The general effect of this evidence of conduct satisfies me that this was a clear case of misdescription of the property, and the defect disclosed was one which could not be easily cured. Not that it was absolutely impossible to cure it. Even the Government Resolution itself admits that the proprietary right of Government to cantonment lands is only a presumption till the contrary is shown. In regard to plaintiff's state of mind, it will not be proper to hold him bound by all that his pleader and legal adviser was supposed to know, not as his adviser, but in his private capacity. The mere fact that the bungalows were situated in cantonment and had to be transferred in the Brigade-Major's register was not sufficient by itself to bring home to the plaintiff the knowledge about the tenure of the land, and defendant's claim to sell the land as his own and that he would make out a good title might well satisfy plaintiff that he was well within his rights in insisting on the fulfilment of the original agreement. When this was found impossible, he offered to accept defendant's one alternative proposal, and in doing so, he naturally took some time to think over the matter. Under the circumstances I do not think he was so much at fault as not only to lose his right of enforcing specific performance, but also forfeiting his money, because he would not make up his mind within twenty-four hours as he was required to do by defendant No. 1's final letter after similar notices had been condoned.

The case being one of defect of title due to a mistake or misdescription, the law on the subject is clear enough. Cato v. Thompson (1) might or might not be quite in point in the matter of specific performance, but so far as the refund of earnest-money is concerned I think with Mr. Justice Fulton that it is an authority in plaintiff's favour. The misdescription was material, and affected the contract. Plaintiff stipulated for sale of the land with the buildings both in full proprietary right, and defendant

No. 1 could only give him the bungalows in full right, and the land held on a very defective title, a mere permissive occupancy at pleasure. It was not the incident of the resumption of the land which was the cause of the plaintiff's dissatisfaction, but it was the liability to resumption without payment which constituted the defect. There was thus a defect of title for which defendant No. 1 was responsible, and which he was unable to cure. Under the circumstances, the present case resembles that of Haji Mahomed v. Musaji (1) with the parties changed. The return of the earnest-money was directed in that case as a measure of equitable relief to the defendant, and the same reasons appear to me still more strongly to justify the award of the same relief here. The judgment in the case noted above referred to the earlier decision in Petamber Sundarji v.
Cassibai (2) for a definition of good title, and hold that good title must be one free from reasonable doubt, and it is this good title which a vendor is bound to make out. This was certainly not made out in the case by the defendant No. 1, and he had no right to detain the earnest-money when his purchaser offered to buy the defective title that he was able to make out. Under all the circumstances of the case, I am satisfied that plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the earnest-money and also to costs as against defendant No. 1. The other defendants were made parties unnecessarily, and plaintiff should pay their costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Strachey.

[7th September, 1896.]

Doctor—Lease—Power of executor to lease—Acquiescence in lease granted by executor —Estoppel—Landlord and tenant—Buildings and improvements of tenant—Compensations for such improvements.

The executors of the will of a Hindu, to which neither the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, nor the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, apply, have such authority only to deal with the estate as the terms of the will confer on them.

Neither a power to "manage the estate as they may deem proper," nor a power to sell it, will authorize executors to lease any part of it for 999 years or (seemle) for any period exceeding 21 years.

Where the devisee of an estate for six years after coming of age and succeeding to the estate signed rent-bills in respect of land which the executors of his testator had purported to lease for 999 years, and such rent-bills contained a representation that the land had been given to the lessees on fazedari tenure.

 Held, that in the absence of any evidence that the lessees had been deceived by or had acted upon such representation, the devisee was not estopped from contesting the validity of the lease.

A man cannot be precluded from asserting his own rights by acquiescence in acts of other parties inconsistent with them unless (1) he has actual knowledge as distinguished from the means of knowledge of his rights; (2) he has knowledge that the persons acting inconsistently with them are doing so under the mistaken belief that they are exercising rights of their own; (3) he has encouraged the parties so acting to spend money or do other acts either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal rights.

Wiltmott v. Barber (1) followed.

[2] A tenant who has erected buildings and effected improvements on the landlord's property is not entitled to be paid their value on the determination of the tenancy merely because he has acted under the mistaken belief shared by his landlord that he had a larger interest in the property than he really had.

[Suit for a declaration that a lease of certain Foras land situate at Chinhpokli in Bombay made by executors for 999 years operated only as a lease from year to year and to recover possession of the premises leased.

The plaintiff stated that his father Vundrawandas Jumaldas died on the 7th April, 1870, leaving a will, of which Merwanji Doseabboy and Chunilal Varjiwandas were appointed executors. They obtained probate on the 16th August, 1870.

S* Suit No. 144 of 1895.

(1) 15 Ch. D. 96.
On the 29th January, 1880, Chunilal Varjiwandas (the other executor having died in 1873) being in possession as executor of the land in suit granted to the first defendant a lease thereof for 999 years with a proviso for renewal for a similar term.

The plaintiff attained his majority in 1885 and his father's property was handed over to him by the executor Chunilal in the year 1888.

The plaintiff further stated that he only became aware of the terms of the said lease in 1893.

He submitted that the lease only operated as a lease from year to year and that he was entitled to recover possession of the land from the defendants, and he prayed for a declaration and order accordingly.

The suit was filed on the 22nd March, 1895.

The defendants submitted that the lease was valid and binding on the estate of the testator. They alleged that, in the belief that the lease was perpetual, they had erected upon the land buildings of the value of Rs. 43,000; that the plaintiff knew of their doing so, and had been aware of the terms of the lease since 1888, and had acquiesced in them. They pleaded limitation and estoppel, and claimed, if ejected from the land, to recover the value of the buildings and improvements, &c.

Rāikes (with Long, Advocate-General, and Russell), for plaintiff.—The executor had no power to grant this lease. His powers are only those given him by the will—Henderson on Law of Wills [3] in India, p. 325—and it does not authorize him to make such a lease. To grant it was a breach of trust—Oceanic Steam Navigation Company v. Sutherberry (1); Drohan v. Drohan (2); Keating v. Keating (3). The lease is void.

Scott (with Macpherson), for defendants.—This suit is barred by limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), arts. 91 and 144. The plaintiff knew this was a fazendari lease and he knew what a fazendari lease was. He has since 1888 acquiesced in the lease. He has stood by while we expended over Rs. 40,000 in building. He is now estopped—Carr v. London and North-Western Railway Company (4). If we are ejected, we must get compensation—Yeshowadabai v. Ramchandra Tukaram (5); Dattatraya v. Shridhar (6); Seton v. Lafone (7); Ramsden v. Dyson (8).

Baikes in reply.—As to estoppel and acquiescence, La Banque Jacques-Cartier v. La Banque D'Epargne de la Cité et du District de Montreal (9); Wilmott v. Barber (10); Naunihal v. Rameshar (11).

On the point of limitation he was stopped by the Court.

JUDGMENT.

STRACHEY, J.—In this suit the plaintiff claims to recover possession of land held by the defendants under a lease for 999 years, executed in favour of the first defendant by the surviving executor of the will of the plaintiff's father. The claim is based on the contention that the lease was in excess of the powers of the executor under the will, and, therefore, void. The will was made on the 9th November, 1869. The testator died on the 7th April, 1870, and the executor took out probate on the 16th August, 1870.

On the 29th January, 1880, the lease was executed, and on the 12th June, 1884, the first defendant assigned it to the second, who is his wife. The plaintiff, who at the time of the testator's death was about three years old, attained his majority on the 9th April, 1885, and on the 1st October, 1888, took from the executor an assignment of all the property of the testator then in [4] the executor's hands. The present suit was instituted on the 22nd March, 1895.

One of the pleas raised by the defendants is that the suit is barred by limitation. In my opinion there is no force in this plea. It depends on the double assumption that this is a suit to cancel or set aside an instrument within the meaning of art. 91 of the Limitation Act, and that the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside became known to him more than three years before the institution of the suit. It is settled, however, at all events in this Court, that art. 91 applies only to suits brought expressly to cancel or set aside an instrument, and does not apply to suits in which substantial relief, such as the recovery of property, is prayed—Abdul Rahim v. Kirparam Daji (1); Sundaram v. Sinhammal (2). In this suit the substantial relief prayed for is that the defendants may be ordered to forthwith deliver possession of the premises to the plaintiff. There is no prayer that the lease may be cancelled or set aside. There is a prayer that it may be declared that the lease only operates as a lease from year to year; but that is obviously ancillary to the prayer for possession. What it means is that both the plaintiff and the executor before him for some years accepted from the defendants the annual rent reserved by the void lease, and that the effect of this was to make the defendants, who would otherwise have been merely tenants-at-will, tenants from year to year upon the terms of the lease so far as applicable to yearly tenancy—Martin v. Smith (3); Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (14th Ed.), p. 299. Further, on the 24th October, 1893, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the defendants giving them notice that the plaintiff had recently ascertained that the lease under which they were holding was for 999 years, that the executor had no power to grant it, that the defendants were in the position of tenants from year to year, and that they were required to give up possession on the 29th January, 1895, at the end of the next complete year of the tenancy. It is obvious from that letter and from the plaint that the plaintiff claims to eject the defendant on the ground that the lease was ultra vires of the executor and void; [6] and in such a suit the setting aside of the lease is unnecessary, and the ordinary limitation of twelve years is applicable. If the defendants, by reason of their occupation and payment of rent under the void lease, are regarded as tenants from year to year, art. 139 of the Limitation Act will apply, otherwise art. 144, and in either case the suit is within time.

The main issue in the case is the first, whether the lease is not valid and operative and binding upon the plaintiff? In considering the power of the executor to grant the lease, it must be remembered that, as the will was made before the 1st September, 1870, neither s. 179 nor any other section of the Succession Act was made applicable to it by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870. In making the lease of the 29th January, 1880, the executor had only the powers of disposition which a Hindu executor would have independently of that Act and of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881—that is to say, the powers, not of an English executor, but of a manager in whom the probate did not vest any title to the estate which he administered, and whose authority to deal with the estate was only such as the terms of the will conferred — Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lal Mullick (1) ; Sreemutty Dassee v. Tarrachurn Coodoo (2) ; Jaykanti Debi v. Shibnath Chatterjee (3). The question, therefore, is whether the will either expressly or by necessary implication gives the executor power to make a lease of the testator’s immovable property for 999 years. There is no express power of leasing to be found in the will. The only clauses which have been referred to as impliedly giving such a power are cl. 4 and 17. To deal first with cl. 17. It appears to me to give no such implied power. As shown by its own terms and those of cl. 19, it provides a mode of remuneration for the executors. It directs that out of the funds of the testator, trade or business to the extent of Rs. 20,000 is to be carried on accordine as Merwanji Dossabhoj (an executor since deceased) may seem proper; it authorizes that executor to keep a share in that trade or business for himself and other shares for his co-executor (the lessor) and another person, [6] and the rest is to be kept for the testator’s estate. Next follow provisions as to the division of profits and other details connected with the business, and as to another business which the testator and Merwanji Dossabhoj carried on in partnership, and one provision is that in the event of losses being incurred to an extent specified, the businesses are to be stopped. The clause ends with these words: "My executors are to act only in such a way that my property may yield rent and the ready cash may yield interest." Whatever may be the exact sense in which the testator used the word "rent," it is obvious that cl. 17 deals exclusively with the trades or businesses for which he was providing, and has no reference to his immovable property or to any power of leasing. The words which I have quoted appear to me merely to emphasize the preceding direction, that if the businesses should result in a loss exceeding the specified amount, they are to be stopped. They are a warning against unprofitable speculation. In the event of the business contemplated by this clause not being carried on, cl. 19 provides another mode of remuneration for the executors. If the expression about the property yielding rent could be held to imply a power of leasing, it would, in my opinion, refer only to such leases as fell within the general power of management conferred by the fourth clause, and not to a lease for 999 years. The only other clause in the will which is said to authorize a lease for 999 years is cl. 4. That clause is as follows:

Clause 4.—"My property is as thus described. My son Jugmohan is the heir and owner of the whole of my said property. He is now two years and a half of age. At the time when he may arrive at his proper age the whole of my property is to be made over to my son. I appoint my executors to carry on the business management of my property up to that time and I give them authority as follows:—My executors are to carry on the management of my property as they may seem proper. They are to sell my immovable or other property, and to purchase property for me; that as to ready cash which is to be advanced at interest, they are to lend the same with great care on the mortgage of good estates and on the shares of good chartered banks and land companies and the shares of spinning companies the whole of the money appertaining to whose calls may have been paid up, and they are to lend money at interest at good parties' places." The only expressions in this clause which could possibly be held to authorize a lease are, first, those which give a general authority [7] to the executors to carry on the management of the property as they may deem proper, and, secondly, those which authorize them to sell and purchase immovable property. The first authority undoubtedly includes everything which could fairly and reasonably be considered an act of management of the property not inconsistent with any express directions of the will itself. I am not prepared to hold, and Mr. Raikes did not contend, that a general power of management would not include some power to lease vacant land if necessary. Such a lease might be the only way of avoiding loss to the estate.

What, then, is the test of whether a particular lease is an act of management and as such falls within the executor's powers, or whether it is more than an act of management and so exceeds them? I think that the test is whether the lease can be shown to have been reasonably necessary for the due administration of the estate, and that whatever cannot be shown to be necessary for that purpose cannot be considered incidental to a general power of management. That was substantially the test applied by Sir George Jessel, M.R., in Oceanic Steam Navigation Company v. Sutherbery (1), where an administrator granted an underlease of the intestate's leasehold estate with an option of purchase to the lessee at a future time. It was held by the Master of the Rolls that having the legal estate in the leaseholds, the administrator might in some cases underlet them, and the underlease would be supported in equity as well as in law. "But," he added, "that is an exceptional mode of dealing with the assets, and those who accept a title in that way must take it subject to the question whether it was the best way of administering the assets." A fortiori I think that must be the question where a lease or underlease is made by a Hindu executor who has not the legal estate in the property. By way of analogy, and provided that the analogy is applied with caution, it appears to me to be legitimate, in the absence of direct authority, to see what are the powers of leasing of English trustees of lands who have no express leasing power, but who are entrusted with the active management of the estate. The managing powers of a Hindu (2) executor not having the estate vested in him could hardly be more extensive. In India, under s. 36 of the Trusts Act II of 1882, a trustee has authority generally to do all acts which are reasonable and proper for the realization, protection or benefit of the trust property and for the protection or support of beneficiaries incompetent to contract, but except with the permission of a Court he cannot lease the property for a term exceeding twenty-one years. In Fitzpatrick v. Waring (2) decided in 1882, it was held by the Court of Appeal in Ireland upon a review of the authorities that a trustee in whom the legal estate is vested, and who is entrusted with the active management of the estate, may, without any express leasing power, make a yearly or other reasonable letting of tenable lands. The principle of the decision is that it would be unreasonable to hold that such a trustee is bound to allow the land to remain vacant and unproductive, or to embark upon farming at the risk of his trust fund; and that a will imposing on him active duties of management must be held to impliedly confer on him such powers as are necessary to enable him to discharge those duties, including the power to demise vacant and untenanted lands so as to make them produce an income. But it was also held that it was for the trustee and the tenant taking under him to show, if challenged, that the demise was, under the circumstances of the case, reasonable and done in the fair management of the estate, and that a reasonable letting meant one which, having regard to the whole scope of the trusts, was reasonably necessary for their due execution on behalf of the beneficiaries. In that case the letting was from year to year, and I have not found any case in which a lease for 999 years was held to be an act in the fair management of the estate, though in Attorney-General v. Green (1) a lease for that period of charity land at an undervalue was decreed to be delivered up. Is it, then, shown by the defendants that this lease for 999 years was an act which, having regard to the scope of the executor’s duties and the fact that the testator’s property was to be handed over to the plaintiff in about fifteen years, was done in the fair management of the property and reasonably necessary for its due administration? [9] There is no evidence which could justify an affirmative answer. There is nothing to show that the land could not have been let profitably for a shorter period falling within the term of the executor’s management. To make what is virtually a perpetual lease, at a rent of Rs. 180 a year, of land which there was every reason to expect would increase in value, and which, I understand, has in fact largely increased in value since 1880, is a transaction of which the necessity and wisdom are certainly not self-evident. No facts or arguments have been put before me to justify the lease regarded as an investment. I am, therefore, of opinion that the lease cannot be supported as falling within the general power of management conferred on the executors by the fourth clause of the will.

The question, then, is whether the power to lease is implied by or included in the express power to sell the property which is given by the same clause. In England and Ireland it has been held that a trust for sale does not prima facie imply a power to grant leases, and that, except under special circumstances, trustees for sale, or executors who are quasi trustees for sale, would not be justified in granting a lease, for such an act is not regularly within their province, and it is incumbent on the persons taking a lease from them to show that it was called for by the interests of the parties entitled to the property—Lawin on Trusts (9th Ed.), pp. 470, 670; Evans v. Jackson (2); Hackett v. McNamara (3); does not include an unlimited power of leasing, for trustees authorized to sell trust property, and having the powers specified in ss. 37, 38 and 39, are nevertheless subject to the prohibition contained in s. 36 against leasing trust property for more than twenty-one years without the permission of a Court. It appears to me that the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in Sreenutm Dasse v. Tarrachurn Coondoo is an authority for applying to a lease granted by a Hindu executor not governed by the Acts of 1870 and 1881 the analogy of the English cases to which I have just referred. That judgment applies to a mortgage, made by such a Hindu executor under a [10] will containing an express power of sale, the decision in Haldenby v. Spofforth (5) that a trust for an absolute sale does not authorize a mortgage. Sir Barnes Peacock further held that such a Hindu executor was a manager having a qualified power of disposition, to whom the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Hunoomansoorsaud Panday v. Musumut Babooee Munraj (6) and now embodied in s. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was applicable.

See also Jaykali v. Shibnath Chatterjee (1). That principle extends to every kind of alienation made by a manager, including leases. If it is applied here, it follows that the lessee, knowing from the terms of the lease itself that it was granted by an executor whose power to grant it depended on the will, was bound to make bona fide and proper inquiry into the circumstances justifying its execution, including the directions of the will and the exigencies of the estate. No such inquiry by the lessee is shown or even alleged. Apart from this, I do not think that in authorizing the executors to buy and sell property the testator intended to authorize them to make a lease of this kind. If he had had any such intention I think that he would have expressed it. A power to buy and sell land is one thing, but a power to buy land and tie it up on a virtually perpetual lease at a fixed rent, however the value of the property may alter, is a different thing altogether. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the lease was ultra vires of the executor, and is not binding upon the plaintiff.

It is, however, contended that the plaintiff is estopped from denying the validity of the lease. That contention is based upon the fact that from January, 1888, to January, 1894, the plaintiff signed rent bills and receipts for the rent payable by the defendants beginning with the words "My land situate at Chinchpokli has been given to you on fazendidari tenure." It is contended that this amounts to a representation by the plaintiff that the land was held by the defendants on fazendidari or permanent tenure and that the defendants having been induced by that representation to spend money on buildings and other improvements on the land, he is now estopped from denying that the land is so held by them. As to that it is sufficient to say that even assuming the rent bills to amount to a representation that the defendants were holding under a valid lease for 999 years made by the executors, there is no evidence that the defendants were misled by any such representation or in any way acted upon it. The only action on their part which is suggested was the result of a belief founded on the representation was their expenditure on the land. In the evidence given by the first defendant in the witness box he has not alleged that he spent money or did anything else in consequence of the statements contained in the rent bills signed by the plaintiff. His evidence is inconsistent with any such supposition, for the earliest of such rent bills is dated the 29th January, 1888, and this defendant began filling in the low lying land apparently in preparation for building as far back as a month or two after the lease of the 29th January, 1880, and he continued doing this year by year spending altogether in this way Rs. 6,000 or Rs. 6,250. The actual buildings, except a shed, were not begun till 1889; but it is abundantly clear that what led the lessee to build was not any statement made by the plaintiff in the rent-bills or otherwise, but the fact that from the date of the lease until 1893 it never occurred to the lessee or any one else to doubt that the lease had been validly granted. Its validity appears to have been assumed by every one who knew of its existence. The lessee’s belief that it was valid dated from a time when the plaintiff neither made nor could have made any representation on the subject; and it was the result of the lessee never having ascertained by inquiry the limits of the executor’s powers under the will. That disposes of the plea of estoppel.

(1) 2 B.L.R.O.C.J. 1 (5).
A further plea is that the plaintiff acquiesced in and ratified the lease.
Now, as to this what are the facts? The plaintiff having attained his majority in 1885, the executor nevertheless continued to manage the property as before until 1888, when he made an assignment of it to the plaintiff and took a release from him. Notwithstanding the assignment and release, however, he still continued to act as manager and to do all the plaintiff's business for him until his death, a month before the hearing of this suit. As regards the property now in question he used [12] to make out the rent bills and send them to the plaintiff for signature. The plaintiff says that all he knew about this property was that he was being paid rent for it regularly and that it was let on fazendari tenure, his knowledge being apparently derived exclusively from the rent bills sent to him by the executor. He never before the institution of the suit saw the property, or was aware of the defendants' buildings, and he first became aware of the existence of the lease during an illness of the executor in 1893, though it must previously have been among the papers in his possession. It was later in 1893 that a question raised in connection with the power of certain trustees, of whom he was one, to lease the trust property first suggested to him a doubt as to the validity of the lease of the 29th January, 1880; which after further inquiry and after taking counsel's opinion led to the notice of the 24th October, 1893, and to the institution of this suit. He produces certain account books of the estate which, with the papers, was kept by the executor in an office in the plaintiff's house, and which remained there after the assignment and release of 1888. In these books there are entries of the 31st December, 1879, the 14th and 29th January, 1880, and the 2nd February, 1882 (Exs. 2, 3, 4 and 5), which give the fullest particulars of the lease; and if he had ever referred to those books he would of course have become completely acquainted with the facts. He says that he did not refer to them, and it appears that although after the assignment and release he nominally took over the management of his estate he continued to leave everything to the executor, who lived in the same compound, who had looked after him during his childhood, and in whom he obviously had complete confidence. This is the substance of the plaintiff's evidence; it was not shaken in cross-examination or contradicted by other evidence, and I see no reason to doubt its truth. It shows that he was ignorant of the lease granted by the executor and of the defendant's action in building, but that if he had referred to the papers or inquired into the previous management of the estate he could have learned those facts. Does this actual ignorance with the means of knowledge constitute acquiescence in or ratification of the lease? I do not think so.
In La Banque Jacques-Cartier v. [13] La Banque D'Epargne de la Cite et Du District de Montreal (1) it is laid down by the Privy Council that "acquiescence and ratification must be founded on a full knowledge of the facts." In Willmott v. Barber (2), Fry, J., held that the acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud, and that a man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights. He further held that one of the elements necessary to constitute fraud of this description is that the possessor of the legal right must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the person setting up the plea of, acquiescence.
"If he does not know of it he is in the same position as" that person,

(2) 15 Ch. D. 96.
"and the doctrine of acquiescence is founded upon conduct with a knowledge of your legal rights." In the present case I am satisfied that the plaintiff did not know of the existence of his own right which was inconsistent with the rights claimed by the defendants. Another condition of acquiescence stated by Fry, J., is that the possessor of the legal right must know of the other party's mistaken belief of his rights. I am satisfied that the plaintiff did not know that the defendants had any mistaken belief whatever. A further condition is that the possessor of the legal right must have encouraged the other party to spend money or do other acts, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. The only acts of encouragement which are suggested here are the plaintiff's signing the rent bills stating that the land was held on fazendari tenure, and his receiving the rent. It is argued that he must have known that the land was held by the defendants under some instrument, and that by implicitly recognizing the executor's power to grant land on fazendari tenure, he must be taken a fortiori to have recognized his power to grant a lease for 999 years. There is nothing to show that the plaintiff believed the grant on fazendari tenure to have been made by the executor; but apart from that point, this view of constructive or possible knowledge as equivalent to acquiescence appears to me to be wholly inconsistent with the judgment of Fry, J. In that case the lessor's ignorance of his right under [14] a covenant in the lease was held to be inconsistent with his acquiescence, though he might, of course, have referred to the lease made himself acquainted with the existence of the covenant. No doubt in Gopal Narain v. Muddomatty (1) Markby, J., laid down the general proposition that it was the duty of a member of a Hindu family when he came of age at least to make himself acquainted with what had been done by the manager (in that case an executor) during his minority, and to express his dissent at once if he disapproved of any transaction. The facts of that case were, however, very different from those of the present; and I infer from the observations made by Couch, C. J., and Pontifex, J., during the argument of the appeal that they did not accept the general proposition laid down by Markby, J. Thus Pontifex, J., observed that acquiescence subsequent to the transaction complained of would not bind the sons unless it was accompanied by ratification, and referred to s. 198 of the Contract Act, which provides that "no valid ratification can be made by a person whose knowledge of the facts of the case is materially defective." Couch, C. J., referred to Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal (2) and Bhupen Mohan v. Elliott (3) as supporting the proposition that acquiescence imports full knowledge. In the present case I think that any other view would result in injustice. All that can be said against the plaintiff is that having the means of knowledge of the lease, he allowed the executor, in whom he had confidence, to go on managing the property, and so remained in ignorance. On the other hand, the defendants in taking the lease appear to have had full knowledge of the facts, but both then and afterwards when building acted under a mistake of law as to the executor's powers. For these reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiff has not ratified or acquiesced in the lease.

The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to recover possession of the property, but it is contended that he should not be allowed to do so without paying to the defendants the full value of all the improvements and buildings effected and erected by them. In support of that contention the cases of Ramsden v. Dyson (1), Dattatraya Narayan Pai (2) and Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra Tukaram (3) have been cited. In the view which I take of the facts, Ramsden v. Dyson is an authority not for against the defendant’s contention, for it shows that it is only under special circumstances that a tenant building on his landlord’s land acquires a right to prevent the landlord from taking the land and building when the tenancy has determined, and the judgments of Lord Cranworth (p. 142), Lord Wensleydale (p. 169), and Lord Kingsdown (pp. 170, 171) show that one special circumstance would be that the landlord had purposely allowed or encouraged the tenant to build knowing that the tenant was building on the mistaken notion that he had rights beyond those of a mere tenant from year to year. Here, as in that case, the evidence fails to show that the landlord did anything of the kind, or even knew that the defendants were building, and no special circumstances are shown within the meaning of the rule. In Dattatraya v. Shridhar it was found that the circumstances justified a presumption that the plaintiff by his conduct sanctioned the construction of the building and well, and encouraged the defendant to believe that he would not be ejected, at all events without reasonable compensation. That is a totally different state of facts from those of the present case. In Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra Tukaram it was found that the defendant’s father had granted the land for building purposes to the plaintiff’s predecessors-in-title, and not only received rent from the tenant for twenty-five years, but “must have seen, and knowing what he had granted made no objection to Tricum erecting the building on the ground.” As observed in Dunia Lal Seal v. Gopi Nath Khetry (4), the Court in Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra Tukaram appears to have thought that s. 2 of Act XI of 1855 would apply to tenants holding under a grant of land in perpetuity on fazendari tenure for building purposes, and a passage in the judgment of the present Chief Justice in Shaik Husain v. Govardhandas (5) seems to imply that the section might be applicable to a tenant bona fide believing that he held the land on permanent tenure. I cannot, however hold, and it was not contended [16] before me, that a tenant building upon land held by him in the bona fide belief that he holds under a valid lease for 999 years builds in the belief that he has an “absolute estate” within the meaning of the section, or that he is “absolutely entitled” to the land within the meaning of s. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. I regret that I can see no principle upon which the defendants can be given compensation for their expenditure on the buildings, for I have no doubt that they built in the belief that they had all the rights of lessees under a valid lease for 999 years. As I have said, the validity of the lease appears to have been assumed without question till 1893, when the plaintiff discovered first that the lease existed, and afterwards almost accidentally that it was invalid. But the defendants’ mistake was apparently due to the absence of inquiry or to insufficient inquiry as to the power of the executor to grant the lease. Their case is, I think, a hard one, but on the other hand I see no reason why the plaintiff should be prevented from recovering his land without paying the defendants a large sum for improvements which he did not lead them to make, and which they made through a mistake of law for which he was not responsible. In Oceanic Steam Navigation Company v. Suttermbery the hardship to the lessees was very great, for the lease itself was found to be proper and advantageous to the estate, and the administrator only exceeded his powers in inserting an option for purchase at a future

[On appeal from the High Court at Bombay.]

SALA MAHOMED JAFFERBHAI AND ANOTHER (Appellants)
v. DAME JANBAI (Respondent).

[24th and 25th February, 3rd and 4th March and 7th April, 1897.]

Will—Execution of will—Codicil—Testamentary acts—Incapacity from illness—Influence not amounting to coercive influence.

A Kheda Mahomedan resident in Bombay made his will in 1886, appointing his wife, and his eldest son by a former wife, to execute it. The testator died on the 9th February, 1891, having at different times, in the interval, made four codicils. The widow applying for probate of all the above, propounded a fifth codicil, alleging it to have been made by her husband on the 6th February, 1891. The son petitioned for probate to be delivered to him and to the widow, but only of the will and of the first two codicils, contesting the three later codi-cils as having been made under undue influence exercised by the wife. He disputed the last codicil, not only on the ground of undue influence, if the codicil had been, in fact, executed, but because at the time of the alleged execution his father was almost unconscious, and unable to understand what he was doing.

The High Court, in its original testamentary jurisdiction, refused probate of the three disputed codicils, granting probate of the will and of the first two codicils only. The appellate High Court granted probate of the will and of the five codicils, finding that no undue influence had been exercised; and that the fifth had been executed by the testator with knowledge and comprehension of its contents, and of his free volition.

The Judicial Committee affirmed the judgment of the appellate Court as to the absence of undue influence. In their opinion, if there was not evidence, and there was not, to show coercion in the special matter of the codicils, general assertions of the wife's commanding character, and of the husband's weakness, and of their differences, went for little.

But, in regard to the fifth codicil, they affirmed the judgment of the original Court, finding the evidence to have left open the inference that the testator had been, at the time when it was alleged by the widow that he had made this codicil, too exhausted and ill for such a testamentary act.
APPEAL from a decree (9th April, 1894) of the appellate High Court, reversing a decree (26th January, 1893) of the High Court in its original testamentary jurisdiction.

The petition filed by the respondent, widow of the late Sir Tharia Topan, on the 23rd July, 1891, was for probate (Act V of 1881) of her husband’s will, dated the 14th January, 1886, with [18] five codicils, all being in Gujarati. The codicils were dated, respectively, 1st November, 1886, 21st July, 1889, 12th January, 1890, 1st November, 1890, and 6th February, 1891.

The testator was a Khoja Mahomedan, originally from Cutch, who died in Bombay on the 9th February, 1891. He had been residing there since 1884. By trading in produce in Zanzibar and in Bombay, where he left property, moveable and immovable, he had acquired a large fortune. The branch in Bombay was managed by his two sons by a former wife, and he superintended the Bombay business. He had daughters also by a former wife, and sons and daughters by Lady Janbai, his third wife.

The state of the family and all the relevant facts appear in their Lordships’ judgment.

The appellants were the representatives of the testator’s eldest son, Moosa Tharia Bhai, deceased in 1893, who by the will was appointed executor jointly with his step-mother Janbai. Moosa filed a counter petition on the 5th August, 1891, contesting the third, fourth and fifth codicils on the ground of their having been made under undue influence exercised by Janbai over her husband. Moosa disputed the fifth codicil on another ground also, that it had not in fact been executed, by reason that his father was at the time at which the proponent had alleged it to have been executed, incapable of such an act, having been so reduced by illness as to have been almost unconscious; and the petition alleged that he was unable to understand what he was doing. Undue influence was also alleged as to this codicil. Moosa’s petition was that probate of the will and of the first two codicils only might be granted to him jointly with Janbai, or to him alone as to the Court might seem fit. The question on this appeal was whether the three later codicils, or any of them, should have been admitted to probate. This involved whether there had been undue influence exercised by the wife in regard to these three codicils, or any, and which of them. As to the fifth, the question also was raised whether the testator had been capable of making the codicil with a sound and disposing mind at the time when he, according to his widow’s statement, had made it. The general scheme of the testamentary papers was this:

[19] At the time of the testator’s making his will in 1886, Janbai’s sons were all minors, and the youngest, Mahomed Husein, was not yet born. The will appointed Moosa and Janbai to be executors and trustees, Janbai to be guardian of the minor sons; and all powers—to maintain and educate the children, to see to their marriages, the administration of their property, and to carry on trade on their behalf—were entrusted to the discretion of Janbai. Pieces of land and house property were devised to the four daughters. Moosa was appointed trustee for his full sister, while Janbai was trustee for her own daughters with power to appoint new trustees. Benefactions were to be disbursed by Janbai after consulting Moosa and his brother Jafferbai; and Janbai had a discretion to give presents to servants of the firm, in addition to those specially bequeathed. She was appointed trustee of property given to a niece of the testator, with full powers. She was also appointed joint trustee with Moosa of certain property left for a hospital, and for a school at Zanzibar, and sole trustee of other properties left for charities in the name of a deceased daughter of the testator. Regarding Janbai herself he confirmed her right to all presents to her, and to the account of her dealings standing in his books. He gave to her a life estate in a bungalow, twelve shops, and a large dwelling-house, in Zanzibar, with remainder to her own sons, then and afterwards to be born. The business in Bombay and Zanzibar was to be carried on by Moosa for the benefit of all four sons equally, and, in the event of Moosa's death, by Janbai and Jafferbai. He gave the residue of his estate equally to his four sons, and any son that might thereafter be born.

The first codicil was executed after the birth of another son, Husein.
It provided that he should share equally with the other sons, and directed that for seven years Moosa should administer Husein's property and trade on his behalf, after which time, or in the event of Moosa's death before, the same authority was given to Janbai. The authority given to her to administer and to trade, was to be with the consent of Moosa and Jaffer in certain cases. Yearly accounts were to be submitted to Janbai, and all mistakes pointed out by her were to be rectified. The sons were always to conduct themselves so that "their mother, my wife, may remain pleased." A house in Zanzibar, worth Rs. 25,000, was given to Moosa.

The second codicil cancelled some bequests owing to the legatees having ceased to be connected with the firm or having died, and made other bequests. Moosa was associated with Janbai in some trusts, in which, by the will, an uncontrolled discretion had been given to her. A recommendation to Janbai, and the two elder sons, to live in harmony followed.

The third codicil related to the personal property of Janbai at Zanzibar and Bombay. It directed that after his death all such property should be given to her upon her own statement or made good to her.

The fourth codicil related to the houses and lands conferred by the will upon Janbai for a life estate, with remainder to her own sons. This estate was now made absolute.

The fifth conferred upon Husein a house in Bombay. To Janbai the codicil gave Rs. 50,000, including Rs. 20,000 which had been already paid to her. The testator confirmed her right to her own separate property in Zanzibar and Bombay, and the account in his books of money due to her.

The judgment of the original Court (Baylay, J.) after finding the fact that the codicil alleged to have been made on the 6th February, 1891, had not been executed with disposing mind, referred to the question of undue influence as follows:

"In the case of the Earl of Sefton v. Hopwood (1), tried at Liverpool in 1855, Mr. Justice Cresswell in directing the jury as to the law said: 'The subject of wills procured by influence has been a good deal discussed of late years, and I think that the law, as at present understood, has somewhat modified the earlier opinions on the subject. I take it that in order to invalidate a will on the score of influence, it is not sufficient that you should think the testator has been persuaded into making a will of a particular kind, that he has been persuaded to benefit this or that person to a certain extent.
It must be an influence depriving the party of the exercise of his judgment

(1) 1 F. and F. 578.
and his free action: it must be such an influence as induces you to think that the will when executed is not the will he desires to execute, that he does not benefit the parties whom he would wish to benefit, but that he is doing that which is not his desire, and, therefore, not his will.'

[21] "In a case tried before Mr. Justice (afterwards Lord Chief Justice) Erle in 1857, Lovett v. Lovett (1), he said: 'The law bearing on this subject is uncontested: . . . undue influence is the control of another will over a person whose faculties have been so impaired as to submit to the control of such other person, so that the party making the will has ceased to be a free agent, and has adopted the will of the controlling party.'

"In Hall v. Hall (2), which came before the Court of Probate in 1868, Sir J. P. Wild (now Lord Penzance) directed the jury on the question of undue influence thus: 'To make a good will a man must be a free agent. All influences are not unlawful . . . . But pressure of whatever character, whether acting on the fears or the hopes, if so exerted as to overcome the will without convincing the judgment, is a species of restraint under which no valid will can be made. The importance or threats, such as the testator has not the courage to resist, moral command asserted and yielded to for the sake of peace and quiet, or of escaping from distress of mind or social discomfort, these, if carried to a degree in which the free play of the testator's judgment, discretion, or wishes is overborne, will constitute undue influence, though no force is either used or threatened.
In a word, a testator may be led but not driven, and his will must be the offspring of his own volition and not the record of some one else's.'

"Wingrove v. Wingrove (3) was decided in the Court of Probate in 1885. Sir James Hannen, the President, in addressing the jury, said: 'I must ask your particular attention to the exposition which I am about to give you of the law upon this subject of undue influence, for I find, from now a long experience in this Court, that there is no subject upon which there is a greater misapprehension. Then after giving several illustrations he said: 'To be undue influence in the eye of the law there must be, to sum it up, coercion . . . . It is only when the will of the person who becomes a testator is coerced into doing that which he or she does not desire to do that it is undue influence.'

"A similar rule was embodied in the 'Indian Succession Act' (X, 1865), s. 48 of which enacted that 'a will or any part of a will the making of which has been caused by fraud or coercion, or by such importunity as takes away the free agency of the testator is void.' And see Illustrations ((E), (F) and (G)). It is admitted, however, that the Succession Act does not apply to the will or codicils of Sir Tharia Topan who was a Khoja Mahomedan, s. 331 of that Act stating that the provisions of that Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu or Mahomedan.

"It was enacted by the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 9, Illustration A, adopting the English law on the subject, that where the question [22] is whether a given document is the will of A (the same rule would be applicable to a codicil) the state of A's property and of his family at the date of the alleged will may be relevant facts.

"Such facts are in the present inquiry in my opinion relevant and material, as likewise are the testamentary disposition which Sir Tharia had already made by his will and his first two codicils the genuineness and perfect fairness of which were not questioned."

(1) 1 F. and F. 581, (2) L.R. 1 P. and D. 481. (3) 11 P. D. 81.
The Judge's conclusion, after considering the evidence, was that the third and fourth codicils had been made under the undue influence of Janbai; and of these, as well as of the fifth, probate was refused.

From the decree of the first Court Janbai appealed, with the result that the above decision was reversed. The appellate Court (Sir C. Sargent, C.J., and Farran, J.) found that the testator knew and understood the contents of the fifth codicil, which he executed on the 6th February, 1891. And they found that all the three codicils, no less than the two that were undisputed, had been made by the testator of his own volition, free from any undue influence.

Farran, J., observed that as to the last codicil he had not come to the opinion of its having been duly executed without considerable doubt and hesitation. As to this codicil, and its execution, he gave weight to the testimony of Merwanji, the medical man in attendance on the testator. All the testamentary papers were, therefore, admitted to probate.

Moosa Tharia Bhai, the eldest son of the testator, died in 1893. An order was made for the admission of this appeal on the 8th August, 1894, and his representatives were the appellants on this record.

Sir Robert Reid, Q.C., Mr. J. Jardine, Q.C., and Mr. Bargrave Dean, Q.C., appeared for the appellants.

For the appellants it was argued that the decree of the first Court was right, and should be restored. The two main points, on which the evidence was referred to, were the state of the testator at the time when, on the 6th February, 1891, according to the respondent's case, he executed the codicil of that date, and the question of the exercised undue influence over him by his [23] wife, in regard to the third, fourth, and fifth codicils. It was submitted that, on the balance of the evidence, the greater weight should be given to the finding of the Judge who had the witnesses before him; and the following were some of the points in the argument. Neither of the judgments in the appellate Court adverted to the sum of Rs. 50,000 having been given by the last codicil, and to the evidence as to the way in which Janbai obtained Rs. 20,000 from the firm, yet that transaction threw considerable light as to the terms on which the husband and wife were. Stress was laid on the testator's letters to his son Moosa, complaining of the conduct of his wife towards him, especially of the letters of the 16th January, 1890, and of the 10th August, 1890. The letters written by or by the direction of Sir Tharia to his son Moosa, stating how he was treated by his wife, were cogent evidence to prove that his wife carried her influence to the extent of coercing him, and that he was not a free agent in the matter of the three later codicils. The testimony of witnesses as to his condition on the evening of the 6th February, 1891, showed that he was then too ill to have been of sound and disposing mind or to be capable. And it was improbable that in his weak state he should have undertaken, of free volition, to carry out an alteration, the evidence having shown that his previously expressed intention was not to leave the house to Husein.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, argued that the judgment of the appellate Court should be affirmed. No evidence had gone the length of showing that any one of the three contested codicils had been obtained from the testator against his own judgment and inclination by the coercive influence of Janbai. The argument that there had been undue influence rested mainly upon two views: the first was that the wife was of a resolute character, capable of influencing her husband whenever she chose, and that this power she had exercised; the second was that the codicils themselves could only be accounted for by taking it that this influence had been brought to bear, inasmuch as the dispositions were just what the wife had wished to have made. Against these views must be set the fact that the previous testamentary documents, which [24] were undisputed, tended the same way; yet it could not be doubted that they spoke the free and uninfluenced mind of the testator. The will itself showed not only the strong affection of the husband for his wife, but the confidence which he reposed in her judgment and integrity.

And so late as the 21st July, 1889, it was clear that her influence did not prevent her husband from making, independently of her wish, provisions that he thought proper. Taking the codicils separately, there was nothing in his providing in the third codicil that the wife's statement should be accepted as to what was, or was not, to be taken to be her property of the articles left at Zanzibar. Nor in the fourth codicil, which only converted her life estate, in two pieces of property with remainder to her own children, into an absolute estate. Nor in the fifth codicil, devising a house to Husain, was there anything to show undue interference or coercion. Nor was there any improbability in the testator's having, of his free volition, in the fifth codicil a further legacy of Rs. 50,000 to Janbai, when his sons were to take everything that was not otherwise bequeathed. As to the evidence afforded by the letters to Moosa, there was the possibility that the testator was endeavouring to make the least of his intention to favour his wife, without there being any real reason why he should so write. For more than one reason little weight should be attributed to the statement by Sir Tharia in the letters of the 16th January, 1890, and of the 10th August, 1890, as to his wife's conduct towards him. In regard to the testator's state on the 6th February, 1891, and the codicil pronounced by the widow as executed on that day, the evidence had established that the testator was of sound and disposing mind at, and before, its preparation and execution, and that he understood and assented to its contents. Upon this point the appellate Court believed the evidence of the medical attendant, who had not been in any way discredited.

Afterwards, on the 7th April following, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.

JUDGMENT.

Sir Tharia Topan was a native of Zanzibar and the owner of a large mercantile business carried on in that island and in the city [25] of Bombay. He resided in Bombay for some years and managed the business there, while his eldest son Moosa managed the business in Zanzibar. He belonged to the sect called Khojas, being Mahomedan in religion but observing Hindu customs as regards their property. In the year 1886 he made his will. He had then a wife named Janbai, who is the present respondent, and who apparently belongs to a family of Shiya Mahomedans. He had also eight living children, three of whom were children of Janbai, and were much younger. Later in the same year, when another son had been born to him, he made a codicil to his will, and in the year 1889 a second codicil. On the 12th January, 1890, he made a third codicil. On the 1st November, 1890, he made a fourth codicil. On the 6th February, 1891, a document was prepared which is pronounced as a fifth codicil. On the 9th February, 1891, he died. His executors were the respondent Dame Janbai and his eldest son Moosa.
On 23rd of July, 1891, the widow Janbai petitioned the High Court of Bombay claiming probate of the will and the five codicils. Moosa opposed her. As regards the will and two first codicils there was no dispute; but Moosa contends that the third and fourth codicils were obtained from the testator by the undue influence or coercion of Janbai, and that the fifth codicil if signed at all by the testator was signed when he was unconscious. These are the issues now before their Lordships. They were decided in favour of Moosa by Mr. Justice Bayley at the trial and against him by the Court of Appeal. He is now dead, and his executors are the present appellants.

As regards the third and fourth codicils, their Lordships cannot say that the case when once cleared of a multitude of rather unimportant details presents much difficulty. Moosa’s contention is that in the course of the year 1889 the testator become very infirm in health, and that in particular his eyesight was so much impaired as to make him very dependent on others; that Janbai was a woman of superior abilities and great force of character; that she acquired constantly increasing dominion over the testator’s mind; and that she used it to obtain from him a constantly increasing amount of benefit for herself, which it is extremely improbable that he would have given her of his own accord. To support this case there are produced letters written by the testator to Moosa containing some bitter complaints about his wife and lamentations over his own weakness.

The most emphatic of these letters is dated the 16th January, 1890, four days after the date of the third codicil. It is written in Gujarati and is translated as follows:

"To the chiranjiw (long lived) Moosabhai Tharia—to wit.
Your bhavhi has been exercising great zulm (oppression). I have been much distressed (at it); what can I do? There is nothing I can do: papers (or writings) are prepared and brought (to me) and (she) forcibly takes my signatures (to them). A paper about the (household) things and articles at Zanzibar having now been prepared and brought (she) has forcibly obtained my signature (to it). Consider that paper as null. And if I should not give (my) signature, I feel danger to my person (or life), and as to whatever money she draws, if I should speak (and raise an objection) thereto she creates a noise (or bustle). I have been made very miserable by your bhavhi. If God should call me over, I shall be freed from her persecution. I write and leave this letter, but I cannot read it. I cannot now endure the disgust (any longer). Your right is great, but there is great persecution from her. The 16th January, 1890."

A second letter is dated the 10th August, 1890. It is of great length referring mostly to the affairs of the firm and showing no lack of capacity for the business in the testator. The most important passage is as follows:

"And the inward reason of (her) giving the annoyance to me is that she wanted me for the benefit of my youngest son (by her) to give (i.e. convey) to my (said) son the two large immovable properties which are situated in Bombay and the one (or) two large immovable properties which are situated in Zanzibar. I did not care for her and did not give (i.e. convey) my said properties in writing (to her) and shall not give (the same) in writing either. On the contrary I told her that I have not even privately given in writing anything to the oldest son who is entitled to a greater (share). She then remained silent; never spoke about it again."
Another letter is dated the 5th November, 1890, four days after the date of the fourth codicil. It does not mention that codicil, but it refers apparently to the same incident mentioned in the letter of August on which that codicil has a bearing.

[27] Taking first the suggestion of violent improbability, it is necessary to see what the codicils actually do or purport to do. The third codicil is confined to chattels belonging to Janbai, who appears to have had considerable property of her own. This is acknowledged briefly in the will. The codicil appears to do exactly the same thing, only with more specific reference to places of deposit, and with an express acknowledgment that the testator is bound to restore the articles to her or to make good any loss. The codicil then goes on to say that his executors shall be bound likewise, and that Janbai’s assertions shall be conclusive on the subject without any evidence or proof. Such a provision is no doubt, if literally applied, calculated to confer a power open to great abuse. But it is clear from the will and otherwise that the testator had a very high opinion of his wife; probably the idea of her making a dishonest use of her powers would not occur to him; or if it did he may conceivably have thought that such a risk was less in amount and less dangerous to his estate than the risk of quarrels over a number of detached articles.

The fourth codicil deals with property given by the will to Janbai for life and afterwards to her sons. It is not quite easy to understand it, either with regard to the property it comprises or to the interests it confers, and it is not necessary to give any opinion on those points. The most adverse construction to Janbai for the present purpose is that which ascribes the greatest amount of increased benefit to her. On that construction the codicil gives to her an absolute interest in a block of buildings and adjacent ground at Zanzibar which the will gave to her and her sons; and it also adds to the gift another building lately joined on to the block.
This addition is valued by Moosa at Rs. 65,000. It may be observed here that the estate is valued at 29 lakhs at the lowest, and another account makes it of much greater value—somewhere about 40 lakhs.

The result is that in the third codicil their Lordships cannot find any such improbability as should induce a Court of Justice to lean favourably towards the other evidence brought to show undue influence.
In the fourth codicil they cannot find any [28] improbability at all; and indeed the gift of the added building seems a highly probable one for the testator to make.

The general evidence brought to show Janbai’s dominion over her husband is loose and vague. He was in failing health; he was nearly blind; she was a woman of great force of character and will, apt to show temper when thwarted; very constantly with the testator, and conversant with his property and with the affairs of the firm. The testator was of parsimonious habits, his wife was fond of what he thought undue display, and by her expenditure goaded him sometimes into expressions of anger and complaint. It is hardly worth while to pursue this class of evidence into further detail. If there is not evidence to show coercion in the special matter of the codicils, general assertions of the wife’s commanding character and the husband’s weakness, and of wrangling about expenses, go for little.

If indeed it could be shown that the statements in the letter of 16th January, 1890, were true, Moosa’s case would be carried a long way. On that account a serious attack is made on the genuineness of the letter.
There are certainly some considerations relating to its writer's infirmities, to its contents, and to its production by Moosa, which are calculated to raise doubts, and the Court of Appeal on these grounds came to the conclusion that it would not be safe to rely upon it. On the other hand, Mr. Justice Bayley, who presided at the trial, thought that the external evidence placed the genuineness of the letter beyond dispute. Moosa received it by post, and of his truthfulness the learned Judge had no doubt. Fazul saw it before it was sent, and posted it. He was a confidential man of business in the service of the testator for twenty-four years, and was munim or head manager of the Bombay branch for ten years. He was not shaken in cross-examination, and he impressed the presiding Judge very favourably as a witness. The legal adviser of the sons in Zanzibar thought he saw it in the summer of 1890. Several persons familiar with the testator's handwriting deposed to it, and the Judge was quite satisfied on that point.

Their Lordships would hesitate much before overruling a conclusion so formed on account of difficulties more or less conjectural; the more especially as the contrary conclusion implies an accusation of elaborate conspiracy, perjury and forgery against Moosa and Fazul, two persons of high commercial position and of otherwise unblemished character; all for a most inadequate temptation, considering the magnitude of the estate and the small amount of gain which could be effected in Moosa's share of it by such a letter. They may, however, content themselves with assuming the genuineness of the letter, because it does not affect the result of their judgment.

The third codicil was prepared by Mr. Sayani, a solicitor of the first rank in Bombay, and the testator's confidential legal advisor. It was prepared as early as August, 1889, on the testator's own instructions; and a declaration of trust to the same effect was prepared at the same time. There was delay in its execution, because the testator was expecting the knighthood actually conferred upon him at the beginning of 1890; and he wished not to execute the documents before that time, saying that his sons might not like it, and might do something to prejudice him. Janbai was opposed to the delay, but his will and not hers carried the day. The execution of the documents was effected in the regular way of business by Sayani at his own office. Janbai, though with her husband, took no part in the instructions or during the execution.

Sayani's evidence must be taken as giving the exact truth of the case so far as he saw it, and there is nothing beyond the intrinsic nature of the disposition (which has been before observed on) to suggest any other conclusion than his. The testator's statement that his wife came and forcibly obtained his signature is not true. It may be that his brain was clouded for the moment; it may be, as the High Court suggests, that he wished to excuse himself to his sons; it may be, and is perhaps more probable, that something had occurred to throw him into a state of irritation not uncommon with strong men whose powers are decaying, and that he vented it in exaggerated and unjust complaints against his wife. Whatever the cause, his letter is clearly contrary to the proved facts of the case.

The two later letters have reference to the dispositions of the fourth codicil. Sayani indeed was not employed in that business, [30] but Fazul, who has in the main given evidence against the codicils, shows how it was executed. By order of the testator he prepared a draft dictated by Janbai. The draft was copied by Muhunil, the cashier of the firm. He is a witness who has in the main given evidence against the codicils, and he is a witness commended by Mr. Justice Bayley. It was read over to the testator, signed by him, and attested by Fazul. There is no evidence of any pressure, and no improbability (as before observed) in the dispositions. Even if the two letters had contained allegations of coercion by Janbai, it is seen by the previous letter of January with what caution they should be received. But the effect of the letters is rather to show that the testator held his own against some importunities of his wife. According to that of August, she wanted a conveyance "in writing" (apparently by deed inter vivos) to her youngest son. According to that of November, she wanted a Mahomedan wife's share "in writing." The testator refused in both cases: saying in the first case that he had not given anything in writing to Moosa himself, upon which she remained silent; and in the second case that what she asked was not the custom among the Khojas, and that he had made his dispositions by will.

The result is that their Lordships agree with the Court of Appeal that there has been no undue influence, and that the third and fourth codicils should be admitted to proof.

The fifth codicil presents questions of much greater difficulty. It bears date the 6th February, 1891. It consists of five clauses. The effect of the first is to give to Janbai's youngest son Mahomed Husein, a boy of six years, a property of considerable value in Bombay, probably one of the properties referred to in the letter of August, 1890. The effect of the second clause is to recognise a draft of Rs. 20,000, recently made by Janbai from the funds of the firm, and to give her Rs. 30,000 in addition. The other three clauses relate to her separate property, and their effect need not be considered. The codicil is attested by Fazul, by Dr. Merwanji, who was in habitual attendance upon the testator, and by Abdula, a Bombay merchant whose daughter was then betrothed to Janbai's son.

[31] It must be admitted that there is much improbability in these dispositions, as to both of which the evidence leads to the belief that they were contrary to recently expressed wishes of the testator. But their Lordships do not follow this point into detail, because the validity of the codicil depends not upon probabilities but upon the circumstances attending its execution.

Four witnesses, being members of or connected with the family, give evidence to support it, viz., Janbai herself, her two daughters Katsibai and Fatmabai, and Abdula, the attesting witness. Janbai's account is that on the 6th February between 10 and 11 A.M., the testator told Fazul to make a draft and gave him instructions. The draft was fair-copied by Mohunlal and read over to the testator; he was then assisted to sit up, and so signed the codicil; only when his hand was shaky, Fazul put his hand on the pen. There were present, besides herself, Fazul, Bandi Ali, Dr. Merwanji and Abdula. She had never asked the testator for the Bombay property, or for the money. She did not take any part in giving instructions for the codicil. To that denial she firmly adhered. Katsibai tells the same story, only adding that the signature took place about a quarter or half past four. Fatmabai substantially agrees. Abdula says that he attested the codicil between 2 and 4 P.M. Earlier in the morning, between 8 and 11, the testator told him that he was giving his bungalow to Mahomed Husein. As to the exact mode of signature he agrees substantially with the others. About the instructions and reading to the testator he knows nothing.

So far the history is plain enough. But the statements of the family witnesses are at variance on important points not only with those of the testator's servants including the attesting witness Fazul, but with those of the third attesting witness Dr. Merwanji. This gentleman is so importtant a witness that Mr. Justice Farran says the whole case for the codicil rests on his testimony. That learned Judge entirely disbelieves, as did Mr. Justice Baylou, the evidence of the family witnesses; and at this bar the respondent’s counsel treated that evidence not a support but as a hindrance to his case. In estimating the effect of Merwanji’s evidence it must be borne in mind that the hour of signature is very important, because the testator’s [32] strength steadily deteriorated throughout the day.
Dr. Bhalchandra, a medical man of good position who was called in on the 5th, tells us that, on the 6th he paid five visits. On that day he believed the testator would die. His temperature was 102° on the 5th, rose to 103° at 3 o’clock on the 6th, and may have gone to 104°. Merwanji tells us that his temperature was 102° in the early morning of the 6th, in the afternoon (about 5 o’clock) 103°, and between 7 and 8, after Bhalchandra’s visit, 104° minus 2 points.

Merwanji went away to his dispensary in the afternoon, and after his return was called into the room where the testator was. Then he gives the following evidence as to the codicil:

"I see my attestation. I saw the testator execute it. After my return at ½ past 6 I was called into the room where Sir Tharia Topan was.

"This document was being dictated by Sir Tharia. A Gujarati mehta was writing. It was dictated by Sir Tharia to Fazulbhai, who was making a rough draft. Only the first clause was dictated by Sir Tharia Topan. Then Sir Tharia Topan, who was in fever and exhausted, told his servants to let him lie down on his bed.

"Then Lady Jambai dictated the last four clauses. Sir Tharia heard her do so. I did not hear him make any objection. A fair copy was made from the rough draft. It took about an hour to write a fair copy.
When the fair copy was made, Sir Tharia Topan was made to sit up in his bed and sign the fair copy. I don’t remember if the fair copy was read over to him before it was signed.

"He was told that it was. He only held out his hand for a pen.

"He was blind and so very weak and his hand was very shaky. The pen was put into his hand, but he was not able to sign. Fazul Mahomed cought hold of his hand along with the pen and signed. After he had signed it was attested.

"At the time this was done the testator was in a conscious state; at the same time he had a little high fever. A little above 103°.

"As long as he dictated the first clause I thought he understood it.
I noticed no change for the worse from the time he ceased dictating to the time he executed the fair copy.

"Seeing he tried to get a pen I think he seemed to understand what he was doing when he executed the document.

"After the first clause was dictated he fell back exhausted. He did not speak from that time till after the document was executed and attested.”

[33] In cross-examination he says: “I asked him, how he felt off and on during the day. That is all I asked him. Sometimes he would say ‘So so,’ sometimes he would only nod. That is all I heard him say during the day except dictating the codicil. Except when at my dis-ensary, I was in his room the whole day and evening.”

Dr. Bhalchandra says he spoke to the testator on the evening of the 6th. “His answers were rational and connected. I believe he was at that time in a fit condition to make his will." But in cross-examination it appears that his only conversations with the testator were to ask him, "How are you?" when he said "I am not feeling well"; and to ask about his appetite, his sleep, and his cough; and "it was from these conversations that I say I believe he was fit to make his will." Now it is obvious that a sick man may well be able to answer simple questions about the state of his body and yet be quite unequal to the effort of making new dispositions of his property.

Yet another doctor gave evidence, one of high standing in Bombay, not specifically as to the codicil, but generally as to the testator’s health. Doctor Bahadurji says that he in company with Bhalchandra visited the testator on the 5th, and again visited him on the 6th, when he describes him as being in a state of semistupor. But this gentleman does not keep memoranda, and reasons are given for thinking that he may be mistaken as to the days of his visits. The other two medical men say that he did not come before the 7th and it is admitted on all hands that after the 6th the testator was quite incapable of attention to business. The first Court expresses doubts on the disputed point, and their Lordships think it safer not to rest weight on Bahadurji’s evidence. They would pass it over without further remark, but for an incidental result of the view taken by the Court of Appeal. The learned Judges there think it so clear that Bahadurji was not present on the 6th, and that everybody must remember the day on which he first came, that they have wholly discredited the testator’s servants, three witnesses strongly relied on by Mr. Justice Bayley, mainly on the ground (which as regards Fazul does not exist) that they ascribe Bahadurji’s visit to the 6th. Nobody intones anything worse than mistake [34] to Dr. Bahadurji, and it seems to their Lordships that even if the other witnesses are wrong in their dates, there is no ground for ascribing to them deliberate perjury so as to vitiate their evidence in every point.

The first of these witnesses is Fazul, the munim. His story is to the following effect. Between 4 and 5 in the evening of 6th, Janbail told him that the testator wanted to give the bungalow to her younger son, and a sum of money to herself. He made a draft from her instructions, and dictated it to Mohunlal. The fair copy was executed, between 7-30 and 8. While it was being executed, Merwanji came in. The draft was not read to the testator, but Mohunlal read the fair copy to him. As to the testator’s sitting up, his inability to sign, and the guidance of his hand, he gives much the same account as that of Merwanji. The testator, he says, was held up by Janbail on one side and Banji Ali on the other. Then he says again that when the signature was being made, Merwanji came in, and adds that at Janbail’s request he put his attestation. He was asked no questions on his statement about the arrival of Merwanji. He says nothing about the visit of Bhadurji.

The next servant witness is Mohunlal the cashier. On the 6th he went to the bungalow in the forenoon with Fazul and waited till between four and five, doing nothing. Then Janbail gave him a draft in Fazul’s handwriting, which at her request he copied. At 7-30 or 8 he with the others went into the testator’s room. As to the circumstances of the signature he gives an account not materially different from the other witnesses, except that he says the document was not read over before the signature. Merwanji, he says, came into the hall after Fazul had attested, and was not in the testator’s room while the codicil was being signed. "When I went out of the room, I saw Merwanji; he had just come. The lady asked him to sign; he said nothing, took the pen and signed at once." He was not asked any further questions on these points. He mentions the visit of Bahadurji about 6 o'clock; this was stated in cross-examination, apparently without remark on either side.

The third servant witness is Bandi Ali, who had been employed upwards of twelve years in one of the sale departments of the business. In the morning of the 6th he by Janbai's order telephoned for Fazul and Mohunlal to come with the cash-book. He took no part in preparing the codicil, but saw the others—Janbai, Fazul and Mohunlal—consulting and writing. The part he took in the signature was to help Janbai in making the testator sit up. His account of that act is much the same as the other accounts; he thinks the document was not read over to the testator, because he was not in a state to understand it. He saw Merwanji when Fazul was making his attestation. He speaks to visits of Bahadurji on the 5th and 6th. On neither of these points was he asked any further questions.

Mr. Justice Bayley says of these three witnesses "they impressed me very favourably by the manner in which they gave their evidence," and that "their evidence was not in the least shaken on cross-examination, though differing in details as truthful witnesses sometimes do." Indeed on a careful examination of the record their Lordships cannot find any matter of importance in which these witnesses contradict one another except as to the reading of the codicil before signature; an important matter no doubt, but one on which it is quite conceivable that the memory might get confused in recalling transactions which from first to last occupied some hours. Even Dr. Merwanji, who says he was present from the beginning of the instructions for the codicil down to its execution, cannot recollect whether it was read over or not. In fact this contradiction, though it has been much dwelt on in argument here, was evidently thought little of at the time. Not one of the witnesses was pressed about it, and it is treated by the Judge as one of those discrepancies which tell rather in favour of than against the veracity of witnesses. Nor is it assigned by the Court of Appeal as a reason for discrediting the witnesses. They dwell slightly on the position of the witnesses as servants of the firm and, therefore, presumably favourable to Moosa, but mainly on the statements of Mohunlal and Bandi Ali with respect to Bahadurji's visits. Now, assuming in Janbai's favour that these statements were not according to the fact, there is nothing to show that they were made with any intention to deceive, or that any particular importance was attached to them at the time. They [36] come into the narrative quite casually, as it would seem, and they were not tested by any questioning. If Bahadurji himself might innocently fall into error about the date of his visit, much more easily might those who only professed to have seen him in the house. In their Lordships' judgment no ground has been shown for throwing the evidence of these three witnesses out of the case.

If the evidence in question is held to be an accurate account of the events, there can be but one conclusion, viz., that when the testator's hand was made to sign the codicil he was hopelessly incompetent. If it is taken only on a level with other evidence, as coming from men intending to speak the truth, but liable to error, and subject to correction from other quarters, then the evidence must be balanced. What is the evidence for the codicil? That of the family witnesses, seeing how it was treated by the Courts below and by the respondent's counsel here, may be put out of the question for this purpose. The slight value of Dr. Bhalchandra's evidence has been shown before. There remains Dr. Merwanji, and their Lordships agree with Mr. Justico Farran that if the codicil is to be supported at all, it must be on his evidence alone.

Dr. Merwanji is a man in good position and with no apparent cause of bias except the fact that he attested the codicil. Though there are some inexplicable contradictions between him and other witnesses on more points than one, no one has imputed falsehood to him. Supposing him to be right on each of the disputed points, the case amounts to this:
that the testator was in a state of high fever and of extreme and increasing weakness; that he was strong enough to dictate a clause; that he was then exhausted, fell back, and never spoke again till after the signature; that his wife dictated the rest, he making no objection; that some time (an hour or so) afterwards a fair copy was brought to him to sign; whether it was read over to him or not the witness cannot say; that he held out his hand for a pen as the witness thought; that he was not able to write; that he was made to sit up and his hand was guided; that his holding out a hand for a pen when invited to sign made the witness think that he understood what he was doing at the time when he [37] executed the document; that the witness had no communication with the testator all day except to ask him off and on how he felt and to receive for answer a nod, or the expression "so, so"; and that the testator said nothing else the whole day except to dictate the codicil.

Now the great importance of Merwanji's evidence consists in his statement that the testator dictated the first clause of the codicil. If that is left out, his account is that of a man who had all day been declining in power and had become at length wholly incapable, too exhausted to speak, to sit up, or to write; this too being his last effort, for it is not suggested that he was afterwards of capacity to act, and it is that circumstance which caused so acute a controversy over the dates of Bahadurji's visits.
Supposing that the testator's dictation is accepted as clearly established, there is still the interval of an hour between that act and the signature, during which he did nothing but hold out his hand; and the evidence, to put it at the highest, still leaves open the inference that after he sank back exhausted he was not capable of a testamentary act.

If then Merwanji's evidence stood absolutely unimpeached, it would hardly support the respondent's obligation to prove that the testator was capable. But so far from being unimpeached, on this point Dr. Merwanji is in flat contradiction to every one of the seven other persons who have given evidence bearing on it. The evidence of the family witnesses may be untrustworthy. But it is impossible to shut our eyes to the fact that Janbai herself, supported by her daughters and her intended son-in-law, flatly denies all participation in the instructions for the codicil, and gives an account of its preparation in a different way and at a different time of day. And it is very difficult indeed to believe that so intelligent a lady would have committed herself to such statements, if all the time she had in her mind the consciousness that, in the presence of Dr. Merwanji and (as he says) of Abdul and of two out of the three servants, she had taken the prominent part, equally impossible to mistake or to forget, of dictating the greater part of the codicil out of her own head. Then comes the evidence of the three servants, as to which their Lordships have already reasons why they cannot acquiesce in its [38] summary rejection by the Court of Appeal. That evidence leaves it very doubtful at what point of the proceedings Merwanji came upon the scene;
but except in one respect, viz., whether the fair copy was read to the testator, it is quite clear and consistent as to the mode in which the codicil was prepared and signed. Dr. Merwanji was, with intervals of visits to his dispensary, about the house all day; and it may be that, having heard much conversation he has not kept his memory clear about that anxious time. But whatever may be the explanation of his evidence, it is quite unequal to bear the weight of proving a due execution of the codicil. Their Lordships cannot accept it as giving a correct account of what happened; and they do not see their way to depart from the decision of Mr. Justice Bayley in accepting the account of the three servants as substantially consistent and correct.

The first Court decreed probate of the will and first two codicils and ordered the plaintiff (Janbai) to pay costs of suit. The Court of Appeal varied that decree by pronouncing in favour of all five codicils, and by ordering all costs to be paid out of the testator’s estate. Their Lordships hold that the decree of the appellate Court should be varied by ordering that the fifth codicil should not be admitted to probate, and quod ultra affirmed. They will humbly advise Her Majesty to this effect. As to the costs of this appeal, each party has succeeded on a substantial point, and has failed on a substantial point; and their Lordships follow the usual course by directing that they shall bear their own costs.

Appeal allowed; decree varied.

TULAJI FATASEING RAJE BHOSLE (Original Judgment-debtor), Appellant v. BALABHAI LAKHMICHAND (Original Decree-holder), Respondent. [10th March, 1896.]

Execution—Attachment—Allowance payable through post office—Attachment of money in hands of public officer—Anticipatory attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 272, sch. 4, Form 142.

Section 272 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) does not allow of an anticipatory attachment of money expected to reach the hands of a public officer, but applies only to money actually in his hands.

[F., 14 C.L.J. 137 = 16 C.W.N 14 = 11 Ind. Cas. 421 ; R., 24 Ind. Cas. 617 = 17 Bom. L.R. 133.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, confirming the order of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge, in an execution proceeding.

The appellant Tulaji Fatesing was in receipt of a monthly allowance of Rs. 500 from the Akalkot State. It was paid to him at Poona through the post office there. The respondent (plaintiff) obtained a decree against Tulaji in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, and in execution attached, by a prohibitory order directed to the Post Master, Rs. 300 out of the allowance. The prohibitory order was issued on the 6th April, 1895, and was received by the Post Master on the 8th April.

He received the money order on the 13th April.

Tulajji applied to the Court to remove the attachment. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application, holding that the allowance was liable to attachment and exempted from the operation of s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), as it was neither a political pension nor a grant by the British Government.

On appeal by the judgment-debtor the Judge confirmed the order.

Tulajji thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

[40] Branson with Ghanasham N. Nadkarni appeared for the appellant (Tulajji).—The attachment purported to be made under s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). Under that section the property to be attached must be in the hands of the public officer. But in the present case the Post Master had no money in his hands when he received the order of attachment. We contend that s. 272 is not applicable. Arrears of maintenance can be attached under that section, but not the right to future maintenance.

Next we contend that an allowance of this kind cannot be attached under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). This allowance was granted to the appellant by the Akalkot State for his maintenance and, therefore, cannot be attached. It may be stopped at any time by the State. The test is, what would a purchaser get if the right to the allowance be put up to sale. It is merely a personal allowance and the purchaser would get nothing if the State stopped the allowance—Ghanashamlal v. Bhanasal (1); Dvicali v. Apaji Ganesh (2); Gulab Kuar v. Bansidhar (3); Bhurub Chunder Ghose v. Nubo Chunder Gooho (4).

Nagindas T. Marphatia appeared for the respondent (judgment creditor).—We do not ask for the attachment of the allowance that may become due in future. Here we have attached the sum of Rs. 300 which has become due. As soon as the money was paid to the forwarding post office at Akalkot for despatch to Poona it ceased to be an allowance, and it became money belonging to the appellant-debtor.

[PARSONS, J.—Can you levy attachment in anticipation?]

We submit we can, because the money had already become the judgment debtor’s property at Akalkot. The prohibitory order was in force when the money reached Poona, and it came into full operation when the money was received by the Post Master at Poona—Narasimhulu v. Adiappa (5); Lalumal v. Mahomed Sherdil Khan (6).

[41] The money is not payable by the British Government and, therefore, it is not a pension under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

JUDGMENT.

FAIRGAN, C. J.—It is not disputed by Mr. Nagindas for the respondent that the allowance payable to the defendant in this case was not attachable until the sums payable in respect of it were received by the post office for his benefit and on his behalf. The attachment order cannot, therefore, be supported on the ground of its being an attachment of the defendant's right to receive the sum in question. The attachment can only be supported as an attachment of moneys in the hands of a public officer within the meaning of s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is admitted, however, that at the date of the attachment (6th April, 1895) there was no money in the hands of the Post Master at Poona. The money sought to be attached did not reach his hands until the 13th April, and so could not be attached on the 6th. Section 272 does not, in my opinion, allow of an anticipatory attachment of money expected to reach the hands of a public officer, but applies only to moneys actually in his hands.

The Court reverses the order of attachment with costs throughout on respondent.

PARSONS, J.—I concur. Section 272 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the attachment of property which is deposited in or is in the custody of a Court or public officer. The form (No. 142, sch. 4) recites an application for the "attachment of certain money now in your hands (here state how the money is supposed to be in the hands of the person addressed)." Thus it is clear both from the words of the section and the form that the property sought to be attached must be actually in the possession of the Court or officer to enable it to be attached under s. 272. It cannot be attached in anticipation of receipt. The District Judge thinks that such a construction of the section would operate to prevent the attachment of salaries, but there is a special provision for them made in s. 268 which he has apparently overlooked.

Order reversed.

[42] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

VARAJLAL MULCHAND AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. KASTUR DHARAMCHAND (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [10th March, 1896].

Decree—Execution—Attachment in execution—Suit to declare property attached not liable in execution—Injunction against sale of property pending decision of suit on plaintiff giving security for interest on the sum representing value of attached property—Subsequent dismissal of suit with costs—Application by defendant in execution of decree for the interest for which security ordered by injunction—Application disallowed—Remedy under s. 427, Civil Procedure Code—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 283, 492, 497.

Kastur having obtained a decree against one Vanmali attached a house in execution. Varajlal intervened under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and applied that the house, if sold, should be sold subject to his mortgage. His application was dismissed and he thereupon brought a suit (No. 649 of 1887) for a declaration that the house was not liable in execution of Kastur's decree. That suit was dismissed by the lower Court, and Varajlal appealed. Pending the hearing of the appeal he applied for and obtained under s. 493 of the Civil Procedure Code an injunction restraining the sale until the result of the appeal on his giving security for interest at six per cent. on Rs. 2,000, the acknowledged value of the house. The appeal was heard in due course and was dismissed with costs, and thereupon Kastur in execution of the decree in this last mentioned suit (No. 648 of 1887) applied to recover the interest for which security was ordered to be given by the District Court.

* Second Appeal, No. 331 of 1895.
He held that he was not entitled to recover it. A Court of execution cannot award interest when the decree is silent. The respondent (Kastur) had his remedy under s. 497 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that remedy was obtainable on application, not to the Court of execution, but to the Court which issued the injunction.

[Rs. 17 M.L.J. 310.]

Second appeal from the decision of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

One Kastur Dharamchand having obtained a decree against Vanmali and others attached a house in execution.

Thereupon Varajal Mulchand intervened under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) claiming a mortgage lien on the attached house. His application was dismissed [43] and he then filed a suit (No. 648 of 1887) praying for a declaration that Kastur was not entitled to sell the said house in execution except subject to his mortgage. This suit was dismissed with costs by the lower Court.

He thereupon filed an appeal in the District Court and at the same time applied for an interim injunction against Kastur restraining him from selling the house pending the disposal of the appeal. This application was made under s. 492 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and not under s. 545. The District Court on this application granted the injunction if Varajal gave a security for interest at 6 per cent. on the value of the property. The order of injunction was in the following terms:

"If the applicant gives security for interest at 6 per cent. on Rs. 2,000 which is acknowledged to be the value of the property by both parties should he fail to establish his mortgage claim and for fulfilling the orders of the Appellate Court, I make the order absolute."

The appeal to the District Court in suit No. 648 of 1887 failed, and the decree of the lower Court dismissing the suit was confirmed, and subsequently a second appeal to the High Court was also dismissed with costs.

Thereupon Kastur applied in execution of the decree in this latter suit (No. 648 of 1887) to recover from Varajal Rs. 236, the interest at 6 per cent. on Rs. 2,000 for which security was ordered to be given by the District Court.

Varajal contended that the order as to the giving of security did not entitle Kastur to recover interest in execution, and that no interest could be recovered in execution of the decree in suit No. 648 of 1887, as that decree contained no order to pay interest.

The Subordinate Judge refused execution of the decree in respect of the interest claimed.

In appeal the District Judge allowed the interest. In giving his decision he said:

"The principal reason why the Subordinate Judge refused execution is that the decree sought to be executed does not direct any interest to be paid to the defendant by plaintiff."

When an appellant obtains a stay of execution pending an appeal and gives security bond to the decree of the appellate Court, the usual [44] way of enforcing such security bond when necessary is by ordinary execution proceedings: vide Venkapa Naik v. Bastingappa bin Kotrabasappa (1). Nor is it usual in the decratal orders of the appellate Court to make any reference to the security bond or its conditions. It is quite true, as stated by the Subordinate Judge, that the suit was one for a declaratory decree, and no interest could be awarded. It was, however, competent to the Court to have granted compensation to the defendant under s. 497 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the probability is that no demand was made for compensation; because the defendant felt that under the security bond he could recover his full compensation. There does not, therefore, appear to me any objection to grant execution in respect of the interest. The Subordinate Judge also remarks that the appellant in his original decree has obtained an order awarding him interest on the decreetal amount, and that he cannot recover double interest on it. As, however, the appellant does not seek to recover double interest from the same person, this does not appear an insurmountable difficulty. What the appellant really seeks to recover is the consideration which respondents undertook to pay on account of the grant of the temporary injunction. I do not see that it was necessary to make any reference to this security bond in the decree of the first appellate Court. Looking to all the equitable circumstances of the case, the respondents are clearly liable to pay the interest promised in the security bond. That bond was not merely to make good the value of the property should any accident occur by which it became injured or ceased to exist, e.g., a fire. A regular suit is not the proper procedure to enforce a security bond given in proceedings for a stay of execution, and unless the appellant is to completely lose his equitable rights, he must be able to recover them in execution."

The District Judge, therefore, directed execution to issue for the interest claimed. Varajjal filed a second appeal in the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the appellant Varajjal.—The injunction granted by the District Court staying the sale if security was given was not made under s. 545 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was an injunction made under s. 492. That being so, Kastur should have claimed compensation as provided in s. 497, but he has not done so. The District Judge has not distinguished between ss. 545 and 492. No interest can be awarded in execution of the decree in this case, because the decree itself does not award it—Sadashiv v. Ramalinga (1); Hurro Doorga v. Maharani Surat Soondari (2); Forester v. The Secretary of State for India (3).

[45] Goverdhanram M. Tripatti, for respondent.—The order of injunction was no doubt made under s. 492. The respondent (Kastur) might have applied for compensation under s. 497, but he is not prejudiced from enforcing in execution the security ordered by the District Judge. See s. 253, Civil Procedure Code. The injunction refers to the then pending litigation. Although the decree is silent as to the interest, the Court can enforce the injunction order.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The present respondent in 1896 attached a house in execution of a decree against some one who is not a party in the present litigation. The present appellants intervened under s. 278 for a declaration of their mortgage lien, and were unsuccessful. Then they sued for the same relief, but were unsuccessful in the suit and both appeals. That suit was No. 648 of 1887. In the appeal therein to the District Court, that Court granted an injunction to restrain the present respondent from selling the house. Both the learned pleaders before me say the injunction was

(1) 2 I.A. 219 (228). (2) 9 I.A. 1. (3) 3 C. 161 (169). under s. 492. The injunction imposed on the present appellants an obligation to pay interest at 6 per cent. on the occurrence of certain future contingencies, on the value of the property settled to be Rs. 2,000.

The present respondent claimed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to recover this interest by way of execution of the decree in suit
No. 648. That decree is silent on the subject. No order was made upon the injunction by the Court that granted it. The Subordinate Judge held that as the decree was silent regarding this interest he could not award it as a Court of execution. The District Judge has reversed the part of the order which rejects the interest claimed in the darkhast. He conceded, as has been conceded in the full argument here, that the respondents had a procedure provided under s. 497 of the Civil Procedure Code before the District Court. This raises the question whether the law allows by imposition that the respondent may also present a darkhast like this to the Subordinate Judge. The case cited by the District Judge—Venkapa
v. Baslingappa (1)—relates to a surety and is an interpretation of ss. 253 and 583, and arose out of a matter under s. 545 of the Code. We do not think it relevant to the present question.

[46] The settled doctrine is that a Court of execution cannot award interest where the decree is silent—Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai(2), Huroo Doorga Chowdhriani v. Maharani Surut Soondari Debi (3), and Forester v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (4). A fortiori this doctrine must apply where, as under s. 497, a special procedure is provided in a different forum. We think s. 497 applies, and that the relief which the District Judge might award upon the application would be pursuant to an adjudication under the section. To hold that the executing Court can adjudicate would be contrary to s. 497, which assigns the duty to the Court which issued the injunction. To hold that no adjudication is necessary would also be contrary to s. 497, which further provides for the result being embodied in the decree. If, then, the respondents had wished to get relief in the matter of interest from the Court of execution, they should have first applied under s. 497, and got provision made in the decree of the District Court.

For these reasons we reverse the order of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge: the respondent to pay the costs of both appeals.

Decree reversed.

APPENDATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

RAMCHANDRA GANESH PURANDHARE (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. RAMCHANDRA KONDIAJI KATE AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Respondents. * [11th March, 1896.]

Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Suit by purchaser against vendor for specific performance of contract of sale—Covenant by purchaser to build a temple—Specific performance refused—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 21.

On the 15th November, 1893, the first defendant agreed to sell a house to the plaintiff. The contract contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiff to build a temple and to secure an annuity to the vendor and his wife. On the [97] 21st of the same month the first defendant sold and conveyed the same house to the second defendant and put him in possession. In the suit brought by the plaintiff against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for specific performance of the contract of the 15th November,

Held (1) that the second defendant was a proper party to the suit.

(2) That specific performance could not be granted, the covenants contained in the agreement being such as the Court could not enforce.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona.

The plaintiff sued for specific performance of an agreement of sale (satekhut) passed to him by the first defendant on the 15th November, 1893. By that agreement the first defendant agreed to sell a certain house to the plaintiff for Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 100 was paid by the plaintiff as earnest-money. Two deeds of conveyance were to be executed conveying different parts of the property. The agreement of sale contained a clause under which the plaintiff (the purchaser) agreed to build a temple and to secure the payment of an annuity to the first defendant and his wife. The following clauses in the document set forth this part of the agreement:

"3. You are to erect a temple of the deity Datt in the place to be entered in the gift-deed and to raise in front thereof a sabba-mandap for Katha and Kirtan. You are to build the aforesaid temple and the sabha-mandap within six years from this day. If you do not do so within the aforesaid time you are to pay Rs. 2,000 (two thousand) for the expenses for the said devasthan (temple institution). Within that sum either I or any body else will erect the temple and the mandap. You, your sons and grandsons, &c., from generation to generation should use the said temple institution, the place and the building and perform the Puja, &c., of the deity. All the right to receive the income and carry on every kind of management, &c., belongs to you. I shall have nothing to do with the same.

"4. Besides (doing what is stipulated above with regard to) the above mentioned property, so long as myself and my wife are alive you are to pay me or in my absence to my wife Rs. 5 every month from this day. After my and my wife’s death you are to spend the said Rs. 5 every month towards the said temple. Should you fail to pay the fixed sum every month, you are to deposit a sum of Rs. 1,000 (one thousand) at 8 annas per cent. per month with any banking firm that we may name, so that we may get the above sum without obstruction. So long as we both are alive we will draw the interest on the above mentioned amount. After the death of both of us, you should take the interest on the said amount or the principal amount itself and do as mentioned above.

On the 21st November, 1893, the first defendant sold the same property to the second defendant by a deed which was duly registered, and the second defendant was put into possession.

The plaintiff sued both defendants, praying for specific performance of the above contract of sale.

The second defendant pleaded that he purchased bona fide and without notice of the prior sale to the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge held that the second defendant had notice of the prior sale to the plaintiff, but that the contract of sale to the plaintiff could not be specifically enforced having regard to s. 21 (cl. b and c) of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff appealed.

Lang (Advocate General with Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan) appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—We merely desire that documents should be executed according to the satekhat and nothing more. Such a suit does not in any way contravene the provisions of s. 21 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877)—Blackett v. Bates (1). The Judge has decided on all the issues in our favour.

Macpherson (with Inverarity and Narayan G. Chandavarkar) appeared for the second defendant.—We rely on s. 21 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877). Supposing that specific performance could be granted, still it cannot be enforced against us, as we have not joined in passing the satekhat—Luckumsey Ookerda v. Fazulla Cassumbhoy (2).

[PARSONS, J., referred to Chunder Kant Roy v. Krishna Sunder Roy (3).]

That decision is against us; still the decision of this Court should be followed.

[49] We have bought the property for valuable consideration and are in possession. The plaintiff's remedy is to sue us for possession.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The first defendant in this case on the 16th November, 1893, agreed to sell the house, the subject-matter of the suit, to the plaintiff; and the plaintiff on the same day paid him Rs. 100 as earnest-money. The sale contract or satekhat (Ex. 43) was to be carried out by two documents conveying different parts of the same premises, the first being styled a deed of gift. The second was to be in form an ordinary deed of purchase. The plaintiff was to pay Rs. 4,000 as the price of the house. The contract also contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiff to build a temple and to secure a small annuity to the vendor and his wife.

On the 21st of the same month the first defendant sold and conveyed the same house to the defendant No. 2 for Rs. 8,000 and put the second defendant in possession of it on the same day (Ex. 35).

The plaintiff has filed the present suit for specific performance of his contract of the 16th November against both the defendants. It has been objected that the suit is not maintainable in that form, but we consider that there is no force in that objection. Chundar Kant v. Krishna Sunder (1) is a case exactly similar to the present, where the original vendor and his alienee with notice were made parties to the suit. See, too, Fry on Specific Performance, p. 18.

The important question to be determined at the threshold of the case is whether the second defendant when he purchased was a transferee for value who had paid his money in good faith and without notice of the plaintiff’s original contract within the meaning of cl. (b) to s. 27 of the Specific Relief Act.

We agree with the Subordinate Judge in his finding that the second defendant was a transferee for value. The evidence that he actually paid the purchase-money is overwhelming. There was a particular reason, too, for his purchase of the house derived from the circumstance that it adjoined his own; and from the connection between him and the first defendant there is no ground for assuming that the whole transaction was a sham to get rid of the plaintiff’s purchase and that he is now holding merely as a trustee for the first defendant. We think that he clearly purchased on his own account and to suit his own object. After a careful perusal of the evidence we do not feel disposed to differ from the Subordinate Judge in his finding that the plaintiff has not proved the four specific instances of direct notice of his contract to the second defendant which his witnesses depose to. The Subordinate Judge saw these witnesses and was in a position to judge of the credit to be given to them, and the reasons which he has given for distrusting their testimony appear to us to be of considerable cogency.

The Subordinate Judge has, however, come to the conclusion, from the facts elicited in the examination of the second defendant himself, that he did not pay his money in good faith and without notice of the plaintiff’s contract. The correctness of that conclusion from the facts deposed to has been assailed before us in the argument of counsel for the respondent. (His Lordship referred to the evidence and continued:—) We have read over the evidence more than once, and the conclusion to which it inevitably leads us is that the defendant No. 2 is not a purchaser in good faith and without notice within the meaning of the section, and we, therefore, agree with the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the fourth issue.

The Subordinate Judge has refused to decree specific performance of the plaintiff’s contract on the ground that the covenants which the plaintiff has entered into are not such as the Court can specifically enforce. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that they are of that nature. The Advocate General, however, for the appellant contends that the plaintiff has not directly entered into these covenants, but has only agreed that the deeds to be executed to carry out the contract shall contain such covenants on his part. The law on this part of the case is expressed with great clearness by Craaworth, L.C., in Blackett v. Bates (2) cited by the Advocate General. “If the arbitrator instead of awarding (51) that the plaintiff should do certain acts had awarded that the lease to be executed should contain covenants by the plaintiffs to do them, the case would have stood on an entirely different footing. The Court would not then have been called on to enforce either directly or indirectly the doing of those acts, but merely to decree the execution of a lease containing certain covenants, a kind of relief which is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Court and open to no objection." These observations apply exactly to the contract in the present case. We must read it carefully, therefore, to see whether it provides that the deeds to be executed shall contain these covenants or whether the plaintiff has directly covenanted by the contract to perform them. Having done so we find no agreement expressed in it that the deeds to be executed shall contain any stipulations whatever. One is to be in form a deed of gift and the other a deed of sale. The first defendant is to get these prepared, stamped, and registered. There is not a word said as to their containing any covenant whatever. The agreement that the plaintiff is to erect a temple within six years, as well as that to secure an annuity to the first defendant and his wife, are direct obligations imposed on the plaintiff by the agreement and so fall within the general rule laid down in Blackett v. Bates and not within the exception which the passage we have cited from the judgment lays down. In decreeing specific performance of the contract as a whole we should be decreeing the plaintiff to perform his part of the agreement as well as directing the defendant to execute the conveyance. The Advocate General at the hearing of the appeal treated the case as though the contract was that the plaintiff should join in the sale-deeds for the purpose of covenancing to perform these acts, and on the supposition that such was its nature we were at the time misled by his argument. The plaintiff is entitled to recover the Rs. 100 earnest-money from defendant No. 1.

(1) 10 C. 710.
(2) L.B. 1 Ch. App. 117.

We confirm the decree with costs as against defendant No. 2. Decree as against defendant No. 1 varied by awarding the plaintiff Rs. 100 against him.

Decree confirmed and partially varied.

[52] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

GODAVARIBAI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. SAGUNABAI AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [16th March, 1896.]

Hindu law—Widow—Maintenance—Separate maintenance and residence—Family property too small to admit of allotment of separate maintenance.

Where the family income was too small to admit of an allotment to a widow of a separate maintenance, and there was no family house, but a small portion of land which was the site of a house.

Held, that the widow was not entitled to a separate maintenance, but might be allowed, if she so desired, to occupy during her life-time a portion of the land, not exceeding one-third.

SECOND appeal from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana, with appellate powers.

The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendants, who were the widows of her husband’s brother, Rs. 72 for three years' maintenance and a third share in a piece of vacant ground for residence, alleging that defendant No. 1 was in possession of the family property which had belonged formerly to the father of her (plaintiff’s) husband and of the defendants’ husband and that she refused to maintain the plaintiff.

Defendant No. 1 answered (inter alia) that the claim was time-barred and that the net profits of the family property amounted to fifteen maunds of paddy only, which were insufficient to maintain her and two unmarried young daughters.

Defendant No. 2 did not appear.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant was not personally liable, but that her liability depended upon the possession of sufficient ancestral property, that the claim was not barred by the law of limitation, that the net annual income of the family property was not more than Rs. 40-4-0, and that no surplus remained for plaintiff’s maintenance, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover one-third share of the land. He, therefore, rejected the claim.

[53] On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Narayan V. Gokhale, appeared for appellant (plaintiff).—The plaintiff is the widow of a co-parcener. The income of the family property may be small, still provision must be made for the maintenance of a widow in the family—Strange’s Hindu Law, pp. 67 and 68. Some arrangement should be made for the plaintiff’s residence.

Sadashiv R. Bakhle, appeared for the respondents (defendants).—As to maintenance we rely on Savitribai v. Luximibai (1), Kasturbai v. Shivajiram (2), Ramchandra v. Sagunabai (3), and West and Bühler, p. 757. Both the lower Courts have concurred in holding that the family property is insufficient to allot separate maintenance to plaintiff. This is a finding of fact.

As to residence, there is only a vacant space and no house. Defendant No. 1 herself is living with her father.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The present falls, we think, within the principle enunciated in the cases “that a widow cannot claim separate maintenance where the family property is so small as not reasonably to admit of an allotment to her of a separate maintenance”—Savitribai v. Luximibai (1), Kasturbai v. Shivajiram (2) and Ramchandra v. Sagunabai (3). The income of defendant No. 1, who is the widow of the last holder, derived from the family property is only Rs. 40 per annum or little more than Rs. 3 per month, and out of that she has to support herself and her daughters. There is no house in which we can assign a residence to the plaintiff, but there is the site of a house. She may be allowed, if she so desires, to occupy during her life-time a portion of that site not exceeding one-third of it. Such portion can be determined in execution if necessary. Decree varied accordingly.

Decree varied.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IMPERATRIX v. JUMA BIN FAKIR AND URZEER BIN SULLEMAN,*

[17th March, 1896 and 14th January, 1897.]

Uganda—Consular Court—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Consular Court over persons not resident within a British Protectorate—Aiding the waging of war against a friendly power—Africa Orders in Council, 1889, 1892, 1893.

Two natives of a German Protectorate were convicted by the English Consular Court of Uganda of aiding and abetting the King of Unyororo in waging war against the King of Uganda and the Queen-Empress under ss. 49 and 50 of the Africa Order in Council of 1889 as supplemented by the Order of Council of 1892 and 1893. One of them was also convicted of slave-dealing.

Held, that the English Consular Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the accused, even if subjects of a Signatory Power, were not resident and their offences were not committed within a British Protectorate.

Held, also, that the alleged fact that the 'locus in quo' was in British military occupation gave no jurisdiction to the Consular Court.

REFERENCE from the Consular Court for the district of Uganda (in Africa) held at Kampala under the Africa Order in Council, 1889 (2), cl. 75.

The accused were convicted of taking part in operations of war by aiding and abetting Kabarage (King of Unyororo) in carrying on war, insurrection or revolution against the Kingdom of Uganda and the Protecting Power, and the first accused was further convicted of slave-trading.

The charges against the accused were framed under cls. 48 and 50 of the Africa Order in Council, 1889, which were as follows:—

"48. If any British subject does any of the following things without Her Majesty’s authority, that is to say:—

[55] "Leaves war or takes any part in any operation of war against, or aids or abets any person in carrying on war, insurrection, or rebellion against any king, chief, tribe, or power, every person so offending shall be guilty of an offence against this order, and on conviction thereof shall be liable (in the discretion of the Court before which he is convicted) to be punished by imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding £1,000, or by a fine not exceeding £1,000 without imprisonment.

"In addition to such punishment every such conviction shall, of itself, and without further proceedings, make the person convicted liable to deportation, and the Court, before which he is convicted, may order that he be deported to such place as the Court directs."

(2) See the London Gazette for Tuesday, October 22, 1889. By cl. 21 of this Order in Council, the High Court of Bombay is the Court of Appeal for the Courts in Africa, acting under the said Order in Council, and by cl. 75, where a Consular Court sentences a person to imprisonment exceeding twelve months, the sentence should be submitted for review to the prescribed Court of Appeal.

See also Africa Order in Council, 1892 (London Gazette, July 1, 1892), and Africa Order in Council, 1893 (London Gazette, July 21, 1893).
50. A person shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this order—

Who smuggles or imports into or exports from any place any goods with intent to avoid payment of any duty payable thereon to any recognized chief, or king, government, tribe, or people, or any goods the importation or exportation whereof (as the case may be) into such place is prohibited by any such chief, king, government, tribe, or people of such place.

A person convicted of an offence against this article shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months, or fine not exceeding £50, or both those punishments; and any goods smuggled or imported in contravention of this article may, on conviction of the offender, or, if he absconds or evades trial, be declared forfeited to Her Majesty together with any ship, boat, cask, case, or receptacle wholly or partly belonging to the offender, and containing such goods."

The accused were sentenced by Mr. Ernest Berkeley, Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General for Uganda, to imprisonment and hard labour for three years and two years respectively.

The sentence now came before the High Court of Bombay for review under the aforesaid cl. 75 of the Africa Order in Council of 1889, with the following explanatory observations by Mr. Berkeley:

"Under the provisions of arts. 74 and 75 of the Africa Order in Council, 1889, Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul General for Uganda, &c., has the honour to submit the accompanying sentence for review by the Supreme Court of Bombay, together with the following explanatory observations regarding the case:

"In the early part of this year, information came to hand that certain Arab caravans were passing up from the south-west of Uganda, between Uganda and Lakes Albert Edward and Albert, into Unyoro with arms and ammunition for trade against ivory and slaves with Kabarega, King of Unyoro, then at war with [56] Uganda and with Her Majesty the Queen. There were various parties all working under an Arab named Khalilka.

"Steps were at once taken to intercept them. On the 20th of May, a patrol came across one of the parties, who opened fire on them and got away, wounding several men of the patrol. In June, Lieutenant Vandelette, Scots Guards, surprised the main camp of these parties in Unyoro itself. He captured a quantity of gunpowder and blew up some more; he also delivered a number of slaves (women and children) that bad been bought by these traders. All the traders, however, got away, securing at the same time a certain number of slaves, but a party of them were shortly afterwards intercepted and captured by Captain Pulleyne, Scots Guards, in charge of a Government station further south.

"The two accused were in command of this party, and as will be observed from their evidence, although they at first pleaded 'not guilty,' they subsequently admitted having been concerned in powder-removing and slave-trading.

"It may be added that ample further evidence could have been adduced as to these facts, but the accused were in reality only concerned to prove that they were not with the party that fired on the Government patrol on May 20th."

The reference was heard by a Division Bench of the High Court (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).
Young (amicus curiae), for the accused (with him Maneksha J. Taleyar-khan).—The evidence on the record does not prove that the offence was committed by the accused. There is no proof that there were hostilities going on between Kabarega and the Protectorate of Uganda and Her Majesty the Queen. Without such proof the conviction is illegal and ought not to be confirmed in revision.

With regard to the question of jurisdiction, there is no doubt that Unyoro is within the British sphere of influence; but there is nothing on record, or in the books that have been written upon Africa, to show that the country of Unyoro was at any time brought within the Protectorate of Uganda.

On the contrary, it appears from the information given in the public press that Unyoro is a kingdom with which the Queen is at present waging war, and an official despatch that appeared in the Times of the 20th February, 1896, shows that a force of 20,000 men is at present employed against it. Unyoro being thus wholly outside the British Protectorate of Uganda, the conviction of the accused for acts done within Unyoro are illegal. [37] See Hall on the Foreign Powers and Jurisdiction of the British Crown, p. 217.

As no declaration has been produced or even alleged to have been made by the Queen bringing Unyoro within Her Majesty’s protection, cl. 3 of the preamble of the Order of 1892 does not apply.

The accused are not British subjects, they are natives of a territory which has been occupied by Germany. No evidence to contradict this fact has been produced by the prosecution, and there is nothing whatever on the record to show that either of them is a resident either in the Protectorate of Uganda or in the British sphere of influence outside. They are, therefore, foreigners. No British Court has ever assumed jurisdiction in a Protectorate over non-British subjects, except under circumstances showing consent, &c. The Treaty of Berlin in 1885 for the first time recognised the principle of giving jurisdiction over non-British subjects; but this, too, was by consent. The accused being German subjects have no power to consent to British jurisdiction. That power was taken away from them by the Africa Order in Council, 1892. The only course open to the prosecution was to bring the case within the Africa Order in Council, 1889. But that order does not make them British subjects, and so art. 48 of that order, which in terms applies only to British subjects, does not apply to them. Under the Africa Orders in Council of 1889, 1892 and 1893 a person who is not a British subject or resident in a British Protectorate is not liable for a crime committed outside a British Protectorate even though committed within a British “sphere of influence.” The lower Court did not treat them as British subjects. This appears from the fact that no charge of treason or misprision of treason was framed against them. British subjects supplying arms to a hostile power, even if in the enemy’s country, are guilty of treason: see 1 East P. C., pp. 52-53, and 2 Stephen’s History of Criminal Law, 14.

No doubt the Africa Order in Council of 1892 renders subjects of the Signatory Powers justiciable in like manner as British subjects, but we contend (1) that these men are not subjects but only under the protection of a Signatory Power, viz., Germany, and that though under the Order in Council of 1889 a British subject is declared to include a person under British protection, there is no proof that German law is the same. See Hall on Foreign Jurisdiction, p. 288.
(2) Even if they are German subjects the extension of the jurisdiction given by the Africa Order in Council of 1892 is clearly confined to such subjects as are residents within a British Protectorate or commit a crime within a British Protectorate. See Africa Order in Council of 1892—preamble and s. 2.

The jurisdiction does not extend to such persons committing a crime in a mere "sphere of influence."

The charge of slave-dealing must also fall to the ground, as non-British subjects are only justiciable for such offences if they are committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiral, and those were not so committed—Stat. 5, Geo. IV, c. 113, s. 9; Stephen's History of Criminal Law, Vol. 2, p. 27.

The only cognizable offence that the accused committed is that they are said to have imported contraband of war. Assuming that they did, the only rightful penalty for that is confiscation. See Hall's International Law, p. 691; Phillimore, Vol. 3, pp. 387, 404, 410—410.

Lang (Advocate General) (with him Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader) for the Crown.—The Order of Council, 1889, extends over the Continent of Africa, and the British sphere includes the whole of East Africa. From the map given in the Rise of our East African Empire by Captain F. D. Lugard it will be seen that the British sphere of influence extends over that portion of Africa which is to the east of the 30th degree of longitude, and Unyoro is to the east of that degree of longitude. The maps given by Captain Lugard show that various portions of Unyoro are, as a matter of fact, actually occupied by British forts. The red dots on the maps show the positions of these forts. The forts extend almost up to Lake Albert, the place where the accused were arrested or seen passing with the contraband goods. And the evidence shows that a British patrol was at the river Mazi.

[59] It is admitted that Uganda is a Protected State. The effect of the Order in Council of 1889 is to make any offender of Uganda punishable by the British Courts. Looking at the territorial description given there, Unyoro is included. Moreover, that Order makes offences against Uganda punishable without reference to the place where they are committed.

By the Treaty of 30th March, 1892, the King of Uganda acknowledged the suzerainty of the British Government—Lugard, Vol. II, pp. 436-437.

Article 48 of the Order Council, 1889, makes every offence against the Protected State of Uganda and the Protecting Power punishable; even when such an offence is committed beyond the limits of the Protectorate, but within the British sphere of influence and the local jurisdiction of the Consular Court, that article still applies. An abetment of such an offence is likewise punishable, although the place is outside the Protected State.

Accused admit that they knew there was war between the King of Unyoro and the Protecting Power. They also partially admit trading in gunpowder. The circumstances show that the importation of gunpowder was for State purposes and for the use of Kabarega, who was at war with the Protecting Power. It is impossible to contend that so large a quantity of gunpowder was merely for sporting purposes. Supplying arms and ammunition to the enemy would be an offence under the Penal Code. If the accused were British subjects, they would be guilty of high treason—Forster on Cr. Cases, 217; Hawkin's Pleas of the Crown, Vol. I, s. 28. A British subject would be punishable under art. 48 of the Order of 1889 for supplying arms and ammunition to the King of Unyoro.

Article 50 prohibits the importation of gunpowder, &c. The Order is in force in any part of Africa.

As regards the conviction for trading in slaves, it should be remembered that the British Courts are bound to put it down. Accused were found carrying two women, not as slaves whom they had purchased for their own use, but for the purpose of selling them as slaves against their will. Slave-trading is [60] prohibited in Uganda; see Lugard, Vol. II, p. 436. Illegal detaining of slave women is prohibited—ibid. p. 574.

PER CORIAM.—1. Until this record came from Uganda, this Court had no notice of its jurisdiction in such cases, as it is not supplied with the London Gazette in which the Africa Orders in Council appear. A copy of those Orders of 1893 and 1893 was procured and placed with the record at the disposal of the learned Advocate General, who, at our suggestion to the Government of Bombay, appeared for the Crown, and of Mr. Young, who, at the invitation of the Bench, appeared as amicus curiae, using his learning and industry on behalf of the convicted persons. We have thus had the advantage of a full argument. The Bench has been much aided by the learned counsel and by the industry of the learned pleaders, who have procured such information about the Uganda region as the libraries of this city afford.

2. The two prisoners were convicted and sentenced on the 15th October, 1895, at Kampala by Mr. Earnest Berkeley, H. M's Commissioner and Consul-General for Uganda.

For the purposes of the Africa Order in Council, 1889, Lord Salisbury constituted, by instructions dated the 31st July, 1891, a local jurisdiction as follows:—viz., the British sphere on the East Coast of Africa, exclusive of the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar.

Those instructions also give effect to art. 21 of the Order of 1889, by constituting this High Court the Court of Appeal from that local jurisdiction.

H. M's Commissioner and Consul-General has submitted the case to this Court for review under arts. 74 and 75 of the Order, which are as follows:—

"74. A Secretary of State may remit or commute, in whole or in part, any sentence of a Consular Court.

"In every case of sentence of death the minutes of the trial shall be transmitted to a Secretary of State, and the sentence shall not be carried into effect until confirmed by him.

"When a Consular Court sentences a person to imprisonment exceeding twelve months or fine exceeding £100, or in any other case, if a Secretary of State by any general or particular instruction so directs, the sentence shall be submitted to [61] the prescribed Court of Appeal for review in the manner hereafter in this order prescribed.

"75. When a sentence is under the order submitted for review, the Consular Court shall transmit the minutes of the case, with such observations as the Consul thinks necessary, and the Court of Appeal shall return the minutes with such instructions as they think fit to give, either as to findings of fact, or as to law, or as to mitigation of sentence; and the Consular Court shall give effect to such instructions.

"Pending the review of a sentence the Consular Court may suspend the execution of the sentence, but is not obliged so to do unless so directed by the Court to whom the case is submitted, or by a Secretary of State. In either case the Consular Court may (unless otherwise directed) take such security by way of bail or otherwise, and if necessary by commitment to prison for safe custody, as it thinks necessary for submission to the ultimate sentence."

3. The statement made by so high an officer as H. M.'s Commissioner and Consul-General is sufficient for our taking judicial notice, under s. 57 of the Indian Evidence Act, of the existence of hostilities between Kabarega, the King of Unyoro, and Her Majesty the Queen, and the protected State of Uganda. This was not seriously contested, and we follow the spirit of English decisions—The King v. De Beregnor (1); Theiluson v. Costing (2); Bradley v. Arthur (3). The Court also takes notice that Uganda is a Protectorate under Great Britain, and that the country called Unyoro is within the British sphere, being east of the 30th degree of longitude. The Court has referred for the history and geography of the region to such works as the learned counsel and plenaders have produced, viz., the Rise of our East African Empire, by Captain F. D. Lugard; The Mission to Uganda, by Sir G. Portal; In Darkest Africa, by H. M. Stanley; The Nineteenth Century, July, 1894, for the Partition of Africa, by A. Silva White. The various maps in these works have been consulted.

4. The Commissioner and Consul-General finds on the facts that "both accused were engaged in running powder to Unyoro, knowing the trade in powder to be illegal, and further knowing that Kabarega was in open warfare with Uganda and the Protecting Power." On this finding both were convicted under [62] arts. 48 and 50 of the Orders of 1889. The judgment goes on: "Urzeen bin Suleiman has, moreover, confessed to buying slaves in Unyoro." This prisoner is convicted of slave-trading. We are not inclined to differ with the findings on facts as above quoted. But with regard to art. 48, we think it necessary to obtain from the Court below a further statement whether it considered that the importation of gunpowder was for the purpose of aiding the King or people of Unyoro in making war against Uganda and Her Majesty, or for pacific purposes of trade. This further statement should be accompanied by reasons. As regards art. 50, the Court also desires further information as to the form of the prohibition of import or smuggling of gunpowder and the authority which prohibited.

5. As to the conviction for slave-trading, we notice that no Act of Parliament or other enactment or article of Order in Council or Treaty is quoted as the law which has been broken. As art. 13 of the Africa Order in Council, 1889, (4) applies the procedure of the Justices of the Peace and the Superior Courts of England and s. 54 of Part C of the schedule annexed to the Order in Council (5) refers to the law, we are of opinion that the Statute, Order, Regulation, or Treaty should be specified in the charge and the judgment. By Africa Order in Council, 1892, a Secretary of State may introduce Indian laws; and we do not know whether he has done so or not, or into what parts of the local jurisdiction. Mr. Young has contended that the facts found do not justify a conviction under either the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860),

(1) 3 M. and S. 67. (2) 4 Exp., 269. (3) 4 B. and C. 292 304.
(4) "13. Subject to the other provisions of this Order, the Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction aforesaid shall, so far as circumstances admit, be exercised upon the principles of and in conformity with the substance of the law for the time in force in and for England, and with the powers vested in and according to the course of procedure and practice observed by and before Courts of Justice and Justices of the Peace in England according to their respective jurisdiction and authorities."
(5) "54. The description of an offence in the words of any Act of Parliament under which the offence arises, or if the offence charged is one against the Africa Order, then in the words of that order or in either case in similar words, is sufficient."

ss. 370 and 371, or the Acts of Parliament, 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, and 9 and 10 Vict., c. 4. See, too, 39 and 40 Vict., c. 46. We are unable, until we know what laws are in force, to apply, them to the facts found. We must, therefore, ask the Court below to certify under what Statute, Act, Regulation, or Order the conviction was passed: and whether it had been applied to Unyoro, where the purchase of the slaves is found to have occurred:

6. An important question of jurisdiction has been raised by Mr. Young, who contends that the only recorded evidence on the point, i.e., the statements of the prisoners themselves, treated as testimony under s. 72 of Part C of the Schedule to the Order in Council 1889 (1), shows that they are both subjects of Germany which was one of the Signatory Powers to the Conference of Berlin signed in 1885, and, therefore, not British subjects as that phrase is used in the Order of 1889, nor such foreigners as are made liable to the local jurisdiction in art. 10, cls. 3 and 4. He contended that the Africa Order in Council, 1892, although it makes "foreigners to whom this Order applies," like the prisoners, justiciable under the Orders in like manner as British subjects, extends only to the area of the Protectorate, viz., that of Uganda, and not another area like Unyoro outside that Protectorate, although within the British sphere. This, he says, appears from the terms of art. 2 of the Order of 1892, on which Order he commented as follows:—As regards cl. 1 of the Preamble, Unyoro is not under the Queen's protection, but is a kingdom with which we are waging war and employing against it a force of 20,000 men—vide an official despatch in the Times newspaper of the 20th February, 1896. The books already referred to show that Kabaroga is a powerful king. The convictions for acts done in Unyoro are bad, as Unyoro is outside the British Protectorate, and the same question is raised as in the case appealed for decision of the Secretary of State from the Niger Territories, mentioned by Mr. Hall in his Treatise on the Foreign Powers and Jurisdiction of the British Crown, p. 217. As to cl. 3 of the Preamble, Mr. Young urged that it deals [64] only with territories that Her Majesty has declared to be under her protection; and no such declaration by the Queen is produced or alleged ever to have been made as to Unyoro. There is nothing whatever to show that either of the prisoners is a resident either in the Protectorate of Uganda or in the British sphere outside; and they being foreigners, not brought under the Order of 1892, their case must be dealt with under the Order of 1889, which does not make them British subjects within its meaning. Hence art. 48, which in terms applies only to British subjects, does not apply to them. If they are justiciable in like manner as British subjects, the supply of arms to an enemy power might be treason or misprision of treason, even if done in the enemy's country (1) East Pleas of the Crown, pp. 52, 53; 2 Stephen's History of Criminal Law p. 14.) The fact that the Court below framed no such charge shows that it did not hold the prisoners to be under the same obligations as British subjects. This is Mr. Young's argument.

7. The Advocate General argues that to British subjects the English law of treason may apply if they furnish arms to the enemy (Foster's

(1) "73. (1) In all criminal proceedings, including preliminary examinations, the accused and the husband or the wife of the accused are competent, but not compellable, to give evidence.

"(2) When the accused, or the husband or wife of the accused, offer, themselves as witnesses they take the oath or declaration required of witnesses, and are examined and subject to be cross-examined in the same way as ordinary witnesses."
Crown Law, 217; 1 Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, p. 12; but that art. 48 of the Order in Council, 1889, also applies. He meets Mr. Young's argument with a suggestion that the offence defined by art. 48 of the Order in Council, 1889, being one against the Protected State of Uganda and the Protecting Power must be treated as one of which an abetment is legally possible, when the act of abetment is done outside the Protectorate but within the British sphere and the local jurisdiction of the Consular Court. A similar question on the Indian Penal Code arose in Queen Empress v. Ganpatrao Ramchandra (1). The Advocate General has also brought to notice that one of the maps in Captain Lugard's book shows that the part of Unyoro where the acts occurred, and which, we believe, is the region of the River Msizi, south of Lake Albert Nyanza, is under a somewhat permanent British military occupation, as the existence of British forts shows; and that the present record discloses that the region is held by bodies of troops under the orders of military officers holding Her Majesty's Commission, and acting under her commands. The fact of this occupation may be relevant to the present case; but as this Court has no clear knowledge of either the nature of the occupation, its territorial extent, its permanency, or the recognition given to it by Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General, or by Her Majesty's Secretary of State, it is not at present necessary to deal with the perplexing questions on which jurists differ and on which we find little judicial authority, questions discussed by Mr. Hall in the Chapter on Military Occupation in his Treatise on International Law.

8. This Court is in ignorance of the treatise or conventions which may exist between Her Majesty and Unyoro or between Her Majesty and other sovereigns about Unyoro. We have not been able to procure any copy of the Act of the Conference of Berlin of 1885, or of the Act of the Brussels Conference of 1891. We have referred to extracts from these Acts in Hall on Foreign Jurisdiction and in Captain Lugard's second volume, p. 574. Both the learned counsel have framed their arguments with reference to what is said in Hall's Foreign Jurisdiction as to the difference of Her Majesty's exercise of jurisdiction in what is merely a "sphere of influence" and what has been formally made a Protectorate.

9. We think that before we determine this question of jurisdiction, the Court ought to be more fully informed by Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General on several points. His judgment records shortly as follows: "Both accused are amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court in virtue of the Africa Order in Council, 1892." But as this is the point which awaits our judicial decision, we desire to know what territory the prisoners belong to, and whether they are subjects of any Signatory or other Power, or subjects of Her Majesty or of any territory under Her Majesty's protection or influence. It has been contended that neither of them is even a denizen in the British sphere.

10. As no declaration of Her Majesty has been shown us, and none is suggested in the proceedings of the Court below, erecting the country of Unyoro, where the offences are laid, into a Protectorate, or including it within the Protectorate of Uganda (66) declared by Her Majesty on the 19th June, 1894, we feel it necessary to ask information from Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General as to whether this country of Unyoro has been included in a Protectorate and, if so, when and how? There are some indications to the contrary; and it may be surmised that the military occupation evidenced by forts and soldiers is not only for the purposes of the actual war, but also for the purposes of Her Majesty fulfilling the obligations of the Conferences of Berlin, 1885, and of Brussels, 1891. The country being within the British sphere is within the local jurisdiction of the Consular Court. But it being apparently outside the Protectorate so often mentioned in the Africa Order in Council of 1892, it is necessary for this Court to be informed whether Her Majesty has, and by what means, made foreigners, to whom that order applies, justiciable by the Consular Court for acts done in Unyoro. It is conceivable that Her Majesty may have refrained from using that jurisdiction as a means of enforcing good order upon foreigners not denizens in the Protectorate or the sphere of influence. The authority conferred on the Crown of exercising its foreign jurisdiction by means of Courts of Justice does not necessarily exclude the prerogative of the Crown to administer territories in military occupation for the purpose of good order, by means of the military commander himself or the military commander under the lawful orders for such purposes of a civil officer. See Barvis v. Keppel (1); Buron v. Denman (2). Under some circumstances, the two means of order may lawfully exist at the same time in the same territory, the Court using judicial procedure and applying established law, the commander or civil officer in authority over him using military force. See Foreyth's Constitutional Law, 201. Thus municipal law and act of State may lawfully be exercised. The authorities are few, and there are none about spheres of influence, but we may refer by way of analogy regarding our occupation of Unyoro to the fully argued case of Elphinstone v. Bedrachund, decided by His Majesty in Council and reported in 1 Knapp, P.C., 316. It arose during the last Maratha war, but after the expulsion of the Peshwa and the conquest [67] of the Deccan and the establishment of a provisional Government under a Commissioner with Courts of Justice under his superintendence. Some public treasure of the late Government was seized by Captain Robertson, the Collector and Magistrate of Poona. No hostilities were then going on in the immediate neighbourhood; but they did continue in Khandesh, and the garrisons were maintained on a war footing and in readiness for active service. It was held by his Majesty in Council that the seizure of the treasure was not an act that could be contested in a civil Court. Their Lordships doubtless knew that after a conquest, and even after civil tribunals are erected, it takes some time for a territory to quiet down and there continues to be need of military operations. Therefore they held the proper character of the transaction to be that of a hostile seizure made, if not flagrante, yet nondum cessante bello, regard being had both to the time, the place, and the person, and that if anything had been done amiss, recourse could only be had to the Government for redress, not to the Court. The case arose in the Deccan, then apparently by conquest part of the dominions of the Crown. But Unyoro appears to be only a sphere of influence; and a fortiori the reasons may apply, and it is easily conceivable that in dealings with foreigners, not denizens of British Territories or Protectorates, Her Majesty may not have extended the jurisdiction of the Consular Court to them. We wish, however, to be made certain of what has been done.

11. This being the first case arising in a new jurisdiction of great magnitude and importance, it behoves this Court not to pass decision at once and thus make a precedent without full information. Although the facts of the particular case have to be placed on record in the Courts below, as they would by Justices of the Peace and the Superior Courts of England, by the depositions of witnesses and the statements made by the accused, and have to be dealt with in the judgment recorded, it is obvious that, when this Court deals with events arising in the heart of Africa, it stands in need of information about local history, geography and diplomatic transactions. The Court has to take notice of treaties and will consider conventions, decisions and usages that have sprung up in the interpretation of them [68] and which have been recognized by Her Majesty and Her Ministers. We are of opinion that the peculiar provision in art. 75 of the Order in Council, 1889, which empowers the Consular Court to submit such information as it thinks necessary, along with the minutes of the case, is intended to supply the Court of appeal with information on authority to which it can give respectful attention and thus promote a common understanding between the Court in Africa and the Court in Bombay, and enable the latter especially to know what diplomatic transactions have occurred, the existence of war, and other matters of judicial notice and events of which there is no available history. It is also a means of avoiding delay in criminal appeal and review. The observations sent up with this record have been of value. In the Queen-Empress v. Rego Montopoulo (1), we found the statement in the Zanzibar Consul General’s observations about diplomatic transactions essential in the decision of the case; and were aided in extending the principles of the common law about local allegiance and alien amity to protected foreigners by the observations recorded in that case by Mr. Berkeley. We accordingly avail ourselves as fully as possible of that appointed means of information by calling for it from H. M.’s Commissioner and Consul-General for Uganda on the perplexing points argued. We think our views as to the scope of the “observations” and their use by this Court are supported by the fact, that the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890, 53 and 54 Vict., c. 37, s. 4, contemplates the submission by this Court of cases of perplexing jurisdiction for the decision of Her Majesty’s Secretary of State which, as to the Orders in Council, makes it clear that this Court should be fully informed on such facts as nationality and the effect of diplomatic arrangements.

12. The presumption in favour of the jurisdiction is not yet displaced; and looking at the acts done by the prisoners as found below, and that the case comes on review, not appeal, we do not think it desirable to suspend the sentences. But we will adjourn the hearing for the return of the record from Uganda with the supplemental observations this Court now calls for. [69] 13. As other cases may in the interval come to the High Court on review or appeal, we will, in order to save future delay, request the good offices of the Governor in Council to procure, for the use of the Judges, a compilation of the Orders in Council, Instructions, Queen’s Regulations and Notifications introducing laws and declaring Protectorates; as also of the treaties and conventions applicable among the Powers, Chiefs and Governments in the parts of Africa to which the jurisdiction of this High Court extends. Among these are, we think, important the transactions of the Conferences of Berlin, 1885, and of Brussels, 1891, and any Acts subsidiary thereto or explanatory thereof.

14. This Court orders that the record be retransmitted to Her Majesty’s Commissioner and Consul-General for Uganda in order that it may be returned to this Court on or before the 17th November, 1896, with

(1) 19 B. 741.
further observations under art. 75 of the Africa Order in Council, 1889, on the matters indicated in this judgment.

As intimated in the above judgment, further information was called for from the Uganda Court, and in reply the following was received from Mr. Berkeley:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of copy of the judgment recorded by the High Court of Bombay in the above case, referred to as in Criminal Reference No. 27 of 1896, and in obedience to the instructions of that Court, I beg to submit the following further information in the case.
The questions to which I understand I am directed to reply are—
1. Did the Court here consider that the importation of gunpowder was for the purpose of aiding the king or people of Uinyoro in making war against Uganda and Her Majesty, or for pacific purposes of trade, and what is the form of prohibition of import or smuggling of gunpowder and the authority which prohibited?

2. Under what Statute, Act, Regulation or order the conviction (of Urzaee bin Suliman, for slave-trading) was passed, and whether it had been applied to Uinyoro, where the purchase of slaves is found to have occurred?

3. Is Uinyoro, which is recognized to be within the British sphere of influence in East Africa, included in any way in a British Protectorate, and if not, bow, the accused being both foreigners, subjects of a Signatory Power to the general act of the Conference of Berlin of 1885 and as such only amenable to jurisdiction under the Africa Order in Council, 1889, within a Protectorate of Her Majesty (Africa [70] Order in Council, 1892), did this Court come to try them under that Order for an offence committed outside such Protectorate?

I have the honour to reply as follows:

1. The Court could not possibly hesitate in considering that the gunpowder was imported for the purpose of aiding the king and people of Uinyoro (in return for ivory or slaves or both) to make war against Uganda and Her Majesty. Hostilities had broken out in December, 1893; military posts and patrols had been established since more than a year for the express purposes of checking the trade in munitions of war; the latter had been repeatedly proclaimed by every possible local means to be illegal; it was notorious throughout the country since two years at least that the trade in arms, powder, &c., was prohibited and could not possibly be prosecuted as a lawful or pacific trade; all trading caravans were well aware (and as regards those coming from the south of Uganda had been repeatedly warned by the German authorities, as officially stated by the latter more than once) that on entering the British sphere they should report themselves and the purpose and nature of their trade to the British authorities; so far from doing so the accused had avoided all British stations, and they or others connected with them under the general direction of one Khalil had fired on the patrol, from Nakabimba Station, who endeavoured to stop them near the Misisi River. And finally, both accused admitted that they knew trading in arms, powder, &c., and slaves to be illegal. The form of the prohibition of these trades has been by repeated notices carried far and wide by the British authorities and their agents and by the chiefs of the different districts in the British sphere. The authority, who prohibited, is, I presume, Her Majesty the Queen.

2. The Statute, Act, Regulation or order in the matter of slave-trading would be, I presume, the obligation undertaken by Her Majesty in Chap. II, art. 9 of the General Act of the Berlin Conference of 1885, and the Treaty obligations there undertaken by Her Majesty are applicable in Unyoro under the provisions of article No. 3 of the Africa Order in Council, 1893.

3. Unyoro had not been declared to be within a British Protectorate, and I must express my regret that in my original judgment I did not explain the circumstances in which I judged, nevertheless, that I was justified in trying the accused under the Africa Order in Council, 1889. In the first place, the accused, stating themselves to be German subjects, I had to consider whether I should deliver them to the nearest German authorities for trial on a charge to be formulated by this administration. The mere fact that German authorities did exist at no very great distance did not appear to me to touch the question. If established, the principle would equally apply to subjects of Austria, Denmark, France, Russia, &c., and other Powers Signatory to the General Act of the Berlin Conference of 1885. Apart from this, therefore, I decided that I should not hand the accused over to the neighbouring German authorities, because I knew of no circumstances in which a British administration would surrender to foreign jurisdiction an accused arrested by themselves, except in deference to some well-established custom or usage, or in reference to a legitimate demand addressed to them by a duly appointed and accredited representative of such foreign jurisdiction. No such custom or usage exists to my knowledge; German subjects have no extraterritorial rights in any part of these territories. Nor has Germany any accredited representative anywhere within them. I could see, therefore, no ground for handing the accused over to the German authorities. It remained, then, either to let them go, or to try them locally. The former course appeared to me to be quite inadmissible, and I consequently decided upon the latter. As regards the form adopted, I would venture to make the following observations. Were a "German subject" to commit a crime and be arrested for it, say in Toru, a peaceful "kingdom," lying like Unyoro within the British sphere but outside the Protectorate, one of two courses would, I presume, have to be followed. Either I should permit the "King" of Toru to try him and punish him according to Toru laws, whatever these might be, or I should (technically) exercise my "influence" over the king in order to arrange that he should delegate his jurisdiction to this administration and thereupon try the accused according to the procedure laid down for British subjects. In the case of Unyoro, however, the king and all local authorities or jurisdiction had disappeared in consequence of the war and, therefore, what could be done in Toru could not be done in Unyoro. Meanwhile in June, 1894, the Earl of Kimberley, then Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, had (though under strict limitations, see Blue Book, Africa, No. 7, 1895, p. 50) recognized the possible necessity for some "temporary and partial occupation of Unyoro." It was in these circumstances and with that sanction that portions of Southern Unyoro have been held by the British authorities in Uganda, and it seemed to me that, since the king and his judicial authorities had disappeared, we must necessarily assume, however temporarily, jurisdiction in their place; in other words, that in those portions of Unyoro which we occupied, in the terms of Lord Kimberley's despatch "for purely defensive purposes with the object of protecting Uganda against aggression," we must assume the responsibilities and exercise the rights which we do in Uganda itself. Our temporary presence in these portions of Unyoro must, in practice, mean the temporary extension over them of the British Protectorate over Uganda. In these circumstances I decided to try the accused as though the offence with which they were charged had been committed in Uganda itself.
The case came on again before the High Court (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.) on the day of 14th January 1897.

Young (amicus curiae) for the prisoners, with him Maneeksha J. Taleyarkhan:—The only point remaining to be discussed is whether the alleged military occupation would render the accused justiciable. But even assuming the fact, an occupation would introduce neither the Orders in Council nor English law but only martial law,—c.p. Manual of Military Law, p. 315; Hall's International [72] Law, pp. 484, 485, 488, 489, and as it is quite clear that the accused were not tried under martial law but under Orders in Council they must be released.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Before dealing with the questions of law, it is convenient to state our view of some of the matters of fact on which those questions depend.

Mr. Young argued for the prisoners that they are not subjects of a Signatory Power, but only dwellers in some region under the protection or influence of Germany. But, as this Court has already pointed out, the only evidence, namely, their own statements, is that they are German subjects: and in his report pursuant to the order of this Court, Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General clearly assumes this to be the fact. This Court must, therefore, deal with them as subjects of Germany.

The acts for which the prisoners have been convicted, occurred in the country of Unyoro; and Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General has, in reply to the question of this Court, in para. 10 of our Order of the 17th March, 1896, stated that Unyoro has not been declared to be within a British Protectorate. He had also submitted the following information:

"As regards the form adopted, I would venture to make the following observations: Were a 'German subject' to commit a crime and be arrested for it, say in Toru, a peaceful kingdom lying like Unyoro within the British sphere, but outside the Protectorate, one of two courses would, I presume, have to be followed. Either I should permit the 'King' of Toru to try him and punish him according to Toru laws, whatever these might be, or I should (technically) 'exercise my influence' over the king in order to arrange that he should delegate this jurisdiction to his administration, and thereupon try the accused according to the procedure laid down for British subjects. In the case of Unyoro, however, the king and all local authorities or jurisdiction had disappeared in consequence of the war, and, therefore, what could be done in Toru could not be done in Unyoro. Meanwhile in June, 1894, the Earl of Kimberley, then Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, had, though under strict limitations (see Blue Book, Africa, No. 7, 1895, page 50), recognized the possible necessity for some 'temporary and partial occupation of Unyoro.' It was in these circumstances and with that sanction that portions of Southern Unyoro have been held by the British authorities in Uganda, and it seemed to me that, since the [73] king and his judicial authorities had disappeared, we must necessarily assume, however temporarily, jurisdiction in their place; in other words, that in these portions of Unyoro which we occupied, in the terms of Lord Kimberley's despatch 'for purely defensive purposes with the object of protecting Uganda against aggression,' we must assume the responsibilities and exercise the rights which we do in Uganda itself. Our temporary presence in these portions of Unyoro must, in practice, mean the temporary extension over them of the British Protectorate over Uganda. In these circumstances I decided to try the accused as though the offence with which they were charged had been committed in Uganda itself."

These remarks of the Commissioner and Consul-General confirm the surmise of this Court that the territory in Unyoro was at the time held by military occupation under the superintendence of Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General by command of the Crown.

The learned Advocate General has argued that if Unyoro was under military occupation, this occupatio bellica transferred the sovereign power to the Crown, and that it had to be exercised by Her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul-General as a Commander-in-Chief; and that as he might, in Unyoro, have tried and punished these prisoners by the law of war, the convictions passed at Kampala in Uganda long afterwards in the Court established by the Orders in Council may justly be treated as valid. But no case has been shown us authorizing the trial by the laws of war at a place and time both distant from the warlike operations. Moreover, the Court of the Commissioner and Consul-General is by various articles of the Order in Council of 1889, e.g., arts. 12 and 22, limited in its powers: it is by art. 22 to exercise Her Majesty's jurisdiction "to the extent and in the manner provided by this Order." Therefore if the offices of Judge of the Consular Court and of a Commander-in-Chief happen in a sphere of influence to be held by the same person, who in both capacities is under the control of the Crown, the directions in the Orders in Council are binding on him as Consular Judge. Article 105 of this Order recognizes and preserves the powers of Consular Officers in performing acts not judicial, acts such as they "might by law or by virtue of usage or sufferance or otherwise have performed if this order had not been made." The Commissioner and Consul General has avowedly and in terms assumed jurisdiction in this case under the Order in Council and submitted it to this Court under arts. 74 and 75. It would be wrong, therefore, to impute what has been done to powers lawfully used by the head of a military occupation, such as are discussed in Forsyth's Constitutional Law, p. 210, and by Mayne in his Criminal Law of India, Chap. 3, ss. 97 to 106.

The Advocate General further suggested that the record and statements submitted showed that this part of Unyoro had become annexed to the dominions of the Crown, but the Commissioner and Consul-General does not aver anything more than a military occupation, which however complete, is not necessarily the same thing as an annexation. I find a case where the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council distinguished the temporary occupation of Moldavia by Russia in 1853 from a change of dominion—Cremidi v. Powell (1). See also other cases cited by Forsyth at p. 21. We must, therefore, hold that there was no annexation. There was a military occupation, more complete because the King of Unyoro and his officers had disappeared. But before then Her Majesty appears to have acted on the obligation of art. 1 of the General Act of the Brussels Conference of 1890, which provides not only by clause, for the government of places under sovereignty or protectorate, but also for "the gradual establishment in the interior, by the responsible Power in each territory, of strongly occupied stations, for roads, steam-boats, telegraphs, expeditions, and flying columns, and the interdiction of arms and ammunition where the slave trade prevails."

We are agreed that the responsibilities here assumed are international duties arising from mutual undertakings of the Signatory Powers: and thus differ from the obligations undertaken by the Sovereign to protect her subjects and others bound to her by allegiance.

The sole question remaining for disposal is whether the Court of the Commissioner and Consul-General had jurisdiction under the Order-in-Council. The Advocate General has not seriously contested the arguments of Mr. Young already set forth in our former order in para. 6. The prisoners are "foreigners," and being German subjects are "foreigners to whom this Order (i.e., [75] of 1892) applies." and if the acts of which they have been found guilty had occurred in Uganda or other Protectorate of Her Majesty, they would have been liable to the jurisdiction under the Order-in-Council of 1889 "under the same conditions as British subjects and to the extent of the jurisdiction vested by law in those Courts." These words are found in art. 2 of the Order-in-Council of 1892. But that article and the preamble, as also the later Order-in-Council of 1893, show that Her Majesty has drawn a plain distinction about the criminal liability of subjects of the Signatory Powers, a distinction based evidently on the difference of the responsibility which the Crown is advised to assume in territories solemnly declared to be under the Queen's protection and those merely placed, qua the other Signatory Powers, in a British sphere of influence. Mr. Hall in his International Law, Part III, Chap. 3, s. 93 et seq., shows how Germany and France have thought proper to assume fuller jurisdiction over persons, not originally their subjects, than the Crown of England has done, the last having, as these Orders in Council show, acted more gradually. It may be that the restrictions of jurisdiction have been ordained in order not to offend the susceptibilities of other Powers or in order not to burden the Queen's administrative and judicial services with cases arising in regions merely in a sphere of influence, where as yet the word "allegiance" has hardly been heard, and where the Queen has not solemnly declared her prerogative of protection. But it is not the duty of this Court to find reasons for the acts of the Queen's Ministers when the language used by her Council is, as we think, clear.

For the above reasons the Court holds that as art. 43 of the Order-in-Council applies in terms only to British subjects, and as these prisoners have not, as regards acts done outside the Queen's Protectorates, been brought into the position of British subjects, the convictions and sentences under art. 48 are on their face without jurisdiction.

The conviction for slave-trading would, if the prisoners were British subjects, probably have been legal under art. 45, which applies the English Statutes. But these foreigners are not of any class included in art. 43; nor do the later Orders in [76] Council, as already mentioned, include them for acts done outside of the British dominions or Protectorates.

The convictions under art. 50 are for the same reasons bad, as upon a true construction the wide phrase of that article "a person" must be treated as limited by art. 10 and the general scope of this Order of 1889 and the later Orders in Council. Another reason for distrusting the validity of the convictions under art. 50 is that there is no record of any prohibition of importing arms and ammunition. The Commissioner and Consul-General presumes that the authority who prohibited is Her Majesty the Queen. But it has not been suggested that Her Majesty has done this.
by applying any Act of Parliament, or any Indian Statute on the subject of prohibited or contraband goods; or that her Secretary of State has sanctioned any Queen’s Regulation under art. 99 on the subject.

The Court holds the convictions and sentences of the Consular Court to have been passed without jurisdiction, and instructs Her Majesty’s Commissioner and Consul-General to cancel them and to set the prisoners at liberty.

The Court will renew its request for a complete collection of such official papers, Queen’s Regulations and Orders in Council as are mentioned in paragraphs 13 of our former Order. To avoid delays of justice we seek for authoritative information as regards any new Protectorates declared or other important Orders passed.

RANADE, J.—I concur. As this is a case of some importance, being the first of its kind under the extended Appellate Jurisdiction of this Court over East Africa, I deem it necessary to record a separate judgment.

Her Majesty’s Commissioner and Consul-General for Uganda convicted the two prisoners Juma and Urzee of offences described in arts. 48 and 50 of the Africa Order in Council, 1889, and Urzee was further convicted of slave-dealing, and they were sentenced respectively to two and three years’ rigorous imprisonment. These sentences were submitted to this Court for review under arts. 74 and 75 of the Order.

In the course of the first hearing, which took place on 17th March, 1896, we took judicial notice of the fact that Uganda was [77] a Protectorate of Great Britain, and that Unyoro, the territory where the offence was admittedly committed, was within the British sphere of influence. Judicial notice was also taken of the fact that the King of Unyoro had commenced hostilities in December, 1893, and was at the time when the offence was committed at war with Uganda and the protecting British Power. We also intimated at the time that we saw no reason to differ from the findings of fact on which the conviction was based, namely, that the prisoners were engaged in carrying gunpowder to Unyoro, knowing the trade in powder to be illegal, and knowing further that the King of Unyoro was in open warfare with Uganda and the protecting Power, and, lastly, that prisoner Urzee was further engaged in slave-trading. We felt it necessary, however, to obtain fuller information (1) as to whether the gunpowder was imported by the prisoners for the purpose of aiding the King of Unyoro in his war operations; (2) whether there was any express authoritative prohibition of the import or smuggling of gunpowder; (3) as no particular Statute or Act was quoted or referred to in the judgment, we wished also to know the particular Act, Statute or Order on which the conviction for slave-dealing was based. Besides fuller information on these points, we inquired, in reference chiefly to the question of jurisdiction raised before us by Mr. Young, (4) what territory the prisoners belonged to, and whether they were subjects of any Signatory or other Power or subjects of Her Majesty or of a territory under Her Majesty’s protection or influence; (5) and further whether the Unyoro country was included in any protectorate, and, if so, when and how; and (6) whether Her Majesty had made foreigners to whom the Order in Council of 1892 applied, justiciable by the Consular Court for acts done in Unyoro.

The Consul-General has now supplied the information asked for in the interlocutory observations. On the first point noted above, his reply shows that the importation of gunpowder was made by the prisoners not for pacific purposes, but for aiding and abetting the King of Unyoro in his war operations. On the second point it is stated that the prohibition of the import of gunpowder had been duly notified, and the prisoners themselves knew that the trade was illegal. In regard to the third point, [78] about the prohibitions of slave-trading, the Consul-General referred to Chap. II, art. 9, of the General Act of the Berlin Conference of 1885, and he stated that the treaty obligations there undertaken were applicable to Unyoro under art. No. 3 of the Africa Order in Council of 1893. As regards the points which had reference to the question of jurisdiction, the Consul-General stated that Unyoro had not been included within a British Protectorate, but it was within the British sphere of influence. We gather further from the reply that the plea of the prisoners that they were German subjects urged by them in the course of the trial is substantially correct, as it is not traversed in the reply. The Consul-General states the prisoners, as soon as they raised this plea, were not made over for trial to the nearest German authorities, because in the absence of any established usage or custom, or of a legitimate demand made by a duly accredited representative of a foreign jurisdiction, it is not usual for British administrations to surrender offenders arrested by themselves. There was no such usage established, and there was no demand made in this case, and German subjects had no ex-territorial rights, and the German Government had no representatives in those parts. As the King of Unyoro was at war with Uganda and the Protecting Power, and Unyoro was temporarily occupied by a military force, the Consul-General held that he felt himself justified in assuming the same responsibilities and exercising the same rights as regards the part of Unyoro in military occupation as his Court exercised in protected Uganda. In other words, though Unyoro had never been formally included within the Protectorate, the fact of military occupation justified the extension of British jurisdiction over that part of it which was so temporarily occupied.

It seems clear to me, from the first set of replies, that there is not sufficient reason shown which renders it necessary to suggest any modification of the decision of the Consular Court on questions of fact. The question of jurisdiction stands, however, on a different footing. The question here is, had the Consul-General jurisdiction to try the prisoners, or was he bound, as he admits it was open to him to do, to hand them over for trial to the German authorities in East Africa. For the purpose of the [?] inquiry into this question of jurisdiction, I may take it as proved that the prisoners are admittedly German subjects and that the offences with which they were charged were committed by them in Unyoro, which territory, though within the British sphere of influence in East Africa, was not included in the Protectorate of Uganda, and the King of Unyoro was at the time engaged in a war which necessitated a partial occupation of his territory by military posts.

I have now to consider whether, under any of the Africa Orders in Council, the Court of the Consul-General and Commissioner of Uganda was vested with a jurisdiction to try German subjects arrested in Unyoro territory. The principal Africa Order in Council, dated 22nd October, 1889, expressly defines the words "British subjects," "foreigners," and "natives" separately. British subjects include persons enjoying British protection, and the subjects of the Princes and States in India resident in the parts of Africa to which the Order relates. Foreigners mean persons who, whether natives or subjects of Africa or not, are not British subjects, and natives are defined as being persons who are not British subjects nor the subjects of any non-African Power. It is clear from this that, so far as this Order goes, the prisoners being German subjects fall within the category of "foreigners." The Consular Courts created by the Order under arts. 5 and 19 and instructions on art. 21 have under art. 10 jurisdiction over the person and property of British subjects as defined above, and in regard to foreigners, they have jurisdiction only over them first when they submit themselves of their own accord to such jurisdiction, or secondly when they are subjects of States which have entered into treaty arrangements with Her Majesty permitting the exercise of this jurisdiction. In the case of natives as well as foreigners, consent is necessary to give jurisdiction to treat them as British subjects (art. 17). So far, therefore, as this Order is concerned, the Consul-General's jurisdiction could only arise on proof that the prisoners submitted to it, or that the German Government had entered into an understanding with Her Majesty's Government permitting this exercise of jurisdiction over them. The Consular Courts though Courts of Record (art. 24) have no plenary authority, but are bound to exercise [80] their jurisdiction to the extent and in the manner provided by this Order (art. 22). The Criminal Side of these Courts was constituted principally with the object of maintaining order among British subjects and for the repression of crimes or offences committed by British subjects (art. 12), and the jurisdiction over foreigners comes in only under the exceptions noted above. Part VI, which relates more particularly to the criminal jurisdiction, defines in art. 45 offences as acts or omissions which are held to be offences under English law, and this is also the purport of arts. 19, 45 and 65 in regard to procedure and punishments. Article 48, under which the accused were charged in the present case, is expressly limited to British subjects as defined by the Order. Article 50 does not contain a similar limitation, but the general scope of the Order also limits its application. The restricted character of the civil jurisdiction of these Courts supports the same inference. Foreigners must expressly consent to civil jurisdiction (art. 100). The existence of native and foreign tribunals side by side with these Courts is expressly contemplated in art. 101. It is not necessary to elaborate this point more fully, because the Consul-General himself rests his jurisdiction to try the prisoners in this case not under the Africa Order of 1889, but under the addition made to it by the Order of Council of 1892.

I have next to see what was the nature of the change effected by the Order of 1892, dated 28th June, 1892. It appears from Mr. Hall's great work on this subject that the Order of 1889 strictly followed the principles and traditions which have guided the policy of British Settlements in foreign parts by which consular jurisdiction is confined to British subjects only. The French and German Governments, however, in their African Protectorates claimed higher powers, and in the new Order of 1892 there was a distinct departure in that direction in regard to British Protected States. The Order in its preamble recites that for the due fulfilment of the obligations undertaken by Her Majesty under the General Act of the Conference of Berlin, signed in 1885, the subjects of the Signatory Powers should be justiciable in like manner as British subjects within the limits of the territories which Her Majesty may have declared to be under [81] her protection. The order then enacts that the words "foreigners to whom this Order applies, shall mean subjects of Signatory Powers or any other Powers which have consented that their subjects shall be justiciable under the Order of 1889, and it further enacts that when Her Majesty has declared any territory to be a Protectorate of Her Majesty, the provisions of the Order of 1889 having reference to British subjects shall apply to the foreigners to whom this Order applies; and the requisition of the express previous consent of the foreigner or of his State shall have no effect in regard to such Protectorate, and in respect of such foreigners. Germany is one of the Signatory Powers. Uganda was declared a Protectorate on 19th June, 1894, and it is clear that if the offences with which the prisoners were charged had been committed in Uganda, this order would have given jurisdiction to the Consul-General to try the prisoners, notwithstanding their plea that they were German subjects. As it is, the Order has no application to Unyoro, which admittedly has not been declared to be a Protectorate.

Mr. Young made some point of the distinction between German subjects proper and subjects of German Protected States. It is not necessary to consider this point, as the distinction would have been material only if the offences had been committed in Uganda. As it is, the prisoners are admittedly not residents either of Uganda or of the territories under British influence.

The Advocate-General contended that as the offences were committed against Uganda and within a part of Unyoro under military occupation by a British force, this part of Unyoro might be considered as annexed to Uganda over which the Consular Court had jurisdiction to try foreigners, who were subjects of Signatory Powers. I think this contention is opposed to the general principles of law and that it is also against the express terms of the Order of 1892 which declares clearly that the Order of 1889 shall be void and of no effect only as regards territories declared to be protected in so far as foreigners to whom the Order of 1892 applies, are concerned. Beyond these local and personal limits the old order must be regarded as still in full force. If the contention of the Advocate-General were sound, no express [82] declaration of a Protectorate would be necessary, as all territory under British influence and occupied by military force would be, for the purposes of the Order of 1892, Protected territory. The Order of Council, dated 17th July, 1893, expressly enacts that "natives," as defined by the Order of 1889, of any Protectorate of Her Majesty outside the local jurisdiction of Consular Courts shall be triable by such Courts as British subjects when they happen to be within such local limits. This extension of the first Order brings out clearly the distinction between the local and the Protectorate jurisdiction of such Courts. It, however, does not support the view that these Courts have any jurisdiction over either natives or foreigners in respect of offences committed by them outside local or Protectorate limits, solely on account of the fact that such territories came within what is called the sphere of influence. The phrase "British sphere of influence" is obviously intended to mark out African territories within which other European Powers are by mutual understanding not to extend their conquests to the disadvantage of the British Power in East Africa, whose sphere in marked out by 30 Meridian East Longitude. It has no significance for purposes of jurisdiction. It is, in fact, the outer circle beyond the Protected States, and is for purposes of internal jurisdiction independent territory, where the Consular Court has no direct authority, and cannot control the actions of its native rulers, as it might do in Protected territory. No delegation of power from the native ruler was possible, as the king was at war.

As regards the question whether jurisdiction was given to the Consular Court by reason of a part of Unyoro being at the time under military occupation, or as the Advocate-General puts it, by reason of the temporary annexation of Unyoro in part to Uganda, I do not think it is necessary.
here to consider the point. Lord Kimberley's order is not among the papers sent to us. A temporary and partial occupation of the sort indicated could confer no jurisdiction on the Consular Court, whose powers are strictly limited by the various orders in Council. The military authorities might have, on the strength of the forcible occupation of the territory of a king at war with Her Majesty's Government, disposed of the prisoners summarily on the spot under martial [83] law applicable to such conditions. Occupation for purposes of war does not change the law of the country invaded, and such occupation cannot confer jurisdiction on the Consular Courts to try foreigners to whom the Order of 1892 did not apply as if they were British subjects. The distinction between spheres of influence and Protected territory is a well-recognized distinction and cannot be got over by such temporary and partial occupation. At any rate this Court in appeal can have no jurisdiction to deal with acts committed under such circumstances.

On the whole, therefore, I feel satisfied that the Commissioner and Consul-General of Uganda had no jurisdiction under any of the Orders in Council to try the prisoners, who were German subjects, for offences committed by them outside the Protectorate of Uganda. We must, therefore, instruct him under art. 75 to cancel the sentences passed by him on the prisoners, and to set them at liberty.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

BHAGWAN JETHIRAM (Original Defendant), Appellant v. DHONDI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [18th March, 1896.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 179—Application for execution of decree.

An application for execution of decree was made in 1885, and the second in 1891. The latter was at first allowed, but subsequently struck off for some default of the applicant. The third application was made in 1893.

Held, that the second application having been made at a time when it was barred by reason of the three years' period having been exceeded, the third was barred though presented within three years of the second.

The phrase "in accordance with law" in art. 179 of the Limitation Act is adjectival not only to the words "to the proper Court for execution," but also to the words "to take some step in execution."

SECOND appeal from the decision of A. Steward, District Judge of Poona.

Redemption suit. In this suit a decree was passed on the 13th February, 1883, for redemption of a mortgage on payment by the [84] plaintiffs (mortgagors) to the defendant (mortgagor) of Rs. 1,600 in eight yearly instalments of Rs. 200 each, with a proviso that the whole should be recovered at once by the sale of the mortgaged land on failure to pay any one of the instalments, the first of which was to be paid on the 31st March, 1884.

The plaintiffs having failed to pay the first instalment, the defendant applied for execution of the decree on the 19th November, 1885, praying for payment of the whole amount. This application was disposed of on the 25th of that month. On the 19th November, 1891, the defendant made a second application for execution which was admitted, and notices were issued under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The application was, however, subsequently struck off on account of some default on the defendant's part.

In 1893 the defendant made a third application for execution. The plaintiffs contended that this application was barred by limitation; that, in fact, the previous application of 1891 was barred and ought not to have been admitted, having been made more than three years from the date of the first application.

The Subordinate Judge of Junnar rejected the application on the ground of limitation and the District Judge confirmed this order.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the appellant (defendant).—The present application is made within three years of the one made in 1891. That one was admitted. It is true it was not adjudicated upon, but that is not required by the Limitation Act. That application was a step in aid of execution in accordance with law and, therefore, the present application is not barred.

Shivram Vithal Bhandarkar, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—The application of 1891 was struck off for default and there was no decision on the merits. The question of limitation was not raised. The disposal of that application was favourable to the plaintiffs, who of course did not appeal. That circumstance distinguishes this case from Mungul v. Grija (1). He cited [85] Rajkumar Banerji v. Rajlakhi Dabi (2); Nilmoney v. Ramjeeban (3); Sheikh Budan v. Ramchandra (4).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The second application made by the defendant, i.e., the one of the 19th January, 1891, was admittedly beyond the limitation of three years. But the Court, probably acting under s. 5 of the Limitation Act, admitted it, and issued notices under s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The application was, however, struck off for some default of the defendant. It is admitted by Mr. Khare that there was no adjudication—Sheikh Budan v. Ramchandra (4)—and it is clear that the plaintiffs could not have appealed from the order striking off, as that was altogether in their favour. The chief circumstance, therefore, on which Mungul v. Grija (1) was decided is absent here.

We proceed, therefore, to consider the pure question of construction of art. 179, cl. 4, of the Limitation Act, viz., whether the second application having been made at a time when it was barred by reason of the three years' period having been exceeded, the present application of the plaintiffs is to be held not barred because it is made within three years of the second application. It has been urged by Mr. Khare that the phrase "in accordance with law" is not adjectival to the words "to take some step in aid of execution," but only to the words "to the proper Court for execution." Thus he would distinguish Nilmoney v. Ramjeebun (1). We think, however, that ordinary syntax would treat the phrase as adjectival to both: and that the reason of the law would acquiese in this view of the meaning. We, therefore, hold that the second application did not create a fresh starting point and that the case is almost on all fours with the Calcutta case. The Court, therefore, confirms the decree with costs.

DHONDHET (Original Defendant), Appellant v. RAVJI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [18th March, 1896.]

Interest—Damdupat—Mortgage—Liability to account—Decree on mortgage—Further interest from date of suit to decree ordered by the Court—Discretion of Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 209.

Where under the terms of a mortgage there is a liability to account, the rule of damdupat does not apply.

The law as laid down in Gopalv. Gangaram (2) is not limited only to cases in which at date of suit an account between the mortgagor and mortgagee is actually kept.

In a suit brought by a mortgagee against his mortgagor (both parties being Hindus) the decree ordered the defendant to pay interest from the date of suit to decree upon the total found due after applying the rule of damdupat at the date of suit. It was objected that this order of further interest violated the rule of damdupat.

Held, that the discretionary power as to awarding interest conferred on the Courts by s. 209 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat.

Appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in suit No. 368 of 1892.

Suit on a mortgage. The plaintiffs (mortgagees) claimed to recover Rs. 2,999 as principal and Rs. 2,999 as interest due under the mortgage. By the deed it was provided that the mortgagees should have possession of the mortgaged property and that the rents and profits should go towards the satisfaction of the mortgaged debt. The plaintiffs gave credit for the sums so received by them and now claimed for the balance. They also claimed further interest on the total sum (Rs. 5,998) from the date of suit to decree.

The First Class Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiffs for the whole amount claimed.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Lang (Advocate General) and Shivram Vithal Bhandarkar, for the appellants (defendants).—The rule of damdupat applies and [87] the plaintiffs cannot recover more than the amount of principal (Rs. 2,999) and an equal amount as interest. Further interest cannot be given.

The case of Gopal v. Gangaram (1) does not apply, as there was no account current between the parties.

Branson and Rao Sahib Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—Gopal v. Gangaram (1) decides that when under the terms of a mortgage there is a liability to account, the rule of damdupat does not apply. The plaintiffs are entitled to the additional interest.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The question about the rule of damdupat was not raised below. In the absence of any finding to the contrary we are of opinion that there was a liability to account under the terms of the mortgage: and we do not treat the judgment of the Full Bench in Gopal v. Gangaram (1) as confined to cases in which at the date of suit an account between the mortgagee and mortgagee was actually being kept. We think the fact that an account may be taken between the parties of interest on the one side and rents and profits on the other is sufficient to exclude the law of damdupat according to that judgment.

But in this case its application relates only to the part of the Subordinate Judge’s, decree, which orders the mortgagee to pay interest from the date of suit to that of decree upon the total found due after applying the rule of damdupat at the date of suit. That total was found to be Rs. 2,999 principal plus an equal sum as interest. We think that the discretionary powers conferred on the Courts by s. 209 of the Code of Civil Procedure, of which this is one, may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat.

The Court confirms the decree with costs.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 285—Execution—Sale—Attachment of same property by different Courts—Sale by both Courts—Titles of the respective purchasers at such sales.

A and B obtained decrees against C. A’s decree was obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Surat. B’s decree was obtained in the Small Cause Court at Surat. In execution of their respective decrees both A and B obtained orders of attachment on the same day of a certain debt due to C by the Municipality of Surat. Notice of the attachment was given by the Subordinate Judge to the Small Cause Court, under s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). On the 16th November, 1892, the Subordinate Judge issued an order for sale of the attached debt, and on the 18th December, the Small Cause Court issued a similar order. Both Courts sold the debt on the 6th January, 1894, the Small Cause Court selling first in point of time. At the sale by the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff bought the debt and the defendant was the purchaser at the sale by the Small Cause Court. The defendant after his purchase sued the Municipality for the debt, making the plaintiff a party defendant, and he obtained a decree against the Municipality. The plaintiff also sued the Municipality making the defendant a party, and he also obtained a decree which was confirmed by the District Court. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held, that the plaintiff had the better title. The defendant had bought at the sale held by the Small Cause Court. The sale by that Court after it had received notice of the attachment proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge was in direct contravention of the provisions of s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Small Cause Court had full notice of the proceedings in the Subordinate Judge’s Court and there was no reason to suppose that the defendant himself had not similar knowledge. The defendant did not set up the plea that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice.

Per FARQUHAR, C.J.—The sale by the Small Cause Court was an act done in the irregular exercise of admitted jurisdiction. But when property is attached by more Courts than one, although each has jurisdiction to sell, that jurisdiction should be exercised by the Court of the highest grade (s. 285). If by a mistake of law or in ignorance of an earlier attachment in a Court of a lower grade, a Court of lower grade proceeds to sell, it is not deprived of jurisdiction to do so by s. 285. The jurisdiction of a Court cannot depend upon its knowledge of facts. If an attachment in a higher Court deprives a Court of lower grade of jurisdiction to sell, the sale must be, I apprehend, invalid, whether the Court of lower grade knows of it or not. The sale is held to be in such cases only irregular, the purchaser will take an indefeasible or defeasible title according to whether he knows or does not know of the irregularity. If he buys bona fide and without notice, his title would be perfect and he will not be affected by the irregularity of the proceedings in the sale—Reena Mahlon v. Ram Kishen (1). If he purchases with notice, he runs the risk of his purchase being set aside.

SECOND appeal from the decree of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Surat. Venilal Bhagwan held a decree against Abdulali and Ismail Karimbhai which he obtained in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat. Mahomed Ali held a Small Cause Court decree against these same persons. On 30th September, 1893, Venilal in execution of his decree applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge for the attachment of a debt due to his judgment-debtors by the Surat City Municipality, and on the same day Mahomed Ali in execution of his decree made a similar application to the Small Cause Court for the attachment of the same debt, and both the Courts made orders for attachment on the same day. The Small Cause Court attachment was levied on the 30th September, 1893, and that of the Subordinate Judge’s Court on the 2nd October. Notice of the latter was duly given to the Small Cause Court. The attachments were thus concurrent attachments and the provisions of s. 285, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), became applicable.

The Subordinate Judge made an order for sale on the 16th November, 1893, and the Small Cause Court made an order for sale on the 18th December. Both Courts sold the debt on the 6th January, 1894, the Small Cause Court selling first in point of time on that day. At the execution-sale by the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff bought the debt; the defendant bought it at the sale by the Small Cause Court. The defendant after his purchase sued the Surat Municipality in the Small Cause Court for the debt which he had bought and he made the plaintiff a party defendant, and obtained a decree against the Municipality. The plaintiff at the same time sued the Municipality in the Subordinate Judge’s Court for the debt and made the defendant (Abdul Karim) a defendant, and he also obtained a decree which on appeal was confirmed by the District Court. The defendant appealed to the High Court.
Motilal M. Munshi appeared for the respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The facts and the dates of the several proceedings which give rise to the question which has been argued upon this appeal are these.

Venilal Bhagwan held a decree obtained in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat against Abdulali and Ismail Karimbhai. Mahomed Ali Abdul held a decree obtained in the Court of Small Causes at Surat against the same defendants. The Surat City Municipality was indebted to Abdul Ali and Ismail Karimbhai in the sum of Rs. 200 or thereabouts.

On the 30th September 1893, Venilal and Mahomed Ali respectively applied in the Courts of which they held decrees for the attachment of the debt due by the Municipality to their common judgment-debtors. An order for attachment was made by both Courts on the same day. The Small Cause Court attachment was levied on the 30th September, 1893, and that of the Subordinate Judge’s Court on the 2nd October following. Venilal on effecting his attachment gave notice of it to the Small Cause Court. The attachments thus were concurrent attachments, and the provisions of s. 285 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) became applicable to them.

The Subordinate Judge made an order for sale on the 16th November, 1893. A similar order was made by the Small Cause Court on the 18th December following. Both Courts sold the debt on the 6th January, 1894, the sale by the Small Cause Court having been (it is said) in point of time first made.

The plaintiff purchased the debt at the sale held by the Subordinate Judge. The defendant Abdul Karim was the purchaser at the sale held by the Small Cause Court. After his purchase[91] the defendant Abdul Karim sued the Surat City Municipality in the Small Cause Court for the debt due by them to the judgment-debtors, making the present plaintiff a party-defendant to the suit, and obtained a decree against the Municipality. Concurrently the plaintiff sued the Municipality and Abdul Karim in the Subordinate Judge’s Court, and also obtained a decree, which was confirmed in appeal by the District Judge. This is an appeal from that decision.

There can, I think, be no doubt that the proper Court to realize the debt by sale was the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, that Court being the higher in grade—Turmuklal v. Kalyandas (1) and the action of the Small Cause Court Judge in proceeding with the sale after he had received notice of the attachment proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, was in direct contravention of the provisions of s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is a contest, however, between the two purchasers, and we have to determine which has the better title. This question has, as pointed out in Patel Naranji v. Haridas (2), given rise to a conflict of decision between the Calcutta High Court on the one side and the Madras and Allahabad High Courts on the other. In the Calcutta cases the objections (which were overruled) to the first sale rested on the ground that they were not ordered by the Courts respectively under whose decree the properties had been first attached, but were made under a subsequent attachment by another Court—Dwarka Nath v. Banku Behari (1), Kashy Nath v. Surbanand (2)—while in the Madras and Allahabad cases the objections (which were allowed) to the original sale were based upon their having been made by a Court of inferior grade while the respective properties were under attachment by Courts of higher grade—Muttukaruppan v. Mutturamalinga (3), Bhadri Prasad v. Saram Lal (4), Aghore Nih v. Shama Sundari (5). The distinction does not appear to be important. The provisions of s. 285 apply equally to both classes of objection, and in Dwarka Nath v. [92] Banku Behari (1) the Court recognised that its ruling was opposed to the decisions in the Madras and Allahabad cases which I have mentioned.

(1) 19 B. 127.
(2) 18 B. 458.

The facts in Patel Naranji v. Haridas (6) and in Turmuklal v. Kalyandas (7) brought those cases within the wording of s. 285, though the Court considered that they were not within its spirit. In them sales by a Court of lower grade were not treated as void while the property sold was under attachment by a Court of higher grade. The proceedings in both cases had, however, reached a very late stage in the Court of inferior grade before the attachment was levied in the Court of higher grade.

The decision of the present case appears to me to rest upon the well-known distinction between the acts of a Court done without jurisdiction or authority and those done in the irregular exercise of an admitted jurisdiction or authority. I think that the sale by the Small Cause Court falls within the latter category. When property is attached by more Courts than one, each of them has, I think, jurisdiction or authority to sell, but s. 285 declares by which of such Courts that jurisdiction should be exercised. If by mistake of law or in ignorance of an earlier attachment or of an attachment in a Court of higher grade a Court of lower grade proceeds to sell, it is not, I think, deprived of jurisdiction to do so by the provision of s. 285. I have advisedly coupled mistake and ignorance, as the jurisdiction of a Court cannot, it seems to me, depend upon its knowledge or ignorance of facts. If an attachment in a higher Court deprives a Court of lower grade of jurisdiction to sell, the sale must be, I apprehend, invalid, whether the Court of lower grade knows of it or not. If the sale is held to be in such cases only irregular, the purchaser will take an indefeasible or a defeasible title according to whether he knows or does not know of the irregularity. If he buys bona fide and without notice, his title will be perfect and he will not be affected by the irregularity of the proceedings resulting in the sale—Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh (8). If he purchases with notice he runs the risk of his purchase being set aside.

[93] This view, which is in accordance with that held by the Calcutta High Court, seems to me to be attended with less momentous consequences than that adopted by the Allahabad High Court. The title to a valuable estate might otherwise be rendered invalid by the existence of an unknown attachment prior in date to that under which it was sold. There is nothing in s. 285 which compels us to hold that a sale is null and void if held in contravention of its terms. Those terms are, I think, fully satisfied by ruling that its provisions are directory as to which of two or more Courts shall exercise what would otherwise be concurrent jurisdiction, without holding that they annul the jurisdiction of the Court of lower grade when it comes into competition with the jurisdiction of a superior Court.

The defendant in this case did not set up the plea that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice. The Court which sold had full knowledge of the proceedings in the Subordinate Judge's Court, and there is no reason to suppose that the defendant had not similar knowledge. His purchase was, in such a case, liable to be defeated by the purchase of the plaintiff. I am of opinion, therefore, that the latter acquired title to the debt due by the Municipality.

The Small Cause Court had not, I think, jurisdiction to decide between those competing titles, and the question raised by this appeal is not, therefore, res judicata by its decree.

Decree confirmed with costs.

Candy, J.—There is no doubt that s. 285, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable to the facts of the present case. But I think that in applying the provisions of that section we should follow the former decisions of this Court in Patel Narangi v. Haridas (1) and Turmuklal v. Katwandas (2), which in effect held that neither the language of the section, nor the object with which it may be supposed to have been introduced, required or made it convenient to hold that the effect of the section rendered the sale by the inferior Court null and void. Thus in the former of the two cases above noted "under the circumstances of the case," the order of sale and proclamation having been made by the inferior Court before application for execution was made in the superior Court, it was held that the applicant for execution in the superior Court had no right to ask the Judge of the inferior Court to set aside the sale as made without jurisdiction, although possibly he might have applied to the District Judge to transfer the proceeds realized by the sale to the superior Court. Similarly in the latter case this Court relied on the circumstance that the inferior Court had issued the proclamation for sale before application for execution was made in the superior Court.

The same view of the section has been taken by the Calcutta High Court in Bikan Nath Shaha v. Rajendro Narain Rai (3). In that case certain property of a judgment-debtor had been attached in 1880 by a Subordinate Judge. For certain reasons, however, there was delay in holding the sale. In 1882 the same property was attached and put up for sale by a Munsif who was subordinate to the Subordinate Judge, and the sale was duly confirmed. The High Court held (pp. 338—339): "The object of s. 285 no doubt is......to prevent confusion in the execution of decrees by providing for certain proceedings to be held by the superior Court where the Courts of execution are of different grades, or by the first attaching Court where both Courts have equal jurisdiction. Strictly speaking, therefore, no such proceeding should be taken except under the direction of one of these two Courts; but where an execution sale has been held by an inferior Court at the instance of the decree-holder (the Court itself, the decree holder and the auction-purchaser being without any information of any objection to the exercise of a jurisdiction which that Court would ordinarily be competent to exercise), and that sale has been confirmed without any objection raised, we are not prepared to say that a title so obtained is not a valid title. * * We are not prepared to hold under the circumstances stated that no valid title was conferred by the sale in the Munsif's Court which was regularly held and duly confirmed. * * *

We are unable to hold that the sale by the Munsif was null and void, as it was perfectly regular so far as the facts were known to the parties concerned and the Munsif himself."

[96] Now here what are the circumstances of the case? The rival decree-holders applied for execution on the same day to the First Class Subordinate Court and the Small Cause Court respectively. An order for attachment was made on the same day by both Courts, express notice being given to the Judge of the inferior Court of the proceedings in the superior Court. Though attachment was actually made by the inferior Court two days before it was made by the superior Court, the order for sale was made by the superior Court about a month before the order for sale was made by the inferior Court. The sale by both the Courts was held on the same day, and it was alleged, and apparently not denied, that the sale by the inferior Court took place about two hours before the sale by the superior Court. I cannot find a trace of any suggestion that the rival proceedings were not perfectly well known to all parties, or that the purchaser in the Small Cause Court sale has ever contended that he is a bona fide purchaser without notice. He has obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court simply on the ground that the attachment in that Court was actually made two days before the attachment was made in the First Class Subordinate Court—an attachment, as shown above, made with express notice of the proceedings in the superior Court.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the purchaser in the Small Cause Court has not got a good title. On the other points I concur with the learned Chief Justice.

Decree confirmed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Candy.

VITHAL ATMARAM AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs) Appellants v. YESA (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [20th March, 1896.]

Khoti Act (Bomb. Act I of 1880), ss. 17, 20, 21 and 33—Entry in the Settlement Officer’s record not conclusive.

An entry by a Survey Officer that an occupancy tenant holds the land rent-free is not an entry under s. 17 of the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880), [96] and not being final, it cannot be reversed or modified by a decree of a civil Court.

Baloji Raghunath v. Bal bin Raghoji (1) distinguished.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath B. Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Ratnagiri.

The plaintiffs as koths of the village of Kurtade in the Ratnagiri District brought this suit to recover that (rent) for the years 1886-87, 1887-88 and 1888-89 from the defendant, who was the occupancy tenant of Survey No. 60.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the land in suit was not arable, but was used as a place for the deposit of bones and the remains of dead animals of the village; that the Special Settlement Officer had by his order exempted it from payment of thal, and that the claim was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was not made within a year from the decision of the Special Settlement Officer.

It appeared from the evidence that the plaintiffs had recovered thal for the land from 1858-59 to 1883-84; that it was voluntarily paid in some years, and in others recovered by suits.

In 1888 the Survey Settlement Officer decided that the land in dispute should be enjoyed rent-free by the occupancy tenant, and an entry was made in the record to the effect that "Falni No. 4 out of Survey No. 60, being a place used for throwing bones on (hadgal), should be enjoyed rent-free."

The reasons for the decision so arrived at were recorded by the Settlement Officer in the following terms:—

"The land is hadgal and has never been assessed; one khot is willing to have it still so entered, the other is not, but proves nothing; therefore I order that the land be enjoyed exempt from all payment to the khot as hadgal."

This order was passed on 16th January, 1888, and the present suit was filed on 1st October, 1889.

The Joint Subordinate Judge of Ratnagiri held that the suit not having been brought within one year from the date of the Survey Officer's order was time-barred, and dismissed the suit.

In appeal the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., of Ratnagiri confirmed the decision of the Joint Subordinate Judge.

[97] Against this decision plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Nagindas Tulsidas, for the appellants (plaintiffs):—The Settlement Officer had no authority to exempt the defendant from liability to pay thal or any other rent. His decision was ultra vires. See Antaji Kassinath v. Antaji Mahadev (1).

Vasudev Gopal Bhandarkar, for the respondent (defendant):—The Settlement Officer having passed an order under s. 17 of the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880) exempting the land from thal, the plaintiff cannot claim it. So long as the entry under s. 17 is on the record, it is conclusive. See Gopal Krishna v. Sakhojiirav (2). It is not open to a civil Court to go behind this entry and enquire whether the order was correctly or validly made—Balaji Rajhunath v. Bal bin Raghoji (3).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—"This suit is brought by the plaintiffs as khots of the village of Kurtade to recover thal rents for the years 1886-87, 1887-88 and 1888-89 from the defendant, who is the occupancy tenant of Falni No. 4, Survey No. 60, and cultivated it in the years in suit.

It is proved in the case that the plaintiffs have been recovering thal for the land from 1858-59 to 1883-84, the same has been voluntarily paid in some years, in others it has been obtained by suit. It is further shown that in 1888 the Survey Officer—presumably acting under s. 33 of the Khoti Act—decided that the land should be enjoyed rent-free by the occupancy tenant and an entry was made in the record, and apparently made under s. 17, to the effect that "Falni No. 4 out of Survey No. 60 being a place used for throwing bones on (hadgal) should be enjoyed rent-free." The grounds of his decision are thus recorded. "The land is hadgal and has never been assessed, one khot is willing to have it still so entered, the other is not willing, but proves nothing: therefore I order that the land be enjoyed exempt from all payment to the khot as hadgal."

The point in the case is whether the entry that the land shall be enjoyed rent-free is an entry duly made under s. 17 and, [98] therefore, final and conclusive. The first essential of an entry under s. 17 is that the rent payable shall be according to the provisions of s. 33. Section 33 enacts that the rent payable by an occupancy tenant shall be "such fixed amount, whether in money or in kind, as may have been agreed upon or as may at the time of the framing of the survey record, or at any subsequent period, be agreed upon between the khot and the said tenant; or on the expiry of the term for which any such agreement shall have been or shall be made, or if no such agreement have been or be made, such fixed share of the gross annual produce of the said tenant's land, not exceeding one-half in the case of rice land, nor one third in the case of varkas lands." Thus the occupancy tenant must pay either a fixed amount or a fixed share, and a determination that he shall pay neither one nor the other, in fact that he shall pay nothing at all, is clearly beyond the jurisdiction of the Survey Officer. It really is a determination of tenure, for it amounts to a decision that the cultivator is not a tenant at all, but the proprietor of the land, holding it on better terms than the khot himself, since he has not to pay even assessment for it. Thus an entry that a privileged occupant held his land rent-free, would not be an entry under s. 17 at all, for it does not specify the nature and amount of rent payable according to the provisions of s. 33. The provisions of s. 33 are wholly ignored, and the Survey Officer instead of determining the amount of rent payable has determined the nature of the tenure on which the land is held. Such an entry cannot be conclusive or final evidence.

It may seem that this opinion is opposed to the decision of this Court in Balaji Raghunath v. Bal bin Ragojij (1). It is, however, not so really when the different facts are considered. In that case there was a holding of six survey numbers. The Survey Officer determined that for the whole holding 7½ mounds of rice should be paid. In working out the details he set out that this amount was payable for five survey numbers, nothing being paid for the sixth number. If based on agreement such a determination as this would not be contrary to the provisions of s. 33. I admit that the words used both by myself and [99] by the Chief Justice are wider than the case required, but I have consulted him in the matter and I have his authority for stating that his words should be taken as applicable only to the case we had before us in which, as I have said, the amount payable on the holding as a whole was determined, though in working out the calculation of the whole rent it was found that a small piece of land was thrown in for which no rent was separately charged.

In the present case there has been no determination of any rent being payable by the defendant for his land, but the whole of it has been held to be rent-free, and that, too, not by virtue of any agreement, but by a consideration of the character of the land itself. Such a decision is not declared to be final under the Khoti Act, and it can, therefore, under s. 21 be reversed or modified by a decree of a Civil Court. The plaintiffs have clearly established that the defendant is not entitled to hold the land in suit rent-free, that he is the occupancy tenant thereof, and that he is liable as such to pay them the customary rent.

We reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and award the thal claimed, with costs throughout on the defendant.

Candy, J.—It is unnecessary for me to repeat what I have set out at length in my judgments in the Full Bench Reference in Antaji Kashinath v. Antaji Mahadev (1) and in Krishnaji Narsinva v. Krishnaji Narayan (2).

I adhere to the conclusions at which I arrived in those judgments with regard to the various provisions of the Khoti Act (Bombay Act I of 1880).

Here we have the following facts:—In 1884 the Settlement Officer under ss. 33 determined the customary rents of the village. No suggestion was then apparently put forward that as between the khot and the occupancy tenant of the land in suit there was "at the time of the framing of the survey record" an agreement that for the land in suit the khot should take "a fixed amount whether in money or in kind." The entry made in the survey record in accordance with that decision was under ss. 17 and 21 final. In 1888 the Settlement Officer passed another decision holding that the land in suit should be held rent-free. In accordance with that subsequent decision an entry [100] has been made in the "botkh of the village." This apparently is a "village record" and not a "survey record." (See my remarks in Krishnaji Narsinva v. Krishnaji Narayan.)

But assuming that an entry has been made in the "survey record" in accordance with the subsequent decision, and assuming that the Settlement Officer could in 1889 alter the decision and entry made in 1884, (it is not pretended that between 1884 and 1888 any agreement to take and pay a fixed amount was made between the khot and occupancy tenant, then the question arises whether the entry made consequent on the decision of 1888 is final and conclusive. It can only be so if it is "according to the provisions of s. 33." But it is directly contrary to those provisions. It states that defendant is entitled to hold the land in suit rent-free. Section 33 provides that an occupancy tenant shall pay such fixed share of the produce as shall be determined to be the customary rate of the village, or such fixed amount, whether in money or kind, as may be agreed upon between the khot and the said tenant. If these words have any meaning at all, they must mean that an occupancy tenant must pay something for his land.

As my learned colleague, who was a party to the decision in Balaji Raghunath v. Bal bin Raqhoji (3), has distinguished that case from the present one, it is unnecessary for me to refer further to that case, with some of the remarks in which I respectfully dissent. The result of the decision in the present case is that the decrees of the lower Courts must be reversed, and the thal claimed, which the lower appellate Court has found to be correct must be awarded.

Decree reversed.

Hindu law—Inheritance—Grandfather's property—Separated grandson — Partition—Self-acquired property, descent of—United sons, right of.

As between united sons and a separated grandson, the succession on the grandfather's death to the property, both ancestral and self-acquired, left by him goes in preference, according to Hindu law, to the united sons.

Fakirappa brought a partition suit against his grandfather (Somappa) and his uncles and obtained a decree. Part of the property, however, which he alleged to be family property was held to be the self-acquired property of Somappa. Fakirappa, therefore, by the decree was allotted a share of the other property only. He took possession of his share and subsequently lived separate from his grandfather and uncles.

On Somappa's death, Fakirappa filed the present suit against his uncles claiming a share of the property which had been declared to be self-acquired by him.

The Second Class Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff having separated from his grandfather (Somappa) was excluded by his uncles (Yellappa and Girirappa) who had remained joint.

The plaintiff appealed and the District Judge dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court.

Shamrao Vitthal and Dattatraya A. Idguni, for the appellant.—The plaintiff is entitled to a share of Somappa's self-acquired property. On Somappa's death it devolved upon his descendants and became ancestral property. The plaintiff as his grandson is entitled to a share—Gavrishankar v. Amraturam (1); Katama v. The Rajah of Shivagunga (2); Ramappa v. Sittamal (3); [102] Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 2, pl. 1 to 17; and s. 5, pl. 9 and 10; Vyavahar Mayukha, Ch. IV, s. 4, pl. 16, 33.

S. R. Bakhale, for the respondents.—In the first suit the plaintiff had claimed a share in the self-acquired as well as the ancestral property of Somappa. His claim to the self-acquired property was not allowed.

JUDGMENT.

Ranade, J.—In this case the appellant, who had already enforced a partition of his share against his grandfather and uncles in respect of joint ancestral property, brought his suit on the death of the grandfather to recover from his uncles by partition his share in the grandfather's share of joint ancestral property, as also in his self-acquired property. Both the lower Courts have disallowed the claim on the authority of West

* Second Appeal, No. 591 of 1896.
(2) 9 M.I.A. 639.
(3) 2 M. 282.
In the appeal before us, the argument has been confined solely to the self-acquired property of the grandfather, and no claim was urged in regard to the joint ancestral property which fell to the grandfather's share. It was urged that the self-acquired property of the grandfather must be treated as being of the nature of property left undivided at the time of the first partition, and that on the grandfather's death it became divisible among all his sons and grandson who succeeded by right of inheritance to it in equal shares. The appellant's pleader cited Gaurishankar v. Amrattram (1), Katama v. The Rajah of Shivagunga (2), Ramappa v. Sithammal (3), and also relied upon Mayukha, Ch. IV, s. 4, pl. 16, 33 ss., and Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 2, pl. 1 and 5.

None of the authorities cited appear to us to support appellant's contention. The ruling in Gaurishankar v. Amrattram no doubt held that the circumstance that there had been a partition between the members of a joint Hindu family would not, in the absence of any special agreement between them, alter their rights as to the property still undivided, as to which they would continue to stand to one another in the relation of members of an undivided Hindu family. The facts of that case, however, show that the ruling had no reference to self-acquired property as such, and that its application was confined only to the common case where some joint property is divided, and the rest, by reason of its peculiar tenure, or because it was mortgaged, &c., is left common and reserved for future partition. Of course in the absence of special agreement to the contrary, such reserved property may be partitioned at a subsequent time.

In the present case the appellant in his previous suit had claimed a share both in the joint ancestral and self-acquired property of his grandfather. Partition was enforced as regards ancestral property, but the claim as regards self-acquired was not allowed, as it was not liable to enforced partition. In regard to self-acquired property, there was no ruling in that case, while the authorities show that it cannot be treated entirely as if it was joint property left undivided. This is clear from the ruling in Shivagunga's case cited on behalf of the appellant. Their Lordships decided in that case that in a united Hindu family where there is ancestral property, and one of the members of the family acquires separate estate, on the death of that member such separate self-acquired estate does not fall into the common stock, but descends to the male issue, if any, of the acquirer, or, in default, to the heirs of his separate estate. The appellant relies on this ruling chiefly because it speaks of the right of the male issue to succeed to such self-acquired property, but it is clear from the context that the male issue here spoken of does not refer to the separated sons so much as to those sons who are in union with their deceased father. The succession of the male issue is by right of survivorship to joint estate, and must be confined to sons who are united coparceners, and cannot include the appellant who is separated from the grandfather and the uncles. In the case of a joint succession, the sons succeed by survivorship, and sons who have separated from their father and his family are passed over in favour of sons who have remained united with him—West and Bühler, p. 68. The sons separated cannot claim any portion of their father's property which he acquired after division—West and Bühler, p. 366. This property goes to his after-born son—Yekeyamian v.

Agniswarian (1)—along with the father's separated share of joint property—Ibid., p. 792. A son born to the father after partition inherits his wealth either solely or in common with sons who have become reunited with him—West and Bühler, p. 776. Where on a partition one sharer takes his share, and the others live and mess with the father as before, these latter may be presumed to have re-united with their father—Petamber Dutt v. Hurish Chunder Dutt (2). The only remaining case to be noticed is the ruling in Ramappa v. Sithammal (3), in which it was held that the separated son succeeded to the father's estate in preference to his widow. The judgment, however, shows clearly that if there had been united sons living at the death of the father, they would have succeeded in preference to their separated brothers. The head-note expressly inserts the qualification that no united son is living at the time of the father's death, and this qualification is also inferable from the whole text of the judgment.

It would be thus seen from the authorities that, as between united sons and a separated grandson, the succession on the grandfather's death to the property, both ancestral and self-acquired, left by him goes in preference to the united sons. The nature of the self-acquired property can make no difference in this connection, more especially where the grandson enforces his partition against his grandfather's and uncle's will. The succession to a joint estate goes by survivorship to the co-heirs, and the separated grandsons cannot be regarded as co-heirs with the grandfather at the time of his death. In this state of the authorities, it is hardly necessary to examine the original Mitakshara and Mayukha texts cited, which were, moreover, fully discussed in the Madras case and in the Privy Council decision noted above. The fact that no case like the present has come up before the Courts, of a second partition being demanded by a separated sharer, is itself strong evidence that the appellant's contention is not sustainable. A partition once made must be presumed to be final and complete. To hold otherwise would be to open the door to a flood of litigation, for in every case a [105] separated son can always put forth the suggestion that a portion of his father's property was self-acquired. On the whole, we think that the lower Courts have correctly decided the points of law, and we must, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Courts, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

JARDINE, J.—I concur in the result and the reasoning. No judicial authority on the point for decision has been shown us. The relationship of the parties is as under:

          Somappa
            /     \
           /     \

Fakirappa, plaintiff.

Basappa died and then Fakirappa sued Somappa and his (Fakirappa's) two uncles and obtained a partition by decree of the ancestral property and failed to obtain it of other property which the Court held to be Somappa's self-acquisition. He now claims to be entitled to share in the latter upon Somappa's death at Hindu law. There is no evidence whether Somappa devoted the property in suit to the purposes of the co-heirs, wherein he stayed till death with his two undivided sons.

(1) 4 M.H.C.B. 307. (2) 15 W.R. 200. (3) 2 M. 182.
I agree that neither Katama v. The Rajah of Shivagunga (1) nor Ramappa v. Sithammal (2) decides the point. Admitting the pre-eminence of a son whether separate or undivided in interest as an heir, the present case differs, as it is one of competition between a son separated and not re-united and other sons unseparated. I distinguish also Luchomun Pershad v. Debee Pershad (3), because the grandson there (whose father was dead) appears to have been a member of the united family. I agree also that Santan v. Janku (4) is not on all fours. Nawal Singh v. Bhagwan (5) appears to be near to the present. There the separated sons were held to have no rights in the property of their father, self-acquired after they had separated, as against a son born after the partition. But the judgment is based on express text affirming the right of such after son.

[106] It is admitted by the pleader for the appellant that during his lifetime Somappa might have dealt with this self-acquired property as he chose by gift or will—Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 2, pl. 1 to 6. But it is argued that the son takes by unobstructed inheritance—Ibid., Ch. I, s. 5, pl. 9 and 10—and that on the father’s death his right accrues, the fact of partition being immaterial. For this claim the Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 3, pl. 1 to 7 are relied upon. No other text has been cited. These placita do not appear to me to declare a rule supporting the present claim, nor have I found any support of it in the texts collected in Colebrooke’s Digest or in his comments upon them.

I concur in thinking that the fact that no reported instance of such a claim having been made or awarded signifies that the Hindu law has not been understood as justifying the contention. We are also entitled to consider the grievous inconvenience which the interpretation suggested would produce—Katama v. The Rajah of Shivagunga. It would stimulate unpleasant litigation. It would interfere with the power of the father and the sons remaining in union with him to provide for a separating son by giving him when he demands partition something more than his proper share of the ancestral property. That can be reasonably done when the self-acquired property left with the father or in the co-parceenary is sufficient to make good provision for those who do not choose to separate. But such reasonable family arrangements would be hampered if the father were at once obliged to protect himself by resorting to gift or will in order to prevent the separating son making claim on the death of the father to share in the self-acquired property. A partition would thus be complicated with arrangements of a testamentary sort and premature. I come to the opinion that the claim is contrary to the spirit and presumptions of the Hindu law and concur in the proposed decree.

Decree confirmed.

[107] APPELLATE CIVIL.
Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

MANAGER VITHOBA TIMAP SHANBHOG AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Appellants v. VIGNESHWAR GANAP HEGDE AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [24th March, 1896.]

Mortgage—Interest—Interest a charge—Construction—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 132.

Where a mortgage-bond stipulated that interest at a certain rate should be paid annually and there were no words limiting this liability to the time fixed for the payment of the principal, and where it appeared from the evidence that interest had been paid for several years after the due date.

Held, that the interest was a charge on the property, and that the claim for interest fell under art. 132 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

SECOND appeal from the decision of E. H. Moscardi, District Judge of Kanara.

Suit on a mortgage by the mortgagee. The plaintiff sued on a mortgage, dated 27th November, 1870, to recover the principal sum of Rs. 300 and interest Rs. 300 by sale of the mortgaged property.

The mortgage-bond was in the following terms:—

"Simple mortgage-bond executed by * * * to * * * I having borrowed from you for my necessity Rs. 300 and mortgaged to you the property * * * * * * These three plots * * * * I have this day mortgaged to you. The details of the Rs. 300 are as follows * * * * * * I shall pay interest on this sum at annas 4 per hun. (Rs. 4) per annum. At this rate I will pay interest annually and obtain your receipt. The principal amount I will repay in a lump sum on or before Margashirsh Shud 5th of Taran next [corresponding to 1884-85 A.D.] and get back this document with payment endorsed thereon. Up to that date I will not alienate the aforesaid lands to others by mortgage or sale. Thus is the mortgage-bond of lands executed."

The defendants contended as to the interest that under the bond it was not a charge on the property, and that the claim to it was barred by limitation.

It appeared from the evidence that interest was, in fact, for several years paid by the mortgagee after the time fixed in the bond.

[108] The Subordinate Judge held, on the terms of the bond, that only the principal, and not the interest, was secured on the lands; that there was no provision in the bond for payment of interest after the repayment of the principal in the Taran [1884-85 A.D.] year, and that the claim for interest was, therefore, time-barred. He accordingly awarded the plaintiff's claim for the principal only, and rejected the claim for interest.

In appeal by the plaintiff the District Judge held that under the bond and on the evidence the intention was that interest should be paid until the principal debt was discharged and that the interest was a charge on the mortgaged property falling under art. 132 of the Limitation Act. He, therefore, amended the decree of the Subordinate Judge by adding the amount of Rs. 300, for interest, to the sum awarded by the lower Court.

Defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Ghanasham Nilkanth, for the appellants (defendants).

Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar, for the respondent (plaintiff).

The following authorities were cited in argument:—Gossain Luchmee Narain v. Tekait Het Narain (1); Mansab v. Gulab (2); Bhagwant v. Daryao (3); Sri Niwas v. Udit (4); Gudri v. Bhubaneswari (5); Thayar v. Lakshmi (6); Narindra v. Khadim (7); Badi v. Sami (8); Bitramjit v. Durgo (9); Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (10); The Managers of the shop of Karsan Nagji v. Harbhamji (11).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The argument that the interest is not a charge on the property was not seriously pressed; and may, therefore, be disregarded.

Before dealing with the decisions as to whether art. 132 of the Limitation Act of 1877 applies to the interest, or art. 116 to damages for deprivation of the use of the money lent by the plaintiff on the mortgage, we have to determine the construction of the mortgage bond where it stipulates interest. The bond [109] exhibit A is dated the 27th November, 1870. It provides that the principal shall be repaid in lump sum on or before the year called Taran. Under the Circular Orders s. 50 the judgment of the District Court should have stated the year in the English Calendar also. It appears to be 1884-85. The stipulation about the interest is that it is to be paid annually and at a certain rate, but it does not say how long the mortgagee is to go on paying interest. The bond thus differs from those dealt with in Gossain Luchmee Narain v. Tekait Het Narain (1), Mansab v. Gulab (2), Bhagwant v. Daryao (3), Sri Niwas v. Udit (4), Gudri v. Bhubaneswari (5), Thayar v. Lakshmi (6), and from Narindra v. Khadim (7) and Badi v. Sami (8) as interpreted by the Court.

The above are cases like Cook v. Fowler (12), which dealt with a case of claim for interest after the date up to which interest was stipulated.

In the case before us it was not pleaded at the trial that the parties did not intend by their written contract that interest should be payable after the due date of the principal, i.e., the year Taran or 1884-85. The District Judge lays stress on the fact that the defendant-mortgagors did go on paying the interest at the stipulated rate for several years afterwards. The Judge holds on the words of the bond and on this evidence that the intention was that the interest at the stipulation rate should continue to be paid until the principal was discharged, which would be up till decree—The Managers of the shop of Karsan Nagji v. Harbhamji (13)—subject, as in the present case, to the law of damdupat. Without framing an issue on the intention of the parties and taking evidence it would be wrong for this Court to disagree with the District Judge’s finding on this point. But as the defendants did not plead what is argued now, it would be wrong to delay the passing of a final decree.

The case has, therefore, to be considered as one where the interest is a charge on the property mortgaged and where no question arises of claim for interest after due date stipulated for payment of interest. The construction we place on the bond distinguishes the case from Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (1). We, therefore, follow Thayar v. Lakshmi (2) and hold that art. 132 applies. The claim for interest is admittedly within the period there provided, wherefore the Court confirms the decree with costs.

RANADE, J.—The two points raised by the appellants in this case relate to the question of the interest claim.

The Court of first instance had disallowed this claim on the ground that the bond did not provide for payment of interest after the time fixed for repayment of principal in the bond. The District Judge construed the bond in a different way, and held that there was a stipulation to pay interest, and that the interest amount was a charge on the property. The appellant contends that the District Judge was in error in the construction he put on the bond, and further that the interest, if allowed, was only compensation and not a charge on the property, and as such the claim was time-barred.

The appellants relied chiefly on the authority of Narindra v. Khadim (3), which is a Full Bench decision, and reviews all previous decisions of that Court as also of the Calcutta High Court on this subject—Bhagwant v. Daryao (4); Sri Niwas v. Udit (5); Bikramjit v. Durga (6). This last decision of the Calcutta High Court was expressly disapproved from by the Full Bench. In that decision the Calcutta High Court held that the interest on the mortgage is not necessarily the interest which the parties stipulated by the mortgage bond should be paid, but would also include interest which under the law is payable after the due date, where there is no stipulation for interest after that date. This Calcutta ruling was followed by the Madras High Court in Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (1), and these two authorities [111] were relied upon by the respondent. No Bombay authority was cited on the subject, for the obvious reasons that all the decisions quoted above relate to s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, which was not introduced in this Presidency till 1st January, 1893. If the decision in the present case has been governed by the Transfer of Property Act it might have been necessary to consider whether this Court should follow the Calcutta and Madras rulings noted above, or the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad Court. The present suit was, however, instituted in 1892 before the Transfer of Property Act came into force in this Presidency, and we must decide the question independently of s. 88 of that Act.

We are inclined to accept the construction put upon the mortgage-bond by the District Judge. The mortgage-bond stipulates that interest at Rs. 4 per annum shall be paid annually, and there are no words limiting this liability to the time fixed for the repayment of the principal. This is not, therefore, a case where there is no stipulation for the payment of interest after a certain time. The conduct of the parties is also in favour of this construction, for it has been found that interest was, in fact, paid after the time fixed in the bond for several years.

There is, therefore, no occasion to have recourse to Interest Act of 1839 in support of the claim. The interest claim, like the principal sum, is, therefore, a charge on the property, and there is no bar of limitation operating in this case. We accordingly confirm the decree of the lower Court and reject the appeal with costs on the appellants.

22 B. 112.

[112] ORIGINAL CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Strachey.

QUEEN-EMpress v. BAL GANGADHAR TILAK AND KESHAV MAHADeY.

BAL. [8th to 11th, 13th, 14th and 24th September, 1897.]

The accused, who was the editor, proprietor, and publisher of the Kesari newspaper, was charged under s. 124-A of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) with exciting and attempting to excite feelings of disaffection to Government by the publication of certain articles, &c., in the Kesari in its issue of the 15th June, 1897.

At the trial an order for the prosecution given by Government under s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) in the following form dated July 25, 1897, was tendered in evidence:

"Under the provisions of s. 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Mirza Abbas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government, is hereby ordered by His Excellency the Governor in Council to make a complaint against Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, B.A., LL.B., of Poona, publisher, proprietor, and editor of the Kesari, a weekly vernacular newspaper of Poona, and against Mr. Hari Narayan Gokhale, of Poona, printer of the said newspaper, in respect of certain articles appearing in the said newspaper, under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code and any other section of the said Code which may be found to be applicable to the case."

Counsel for the accused objected that the order was too vague and should have specified the articles with reference to which the accused was to be charged.

Held, that the order was sufficient and was admissible, but that if it were not sufficient, the commitment might be accepted and the trial proceeded with under s. 532 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Queen-Empress v. Morton (1) followed.

In order to show the intention of such publications, counsel for the prosecution tendered in evidence a certain letter signed "Ganesh" which appeared in the issue of the Kesari of May 4, 1897. Objection was taken that it was not admissible, inasmuch as letters to newspapers often express opinions which are not the opinions of the editor and publisher.

Held that the letter was admissible to show intention and animus.

The proceedings in the Legislative Council which result in the passing of an Act cannot be referred to as aids to the construction of that Act. Administrator- General of Bengal v. Premnath Mullick (2) followed.

[113] Section 124-A of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) explained. Meaning of the word "disaffection."

At the close of the Judge's charge to the jury, counsel for the first accused asked that the following points might be reserved for the decision of the Court under s. 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), viz.:—

1. Whether the order for the prosecution was sufficient under s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
2. Whether the High Court had power, in the absence of a sufficient order, to accept the commitment of the accused under s. 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to proceed with the trial.

(1) 9 B. 288.
(2) 22 I.A. 107.
3. Whether the meaning given to the term “disaffection” by the Judge in his charge to the jury was correct.

The Judge declined to reserve the above points.

The first accused having been convicted applied to a Full Bench under cl. 41 of the Amended Eastern Laws Act, 1865, for a certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. The points upon which he desired to appeal were those which his counsel at the close of the trial asked the Judge to reserve as above stated.

The Full Bench refused to grant the certificate.

The first accused was the editor, proprietor and publisher and the second accused was the acting printer and manager of a newspaper called the Kesari. They were charged under s. 124A of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) with (1) exciting, and (2) attempting to exite, feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India by publishing in Bombay certain paragraphs and articles in the said newspaper in its issue of the 15th June, 1897. The first of the publications complained of appeared in the said newspaper under the heading “Shivaji’s Utterances” and was partly in verse: the second was an account of the proceedings at the Shivaji’s coronation festival held on the 12th June, 1897. The publications were as follows:—

They toil through hard times by tying up their stomachs (to appease the pangs of hunger). Oh people! how did you tolerate in the Kshetra (4) the incarceration of those good preceptors, those religious teachers of mine, the Brahmans whom I protected, (and) who, while they abided by their own religion in times of peace, forsook the darbha (5) in (their) hands for arms which they bore when occasion required? The cow—the foster-mother of babes when (their) mother leaves (them) behind—the mainstay of the agriculturists, the imparter of strength to many people, which I worshipped as my mother, and protected more than (my) life, is taken daily to the slaughter house and ruthlessly slaughtered (there). "He himself came running exactly within the line of fire of (my) gun!" "I thought (him to be) a bear!" "Their spleens are daily enlarged!" How do the white men escape by urging these meaningless pleas? This great injustice seems to prevail in these days in the [116] tribunals of justice. Could any man have dared to cast (6) an improper glance at the wife of another, a thousand sharp swords (would have) leapt out of (their) scabbards instantly. Now, (however,) opportunities are availed of in railway carriages, and women are dragged by the hand. You eunuchs! How do you brook this? Get that redressed! "He is mad. Lift him up and send him at once on a pilgrimage." "He is fond of pleasure. Deprive (him of his) powers, saying that it would be for a time only." This is the way in which royal families are being handled now. What misfortune has overtaken (the land) ! How have all these kings become quite effeminate, like those on the chess-board! How can I bear to see this heart rending sight? I turn (my) glance in another direction after tolling (i.e., leaving with you) a brief message. Give my compliments to my good friends, your rulers, over whose vast dominions the sun never sets. Tell them "How have you forgotten that old way of yours, when with scales in hand you used to sell (your goods) in (your) warehouses?" (As) my expeditions in that direction were frequent, it was at that time possible (for me) to drive you back to (your own) country. The Hindus, however, being magnanimous by nature, I protected you. Have you not thus been laid under deep obligations? Make, then, your subjects, who are my own children, happy. It will be good for (your) reputation if you show your gratitude now by discharging this debt (of obligation).

The Shri Shivaji-coronation festival here commenced on Saturday, the 12th instant, and was brought to a close last night. The temple of Vithal, near the Lakdi-pul (i.e., wooden bridge), was decorated in an excellent style for the festival. An image of Shri Shivaji on horseback was installed and around (it) were arranged pictures of Shri Shivaji Maharaja drawn by different artists. The picture drawn specially for this festival by Mr. Pimpalkhare, the accomplished local artist, representing the incident of Samarth Ramdas Swami and Shri Shivaji Maharaja meeting in the jungle at the foot of Sajjangad and the Samarth exhorting Shri Shivaji; and the "bust" of the Maharaja executed by Mr. Bhide, were worth seeing. (Some) students having recited pada (songs) in praise (of Shivaji) at the commencement of the festival, Professor Praranjpe read the Puran. He had for the text of his Puran (reading) the story in the Mahabharat, about the exasperation on (his) return (home) of the ambitious Suyodhana at the sight of the Rajasuya sacrifice (1) performed by Dharmaraja, his thoughts in that connection (and) the conversation he had with Shakunimama and Dhritarashtra (on the subject). The Puran reader having, with a view to give (his audience a clear idea of the Rajasuya sacrifice, compared it with the Diamond Jubilee, commenced the Puran (reading), observing, by way of an exordium, that his was not an attempt to uphold (or justify) what Duryodhana did, but [116] (only) to lay before them the (2) philosophical enquiry pursued in the Mahabharat as to the potency and quality of ambition which inspires all beings, and the innate power it has of elevating a country or a party. Professor Praranjpe's style of speaking is vigorous and impressive, (and) therefore the excellence of the most beautiful picture which Shri Vyasa has depicted of an ambitious mind was on this occasion well impressed upon the minds of (his) hearers by the Puran reader. (3) "Discontent is the root of prosperity; but contentment destroys prosperity." These maxims were the sum and substance of the Puran (reading). The dissertation as to how a man, even in affluent circumstances, prefers death in his exasperation to the indignity of being trampled under foot by his enemies, and how a discontented man secures co-operation and makes up for the lack of arms (and) missiles by (his) craftiness and other matters, was specially impressive. After the Puran (reading) was over, Professor Jinsiwale very earnestly requested the audience to study the Mahabharat. Professor Jinsiwale on this occasion said that the reason why Shri Shivaji Maharaja should be considered superior to Caesar (and) Napoleon was that, while the great men of Europe were actuated by ambition alone, like Duryodhana, the uncommon attributes displayed by our Maharaja were not the blaze of the fire of ambition or discontent, but were the outcome of the terrible irritation at the ruin of his country and religion by foreigners. After the (reading of the) Puran there was a Kirtan (4) by the pious Matangi Bava at night. The verses composed by the Bava himself on the coronation (of Shivaji) were couched in simple language, and as the Bava had all the accompaniments required for the Katha (5) with him, the Katha (5) was very much enjoyed. (6) Veda Shastra Sampanna (6) Matangi had specially come here from Satara for this Katha (5).

Vinchurkar’s Wada. The students of the New English School and the Nautan Marathi Vidyalaya and the other schools acquitted themselves creditably in their performance with Indian clubs and on the malkhamb (1). The students of the New School showed themselves to be proficient in playing kathi (2), dandpatta (3), bothati (4), &c. We hope that the students of other schools will follow their example (in this matter). The students attending the various schools as well as the people attending the gymnasia at this place will not find a better occasion than the festival (of the anniversary) of Shivaji’s birth for exhibiting their skill in many [117] sports. If the managers of the various schools take concerted action in this matter, it is likely to give special encouragement to physical and many sports amongst boys. We hope that this our suggestion will be duly considered by the principals of different schools. Well, on the night of the same day a lecture on the subject of “The killing of Afzulkhan” was delivered by Professor Bhanu, under the presidency of Mr. Tilak. The Professor ably refuted the charge of “murder” which English historians bring against Shri Shivaji Maharaja. The Professor has abundant (or strong) evidence in his possession (to prove) that Pantoji Gopinath was not a servant of Afzulkhan, but was from the first a servant of Shri Shivaji Maharaja. (5) Professor Bhanu having no permission to publish the papers relating to this matter for two years (more), did not place his (documentary) evidence on this (subject) before the meeting (5). It is, therefore, evident that the charge of treason brought against Pantoji Gopinath is literally false. How was it possible for the Maharaja even to imagine that Afzulkhan, who had undertaken on oath either to seize (Shivaji) and bring him alive or to kill him and bring his head to Bijapur, and who had on (his) way trodden under foot the goddess of Tuljapur and the Vithoba of Pandharpur, meant really to treat with him? What treason did the Maharaja commit if he went to meet Afzulkhan on the machi (6) of Pratapgad after making every preparation for battle for his (own) safety? The English historians assert that the Maharaja was the first to thrust in the waghnakhs (7), but we see it stated in two bakhars (i.e., memoirs), one of them written thirty years after the death of the Maharaja and the other about a hundred years after (his) death, that Afzulkhan was the first to strike (Shivaji). Even if we assume that the Maharaja was the first to strike Afzulkhan, what right has any writer to call that man a “murderer” who, while nine years of age, had divine inspiration not to bow down his head in the slightest degree before the Musalman Emperors? If Mazzini of Italy dons a mourning dress from (his) ninth year for the loss of the independence (of his country), why should not the Maharaja even at a tender age be stirred to put forth prodigious efforts for protecting (8) the walking and speaking depositories of knowledge (8) and the kine which are the living index of our prosperity? How can English writers have the audacity to belaun Clive and Warren Hastings, who were incomparably inferior to the Maharaja and whose careers were fraught with foul deeds? Is it not a deliberate outrage to the purity of truth that the pen of the same English writers, whose (code of) morality refrains from applying the epithet "rebels" in speaking of Washington, calls Shivaji a rebel? The history of Europe cannot show even a single upright man of Shivaji's type. History will find fault with Shivaji, (but) from the point of view of ethics his act does not merit censure. How can the European science of ethics, which has "the greatest good of the greatest number" as its basis (or principal axiom), condemn Shivaji for abandoning a minor duty for the purpose of accomplishing the major one? [118] In the Mahabharat a man of this type is called "Buddha"(1). The Professor concluded (his discourse on) the original theme with the declaration that even if (the Maharaja) had committed five or fifty more faults (crimes), more terrible than those which historians allege Shivaji committed, he would have been just as ready as at that moment to profoundly prostrate himself a hundred times before the image of the Maharaja.

At the conclusion of the lecture Professor Bhanu said: Every Hindu, every Maratha, to whatever party he may belong, must rejoice at this (Shivaji) festival. We all are striving to regain (our) lost independence, and this terrible load is to be uplifted by us all in combination. It will never be proper to place obstacles in the way of any person who, with a true mind, follows the path of uplifting this burden in the manner he deems fit. Our mutual dissensions impede our progress greatly. If any one be crushing down the country from above, cut him off; but do not put impediments in the way of others. Let bygones be bygones; let us forget them and forgive one another for them. Have we not had enough of that strife, which would have the same value in the estimation of great men as a fight among rats and cats? All (2) occasions like the present festival, which (tend to) unite the whole country, must be welcome. So saying the Professor concluded his speech. Afterwards Professor Jinsiwala said: If no one blames Napoleon for committing two thousand murders in Europe, (and) if Caesar is considered merciful though he needlessly committed slaughters in Gaul (France) many a time, why should such virulent an attack be made on Shri Shivaji Maharaja for killing one or two persons? The people who took part in the French Revolution denied that they committed murders and maintained that they were (only) removing thorns from (their) path. Why should not the same principle (?) argument be made applicable to Maharashtra? Being inflamed with partisanship, it is not good that we should keep aside our true opinions. It is true that we must (i.e., should not hesitate to) swallow down our opinions on any occasion when an expression of them might be thought detrimental to the interests of the country (i.e., nation), but no one should permit his real opinions to be permanently trodden under foot. Professor Jinsiwala concluded his speech by expressing a hope that next year there will be witnessed greater unity amongst the various parties in Poona on the occasion of this festival.

After the conclusion of Professor Jinsiwala's speech, the President, Mr. Tilak, commenced his discourse. It was needless to make fresh historical researches in connection with the killing of Afsulkhan. Let us even assume that Shivaji first planned and then executed the murder of Afsulkhan. Was this act of the Maharaja good or bad? This question which has to be considered should not be viewed from the standpoint of even the Penal Code or even the Smritis of Manu or Yagnavalkya, or even the principles of morality laid down in the western and eastern ethical systems. The laws which bind society are for common men like yourselves and myself. No one seeks to trace the genealogy of a Rishi, nor to fasten guilt upon a king. Great men are above the common principles of morality. These principles fail in their scope to reach the pedestal of great men. Did Shivaji commit a sin in killing Azulkhan or how? The answer to this question can be found in the Mahabharat itself. Shrimat Krishna's advice (teaching) in the Gita is to kill even our teachers (and) our kinsmen. No blame attaches (to any person) if (he) is doing deeds without being actuated by a desire to reap the fruit (of his deeds). Shri Shivaji Maharaja did nothing with a view to fill the small void of his own stomach (i.e., from interested motives). With benevolent intentions he murdered Azulkhan for the good of others. If thieves enter our house and we have not (sufficient) strength in our wrists to drive them out, we should without hesitation shut them up and burn (1) them alive. God has not conferred upon the Mlenchhas (2) the grant inscribed on a copperplate of the kingdom of Hindustan. The Maharaja strove to drive them away from the land of his birth; he did not thereby commit the sin of coveting what belonged to others. Do not circumscribe your vision like a frog in a well. Get out of the Penal Code, enter into the extremely high atmosphere of the Shrimat Bhagavatgita, and (then) consider the actions of great men. After making the above observations in connection with the original theme, Mr. Tilak made the following remarks relating to the concluding portion of Professor Bhanu's address: — A country which (i.e., a people who) cannot unite even on a few occasions should never hope to prosper. Bickerings about religious and social matters are bound to go on until death; but it is most desirable that on one day out of the 365 we should unite at least in respect of one matter. To be one in connection with Shivaji does not mean that we are completely to forget our other opinions. For quarrelling there are the other days of course. We should not forget that Ram and Ravan felt no difficulty whatever to meet in the same temple on the occasion of worshiping (the god) Shankar. After the lecture, pada (verses) of the Sanmitra Samaj and Maharashtra Mela were sung, and this brought the second day's (celebration) to a close.

On the third day Professor Jinsiwale delivered a very long lecture, which was replete with information. As it is not at all possible to compress Professor Jinsiwale's address in a brief space, we cannot give even a summary of it to-day. We are glad to say that the Kirtan of the pious Ghamande was, as usual, worth bearing. He took up the same story (subject) of the assassination of Azulkhan, and though it was (narrated) in the old style, it was full of new thoughts, as is usually the case with the Bava (i.e., preacher).

Other articles and extracts from the Kesari and from another newspaper called the Mahatta (of which the first accused was also the publisher and proprietor) of dates prior to the 15th June, 1897 were put in evidence to show animus on the part of the accused. Articles were put also in evidence by the defence to show that the accused were not actuated by any intention to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government.

Lang (Advocate-General), Macpherson and Strangman, for the prosecution.

Pugh and Davar appeared for the first accused.
The second accused was not defended.

Lang in opening the case read s. 124-A of the Penal Code and as to the meaning of the word "disaffection" referred to the definition given in Johnson's Dictionary, Webster's Dictionary, &c., viz., dislike, disgust, unkindness, ill-will, alienation, disloyalty, hostility, &c., and to the construction of it by Petheram, C. J., in his charge to the jury in the case of Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Chunder Bose (1).

In commenting upon the extracts from the Kesari he said there was nothing necessarily disloyal in celebrating the anniversary of Shivaji, who was unquestionably a great and distinguished man, but he contended that advantage had been taken of the celebration to use language with reference to the British Government which was intended to excite disaffection, and to incite those who heard and read the speeches and articles contained in the Kesari to follow the example of Shivaji and overthrow British rule. That was plainly the object of the accused. In order to show the intention he referred to an extract from the Kesari of May 4th, 1897, which appeared in the form of a letter signed 'Ganesh.'

Pugh objected that a letter addressed to a newspaper could not be used to show the animus or intention of the editor or publisher of the paper. Letters appearing in newspapers often give expression to opinions which are not the opinions of the editor and publisher.

Lang, contra, contended that all contributions to the paper which appeared in it were accepted by the publisher and might be used in evidence against him. These contributions were of the same tendency and expressed the same opinions as were found in the articles for which the editor and publisher was necessarily responsible.

[Strachey, J.—I do not think that I can exclude the evidence. As in cases of defamation, the proprietor and publisher would be liable for articles or letters published by him, though purporting to be signed by outsiders, and, therefore, I think that such contributions are admissible to show his intention and animus, as well as articles purporting to represent the views of the paper. It is, of course, open to the accused to put in any contributions of a different tendency which he may have published, and so to show that those put in by the Crown do not express his intention.]

Lang, continuing, referred to other articles which, he submitted, drew a comparison between the condition of the people under Shivaji and under British rule, altogether unfavourable to the latter, and contended that they were published for the purpose of exciting disaffection against the latter.

He argued that one of the articles in the Kesari on which the charges were framed contained a clear attempt to justify political assassination. It was significant that within a week of the publication of these articles, Mr. Ayerst and Mr. Rand were murdered at Poona. He could not produce evidence to show that these murders were directly caused by the publication of these articles. It would be for the jury to form an opinion as to the probable effect of publishing such articles at a time when much excitement and distress existed in consequence of the famine and plague and the measures which the Government had been obliged to take to prevent the spread of the latter.

At the conclusion of the Advocate-General's speech, evidence was called. The first witness was Mirza Abas Ali Baig, by whom the prosecution was instituted. He said:

"I am the Oriental Translator to the Government of Bombay. I instituted these prosecutions under the orders of Government in respect of these articles of the 15th June."

[122] Lang tendered in evidence the order given by Government under s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) which was as follows:

"Under the provisions of s. 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Mirza Abas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government, is hereby ordered by His Excellency the Governor in Council to make a complaint against Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, B.A., L.L.B., of Poona, publisher, proprietor and editor of the Kesari, a weekly vernacular newspaper of Poona, and against Mr. Hari Narayan Gokhale of Poona, printer of the said newspaper, in respect of certain articles appearing in the said newspaper, under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code and any other section of the said Code which may be found to be applicable to the case.

"By order of His Excellency the Governor in Council,

"S. W. EDGERLEY,
"Secretary to Government."

"Poona, July 26, 1897."

Pugh objected. This order is inadmissible. It is not a sufficient order under s. 196. It is not in proper form. It is too vague. It does not specify the articles with reference to which complaint is to be laid. The Kesari newspaper has been in existence for seventeen years. This order would permit a prosecution for any article which has appeared during all that time. A general sanction is not a good one—Queen-Empress v. Samavie (1). Here the order is indefinite. He also cited Reg v. Vinayak Divakar (2).

Lang, contra.—Section 196 does not require the order to be in writing. The witness has sworn that he had the authority of Government to institute this prosecution on the two articles in the Kesari on which the accused was charged. That sufficiently proves the order. If, however, that is not sufficient, I tender a further and later order of Government in this matter. The document now tendered was as follows:

"Whereas under the provisions of s. 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Mirza Abas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government, was, by order of His Excellency the Governor in Council, dated 26th July, 1897, ordered to make a complaint against Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, B.A., L.L.B., of Poona, publisher, proprietor and editor of the Kesari, a weekly vernacular newspaper of Poona, in respect of an offence committed by him punishable under [123] s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, and whereas under the same provisions of the said s. 196 the said Mirza Abas Ali Baig was by further order of His Excellency the Governor in Council, dated the 27th July, 1897, ordered to make a complaint against Keshav Mahadev Bal, clerk in charge or acting manager of the Aryabushan Press in Poona as printer of the said newspaper Kesari in respect of an offence committed by him punishable under the said s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code. It is by order of His Excellency the Governor in Council hereby declared that the said orders had and have reference to certain articles appearing on p. 2 of the said Kesari newspaper of issue, dated the 15th June, 1897, under the heading or title 'Shivaji's Utterances' and in paragraph on p. 3 of the same issue beginning with the 2nd paragraph commencing in the 1st column which said articles at the time when the said orders were passed were then before and under the consideration of His Excellency the Governor in Council.

Pugh.—This further order is not admissible. It is simply a declaration that the previous order related to the articles in question. It is not for the Governor in Council but for the Court to say what is the construction and meaning of the first order.

[STRACHENY, J.—I do not think it necessary to consider the admissibility of this last document, as I must hold the order of the 25th July to be sufficient and to be admissible. Under s. 196 of the Code, no Court is to take cognizance of any offence punishable under Chap. VI of the Penal Code, in which s. 124-A occurs, unless upon complaint made by order of, or under authority from the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government. In this case a complaint has been made of an offence punishable under s. 124-A, it was made by the Oriental Translator to Government, an order by the Local Government to the complainant for the prosecution of the prisoner under s. 124-A is produced, and the complainant in the witness box has sworn that he instituted the prosecution in respect of these articles by order of the Government. Mr. Pugh has objected to the order on two grounds, first, that it directs a prosecution in respect of certain "articles" and that the extracts in question do not fall within that description, and secondly that the order does not satisfy the requirements of s. 196 because it is too vague and does not specify by date or otherwise the extracts in respect of which action is to be taken. As to the first point, I am of opinion that the word "articles" in the order [124] covers and was intended to cover not only articles in the strict sense, but generally, matter published in the paper which was considered objectionable. As to the second point, if any particular articles or any dates had been specified, the complainant would have no doubt have been limited to them, but the effect of no such specification being made is to give him the widest latitude in selecting the matter to be complained of. It is only necessary to see whether the complaint relates to matters falling within the words "certain articles appearing in the said newspaper," and it is obvious that it does, and the order is, therefore, complied with. It may be desirable, and I think it is, that orders under s. 196 should be expressed with greater particularity, but I cannot read into the section restrictions which are not there. The section does not prescribe any particular form of order, and does not even require the order to be in writing. I am, therefore, of opinion that the order is sufficient. But even if I am wrong in this view, and if the order does not comply with s. 196, I am still of opinion that the objection must be disallowed. The section says that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under Chap. VI of the Penal Code unless upon complaint made by order of or under authority from the Governor. It is the Magistrate who takes cognizance of an offence upon complaint (s. 191): the High Court takes cognizance of an offence not upon complaint, but upon commitment (s. 194). Therefore, this is really an objection that the Magistrate, for want of a proper order under s. 196, had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence upon the complaint and to commit the accused for trial, and that, there being no valid commitment, the High Court has no jurisdiction to try the accused. But although in general where the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to commit an accused for trial, the High Court cannot accept the commitment, s. 532 of the Code creates an exception, and provides that in such a case the High Court may accept the commitment if it considers that the accused has not been injured thereby, unless during the proceedings before the Magistrate be objected to the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Mr. Pugh has argued that s. 532 does not apply to the absence of a proper order under s. 196, but I think that I am bound by the decision of the Full Bench in [125] Queen Empress v. Morton (1) to hold that it does. In this case no objection was taken in the Magistrate's Court, and I cannot hold that the accused has been in any way prejudiced. The object of s. 196 is to prevent unauthorized persons from intruding in matters of State by instituting state prosecutions, and to secure that such prosecutions shall only be instituted under the authority of the Government. I have no doubt that these proceedings have been authorized by the Government, and I disallow the objection.]

Pugh, in addressing the jury for the accused No. 1, submitted that the articles on which the accused were charged did not fall within s. 124-A. Tilak had taken an independent line with regard to the measures taken by Government in dealing with the plague and had co-operated with Government in that work. His action in that respect brought him into opposition to the leading men of his community. That was surely not consistent with any attempt to cause disaffection. The articles describing the sufferings of the people were quite consistent with loyalty. They no doubt set forth grievances, but it was not seditious to do that. There were articles in the Kesari describing the power and resources of the British Government. They would not have appeared if the publisher was seeking to stir up disaffection, for they would only show how hopeless any attempt at revolt would be. The articles on the Jubilee showed a genuine loyalty. No doubt there were articles in praise of Shivaji. They, however, only expressed a general admiration for him as a man of extraordinary power and talents. The books used in the schools subject to Government inspection used expressions about Shivaji as strong as any in these articles. The object of the accused was clearly only to create a national sentiment, just as the Scotch and Welsh and Irish people by their national celebrations endeavour to keep alive and foster a national spirit. There was not any suggestion of overthrowing the British Government. That could never be attempted except by a combination of Hindus and Mahomedans, and praises of Shivaji were not likely to bring about such a combination.

As to the meaning of s. 124-A, he referred to the speech [126] of the Legal Member of the Indian Legislative Council when proposing its enactment.

[STRACHEY, J.—I do not think, Mr. Pugh, you can refer to that speech as showing the meaning of the section.]

Pugh contended that the speech might be referred to, and cited, in support of his contention, In re Mew (2); The Queen v. The Bishop of Oxford (3); Queen Empress v. Kartic Chunder (4); Romesh Chunder v. Hiru Mondal (1); Gopal Krishna v. Sakhojirao (2); Regina v. Courvoisier (3); Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (4).

STRACHEY, J.—I have no doubt upon the point that has been raised. It is clearly settled by authority. Mr. Pugh has cited both English and Indian cases in support of his contention. The first English case he cited was that of In re Mew (5) in which it is true that Lord Westbury referred to a speech made in the House of Commons. That, however, was so far back as 1861. It is clear, I think, that since then in England the practice has been not to refer to speeches made in the Legislature for the purpose of construing statutes. In the case of The Queen v. The Bishop of Oxford (6), which came before the Court of Appeal in 1879, Mr. Bowen, afterwards Lord Bowen, who was counsel for the appellants, alluded in his argument to the speech made by the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords upon the third reading of the Public Worship Regulation Bill as an authority upon the construction of the Church Discipline Act, which had for many years been law. An objection was at once taken that a report of a debate in Parliament was not receivable as an interpretation of a statute. Mr. Bowen expressly admitted that the speech to which he referred was inadmissible so far as it related to the effect of the Bill before the House of Lords, but contended that he might refer to it as a statement by the Lord Chancellor of what the law was at the time the speech was made. He thus sought to use it not for the purpose of construing the Bill which was being introduced at the time the speech was delivered, but merely to show the then existing state of the law. The Judges were divided as to whether they could allow the speech to be read. Baggally, L.J., said (p. 576) that he had some doubts whether it was right to permit it, but, on the whole, did not object, and Thesiger, L.J., considered it to be “inexpedient in a very high degree.” Bramwell, L.J., however, saw no objection to its being done. That case went on appeal to the House of Lords, and during the argument of the appeal, Lord Cairns and Lord Selborne expressed the strongest disapproval of the conduct of the Court of Appeal in allowing the speech to be cited. Their disapproval is not stated in the Law Reports, but in the Law Journal Report (7); see also South Eastern Railway Co. v. Railway Commissioners (8). It will be observed that even those Judges of the Court of Appeal who allowed the speech to be cited, only allowed it for the purpose of construing a statute in force at the time when the speech was made. They never suggested, any more than counsel had done, that it might be cited as an authority for the construction of the Bill before the Legislature. The language of one of them at least strongly implies the contrary. That is what Mr. Pugh desires to do here. He wishes to refer to Sir James Stephen’s speech for the purpose of construing the section which he was then proposing to introduce into the Penal Code. That, I think, upon the authority of the English cases he cannot do.

But in India the law is now quite clear. It is true that there have been decisions in the Courts in India in favour of allowing the proceedings in the Legislative Council to be referred to for the purpose of construing an Act, but the Privy Council in a case decided so recently as 1895 (The Administrator General of Bengal v. Premal (9)), has held that this ought not to be done. If there has been a practice to the contrary in the Courts in India, that practice is wrong and cannot be permitted any longer. I am bound by this decision of the Privy Council, and I must hold that it is inadmissible to take as an aid in the construing of an Act the proceedings in the Legislative Council which resulted in the passing of that Act.

But if I were free to consider the question [128] apart from authority, I may say that I agree entirely with the judgment of Edge, C. J., in Kadir Buksh v. Bhawani (1) in which he condemned the practice of referring to the proceedings in the Legislature in order to ascertain the meaning of an Act. I think with him that "if Judges were to allow their minds to be influenced in the construing of a statute by debates in Parliament or reports of Select Committees or other bodies on the bill, statute law would be reduced to confusion, and instead of there being one principle of construction of statutes well understood by lawyers the construction of statutes would be reduced to no principle at all." Mr. Pugh can, of course, read any passages from Sir James Stephen's speech as a part of his address, and as stating his own argument in words which he adopts as his own, but he cannot cite them as Sir James Stephen's opinion and as authority showing the construction to be put upon the section.

Pugh, continuing, read passages from the speech of Sir James Stephen in the Legislative Council when proposing the enactment of s. 124-A as part of his argument to show that the section was really intended to punish an attempt to create a rebellious spirit against Government. The Advocate General had referred to dictionaries for the meaning of the word "disaffection," but the question here was not as to the etymological meaning of the word "disaffection," but as its meaning as defined by law. The jury should take a generous and liberal view of the articles on which the accused was charged. He referred to Cave, J.'s judgment in Reg v. Burns (2); the summing of Fitzgerald, J., in the Queen v. Sullivan (3); Queen-Empress v. Kahanji (4).

The Judge then charged the jury as follows:—

STRACHET, J.—Gentlemen of the Jury,—The two accused, Bal Gangadhar Tilak and Keshav Mahadev Bal, are here arraigned before you upon two charges. Each of them is charged, in the first place, with having excited feelings of disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. Each of them is also charged with having attempted to excite feelings of disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. And they are charged with doing these things by means of certain articles appearing in a newspaper called the Kesari of the 15th June of this year. Before going into any other part of the case, it is necessary to explain to you what is the responsibility of these persons, if any attaches to them, in respect of these articles; and, secondly, we will proceed to consider what is the nature of the offence with which they are charged. I have directed that copies of s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code should be distributed among you, and if they have not already been distributed, this will presently be done. The section, you will observe, defines the offence of exciting or attempting to excite, feelings of disaffection. It has been held by the late Chief Justice of Calcutta, Sir Comer Petheram, that it is not only the writer of the alleged seditious article but whoever uses in any way words or printed matter for the purpose of exciting feelings of disaffection to the Government that is liable under the section, whether he is the actual or not; and I entirely agree with him. The question is, whether the accused used words printed in a newspaper for the purpose of exciting disaffection towards the Government. That is what you have to consider.

The matter complained of consists of two articles published in the Kesari of the 15th June. As to the preliminary question of the connection of the accused with these articles, I will take the case of the prisoner Tilak first. The Kesari is a weekly paper, published in Marathi every Tuesday at Poona. It has a considerable circulation, having six or seven thousand subscribers not only in Poona, but in many other places, including Bombay. This particular issue of the 15th June contained these two articles and it was sent by post from the office at Poona to the subscribers in Bombay and elsewhere. So the paper's publication extended to Bombay. I only mention this matter of publication in Bombay, because it gives this Court jurisdiction to try this case. Sending the newspaper by post from the office where it is published to other places constitutes in law the publication in Bombay or any other place to which it is so sent. It is not denied by the defence that there was this particular publication in Bombay. It is in evidence that a copy of the paper containing these articles was sent from the office, and posted at Poona on the 15th, and [130] reached a particular subscriber at Bombay on the 16th of June. The prisoner Tilak is the proprietor and editor of that paper, and he is also the publisher. He has not attempted to dispute that, but has admitted it. He has also, in his statement before the committing Magistrate, admitted that he was cognisant of the fact that the paper was despatched to various places, including Bombay. It is further in evidence that before any matter is published in the Kesari, proofs are submitted to him. Upon the evidence you would be justified in holding that he is the publisher of this paper, and also the publisher of these particular articles in the paper. He has signed a declaration under an Act which the Legislature passed in 1867, and that declaration is in evidence. The Act requires the publisher of every newspaper to make a certain declaration that he is the publisher of it. The declaration in regard to the Kesari was made by Tilak some time in 1887. The law says that that may be taken as sufficient prima facie evidence that the person signing the declaration is the publisher of every part of any paper bearing a name corresponding to that mentioned in the declaration. And, therefore, under that Act, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, you will be justified in holding that the prisoner Tilak was the publisher of every article and every word in the Kesari. He published it through his servants; and it must be taken as a fact, until the contrary is proved, that he authorised them not only to print it, but to give it out to the world and to distribute it in Poona and various other places, among them being Bombay. You will be justified in holding, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that Tilak was the publisher, and that he published these particular articles at Bombay by causing the paper containing them to be sent to and distributed in Bombay through his agents on the 15th of June. The prisoner has not disputed, but on the other hand has boldly avowed, his connection with the paper. He has not attempted to shirk any responsibility which attaches to him in respect of these articles. So much with regard to the responsibility of Tilak.

Now I turn to the question of the responsibility of the other accused person Bal, who takes up a different position altogether. He has admitted in the statement which he has handed to the [131] Court that he was the acting manager of the paper in June last. He had been acting for some time in the place of the substantive holder of the office, who had been absent since last October. The second accused was officiating for that person. Letters signed by him "for manager" have been put in.
In one letter he describes himself as "acting manager." He was head printer also of the Arya Bhushan Press, where the Kesari and the Mahratta, also belonging to the prisoner Tilak, are printed. As the acting manager he superintended the printing of the paper, because he was also acting printer. He is not the registered printer. It is further in evidence, and witnesses for the Crown have told you, what was the practice in the office with regard to printing matter for publication. Bal used to receive manuscripts, and be used to make them over to the compositors, and when proofs were handed to him he sent them to Tilak. He does not deny that. He is the officiating manager, he is the officiating printer, and he is the person through whose hands proofs ordinarily passed, and he was occupying that position on the 15th of June. Observe what he says in his statement that, although the proofs passed through his hands, it was not his business to correct them. He says that he was a paid servant, receiving only Rs. 30 per month. It was not his duty to pay attention to or correct the proofs that passed through his hands, which were corrected by a corrector and then submitted to Tilak. That statement of his is borne out by the evidence of the witnesses for the Crown. The witnesses say that it was not his business to examine the proofs. They were corrected by a corrector. That, in a nut-shell, is the evidence of the part taken by the second accused in bringing out these articles. Apparently the literary department was not under his control. That being the state of facts, how have you to deal with the question of his responsibility? You have to deal with it in this way.
As he was the manager and superintendent in bringing out the matter —which was distinct from having a control over the literary department —as he was the printer of it, you may presume that he was acquainted with what he was printing and distributing. You have to find whether he authorised the insertion of these articles or their distribution. It is a pure question of fact. If you are not satisfied that [132] the prisoner was cognisant of the particular articles, or that he directed or authorised the insertion or distribution of them, then I will advise you to find him not guilty, because you must have regard to the section, which requires distinct proof by the Crown against him. You must be satisfied that for printing or using the words that were published, he was responsible, and that he used those words for the purpose of exciting disaffection. If you come to the conclusion that he knew nothing about these articles, then it is a question for you to consider whether you can properly say that he used those words with that purpose in his mind.
It is entirely for you to consider whether you believe Bal's uncontradicted statement that he was absolutely ignorant of what appeared in these articles.

But this does not apply to Tilak. He stands in a different position.
Tilak was the proprietor and publisher of the paper, and he must be taken as authorising the publication of everything appearing in the paper. No evidence has been called on his part to refute or rebut that position. He must be presumed to have been cognisant of what was published in his paper.  If you are satisfied that the two prisoners, or either of them, are responsible for the publication of these two articles in the Kesari the next question is whether that makes either of them guilty of an offence under s. 124-A of the Penal Code. Did they or either of them, by means of the articles, excite or attempt to excite in their readers feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India? That is a question of the meaning and effect of the articles, and the intention of the accused in publishing them, and it is entirely and exclusively a question for you to decide. But there is a preliminary question to be considered, and that is, what is the meaning of s. 124-A of the Penal Code, and what is the nature of the offence which it makes punishable? That preliminary question is for me to decide. The Code of Criminal Procedure requires you to accept from me the explanation of the section and of the offence—if my explanation is wrong, the responsibility rests upon me and me alone—and it is then for you to determine, upon the evidence before you, whether the facts constituting the offence as explained by me have been established, and whether the prisoners are guilty or not.

[133] Now, I come to deal with the law as contained in s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, and before I read it I would point out that there are certain matters which I shall ask you to dismiss altogether from your minds. In the first place, in construing the section I do not propose to discuss the English law of seditious libel, though I have most fully considered the cases to which Mr. Pugh has referred, and the writings of Sir James Stephen and others on the subject. I believe that the explanation which I shall give you is not in any way inconsistent with the best English authorities; but in England the offence of seditious libel is not a statutory offence defined by Act of Parliament, but a common law misdemeanour elaborated by the decisions of Judges. In this country the law to be applied is the Penal Code. I will now ask you to look at the section and the way it is worded. It says: “Whoever by words, either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs, or by visible representations, or otherwise, excites or attempts to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, shall be punished with transportation for life, or for any term, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, to which fine may be added, or with fine.” To the above is appended the following explanation: “Such a disapprobation of the measures of the Government as is compatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of the Government, and to support the lawful authority of the Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist that authority is not disaffection. Therefore, the making of comments on the measures of the Government with the intention of exciting only this species of disapprobation is not an offence within this clause.” You will observe that the section consists of two parts: first, a general clause, and then an explanation. The object of the explanation is a negative one, to show that certain acts which might otherwise be regarded as exciting or attempting to excite disaffection, are not to be so regarded. We must, therefore, first consider the first or general clause of the section by itself, and then see how far the explanation qualifies it.

The offence as defined by the first clause is exciting or attempting to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government. [134] What are “feelings of disaffection”? I agree with Sir Comer Petheram in the Bangobasi case that disaffection means simply the absence of affection (1).

(1) This should have been “the contrary of affection”; see I.L.R. 19 Cal. at p. 44. "Disaffection means a feeling contrary to affection, in other words, dislike or hatred." "Disaffection" is defined in The New English Dictionary as "absence or alienation of
It means hatred, enmity, dislike, hostility, contempt, and every form of ill-will to the Government. "Disloyalty" is perhaps the best general term, comprehending every possible form of bad feeling to the Government. That is what the law means by the disaffection which a man must not excite or attempt to excite; he must not make or try to make others feel enmity of any kind towards the Government. You will observe that the amount or intensity of the disaffection is absolutely immaterial except perhaps in dealing with the question of punishment if a man excites or attempts to excite feeling of disaffection, great or small, he is guilty under the section. In the next place it is absolutely immaterial whether any feelings of disaffection have been excited or not by the publication in question. It is true that there is before you a charge against each prisoner that he has actually excited feelings of disaffection to the Government. If you are satisfied that he has done so, you will, of course, find him guilty. But if you should hold that that charge is not made out, and that no one is proved to have been excited to entertain feelings of disaffection to the Government by reading these articles, still that alone would not justify you in acquitting the prisoners. For each of them is charged not only with exciting feelings of disaffection, but also with attempting to excite such feelings. You will observe that the section places on absolutely the same footing the successful exciting of feelings of disaffection and the unsuccessful attempt to excite them, so that, if you find that either of the prisoners has tried to excite such feelings in others, you must convict him even if there is nothing to show that he succeeded. [135] Again, it is important that you should fully realize another point. The offence consists in exciting or attempting to excite in others certain bad feelings towards the Government. It is not the exciting or attempting to excite mutiny or rebellion, or any sort of actual disturbance, great or small. Whether any disturbance or outbreak was caused by these articles, is absolutely immaterial. If the accused intended by the articles to excite rebellion or disturbance, his act would doubtless fall within s. 124-A, and would probably fall within other sections of the Penal Code. But even if he neither excited nor intended to excite any rebellion or outbreak or forcible resistance to the authority of the Government, still if he tried to excite feelings of enmity to the Government, that is sufficient to make him guilty under the section. I am aware that some distinguished persons have thought that there can be no offence against the section unless the accused either counsels or suggests rebellion or forcible resistance to the Government. In my opinion, that view is absolutely opposed to the express words of the section itself, which as plainly as possible makes the exciting or attempting to excite certain feelings, and not the inducing or attempting to induce to any course of action such as rebellion or forcible resistance, the test of guilt. I can only account for such a view by attributing it to a complete misreading of the explanation attached to the section, and to a misapplication of the explanation beyond its true scope. Lastly, the authority or institution against which it is an offence to excite or attempt to excite feelings of disaffection is "the Government established by law in British India." What is the meaning of that affection or kindly feeling, dislike, hostility, political alienation or discontent, a spirit of disloyalty to the Government or existing authority;" in Latham's edition of Johnson as "dislike, ill-will, want of zeal for the Government, want of ardour for the reigning prince;" in Webster as "state of being disaffected, alienation or want of affection or good-will, unfriendliness, disloyalty," with synonyms "dislike, disgust, unfriendliness, ill-will, alienation, disloyalty, hostility."—A. S.
expression? It means, in my opinion, British rule and its representatives as such,—the existing political system as distinguished from any particular set of administrators. The result is that you have to apply this test to the case of each of these two prisoners: did he, by these articles, try to excite in the minds of their readers feelings of disloyalty or enmity to the Government?

Now I come to the explanation to s. 124-A, and the question is how far it qualifies the section as just explained by me, and whether it supplies you with any other test to apply to these articles. Let us read the explanation again:—"Such a disapprobation [136] of the measures of the Government as is compatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of the Government, and to support the lawful authority of the Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist that authority, is not disaffection. Therefore the making of comments on the measures of the Government with the intention of exciting only this species of disapprobation, is not an offence within this clause." Let us consider each part of this explanation, as we have considered each part of the first clause. Observe first that, as I have already said, while the first clause shows affirmatively what the offence made punishable by the section is, the explanation states negatively what it is not: it says that something "is not disaffection," and "is not an offence within this clause." Therefore its object is to protect from the condemnation pronounced by the first clause certain acts which it distinguishes from the disloyal attempts which the first clause deals with. The next and most important point for you to bear in mind is that the thing protected by the explanation is "the making of comments on the measures of the Government" with a certain intention. This shows that the explanation has a strictly defined and limited scope. Observe that it has no application whatever unless you come to the conclusion that the writings in question can fairly and reasonably be construed as "the making of comments on the measures of the Government." It does not apply to any sort of writing except that. It does not apply to any writing which consists not merely of comments upon Government measures, but of attacks upon the Government itself. It would apply to any criticisms of legislative enactments, such as the Epidemic Diseases Act, or any particular tax, or of administrative measures, such as the steps taken by the Government for the suppression of plague or famine. But if you come to the conclusion that these writings are an attack not merely upon such measures as these, but upon the Government itself, its existence, its essential characteristics, its motives, or its feelings towards the populace, then you must put aside the explanation altogether, and apply the first clause of the section. In the next place supposing that you are satisfied that these writings can fairly and reasonably be construed as "comments on the measures of the Government" and not as attacks upon the Government itself, still you cannot apply the explanation unless you believe that such comments were made with the intention of exciting only "such a disapprobation of the measures of the Government as is compatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of the Government, and to support the lawful authority of the Government, against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist that authority." This, you will see, draws a distinction between attempting to excite feelings of "disaffection" to the Government, and intending to excite only a certain species of "disapprobation" of Government measures; and protects the latter only. What is the meaning of "disapprobation" of Government measures as contrasted with "disaffection" to the Government? I agree with Sir Comer Petheram that while disaffection means the absence of affection or enmity, disapprobation means simply disapproval; and that it is quite possible to like or be loyal to any one, whether an individual or a Government, and at the same time to disapprove strongly of his or its measures. This distinction is the essence of the section. It shows clearly what a public speaker or writer may do, and what he may not do. A man may criticise or comment upon any measure or act of the Government, whether legislative or executive, and freely express his opinion upon it. He may discuss the Income Tax Act, the Epidemic Diseases Act, or any military expedition, or the suppression of plague or famine, or the administration of justice. He may express the strongest condemnation of such measures, and he may do so severely, and even unreasonably, perversely and unfairly. So long as he confines himself to that, he will be protected by the explanation. But if he goes beyond that, and, whether in the course of comments upon measures or not, holds up the Government itself to the hatred or contempt of his readers,—as for instance, by attributing to it every sort of evil and misfortune suffered by the people, or dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character, or imputing to it base motives, or accusing it of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people,—then he is guilty under the section, and the explanation will not save him.

The object of the explanation is to protect honest journalism and bona fide criticism of public measures and institutions with [138] a view to their improvement, and to the remedying of grievances and abuses, and to distinguish this from attempts, whether open or disguised, to make the people hate their rulers. So long as a journalist observes this distinction, he has nothing to fear. It seems to me that this view of the law secures all the liberty which any reasonable man can desire, and that to allow more would be culpable weakness, and fatal to the interests not only of the Government but of the people. But now there are other words in the explanation which we have still to consider. To come within the protection of the explanation, a writing must not only be the making of comments on Government measures with the intention of exciting only disapprobation of them as distinguished from disaffection to the Government, but the disapprobation must be "compatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of the Government, and to support the lawful authority of the Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist that authority." What that means is that even exciting disapprobation of Government measures may be carried too far. For instance, if a man published comments upon Government measures which were not merely severe, unreasonable or unfair, but so violent and bitter, or accompanied by such appeals to political or religious fanaticism, or addressed to ignorant people at a time of great public excitement, that persons reading those comments would carry their feelings of hostility beyond the Government measures to their author, the Government, and would become indisposed to obey and support the Government, and if it could fairly be gathered from the writing as a whole that the writer or publisher intended these results to follow, then he would be guilty under the section and would not be protected by the explanation. Observe the nature of this "disposition," which makes the whole difference between a "disapprobation" of measures which amounts to "disaffection" to the Government, and a disapprobation which does not. It is not merely "a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of the Government." It is a disposition both to render obedience and also to support the lawful authority of the Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist it. And it is a disposition to support that lawful [139] authority against unlawful attempts not only to "resist" it—that is, to oppose it—but also to "subvert" it—that is, to weaken and undermine it by any unlawful means whatever. And, lastly, it is a disposition to support the Government against all such unlawful attempts whenever occasion may arise, not only against any particular unlawful attempt proceeding or impending at the time of the publication. I believe that it is an inaccurate reading of this part of the explanation, a too exclusive attention to the expressions about obedience and resistance, and an insufficient attention to other expressions equally important, which has caused some people to misunderstand the whole section, and to imagine that no one can be convicted under it even if he assails the Government itself, and not merely Government measures, unless he counsels or suggests rebellion or forcible resistance.

You will thus see that the whole question is one of the intention of the accused in publishing these articles. Did they intend to excite in the minds of their readers feelings of disaffection or enmity to the Government? Or did they intend merely to excite disapprobation of certain Government measures? Or did they intend to excite no feeling adverse either to Government or its measures, but only to excite interest in a poem about Shivaji and a historical discussion about his alleged killing of a Mahomedan general? These are the questions which you have to consider. But you may ask, how are we to ascertain whether the intention of the accused was this, that, or the other? How can we tell whether his intention was simply to publish a historical discussion about Shivaji and Afzul Khan, or whether it was to stir up, under that guise, hatred against the Government? There are various ways in which you must approach the question of intention. You must gather the intention as best you can from the language of the articles; and you may also take into consideration, under certain conditions, the other articles that have been put in evidence, such as the articles about the plague and the Diamond Jubilee and so forth. But the first and most important index of the intention of the writer or publisher of a newspaper article is the language of the article itself. What is the intention which the articles themselves convey to your minds?

[140] In considering this, you must first ask yourselves what would be the natural and probable effect of reading such articles in the minds of the readers of the Kesari, to whom they were addressed? Read these articles, and ask yourselves how the ordinary readers of the Kesari would probably feel when reading them. Would the feeling produced be one of hatred to the Government, or would it be simply one of interest in a poem and a historical discussion about Shivaji and Afzul Khan and so forth? If you think that the only feelings which such readers would be excited to are feelings of interest in a poem or a historical or ethical discussion, then you may presume that that is all the accused intended to excite. If you think that such readers would naturally and probably be excited to entertain feelings of enmity to the Government, then you will be justified in presuming that the accused intended to excite feelings of enmity or disaffection. As a matter of common sense a man is presumed to intend the natural and ordinary consequences of his acts: he cannot, speaking generally, say: Although this language would have the natural and ordinary effect of exciting feelings of disaffection, I did not when publishing it intend that it should do so. But in considering what sort of effect these articles would be likely to produce, you must have regard to the particular class of persons among whom they were circulated, and to the time and other circumstances in which they were circulated. In judging what would be the natural and ordinary consequences of a publication like this, and what, therefore, was the probable intention of the writer or publisher, I must impress on you, as perhaps the most important point in my summing up, that you must bear in mind the time, the place, the circumstances, and the occasion of the publication. An article which, if published in England, or among highly educated people, would produce no effect at all—such as an article on cow-killing—might, if published among Hindus in India, produce the utmost possible excitement. An article which, if published at a time of profound peace, prosperity and contentment would excite no bad feeling, might, at a time of agitation and unrest, excite intense hatred to the Government. When you are considering the probable effect of a publication upon people's minds, it is essential to consider who the people are. In my opinion, [141] it would be idle and absurd to ask yourselves what would be the effect of these articles upon the minds of persons reading them in a London drawing-room or in the Yacht Club in Bombay; but what you have to consider is their effect, not upon Englishmen or Parsis or even many cultivated and philosophic Hindus, but upon the readers of the Kesari among whom they are circulated and read—Hindus, Marathas, inhabitants of the Deccan and the Konkan. And you have to consider not only how such articles would ordinarily affect the class of persons who subscribed to the Kesari, but the state of things existing at the time, not in the year 1890 or 1891, or 1892 or 1893, or even 1896, but in June 1897, when these articles were disseminated among them. Then you have to look at the standing and the position of the prisoner Tilak. He is a man of influence and importance among the people; he would be in a position to know what effect such articles would probably produce in their minds. Would then the readers of the Kesari at that time, and in the then existing state of the country and of public feeling, regard the articles as a poem and a historical discussion applying no moral to the British Government here and now, or would they be excited by them to feelings of enmity to the Government?

But in the next place, in judging of the intention of the accused, you must be guided not only by your estimate of the effect of the articles upon the minds of their readers, but also by your common sense, your knowledge of the world, your understanding of the meaning of words, and your experience of the way in which a man writes when he is animated by a particular feeling. Read the articles, and ask yourselves, as men of the world, whether they impress you on the whole as a mere poem and a historical discussion without disloyal purpose, or as attacks on the British Government under the disguise of a poem and historical discussion. It may not be easy to express the difference in words; but the difference in tone and spirit and general drift between a writer who is trying to stir up ill-will and one who is not, is generally unmistakable, whether the writing is a private letter, or a leading article, or a poem, or the report of a discussion. You can form a pretty accurate notion of what a man is driving at, or what he wants to convey, from [142] a perusal of the writing, and can generally tell whether the writing is inspired by good-will or is meant to create ill-will. It is not very difficult to distinguish between the language of hostility and the language of loyalty and good-will or of criticism and comment. You must ask yourselves, having read the articles, whether the writer or publisher is, trying to stir up the feelings of his readers against the Government, or is trying to do something altogether different. If the object of a publication is really seditious, it does not matter what form it takes. Disaffection may be excited in a thousand different ways. A poem, an allegory, a drama, a philosophical or historical discussion, may be used for the purpose of exciting disaffection, just as much as direct attacks upon the Government. You have to look through the form and look to the real object; you have to consider whether the form of a poem or discussion is genuine, or whether it has been adopted merely to disguise the real seditious intention of the writer. Again, in judging of the intention of the writer or publisher, you must look at the articles as a whole, giving due weight to every part. It would not be fair to judge of the intention by isolated passages or casual expressions without reference to the context. You must consider each passage in connection with the others and with the general drift of the whole. A journalist is not expected to write with the accuracy and precision of a lawyer or a man of science; he may do himself injustice by hasty expressions out of keeping with the general character and tendency of the articles. It is this general character and tendency that you must judge the intention by looking at every passage so far as it throws light upon this. You have heard much discussion as to the exact meaning of various expressions in these articles and the best way of rendering certain passages into English. You must remember that there has been a dispute about the correctness of some of the translations which have been put before you. For most of you the documents that you have to deal with are, in their original form, in a foreign language. I do not intend to trouble you with any criticism of the various renderings which are in evidence. The discussions which have taken place on the subject are, I assume, within your recollection. They no doubt were necessary, and it is important that we should, as far as possible, exactly understand [143] the true meaning of every word. But it would be a great mistake to let the decision of this case turn upon mere verbal niceties of translation or discussions as to the best English equivalents of particular Marathi terms. We must look at these articles, not as grammarians or philologists might do, but as the ordinary readers of the Kesari would look at them—readers who are impressed not by verbal refinements but by the broad general drift of an article. Two translations have been put before you, one of which has been called a free and the other a literal translation. Both are equally official translations. What I would advise you is that wherever there is no dispute about the accuracy of the free translation, where its rendering has not been challenged, you should be guided by the free translation. It is altogether a mistake to suppose that because a translation is literal, it is more correct than the translation which is called free. It does not follow that the most literal translation of a passage is that which best conveys its meaning in English. What we want to get at is the way in which an ordinary reader would understand the whole article, and hence to gather the intention with which the article was written and published. An absolutely literal translation from one language to another may give in the second language an extremely imperfect and really inaccurate idea of the meaning and spirit of the original. These documents have been translated by a translator of the Court, a Hindu gentleman, whose capacity to translate cannot for one moment be doubted. The accuracy of his literal rendering of the articles has not been challenged by the defence; but the defence have found fault with the free translation as regards certain expressions occurring in the articles. The free translation does not profess to give the absolutely literal meaning of the words, but their real genuine equivalents in English. As I have said, where the accuracy of the free translation is not disputed, I advise you to be guided by that; where there is any dispute, I advise you to compare the literal with the free translation, to look at the context of the disputed passage, and to judge, by reference to that, which conveys the true meaning and intention. Again, where there is a conflict of evidence as to the meaning of a particular expression, I would advise you to give, [144] under the usual rule, the benefit of any reasonable doubt to the accused. Were the accused publishing a harmless poem and historical discussion, or were they using the form of a poem and a historical discussion for the real purpose of exciting enmity to the Government? In dealing with this question, as with all others in a criminal case, you must remember to give the accused the benefit of any reasonable doubt, and to give the articles not only a fair but a liberal and generous consideration. You must remember that the prosecution have to establish against the accused that the construction of the articles which they have put forward is the true one. In all cases, and whether the charge is one of sedition or murder or any other offence, the prosecution have to prove their case; and here they have to prove their construction of the articles, and to prove that the articles were published by the accused with the intention of exciting disaffection.

I will now come to the articles, but in doing so I wish you to bear in mind the nature of the Shivaji controversy. (His Lordship then proceeded to analyse and comment upon the articles on which the charges were drawn and also the various other articles that had been put in evidence, and concluded by asking the jury to give the matter an impartial consideration. He urged them to read the articles with the other evidence, and putting aside all prejudice from their minds, to say if Tilak was trying to make his readers hate the Government, or was commenting upon Government measures simply with the object of exciting a disapprobation compatible with a disposition to obey and support the Government, or was trying to interest his readers in a poem and a historical discussion with no practical application to the present day. His Lordship also impressed upon the jury, in view of the importance of the case, to endeavour to come to an unanimous verdict).

Pugh:—May I ask your Lordship for a reservation upon two points. The first is whether there is any sufficient order or authority, within the meaning of s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for the complaint made in this case; and secondly, [145] whether this Court had power, notwithstanding the absence of a sufficient order or authority, to accept the commitment under s. 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and proceed with the trial. Then there is a third point in regard to the charge. It is a question as to the meaning of the term "disaffection," and this is of very great moment. Although this is only the second case under this section, others are pending, some in this Court and others outside the Court, which will come up immediately for decision. What I desire to put before the Court is as to the meaning of the term "disaffection." Your Lordship has put it that disaffection is simply want of affection, afterwards explaining it by ill-will, dislike, and enmity. The point, I take it, is that disaffection is the absence of affection. The point I ask to have reserved is whether your Lordship's direction, to the jury that disaffection means simply want of affection in any degree towards British rule or its representative, is correct.

STRACHEY, J. — That is not quite a complete account. I was anxious not to pin down the jury to 'absence of affection,' (1) and that is why I also included those other terms, enmity, ill-will and so forth, as to the meanings of which there may be some shadow of difference. The word disaffection covers, in my opinion, all those terms.

Pugh : — I understood your Lordship to say that disaffection was absence of affection in any degree, and that you illustrated it by ill-will, dislike, enmity.

STRACHEY, J. — I held that disaffection was a common term embracing all these others.

Pugh : — My point is that disaffection does not mean, as Sir Comer Petheram put it, 'the contrary of affection.'

STRACHEY, J. — I have considered the various points which Mr. Pugh has asked me to reserve. I am of opinion that no good purpose would be served by reserving them, and I decline to reserve them.

The jury by a majority of six to three found the first prisoner guilty, and they unanimously acquitted the second.

"6. That in the course of the said trial the said alleged sanction or authority to prosecute your petitioner was tendered in evidence on the part of the prosecution and was objected to on behalf of your petitioner on the ground that the same was not a sufficient order or authority under s. 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the complaint against your petitioner in respect of the offence charged against him, but the said objection was overruled, the learned Judge holding that the said alleged sanction was sufficient within the said section, and that even if it was not, the effect, if any, was cured by the provisions of s. 532 of the said Code. Your petitioner humbly submits that the reception of the said sanction in evidence greatly prejudiced him in his trial."

"9. That in the course of his summing up to the jury the said learned Judge, among other things, directed the jury and, as your petitioner is advised, misdirected the jury as follows, that is to say:

(a) That 'disaffection' meant simply absence of affection.
(b) That it meant hatred, enmity, dislike, hostility, contempt and every form of ill will to the Government.
(c) That disloyalty was perhaps the best general term, and that it comprehended every possible form of bad feeling to the Government.
(d) That a man must not make or try to make others feel enmity of any kind against the Government.

(1) See note at 22 B. 134, ante.
(2) Clause 41:
"And we do further ordain that from any judgment, order, or sentence of the said High Court of Judicature at Bombay made in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction, or in any criminal case where any point or points of law have been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court in manner hereinbefore provided by any Court which has exercised original jurisdiction, it shall be lawful for the person aggrieved by such judgment, order, or sentence to appeal to Us. Our heirs or successors, in Council, provided the said High Court shall declare that the case is a fit one for such appeal, and under such conditions as the said High Court may establish or require, subject always to such rules and orders as We may, with the advice of Our Privy Council, heretofore make in that behalf."
That the word Government meant British rule or its representatives by administrators.

10. That before the verdict of the jury was delivered your petitioner's counsel applied to the said learned Judge to reserve the following questions of law, namely:

(1) Whether there is any sufficient order or authority, within the meaning of s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for the complaint made in this case;

(2) If not, whether this Court had power nevertheless to accept the commitment under s. 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to proceed with the trial;

(3) Whether the direction to the jury that disaffection means simply absence of affection in any degree towards the British rule or its administrators or representatives is correct;

for the opinion of this Honourable Court, but that His Lordship declined to do so.

11. That your petitioner thereafter through his solicitor Mr. Bhaskar Nanabhai applied to the Honourable the Advocate General for a certificate under s. 26 of the Letters Patent, but the Honourable the Advocate General declined to grant it.

12. That your petitioner is advised and verily believes that, in addition to the specific instances above mentioned, the learned Judge also misdirected the jury upon other points, and that, if the learned Judge had not so misdirected the jury as above mentioned, the majority of the jury would not have found a verdict against your petitioner.

13. That this case is one of the greatest importance not only to your petitioner, but to the whole of the Indian Press and also to all the Indian subjects of the Crown, inasmuch as, according to his Lordship's charge, a petition for the redress of grievances however unobjectionable in other respects would subject the person or persons presenting the same to the punishment provided by s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code.

14. That your petitioner is also advised and verily believes that, if the said charge be held to be a correct exposition, it will seriously interfere, if not entirely do away, with the liberty of the press and the right of freedom of speech and public meeting in India.

Your petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that Your Lordships will be pleased to declare under cl. 41 of the Letters Patent that this case is a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

The application was heard by a Full Bench consisting of Farran, C.J., Candy and Strachey, J.J., on the 24th September.

Russell, for petitioner: The authorities show that the Privy Council will hear appeals in three classes of cases: (1) where questions of jurisdiction arise; (2) where questions of grave importance arise which are likely to recur; (3) where refusal to do so would lead to a failure of justice to the accused—Pooneakhoy [148] Moodiase v. The King (1); Aga Kurbollie Mahomed v. The Queen (2); Jannokee v. Bindabun (3); Queen v. Eduljee Byramjee (4); Reg. v. Allo Paroo (5); Reg. v. Bertrand (6); Queen v. Murphy (7); Reg. v. Reay (8); Reg. v. Pestanj Dinsa (9); Carter v. Molson (10); Riel v. The Queen (11); In re Abraham Mallory Vilet (12); Ex parte Deeming (13);

(1) 3 Knapp P.C. 348 (352). (2) 4 Moo. P.C.C. 239 (242). (3) M.I.A. 67 (75).
In re MacCrea (1); Ex parte Kops (2). All these cases justify the appeal in the present case. We submit that the sanction given by Government was not a sufficient sanction (3) under s. 396 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) so as to give the Magistrate jurisdiction to hear and to commit the case to the Sessions. The sanction should set out the complaint, giving dates, particulars, &c. Here the Government gave the Oriental Translator a free hand to bring any complaint he pleased with respect to anything that had appeared in the Kesari from the date it first appeared. The nature of the complaint should be definitely stated in the sanction. The Government could not delegate to another the duty that was cast upon it. If the sanction was insufficient, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to commit.

Next we contend that the Judge mistook the jury as to the meaning of the word 'disaffection.' It was wrong to say that it was the absence of affection. It really means active disloyalty.

[STRAUGHN, J.—I pointed out that I agreed with Sir Comer Petheram’s definition, and I clearly meant to express that. I do not think that the word 'absence' was a fortunate word to use, but I think you will see that taken with the context I meant not mere negation, but an active feeling. I wanted to avoid pruning down the definition to any one word, and the word 'absence' does not accurately represent my meaning. The word was not used as fully defining the meaning of disaffection. You cannot take it that I meant an attitude of mere negation from the words which followed, for I said that disaffection meant exciting the people to hate their rulers, that is, coupled with the word enmity, and means an active feeling. The words 'absence of affection' were coupled with exciting disaffection of Government measures with a view to holding Government itself to the hatred or contempt of the readers.]

There must be an excitement to disorder—Mayne’s Criminal Law, p. 473.

Lastly, we contend that the Judge was wrong in his definition of the word Government as meaning British rule or its representative or administrator.

Lang (Advocate General, for the Crown.—No case has been made out to justify a certificate of leave to go to the Privy Council. The grounds on which the cases go to the Privy Council are stated in the Dillet’s case (4) and this case clearly does not fall within the class of cases there specified. There is no question of jurisdiction here. The only point is whether the prosecution was instituted by the authority of Government. No written authority is required. The Magistrate has only to decide whether the Government sanctioned the prosecution. Here the complaint was laid by the Translator to Government, who produced the written order of Government, and the case was conducted by the Government Solicitor. Could any Court for a moment consider it doubtful that the Government had sanctioned the complaint. It is difficult to treat the point seriously. The Code does not require any particular form in which the Government is to give its sanction.

The only other point is the alleged misdirection of the Judge with regard to the word disaffection. I do not admit there was any misdirection. The whole clause must be taken together. Words and passages must not be isolated and regarded separately from the context. Taking the whole clause it was clear that the definition of disaffection given was correct and agreed with that given by Petheram, C. J., in Queen-Empress v. Jogendro Chunder Bose (1).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The question to be decided in this case is whether in the opinion of this Court this is a fit case for appeal [150] to Her Majesty in Council. In reference to that it must be remembered that the Privy Council have themselves laid down certain rules which guide them in considering whether appeals in criminal cases are fit cases for appeal or not, and that they have expressly decided that there is no general appeal in criminal cases. It is only when an important or doubtful question of law arises, or when there has been a miscarriage of justice, that they will deal with appeals in criminal cases. I think this will include nearly all cases—excluding for the moment questions of the absence of jurisdiction—in which appeals have been allowed by the Privy Council. Therefore we have to apply our minds to consider whether in this case there is an important question of law to be considered, whether there has been a miscarriage of justice, and also whether there has been any want of jurisdiction shown in the committing Magistrate or the High Court.

Now, as to the question of jurisdiction, we are all of opinion without doubt that this prosecution was instituted under the authority of Government, and that, to use the words of the present Code (Act X of 1882), this complaint was made "by order of or under the authority of Government." There is no special mode laid down in the Code whereby the order or sanction of Government is to be conveyed to the officer who puts the law in motion. In this case the prosecution was conducted by the Government Solicitor, it was instituted by the Oriental Translator to Government, and he produced the written order of Government to institute the complaint. Now though the complaint must undoubtedly contain the article complained of to give information to the accused of the charge against him, there is nothing in the Code to show that the written order to make the complaint—if written order is required—must specify the exact article in respect of which the complaint is to be made. Therefore we think that it would be puerile on that point to send the case before another tribunal.

The other ground upon which Mr. Russell has asked us to certify that this is a fit case to be sent to Her Majesty in Council is that there has been a misdirection, and he based his argument [151] on one major and two minor grounds. The major ground was that the section cannot be said to have been contravened unless there is a direct incitement to stir up disorder or rebellion. That appears to us to be going much beyond the words of the section, and we need not say more upon that ground. The first of the minor points is that Mr. Justice Strachey in summing up the case to the jury stated that disaffection meant the "absence of affection." But although if that phrase had stood alone it might have misled the jury, yet taken in connection with the context we think it is impossible that the jury could have been misled by it. That expression was used in connection with the law as laid down by Sir Comer Petheram in Calcutta in the Bangaboshi case. There the Chief Justice instead of using the words "absence of affection," used the words "contrary to affection." If the words "contrary to affection" had been used instead of "absence of affection" in this case there can be no doubt that the summing up would have been absolutely correct in this particular. But taken in connection with the context it is clear that by the words "absence of affection" the learned Judge did not mean the negation of affection, but some active sentiment on the other side. Therefore on that point we consider that we cannot certify that this is a fit case for appeal.

In this connection it must be remembered that it is not alleged that there has been a miscarriage of justice.

The last minor point was with reference to the definition of the word Government. This is a very minor point in the case, but striking out the words which Mr. Russell has alluded to, but which were not in the original summing up (1), we cannot see that there has been any misdirection as to the meaning of the word Government. We, therefore, think that the application must be refused.

Application refused.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL—FULL BENCH.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMpress v. RAMCHANDRA NARAYAN AND ANOTHER.
[23rd November, 1897.]

The word "disaffection" in s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) is used in a special sense as meaning political alienation or discontent, a spirit of disloyalty to the Government or existing authority.

An attempt to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government is equivalent to an attempt to produce political hatred of Government as established by law, to excite political discontent, and alienate the people from their allegiance.

This meaning of the word "disaffection" in the main portion of the section is not varied by the explanation.

Per Parsons, J.—The word "disaffection" used in s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code cannot be construed as meaning an absence of or the contrary of affection or love, that is to say, dislike or hatred, but is used in its special sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government, which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government.

Per Ranade, J.—"Disaffection" is not a mere absence or negation of love or goodwill, but a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty, a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not definite, it secretly seeks to alienate the people and weaken the bond of allegiance and oppress the minds

* Criminal Appeal, No. 564 of 1897.

(1) In the copy of the charge annexed to the petition for leave to appeal, the definition of the words in s. 124-A of the Penal Code, "the Government established by law in British India" was given thus:—"It means, in my opinion, British rule and its representatives and administrators as such—the existing political system as distinguished from any particular set of administrators." In the charge as delivered the words here italicised "and administrators" were not used. The sentence should be, "It means, in my opinion, British rule and its representatives as such—the existing political system as distinguished from any particular set of administrators." of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government,—a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing [153] base and corrupt motives to it, and makes them indisposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and which promotes discontent and public disorder.

APPEAL from the conviction and sentence recorded by H. F. Aston, Sessions Judge of Satara, in the case of Queen-Empress v. Ramchandra Narayan and another.

This was a prosecution under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code.

Accused No. 1 was the editor, and accused No. 2 the proprietor of a newspaper called the Pratod, which was printed and published at Islampur in the Satara District.

The accused were charged under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code with having published on the 17th May, 1897, in the Pratod newspaper an article headed "Preparations for becoming Independent," in which they attempted to excite feelings of disaffection to the British Government.

The article, in respect of which the offence was alleged to have been committed, was to the following effect:

"Preparation for becoming independent.—Canada is a country in North America under the British rule, the people of which have now become intolerant of their subjection to England. Though they are subject to the British people, they are not effeminate like the people of India.
It is not their hard lot to starve themselves for filling the purse of Englishmen. They are not obliged to pay a pie to England. Their income from land revenue and taxes are expended for their own benefit.
They enact their own laws independently and appoint their own officers except one or two who are sent from England. Of even this nominal dependence they have become impatient and are now busy making efforts to throw it off. It is natural for them to envy their neighbours, who after casting off their English nationality and assuming the designation of Americans are now enjoying the blessings of a free nation. They have appointed a committee to frame an independent constitution for themselves.

"This committee has issued a notification of their aims, copies of which have been distributed even in India. In this notification they have clearly stated their intention of throwing off the English yoke and establishing a Government of their own. Like us, they are not men given to vain prattling, but can act up to their word. There is also strong unity amongst them. Spirited men show by their actions what stuff they are made of. There are no people on earth who are so effeminate and helpless as those of India. We have become so callous and shameless that we do not feel humiliation while we [154] are laughed at by all nations for losing such a vast and gold-like country as India.
What manliness we can exhibit in such a condition is self-evident."

To prove the animus of the accused, the Crown relied upon two other articles which were published in the Pratod newspaper on the 26th April and 17th May, 1897, respectively.

The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge of Satara with the aid of assessors.

Both the assessors were of opinion that the article complained of did not disclose any attempt to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government.
The Sessions Judge, however, disagreed with the assessors and found the accused guilty of the offence under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced accused No. 1 to transportation for life, and accused No. 2 to transportation for seven years. Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court.

Anderson (with him M. B. Chaudhary and M. V. Bhat), for accused.

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C.J.—The accused in this case have appealed from their conviction and the sentences passed upon them, respectively, by the District Judge of Satara, under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, for the offence of attempting to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India. The first prisoner has been sentenced to transportation for life, the second to transportation for seven years.

The libel in respect of the publication of which the accused have been convicted was published on the 17th May, 1897, in the Pratap newspaper, which is a newspaper printed and published every week at Islampur. It is not denied that the first accused Ramchandra Narayan is criminally responsible for the publication of the libel if its contents contravene the provisions of s. 124 A of the Penal Code: but for him it has been contended that the libel does not transgress the law enacted in that section. The same contention has been made on behalf of the accused No. 2, Krishnaji Dhonde, but in his case the defence has also been [165] urged that although he is the registered printer and publisher of the Pratap newspaper, he had ceased to taken any part in its management long before the publication of the libel, and that he is not criminally responsible for its publication, even though seditious matter is contained in it.

It will be convenient, before referring to the terms of the article the subject of the charges, to consider the meaning of the section upon which the prosecution is based. That section enacts that whoever by words, &c., excites or attempts to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, shall be punished with transportation for life for any term, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, to which fine may be added, or with fine. The punishment, it will be observed, varies according to the nature and gravity of the offence from simple fine to life-long transportation and fine. The explanation appended to the enacting part of the section does not directly deal with attacks or libels upon the Government itself, but with comments or attacks upon the measures of Government. It runs thus: "Such a disparagement of the measures of the Government as is compatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of Government and to support the lawful authority of the Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist that authority is not disaffection. Therefore, the making of comments on the measures of the Government with the intention of exciting only this species of disapprobation is not an offence within this clause." From this it follows that a wider latitude is allowed to a writer who comments on, or attacks the measures of the Government than to a writer who attacks the Government directly. Neither the section nor the explanation, however, defines the term "disaffection," nor is it defined in other parts of the Code. We must ascertain first its meaning in its usual popular and ordinary sense, and then consider whether from the scope and wording of the section read as a whole it is used there with the same or in a different signification.

In Murray's Dictionary—at present the most complete dictionary of the English language so far as it has been published—it is [156] stated that the adjective “disaffected” is almost always employed in a special sense as meaning “Unfriendly to the Government or the constituted authority; Disloyal.” The noun “disaffection” is defined as “absence or alienation of affection or kindly feeling—dislike—hostility.” Specially.
“Political alienation or discontent, a spirit of disloyalty to the Government or existing authority.” The quotations given show the correctness of this view. From The Rambler (A. D. 1751) we have this passage:—“Thou hast reconciled disaffection—thou hast suppressed rebellion”; and in Green's History (A. D. 1874) we find “The popular disaffection told even in the Council of State.” In this last sense it is, I think, employed in the main portion of the section we are considering.

An attempt to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government is thus equivalent to an attempt to produce hatred of Government as established by law, to excite political discontent and alienate the people from their allegiance. This is an offence under English law. In Stephen's Criminal Law the publication of a libel with seditious intent is classed as a misdemeanour, and seditious intention is thus defined:—“A seditious intention is an intention to bring into hatred or contempt, or to excite disaffection against the person of Her Majesty, her heirs or successors, or the Government and constitution of the United Kingdom as by law established...or to raise discontent or disaffection amongst Her Majesty's subjects.” I quote the passage as conveniently summarising the English law. It is, I think, fully supported by the rulings of the English Judges and all the recognised text books on criminal law.

Turning to the explanation, we find that disapprobation of the measures of Government is not disaffection provided that it is of such a nature as to be compatible with a disposition to obey Government and to support its lawful authority against attempts to resist or subvert it. The meaning of that passage appears to me to be that a loyal subject who disapproves Government measures is not to be deemed disloyal or disaffected on that account if, notwithstanding his disapprobation of such measures, he is ready to obey and support Government. If he is at heart loyal he is not [157] disaffected, merely because he disapproves certain measures of Government. The converse proposition does not appear to me to be true or deducible from the explanation, namely, that a subject who is ready to obey Government and support its lawful authority is necessarily loyal or well affected. He may be a rebel at heart though for the time being prepared to obey and support Government. The distinction is doubtless fine, but I think it exists, and it consequently follows that the publication of a libel exciting to disaffection against Government itself—the constitution established by law—may be an offence, though the libel may insist upon the desirability or expediency of obeying and supporting Government. The ordinary meaning of the term disaffection in the main portion of the section is not, I think, varied by the explanation.

The article in the present case is not one which is concerned with any measure of Government. If libellous, it is by reason of its exciting feelings of disaffection to the Government itself—causing the people to hate the constitution under which they live and to desire to subvert and change it for another form of Government. It opens with an untruthful representation of the aims and wishes of the Canadian subjects of Her Majesty, but as to this I think it must be assumed in favour of the accused that he was misled by some notification which had been seen by him, or by a reference to some such notification which had been published in some other paper, or otherwise had come to his knowledge. The accused were not questioned about this, nor has the prosecution proved the contrary. It ought not, I think, to be presumed that the existence of the notification was evolved from the imagination of the writer. Having started with this misleading account of the position of the Canadians, their aims and wishes, he proceeds to contrast their political position with that of Her Majesty's Indian subjects, greatly to the prejudice of the latter. The writer then goes on to address his readers. He informs them that they once possessed a vast and gold-like country—India—and assures them that they are laughed at by all nations for having lost it. He upbraids them for their effeminacy and want of spirit, and urges them to action. "Spirited men show by their actions what stuff they are made [158] of." He ends with this enigmatic passage: "How we can exhibit manliness in such a condition is self-evident." The article as a whole has, I think, the object of making its readers impatient of their allegiance to a foreign sovereign and creating in them the desire of casting off their dependence upon England—in other words, of exciting feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India. The publication of the libel is, I think, an offence under s. 124-A. The first accused was, therefore, in my opinion, properly convicted.

As to the second accused, he is admittedly the proprietor of the Pratod. He is its declared printer and publisher. Prima facie, therefore, he is responsible for what is published in it. When the prosecution has proved these facts, the onus is thrown upon the accused No. 2 to rebut the inference which arises from them. Ramaswami v. Lokanada(1) is, I think, an authority in favour of this view of the law. I think that its reasoning is applicable to a prosecution under s. 124-A. From his own statement, corroborated as it is by the evidence of some of the witnesses for the prosecution, I think it is established that the accused No. 2 now leaves the general management of the Pratod to the first accused, but I am not satisfied that he is not from day to day cognizant of the more important matters which appear in it. This being so I am not prepared to upset the conviction in his case. His offence, however, to me to have consisted rather in passively acquiescing in, and negligently allowing the publication of the libel in question, than in actively directing it.

As to punishment, it should in each case be commensurate with the offence. As to the article itself, there is nothing practical about it. It sets nothing tangible before its readers. It is calculated, I think, rather to excite unrealizable dreams—abstract feelings of discontent—than to spur to immediate action, and I do not think that the other articles put in to show the intent of the writer carry the case any further. This should be taken into consideration. The article also does not vituperate the Government at present existing. This is, I think, a feature to be borne [159] in mind. It appears, after all, in but an obscure paper published in a small town by an obscure person. The circulation of the Pratod is very small. The libel is written at a period when profound peace dwells in the land, and the law as it exists upon the subject of creating disaffection has been so long left in abeyance that its true purport may not have possibly been realized by the accused. At the same time the article certainly is calculated, and I think intended, to widen the slight breach or misunderstanding which in some parts of the country exists between the Government and its subjects, when the aim of all good writers should be to lessen and to close it.

We alter the sentence on the first accused to one year's rigorous imprisonment. This will, I think, be commensurate with the offence and will be amply sufficient to deter other newspaper managers from publishing similar articles. The accused No. 2 is an old man. His offence is rather one of negligence in permitting the publication of the article than of taking an active part in it. Three months' simple imprisonment will, I think, be an adequate punishment in his case—and we alter it accordingly. The more severe punishment which the section admits of ought, in my opinion, to be reserved for a more dangerous class of writing published in times of public disturbances.

PARSONS, J.—I concur. In my opinion the word "disaffection" used in the section under discussion (124-A) cannot be construed to mean an absence of or the contrary of affection, or love, that is to say, dislike or hatred; but must be taken to be employed in its special sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the Government or existing power, which tends to a disposition not to obey but to resist and attempt to subvert that Government or power. Its meaning thus exactly corresponds to the almost, if not quite, universally accepted meaning of its adjective "disaffected." To make or attempt to make a person disaffected, that is, to excite or attempt to excite in him a feeling of disloyalty to Government, or to create or attempt to create in his mind a disposition to disobey, to resist the authority of or to subvert the existing Government, is the act under this section declared an offence.

[160] The article in question clearly comes within this definition. Under the false representation of what the Canadians were about to do, it chides the people of India for their effeminacy and want of spirit, and exhorts them to exhibit some manliness in order to cast off their subjection to the English rule, to establish a Government of their own, and to become independent. In veiled language, but in no uncertain tone, it attempts to incite the readers to subvert the Government and replace it by another. I would confirm the convictions, but alter the sentence on No. 1 to one year's rigorous imprisonment, and on No. 2 to three months' simple imprisonment.

RANADE, J.—I concur. It seems necessary in the circumstances of this case that I should briefly state the reasons which lead me to this conclusion. To understand correctly the precise scope of s. 124-A, it is necessary to bear in mind that this section, together with s. 121-A, was avowedly inserted in Chap. VI of the Code relating to offences against the State, with a view to fill up an inadvertent omission of a special provision for the punishment of the offence of abetment of rebellion. In the words of Sir Fitz James Stephen, it was felt that as the causes which produce rebellion are wide, and spread over a longer period, a wider definition of abetment in the case of rebellion was necessary than sufficient in the case of theft or murder. In giving effect to this view, the principles of the English statute and common law were followed, and the section, as originally drafted by the Indian Law Commissioners in 1887, was finally incorporated in the Code in 1870, as substantially representing the law of England of the present day "though much more compressed, and more distinctly expressed."
The connection between English law and this particular section being thus admitted, the precise sense intended to be conveyed by the words “exciting or attempting to excite feelings of disaffection” used in the section can best be ascertained by a study of the corresponding English statutes and the decisions of the great English Judges who have declared what the common law is on the subject of this class of offences against the State. As regards statute law, I need go no further back than 60 George [161] III and I George IV, c. 8, which was expressly enacted for the punishment of seditious libels, which are described as “libels tending to bring into hatred or contempt the person of the King, or his Government or constitution by law established, or excite the subjects to attempt the alteration of any matter of Church or State as by law established otherwise than by lawful means.” The close correspondence between this provision and the s. 124-A, with the explanation attached to it, will be obvious on the most superficial comparisons of both.

The same connection becomes still more obvious when we consider the principles laid down by the Judges in some of the more remarkable prosecutions for seditious libels in England and Ireland. In R. v. Collins (1), Littledale, J., laid down that the people were allowed to hold free and full and candid discussion of public matters, but they must not do this in a way to excite tumult. In R. v. Tutchin (2), Holt, C.J., said that no Government is possible if men cannot be called to account for possessing the minds of the people with an ill opinion about the Government. Far more to the point is Lord Ellenborough’s pronouncement of the law in his charge to the jury in R. v. Cobbett (3). His Lordship said that if the publication is calculated to “alienate the affections of the people” by bringing the Government into disesteem, whether the expedient employed is ridicule or obloquy, the publication is seditious. The same expression,—alienating the affections of the people,—occurs in the charge to the jury in R. v. Lambert (4) of the same great Judge. In R. v. Sullivan (5) Fitzgerald, J., defined sedition to be “all practices which have a tendency to disturb public tranquility, and to lead people to subvert the Government and the laws. The objects of sedition are to create discontent and insurrection, or stir up opposition to Government. Sedition is further described as disloyalty in action. Practices which create discontent and dissatisfaction, or create public disturbance, or bring into contempt or hatred the Government, or the laws and the constitution, are punishable as [162] sedition.” The limitations on public discussion are thus laid down in the same judgment. “A journalist is free to canvass and discuss the acts of Government or its Ministers. He is free to discuss and point out errors, but he must do all this in calm and temperate language. He should not impute improper motives.” The mere use of strong language is not a crime, but if the publication is of a character to “excite contempt for the Government” or the laws, to bring them into disrepute, or to “excite disaffection,” or “disturb public peace,” then the publication is punishable.

These extracts will suffice. The Calcutta High Court adopted this same view when Petheram, C.J., observed in I.L.R., 19 Cal., p. 35, that if a publication is calculated to create in the minds of the people to whom it is addressed a disposition not to obey lawful authority, or to subvert or resist that authority, if and when occasion should arise, and if the intention of the writer was to create such a feeling, it is clearly punishable under s. 124-A. Disaffection, as thus judicially paraphrased, is a positive political distemper, and not a mere absence or negation of love or good-will. It is a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty, a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not defiant, it secretly seeks to alienate the people, and weaken the bond of allegiance, and prepossess the minds of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government, a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing base or corrupt motives to it, makes men indisposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and promotes discontent and public disorder.

The decisions quoted above have recognized greater freedom in the criticisms of the acts or measures of Government and its officers than is permitted in attacks on the Government itself, as also against the fundamental laws and the constitution, and it is this difference which is given effect to in the explanation attached to the main section, within the limits therein laid down. This distinction is operative not only in respect of the seditious libels, but also in blasphemy and attacks on public morals. Fair and candid and bona fide criticism is permissible in all these three cases, but when these limits are exceeded in a spirit of reckless [163] wantonness and levity, legal malice is presumed, and the protection ceases.

Having thus seen what is the character of the main offence and its limitations, the question how far the particular libel under consideration comes within the principle of the law as thus laid down becomes a comparatively easy one. We have only to see whether the words used were calculated to create the public distemper described as disaffection. Did it suggest or counsel or encourage the spirit of public discontent and insubordination to the law? Did it seek to alienate the affections and weaken the bonds of allegiance of the people, or to bring the political order of things as at present established into contempt? Did it promote political unrest or disorder? Of course the question is not whether these bad effects were or were not actually produced, but whether the words were calculated and intended to produce this public mischief. Judged by these tests, it appeared to me that the article in dispute was calculated to produce this mischief. Its evident animus was to excite a feeling of aversion and hatred. It was not directed as an attack against any particular act or measures of Government or its officer, but it appears to be the outcome of a general sense of vague dissatisfaction with the existing political constitution and order. The article was based apparently on no reliable document or notification issued by any responsible party in Canada. As a statement of well-known contemporary facts, it is not true to state that Canada is desirous of throwing off the English connection. An imaginary ideal of independence is held up for imitation, and the people of this country are blamed for their apathy in the matter and scornfully disparaged for their want of spirit. It is quite clear, therefore, that the words are calculated to create the feeling which the law reprehends and seeks to punish. The evidence of criminal intention is to be mainly gathered from the article itself, and the other articles which were admitted in evidence. Any actively malevolent intention does not appear clear from this evidence, but there can be no doubt that there was sufficient foundation for the inference of legal malice drawn by the Sessions Judge. In respect of such a publication, the professed writer, as also the registered proprietor, are legally responsible. The Sessions Judge was, therefore, right in convicting both [165] the accused. At the same time he greatly overrated the influence and mischief of the publication. The proprietor's responsibility is of a very technical character, and even the writer must be leniently judged because of the insignificance of his paper, its small circulation, and his poor education.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Strachey.

Mortgage—Payment of mortgage-debt by third person at request of mortgagor—Deposit of mortgage-deed and documents of title with such third person at request of mortgagor—Effect of transaction—Equitable mortgage by deposit—Costs—Appeal as to costs.

The first defendant held a mortgage as a security for a loan of Rs. 350. On the 23rd June, 1893, the mortgagors themselves paid him the interest due on the mortgage and on the same day at the request of the mortgagors the plaintiff paid him the principal sum of Rs. 350, which payment was endorsed upon the mortgage-deed. The deed so endorsed together with another document of title was thereupon handed over to the plaintiff by direction of the mortgagors. The plaintiff subsequently brought this suit, alleging that the defendant had agreed to assign over the mortgage to him and praying that he might be ordered to execute a transfer. The lower Court found that there was no agreement to assign the mortgage, but that the plaintiff was, under the circumstances, entitled to have an assignment executed to him by the defendant. It, however, ordered the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs of suit, being of opinion that the defendant had been justified in refusing to execute a transfer.

On appeal by the plaintiff.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an assignment of the mortgage from the defendant. If he had been so entitled he ought not have been ordered to pay the defendant's costs. But

Held, also, dismissing the appeal, that the plaintiff had no right of suit against the defendant. The defendant's mortgage was at an end. It was paid-off, and nothing remained for the defendant to do but to retransfer the property to the mortgagors or to such person as they should direct, but as there was no contract or privity between the defendant and the plaintiff, the latter could enforce no right against the defendant. His remedy was against [163] the mortgagors. When the defendant at the request of the mortgagors handed over the endorsed mortgage-deed and the other document of title to the plaintiff, a new mortgage, viz., an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, was effected by the mortgagors in favour of the plaintiff. What rights that deposit gave against the mortgagors, depended on the agreement between them.

The law as to the right of appeal on a question of costs is correctly laid down in the judgment in Ranichordas v. Bai Kasi (1).

The plaintiff in this suit prayed that the defendant might be ordered to execute a transfer to him of a certain mortgage which he alleged had been assigned to him by the defendant.

* Suit No. 503 of 1895. Appeal No. 938.

(1) 16 B. 676.
The plaintiff alleged that the defendant held a certain mortgage as security for a sum of Rs. 350 lent by him to the mortgagors; that he assigned it to the plaintiff for Rs. 350 and that on the 23rd June, 1893, the plaintiff paid him that sum, the payment being then endorsed on the mortgage-deed which with another document of title was handed over to the plaintiff by the defendant; that the defendant undertook to execute a formal deed of transfer whenever called upon, but had subsequently refused to do so.

The plaintiff further stated that the plaintiff was desirous of realizing the security and for that purpose it was necessary to obtain a formal transfer of the mortgage to himself. He, therefore, brought this suit, praying that the defendant might be ordered to execute the necessary transfer.

The defendant denied that he had agreed to assign the mortgage and alleged that the Rs. 350 had been paid to him by the plaintiff at the request of the mortgagors and in satisfaction of the principal debt due on the mortgage.

At the hearing Fulton, J., found that there was no agreement to assign the mortgage to the plaintiff; that on the 23rd June, the mortgagors themselves having paid the interest, the plaintiff at their (the mortgagor's) request paid the defendant the Rs. 350 in satisfaction of the principal debt due on the mortgage and that the mortgage-deed and another document of title was handed over by the defendant to the plaintiff by the mortgagor's direction. He held that under the circumstances the plaintiff was entitled to have the mortgage assigned to him, but he directed the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs of suit, being of opinion that the defendant had been justified in refusing to execute a transfer to the plaintiff. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"I find on issues 1, 2 and 3 in the negative, for I do not consider that there was any express arrangement either for the assignment or discharge of the mortgage; but I hold that as the principal was paid off with the plaintiff's money and the title-deeds were left with him, with the mortgagor's consent, the plaintiff is entitled to an assignment of the mortgage for Rs. 350 with interest subsequent to the 23rd June, 1893. I think, however, the plaintiff must pay the costs of the suit, for in the absence of any definite arrangement it was impossible for the defendant to assign until the facts were proved. He has substantially made out the allegations set forth in the written statement, and though I think a conveyance ought now to be given to the plaintiff, the latter must pay all expenses incidental to establishing his right to it. The mortgagors' story about the deposit of Rs. 350 was put forward on their own account and was never set up by the defendant."

The plaintiff appealed, contending that the lower Court ought to have found that there had been an express agreement to assign the mortgage to him, and that the defendants ought to have been ordered to pay his costs, or that the costs of the issues should have been apportioned.

Lang (Advocate-General) and Vucjaft, for appellant.—This an appeal as to costs—Ranbohordas v. Bai Kasi (1). The plaintiff although successful has been ordered to pay the defendants' costs. That order is wrong—Morgan on Costs (2nd Ed.), p. 95.

Starling and Russell, for respondents.—The appellants have appealed on the question of costs. We say the order as to costs is right, and support it on the ground that the suit ought to have been dismissed with costs.

(1) 16 B. 676.
So much of the decree as relates to costs was right. The rest of the decree was wrong and ought to be varied. We are entitled to support the order as to costs on this ground although we have not appealed against the decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 561. We say this suit should have been dismissed with costs, because a stranger who as a matter of fact pays off a mortgage is not necessarily entitled to an assignment of it. It was the mortgagors who [167] borrowed money from the plaintiff and gave the mortgage, and they only can require the defendant to reconvey the property. Possibly they might be entitled to require him to assign it to their nominee. But a third person cannot compel the mortgagee to assign to him. At the time of the mortgage there was no express or implied agreement by the mortgagor that he would assign the mortgage; and any agreement of the kind made after payment at the request of the mortgagors was without consideration. We, therefore, contend that the plaintiff is not entitled to the assignment he claimed, and that his suit should have been dismissed with costs. The part of the decree which orders him to pay costs is, therefore, right and this appeal on the point of costs ought to be dismissed.

Lang in reply.—It is only the order as to costs that is wrong. The decree in so far as it orders the assignment prayed for by the plaintiff is right. The plaintiff’s prayer being granted, he should get his costs. The defendant (the mortgagee) knew that the plaintiff at the request of the mortgagors paid off the mortgage-debt, and the defendant then handed over the mortgage deed to the plaintiff with the payment endorsed. In effect this was a sale of the mortgage to the plaintiff for Rs. 350—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 59, 8. The defendant’s right was made over to the plaintiff and the plaintiff is entitled to have a legal recognition of that right from the defendant.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Division Court which, while directing the defendants to execute a transfer to the plaintiff of the mortgage (Ex. A), which the defendant held over the several pieces of land of one Dadoba Jagonath and his sons, ordered the plaintiff to pay all the costs of the suit, both those of the defendants and his own.

It is objected that there cannot be an appeal upon the question of costs; but though a Court of appeal is averse to interfere with the discretion of a Judge of first instance in awarding costs, and rarely, if ever, exercises its power, except in cases in which some question of principle is involved and the principle has been violated, the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), does allow [168] of an appeal from any part of a decree including the award of costs. This was decided in Ranchordas v. Bai Kasi (1). The law upon this subject is, we think, correctly laid down in the judgment of Bayley, C.J., in that case.

It would, I think, as argued by the Advocate-General, be difficult to maintain the order as to costs in this case if the Division Bench is right in its conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to an assignment of the mortgage from the defendant. If the plaintiff had such a right as against the defendant, and the defendant refused to recognise and give effect to it, surely the plaintiff would be entitled to sue to establish it in Court, and ought not to have been directed to pay the defendant’s costs, though his mode of shaping his case and the raising of unnecessary and improper issues might have justified an order depriving him of his costs or even an order that he should pay the defendant's costs of the issues which he had improperly raised and which were found against him. I do not mean to say that the plaintiff himself raised these issues, but his allegations in the plaint necessitated their being raised.

Feeling this difficulty Mr. Starling contended, as under s. 561 he was entitled to contend, that the Division Court was not right in its conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to an assignment of the mortgage at the hands of the defendant; and in that contention he was, in my opinion, correct. The facts as found by the Division Bench are that the mortgagors on the 23rd June, 1893, themselves paid the interest due under the mortgage and that the plaintiff on the same day at the request of the mortgagors paid the principal sum of Rs. 350 to the defendant, the mortgagee. Thereupon the mortgagee made the following endorsement upon the mortgage:

"The 23rd June in the year 1893; on this day Rs. 350, the amount of this mortgage-deed, has been received in full, by the hands of Khushal Sadashivji, who has paid the same. The handwriting is that of Sha Punamchand Jusriupi. The amount of the deed which had been registered has been received. The handwriting is that of Punamchand."

[169] After making this endorsement the mortgagees by the mortgagors' directions handed the endorsed mortgage-deed and another document of title to the plaintiff. It is found by the Division Court that there was no agreement between the defendant and the plaintiff that the former should assign his mortgage to the latter. It was not seriously contended that this finding was not correct. The terms of the endorsement preclude the idea of such an agreement.

What, then, was the effect of the defendant's handing over the endorsed mortgage and the other document of title to the plaintiff at the request of the mortgagors? The answer is—the mortgagors thereby created a new mortgage—an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds—in favour of the plaintiff. What rights such deposit gave against the mortgagors depends upon the agreement between them—the plaintiff and the mortgagors. In the absence of an agreement, the English law gave him a right to call for the legal estate and right to foreclosure—Coot's, p. 351 (Ed. 1884). The Transfer of Property Act is silent upon the subject. It preserves such mortgages and says no more about them—s. 39.

But whatever may be the rights which such deposit gave to the plaintiff as against the mortgagors, it gave, in my opinion, none as against the defendant. His mortgage was paid off and done with. Nothing remained for him to do but to re-transfer the property to the mortgagors or to such person as they should direct—to the plaintiff, it may be, at such direction; but as there was no contract or privity between the defendant and the plaintiff, the latter could enforce no right against the defendant. His remedy was against the mortgagors. If he had sued the mortgagors for a conveyance of the legal estate, he might possibly properly have made the present defendant a party defendant to the suit, as the legal estate was outstanding in him. In that case the present defendant would have been merely a formal party and he would have submitted to any order which the Court should make and have asked for his costs. Against him directly, however, in my opinion the plaintiff had no right. of suit, and the order that the plaintiff should pay his costs is, therefore, right. The decree [170] would have been, I think, technically more correct if it had dismissed the suit with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

HANMANT ANYABA (Original Defendant), Appellant v. RAJMAL MANIKCHAND (Original Plaintiff), Respondent. [30th March, 1896.]

The plaintiff had contracted to supply materials requisite for a public building. The defendant was the supervisor, Public Works Department, in charge of the work. From time to time defendant borrowed money from the plaintiff, and (inter alia) four sums amounting to Rs. 385 which he paid as wages to labourers working under him. It was not proved, however, that he had borrowed the money as supervisor, and the defendant did not plead that he borrowed them in his official capacity.

Held, that inasmuch as a Public Works supervisor has not usually authority to borrow money for the purpose of the work of which he may be in charge, or in any way to pledge the credit of Government, the mere statement of the defendant when he borrowed the moneys that he wanted them to pay the labourers was not under the circumstances enough to show that the defendant borrowed them in his official capacity, and that the Subordinate Judge had authority to entertain the suit in respect of them.

In claims arising out of contracts the same test must be applied to determine the question of jurisdiction as in those having their origin in tort, viz., was the loan contracted by the defendant in his official capacity?

SECOND appeal from the decree of A. Steward, District Judge of Ahmednagar.

The plaintiff sued to recover certain sums of money lent by him to the defendant.

[171] The plaintiff was the contractor for the building of the Mamlatdar's kacheri at Raburi, and the defendant was the Public Works supervisor employed on the work.

The defendant pleaded that he had lodged Rs. 521-14 with the plaintiff and had drawn on this sum as he required it by chitties (cheques) on the plaintiff; that if he had overdrawn at all he had not done so beyond the amount of Rs. 55, which he was willing to pay to the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 524-13-6, finding that the defendant had repaid the sum of Rs. 897-9-0.

The District Judge on appeal varied the decree by awarding the plaintiff Rs. 1,027-6-6. He, however, disallowed an item of Rs. 385 claimed by the plaintiff, holding that this sum, which had been lent to

* Cross Second Appeals Nos. 60 and 100 of 1895.
the defendant for the purpose of paying the labourers employed on the kauberi, had been lent to the defendant in his official capacity, and that as regards it, the suit was one against the defendant in his official capacity which under s. 32 of Act XIV of 1869 the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain.

Both parties appealed.

Daji A. Khare, for the appellant (defendant).
Gangaram B. Rele, for the respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—The District Judge in this case has disallowed Rupees 385 out of the plaintiff’s claim on the ground that the Subordinate Judge was incompetent, having regard to s. 32 of Act XIV of 1869, to entertain the suit in so far as it included that sum. He held, as to it, that the suit was against the defendant in his “official capacity.”

The plaintiff had contracted to supply the wood-work and stones requisite for the building of the Mamlatdars Kucherl at Rahuri. The defendant was the supervisor, Public Works Department, in charge of the work. The defendant appears to have constituted the plaintiff as his banker or savkar and to have borrowed several sums from him in respect of which the plaintiff opened an account or “khata,” with him in the plaintiff’s books. Amongst the sums so borrowed are four items making up the above sum of Rs. 385, and the question is whether the defendant borrowed them in his “official capacity.”

No cases have been brought to our notice, nor do we know of any in which this question has arisen in connection with a claim arising out of contract; but we think that the same test must be applied to such a claim as to one having its origin in tort, viz., was the loan contracted by the defendant in his official capacity? See William Allen v. Bai Shri Dariaba (1). In considering that question it must be borne in mind that a Public Works supervisor has not usually authority to borrow money for the purpose of the works of which he may be in charge, or in any way to pledge the credit of Government. That being so, in order to deprive the Subordinate Judge of jurisdiction it must, we think, be shown that the defendant purported at least to borrow the money as supervisor; that he affected to enter into the contract on behalf of his department. If he did not, but only intended and affected to pledge his own private credit it is difficult to understand how he can be said to have contracted the loan in his official capacity.

Now in the present case the parties made no distinction between the sums in question and the other moneys which the defendant borrowed from the plaintiff. The defendant did not sign the orders for the money as supervisor, but simply in his own name. The sums were entered to his debit in his own private account, and when the plaintiff sued for them, he sued for them and the rest of the items upon the same footing. The defendant did not himself plead that he borrowed them officially. The parties evidently treated these as private borrowings. In the course of the evidence it came out that the defendant, when he borrowed the sums in question, wanted them to pay labourers. Why he so needed them is not shown. Whether he had received and spent the money to pay the labourers, or whether he wanted to pay them before he received official moneys for that purpose, we know not. The defence was not raised in the Court of first instance, so no evidence was given upon the question. All we [173] know is that the defendant stated, when he borrowed the moneys, that he wanted them to pay labourers.

(1) 21 B. 764.

Having regard to the other circumstances which we have referred to, we consider that that is not enough to show that the defendant borrowed these sums in his official capacity and that the Subordinate Judge had authority to entertain the suit in respect of them. We must, therefore, allow the cross appeal and vary the decree of the District Judge by awarding to the plaintiff Rs. 385 in addition to the sum decreed, or Rs. 1,412.6.6 in all. We do not think that we can, in second appeal, award interest between the date of suit and decree. The District Judge was not asked to do it, nor is this made a ground of appeal. We have already intimated our opinion that the defendant’s appeal cannot be sustained. The defendant must pay the costs throughout on the amount awarded.

Decree varied.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 59, 138, 139—Production of documents—Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 11—Practice—Procedure.

Under s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) in a suit to which that Act applies, the Court, before taking evidence on the merits, should require the plaintiff to prove first of all that he has, previously to bringing the suit, “presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force as within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit it was possible to present.”

Section 138 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1892) is enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents, and not to shut out formal evidence beyond suspicion, such as certified copies of public documents like records of Government.

Plaintiffs sued to recover possession of certain gabhan lands, alleging that they had been wrongfully dispossessed of the same by the Assistant Collector of Broach. They also claimed damages for loss caused to them by the superstructure on the said lands having been pulled down.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that under s. 11 of Act X of 1876 (2) the suit could not be entertained, as the plaintiffs had not

(2) Section 11 of Act X of 1876.—No Civil Court shall entertain any suit against Government on account of any act or omission of any Revenue officer unless the plaintiff first proves that previously to bringing his suit he has presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force, as within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit, it was possible to present.
presented all such appeals to the Revenue Courts as were allowed to him by law.

The first hearing of the case took place on 25th March, 1893. The issues were framed on 31st July, 1893; and the case was adjourned to the 12th March, 1894, when some evidence was taken; but the plaintiffs made no attempt to prove that they had exhausted all the rights of appeal in the Revenue Courts until 19th March, 1895, when they tendered in evidence two papers purporting to be answers to appeals made by them to the Collector of Broach and the Secretary to Government, respectively.

The Assistant Judge under ss. 138 and 139 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) refused to admit the documents because they had been produced at so late a stage of the suit.

He then dismissed the suit, holding it to be premature, the plaintiffs not having exhausted all rights of appeal to the Revenue authorities.

From this decision plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Gokaldas Rahandas, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The objection that the plaintiff had not exhausted all his remedies in the Revenue Courts was taken by the defendant in his written statement. The burden of proving this allegation was, therefore, upon [175] him. The plaintiff, however, produced the documents received from the Revenue authorities. The Assistant Judge ought to have admitted them in evidence. They did not take the defendant by surprise. These documents had not been called for. Section 138 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) does not apply; see Mahbub v. Patasu (1). That section is merely intended to prevent surprise, or fraud, or forgery: See Syed Ikram v. Ram Lochan (2).

Rao Sahob Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent-defendant.—Under s. 138 of the Civil Procedure Code a plaintiff ought to be ready with the whole of his evidence at the first hearing. The cases of Mahbub v. Patasu (1) and Minakshi v. Velu (3) do not apply. The plaintiffs knew what he had to prove. The issues were fixed on 31st July, 1893, and fifteen hearings took place subsequently, at which evidence on the merits was recorded. Section 59 of the Civil Procedure Code precludes the plaintiff from producing new evidence.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—There have not been many decisions on s. 138 of the Code of Civil Procedure: but we follow Syed Ikram v. Ram Lochan (2) in believing that it was enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and not to shut out formal evidence beyond suspicion, such as certified copies of public documents like records of Government. The Court below has overlooked the excuse given by the appellants, viz., that the Court had not called on them to produce the documents, which is supported by Mahbub v. Patasu (1) and Minakshi v. Velu (3). The record does not show that any call was made.

As Act X of 1876 was held to apply, the Court ought, before taking evidence on the merits, to have required the plaintiffs (appellants) to prove first of all that they had, previously to bringing the suit, presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force, as within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit it was possible to present." Otherwise, as s. 11 says, "no civil Court shall entertain any suit against Government, &c." By taking evidence on the merits without dealing with this question of jurisdiction raised in the 7th issue the plaintiffs were likely to be misled as to what s. 59 of the Code requires. We refrain from deciding whether the requisite appeals had been presented and whether an appeal presented after the period of limitation, therefore, is outside of the words "allowed by the law." The facts must first be found.

The Court for these reasons, and considering that, in such matters of procedure as s. 135 deals with, it should rather lean to an interpretation which advances justice than to a contrary interpretation, reverses the decree of the Assistant Judge and remands the suit to his Court for disposal according to law: costs to abide the result.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir O. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

TATIA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BABAJI (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [8th April, 1896.]

Vendor and purchaser—Executed deed of sale set aside for want of consideration—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25.

On the 18th November, 1892, A executed to B a deed of sale of certain land. The deed was duly registered and it recited that the consideration money, Rs. 50, had been duly paid. B got into possession of the land. A subsequently brought a suit to set aside the deed of sale, and to recover possession, alleging that he had been induced to execute the deed when incapacitated from illness, and that the consideration money had not been paid. Both the lower Courts found that the consideration money had not been paid. The lower appellate Court dismissed the suit, holding that A's remedy was to sue for the consideration money if it was unpaid, and that he had a lien on the land for the amount, but that he could not set aside the deed.

Held, that the deed should be set aside and the plaintiff should recover possession.

Per FULTON, J.—The sale was void for want of consideration. Section 25 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) applies to the transaction.

Trimalkara Raghavendra v. The Municipal Commissioners of Hubli (1) distinguished.

[177] Per FARRAN, C.J.—The judgment itself appears to me to disclose a state of facts which shows that there was no sale at all, and that the plaintiff was tricked into executing and registering the conveyance. I am not, however, as at present advised, prepared to assent to the train of thought which puts conveyance of lands in the mofussil perfected by possession and registration, where the consideration expressed in the conveyance to have been paid has not been paid in fact, in the same category as contracts void for want of consideration.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Narhar Gadadhar Phadke, First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur with appellate powers, reversing the decree of Khan Saheb Rattonji Mancherji, Subordinate Judge of Barri.

Suit to set aside a deed of sale and to recover possession of land.

The plaintiffs alleged that he being very ill, the defendant undertook

* Second Appeal No. 611 of 1895.

(1) 3 B. 172.
to cure him on condition of obtaining a portion of his land; that on the 18th November, 1892, the defendant by holding out false hopes of curing him induced him to execute a deed of sale of the land in question for the consideration of Rs. 90; that the consideration money was not paid by the defendant; and that he had been induced to execute the deed by the defendant’s fraud and deceit.

The plaint further stated that the defendant had got possession by a summary suit in the Mamlatdar’s Court.

The plaintiff now prayed that the deed of sale should be set aside and for possession.

The defendant pleaded that the deed of sale was duly registered and that the plaintiff had admitted payment of consideration before the Registrar; and that the plaintiff showed no ground for setting aside the deed.

The Subordinate Judge found that the deed was void for want of consideration, and allowed the plaintiff’s claim.

On appeal the Judge, though he found there was no consideration for the deed, reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, relying on Trimal Rav Raghavendra v. The Municipal Commissioners of Hubli (1).

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

[178] Balkrishna N. Bhajekur, for the appellant (plaintiff).—At the time the deed was executed the defendant was in possession of the land as tenant. It was not under the deed that he got possession. The decision relied on by the Judge is distinguishable. In that case the contract itself was not illegal, while in the present case the plaintiff was induced to execute the sale-deed by deceit and fraud. Section 25 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) is applicable, as well as ss. 11 and 12, because at the time of the sale the plaintiff was incapacitated by illness.

Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) defines a sale. Some consideration, if not the whole of it, must pass to validate a sale. Both the lower Courts have found that no consideration was paid to us—Umedmal Motiram v. Davu bin Dhondiba (2).

Mahadev B. Chaubal, for the respondent (defendant).—The Judge held that the consideration was not paid. He did not hold that the sale deed was void for want of consideration. If the consideration was not paid, the plaintiff has a lien for the unpaid purchase-money. He can sue for the price—Trimal Rav Raghavendra v. The Municipal Commissioners of Hubli (1). But he cannot get back the ownership, which was transferred to us by the sale-deed. The Transfer of Property Act is not applicable, because the sale-deed was passed before that Act came into force in this Presidency.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—In this case the plaintiff, who on the 18th November, 1892, had executed a deed of sale of certain land in favour of the defendant, sued to have the deed set aside, and possession of the land, which had passed to the defendant, restored to him, on the ground that the sale-deed was void for want of consideration and that he was induced to pass it by the defendant’s fraud and deceit. The defendant alleged that the consideration of Rs. 90 had been paid as stated in the deed, and that certain other statements in the plaint were untrue.

The recital in the deed about the payment of the consideration was as follows:—“I (the plaintiff) received the abovementioned sum of Rs. 90

(1) 3 B. 172.
(2) 2 B. 547.
twelve days ago. In respect thereof there is no document or khata. I have received payment of the money. There has remained no dispute as to payment of the money." The Subordinate Judge on the evidence held that no valuable consideration passed for the sale, which was, therefore, void, and ought to be set aside, and he accordingly decreed possession to the plaintiff with costs of the suit.

The First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers agreed with the lower Court in holding that the consideration money had not been paid, but rejected the plaintiff’s claim on grounds stated as follows:—

"A vendor of immovable property who has given possession to the purchaser is not entitled to rescind the contract of sale and recover possession because the purchase-money is not paid. His remedy is to sue for the sum due, and he has a lien on the property for the amount—

Trimalrav Raghavendra v. The Municipal Commissioners of Hubli (1). There is no contention in the present case that the land was not held by the defendant as its purchaser after the sale-deed in continuation of the previous lease tenure as admitted by him in No. 8. The sale-deed cannot be cancelled, as there is no fraud or deceit proved to subsist in its execution by the plaintiff."

The plaintiff is, therefore, left in the unfortunate position of getting neither his money nor his land. He may seek to recover the money in another suit, but, if the defendant still continues to allege payment, it is very doubtful whether the fact of non-payment will be treated as a res judicata, for it may probably be argued that, as the appellate Court considered that the transfer of ownership was effected by the mere execution of the deed and delivery of possession, the finding that the price had not been paid was immaterial to the result, the suit being dismissed not in consequence of that finding, but in spite of it.

Now, of course, if we considered that the lower Court had rightly applied the law to the facts found, we should be obliged to uphold its decision, but I am glad to think that according to the view which I take of the law we shall not be compelled to concur in such an unsatisfactory result. To the learned First Class Subordinate Judge’s statement of the law I entirely assent, but not to its application in the present case. The fallacy of his argument appears to lie in the use of the word "vendor." If the transaction was a "sale," and the plaintiff was a "vendor," undoubtedly he could not now recover possession of the land; but if there was no consideration, either paid or promised, then, I think, there was no sale, and the remarks above quoted have no bearing on the case. The decision—Trimalrav Raghavendra v. The Municipal Commissioners of Hubli (1)—relied on by the First Class Subordinate Judge is wholly inapplicable. The validity of the contract there was unquestionable. The consideration for the sale consisted in the promise to pay the price by instalments, and, on this promise being broken, the remedy lay not in a rescission of the contract but in a suit to recover the money due under it. The case of Ummedmal v. Dau (2) is more analogous to the present case. There the deed of sale, it is true, recited that the purchase-money had been paid; but the conduct of the parties showed that the real intention was that the money was to be paid subsequently: for thirteen days after execution the purchaser, finding that he could not raise it, returned the deed to the vendor. Therefore, in that case it could not be argued that there was no consideration. There was an understood promise to pay, and on this consideration the contract was valid, and by the execution of the deed embodying it the vendor's title was conveyed to the vendee and could not be restored to him except by a subsequent agreement. The evidence, however, offered to prove such agreement was inadmissible by reason of the terms of the Registration Act, and the vendee's title could not be disproved. That case simply emphasized the principle that a contract of sale is completed when the terms are agreed on and the deed is executed, but cannot be treated as an authority for the proposition that a mere conveyance not containing the terms of a valid agreement is sufficient in itself to transfer the property. In that particular case the contract was valid, but I do not think that the learned Judges who decided it intended to affirm that in all cases where a deed of sale was signed, and possession was delivered, the property ipso facto passed. In most cases, no doubt, where the execution of a deed is the final act of a valid contract of sale, it is correct to say that the property is transferred by the deed, but the matter seems to me to hinge on the validity of the contract. Nor I think can it be argued that in all cases in which the price is incorrectly recited to have been paid, we ought to infer that the real agreement was that it was to be paid. In many cases no doubt such an inference would properly be drawn having regard to the well-known laxity of recitals on this point, but the inference to be drawn in many (or perhaps in most) cases cannot be extended to all. It is a mere presumption of fact. Each case must be decided on its own merits.

(1) 3 B. 172.
(2) 2 B. 547.

In the present case, having regard to the great care taken by the parties to the deed to exclude the possibility of any claim for future payment, and the fact that neither party has alleged a promise or intention to pay in future, it would not, I think, be possible consistently with s. 114 of the Evidence Act to presume that payment was promised. To me it seems very unlikely that any future payment was promised or intended. If on the meagre facts before us I were compelled to form a theory as to the reason which induced the plaintiff, who is found not to have received the Rs. 90, to sign the deed, I think I should be inclined to accept his own version of the story, which, though not proved, may nevertheless be true. But it is not necessary to speculate on this point, for the lower Court has expressly found that there was no consideration for the sale. Such being the case, I think s. 25 of the Contract Act applies to this transaction as to any other contract. It is true that this deed was executed before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, and that, therefore, it is not affected by s. 4 of that Act, which declares that the chapters and sections relating to contracts shall be taken as part of the Indian Contract Act; but even apart from this section there is, I think, no reason for excluding from the general provisions of the Contract Act contracts of sale of land. The wording of these provisions certainly does not suggest any such exclusion. In Rajan Harji v. Ardesir (1) it seems to have been assumed by Sir M. Westropp and Mr. Justice F. D. Melvill that [182] a sale of land was subject to the provisions of ss. 23 and 24 of the Contract Act, though the finding that there was no fraudulent or unlawful object rendered any decision on the point unnecessary. In Manna Lal v. Bank of Bengal (2) the Allahabad High Court held a mortgage effected by a duly registered deed to be void for want of consideration under s. 25 of the Contract Act. This case is on all fours with the present case, excepting that here the transaction purported to be a sale and there a mortgage. See also Ganga Bakhsh v. Jagat Bahadur Singh (1) in which the applicability of s. 16 of the Contract Act to a gift of land appears to have been admitted.

Of course it may be said that as the plaintiff chose to sign a sale-deed without any consideration, either paid or promised, there is in justice no more reason for setting it aside than there would be for annulling a deed of gift. The plaintiff, if he chose, was at liberty to give away his land. But the answer to this argument appears to be that if the defendant had come into Court with a deed of gift it would almost certainly, under the circumstances set forth in the judgments, have been avoided as obtained by means of undue influence. Considering the illness of the plaintiff and the fact that he was unable to manage his property and remembering that no intelligible motive has been assigned for the alienation of this land, the Court would doubtless have come to the conclusion that there had been unfair dealing. It is quite as strong a case as Clark v. Malpas (2) in which a completed sale was set aside on the ground that the inadequacy of the consideration and the helpless condition of the vendor, who was illiterate, and without independent advice, proved a transaction which was "equitably void." Numerous other cases might be referred to in which transactions have been avoided where the consideration was so grossly inadequate as to indicate fraud; but I have thought it enough to refer to Clark v. Malpas to show how hopeless it would have been to attempt to uphold this transaction as a gift based on no consideration at all.

This point, however, need not be further discussed. The transaction, as it stands, purports to be a sale and nothing else. But [183] as a sale it is void for want of consideration. There being no contract, there could, I think, be no transfer of property by sale.

I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, with costs on defendant throughout.

FARRAN, C.J.—I am not prepared to dissent from the conclusion which my learned colleague has come to in this particular case. The findings of the Subordinate Judge, A. P., that "the defendant has been in possession of the land in dispute from times previous to the sale to him and it is evident that he is aware of the real valuableness of the same. He, therefore, seems to have the same conveyed to himself by the plaintiff at a more or less price which he managed not to pay to the latter," and that there was no fraud or deceit proved to subsist in the execution of the conveyance by the plaintiff, are to my mind self-contradictory, especially bearing in mind that the plaintiff was at the time of the execution incapacitated by illness from managing his business. The judgment itself appears to me to disclose a state of facts which shows that there was no sale at all and that the plaintiff was tricked into executing and registering the conveyance. I am not, however, as at present advised, prepared to assent to the train of thought which puts conveyances of lands in the Mofussil perfected by possession or registration, where the consideration expressed in the conveyance to have been paid has not in fact been paid, in the same category as contracts void for want of consideration. The radical distinction between a perfected conveyance and a contract does not seem to me to have been sufficiently borne in mind throughout the judgment. I refrain, however, from saying more upon this subject until the problem is presented to the Court in a more intelligible form. The Transfer of Property Act, s. 54, will for the most part in future regulate conveyances which come before the Court under such circumstances.

(1) 22 I. A. 153.  (2) 4 D. F. and J. 401.

Decree of the Joint Subordinate Judge, A. P., reversed and that of Subordinate Judge restored. Cost of appeals on respondent.

Decree reversed.

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LIMITED (Original Defendants), Appellants v. RATANSI RAMJI (Original Plaintiff), Respondent. [*] [13th April, 1896.]

Bill of lading—Contract of carriage—General words of exemption—"Or otherwise"—Construction—Short delivery of goods—No evidence as to how goods were lost—Burden of proof.

The plaintiff was the consignee of a large consignment of goods shipped from Bombay in bags on board the defendants' steam ship "Java" for carriage to Zanzibar. On arrival of the "Java" at Zanzibar the goods were landed by the defendant-company and placed in the customs godown, where the plaintiff in due course demanded delivery. Some of the bags were not forthcoming, but the evidence did not show how the loss had occurred. The bill of lading contained the following condition:

"The company's liability shall cease as soon as the packages are free of the ship's tackle, after which they shall not be responsible for any loss or damage, however caused. If stored in receiving ship, godown or upon any wharf, all risks of fire, dacoity, vermin or otherwise shall be with the merchant, and the usual charges shall be paid before delivery of the goods. Fire insurance will be covered by the company's agents on application."

Held that the defendants were liable. They did not show how the loss occurred, and as it might have occurred from causes not covered by the exception (e.g., from misdelivery) they did not bring themselves within the protection afforded by the exemption.

The general words "or otherwise" contained in the 10th clause of the bill of lading could not be read so as to cover all possible losses, for that would make them include willful misconduct on the part of the defendants' servants, and general words are not read with such an extended meaning. Nor would they include misdelivery, for that was provided for in the eighth clause.

 Appeal from the decision of H. W. de Saussmazen, Consular Judge of Zanzibar, in civil suit No. 514 of 1894.

Suit to recover Rs. 1,028-12-6 on account of damages for short delivery of goods.

The plaintiff was the consignee of certain goods shipped from Bombay to Zanzibar in the defendants' steamer "Java." On arriving in the port at Zanzibar they were landed by the defendants [185] at the custom house, where with other merchandise they were placed by order of the collector of customs in a godown. The defendants landed the goods themselves, not allowing the consignee to take delivery at the ship's side;

* Appeal No. 128 of 1896.
delivery being given by the defendants' delivery clerk in the godown on the production by the consignee of the bill of lading.

The plaintiff in due course presented his bill of lading to the defendants' delivery clerk and it then transpired that the goods in question had disappeared between the time of their being landed by the defendants and demanded by the plaintiff.

The defendants pleaded that under the conditions of the bill of lading they were absolved from liability. The conditions relied on were as follows:—

8. The goods are to be distinctly marked with the marks, numbers and port of destination, or the company is not to be responsible for detention or wrong delivery.”

10. The company to have the option of delivering these goods into receiving ship or landing them at consignee’s risk and expense as per scale of charges to be seen at the agent’s offices, the company having a lien on all or any part of the goods against expenses incurred on the whole shipment. The company’s liability shall cease as soon as the packages are free of the ship’s tackle, after which they shall not be responsible for any loss or damage, however caused. If stored in receiving shed, godown or upon any wharf, all risks of fire, dacoity, vermin or otherwise shall be with the merchant, and the usual charges shall be paid before delivery of the goods. Fire insurance will be covered by the company’s agents on application.”

The Judge allowed the claim and passed a decree for the plaintiff.
The defendants appealed.

Scott (with Craigie, Lynch and Owen) appeared for the appellants (defendants).

Lany (Advocate-General, with Maneckshah J. Taleyarhkan) appeared for the respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The decision of this appeal depends upon the proper construction to be placed upon the conditions of the bill of lading of the defendant company. The facts which the evidence establishes are, in our opinion, these.

[186] The plaintiff was the consignee of a large consignment of flour and coffee shipped from Bombay in bags on board the defendants' S.S.
"Java" for carriage to Zanzibar, including the bags of flour and coffee, the subject of this suit. On the arrival of the "Java" at Zanzibar the goods in question were landed by the defendant company and placed in the customs godown with the rest of the cargo of the "Java." When the plaintiff in due course came to demand delivery under his bill of lading he was unable to obtain delivery from the company of the bags in question, which were not forthcoming. The evidence does not enable us to say whether they had been stolen from the customs godown or had been misdelivered by the defendants' agents to some person other than the plaintiff, or how, in fact, the loss occurred.

As the defendants' contract as carriers, and under their bill of lading, was to carry the goods and deliver them to the consignee, the above facts disclose a breach of contract on their part, which would render them liable to the plaintiff for the value of the goods short delivered, unless they are protected by the terms and conditions of their bill of lading. It is not material to consider in this case the terms of the body of the bill of lading, which are mainly conversant with the carriage of the goods

during the voyage. The eighth and tenth conditions printed at its foot contain the terms which more immediately relate to the question which we have to decide. They run as follows:—[His Lordship read the clauses set forth supra p. 185, and continued.]

It is contended by Mr. Scott for the appellants that the present case is covered by the first portion of the tenth condition, and that after the goods in question were free of the ship’s tackle and placed in the company’s boats, the responsibility of the company ceased absolutely to an end. He relies upon the case of Petrocochino v. Bott (1). There, according to the custom of the Victoria Docks, with reference to which the bill of lading was drawn, the Dock Company landed the goods from the ship and placed them on the quay at the expense of the ship. The consignee received them from the Dock Company. In ordinary course the ship-owner would be liable until such delivery was duly made to the consignee, [187] but the bill of lading provided that the goods were “to be delivered from the ship’s deck when the ship’s responsibility shall cease at the aforesaid port of London.” It was held that this term of the bill of lading protected the ship-owner from loss of the goods after they had come into the keeping of the Dock Company. The Dock Company were an intermediate agency, and under the bill of lading the ship’s responsibility ceased as soon as the goods passed from the ship’s deck into the hands of the intermediate agent.

The bill of lading before us is of a different character. The goods after they leave the ship’s tackle are to be landed by the Company and delivered by them on shore. When examined it will be found to provide (1) for the carriage of the goods on the voyage, (2) for the landing of the goods, (3) for storing them on the wharf or in a godown, and (4) for their delivery: and appropriate exemptions from liability are inserted to cover each stage of the defendants’ responsibility. With the first stage we are not now concerned. The second, the landing of the goods, is to be at consignee’s risk; the commencement of that stage is marked by the provision that the Company’s liability is to cease as soon as the packages are free of the ship’s tackle. They are still, however, in the charge of the Company by whom they are to be landed; but during the process the Company are not to be responsible for any loss or damage, however caused. Then when the goods are landed, and they have to be stored, the responsibility of the Company is regulated by the concluding portion of the 10th condition, which provides that all risks of fire, dacoity, vermin or otherwise shall be with the merchant. It has been contended by Mr. Scott for the appellants that the storage here referred to is storage on extraordinary occasions, such as when the goods are retained by the Company to secure their lien for freight and such like, but there is nothing in the wording of the condition to lead us so to limit its application. The bill of lading treats the storage of the goods on the wharf, or in a godown, as one of the ordinary incidents of the contract of carriage, and such the evidence shows that it is in Zanzibar.

It remains to consider whether the Company are exempted by the condition as to storage from their responsibility for the loss [188] of the plaintiff’s goods while they were in the custom-house godown. During such storage the bill of lading protects the Company from all risks of fire, dacoity, vermin or otherwise. It is, we apprehend, upon the Company, in order to absolve themselves from liability, to show that the goods have been lost by reason of one of the excepted risks. It is not suggested that the loss has occurred through any of those specifically enumerated. The Company rely upon the general words "or otherwise" to protect them. Their contention, as they have not shown how the loss occurred, must be that these words cover all possible losses. This would include willful misconduct on the part of the Company's servants, but general words are not read with such an extended meaning—Steinman & Co. v. Angier Line (1). Nor do we think that they would include misdel-ivery, as that is specially provided for in the eighth condition, which we have read, that the goods are to be distinctly marked or the Company is not to be responsible for wrong delivery. In Norman v. Binnington (2) the expression "negligence * * * or otherwise" was used in anti thesis to "negligence in navigating the ship," and it was held that it covered negligence of some persons for whose action the ship-owner was responsible though they were not engaged in navigating the ship. In Baerselman v. Bailey (3) the words were similar, and it was held that the expression "or otherwise" following the words "the ship-owner not to be liable for any act, negligence, default * * * of the master, mariners or other servants of the ship-owner in navigating the ship" covered the case of a stevedore employed by the ship-owner in storing the cargo. Lord Esher in that case is careful to point out that the words "or otherwise" do not include all possible cases of negligence.

These authorities do not, we think, compel us to hold that the expression "or otherwise" used in a bill of lading like the one before us includes all possible risks.

The Consular Court at Zanzibar has in this case held that the expression "or otherwise" following the specific risks enumerated [183] does not cover a loss by theft. We are not prepared to assent to that view, at least in the case of thefts committed by persons other than the Company's servants; but as the Company have not shown how the loss occurred, and as it may have occurred from causes not covered by the exception which we are considering, as for example from misdel-ivery, we are of opinion that they have not brought themselves within the protection afforded by the exemption, and that the appeal must, therefore, fail.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Fulton.

DADABHAI HORMUSJI DUBASH (Plaintiff) v. C. J. KHAMBATTA
AND ANOTHER (Defendants).* [17th September, 1897.]

Contract to deliver—Suit for non-delivery—Clause exempting from liability in case of loss of carrying ship—Loss of ship—Declaration of ship after date of loss—Apropriation of goods after goods lost.

The defendants by a contract dated 10th January, 1896, sold 2,500 tons of coal to the plaintiff of the February and March shipment to be delivered in Bombay. No ship was named in the contract, which contained the following clause:—"In the event of the ship being lost, this contract shall be null and void." February and March shipments ordinarily arrive in Bombay on or before the 30th April following. All of the coal contracted for was duly delivered by the defendants except 1,376 tons, which still remained to be delivered to the plaintiff. By a letter dated 25th April, 1896, addressed to the plaintiff the defendants declared the S.S. 'Eastby Abbey' as the ship carrying the said 1,376 tons of coal remaining due under the contract. There was no evidence of any appropriation of coal on board the 'Eastby Abbey' to the purpose of the above contract prior to this declaration. It subsequently transpired that the 'Eastby Abbey' had run on a reef in the Red Sea on the 16th April and had been so seriously damaged that being taken to Suez (where such of her cargo as had not been thrown overboard was sold) she was found unable to proceed to Bombay, and she returned to England for repairs. The plaintiff sued the defendants for non-delivery of 1,376 tons of coal. The defendants pleaded that the ship having been lost, they were exempt from liability under the above clause in the contract.

[190] Held, that the defendants were liable for the non-delivery of the coal. There having been, previously to the declaration of the ship, no appropriation of the coal on board to the purposes of the contract, the exemption clause did not apply.

Semble.—In case of a contract containing such an exemption clause as the one in question, the declaration of a ship so as thereby to appropriate goods on board to the purposes of the contract is useless if made after the ship has been lost, whether the fact of the loss is known to the declarant or not.

SUIT for damages for non-delivery of 1,376 tons of coal.

On the 10th January, 1896, the defendants sold to the plaintiff 2,500 tons or thereabouts of Davison's West Hartley coal, February and March shipment. No ship was named in the contract, which contained the following clauses:

"All conditions in the charter party or bill of lading to be binding on the purchaser.

"In case of riots, strikes, frosts, floods or other accidents beyond seller's control interfering with the shipment to be made under this contract, sellers to have the option of shipping other good ordinary description of Welsh and East Coast coal at the ordinary market difference. Should the sellers decline to ship another description, buyers may cancel the contract, or must allow the sellers as many additional days for shipment as the strike, riots, lockout, &c., may last, in which case sellers may at their option substitute another steamer.

"Should the vessel put back or into any port through stress of weather, or any other cause, the terms of this contract shall not be prejudiced thereby.

"In the event of the ship being lost, this contract shall be null and void.

"Should the purchaser fail to take delivery on receipt of notice that the ship is ready to discharge, it shall be optional with the vendors to resell from alongside, or land and afterwards resell the said coal, giving twenty-four hours' notice of their intention to do so; and the purchaser hereby holds himself, his heirs, representatives or executors responsible, and obliges himself or them to forfeit any advantage or to make good any loss or difference that may arise through such resale."

Coals of February and March shipment would ordinarily arrive in Bombay on or before the 30th April.

The defendants duly delivered to the plaintiff two lots of coal, viz., 664 tons and 460 tons, leaving a balance of 1,376 tons still to be delivered under the above contract. It was for damages for the non-delivery of this balance that the present suit was brought.
The defendants pleaded that the goods were on board the S.S. "Eastby Abbey" which was lost on the voyage to Bombay, and that the contract was, therefore, null and void under the above clause in the contract.

It appeared that the defendants had declared the "Eastby Abbey" as the ship carrying the 1,376 tons in question by a letter dated Saturday, the 25th April, 1896. The plaintiff, however, alleged that this letter although dated the 25th was not delivered to him until noon on Monday the 27th April, and that telegraphic news of the loss of the "Eastby Abbey" had been received on the previous day (the 26th) by the ship's agents (Messrs. Killick Nixon and Co.), and the fact of the loss had become generally known in Bombay on the morning of Monday the 27th April.

The plaintiff having (as he alleged) received on the 27th the defendant's letter dated the 25th declaring the "Eastby Abbey" replied the same day as follows declining to accept the declaration:

"Bombay, 27th April, 1896.

"Your note declaring coal 1,376 tons per S.S. 'Eastby Abbey' reached us this day at about 12 o'clock. Messrs. Killick Nixon and Co. had given out early this morning that the S.S. 'Eastby Abbey' was probably lost. Under the circumstances we must decline to accept the declaration of the coal per this steamer at present."

The defendants then wrote the following letter to the plaintiff, stating that their declaration had been sent to the plaintiff's office on the previous Saturday the 25th:

"Bombay, 27th April, 1896.

"Our letter was issued on Saturday by noon and through our poon's neglect it was refused when presented on that day about 2 P.M. or a little later.

"Your own man had called at our office at 11 A.M. this day after the same being offered, for a little correction of the date of 'Castlemoor,' and nothing was mentioned then.

"We have not heard of the 'Eastby Abbey's' loss, and you yourself admit that she may probably be lost.

"We have every day the broker's gap to suit each man's purpose.

"The other day it was also reported that the S.S. 'Glomin' was lost when she was a little late in arrival, and it may be the case with the 'Eastby Abbey.'

[192] "Unless you give us the proof of the total loss of the vessel, the declaration stands good."

To that letter the plaintiff replied as follows:

"Bombay, 28th April, 1896.

"We are in receipt to-day of your letter of yesterday's date.

"We are not prepared to admit that your letter purporting to bear date the 25th instant was not delivered to us until the 27th owing to any neglect on the part of your poon. As far as we are concerned, we may state that no letter was tendered to us on the 25th and refused by us. Our senior did not leave the office before 6 o'clock in the evening on that day.

"We shall be glad if the reported loss of the 'Eastby Abbey' turns out to be false; but if it does not, we shall hold you bound to deliver us the coal, as we have reason to believe that the name of the steamer was delivered by you after you had heard of her reported loss. You cannot make us believe that as one in the trade, and moreover having coal in the vessel, you were ignorant of the reported loss of the vessel until receipt of our letter of the 27th instant. Our information in regard to the loss was not a broker's gap, but was delivered from the firm who are the consignees of the steamer."

On the 11th May, 1896, the plaintiff wrote to the defendants as follows:—

"By particulars to hand by the mail which came in yesterday we learn that the 'Eastby Abbey' was sunk as far back as the 16th ultimo, which was within two days after she had passed the canal. We also learn that in all probability the steamer is breaking up.

"Under these circumstances, and you having failed to declare us the name of any steamer under your contract save that of the 'Eastby Abbey,' which, as we told you before, we are satisfied was declared after the loss of the vessel was made known, we hold you liable for the damages we have suffered by reason of your failure to deliver the 1,376 tons, and now enclose our statement of claim which, unless paid within two days, will be handed to our attorneys with instructions to take prompt action for recovery of same."

In the plaint the plaintiff charged that the defendants' letter declaring the ship was not written on the 25th April, but was in fact written on the 27th April after the defendants had heard of the reported loss of the ship. The plaintiff contended that the defendants' declaration was not made bona fide and that he ought not to be held bound thereby.

At the hearing it appeared that the coal sold to the plaintiff by the defendants was part of a lot of 4,000 tons which they had purchased from Messrs. Killick Nixo and Co. All this coal had [193] been duly delivered to them by Messrs. Klick Nixo and Co. except 846 tons, which by letter dated the 14th April addressed to the defendants they had declared as on board the 'Eastby Abbey.' The coal, therefore, actually belonging to the defendants on board this ship was only 846 tons and not 1,376 tons.

The S. S. "Eastby Abbey" ran on a reef in the Red Sea on the 16th April. Some of her cargo was thrown overboard and she was subsequently got off the reef and taken to Suez, where the rest of her cargo was sold, and the ship being unable to proceed to Bombay eventually returned to England to be repaired.

The plaintiff claimed Rs. 3,455.7.9 as damages. The defendants did not dispute the amount of damages, but contended, as above stated, that the ship having been lost they were exempt from liability under the terms of the contract.

The principal issue raised at the hearing was "whether the defendants' declaration purporting to be of the 25th April, and communicated to the plaintiff on the 27th April, was a good and sufficient declaration."

Russell (Anderson with him), for the defendants.—The vessel was lost and the defendants are exempt from liability under the terms of the contract. We rely on Nusservanjji J. Khambata v. Volkart Brothers (1). We say the loss must be held to have taken place about the 10th May, i.e., when it was finally ascertained that the vessel could not proceed to Bombay. The declaration of the ship was made on the 25th April. The evidence shows it was made on that day in good faith and before the defendants had heard of the accident to the ship.

Kirkpatrick (with Lang, Advocate-General, and Macpherson).—The ship was lost for the purpose of the voyage to Bombay on the 16th.
April. It was, therefore, already lost when the declaration is said to have been made, viz., on the 25th April. A declaration of a lost ship is not a good declaration whether the fact of the loss is known to the declarant or not. In this case the declaration of the ship was the appropriation of the goods on board. There had been no previous appropriation as in Nusservamji v. Volkart Brothers (1). The plaintiff refused to assent to the appropriation [98] knowing that the goods were lost, and no assent to the appropriation could be implied in such a case—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 83. Further, the declaration of 1,376 tons was bad, as the defendants had only 846 tons on board—Reuter v. Sala (2). Lastly, it is clear that the declaration was really written on the 27th April after the defendants had heard that the ship was lost, although they dated it the 25th April.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The plaintiff sues under a contract dated the 10th January, 1896, to recover damages for non-delivery of 1,376 tons of coals sold to him by the defendant.

The defendant relies on the clause of the contract “In the event of ship being lost, this contract to be null and void,” and alleges that the contingency therein contemplated has arisen.

It appears that on the 14th April, 1896, Messrs. Killick Nixon and Co. declared to the defendant 846 tons of West Hartley coal ex “Eastby Abbey” then on her voyage to Bombay and due about the 28th. On Sunday the 26th the firm received a telegram stating that the “Eastby Abbey” was probably lost, and next morning the news was communicated at their office to a number of brokers. On the same day, namely, Monday the 27th, the plaintiff received a letter dated the 25th in which the defendant declared to him 1,376 tons ex “Eastby Abbey.”

The evidence shows that on the 16th April the steamer ran on the Jujub reef in the Red Sea receiving serious damage. Eventually after throwing overboard about 1,000 tons of coal she was got off the reef with the assistance of two small steamers, and returned to Suez with about 15 feet of water in the forehold and lesser quantities in the other parts of the ship. At Suez the vessel was patched up, but could not be permanently repaired. Part of the cargo was damaged and the whole was sold. In the captain’s opinion it was impossible to take the cargo to Bombay with the temporary repairs effected at Suez, and eventually the steamer returned to England for permanent repairs.

On these facts it was faintly argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the ship was not lost within the meaning of the contract. But I cannot accept this view. In Nusservamji v. Volkart Brothers (1) Mr. Justice Scott decided in 1888 that under a similar contract a ship must be held to have been lost when she was rendered useless for the purpose required, that is, for a voyage in fulfilment of the specified contract. That doubtless was a liberal construction of the clause in the contract, but it has apparently satisfied the coal merchants concerned, as it has not led to any modification of the form of contract. In these circumstances I must hold that in the contract now under consideration the expression “the ship being lost” was used in reference to the interpretation put on it in that judgment and was intended by the parties to cover a casualty such as occurred to the “Eastby Abbey” which completely prevented her from accomplishing her voyage. The previous clause about the vessel "putting back or putting into any port through stress of weather" evidently refers to a temporary interruption of the voyage, but not to its total abandonment. This was the view apparently at first taken by the plaintiff when he filed the plaint admitting the loss of the ship.

For the purposes of the contract it seems clear that the "loss of the ship" occurred on the 16th April when she ran on the reef. Mr. Russell argued that the loss should be deemed to have occurred on some date later on when the captain finally decided the voyage to Bombay to be impracticable. But this contention cannot be accepted. The defendant's case is that the completion of the voyage was impracticable, and accepting this view it is clear that the further continuance of the voyage was impracticable, not when the captain first realized the fact, or the owners became aware of it and admitted it, but when the accident occurred which rendered it impossible to proceed with due regard to safety. That was on the 16th April.

A question then arises whether a declaration made after the loss was of any effect even if made in good faith. It was argued that there was no need to make any declaration at all. Mr. Justice Scott held that where certain goods on board a particular ship had been appropriated by the vendor, the clause applied even though such appropriation had not been communicated to the purchaser; and in the particular case before him he held, on [196] the evidence, that there had been such an appropriation. It is unnecessary for me to express an opinion on the correctness or otherwise of this view, for in the present case there is no evidence at all to show any appropriation of any coal on board the "Eastby Abbey" to the purposes of this contract until the declaration of the 25th or 27th April. To contend that without proof of any appropriation at all the clause could be applied, would be to ignore the definite article "the" prefixed in the contract to the word "ship." It would be equivalent to arguing that, on the loss of any ship being proved, the vendor was entitled to treat the contract as void, but this would be an absurd result, certainly not intended by the parties. The article "the" clearly shows that the lost ship means the ship specified, or, in other words, the ship carrying the coals which the vendor intends to deliver to the purchaser, and, therefore, there must be proof at least of his intention having been formed either before the ship was lost, or at any rate before he knew of the loss. To have to form an opinion on an uncommunicated intention, as seems to be necessary in certain cases under Mr. Justice Scott's decision, is difficult and may lead to considerable uncertainty; but, as I said before, it is unnecessary for me in this case to express an opinion on the correctness or otherwise of the proposition that a declaration of the ship's name to the other party is not essential. Suffice it to say that the decision does not seem to have led to any modification of the form of contract. If the parties to these contracts now desire to make the matter clear they can easily do so by adding to the clause the words "Provided the name of the ship is communicated by the vendor to the purchaser before the loss is known in Bombay."

The question whether the appropriation of the coal to the contract must be made not before the loss is known, but before it actually occurs, is one of some difficulty. But as the contract is at present worded, it seems to me, in the absence of all proof of mercantile practice affecting the construction, that the words "the ship" must mean a specified ship carrying coals to Bombay, and that no ship comes within that category.
which has not been specified before the loss. If no appropriation of coal in a particular ship has been made before that ship has sunk, or [197] become incapable of conveying her cargo to Bombay, it is difficult, to my mind, to describe that ship as "the ship" carrying appropriated coals to Bombay when as a matter of fact it was never for a single moment of its existence so employed. I am inclined to think, therefore, that the appropriation of coals by the declaration of the ship, whether on the 25th or 27th of April, was useless. It did not render the "Eastby Abbey" that was lost on the 16th "the ship" within the meaning of the contract, and, therefore, the clause had no application.

If this opinion be correct, the question whether the defendant declared the ship before he heard the report of its loss becomes immaterial; but as it is possible that a different view may prevail it is better that I should express my opinion on the evidence as to the time of the declaration.

As the defendant seeks to apply the clause, the burden of proving the facts which render it applicable is on him. Assuming that a declaration or appropriation made bona fide in ignorance of the loss of the ship is valid, it is for the defendant to show that such ignorance existed. The letter dated the 25th April (Ex. C. (1)) is the first evidence of any appropriation of coals ex "Eastby Abbey" for the purposes of the contract; and it is for him to prove that it was written before the report of the loss reached him. He swears that he wrote the letter on the 25th and brings forward his letter-book to corroborate his statement. Thepeon Keshav is called to prove that the letter was taken that afternoon to plaintiff's office and refused. The clerk Narayan says he remembers Keshav bringing back the letter. On the other band, the deceased plaintiff's son Cowasji Dadabhai, his clerk Pherozshah and another clerk Dadabhai all swear that the office was open till 6 P.M. on Saturday, and that no letter was refused. It is difficult to see why any letter should have been refused on Saturday when there was rumour of the loss of the "Eastby Abbey."

The letter-book relied on is not conclusive, for it is not satisfactorily proved that any one of the four letters numbered 398, 399, 400 and 401 in that book was delivered on Saturday. Messrs. Killick Nixon's clerk unfortunately cannot say on which [198] day No. 399 was delivered. Letters 398, 400 and 401 were all declarations ex "Eastby Abbey" considerably in excess of the coals then owned by the defendant in that vessel. Of course the defendant might subsequently have bought sufficient quantity to meet his contracts, but the circumstance is suggestive, especially as Ambalal, to whom letter No. 400 was addressed also declaring the "Eastby Abbey," swears that letter was not delivered till the 27th—a statement corroborated by his solicitor's letter of the 28th. It is not likely that there was collusion at that time between Ambalal and the plaintiff, and it is extraordinary that both should have repudiated the declaration on similar grounds if there was not good reason for their doing so. A good deal of argument was based on the fact of pencil initials in the delivery book being below Pherozshah's red-ink initials; but as letter C was admittedly not accepted in plaintiff's office till the 27th, I do not see that the circumstance is of much importance.

On the whole, looking to the suspicious nature of the circumstances and the impossibility of explaining satisfactorily why the letter Ex. C. (1) should have been refused in plaintiff's office on the 25th, I do not think it is established beyond reasonable doubt that the letter was written before the 27th or in ignorance of the reported loss of the "Eastby Abbey" which afterwards turned out to be true. It is accordingly not proved to have been a declaration made in good faith and cannot, therefore, be treated as effective, even supposing that if so made after the actual loss of the ship, it would have brought the case within the meaning of the clause.

As the damages are not disputed, the plaintiff will get a decree for Rs. 3,455-7-9, with interest thereon at 9 per cent. per annum from 30th April, 1896, till to-day and costs of the suit; excepting his costs of the commission to England, which was the result of his unwillingness to admit the loss of the ship notwithstanding his averment in the plaint and the information furnished in the numbers which he put in of Lloyd's shipping index in which all the material facts were sufficiently stated. Interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

[199] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Fulton.

MAHABLESHVAR FONDBA (Original Defendant No. 2), Appellant v. DURGABAI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs and Defendant No. 1), Respondents.* [13th April, 1896.]

Hindu law.—Adoption.—Adoption by widow.—Motions of widow in adopting.—Adoption from corrupt motives.—Presumption.

In Bombay, according to the authorities, if it can be predicated of an adoption by a widow (in a case where the consent of the husband's kinmen is not required) that the ceremony has been performed, not as a religious duty, but from sinful and corrupt motives, it is on that account invalid, and the authorities appear to impose upon the Court the duty of inquiring into the motives of the adopting widow where her motives are called in question. Whether the presumption that an adopting widow has performed her duty from proper motives ought or ought not to be deemed an irrebuttable presumption, is a question which still remains to be judicially decided.

The fact that the motive of the widow were of a mixed character is not sufficient to rebut the presumption—Patel Vardavan v. Patel Manilal (1).

The fact that the widow has made terms for herself with the father of the boy to be adopted, or that she has solicited a boy whose father will be likely to accede to her wishes, is not sufficient to render the adoption invalid—Bhosla v. Indar (2); Chitko v. Janaki (3).

Where a widow had adopted a son, and it was found by the Courts that unless she had been assured by the father and guardian of the adopted boy that she would receive Rs. 4,000 she would not have adopted him, but it was not found that she had not the special benefit of her husband in view when she made the adoption.

Held, that the presumption that she made the adoption from motives of duty was not rebutted, and that presumption should be allowed to prevail.

SECOND appeal from the decision of E. H. Moscardi, District Judge of Karwara, reversing the decree of Rao Bahadur Gangadhar V. Limaye, First Class Subordinate Judge of Karwar.

One Mangesh Purshotam, a separated Hindu, died on the 18th September, 1878, leaving a widow Parvatibai (defendant No. 1), but without issue. Parvatibai subsequently adopted one Mahabaleshvar Fonda (defendant No. 2).

The plaintiffs, who were the sisters of Mangesh, brought this suit to have the adoption declared invalid, alleging that it had been made from corrupt motives; that they (the plaintiffs) were the reversionary heirs of Mangesh next after his widow Parvatibai; and that, in order to prevent them from succeeding to the property, Parvatibai in collusion with the guardian of Mahabaleshvar had agreed to make the adoption, and that the guardian had agreed to pay her the sum of Rs. 4,000 for doing so.

The defendant denied the allegation of the plaintiffs.

The Subordinate Judge found that the adoption of defendant No. 2 was not opposed to Hindu law; that he was not adopted by Parvatibai solely in consideration of Rs. 4,000 received by her as alleged, and that the adoption was not invalid. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiffs, the Judge reversed the decree and declared that the adoption of Mahabaleshvar (defendant No. 2) by Parvatibai (defendant No. 1) was illegal and invalid, because it was made from a corrupt motive.

Mahabaleshvar (defendant No. 2) preferred a second appeal.

Lang (Advocate General with Ghanasham N. Nadkarni) appeared for the appellant (defendant No. 2).

Mehta (with Chimanket H. Setalvad) appeared for the respondents (plaintiffs and defendant No. 1).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This appeal involves the consideration of a question of some importance upon the law of adoption amongst Hindus.

The plaintiffs, who are the sisters and next reversionary heirs of one Mangesh Purshotam, deceased, sued to have it declared that the alleged adoption of the defendant Mahabaleshvar by Parvatibai, the widow of Mangesh, is invalid. The factum of the adoption is not disputed. The objection to the adoption which is relied upon is that the guardian and natural father of the boy taken in adoption had agreed to pay the adopting mother Parvatibai Rs. 4,000 after the adoption should have taken place.

The following issue was raised by the Subordinate Judge upon this part of the case:—"Was the defendant No. 2 (Mahabaleshvar) adopted by the defendant No. 1 (Parvatibai) in consideration of Rs. 4,000 received by her as alleged?"

The payment of the Rs. 4,000 to Parvatibai was admitted. The Subordinate Judge considers that it was paid by Fondba, the father of Mahabaleshvar, after the adoption, but that the expectation of the payment exercised a very powerful influence on Parvatibai in inducing her to make the adoption. The Subordinate Judge considers that she felt herself unable to manage the property, was badly served by those to whom she entrusted the management, and was continually being thwarted by the kinsmen of her husband; that she was desirous of going on a pilgrimage and performing acts of dharma, and that the offer of Fondba to give his son in adoption and to provide her with means of living the life she desired, offered a ready escape from her position. She wished to secure freedom from secular cares and the money required for certain spiritual purposes.

"It is conceivable," says the Subordinate Judge, "that a woman whose line of action was thus dictated by prudence and piety should have easily realized the two-fold advantage of Fond's proposal, which, as the proverb" goes, had the potency of giving her two eyes when she was seeking only for one." The Subordinate Judge upheld the validity of the adoption.

The District Judge raised the following issues, viz:—" (2) Was the adoption made solely as a means of acquiring Rs. 4,000?" and " (3) Is the adoption invalid?" After discussing the evidence he says:

"On the whole, therefore, I come to the same conclusion as the Subordinate Judge, viz., that the Rs. 4,000 was paid to defendant No. 1 or at any rate promised to her as an inducement to take defendant No. 2 in adoption, and that she adopted him in consideration of such payment or promise of payment, and that but for such payment or promise she would not have adopted him. Whether the payment formed the sole consideration for the adoption, or whether she also had the spiritual benefit of her deceased husband in view, it is not easy to say, but I altogether dissent from the theory of the lower Court that she must be held to have adopted him from religious motives, because nominally the money was to be devoted to the payment of alleged debts due by the estate, and to religious purposes. I do not consider it proved that a single rupee of the amount was devoted to any but secular purposes, and without believing the evidence of 48, [202] I do not believe, in the absence of better proof than Fonda's word, that any of the money was spent in paying off debts."

He found on the issues "(2) it is not proved that the adoption was made solely as a means of acquiring Rs. 4,000;" and "(3) the adoption is invalid, because it was made from a corrupt motive."

The result would, therefore, appear to be that mixed motives of various kinds impossible to fathom operated upon the mind of this lady, who appears to be of a religious turn of mind and inapt for the duties of an ordinary mundane life, and induced her to make the adoption, but that she would not have made it had she not received the Rs. 4,000 for her own purposes. Is this in law sufficient to invalidate the adoption? It is, we believe, the first occasion which has come before this Court in which an adoption has been set aside on such grounds. It must be at once manifest that, if the view of the District Judge is correct, the Court in every case of disputed adoption may be led into abstruse ethical discussions as to the motives which induce a Hindu widow to adopt, and the validity or invalidity of such an adoption will depend upon a consideration, not of facts, but of the feelings, which actuate the Hindu female mind at the time of adoption—feelings, which, even if truthful, she would herself probably be unable to define. In almost every case of adoption a widow in possession of the estate of her husband must have internal struggles of mind whether she will relinquish it by adopting a son, or retain it by remaining sonless. If the certainty of not being left without the means of support or dependent upon the caprice of the adopted boy turns the scale, is the adoption to be set aside because she was partially influenced by a consideration of her own future well-being? The problem is a difficult one for a Court of justice to solve. The task would seem to be better fitted for a Court of conscience.

The basis upon which the law upon this subject is founded is the following passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in the Ramnad Case (1). The question which their Lordships there had to consider was what assent of kinsmen was requisite to [203] validate an adoption by a widow in the Dravida Country where there was no

father-in-law in existence. Their Lordships say: "It is not easy to lay down an inflexible rule for the case in which no father-in-law is in existence. Every such case must depend upon the circumstances of the family. All that can be said is that there must be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive. In this case no issue raises the question that the concessions were purchased, and not bona fide obtained. The rights of an adopted son are not prejudiced by any unauthorized alienation by the widow, which precedes the adoption which she makes; and though gifts improperly made to procure assent might be powerful evidence to show no adoption needed, they do not in themselves go to the root of the legality of an adoption." In subsequently considering this passage in Rajah Veliani Venkata v. Venkata Ramu (1) their Lordships, after observing that the evidence required was not of the widow's motives but of the assent of the kinsmen, say: "Their Lordships think it would be very dangerous to introduce into the consideration of these cases of adoption nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow, and that all which this Committee in the former case intended to lay down was, that there should be such proof of assent on the part of the sapindas as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives, or in order to defeat the interests of this or that sapinda, but upon a fair consideration by what may be called a family council, of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband. If that be so, there seems to be every reason to suppose that in the present case there was such a consideration, both on the part of the widow and on the part of the sapindas; and their Lordships think that in such a case it must be presumed that she acted from the proper motives which ought to actuate a Hindu female, and that, at all events, such presumption should be made until the contrary is shown.

Mr. Mayne (Hindu Law, Pt. 116) commenting on this passage thinks that even now it is not quite clear whether their Lordships [204] are of opinion that a widow's motives in making an adoption, provided she has received the assent of sapindas given bona fide to the adoption, are material. His view, however, is that the Judicial Committee did not mean to lay down that such evidence would be material or admissible. To us it appears that their Lordships, feeling how dangerous it would be to introduce into the considerations of cases of adoption nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow, have pointed out that the Ramnad Case did not decide that such motives would be material, and have not themselves expressed any opinion upon the question. Their guarded language at the end of the passage which we have quoted leaves the question absolutely open. We have not, therefore, the advantage of knowing what conclusion the ultimate tribunal will arrive at upon it when it comes in a concrete form before them.

Turning to the decisions of this Court we find that in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (2) it was decided that in the Maratha country a Hindu widow may adopt without the permission of her husband and without the consent of his kindred if (borrowing the language of the Privy Council in the Ramnad Case) "the act is done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive." The result of this decision is referred to and its terms are repeated in Bhavvandees v. Rajmal (1) without comment, and is again referred to in Naragan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (2), and again in Ramji v. Ghumau (3).

The first attempt to be found in the reports of this Court to apply the qualification of a widow's power to adopt, and to upset the adoption on the ground of the widow's motive in making it, is to be found in Vithoba v. Bapu (4). That was the case of an undivided family. It was almost admitted that the widow's motives in adopting were malicious, but as she had without deceit obtained the consent of the head of the family to the adoption it was upheld. Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal (5) was the case of a divided estate vested in the widow. It was alleged [205] that her motives in making the adoption were corrupt and capricious. The Chief Justice, Sir Charles Sargents, after referring to the dictum in the Ramnad Case already quoted and its qualification by the Privy Council in the later case, and adopting Mr. Mayne's view of the result of these decisions, says: "Where, however, the assent of sapindas is not required, as in this Presidency where the family is divided, then there will be only the ordinary presumption that the widow has performed a duty from proper motives, and the onus lies heavily on him who seeks to set aside the adoption on the ground of corrupt motive." His Lordship then reviewed the evidence as to motive and came to the conclusion that although it was probable * * * that the widow acted from mixed motives there was no sufficient evidence that she acted from corrupt or malicious motives such as would invalidate the adoption.

Such is the state of the authorities upon this difficult question. They doubtless assume that if it can be predicated of an adoption by a widow (in a case whether the consent of the husband's kinsmen is not required) that the ceremony has been gone through not in the performance of a religious duty but from sinful and corrupt motives, it is on that account invalid; and they appear to impose upon the Court the duty of inquiring into the motives of such adopting widow where her motives are called in question. Whether the presumption that an adopting widow has performed her duty from proper motives ought or ought not to be deemed to be an irrefutable presumption, is a question which still remains to be judicially decided. It is unnecessary for us, we think, to consider it in the present case.

As to the nature of the evidence which will rebut presumption that the act of adoption has been performed as a duty, there is but little authority to guide us. The judgment in Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal (supra) establishes that the fact of the motives being of a mixed character is not sufficient to rebut the presumption. It appears also to be clear that the widow's making terms for herself with the father of the boy to be adopted, or selecting a boy whose father will be likely to accede to her wishes, is not sufficient to render the adoption fraudulent or [205] to establish that it has been made for a corrupt purpose or for a purpose foreign to the real object of adoption—Bhasba v. Indar (6) and Chitko v. Janaki (7). That is, however, what the evidence in this case in the judgment of the District Judge establishes. He finds that unless she had been assured that she would have received the Rs. 4,000 she would not have adopted Fondbals son—possibly (it may be) would not have adopted at all; but he does not find that she had not the spiritual benefit of her deceased husband in view when she made the adoption. Hindu law—Adoption—Motive in adopting—Adoption made by a widow to defeat the claim of her co-widow to a share in her husband's estate—Validity of such adoption.

An adoption made by a Hindu widow is not invalid merely because it is made with the object of defeating the claim of a co-widow to a share in her husband's property.

Second appeal from the decision of R. Knight, Assistant Judge, F.P., at Bijapur.

Suit to set aside an adoption.

One Ramanavda died in 1886, leaving three childless widows, Hanmawa, Bhimawa and Sangawa.

On the 27th June, 1890, Sangawa applied for leave to sue as a pauper to recover her share of her husband's estate.

[207] On the 23rd October, 1890, pending this application, Bhimawa with the consent of the eldest widow Hanmawa, took Bhimapa in adoption.

On the 3rd January, 1891, Sangawa's application for leave to sue as a pauper was granted, and registered as a plaint.

Bhimapa was added as a party to the suit, and an issue was raised,—whether his adoption was valid.

On the issue the Subordinate Judge held that the adoption was valid, though it was made with the object of defeating Sangawa's right to obtain a third share of her husband's estate. Sangawa's suit was, therefore, dismissed.

On appeal the Assistant Judge reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and awarded the plaintiff's (Sangawa's) claim. He held that the adoption of Bhimapa was invalid on the ground that it was made from corrupt and malicious motives, with the manifest object of defeating the plaintiff's claim for partition of her husband's property. The following extract from his judgment gives his reasons:—

"Taking all these circumstances together we see that defendant No. 2 did not think of adopting a son until plaintiff began to press her claim; that she opposed her application for permission to sue in forma pauperis; that as soon as that permission was obtained, she hurriedly alienated nearly the whole of the joint property; that she speedily married the adopted son to a near relative of her; that the adoption-deed contains gratuitous and palpable lies introduced with the obvious design of fortifying the adoption; that a similar design is in the construction of the mortgage-deeds; and that the application of the money derived from the mortgages is not satisfactorily proved. If facts can speak, these facts unhesitatingly testify to the corruption of defendant No. 2's motives. The Subordinate Judge, while suspecting that the adoption was made from corrupt and malicious motives, thought that it was not clearly enough established to warrant him in setting aside the deed. I differ from him in his view of the strength of the inferences suggested. For acting on the presumption that defendant No. 2 was actuated by proper and laudable motives, I am wholly unable to account for her actions. Coincidences are very well in their own way, but multiplication is fatal to them. On the first issue I, therefore, find that the adoption is proved, but that it is not valid.”

Against this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

Parsons, J.—The facts of this case are not disputed. Ramangavda died childless in or about the year 1886, leaving three widows, 1 Hanma-wa, 2 Bhimawa (defendant No. 2), and 3 Sangawa (plaintiff). He had not prohibited his widows from adopting a son to him. In 1887 Hanma-wa consented to the adoption by Bhimawa of any one she would like to adopt (Ex. 92). On the 27th June, 1890, Sangawa applied for leave to sue as a pauper to obtain her share of her husband’s estate. The application was enquired into and was ordered to be registered as a plaint on the 3rd January, 1891. On the 23rd October, 1890, Bhimawa took Bhimapa (defendant No. 7) in adoption. The Court of first instance thought that the adoption was made with the object of not allowing the immovable property of her husband to the extent of a third to go into the hands of Sangawa, but found that there was no corrupt motive for the adoption, and held it valid. The appellate Court found that the adoption was made from corrupt and malicious motives, and, therefore, held that it was not valid. The corrupt and malicious motives by which the Assistant Judge found that Bhimawa was actuated were, as clearly appears from his judgment, nothing more than a desire to defeat the claim of Sangawa to a share in her husband’s property.

The point of law before us is whether an adoption effected with that motive is invalid. In determining that point we have been very greatly assisted by the able and exhaustive judgment of the Chief Justice in Mahableshvar v. Durgabai (5). It is clearly laid down in that judgment that an adoption to be invalid must be shown to have been made from sinful and corrupt motives, and not in the performance of a religious duty. Read in connection with the cases cited, that must mean that the widow must [309] be shown to have acted with an utter disregard for the spiritual benefit of her deceased husband and solely for her own self interests and her own future well-being. Such a motive would be material. Cases may no doubt arise in which that motive may be capable of proof, but it is impossible to say that the present falls within that category. The immediate and necessary effect of any adoption by Bhimawa would be to divest Sangawa of her estate. To take effect for cause or motive as the Assistant Judge has done would be to place a bar upon Bhimawa’s ever exercising the right of adoption that she possessed. Such a motive is clearly immaterial.

If the Assistant Judge had found that Bhimawa had adopted capriciously, corruptly, and with an utter disregard of her husband’s spiritual benefit, we might then have had to inquire whether under the law in force in this Presidency these motives were in any way material. We need not do that now, for taking his finding as it stands, it merely amounts to a finding that Bhimawa intended to do exactly what she had a perfect right to do at any time she chose, namely, adopt a son and so divest Sangawa of her inheritance. He does not find that the assent of Hammawa was in any way tainted, or that Bhimawa herself gained anything by the adoption, or that she was not acting from motives of duty. We cannot, therefore, agree with him in holding the adoption invalid, and we reverse his decree, and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs in this and lower appellate Court on the respondent.

RANADE, J.—The Assistant Judge in this case has held that the factum of adoption was proved, but he set it aside on the ground that it was invalid by reason of its having been effected from corrupt and malicious motives. The respondent, original plaintiff, was the youngest of three widows, and it was found in this case that the appellant No. 1, the second widow, with the assent of the eldest widow, adopted appellant No. 4 after the respondent had instituted proceedings in forma pauperis to obtain a partition of her share. It has been further found that this adoption was effected to defeat the respondent’s claim. From this circumstance, as also from the delay of four years allowed to intervene, and the registration of the adoption-deed and of other [210] documents (executed by appellants Nos. 1 and 4, mortgaging and otherwise alienating without proper consideration the family property to the other appellants) on the same day that respondent’s application to sue as a pauper was granted, and the marriage of appellant No. 4 to a near relation of appellant No. 1, the Assistant Judge has inferred that the motives which prompted appellant No. 1 to adopt appellant No. 4 were corrupt and malicious, and that she was not actuated by a due sense of pure religious duty.

We may at once dispose of the alleged acts of waste and improvidence, and the suspicions about the marriage, and the registration of the adoption-deed. They have no bearing either way, as they are subsequent in date to the adoption, which took place in October, 1890, while the documents were all executed in January, 1891, and the marriage took place in March, 1891. The rights of the parties inter se cannot be seriously affected by these subsequent acts, and they may, therefore, be safely left out of account, except as indirect corroborations of the original motive which dictated the adoption.

There can be no doubt, on the facts found, that the adoption was effected with a view to defeat the respondent’s claim for partition, and we have, therefore, to see how far such a motive can be regarded as sufficiently establishing the elements of corruption and malice in a manner to invalidate the adoption. In none of the authorities relied upon by the counsel on both sides, has any reference been made to any express ancient texts of Hindu law which bear upon this point. The doctrine is entirely a creation of general equity as formulated in recent judicial decisions.

The proposition was first laid down in a ruling of the Privy Council in the case of The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga (1), where it was observed that the evidence about the assent of the kinsmen should be such as suffice to show that the act of adoption was done in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously, nor from corrupt motive. The context, however, shows that their Lordships had chiefly in view the corruption represented by the kinsmen giving their consent from mercenary motives, and not from a bona fide sense of their duty. It is not alleged in this case that the eldest widow’s consent was purchased in this way. This decision, therefore, does not support the view taken by the Assistant Judge as to the motives of appellant No. 1 being corrupt. The next case in order of time is that of Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (2). It is of special value as an authority in this case, because the contest here, as before, was between co-widows, and there was considerable delay in making the adoption. The right of the elder widow to adopt without the consent of the younger widow, even though such adoption deprived her of her own rights, was there upheld, and the Judges further held that the interest of the younger widow could not be regarded in the same light as that of other members of an undivided family. See also on this point Keshav v. Govind (3). This distinction between a co-widow and other heirs was re-affirmed in Ramji v. Ghaman (4) and Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (5). In the last of these cases, it was held that the younger widow was equally interested with the elder widow in securing the husband’s future beatitude, which consideration had no force in regard to other heirs, who could not, without their consent, be deprived of any rights which may have become vested in them.

These decisions show that, though the adoption of appellant No. 4 by appellant No. 1 had the effect of defeating the respondent’s rights as co-widow, yet as the law gave the power to appellant No. 1, her exercise of that power cannot be regarded as capricious or malicious, merely because she exercised it after respondent instituted her suit in forma pauperis. The right of the elder widow to exercise her power cannot properly be made dependent upon the consent of the younger co-widow, whose interest would in many cases be opposed to its exercise—Bhagubai v. Kalo (6). The exercise of a valid power by a properly authorized person cannot be held to be capricious or malicious in law solely because it defeated the expectations of others.

In the case of Vithoba v. Basu (7) the adoption was admittedly effected pending legal proceedings with a view to defeat those proceedings of the rival claimant, and that circumstance was not held sufficient to vitiate the adoption on the ground of caprice or malice, when it had been made with the assent of the head of the family. The next case reported in the same volume—Patel Vandravan Jekisan v. Patel Manilal Chunial (8)—further shows that the mere existence of alleged ill-will is not by itself sufficient to prove corruption and malice. It was held in this last case that when a widow adopts with the consent of the nearest sapinda, in this case the eldest widow, there is a presumption that she has performed the act from proper motives, and the burden of proving corrupt motives lies heavily on the other side. This qualification of the rather general terms used in the Rammad Case was made on the authority of two later decisions of their Lordships in which the passage was more fully explained—Sri Raghunadha v. Sri Brozo Kishore (1); Rajah Vellanki Venkata Krishna Bow v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi Narsayya (2). In the last of these cases, their Lordships observed that it would be dangerous to introduce into the consideration of these adoption cases nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow, and that all that their Lordships meant to lay down was that there should be such evidence of the assent of the nearest sapinda as would suffice to prove that the adoption was not made from capricious or corrupt motives. When such assent is secured, it must be presumed that the widow acted from proper motives until the contrary was shown.

All these authorities were referred to in a recent decision—Mahabaleshwar v. Durgabai (3)—passed on 13th April, 1896, by the Chief Justice and Fulton, J. In that case, the question at issue was approached from the point of view of what circumstances must be proved to show corrupt motives on the part of the adopting widow, and it was held that the agreement of the natural father to pay Rs. 4,000 to the adopting widow, did not vitiate the adoption, as it did not rebut the presumption that she acted from a proper sense of her duty towards her husband. In the present case there is no question of corruption. The same act [213] of adoption which defeated respondent's rights as a widow was equally prejudicial to the personal interests of the appellant No. 1. She might well regard that the breaking up of the family by partition was undesirable. The eldest widow's claims were somehow settled, and her assent was secured to the adoption several years before the respondent had any open differences with appellant No. 1. Under these circumstances, it is plain that the mere delay in giving effect to the legitimate power possessed by her, and her resorting to its exercise when the respondent threatened to break up the joint family, would not make the act either capricious or malicious, solely because it was effected after the institution of the application to sue in forma pauperis. The presumption in favour of the bona fides of the act would not be rebutted by this circumstance, or by the subsequent acts of alleged waste.

For these reasons we reverse the decree of the Assistant Judge, and restore that of the Subordinate Judge with costs on respondent.

CHUNILAL PREMJEE MARWADI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. RAMCHANDRA AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [17th April, 1896.]

Registration—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 50—Notice—Registration is notice only of registered documents, not of unregistered documents under which holders of registered documents derive their title—Priority

The plaintiffs sued to recover possession from the defendants of certain land which they had purchased from one Ran by a registered deed of sale dated the 22nd August, 1882.

Ran had been given the land by one Harichand by a registered deed of gift dated 15th November, 1881.

Harichand, however, had purchased the land from one Vithoba on the 22nd March, 1876, and the deed of conveyance to him of that date was not registered.

On the 2nd April, 1894, the sons of Vithoba (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) sold the land to the third defendant by a deed of that date which was duly registered.

The third defendant contended that the plaintiffs’ title depended on the unregistered deed of the 23rd March, 1876, executed by Vithoba (father of his vendors), and that his (defendant’s) purchase by registered deed dated 2nd April, 1894, had priority.

Held, that the plaintiffs’ claim must be dismissed. They were mere strangers to the land, unless they could rely on the unregistered conveyance by Vithoba to Harichand of the 23rd March, 1876, but this conveyance had no effect when brought into competition with the registered conveyance to the third defendant of the 2nd April, 1894.

Though the register is notice of registered documents it is not notice of unregistered documents under which holders of registered documents derive title.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Arthur H. Unwin, District Judge of Nasik, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Malagaon.

Suit for possession of land. The plaintiffs had bought the land in question from one Ran on the 22nd August, 1882, by a registered deed of conveyance.

Ran had been given the land by one Harichand and had a registered deed of gift from him dated the 15th November, 1881.

Harichand, however, had purchased the land from one Vithoba by an unregistered deed dated the 23rd March, 1876.

The first and second defendants were the sons of Vithoba and they sold the land to the third defendant by a registered deed dated 2nd April, 1894.

The third defendant contended that the plaintiffs’ title ultimately rested on the unregistered deed of the 23rd March, 1876, executed by Vithoba (the father of his vendors) and that his (the third defendant’s) registered deed of 2nd April, 1894, had priority to that previous unregistered deed of March, 1876.

The Subordinate Judge held that, under s. 50 of the Registration Act, the registered sale-deed of defendant No. 3 (Ex. 46) was entitled to priority over the plaintiffs' unregistered title-deed (Ex. 29). He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge confirmed the decree.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—We confirm the decree of the District Judge in this case on the ground that the registered deed dated 2nd April, 1894, (Ex. 46) executed by Vitoba's sons in favour of the defendant No. 3 under s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) takes effect as regards the property comprised therein, being the property in suit, against the unregistered conveyance dated 23rd March, 1876, (Ex. 29) by Vitoba in favour of Harichand, who by deed of gift on the 15th November, 1881, (Ex. 32) gave the property to Ran, who sold it by deed dated 22nd August, 1882, (Ex. 36) to the plaintiff.

It is contended that the deeds of 2nd April, 1894, and 23rd March, 1876, Ex. 46 and Ex. 29, do not come into competition, as the former was executed by the father Vitoba, and the latter was executed by his sons and heirs. The contention ought not to prevail. The title of Vitoba descended upon his sons, and it is the same title which is conveyed by both documents. That is sufficient—Makandas v. Shankardas (1).

It is on this argued that the registered documents, dated respectively, 15th November, 1881, and 22nd August, 1882, Ex. 32 and Ex. 36, come into competition with, and being prior in date to the deed of 2nd April, 1894, Ex. 46, take precedence over it. We do not think that is so. The plaintiff and his grantors are mere strangers to the land, unless they can rely upon the unregistered conveyance by Vitoba to Harichand in March, 1876, Ex. 29; but this conveyance, as we have stated, does not take effect upon the property when brought into competition with the registered conveyance of April, 1894, Ex. 46. The grantees of Harichand stand in his shoes, and if he could not succeed against the defendant No. 3, neither, we think, can they.

As to the argument based upon the law to notice laid down in Dundaya v. Chenbasapa (2) that the defendant No. 3 had notice through the registered documents of November, 1881, and August, 1882, Ex. 32 and Ex. 36, of the unregistered document of March, 1877, Ex. 29, it is ingenious, but, we think, unsound [216] The register may be notice, and in most cases under the rulings of this Court doubtless is, of the registered documents which it contains, but it would be pushing the doctrine of constructive notice beyond all bounds to hold that it is notice of the unregistered documents under which the holders of registered documents derive their title.

Lastly, it is contended that the alleged constructive possession of Harichand of the premises under the kabulayat, Ex. 41, gave constructive notice of Harichand's purchase to the defendant No. 3. That kabulayat, however, if genuine, was for a year, and expired in 1879, so that as a fact the sons of Vitoba were not holding as tenants under it in 1894; but even if they were, they were in apparent possession, and the constructive possession, which would be in Harichand or his grantees by reason of the kabulayat, was not possession of such a nature as to be notice to the defendant No. 3 of their prior title—Moreshwar v. Dattu (1).

[217] In 1893 the plaintiffs brought the present suit with the consent of the Advocate-General, under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), against the same defendant, alleging that after Purshotam’s death the defendant had entered into possession of the property and for some years had carried out the trusts created by his father Purshotam; but that latterly he had claimed the property as his own and refused to perform the trusts. They prayed that trustees might be appointed and the property made over to such trustees. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs in both the suits were the same, vis., persons representing the same cestui que trustent, i.e., the devotees of the temple or the general public; that they sued in the same right, and that as the plaint in the former suit were held barred by limitation, the plaints in the present suit were also barred.

Held, that the present suit was not barred. The plaintiffs in the former suit had no general warrant, such as is conferred on plaintiffs suing under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, to represent the public, the objects of the charity. They based their title to sue on their particular appointment by Purshotam, and when it was found that they had by limitation lost their rights to the title derived from that appointment they ceased to represent the public just as though they had been removed from their office. The de jure managers and trustees of a public charity losing their right by limitation to oust the de facto trustees does not confer on the latter immunity from suit on the part of the Advocate-General or the temple.

devasthan; that on the 18th December, 1859, he executed a deed of gift which was duly registered, and constituted himself trustee for life for the management of the property and also appointed trustees for management after his death; that the defendant was in possession of the property and neglected to perform the duties connected with the idol and devasthan; that the defendant was dealing with the property as owner that all the trustees appointed by Purshotam were dead; that plaintiff No. 3 was the pujaar (worshipper) of the idol and that the remaining plaintiffs being its devotees had an interest in the continuance [218] of the devasthan and of its property. The plaintiffs prayed that the property, moveable and immovable, belonging to the devasthan should be handed over to them, or that the Court should appoint other trustees, &c., &c.

The Judge found that the plaintiff were not entitled to sue under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the defendant was in possession of the property as owner; and that the claim for his removal, or to recover the property from him, was time-barred. He, therefore, dismissed the suit. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"The main point for decision in this suit is whether there was a trust as regards the possession and cauchat of certain properties alleged to have been dedicated by one Purshotam Ambaidas to the idol in the temple of Nivdung Vithoba at Poona. Defendant urges that he was the owner of the property. I have declined to take fresh oral evidence on this point, as I think that this and all other questions connected with this case can be decided by a reference to the judgment of Mr. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge, which was confirmed by the High Court in P. J., p. 155, of 1892 (Ap. 86 of 1889). The plaintiff urge that these judgments are not admissible in evidence, but I would hold, on the contrary, that these judgments are admissible as a piece of evidence under s. 42 of the Indian Evidence Act. I would even go further and hold that the decree of Mr. Fernandez, which was confirmed by the High Court, operates as res judicata between the parties before us, because the matter in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between parties litigating under the same title. The plaintiffs in the former suit called themselves trustees, but as no trust was proved, they were not more than devotees of the idol, and that is what the present plaintiffs allege themselves to be. In the former ease to prove that a trust had been created, a deed of gift said to have been passed in June, 1859, and a will alleged to have been passed about eight years later were produced. Mr. Fernandez held that the deed of gift was proved, but had never been acted on, and he held that the will had not been proved. He held further that it had not been proved that the property in suit was acquired by Purshotam alone without the aid of any ancestral property. On this point their Lordships did not agree with him, for they assumed that the property had been self-acquired, and they do not expressly record any finding on the danpatra or the will. They do not, however, quarrel with his decisions on these points, but confirm the decree, from which I gather that their opinion as to the unreliability of these two documents was the same as that of the Subordinate Judge. The judgment of the High Court goes on to say, 'whether the defendant be regarded, in fact, as a trustee for the temple, and can be removed for misconduct, is not now before the Court.' But I will show to the best of my ability that neither plaintiffs nor defendant were trustees for the [219] temple, —in fact, there has never been any trust. As regards the defendant, the judgment in appeal of the High Court decides that the defendant has always been in possession of the property adversely, to the Panch ever since his father's death. If his possession of the property was adverse, he could not have been a trustee. Then as regards the so-called Panch, if the judgment of the First Class Subordinate Judge holds good,—and I say that it must hold good, as it has been confirmed by the High Court,—the deed of gift was never acted on, and the will has never been proved; therefore, there was no trust as regards them, and it is clear that defendant Bapubhai has all along enjoyed the property in his own right as owner and not as gumastra, as held by Mr. Fernandez. I hold, then, that no trust was created by Purshotamdas, and that no Panch was appointed by him, and that the son of Purshotamdas had vakhat in his own right and not as gumastra. I, therefore, decide the first point against the plaintiffs and hold that they are not entitled to sue under s. 539, Civil Procedure Code, for the removal of the defendant."

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiffs with the consent of the Advocate-General under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (inter alia) to have trustees appointed for the management of the property specified in the plaint—a temple and its accessories—and to have the property made over to such trustees.

Their allegation is that Purshotam, the father of the defendant, validly dedicated the property in question to public religious uses, and during his lifetime managed the same, and that after his death the defendant, his son, entered into possession of it, and that for some time the trusts created by his father were recognized and carried out, but that latterly the defendant has claimed it as his own, and refused to perform the trusts or allow them to be carried out. The plaint specifies various documents and makes other allegations, but the above is its substance.

The District Judge has rejected the claim altogether and dismissed the suit without recording evidence, on the ground that it is res judicata by the decision in Kupuswami v Jugalkeshore (1). That was a suit by certain persons alleging that they had been appointed trustees of the charity by Purshotam, and seeking to evict the defendant from the premises on the ground that he had been appointed by them as their gumastra, and that they had dismissed him, and that he refused to give up the property to them. The High Court, without specifically finding whether the plaintiffs in that suit had been appointed trustees by Purshotam or not, dismissed the suit on the ground that the claim to recover possession of the property from the defendant was barred by limitation. The High Court expressly refrained from deciding whether the defendant could be regarded as, in fact, a trustee of the temple and could, as such, be removed for misconduct. The present suit is framed for seeking relief on that footing. It is contended that the plaintiffs in the former suit being the trustees appointed after his death by Purshotam both by the original deed of gift and by his alleged will represented the cestuum qui trautum the devotees of the temple or the general public, and that the present plaintiff also represent the same cestuum qui trautum, and are, therefore, suing in the same right as the trustees in the former suit, and that thus the parties to the two suits are the same. It is further contended that as it was held in the former suit that the claim of the trustees to recover the property from the defendant was barred, the claim of the cestuis que trustent to recover the same property must also be barred. What, however, was held in the former suit was that the particular plaintiffs in that suit had, by the operation of the law of limitation, lost their right (if they had ever possessed one) to represent the charity and to eject the defendant. The plaintiffs in that suit had no general warrant such as is conferred on plaintiffs suing under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code to represent the public as the objects of the charity. They based their title to sue on their particular appointment by Purushotam, and when it was found that they had by limitation lost their right to the title derived from that appointment, they ceased to represent the public just as though they had been removed from their office. The de jure managers and trustees of a public charity losing their right by limitation to oat the de facto trustee does not confer on the latter immunity from suit on the part of the Advocate-General or the public. The present suit is not, therefore, we think, barred by the proceedings in the former suit.

[221] The District Judge by an elaborate process of reasoning based upon the findings of the Subordinate Judge has arrived at the conclusion that it must be held that the judgment of the High Court decides more than is above set out, but when an appellate Court dismisses a suit on the ground of its being barred by the law of limitation it must be taken that the merits of the suit are not dealt with even though the decree of the lower Court is formally confirmed.

It is objected that the relief sought in this suit is not within the provision of s. 539. It is not necessary to consider that objection at present. Portion of the relief sought is clearly within the section upon the most limited view of its scope.

We reverse the decree of the District Judge and remit the case for retrial on the merits. Costs, costs in cause.

Decree reversed and case remitted.

SECOND appeal from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, confirming the order of Rao Sahab Moroshvar N. Ovalekar, Subordinate Judge of Khed, in an execution proceeding.

The plaintiff filed a redemption suit against the defendant and obtained a consent decree on the 1st December, 1884. The decree directed the plaintiff to pay Rs. 375 to the defendant by instalments of rupees twenty-five a year, and that the defendant should take the income of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest.

The instalments as they became due were paid by the plaintiff. In 1895, however, he paid the whole of the balance that remained due, and he then applied to recover possession of the mortgaged property.

The defendant objected and contended that under the terms of the decree the last installment would not become due until Magh, Shaka 1821 (1898-99 A.D.), and that until then he was entitled to remain in possession of the property and to take the produce in lieu of interest; that if the plaintiff were allowed to recover possession before that time, he (defendant) would be a loser; that he had let the land in dispute to a tenant for a period of five years, and that the Court had no power to alter the terms of a consent decree.

The Subordinate Judge granted the plaintiff’s application permitting him to pay off the remaining instalments at once and to recover possession of the land.

[223] On appeal by the defendant the Judge confirmed the order.

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Purshotam P. Khare, for the appellant (defendant).—The consent decree was, no doubt, passed under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act; still even under that Act it is not open to the Court to alter the terms of a decree after it has been passed—Balakrishna v. Abaji (1). A Court executing a decree must execute it according to its terms—Mahant Ishwargar v. Chudasama Manabhai (2); Lakshman v. Shekh Abdulla (3). The defendant has suffered loss by possession being given to the plaintiff earlier than at the due date. He has lost interest on his money for which he should be recouped. Further, relying on the decree he has already let the land, and the period of tenancy is yet to run. If the tenant be evicted, he will sue the defendant for damages.

Trimbak R. Kotwal, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The order for the payment of the decretal debt by instalments was in the interest of the plaintiff, who is an agriculturist, and not for the benefit of the defendant. The defendant has, therefore, no right to refuse to receive the balance of any amount payable by the mortgagor under that decree shall be payable in such instalments, on such dates and on such terms as to the payment of interest, and, whereas the mortgage is in possession, as to the appropriation of the profits and accounting therefor, as it thinks fit.

[222] (2) If a sum payable under any such direction is not paid when due, the Court shall, except for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, instead of making an order for the sale of the entire property mortgaged or for foreclosure, order the sale of such portion only of the property as it may think necessary for the realization of that sum.

The Court may at any time direct that the amount of any decree passed, whether before or after this Act comes into force, against an agriculturist, or the portion of the same which it directs under section nineteen to be paid, shall be paid by instalments with or without interest.

(1) 12 B. 326. (2) 13 B. 106. (3) P. J. (1890), p. 154.
the debt at once. The decree does not prevent the plaintiff from paying the debt at once if he can. It is not open to the defendant to say that because he has leased the land for a period which has not expired, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The decree in this case provides that its amount (Rs. 375) shall be paid by the plaintiff by annual instalments of Rs. 25 each and that until the decree is paid off in Shaka 1381 the defendant is to remain in possession of the mortgaged property and to receive the produce in lieu of interest, he paying the assessment. The suit in which the decree was passed was for redemption and was brought under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act. The decree was the result of a compromise and was passed by consent, but presumably after the Judge had satisfied himself that the mutual obligations of the parties had been equitably determined. Section 15 (3) of the Act enabled the Court in its discretion to pass the decree in the above form.

The plaintiff has paid several instalments in pursuance of its terms. The question is whether he is now entitled at once to pay the residue of what is due under the decree and redeem the property. The matter is of importance, as s. 15 (3) enables the Court in its discretion to continue the mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property for a fixed period as a means of liquidating the debt, and the question is likely often to recur.

The general rule is that when the mutual rights and obligations of the plaintiff and defendant have been determined by a decree, the decree affords the measure of those rights and obligations, and a Court executing the decree can only execute it in accordance with its terms—Lakshman v. Sheikh Abdul (1); Mahant Ishwargar v. Chudasama Manabhai (2) and Balkrishna v. Abaji (3). In the last mentioned case it was held that when a decree was made payable by instalments, the whole becoming due in default of payment of an instalment, the Court had no power, even under the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act, to make a further order for the payment of the decree by instalments. Section 20 of the Act now confers that power upon the Court, but no general power to vary the terms of a decree once passed is thereby given.

The decree in the present case determines the mode in which the plaintiff is entitled to redeem and the defendant is liable to be redeemed, and we think that, in the absence of consent, the executing Court cannot compel the defendant to allow himself to be redeemed except in accordance with the mode provided by the decree. To allow the plaintiff to redeem now would be a hardship on the defendant. As each instalment is paid to the defendant, the stipulation as to interest contained in the decree becomes more and more favourable to him. When half the debt is paid, he receives as much interest on the unpaid half as he originally obtained on the whole, and so, as each instalment is paid, he gets an increasingly high rate of interest on the unpaid balance. This must be presumed to have been in the mind of the Judge when he passed the decree, and he must have struck, or the parties must have done so with his approval, a fair average rate for the whole period. The defendant, moreover, alleges that on the strength of the terms of the decree he has let the land to tenants and thus incurred obligations towards them. It would be manifestly unfair to expose him to risk at the suit of such tenants. We think that when a mortgagee is, under a decree, continued in possession of the mortgaged property for a definite time he is entitled to retain that possession until the expiration of the specified period and is not liable to be redeemed before then at the wish of the plaintiff. His position otherwise would be most anomalous.

We reverse the orders of the Courts below and dismiss the Darkhast No. 377 of 1895 with costs throughout.

Order reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

MALUJI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. FAKIRCHAND AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [16th April, 1896.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II. art. 134—Purchaser for value—Mortgage—Mortgage in 1842—Subsequent mortgage in 1872 by mortgagee representing himself to be owner—Decree on second mortgage—Sale in execution—Purchaser at auction-sale—Right of original mortgagor in 1893 to redeem mortgaged property.

In 1842 Andoji, the grandfather of the plaintiff, mortgaged the land in question to one Manekchand with possession. On 9th May, 1872, Manekchand's son Lakhmichand, who was then still in possession, representing himself to be the owner mortgaged the property with possession to Tuljaram (defendant No. 2) and Sarupchand, the grandfather of Lakhmichand Gulabchand (defendant No. 3). These defendants sued upon their mortgage of May, 1872, and obtained a decree and sold the property in 1881 in execution, purchasing it themselves. Defendant No. 3 subsequently sold his share to one Fulohan (defendant No. 4). In 1892 the plaintiff, (who was the grandson of Andoji, the original mortgagor in 1842), sued the first defendant (the grandson of the original mortgagors Manekchand and Lakhmichand and Fulohan (defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4) party defendants.

 Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. By the sale in 1881 the interest of defendant No. 1 (grandson of original mortgagor under the mortgage of 1842) became vested in defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff could then have redeemed them on paying off the amount due under the mortgage of 1842, disregarding the mortgage of 9th May, 1872, altogether. But when the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had held possession under that mortgage for twelve years (i.e., on 9th May, 1884) that mortgage, under art. 134 and s. 28 of the Limitation Act became a valid mortgage as regards the plaintiffs, and they could not after that date recover possession without redeeming it also. The purchase by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 at the auction-sale in 1881 could not avail them, as the present suit was brought within twelve years from that date.

Though a mortgagee is a purchaser for value he is not an out-and-out purchaser, but only a purchaser sub modo. He purchases a mortgagee's interest in the land, viz., a right to hold the mortgaged property until the debt is paid.

A mortgagee is pro tanto a purchaser for value within the meaning of art. 134 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

SECOND appeal from the decision of S. Hammick, District Judge of Ahmednagar, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb B. Y. Gupte, Subordinate Judge of Karjat.

* Second Appeal, No. 340 of 1894.
Suit for redemption. In 1842 one Andoji, the grandfather of the plaintiffs, mortgaged the land in question to one Maneckchand with possession.

In May, 1872, Maneckchand’s son Lakhmichand Maneckchand, who was then in possession representing himself to be the owner, mortgaged the land with possession to Tuljaram (defendant No. 2) and Sarupchand, the grandfather of Lakhmichand Gulabchand (defendant No. 3) and on 17th September, 1878, these mortgagees obtained a decree on their mortgage, and in April, 1881, sold the land in execution and bought it themselves, duly obtaining a certificate of sale. Subsequently to their purchase they held possession prior to this suit for nearly eleven years, and Lakhmichand Gulabchand (defendant No. 3) had sold his share to one Fulchand (defendant No. 4) and had given him possession.

In 1892 the plaintiffs, who were the grandsons of Andoji, the original mortgageor, brought this suit against the first defendant Fakirchand (grandson of Maneckchand the original mortgagee) for redemption of the mortgage of 1842, making Tuljaram and [227] Lakhmichand and Fulchand (defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4) party-defendants.

The defendants alleged that in 1872 the land was the property of Lakhmichand Maneckchand, who had mortgaged it in May, 1872, to defendants Nos. 2 and 3, representing himself to be the owner. They pleaded that they were purchasers for value, and that the suit was barred by limitation under art. 154 and s. 28 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

The Subordinate Judge relying on the decision in Yesu Ramji v. Balkrishna (1) held that the claim was time-barred and dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge confirmed the decree.

The plaintiffs having then preferred a second appeal, the High Court (Farran, C. J., and Parsons, J.), on the 6th September, 1894, sent down the following issue for the findings of the lower Courts:

"Whether when the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 took the mortgage from defendant No. 1 in 1872 they did so with notice that defendant No. 1 was himself a mortgagee, or whether they took the mortgage on the representation and in the belief that his was an absolute title?"

The findings of both the lower Courts on the issue were that when defendant No. 1 mortgaged the land to defendants Nos. 2 and 3, he put himself forward as the absolute owner of the property.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni appeared for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The defendants are, no doubt, purchasers for value under art. 154, sub. II of the Limitation Act. But we submit that they are purchasers in a limited sense. What the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 purchased at the auction-sale was the interest of the mortgagees under the mortgage of 1842. That interest would have become an absolute ownership under art. 154 in twelve years. But this suit is brought within twelve years. They are, therefore, only mortgagees and not owners, and the plaintiffs are entitled to redeem.

Mahadeo V. Bhat appeared for the respondents (defendants).—We rely on Yesu Ramji v. Balkrishna (1); Shephard on Limitation, [228] p. 103; Vol. XVI, p. 466, of the Proceedings of the Legislative Council. The first adverse act on the part of the defendants took place in the year

1872, when defendant No. 1, professing himself to be the owner, mortgaged the land to defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The present suit not being brought within twelve years from that date is clearly time-barred.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—We have considered, and are not prepared to dissent from the ruling in Yesu v. Balkrishna (1) that mortgagees are (pro tanto) purchasers for value within the meaning of art. 134 of the Limitation Act. "A purchaser for value" is an expression well known to lawyers, used in contradistinction to a mere volunteer; and we do not find that there are sufficient indications afforded in the Limitation Act to lead us to feel confident that it has not been used by the Indian Legislature in art. 134 in that sense. It is so used in the English Statute (3 and 4 Will. IV, cl. 27, s. 25), the cases decided under which may, we think, be resorted to as a guide to the meaning of the expression. They will be found collected in Lewin on Trusts, p. 876.

This is not, however, decisive, as held by the lower Courts, against the plaintiffs' right to redeem altogether. It only, we think, imposes upon them the necessity of redeeming the mortgage created by the father of defendant No. 1 before they can recover possession of the property. Though a mortgagee is a purchaser for value he is not an out-and-out purchaser, but only a purchaser sub modo. He purchases a mortgagee's interest in the land, viz., a right to hold the mortgaged property until his debt is paid.

The dates and facts as alleged or found are these. The plaintiffs' ancestor, it is alleged, in 1842 mortgaged the land with possession to the grandfather of the defendant No. 1. On the 9th May, 1872, the father of the defendant No. 1, representing himself to be the owner, mortgaged the property with possession to the defendant No. 2 and to the ancestor of defendant No. 3. On an issue sent down it has been found that the mortgagees (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) in taking the last-mentioned mortgage were led to believe that defendant No. 1 was the full owner of the mortgaged property and as such executed the mortgage in their favour. They did not merely take an assignment of defendant No. 1's mortgage interest. In 1878 the defendant No. 2 sued the defendant No. 1, and in that suit obtained a decree upon the mortgage of 9th May, 1872, and in execution of the decree caused the mortgage property to be sold in 1881. It was purchased by the defendant No. 2 on behalf of himself and his co-mortgagee, defendant No. 3. The latter subsequently sold his interest in the property to the defendant No. 4. The plaintiffs filed the present suit for redemption in 1892.

As none of the defendants have held possession as out-and-out purchasers for the statutory period of twelve years, the plaintiffs have not, we think, under art. 134 lost their right to redeem. All the interest of defendant No. 1 has now centred in the other defendants. The plaintiffs would, therefore, be entitled to redeem them on paying off the amount of the alleged mortgage of 1842, unless the law of prescription has validated the mortgage of 9th May, 1872. Until the defendants held possession under that mortgage for the full period of twelve years, the plaintiffs could have disregarded it and recovered possession, notwithstanding its existence, by paying off the amount due on the original alleged mortgage of 1842. When, however, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had held possession under it for twelve years (which would be on the 9th May, 1884), art. 134 coupled with s. 28 of the Limitation Act gave, we think, legal validity to it, and the plaintiffs' from that date were barred by art. 134 from recovering possession of the property, disregarding the mortgage of 9th May, 1872. The possession of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was, however, only that of mortgagees, and like all other mortgagees they were, of course, liable to be redeemed at suit of the person entitled to the equity of redemption, and still are, we think, liable to be redeemed, as the out-and-out ownership, which their purchase of 1881 might (it was a Court sale, and we express no opinion as to its effect) have conferred on them, if twelve years had elapsed from its date at the time of suit brought, does not avail them. The suit was brought within twelve years of the purchase. As, however, the defendants' purchase in 1881 does not avail [230] them, we think that they can fall back upon their position of mortgagees under their mortgage of 9th May, 1872, which, as we have said, became by prescription a valid mortgage on the 9th May, 1884. The plaintiffs must, therefore, redeem that mortgage before they can recover possession of the mortgaged premises. For these reasons we must reverse the decree of the Courts below and remand the case for determination of the remaining issues. Costs hitherto incurred to be costs in the cause.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

PATEL PANACHAND GIRDHAR AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs); Appellants v. THE AHMEDABAD MUNICIPALITY (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [16th April, 1896.]

Municipality—Suit against municipality for injunction—Notice of action—Bombay Act VI of 1873, ss. 17, 23 and 42—Discretion of municipality to take action under s. 33, cl. 3 of Bombay Act VI of 1873—Court's power to interfere with such discretion—Bombay Act II of 1884, s. 42.

A suit for an injunction to restrain a municipality from removing a certain building or construction is not an action "for anything done, or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the Act" within the meaning of s. 42 of Bombay Act II of 1884. Such a suit can, therefore, be brought without giving previous notice to the municipality.

Apart from the provisions of s. 33 of Bombay Act VI of 1873, it is only if the site of a building is vested in a municipality under s. 17, that this body is empowered, whether by s. 42 or by any other section, to take steps for the removal of the building.

The discretion of taking action or otherwise under the 3rd clause of s. 33 is vested in the municipality, which alone can determine whether or not the removal of a building erected contrary to the provisions of s. 33 is or is not a measure likely to promote the public convenience. If the municipality adopt the proper procedure, no Court can review its decision on the ground that in the opinion of the Court the removal of the building is not likely to promote public convenience.

The Legislature has confined to the municipality, and the municipality alone, the duty of deciding what measures within its legal powers are for the public convenience, and its discretion is not subject to control by the Courts.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 242 of 1893.

The plaintiffs sued for an injunction restraining the municipality of Ahmedabad from removing a chora and a parabdi, alleging that the chora and parabdi stood on a site belonging to the inhabitants of Hanuman Street in Ahmedabad; that the parabdi was recently rebuilt on the foundation of an old parabdi; and that the municipality had attempted to remove the same without giving proper notice.

The defendant municipality pleaded (inter alia) that the site of the chora and parabdi was part of a public street and as such was vested in the municipality; that the municipality had authority to remove the structures under s. 33 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873); and that the suit was bad for want of notice under s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884.

The Subordinate Judge disallowed these pleas, and passed a decree granting the injunction sought.

On appeal the District Judge reversed this decree, holding that the suit was bad for want of notice under s. 48 of the Bombay Act II of 1884, and that the ground upon which the chora and parabdi stood did not belong to the plaintiffs but to the municipality.

Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The objection to this suit based on s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 was not pressed in argument by Mr. Chimnanlal. It is clear that a suit for an injunction to restrain a municipality from removing a certain building or construction is not an action "for anything done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance" of the Act.

We turn then to the merits. Apart from the provisions of s. 33 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 it cannot, we think, be disputed that it is only if the site of the chora and parabdi are vested in the municipality as a public street that this body is empowered, whether by s. 42 or by any other section, to take steps for their removal. Section 17 specifies the property vested in the municipality, and it is contended that the ground in dispute—namely, the site on which the chora and parabdi are erected—forms part of a public street. The question, then, to be determined is whether such site forms part of a public street. The learned District Judge has discussed the question whether the recess in which the chora and parabdi stand is a public street, though he has not arrived at any very clear decision on the point. But he has not considered whether, supposing the recess to be a public street, the site of the chora and parabdi forms part of such street. Prima facie the site is the property of the persons who by building the chora have occupied it to the exclusion of the public—The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Jethabai (1). They have apparent possession, and are presumably the owners till the contrary is proved (s. 110, Evidence Act). But it may be shown that previous to the recent construction or reconstruction of the chora the site on which it now stands formed part of the public street. That is a question of fact on which we can come to no decision. It is alleged that there was an old chora of which only foundations remained. It is also alleged that the post on which the parabdi stands has always been there. If these allegations are sustained, there can be no doubt the difficulty of proving the site to be part of the public street will be increased. The site of an old chora which had been abandoned for a number of years might possibly be found to have been left so long unoccupied by its owners as to raise a presumption of dedication to the public or the public might have acquired a right of way over it; but facts necessary to support either of these conclusions would have to be established, and in the case of a small plot of land the proof of acts of user by the public would probably be difficult. However this may be, as the site is now covered by a chora, it is for the municipality, which alleges it to form part of the public street, to prove facts from which it can be inferred that the allegation is correct.

There are other points, too, in regard to which findings are necessary to enable us to dispose of the case. In the Lower Court it was contended for the municipality that the chora had [233] been recently constructed without notice under s. 33, and that, therefore, irrespective of title to the ground, it had a right to remove it. The Subordinate Judge held that the parabdi did not interfere with the public safety, health or convenience, and that, therefore, the municipality were not justified in exercising the discretionary power given them by cl. 3 of s. 33. He also held that as upon the evidence on record it appeared that the disputed parabdi and chora had been built upon the site of the old parabdi and chora, no notice was necessary under s. 33, cl. 1, and the municipality was consequently not justified under that section in ordering their removal—Krishnaji v. The Municipality of Tusgaon (1). Against this decision no very distinct objection was taken in the points of appeal to the District Court; but as the question was apparently raised in the 3rd issue, and decided in the affirmative, we have to determine it. We are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge that, assuming the plaintiff to have built without notice, and assuming that under the circumstances of the case notice was necessary under s. 33 before building, it was not within the discretion of the municipality to order the removal of the chora if it thought a proper case had been made out. The discretion of taking action or otherwise under the 3rd clause of s. 33 is vested in the municipality, which alone can determine whether or not the removal of a building erected contrary to the provisions of s. 33 is or is not a measure likely to promote the public convenience (vide s. 24, cl. 21). If the municipality adopts the proper procedure, no Court can review its decision on the ground that in the opinion of the Court the removal of the building is not likely to promote public convenience. The Legislature has confided to the municipality, and the municipality alone, the duty of deciding what measures within its legal powers are for the public convenience, and its discretion is not subject to control by the Courts—vide Allcroft v. Lord Bishop of London (2). As to the second ground on which the Subordinate Judge considered that no order for removal could be made under s. 33—namely, that the chora was built entirely on old foundations—we refrain from expressing any opinion until the District [234] Judge has formed his conclusions as to the facts and the application to them of the law.

Assuming that notice under cl. 1 of s. 33 ought to have been given to

(1) 18 B. 547.
(2) [1891] A.C. 666.
the municipality before the chora was constructed, the question remains whether the municipality has given due notice of removal under cl. 3.
Mr. Chimanlal contended that the notice to Vithal Panachand had been accepted as sufficient; but until it is found either that the notice to Vithal has been accepted as sufficient or for some reason is sufficient, or that notice has been duly served as provided in s. 76, it is impossible to see how the municipality can be justified at present in removing the chora.
We do not know the facts, which must be ascertained by the District Judge.
They may be important in determining whether, in case an injunction is granted, it should be of permanent effect or merely of temporary effect until the municipality has followed the procedure prescribed by law.
Lastly, supposing the procedure in s. 33 to be inapplicable, and supposing it to be found that site of the chora is part of a public street, it has to be found whether the municipality has given sufficient notice of removal to satisfy the requirements of s. 42. But as no form of notice is prescribed, it is probable that, if there was sufficient notice of removal for purposes of s. 33, it would equally suffice for the purposes of s. 42.
We shall, however, be in a better position to decide the whole case when the facts are before us.

We now send down the following issues:—

1. Whether it is proved that the site of the chora and parabdi forms part of a public street?
2. Whether, before the recent construction or reconstruction of the chora, notice to the municipality was required under the 1st clause of s. 33?
3. Whether notice by the municipality requiring removal of the chora and parabdi, whether (a) under s. 33, cl. 3, or (b) under s. 42, has been duly given or accepted as sufficient?

[235] As on the first of these issues neither the parties nor the Courts appear to have noticed the necessity for determining whether the actual site (as distinguished from the recess in which it is situated) was part of a public street, we think it fair to allow fresh evidence to be given.

The findings of the District Court should be returned within four months.

Case remanded.

QUEEN-EMpress v. NAGLA KALA.* [28th May, 1896.]

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 36—Confession—Confession made to a Magistrate of a Native State—Admissible—Evidence.

The words "police officer" and "Magistrate" in s. 36 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) include the police officers and Magistrates of Native States as well as those of British India.

A confession made by a prisoner, while in police custody, to a First Class Magistrate of the Native State of Muli in Kathiawar, and duly recorded by such Magistrate in the manner prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), is admissible in evidence.

Queen-Empress v. Sunder Singh (1) followed.

* Criminal Appeal No. 50 of 1896.
(1) 12 A. 596.

APPEAL from the conviction and sentence recorded by Gilmour McCorkell, Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad.

The accused was tried for murder.

The evidence for the Crown consisted (inter alia) of a confession made by the accused while in police custody.

The confession was made to a First Class Magistrate of the Native State of Muli in Kathiawar. It was recorded by the Magistrate in the manner prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) and signed by the accused in the presence of the Magistrate.

At the trial the Magistrate was called as a witness for the Crown; and he deposed that he had taken down the prisoner’s statement with his own hand in the prisoner’s own words. [236] The statement was read and recorded as evidence against the accused.

The jury found the prisoner guilty of murder by a majority of 3 to 2.
The Sessions Judge concurring with the majority of the jury convicted the accused of murder and sentenced him to transportation for life.

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court.

There was no appearance either for the Crown or for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—The papers in this case were called for to consider the admissibility, in evidence, of a confession by the prisoner recorded by a First Class Magistrate of the Muli State in Kathiawar. The accused while making the confession was in the custody of a police sepoy, who was present in the room. The confession was regularly recorded in the manner usual under the Criminal Procedure Code in British districts: it was signed by the mark of the accused in the presence of the Magistrate, who also signed it and added the usual certificates. At the trial the Magistrate was examined as a witness and deposed that he was a First Class Magistrate in the Muli State, and that he had taken down the accused’s statement with his own hand in the accused’s own words. The statement was then read as evidence.

The only question that arises is whether s. 26 of the Evidence Act renders the confession inadmissible. Section 26 is as follows: "No confusion made by any person whilst he is in the custody of a police officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be proved as against such person. Explanation:—In this section Magistrate does not include the heads of a village discharging magisterial functions in the Presidency of Fort St. George or in Burmah or elsewhere, unless such headman is a Magistrate exercising the powers of Magistrate under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882." There was no appearance for either the prisoner or the Crown, but in another case in which judgment will be delivered to-day we have had the advantage of hearing on this very point the arguments of [237] Mr. Branson for the prisoners and the Government Pleader for the prosecution, and had our attention called to the cases reported in Weir’s Reports, p. 800, and Queen-Empress v. Sundar Singh (1).

We have then to consider whether the words "police officers" and "Magistrate" as used in this section are applicable only to British officials, or whether they apply also to the officials of Native States. In our opinion the words include the police officers and Magistrates of Native States as well as those of British India. In regard to the police, it would be unreasonable to hold that a confession made to a Native State policeman should be more admissible than one made to a British policeman. We agree with the opinion of Garth, C.J., in the Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), that in the Evidence Act the term police officer should be read "not in any strict technical sense, but according to its more comprehensive and popular meaning," and can see no justification for declaring that the officials ordinarily described as police officers in Native States, and performing in such States the functions of police, are not police officers within the meaning of ss. 25, 26 and 27 of the Evidence Act.

Turning, then, to the word Magistrate in s. 26 we think that it must equally include Magistrates in Native States. The statement in the General Clauses Act (I of 1868) that Magistrates shall include all persons exercising all or any of the powers of a Magistrate under the Code of Criminal Procedure suggests that there may be Magistrates not belonging to the class included. In the Empress v. Ramanjiyaa (2) the Madras High Court held that the word "Magistrate" in s. 26 included village Munsifs. This was thought objectionable, and by Act III of 1891 the section was amended so as to exclude village headmen; but when making this amendment the Legislature must have been acquainted with the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the Queen-Empress v. Sundar Singh (3) (1890), and if it had desired to limit the meaning of the term Magistrate in s. 26 to Magistrates under the Code of Criminal Procedure, nothing would have been easier than to say so. Such a limitation, however, which would exclude the use, in British Indian Courts, of a confession made [238] by a person while in police custody to a Magistrate in England or in a Foreign country, does not appear to have been intended.

In these circumstances we think we may safely follow the decision of the Allahabad High Court above referred to in so far as it admits in evidence a confession made in the presence of a Magistrate of a Native State. That decision, it is true, deals with the question of the admissibility of the record of the proceedings of a Magistrate of a Native State under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, but as it is based on the construction of the word "Magistrate" in that section as including a Magistrate in a Native State it is an authority for a similar construction of the word in s. 26; for it would, we think, be unreasonable to hold that the Legislature used the same word in different senses in the same Act. We, therefore, reject the appeal, which raises no other point open to argument under s. 418 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hosking.

MOTIRAM BALKRISHNA RAJMANNE (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. YESU AND OTHERS (Original Defendant), Respondents.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 375—Compromise—Court cannot refuse to record a compromise except where unlawful.

The terms of s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) are imperative, and a Court cannot refuse to record a lawful agreement of compromise, and to pass a decree in accordance therewith, merely because in its view it is too favourable to one of the parties.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadke, First Class Subordinate Judge of Solapur with appellate powers, confirming the decree of Rao Sabeb G. B. Laghat, Subordinate Judge of Karmala.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land.

The defendant claimed that the property was his, alleging that the plaintiff had purchased the property benami for him (the defendant).

[239] At the first hearing the parties stated to the Court that the suit had been compromised in the terms that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff Rs. 225 within six months, and that the plaintiff should give up his claim to the land, and they applied that a decree should be passed in the terms of the compromise. The Subordinate Judge, however, refused to grant the application, but went into the merits of the case and found that the plaintiff had purchased the land for the defendant and that the defendant was the rightful owner. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"The wording of s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code is certainly imperative in the matter of recording the compromise come to by the parties to the suit in respect of the subject-matter thereof; but it must be borne in mind that the Court is bound to adopt the procedure laid down in that section on the condition that the compromise is lawful and not otherwise. Exhibit No. 14, which embodies the compromise, bears the signatures of both the parties thereon, and the plaintiff therein admits himself to be a benami purchaser. In these circumstances the compromise cannot be said to be just and lawful, inasmuch as the plaintiff is thereby receiving some benefit at the sacrifice of the just interest of the defendant. The plaintiff is according to the compromise to get Rs. 225 from defendant for nothing. The defendant agreed to pay that sum at the suggestion of the panch only because he thought that he would otherwise be losing his beloved land."

Ganesh K. Deshamukh appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—The compromise was effected under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Judge refused to give effect to the compromise on the ground that the plaintiff was deriving an advantage to which he had no right. The Judge was wrong in refusing to record the compromise on that ground. The only ground on which the Court can refuse to record a compromise is that it is unlawful. Under s. 375 the Court cannot go into the question of the compromise being just and equitable. The plaintiff’s giving up all further litigation was a sufficient consideration.

Mahadeo B. Chaubal appeared for the respondents (heirs of the original defendants, deceased).—It is not now open to the plaintiff to insist upon the compromise. Because after it was stated to the Court, the parties proceeded with the suit tendered evidence and [240] allowed the case to be decided on the merits. The application was made on the 14th November, 1892. The whole evidence was recorded after that date and the case was decided on the 10th March, 1893. The conduct of the parties shows that they decided not to be bound by the suggested compromise and, therefore, it is ineffectual—Shankar Venkatpataya v. Gopal Mahaleshwar (1). The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the defendant did not really understand the effect of the compromise. The parties reside in the Sholapur District to which the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act applies. Reference to arbitration was made while the suit was pending; therefore such a reference would not be legal taking into consideration the object and scope of that Act.

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—In this case we think that the Court was bound under s. 375 of the Civil Procedure Code to record the compromise and pass a decree in accordance therewith. The case has not been brought within the special provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act, and must, therefore, be determined by those of the Civil Procedure Code alone. The terms of s. 375 are imperative, and the lower Courts could not refuse to act upon the agreement of compromise, merely because, in their view, it was too favourable to the plaintiff. In no sense was the compromise unlawful.

The case of Shanker Venkatpataya v. Gopal Mahaleshwar (1) has no application here, as the Subordinate Judge, when reserving his decision as to whether he would record the compromise, ordered the defendant to proceed with his evidence.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Courts and pass a decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise of the 14th November, 1892. The time for the payment by the defendant of the Rs. 225 must be extended for a period of six months from this day. As the cost of the subsequent proceedings has been caused by the error of the Subordinate Judge, we direct each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Decree reversed.

AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [16th June, 1896.]

Landlord and tenant—Yearly tenancy—Notice to quit—Notice to make a fresh agreement with the landlord or to quit at the end of the year—Sufficient notice.

On the 28th September, 1891, the plaintiff gave defendants, who held his land as annual tenants, a notice in the following terms:—

"Therefore, within two days from the receipt of this notice, meet us, increase the rent and give us a legal writing, or in default, on the 31st March, 1892, we shall keep present two good men and take full possession of the said land with all trees, &c., on that day, and no contention of yours in that matter will avail; and if you raise a contention we shall have recourse to a regular suit to obtain possession, and you will be responsible, &c."

Held, that the notice was a good and valid notice to terminate the tenancy.

[F., 19 Ind. Cas. 768; R., 16 C.L.J. 561 = 16 Ind. Cas. 906; 5 P.R. 1904 = 42 P.L.R. 1904.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Surat, reversing the decree of Khan Sabeb Jahangir E. Modi, Subordinate Judge of Olpad.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain lands, alleging that the defendants were yearly tenants; that he served them with a notice on the 28th September, 1891, to pay enhanced rent or to give up possession on the 31st March, 1892, and that they refused either to pay the enhanced rent or to vacate the lands.

The following is the material portion of the notice referred to in the plaint:—

"We have very often told you and sent you word that you are not giving us a rent-note and you are putting us off from time to time.
Besides, people are ready to give us more rent; therefore, we are now not willing to keep you for good. Therefore within two days of the receipt of this notice meet us, increase the rent and give us a legal writing, or in default on the 31st March, 1892, we shall keep present two good men and take full possession of the said land with all trees, well, &c., on that day, and no contention of yours in that matter will avail, and if you raise a contention, we shall have recourse to a regular suit to obtain possession, and you will be responsible for the expenses."

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the notice given by the plaintiff was not a good legal notice.

[242] The Subordinate Judge found that the notice served by the plaintiff on the defendants was sufficient. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge held that the notice given to the defendants was not sufficient, and he reversed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—
The notice was good. It was given more than six months before 31st March, 1892. Sections 83 and 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) were complied with. The notice is clear and unambiguous

* Second Appeal No. 709 of 1896.
and sufficient in law to entitle the plaintiff to maintain an action in ejectment. The Judge has relied on Mohamaya v. Nilmadhab (1) and Bradley v. Atkinson (2). In the former case there was no question as to the sufficiency of notice, and the latter case is not applicable, because the notice in that case expired in the middle of the month of tenancy. In support of our contention we rely on Hem Chunder v. Radha Pershad (3), Ahearn v. Bellman (4), Bury v. Thompson (5) and Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, p. 315 (14th edition).

Motilal M. Munshi appeared for the respondents (defendants).—The decision in Hem Chunder v. Radha Pershad (3) is based on the decisions in Jamoo Mundur v. Bijoo Singh (6), which is dissent from in Mohamaya Nilmadhab (1). The notice in dispute is a notice in the alternative is not sufficient.—Bradley v. Atkinson (2). The test is what was the intention of the landlord. In the present case the intention of the landlord was to continue the tenancy in case we paid the enhanced rent.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The District Judge in this case has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the notice which the plaintiff gave to the defendants, his alleged tenants, was not in law a notice which could determine the tenancy. The Subordinate Judge on that point had come to a different conclusion.

[243] Apart from authority, and reading the notice as a person not a lawyer would understand it, we agree with the Subordinate Judge that it expresses the intention of the plaintiff to enter upon and take possession of the land on the 31st March, 1892, and requires the defendants to deliver up possession on that day. "Therefore, the notice states, "within two days from the receipt of this notice meet us, increase the rent, and give us a legal writing, or in default on the 31st March, 1892, we shall keep present two good men and take full possession of the said land with all trees, &c., on that day, and no contention of yours in that matter will avail, and if you raise a contention we shall have recourse to a regular suit to obtain possession and you will be responsible, &c." The defendants were by that notice allowed two days to make a fresh agreement with their landlord, failing which the notice to them to quit at the end of the year became an absolute notice. Two days after the defendants received that notice, when they knew that they had not made an agreement with the plaintiff, they had before them a written notice which had then become unconditional that they must give up possession on the 31st March, 1892. The terms of the notice could not possibly, we think, have left them in doubt as to what was required of them. That to an ordinary mind would appear to be sufficient to terminate the defendants' existing tenancy on the day specified, assuming it to have been a tenancy which the plaintiff had the right to terminate by notice.

Is there, then, anything in the authorities which prevents us from holding such a notice to be a good and valid notice to terminate the tenancy? We think that there is not. In Bradley v. Atkinson relied on by the District Judge the notice dated 11th December was "If the rooms you occupy are not vacated within a month from this date I will file

(1) 11 C. 598. (2) 7 A. 899. (3) 28 W.R. 440. a suit against you for ejectment as well as for recovery of rent due at the enhanced rate." The notice in the judgment of the Court delivered by Petheram, C.J., was held insufficient, as it was not an intimation to terminate the tenancy on the 31st December, the date on which the tenancy could be legally determined. The essential condition that there must be no uncertainty as to the date upon which the tenancy is to terminate, and that such date must be a [244] date on which the tenancy can legally be determined, was wanting and, therefore, the notice was held bad. The judgment of Straight, J., makes the reason of the decision very plain. The case is totally unlike the present, where the legal date on which the tenancy is to terminate is stated with particularity.
In Mohamaya v. Nilmadhav (1) all that was decided was that a notice to quit or pay an enhanced rent did not entitle the landlord to a decree for both rent and in ejectment—rent for the first quarter after the notice and ejectment thereafter.

The judgment of Garth, C.J., in the last mentioned case raises a doubt whether a notice to quit upon a certain date or pay an enhanced rate from that date is valid. Such a notice was treated as a good notice in Janoo And a majority of the Judges in Ahearn v. Bellman (4) held that a notice to quit was not invalidated by the addition of the further clause "and I hereby further give you notice that, should you retain possession of the premises after the day before-mentioned, the annual rental of the premises now held by you from me will be £160 payable quarterly in advance." We do not think it necessary in this case to decide whether the doubt expressed in Mohamaya v. Nilmadhav (supra) is well-founded or not. There the alternative presented to the tenant continued to be presented to him until the date specified in the notice. Here the alternative ceased to be an alternative two days after the service of the notice where after the notice to quit left the tenant no other option than to deliver up possession on the day named. In Bury v. Thompson (5) a notice by a tenant that he would leave the leasehold premises on a certain day unless the landlord agreed in the meantime to a reduction of rent, was held to be a good notice. It bears a close resemblance to the notice in the present case.

We do not think, therefore, that the authorities prevent us from acting upon our own view as to the validity of the notice before us and, therefore, hold that the notice is a good and effectual notice, and reverse the decree of the District Judge and [245] remand the appeal for trial of the remaining issues. Costs of the appeal will be costs in the cause.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

INDIAN DECISIONS, NEW SERIES

22 B. 245.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

BAPU (Original Defendant No. 5), Appellant v. BHAVANI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiff and Defendants Nos. 1 and 2).* [10th June, 1896.]

Mortgages—Mortgage or sale—Test of mortgage—Practice—Procedure—Finding on unnecessary issue between co-defendants—Res judicata.

In an instrument dated the 30th June, 1885, styled a sale-deed, it was recited that in consideration of Rs. 2,500 certain specified properties (already mortgaged to the so-called vendees and in their possession) were “given in sale” to them and were to be enjoyed by them for ten years in any manner they liked. At the expiration of that time the vendors were to pay the Rs. 2,500 and take back the property. In 1893 the plaintiff (a son of the so-called vendor) brought this suit treating the above instrument as a mortgage and praying for redemption. The main question in the suit was whether the instrument sued on was a mortgage or a deed of sale with the option of repurchase after ten years.

Held, that the instrument was a mortgage. The test was whether after the execution of the deed there continued to be a debt from the so-called vendors to the vendee, or whether the pre-existing debt became extinguished on the execution of the deed.

A finding between co-defendants unnecessary for the determination of the suit, or the rights of the parties involved in the suit, is not res judicata.

SECOND appeal from the decree of G. Jacob, District Judge of Sholapur-Bijapur, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Barsi.

Suit for redemption. The land in question was the property of one Gunaji and his two sons, viz., the plaintiff Bhavani and Raoji (defendant No. 4). This land had been mortgaged to members of the Mundhe family, and the mortgagee’s interest had become vested in one Nani, who was in possession.

On the 21st October, 1885, Gunaji mortgaged this same land to Pandurang and Nana (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) for Rs. 2,000, [246] and subsequently, viz., on the 30th June, 1886, he executed a further deed (called a sale-deed) to them for Rs. 2,500 made up of the previous Rs. 2,000 and a further sum of Rs. 500. The material part of this deed was as follows:

"In consideration of this amount (Rs. 2,500) there have been given in sale the undermentioned properties (describing them). The abovementioned properties have been in your enjoyment up to this day since the aforesaid date the 7th, on which day the properties were given in writing in mortgage to you and delivered into your possession. The said properties have been sold to you for the abovementioned amount, and they have been by virtue of the previous mortgage-deed in your possession, and they have also been given into your possession by this sale-deed. You are, therefore, to enjoy the properties for ten years in any manner you like. After the expiration of the ten years I (Gunaji) will redeem my properties on payment of Rs. 2,500 (or more literally ‘having made payment of Rs. 2,500 I will take back my properties’). Consent to this is given by us, Raoji, aged 40 years, and Bhavani, aged 35 years * * * who state in writing that our said father will, on payment of the amount as aforesaid, redeem the properties which have been as aforesaid given to you in writing. Should he fail to..."

do so, we, having paid the amount, will redeem them without pleading the excuse of each other's absence."

On the 8th January, 1887, Gunaji and Raoji (the plaintiff Bhavani did not join) again sold it to one Bapu Ambadas (defendant No. 5) for Rs. 3,000. About the same time Bapu (defendant No. 5) purchased Nani's interest in the land and obtained possession from her.

In 1888 Pandurang and Nana (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) sued (suit No. 125 of 1888) to redeem Nani's mortgage and to recover possession. Bapu Ambadas (defendant No. 5) was then in possession, and he was, therefore, made a party defendant to that suit, as were also Gunaji and his two sons, Bhavani (present plaintiff) and Raoji (defendant No. 4).

Bapu Ambadas filed a written statement in that suit in which he alleged that by the sale to him he had also acquired the interest of the plaintiff Bhavani. Bhavani denied this and an issue being raised on the point, it was decided in Bhavani's favour. The suit itself, however, was decided in favour of Pandurang and Nana (defendants Nos. 1 and 2), who recovered possession of the land from Nani and Bapu.

[247] In 1893 the present plaintiff Bhavani brought this suit against Pandurang and Nana (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) for redemption, alleging that the deed of the 30th June, 1886, was a mortgage and not a sale.

Pandurang and Nana (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) contended that the plaintiff had no right to sue, as well as his brother Raoji being bound by the sale to Bapu Ambadas in January, 1887; that in any case he could not sue before the expiration of the ten years mentioned in their sale-deed; and that as they had purchased the land, no account could be ordered against them. Bapu Ambadas (defendant No. 5) pleaded that he had bought the land from Gunaji as head of his (Gunaji's) family, and that, if plaintiff had any right to sue, he (Bapu) should be made a co-plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for redemption in favour of plaintiff and defendant No. 5 (Bapu).

On appeal the Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. He held that the deed of 30th June, 1886, was not a mortgage, but that the transaction was a sale with a right of repurchase; but that the land could not be recovered from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 before the expiration of ten years. He held, however, that the plaintiff had a right to sue, being of opinion that that question had been decided, in suit No. 125 of 1888 and was res judicata.

Bapu Ambadas (defendant No. 5) filed a second appeal.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar, for the appellant (defendant No. 5).—The first question is whether the document executed by Gunaji to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the 30th June, 1886, shows a mortgage or a sale. If the transaction is a mortgage, then under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act we can redeem before the expiration of the term mentioned therein. In order to determine whether a transaction is a mortgage or not, the test is whether there is still a subsisting debt. The document clearly shows that there was a subsisting debt. The creditors deposed that on the day the document was executed, they debited the amount to the debtor Gunaji. It is, therefore, manifest that the parties themselves treated the transaction as a mortgage. The document, no doubt, begins [248] with the expression Mudatische sale-deed. But the name given to a document does not determine its character. Other circumstances in connection with it must be considered. In the present case, looking to the conditions in the document, the creditors could have sued for the recovery of the debt and, therefore, the transaction is a mortgage—Subhiaqhat v. Vasudev bhat (1); Bapuji Apaji v. Senavaraji (2); Govinda v. Jesha Premoji (3); Ram Saran Lal v. Amirta Kuar (4); Malipatran v. Gumbhirnal (5); Lakhmiandv. Chatur Deuchandshet (6); Rama v. Yesu (7). The inclination of the Courts is always in favour of holding a transaction to be a mortgage rather than a sale.

The next point is as to whether Bhavani’s interest passed to us under our sale-deed. It is contended that this question was decided in the previous suit of 1888. We submit that we are not bound by that decision. The issue raised on the point in that suit was superfluous and was not necessary for the decision of that suit. The High Court in second appeal held that the determination of those questions was unnecessary. Therefore, the finding in the former suit that Bhavani was not barred by the sale-deed passed to us by his father and brother is not res judicata—Ghela Ichharam v. Sankaichand Jetha (8).

Manekshah J. Taleyar Khan, for respondents (defendants Nos. 1 and 2).—We contend that the transaction in dispute is a sale with a right of repurchase. In order to determine the nature of the transaction in dispute the previous transaction of the 21st October, 1885, has to be taken into consideration. The transaction in dispute recites the previous debt and states that for the additional sum of Rs. 500 the property was sold for a term of years. Another test is that we could not have sued for the recovery of the money, because in the document there is no promise to pay. Under the document we had no right to call back the money. Only the option is given to the vendor to pay us the money and to recover the property—Alderson v. White (9); Bhagwan Sahai [249] v. Bhagwan Din (10); Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co. v. North Central Waggon Co. (11).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—We think that in this case the District Judge ought to have inquired into the title of the plaintiff upon the merits, and was wrong in holding that his right to sue was res judicata as having been established by the finding upon the issues in suit No. 125 of 1888. We must remand the case for a further finding upon the first issue. The question arises under the following circumstances:

Before the dealings between the parties to this suit in respect of the land which the plaintiff seeks to redeem, the land was subject to a mortgage or mortgages in favour of certain members of the Mundhe family whose interests eventually became centred in one Nani. It is unnecessary to refer to these mortgages in detail. The equity of redemption in the mortgaged property, which was ancestral, was vested in the defendant Gunja and his two sons, the plaintiff Bhavani and the defendant Raoji.

On the 30th June, 1886, Gunja and his two sons executed the instrument (Ex 50) in favour of the defendants Pandurang and Nana, which, treating it as a mortgage, the plaintiff seeks to redeem. One of the questions in the suit—the main question—is whether it is a mortgage or a sale with the option of repurchase. Subsequently the defendants Gunja and Raoji, on the 8th January, 1887, sold the land to the fifth defendant Bapu for Rs. 3,000. The plaintiff Bhavani was not a party to that deed, and claims that it is not binding upon him.

In 1888 the present defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Pandurang and Nana, filed a redemption suit against Nani to recover possession of the lands, alleging that the mortgage, which she held, had been paid off. The present defendant Bapu had then acquired the interest of Nani in the lands and was in possession of them. Accordingly he was made a defendant to the suit, as were also the present defendants Gunaji and Raogi and the present plaintiff Bhavani.

The defendant Bapu in his written statement in that suit alleged that under the sale-deed executed in his favour by Gunaji and Raogi he had also acquired the interest of the plaintiff [250] Bhavani. This the plaintiff Bhavani denied. An issue was raised upon that question in the Court of the first instance, which was decided in favour of the plaintiff Bhavani. The suit itself was decided in favour of the present defendants Pandurang and Nana, who recovered possession of the lands from Nani and her assignee, the present defendant Bapu. There was an appeal against that decision, but it was confirmed both in the District Court and on second appeal in the High Court. The defendant Bapu did not appeal in respect of the finding on the issue in favour of the plaintiff Bhavani.

Now it will be observed that the finding upon the issue in favour of the plaintiff Bhavani was a finding upon an issue which did not properly arise in the suit. The title of the plaintiffs in that suit (the present defendants Pandurang and Nana) to represent pro tem, the interests of Gunaji and his sons Bhavani and Raogi under the terms of the document, Ex. 50, was clear and undisputed. The only question, which properly arose in the suit, was whether they were entitled to redeem Nani and her assignee Bapu and upon what terms. The determination of the issue between Bhavani and Bapu was not connected with the suit. It does not appear why the Subordinate Judge allowed it to be raised, or why he found upon it; but as we have said, there was no appeal from the finding. Had there been, the District Judge must have refused to consider it beyond declaring that the issue was improper and ought not to have been raised or decided. However, there having been no appeal, the finding on the issue remained, and the District Judge in this case has treated that finding as decisive of the respective rights of the plaintiff Bhavani and the defendant Bapu in the suit. The question is whether he was correct in so treating it. We are of opinion that he was not. It was a finding between co-defendants unnecessary for the determination of the suit or the rights of the parties involved in the suit. It cannot, therefore, operate as a res judicata—Ramchandra Narayan v. Narayan (1); Ghela v. Sankalchand (2); Ahmad Ali v. Najabat Khan (3).

[281] We have next to consider whether the instrument sued upon is a mortgage or a deed of sale with an option or right on the part of the vendors to repurchase the land after ten years. The solution of that question depends upon the terms of the instrument and the intention of the parties. The Subordinate Judge considered it to be a mortgage by way of conditional sale, and under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act allowed redemption, though the mortgage term had not expired. The District Judge held it to be a sale outright, with a right of repurchase reserved. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The transaction is in the body of the instrument styled a sale; but that, though a circumstance to be taken into consideration, is not conclusive. The test is whether after its execution there continued to be a debt from the so-called vendors to the vendee, or whether the pre-existing debt became extinguished on the execution of the instrument—Govinda v. Jesha (1). The material portions of the instrument are these:

"In consideration of this amount (Rs. 2,500) there have been given in sale the undermentioned properties (describing them). The above-mentioned properties have been in your enjoyment up to this day since the aforesaid date the 7th, on which day the properties were given in writing in mortgage to you and delivered into your possession. The said properties have been sold to you for the abovementioned amount and they have been by virtue of the previous mortgage deed in your possession and they have also been given into your possession by this sale-deed. You are, therefore, to enjoy the properties for ten years in any manner you may like. After the expiration of the ten years I (Gunaji) will redeem my properties on payment of Rs. 2,500 (or more literally 'having made payment of Rs. 2,500 I will take back my properties'). Consent to this is given by us, Raaji, aged 40 years, and Bhavani, aged 35 years * * * who state in writing that our said father will, on payment of the amount as aforesaid, redeem the properties which have been as aforesaid given to you in writing. Should he fail to do so, we, having paid the amount, will redeem them without pleading the excuse of each other's absence."

The effect of that instrument appears to us to be that the creditors are to hold the property for ten years and are not to be answerable for what they do with it, nor have they any claim to interest. At the end of ten years, however, or at any time thereafter the vendor Gunaji undertakes that he having paid the money (Rs. 2,500) "will take back the land," which [252] amounts, we think, to a covenant on his part to repay the money and redeem the land. This is made still more clear by what the sons are to do if the father fails to redeem. It is not, it appears to us, an option which the sons are given of repurchasing, but an express covenant on their part, which it is intended that the creditors can enforce, and in answer to which the sons are not to plead the non-joiner of one another. They are to repay the Rs. 2,500 and take back the land.

Mr. Maneckshaw in support of the opposite view relied on Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2), where the Lords of the Privy Council held (citing the cases of Alderson v. White (3) approved in The Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshires Railway Co. v. The North Central Wagon Co. (4)) that the instrument before them was one of conditional sale and not of mortgage, but there the only agreement was one on the part of the vendee to accept the purchase-money and cancel the sale. Here the undertaking is on the part of the so-called vendors to pay the debt and redeem. The words can bear no other meaning. The debt is recognised as an existing debt, payment of which is postponed for ten years. If we were doubtful as to the true effect of the instrument, the conduct of the creditors would, we think, make the matter clear. In their books they entered the Rs. 2,500 as a debt due from the so-called vendors, and Pandurang in his evidence in the former suit stated that the vendees enjoyed the profits in lieu of interest.

ARJUN RAMCHANDRA SESH KARPE (Original Defendant), Appellant v. SHANKAR VISHRAM SHENVI GHURAYE (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [17th June, 1896.]

Practice—Procedure—Dismissal of case in first Court without hearing all the witnesses—Appeal—Duty of appellate Court to call the remaining witnesses before reversing the decree of first Court.

The Subordinate Judge having heard all the witnesses for the plaintiff and some of the witnesses for the defendant intimated that he did not consider it necessary for the defendant to call any more evidence. He then dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge upon the recorded evidence reversed the decree and allowed the plaintiff’s claim. The defendant appealed to the High Court, contending that the lower Court ought not to have found against him without allowing him an opportunity to call the witnesses whose evidence had been dispensed with by the Subordinate Judge.

Held (reversing the decree of the lower appeal Court and remanding the case), that the lower appellate Court ought not to have reversed the decree of the first Court without allowing the defendant to give the evidence which the first Court declined to take.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur V. V. Vagle, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ratnapuri, with appellate powers, reversing the decree of Rao Sahib Vishvanath Vaikunth Wagh, Subordinate Judge of Vengurla.

The plaintiff had attached certain property in execution of a decree obtained by him. This attachment had been removed on the application of the defendant, and the plaintiff now brought this suit for a declaration that the property was liable to attachment.

The defendant resisted the plaintiff’s claim.

The Subordinate Judge examined all the witnesses tendered by the plaintiff, and after examining only three of the witnesses adduced by the defendant dispensed with the rest of his witnesses and dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Judge reversed the decree and allowed the claim. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

[284] “On the other hand the defendant adduced no evidence beyond examining three persons as witnesses Nos. 56, 64 and 65 on his behalf. * * * This is all the evidence adduced by the defendant. The defendant’s vakil contended that as the lower Court thought it unnecessary to examine all his witnesses in view of the plaintiff’s evidence he should be allowed a fresh opportunity of examining his witnesses. No doubt there is a passage in the lower Court’s judgment that it did not consider it necessary to examine all witnesses called by the defendant; but on referring to the resnama of the case, I find that the defendant himself dispensed with the rest of his witnesses (vide Ex. 9). He may have done so at the suggestion of the lower Court, but he took the risk of it upon himself. I, therefore, hold that the defendant has no right to examine those witnesses whom he himself dispensed with."

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

_Scott (with Vawdeco G. Bhandarkar), for the appellant (defendant).—_

As the plaintiff’s attachment had been removed, the burden of proof lay heavily upon him to prove his right to attach it, and he has failed to do so. The first Court, without examining all our witnesses, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to make out his case. But on the evidence on the record, the Judge in appeal came to a contrary conclusion. The Judge ought to have given us an opportunity to produce all our evidence, especially as the evidence was dispensed with by the first Court; before he decided in plaintiff’s favour—_Khuda Bakhsh v. Imam Ali_ (1); _Ram Jeeun Singh v. Radha Persad Singh_ (2). We submit that the inquiry has been defective.

_Lang (Advocate General with Gangaram B. Rele), for the respondent (plaintiff).—_It appears that the defendant himself dispensed with the rest of his evidence. He considered that it was not necessary for him to examine the rest of his witnesses having regard to the evidence adduced by the plaintiff. The defendant must take the consequence of his own act.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—It is in our opinion undesirable to have a case disposed of without hearing the evidence of all witnesses whom the parties desire to call. Here the Subordinate Judge during the progress of the case intimated to the parties that, having regard to the view which he took of the evidence called by the plaintiff, he did not think it necessary to examine all the witnesses called for the defendant. We think that after that intimation [255] the defendant was not bound to go on calling witnesses, which the Subordinate Judge thought it unnecessary to examine. Though his pleader in his endorsement on the darkhast of 10th July, 1893, made long afterwards stated that “it was not necessary to examine the remaining witnesses having regard to the evidence produced by the plaintiff,” we do not see more in that than an acquiescence in the course adopted by the Subordinate Judge. When the Judge in appeal was inclined to take a different view of the effect of the plaintiff’s evidence, we think that he ought to have given the defendant an opportunity of calling the evidence which the Subordinate Judge in effect declined to take.

We are fortified in this view by the cases of _Khuda Bakhsh v. Imam Ali_ (1) and _Ram Jeeun Singh v. Radha Persad Singh_ (2).

We reverse the decree and remand the case for re-hearing of the appeal after the defendant has been given an opportunity of having the witnesses, whom he proposed to examine, examined either in the Court of the Subordinate Judge or by the appellate Court as the appellate Court may think fit. Costs, costs in the cause.

NANA MANSARAM SETH (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. RAUTMAL TARACHAND SETH (Original Defendant), Respondent.*

Fraudulent conveyance—Colourable sale—Sale of property to defraud creditors—Indicia of fraud—Execution of decree—Attachment—Application to raise attachment—Suit to establish right to the attached property.

Where in a suit to establish plaintiff's right to property purchased by him it was found that his vendor, who had many debts to pay, had sold to the plaintiff all his property, reserving nothing to himself; that the plaintiff bought the property without seeing it or valuing it; that the consideration for the sale consisted of time-barred debts or debts which were not payable at the time; that the property sold remained in the possession of the vendor who paid its assessment, and that the consideration was grossly inadequate.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Babadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb G. N. Gokhale, Subordinate Judge of Jalgaon.

The defendant having obtained certain money decrees against one Babu Vithoba Patel and his brothers attached certain lands and houses in execution.

The plaintiff claimed the property as his, alleging that he purchased it from Babu Vithoba Patel and his brothers under a sale-deed dated 2nd January, 1891. He applied to have the defendant's attachment removed, but his application was rejected and he then brought this suit to establish his right to the property.

The defendant alleged that the purchase of the property by the plaintiff was merely colourable and that the property was liable to his (the defendant's) attachment.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding that this purchase of the property was a valid purchase.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge found that the plaintiff's sale-deed was fraudulent and colourable and reversed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"It appears that the judgment-debtors have sold the whole of their property to the plaintiff, and this is a badge of fraud. The conduct of the plaintiff is not that of a bona fide purchaser. He had not seen the property which he purchased. He did not take care to ascertain the value of the property. He says his gumasta Gopal knew everything about it, and he purchased the property, because his gumasta advised him to do so. Now that gumasta, though examined in the case, has not been asked a word on this point. Some of the debts due to the plaintiff had been time-barred and a portion of them had not become due then. The two sons of Vithoba, who were not parties to the bonds, appear to have joined in the sale without any hesitation. The dealings between the plaintiff and the three sons of Vithoba had been very old, and on not a single occasion had the other two sons of Vithoba been called upon to join in passing a bond to the plaintiff.

* Second Appeal No. 732 of 1895.
Notwithstanding the sale the houses included in the sale have been in possession of the vendor without rent, and the only explanation offered by the plaintiff on this head is that [257] houses in villages could fetch no rent. As regards the lands, the plaintiff had taken a rent-note from his debtor Rampuri, a guru of the vendors, but the evidence on the records shows that the vendors have been in possession of the lands, and Rampuri is a mere nominal tenant. Government assessment for the lands in suit has been paid by the vendors except on one solitary occasion when it was paid by Rampuri and that was on 23rd January, 1894 (Exs. Nos. 71, 72, 73). Rampuri says he ploughs the fields by means of bullocks belonging to the vendors, and that one of the vendors is his saldar (servant) for ploughing the fields. All these circumstances go to show that the sale is a fraudulent transaction made with a view to defeat the claims of creditors. It is true that the sale was made for consideration. A time-barred debt is, no doubt, a good consideration, and similarly a debt still to become due is also a good consideration; but in Twyn's case there was a good consideration, but the sale was declared void and fraudulent, because of the existence of other circumstances irrespective of want of good faith.

"The stamp-paper for the sale-deed was purchased on 1st January, and the deed was passed on 2nd January,—that is to say at a time when the Courts were closed for Christmas Holidays; perhaps the Courts might have re-opened on the very date of the sale. As regards the adequacy of the consideration, it appears that the plaintiff is unwilling to part with the property for even Rs. 3,000. At the Courts' sale, some portion of the property was not sold, but that which was sold fetched about Rs. 2,481. The lower Court says that this price cannot be taken to be the true value of the property. But when we find that a greater portion of the property has been purchased by Jagannath Navalram, we cannot refuse to attach due weight to the circumstance that Jagannath is a debtor of the plaintiff to the extent of about Rs. 6,000, and it was the plaintiff's gumasta who paid the purchase-money on behalf of Jagannath. It is reasonable under the circumstances to presume that Jagannath was simply a man on behalf of the plaintiff, and it is improbable in the highest degree to suppose that a man of the plaintiff should have acted as a puffer at the auction sale. The only other bidder at the sale was a man on behalf of the defendant. Jagannath purchased property of the value of about Rs. 1,600, whilst the defendant's man purchased property of the value of about Rs. 800. The value paid by the plaintiff is, therefore, inadequate."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Branson (with Vasudeo G. Bhandavkar for Narayan G. Chandavarkar) appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge has not found that the transaction was not intended to convey the rights in the property or that the debtors still continued to be the owners of the property. In the absence of such findings, and our sale-deed being registered, it lay on the defendants [258] to show that no property passed to us—Rajan Harji v. Ardesheir (1); Motial v. Utam (2).

Lang (Advocate General, with Gangaram B. Rele), for the respondent (defendant).—The finding of the Judge is quite clear. He found that the transaction was fraudulent and colourable. The only conclusion for such a finding is that there was no intention to convey the property—Rangilbhai v. Vinoyak (3).

RANADE, J.—Mr. Branson, the counsel for the appellant, admitted that if the lower appellate Court had found that the deed of sale was only a paper transaction, and the property in the lands sold did not pass to the appellant purchaser, that would have been a finding of fact which he could not question in second appeal. As we read the judgment in appeal, we think the judgment to say that in his opinion there was no bona fide or valid sale. He found that the sale-deed was colourable and fraudulent. He noticed the several indicia of fraud and collusion viz., (1) that the debtor sold all his property reserving nothing to himself; (2) that the appellant bought the property without seeing it or taking care to value it; (3) that the consideration consisted of time-barred debts which were not payable at the time; (4) that the properties sold remained in the possession of the vendor, who paid the assessment of the same; (5) and that the consideration was grossly inadequate. The judgment indeed stated in one place that the sale was made for consideration, but this consideration is described immediately after as being time-barred debts, or debts which were not repayable at the time.

It was on all these accounts, and not merely because the sale was intended to defeat other creditors, that the lower appellate Court held the sale-deed to be fraudulent and void. This clearly amounts to a finding that it was a mere colourable transaction without consideration, and one which was not intended to transfer the property to the appellant. The present case clearly falls within the ruling in Rangibhai v. Vinayak (1), and not within the class of cases covered by Mottal v. Utam (2) and Rajam Hariji v. Ardeskwr (3). We must, therefore, confirm the decree, and reject the appeal with costs

JIVANBHAT (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. ANIBHAT (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [30th June, 1896.]

Hindu law—Partition—Suit for partition—Exclusion—Burden of proof.

In a suit for partition of joint family property, the defendants pleaded that the plaintiff’s branch of the family had been separated more than thirty years ago. The plaintiff proved that the family property was joint, and that he had a share in it.

Held, that under the circumstances it lay on the defendants to prove plaintiff’s exclusion from the joint estate for more than twelve years and an exclusion known to the plaintiff.

SECOND appeal from the decision of M. H. W. Hayward, Assistant Judge of Belgaum, in appeal No. 191 of 1893.

Suit for partition.

The plaintiff sought to recover his one-fourth share of certain property, which he alleged was the joint family property of the parties to the suit.

* Second Appeal No. 865 of 1895.

(1) 11 B. 665.
(2) 13 B. 484.
(3) 4 B. 70.

The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff's branch of the family had separated more than thirty years ago, and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance held that the parties were members of a joint Hindu family, that the suit was not time-barred, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his share by partition of the property in dispute.

This decision was reversed, on appeal, by the Assistant Judge, who held the claim to be time-barred. He remarked as follows:

"The plaintiff was bound to prove that he first became aware of his exclusion within twelve years of the suit under art. 127 of Act XV of 1877, and this would include proof of possession as well as title within that period. This he appears to me to have failed to do. His suit is, therefore, time-barred under art. 127 of Limitation Act."

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Daji Abaji Khare, for appellant (plaintiff).—The lower Court has laid the burden of proof on the wrong party. The plaintiff has proved that his branch of the family is not separated from that of the defendants. The parties are still joint. That being so, it lies on the defendants to show that plaintiff has been excluded to his knowledge from the joint property for twelve years before suit.

Unless and until the defendants prove this fact, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for partition—Krishnabai v. Khangowda(1); Dinkar v. Bhikaji(2).

N. G. Chandavarkar, for respondent.—It is found that defendants have been in possession of the property in dispute for over thirty years. Possession is prima facie exclusive. It is for the plaintiff, who has been out of possession for so many years, to prove that his title was ever acknowledged by the defendants during this period or that they held the property on his behalf. This has not been done. His claim is, therefore barred by limitation—Ramachandra Narayan v. Narain Mahadev(3).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The Assistant Judge was wrong in placing the onus on the plaintiff of proving possession within twelve years of suit as well as title. Plaintiff sued to enforce a right to a share in joint family property. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff belonged to a branch of their family which had separated more than thirty years ago. It was, therefore, necessary for the plaintiff to prove title—that is, to prove that the property was joint, and that he had a share in it. This he did in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge. The Assistant Judge has recorded no finding on this point, and it still remains to be decided.

Assuming, however, for the purposes of this appeal, that this proof has been given, then clearly the onus of proving exclusion would lie on the defendants who assert it, and it is not merely [261] an exclusion that must be proved, but an exclusion known to the plaintiff. This is distinctly laid down in Krishnabai v. Khangowda(1). See also Hari v. Maruti(4) and Dinkar v. Bhikaji(2).

We reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court, and remand the appeal for a fresh trial. Costs to abide the result.

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Strachey.

[9th December, 1897.]

Practice—Procedure—Controversial matter.—Duty of Registrar—When a petition for probate or letters of administration becomes controversial—Non-appearance of caveatator—Form of order.

So long as a petition for probate or letters of administration is "non-contentious" it is to be dealt with by the Registrar. As soon as it becomes "contentious" it is to be treated as a plaint in a suit, and the suit is governed, so far as practicable, by the procedure prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code.

The petition becomes contentious not upon the entry of a caveat, but upon the filing of the affidavit in support of the caveat.

Where, in consequence of the filing of the affidavit, the matter becomes a suit, the whole suit must be disposed of by the decree of the Court. Where, therefore, at the hearing of the suit the defendant does not appear in support of the caveat, it is not a correct procedure for the Court merely to dismiss the caveat, leaving it to the Registrar to dispose of the petition as a non-contentious matter. The proper form of order is that the caveat be dismissed and that probate or letters of administration issue, provided that the Court is satisfied that the papers are in order.

The plaintiff presented a petition praying for probate of the will of his father Chunilal Motial.

The defendant filed a caveat against probate being granted to the plaintiff.

[262] The matter thereupon, in accordance with the practice, became a suit, was duly numbered as such, and was included in the list of testamentary cases "for hearing."

No affidavit, however, was filed in support of the caveat, and it now appeared on the day's list "for dismissal under Rule 42 (1)" of the High Court Rules.

MacIsod appeared for the petitioner.—This matter has been improperly set down for dismissal under Rule 42. That rule does not apply. The caveatrix has filed no affidavit, and I, therefore, ask that her caveat be dismissed, and probate be granted by the Court to the petitioner.

There is now no opposition to his petition.

[STRACHEY, J.—I am informed by the Registrar that in such a case as this, i.e., where no affidavit has been filed in support of the caveat, the practice is for the Court merely to dismiss the caveat, and for the Registrar to grant probate].

If so, that practice is wrong. The matter has become a suit, and the Court must deal with it. It is for the Court, and not the Registrar, either to grant or refuse the relief prayed for. The defendant (i.e., the caveatrix) fails to support her case by making the necessary affidavit. Why should that fact make it necessary for the petitioner to present a

— Suit No. 27 of 1897.

(1) 42. All writs of summons to appear and answer shall show in the margin the date of the filing of the plaint, and of any order to amend the summons, and shall be delivered to the Sheriff—for service within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court—or to the Prothonotary for transmission elsewhere, within twenty-one days from the filing of the plaint, or the date of such amendment; otherwise the suit will be set down on the Trial Board to be dismissed unless otherwise ordered.
fresh application to the Registrar instead of having his case decided now by the Court? The matter was some time ago on the board for hearing. If it had been reached, and had been called on for hearing, the Court would have dealt with it and have granted probate. It was not reached, and not called on, and now improperly appears on the list "for dismissal." I submit that it is the caveat that must be dismissed. The petition of the plaintiff for probate should be granted. His petition has become a suit (Succession Act, X of 1865, s. 261; Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, s. 83). A suit is not dismissed because no written statement [263] is filed. This petition ought not to be dismissed because no caveat is filed.

There was no appearance for the caveator. The Court dismissed the caveat, and reserved judgment on the point whether the Court or the Registrar should grant probate. Subsequently the following judgment was delivered—

JUDGMENT.

Strachey, J.—I have to decide a question of practice in the Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction of this Court which has arisen lately in several cases, and which I have taken time to consider. It relates to the course which should be adopted where a caveator fails to file an affidavit in support of the caveat within eight days after its entry under Rule 483 of the Rules of the Supreme Court (Ecclesiastical) which is still in force.

In one of the cases in which the question has arisen, the suit was according to the usual practice put up for dismissal of the caveat for non-compliance with this rule, and Mr. Macleod, who appeared for the petitioner, asked me not only to dismiss the caveat, but to direct probate to issue to his client. The Registrar, however, informed me that the practice was for the Court to confine itself to dismissing the caveat, and for the case upon such dismissal to be treated as a non-contentious matter in which under Rule 3 of the Testamentary and Intestate Rules made on the 1st December, 1862, the grant of probate is made, not by the Judge, but by the Registrar. On the other hand, Mr. Macleod contended that the Court being seized of the case, the more reasonable and expeditious course would be to avoid taking two steps where one was sufficient, and that where a petition for probate had become contentious by the entry of a caveat, and by the proceedings being converted into a suit, it should be completely disposed of by the decree of the Court.

The Registrar has kindly furnished me with a note, from which I gather that the course adopted in most of the few cases on the subject of which there is any record has been to dismiss the caveat, leaving the grant of probate to be made by the Registrar. Only six cases have been found, and in three the order was simply "caveat dismissed with costs." In one the Judge added to these words "application to be dealt with by the Registrar." In another the Judge on the consent of the defendant decreed [264] administration to the guardian of an infant plaintiff; and in the sixth the order was "caveat dismissed with costs. Probate to issue to both plaintiffs."

There is thus nothing that can be called a long, continuous and uniform practice on the subject. It is, however, desirable that a uniform practice should be adopted. The question is what practice would be most in keeping with the Indian Succession Act, 1865, the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) and, so far as applicable, the rules of practice and procedure of the Probate Division of the High Court in England. The effect of Rule 8 of the Rules of the 1st December, 1892, of ss. 238 and 261 of the Indian Succession Act, and ss. 55 and 83 of the Probate and Administration Act, is that, so long as a petition for probate or letters of administration is "non-contentious," it is to be dealt with by the Registrar: as soon as it becomes "contentious" it is to be treated as the plaint in a suit, and the suit is governed as far as practicable by the procedure prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code. It appears to me that the existing practice does not conform to this distinction as accurately as it might. What it does is to treat the filing of a caveat as the point at which a petition for probate or letters of administration becomes contentious. Immediately upon the caveat being filed, a notice is issued by the Registrar to the "attorney for the plaintiff" in which the proceedings are described and numbered as a suit between the petitioner as plaintiff and the caveator as defendant; this notice states the filing of the caveat, and that "the petition became a suit" upon a date specified, and that "you are required to apply for, and deposit for service a summons within twenty-one days from such last mentioned date under Rule 64 of the High Court Rules"—that is, Rule 42 of the Rules as now revised. The next step where an affidavit is filed in support of the caveat, is that the Registrar gives notice of the fact to the attorney for the plaintiff. If the affidavit is filed within eight days after the entry of the caveat, it becomes the written statement in the suit. If no affidavit is filed within eight days, the suit is put on the board for dismissal of the caveat, and the petition is dealt with by the Registrar in the manner already described. It appears to me that the more [265] correct procedure would be to treat, not the entry of a caveat, but the filing, within eight days of such entry, of an affidavit in support of the caveat, as the point at which the petition becomes contentious. The form of caveat prescribed by s. 252 of the Succession Act, and s. 71 of the Probate and Administration Act, and the judgments of the Court of Appeal in Moran v. Place (1) and Salter v. Salter (2) show that the entry of a caveat is not necessarily a contentious proceeding, and does not necessarily imply any intention to oppose the grant: it is merely a request that nothing be done in the matter of the estate of A. B., deceased, without notice to the caveator. The caveator may only want time to make enquiries and obtain information. In the cases just mentioned, it was held that in England the contention or litigation commences not with the caveat, nor with the warning of the caveat, nor with the caveator's appearance to the warning, but with the writ of summons which the person warning the caveat and intending to propound the will must then issue, and by which under s. 100 of the Judicature Act an action is commenced. In India, though there is a caveat there is no warning, no appearance to the warning and no writ of summons commencing an action; but a suit is here commenced by the filing of a plaint, and the question is at what point the petition for probate or letters of administration should be treated as having become the plaint in a suit. I think that the point at which this should be done is the filing of the affidavit in support of the caveat, because under the Rules the affidavit must state "the right and interest of the caveator, and the grounds of objection to the application," and that does imply opposition to the grant. Up to the filing of the affidavit, nothing need be done by the Registrar. If within eight days from the entry of the (2) (1896) p. 291.

caveat no affidavit is filed, the caveat simply drops, the matter never becomes contentious, and the Registrar can proceed to grant probate or administration as if no caveat had been entered. That is, in my opinion, implied by the Rule which provides that, unless the affidavit is filed within eight days, "such caveat shall not prevent the granting of probate or letters of administration." If within the eight days an affidavit is filed, then, but not before, notice should be given to the petitioner that the petition has become the plaint in a suit, and that he must proceed under Rule 42. This course will prevent any such question as that raised by Mr. Macleod from arising in the future; for until the affidavit is filed, there will be no suit, and if it is not filed in time, the case will not be put on the board for dismissal of the caveat, but the Registrar will ignore the caveat and dispose of the petition.

Where, in consequence of the filing of the affidavit, the matter becomes a suit, the whole suit must, in my opinion, be disposed of by the decree of the Court. In England there is a machinery by which, even after a writ of summons has issued, an order may be obtained for discontinuance of contentious proceedings, and for the grant of probate in common form. In India there is no such machinery, and a probate matter which has once become a suit can only be disposed of like other suits. A relief prayed for in the plaint can only be granted by the Court, and in a petition for probate or letters of administration the relief prayed for is that probate or administration may be granted. It follows that where at the hearing of the suit the defendant does not appear in support of the caveat, it is not, in my opinion, a correct procedure for the Court merely to dismiss the caveat, leaving it to the Registrar to dispose of the petition as a non-contentious matter. In such a case I think that the proper form of order is that the caveat be dismissed, and that probate or letters of administration issue, provided that the Court is satisfied that the papers are in order, and, in the case of probate, of the due execution of the will. In a case decided in 1860, Sausse, C. J., directed probate to issue out of the office, "if there is no objection on the part of the officer," and I think that will be the most convenient form of order, except where the Registrar has already minuted.

In the case in which Mr. Macleod appears, and which in accordance with the existing practice has been treated as a suit, I have already dismissed the caveat, and I now direct that probate issue to the plaintiff subject to any objection on the part of the Registrar.

Order that probate issue.
MADHAVRAO v. RAMRAO

22 B. 267.

[267] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ranade and Mr. Justice Hosking.

MADHAVRAO (Original Plaintiff) Appellant v. RAMRAO AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Respondents. [29th June, 1896.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244, cl. (c)—Decree—Declaratory decree—Execution of decree raising question of mis-management of property—Execution.

In a partition suit brought by the plaintiff a decree was passed in 1882 which provided (inter alia) that the defendant should manage certain devasthan lands and apply the income thereof to devasthan purposes; and that if he failed to manage the lands properly, or alienated them by sale or mortgage, the plaintiff and his younger brother should enjoy the lands and apply the proceeds towards the maintenance of the devasthan.

In execution of this decree, plaintiff presented an application on the 28th November, 1894, praying that he should be put in management of the devasthan lands, on the ground that the defendant was guilty of mismanagement and misapplication of the devasthan property.

This application was rejected by the Court of first instance on the ground that the question of mismanagement did not fall within s. 244, cl. (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). This order was confirmed on appeal on the ground that the decree was a declaratory decree and, therefore, incapable of execution.

Heid, on second appeal, that the decree was not declaratory only, and that it could be enforced in execution under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

SECOND appeal from the decision of S. Tagore, District Judge of Satara, in appeal No. 15 of 1895.

In a partition suit the decree dated 31st October, 1882, directed (inter alia) that the plaintiff's older brother Ramrao should have the management of certain lands which were set apart for the maintenance of a devasthan, so long as he carried on the management properly; and that if he failed to perform this duty, or alienated the devasthan lands by sale or mortgage, the plaintiff and his younger brother should manage the lands, and apply the income to devasthan purposes.

On the 28th November, 1894, plaintiff made an application for execution of the above decree, praying that he should be put in management of the devasthan lands, as his brother Ramrao had alienated the lands on permanent mirasi leases, and failed to apply the income to the purposes of the devasthan.

The Court of first instance rejected this application, on the ground that the question of mismanagement did not fall within s. 244, cl. (c), of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and referred the plaintiff to a separate suit.

On appeal the District Judge held that the decree, so far as it related to devasthan lands, was a declaratory decree, and as such incapable of execution. He, therefore, confirmed the order of the first Court.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The following authorities were referred to in argument:—Ramapa v. Krishnaya (1); Kashee Kishore Roy Chowdhry v. Noor Khan (2); Roy Luchmeenput Singh v. Adoyto Churn Mullick (3); Mukund Harshet v. Haridas Khemji (4).

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case the appellant-plaintiff is brother of the respondents Nos. 1, 2. There was a partition dispute between them, which was settled by an agreement effected by a conciliator, and the award of the conciliator was made on 29th September, 1882, and had the effect of a decree when the award was filed on 31st October, 1882.

The fourth clause of this conciliation decree related to the devasthan lands, and it directed that respondent No. 1 should have the management of these lands for devasthan purposes as long as he carried on the management properly. If respondent failed to perform this duty, or if he mortgaged or sold devasthan lands, the appellant-plaintiff and his brother respondent No. 2 should enjoy the inam lands of the devasthan, and apply the proceeds to devasthan purposes.

The present darkhast was filed by the appellant, in continuation of previous darkhast of 1885, 1888 and 1891, on 23rd November, [269] 1894, and it was stated therein that respondent No. 1 had let out the lands on permanent mirasi leases, and failed to apply the income to devasthan purposes, and that, therefore, the appellant should be placed in management of the lands as provided for by the decree. As the other brother of plaintiff refused to join in this proceeding, he was made co-defendant. The Court of first instance held that the question of the alleged mismanagement and alienation did not fall within cl. (c) of s. 244, and that plaintiff should bring a separate suit. This order was confirmed in appeal by the District Judge on the ground that the decree in respect of the devasthan property was declaratory only, and not capable of execution.

It was contended in the appeal before us that the decree was not declaratory only, and that the question of mismanagement fell within cl. (c) of s. 244. We took time to consider our judgment, as the points raised in this appeal have never been formally decided in this Court. There can be no doubt that the portion of the decretal order now sought to be executed was not declaratory only, and incapable of execution. The authority quoted by the District Judge, apparently from O'Kinealy's Code,* cannot be found in I. L. R., 1 All., p. 154. The ruling in Nawazish Ali Beg v. Vitaytee Khanum (5), however, is an instance of a declaratory decree incapable of execution. In that case execution was sought of a decree declaring plaintiff's right to a monthly allowance, and it was very properly held that plaintiff's remedy was by suit, and not in execution under s. 244. The appellant's pleader referred to Ramapa v. Krishnaya, (1), which is more in point, as an authority in the present case. In that case the decree was passed in 1869 in accordance with the terms of a compromise, and directed that the tenant should retain possession of the land as long as he paid the rent fixed, but on default in payment the tenant should make over the land into plaintiff's possession. Plaintiff sought in 1882

[370] To enforce this last portion of the decree on the allegation that there had been a default in payment. It was held by this Court that such a decree was capable of execution, and its execution was not barred by reason of the lapse of more than three years from the date of the decree. There is an earlier ruling of the Madras High Court—Ranganasary v. Shappani Asary (1) which is to the same effect, and the landlord was required to seek possession of the land in execution, and not by a separate suit, when the decree awarded him possession on default in the payment of rent. It is true that in Kashee Kishore Roy Chowdhry v. Noor Khan (2), pl. (d), s. 244, was held to relate to matters immediately connected with or arising out of the execution of decrees, and that the question of damages caused to attached property was held not to fall under this clause. So also where the judgment-debtor sought to impeach a decree or an execution sale on the ground of fraud, it was held that such a claim could only be established by a separate suit—Roy Luchmeeput Singh v. Adoyo Churn Mullick (3); Mussamut Rajbansee Koomaree v. Bhugwalee Koomaree (4); Hemmo Moyee v. R. Watson and Co. (5). An agreement not to execute the decree was similarly held to be not a matter relating to execution within the meaning of s. 244—Mukund Harshet v. Haridas Khemji (6).

These rulings do not apply to the circumstances of the present case, which is clearly governed by the Madras ruling, Ranganasary v. Shappani Asary (1), and the similar decision in Ramapa v. Krishna (7). We must, therefore, reverse the orders of both the lower Courts, and direct the Khatav Court to proceed with the execution of the decree by permitting the parties to give evidence in regard to the alleged default of respondent No. 1. The costs of these proceedings will be governed by the final decision.

Orders reversed.

GENU AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants Nos. 2 and 3), Appellants v. SAKHARAM AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs and Defendant No 1), Respondents.* [3rd July, 1896.]

having made default in paying the assessment, plots Nos. 303 and 305 were sold by the Revenue authorities and were bought respectively by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. In the latter year (1891) plot No. 304 was sold in execution of a money decree obtained by the mortgagee (defendant No. 1) against the mortgagor and was purchased by his (the first defendant's) undivided brother without leave of the Court. In 1892 the plaintiffs (heirs of the mortgagor) brought this suit against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to redeem the said three plots of land from the mortgage of 1872.

Defendant No. 1 pleaded that he had inherited plot No. 304 from his brother, who had become the owner of plot No. 304 by his purchase at the execution sale in 1881. He disclaimed all interest in plots Nos. 303 and 305. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 answered that they had become absolute owners by the purchase at the revenue sales. As to these latter, it was alleged that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were in possession of the said two plots for the first defendant. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 contended that by s. 182 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) the plaintiffs were precluded from raising this point.

 Held, that though s. 182 forbade the Court to entertain a suit against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the ground that they had bought the land for defendant No. 1, it did not debar it from entertaining a suit against them on the ground that subsequently to the sale they were holding on behalf of defendant No. 1 or against defendant No. 1 on the ground that he was himself really in possession through defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as his agents or tenants. The same principle of equity which would make defendant No. 1 a trustee for the mortgagee if he had bought in his own name, would make defendants Nos. 2 and 3 trustees for them if subsequently to the sale they held the land on behalf of defendant No. 1 and would also make defendant No. 1 himself a trustee if subsequently to the sale the property came into his possession as beneficially entitled thereto owing to an agreement between him and the certified purchasers.

Where a judgment-creditor without leave of the Court buys the property of his judgment-debtor at a Court-sale, the remedy of the latter is by application under s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and not by separate suit.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadke, Joint First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur, A. P.

Suit for redemption of certain plots of land (Survey Nos. 303, 304, 305) which had been mortgaged to defendant No. 1 (Motiram Fuleband) on 11th March, 1872, by the plaintiffs' father.

Defendant No. 1 alleged that as to plot No. 304, it had been purchased by his brother at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained against the mortgagee; that his brother was dead and that he had inherited plot 304 from him. He disclaimed all interest in plots Nos. 303 and 305.

As to plot No. 303, defendant No. 2 alleged that he had purchased it at a revenue sale in 1880 held in consequence of the mortgagee's default in paying assessment.

As to plot No. 305, defendant No. 3 claimed also as a purchaser at a revenue sale held in 1881.

The first Court held that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had become full owners of plots Nos. 303 and 305, and as to them rejected the plaintiffs' claim, but as to plot No. 304 he passed a decree for the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs appealed and the defendants filed cross-objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The appellate Court raised a further issue (No. 7) as follows:

"(7) Are Survey Nos. 303 and 305 purchased by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for the defendant No. 1?"

[273] The Judge (First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P.) found that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had purchased these plots of lands for defendant No. 1 and allowed the plaintiffs' claim as to them. He rejected the claim as to plot No. 304, holding that as to it no suit would lie, the plaintiffs' remedy being in execution or by an application to set aside the sale under s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code.

From his decision defendants Nos. 2 and 3 filed a second appeal (No. 892 of 1895).

One of the plaintiffs also filed a second appeal (No. 944 of 1895).

Mahadeo B. Chabul, for appellants in appeal No. 892 (defendants Nos. 2 and 3).—We purchased the lands at the revenue sales, and sale certificates were granted to us. We thus became certified purchasers and no suit could lie against us on the ground that we purchased the lands for defendant No. 1. Section 182 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) is quite clear on the point—Balkrishna v. Madhurav (1). Further, there is absolutely no evidence to support the finding that our purchase was for defendant No. 1. We contend that we purchased the lands in our own right and have become full owners.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the appellant (plaintiff No. 3) in appeal No. 944 of 1895:—Our appeal relates to Survey No. 304 only. We contend that as the property was purchased at a Court sale by the undivided brother of defendant No. 1 without the sanction of the Court, it was a purchase by the defendant himself (the mortgagee) without sanction. The Court sale was, therefore, voidable, and a suit to set aside such a sale can be brought within twelve years from the date of the sale—Erava v. Siaramana (2).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The plaintiffs sued to redeem three fields, Survey Nos. 303, 304 and 305, which had been mortgaged to the first defendant with possession. The lower appellate Court held that they were entitled to recover Nos. 303 and 305, but not No. 304, their right to which had been extinguished by a Court sale, which took place in 1881.

[274] In regard to Nos. 303 and 305 the appellate Court found that in 1880 or 1881 the occupancy right in the two numbers had been sold by the Collector in consequence of the default of defendant No. 1, who was bound to pay the assessment; that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 bought these numbers at the sale for defendant No. 1; and that there was none of the mortgage-debt remaining due on these numbers.

The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have appealed, and it has been contended on their behalf that having regard to s. 182 of the Land Revenue Code, the allegation that they bought for defendant No. 1 cannot be put forward, and that the finding is not supported by the evidence and should not have been arrived at, having regard to the issues tried by the Second Class Subordinate Judge. It was also urged that the fields were not free from the mortgage-debt.

On the first of these points we are of opinion that although s. 182 of the Land Revenue Code does prevent the plaintiffs from proving that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 purchased on behalf of defendant No. 1, it does not determine the subsequent position of the parties. The section is as follows:—

"The certificate shall state the name of the person declared at the time of sale to be the actual purchaser; and any suit brought in a civil Court against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of another person not the certified purchaser, though by agreement the name of the certified purchaser was used, shall be dismissed."

(1) 5 B. 73.

(2) 21 B. 424.
The section is very similar to the first clause of s. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code, but does not contain a proviso like the second clause. Hence it may be contended that the decisions under this section, which have been cited in Subha Bibi v. Hara Lal Das (1), are no guide to the construction of the section under consideration. It seems to us, however, that the same principles of equity which would make the first defendant a trustee for the mortgagors if he had bought in his own name (see Balkrishna v. Madhavrao (2)) would render defendants Nos. 2 and 3 trustees for them if subsequently to the sale they held the land on behalf of defendant No. 1, and would also make defendant No. 1 himself a trustee if subsequently to the sale the property came into his possession as beneficially entitled thereto owing to an agreement between him and the certified purchasers. The section apparently forbids the Court to entertain a suit against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the ground that they bought for defendant No. 1, but does not debar it from entertaining a suit against them on the ground that subsequently to the sale they were holding the land on behalf of defendant No. 1 or against No. 1 on the ground that he was himself really in possession through defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as his agents or tenants. If it were otherwise, it would be open to a mortgagee, who was bound to pay the revenue and had been entered in the revenue books as occupant, to perpetrate a fraud by allowing the occupancy to be sold for default of payment of assessment (of which sale the mortgagor might under the circumstances have no notice) and getting it bought in by his servant or friend, who might then either continue to hold it on behalf of the mortgagee or at once make it over to the mortgagee's possession. But the principle of equity is, that if subsequently to the valid transfer of an estate (whether by the sale in England of the legal estate without notice of an equitable incumbrance, or by the sale in this country of the occupancy to realize the paramount charge of land revenue) it again becomes vested in the person whose conscience is charged by the meditated fraud, the original equity attaches to it in his hands or in that of his agents. (See Krr on Frauds, p. 356; Story on Equity Jurisprudence, s 410; and Kennedy v. Daly (3)). This principle is clearly laid down in Balkrishna v. Madhavrao, in regard to which case it must be noted that Sir M. Westrop's allusion to the Land Revenue Code was made not with a view to limiting the applicability of the equitable principle to revenue sales prior to the enactment of the Code, but merely to show that his remarks about the paramount nature of the charge for land revenue, which had previously been determined on other grounds, would thereafter be governed by the express provisions of the Code.

We think, then, that the form of the 7th issue raised by the lower appellate Court was wrong. The real question was not whether the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had purchased at the revenue [276] sale for the defendants No. 1. Such an issue could not be raised in a suit against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 consistently with the provisions of s. 182 of the Land Revenue Code. The point for determination was whether at the time of the institution of this suit the defendant No. 1 was in possession through his agents, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, or the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were by agreement holding the land on his behalf. As this issue was not raised in either of the Courts in a distinct form which would bring to the minds of the parties exactly what they would have to prove, we think the fairest way will be to send it down for determination leaving it to the lower appellate Court after taking such further evidence as the parties may tender or it may call for to decide what is the reasonable inference to be drawn from the various circumstances that may be proved. It may be well to look at the receipt-books in order to ascertain by whose hand the land revenue has been paid, to find out why the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not appear at the previous hearings, and whether they are or are not connected in their dealings with defendant No. 1, and generally to make a full enquiry into the circumstances calculated to throw light on the case.

We think the lower Court was right in holding that no mortgage-debt remained due on these fields for the reasons which it has given. If defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are holding them on their own account, they are entitled to retain them. If they are holding them for defendant No. 1, or he is otherwise in possession, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover them.

We now send down the following issue:—"Whether at the time of the institution of this suit the defendant No. 1 was in possession of Nos. 303 and 305 or either of them through his agents, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, or otherwise, or whether defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were by agreement holding them on his account?"

The finding should be returned within three mouths.

With regard to Survey No. 304 we think the finding of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., was correct. Mr. Bele referred us to Erava v. Sidramapa (1), but that case does not support the contention that a judgment-debtor whose property [277] has at a Court sale been bought by the judgment-creditor without leave of the Court can sue within twelve years to set aside the sale and recover possession. It shows that when after the death of a judgment-debtor his property is sold without notice to the heirs, those heirs can sue within twelve years to recover it. But the reasoning cannot be applied by analogy to the present case. There the auction-purchaser was not a party to the suit. Here it is only on the ground of his being a party that the sale can be avoided. The case, therefore, clearly falls under s. 244, and no separate suit will lie. Section 294 provides expressly a remedy by application. See Chintamanrao v. Widadrai (2).

We, therefore, dismiss appeal No. 944 of 1895 with costs on the appellant.

where it is alleged that such a marriage is invalid, the onus lies upon the persons making such allegation, of proving that such marriage is prohibited by immemorial custom.

[Appeal from the decision of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Dharwar, confirming the decree of Rao Babadur Gangadhar V. Limaye, First Class Subordinate Judge.]

The plaintiff sued to obtain possession of his wife, the defendant. The parties were Lingayets and resided in Dharwar.

The defendant contended that she and the plaintiff belonged to different sects of the Lingayet caste and that there could be no lawful marriage between them.

[278] The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant was not the lawfully married wife of the plaintiff, the parties belonging to different sects of the Lingayet caste, and there being no evidence of any custom sanctioning such marriages. He also held that the claim was time-barred under arts. 34 and 35, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge summarily dismissed it, under s. 551 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Dhondu P. Kirloskar, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The parties are Lingayets who have been held to be Sudras—Gopal v. Hanmant (1); Basava v. Lingangavda (2). Marriages between different sections of the Sudra class are not invalid—Inderun v. Ramasawmy (3); Pandaiya Telaver v. Puli Telaver (4). In the present case the parties, no doubt, belong to different sects. The evidence shows that the plaintiff is a member of the Adivanjgar sect and the defendant a member of the Panchamsali sect. But the circumstance that they belong to different sects is not by itself sufficient to invalidate a marriage if it has taken place. The marriage having taken place, every presumption must be drawn in its favour, unless and until it is clearly shown that marriages among members of different sects are strictly prohibited. If the conscience of the caste does not revolt against such a marriage, it must be upheld—Patel Vandravan Jekison v. Patel Manital Chuntial (5).

Among Hindus marriage is a sanskar and if it once takes place, the doctrine of factum valet applies and nothing can undo it. Defendant admits the fact of marriage. She must, therefore, prove that it is invalid.

Daji A. Khare, for the respondent (defendant).—Both the lower Judges have found, on the evidence, that marriages cannot take place among members of the different sub-divisions of the Lingayet caste. That being so, the marriage alleged by the plaintiff is invalid—Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (6).

[279] Dhondu P. K. Kirloskar, in reply.—The decision relied on is not applicable, because in that case the parties belonged to different castes and not to two sub-sections of the same caste.

JUDGMENT.

HOSKING, J.—This action was instituted by Fakirgauda to obtain possession of his wife Gangi. The parties reside in the Dharwar District.
and are Lingayets. The lower Courts have both found that the parties are members of different sects of Lingayets, but neither Court has given in its judgment the names of the sects. From the evidence there can be no doubt that they found plaintiff to be a member of the Adibanjadiar sect, and defendant to be a member of the Panchamsali sect.

The Subordinate Judge framed, as the only issue on the merits of the case, the question whether defendant is the lawfully married wife of plaintiff. He held that, in the absence of evidence of custom sanctioning a marriage between persons of different castes of the Lingayets, such a marriage must be held to be invalid. The District Judge, who has dealt with the case rather summarily under s. 551 of the Civil Procedure Code, also appears to have placed on plaintiff the onus of proving that the marriage was valid.

It has been contended in this Court that the fact of marriage having been admitted, it must be presumed to be valid, and that it was for defendant to prove that the marriage was invalid. We are of opinion that both these contentions are correct.

The status of Lingayets as Sudras was determined by the judgment of this Court in Gopal v. Hanmant (1). In Upama Kuchain v. Bholaram Dhubi (2) the Calcutta High Court, after reviewing previous decisions on the question whether marriages between persons in different sections or sub-sections of the Sudra caste are valid (3) held that there is nothing in Hindu law prohibiting such marriages. In Basava v. Lingangauda (4) Mr. Justice Ranade says: The Lingayets are admittedly a heretical sect, and are not subject to Brahmin religious laws. The liberty of widow re-marriage [280] and even of wife re-marriage, has been allowed to this Lingayet community." The only authorities we have been able to consult as to the religion of the Lingayets are Steele on Hindu Castes and Campbell's Gazetteer of the Dharwar District. The former work throws no light on the point at issue in this suit. Mr. Campbell says that according to the Lingayets the practice of wearing the ling was introduced by Basav (A.D. 1100-1160), who reformed the Lingayet religion. Mr. Campbell lays down among the leading doctrines and rules of Basav's faith that as all ling wearers are equal, the Lingayet woman is as high as the Lingayet man, and that, therefore, she should not marry till she comes of age, and should have a voice in choosing her husband, and that as all ling wearers are equal, all caste distinctions cease. Mr. Campbell says that many of these rules are not observed, and he states that in Kolhapur neither eating together nor intermarriage is allowed among the different classes of Lingayets. A Jangam, that is, a Lingayet priest, may in Dharwar marry the daughter of a pure Lingayet, a Shilvant or Banjig. The customs of the Lingayets apparently vary in different districts.

Upon this authority we hold that according to the Lingayet religion, as well as according to Hindu law, marriages between members of different sects of the Lingayets are not illegal. and where it is alleged that such a marriage is invalid, the onus lies upon the persons making such allegation, of proving that such marriage is prohibited by immemorial custom.

The way in which plaintiff put forward his case, attempting, unsuccessfully, to prove that he and defendant are both Panchamsalis, weakens his contention that intermarriages are not prohibited, and one of his own witnesses, Lingangauda (Ex. 31), has directly asserted that marriages do not and cannot take place between Panchamsalis and Adibanjigars, but the cross-examination of defendant’s witnesses shows that the present contention was raised in the Court of first instance, and plaintiff is entitled to have the case tried on a proper issue, if the suit is not barred by limitation. The District Court has recorded no finding on that point. Should it be necessary to decide the issue as to prohibition by custom, the question being one of great importance to the Lingayat community in the Dharwar District, it is very desirable that there should be a thorough enquiry and that persons of standing in the community should be examined. We reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the case for a fresh decision. Costs to follow final decision.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

ABAJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BALA AND ANOTHER
(Original Defendants), Respondents. [8th July, 1896.]

Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 9—Offer by one party to be bound by oath of other party if taken in a certain form—Acceptance of the offer—Subsequent retraction of the offer—Administering of the oath discretionary with the Court.

The plaintiff offered, under s. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), to be bound by the oath of affirmation of the defendant in a prescribed form upon a certain point. The defendant accepted the offer and took the oath.

Held, that the plaintiff could not retract his offer to be bound by the oath.

SECOND appeal from the decision of S. Tagore, District Judge of Satara, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb K. H. Kirkina, Subordinate Judge of Khatav.

The plaintiff claimed as the adopted son of one Gopal (deceased) to recover certain property which he alleged was in the hands of his adoptive mother (defendant No. 2), who in collusion with her son-in-law (defendant No. 1) had wrongfully taken possession of it.

The defendants denied the plaintiff’s adoption.

At the hearing the plaintiff offered, under s. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), to be bound by the oath of the second defendant upon the point of his adoption if she took it before a certain idol in a certain form. She agreed to do so and the Court appointed a commissioner to administer the oath.

The plaintiff subsequently retracted his offer and applied that the case might be disposed of by the Court on its merits. The Judge, however, rejected his application, and the commissioner administered the oath to the second defendant as proposed originally by the plaintiff.

[282] The Subordinate Judge then decided the suit in defendants’ favour and rejected the claim.
On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that it was not competent for the plaintiff to revoke his offer under the circumstances of the case, and that the Subordinate Judge was fully justified in holding him bound by it after it had been accepted and acted upon.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

_Balaji A. Bhat_ for the appellant (plaintiff).—It is true that the Oaths Act (X of 1873) makes no provision for retracting such a proposal; still s. 12 of the Act provides that if a party refuses to make the oath, the Court may presume against him. A similar presumption may be drawn in the case of a person retracting the proposal. But the Act does not lay down that, if a man makes the proposal, he is finally bound by it and cannot afterwards retract. The provisions of the Act are not peremptory; they are merely permissive.

_Vasudeo R. Joglekar_ for the respondents (defendants).—The plaintiff could not retract, inasmuch as defendant No. 2 was ready and willing to take the oath proposed by him. The lower Courts were justified in not allowing him to retract, because the reasons assigned by him for doing so were frivolous and vexatious.

JUDGMENT.

_FARRAN, C.J._—The question in this case is, whether the Subordinate Judge rightly decided this suit upon the oath of the second defendant, that she had not adopted the plaintiff. The plaintiff offered, under s. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873, to be bound by the oath or affirmation upon that point of the second defendant, if she took it before a certain idol in a prescribed form. The second defendant agreed to take the oath before the idol in the prescribed manner, and subsequently did so in the presence of a commissioner appointed by the Court. The Court thereupon treated the oath of the second defendant as conclusive proof of the non-adoption of the plaintiff by the second defendant and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed on the ground that he had retracted his offer before the oath was taken by the second defendant, though [283] after she had agreed to take it, and that, therefore, he was not bound by the oath. The Act, however, makes no exception of the case in which a party who makes such an offer which his adversary accepts subsequently retracts it. What it does is to make the administering of the oath or the appointment of a commissioner to administer it discretionary with the Court. If a party after making such an offer satisfies the Court that he has good grounds for retracting it, the Court would probably exercise a wise discretion in refusing to administer the oath; but when (as in this case) the party puts forward frivolous reasons for his retraction, the Court is, we think, justified in administering the oath notwithstanding the retraction. We confirm the decree with costs.

_Decree confirmed._

APPELLATE CIVIL.
Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hosking.

KASHINATH KRISHAV JOSHI (Original Plaintiff No. 1), Appellant v. GANGABAI AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents.*

Municipality—District Municipal Acts (Bombay Act II of 1894) s. 48 t and (Bombay Act VI of 1873), s. 86 t—Purchase from mortgagee by Municipality—Suit by mortgagee to recover possession—Ejectment—Limitation—Notice.

A mortgagee (defendant No. 1) refused to give up part of the mortgaged land when the mortgage was paid off in 1891. He remained in possession and in 1896 he sold this land to the Municipality of Mahad (defendant No. 2). The mortgagee subsequently sued the Municipality and its vendor to recover possession. The Municipality contended that the suit was barred by limitation under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1894).

Held, that the suit was not barred by s. 48. That section does not apply to actions of ejectment brought against a Municipality. Such an action, brought to try the title to land is not an action for anything done or purporting to be done in pursuance of the Act.

Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) distinguished.

SECOND appeal from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana with appellate powers, reversing the decree of Rao Sahib A. V. Purohit, Subordinate Judge of Mahad.

Suit for possession of certain lands against Gangabai (defendant No. 1), and the Municipality of Mahad (defendant No. 2), the latter being in possession as purchaser from Gangabai.

* Second Appeal No. 872 of 1895.

(1) Section 48 of the District Municipal Act Amendment Act (Bombay Act II of 1894):

48. No action shall be commenced against any Municipality, or against any officer or servant of a Municipality, or any person acting under the orders of a Municipality, for anything done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance of this Act, or of the principal Act, without giving to such Municipality, officer, servant or person, one month’s previous notice in writing of the intended action and of the cause thereof, nor after three months from the date of the act complained of;

and in the case of any such action for damages, if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before the action was brought, the plaintiff shall not recover more than the amount so tendered and shall pay all costs incurred by the defendant after such tender.

(1) Section 86 of Bombay Act VI of 1873:

86. No action shall be brought against the Municipality, or any of their officers, or any person acting under their direction, for anything done or intended to be done under this Act, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing shall have been delivered or left at the office of the Municipality, or at the place of abode of the intended defendant, stating with reasonable particularity the cause of action, and the name and place of abode of the intended plaintiff;

and upon the trial of any such action the plaintiff shall not be permitted to go into evidence of any cause of action, except such as is stated in the notice so delivered, and unless such notice be proved, the Court shall find for the defendant; and every such action shall be commenced within three months next after the passing of the final order by the Municipality or officer having power to pass such order, and not afterwards.

And if any person to whom any such notice of action is given shall, before action is brought, tender sufficient amends to the plaintiff, such plaintiff shall not recover more than the amount so tendered, and shall pay all costs incurred by the defendant after such tender.

(1) 18 B. 19.
The plaintiff alleged that he had mortgaged the land in question with other land to the first defendant; that he paid off the mortgage on 27th July, 1881, and got back the rest of the property, but the portion now sued for remained in possession of the first defendant, who had built a shed on it and refused to give it up, and on the 8th May, 1888, sold it to the Municipality (defendant No. 2).

The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff’s claim.

[288] On appeal by the Municipality (defendant No. 2) the Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit on the ground that the Municipality had wrongfully taken and held possession of the land, and that under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1884) the suit should have been brought within three months of the act complained of. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"The plaintiff admitted in the plaint that the Municipality took wrongful possession of the property when it purchased the same from the defendant No. 1. In the plaint it is also admitted that the defendant No. 1 was also in wrongful possession. When the Municipality took wrongful possession of the property, the legal possession was with the plaintiffs. This being so, the plaintiff treated the Municipality as trespassers and sought to eject the Municipality. This act of taking wrongful possession was committed by the Municipality long after the amending Act of 1884 came into operation. Under s. 48 of that Act this suit should have been brought within three months of the trespass complained of. The decision in I. L. R., 18 Bom., 19, shows that the suit as against the appellant is barred by that section."

Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Ganesh K. Deshamukh, for the appellant (plaintiff No. 1).—The case Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) does not apply. That case applies only where the act done is in pursuance of the object of the District Municipal Act. That is not so here. Section 48 of the District Municipal Act is not applicable to ejectment suits. It relates to actions for money. Our contention is strengthened by the language of s. 86 of the old Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873). See also Sorabji Nassarvanji v. The Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay (2).

Daji A. Khare, for respondent No. 2 (defendant No. 2).—The plaintiff distinctly states that we had taken wrongful possession. Under the District Municipal Act, a Municipality has the right to possess property and to purchase property. Therefore the present suit is an action for an act done by us as a Municipality under the Act.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—This was a suit to recover possession of vacant land in the town of Mahad. The second defendant (the Municipality of Mahad) are in possession under a purchase from the [288] first defendant. The plaintiffs allege that they mortgaged the land in suit and other property to the first defendant, and that when they finally paid off the mortgage on the 27th July, 1881, and got back the rest of the mortgaged property, the land in question remained in possession of the first defendant, who had built a shed on it and refused to give it up. The first defendant being thus in possession sold it to the Municipality on the 8th May, 1888. The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiffs’ claim.

(1) 18 B, 19.
(2) 19 B. H.C.R. 250.
This decision was—without entering upon the merits—reversed by the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. R., at Thana, on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation under the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884. The learned Judge relied upon the decision in Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) in support of his judgment. That decision can be distinguished from the present on the ground that the facts in each of the cases are essentially different. There the Municipality pulled down certain huts and entered upon the land which the plaintiff claimed as his, thus dispossessing him. This dispossession may be said to have been "something done or purporting to have been done in pursuance of" the Act. In the present case the vendor of the Municipality had according to the plaintiffs' case entered upon the land lawfully, and continued in possession of it until be sold to the Municipality. If the plaintiffs' case be true, the defendant No. 1 could, of course, only assign to the Municipality such possessory right as he enjoyed and such right only the Municipality could purchase. The plaintiffs doubtless say that the possession of the defendant No. 1 was wrongful, and that the possession of the Municipality obtained from him was wrongful, but the facts as alleged by the plaintiffs are, as we have said, that the defendant No. 1 entered lawfully, and being in possession sold to the Municipality. The Municipality, therefore, committed no wrong in purchasing the land from the first defendant. They simply bought land with a defective title. The facts of the two cases as stated by the plaintiffs, respectively, are, therefore, by no means on the same or even on parallel lines. Here there has been no dispossession of the plaintiffs by the defendant, the Municipality.

We are thus led to consider whether the decision in Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (supra) was intended to extend beyond a state of facts similar to those in that case so as to embrace all actions of ejectment; and whether if not we ought so to extend it. When the judgment is carefully read it will be found that it in terms applies only to actions of ejectment in which the defendant is dispossessed by the Municipality. Omitting the reference to the section of the former Act the judgment is in these words: "A suit in ejectment * * * being an 'action for an act done'—(that act being the dispossession by defendant)—with a view to being restored to possession must be held to fall under the provisions of the first paragraph of the section (48) of the Act of 1884." That passage plainly does not expressly embrace nor do we think that by implication it necessarily embraces, actions in ejectment in which the plaintiff does not complain of being dispossessed by the Municipality, and having regard to its extremely guarded language we are not disposed to think that it was intended to extend beyond the actual case which the learned Chief Justice was dealing with. That being so we are at liberty, we think, to consider the broader facts before us and see whether they bring the present case within the purview of the section. Are actions in ejectment generally governed by its provisions?

The language of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 differs so widely from that of s. 46 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 that no inference as to the intention of the Legislature can be drawn from the change of expressions contained in the later section. The Legislature departing from the technical language of the earlier section copied from English statutes has used in its stead simpler and more popular language. The concluding paragraph of s. 86 of the earlier Act would appear to have limited its application to actions for damages. The concluding paragraph of s. 48 of the later Act evidently has not that operation. It shows, on the contrary, that the earlier paragraph of the section embraces other actions than actions for damages; but as besides actions of ejectment there are various other actions which can be brought against a Municipality which do not sound in damages, e.g., the familiar one to recover money illegally demanded and [288] paid under protest, this consideration does not bring us any nearer to an answer to the question whether actions of ejectment are within the scope of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884.

It appears to us that it would be a straining of language to say that an ordinary action of ejectment against a Municipality to try the title to land is an action for anything done or purporting to be done in pursuance of the Act. What in such an action is the act done or purporting to be done in pursuance of the Act? Suppose the case in which the Municipality comes in under a title at the time valid, but which subsequently fails, as when it purchases from a tenant for life and the remainderman after his death sues for its recovery. How does the remainderman sue for an act done by the Municipality? He sues for his land. The Municipality defend, not because they have acted or purported to act under the Act, but because they allege that the land is their land. Whom in such a case is the act complained of done? The cause of action of the plaintiff dates from the death of the tenant for life, but at that time the Municipality has done nothing either in pursuance of the Act or otherwise. Is then the act complained of the refusal of the Municipality to restore the land to the plaintiff when he demands it? If it is, the answer is:—That is not an act done in pursuance of the Act. The Act does not enable or purport to enable the Municipality to keep land which does not belong to them.

These and other considerations of weightier import in addition to the technical arguments founded upon the exact language of the concluding paragraph of the section led the Court in Sorabji Nassarvanji v. The Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay (1) to come to the conclusion that an action in ejectment did not fall within the scope of the section with which they were dealing. A similar conclusion was arrived at by the Judges in the Queen's Bench Division in England in Foat v. The Mayor, et al., of Margate (2). "This," says Watkin Williams, J., speaking of an action of ejectment, "is not an action of tort or for anything done under the provisions of the Act." And Mathew, J., at the close of his judgment adds: "An action for the recovery of land is something [389] wholly different." The decisions upon the section of the earlier and differently worded statutes did not depend solely upon the argument based upon the concluding paragraph as to making amends, but upon the broader ground that an action of ejectment was not an action for anything done or intended to be done under the Act. They are, we think, still valuable as guides to the interpretation of the present Act.

For these reasons we reverse the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, A.P., and remand the case for retrial of the appeal upon the merits. Costs, costs in the cause.

Dee re versed and case remanded.

Municipality—Ejectment suit against Municipality—Notice of action—Bombay District Municipal Act (II of 1884), s. 48—Notice.

The plaintiff was the inamdar of the village of Dakor. He filed an ejectment suit against the Municipality of Dakor, alleging that the Municipality had illegally and wrongfully encroached upon a portion of the Gomti Lake at Dakor by laying the foundations of a building which they intended to erect for the purpose of a dharmshala.

The Municipality pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was bad for want of notice of action under s. 48 of the Bombay District Municipal Act II of 1884.

Held (by a majority of the Full Bench) that the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 do not apply to actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality.

Per Parsons, J.—The provisions of s. 48 apply only to actions for the possession of land whereof the plaintiff has been dispossessed by the Municipality acting or purporting to act under some section of the Municipal Act, which empowers them to take possession of, or oust any one from, that land.

Per Ranade, J.—Section 48 does not generally apply to suits for the possession of land, except in those cases where the claim arises on account of some act or omission of the Municipality when it acts in pursuance of its statutory powers, and encroaches upon private rights.

Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) overruled.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeals Nos. 198 and 209 of 1893.

The plaintiff, who was the inamdar of the village of Dakor, and hereditary trustee of the temple of Shri Ranchooddri, sued the Municipality of Dakor to recover possession of Survey No. 1588 and part of Survey No. 1584 situated in the village of Dakor.

Survey No. 1588 is the Bet or island in the Gomti Lake at Dakor. Survey No. 1544 comprises the lake and some land adjoining it.

The plaintiff alleged that the Bet had been in the occupation of certain Bawas under a revocable permission or licence from his ancestors, and that the Municipality of Dakor had recently purchased it from the Bawas, and taken possession of it without his authority or consent.

As to the portion of the Gomti Lake which was included in the present suit, the plaintiff alleged that the Municipality had illegally and wrongfully encroached on the same by laying the foundations of a building which they intended to erect for the purpose of a dharmshala.

The plaintiff in this suit sought to have the encroachment removed, and to recover possession of the Bet and part of the lake in dispute. Before filing the suit he gave notice to the Municipality, under s. 48 of

Bombay Act II of 1884, of his intention to sue them for the recovery of the Bet, but made no reference to the lake.

Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit in toto, holding that the plaintiff's claim to the Bet was time-barred by reason of adverse possession on the part of the Bawas for over fifty years, and that the suit, so far as it related to the lake, was bad for want of notice under s. 48 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1884).

Against this decision plaintiff preferred a second appeal (No. 16 of 1896) to the High Court.

This appeal, as well as appeal No. 207 of 1896 which involved the same points, were heard at first by a Division Bench (Farran, C.J., and Hosking, J.), who referred the following question to a Full Bench:

"Whether the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 apply to all or any actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality."

The order of reference was in the following terms:

"As to that portion of the lake which the defendants, the Municipality of Dakor, have encroached upon, the District Judge has held that the suit is not maintainable, as due notice of it had not been given under s. 48 of the Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1884). In support of that view he has relied on Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1), the circumstances of which are indistinguishable from those of the present case. The correctness of that decision has been questioned with much force before us by counsel for the appellant. In Kashinath v. Gangabai (2) we have held that s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 does not apply to all actions of ejectment, and the reasoning in the judgment goes, we think, far to show that it does not apply to any. The subject is one of great importance, and we think it advisable to refer to a Full Bench the question—Whether the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 apply to all or any actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality?"

The reference was argued before Farran, C.J., Parsons, Ranade, Strachey and Hosking, JJ.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the appellant in appeal No. 16 of 1896.

C. H. Setaiwall, for the appellant in appeal No. 207 of 1896.

Rao Sahib Vasudev J. Kirtikar, for respondents in appeals Nos. 16 and 207 of 1896.

Setaiwall (for the appellant).—The question turns on the construction of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884. The corresponding section of the old Act (VI of 1873) has been held not to apply to actions in ejectment—Sorabji Nassarvanji v. The Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay (3); Joharji v. The Municipality of Ahmednagar (4); so, too, a similar construction has been put on s. 87 of Bengal Act III of 1864 by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court—Chunder Sikhar v. Obhoy Churn (5). To the same effect is the ruling of the Madras High Court under s. 156 of Madras Act V of 1884—President of the Taluka Board, Sivaganga v. Narayanann (6) and Mayandai v. McQuhae (7). The English decisions on s. 264 of the Public Health Act of 1875 also lay down that notice is only necessary in the case of actions for compensation or damages for wrongful acts on the part of Municipal or Local Boards. The section does not apply to actions of ejectment—Foot v. Mayor, &c., of Margate (8). An action of ejectment cannot be said to be an action for anything done or purporting to be done in pursuance of the Act. It is not alleged or pretended that the encroachment complained of was authorized by any section of the Act. That being so, no notice is necessary under s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884. No doubt the decision of this Court in Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) is opposed to my contention. That decision is based on the ground that there is a change in the language of s. 48 of the Amending Act. But the change in the wording of s. 48 does not make it applicable to actions of ejection. The general scope and intention of the Act must be taken into consideration, and not merely the language of a particular section. Take the case of a minor or of a person who has gone abroad. Suppose that the Municipality were to take wrongful possession of his land without his knowledge and consent. Is he to lose his land altogether if he does not sue the Municipality within three months from the date of his dispossession, though he has full twelve years under the [293] general Limitation Act to bring an ejectment suit against a trespasser? The Legislature could not have intended to inflict such a hardship on private individuals in favour of municipal bodies. The decisions under the old Act must have been present to the mind of the Legislature, and if it had been the intention of the Legislature to change the existing law as settled by those decisions, it would have done so in clear and express terms. I submit, therefore, that the Legislature has not made any change in the law and that s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 has no application to ejectment suits.

Rao Sahib Vasudev J. Kirtikar, for the respondents.—The defence of the Municipality in this case is that the Gomti Lake is public property and, as such, vested in the Municipality under s. 17 of the District Municipal Act. If the Municipality took possession of any portion of the lake, it did so under the authority vested in it by law. The alleged dispossession was an act done in pursuance of the Act. The suit is, therefore, bad for want of notice. The language of s. 48 of the Amending Act differs materially from that of s. 86 of the old Act. Section 86 of the old Act contemplates actions for damages only, and so does s. 87 of Bengal Act III of 1864 and s. 156 of Madras Act V of 1884. But under s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 "no action"—that is, no action of any sort or description whatever—can be instituted against a Municipality without giving one month's previous notice. The language of this section is clear and wide enough to include ejectment suits. The application of this section to ejectment suits may work hardship in certain cases, but that is not a valid reason for excluding such suits from the operation of this section. Whatever hardship a legislative enactment may entail, if the language of the enactment is clear, it must be given effect to—Maxwell on Statutes, p. 4; Hill v. East and West India Dock Company (2); Rhodes v. Smethurst (3). It has been held in England that under the corresponding s. 264 of the Public Health Act notice of action is necessary—Midland Railway Company v. Withington Local Board (4). Having regard, then, to s. 86 of the old Act, having regard to the [294] change in the language of s. 48 of the Amending Act, and having regard to the English and Indian decisions passed under similar enactments, I contend that s. 48 does apply to actions of ejection.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—In the principal case out of which this reference arises, the Municipality of Dakor believing (it may be assumed) that the Gomti Lake was vested in them under the provisions of s. 17 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, proceeded under the powers conferred upon them by s. 24, cl. 15, of that enactment to lay the foundations of a building (a dharmsala) in the bed of the lake. In the subordinate case the Municipality took possession of land forming portion of Survey No. 1584 (by placing mud and refuse upon it), believing (it may be assumed) that it was vested in them as part of the Gomti Lake, and refused to acknowledge the plaintiff's title to it or to restore it to him. In each case the plaintiff claims the land so taken possession of by the Municipality as his own. For the purposes of this reference we must assume that each plaintiff is entitled to the land which he seeks to recover from the Municipality. The question to be determined is whether before bringing such a suit the plaintiff is bound to give to the Municipality the notice required by s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884, and whether (which is of more importance) the plaintiff loses his right to sue for his land after three months from the date of the Municipality so taking possession of it unless he files a suit for its recovery within that period.

My answer to the question so raised is in the negative upon the broad ground that an action in ejectment, or, in other words, a suit for the possession of land is not "an action for anything done or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the Act." I adopt this broad ground, because I cannot help thinking that what the Municipality have actually done in each of the present cases they have done under the belief that they were acting in pursuance of the Act, and that it would be narrowing the scope and effect of the section too much to say that the act of taking possession of the land in the above manner was not an act purporting to be done by them in pursuance of the Act, although no section of it specifically authorises them to build foundations in, or to throw earth or rubbish on, the land of another. [296] The object of the present section (48), as it was of the earlier and differently worded sections, appears to me to be to shorten the time within which pecuniary claims for compensation for wrongful acts done by the Municipality or their officers in carrying out the provisions of the Act can be brought, and to give the defendants timely notice of such actions to enable them to consider their position and to tender amends in cases of actions for damages in proper cases. In actions not sounding in damages, such as actions for money had and received, where the tort was waived, Municipalities in common with all defendants always had without express statutory authority the power to avoid an action by payment of the amount actually due. It was only necessary, therefore, to provide expressly for actions for damages. I think, therefore, that a suit against the Municipality to recover damages for either of the acts which the Municipality have done in these cases would be barred after three months from their committal, and that the Municipality would have been entitled to timely notice before they could have been sued in respect of such acts. I am unable, however, to hold that an action in which a plaintiff without suing for damages claims to recover possession of his own land is within either the scope or the spirit of the words of the section. Under the various analogous sections in former Acts it was uniformly held that their provisions did not apply to actions of ejectment. The wording of such sections was different in some respects from that of s. 48, but the language, which described the nature of the action which it was sought to cover, is almost the same in all of them as in the latter section. In 38 and 39 Vict., c. 55, s. 264, it was:—"A writ or process shall not be sued out  for anything done or intended to be done or omitted to be done under the provisions of this Act." In the repealed section, Bombay Act VI of 1873, s. 86, it was:—"No action shall be brought * * * for anything done or intended to be done under this Act." In Bombay Act II of 1865, s. 240, the wording was:—"No writ or process shall be issued * * * for anything done or intended to be done under the powers of this Act;" and in Bombay Act III of 1872, s. 287, the language was the same. Similar language was also employed in Bengal Act III of 1864, s. 87, and in Madras Act V of 1884, s. 156. If that [296] language did not in these sections embrace actions in ejectment, (and as I have said it was invariably held that it did not)—Foot v. The Mayor, &c., of Margate (1); Sorabji Nassarvanji v. The Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay (2); Joharval v. The Municipality of Ahmednagar (3); Chunder Sikhar Babu v. Obhoy Churn Bagchi (4); and President of the Taluk Board, Sivaganga v. Narayanan (5)—it would be strange if the Legislature had intended to alter the law in this respect that it should have continued to employ the same language and left the expression of their change of intention to depend upon an inference deducible from an ambiguous provision at the close of the section.

It must in this connection be borne in mind that the language of the former section embraced not only actions sounding in damages, but was applicable to all claims of a pecuniary character arising out of the acts of municipal bodies who might have committed illegali ties not justified by their powers.—Ranchhod Varajbhai v. The Municipality of Dakor (6); Midland Railway Co. v. Withington Local Board (7). If this be so, the inference arising from the Legislature having apparently considered that actions other than actions sounding in damages came within the scope of the section, lends no colour to the argument that they intended it to cover actions for the possession of land and to alter what had so long been considered to be the law upon this subject. The reasons which induced the Courts to adopt that view of the law are so well set out in the judgment in Sorabji Nassarvanji v. The Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay (2) that it is unnecessary for me to repeat them in my own language. They are, I think, as cogent now as they were then.

Passing, however, from such considerations as these, which are only permissible if the language of the section is ambiguous, and reading the section (46) as a whole, I am of opinion that upon the natural construction of its language it does not include actions in ejectment. I do not think that an action for the possession of land can be said to be an action for anything done or purporting [297] to have been done in pursuance of the Act. An action of ejectment is based on title, and has no reference, except for limitation purposes, to the time when, or the means by which, the defendants obtained possession of the land sued for. The right of the plaintiff to sue is complete when he can show that the defendant is in possession of land belonging to him. He need not go further and allege the means by which the defendant acquired it. Whether these means were lawful or unlawful, is quite immaterial (so long as they do not convey title) in so far as the plaintiff's right to sue is concerned. If this is the correct mode of viewing the nature of an action of ejectment, and I think that it is, I fail to see how such an action can be said to be an action for something done in pursuance of the Act when a Municipality is the defendant, and for that reason I consider that it does not fall within the wording of the section. It is on this point that I reluctantly differ from the judgment of our late Chief Justice in Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1). That learned Judge treated the dispossession of the plaintiff by the Municipality as his cause of action. I have, I think, shown that it is the possession of the defendant without title of the plaintiff’s land which gives the plaintiff the right to sue.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the case of Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) was not correctly decided and that our answer to the reference should be that the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 do not apply to actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality.

PARSONS, J.—The point referred for our determination is "Whether the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 apply to all or any actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality?"

It may, I think, be assumed that the change of language in the new s. 48 shows that it was contemplated that there might be actions other than for damages to which the section should be applicable. I see no reason for excluding from those actions suits for the possession of land, but then the restrictive words of the section itself must be also applied to the suits, that is to say, the [298] suits must be "for anything done or purporting to have been done in pursuance of this Act or of the principal Act." The learned Chief Justice in Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) says; "A suit for ejectment being an action for an act done," that act being the dispossession by the defendant with a view to being restored to possession, must be held to fall under the provisions of the first paragraph of the section." This is, in my opinion, too wide a statement, inasmuch as it takes no account of the restrictive words I have mentioned. If to the words "dispossession by the defendant" the words "by an act done or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the Municipal Acts" are added, then, I think, the statement would be a correct exposition of the law. There are, for instance, sections of the Act which give a Municipality power to remove what it considers to be obstructions or encroachments. If a suit were brought against it for possession of the land it may have taken possession of when putting in force the provisions of those sections, it could justly plead in such a suit that its action was done or purported to be done in pursuance of the Act. Where, however, as in the present case, there is no action or assumption of action under any section of the Act, but the Municipality have taken possession of land claiming it as its own property, s. 48 cannot, in my opinion, be held applicable.

In a case lately tried by Mr. Justice Ranade and myself—Kapasi Mulchand v. The Virangaum Municipality (2)—the action was brought to obtain possession of land which the Municipality had sold to the plaintiff. To such an action s. 48 clearly would not apply. In the case of Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) the section would not apply, the Municipality having removed the hut under any power given to them by any provision of the Act, but on the general right of an owner of land to take possession of that land and oust trespassers therefrom.

For the same reason in the present case also the section would not apply. Section 24 of the Act, while it gives a Municipality power to make provision out of the municipal property and funds for the cost of certain improvements, neither gives nor purports to give it power to take possession of the land of a private individual.

[299] I answer the question in this way, viz., that the provisions of s. 48 apply only to actions for the possession of land whereof the plaintiff has been dispossessed by the Municipality acting or purporting to act under some section of the Municipal Act which empowers them to take possession of, or oust any one from, that land.

Rana J.—The question referred to us is "whether the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 apply to all or any actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality." Section 48 has taken the place of old s. 86 of Bombay Act VI of 1873, in respect of which it was held in Joharnal v. The Municipality of Ahmednagar (1), that it did not apply to ejectment suits. There was a similar ruling on the corresponding s. 240 of Bombay Act II of 1865—Sorabji Nassarvanji v. The Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay (2). In Chunder Sundar Dutt v. Obhoy Churn Bagchi (3), a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court ruled that the corresponding s. 87 of Bengal Act III of 1864 did not apply to a suit for the possession of land, which was brought by a plaintiff dispossessed by the Municipality of Santipur. See also Poorno Chander v. Mr. H. Balfour (4), where Phear, J., differed from Bayley, J., in his interpretation of this section. In The Municipal Committee of Morabad v. Chatri Singh (5), the Allahabad High Court ruled that s. 43 of Act XV of 1873 did not govern a suit for possession of land which was brought by a private person, who claimed a certain highway marked out by the Municipality of Morabad to be his private property. These rulings were expressly based on the English decisions on the corresponding s. 264 of the Public Health Act of 1875, which confused the section about one month's notice and the limitation of three months to claims for compensation and damages for wrongful acts or omissions of municipal and local corporations—Foot v. The Mayor, &c., of Margate (6). Actions based on contracts, and claims in the nature of ejectment, have been accordingly held not to fall within the scope of this section—Mayandi v. McQuhae (7)—or of [300] a provision based on the same lines in s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code—Shakebzaadee Shahnunshah Begum v. Ferguson (8).

The next question for consideration is whether the new s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 has effected any change in the law as settled by these rulings of all the High Courts on the corresponding section of the old enactments. It may be noted that even the old s. 86 of Act VI of 1873 was construed in Ranchhd v. The Municipality of Dakor (9) as being wide enough to govern not only claims for damages, but also claims for refund of money illegally levied. Sir Charles Sargent observed in that case that "in our opinion the section is applicable to every claim of a pecuniary character" made against a Municipality in the exercise of its powers. The same learned Judge, when he had occasion to decide a case under the new enactment, arrived at the conclusion that the change in the wording and arrangement of the new section justified the conclusion that s. 48 was applicable to a case where the plaintiff sued for the possession of land, as well as for damages in respect of the defendant's wrongful act in having pulled down his huts and built new huts—Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (10). Sir C. Sargent held in this case that a claim of ejection

(9) 8 B. 421. (10) 18 B. 19.
fell within the more general words of the first paragraph of the new section, which were not controlled by the more limited scope of the second paragraph. This ruling was noticed in a later decision of this Court—
Kashinath v. Gangabai (1)—and distinguished on the ground that, in the former case, there was an express act of dispossessing represented by the pulling down of plaintiff's huts. It was accordingly held that where there was no such dispossessing in the exercise of its powers, and the Municipality came into possession under a private right, the ejectment suit had no reference to any act or omission of the Municipality, and s. 48, therefore, had no application.

Such being the state of the authorities, it appears to me that the conflict between them is only apparent, and that they may all be reconciled, and the intentions of the Legislature carried out by holding that where the claim for possession of land is founded on a cause of action which has no reference to "anything done or purporting [301] to be done in pursuance of the Act" by the Municipality or its officers, the condition about previous notice, and the three months' period of limitation, have no place; but when dispossessing has resulted from a direct act or omission committed by or under the orders of the Municipality or its officers, then no suit should lie unless the conditions of s. 48 are properly complied with. The Legislature apparently did intend to enlarge considerably the scope of the old section, but it does not follow from this that the words of the section should be so far strained as to embrace all classes of suits for the possession of land. Claims based on contract can never be included under this section for the simple reason that they are not claims "for anything done or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the Act." Claims for the specific performance of a contract to sell or lease land will not, therefore, fall within the section. Where the claim of the Municipality is based on a private right, the plaintiff who may be injured by the exercise of that right, can sue without giving previous notice just as he might sue any other individual. Where any private person is dispossessed by the orders of the Municipality, if he sues for damages in respect of the trespass, s. 48 will of course apply. But if he sues to recover possession of the land, the application of the section will depend upon the fact whether the dispossessing was the result of any act of the Municipality done by it in the exercise of its statutory powers. In that case, s. 48 will govern the case as laid down in Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (2). If it had no such connection, and the Municipality claimed under a private title, then no notice would be necessary—Kashinath v. Gangabai (1). In other words, the true test is not so much the nature of the suit or of the subject-matter, but whether the cause of action was or was not connected with the exercise of the statutory powers conferred on the Municipality.

This was the principle followed in Ranchhod v. The Municipality of Dakor (3) even when the old Act was in force, and it was also the principle of the decision in Selmes v. Judge (4), where a refund of tolls illegally levied was claimed, and it was held that the section applied not only to cases where compensation was sought for [302] wrongful acts, but also where relief was sought in respect of anything done or purported to be done in the exercise of the powers conferred by the Act.

This is the only way of giving effect to the intentions of the Legislature in enlarging the scope of the old law, without at the same time overstraining the received import of the words used. I am not, therefore, prepared to hold that the case of Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) was wrongly decided. I would rather distinguish it in the way it was distinguished by the learned Judges who decided the case of Kaskanath v. Gamanabai (2). My answer to the question is thus that s. 48 does not generally apply to suits for the possession of land except in those cases where the claim arises on account of some act or omission ordered by the Municipality in the exercise of its statutory powers.

Strachey, J.—I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Chief Justice, and with his reasons.

Hosking, J.—In my opinion the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 do not, as a general rule, apply to actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality.

Section 48 makes notice compulsory before the institution of any action "for anything done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance" of Bombay Act II of 1884 or Bombay Act VI of 1873.

Where such notice is required by a statute, the rule as to the actions for which notice is necessary is thus laid down by Pollock, C. B., in Hardwick v. Moss (3): "If the act is done by a public officer in his capacity of public officer, with reasonable ground for believing that he was authorized by the statute to do it, he is entitled to notice of action."

On examination of Bombay Acts VI of 1873 and II of 1884, I find that under s. 28 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 the Municipality is empowered to purchase land; that under certain circumstances by virtue of s. 30 land under houses, which have projected on the street, becomes part of the public street, [303] and s. 25 provides for the acquisition of land by Government for the Municipality under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894; but apart from the provisions of ss. 25 and 30, I do not find any section of the Act empowering the Municipality either to take possession or to retain possession of land owned by another person without the owner’s consent, and it appears to me that, if the Municipality thus either takes or retains possession, it cannot be said to have reasonable ground for believing that it was authorized by the District Municipal Act to do so. In such a case in deciding the question whether notice is necessary it must be assumed, as Sir Michael Westropp said in Surabji Nassarvanji v. The Justices of the Peace for the City of Bombay (4), "that the plaintiff truly alleges the property to be his and to be wrongfully in the possession of the defendant." In the appeals in which this reference has been made it is contended by the Government Pleader that the Municipality was in good faith carrying out works of utility on land which it believed had vested in it—ss. 17 and 24 of Bombay Act VI of 1873. This would be a good defence if the plaintiff demanded damages for the occupation of his land or on account of the works carried out; here there is no such claim, and if there were such a claim, it could be separated from the claim to possession of the land. As regards the land, the claim is simply for possession on the ground that defendant wrongfully retains possession. No doubt carrying out works of utility on plaintiff’s land is at first sight the cause of his bringing his action, but his real cause of action as to possession of the land is the refusal of the Municipality to restore to him possession of his land. A suit for the removal of any work done by the Municipality or for damages might fail to that extent for want of notice; but apart from ss. 25 and 36, the Municipality cannot show any authority for retaining possession of land without the owner's consent.

For these reasons I am unable to agree with the learned Judges who decided Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1) that a suit in ejectment falls under the provisions of the first paragraph of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884.

[304] PER CURIAM.—The answer to the Division Bench will be in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Full Bench that the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 do not apply to actions for the possession of land brought against a Municipality.

Marshalling of securities—Apportionment—Mortgage—Subsequent mortgage to another person of part of the mortgaged property—Notice to puisne incumbrancer—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1889).

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 mortgaged three properties, viz., A, B and C, to the plaintiff and afterwards mortgaged one of them (A) only to one Pranjivan. Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a money decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in respect of another debt, and in execution attached and sold their equity of redemption in C and purchased it himself, thus becoming full owner of C, which he then sold to another person for Rs. 100.

Pranjivan sued on his mortgage and obtained a decree, and in execution property A was sold to defendant No. 3. Subsequently the plaintiff sued to recover his debt by the sale of properties A and B only. Defendant No. 3 claimed that the securities should be marshalled and that the debt should be apportioned, and that property C should bear its proportion of the debt.

Heid, that the third defendant was entitled to have the debt apportioned, and that property C should bear its proportion of the debt. When the plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption in C he purchased it subject to its due proportion of the mortgage debt due to himself. On his purchase the debt to that extent ceased to exist, and the debt due to him on his mortgage was reduced by that amount. The proportion of the debt thus wiped out depended on the proportion of the value of property C to the rest of the mortgaged property.

Heid, also, that the third defendant had a right to have the securities marshalled. That right extends to a purchaser and is not confined to a puisne incumbrancer.

[305] Rodh Mal v. Ram Harakh (2) followed.

Heid, also, that the fact that the third defendant had notice of the plaintiff's mortgage did not affect his right to have the securities marshalled. The question of notice was immaterial prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1889).

Chumilal v. Pulichand (3) followed.

APPEAL under s. 15 of the Amended Letters Patent from the decision of a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.) in second appeal No. 187 of 1895 confirming the decree of F. C. O. Beaman, District Judge of Thana.

Suit by the plaintiff (mortgagee) to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property.

On 14th January, 1870, defendants mortgaged certain land and a house to the plaintiff.

Subsequently they mortgaged the same property with the exception of the house and a plot of land (Survey No. 122) to one Pranjivan.

The plaintiff some time afterwards obtained a money decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for another debt, and attached and sold the house in execution, and at the auction sale he himself became the purchaser, thus adding the equity of redemption to the interest already held by him as mortgagee and becoming absolute owner of the house. He subsequently sold the house to one Francis for Rs. 100.

Pranjivan obtained a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 upon his mortgage, and in execution sold the property which had been mortgaged to him to the third defendant, who thus became owner subject to the previous mortgage to the plaintiff.

In 1892 the plaintiff brought this suit upon his mortgage of 1870 claiming to recover the sum of Rs. 90 by the sale of the mortgaged property exclusive of the house.

The third defendant claimed that the securities should be marshalled and the debt apportioned, contending that the house should bear its proportion of the debt and that the other property should be relieved pro tanto.

[306] The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had realized Rs. 100 by the sale of the house, and that, therefore, nothing was due to him.

The plaintiff appealed.

The Judge found that the first Court was wrong in appropriating the value of the house to the discharge of the amount claimed, and that defendant No. 3 was not entitled to insist upon the properties or funds being marshalled and plaintiff's lien being first satisfied on the house and Survey No. 122, sub No. 6. His decision was as follows:—

I must reverse the decree of the Court below and find for the plaintiff, the decree being that he is entitled to recover ninety rupees from the property mortgaged to him by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and cost throughout in that proportion from defendant No. 3.

Defendant No. 3 preferred a second appeal, which came on for hearing before a Division Bench composed of Jardine and Ranade, JJ., who differed as to the application of the doctrine of marshalling in the present case. They delivered the following judgments:—

JARDINE, J.—On the 14th January, 1870, by a deed in the form of sale, but which is found to be a mortgage, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 mortgaged to the plaintiff certain property. Soon after they mortgaged the same, with the exception of a house and of sub No. 6, to Pranjivan.

Then the plaintiff in execution of a money-decree against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 got the house put up for sale and bought it himself. The plaintiff then sold the house to Francis, who is not on the record, but who is, as the pleader for the appellant states, the present owner of the equity of redemption of the house.
The pleader says that the equity of redemption of sub No. 6 is presently owned by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are in possession of this sub-number.

The pusine mortgagee, Pranjivan, of the property with the exception of the house and sub No. 6 got a mortgage-decreed against the property included in his mortgage, which was bought by the defendant No. 3, now appellant, who thus became and is the owner of the equity of redemption of that property.

[307] As the defendant No. 3 has not sought, in the Courts below, to make Francis a party, I do not think he is entitled to have the claim of the plaintiff apportioned on the house. Equity will not interfere to the injury of a third party, which implies that the third party shall be a party in the suit.

The plaintiff’s mortgage was registered, and this was notice to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees—Dundaya v. Chanbasapa (1). The case of Rodh Mal v. Ram Harakh (2), where marshalling was directed, is a case where the purchaser was without notice. The case cited by the District Judge, Rama Raju v. Subbarayudu (3), is like the present. In the present state of the authorities I am not prepared to say the decision was wrong.

RANADK, J.—The only point urged by the appellant’s pleader relates to the question whether the equitable doctrine of marshalling was or was not applicable to the circumstances of this case. Though the deed in the respondent’s (original plaintiff’s) name is in form a deed of sale, it has been all along treated by both parties as a mortgage. This deed was executed on 14th January, 1870, by the deceased defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and it charged the debt of Rs. 100 on one house, three varkas and eight kharif lands. The house was subsequently sold in execution of the respondent’s decree, and after having bought it himself in 1876, respondent sold the same to one Francis for Rs. 100 in February, 1890. This Francis has not been made a party to this suit, but his tenants, who live in the house, were joined as defendants Nos. 4, 5.

As regards the lands all the properties except Survey No. 122, pot No. 6, were sold in execution of a mortgage decree by another creditor of deceased defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and in the sale that took place, defendant No. 3 bought these lands, and obtained possession the same in November, 1883. It is this defendant No. 3 who is appellant before us, and his contention is that the respondent should be required to proceed first against the house and land, Survey No. 122, pot No. 6, before he attempted to recover the sum decreed by the sale of the lands in appellant’s possession. The District Judge held that the question of marshalling did not arise in the circumstances of this case. He was opinion that if the mortgagors had mortgaged all the properties first to the respondent, and then a part of the property to the appellant, the equity marshalling the securities could properly be considered, but that the equity did not arise when the conflict was between a mortgagee and a subsequent purchaser, who buys property subject to prior incumbrances.

I feel satisfied, on a careful consideration of the arguments on both sides, that the District Judge was in error in holding that the doctrine of marshalling did not apply to circumstances of the present case. Though speaking generally, the occasions for enforcing the equity arise chiefly as between prior and pusine incumbrancer, still the relief is not confined to

(1) P. J. (1883), p. 3. (2) 7 A. 711. (3) 5 M. 387. that class of cases only. Ordinary sureties are, for instance, entitled to the right of marshalling. A vendor of goods may compel the endorsee from vendor to submit to this equity under certain circumstances. (Fisher on Mortgage, Vol. 2, para. 1366, p. 763.) The doctrine has ever been applied as between mortgagor and mortgagee when the latter's security is limited to one part of an estate, and the whole is charged with the liability to pay off legacies and debts. (Fisher, Vol. 2, para. 1370.) The late Mr. Justice Telang noticed in his judgment in Chumilal v. Futchand (1) that the doctrine has been frequently applied with beneficial effect in partition suits in this country.

The District Judge's view is no doubt supported to some extent by the rulings in Kristodass v. Ramkant Roy (3), Lala Dilawar v. Dewan Bolokiram (3) Khetosee Chercoria v. Banee Madhup (4) and the decisions of the Madras High Court in Timmappa v. Lakshmanama (5) and Rama Raju v. Subbarayudu (6). These cases were, however, fully considered by Jardine and Telang, JJ., in the case above quoted, and as these Judges differed in their views, the point was referred to a third Judge (Bayley, J.), who agreed with the view of Mr. Justice Telang. In this particular case, the question was between two mortgagees. But, as remarked [309] in Rooh Mai v. Ram Harakh (7) the equities which apply to a puisne incumbrancer in the marshalling of securities apply also in favour of a bona fide purchaser of value without notice of a portion of the property, the whole of which was subject to a prior mortgage, Mr. Justice Mahmood, who decided the case, referred to some earlier cases—Tulsee Ram v. Munnoo Lal (8), Now Koer v. Abdul Rahim (9), Bishonath v. Kisto Mohun (10)—in one of which the Court held that though the purchaser took the estate subject to a prior mortgage, yet the mode in which the mortgagor had dealt with the property entitled the purchaser to require the mortgagee to apply the other property first in satisfaction of his debt. In the words of Norman, J., "a subsequent purchaser of one of the estates has just as great an equity as an incumbrancer"—Bishonath v. Kisto Mohun (10).

These authorities make it perfectly clear that the appellant in this case in his character as purchaser at an auction-sale in execution of another mortgage-deed, has a right to require the respondent to seek satisfaction first out of the property not covered by the purchase, before holding the property in his (appellant's) possession liable to make good the balance of the debt.

Some of the cases have gone much further. In Ram Dhun Dhur v.
Moheesh Chunder (11) the mortgagee, who deliberately refrained from proceeding against eleven mortgaged properties in his own possession, and sought satisfaction by the sale of the remaining property which had passed out of his possession into the hands of an auction-purchaser, was required to apportion the entire debt proportionately between all the properties. Similarly, it was ruled in Nathoo Sahoo v. Lala Ameer Chand (12) that though a mortgagee can require, those persons who have succeeded to the rights of the mortgagee in different estates, that they shall not redeem any part by paying a part of the debt, but must redeem the whole, it does not follow from this that a mortgagee, who has himself purchased the equity of redemption in a particular estate, may throw the whole burden of the mortgage-debt upon the remaining portion of the estate in the hands of other purchasers. Each has bought subject to a proportionate share of the burden, and must discharge it accordingly. It was this last equity which was given effect to in Moro Raghunath v. Balaji (1).

It is, therefore, clear that the equity holds good in favour of the appellant in this case, not only in regard to the Survey No. 123 which has not been sold, but also as regards the house which the respondent has himself purchased, and resold to Francis. As, however, Francis is not a party to this suit, I would make no order in regard to that property, but would only direct that the respondent must first proceed against Survey No. 123, pot No. 6, and if any balance is still left due to the respondent, he should recover the same from the property in appellant’s possession.

I would accordingly vary the decree of the lower Court to the extent mentioned above.

PER CURIAM.—Under s. 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) the decree is confirmed with costs.

The Judges having thus differed, the defendant appealed under s. 15 of the Amended Letters Patent. The appeal was heard by a Full Bench consisting of Farran, C.J., Parsons and Hosking, JJ.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for the appellant (defendant No. 3).—There are two questions in this case—one as to the apportionment of the debt and the other as to the marshalling of securities. The plaintiff purchased at the Court sale the equity of redemption in the house, and thus by his own act destroyed the unity of the security. He cannot, therefore, now object to have the debt apportioned—Moro Raghunath v. Balaji Trimbak (1).

We, as subsequent purchasers of part of the mortgaged property, are entitled to have the securities marshalled. This doctrine is recognized in India—Chunial v. Fulchand (2). The plaintiff as mortgagee must, therefore, first proceed against the other mortgaged property before proceeding against the property which we have bought.

[311] Mahadeo B. Chaubal, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The question of apportionment cannot now be raised. It was not raised in the lower Courts, nor was there any difference of opinion as to it in the Division Bench. The only point now open is as to marshalling. On all other points the Judges of the Division Bench were agreed, and the decree as made was good with respect to them.

Marshalling is allowed only in cases where there is a mortgage of property and a subsequent mortgage of part of that property to others. Purchasers cannot claim it. The doctrine has been, no doubt, extended to purchasers without notice, but should not be extended further. In the present case the defendant is not a purchaser without notice. He purchased the property at a Court’s sale, and, therefore, bought subject to all the equities that the mortgagor was bound by. A purchaser can get only what the mortgagor could honestly sell—Rama Raju v. Subbarayudu (3). The case of a purchaser at a private sale is on a different footing. It is open for him to show that he is a bona fide purchaser without notice and, therefore, entitled to have the securities marshalled.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar in reply.—In the District Court the point as to apportionment was taken in the memorandum of appeal. The question of apportionment was not, therefore, raised here for the first time.
The whole decree is now in appeal, and, therefore, the question as to the points in which the Judges of the Division Bench were agreed is immaterial.

Marshalling has been allowed in cases of purchasers. The question of notice is covered by the ruling in Chunilal v. Fulchond (1). It is, therefore, not necessary to consider whether the defendant was a purchaser without notice. A purchaser at an auction-sale cannot be in a worse position than a purchaser at a private sale with notice.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by FARRAN, C.J.—The second mortgage which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed in favour of Pranjivan did not include the house described in the plaint, nor the field Survey No. 122, [312] pot No. 6, which were included in the original mortgage to the plaintiff. As to these the plaintiff himself purchased the equity of redemption of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the house at an auction-sale held by the Court for Rs. 2-2-0. The field Survey No. 122 is still under the dominion of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the original mortgagors.

The plaintiff in the present suit sought to enforce his mortgage to its full extent against all the properties included in his mortgage with the exception of the house.

The appellant, who is a purchaser at a Court’s sale under a decree obtained by Pranjivan on his mortgage, contended that the plaintiff must enforce his claim against the house and against the field Survey No. 122 (6) before he could proceed against the lands included in the mortgage to Pranjivan. The amount found to be still due upon the plaintiffs’ mortgage is Rs. 90.

After purchasing the equity of redemption in the house the plaintiff re-sold it to one Francis for Rs. 100 by Ex. 38. It is alleged that the latter purchased benami for defendants Nos. 4 and 5. Francis has not been made a party to the suit. It has been held by the District Judge that Francis under the sale-deed, Ex. 38, purchased only the equity of redemption in the house, and this view of its effect has been assumed by the Division Court. We have had the document read, and are clearly of opinion, notwithstanding some ambiguous words at its close which have given rise to a false impression as to its effect, that the whole interest of the plaintiff in the house was conveyed by Ex. 38 to the purchaser Francis and not the equity of redemption only. Francis or the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, it is immaterial to consider which, therefore, now hold the house free from the mortgage-lien.

Pranjivan brought a suit upon his mortgage against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and having obtained a decree, caused the properties comprised in his mortgage to be sold, and the third defendant, the appellant in this case, was the purchaser at the auction-sale, and thus became the owner of these premises subject to the plaintiff’s mortgage thereon. Under this purchase [313] both the interest of the mortgagors and the interest of the mortgagee became vested in him.

This was the position of the parties when the present suit was instituted.

(1) 18 B. 160.
Though the appellant originally claimed to have the mortgage-debt of the plaintiff satisfied in the first instance out of the house and the field Survey No. 122 (6) before the properties which were mortgaged to Pranjivan were resorted to, that claim in respect of the house has now properly been abandoned, and as to it the appellant seeks to have the amount of the mortgage apportioned between the house and the other properties comprised in the plaintiff’s mortgage, so that the house may be saddled with its due proportion of the mortgage-debt, and the other properties comprised in the plaintiff’s mortgage may be pro tanto relieved of its burden.

We have two questions, therefore, to consider, one of marshalling and one of apportionment. As to the latter, it is objected that the claim of the appellant Lakhmidas to have the mortgage-debt apportioned was not made by him in the lower Courts and cannot be now raised in second appeal.
The question was, however, directly raised by the plaintiff in the memo-of appeal to the District Judge (the Subordinate Judge had erroneously held that the plaintiff’s mortgage had been paid off by the sale of the house for Rs. 100 by the plaintiff to Francis); so the District Judge ought to have considered it. We are, therefore, of opinion that we ought now to do so. It is clear that the plaintiff when he purchased the equity of redemption in the house purchased it subject to its due proportion of the mortgage-debt. That proportion of the mortgage-debt thus ceased to exist, and the plaintiff’s right as mortgagee to recover the money secured by his mortgage was reduced to that extent. What proportion of the mortgag-debt was thus wiped out, depends upon the proportion of the value of the house to the value of the rest of the mortgaged properties. We must leave that proportion to be settled by the Court executing the decree.

As to the appellant’s claim to have the securities marshalled, it is objected that he has not that right as a purchaser of the [314] properties mortgaged to Pranjivan at the Court sale. As such purchaser it is said that he has no right to have the securities marshalled. We think, however, upon the authority of Bhad Mal v. Ram Harakh (1), that the right to have the securities marshalled extends to a purchaser and is not confined to a pujane incumbrancer. As to the distinction which was attempted to be made between a purchaser like the appellant Lakhmidas at a Court sale held in pursuance of a mortgage decree and an ordinary purchaser or a purchaser at an execution sale in pursuance of a money decree, we are of opinion that no such distinction can be drawn. If a distinction were drawn it would be in favour of such a purchase as Lakhmidas’, which clothes him with the interest both of the mortgagor and mortgagee.

Lastly, as to the appellant not being a purchaser for value without notice, we follow the decision of this Court in Chunilal v. Pulchand (2), which lays down that prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act the question of notice was immaterial. To this case as to that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act are not applicable. The present decision will not be a precedent for cases to be determined under that Act.

The final decree in appeal will be as follows:—

Let the Court in execution ascertain the amount due on the mortgage by deducting from Rs. 90, the proportionate part of the debt for which the house was liable, the amount so ascertained, and the costs hereinafter awarded are to be paid to the plaintiff within six months of ascertainment.

(1) 7 A. 711.
(2) 18 B. 160.
in default of such payment the plaintiff to be at liberty to recover it by the sale of the Survey No. 122 (6) and the balance by the sale of the rest of the property mortgaged. We give plaintiff costs in proportion in the Courts of first instance and Court of appeal. In this Court each party should bear his own costs.

Final decree made.

[315] APPELLATE CIVIL.
Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

MOTIBHAI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. HARIDAS AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents. 2  [14th July, 1896.]

Jurisdiction—Partition—Valuation of a suit for partition—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8.

In a suit for partition of certain property, the value of the whole property sought to be divided was over Rs. 5,000. Plaintiff valued his share at Rs. 250, and paid court fees on this amount.

The suit was filed in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class.

Held, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit could not be held to be more than Rs. 250, so that the suit ought to have been filed in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur P. V. Gupte, Acting First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.
The plaintiffs sought to recover by partition their share of certain landed property at Nadiad.

The whole of the property sought to be divided was worth more than Rs. 5,000. Plaintiffs valued their share at Rs. 250, and paid court fees on this amount.

The plaint was at first presented to the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Nadiad.
The Subordinate Judge returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, holding that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.
The plaint was then filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad. He held that he had jurisdiction to try the suit (1) because the decision of the Nadiad Court was conclusive, and (2) because for purposes of jurisdiction the whole property sought to be divided was the subject-matter of the suit, which was more than Rs. 5,000 in value.
The First Class Subordinate Judge, however, dismissed the suit for non-joinder of parties.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.
Manekshah Jehangirshah, for appellant.

* Appeal No. 95 of 1898.
JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The first point for our decision is whether this suit was properly brought in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. This depends upon the value of the subject-matter of the suit. It is a partition suit. The value of the whole of the land to be partitioned is admittedly over Rs. 5,000; the value of the share claimed by the plaintiffs is valued by them at Rs. 250.

Under the Court Fees Act, 1870, the amount of fee payable in the suit would be according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint (s. 7, cl. iv (b)). The Suits Valuation Act, 1887, s. 8, provides that for such a suit the value as determinable for the computation of Court fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same. Thus it seems clear that the value of the subject-matter of the present suit cannot be held to be more than Rs. 250, so that the suit ought to have been filed in the Court of a Second Class Subordinate Judge. We may add that this decision is consonant with the rulings of this Court in Lakshman Bhaktar v. Babaji Bhaktar (1), Mahadeva Balwant v. Laxumun Baiwant (2) and Balwant Ganesh v. Nana Chintamon (3) and of the High Court of Allahabad in Hikmat Ali v. Wali-un-nissa (4). The Calcutta High Court is apparently of the same opinion—Boidya Nath Adya v. Maktan Lal Adya (5).

It is true that the High Court at Madras has come to a contrary decision—Vyuminatha v. Subramanya (6), but the later decisions—Ramayya v. Subbarayudu (7) and Narayanan v. Narayanan (8)—seem to embody the more correct principle.

We reverse the decree of the lower Court and send the plaint and other records of the suit to the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Nadiad for disposal on the merits. All costs to be costs in the cause. Decree reversed and case sent back.

[317] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RANCHHODDAS NAGARDAS.* [22nd July, 1896.]

Pleader—Responsibility of, in conduct of case—Suspicious document used in a case—"Guilty knowledge"—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 471—Sanction for prosecution.

Sanction was given for the prosecution of a pleader who in the conduct of a case had presented to the Court for his clients a document of suspicious appearance and which his clients were charged with having forged. The sanction was granted by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the document bore on its face such marks of concoction that the pleader's suspicions must have been aroused at the first sight of it, and that had he examined it, as he ought to have done, he would either have rejected it, or have advised his client to produce it in Court at his own risk. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that the sanction should be revoked. A pleader is under no higher obligation than any other agent would be, and to justify his prosecution it should be shown that he had been a party (principal or accessory) to the concoction of the document, or that he had the knowledge that it was concocted.

The mere fact that his suspicions ought to have been aroused by the sight of the document was not, prima facie, evidence that he knew, or had reason to believe, the document to be forged.

This was an application to the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1892).

The petitioner Ranchhoddas Nagardas was a pleader practising in the Courts of the Ahmedabad District.

Certain parties to a suit filed in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Umerth, viz., Manekilal and Bhogilal, engaged the petitioner Ranchhoddas as their pleader to appear and act for them.

A written statement in the suit was in due course put in by them which was countersigned by the petitioner as their pleader. This written statement referred to a certain vahivatnama, a copy of which was annexed to it.

Shortly afterwards some of the parties to the suit alleging that the vahivatnama was forged applied to the Subordinate Judge for a sanction to prosecute Manekilal and Bhogilal for the forgery.

The Subordinate Judge granted the sanction.

Manekilal and Bhogilal then applied to the Sessions Judge to have the sanction revoked.

During the hearing of this application the Sessions Judge of his own motion ordered a notice to issue calling upon the petitioner Ranchhoddas to show cause why he should not be included with Manekilal and Bhogilal in the prosecution for which a sanction was granted. The Sessions Judge after hearing him granted a sanction for his prosecution, on the following grounds:—

"The questions arise how far is a pleader bound to satisfy himself as to the authenticity and genuineness of documents which may be given to him by his client for production in Courts in judicial proceedings, and how far is a pleader criminally liable along with his client for the wrongful acts which have been instituted by the latter?

"In my opinion, a pleader can only claim immunity so long as he can show that he has exercised due care and caution.

"A pleader no doubt is bound by his instructions, but if a pleader in carrying out those instructions knowingly infringes the criminal law he lays himself open to a criminal prosecution.

"It has been urged on behalf of Mr. Ranchhoddas that he was acting only as a pleader, and cannot, therefore, be held responsible for the actions of his clients. It has been urged that Mr. Ranchhoddas did not produce the document, Ex. 46, but it was put in by the two appellants along with their written statements. As, however, the written statement is countersigned by Mr. Ranchhoddas, and in the body of the written statement there is a distinct allusion to the document, Ex. 12, (now Ex. 46), I do not think that any twisting of facts will persuade any ordinary mind that Mr. Ranchhoddas did not take a part, and a very prominent part, in the production of Ex. 46 in Civil Miscellaneous Suit 18/95. It is further contended that there is nothing to show that Mr. Ranchhoddas had any guilty knowledge, or even a suspicion, of the falsity of the document placed in Court; and it is argued that there is no duty of a pleader to suspect his clients' documents, nor to sift and to discriminate them; carelessness, it is urged, is the worst offence which can be placed to Mr. Ranchhoddas’ account.

"The final gist of Mr. Gokaldas’ able speech for his client is as follows:
—Mr. Ranchhoddas was acting a pleader, and as such no responsibility can attach to him for the production of documents which his clients put in, even though they may be suspicious documents. This is a very large view indeed to take of the irresponsibility of a pleader, but one which I do not think can for a moment be allowed to prevail. It appears to me that Mr. Gokaldas attempts to invest a pleader with the same mantle of irresponsibility which rightly or wrongly barristers and advocates assume and were. The duty of a [319] pleader is, as I take it, in the first place to advise his client as to the conduct of his case; to hear what evidence his client proposes to adduce; to sift, examine and discriminate among the evidence both oral and documentary; to avoid bringing before the Court any evidence which may be of no advantage to his client or may be detrimental. It is, I think, the duty of a pleader to examine all documentary evidence, and so far as he can satisfy himself as to the authenticity and genuineness of the same, and at the same time to form an opinion as to its admissibility or otherwise and advise his client accordingly to the best of his ability.

"If I am right in my opinion as to the duties and responsibility of a pleader, then there can be no doubt that Mr. Ranchhoddas was equally with his clients responsible for the production in Court of Ex. 46.

"Criminal responsibility may arise as well from omission as commission, and in the present case Mr. Ranchhoddas by his omission to point out to his clients the compromising character of Ex. 46, equally with his action in joining them in signing the written statement, has made himself particeps criminis with the appellants, his clients. * * *"

The Sessions Judge, therefore, directed sanction to issue under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for prosecution of Ranchhoddas on charges under ss. 198, 471 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

Ranchhoddas applied to the High Court to revoke this sanction.

Macpherson (with him Gokuldas Kahandas Parakh), for the applicant.
—This case is without a precedent. A pleader is not bound to examine documents given to him by his client for production in Court. The duty of examining those documents and pronouncing upon their genuineness or otherwise, properly belongs to the Court before which they are produced and not to the agent who produces them. In order to fix a pleader with criminal responsibility it must be clearly proved that he had guilty knowledge. There is no difference in this respect between the case of a pleader and that of any other agent. No such guilty knowledge has been proved in this case. That the petitioners’ suspicions ought to have been raised, is wholly insufficient.

Laing, Advocate-General (with him Rao Sahib Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader), for the Crown.—The reasons given by the Sessions Judge in support of the order for sanction are sufficient. A pleader stands on a higher footing than an [320] ordinary agent. He is bound to exercise his discretion before producing evidence in Court. That this discretion should be properly exercised, is essential to the administration of justice.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—We have heard the able arguments of Mr. Macpherson for the applicant and of the Advocate-General for the Crown, and we think that the sanction ought to be revoked. The Sessions Judge granted it on the ground that the document in question bears on its face such marks of concoction that the pleader's suspicions must have been aroused at the first sight of it, and that he ought to have strictly examined it, and had he done so, he would either have rejected it or advised his client to produce it in Court on his own risk or responsibility. His offence was thus one rather of omission than of commission. We cannot place a pleader's duty and his responsibility on so high a base as this. We do not think that any Court would be justified in ordering the prosecution of a pleader for presenting on behalf of his client a document merely because the document was suspicious in appearance, nor do we think that pleaders are in duty bound to examine documents given them to produce in Court and to come to a conclusion upon their genuineness, for which conclusion, if wrong, they are liable to be criminally prosecuted. We think that a pleader is under no higher obligation than any other agent would be, and that to justify his prosecution it must be shown that he was a party (principal or accessory) to the concoction of the document, or that he had the knowledge that it was concocted. The words in s. 471 of the Penal Code "knows or has reason to believe" are of general application, and the allegation must be proved as strictly in his case as in the case of any one else. It would be difficult, we think, to say that when a pleader acting on the instructions of his client tenders in Court a document he cannot plead and rely upon those instructions as sufficient cause. However, we need not go as far as that.
We think in the present case that the mere fact that the suspicions of the pleader ought to have been aroused by the sight of the document is not "prima facie" evidence that he knew or had reason to believe the document to be forged, and, therefore, we revoke the sanction for his prosecu-

Sanction revoked.

* Appeal No. 41 of 1895.
APPEAL from an order of remand passed by A. Steward, District Judge of Ahmednagar, against the decree of Rao Saheb B. W. Bhat, Subordinate Judge of Akola.

Suit for redemption. One Chima, a Sudra by caste, died leaving a widow Shiyu and an infant son, who died unmarried and childless about the year 1873. On this son’s death Shiyu succeeded to the land in question, which she mortgaged with possession to defendant No. 1.

Shortly afterwards, viz., in 1874 or 1875, Shiyu married again. At that time the nearest heir to Chima’s deceased infant son was Chima’s sister Gangabai. She died on the 2nd March, 1886, leaving a daughter Rakhmi as her heir. On the 9th December, 1889, Rakhmi sold the land in suit to the plaintiff. In the same year Shiyu sold the land (which as above stated she had already mortgaged to defendant No. 1) to defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

In December, 1893, the plaintiff brought this suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to redeem the mortgage and recover the land.

On the 22nd June 1894 Shiyu died.

[322] The defendants contended that Rakhmi was never the owner of the land, and that the plaintiff got no title by his purchase from her.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff’s suit, holding that Rakhmi was never entitled to the property, but that, if she ever had any title, she had lost it by the adverse possession of Shiyu and her mortgagee (defendant No. 1).

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge reversed the decree and remanded the case under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). He was of opinion that Shiyu had forfeited her interest in the property on her second marriage, and that Rakhmi had succeeded as heir. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"The Subordinate Judge appears to think that a Sudra widow who remarries does not forfeit any interest she may have in property of her deceased son. But s. 2 of Act XV of 1856 is clear on the point. These rights and interests cease as if she had died when she remarried. Mr. Ranade (defendant’s pleader) has produced no cases or authorities to induce me to believe that such is not the case.

"With regard to the second point, Rakhma is the daughter of the sister of Chima, the father of his deceased infant son who became his heir. Mr. Ranade contends that she is not a ‘bandhu’ of his infant son. At p. 178 of the old edition of West and Buhler it is written, the Shastras allow besides the so-called nine bandhus the following bhimnagotra sapindas to inherit:—(1) Sister’s son, (2) maternal uncle, (3) brother’s daughters, (4) sister’s daughters. Rakhma was not the daughter of the sister of the deceased infant son of Chima but of his father Chima. I do not, however, think that this ought to prevent her from inheriting in the absence of any other incidental heir; if she does not inherit, the property would revert to Government as intestate. I consider that Rakhma was in her right in conveying the property in suit to plaintiff for Rs. 1,000 in 1889."

Defendant No. 1 appealed against the order of remand.

Branson with Daji A. Khare appeared for the appellant (defendant No. 1).—The question is whether Rakhmi had any right to sell to the plaintiff, and whether Shiyu’s re-marriage had the effect of divesting her estate as mother. Section 2 of Act XV of 1856 is not applicable to the present case. It enables those widows to remarry who could not do so before the Act was passed. But in the present case the parties are Sudras.
who were allowed to re-marry. Act XV of 1856, therefore, did not affect Shivu’s rights, and by her re-marriage she did not forfeit the property.

Har Saran Das v. Nandi (1); Rosul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun (2), in which the Allahabad decision is dissented from; Murugai v. Viramkali (3); Matungini v. Ram Rutton (4); Akorah v. Boreane (5). As to Rakhmi’s right to inherit, West and Bubler, pp. 139, 488. An aunt is not given in the list of bandhus.

Further, it is to be observed that the first Court found that Shivu’s possession was adverse from the date of our mortgage, that is, from February, 1872.

Inequity with Gangaram B. Rele appeared for the respondent (plaintiff).—The Judge in appeal sent back the case under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code for decision on the merits. In the first Court there was no issue on the point of limitation. The real point is whether the plaintiff has a right to sue. The question is who would be the heir after Shivu’s death, her re-marriage being tantamount to death with respect to the family of her son to whom she had succeeded as heir. Gangabai was alive at the time of Shivu’s re-marriage. Succession depends upon propensity and not on religious efficacy—Parot Bapalal Sevakram v. Mehta Harial (6). Act XV of 1856 is applicable, and even supposing that it is not, we say that under the general Hindu law Shivu forfeited her right to her son’s property after her re-marriage. The preamble of the Act is useful to determine the real motive and the occasion which led to the passing of the Act—Maxwell on Statutes, pp. 52, 56. Sections 1 and 2 of the Act are express enactments which apply to all Hindu widows—Rosul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (3).

A mother inheriting from her son takes nothing more than a widow’s estate. See also s. 2 of Act XV of 1856.

At the close of the argument the appellant’s pleader brought to the notice of the Court a passage in Parekh Ranchor v. Bai Vakhat (7) where it is stated that s. 2 of Act XV of 1856 was not applicable to a widow in whose caste re-marriage was allowed.

[324] The Court took time to consider, and subsequently referred the question to a Full Bench. The following is the referring judgment:

FARRAN, C. J.—When we intimated the inclination of our opinion at the close of the argument in this appeal the case of Parekh Ranchor v. Bai Vakhat (7) had not been brought to our notice. When our attention was called to it we considered it advisable to reserve our judgment. Further consideration has not changed the view which we then expressed; but as it is inconsistent with the ruling in the above cited case we refer the matter to a Full Bench. The question for its consideration will be:

Whether under Act XV of 1856, s. 2, a Hindu widow, belonging to a caste in which re-marriage has always been allowed, who has inherited property from her son, by her re-marriage forfeits her interest in such property in favour of the next heir of her son?

The question has arisen under the following circumstances. The estate, of which the land in suit forms part, belonged to two brothers Chima and Bhima. On the death of the latter it devolved upon Chima. Chima died many years ago, leaving a minor son whom we may call S, and a widow Shivu. S died unmarried and childless, and upon his death his mother Shivu succeeded to the property. She mortgaged the land.

in dispute with possession to defendant No. 1. There is no dispute as to the validity of that mortgage. The main question in the suit is as to the plaintiff’s title to redeem it.

Bhima and Shivu belonged to a caste of Sudras in which re-marriage has always been permitted. There has been no finding by the District Judge whether according to the practice prevailing in that caste a widow forfeits her interest in her husband’s estate by her re-marriage, or as to what effect (if any) the remarriage of a mother has upon the property which she has inherited from her son, but the Subordinate Judge has found that according to the custom of the caste re-marriage does not entail forfeiture in such a case. Shivu remarried eighteen or [325] twenty years previous to the trial before the Subordinate Judge, i.e., in A.D. 1876 or 1874. At that time the nearest heir of S. was his paternal aunt Gangabai. She died on the 2nd March, 1886, leaving a daughter Rakhmi as her heir. Rakhmi sold the equity of redemption in the mortgaged land to the plaintiff on the 9th December, 1889, and he filed the present suit in 1893 to redeem the mortgage. Shivu in 1888 sold the mortgaged premises to defendant Nos. 1 and 2. Shivu died on the 22nd June, 1894. The Subordinate Judge rejected the plaintiff’s claim, as he considered that Shivu by her re-marriage did not forfeit her rights to the property which had been her husband’s and which she inherited from her son S, and that the plaintiff, therefore, took nothing by his purchase from Rakhmi. The District Judge has held that under the provisions of Act XV of 1856 Shivu by her re-marriage forfeited all interest in her son’s and husband’s property which had devolved upon Rakhmi when she sold the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, and remanded the suit for trial by the Subordinate Judge.

The rulings in the other High Courts are not uniform as to the effect of s. 2 of Act XV of 1856 in cases where previous to its enactment the remarriage of a widow in a Hindu caste was permitted, and according to the custom of her caste such re-marriage did not entail a forfeiture by the widow of her interest in her husband’s estate.

In Har Saran Das v. Nandi (1) it was held that Act XV of 1856 was not intended to place under disability or liability persons who could marry a second time before the Act was passed. The same view was adopted by this Court in Parekh Banmoh v. Har Vakhat (supra) to which we have already referred, but there does not appear to have been any argument on that part of the case. The Act was considered in Akbar v. Boree (2) and again by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Matungini v. Ram Rutton (3), but the point now under consideration did not directly arise in either of these cases. However, in Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun (4) a Division Bench expressed a strong opinion that s. 2 of the Act was applicable to such a state [326] of circumstances as the present. The question does not appear to have arisen in Madras. The view of the Hindu law taken in Murugavi v. Viramakali (5) may possibly have prevented it from being brought before that High Court.

Section 2 of Act XV of 1856, read by itself and without reference to the circumstances under which it was enacted, plainly extends to all Hindu widows irrespective of the castes to which they belong and to the special customs of such castes. It reads as a law of universal applicability. "All rights and interests which any widow may have in her deceased husband’s property * * * shall upon her re-marriage cease-and determine as if she had then died." It would be difficult to use more general words, and in our opinion there is no sufficient indication afforded by the preamble or the other provisions of the Act that the Legislature intended to use them in a restricted sense and as confined to Hindu widows who for the first time were by the Act permitted to marry to lead us to read them in a restricted sense. The preamble shows that the Legislature had in its mind when passing the Act the clear conception that there were at that time two classes of Hindu widows, viz., (1) those who were by the law as administered in the Courts of the East India Company held incapable of contracting a second marriage, and (2) those who were then held capable of marrying a second time, which latter class formed an exception to the more general one. The direct object of the Act was doubtless, as appears from the preamble, to relieve the former class from this disability. The words are: "And whereas many Hindus believe that this imputed legal incapacity, although it is in accordance with established custom, is not in accordance with a true interpretation of the precepts of their religion, and desire that the civil law...shall no longer prevent those Hindus who may be so minded from adopting a different custom, in accordance with the dictates of their own consciences; and whereas it is just to relieve all such Hindus from this legal incapacity of which they complain, &c." The object of the Act is, therefore, plain. That object might have been effected in one of two ways. First, by passing a general law applicable to all Hindus alike, or secondly by passing an enabling Act which would be applicable to such widows only as chose to avail themselves of its provisions. The Legislature, we think, adopted the former method. The first section declares in the very broadest terms that "No marriage contracted between Hindus shall be invalid * * * by reason of the woman having been previously married or betrothed to another person who was dead at the time of such marriage, any custom and any interpretation of Hindu law to the contrary notwithstanding." It appears difficult to contend that that declaration does not extend to all Hindus alike whatever their caste or the interpretation of the Hindu law authorized by their caste may be. Equally general appears to us to be the positive enactment in the second section which we have read "All rights and interests which any widow may have in her deceased husband's estate * * * shall upon her remarriage cease and determine."

The preamble to the Act does not, therefore, we think, indicate an intention of the Legislature to control its express enactments even if it could legitimately be used for that purpose, which cannot generally be done —Maxwell on Statutes, pp. 52 and 56.

In the judgment of the Court in Har Saran v. Nandi (supra) it is said that the Act was not intended to apply to persons like Musamat Nandi, who could before it have remarried without thereby forfeiting the property inherited by them from their first husbands. The answer to this appears to be twofold: (1) that it is an assumption without basis to attribute that absence of intention to the Legislature; it is equally probable that they intended to assimilate the Hindu law in this particular in all castes and to make the law as administered accord with the true principles of Hindu law—Murugayi v. Viramakali (1)—and (2) that it is not allowable to cut down the express provisions of a law by a consideration of the supposed intention of the Legislature in passing it. If the Act applies to property in all cases in which a woman inherits from her husband, its express terms extend equally to property inherited by a mother from her husband’s sons and her own.

[328] The question was argued before a Full Bench consisting of Farman, C.J., and Parsons and Ranade, JJ.

Branson with Daji A. Khare, for the appellant (defendant).—The preamble to Act XV of 1856 clearly shows that it is an enabling Act. It does away with the disability of those widows who were not allowed to remarry before the Act was passed. If it be held that the Act applies to widows of all classes, then the consequences would be serious in the case of those widows who could remarry before the Act was passed, because they also would forfeit estates already inherited by them. Thus the Act would introduce forfeiture where it did not exist before.

Viccoji with Gangaram B. Rele, for the respondent (plaintiff).—Section 2 of the Act is in plain terms and applies to widows of all castes whether permitted by their respective customs to remarry or not. There being no ambiguity of language, the operation of the section cannot be restricted to that class of widows which does not permit remarriage. The preamble simply recites inconveniences caused to widows of that particular class and supplies a motive or occasion for universal legislation. It cannot, consequently, curtail the plain sense of the operative section of the Act—Maxwell on Statutes (3rd Ed.), p. 63; Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (1); Narendra v. Kamalbasini (2); Doe dem. Bywater v. Brandling (3).

Branson in reply.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is, whether under s. 2 of Act XV of 1856, a Hindu widow, belonging to a caste in which remarriage has been always allowed, forfeits upon such remarriage her interest in property which has come to her as heir to her son in favour of the next heirs of her son. The decision of the question depends solely on the interpretation to be placed upon the words “any widow” used in that section,—whether they connote all Hindu widows, independently of the consideration whether remarriage was or was not customary in the castes to which they belong, or only a particular class of widows who laboured under a customary disability which this Act was intended to remove.

[329] This Court and the Allahabad High Court have adopted the latter and the more restricted view of the scope of s. 2—Parekh Ranchor v. Bai Vakhat (4); Har Saram Das v. Nandi (5); while the Madras and the Calcutta High Courts have followed the more general interpretation—Murugaiy v. Viramakali (6); Matungini Gupta v. Ram Ruttun Roy (7); Rasul Ishtam Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (8). It clearly appears that the intention of the Legislature to restrict the scope of the section to those castes only where remarriage was forbidden by custom was assumed by this Court and the Allahabad Court as too obvious a conclusion to need any argument. On the other hand, it may be observed that in the Madras case noted above, no express reference is made to the provisions of Act XV of 1856, but it is assumed as a self-evident conclusion that where the rule as regards second marriage is relaxed, and such connections are permitted, it cannot be supposed that the law of these castes permits the remarrying widow to retain her first husband’s property.

As regards the Bengal cases, it deserves notice that the ruling in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1) overruled an earlier ruling in Gopal Singh v. Dhungazee (2), in which the contrary view had been enunciated. The later decision in Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (3) simply followed the earlier ruling in Matungini Gupta v. Ram Rutton Roy (1). The Judges, however, remarked that the question of forfeiture did not properly arise in the case, for the widow-defendant did not claim to have succeeded as heir to her husband, but contended that the estate did not belong to her husband. The expression of the Judges’ opinion was thus obiter dictum.

In neither of the two last named cases, the earlier decision of a Full Bench of the same Court reported in full in 2 Beng. L. R., p. 199, and briefly in 11 Cal. W. R., p. 82—Akorah v. Boreanees—was noticed, where it was held that a Hindu widow could succeed as heir to her son when the son died after the widow’s remarriage. In the present case, the widow remarried after she (330) succeeded to her son as heir, and this circumstance distinguishes it from the Full Bench ruling in Akorah v. Boreanees.

In this state of conflict between the several High Courts, it becomes necessary to consider the question as one not concluded by authority. The learned counsel on both sides in the argument before us admitted that the preamble to the Act was at variance with its enacting clauses. The preamble evidently favours the view that the Act was not intended for all classes of Hindu widows. It recognizes the fact that there were certain exceptions to the custom prohibiting the remarriage of widows, and it goes on to state that, with a view to relieve persons who were inclined to disapprove the customary prohibition, the Act was promulgated. The enacting clauses, however, observe no such reserve, and the words used are as general as they can well be, and there is no special section preserving to the castes in which remarriage was permitted full recognition of their customary rights.

It appears to me that this variation between the preamble and the enacting clauses was not the result of any oversight, but that the Legislature deliberately used the more general words in s. 2 of the Act, because it found that, while the custom of prohibiting remarriage obtained in certain castes, and did not obtain in others, in the matter of forfeiture by the widow of all interest in her first husband’s estate, there was no such divergence. So far as this Presidency is concerned, this is obvious from the information collected by Government, and published in Steele’s Law and Customs of Indian castes. At pages 364-65 the names of the castes in the Dekkhan, among whom Pat Marriages were allowed or forbidden, are given, and at p. 424, mention is made of the castes in which, when a widow performed Pat, her husband’s relatives succeeded to her husband’s estate. This last list includes some sixty castes, the great Kunbi caste to which the parties here belong, and all castes which are usually engaged in agriculture and manual industry. There is not a single caste mentioned in which any custom to the contrary prevailed. If with this information before it, the Legislature enacted ss. 2, 3, 4, in very general terms, thinking thereby to declare

(1) 19 C. 299.  (2) 3 W. R. 206.  (3) 22 C. 569.
what was in fact a general practice, it cannot be said that any new disability was created thereby. The words used in the preamble are no doubt to some extent misleading. So far from the castes in which remarriage was permitted being fitly described as certain exceptions to the general rule of prohibition, the fact is that the prohibition to remarry is confined to certain sections of the population, namely, the persons belonging to the first three principal castes. These higher castes are numerically less than 20 per cent. of the population. This mistaken impression led to the enactment of s. 6 prescribing the ceremonies necessary to validate second marriages. In this part of the country, the customary ceremonies observed at a Pat marriage are different from those observed at a lagna or first marriage. In the case of guardianship also, a similar difficulty has been needlessly created by s. 3. But as far as s. 2 is concerned, the law has only declared what was an universal practice, and this fact must have been present to the mind of the Legislature, and explains the omission of all qualifying words. Under these circumstances, there is no occasion to consider how far the preamble can be permitted to control the more general words of the enacting clauses. In the case of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, XVII of 1879, the preamble is similarly restricted in its scope, being confined to agriculturists, while in the body of the Act there are various sections which extend its scope to non-agriculturist classes of litigants. But as this extension was deliberately made, this Court has held that the preamble did not control the enacting clauses. The forfeiture under s. 2 is expressly confined to the limited estate to which a widow succeeds on the death of her husband or his lineal successor, she forfeits only the estate which comes to her during or for her widowhood. The absolute interests she acquires as heir to other relatives are expressly preserved to her by s. 5 of the Act, except so far as s. 4 limits this right. For these reasons, as the widow Shiyu in this case remarried after she succeeded as heir to her son, s. 2 operates to deprive her of that estate. The question how far her possession for eighteen or twenty years since she remarried bars the next heir's claim, is a point which will have to be considered by the Division Bench in finally disposing of this case. I am satisfied that question of law referred to us must be answered in the affirmative.

FARRAN, C.J.—I concur and have nothing to add to the reasons given in the referring judgment.

PARSONS, J.—I also concur for the reasons given in the referring judgment.

Question answered in the affirmative.
H. PLUNKETT, INCOME TAX COLLECTOR, POONA (Original Defendant), Appellant v. NARAYAN PARASHRAM TULLU (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [23rd July, 1896.]

Incomes Tax Act (II of 1886), ss. 21, 22—Agent of a company not resident in India — Liability of.

The liability for income tax of the agent of a company not resident in British India, but in receipt through such agent of income chargeable under the Income Tax Act (II of 1886), is personal, and s. 22 does not make such liability conditional upon his having funds of the company in his hands.

APPEAL from the decision of Arthur H. Unwin, District Judge of Nasik, in suit No. 3 of 1895.

In April, 1893, the Chatre Circus Company was assessed for payment of income tax. The notice under s. 17 of the Income Tax Act (II of 1886) was at first issued to one Nago Bhicaji, who was described as the Manager of the Chatre Circus Company. It was dated the 29th April 1893, and it informed Nago Bhicaji that the tax charged was Rs. 51-2, which he was required to pay before the 29th May, 1893. The notice reached Nago Bhicaji on 29th June, 1893, at Gwalior, where the Circus Company was then giving performances. He wrote to the Income tax Collector that he got the notice after the last day fixed therein, and that payment within the time fixed was thus not possible. He, however, informed the Income Tax Collector that the plaintiff Narayan was their head manager, and that he had been asked to make all proper arrangements in respect of the demand. Thereupon, the Income Tax Collector for the first time, on 4th August, 1893, required the plaintiff, who was not described as manager on this occasion, to pay the tax within eight days.

The plaintiff on 9th September, 1893, describing himself as Manager of the Chatre Circus, wrote a letter in which he represented that the Circus Company had not earned any profits, and that throughout the year it was working out of British India, and it was, therefore, not liable to the tax. This letter was accompanied by a printed form of application under s. 25, signed by the plaintiff, in which he identified himself with the company, stating that "we" had no property, and earned no profits in British India.

The Income Tax Collector on 13th September, 1893, made enquiries about the movements of the circus, and plaintiff sent a reply on 15th September. Later on, the Collector asked to be furnished with information about the company's accounts. Plaintiff asked for time to obtain this information from Gwalior and later on supplied information on these points, and sent extracts of the company's accounts. Finally, the Income Tax Collector confirmed the tax as first assessed on 1st December, 1893.

An appeal was then preferred by the plaintiff, in which he again described himself as Manager of the Chatre Circus. This appeal was rejected.

* Appeal No. 19 of 1896.

804
The tax not having been paid, on the 6th February, 1894, the Collector issued the following warrant for the recovery of the tax:—

"Whereas the Chatre Circus Company represented by their manager, Mr. Narayan Parashram Tullu, have made default in payment of the sum of Rs. 54-9 due by them on the 1st January, 1894, on account of income tax for 1893-94, I, Mr. A. H. Plunkett, Collector of Income Tax, Poona City, do hereby direct, under sub-s. 1 of s. 30 of Act II of 1886, that a sum of Rs. (54-9-0) fifty-four and annas nine be recovered from the said defaulter (the manager)."

In execution of this warrant, six currency notes for Rs. 10 each, the private property of the plaintiff, were attached. He was asked to take back the balance after deducting the tax, which he refused to do.

[334] Plaintiff brought this suit to recover these notes or their value on the ground that as he was not personally liable to pay the income tax for the company, his private property was wrongfully attached.

The District Judge of Nasik awarded the claim with interest, observing (inter alia) as follows:—

"Now it is plain that this circus so long as it existed must have had attachable plant and property of its own, and defendant’s own yadi, Ex. 15, to plaintiff shows that defendant had been made duly aware that the circus and its properties were actually at Gwalior in the autumn of 1893. Defendant in that yadi says he has been referred by post-card from the manager of the Circus at Gwalior to plaintiff residing at Nasik, who, the post-card is said to have stated, ‘will make the needful arrangement’ about the levy of income tax. When defendant had thereupon interviewed plaintiff, and after due enquiry into the Circus accounts had resolved that the assessment in question must stand, why did not defendant at once seek to ascertain from plaintiff how, when, and where the Circus property, or else Chatre himself, was likely to be found tangible for the realization of the tax, and upon information which it must be presumed plaintiff would have furnished, proceed direct against Chatre in person or that property for recovery of the tax? * * * And supposing that plaintiff had officiated as a paid vakil, agent, or employee of Chatre for the Circus, or again as a receiver or manager as appointed under s. 23 of the Act, it would surely have been an unjustifiable step to seize and distrain his personal property, property like these notes, in his private house as Nasik, for his principal’s default."

From this decision defendant appealed to the High Court.

Rao Saheb Vasaudeo J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader) for the appellant (defendant).—The plaintiff having held himself out as the manager of the company is now estopped from repudiating his liability to the income tax—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 31 and 115. As the agent of a non-resident company in British India plaintiff is liable under ss. 21 and 23 of the Act (II of 1886). The duties of the principal officer of a company are laid down by ss. 11, 12 and 28. Plaintiff may call upon the company to recoup him under ss. 23 and 49. But his liability to pay the tax primarly cannot be extinguished.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the respondent (plaintiff).—Plaintiff is not a paid manager or agent of the company. He has no share or interest in the capital, plant or profits of this Circus. He has no doubt signed certain letters and applications as manager, but [335] that fact alone cannot make him personally liable for the income tax payable by the Company. I rely upon s. 22 of the Act, which prevents the liability from resting upon the plaintiff. Plaintiff when he signed those letters and applications acted more in his capacity as a vakil than an agent of the company. He had no funds in his hands belonging to the company. Any such funds, if he had then, would no doubt have been liable in his hands for the income tax. To the extent of such funds, and such funds alone, he would be liable.

As regards the point of estoppel, the plaintiff's conduct has not in any way prejudiced the defendant. The Collector can call upon the proprietor of the Circus whenever he comes into British India to pay the tax, and if he refuses, then to recover the same under the powers vested in him by the Act. But to hold otherwise would be illegal and ultra vires of the Income Tax Act (II of 1886).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The facts of this case are as follows:—In April, 1893, the Chatre Circus Company was assessed for payment of income tax (s. 23), and the Income Tax Collector under the instructions of the Company, which was then at Gwalior, called on the plaintiff to pay it as the manager of the company in British India (s. 15). Certain correspondence followed which need not be set out at length, in which the plaintiff sought to get the assessment remitted on the ground mainly of the company having made no profits in British India. Throughout the whole of it the plaintiff styled himself and was addressed as the manager of the company.

In December, 1893, the plaintiff as the manager of the company appealed against the assessment of income tax, but his petition was rejected. The tax not having been paid, on the 6th February, 1894, the Collector issued the following warrant for the recovery of the tax:—

"Whereas the Chatre Circus Company represented by their manager, Mr. Narayan Parashram Tullu, have made default in payment of the sum of Rs. 54-9 due by them on the 1st of January, 1894, on account of income tax for 1893-94, I, Mr. A. H. Plunkett, Collector of Income Tax, Poona City, do hereby direct under sub-s. 1 of s. 30 of Act II of 1886 that a sum of Rs. (54-9-0) fifty-four and annas nine be recovered from the said defaulter (the manager)."

[336] In execution of this warrant, six currency notes for Rs. 10 each, the private property of the plaintiff, were attached. He has now brought this suit to recover these notes or their value on the ground that as he was not personally liable to pay the income tax for the company, his private property was wrongfully attached.

The points for determination, therefore, are:—(1) Whether the plaintiff was personally liable to pay the tax? (2) If not, whether a suit to recover the property attached or its value will lie in a civil Court?

We decide the first point in the affirmative. Section 21 of the Act (II of 1886) is clear on the point. It provides that a person not resident in British India, but being in receipt through an agent of income chargeable under the Act shall be chargeable in the name of the agent just as he would be chargeable if he were resident in British India. That is precisely the case here. The Chatre Company, which, as the plaintiff says in his appeal petition, "is living at Gwalior and is likely to live there permanently," was assessed in the name of its manager, the plaintiff, for income tax, and demand was made on the plaintiff for payment. He thereupon became liable to pay it. That is the clear meaning of s. 21, and s. 22 does not, as has been argued, take away that liability. It only provides the agent with the means of obtaining funds or recouping himself for the payment. The plaintiff could have, indeed may have, employed those-means, but his omission to do so will not relieve him from liability to pay the tax any more than a plea that he had no funds would.

It is unnecessary to decide the second point. Reversing the decree of the lower Court we order plaintiff's suit to be dismissed with costs throughout.

RANADE, J.—There is no occasion to consider the points of law based on the construction to be placed on the provisions of s. 39 and s. 30 (3) of the Income Tax Act, as we feel satisfied that the District Judge's decree cannot be supported on the merits.

[337] The respondent, original plaintiff, brought this suit against the appellant, who is the Income Tax Collector of Poona, to recover back a certain sum which was levied from him as income-tax for 1893-94 on the 29th March, 1894, for the tax due from the Chatre Circus Company, of which company respondent was stated to be manager. Respondent's main contention was that he was not in any way interested in the financial management of the circus, and only helped it with his advice and services gratis, and that at any rate he was not personally responsible for a tax admittedly due from the Circus Company. The appellant, while maintaining that no suit would lie against him for the refund of the tax in a civil Court under ss. 30 and 39 of the Income Tax Act, further pleaded on the merits that respondent had by his conduct held himself out to be, and in fact was, manager of the circus, and that he was, therefore, liable to pay the tax due from the circus Company as agent for the same. The District Judge held that the respondent was not personally responsible for the payment of the tax due by the Circus Company, and accordingly ordered a refund of the sum levied without right from him.

The correspondence between the parties, however, shows clearly that, in the first instance, the Income Tax Collector did not hold the respondent responsible. The notice under s. 17 was at first issued to Nago Bhicaji, who was described as the Manager of the Chatre Circus Company. This notice is Ex. 23, and bears date the 29th April, 1893. It informed Nago Bhicaji that the tax charged was Rs. 51-2, and required him to pay the same before 29th May, 1893, or to make any representation about the same that he might deem proper. It appears that the notice reached Nago Bhicaji at Gwalior, where the circus then was, on 29th June, 1893, and this Nago Bhicaji wrote to the Income Tax Collector that he got the notice after the last day fixed in it, and that payment within the time fixed was thus not possible. He, however, informed the taxing officer that the respondent-plaintiff Narayan was "our" head manager, and that he had been asked to make all proper arrangements in respect of the demand. Thereupon, the appellant for the first time, on 4th August, 1893, required the respondent, who was not [338] described as manager on this occasion, to pay the tax within eight days (Ex. 15). The respondent on 9th September, 1893, describing himself as Manager of the Chatre Circus, wrote Ex. 16, in which letter he represented that the Circus Company had not earned any profits, and that throughout the year it was working out of British India, and it was, therefore, not liable to the charge. This letter was accompanied by a printed form of application under s. 25, signed by the respondent, in which he identified himself with the company more completely by the use of the first personal pronoun in stating that "we" had no property, and earned no profits in British India.

The appellant next, on 13th September, 1893, made inquiries about the movements of the circus, and respondent sent a reply on 15th September.
Later on, appellant asked to be furnished with information about the company's accounts. Respondent asked for time—Exs. 28, 29—to obtain this information from Gwalior, and later on supplied information on these points, and sent extracts of the company's accounts. Finally, the Income Tax Collector confirmed the tax as first assessed on 1st December, 1893—Ex. 32. An appeal was then preferred by the respondent in which he again described himself as Manager of the Chatre Circus. This appeal was rejected. Thereafter a warrant was issued for the levy of the tax from the Chatre Circus Company represented by the manager respondent, and it was in execution of this warrant that the notes of 60 Rs. were recovered from the respondent as manager, as stated in the warrant.

It is quite clear from this correspondence that the respondent—plaintiff all along conducted himself as though he was the bona fide head manager of the circus. That character was given to him, not by the appellant, but by Nago Bhicaji, and respondent not only never repudiated that character, but actually identified himself with the circus in a way which left no room for doubt that he was the head manager. He did not act in his capacity as vakil for the Circus Company. He himself states he never had a power of attorney from Mr. Chatre. His own evidence shows that the Nasik Mamladar asked him to pay the tax for the Circus Company. The patel andulkarni also admittedly [339] made the demand on him as Manager for the Circus Company, and he was asked to take back the balance after deducting the tax he had paid for the Circus Company. There was, therefore, nothing illegal in all these proceedings. Section 21 of the Act authorizes such a levy from the agent or manager when the principal lives out of British India. The mere fact that respondent was not a paid servant of the company cannot make any difference. It appears that he had advanced moneys to defray the circus expenses. But whether he was pecuniarily interested or not, it is clear that he put himself forward as an agent of the Circus Company, and he is, therefore, estopped now from pleading that he was not liable to be dealt with as such. We at first entertained some doubts which were suggested by plaintiff's evidence as to whether the levy was made from the respondent in his private capacity or as agent. We accordingly sent for the warrant, and its terms leave no doubt that the levy was made from him as manager. He has under the Act his own remedy against the owner of the circus if he has had to pay the money for his principal without having the principal's fund in his hand. Lastly it may be noted that respondent might have applied to the Collector under s. 30 (3) (d) and made a claim for the money, if he objected to the payment. Section 39 has obviously no application, as respondent did not bring this suit to set aside the assessment. On the whole, we feel satisfied that the District Judge's decision cannot be supported on the merits. We accordingly reverse his decree and dismiss the suit with costs throughout on respondent.

Decree reversed.

SECOND appeal from the order of Rao Bahadur Vishvanath
B. Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara with appellate powers.

On 28th March, 1887, Bapuchand (appellant) obtained an instalment decree against the respondents. The decree ordered the payment of the first instalment before 1st April, 1887, and of each succeeding instalment before the 1st of April of each year, and directed that in default of any instalment the whole amount due under the decree should be recoverable at once.

The second instalment was not paid until the 3rd April, 1888, and was, therefore, late; the third instalment was also late, being made on 2nd April, 1889; the fourth was paid on the 1st April, 1890.

On 7th August, 1891, a sum of Rs. 635-15-0 was paid into Court by the judgment-debtor, and on the oral application of the judgment-creditor it was paid over to him next day.

On 6th August, 1894, the judgment-creditor Bapuchand (appellant) applied for further execution of the decree. The judgment-debtor pleaded that he was barred by limitation. The question then rose whether his oral application on the 7th August, 1891, for the money which had been paid into Court on his account was an application to take a step in aid of execution of the decree under art. 179, sub-cl. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

[341] The Subordinate Judge rejected the application as barred by limitation.

On appeal the Judge confirmed the order.

The applicant Bapuchand appealed to the High Court.

is a step in aid of execution and saves time—Venkatarayalu v.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—Appellant Bapuchand applied on the 6th August, 1894, for further execution of an instalment decree of the 28th March, 1887. The two lower Courts have held that the application was time-barred. The decree directed the payment of the first instalment before the 1st August, 1887, and the payment of each succeeding instalment before the 1st April each year, and further directed that on default of payment of any instalment the whole amount due under the decree should be recoverable at once.

Payments were made as follows:—The first instalment on the 31st July, 1887; the second instalment on the 3rd April, 1888; the third on the 2nd April, 1889; the fourth on the 1st April, 1890; and on the 7th August, 1891, the sum of Rs. 635-15-0 was paid. As default was made in paying the second instalment, the whole amount of the decree became payable on the 1st April 1888. It appears from the rojnamas that the last of the above payments, that of Rs. 635-15-0, was made by the Court in pursuance of an oral application made to the Court by the judgment-creditor on the 7th or 8th August, 1891.

The question then arises, whether an application by a judgment-creditor for the payment to him of money which has been paid into Court on his account in execution of his decree, is an application to the Court to take a step in aid of execution of the decree. This question has been answered affirmatively by the Madras and Allahabad High Courts,—Venkatayalu v. Narasimha (1); Kerala Varma v. Shangaram (2); Koornayya v. Krishnamma (3); Paran Singh v. Jawahir Singh (4); Sujan Singh v. Hira Singh (5). On the other hand the Calcutta High Court holds that such an application is not an application to the Court to take a step in aid of execution—Hem Chunder v. Brojo Soonduri (6); Fazal Imam v. Metta Singh (7); Gunja Pershad v. Debi Sundari (8); Ananda v. Hara Sundari (9). In the last reported judgment of the Calcutta High Court touching this point, Sir Comer Petheram, after mentioning the view taken by the Madras and Allahabad High Courts, says (p. 199): “It seems to us that when the sale of the property attached in execution has been completed, and the purchase-money has been paid into Court, nothing more remains to be done in respect of the execution of the decree as against that property, and no application as regards the purchase-money, either to draw it out of Court or to set it off against the decree when the decree-holder is himself the purchaser, can be properly said to be an application to the Court to take some step in aid of the execution of the decree.”

The lower appellate Court has referred to Dulsook v. Chugon (10) decided by Sir Michael Westropp and Mr. Justice Melvill. The facts of that case were very similar to the facts of the present case, but the Limitation Act then applicable was Act IX of 1871, and the 4th clause of art. 167 of the 2nd schedule of that Act corresponding with cl. 4 of art. 179 of Act XV of 1877 did not specially provide for an application to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution: the words in cl. 4 of art. 167 were, “applying to the Court to enforce, or keep in force the decree or order.” The point which we are considering was (probably for that reason) not taken in that case. In Keshavial v. Pitamberdas (11) Mr. Justice

Jardine expressed an opinion that [343] in the case of a mere money decree, in which the execution by attachment was not intended to be a permanent arrangement, mere receipt of money is not a step in aid of execution, but he held that, where under the terms of the decree the judgment debtor’s property is attached, and the profits sequestrated for a long period, an application to receive the proceeds of such property is a step in aid of execution.

When money is paid into Court in satisfaction of a decree it is, in the ordinary course, placed to the credit of the judgment-creditor, and is then liable to attachment as his money. In a certain sense the decree is then satisfied to the extent of the payment: still it appears to us that the execution of the decree with regard to such payment is not fully completed till the money has been actually paid by the Court to the judgment-creditor or to some one on his account. We, therefore, agree in the view taken by the Madras and Allahabad High Courts.

It was contended by the pleader for the respondent that the decree was time-barred at the date when the last application for the payment out of the Rs. 635-15-0 was made by the judgment-creditor to the Court, inasmuch as the appellant has not shown that any previous application to take a step in aid of execution was made within three years of that date. We think under the circumstances that it was rather for the respondent to show that the decree was then time-barred; but at all events we think that we ought to presume, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the previous payments out of the instalments to the judgment-creditor were made in pursuance of applications made by him for that purpose to the Court.

It was further contended for respondents that, assuming that an application to take money out of Court is an application to the Court to take a step in aid of execution, yet that as the whole amount of the decree became payable on the 1st April, 1889, the subsequent applications made in 1888, 1889 and 1890, being only for payment of instalments, would not keep the decree alive. We do not think this is a sound argument. The step in aid of execution, referred to in cl. 4 of art. 179, need not, we think, be a step directly towards the complete execution of the decree. The lower appellate Court was of opinion [344] that the decree in question had been fully satisfied, but it appears to have overlooked the interest which was due at the date of the decree and for payment of which the decree provides as well as for payment of future interest.

We reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the case that an account may be taken of what is due under the decree and an order may be made for its realization.

Decree reversed and case remanded.
APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hosking.

RAOJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. GENU (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [29th July, 1896.]

Vaton—Vatandar—Vatandar family—Hereditary Offices (Bom. Act III of 1874), s.25 (1)
—Suit for declaration of rights to represent family—Jurisdiction of civil Court.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the branch of the Gavda family which he represented was elder than that represented by one of the defendants. The object which he desired to obtain by a declaration in that form was to influence the Collector in determining whether he should be recognized as the representative vatandar in respect of the four annas' share which the Gavda family possessed in a patelki vaton.

 Held, that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, since the declaration sought, if made, would in effect be a declaration of plaintiff's status as representative vatandar. This, however, equally with the duty of ascertaining the custom of the vaton as to service was a duty which by s. 25 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bom. Act III of 1874) was imposed on the Collector and not upon the civil Court.

SECOND appeal from the decision of A. Steward, District Judge of Poona, reversing the decree of Rao Sahib D. G. Medhekar, Subordinate Judge of Junnar.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the branch of the Gavda family represented by him was elder than that represented by the defendant. He stated that the Gavda family had a four annas' share in the Patelki vaton at Elgaum; that it was customary for the eldest branch to hold that share; and that fifteen or twenty years previously the defendant's father, taking advantage of the plaintiff's absence from the village, had by false representations got the four annas' share entered in his name as the representative of the eldest branch of the family; that the defendant's father was now dead and that he (the plaintiff) had applied to the Collector to have his name entered as representative of the family and that the Collector referred him to a civil Court to prove his right to represent the family.

The defendant denied the statements of the plaintiff and pleaded that the claim was barred, and was not one which could be entertained by a Civil Court.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff represented the elder branch of the family of the parties; that his cause of action arose when the defendant applied to the Collector for the registration of his name as representative vatandar after the death of his father; that the claim was not time-barred and that it could be entertained by a civil Court. He, therefore, made the declaration sought for.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, holding that it was not cognizable by a civil Court.

* Second Appeal No. 666 of 1895.

(1) Section 25 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bom. Act III of 1874) —
25. It shall be the duty of the Collector to determine, as hereinafter provided, the custom of the vaton as to service, and what persons shall be recognized as representative vatандars for the purpose of this Act, and to register their names.
The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Narayan M. Samarsh, for appellant (plaintiff).—The main question is whether a Civil Court has jurisdiction under the present Vatan Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) to entertain a suit for such a declaration as this. We submit that it has. Under the old Vatan Act (XI of 1843) civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit—Abaji v. Niloji (1); Yesaji Apaji v. Yesaji Mhaloji (2). But the present Vatan Act, which is applicable to the case, has made changes in the old law: see ss. 24 to 30 of the Act. Under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) we are entitled to bring such a suit. The discretion of the Collector arises after the civil Court has determined the right of eldership—Rangraj Venktesh v. Krishnarav Gopal (3); Dadaji v. Bhaskarav (4).

Ganpat S. Rao, for the respondent (defendant).—Sections 25 and 26 of the Vatan Act empower the Collector to inquire into the custom with respect to a vatan. Therefore, a civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit with respect to a custom relating to a vatan. On the death of defendant’s father, who was the representative vatanadar, the Collector was bound to enter defendant’s name as the representative vatanadar—Khand Narayan Kulkarni v. Apaji Sadashvo Kulikarni (5); Ramchandra v. Anant (6); Balkrishna v. Balaji (7); Govind v. Bapuji (8).

Further, we submit that on the face of the plaint the claim is time-barred. Plaintiff’s cause of action accrued to him when defendant’s father was recognized as the representative vatanadar fifteen or twenty years before the institution of the suit, or when Act III of 1874 came into force.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The plaintiff in this suit sued for a declaration that the branch of the Gavda family which he represented was elder than that represented by the first defendant Genu. The plaintiff confined his prayer to that relief. The object which he desired to obtain by a declaration in that form was (as is shown by the statements in the plaint) to influence the Collector in determining whether he should not be recognized as the representative vatanadar in respect of the four annas’ share which the Gavda family possess in the patelki vatan at Edgaum. There has been no certificate of the Collector put in showing what the custom of the vatan as to service is, nor has either of the lower Courts found upon that question. The plaintiff in his plaint alleges that it is customary for the representative of the eldest branch of the Gavda family to be the representative vatanadar of its four annas’ share. The first defendant denies that such is the custom. The Subordinate Judge made a declaration in the plaintiff’s favour deeming that it was competent for a civil Court to give the plaintiff relief in that form. The District Judge Judge, holding a contrary opinion, reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

Now s. 25 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874) enacts that it shall be the duty of the Collector to determine as thereinafter provided the custom of the vatan as to service and what persons shall be recognized as representative vatanadors for the purposes of the Act and to register their names. The sections which follow (26 to 30) lay down elaborate rules to guide the Collector in ascertaining what the custom of the vatan which he is to follow is. When he has ascertained it, s. 25 still imposes upon him the duty of determining what person shall be recognized as representative vatandar and of registering his name.

In the present case a declaration of eldership would only assist the plaintiff if the custom of the vatan is for the service to be performed by the representative of the elder branch. It is conceded that the civil Courts have not jurisdiction to enter upon an inquiry whether such is the custom of the vatan or not. Assuming that it is, the decree of the civil Court declaring the plaintiff to represent the elder branch would be, in effect, a decree declaring him to be the representative vatandar in the Gavda family. That, however, equally with the duty of ascertaining the custom of the vatan, is a duty, which by s. 25 of the Act is imposed on the Collector and not upon the civil Court. We think that the civil Courts are not entitled to assume a jurisdiction which the Legislature has entrusted to other hands. The law upon the subject appears to us to be accurately stated by West, J., in Ramchandra v. Anant (1) in this short sentence—"Bombay Act III of 1874 in giving the Collector jurisdiction to pronounce who amongst the vatandars shall be representatives does not give him jurisdiction to determine who in disputed cases shall be vatandars within the definition given in the Act." We, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower appellate Court with costs.

Decree confirmed.

[348] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hosking.

BALIARAMGIRI RAMCHANDRAGIRI INAMDAR (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. VASUDEV MORESHVAR NIPHADKAR AND OTHERS
(Original Defendants), Respondents.* [31st July, 1896.]

Landlord and tenant—Inamdar—Notice of relinquishment of land by tenant—Valid notice—Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), s. 74 (2)—Tenant must give vacant possession—Remedy of landlord when vacant possession not given—Damages.

On the 20th March, 1893, the defendants, who held seven fields as tenants of the plaintiff, the inamdar of the village of Kaneri, gave him notice of relinquishment of six of them. The notice stated that these six fields were no longer in their possession, and that they would not be responsible for the assessment. The

(2) Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), s. 74:—
74. An occupant may, by giving written notice to the Mamlatdar or Mahalkari, relinquish his occupancy, either absolutely or in favour of a specified person, provided that such relinquishment apply to the entire occupancy or to whole survey numbers, or recognized shares of survey numbers.

An absolute relinquishment shall be deemed to have effect from the close of the current year, and notice thereof must be given before the 31st March in such year, or before such other date as may be from time to time prescribed in this behalf for each district by the Governor in Council.

A relinquishment in favour of a specified person may be made at any time.

When there are more occupants than one, the notice of relinquishment must be given by the registered occupant; and the person, if any, in whose favour an occupancy is relinquished, or, if such occupancy is relinquished in favour of more persons than one, the principal of each persons must enter into a written agreement to become the registered occupant and his name shall thereupon be substituted in the records for that of the previous registered occupant.
plaintiff notwithstanding brought this suit to recover the assessment for the year 1893-94. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendants continued to be tenants of the fields in question and were liable to the assessment on the ground that the notice of relinquishment did not purport to give vacant possession to the plaintiff. He therefore passed a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decree, holding that the notice was a conditional relinquishment which terminated the tenancy. On appeal to the High Court, Held (confirming the decree of the lower appellate Court) that the defendants were not liable to the assessment.

Section 74 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) only declares the customary common law on the subject of relinquishment of tenancy.

[349] A notice of relinquishment is not invalid because it does not purport to give and does not in fact give vacant possession to the inamdar. The result is the same whether the fact that the possession is not vacant appears on the face of the notice or is shown otherwise.

A tenant giving up demised lands to his landlord is bound to give him vacant possession. The result, however, of his not doing so is not to continue the tenancy, but to create a claim for damages on the part of the landlord. The tenant is liable in damages to the extent of the loss of rent which the landlord sustains during the actual period for which he is kept out of possession and the expenses he is put to in recovering possession of the land.

SECOND appeal from the decision of F. C. O. Beaman, District Judge of Thana, reversing the decree of Vadilal T. Parekh, Subordinate Judge of Bhivandi.

The plaintiff as inamdar of the village of Kaneri sued to recover Rs. 85-8-0 as the assessment for the year 1893-94 due by defendants in respect of seven fields described in the plaint.

The defendants alleged that except one field (called Ambashet) they had relinquished all the fields in question and that these fields were now in the possession of other persons; that on the 22nd March, 1893, they had given the plaintiff due notice of their relinquishment of these fields, and they contended that they were, therefore, now not liable for assessment in respect to them.

The notice relied on (after stating that the defendants were not in possession of the fields except Ambashet and had no interest in them) was as follows:

"Therefore we have previously orally and by written notices informed you that you should enter such lands as are in any one's possession in his name and levy the assessment from him; but as there is ill-feeling between you and us, and as the other sharers are colluding with you, you are trying maliciously to hold us responsible and liable for the assessment due on most of the land in Shivaram Chimnaji's khata. This is not proper and is illegal. Therefore we now inform you that we have in our possession and ownership only the field Ambashet out of all the lands in Shivaram's khata, and we are willing to pay the assessment thereon, but you do not accept it, and demand from us the assessment for all the lands. Therefore we are not liable for the costs thereof. The land except Ambashet is not owned by us and is not in our possession. We have also not taken the produce of the land and are not doing so. You are aware of this. You should manage to have the land entered in the name of whoever may be in possession of the same and recover the assessment from him, or you should get the lands vacated and let them to any one else. You should make whatever arrangement you think proper. We have no objection thereto. We are not responsible for the assessment of the lands or any expenses connected therewith. Be this known to you."

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendants were liable to pay the assessment and awarded the claim.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge reversed the decree. He held that the defendants having relinquished the land by their notice dated 20th March, 1893, they were no longer liable to assessment. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"The plaintiff is inamdar, and the defendants in respect to all the lands which they do hold are sutidars or mirasidars,—that is to say, they hold permanently on condition of paying the assessment. Some years ago the plaintiff enhanced the assessment, and there was litigation between him and the present defendants, as a result of which it was held that he had a right to enhance, and that the defendants were bound to pay him that year's assessment. Since then a new point has arisen. The defendants now deny that (with the exception of one field about which there is no appeal) they are in possession of any of the land in suit. And they say further that as in March, 1893, they served the plaintiff with a notice, amounting to an absolute and unqualified relinquishment, he cannot sue them for the assessment for 1893-94. I think that contention must prevail. It is true that s. 74 of Act V of 1879 does not apply to villages which have not been surveyed. But there is equally no question but that if it did apply, and the notice in question (receipt of which is not denied) had been served on a Mamlatdar or Mahalkari, it would have been sufficient to discharge the defendants from all further revenue demands on the holding. The contention is that since the inamdar has not been empowered under s. 88 of the Land Revenue Code to receive relinquishments under s. 74, the defendants gained nothing by their notice, and were bound to hold over until the landlord chose to release them. This appears to be an untenable position."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Narayan G. Chandawarkar, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge erred in holding that the notice (Ex. No. 22) given to us by the defendants was a valid relinquishment of their rights and liabilities. Section 74 of the Land Revenue Code is not applicable to the present case; but in any case the defendants cannot claim protection under it, because a tenant cannot relinquish his tenancy in favour of another person and force another tenant on the landlord.

Mahadev B. Chauwal, for the respondents (defendants).—The real point in the case is as to the effect of the notice of relinquishment (Ex. No. 23) which we gave. We gave three notices informing the plaintiff that we were not willing to cultivate the lands. A landlord cannot recover rent from his tenant after the tenant has given notice of relinquishment.

Narayan G. Chandawarkar, in reply.—The defendants' notice of relinquishment does not absolve them from liability. They ought to have given possession to us. Further, the notice is not legal, because it relates only to six out of the seven fields of which the defendants are in possession—Subrao v. Rainasheet (1); Nana v. Annapa (2).

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether the defendants are liable for the assessment on the seven fields described in the plaint for the year 1893-94 notwithstanding their having given the plaintiff the notice, dated the 20th March, 1893, which has been put in as Ex. No. 22.

In the year 1886, the plaintiff, who, as priest of the temple of Shri Vajreshwari, is inamdar of the village of Kaneri, sued the defendants and other persons for enhanced assessment on the above fields and other land. The defendants in answer alleged that they were mirasi tenants in possession of the fields, and were not liable to have the assessment upon them raised. The ultimate result of the suit in appeal was that the defendants were decreed to pay Rs. 85-8-0, the enhanced assessment on the fields for 1885-86 (Ex. Nos. 24 and 25). There was no decision come to in that case as to the tenure upon which the defendants held the fields. The District Judge in the present case has treated them as having held the fields on mirasi tenure.

After the decree in 1885-86 the plaintiff recovered the enhanced assessment on the fields from the defendants down to and including the year 1893-94. The defendants during the last three or four of these years unsuccessfully resisted the plaintiff's demand for assessment on the ground that they were in possession of one only of the seven fields, but the plaintiff, with the assistance of the Revenue authorities, recovered the assessment on them all. Eventually the defendants on the 20th March, 1893, gave the plaintiff the notice of that date, the effect of which we have now to consider. The present suit is brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants the enhanced assessment on the seven fields for the year 1893-94.

We agree with the District Judge that, although Bombay Act V of 1879, s. 74, does not apply to the fields in question, they being situate in an unsurveyed village, it was competent to the defendants by a proper notice to the inamdar given at the proper season to relinquish their holding and cease thenceforth to be liable for the assessment. There being no covenant entered into by the defendants to continue to hold these fields for a fixed period, and not being adscriptis glebae bound to remain indefinitely the tenants of the inamdar, they were entitled by a legal notice to terminate the relationship of tenants and landlord between them. Section 74 of Act V of 1879 only gives definiteness to the customary common law upon this subject. The contrary was not indeed contended before us, although it appears to have been argued on behalf of the inamdar-plaintiff in the lower appellate Court.

The only question (apart from the retention of one field by the defendants which gives rise to different considerations) which we have to determine is whether the notice is a sufficient notice of relinquishment. It is not disputed that it was given at the proper season of the year, or that it was a timely notice for the year 1893-94. In terms it is an absolute and unqualified notice. After stating that the defendants were not in possession of the fields (except one Ambashet), and had not taken their produce and had no interest in them, it continues [His Lordship read the notice and continued.]

The Subordinate Judge treated the defendants as the continuing tenants of the plaintiff on the ground that the notice does not purport to give vacant possession of the six fields to the plaintiff. The District Judge considered it to be an unconditional notice of relinquishment which terminated the tenancy of the defendants. He has not considered the question of vacant possession not being given. The defendants in their written statement say that three of the fields, Shingale, Wawe and Bag, belong to Keshav Narayan, and that three of them, Hira, Maind and Chari, belong to Pandurang Dinkar, and at the hearing they called Keshav to state that he was in possession of the three fields said to be in his possession. He is a relation of the defendants. Though there is no finding of the District Judge upon the point, it must, we think, be taken as a fact that the defendants did not give vacant possession to the plaintiff when they gave the notice just referred to.

It appears to us that the notice is in terms an absolute relinquishment by the defendants of all interest in the six fields, and that it is not the less so because it states that the defendants had not been in possession of the fields. It leaves the field at the unqualified disposal of the inamdar in so far as the defendants are concerned, and is thus a notice as defined in the cases of Venkatesh v. Krishnaji (1) and Balaji v. Bhikaji (2).

The question thus arises whether a notice of relinquishment is invalid if it does not purport to give and does not in fact give vacant possession to the inamdar. It does not seem to us to affect the legal aspect of the case whether the fact that the possession is not vacant appears on the face of the notice or is shown otherwise. The legal result must, we think, be the same in either case. There can, we think, be no doubt that a tenant giving up demised lands to his landlord is bound to give him vacant possession. That is the law in England even in the case of a demise by parol. Where there is no express stipulation to that effect made at the time of the letting of the land, it will be implied as one of the terms of such letting—Henderson v. Squire (3) The same must, we think, be the law in India.

The question, however, still remains. What is the result of not giving vacant possession? Does it continue the tenancy indefinitely, or does it give rise to a claim for damages on the part of the landlord? The latter appears to us to be its legal result. In the case of Henderson
v. Squire above referred to [334] the tenant had underlet a part of the premises, and the under-tenant refused to vacate at the termination of the principal tenancy. The landlord recovered possession by ejectment. The tenant was there held liable in damages to the extent of the loss of rent which the landlord sustained during the actual period for which he was kept out of possession and the expenses he was put to in ejecting the sub-tenant. The same rule should, we think, be applied in a case like the present. It would be unreasonable to hold cultivators, like the defendants, liable for rent perpetually because the inamdar does not choose to demand or recover possession from Keshav and Pandurang, if he does not desire to treat them as his tenants. If they refuse to vacate at the request of the defendants, it is difficult to see how the defendants after the notice could force them to do so. There is no finding by the District Judge how these men got into possession, whether with the consent or against the wish of the defendants, or whether they are or are not willing to vacate the fields.
The Subordinate Judge appears to think that they may be holding on behalf of the defendants, but he has not found to that effect, and that aspect of the case does not appear to have been presented to the District Judge. It would have been more desirable if the latter had dealt with this question of non-vacant possession, but as his judgment does not allude to it we must presume that it cannot have been pressed upon him.

(1) 8 B. 160.  (2) 8 B. 164.  (3) L.R. 4 Q.B. 170.
As this is not a suit for damages for not giving up vacant possession, but to recover assessment from the defendants as if they had given no notice of relinquishment, we do not think it necessary, in the view which we take of the law, to remand the appeal for further inquiry upon that point. The conclusion which we have come to does not appear to us to be at variance with Subrao v. Rainushet (1) followed in Nana v. Annapa (2).

The question whether the notice is bad on the ground that it relates to six only out of the seven fields is one upon which the plaintiff did not apparently rely in either of the lower Courts. The holding is only joint in the sense that these seven fields with other fields once stood in the khat of Shivram Chinnaji. No [355] other connection is shown between the fields. The objection was not mentioned by the learned pleader for the appellant in his opening speech. He only incidentally referred to it in his reply to meet the argument of the learned pleader for the respondents. We do not think that under all the circumstances of the case we ought to consider the objection in second appeal when raised there for the first time, or to remand the appeal for the lower Court to consider it. We accordingly confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice A. Strachey.

FARDUNJI MERWANJI BANAJI AND OTHERS (Appellants) v. MITHIBAI AND OTHERS (Respondents). * [12th November, 1897.]

Agreement—Construction—Gift to the heirs of A from generation to generation.

The members of a Parsi family, the heirs of one Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, entered into an agreement dated the 24th May, 1851, by which they agreed that the remaining income (after paying the deceased's debts) of a certain estate which had belonged to the deceased, called the Powai estate, situated in the island of Salsette, should be appropriated in certain shares among themselves as heirs of the deceased and "after their death their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever." In a previous suit (J.L.R., 6 Bom., 151) it was decided that under this agreement the signatories thereto took only a life interest in their respective shares. In the present suit it was contended and was held by the Division Court that the subsequent gift to the "heirs and children (of the signatories) from generation to generation for ever" was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. On appeal, it was held that the settlement in favour of the heirs and children of each signatory was in law a valid settlement and not void as creating a perpetuity. In the absence of words in the context showing that they were intended to take less, the respective heirs and children of the signatories took an absolute estate.

[356] A gift to the heirs of A from generation to generation confers on them when ascertained the same estate as if the gift were to X and Y, the heirs of a nominism.

This suit was filed by the plaintiff Mithibai and others for the administration of the estate of her father-in-law Framji Cowasji Bomanji, who died in February, 1851.

* Suit No. 877 of 1870. Appeal No. 354.

He had left a will and codicil, dated respectively the 5th July, 1828, and 15th December, 1831. Subsequently, however, to their execution he had become possessed of a large property called the Powai estate situate in the island of Salsette, and neither the will nor the codicil contained any residuary devise, so that he left the Powai estate undisposed of and also some immovable property in Bombay and a considerable amount of moveable property. The Powai estate had been granted to him, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns for ever by the East India Company under an indenture dated 15th February, 1837. The deed contained a covenant by him for himself and his heirs, executors and administrators that he and they would, out of the income of this estate, provide a supply of water for the use of the poor of Kamathipura in Bombay, and accordingly it appeared that at the date of the family arrangement hereinafter mentioned (24th May, 1851) the said estate was vested in trustees for the purpose of keeping up this charity and also a fire temple.

The said Framji Cowasji Bomanji left him surviving his widow Buchubai; three sons, viz., Jehangir (husband of the plaintiff Mithibai), Postonji and Nanabhai; three daughters, viz., Ratanbai, Navazbai and Perozba; and several grand-children by three other daughters, Gulbai, Meherbai and Manekbai, all of whom had predeceased him.

Disputes arose in the family as to the distribution of his property, and to put an end to them a family arrangement was entered into on the 24th May, 1851.

The following clauses of the said agreement are the only portions material to this report:

"7. As to all the debts due by the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased, (the proceeds of) the sale of his landed estate in Bombay and the amount of insurance of the ship Buckinhamshire destroyed by fire having been collected, and furniture and other goods and effects having been sold, and such outstanding debts as [357] may be due by different persons having been collected, his creditors should be paid; but on selling and collecting all the above (property) should all the creditors be not paid in full, then there are six villages, inclusive of Powai in Salsette, belonging to the deceased, which have been obtained from Government rent-free for ever. Out of the income of these villages in the first place water should be supplied for the use of the poor community of Kamathipura in Bombay, which the late Framji Cowasji Sett, deceased, has been supplying from the year 1824 A.D. out of the well in his Girgaon estate, called Mugbat; and, in order that this charity may continue for ever, a trust-deed in English, dated the 30th September, 1837, has been made for drawing Rs. 2,400, namely, twenty-four hundred, annually out of the income of the villages inclusive of Powai; and the English Government has been appointed trustees therein, with a view that should the heirs of the deceased be unable to supply the water properly, then Government, the trustees, having drawn out of the income of the village of Powai the abovementioned sum of Rs. 2,400 every year, are to conduct and preserve that charity work for ever. Therefore, after the amounts of these charges of the karkuns and sepoys and other charges of the villages inclusive of Powai have been deducted from the amount of the income, the surplus, whatever it may be, should be paid in the best possible way to the creditors in part payment of the interest; and in case there be any surplus, the same should be paid to them in equal proportions in part payment of their principal, until all the debts of the late Framji Cowasji, deceased, are discharged. Payments are to be truly made out of this income.
"8. Besides the above six villages inclusive of Powai (free from payment of any tax) there are in Salsette two other villages, Vikroli and Kanzoor, adjoining Powai which were farmed from Government for ever on the—day of——18——on agreeing to pay annually, Rs. 1,000 for rent. After paying which sum of Rs. 1,000, as well as the amount of other expenses of the said villages out of the annual income of the said villages, a sum of Rs. (2,500), namely, twenty-five hundred per annum out of the remaining income has been bestowed by the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased, for defraying the current expenses of the late Bawa Cowasji Byramji’s Atush Byram or fire temple in Bombay: it has been directed to be paid to the managers of the said fire temple, for the purpose of defraying its current expenses, for which a separate trust-deed was executed in English on the 12th day of July, 1849, by the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased; and according to what is therein written, a sum as far as Rs. 2,500 is to be paid from the revenue of these villages; should the income of the said two villages be insufficient to make up the above mentioned sum of Rs. 2,500 the deficiency, whatever it may amount to, is to be made up by the income of Powai and its adjoining villages as therein directed; and should there be any surplus it should be added to the income of the villages of Powai and should be appropriated as stated in the above mentioned para. 7 towards the payment of the deceased’s creditors, which we, all the undersigned, are truly to agree to and to abide by.

[388] "9. We, all the undersigned, heirs of the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased, have by our unanimous consent acknowledged and determined by this writing the aforementioned persons to be the heirs of the said Framji Cowasji, deceased; the particulars of their names and the manner in which it is agreed their shares are to be paid are as follows, viz.:

"(25) Twenty-five cents to Bai Buchubai, the widow of our late patron Framji Cowasji, 25.

"(50) Fifty cents to be divided equally among the sons who are living; the particulars whereof are as follows, viz., Jehangir Framji, Pestonji Framji and Nanabhoj Framji, 50.

"(25) Twenty-five cents to be divided in equal shares among the living daughters and the heirs of the deceased daughters—Bai Ratnabai, the widow of the late Nusserwanji Rustomji Bali Homaji, deceased, Bai Navazbai, the wife of Dhumjibhoj Byramji Rana; Bai Perozbai, the wife of Ardasis Cursetji Sett. The late Gulbai, deceased, wife of the late Dhumjibhoj Nusserwanji, deceased, is dead, and her daughter Hirabai is at present her heir, and she is the wife of Sorabji Pestonji. The late Meherbai, deceased, the wife of Pestonji Nowroji, is dead, and her heirs are her two sons, Ardasis Pestonji and Nowroji Pestonji; and these sons are at present young and are living with their father Pestonji Nowroji; and having appointed along with their father and guardian two other persons as trustees, and the amount of the share of these young heirs until such time as they come of age having been duly guaranteed, that is to say, having been invested in Government papers, the accumulating interest is to be added thereto, and their shares should be paid to them as they respectively come of age. The late Manekbai, deceased, the wife of Dadabhoy Rustomji, is dead, and her heirs are her daughter Sirinbai and her son Kaikhursu; but those children are at present young and are living with their father Dadabhoy Rustomji, and having appointed along with their father and guardian two other persons as trustees the amount of their shares of these young heirs, until such time as they come of age having been duly.
guaranteed, that is to say, having been invested in Government papers, the accumulating interest is to be added thereto and their shares should be paid to them as they respectively come of age.

"According to these particulars 100 namely one hundred cents are to be apportioned among Buchubai, the three sons, the three living daughters and the children and heirs of the three deceased daughters, agreeably to the shares of the heirs settled above.

"11. After paying in full, agreeably to what is written above, all the creditors of the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased, out of the income of the Powai estate of the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased, as written above, out of the remaining income whatever it may come to, after paying for the two charitable works, namely, supplying water and the management of the fire temple for which trust-deeds have been made, agreeably to and as mentioned in paragraphs 7 and 8 and after deducting the amount of the expenses of those villages, the remainder is to be [359] apportioned to the above-mentioned heirs agreeably to the shares mentioned above; but after their death their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever; no other person shall make any claim or demand whatsoever thereon, and should any male or female heirs give away his, her or their share to a stranger or to any improper person, the same should not take effect; and we, all the heirs, do agree by this writing, that should anything of this kind be done, it is to be all null and void, and is truly to become void; and should any of the undermentioned heirs or their heirs and children die hereafter without issue, then his or her share is truly to go to the surviving male and female heirs; and my (Buchubai's) share too after my death is truly to go to the male and female heirs settled above; and in the event of their death, to their children and heirs in the manner written above. This we, all the undersigned heirs, concurring with one another are truly to abide by.
Should we or our children and heirs now or hereafter make any alterations or deviations therein, or make any claim or demand thereon, it is to be truly null and void; moreover, the authority for the management of the estate of the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased, whatever it may be, and the income of the villages in Salsette inclusive of Powai and the management and the taking care thereof, and for the management of the supply of water for charity from the Girgaon cart to the poor of the Kamathipura in Bombay belongs to us, Pestonji Framji and Nanabhoy Framji, the executors and heirs appointed in the said will of the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased; and in the event of the death of either of them, one of his sons and heirs is to be appointed by the other, and so, from generation to generation, who is to do all the business agreeably to what is written above.
Should any one die without appointing any one out of his sons as his heirs, then his eldest son, whoever he may be, is truly to join in conducting all the management on behalf of his father, agreeably to what is written above, and is truly to give and receive what is due to any from the other heirs appointed by this writing. Agreeably to what is written above no other heirs have any authority in this matter, and should any one whatsoever raise any claim or demand whatsoever thereon at any time it is truly to be null and void.

"14. As the late Sett Framji Cowasji, deceased, had himself no right either to sell or mortgage the villages and the estate in Salsette belonging to our patron the late Framji Cowasji, deceased, consequently none can ever exercise such a right over the same in any respect, but we, the undersigned heirs and our successive heirs, do agree that we are in no way able either now or at any time hereafter to sell or mortgage the said estate in Salseette. But in addition thereto, agreeably to what is written in the above paragraph in this writing, it is agreed that the claim of inheritance of us, the undersigned heirs of our patron the late Framji Cawasji, deceased, is to be received out of the income of this estate. As to that claim we, the undersigned, all the heirs of the late Sett Framji Cawasji, deceased, and our successive heirs, do agree that the claim of each of us separately over the above-mentioned income is not in any way to be sold or to be given in writing to any one now or hereafter by any one of us or any of our successive [360] heirs, and should any one do any such thing it shall truly be null and void. By this writing our respective shares after they shall have come into our hands may be used and enjoyed by us in any way we like; but agreeably to this writing we are not to sell or give away in writing our prospective income to anybody which we all are truly to agree to and abide by agreeably to this writing."

The present suit was based upon this family agreement, and the plaintiff prayed (inter alia) that the rights and interests of the plaintiffs and defendants under it might be ascertained and declared; that accounts might be taken and the estate distributed, &c., &c.

On the 24th February, 1872, the suit came on for hearing, and by consent it was declared that the parties were entitled to have the estate ascertained and distributed under the said family agreement and that the said agreement was binding upon them; and the matter was referred to the Commissioner to take the accounts and to ascertain and report as to the shares to which the parties were respectively entitled.

In 1873, Nanabhoj (a son of Framji Cawasji), one of the signatories to the said agreement, sold his share and interest in the estate to one Harivalabdas Kaliandas, and the question shortly afterwards arose as to the nature and extent of the interest taken by Nanabhoj and the other signatories under the agreement. In 1881 the question came before Bayley, J., who held that under the terms of the agreement the signatories took only a life-interest in their respective shares (see Mithibai v. Limji Nowroji Banaj (1). On appeal that decision was confirmed (2).

The taking of accounts was subsequently proceeded with, and on the 14th July, 1884, the Commissioner made his report. As already mentioned, Nanabhoj, one of the signatories to the agreement, had sold his interest to Harivalabdas Kaliandas, who had since died, and the right to Nanabhoj's share had devolved on Narandas Kaliandas, the brother of Harivalabdas. Narandas filed exceptions to the report, raising the question as to the devolution of the shares specified in the agreement subsequently to the life-interests of the signatories thereto. The matter came again before Bayley, J., who on the 1st March, 1887, [361] held that the limitations in the agreement subsequent to the life-interests given thereby to the signatories were void as infringing the rule against perpetuities, and that consequently there was a resulting trust of the respective shares to the heirs of Framji Cawasji.

The following are extracts from his judgment:

"On the argument of the exceptions before me it was contended by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of Narandas Kaliandas that, assuming Nanabhoj Framji only took a life-estate, everything beyond that is bad as tending to create a perpetuity; in other words, that the true intent of the parties to the agreement of the 24th May, 1851, was not to dispose of the estate itself, but to enable them and their descendants to enjoy the profits of the Powai estate in Salsette for ever; whilst Mr. Lang and Mr. Starling on behalf of their respective clients urged that the parties intended to divide the estate itself among themselves and their descendants, and consequently that those who come immediately after the respective life tenants took absolute estates equivalent to estates in fee simple.

The point for decision appears to present no serious difficulty, the manifest intention to be collected from the provisions of the family agreement of 24th May, 1851, being, in my opinion, quite clear.

"The learned Advocate-General, on behalf of the defendant Narandas Kaliandas, relied strongly on the decision in March, 1885, of the Privy Council in the case of Sookhnoy Chunder Dass v. Srimati Monohurri (1) where, it appearing that a Hindu testator's intention was that his estate itself should not be disposed of, but to make a gift simply with reference to the enjoyment of profits, the object being to create a perpetuity as regards the estate and to limit for an indefinite period the enjoyment of the profits, it was held that by Hindu law the whole will was invalid. Their Lordships say at pages 109 and 110: 'It is true, if the bequest had been of rents and profits, and it appeared that it was the intention of the testator to pass the estate, those words would be sufficient to do it; but what their Lordships have to do is to find the intention, looking at the whole of the provisions of the will; and they gather from those words that it was not his intention to pass the estate. The provision afterwards against alienation further confirms this. It is not a case where the testator has expressed an intention to pass the estate, has added a clause against alienation, in which case the clause against alienation would be void, but the provision here against alienation is confirmatory of the other part of the will.' In the agreement here there is also a clause against alienation —cl. 14, which has the following terms. [His Lordship read cl. 14 (2) and continued.]

"All that the signatories and their heirs are to receive is the remaining income of the Powai estate after the yearly burthen imposed by the trusts, which are [362] to continue for ever, have been discharged. The agreement does not pass or give away the estate to any one. That had, in the opinion of the signatories, been already vested by the trust deeds in the trustees. Assuming, therefore, as after the decision in the Court of Appeal this Court is bound to assume, that the parties to the agreement of the 24th May, 1851, took life interests in the property mentioned, the question arises whether all the limitations, subsequent to such life interests, are not void as infringing the rule against perpetuities which, it is contended, is applicable to the Parsi signatories to that document. As the Judges of the Court of Appeal said (I. L. R., 6 Bom., at p. 164) in the present case
'the lands are outside the jurisdiction of the High Court and the question is as to the construction to be placed on an agreement entered into by persons assumed to be the heirs of the testator'; at p. 162 they said: 'As the contract relates to immovable property outside the territorial juridication of this Court, the rights of the parties must, according to the well established rule, be determined by the lex loci rei sitae. This rule would be applicable both as forming part of the English law which, as stated by the Chief Justice in Nowroji v. Rogers (3), has always been the law applic-cable to Parsis in this Court, subject to certain statutory and other exceptions or as the well established rule of jurisprudence adopted by all.

writers on the subject. Much learned argument was addressed to us as to what is the lex loci of the mofussil. We do not, however, think it necessary to come to any distinct conclusion on this question which has occupied the attention of so many learned Judges with such varied results. In the view we take of this case, it becomes unnecessary to determine whether there be any lex loci properly so called in the mofussil, or if there be, whether it is the English law in some modified form or the regulations; as we cannot doubt that even assuming English law to be the lex loci in the mofussil, or that at any rate it must be applied in this Court in the absence of any lex loci, the English law so to be applied cannot include the rule in Shelley's case.'" * * * *

"Now in the recent argument before this Court neither Mr. Lang nor Mr. Starling suggested the existence of any Act of Parliament or regulation or any special law or usage applicable to lands held by Parsis in the island of Salsette. The main question debated was, did the parties to the agreement of the 24th May, 1851, intend and purport by it to dispose of and divide the Pawai estate itself, or did they intend and purport by it to divide the profit and increment of it among themselves and their descendents? It appears to me, therefore, that I have to ascertain whether according to English law, or rather according to so much of it as is administered to Parsis in this Court, effect can be given to the evident intention of the parties to be collected from the various portions of the agreement itself. After giving the matter the best consideration in my power, I entertain no doubt that all the limitations of the remaining income of the villages in Salsette inclusive of Pawai after the life interests therein given to the signatories of the agreement of the 24th May, 1851, are illegal and void as infringing the rule against perpetuities, a rule which in my opinion is applicable to the agreement in question and to that portion of the income of the estate in Salsette with which it professes to deal. * * *

"For the above reasons and applying the principles of the authorities I have cited, as far as they are applicable to the circumstances of the case before me, and adopting, as I am bound to do, the decision of the Court of Appeal in February, 1852, that those who signed the agreement of the 24th May, 1851, took under it life interests, I hold that all the subsequent limitations are void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. The consequence is that after such life interests there was a resulting trust in favour of the signatories to that document, or, to speak more accurately, in favour of the heirs of Framji Cawasji (who, as presently to be noticed, died intestate as to the Salsette estate) as declared by the agreement of the 24th May, 1851, and by the consent decretal order of the 24th February, 1872, by which decretal order it is declared that the agreement dated the 24th May, 1851, in the plaint in this suit mentioned was and is now a binding and valid agreement between the parties thereto and doth order and decree the same accordingly. As pointed out in my former judgment (L.R., 5 Bom. 509), neither the will nor the codicil of Framji Cawasji contained any general devise of his residuary estate, and there were no words in either of those documents sufficiently large to include the Pawai estate! As to that estate he consequently died intestate. * * * *

"The defendant Narandas Kaliandas, as the present assignee of the share of Nanabhoy Framji, will, of course, take all that Nanabhoy Framji would have taken or may hereafter be found entitled to take as one of the heirs of Framji Cawasji. The third objection taken by Narandas Kaliandas to the report of the Acting Commissioner must accordingly be allowed."
His Lordship directed certain further accounts to be taken and referred the matter back to the Commissioner.

On the 29th April, 1895, the Commissioner made his final report, which was confirmed by the Court on the 16th June, 1896.

The case came before the Court (Tyabji, J.) on further directions and costs on the 12th November, 1896, and the final decree was made.

The appellants appealed on the following grounds:—

1. That the said decree is erroneous, inasmuch as it was based on the order of the Honourable Mr. Justice Bayley made herein on the 1st day of March, 1887, against which order the appellants herein desire to complain.

2. That the said order is wrong in that it declares that the limitations in the family agreement of the 24th May, 1851, subsequent to the life interests of the signatories, are null and void, and that there was a resulting trust in favour of the heirs of Framji Cowasji, deceased, as declared by the said agreement in respect of the estate, created under such void limitations.

3. That the said subsequent limitations ought not to have been held to be void in toto.

4. That it ought to have been held that the signatories to the said agreement were not entitled to any further interest or estate in the subject-matter of the said agreement over and above their life estate secured to them by the said agreement.

5. That it ought to have been declared that on the death of each of the signatories of the said agreement, his or her heirs became absolutely entitled to the corpus of the property in which the deceased signatory had a life estate.

6. That it ought to have been declared that no signatory had any right to affect the corpus of his or her original share under the said agreement by a will or testamentary writing.

Some of the plaintiffs filed cross-objections to the decree.

Starling and Jardine, for the appellants.—This appeal is really against the order made by Bayley, J., on 1st March, 1887, although in form against the final decree of the 12th November, 1896. We contend that there was no resulting trust after the life estates given to the signatories as held by Bayley, J., but that after the life estates the heirs of the signatories took the respective shares in fee under the terms of the family arrangement of 1851. They cited Thakur Harihar Buksh v. Uman Pershad (1); In re Ridley; Buckton v. Hay (2).

Lang (Advocate-General) and Lowndes for some of the respondents contended that an appeal from the order of Bayley, J., in 1887 was too late. They cited Rahimbhoy v. C. A. Turner (3). On the main question they cited Carne v. Long (4); Thomson v. Shakespear (5).

Mankar and J.E. Modi, for other respondents, cited Sookhmoy Chunder v. Srinuit Monchurri (6); Ganendro Mohun Tagore v. Juttendro Mohun Tagore (7).

Robertson and Davar for other respondents cited Theobald on Wills, p. 482.

Jardine, in reply as to the right to appeal, referred to Mahant Ishwarragh v. Chudasama Amarsang (8); Aben v. Cassirao (9).
JUDGMENT.

Farran, C.J.—The principal question which has been argued before us upon this appeal is whether the declaration in the order of Mr. Justice Bayley of the 1st March, 1887, "that the limitations in the family agreement of 24th May, 1851, contained subsequent to the life interest of the signatories to the said agreement in the Powai estate, were and are void, and that there is a resulting trust in favour of the heirs of Framji Cowasji, deceased, as declared by the said agreement in respect of the estate created under such void limitations," is a correct declaration of the rights of the persons described in the family agreement as the "heirs and children" of the signatories to it.

The order in which the above declaration is contained was made upon objections to a report of the Commissioner on matters referred to him by the decretal order of the 24th February, 1872. It directed additional inquiries and accounts. These inquiries and accounts were accordingly taken, and their result was embodied in a report dated the 29th April, 1895. A decree upon further directions was passed upon that report. The learned Judge who passed the decree adopted the declaration to which we have referred and passed the decree in accordance with it, deeming that it was binding upon him as the decision of a Judge of co-ordinate jurisdiction. The present appeal is from that decree in form, but in substance it seeks to review the declaration made by the order of the 1st March, 1887.

A preliminary objection arises and has been taken that the appeal does not lie, inasmuch as it ought to have been made from the order of the 1st March, 1887 (which would be now too late) and not from the decree which adopts the order and its consequences. We think that the appeal lies in its present form. The original decretal order referring the suit to the Commissioner was doubtless a decree within the terms of s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), but the last separate order made subsequent thereto, giving directions to the Commissioner as to the mode in which he shall carry out the original decretal order even though it may direct further and additional inquiries, is, in our opinion, an order to which the provisions of s. 891 of the present Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) are applicable. The case of Hirji Jinna v. Narain Muli (1) was decided under the Code of 1859. The term decree is now precisely defined, and does not appear to us to embrace the order with which we are dealing.

The clause in the agreement of the 24th May, 1851, upon which our decision rests is as follows (His Lordship read cl. 11 (2) and continued):— It appears from this and other clauses of the agreement that at its date the Powai estate was vested in trustees for the purpose of keeping up a supply of water for the use of the poor of Kamathipura and was also subject to a charge in favour of a fire temple. The signatories to the agreement, therefore, appear to have considered that they could only deal with the surplus income of the estate, and this is all as to which they purport to agree; but as the agreement is of an executory character which it was intended to have carried out by a formal instrument, we cannot doubt that it is operative to affect whatever interest in the Powai estate the signatories at its date possessed subject to the trusts declared by the charitable deeds.

The scheme of the agreement was to divide this income into shares and to allot his or her proper share in such income to the several heirs of Framji Cowasji, the signatories to the deed. This, which is we think sufficiently apparent from the terms of the 11th clause, is made still clearer by those of the 14th clause, which speaks of the manner in which the respective shares of the signatories are to be used and employed. It has already been definitely decided by the appellate Court that each of the signatories to the agreement took only an estate for life in his share. The question which remains for us to determine is whether the signatories have sufficiently indicated their intention as to who are to take their respective shares upon the death of each, and, if so, whether legal effect can be given to their intention.

[367] The clause provides that after their death their shares are to be enjoyed and received by "their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever." Having regard to the context which we have referred to, this must necessarily mean that the share of each signatory is to be enjoyed by "his heirs and children from generation to generation for ever." The clause must, therefore, we think, be read as though the word "respective" preceded the expression "heirs and children."

Each share is thus settled upon each signatory for life and after his death upon his "heirs and children," the latter words being, as already decided, words of purchase and not of limitation. The question arises what estate do the "heirs and children" take. We cannot doubt that, unless the subsequent context plainly shows that they were intended to take less, they must be held to take an absolute estate. This is the usual—we might, we think, say the invariable—way in which an estate of inheritance is given in Indian documents. The case of Thakur Harihar Buksh v. Uman Pershad (1) relied upon by Mr. Starling is an authoritative ruling to that effect, as is also the case of Ram Lal Mookerjee v. Secretary of State (2). Mr. Lowndes contends that the expression "from generation to generation" usually employed to describe the quantum of estate given to the donee has a different meaning when the gift is expressed to be in favour of "heirs" from that which it bears when it is in favour of a named person, but he has not cited any authority in support of that contention, and we know of none. We think that a gift to the heirs of A from generation to generation confers upon them when ascertained exactly the same estate as if the gift were to X and Y, the heirs of A nominatim.

We have now to see whether the subsequent context shows that the limitation in favour of the "heirs and children" of each signatory is not intended to be given here its usual effect, but to limit them to some lesser or different estate. It is immediately followed by a direction that they are not to give it away to an improper person, and in a subsequent clause the same provision is repeated in the form of a covenant: "we, the undersigned, all the heirs of Seth Framji Cowasji, deceased, and our successive heirs [368] do agree that the claim of each of us separately over the above-mentioned income is not in any way to be sold or to be given in writing to any one now or hereafter by any of us or any of our successive heirs." This provision, it may be admitted, shows an intention on the part of the signatories that their several heirs shall not dispose of the shares which shall devolve upon them respectively, but that such shares shall be inalienable in their hands, and thus to create a perpetuity. Following, however, as the provision does, words of absolute gift its effect is nil.

(1) 14 I.A. 7.  (2) 8 I.A. 46.
It is repugnant to the gift and may be altogether disregarded. This provision does not appear to us to give support to the contention that the earlier words are not used in their ordinary signification.

The limitation which follows this provision is, however, much relied upon as showing that the intention of the settlers was that their heirs should not take absolute estates, but only successive life estates. The limitation is that should any one of the heirs die without issue, his share is to pass to the other heirs. This appears to be an attempt to create an estate tail in the heirs. The limitation over, however, fails in toto, as it offends against the law of perpetuities, and the result is that the heirs take the estate free from the limitations—Carver v. Bowles (1); Ring v. Hardwick (2); Theobald, 4th Ed., p. 487. Such a limitation would be valid in England, where estates can be limited in tail, but that is only because estates tail are there always barrable: see Theobald, 4th Ed., p. 478, and cases there cited.

Analyze the clause and it will be found to amount to this: (1) a settlement on the heirs of each signatory from generation to generation for ever,—in other words, a settlement of an absolute estate upon them; (2) a provision against alienation which is absolutely void; (3) a limitation over upon the failure of heirs in any line, which is also void.

The settlement in favour of the heirs and children of each signatory is, therefore, in law, we think, a valid settlement, and is not, as held by the Division Court, void as creating a perpetuity. Its signatories may have had that object in view, but they have failed to use apt words to effect it. Our conclusion upon this (369) part of the case is, we think, in accordance with the rules of construction laid down by the Privy Council in Lalit Mohun v. Chukkun Lai (3), the report of which case has been published since our judgment was written. A careful perusal of the judgment of their Lordships delivered by Lord Davey strengthens our view as to the correctness of the construction of the agreement of 1851 which we have adopted.

It is, however, objected for the respondents that the limitation to "the heirs and children" of each signatory is too ambiguous to be given effect to, and that the settlement in their favour for that reason fails. Later on in the same clause "children and heirs" is used as the exact equivalent of the phrase "heirs and children," and in cl. 14 the word "heirs" is used singly in the same sense. It appears to us that they have all the same meaning, viz., children and other heirs. The signatories describe themselves as the "heirs" of Framji Cowasji. They were his children and other heirs. The children of living children do not sign, but those of deceased children do, and so does his widow. The context affords a glossary explanatory of this expression. There can, we think, be no doubt as to who are the settlers meant by this phrase "heirs and children," or how they were intended to take.

We are for these reasons of opinion that the decision of the lower Court upon this question cannot be supported, and that the children and other heirs of the respective settlers are entitled to the respective shares settled upon them. Who are to take the respective shares of the settlers who are still living, cannot be determined until after their respective deaths.

As to the cross-objections made on behalf of the plaintiff, (His Lordship then gave directions in accordance with the above decision as to the

Before Mr. Justice Fulton.

PHEROZSHA PESTONJI RANDERIA (Plaintiff) v. THE SUN
MILLS, LIMITED (Defendants).* [4th December, 1897.]

Decree—Rectifying decree—Practice—Procedure.

By a written agreement the defendants agreed to purchase from the plaintiff certain land comprising 5,280 square yards or thereabouts at the rate of Rs. 1.16 per square yard. The sum of Rs. 1,000 was paid on the date of the agreement in part payment of the price. The plaintiff sued for specific performance of the agreement. The plaint set forth the facts and the part payment, and prayed that the defendant might be ordered specifically to perform the agreement and to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the purchase money, viz., the sum of Rs. 4,475. On the 9th September, 1897, judgment was given for the plaintiff ordering "specific performance as prayed and costs." The decree was accordingly drawn up in terms of the prayer of the plaint. It was afterwards discovered that the sum mentioned in the prayer (viz., Rs. 4,475), and inserted in the decree, was incorrect, and ought to have been Rs. 4,775, the latter being the real balance due at the rate mentioned in the agreement after deducting the Rs. 1,000 paid as earnest. On 6th November, 1897, the plaintiff gave notice of motion to rectify the decree by altering the figure Rs. 4,475 to Rs. 4,775. On motion to rectify the decree,

Held, that the decree should be rectified.

[F., 4 Ind. Cas. 231—5 N.L.R. 159.]

APPLICATION to rectify the decree passed on the 9th September, 1897.

[371] The suit was for the specific performance of an agreement dated the 17th July, 1896, whereby the defendants agreed to purchase from the plaintiff a certain piece of land situate at Byculla in Bombay.

The material part of the agreement was as follows:—

"1. Pheroza Pestojni Randeria, agree to sell and we, The Sun Mills, Limited, agree to purchase, the hereditaments described in the schedule hereof and the inheritance thereof in fee simple in possession at the rate of one rupee one anna and six pice per square yard.

"2. The purchasers have this day paid rupees one thousand to the vendors as earnest and in part payment of the purchase-money."
The schedule referred to was as follows:—

"All that piece or parcel of Government land or ground situate, lying and being on the Ferguson Road without the Fort of Bombay in the occupation of the vendor's tenants containing by admeasurement (5,280) five thousand two hundred and eighty square yards or thereabouts, registered in the books of the Collector of Land Revenue under Collector's old Nos. 654, 690 and Collector's new No. 12634, and bounded as follows, &c., &c."

The plaint set forth the facts and prayed as follows:—

"(a) That the defendant-company may be decreed specifically to perform the said contract of the 17th July, 1896, and to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the said purchase-money, viz., the sum of Rs. 4,475."

The suit was duly heard, and on the 9th September, 1897, judgment was given for the plaintiff ordering "specific performance as prayed, and costs." The decree was accordingly drawn up in the terms of the prayer of the plaint.

It was subsequently discovered that the sum mentioned in the prayer of the plaint (viz., Rs. 4,475) and inserted in the decree was incorrect, and ought to have been Rs. 4,775, the latter being the real balance of purchase-money due to the plaintiff under the contract for 5,280 square yards at the rate of Rs. 1-1-6 per square yard after deducting Rs. 1,000 paid as earnest.

On the 4th October, 1897, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the solicitors of the defendants:—

"On examining the decree herein, we observe that the decree directs the defendant to specifically perform the contract and to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 4,475 as the balance of the purchase-money.

[372] We have, however, discovered that the amount of balance of purchase-money mentioned in the decree is not correct. The correct figure is Rs. 4,775 as follows:—5,280 square yards, at Rs. 1-1-6 per square yard, amounts to Rs. 5,775, and deducting Rs. 1,000 paid as earnest-money the balance is Rs. 4,775 and not Rs. 4,475. We find that the figure 4,475 was copied in prayer A of the plaint by a clerical error and from the plaint it has found its way into the decree.

"We, therefore, propose to apply to Mr. Justice Fulton in chambers to correct the mistake and request you will let us know if you will consent to such correction being made.

"An early reply is requested."

"Yours truly,
"LITTLE & Co."

The defendants' solicitors replied by a letter of 4th November, 1897:—

"We are in receipt of your letter about the decree.

"Your client asked for a decree for a specified sum and has got it. If he had asked for more we would have considered the matter. Our instructions are to oppose any application you may make in the matter.

"Yours truly,
"HIRALAL, MULLA AND MULLA."

On the 6th November, 1897, the plaintiff's solicitors gave notice that they would move to rectify the decree by altering the figures Rs. 4,475 to Rs. 4,775.

Anderson, for the plaintiff.—We seek to rectify merely a clerical error. It is not disputed that the land we sold was 5,280 square yards in extent.
or that the rate at which it was sold was Re. 1-1-6. That was the contract between the parties. The decree ordered specific performance of that contract, and we are entitled to the sum we now ask for, although by mistake we inserted a smaller sum in the plaint. We are willing to have the land measured. Counsel referred to the Annual Practice for 1895, p. 596; Barker v. Purvis (1); In re Tylor’s Estate (2).

Stirling, for the defendant.—The decree is in accordance with the plaint. The plaint cannot be amended after decree. What is really sought is a review of judgment, but that is barred by limitation, and it is doubtful if a judgment can be reviewed which involves an amendment of the plaint. I am not instructed to [373] admit that 5,280 square yards were sold. What was really sold was land-bounded as described in the schedule, believed to be about 5,280 yards. The plaintiff’s own figures must be accepted, and he cannot now alter them.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—This suit was brought by the plaintiff for specific performance of a contract by the defendants for the purchase of a piece of land.

The plaint referred to the agreement of the 17th July, 1896, of which a copy was annexed. It recited that the plaintiff had received Rs. 1,000 by way of earnest-money and in part payment of the purchase-money and after stating that the defendants had neglected and refused to carry out the contract, prayed that they might be decreed specifically to perform the said contract of the 17th July, 1896, and to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the said purchase-money, viz., the sum of Rs. 4,475.

The contract contained an agreement by the defendants to purchase at a rate of Re. 1-1-6 per square yard land within certain specified boundaries containing by admeasurement 5,280 square yards or thereabouts.

At the hearing objections were taken to the plaintiff’s title, but no question was raised as to the area of the land or the amount of the balance due.

On the 9th September, judgment was given for the plaintiff. The judgment delivered was oral, and the note in my note-book was as follows:—

“Decree for specific performance as prayed, and costs.”

On this the decree was drawn up in the terms of the prayer of the plaint.

The plaintiff has now moved to amend the decree by substituting Rs. 4,775 for Rs. 4,475. The reasons for this amendment are contained in his solicitors’ letter to the solicitors of the defendants dated the 4th October. It is obvious that assuming the area of the land to be 5,280 square yards the balance due to the plaintiff is Rs. 4,775, and the item of Rs. 4,475 was entered in the plaint through a clerical error.

[374] In argument it was not alleged that the land was less than 5,280 square yards, though no admission was made as to its real area. The objections to the proposed amendment are of a technical nature. It was said that there was no error in the decree, which was according to the judgment and awarded the plaintiff all he asked for in the plaint. If the judgment was wrong, a review, it was urged, ought to have been applied for; but it was clear that the error, if any, was in the plaint itself.

The argument, I think, is not quite sound. The essential part of the judgment was that the defendant was specifically to perform his contract; and it is clear that, if the decree contains mention of a sum of rupees the payment of which will not amount to performance of the contract, it does not correctly represent the intention of the judgment. It seems to me to be of little consequence that the error arose from the plaintiff's own mistake in his plaint. A perusal of the contract which is referred to in the plaint shows that the prayer for the specific performance and the prayer for payment of Rs. 4,475 are inconsistent. Similarly, the decree is inconsistent, and the portion of it directing payment of Rs. 4,475 is at variance with the judgment directing specific performance of the contract.

The case seems to me to be somewhat analogous to that of Karim Mahomed v. Rajooma (1), and in the circumstances, I think, the plaintiff has taken the proper course in moving for a correction of the decree. After all, procedure is merely subservient to justice, and to the present case, I think, I may appropriately apply the words of Lindley, L. J., quoted by Sir C. Sargent: "If an order as passed and entered does not express the real order of the Court, it would, as it appears to me, be shocking to say that the party aggrieved cannot come here to have the record set right (2)."

In the present case there can be no question that my intention was to direct specific performance and that is the intention which must be given effect to by the decree. The prayer in the plaint for payment of Rs. 4,475 was really superfluous, and so was the direction in the decree to pay that precise sum.

[375] The contract binds the defendants to pay for the land at the rate of Rs. 1-1-6 per square yard and the decree must be amended by striking out the words "the sum of Rs. 4,475 being" in the last line of the first page of the decree. If the defendants really dispute the amount of the balance due and the plaintiff has to come to the Court for execution of the decree, the area will have to be measured, doubtless at the risk as to costs of the party who is found to be mistaken on the point.

Looking to the grounds on which the defendants have resisted any amendment of the decree, and their conduct in reference thereto as shown by the correspondence, I think that they must pay the costs of this motion.

Second appeal from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana with appellate powers, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb G. A. Bhat, Subordinate Judge of Mahad.

Suit for redemption. The plaintiffs alleged that they had mortgaged the land in question by deed, dated 5th December, 1883, for five years to the defendants' father (deceased) for Rs. 300; that in December, 1893, they offered to redeem the lands, but the defendants [376] replied that the term fixed was fifty years and not five. The plaintiffs alleged that the mortgagee in collusion with the writer of the deed had fraudulently inserted the words fifty years in the deed.

The deed contained the following clause binding the mortgagors to pay off the mortgage-debt whenever the mortgagee should demand it:—

"Should you (mortgagee) for any reason not wish to carry on the management of the mortgaged property, then either before the time or thereafter (that is to say whenever you may demand your money) I will pay off the whole amount according to the above agreement. Should I not pay the same, you are to recover the same in full from the mortgaged property."

The defendants pleaded that the mortgage term was fifty years and that the suit was premature.

The Subordinate Judge found that the term fixed in the deed was five years and not fifty. He, therefore, directed the plaintiffs to redeem the lands on payment of Rs. 450 to the defendants.

On appeal by the defendants, the Judge reversed the decree, holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to redeem, the term for redemption fixed in the mortgage being fifty years.

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Kalabhai Lallubhai, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The conditions of the mortgage are oppressive and inequitable. The term of fifty years makes the transaction virtually a sale. Further, the rights of foreclosure and redemption are not co-extensive. The mortgagors are left entirely at the mercy of the creditor. He is empowered to call in his money at any time either before or after the stipulated term, and the mortgagors are not to redeem till he makes a demand for the money. Such a transaction cannot stand—Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam Zilani (1).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The mortgage before us contains the following clause:—"Should you for any reason not wish to carry on the management of the mortgaged property, then either before the time or thereafter (that is to say, whenever you may demand your [377] money) I will pay off the whole amount according to the above agreement. Should I not pay the same, you are to recover the same in full from the mortgaged property." The effect of such a stipulation has been considered in Sayad Abdul Hak v. Gulam Zilani (1), and it has been there held that the stipulation postponing the mortgagor's right to redeem beyond the time when the mortgagee can call in his money is inoperative. The present case shows the desirability of such a rule. What advantage can it possibly be to the ladies here that they should be able to redeem after fifty years and remain all that time liable to pay the mortgage-money whenever it may please the mortgagee to demand it.

As the appeal before the Subordinate Judge, First Class, A.P., was heard ex parte, his attention was not called to the above ruling. No reasons have been assigned before us why we should not follow it. We consider, therefore, that we are bound to do so.

We must reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the appeal that he may take the accounts and allow plaintiffs to redeem on the usual terms. Costs, costs in the cause.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

BALVANT GANESH OZE (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [6th August, 1896.]

Irrigation Act (Bom. Act VII of 1879), s. 49 (2)—Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Act X of 1876), s. 4 (b) (3)—Water-rate—Incidence—Land revenue—Canal water—Percolation of the water—Opinion of the canal officer—Civil Courts—Jurisdiction.

Where water-rate is levied under s. 48 of the Irrigation Act (Bom. Act VII of 1879), the question as to the jurisdiction of civil Courts in a suit for the determination of the legality or otherwise of such levy, depends upon

* Appeal No. 22 of 1895.

(1) 20 B. 477.
(2) Section 48 of the Irrigation Act (Bom. Act VII of 1879):—
48. If it shall appear to a canal officer duly empowered to enforce the provisions of this section, that any cultivated land within two hundred yards of any canal [378] receives, by percolation or leakage from such canal, an advantage equivalent to that which would be given by a direct supply of canal water for irrigation, or that any cultivated land, wherever situated, derives by a surface flow, or by means of a well sunk within two hundred yards of any canal after the admission of water into such canal, a supply of water which has percolated or leaked from such canal, he may charge on such land a water-rate not exceeding that which would ordinarily have been charged for a similar direct supply to land similarly cultivated.

For the purposes of this Act, land charged under this section shall be deemed to be land irrigated from a canal.

(3) Section 4 (b) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act—(Act X of 1876):—
whether the incidence of the rate is authorized by the provisions of the section. Under it, the condition precedent to levying the rate is not the fact ascertained by evidence whether the water in dispute has percolated from the canal, but the opinion of the canal officer that it has so percolated, he and not the civil Court being made the judge of such percolation for the purposes of the Act.

Such water-rate falls within the denomination of land revenue.

Appeal from decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona.

Suit to recover Rs. 115-3-0 paid by the plaintiff under protest as water-rate levied on him for two years (1889-90, 1890-91) and for an injunction restraining Government from levying such rate for the future.

The plaintiff was the owner of certain land in the Poona District, near which was a nala. Across this nala the plaintiff had built a dam in order to collect the water flowing from the hills which he conducted to his land by a channel constructed by himself and used for the purpose of irrigating his crops. The water flowed from the nala to the land by gravitation.

The plaintiff's land was at some distance from the main branch of the Government irrigation canal (the Mutha Right Bank [379] Canal), but was about 200 yards distant from its nearest distributing channel.

The plaintiff complained that he had been charged water-rate under s. 48 of the Irrigation Act (Bom. Act VII of 1879), on the ground that the nala and his land were supplied with water which percolated from the said canal. He denied that this was the case, and he alleged that the water-rate was, therefore, improperly levied upon him. He prayed that the defendant should be ordered to repay the sum (Rs. 115-3-0) for two years which he (the plaintiff) had paid under protest, and that an injunction should be granted restraining the defendant from levying it. The suit was filed on 12th September, 1893.

The defendant pleaded that as the plaintiff had paid the money on the 25th July, 1891, the suit was barred by limitation under art. 16 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877); that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under s. 4 (3) of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876); that the water taken by the plaintiff from the nala was water which came from the irrigation canal, which was only 200 yards from the plaintiff's land, and that s. 48 of the Irrigation Act applied.

The District Judge of Poona dismissed the suit. He held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain it, but on the merits he held that the nala was supplied by water which percolated from the canal, and that s. 48 of the Irrigation Act applied. As to the claim of Rs. 115-3-0, he held that it was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff appealed.

Inverarity (with Shivram V. Bhandarkar), for the appellant (plaintiff).—The Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and he decided it against us also on the merits. We contend that the nala does not get water by percolation from the canal, and supposing that it does, still we would not be liable to pay assessment under the Irrigation Act for taking water from the nala. When water is collected by a dam in

---

1. Subject to the exceptions hereinafter appearing, no civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction as to any of the following matters:—

(b) objections—

1. to the amount or incidence of any assessment of land revenue authorized by Government, or

2. to the mode of assessment, or to the principle on which such assessment is fixed, or a nala, and when it is thence carried by some artificial means, it ceases to be "surface flow."

Rao Sahib Vasudev J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the respondent (defendant).—Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to [380] entertain a suit like the present under s. 4 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Act X of 1876). In the present case the rate was authorized by Government.

[FARRAN, C.J.—The question is whether the rate was authorized.] We submit that it was—Waman v. Collector of Poona (1).

At this stage of the hearing the Court framed the following issue, and sent it back to the Judge for his finding:

"Did the water flow directly by gravitation from the dammed up nala through a channel on to the plaintiff’s land, or was it raised from the nala by artificial means and so caused to flow by a channel on to the land of the plaintiff?"

The finding of the Judge was that the water flowed directly by gravitation from the dammed up nala through a channel on to the plaintiff’s land.

Branson (with Shrivam V. Bhandarkar), for the appellant (plaintiff).—It was urged that there is percolation going on, but it is impossible to say whether the percolation is from the canal or the field channel. The defendant must show that the water in the nala is the percolated water from the canal and the field channel and from no other source. If the nala contains water from any other source, then the levy of assessment from us would be illegal. The water is first collected in the nala by a dam and then we take it to our field by cutting a channel. Under these circumstances it is impossible to uphold the levy of water-rate under s. 48 of the Irrigation Act. That section relates to a direct surface flow of water which has leaked or percolated.

We have produced affidavits to show that the water does not percolate.

Rao Sahib Vasudev J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Poona. The circumstances under which it is brought are these. The plaintiff is the owner or occupant of Survey No. 24 in the village of Loni Kalbhar. A nala from the [381] hills lying to the south of Loni passes close to the field. The plaintiff has constructed a dam across this nala behind which water collects. Thence it is led by means of a channel constructed by the plaintiff to the field in question where it is used by him for the purpose of irrigating his sugar cane crops. The water flows by gravitation only without being raised for the purpose from the dammed nala to the field. In respect of the water thus reaching the plaintiff’s field the canal officer empowered to enforce the provisions of s. 48 of "The Bombay Irrigation Act, 1879" has charged the plaintiff under that section with a "water-rate not exceeding that which would ordinarily have been charged for a similar direct supply" (from a canal) "to land similarly cultivated." The land of the plaintiff though at a considerable distance from the main branch of the Mutha Right Bank Canal is within 200 yards of its nearest distributing channel. The distributing channel is, however, included by the force of s. 3 of the Act within the term "canal." The plaintiff's land is thus brought within 200 yards of the canal.

The plaintiff filed the present suit on the 12th September, 1893, to recover the sum of Rs. 115-3-0 paid by him, under protest, to Government on the 25th July, 1891, as water-rate levied for the years 1889-90 and 1890-1891, in respect of his above survey number and for a declaration that Government is not entitled to demand from him Rs. 57-9-6 per annum on that account and for an injunction to restrain Government from levying it in future.

The main defences raised on behalf of the defendant were (1) that the suit was barred by limitation; (2) that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under s. 4 of Act X of 1876, and (3) that the nala dammed by the plaintiff derived the water used by the plaintiff from the field water-courses supplied by the canal, the plaintiff's land being within 200 yards from the canal; and that the case fell within the provisions of s. 48 of the Act.

The lower Court has found that the plaintiff's claim to recover the money paid under protest is barred under art. 16 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, but that the claim for a declaration and injunction is not time-barred. There has been no appeal upon that part of the case, which we do not, therefore, further consider.

The question whether the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the claim depends upon the construction and effect of s. 4 of Act X of 1876, which enacts that "subject to the exceptions hereinafter appearing no civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction as to (b) objections to the amount or incidence of any assessment of land revenue authorized by Government or to the mode of assessment or to the principle upon which such assessment is fixed, &c." It is not contended before us that the water-rate in question is not land revenue, and in Waman v. Collector of Poona (1) it has been ruled that it falls within that denomination, and so it appears to us that it does. The contention of the plaintiff on this point is that, even assuming the water in the nala behind the dam to be derived by leakage or percolation from the Government canal, the canal officer was not authorized to levy a water-rate upon his land, as the case is not one which falls under the provisions of Bombay Act VII of 1879, s. 48, which is the only law under which such a rate can be levied from him. It is not suggested that independently of the Act, Government has authorized or could authorize the levy of this water-rate from the plaintiff, nor has Government directed that the water-rate should have this particular incidence unless it falls within the scope of the s. 48.

Assuming, then, that the rate being authorized by s. 48 of the Act is a rate authorized by Government (as its amount certainly is), the question of jurisdiction appears to us to depend upon whether the incidence of the rate upon the plaintiff's land is authorized by Government, or, in other words, by the provisions of s. 48. If it can fall within those provisions, or within the authorization by Government, the jurisdiction of the civil Courts is, it appears to us, ousted. If it does not fall within that authorization, or within those provisions, the levy of the rate is illegal, and the jurisdiction of the civil Courts is preserved. We proceed, therefore, to consider whether the levy (383) of this rate from the plaintiff is authorized by the provisions of s. 48 of the Bombay Irrigation Act of 1879.

The plaintiff contends that the water in the nala behind the dam is not derived by percolation or leakage from the Government "canal," but comes from another source. The District Judge has raised an issue upon that contention, which he has found against the plaintiff and in favour of Government. Counsel for the appellant before us was anxious to be allowed to refute that finding and asked leave to put in affidavits or to adduce evidence before this Court to the effect that the result of the sinking of certain trial pits showed clearly, if not conclusively, that the opinion formed by the canal authorities as to the source of the water in the nala was erroneous and that it was really filled from sources independent of the canal water. We have not ourselves formed an opinion upon this question, nor have we allowed the affidavits to be put in, because it appears to us that the authority to levy the rate does not depend upon whether the plaintiff's land is, in the judgment of the civil Court founded upon the evidence before it, irrigated with canal water, but depends upon the opinion formed on that question by the canal officer. The words of the section are:—"If it shall appear to a canal officer * * * that any cultivated land within 200 yards of any canal receives by percolation or leakage from such canal an advantage, &c., or that any cultivated land wherever situate receives by a surface flow a supply of water which has percolated or leaked from such canal * * * he may charge on such land a water-rate not exceeding that which would ordinarily have been charged for a similar direct supply to land similarly cultivated." The condition precedent to levying the rate is not the fact ascertained by evidence whether the water in dispute has percolated from the canal, but the opinion of the canal officer that it has so percolated. He and not the civil Court is made the judge of such percolation for the purposes of the Act.

Now in this case it has, we consider, appeared to the canal officer that the nala in question is supplied with water in the dry season which has wholly or almost wholly leaked or percolated from the canal, and the question only remains whether that [384] brings the case within the provisions of s. 48 of the Act. We think that it does. The first part of the section hardly, we think, applies to the case. The plaintiff's land cannot well be said to receive by percolation or leakage from the canal an advantage equivalent to that which would be given by a direct supply of canal water for irrigation, but the second part of the section, in our opinion, applies. The nala ex concessis in the opinion of the canal officer has been filled with a supply of water which has percolated or leaked from the canal. The plaintiff's cultivated land derives by a surface flow a supply of the water which has so percolated or leaked, and the conditions of the section are thus, we think, fulfilled. It does not seem to us to be material whether the reservoir which collects the percolation from the canal is a natural reservoir or one artificially formed so long as the water flows from it by a surface flow on to the plaintiff's land. If the plaintiff can show that the opinion formed by the canal officer is erroneous, and that the nala is kept supplied by sources independent of the canal water, his remedy is to convince the canal authorities of that fact and not by suit in the civil Court. We must confirm the decree appealed from with costs.

Decree confirmed.
APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ranade and Mr. Justice Hosking.

VASUDDEVACHARYA AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. THE MUNICIPALITY OF SHOLAPUR (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [6th August, 1896.]

Municipality—District Municipal Act (Bom. Act XXVI of 1850)—The District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873), s. 14 (1), rules framed under—Rule 16 (2)—Rule not mandatory but only permissive—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 265—Suit for damages and injunction restraining municipality from stopping water-supply—Right to sue in civil Courts.

The plaintiffs having sued the Municipality of Sholapur for damages and for an injunction restraining the municipality from stopping the supply of water to their house, the first Court allowed the claim, but the Judge in appeal [385] dismissed the suit, holding that it was premature, and that the plaintiffs had no right to sue the municipality for damages under Rule 16 of the Rules framed by the municipality under s. 14 of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873), that rule providing that "parties dissatisfied with a decision of the managing committee or of any sub-committee may prefer an appeal to the municipality whose decision shall be final."

Held, reversing the decree, that the rule must be construed as permissive and not mandatory. It referred to departmental procedure only and did not debar the institution of the civil suit.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. Jacob, District Judge of Sholapur-Bijapur, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb Ramchandra Vyan-katesh Patki, Joint Subordinate Judge of Sholapur.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants for an injunction restraining them from stopping the supply of water to the plaintiff's house and for damages, alleging that the defendants had illegally and of malice stopped the supply of water through the pipe in their house.

The defendants pleaded that they had a right under the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873) to stop the supply of water, and that the damages claimed were excessive.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendants were not entitled to stop the water-supply under the District Municipal Act or under the rules framed under the Act. He, therefore, allowed the claim with further damages from the date of suit to be determined in execution proceedings.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. The following is an extract from his judgment:

Rule XVI of the Rules framed under the Act and sanctioned by Government in Resolution No. 3630 of the 28th December, 1874, provides

* Second Appeal No. 246 of 1896.

(1) Section 14 of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873) :—
14. Clause 1.—It shall be the duty of every municipality, as soon after their constitution as conveniently may be, to prepare rules, and afterwards from time to time repeal, alter or amend the same as occasion may require, regulating the nature and action of the municipal executive administration:
Provided that no rule shall have effect until the same shall have been approved by the Governor in Council.
All rules when so approved shall, until altered or rescinded under the same authorities, have the same force as if they had been inserted in this Act.

(2) Rule 16 :—
16. Parties dissatisfied with a decision of the managing committee or of any sub-committee appointed under s. 1 of these rules.........may prefer an appeal to the municipality whose decision shall be final.
that "parties [386] dissatisfied with a decision of the managing committee or of any sub-committee appointed under s. 1 of these rules may prefer an appeal to the municipality whose decision shall be final."

The plaintiffs did not avail themselves of this remedy. Following the decision in Saktharam v. Chairman of the Municipality of Kalyan (1) I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs' suit was premature, or in other words that they had no right to sue the municipality for damages.

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The decision relied on by the Judge is not applicable. That decision was passed under the old District Municipal Act (Bom. Act XXVI of 1850), while the Act now in force is Bombay Act VI of 1873. Further, cl. (I) of Rule VI of the Rules framed under the Act of 1850 made it compulsory upon an aggrieved party to complain to the municipality because it laid down that all complaints against the municipality shall be addressed in the first instance to the Municipal Commissioner. According to Rule 16 of the Rules framed by the municipality under the Act it was not obligatory on us to lodge a complaint to the municipality, the words used in it being may and not shall. If we had gone to the municipality we could have been debarred from seeking a remedy in the civil Court, as the rule makes the decision of the municipality final.

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the respondent (defendant).—The word may in Rule 16 should be construed to mean must, because the latter part of the rule lays down that the decision of the municipality shall be final. If it be left open to parties to seek redress either by resorting to a civil Court or to the municipality, then the parties would naturally seek their remedy by a suit, and then the clause as to the finality of the decision of the municipality would be a dead letter. It has been held that the word may occurring in s. 265 of the Contract Act means must—Prosad Doss Mullick v. Russick Lal Mullick (2); Delhi and London Bank, Limited v. Orchard (3).

JUDGMENT.

[387] RANADE, J.—The District Judge has in this case reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, and dismissed appellants' suit against the respondent, the Municipality of Sholapur, on the ground that the suit was not maintainable, as the appellants had not complied with the provision of Rule 16, which directs that "parties dissatisfied with the decision of the managing committee or any other sub-committee may appeal to the municipality whose decision shall be final." He relied upon the authority of Saktharam v. Chairman of the Municipality of Kalyan (1).

It was, however, contended before us that that decision had reference to the rules made under Act XXVI of 1850, while the rule in dispute is one of a set of rules framed under s. 14 of Act VI of 1873. It was further pointed out that while cl. 1 of the former set of rules directed that "all complaints against the municipality shall in the first instance be addressed to the Municipal Commissioners," Rule 16 framed under the latter Act was not mandatory, but only permissive, as it used the word "may" in place of the old word "shall." The respondent's pleader urged, on the other hand, that the word "may" in the new set of rules should be construed as though it meant "shall," and referred to the decisions passed upon s. 265 of the Contract Act where a similar construction had been placed upon the word "may" as being intended to be mandatory, and not permissive only.

There can be no doubt that, under certain circumstances, such constructions have been placed on the word "may." Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes discusses this subject at some length, and his remarks show that Courts in England have no doubt held that where a Statute confers an authority to do an act which the public interests demand, the directory, permissive, or enabling words used in it must be construed as imperative, unless there be special grounds for a contrary construction. Special consideration, however, may show that the permissive words used were intended to confer a discretionary power only. The question thus resolves itself into one of giving effect to the intentions of the Legislature.

In the present case, it may be noted that the dispute relates to the interpretation of a rule made by the municipality itself, and liable to be altered by it, and not to an Act of the Legislature. Further, reading Rules 15, 16, 17 together, it will be seen that while in Rule 15, which relates to complaints against servants, the words used are that such complaints shall in the first instance be addressed to the managing committee, and in Rule 17 it is provided that appeals in respect of orders under s. 33 shall lie to the President, whose decision shall be final, it is only in Rule 16 that the permissive "may" is used, though it is provided that the decision of the municipality shall be final. The respondent's pleader laid some stress upon the use of these last words. It appears to us, however, that by themselves they are not sufficient to take away the permissive character of the rule when it is read side by side with the preceding and succeeding rules. Under the old rules, an appeal was permitted from the decision of the municipality to the Collector, and in cases of doubt the matter could be taken to the Police Commissioner, whose decision was declared to be final. This appeal to the Collector and Police Commissioner was taken away in the new set of rules, as the new Act contained an express provision permitting parties who had complaints against the municipality or its officers to bring civil suits after giving due notice. This notice afforded opportunity to the municipality to remove all cause for complaint if it were inclined to do so. The intention of the Legislature being thus plainly manifested, it is clear that the rules must be construed in consonance with the same, and Rule 16 must be construed as permissive, and not mandatory. It refers to departmental procedure only, and does not debar the institution of the civil suit.

For these reasons, the decree of the lower Court must be reversed, and the case remanded for trial on the other issues, and final disposal on the merits. Costs of this appeal on the respondent, and other costs to abide by the final result.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

Appeal under s. 15 of the Amended Letters Patent, 1865, from the decision of a Division Bench consisting of Jardine and Ranade, J.J., in second appeal No. 890 of 1893.

The facts of this case are as follows:—

On the 28th October, 1880, the father of Narayan (defendant No. 2) granted a mulgeni lease of certain land to Nagappa (defendant No. 1), the rent reserved being Rs. 29 per annum. On the 4th of September, 1888, Nagappa (defendant No. 1) mortgaged his interest in the land to the plaintiff. Subsequently the rent payable by defendant Nagappa under the lease having fallen into arrear, Narayan (defendant No. 2) applied to the Collector under s. 86 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bomb. Act V of 1879) for assistance to recover the arrears. The Assistant Collector after holding the inquiry directed by s. 87, passed an order giving the required assistance to Narayan (defendant No. 2) as the superior holder, and declared the mulgeni right of Nagappa (defendant No. 1) in the land to be forfeited, putting the second defendant Narayan at the same time in possession of the land.

The third defendant Dalla took proceedings before the Revenue authorities to have the order restoring the property to Narayan [390] set aside. These proceedings resulted in the original order of the Assistant Collector being upheld.

The plaintiff as mortgagee filed the present suit to recover the amount due under his mortgage of the 4th September, 1888, against Nagappa (defendant No. 1) personally and by the sale of his interest in the mortgaged land.

The lessor Narayan was joined as defendant No. 2, because he denied Nagappa's (defendant No. 1's) right to the land mortgaged. Defendant No. 3 was joined, because he had purchased the right of Nagappa (defendant No. 1) from the Revenue authorities.

Narayan (defendant No. 2) pleaded (inter alia) that the suit would not lie as far as the land was concerned, as the mortgaged holding had been forfeited and possession thereof given to him under a decree of the Revenue Court.

The First Class Subordinate Judge at Karwar held that Nagappa (defendant No. 1) had forfeited his interest in the land under the mulgeni lease and he awarded the plaintiff's claim to recover his mortgage-debt from Nagappa (defendant No. 1) personally and by sale of his interest in the land, if he had any, apart from his forfeited mulgeni right.

In appeal the District Judge of Kanara amended this decree by declaring that the sale of such interest as Nagappa (defendant No. 1) may have in the land, should confer on the purchaser the right to hold the land as a mulgeni tenant of Narayan (defendant No. 2) under the lease of 28th October, 1880.

Narayan (defendant No. 2) preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

_Ganpat Sadashiv Rao_, for the appellant (defendant No. 2).

1895, _July_ 17. Ranade, J.—The question at issue in this case is whether a declaration of forfeiture, under s. 153 of Bom. Act V of 1879, of the interests of a lessee holding under a mulgeni (permanent) lease, not followed by a sale, but by an order transferring possession of the holding to the lessor under s. 57, has the effect of defeating prior incumbrances created by the lessee in favour of third parties, such as that claimed by the mortgagee-appellant before us. In disposing of this question, the analogies [391] furnished by the English law of landlord and tenant can prove of little help; for, as was observed in _Nagardas v. Hari Damji_ (1), the relations between an Indian zemindar and rayat are not generally the same as those between the English landlord and tenant. This caution was inculcated in regard to the English law about forfeiture. In _Sattiyappa v. Mahadevamma_ (2) the same observation is made in regard to the doctrine of waiver, and in _Ramji v. Vinayak_ (3) in respect of the right of re-entry on alienation.

The old native law of the country was peculiarly favourable to permanent tenants such as mirasars, with whom mulgeni lessees may well be and have been classed. Even in respect of State dues, a mirasar never permanently forfeited his interest by reason of default in the payment of assessment. His land might be attached and transferred to the temporary occupation of another, but he could claim it back on payment of all arrears at any time on his return to the village. The incident of forfeiture might of course be attached as a condition in a private lease, but there is nothing in the evidence before us to show that the mulgeni lease in the present case contained such a condition. The lessor applied under s. 86 for help to the Collector to recover his rent, which in this case exceeded the assessment of the land, and the Revenue authorities thereupon made a declaration of forfeiture under s. 153, and soon after transferred possession of the land to the lessor under s. 57. We have thus to see how far these orders of the Revenue authorities affected the prior mortgage incumbrance created by the lessee. The appellant's pleader relied chiefly on the analogy of a declaration of forfeiture for Government dues. The Land Revenue Code, however, makes a clear distinction between State dues and private dues, and though under s. 86 the Revenue authorities are empowered to give help on the application of superior holders to recover the arrears of rent or revenue due to them, by the use of the precautionary and other measures laid down in Chap. XI for the recovery of State dues, there is an express reservation in s. 86 excluding the operation of s. 137, which secures to State dues a priority [392] over all other claims. This distinction between State dues and private claims has been recognized judicially in Ratnaj v. Sakharam (1), Narayan v. Vithal (2) and Sato v. Sarovotamrao (3). We must, therefore, carefully consider ss. 56, 57, 80, 81, 86, 137, 153 of the Land Revenue Code to see how far the orders passed by the Revenue authorities in this case under ss. 153 and 57 had the effect of destroying all prior incumbrances created by the permanent lessee.

Apart from positive law, it is obvious that a person can only forfeit such interest as he has in his land at the time of his default in payment, and it would not be equitable to antedate the effect of the forfeiture so as to defeat prior incumbrances, especially under a system of land-law which declares that a permanent tenant’s interest is both heritable and transferable.

Turning next to positive law, it appears that, under s. 86, the superior holders are entitled to assistance in the shape of the use of precautionary and other measures for the recovery of rent or revenue, under the same rules, and in the same manner as is prescribed by Chap. XI for the realization of Government land revenue. Section 153 lays down the precautionary and other measures referred to in this Chap. XII, and it empowers the Collector to declare the occupancy or alienated holding, in respect of which an arrear of land revenue is due, to be forfeited to Government, and to sell or otherwise dispose of the same under ss. 56 and 57 of the Land Revenue Code. Under s. 56, the non-payment of land revenue dues makes an occupancy or alienated holding liable to forfeiture. Two courses are open to the Collector after such a liability has accrued. He may levy the arrears due by a sale of the occupancy or holding, or he may otherwise dispose of such occupancy, &c., under rules or orders made under s. 214. When a sale takes place, s. 56 lays down that the property sold will be freed from all tenures, incumbrances and rights created by the occupant or holder. Under s. 57, the Collector may, on such forfeiture, take immediate possession, and dispose of the same by placing it in the possession of the purchaser (apparently when a sale takes place), or any other person entitled to hold it (being co-occupant, tenant or mortgagee, or other persons interested under ss. 80, 81), under the provisions of the Code. Admittedly, in this case, no sale has taken place after the declaration of forfeiture. Only a transfer of possession has taken place under s. 57. If it was deemed necessary to insert a special provision like s. 137 to reserve a precedence for Government claims to land revenue over all other private demands, &c., and if, in extending by s. 86 the procedure under Chap. XI to enable private landlords to realize their dues, mention of this special precedence was expressly excluded, it is obvious that a mere declaration of forfeiture, even when followed by an order transferring possession, does not, in the case of private landlords, destroy all prior incumbrances created by the occupant.

In Dasharatha v. Nyahalchand (4) the effect of a mere transfer of possession under the orders of the Mamlatdar was considered by this Court. The registered occupant in that case had mortgaged his land, and the mortgagee obtained a decree for the sale of the land in respect of his mortgage-debt. In the meanwhile, the occupant committed default in payment of land revenue, and the mortgagee-creditor, having paid the arrears of revenue due, was placed in possession. Subsequently, the occupant sued for redemption, and the mortgagee pleaded adverse title as having been placed in possession by the Revenue authorities. This contention was disallowed, and it was held that the mortgage relationship still subsisted. The case of Gahinaji v. Bhikchand (1) is an express decision on this same point. In that case, there was a forfeiture followed by a subsequent restoration of the holding to the old occupant under the orders of the Collector. The prior incumbrance created by the occupant before the forfeiture was held to be not extinguished by the mere declaration of forfeiture as it would have been if a sale had taken place.

It is not necessary here to discuss the effects of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, Chap. V, for the present suit was instituted before January, 1893, when the notification of [394] Government was issued, and under s. 424 the provisions of Chap. V do not apply to agricultural leases.

For the reasons stated above I would reject the appeal, and confirm the decree of the District Court.

JARDINE, J.—After the original decree was passed, and before the first appeal was heard, the Collector of Kanara passed a decision annulning the later and restoring the earlier decision of the Assistant Collector.
Being of opinion that the District Judge ought to have admitted the Collector’s decision as evidence, we have recorded it here, and have next to ascertain what the earlier decision of the Assistant Collector settled.
It recites s. 153 of the Land Revenue Code, Bombay Act V of 1879. It declares that in consequence of the Mulgunidar Nagappa’s default of payment to the superior holder Narayan, Nagappa’s rights were forfeited, and the land was directed to be given into possession of Narayan.
Mr. Gaupatran, relying on s. 56 and r. 58, made under s. 214 of the Code (printed in General Rules in force in the Revenue Department, Edition of 1893, p. 30) has contended that the declaration of forfeiture so made as above extinguishes by mere operation of the Code every incumbrance or interest created before this forfeiture by the mulgni lessee, such as, e.g., the mortgage by Nagappa to the plaintiff Parshotam. But he was unable to cite any judicial decision in support, or to show that this was the Statute law before the Revenue Code of 1879 was enacted.

He contended that the land revenue being a paramount charge on the land, the superior holder, though a subject, had a right by Statute to the same priorities as the Government; and that as a Collector could, after a forfeiture declared, and by virtue of s. 56, sell the estate free from all tenures, incumbrances and rights created by the occupant, therefore the placing of Narayan, the superior holder, in possession was an extinguishment of all such rights, including Nagappa’s mortgage to plaintiff, as charges on the land.

We think that the giving of possession to Narayan was an act done under s. 57, a recognition by the Assistant Collector that he was entitled to hold it under the Code or some other [395] law. There is nothing in this section, however, which quenches earlier incumbrances; I think Mr. Ganpatran goes too far in placing the rights of Narayan, a superior holder and mere subject, on a par with those of the State. The State has paramount rights under s. 137, which is as follows:—

"The claim of Government to any moneys recoverable under the provisions of this chapter shall have precedence over any other debt, demand or claim whatsoever, whether in respect of mortgage, judgment-decree, execution, or attachment or otherwise howsoever, against any land or the holder thereof."

(1) P.J. (1899), p. 547.
But s. 86, which extends to superior holders certain procedures used by the State to recover its own paramount dues, makes an express exception of s. 137, a clear indication that the above rule of priority was not enacted in favour of the subject superior holder.

We have first to determine the true intent of these to ss. 137 and 86. I am of opinion that they are not to be constituted as enactments altering the principles of the law as it stood in 1879.

Section 137 is merely declaratory of the law as interpreted by this Court in Abdul Gani v. Krishna (1), Gundo v. Mardum (2), and Ghelabhai v. Pranjivan (3) that the land revenue due to the Crown is the paramount charge on the land. The rights of the Crown are founded on reasons which are foreign to any subject, as seen in Secretary of State for India v. Bombay Landing and Shipping Company (4). Cessat ratio cessat lex. The exception in s. 86 declaring that a superior holder is not to get the assistance of the doctrine of s. 137 merely leaves the law as it was. Some perplexity may have disturbed the mind of the draftsman after he had inserted the high prerogative doctrine among little rules of procedure, fiscal rules apt alike to Crown and subject for recovering revenue or rent. That is why he excludes in s. 86 the superior holder from what he calls a rule, as if any subject could have the right which even before [396] Magna Charita, C.18, the common law gave the King—Quia thesaurus regis est pacis vinclum et bellorum nervi.

Except as declaratory, I think s. 86 deals only with procedure, and cannot be construed as altering the principles which the High Courts of India have applied as law and equity to the failure of a lessee to pay rent when that payment is a condition of his tenure. (As to mulgeni leases see Subbaraya v. Krishna (5); Narayana v. Narayana (6).) We must now see what principles the Courts have applied. The High Courts have applied the English doctrine of forfeiture. The latest views of the Indian Legislature as shown in s. 115 of the Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882 (which does not apply to this case) are similar to the statement of the law of England about the effect of surrender and forfeiture upon an under-lessee's interest expressed by Lord Justice Mellish in Great Western Railway Company v. Smith (7). "It is a rule of law, that if there is a lessee, and he has created an under-lease, or any other legal interest, if the lease is forfeited, then the under-lessee, or the person who claims under the lessee, loses his estate as well as the lessee himself." Rent, like service, is a condition in law annexed tacite; (compare this feudal law with s. 83); and if the rent be not paid "then may the feoffee or his heirs enter into such lands or tenements and them in his former estate to have and hold, and the feoffee quite to oust thereof." Coke on Littleton, 201. Coke explains the former estate to be "that estate which he had at the time of the estate made upon condition." In Bacon's Abridgment, Conditions O. 4, the rule is found which is stated in rather fuller terms by Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, Ed. 14th, p. 327, that "on an entry on ejectment or recovery for a condition broken, the lessor gets the estate he had at the time of the estate made on condition and may avoid all mesne charges and encumbrances." His authorities are Coke on Littleton, Bacon, and Cole on Ejectment, 68. Coke applying to entry the doctrine of remitter says:—"Immediately upon entry the party..."
is by law remitted to his previous estate; (that is to say, he becomes seized or possessed of the land for such an estate therein if any) as was legally vested in him before and at the time of the entry."

In regard to his entry and present possession the defendant Narayan has apparently used the legal procedure. As mentioned above, the revenue official has declared under s. 157 that Nagappa’s rights are forfeited, which distinguishes the case from Dasharatha v. Nyakhalchand (1). The same order also puts Narayan in possession, which distinguishes the case from Mahkari v. Tukaram (2); the entry is not the act of Narayan himself as in Indraborty v. Holloway (3).

On considering s. 153 and ss. 56 and 57 together, I do not think that upon making a declaration of forfeiture the Collector must necessarily sell the forfeited estate. Reading ss. 56 and 57 distributively, I am of opinion that he had power himself to take possession and to dispose of the holding by putting in the person whom he thought entitled at law, who on the English principles is the lessor Narayan, not the plaintiff Parshotam, the mortgagee from the lessee. As it does not appear that the plaintiff-mortgagee paid to Narayan the rent due from Nagappa, s. 80 does not come into play. The final order of the Collector was passed after considering the question under s. 81. His decision annuls that which held that there had been collusion between Nagappa and Narayan, resulting in a forfeiture on failure to pay the rent, with a view to defeat incumbrances created by the lessee. In the present suit the pleadings and issues do not show that Parshtotam alleged this fraud; so fraud ceases to be a fact in this appeal.

I do not know of any principle by which the mulgeni lessee Nagappa can be treated as legitimus dominus pro tempore so as to create an estate in a mortgagee which shall not be subject to forfeiture. This is not a case analogous to that exceptional one of the Earl of Arundel (4) in Bacon’s Abridgement, where the fee of a manor upon condition was held to have created enduring grants by copy, because he was legitimus dominus pro tempore. Where the only question is between the lessee and his grantee, the grants may in certain circumstances be upheld in equity as they are at law on a surrender; and Gahinaji v. Bhikchand (5) is such a case. But as I can find no case, so I believe, that not one of the High Courts of India has hitherto treated an inferior holder or lessee as competent to grant an estate more perdurable than his own. So grievous an interference with a landlord’s property cannot be tolerated in law or equity. There is no analogy at all between the lord of a manor making grant by copy and the lessee who holds on condition. The former holds a Court, and his powers as owner of a franchise are settled by custom; therefore he was held to be legitimus dominus pro tempore. Having had the advantage of perusing Mr. Justice Banade’s judgment, I may say that we are not dealing with a mirasdar whose rights do not depend on a lease; and I will not in a mere incidental manner say anything on the question whether a mirasdar is legitimus dominus for this purpose by custom; obiter dicta here may have unforeseen results. I may, however, remark that the mirasdar has been treated in some cases not as perpetual lessee; but, like the muladar in this case as the highest superior holder—Narayan v. Lakshuman (6); Alagaiya v. Saminada (7).

(1) 16 B. 134. (2) 6 B.H.C.R., A.C.J. 86. (3) 9 W.R.C.R. 168.
(7) 1 M.H.C.R. 264.
On this great and important question of the lessee's powers I have the misfortune to differ with my brother Ranade; and, moreover, Mr. Ganapatrao did not argue the law of forfeiture as between landlord and tenant. To make my views clear I will now sum them up. 1. The feudal notion that payment of the rent or service was a condition in law had been treated as the law of India before the passing of s. 83 of the Land Revenue Code which declares the condition. 2. All the High Courts have held forfeiture to attach as a breach of that condition. 3. No High Court has held that a mere lessee can grant an estate more perdurable than his own, and which shall not be subject to forfeiture in favour of the lessor in the event of the lessee's estate being forfeited. 4. The rules of law as to the different effects of surrender and forfeiture are not to be ignored. [399] 5. The Legislature of Bombay in framing rules of procedure did not intend to alter the law about transfer of property. 6. An ordinary subject lessee on a perpetual lease on condition is not a dominus. 7. The mulgenidar Nagappa could not by his own mere act create a mortgage in favour of Parshotam, which would survive the forfeiture of Nagappa's own estate to the landlord.

It follows that, in my opinion, the decree of the District Court ought to be amended. But as my brother Ranade upholds it, this Court will confirm it under s. 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Judges having differed, the decree of the District Judge was confirmed under s. 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

Narayan (defendant No. 2) preferred an appeal, under s. 15 of the Amended Letters Patent, from the decision of the Division Bench.

The appeal came on for argument before a Full Bench consisting of Farran, C.J., and Parsons and Hosking, J.J.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the appellant (defendant No. 2).—The question is what is the effect of a forfeiture for non-payment of rent under s. 153 of the Land Revenue Code. We contend that it has the effect of extinguishing not only the lessee's interest in the holding, but also that of the under-lessee, or any other person who derives his title from the lessee. The land reverts to the lessor free from all charges and incumbrances created by the lessee. See s. 56 of the Land Revenue Code and the rules made under s. 214. In accordance with these rules the Collector has disposed of the holding in dispute and put the original lessor in possession. Payment of rent is a condition of the tenancy, and forfeiture attaches as a breach of the condition.

There was no appearance for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C.J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from the decree of a Division Bench passed in second appeal. The learned Judges who heard the appeal having differed in opinion, the decree of the lower appellate Court was confirmed. The question of law which we have to consider is one of some importance. [400] It is to be regretted that the respondent was not represented before us and that we have to deal with the appeal on an ex parte argument. The facts which gave rise to the question are these.

On the 28th October, 1880, the father of Narayan (defendant No. 2) granted a mulgeni lease of the land in suit to Nagappa (defendant No. 1), the rent reserved being Rs. 29 per annum. On the 4th of September, 1888, the defendant Nagappa mortgaged his interest in the land to the plaintiff. Subsequently the rent payable by defendant Nagappa under the lease having fallen into arrear, the defendant Narayan applied to the Collector under s. 86 of "The Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879" for assistance in the recovery of the arrears. The Assistant Collector after holding the inquiry directed by s. 87 passed an order for rendering assistance to Narayan as the superior holder and declared the mulgeni right of the defendant Nagappa in the land to be forfeited; and purporting, I assume, to act under s. 57 of the Code, put the defendant Narayan in possession of the land.

The third defendant Dalla took proceedings before the Revenue authorities to have the order restoring the property to the superior holder set aside. It is unnecessary further to refer to these proceedings. They resulted finally in the original order of the Assistant Collector being upheld. The present suit was filed by the plaintiff, the mortgagee under the mortgage of the 4th September, 1888, to recover the amount due under his mortgage against the defendant Nagappa personally and by the sale of his interest in the mortgaged land. The defendant Narayan contended by his written statement that the suit would not lie as far as the land was concerned, as the mortgaged holding had been forfeited and possession thereof given to him under a decree of the Revenue Court.

The Assistant Collector in taking the above steps in favour of the superior holder appears to have acted in pursuance of a Resolution of Government of the 30th May, 1881 (General Rules of the Revenue Department, 1893, p. 30), which concludes as follows: — "Accordingly when s. 153 provides that the Collector [401] may declare the occupancy in respect of which an arrear of land revenue is due to be forfeited to the Government, so he may declare a holding with which he is dealing under s. 86 to have reverted to the superior holder."

The first question for decision is whether Nagappa's lease was liable to be declared forfeited under s. 153 of the Land Revenue Code. It does not for this purpose seem necessary to consider whether the earlier provision of s. 56, which makes the arrears of land revenue due on account of land by any landholder a paramount charge on the holding, applies to the arrears of rent under a mulgeni lease, though if such a lease can be sold free from incumbrances under the provisions of ss. 153 and 56 the inference would rather be that it does, but there are difficulties in the way of such holding, so I pass from that question. Section 86 of the Code enables a superior holder by written application to the Collector to obtain assistance by the use of precautionary and other measures for the recovery of rent or land revenue payable to them by inferior holders * * * under the same rules (except that contained in s. 137) and in the same manner as prescribed in Chap. XI of the Act for the realization of land revenue by Government. Nagappa clearly, I think, came within the definition of "inferior holder" contained in s. 3, cl. 14, of the Code, so it follows that his superior holder was entitled to have measures taken in his favour under Chap. XI for the recovery of his rent under the same rules and in the same manner (subject to the limitation contained in the proviso to s. 86) as Government could resort to. As forfeiture under s. 153 is one of the measures which can be resorted to under Chap. XI it follows that Nagappa's lease or holding was liable to be declared forfeited under s. 153.

Assuming, then, that it was liable to such a declaration of forfeiture, it has next to be considered what is the effect of the declaration. The Code itself does not enact that any particular legal consequences shall flow from the forfeiture of a holding by the Collector beyond.
making such a forfeiture a condition precedent to his selling or otherwise disposing of the same. In the case of the breach of a covenant in a lease at common law which contains a condition for re-entry, the right of the landlord is to re-enter and hold the leasehold premises as of his former estate freed from the lease and all incumbrances created by the lessee—Woodfall, p. 327. Upon such re-entry the interest of the lessee under the lease determines and he has no further claim upon it. When we turn to the Land Revenue Code we find that the Collector upon declaring the forfeiture must sell or otherwise dispose of the holding under the provisions of ss. 56 and 57 and credit the proceeds (if any) to the defaulters' accounts. This distinguishes a forfeiture under the Code from a forfeiture and re-entry at common law where no such further steps are incumbent on the landlord. It appears to me that a declaration of forfeiture by the Collector under s. 153 is the formal preliminary step which leads to the consequences indicated in the Code, but is not in itself until these steps are taken productive of any direct legal result. Upon a declaration of forfeiture it does not, I think, follow that the holding thereupon becomes the property of the superior holder or that he becomes ipso facto seized of his original estate in the forfeited holding, else as I have said the proceeds of the holding when dealt with would not be credited to the tenant. The steps which the Collector is to take upon a declaration of forfeiture are indicated in s. 153. He is to sell or otherwise dispose of the same under the provisions of ss. 56 and 57. The case of a sale gives rise to no difficulty whether it is the case of the sale of a holding held directly from Government or of a holding under a superior holder. Its consequences are plainly indicated in s. 56. The sale is to be of the holding freed from all sub-tenures and incumbrances subject in the case of a holding from a superior holder to the paramount claims of Government under s. 137. The Collector, however, can otherwise dispose of the holding under the provisions of ss. 56 and 57. If he does so it appears to me that he can dispose of the holding only under rules and orders made in this behalf under s. 214. He cannot dispose of it otherwise. Now when the rules and orders made in this behalf under s. 214 are examined, it will be found that they are applicable only to holdings from Government and are wholly inapplicable to a holding under a superior holder. What the Collector is to do under these rules and orders is to cause the land comprised in the forfeited holding to be entered in the records as unoccupied alienated land, with which he may then or subsequently deal as such. The rules and orders contain further provisions and directions which are inconsistent with the Collector's power absolutely to restore a forfeited holding to the superior holder as of his original estate. It appears to me, therefore, that the Collector has no authority under s. 56 to restore the forfeited holding to the superior holder. If such a power were conferred upon him by rules made under s. 214 I should be inclined to think that the same consequences would follow upon such restoration as follow now when the Collector otherwise than by sale disposes of holdings held under Government. I cannot see how different consequences would flow from the same action of the Collector in cases where a superior holder is concerned from those which flow from that action where Government is concerned, and in the case of Government I cannot doubt that it re-enters on its old estate. The rules and orders made under s. 214 (which have the force of law) show that, I think, conclusively.

It remains to consider the provisions of s. 57, which enables the Collector to take immediate possession of the land embraced within a holding forfeited under s. 56 or any other law for the time being in force and to dispose of the same by placing it in possession of the purchaser or other person entitled to hold it according to the provisions of the Land Revenue Code or any other law for the time being in force. These provisions appear to me to deal with possession only. They do not, I think, enable the Collector to determine any question of right. It shall be lawful for the Collector to dispose of the land by placing it in the possession of the purchaser is, I think, but a circuitous mode of saying that it shall be lawful for him to place the land in the possession of the purchaser. When the person entitled to the land has been ascertained under the provisions, [404] of the preceding section or any other Act, the Collector is empowered without civil process to put him in possession. Read in that sense s. 57 is merely ancillary to s. 56 with a superadded provision enabling the Collector to deal generally with the possession of land comprised within forfeited holdings. It cannot, I think, have been intended by the use of the general words employed in the section to constitute the Collector a civil Court to deal with all questions relating to the forfeitures of land. It must be borne in mind that the section deals primarily with land forfeited to Government, and that it is only indirectly under the provisions of s. 86 that land held under superior holders is brought within its purview.

If this be the true meaning of the section, the making over of the land in question to the defendant Narayan did not amount to a disposing of the land by the Collector under the provisions of the Code, and had, therefore, no legal operation upon the rights of the several parties interested in the defendant Nagappa's holding.

The result of the above reading of the ss. 153, 56 and 57 of the Land Revenue Code might doubtless lead to the conclusion that even the interest of Nagappa in the holding in suit has not been terminated by the proceedings already taken under the Code though it is liable to be terminated under them. It is not, however, necessary for me so to hold in this case. It will be sufficient for the determination of this appeal to say that the plaintiff's interest in the holding has not been extinguished. It is also unnecessary to consider whether the making over of the land by the Collector to the defendant Narayan was legal.

For these reasons I agree with the result which the lower appellate Court and Mr. Justice Ranade have arrived at in this case, and am of opinion that the decree appealed from is correct and ought to be confirmed.

PARSONS, J.—The decision of this case depends upon the construction to be placed upon certain sections of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879. Section 86 provides that superior holders shall be entitled to assistance for the recovery of rent or land revenue under the same rules, except that contained in s. 137, and in the same manner as prescribed in Chap. XI for the [405] realization of land revenue to Government. Section 150, which is in Chap. XI, contains the processes by which an arrear of land revenue may be recovered, among them is "(b) by forfeiture of the occupancy or alienated holding in respect of which the arrear is due under s. 153."

Section 153 provides that "the Collector may declare the occupancy or alienated holding in respect of which an arrear of land revenue is due, to be forfeited to Government, and sell or otherwise dispose of the same under the provisions of ss. 56 and 57, and credit the proceeds, if any, to the defaulter's accounts." Section 56 gives the Collector power to "levy all sums in arrear by sale of the occupancy or alienated holding, freed from all tenures, incumbrances and rights created by the occupant or holder or any of his predecessors-in-title, or in any wise subsisting as against such occupant or holder, or may otherwise dispose of such occupancy or alienated holding under rules or orders made in this behalf under s. 214."

Section 57 gives the Collector power "in the event of the forfeiture of a holding through any default in payment or other failure occasioning such forfeiture under the last section or any law for the time being in force, to take immediate possession of the land embraced within such holding, and to dispose of the same by placing it in the possession of the purchaser or other person entitled to hold it according to the provisions of this Act or any other law for the time being in force."

Section 137 declares that "the claim of Government to any moneys recoverable under the provisions of this chapter shall have precedence over any other debt, demand, or claim whatsoever whether in respect of mortgage, judgment-decree, execution, or attachment, or otherwise howsoever, against any land or the holder thereof."

We have to apply the sections to the facts of the present case in which the rent payable by the mulgeni tenant having fallen into arrear, the Collector on the application of the superior holder declared the mulgeni holding forfeited, and disposed of the holding [406] by placing it in the possession of the superior holder, and determine whether the claim of the latter to hold the land free from a mortgage incumbrance created by the mulgeni tenant is good or not. In my opinion he is not entitled to so hold the land. It is true that the mulgeni lease has been declared forfeited by the Collector, but the Code does not provide for the forfeiture of an inferior holding to the superior holder. Section 153 speaks only of forfeiture to Government. Section 86 when applying Part XI does not place the superior holder in the position of Government. I do not agree with the Legal Remembrancer, upon whose opinion Government passed the Government Resolution No. 3069 of 30th May, 1881, that s. 153 must be construed as if the occupant took the position of Government. There is a great difference between the position of Government and that of a superior holder, and the latter has not for his rent the paramount claim that Government has for its land revenue. The declaration, therefore, of forfeiture in the present case made no change in the legal relationship of the landlord and tenant.
It was merely a step that had to be taken before other acts could be done, Having declared the lease forfeited, the Collector could then proceed to sell or otherwise dispose of the same under the provisions of ss. 56 and 57 and credit the proceeds, if any, to the defaulter’s accounts. Section 56 allows of a disposal only under rules and orders made in this behalf, under s. 214. I have carefully studied these rules, but I can find among them no rule or order which allows the Collector to dispose of the holding by handing it over to the superior holder. It is of course always difficult to apply rules framed for one set of circumstances to another and different set. A rule like 59, which provides for the land being entered as Government waste or unoccupied land, cannot apply to land like this. Rules 59A and 59B might apply, but they have no application to the circumstances of the present case. The only rule which does apply is 60, the general one, and this renders it obligatory on the Collector to put the forfeited holding up for sale, except in two cases neither of which exists here. Thus the only legal method of disposal of an inferior holding is by sale.
[407] It remains only to consider the mode of disposal under s. 57. That allows of a disposal of the holding by "placing it in the possession of the purchaser or other person entitled to hold it according to the provisions of this Act or any other law for the time being in force." The superior holder in this case is not the purchaser, and as we have seen, is not a person entitled to hold it. There has been no valid proceeding under which he has become entitled to put an end to the tenancy and re-enter on the land. Not having been legally disposed of, the mulgeni lease though forfeited still subsists and is liable to the claim of the mortgages. I concur, therefore, in confirming the decree with costs.

HOSKING, J.—In this case, appellant Narayan, a superior holder of certain alienated land, having applied to the Revenue authorities under s. 86 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code for assistance in recovering arrears of rent from Nagappa, his mulgeni tenant, the Revenue authorities, under s. 153 of the said Code, declared the mulgeni tenancy forfeited, and under s. 57 put the superior holder in possession of the land. The question for decision is, whether the said land is now free from a mortgage charge created by the inferior holder in favour of respondent Parshotam, before the forfeiture.

A forfeiture followed by a sale under s. 56 frees the land sold from prior incumbrances. In the present case there was no sale. Under the latter part of s. 56 a forfeited holding may be disposed of under rules or orders made by Government under s. 214. No restriction is placed upon the power of Government, and by such rules it may free the forfeited holding from prior incumbrances, but these rules or orders can only be made as to the disposal of a forfeited superior holding, for that is the only kind of holding contemplated by s. 56. By virtue of s. 86 the rules and orders might, if practicable, be applied to a forfeited inferior holding. The following rule has been made by Government as to the disposal of a forfeited superior holding:—"The Collector shall cause the land comprised in any forfeited alienated holding to be entered in the records as unoccupied unalienated land, and may dispose of it forthwith, or at any subsequent time, in accordance with the rules and orders [408] in force relating to land of that description" (Rule 59 under s. 214, Bombay Revenue Code—Government Rules, Revenue Department). According to the rules for the disposal of unoccupied unalienated land the Collector may grant the occupancy upon payment of a price fixed by him, or without charge, or he may have the occupancy sold by auction and grant it to the highest bidder (Rule 16 under s. 214). It appears to be impracticable to apply these rules to the case of a forfeited inferior holding. Consequently, in my opinion, s. 56 is inapplicable to the forfeiture under consideration.

The question then remains as to the effect of a forfeiture under s. 153 followed by disposal under s. 57, apart from s. 56, assuming such procedure to be legal. Section 137 gives the claims of Government precedence over all other debts, including mortgages. Section 86 specially denies this privilege to superior holders. It is, therefore, I think clear that the forfeiture of an inferior holding under s. 153, apart from s. 56, does not free the land from prior incumbrances. Under s. 80 the mortgagee of an occupancy may prevent a forfeiture by paying arrears of land revenue, but I do not find any provision in the Code giving a similar right to a mortgagee of a superior or inferior alienated holding. There is, therefore, the more reason for holding that the forfeiture of an alienated holding does not free the holding from a prior mortgage. The forfeiture in the present case has, been declared under the provisions of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and the only question is as to the effect of the forfeiture under the Code.

Had the superior holder wished to enforce a right of forfeiture under a condition in the lease, or under the general law of landlord and tenant, he should have had recourse to a suit in the civil Court. The mortgagee would have been entitled to be made a party to such a suit, and, assuming there were a right of forfeiture, the Court would have given the mortgagee an opportunity of preventing the forfeiture by paying the arrears of rent.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the decree of the Division Bench should be confirmed.

Decree confirmed with costs.

LALLU (Original Defendant), Appellant v. JAGMOHAN (Original Plaintiff), Respondent. [*] [18th August, 1896.]

Will—Construction—Bequest by a Hindu to his wife—Life-estate—Reversioner—Vested remainder—Contingent bequest.

One Jamnadas Natha died in 1876, leaving a will which after stating his property in detail provided as follows:—"When I die, my wife named Suraj is owner of that property. And my wife has powers to do in the same way as I have absolute powers to do when I am present, and in case of my wife's death, my daughter Mahalaxmi is owner of the said property after that (death)."

Held, that Suraj took only a life-estate under the will, with remainder over to Mahalaxmi after her death.

Held, also, that the bequest to Mahalaxmi was not contingent on her surviving Suraj, but that she took a vested remainder which upon her death passed to her heirs.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Lalsbarkar Umashankar, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.

One Jamnadas Natha, a separated Hindu, died on 19th July, 1876, leaving a widow Bai Suraj and a daughter Mahalaxmi by a predeceased wife.

He left a will dated 19th January, 1874, of which the following is the material part:

"My property consists of dwelling-houses and moveables such as cash, jewels and furniture, the silk, &c., appertaining to my business, and outstanding debts, whatever the same may be. As to this, when I die, my wife named Suraj is owner of that property. And my wife has powers to do in the same way as I have absolute powers to do when I am present, and in case of my wife's kaja raja (death) my daughter Mahalaxmi is owner of the said property after that (death). I have, therefore, made this my will in respect thereof."

In accordance with this will the testator's widow Suraj took possession of all his property, both moveable and immovable, after his death in 1876.

* Appeal No. 170 of 1894.
His daughter Mahalaxmi died in July, 1883.

Suraj died on 11th March, 1893, leaving a will dated 27th December, 1883, whereby she bequeathed the whole of the property in her possession to her brother's son Lallu (the defendant). On her death Lallu took possession.

The plaintiff was the grandson of Mulchand, the separated brother of Jammadas Nathu. In 1894 he brought this suit claiming as reversionary heir of Jammadas Natha to be entitled to his property on the death of his widow Suraj. He contended that under the will of Jammadas Nathu his widow Suraj took only a life-interest in the property and that she had no power to bequeath it to Lallu.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that Suraj took an absolute interest under the will of Jammadas Natha and that she had, therefore, full power to bequeath the property to him (the defendant) as she had done.

The First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad held, on the construction of Jammadas' will, that Suraj took only a life-interest in the testator's property, that she was not competent to dispose of it by will, and that her will, therefore, did not confer any title on the defendant to any part of the property in dispute.

He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim.

Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellant (defendant). — The defendant holds the property under the will of Suraj. The question is whether Suraj under the will of her husband Jammadas took an absolute estate which she could bequeath to the defendant. We say she did. The will gives her as full an estate in the property as the testator had. The Court must give effect to these words in the will. They show that she did not mean to give her only a life-estate.

The gift over to his daughter Mahalaxmi is to take effect only in the event of the wife's death during the lifetime of the testator. It is a substitutionary bequest, contingent on the lapse or failure of the prior absolute devise — Gee v. Mayor, &c., of [411] Manchester (1); Woodburne
v. Woodburne (2); Clayton v. Lowe (3). The rule is well established that where a bequest is simply to A and "in case of his death," or "if he die," to B, A surviving the testator takes absolutely — Williams on Executors, 1082, 3 (4th Ed.). In the present case the wife did survive the testator:
she, therefore, took the property absolutely; and was competent to dispose of it by will as much as by gift inter vivos. Her will is, therefore, valid.

But assuming that she took only a life estate, it is clear that Mahalaxmi took a vested remainder. That being so, then although she predeceased Suraj, her interest passed on her death to her heirs. The principle laid down in § 106 of Act X of 1865 applies by analogy to the present case, so that even if Suraj took only a life-estate, the plaintiff cannot succeed, as he is not the heir of Mahalaxmi.

Goverdhan M. Tripathi, for respondent (plaintiff). — The will does not confer an absolute interest on Suraj. The gift over to Mahalaxmi clearly shows that the testator intended to give his wife nothing more than a life-estate. The rules laid down by English Courts for the construction of English wills do not apply in the case of Hindu wills.
Hindu wills are to be construed according to the laws and usages of Hindus. The principle is now well settled that unless a will contains words of inheritance or words giving an express power of alienation to a widow, a bequest by a husband to a wife does not confer on her an absolute estate—Hirabai v. Lakshmibai (1); Harilal v. Bai Rewa (2). There are no such words in the will in question. Suraj, therefore, took a life-estate only.

As to the gift over to Mahalaxmi, it is a contingent bequest, contingent on her surviving the widow. And as she did not survive the widow, her legacy fails. The property is, therefore, undisposed of after the death of Suraj, and the plaintiff is entitled to inherit as the next of kin of the testator Jamnadas Natha. Even assuming that Mahalaxmi took a vested interest in the legacy, which passed on her death to her heirs, we do not admit that the plaintiff [412] is not her heir. The question as to who are Mahalaxmi’s heirs has not been raised in the lower Court, and there are no materials before this Court to enable it to decide that point.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, at Ahmedabad allowing the plaintiff’s claim. The plaintiff as the nearest reversionary heir of Jamnadas Natha after the death of Bai Suraj, the widow of Jamnadas, sued to recover from the defendant, who claims under a will of Bai Suraj, the property left at her death. The defendant contends that Bai Suraj had, in consequence of Jamnadas having made a will in her favour, power to deal with his property by her will; and also, if she had not such power, that the heir of Mahalaxmi, the daughter of Jamnadas, and not the plaintiff, is the person now entitled to the property. The rights of the parties in the main, therefore, depend upon the construction and effect of the will of Jamnadas. The argument before us on appeal was confined to this part of the case.

The facts which it is necessary to remember as bearing upon the construction of the will and the devolution of the property are these. The testator Jamnadas, who was a trader and had a shop, was a separated Hindu. When he made his will in March, 1874, he had a wife Bai Suraj and a daughter Mahalaxmi by another wife (then deceased) who was young. His separated brother Mulchand was alive and had a son. The plaintiff is Mulchand’s grandson. Jamnadas died in July, 1876, leaving his widow Bai Suraj and his daughter Mahalaxmi surviving him. The latter married, but died in July, 1883, without leaving issue. The parties are not agreed as to who her heir is. The lower Court has not considered that question. Bai Suraj made a will in December, 1883, leaving the property to the defendant No. 1. She died in 1893. The present suit was filed in 1894.

The will is short. After referring to the state of his family and his separation and enumerating his property the testator proceeds: "As to that when I am not alive my wife named Suraj is the owner of the property and has the same right of doing things independently as I myself during my lifetime have, and after her death my daughter Mahalaxmi is the owner of the [413] said property. I have, therefore, made this my will in respect thereof." This is the translation which has been furnished to us. Though it conveys the general meaning it is not literally accurate. The Subordinate Judge renders it thus: "And my wife has powers to do in the same way as I have absolute powers to do when I am present, and in case of my wife’s death after that my daughter Mahalaxmi is the owner of that property." The words "tens

Mr. Rao, who argued the appeal with much ability for the appellant, contends that the true intention of the testator to be gathered from the words of the will was to give an absolute and unqualified estate in perpetuity with the fullest powers of alienation and disposition to the widow, and that the gift to Mahalaxmi was substitutionary to provide for the event of Bai Suraj dying in the lifetime of the testator. He relied upon the rule deducible from the cases of Gee v. Mayor, &c., of Manchester (1) and Woodburne v. Woodburne (2). He argues that unless this construction is adopted, and if Bai Suraj takes only a life estate, the words giving her such ample powers over the property must be rejected as meaningless. It appears to us, however, that, as we have already said, the gift over to Mahalaxmi is not expressed as a contingency by the testator, but as a certainty, and that, therefore, there is no room or basis for the argument. The words which gave the widow such ample power over the property are, we think, only intended to enlarge the Hindu widow’s ordinary power and to provide that she is to be perfectly untrammeled in its enjoyment and management so long as she lives, but that the estate is still to pass to Mahalaxmi on her death. We are of opinion that Bai Suraj took only a life estate in the property with remainder to Mahalaxmi after her death.

[414] Mr. Govardhanram, on the other hand, contended that the gift to Mahalaxmi was contingent on her surviving Bai Suraj, but we think that his contention also ought not to prevail, and that Mahalaxmi took a vested estate in the property subject to the life interest given to Bai Suraj. In the first place, there are no words to be found in the will expressive of contingency, and the will certainly in express terms disposes of the entire estate of the testator in the property. This is the rule laid down in s. 106 of the Indian Succession Act, which, though inapplicable to the will which we are construing, has been made applicable by the Hindu Wills Act to Hindu wills executed in the Presidency Town. It is argued that this construction would defeat the probable intentions of the testator, but we think not. It is clear that if Mahalaxmi had survived Bai Suraj she would have taken an absolute estate under the will and that it would then have passed to her heirs if she died intestate. The same result follows if she dies before Bai Suraj. It passes on her death to her heirs. If she had survived Bai Suraj (in the absence of a will) she would also have taken an absolute estate in the property which would in that case also have passed to her heirs. The case of the property passing to Mahalaxmi absolutely and after her death to her heirs may well, therefore, have been the intention of the testator in any event; but it is, we think, idle to speculate on intention where none is expressed. What the testator has done is to give his whole property to his wife and daughter and to leave the result to the general rules of law. We must, therefore, hold that Bai Mahalaxmi took a vested estate in the property after the death of the widow Bai Suraj which upon her death passed to her heirs.

(1) 17 Q.B. 737. (2) 23 L.J. Ch. 336.
This will defeat the plaintiff's claim in this suit unless he is the heir of Mahalaxmi. It is not conceded that he is not. We must send down an issue to have it determined whether the plaintiff is the heir of Mahalaxmi. Finding to be certified within two months. Further evidence on the issue may be received.

Issue sent down.

[415] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

RAMCHANDRA KRISHNAPA (Plaintiff) v. BELYA AND ANOTHER (Defendants).

SUBRAO VITHOBA GURGURE (Auction-purchaser).* [18th August, 1896.]

Execution—Sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 307—Payment by purchaser into the Post Office within time—Money not received by the Court until after expiration of time allowed by the section.

A purchaser at an execution sale was bound under s. 307 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to pay the balance of the purchase-money into Court on the 19th June, 1896. On the 17th June he paid in the amount to the Post Office at Yellapur and obtained a money order which he sent to the Nazir of the Court. The Nazir did not receive the money until the 22nd June.

Held, that the payment was not in time. The Post Office is not the agent of the Court and the purchaser was bound to see that the money reached the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of s. 307.

On the 4th June, 1896, certain immovable property was sold in execution of the decree of the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Karwar. The purchaser paid the deposit of twenty-five per cent. on the amount of the purchase-money on the same day. Under s. 307 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) he was bound to pay the balance of the purchase-money before the evening of the 19th June. On the 17th June he paid the money into the Post Office at Yellapur and caused a money order to be sent to the Nazir of the Court. The Nazir received the money on the 22nd June.

On these facts the Subordinate Judge submitted the following question:—

"Whether a payment into the Post Office is equivalent to a payment into Court for the purposes of s. 307 of the Code of Civil Procedure?"

[416] The opinion of the Subordinate Judge was in the affirmative.

He referred to Srinivas v. Malayacha (1); Gujadhur Pawree v. Naik Pawree (2).

Shamrao Vithal (amicus curiae), for plaintiff and defendants.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar (amicus curiae), for auction-purchaser.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—We answer the question in the negative. The Post Office is not a part of the Court or the agent of the Court. The purchaser, if he chooses to send the purchase-money by it, must, as in any other mode of sending the money, send it so that it shall reach the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of s. 307 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He cannot treat the time of payment into the Post Office as the time of payment to the Court. In both the cases cited by the Subordinate Judge, the money was actually brought to the Court within the time allowed, so that they have no application to the present case.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

AMAVA AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Appellants v. MAHADGAUDA (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [24th August, 1896.] [417]

Hindu law—Jains—Adoption—Death of only son leaving widows in lifetime of father—Subsequent death of father—Vesting of father's estate in son's widows—Adoption by son's senior widow without consent of junior widow—Divesting of estate.

By custom the Jains are governed in matters of adoption by the ordinary rules of Hindu law.

Where an only son has died in his father's lifetime leaving a widow, an adoption by her after the father's death, and after she has inherited the estate, is valid.

Where the son has left two widows, an adoption by the senior widow after the father's death is valid although the younger widow does not consent and although such adoption divests the estate which she has inherited from her father-in-law.

The authority of a widow to adopt is at an end when the estate after being vested in her son has passed to the son's widow.

[417] An adoption by a widow in a divided family cannot divest any estate other than her own and her co-widow's except perhaps with the consent of the heir in whom the estate has vested.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur C. N. Bhat, Joint-First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara with appellate powers, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb Venkatrao Pandurang Deshpande, Subordinate Judge of Tasgaon.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain property, alleging that he had been adopted by Sarasvatibai, senior widow of Kalgaida, in October, 1880, and that the property was in the possession of defendant No. 1 (Amava), younger widow of Kalgaida who had predeceased his father Daulatgaida.

Amava (defendant No. 1) pleaded that the property of her father-in-law had devolved upon her and her co-widow Sarasvatibai and was now vested in them; that Sarasvatibai had no right to adopt without her (Amava's) consent, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, not validly adopted.

The defences of other defendants were immaterial.

The Subordinate Judge found that the adoption of the plaintiff by Sarasvatibai was valid, and that the consent of defendant No. 1 to the adoption was not necessary. He, therefore, awarded the plaintiff's claim subject to the maintenance due to defendant No. 1 the amount of which was to be determined in execution.

On appeal by defendant No. 1 the Judge confirmed the decree.
Defendant No. 1 preferred a second appeal.
Vasudev R. Jogekar, for the appellant (defendant No. 1).
Daji A. Khare, for the respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The parties to this appeal are Jains. The question to be decided is whether the senior widow of a son who predeceased his father can adopt after that father’s death without the consent of the junior widow.

Daulatguda, the owner of the estate, had a son Kalguda, who died childless in his father’s life-time, leaving two widows Sarasvatibai and Amava. On Daulatguda’s death, leaving neither widow nor descendants, Sarasvati and Amava inherited [418] the estate as the nearest sapindas.
Subsequently Sarasvati, the elder co-widow, adopted the plaintiff
Mahadguda without the consent of Amava.

That by custom Jains are governed in matters of adoption by the ordinary rules of Hindu law is established by the case of Bhagvadas v.
Rajmal (1). We must, therefore, consider whether according to Hindu law the above adoption would be valid.

If Sarasvati had been a sole widow it is difficult to see on what ground the adoption could have been impugned.

By Hindu law, according to the Maratha school, a sole widow in a divided family may without express authority adopt to her deceased husband, but cannot by so doing divest any estate already vested by inheritance other than her own. In such a case the assent of kinsmen is not required. In a united family she can, if not specially authorized by her husband, adopt only with the assent of the co-partners. In the present case, Daulatguda and his son Kalguda were presumably united. During Daulatguda’s life, Kalguda’s widow could have adopted with the consent of her father-in-law. After Daulatguda’s death, the widow having gained independence of control by reason of there being no other co-partner in existence could, in conformity with the presumption of implied authority from her husband recognized by the Maratha school, have adopted a son.
Thus, in the case of Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (2) it was held that the authority to adopt subsisted in the case of the widow of a predeceased co-partner and could be exercised after the death of the last surviving member of the co-partnership, the sanction of the last survivor’s widow being required not to supplement that authority but to divest the estate which had been inherited by the last survivor’s widow. This view is in no way inconsistent with the decision in Krishnarav v. Shankarrav (3), in which it was held that the authority given by implication by the deceased husband of a widow was an end and incapable of execution [319] after the estate having vested in deceased’s son had passed on that son’s death by inheritance to the son’s widow. The principle on which this decision rests will be found explained in Bhoojban Moyee v. Ram Kishore (4), in which their Lordships remarked as follow:—“How then is the deed to be construed when we regard it merely as a deed of permission to adopt? What is the intention to be collected from it, and how far will the law permit such intention to be effected? It must be admitted that it contemplates the possibility of more than one adoption; that it shows a strong desire on the part of the maker for the continuance of a person to perform his funeral rites and to succeed to his property; and that it does not in express terms assign any limits to the period within which the adoption may be made. But it is plain that some limits must be assigned. It might well have been that Bhowani had left a son, natural born or adopted, and that such son had died himself leaving a son, and that such son had attained his majority in the lifetime of Chandrabullee Deba. It could hardly have been intended that after the lapse of several successive heirs a son should be adopted to the great-grandfather of the last taker when all the spiritual purposes of a son according to the largest construction of them would have been satisfied.

In Pudna Coomari v. The Court of Wards (1) the Privy Council applying the principle of a limit of authority explained in the above passage said that upon the vesting of the estate in the son’s widow the power of adoption by the son’s mother (proceeding in that case from an express authority to adopt given by the husband) was at an end. In Krishnarav v. Shankararav (2) this Court merely applied the above principle to a case governed by the law of the Maratha school in which the authority from the husband was implied instead of being express. In so doing the Court followed the decision in Kesav v. Govind (3) in which Mr. Justice West very clearly explained the doctrine of the limitation of a widow’s implied authority. In the case of Shri Dharidhar v. Chinto (4) it was held that the widow of a [420] predeceased son could not adopt so as to divest the estate inherited by the widow of her father-in-law. This decision apparently proceeded on the principle explained in Chandra v. Gojarabi (5) that an estate which had once passed away to a separated heir could not be affected by a subsequent adoption, for it must be remembered that the widow of the last survivor of a group of co-parceiners takes by inheritance as if that survivor had been a separated householder, and that consequently when the estate has been inherited by the widow of the last survivor it cannot be divested (at least without the consent of the person in whom it is vested) by an adoption made by the widow of a predeceased co-parceiner. The same view was expressed in another way by the Privy Council in Bhubaneswari v. Nikkomul (6) in which their Lordships said: “An adoption after the death of a collateral does not entitle the adopted son to come in as heir of the collateral” for this would be contrary to the rule that on the death of a separated householder or last surviving member of a co-parcenary the inheritance passes at once to the nearest heir or group of heirs and cannot be held in suspense subject to a possible adoption. In Babu Anaji v. Rainoji (7) it was held, following Rupehand v. Rakhmabai (8), that the general rule that an adoption by a widow could not divest an estate vested by inheritance in an heir was subject to the exception that it might divest such estate if made with such heir’s consent. This proposition was disputed by Mr. Justice Candy in Vasudev v. Ramchandra (9), his opinion being in accordance with the decision in Annamah v. Mabbu (10) and a dictum in Dharidhar v. Chinto (4), but not deriving support from the case of Krishnarav v. Shankararav (2) if our view of the principle of this decision be correct.

(1) 8 I.A. 229. (2) 17 B. 164. (3) 9 B. 94. (4) 20 B. 260.
From the cases above referred to, it seems to us that two rules are established which govern adoptions by widows:

First. That having regard to the doctrine of satisfaction of spiritual purposes the authority of a widow to adopt is at an end when the estate, after being vested in her son, has passed to the son’s widow.

2ndly. That an adoption by a widow in a divided family cannot divest any estate of inheritance other than her own (and her co-widow’s) except perhaps with the consent of the heir in whom the estate has vested in regard to which exception the decisions are conflicting.

In the case of Sangapa v. Vyasa (1) which came before Mr. Justice Bayley and Mr. Justice Fulton, the Court was asked to extend the first of these rules by holding that the authority of the mother was at an end when the son died unmarried after attaining full age and ceremonial competence. To this request they did not consider that the authorities justified them in acceding, but as the case is under appeal to the Privy Council, the matter cannot be treated at present as settled.

Now it seems clear that an adoption by a sole widow of a son who died childless in his father’s lifetime made after that father’s death and after the estate has been inherited by such widow as nearest sapinda is not inconsistent with either of these rules. It is certainly not in conflict with the second. It appears evident also that it is not at variance with the first when the reasoning on which that rule is based is borne in mind, for as the widow’s husband never had a son, it cannot be contended that all (or any) of the spiritual purposes of a son have been satisfied. If it be objected that under this decision the widow of a childless separated bahu who may have inherited an estate as nearest sapinda will be able by adoption to divert the inheritance on her death from the next heir, the answer seems to be that during the widow’s life the next heir has no vested interest in the inheritance, that the widow has a right to adopt a son to her own husband, that the right cannot be defeated by the accident of her having inherited the estate of a sapinda, and that the adoptive son will be in precisely the same position in regard to the inheritance of that estate on his adoptive mother’s death as if he had been born in the family. There remains, therefore, no ground for doubting [422] the validity of an adoption by the sole widow of a son who has died in his father’s lifetime after the father’s death and after the estate has been inherited by the son’s widow.

The next question to consider is whether the fact of there being a younger co-widow not consenting invalidates the adoption by the elder widow. Amongst Hindus the question is settled by the decisions in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (2) and Ramji v. Ghama (3) which show that as it is the younger widow’s duty to assent to the adoption in order to secure spiritual and other benefits to her husband, her omission to do so does not affect its validity notwithstanding the fact that it divests her estate. The reasoning on which the law is based is probably not wholly applicable to Jains, just as a similar objection may be urged in regard to many other rules of adoption. But as it has been decided that by general custom the Jains are governed by Hindu law in matters of adoption, and as no special custom affecting adoption by co-widows has been proved to exist among Jains, there is no ground for holding that the general law ought not to be applied. We, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hosking.

BHIMAPAIYA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. RAMCHANDRA BHIMRAO AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents.*

[1st September, 1896.]

Resumption—Land granted with condition of service—Land granted as remuneration for service—Service attached to grant of hereditary office—Adverse possession—Limitation.

Land granted with a condition of service attached to the grant cannot be resumed when the service is no longer required.

But land granted as remuneration for service may be resumed when the service is no longer required, except when there has been a grant of an hereditary office to those who are to perform the service. In that case the land can only be resumed when the need of such service altogether ceases. Where the services are still required, and the grantee has a right to the hereditary office, he cannot be deprived of the land on the mere ground that the grantor prefers to appoint some one else to officiate.

The ancestors of the plaintiff appointed the ancestors of the defendants as hereditary kulkarnis and granted to them certain lands as remuneration for service as kulkarni, and as karkun. The service required as karkun ceased in 1863-64. Members of defendants' family officiated as kulkarni for more than two hundred years. They continued to officiate till 1887. Their services were then dispensed with, and a stranger was appointed kulkarni by the plaintiff. In 1894 the plaintiff sued to recover all the lands.

Held, (1) that the appointment of the defendants' family as hereditary kulkarni was valid.

(2) That the claim to recover possession of part of the lands assigned for the remuneration of the defendants as karkun was time-barred by the defendants' adverse possession since 1863-64.

(3) That the defendants' possession of the lands assigned for the remuneration of the defendants as kulkarni was not adverse to the plaintiff previously to 1887, but that as the hereditary kulkarnis of the village the defendants were entitled to enjoy the land so long as the services of a kulkarni were required, whether their services were accepted or were refused, provided they duly discharged the duties of the office should their services be required.

APPEAL from the decision of J. J. Heaton, District Judge of Dharwar. The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendants certain lands situate in the village of Annigeri, known as the Wat Gadag or Gadagindari lands, Sirenhallidari lands and Hebursdari lands.

The plaintiff alleged that the ancestors of the plaintiff had granted these lands to the ancestors of the defendants as remuneration for service as karkun to plaintiff's family and as kulkarni of the village of Annigeri; that defendants had continued to render service as kulkarni of Annigeri till August, 1887, when plaintiff dispensed with defendants' services both as karkun and kulkarni, since which time the defendants had wrongfully held the lands and refused to give them up. The defendants contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to resume the lands merely because he declined to accept service from the defendants as kulkarni, i.e., that the defendants were willing to do such services as were lawfully required from them, and that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

[424] The Judge held that the plaintiff was not entitled to resume the lands in suit, or any of them, without giving the defendant the option... of continuing to render service for which they were granted, and that the claim as regards Wat Gadag lands was time-barred. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed with respect to Wat Gadag lands only.

Rao Snehb V. J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader).—Our appeal relates to Wat Gadag lands in respect of which the lower Court has held our claim barred. But there has been no adverse possession of them.
The defendants have always held the land as our agents (mutalikas).

But further we contend that when there has been a grant of land for service, the land is resumable when the service ceases. The appointment of an hereditary mutalik (agent) is invalid—Kavji v. Mahadevrao (1); Krishnaji v. Vitthalrao (2); Bhimaji v. Giriprao (3). The case of Narainsing v. Mahadevsing (4) is not in point, as the grant there was made by Government. He cited s. 83 of Bombay Act V of 1879.

Daji A. Khare, for respondent (defendant).—The defendant ceased to do service as karkun in 1863, but he has held the land granted as remueration for such service ever since. The plaintiff's claim to it is, therefore, barred. The office of mutalik may be hereditary—Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 56. We rely on Krishnarao v. Rangrao(5); Gopal v. Sakharam(6); Radhabai v. Anantrao (7); Bhimaji v. Giriprao (3); if the defendants are willing to perform the services for which the lands were granted, the plaintiff cannot resume the lands—Forbes v. Meer Mahomed (8).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—This action was instituted by Bhimapaiya Deshpande to recover possession of certain lands in the village of Annigari in the Dharwar District, known as Wat Gadag lands, and certain other lands.
Plaintiff alleged that his ancestor granted the said lands to the ancestors of defendants as [426] remuneration for service as karkun and as kulkarni, and that in 1887 he dispensed with the services of defendants, and demanded that the lands should be given up, but that defendants refused to comply with his demand. The defendants replied (inter alia) that the lands had been granted as sarva inam, and that they had never refused to perform service.

The District Judge found that the lands claimed other than the Wat Gadag lands had been granted to defendants' ancestors as sarva inam, and that the Wat Gadag lands were permanently granted as remuneration for service, and that defendants had been in adverse possession for over twelve years before suit, and he rejected the whole claim. Plaintiff appeals as to the Wat Gadag lands only.

The earliest evidence which defendants have produced as to their title to the Wat Gadag lands consists of a document executed by the Deshpande to their ancestors in A. D. 1716. It sets out that the defendants' family had from old times held six mars of land Wat Gadag as mushahira (salary) for service (the nature of the service is not stated) done by two men; that the Deshpande had taken money from them; that they had objected they were writers, and not cultivators, and would prefer that the Deshpande should get the lands tilled by cultivators rather than they would continue to hold the land on such terms; that the deshpande having considered their complaint guaranteed the return of the money taken from them and would allow them to hold the land free from all exactions in return for the service they did. It is admitted that the service required from defendants as karkarni ceased in 1863-64, as Government no longer required such service from the Deshpande. Members of the defendants’ family continued to officiate as kulkarni of Annigeri till 1887 and then their services were dispensed with, and a stranger was appointed kulkarni as the deputy of the deshpande. Only one instance has been shown in which a person who was not a member of defendants’ family officiated as kulkarni before 1887; this was the appointment in July, 1858, of Anant Ganesh, but he was appointed by Venkape, a member of defendants’ family.

The defendants have never denied that the kulkarniship of Annigeri belongs to the Deshpande, but they claim to be the [426] hereditary deputy kulkarni. It is contended for defendants that the Wat Gadag land was granted to their ancestor, with a condition of service attached to the grant, while, on the other hand, the contention for plaintiff is that the land was granted as remuneration for service.

The distinction between these two kinds of grants was recognized by the Privy Council in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee (1). In the case of a grant of the first kind, the land cannot be resumed when the service is no longer required; in the case of a grant of the other kind the land may be resumed. This rule as to the resumption of land granted as remuneration for service can only be applied (in a case where there has been a grant of an hereditary office) when the need of such service altogether ceases. In the present case the services of a kulkarni are still required, and if defendants have a right to the hereditary deputy kulkarniship they cannot be deprived of the land which they hold as remuneration for such office, on the mere ground that plaintiff prefers to appoint some one else to officiate as kulkarni.

We have then first to consider the nature of the grant of the Wat Gadag land. It appears to us that it was a grant of land as remuneration for future service. The wording of the instrument passed by the Deshpande in A.D. 1716 shows this. It is also evidenced by a letter written by the Deshpande on the 24th February, 1850, (Ex. 73) to a member of defendants’ family, when, as the Government Pleader argues, he could not have anticipated that the Courts would distinguish between a grant burdened with a condition of service and a grant of land as remuneration for service. In that letter the Deshpande wrote on account of a dispute about the pay of the officiating kulkarni. “This is, therefore, to inform you that you cousins should arrange among yourselves what work each is to do. For this you receive lands and cash allowances. Divide that among yourselves and do the work.” Mr. Khare points out that in 1844 Annandibai, who was then Deshpande, spoke of the grant of land to defendants as their inam. Wilson, in his Glossary, says that the term ‘Inam’ is sometimes vaguely applied to grants of rent-free lands, without reference to perpetuity or any specified conditions; it is not [427] unlikely that Annandibai used the word in this vague sense. Were the defendants hereditary deputy kulkarnis? We think the question must be answered affirmatively. Members of their family alone have officiated, so far as the evidence shows, certainly for over 200 years, and probably for over 300 years, with the exception before referred to and explained, and the necessary inference from this long continued term of office is, we think, that defendants' ancestors were permanently appointed to the office. It is true that the Deshpande has been consulted by Government as to who should officiate, but the pedigree (Ex. 98) shows that for many years there have been several members of defendants' family available for service, and it was necessary that one should be selected for service from time to time. The Deshpande appears always to have selected a member of the defendants' family until the year 1887.

Was the appointment of a hereditary gumasta kulkarni valid? The decision of Forbes and Tucker, JJ. in Ravji v. Mahadevrai (1) is against the validity of such an appointment though made before any British legislation on the subject. The learned Judges, without citing any specified authority, say: "The holder of an hereditary office being simply a tenant for life, as has been frequently decided, the nomination of an hereditary substitute to his successors in the office is an act clearly beyond his competency." In Krishnaji v. Vithalrao (2) this case of Ravji v. Mahadevrai is mentioned as an authority on the point, but the appointment which was held to be invalid was one made in 1850, and the distinction between appointments to hereditary offices made before Reg. XVI of 1827 came into force and appointments made subsequently does not seem to have been considered. On the other hand in Krishnaraiv v. Rangrao (3) Westropp, J. upon the strength of a large number of cases which he cites, says: "As to civil hereditary offices and the inama (vatan) annexed to them, the balance of authority seems to incline in favour of the alienability in permanence (previously to British legislation) as well of the offices as of the inama appendant to them, together or separately." This view of the law (428) has been followed in several cases—Radhabai v. Ananta (4); Bhimaji v. Girapra (5); Lakshman v. Narayanrao (6)—and may now be taken to be the law on the subject. See also ss. 56 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, 1874. We find, then, that the defendants are the hereditary gumasta kulkarnis of Annigeri, and that so long as the services of a kulkarni are required for that village, the defendants are entitled to enjoy so much of the Wat Gadag land as has been assigned to them as remuneration for such services whether their services are accepted or refused, provided they duly discharge the duties of the office should their services be required.

As has been already stated, the Wat Gadag land was assigned for remuneration for the services of a karkuni and of a kulkarni. Plaintiff has not distinguished in the plaint between the part assigned as remuneration for one office and the part assigned for the other office, but there is some evidence that half the land was assigned for each office, and as there were two persons whose services were required, this seems probable. The claim to recover possession of the part assigned for remunerating the karkun has been long since time-barred. In the view we have taken as to the nature of defendants' tenure of the office of kulkarni, possession of the part of the land assigned for the remuneration of the kulkarni was not adverse to the Deshpande before 1887. For these reasons we confirm the decree of the District Judge with costs.

VEDU (Original Defendant), Applicant v. NILKANTH (Original Plaintiff), Opponent.* [1st September, 1896.]

Landlord and tenant—Possessory suit by landlord—Lease—Tenant can show that lease determined by sale.

In a possessory suit before a Mamlatdar, though it is not competent to a tenant to deny his landlord's title at the date of his lease, it is open to him to [429] show that it has since determined, e.g., by a sale to him by the landlord, in which case the tenant no longer holds under a title derived from the landlord.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb Shankar Krishna, Mamlatdar of Jalgaon.

The plaintiff brought a summary suit to recover possession from the defendant of four fields, alleging that they had been let by him to the defendant for a year under a lease which terminated on Chaitra Shudh 1st, Samvat 1952, (15th March, 1896), but the defendant refused to deliver up possession.

The defendant pleaded that he had purchased the fields from the plaintiff five days before the expiry of the lease under a deed of sale.

At the hearing the defendant applied for time to enable him to produce the deed of sale from the Registrar's office. The Mamlatdar rejected the application and awarded the plaintiff's claim, holding that even if the deed of sale was produced, it would not help the defendant, as he could not deny his landlord's title, and under the lease he was bound to give up possession.

The defendant applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882), and obtained a rule nisi calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the decision of the Mamlatdar should not be set aside.

Mahadeo V. Bhat appeared for the applicant (defendant) in support of the rule.

Gokuldas K. Parekh, for the opponent (plaintiff) showed cause.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—From the judgment of the Mamlatdar it would appear that he would have allowed the defendant an opportunity of producing his alleged sale-deed from the office of the Registrar had he not been under the impression that it would not, if produced and proved, have been a good answer to the plaintiff's claim. This was a mistake on his part. Had the plaintiff sold the land to the defendant, the defendant would no longer be holding under a title derived from the plaintiff. [430] Though it is not competent to a tenant to deny his landlord's title at the date of his lease, it is open to him to show that it has since determined.

We set aside the decree and remand the case for a re-trial having reference to the above remarks. Costs, costs in the cause.

Decree set aside and case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hosking.

BAI SHIRINBAI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. KHARSHEDJI NASARVANJI MASALAVALA (Original Defendant), Respondent.*

Parsi—Marriage—Infant marriage among Parsis—Custom—Suit for declaration of nullity of infant marriage—Age of majority applicable in case of such suit—Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), ss. 2 and 3—Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), s. 3—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 120—Practice—Second appeal—Finding of lower Courts as to custom.

A Parsi female, within three years after she had attained the age of twenty-one, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Broach for a declaration that a marriage ceremony performed in 1869, when she was not three years old, did not create the status of husband and wife between her and the defendant. She had never lived with the defendant as his wife. The Subordinate Judge held that the marriage was valid and binding, being of opinion that the custom of infant marriage among the Parsis was well established and recognized. On appeal the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that at all events in 1869, when the marriage took place, the custom was common and recognized as binding. On second appeal the High Court concurred with the opinion expressed in Peshotam v. Maheherbai (1) that the Zoroastrian system did not contemplate marriage in infancy, but the lower Courts having found a custom had grown up among Parsis in India validating such marriages, and that the custom was in force in 1869, did not consider it open on second appeal to arrive at an independent finding as to whether the evidence established the existence of such a custom.

Held, that a Parsi suing to have a marriage declared void is "acting in the matter of marriage" and, therefore, the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), which makes the age of eighteen the age of majority, does not apply to a question of limitation with regard to such suit. The age of majority in such a case is that prescribed by the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), viz., twenty-one years.

[31] Held, also, that art. 120 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was applicable to the above suit and that the plaintiff having for the purpose of bringing the suit attained her majority at twenty-one, the suit was not barred.

Act XV of 1865 contains no provision as to the age at which a Parsi marriage can be validly contracted, the matter being left to the general law which governs Parsis in that particular, just as the English Marriage Act (4 Geo. IV, c. 76) leaves it to be dealt with by the common law of England.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of C. Fawcett, Assistant Judge of Broach, confirming the decree of Rao Sahib Chunilal D. Kavishvar, Subordinate Judge of Broach.

Suit by a wife for a declaration of nullity of marriage. The parties were Parsis. The suit was filed on 11th September, 1890.

The plaintiff alleged that she was born on the 20th September, 1866; that on the 25th January, 1869, she being then between two and three years old, she went through the ceremony of marriage with the defendant; that she had never lived with him as his wife and had never ratified or acquiesced in the alleged marriage, but on the contrary had always repudiated it and had refused to live with the defendant. She contended that the pretended marriage was null and void, as she, being at the time an infant three years old, was incapable of consenting to the contract. She, therefore, prayed for a declaration that the marriage ceremony had not created the status of husband and wife, and that the alleged marriage was null and void.

* Second Appeal No. 117 of 1896.

The defendant contended (inter alia) that the suit was time-barred by limitation; that the marriage was legal and binding; and that plaintiff could not repudiate it.

The Subordinate Judge held that the marriage was valid and binding on the plaintiff. In his judgment he said:—

"The suit was not time-barred, because the cause of action accrued to plaintiff when she was informed of the marriage on reaching years of discretion, that is, at the age of fourteen. The ordinary period of limiting was six years under art. 120 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), but under s. 7 of the same Act the period was extended to three years from the date of plaintiff's attaining majority. She was proved to have been born on the 20th September, 1866, and in the matter of the marriage the plaintiff attained her majority under s. 3 of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865) at the age of twenty-one and not at the age of eighteen under the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875).
The plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to institute the suit at any time before she completed her twenty-fourth year, and the suit having been brought on the 11th September, 1890, was not time-barred.

"The marriage was valid, as the custom of infant marriages among Parsis was well established and recognized, as valid and was not prohibited by the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act. The requisites to the validity of a Parsi marriage had also been observed in the present case. The marriage was therefore, binding upon the plaintiff.

"The plaintiff could not repudiate the marriage. There was no authority for holding that she could, and the contrary opinion was expressed by Scott, J., in Peshotam v. Meherbai (1)."

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree. He was of opinion that the suit was barred by limitation. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"As to the custom, it is clearly established by the evidence in the case.
Even the plaintiff's witnesses admit that the custom was formerly very prevailing and was recognized as valid among the Parsis. * * The custom is fast dying out, and it may be that it has now ceased to be a well-established custom having the force of law. That, however, is not the question for me to decide. It is beyond any doubt whatever that in 1869, when this marriage took place, the custom was common and recognized as binding.

"The Subordinate Judge bases his decision upon s. 2 (a) of the Indian Majority Act, 1875, read with s. 3 of Act XV of 1865. He argues that as a Parsi boy or girl is not sui juris for the purpose of entering into a marriage contract until he or she reaches the age of twenty-one, a fortiori, he or she cannot file such a suit as this without being represented by a guardian or next friend within that period. I do not, however, think this argument sound. As laid down in the case reported at I.L.R., 3 Mad., 248, s. 2 of Act IX of 1875 refers only to the capacity to contract, and not to the capacity to sue. It does not, therefore, follow that because the plaintiff was not sui juris so as to contract a valid marriage between eighteen and twenty-one, that she was not in a position to bring a suit in a case like this. The word 'minor' in s. 7 of Act XV of 1877 must, in my opinion, be construed with reference to the general law as laid down in the Indian Majority Act, 1875, under which the plaintiff attained her majority at the age of eighteen. She should accordingly have brought her suit within three years from 20th September, 1884, and as she failed to do so, her suit is time barred."

(1) 13 B. 802.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Macpherson with Ardesir, Hormasji and Dinska, appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—The suit is not barred by limitation. The [433] age of majority for marriage among Parsees is twenty-one years under s. 3 of the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865); the Indian Majority Act (IX, 1875) is not applicable. Under the provisions of s. 2, cl. (a), that Act is not applicable to marriage, dower, divorce and adoption. The words in the clause are "the capacity of any person to act." We contend that instituting a suit is a capacity to act; otherwise a person who is disabled from contracting marriage before he is twenty-one years old, would be entitled to bring a suit to set aside a marriage made with the consent of guardians. Under art. 120, sect. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the period of limitation for a suit of this nature being six years our claim is within time.

There is no custom of infant marriage among Parsees. The sacred books do not sanction it. If there had been such a custom the Legislature would have given binding effect to it by the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act. The Legislature would not have ignored a recognized custom.

Marriage among Parsees is a contract between the husband and wife. The contracting parties must understand and be capable of consenting to the contract. Here the parties were infants when the marriage was performed and quite incapable of understanding or consenting to it.

According to the sacred books of the Parsees the earliest age at which the marriage ceremony can be performed is between seven and twelve years, but the plaintiff's marriage took place when she was only three years old.

Scott with Maneckshah J. Taleyarkhan, appeared for the respondent (defendant).—As to the question of limitation, it is true that the provisions of the Indian Majority Act do not apply to marriage, dower, divorce and adoption. But these exceptions cannot prevent a person sui juris from bringing a suit within the statutory period after attaining the age of eighteen years. The present suit is not brought under the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act.

[FARRAN, C. J.—The question is whether repudiating a marriage is acting in the matter of marriage].

We submit it would be so.

[434] If the suit is in time then the question is whether the marriage is binding on the parties. Both the lower Courts have concurred in finding on the evidence that it is binding. That finding is a finding of fact and cannot be upset in second appeal. There is overwhelming evidence in the case with respect to the custom of such marriages among Parsees. The Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act does not lay down that infant marriages are illegal. Marriage may be a contract under that Act, but it is not necessarily a contract under the Contract Act.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The first question which has to be considered in this appeal is whether the suit is within time. The plaintiff Shirinbai, as found by the lower Courts, was born on the 20th September, 1866. Her marriage with the defendant, which she impeaches, took place in or about the year 1869. On the 20th September, 1884, she, therefore, attained the age of eighteen, and on the 20th September, 1887, the age of twenty-one years. On the 11th September, 1890, within three years of the latter date she filed the present suit in which she prays for a decree declaring that the marriage ceremony performed in her infancy did not create the status of wife and husband between her and the defendant.

It is admitted that art. 120 of the schedule to the Limitation Act governs the present case, as no other article in the schedule applies specifically to it. That article allows a period of six years within which to sue from the time when the right to sue accrues. We agree with the lower appellate Court that the right to sue—the cause of action—accrued during the plaintiff’s infancy at the time when being of years of discretion she knew of the marriage and understood its consequences, which is found to be at latest when she was fourteen years of age. That being so, the effect of s. 7 of the Act is to allow the plaintiff three years’ time within which to sue after attaining her majority. We must, therefore, inquire whether for the purpose of bringing this suit the plaintiff attained her majority on reaching the age of eighteen or of twenty-one years. The question is by no means free from difficulty.

When the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865) was passed, twenty-one was the age of majority for Parsis in the Presidency Town, as the English law in that respect applied to them—Peshotam v. Meherbai (1); Naoroji v. Rogers (2). There is no evidence before us to show that a different law as to the age of majority amongst Parsis prevailed in the mofussil. The Legislature in Act XV of 1865 adopted twenty-one years as the age of majority for Parsis, enacting by s. 3 that no marriage contracted after the commencement of the Act should be valid, unless in the case of any Parsi who should not have completed the age of twenty-one years the consent of his or her father or guardian should have been previously given to such marriage. The schedule to the Act shows that the age of twenty-one was inserted in s. 3 as denoting the limit of age of infancy. For the purpose of the Act it must, therefore, we think, be taken that minority did not cease amongst Parsis until the age of twenty one, and it was so held by Candy, J., in Sorabji v. Buchooobai (3). The present suit is not, however, brought under the provisions of that Act, as (probably by an oversight) no provision is contained in it dealing with a case like the present where it is alleged that a marriage though in form a marriage is invalid in law, the element of consent being absent—Peshotam v. Meherbai (supra). It is, we think, to be regretted that a case like this cannot be tried before the special Parsi tribunal constituted by the Legislature for the trial of cognate cases.

The “Indian Majority Act” (IX of 1875) enacts generally (subject to a certain specific exception which does not apply here) that “every person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years and not before” (s. 3), but by s. 2 nothing in the Act “shall affect the capacity of any person to act in the following matters (namely), marriage * * divorce, &c.” The question is whether filing a suit like the present is “acting in the matter of marriage.” If it is, a Parsi’s minority is not in

(2) 4 B. H. C. R. O.C. J. 1.
(3) 18 B. 866.
that respect altered—his capacity is not affected—by Act IX of 1875.
On the best consideration which we can give to the subject we think that the question must be affirmatively answered. A Parsi suing for a divorce must, we [436] think, be an "acting by him in the matter of divorce." It is the only way in which a Parsi can act in that matter. A Parsi suing to have a marriage declared void appears to us similarly an acting by him in the matter of marriage. It would be, as pointed out in argument, a strange anomaly if a Parsi between eighteen and twenty-one years of age could not contract a marriage without the consent of his guardian, but could sue to set it aside of his free will as though he were a major. This view is not perhaps wholly reconcileable with the judgment of the Madras High Court in Puyikuth v. Kairhirapokil (1), but that case was not argued, and the decision can be supported on other grounds. The Majority Act does not use the expression "capacity to contract," but "capacity to act," which is of much wider import. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the suit is not time-barred.

Turning to the merits of the appeal it is first to be observed that Act XV of 1865 contains no provision as to the age at which a Parsi can contract marriage. Though the Legislature in s. 37 impliedly recognizes the validity of the marriage of a Parsi woman under the age of fourteen and of a Parsi male under the age of sixteen, it does not deal with the age at which a Parsi marriage can be validly contracted. That matter is left to the general law which governs Parsis in that particular just as the English Marriage Act (4 Geo. IV, c. 76) leaves the same matter to be dealt with by the Common Law of England. Now in Ardeseer v. Perozeboyde (2) it is assumed by the Privy Council that the validity of a Parsi marriage must be determined by Parsi law and not by English law. That opinion was expressed in a case which was brought in the late Supreme Court on its Ecclesiastical Side, but the dictum is of general application and applies with even more force outside the limits of the Presidency Town where under Reg. IV of 1827 the law to be observed is, in the absence of Acts and Regulations, the usage of the country in which the suit arose; if none such appears, the law of the defendant, and in the absence of specific law and usage, justice, equity and good conscience alone.

[437] The difficulty in this case is to ascertain what the Parsi law on the subject of infant marriage is. Mr. Justice Scott seems to have been of opinion that the Zoroastrian system did not contemplate marriage in infancy—Peshotam v. Meherbai (supra) at p. 311. In that opinion we concur. The authorities referred to by him and those cited before us appear to be inconsistent with any other view.

In the present case, however, we are met by the finding of the lower Courts that there has grown up in India a custom amongst Parsis which validates and renders binding marriages between Parsis though contracted between children of tender age, and that that custom was in full force as a custom in 1869. Sitting as we are in second appeal we feel that it is not open to us to arrive at an independent finding as to whether the evidence establishes the existence of such a custom, as there is indisputably a large body of evidence upon the record in support of it.

It may well be, as contended by Mr. Macpherson, that the Assistant Judge might have treated that evidence as establishing, not a custom binding as law but a mere practice, the validity of which as embracing a customary law the backwardness and ignorance of Parsis generally in former times and of Parsi children especially as to their rights on attaining years of discretion or of majority and the habit of adhering to the wishes of their parents prevented from being questioned. "Communis error." (He argues) "non habet jus." Such a finding, it is contended, would not have invalidated infant marriages where the parties on attaining years of discretion had not repudiated them, but would only have severed the marriage tie in rare instances like the present in which the married pair or one of them at the proper time repudiated the marriage performed during their infancy. It would have illegitimized no children, but would have afforded relief in cases of hardship. That is an argument which is, we think, entitled to much consideration, but it is not open to us on appeal to give effect to it. It no doubt was pressed upon the Assistant Judge, and he declined to accede to it; and we may add, that Mr. Justice Scott in the case which we have above referred to appears not to have been inclined to accept it, though he decided the case upon a different ground. It is also contended [438] for the appellant that the Assistant Judge has not understood the distinction between practice and custom, and that his finding amounts to nothing more than (what is conceded) a finding as to the common practice of infant marriages amongst Parsis. The Assistant Judge, however, finds that the custom was both common and recognized as binding, which shows that he fully appreciated the distinction as we should expect that a judge of the judicial acumen and knowledge of the Assistant Judge in this case would certainly do.

It is lastly urged that by the upheaval of opinion amongst enlightened Parsis upon this subject which resulted in the passing of Act XV of 1865 the custom, if it prevailed as a custom, was as it were broken up, and that after that time no such custom could as a binding custom exist, but we cannot accede to that argument. No doubt the more enlightened amongst Parsis revolted against the practice and desired that it should cease to be treated as a custom, but it is impossible to read the passages to which our attention was directed without seeing that the writers of them believed that the custom against which they inveighed in their view existed as such. If they thought that infant marriages allowed children the option of repudiating them on attaining years of discretion, there would have been no need for their asking for special legislation in the matter. The Parsi law would in this view have been in accord with the English law upon the same subject. The practice only would have needed reformation. We must confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

IMPERATRIX v. NARAYAN VAMANAJI PATIL.* [3rd September, 1896.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 545—Compensation—Injury caused by the offence committed—Indirect consequences resulting from the offence.

Compensation for loss caused by inability of the complainant to attend to his work on account of his time being taken up with the prosecution of the accused. [438] cannot be ordered to be paid under s. 545 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), which deals with expenses incurred in the prosecution and with compensation for the injury only.

This was a reference by H. F. Silcoek, District Magistrate of Nasik, under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). The accused was convicted by the Second Class Magistrate of Dindori under s. 504 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLI of 1860) and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 12.

Rs. 5 out of the fine, which was recovered, were ordered by the Magistrate to be given to the complainant as compensation for the trouble and annoyance he had to suffer in prosecuting the accused and for the loss sustained by him for stoppage of his work.

Therupon the District Magistrate of Nasik referred the case for the orders of the High Court under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). He was of opinion that the Magistrate’s order was illegal “inasmuch as the section (s. 515, cl. b) allows the fine to be applied in compensation for the injury caused by the offence committed.” He referred to 7 Mad. H. C. Rep., Appx. XIII and to the Queen v. Reddon (1).

There was no appearance either for the accused or for the Crown.

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Parsons and Ranade, JJ.).

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—The Magistrate has ordered compensation for loss of time, in that the complainant could not go on with his field work on account of the prosecution of the accused. We do not think that this comes within the provisions of s. 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code which deals with expenses incurred in the prosecution and with compensation for the injury only.

We reverse the order of compensation.

Order reversed.

22 B. 440.

[440] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hosking.

KAMAYA NAIK (Original Defendant No. 1), Appellant v. DEVAPA RUDRA NAIK AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.*

[8th September, 1896.]

Mortgage—Redemption—Mortgagee in possession—Payment by mortgagees of assessment payable by mortgagor—Right of mortgagee to take amount so paid to mortgage-debt—Tender—Offer by letter to pay debt.

Where a mortgagee in possession pays the assessment on the mortgaged land which was payable by the mortgagor, he has a right to tack on the amount so paid to his mortgage-debt.

A mere offer by a debtor by letter to pay an amount cannot be treated as a tender either in law or in equity. In order to stop interest, a strict tender should be proved.

SECOND appeal from the decision of E. H. Moscardi, District Judge of Kanara, amending the decree of Rao Saheb N. B. Muzumdar, Subordinate Judge of Honavar.

Suit for redemption. The plaintiffs' vendors had mortgaged the land in question to the first defendant with possession for Rs. 80.

Under the mortgage the first defendant was to take all the profits of the land in lieu of interest and pay the Government dues, and the mortgage was to be redeemed in ten years.

In April, 1890, plaintiffs sent a written notice to the first defendant calling on him to receive payment of the money and surrender the land. The defendant refused, and the plaintiffs thereupon brought this suit praying for redemption in payment of Rs. 80, and that the first defendant might be ordered to pay mense profits to them from October, 1890, amounting to Rs. 94-4-0.

It appeared that at the date of the mortgage the assessment on the mortgaged land was annas 12-3, but subsequently it had been increased to Rs. 4-3-10. The defendant (mortgagee) had paid this additional assessment. He now contended (inter alia) that he ought to be allowed to add the amount so paid by him to the amount due to him under the mortgage and to recover it [441] from the plaintiff, and that the increased assessment with interest was a charge on the land.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who were brothers of defendant No. 1, did not appear.

The Subordinate Judge found (inter alia) that the first defendant was entitled to add the sum of Rs. 10-6-9 on account of the enhanced assessment paid by him and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to mesne profits, the alleged tender by them in April, 1890, being insufficient. He, therefore, passed the following order:

"Plaintiffs do recover possession of the land on payment to defendant No. 1 of Rs. 90-6-9 and his costs within four months from to-day. On default to pay, the right of plaintiffs to redeem the land shall for ever be foreclosed."

* Second Appeal No. 318 of 1896.
The following is an extract from his judgment:

"The mortgage-deed was passed in 1867 and is duly registered. It is admitted by both parties. It stipulates that the land, which is a garden, is mortgaged for Rs. 80; that the mortgagee should enjoy possession of the garden; that its annual profits are about 385 cocoanuts worth Rs. 5-12-3; that from this interest Rs. 5 per year and Government dues Rs. 0-12-3 should be paid by the mortgagee; that the mortgagee should never complain that the profits have fallen, and the mortgagor should not demand the increase in case the profits increase; that the money should be paid within 10 years before the end of the cultivating season. Thus both parties knew that the profits would either increase or decrease, and stipulated that whatever the amount of the same it should be retained by the mortgagee in lieu of interest. But there is nothing in the deed showing that the parties expected that the Government dues of the land would be enhanced, or that it was their intention that the enhanced portion should be paid by the mortgagee. The Government dues at the date of the deed were annas 12-3, but since the introduction of the revenue survey in 1860 they have been Rs. 4-4-0 including the local fund cess. The mortgagor, like the landlord of a mulgoni tenant, should, therefore, pay the excess. It is admitted by both parties that defendant No. 1 has paid all the Government dues till now. He is, therefore, entitled to recover the excess from the plaintiffs. But the amount is not a charge on the land. The deed shows that only Rs. 80 are a charge on the land. In Mahadaji v. Joti (1) it was held that in the case of a usufructuary mortgage if the deed charges only the principal on the land, the land cannot be security for interest. In the present case the mortgagees ought to have recovered the excess of Government dues from the mortgagor personally from time to time, as was done in Nikku Mal v. Sulaiman (2).

[442] "Defendant No. 1 can, therefore, recover from plaintiffs only the last three years' excess, namely, Rs. 10-6-9."

The plaintiffs appealed and defendant No. 1 preferred cross-objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The Judge found that under the terms of the mortgage the plaintiffs were liable to recover from the defendant the amount of assessment paid by him over and above the amount which had been payable at the date of the mortgage, but that such an amount was not a charge on the land (Nugender Ghunder v. Sreemuty Kaminee Dossee (3)) and that the plaintiffs were not bound to repay such amount before recovering possession of the land; that the notice given by the plaintiff in April, 1890, was a sufficient tender of the redemption money; that the plaintiffs were entitled to mesne profits from the date mentioned by them in the plaint to the date of payment or delivery of possession less any amount paid by the defendant as assessment in excess of Rs. 0-12-3, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover their costs from the defendant. He, therefore, passed a decree in the following terms:

"Accordingly I amend the decree of the lower Court, and direct that, if the plaintiffs within six months of this date shall pay into Court the sum of Rs. 80, the defendants shall give them possession of the land in suit; otherwise, the plaintiffs shall be for ever foreclosed from redeeming the same. And I further direct that on the plaintiffs making such payment they shall be entitled to recover from the money so paid into Court, and from the defendant No. 1 personally, mesne profits at the rate claimed in the plaint from October, 1890, to the date of delivery of possession, and their costs of this suit and appeal, less any payments in excess of annas 12-3 per annum, that defendant No. 1 may have made in respect of the Government assessment and local-fund cess of the land in suit. Defendant No. 1 to bear his own costs throughout."

The first defendant preferred a second appeal.

Dattatraya A. Idgunjii, for the appellant (defendant No. 1).—When the defendant became mortgagee, the assessment on the land was annas 12-3. Subsequently it was enhanced to Rs. 4-3-10, that is, Rs. 3-7-7 were added to the original amount. The question is whether he is entitled to tack on the enhanced assessment to the amount of the mortgage. No doubt the mortgage is, [443] according to its terms, to be redeemed on payment of Rs. 80 only. But the defendant is mortgagee in possession and he had to look both to the safety of his security and the interest of the mortgagor. If he had not paid the increased assessment, the property would have been sold for arrears of revenue and he would have lost his security, and the mortgagor would have lost his right of redemption. The increased assessment is, therefore, a charge on the mortgaged property and the defendant has a lien on the property for the amount and is entitled to retain it till it is paid. See s. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882); Shaik Idrus v. Vithal Rakhmaji (1); Girdharlal v. Bhomanath (2). The Judge has relied on Nugender Chunder Ghose v. Sreemunit Kaminee Dossee (3). But that decision is not against us. It supports our contention.

In April, 1890, the plaintiff gave the defendant a notice offering to redeem on payment of Rs. 80. That notice was not equivalent to a tender of the redemption money, first, because the sum offered was not sufficient; secondly, because the notice ought to have been given, according to the terms of the mortgage, before the beginning of the cultivating season, that is, before the 31st March; and thirdly, because the money was not actually produced and tendered—Fisher on Mortgages, p. 739; s. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). There being no sufficient tender, mesne profits ought not to have been awarded against the defendant.

The order as to costs is wrong—Sadasiv v. Bhiyji (4).

Vasudev G. Bhandarkar, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—We would support the decree, but on grounds different from those taken by the Judge. Under the terms of the mortgage we were not liable to pay enhanced assessment. The question whether the defendant as mortgagee is entitled to add the increased assessment to the amount of the mortgage depends upon the circumstances of the case—Shaik Idrus v. Vithal Rakhmaji (1); Achut v. Hari (5).

[444] The Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is not applicable. It came into force in this Presidency in January, 1893. The present suit was filed in 1893, but we had made the tender in April, 1890.

In the lower Courts the defendant did not contend that the notice which we gave in April, 1890, did not amount to a tender. Even in the written statement no contention on this point was raised.

When we made the tender in 1890, s. 14 of Reg. V of 1827 was in force, and it laid down that as soon as tender was made, interest should cease. The notice we gave requested the defendant to go to a certain house and there receive Rs. 80. The tender was sufficient. The plaintiffs then believed that they had offered the whole amount that was due —Haji Abdul Rahman v. Haji Noor Mahomed (1); Rameshar Singh v.

Kanahia Sahu (2).

The award of mesne profits and costs depends on whether we made a good tender. If the tender was good, then the mortgagee would not be entitled to mesne profits and costs. If a mortgagee refuses to accept a proper tender, he becomes liable to pay the mortgagor’s costs—Fisher on Mortgages, p. 912; Dhondo v. Bilkrishna (3).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—We agree with the District Judge in the construction which he agrees with the Subordinate Judge has put upon the mortgaged in this case, viz., that the produce of the land was to be taken at Rs. 5-12-5 both in favourable and unfavourable years and that out of the produce calculated on that basis the mortgagee was to pay himself his interest, viz., Rs. 5 each year—and to pay the assessment 12 annas 3 pies on account of the mortgagor. The mortgage was for Rs. 80 and was made redeemable on payment of that sum.

Upon this construction the addition to the assessment of Rs. 3-7-7 which was laid upon the land in 1880 became payable by the mortgagor and not by the mortgagee. The latter, however, paid it.

[445] The next question is whether this payment of the addition to the assessment upon the land can be tackled to the mortgage or (as held by the lower Courts) gives rise to merely a personal remedy against the mortgagor to the extent of the payments made by the mortgagee on his account. The authority cited by the District Judge—Nugender Chunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dossee (4)—when carefully read does not bear out the proposition for which the District Judge has cited it. It is usually referred to as an authority for the opposite view. The actual decision turned upon a question of pleading. The representative of the mortgagee paid the arrears of the Government revenue to save the mortgaged estate from sale while it was in the possession of the widow of the mortgagor. He then brought a suit against the widow which did not raise any claim against the estate, but sought only a personal decree against her. This he obtained, but finding that he could not execute it against the estate he filed a supplemental suit against the widow and the reversioners praying that the amount of the original decree might be realized by selling the estate. The Privy Council affirming the judgment of the High Court held that the decree which the plaintiff had obtained could only be enforced against the widow’s interest in the estate of her husband. The Judicial Committee, however, intimated their opinion (p. 267 of the Report) that the plaintiff in a properly constituted suit would have been entitled to have had an additional charge on the estate declared in his favour by reason of his having saved the estate by payment of the Government revenue.

In Shaik Idrus v. Vithal Rakhmaji (5) Westropp, C.J., and Melvill, J., allowed a mortgagee in possession who had paid the Government assessment from his own funds a lien on the estate for the amount. That case is on all fours with the present. The same law was applied in Girdhar Lal v. Bhola Nath (6), where the Court held that the rules

(1) 16 B. 141.
(2) 3 A. 653.
(3) 8 B. 190.
(4) 11 M.I.A. 241.
(6) 10 A. 611.
contained in s. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act "only reproduce the doctrines which the Courts of Justice in India have uniformly adopted, and it reproduces the older law." The right of a mortgagee to tack [446] assessment paid on account of the mortgagor to his mortgage-debt is also recognized in Achut v. Hari (1). We are, therefore, of opinion that the mortgagee-defendant had a lien on the mortgaged property for the amount of the added assessment which he paid on behalf of the mortgagor with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The lien for the extra assessment is given by the law and not by the terms of the mortgage-deed. The case cited by the Subordinate Judge—Mahadaji v. Joti (2)—where the decision turned on the terms of the mortgage-bond, is not, therefore, in point here.

It follows that the offer to redeem by paying Rs. 80, which the plaintiff-mortgagor made by his registered letter in April, 1890 (Ex. 35), was an offer of an insufficient amount which the defendant was not bound to accept. The lower Courts have treated this offer as a tender, and no objection appears to have been made to its sufficiency as such by the defendant. A mere offer by letter to pay an amount is not, however, usually treated as a tender either in law or in equity—Fisher on Mortgages, p. 912. In order to stop interest, a strict tender should be proved—Coots on Mortgages, p. 359 (5th Ed.).

The award of mesne profits against the defendant from the date of the notice of April, 1890, cannot, therefore, be sustained, nor the order directing the mortgagee-defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs. The mortgagee not being in default is entitled to be paid his costs of the suit to redeem him—Jamal v. Mahomedbhai (3); Sadashiv v. Bhioji (4).

Unless the pleaders agree on the amount, we must remand the case to have the accounts taken on the footing of this judgment. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court.

Case remanded.

[447] INSOLVENCY JURISDICTION.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

IN RE BHAGWANDAS NAROTAMAS, AN INSOLVENT.
CHUNILAL DHARAMDAS AND OTHERS (APPPELLANTS) V. HARILAL RAMDAS (RESPONDENT). [10th DECEMBER, 1897.]

Insolvency—Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict. c. 21), s. 96—Order for examination of witnesses where witnesses are defendants in a suit brought by insolvent prior to his insolveney—Practice—Procedure.

One Bhagwandas Narotamdas filed a suit against the three appellants Chunilal Dharamdas, Dharmandas Dullabram and Chotalal Ishwardas praying for a declaration that he was their partner in a certain business, &c. Chunilal Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram filed their written statements, and affidavits of documents were made and inspection given and taken on either side; but Chotalal Ishwardas did not file either his written statement or his affidavit of documents. On the 28th July, 1897, the plaintiff Bhagwandas was adjudicated an insolvent, and on the 4th September, Chotalal Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram obtained an order under s. 370 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

directing the Official Assignee to elect, on or before the 18th September, 1897, whether he would proceed with the suit, and, if so, to give security for costs.

On the 4th October, 1897, one Harilal Ramdas, a creditor of the insolvent, obtained an order from the Insolvent Court under s. 36 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21) for the examination of Chunilal Dharamdas, Dharamdas Dullabram and Chotalal Ishwardas with reference to the estate and effects of the said insolvent, and the 10th November, 1897, was appointed for their examination. On the said 10th November they obtained a rule from the Insolvent Court to set aside the said order for their examination, or in the alternative to postpone their examination until after the above suit, in which they were defendants, should be heard. The rule was subsequently discharged and the examination was ordered to proceed. On appeal, Held, that Chunilal Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram ought not to be prejudiced in their defence in the suit brought against them by the insolvent by being subjected to an examination until that case was heard. By filing their written statements, and giving inspection of documents, they had given all the information they could be required to give until the hearing should take place.

As to Chotalal Ishwardas, however, the order for examination was confirmed, he not having filed any defence in the civil suit nor given inspection.

[448] APPEAL from Strachey, J.

This was an appeal from an order made by Strachey, J., as Commissioner of the Insolvent Court, discharging a rule obtained by the appellants to set aside an order made for their examination under s. 36 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), or to postpone their examination until after the hearing of a certain suit in which they were defendants.

On the 10th December, 1896, Bhagwandas Narotamdas filed a suit (No. 653 of 1896) against the three appellants, Chunilal Dharamdas, Dharamdas Dullabram and Chotalal Ishwardas, praying for a declaration that he was their partner in a certain business and for accounts and other relief. Two of the said defendants, viz., Chunilal Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram, duly filed their written statements of defence, and affidavits of documents were made and inspection given and taken on either side; but the third defendant, Chotalal Ishwardas, did not file either his written statement or his affidavit of documents.

On the 28th July, 1897, the plaintiff Bhagwandas Narotamdas was adjudged an insolvent under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act at the instance of one Pranjiwandas Laidas, and was directed to file his schedule within thirty days from that date.

On the 4th September, 1897, Chunilal Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram obtained an order under s. 370 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) in suit No. 653 of 1896, directing the Official Assignee to elect, on or before the 18th September, 1897, whether he would proceed with the said suit, and, if so, to give security for costs.

On the 4th October, 1897, one Harilal Ramdas, a creditor of the insolvent Bhagwandas, obtained an order from the Commissioner of the Insolvent Court under s. 36 of the Insolvent Act for the examination of the three defendants Chunilal Dharamdas, Dharamdas Dullabram and Chotalal Ishwardas with reference to the estate and effects of the said insolvent, and by the said order the 10th November, 1897, was appointed for their examination.

On the said 10th November, 1897, they applied for and obtained from the Commissioner of the Insolvent Court a rule nisi calling upon the said Harilal Ramdas to show cause why the [449] aforesaid order for their examination should not be revoked or set aside, or in the alternative why their examination should not be postponed until after the hearing of the suit No. 653 of 1896, in which they were defendants.
On the 24th November, 1897, this rule was discharged and the examination was ordered to proceed.

Against this order they appealed, and on the 30th November, 1897, they obtained a rule nisi from the appeal Court calling upon Harilal Ramdas to show cause why execution of the order of the Insolvent Court of the 24th November should not be stayed. The appeal Court also granted an interim stay of the said order pending the argument of this rule.

The rule now came on for hearing.

Lang (Advocate-General), for Chunilal Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram.—My clients have taken no part in the insolvency proceedings. They are defendants in a civil suit brought against them by the insolvent which has not yet been heard. In that suit they have given inspection of the documents in their possession to the solicitors of the insolvent plaintiff. These solicitors are now acting for the Official Assignee, who represents the creditors. The creditor Harilal should not be permitted to examine them until after the suit is heard. Such a proceeding may greatly prejudice them in their defence in that suit. The order directing their immediate examination is wrong—In re Franks (1); In re Metropolitan Bank (2); In re North Australian Territory Co. (3).

Starling, for Chotalal Ishwardas.—Although my client has not yet filed his defence in the civil suit, he ought not to be examined until that case is heard—In re Imperial Continental Water Corporation (4); In re North Brazilian Sugar Factories (5).

Mankar, for the creditor-respondent, Harilal Ramdas.—My client appears in the schedule filed by the insolvent as a creditor to a large amount. The Official Assignee, who now represents him and the other creditors, is required by the order of the 4th September, 1897, to elect whether he will proceed with the [450] suit No. 653 of 1896 against the three appellants, and if so, to give security for costs. My client and other creditors are entitled, before providing such security for the Official Assignee, to ascertain whether that suit, if proceeded with, is likely to bring in any assets for distribution among the creditors. That information can only be obtained by examining the three appellants under s. 36 of the Insolvent Act. They are alleged to be debtors of the insolvent. It is unreasonable to require the creditors and the Official Assignee to elect and to give security in the dark. My client in his affidavit alleges that the insolvent and the appellants are acting in collusion. He cited In re Metropolitan Brush Electric Light and Power Co (6); Massey v. Allen (7).

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—We think that the two appellants who have filed their written statements in suit No. 653 of 1896, and who have in that suit given inspection of the documents in their possession, ought not to be examined until that case is heard. They have given all the information they can be required to give in that suit until the hearing takes place. They ought not to be prejudiced in their defence by being subjected to an examination under s. 36 of the Insolvent Act. That section was not intended to enable an insolvent plaintiff to cross-examine persons against whom he has filed a suit. Here it is not the Official Assignee who desires further information; it is a creditor of the insolvent.

As to the third appellant Chotala Ishwardas, we think his position is different from that of the others. He has not filed any defence to the suit, nor has he given any inspection. His examination under s. 36 may proceed. He, of course, need not answer any questions to his prejudice, if so advised. As to him we confirm the order of the Insolvency Court. The examination of the other two appellants should be postponed until the disposal of suit No. 653 of 1896.

The respondent Harialal must pay the costs of the two successful appellants.

Before Mr. Justice Fulton.

STEVENS AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. BEDFORD (Defendant).
[27th and 28th January, 1898.]

Friendly society—Rules—Power to alter rules.

The Bombay Unconnected Service Family Pension Fund was a voluntary society established in 1850. Its object was to provide pensions for the widows of its members. One of its rules provided that the rules of the society were subject to such additions and alterations as might from time to time be sanctioned by the general body of subscribers, and, by the form of application for admission as a member, each applicant promised and engaged to abide by the rules of the society.

The plaintiff became a member in 1875. At that time one of the rules (which had been passed in 1871) provided that the pensions of widows resident in Europe should be payable to them at the rate of 2s. per rupee.

On the 20th July, 1895, the society passed a new rule which provided that all pensions due or becoming due after the 31st July, 1896, should be paid to incumbents residing in Europe or the colonies at the market rate of exchange on the day of remittance.

The plaintiff contended that the society was not competent to alter the rule passed in 1871 by which he had been induced to join the society, and he prayed for a declaration that his wife, if and when she became a widow, would be entitled to have her pension paid at par.

Held, dismissing the suit, that the society was competent to alter its rules and that the plaintiff was bound by such altered rules. The contract with the plaintiff was that his widow, if he left one, should receive such pension as the rules prescribed, and the rules were liable to alteration by a majority at a general meeting to which he would be subject so long as he remained a member.

The defendant was the chairman of the managing committee of a voluntary society, established in 1850, called the Bombay Unconnected Service Family Pension Fund. The society was not incorporated or registered under any Act. Its funds were formed by the subscriptions of its members.

The object of the society was to provide pensions for the widows of its members. Its membership was restricted to those who were or had been unconnected servants of Government employed in the Bombay Presidency.

Suit No. 386 of 1897.
The first plaintiff was a subscriber and member of the society. He had become a member in 1875. At that date, by a rule of the society which had been passed in 1871, the pensions of widows who resided in Europe were payable to them at the rate of 2s. per rupee. A prospectus had been issued by the society which set forth the advantages it offered to its members and amongst them was mentioned the payment of pensions at par as provided by the rule of 1871. This rule was altered in 1887 as to widows of those who became members after the 1st January, 1888, but it was still maintained as to the widows of those who were members prior to that date. On the 20th of July, 1895, however, the society passed a rule making the pension to all widows who should become incumbents on the fund after the 1st August, 1895, payable at the market rate of exchange on the day of remittance. The rule of 1871 was thus wholly repealed.

The first plaintiff and his wife (the second plaintiff) brought this suit to have it declared that this last-mentioned rule was _ultra vires_ of the society, and that the second plaintiff would be entitled, in case she became a widow, to recover her pension at par as provided by the rule of 1871, which was in force when the first plaintiff joined the society.

The plaintiff stated that the first plaintiff had joined the society in 1875 and had become a subscriber for a pension of Rs. 60 a month to his wife if and when she should become a widow; that the rule as to pensions then in force was a rule passed in 1871 which provided that incumbents on the fund residing in Europe should be paid their monthly pension at the rate of two shillings to the rupee; that this rule had been passed in 1871 in order to protect such incumbents from loss by exchange which had then fallen to about 1s. 10½d., and that it was prominently printed on the outside of the printed rules as constituting one of the most valuable advantages to be obtained by joining the society, and that the first plaintiff was, in fact, mainly induced by reason of such advantage to join the society.

The plaintiff further stated that in 1887 a new rule was made providing that only widows of subscribers who had joined the _[455]_ society prior to 1st January, 1888, should receive their pensions at par.

It then set forth the new rule passed on 20th July, 1895, which repealed the rule of 1887 and provided that all pensions falling due after the 31st July, 1895, should be paid at the market rate of exchange.

With reference to this rule the plaintiffs stated their case as follows:—

"7. The plaintiffs submit that it was not competent to the Association to deprive the plaintiff Mary Elizabeth Stevens of her right to be paid her pension at par, inasmuch as the said Frederick William Stevens joined the said Association on the faith of payment at such rate of par and the Association contracted with him to that effect.

The prayer of the plaint was as follows:—

"(a) That it may be declared that it was and is not competent to the Association to deprive the plaintiff Mary Elizabeth Stevens of her right to receive her pension, if and when the same becomes and so long as the same is payable, at par.

"(b) That the plaintiff Mary Elizabeth Stevens if and when she becomes widow of the plaintiff Frederick William Stevens, will as such widow for her life, except during any period of re-marriage, be entitled to receive her pension at par.

"(c) That the plaintiffs' costs may be paid out of the funds of the Association."
The defendant was sued as one of the parties interested, and notice of the suit was published under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The defendant filed a written statement in which he contended that the new rule of July, 1895, was valid and binding on the plaintiffs; that at the time the first plaintiff joined the society he had notice that the rules were subject to such alterations and amendments as the subscribers might from time to time think necessary or desirable; and that he had become a subscriber on the terms and conditions contained in the rules then in force, or in such other rules as might afterwards be adopted by the subscribers or the majority of them.

[454] The application of the first plaintiff in 1875 to be admitted as a subscriber was in the following form:—

"TO THE SECRETARY TO THE BOMBAY UNCOVENANTED SERVICE FAMILY PENSION FUND.

"Sir,—I request to be admitted a subscriber to the Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund, and I hereby promise and engage to submit to and abide by the Rules of the Institution."

In reply to the above application he received a formal notice of his admission enclosing a copy of the rules of the fund and a certificate in the following form:—

"Certified that Mr.———has been admitted a member of the Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund, and that, provided he conforms to the requirements of that Institution, his widow will be entitled to a monthly pension of Rs.————.

Amongst the rules in force at the date of the first plaintiff's admission to the society were the following:—

"VI. No proposition affecting the stability of the Institution, or for the alteration of its rules, nor any special question shall be discussed at any of the meetings of the subscribers, unless notice thereof be given in writing to the Secretary four weeks before the meeting is held, and a copy of such notice shall be circulated to subscriber at least three weeks before the day of meeting."

"XLVII. These rules are subject to such additions and alterations as may from time to time be deemed necessary."

The rules were revised and altered from time to time, and in the copy issued in 1894 the latter of the above rules stood as follows:—

"68. These rules are subject to such additions and alterations as may from time to time be sanctioned by the general body of subscribers."

It appeared that under the rules of the fund as altered in 1887 the first plaintiff's subscription, which originally was Rs. 19-13-6 per mensem, had been reduced by abatement to Rs. 4-1-10 per mensem for the years 1895 to 1897, and from the year 1897 he would not be required to pay any subscription.

It further appeared that by accretions made under the rules of the fund the pension which would be payable to the first plaintiff's wife in case of his death would be upwards of Rs. 84 a month instead of Rs. 60 as originally subscribed for.

[455] The written statement set forth the heavy loss the society had suffered by reason of the fall in exchange and the representations made to it by the Actuary to whom its affairs were submitted every two years as required by Government. The following paragraph of the written statement states the case of the defendant:—

"15. Under the above stated circumstances it became necessary in the common interest of all the subscribers to the said fund and to save the said fund from insolvency to adopt the following resolution which was duly passed by a majority of 98 (i.e., 147 to 49) at a special general meeting of the subscribers duly convened and held on the 20th July 1895, viz., 'that pensions already due or becoming due before the 1st August, 1895, on risks accepted before the 1st January, 1893, shall be payable to incumbents residing in Europe or the colonies at the fixed rate of 2s. to the rupee, but that all other pensions due or becoming due after the 31st July, 1895, shall be paid to incumbents residing in Europe or the colonies at the market rate of exchange on the day of remittance.' The said resolution is the resolution complained of by the plaintiffs and is Rule No. 62 of the Rules now in force."

Scott (with Inverarity) for plaintiffs.—The first plaintiff became a member of the society because of the then existing rule of 1871 under which his widow would receive her pension in England at par. That was the inducement to him and to many other Europeans, and was part of his contract with the society. It is upon these terms that he has continued to be a member and has paid his subscription. The society is bound to fulfil its obligations to him. It cannot now alter the terms of its contract by merely passing a new rule. The society having secured for itself the benefit of the large sums paid by the European members who were induced to join by the old rule of 1871 ought not to be allowed to deprive those members of the advantage for which they subscribed. The society is prosperous and cannot plead necessity. It is breaking faith with those who subscribed under the rule of 1871 merely in order to apply its superfluous funds towards the general abatement of subscriptions. By the new rule of 1895 the society in effect confiscates part of the pension for which the plaintiff has subscribed. If it has power to confiscate a part, it has power to confiscate the whole. A majority cannot deprive a member of his rights. The fact that the plaintiff has benefited with others by the abatement of his subscription does not take away his right to claim the special benefit as to the pension for which he subscribed. Further, we submit that the "general body" of subscribers in Rule 68 means all the subscribers. The members must be unanimous. The rule does not give a mere majority any power. He referred to Falle v. MacEwen (1), East India Company v. Robertson (2); Secretary of State for India v. Underwood (3); Edwards v. Warden (4). The first plaintiff received no notice of the meeting by which the new rule was made. He was in England at the time.

Kirkpatrick (with Lang, Advocate General) for the defendant.—There was no contract with the first plaintiff as to the amount of his widow's pension or the mode of its payment. The contract with him was to admit him as a member of the society and to such benefits as the rules from time to time might allow to its members. The members themselves framed those rules and they claimed and exercised the right to alter them as they thought desirable. (See Rules 6 and 47 supra). The first plaintiff had full notice of this, and elected to join the society on these terms. (See his application supra). All the rules stood on an equal footing. There was no agreement with the plaintiff that any one of them should be fixed and permanent as regards him. All were equally subject to alteration. As a member he had an equal voice with the other members in making and altering them, but he is bound by the vote of the majority. As to the power of a majority, see Lindley on Partnership (5th Ed.), p. 313; Lindley on Companies (5th Ed.), pp. 578-79; Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 253, cl. (5). Notice of the meeting in July, 1895 was sent to him by registered post. The members can deal with their common property among themselves just as a partnership can—Silver v. Barnes (1), Burbidge v. Cotton (2). They can decide whether any and how much of it is available for division. A person may be induced to join a firm because it divides large profits, or a company because it declares high dividends, but that fact would not preclude the partners from determining in their common interest not to divide all the profits, or the company from refusing to continue to pay high dividends. Nearly all the [457] rules have been altered since the plaintiff became a member, and he has acquiesced. By some of these alterations he has largely benefited, e.g., by abatement of his subscription. He cannot now question the right to alter the rules. The words "general body" in Rule 68 mean majority at a general meeting. The necessity or expediency of changing the rule as to pensions is not a question for the Court. If the society had no power to make the new rule of 1895, it had none to make the rule of 1871 which the plaintiff wants to enforce. In any case the decree prayed for cannot be made, nor are the plaintiffs in a position to sue, the pension in respect of which this suit is brought having never become payable at all, nor can any decree be made against defendant—Collett on the Specific Relief Act, pp. 276, 73, 82; Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, s. 42. He referred to the following cases:—East India Company v. Robertson (3); Boldere v. East India Company (4); Secretary of State for India v. Underwood (5); Edwards v. Warden (6); Smith v. Galloway (7); Falle v. MacEwen (8).

Scott in reply:—The fact that other rules have been altered is of no importance. It is not shown that any member objected, or that any question was raised, as to the validity of the alteration. The plaintiff had a vested interest. The contract was partly performed—Gerhard v. Bates (9); Carlile v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co. (10).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—This is a suit against the chairman of the committee and the members of the Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund, to establish the right of members who joined before the 1st January, 1888, to have the pensions of their widows when resident out of India paid at the rate of two shillings to the rupee.

The first plaintiff became a member of the fund in 1875. Before doing so he received a prospectus, in the form of Ex. B, in which it was stated under the heading of "advantages" that pensions to widows in England were paid at the fixed rate of two [458] shillings per rupee. At that time exchange was a little under 1s. 10¼d., and to a gentleman domiciled in England the offer of a fixed rate of exchange at 2s. for the widow's pension naturally rendered the scheme far more attractive than would otherwise have been the case. The rule on the subject is to be found in the last sentence of No. 30 of the Rules of 1873, which provided that incumbents on the fund residing in England shall be paid their monthly pensions at the fixed rate of two shillings to the rupee. This proviso was added in 1871. At the end of 1887, in consequence of the continued fall of exchange, the rule was amended so as to exclude from the benefit of the fixed rate the widows of members who joined after the 1st January, 1888. The benefits secured to members who had joined before that date were left untouched: vide No. 62 of the Rules of 1894.

On the 20th July, 1895, in consequence of a report of the Actuary on the position of the fund, it appeared necessary to guard still further against loss by exchange, and another amendment of the rule was made abrogating the privilege of the two-shilling rate previously secured to the members who had joined before the 1st January, 1888. The amendment did not touch the pensions of widows who became incumbents on the fund before the 1st August, 1895, but abolished the privileged rate in the case of all who might become entitled to their pensions after that date.

Now on behalf of the first plaintiff it is contended that it was not competent to a majority of the members of the fund to make such an alteration in the rules against the wishes of a minority, and, secondly, that the proceedings of the meeting were invalid, because notice had not been sent to Mr. Stevens.

The first of these questions is the more important of the two, and will, therefore, be first considered. The society is not incorporated in any way, and the rights of the members inter se depend entirely on contract. When a member joins, he enters into a contract with the other members of the society who are represented by their agent or secretary authorized to admit him. The same process is repeated as each new member is accepted. In this way the members mutually contract with each other to provide benefits for widows and others on certain prescribed [459] terms. For convenience the terms are embodied in rules which are liable to alteration from time to time. As each new member joins, "he promises and engages to submit to, and abide by, the rules of the institution," and receives a copy of the rules on the acceptance of his application. We have, therefore, to look to the rules as they stood when Mr. Stevens joined. The clause of Rule 30, which had been added in 1871, provided for the payment, at two shillings, of the pensions of incumbents residing in England; and the 47th Rule declared that the rules were subject to such additions and alterations as might, from time to time, be necessary. The earlier rules prescribed the procedure to be followed, and the provision of Rule 22, that votes of subscribers at all their meetings should count and have effect singly, implied clearly that the decision of any question was to be determined by vote. In the Rules of 1894 there was some change of phraseology. And in the 68th of those rules it was declared that they were subject to such additions and alterations as might from time to time be sanctioned by the general body of subscribers. Upon this rule it was argued that the words "general body" meant the whole body and required unanimity, but I am unable to accept this view. The earlier portion of these rules, like those of 1873, prescribed the procedure for general meetings, and the 11th rule repeated the provision about the votes of subscribers having effect singly. The phrase "general body" then was evidently used simply to indicate that the rules could only be altered by the subscribers acting as a body and deciding questions in the usual way by vote at a meeting, and cannot bear the meaning for which Mr. Scott argued. The expression occurs in several other rules. In the 32nd rule it was declared that at each annual general meeting one of the auditors should be elected by the "general body" of the subscribers; but no one, I think, would contend that unless there were unanimity at the meeting no auditor could be elected. If it had been intended that there was to be no alteration of the rules in general, or of any particular class of rules, without the unanimous assent of all the members, such a provision would certainly have been expressed in clear and unmistakable phraseology. It appears then to me that the contract with Mr. Stevens was that his widow, if he left one, was to receive such pension as the rules prescribed, and that the rules were liable to alterations by a majority at a general meeting to which he would be subject so long as he remained a member. The prospectus, it is true, raised expectations which were not guaranteed by the rules, but it is, I think, impossible to treat the prospectus as part of the contract which was embodied in the application and acceptance. The application specifically referred to the rules which contained a provision for amendment, and though I cannot but sympathize with persons who rested their expectations on the prospectus, it seems impossible to say that they were justified in doing so, for if they had referred to the rules which they agreed to submit to, they would have noticed that they were liable to alteration. The prospectus was, I feel sure, issued in perfect good faith. In 1875 the necessity for altering the rules was not foreseen. But though there was probably no thought of such an alteration as has actually been made, the right of making alterations was expressly reserved. Doubtless the right to alter rules was subject to the limitations noticed by Lord Hatherley in the Secretary of State for India v. Underwood (1) that "the power of making general rules must be one of making rules that operate equally on all subscribers: they could not, by a majority, determine that all subscribers of ten years' standing should pay twice as much or half as much as those of five years' standing . . . . . . No rules, unless the expressions were insuperably the other way, would ever be so construed as to enable a majority having an interest directly opposed to the vested interest of a minority to confiscate that interest." Mr. Scott referred to Edwards v. Warden (2) to show that the majority of the members of a fund could not deprive another member of his vested right. He argued, moreover, that Mr. Stevens having for many years subscribed to the fund on certain terms had a vested right to the performance, by the other members, of their contract with him. These propositions will not be disputed; but what was that contract? It seems to me that it was simply that the widow was to receive such benefits as the rules in force when she became entitled to them might prescribe. Mr. Stevens has at present no vested interest in any particular benefit. Can it then be argued (461) that the new rule was not binding on him, because having regard to the probabilities arising from the different positions and nationalities of the members it was so inequitable that a majority should be entitled to abolish the privileged exchange that it could not be held to be an alteration authorized by rule 68? If the matter had been res integra the answer to this question might, perhaps, have been doubtful, for it is a subject in regard to which the decision of Lord Hatherley shows that there is room for doubt: but the case seems governed by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Falle v. MacEwen. It was urged that this decision was erroneous. I am unable to take this view. Irrespective of the reference

due to the Court by which the case was decided, I think that the conclusion arrived at is very firmly based on the judgments of the majority of the House of Lords in the Secretary of State v. Underwood. If by a vote of the Civil Service Mr. Underwood could be deprived of future accumulations which his position in that service rendered it almost certain that he would enjoy, and in spite of the fact that his chances of doing so were infinitely greater than those of the majority of the members who were probably his juniors by many years, and had before them much greater risk of never realizing their annuities, it seems hardly possible to contend that a vote passed by members of this fund with a view to restore the equality of widows' pensions which had been disturbed by the rule of 1871 was beyond the competence of the subscribers, merely because the expectations of some members under the former rules were considerably greater than those of others: for it must be admitted that the uncertainty whether Mr. Stevens' estate will suffer by the alteration of the rule is greater than was the uncertainty in Mr. Underwood's case.

I have arrived at this conclusion with some reluctance and hesitation, but I find no argument to justify my dissenting from the carefully considered decision of the Calcutta High Court. The case of the East India Company v. Robertson (1) in no way militates against this view, for the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided in Mr. Robertson's favour only on the ground that before the revised rules were passed he had acquired a title to the refund of the excess of his subscriptions, because in the year 1852 he had accepted the annuity on condition that the excess of his payments should be refunded to him. The question whether the apprehended deficit in the fund now under consideration could more properly have been guarded against by withdrawing the abatements of subscriptions instead of by abolishing the privileged rate of exchange, was one within the power of the meeting to determine, and does not appear to me to fall within the province of the Court to decide.

Mr. Kirkpatrick suggested that the rule of 1871 was ultra vires, but as there is no evidence to show that there was any opposition to it at the time, and it has been assented to by all members joining between 1871 and 1895, it is now far too late to take such an objection.

The other point to be considered is about the alleged want of notice to Mr. Stevens of the proposal to convene the meeting. The facts appear to be as follows:—Mr. Stevens was in England at the time; but he had not shown that before his departure he had given any special address to which communications were to be sent. Notices of the meeting of the 20th July were sent out on the 6th June. The notice for Mr. Stevens was apparently addressed to Rampart Row School of Art residence and was, I think, sent by post. It never reached Mr. Stevens. What became of it, it is impossible to say; but from the mere fact that it was not forwarded from the School of Art, I cannot infer that it was not sent there as stated by the clerk. Having regard, then, to the presumption usually drawn as to the regularity of official acts, I think it is but reasonable, in the absence of any statement by Mr. Stevens to the contrary, to hold that the School of Art residence was the last address he had given to the office, and that the transmission of the notice to that address fulfilled the requirements of Rule 7. The rule must be construed reasonably, and if the prescribed notice is sent to the last address given by the subscriber, its provisions seem to be complied with. Otherwise, if any member changed his residence without informing the secretary, it would be impossible to make any alterations in the rules during his absence, and the position of the fund might be seriously imperilled.

[463] In these circumstances I must reject the claim, but as this was a test case, and the litigation was in some measure occasioned by the careless wording of the prospectus, I shall follow the precedent set by the Calcutta High Court and make no order as to costs, excepting that the defendant may get all his costs, charges and expenses properly incurred to be taxed as between attorney and client, including costs (if any) preliminary to suit, out of the fund.

LALDAS NARANDAS (Original Defendant No. 2), Appellant v.
KISHORDAS DEVIDAS AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Amending Act VII of 1888—Agreement before decree by the decree-holder not to recover costs which the decree might award—Question to be determined in execution and not by a separate suit.

Devidas and Harilal obtained a decree on an award with costs against Shankarilal and Laldas. When they applied for its execution against Laldas in order to recover his half share of the costs, he pleaded that before the proceedings had commenced, the plaintiffs had entered into an agreement with him that none of the costs which might be awarded by the Court should be recovered from him.

Held, that the existence and validity of such an agreement ought to be determined in execution under the provisions of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and not in a separate suit.

APPEAL from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana, in execution of a decree.

[564] Harjivanadas, Shankarilal and Laldas were three brothers. A disagreement having arisen between them with respect to the division of the family property, they referred the dispute to an arbitrator, who made an award dividing the property. Subsequently, Harjivan having died, his sons Devidas and Harilal sued to enforce the award, the filing of which had been opposed. They obtained a decree which (inter alia) ordered the defendants Shankarilal and Laldas to pay the plaintiffs' costs.

Devidas and Harilal both died and their sons applied to execute the decree against Laldas for his half-share of the costs awarded by it. Laldas pleaded that the original plaintiffs to this suit (the fathers of the present applicants) had entered into an agreement with him that he should not be required to pay any of the costs which might be awarded by the decree. The Subordinate Judge held that the alleged agreement could not be set up as a ground for not executing the decree. He, therefore, held Laldas liable for a moiety of the costs, namely, Rs. 900-8-0.

Laldas appealed.

Trimbak R. Kotval, for the appellant (original defendant No. 2, Laldas).
Manekshaw J. Taleyarkhan, for the respondents (original plaintiffs).

The appeal was argued before a Division Bench consisting of Farran, C.J., and Hosking, J.

FARRAN, C.J.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, at Thana, in execution of a decree in a suit in which Devidas and Harilal Harivandas were the plaintiffs, and Shankarlal and Laldas Narandas were the defendants. The suit was on an award, the filing of which had been opposed. The decree directed the defendants to pay the plaintiffs' costs.

The present application was made by the minor sons of the original plaintiffs (who were placed on the record as representatives of their respective fathers), inter alia, for payment by the defendant Laldas Narandas of Rs. 900-8-0, being a moiety of the costs by the decree directed to be paid to the plaintiffs. In answer to the application, the defendant Laldas put in a written statement, in which he alleged that the award had been filed with his consent, and that before the proceedings for filing it commenced, the present plaintiffs' father and uncle (Devidas and Harilal) had entered into an agreement with him that no such cost as the Court might award should be recovered from him, and that if the whole of the costs which should be incurred for having the award filed should not be recovered from Shankarlal, then as to whatever amount might fall short the same should be borne by the plaintiffs' father and uncle (Devidas and Harilal) and himself half and half; and that in the matter of having the award filed the was really a plaintiff though nominally a defendant.

The pleader for the defendant Laldas asked the Subordinate Judge to raise an issue on the above allegations as to whether having regard to the agreement (which the Subordinate Judge erroneously calls an oral agreement) the defendant Laldas was liable for the costs of the decree. The Subordinate Judge declined to raise the issue asked for, as to grant it would be to go behind the decree which he could not do. In fact, he decided that the alleged agreement could not be set up as a ground for not executing the decree. He would, we consider, have acted more regularly if he had raised the issue asked for and decided it.

The first question which we have to consider is, whether the existence and effect of such an agreement can be inquired into and decided upon in execution proceedings, or whether they ought to form the subject of a separate suit. Section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code enacts that "the following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit." Sub-clauses (a) and (b) mention specific questions which are to be so determined. Sub-clause (c) is more general: "Any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree or to the stay of execution thereof." The corresponding section in Act XXIII of 1861 as there worded was considered by West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ., in Ramchandra-
LALDAS NARANDAS v. KISHORDAS DEVIDAS 22 Bom. 467

_v. Govind_ (1), where West, J., in giving the judgment of the Court says that "the general words 'any other question arising between the parties to the suit in [466] which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of the decree' according to the familiar rule of construction are to be understood of matter _ejusdem generis_ with those more particularly specified in the same enactment. The only questions which can properly arise in the execution of a decree are (1) as to the contents of the order made, (2) as to the jurisdiction to make it, and (3) as to how far it has been carried out." That view of the law was adopted and followed in _Mukund v Hari das_ (2) by Sargent, C. J., and Telang, J. It has been contended before us that this latter decision cannot now be supported, having regard to the expression of opinion by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council contained in _Prosunnio Coomar v. Kasi Das_ (3) that the clause in question should not receive a narrow construction. The contention derives support from the decision in _Azizan v. Matuk Lal_ (4) and especially from the judgment of Piggott, J., at page 458 of the Report. After an exhaustive consideration of decided cases that learned Judge says: 'I find myself unable to come to any other conclusion than this, that for reasons of policy, which it is not for a Court to contravene, the Legislature has deliberately so framed s. 244 as to prohibit in a separate suit between the parties to a decree any relief being granted which shall interfere with the conduct of the execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree. I do not see any escape from that conclusion, nor do I think it should be avoided, because possibly individual cases of inconvenience (not of absolute denial of all remedy) may arise from it.' And as to the decision in _Mukund v. Hari das_ he says (p. 460): "I own that as to the relief by way of injunction granted in that case it does seem to me not to be consistent with the decision of the Privy Council as to the scope of the words 'relating to the execution, &c.' and I think, therefore, that I am bound to conclude that had that decision been made before the Court the case of _Mukund Harshet v. Hari das Khemji_ would have been otherwise decided.'

We are ourselves inclined to take the same view. The addition of the words "or to the stay of execution thereof" to cl. (c), s. 244, does not seem to have been brought to the notice of [467] the Court in _Mukund v. Hari das_ when it followed the ruling in _Sakharam v. Govind_ which was decided before the introduction of these words into the section. We think that the matter ought to be considered by a Full Bench.

We accordingly refer to a Full Bench the question:—

"Whether the existence and validity of such an agreement as the defendant Laldas Narandas relies on, ought to be determined in execution under the provisions of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code or in a separate suit?"

The question being thus referred, it came on for argument before a Full Bench consisting of Farriar, C. J., and Parsons, Banare and Hosking, JJ.

_Trimbik R. Kotwal_, for the appellant (original defendant No. 2, Laldas).

—Laldas had not opposed the award and he was really a plaintiff, though nominally a defendant. The Judge should have considered the question as to the agreement and should have determined what was the effect of it in the execution proceedings. No separate suit would lie on the agreement—s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852). The object of the section being to benefit the parties, it should receive a liberal construction. Matters relating to execution must be determined as cheaply and as speedily as possible by the Court executing the decree—Azizan v. Matuk Lal (1); Prosunno Coomar Sanyal v. Kasi Das Sanyal (2). A narrow construction was given to the corresponding section of Act XXIII of 1861 in Sakharam v. Govind (3). That view of the law was adopted and followed in Mukund v. Haridas (4). The words "or to the stay of execution" were added to s. 244 later on by the amending Act of 1888 and it seems that these words were not brought to the notice of the Court which decided Mukund v. Haridas (4). The Bombay cases are overruled by implication by the ruling of the Privy Council in Prosunno Coomar Sanyal v. Kasi Das Sanyal (2).

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—The defendant cannot rely upon the agreement and seek redress in execution proceedings. To consider the agreement in the execution proceedings would be tantamount to going behind the [468] decree. The defendant ought either to have appealed or applied for review or applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction to get the order as to costs corrected. There would be no finality to decrees if an agreement like the present were allowed to be set up in execution proceedings. The Bombay rulings support our contention and we submit that they were correctly decided. The decision of the Privy Council relied on has no bearing upon the facts of the present case.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—After hearing the argument addressed to us in this case, I am confirmed in the view which I was inclined to take when the case came before us as a Division Bench. There appears to me to be no reason for not giving to the wide words of s. 244, cl. (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, their full significance and force. I would, therefore, for the reasons given in the referring judgment, answer the question referred to us by saying that the existence and validity of such an agreement as is referred to in the submitting judgment ought to be determined in execution and not by separate suit.

HOSKING, J.—I concur with the Chief Justice.

PARSONS, J.—I concur in the view expressed by the Division Bench which made the reference. Having regard to the language of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the opinion expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Prosunno Coomar v. Kasi Das (2) it is clear that cl. (c) of that section should not be construed narrowly, it follows, therefore, that it ought to be construed as it was in Azizan v. Matuk Lal (1) and not as it was in Mukund v. Haridas (4). In the present case the existence and validity of the agreement set up by the defendant relate to the execution of the decree, that is to say, they have to be inquired into and found upon in order to determine how the decree is to be executed. The inquiry and determination, therefore, ought to be made in execution. I answer the question in the affirmative.

RANADE, J.—In this case, the appellant Laldas and his brother Shankarlal were co-defendants in a partition proceeding instituted [469] by Devidas and another, who were the sons of their deceased third brother Harjivandas. The matters in dispute were referred to private arbitration under s. 525, and the award made was duly filed in Court, and had then the force of a decree under s. 526. The respondents, who are the heirs of Devidas and another, then gave a darkhast for the execution of the award decree and for recovery of costs, and it was in the course of these execution proceedings that appellant Laldas pleaded that there was an agreement, entered into between himself and the deceased respondents before the award was filed, to the effect that they would not hold him responsible for costs, but that they would recover the same from Shankarlal, and if the full sum was not recovered, they would bear the loss half and half with Laldas.

The Court of first instance refused to raise any issue on this point, as in its opinion it was not open to that Court in execution proceedings to go behind the decree. In the present appeal the contention was accordingly raised that the lower Court was in error in not inquiring into the question of this agreement, and the following question has been referred for the consideration of the Full Bench, whether the existence and validity of the agreement relied on by the appellant ought to be determined in execution under s. 244, Civil Procedure Code, or in a separate suit.

This reference has become necessary from the apparent conflict of the rulings of this Court in Sakharam v. Govind (1) and Mukund v. Haridas (2) with the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Prosunu Coomar v. Kasi Das (3). As far as the decision in Sakharam v. Govind is concerned, all that the Court really decided in that case was that an agreement between parties defining the manner in which a decree should be executed, if entered into before the decree was passed, and not pleaded in the course of the hearing of the suit, cannot be set up as a bar against the execution of the decree, which, for its own purposes, is to be held final as to what one party must do or forbear for the benefit of the other. The decision, in other words, was that the agreement ought to have been pleaded in the course of the hearing of the suit, and not being so pleaded, could not be urged as a plea in bar of the execution of the decree according to its terms. This case is, therefore, not so much an authority upon the question directly raised in this reference as upon another question, viz., whether a plea which a party might have raised before decree can be set up as a defence in execution proceedings. It is true Mr. Justice West in the course of his remarks gave expression to his view that the only questions which can properly arise under s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 in execution of a decree were questions relating to the contents of the decree, the jurisdiction to make it, and the extent of its satisfaction. This enumeration was obviously not meant to be exhaustive, and, as observed above, no great stress was laid on it. Under the law as it now stands, with the final addition made to s. 244 by Act VII of 1888, if the agreement relates to the stay of execution, it must be pleaded in execution, and no separate suit can be brought in respect of such an agreement. The case of Mukund v. Haridas can also be distinguished to some extent from the circumstances of the present case. There the undertaking relied upon was that the plaintiff agreed not to secure a decree against one of the defendants, and even if a decree were passed, he would not execute it. This agreement was made during the pendency of a suit, and after the decree was obtained, plaintiff broke his agreement, and sought to execute the decree. The defendant thereupon brought a separate suit to restrain the plaintiff in the former suit from executing the decree.

(1) 10 B.H.C.R. 361.  (2) 17 B. 23.  (3) 19 I.A. 166.
Sir C. Sargent made a point of this special agreement not to execute the decree at all, and distinguished the case before him on this ground from another case, Chenuirappa v. Puttappa (1), where the agreement provided, as in Sakharam v. Govind, for the execution of the decree in a manner inconsistent with its terms. He observed that in those latter cases the agreement could be and ought to be pleaded before the decree was passed. When the agreement is not to execute the decree at all, then by its very nature it could not be pleaded before the decree was passed. This seems to have been the real ground on which Sir C. Sargent held in this case that a separate suit to enforce the agreement and restrain its breach by injunction might be maintained.

[471] In the one case, as in the other, the question really turned upon the point whether the prior agreement could or could not be pleaded as defence before the decree was passed. When it could be so pleaded, and was not pleaded in the course of the hearing of the suit, Mr. Justice West held that it could not be so pleaded afterwards in bar of execution. When it could not be pleaded, Sir C. Sargent held that it might furnish a cause of action for a suit to restrain the other party from breaking his agreement. It is true, in arriving at this last conclusion, Sir C. Sargent referred with approval to the restricted interpretation suggested in the previous judgment of Mr. Justice West, but his main point obviously appears to be that when the prior agreement was not to execute the decree at all, it could not be said that such an agreement involved a question relating to the execution of the decree within the terms of s. 244. The attention of the Court was not apparently drawn to the addition of the last words in s. 244, and it is open to question how far this decision can be regarded as binding in the present case, where the agreement was not to execute the decree at all, but to execute it in respect of costs first against Shankarlal, and next to share the loss half and half.

To come next to the consideration of the Calcutta cases, most of which are reviewed in Azizan v. Matuk Lal (2), it is to be noted that even Mr. Justice Macpherson admitted in his judgment that, although a separate suit cannot be brought to stop execution on the ground that the judgment-creditor did not give credit for an uncertified adjustment or payment, there may be another form of suit in which plaintiff can claim relief of a different kind. Mr. Justice Pigot also in his judgment admitted the possibility of the relief by injunction being open to parties in certain contingencies. The authority of the decision in Azizan v. Matuk Lal (2), though it interprets s. 244 more liberally than was done in the two Bombay cases noted in the reference, must in view of these admissions be confined to the point actually decided in that case, viz., that no separate suit can be maintained to recover uncertified payments so as to stop the decree-holder's right to execute his decree according to its terms. Similarly, suits in which it is sought to set aside sales on the ground of the judgment-creditor's fraud in [472] bringing them about, stand in the same category with those which relate to uncertified adjustments or payments. Both classes of cases refer to transactions after decree, and to disputes which arise in the execution of the decree; and such transactions properly fall within the terms of s. 244, and no separate suit will lie. The extension of this prohibition to cases where the auction-purchasers are parties was approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Prosunno v. Kast

Das (1). On both these points there is now complete agreement in the decisions of all the High Courts—Sakharam v. Damodar (2); Kuriyali v. Mayan (3); Patankar v. Deoji (4); Haji Abdul Rahman v. Khaja Khaki Aruth (5). In fact, the interpretation placed by this Court on s. 258 as it stood at first was stricter than what was placed on it elsewhere.

There is not a similar agreement on the point whether when fraud is practised in obtaining a decree, or in securing its execution, a separate suit to restrain the decree-holder may or may not lie at the instance of the party defrauded. This point, however, does not arise here.

As far as the present case is concerned, I am clearly of opinion that as the agreement relied upon by the appellant was pleaded by him to stay execution of the decree in regard to costs as against him, the inquiry fell within the terms of s. 244 as finally amended in 1888. It is not clear if appellant could have urged it before the award was filed, and as it affected the manner of the execution of the decree in regard to costs, the appellant had a right to require the executing Court to investigate the matter, and there was nothing like going behind the decree in such an inquiry. Such an agreement cannot be made the cause of action for a separate suit.

I am, therefore, of opinion that a reply in favour of the first alternative must be given to the question under reference. The existence and validity of the agreement relied upon must be determined in execution under s. 244, Civil Procedure Code, and not in a separate suit.

[473] APPELLATE CIVIL.

VARAJLAL MOTICHAND (Original Decree-holder), Applicant v. KACHIA GARBAD KRUSHAL (Original Applicant), Opponent.*

[17th September, 1896.]

Execution—Attachment—Attachment of property of third person—Payment into Court of amount of decree by owner of property in order to release property—Application in execution for refund of money so paid—No jurisdiction to order refund—Separate suit necessary—Practice—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 278.

A certain box was attached in execution of a decree against one Mathur, whose father, alleging that it was his property and not Mathur's, paid the bailiff the amount of the decree in order to release it from attachment. He then applied to the Judge to have the money refunded to him. The Judge held the box to be his property, and directed repayment.

Held, that in making the order for repayment the Judge acted without jurisdiction, there being no provision in the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) under which it could be made. The proper course was to have taken steps under s. 278 of the Code to have the attachment on the property raised. By paying the amount of the decree into Court it became necessary to file a suit for the recovery of the money so paid.

Application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 682 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Khan Sabab Nowroji Byramji, Subordinate Judge of Umroth, in the Ahmedabad District.

* Application No. 144 of 1896 under the Extraordinary Jurisdiction,

(1) 19 I. A. 166. (2) 9 B. 468. (3) 7 M. 268.

In execution of a decree obtained by Varajal, against one Mathur Garbad, the bailiff attached a certain box in the house in which Mathur Garbad resided with his father Kachia.

Kachia alleged that the box was his, and was not liable to attachment, but in order to save it he was obliged to pay the bailiff the amount of the decree, and two days afterwards he applied to the Court to have the amount refunded to him. The money was still in Court and had not been paid over to the decree-holder.

The Subordinate Judge granted the application and directed repayment to be made, holding that Kachia had proved that the box was his.

[474] Varajal, the decree-holder, thereupon applied to the High Court and obtained a rule nisi calling upon Kachia to show cause why the order of repayment made by the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside.

Chimanlal H. Setalvad appeared for the applicant (Varajal, in support of the rule.—The order of repayment was made in execution. There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code for such a refund. Kachia should have brought a separate suit for the money—Dulichand v. Ramkishen (1); Jugdeo Narain Singh v. Raja Singh (2).

Nagindas T. Marphatia, for the opponent (Kachia) showed cause.—The money being still in the custody of the Court, and not having been paid over to the decree-holder, the Subordinate Judge had power to order the refund. He has found that the money was paid under protest, and that the box was really Kachia's property and was not liable to attachment. The Court surely has power to restore money which it finds after inquiry its own officer has wrongfully taken, and which is still in its hands, without putting the person wronged to the trouble, delay and expense of bringing a suit and having a fresh inquiry.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—We think that in making the order which the Subordinate Judge has made in this case he acted without jurisdiction. The property in question, a box, was attached by the Nazir, and to procure its release the opponent paid to the Nazir the amount of the decree against his son. The Subordinate Judge has ordered the amount so paid to be repaid to the opponent. There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code to which we have been referred under which such an order can be made.

Under similar circumstances the plaintiff in the case of Dulichand v. Ramkishen (1) brought a suit to recover the amount he had paid under compulsion, which went on appeal to the Privy Council. Their Lordships (at p. 653) say: "It was also objected that the remedy is not the proper one, and that some further proceedings should have been taken in the execution suit; [475] but none were pointed out by Mr. Arathoon which would afford a suitable remedy or which would preclude such an action as the present." The opponent's course, if he desired the matter to be summarily disposed of, was to have taken steps under s. 278 to have the attachment on the box raised. By paying the amount of the decree into Court he has entailed upon himself the necessity of filing a suit if he desires to recover it.

Rule absolute to set aside the order as made without jurisdiction, The applicant is entitled to his costs. Rule made absolute.

CHINTAMAN BAJAJI DEV (Original Defendant), Appellant v. CHINTAMAN BAJAJI DEV AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [24th September, 1896.]

Decree—Execution—Powers of Court in executing decree—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1862), s. 244.

The validity of a decree of which execution is sought cannot be disputed in execution proceedings under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1862).

APPEAL from the decision of G. Jacob, District Judge of Poona, in Darkhast No. 7 of 1893.

In 1874 one Chintaman Bajaji succeeded to the office of manager and trustee of the Chinchwad Savasthan.

In 1880 he instituted suit No. 1 of 1880 in the Court of the District Judge of Poona against Chintaman bin Vithoba to obtain a declaration that certain mortgages of savasthan property made to the said Chintaman bin Vithoba by Lakshmibai, one of the widows of Dherindhar the predecessor of Chintaman Bajaji as trustee and manager of the Chinchwad Savasthan, were not binding upon him.

That suit was settled by a consent decree passed on the 13th July, 1880, by which the defendant Chintaman bin Vithoba was to be paid Rs. 23,000 and interest, by annual instalments of [376] Rs. 2,000 out of the revenues of the village of Man, which was part of the savasthan property.

Subsequently Chintaman Bajaji was removed from the office of manager and trustee of the savasthan under a decree of the District Court of Poona, and other trustees were appointed. This decree was, on appeal, confirmed by the High Court. See Chintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (1).

Chintaman bin Vithoba, in execution of the consent decree in suit No. 1 of 1880, received Rs. 2,000 a year from the revenues of the village of Man till the beginning of 1891-92. Payment was then withheld. He died, and in 1893 Sadasiv and Vinayek, his sons and heirs, presented a darkhast (No. 7 of 1893) to the District Court of Poona, praying for an order for the attachment of the revenues of the village of Man and for payment from them of Rs. 2,195-8-2 in further execution of the decree in suit No. 1 of 1880.

The trustees of the Chinchwad Savasthan, having been served with notice of the application, objected to the execution of the decree, contend- ing (inter alia) that Lakshmibai had no authority to execute the mortg- ages upon which the consent decree was based; that Chintaman Bajaji had no authority to consent to the decree; and that the consideration for the mortgages had not been paid into the savasthan, and had not been applied for purposes of the devasthan.

* Appeal No. 33 of 1895.

(1) 15 B. 612.
For the decree-holders it was argued that these objections could not be taken in execution proceedings under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The District Judge held that the objections could be taken in execution proceedings, and upon consideration of the objections rejected the darklist.

Against this decision the decree-holders appealed to the High Court, Macpherson (with him Mahadeo Bhaskar Chaubal), for the appellant (deecree-holder).—We are entitled to have the decree executed. The present trustees cannot question the validity of the acts of Chintaman Bajaji, who was the former trustee [477] and their predecessor in the management of the trust. Chintaman as such trustee consented to the decree in suit No. 1 of 1880, and the validity of that decree cannot now be impeached in execution. This point is concluded by authority. Section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code does not authorize the impeachment of decrees in execution—Ram Bhunjun Singh v. Massamut Munder Koer (1) Ramanaoogro Singh v. Kishen Kishore Narain Singh (2); Burtoo Singh v. Ram Purmessur Singh (3); Sudindra v. Budan (4); Prasunnu Kumari v. Golabehand (5).

The District Judge relies upon Narayan v. Chintaman (6), Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Kesavara Govinda (7) and Venubai v. Dhondo Ganesh (8), but in none of those cases was this particular point decided.

Ganpat Sadashio Rao (with him Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar), for respondents.—In suit No. 1 of 1880, Chintaman Bajaji did not sue as trustee of the savasthan property. It is clear from the terms of the decree that suit, which provided that in the event of there being obstruction in realizing the money due from the revenues of the village of Man, the money awarded should be paid by Chintaman Bajaji personally: vide the deposition of Chintaman Bajaji in Chintaman Bajaji v. Dhondo Ganesh (9). It is thus clear that the liability of Chintaman Bajaji under that decree was personal, and did not devolve upon the succeeding trustees of the devasthan property, vis., the respondents in this appeal.

Objection to the validity of the decree of which execution is sought can be taken under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Clause (c) of that section provides for the raising of questions as to the stay of execution of decrees. This shows that it was intended that the validity of a decree might be impeached in execution—Trimbak v. Govinda (10); Narayan v. [478] Chintaman (6); Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Kesavara (7); Venubai v. Dhondo (8).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—In 1874 Chintaman Bajaji succeeded to the office of manager and trustee of the Chinshwad Savasthan, and in 1880 he instituted suit No. 1 of 1880 in the Court of the District Judge of Poona against Chintaman Vithoba to obtain a declaration that certain mortgages of savasthan property made to the said Chintaman Vithoba by Lakshimbai, one of the widows of Dharnidhar, the predecessor of Chintaman Bajaji in the management of the Chinshwad Savasthan, were not binding upon him. That suit was settled by a consent decree passed on the 13th July, 1880, awarding the defendant Chintaman...
Vithoba Rs. 23,000 and interest, by annual instalments of Rs. 2,000, out of the revenues of the village of Man, which is part of the savasthan property.

Subsequently Chintaman Bajaji was removed from the office of manager and trustee of the savasthan under a decree of the District Court of Poona, and other trustees were appointed. This decree was on appeal confirmed by the High Court—Chintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhond Ganesh Dev (1).

Chintaman Vithoba in execution of the consent decree in suit No. 1 of 1880 received Rs. 2,000 a year from the revenues of the village of Man till the beginning of 1891-92. Payment was then withheld, and in 1893 Sadashiv and Vinayek, the sons and heirs of Chintaman Vithoba, deceased, presented darkhast No. 7 of 1893 to the District Court of Poona, praying for an order for the attachment of the revenues of the village of Man and for payment from them of Rs. 2,195-8-2 in further execution of the decree in suit No. 1 of 1880.

The trustees of the Chinchwad Savasthan having been served with notice of the darkhast objected (inter alia) that Lakshmibai had no authority to execute the bonds upon which the consent decree was based, that Chintaman Bajaji had no authority to consent to the decree, and that the consideration for the bonds [479] was not lawfully paid into the savasthan or was not applied for purposes of the divasthan.

It was contended for the decree-holders that these objections could not be raised in execution proceedings under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The District Judge upon the authority of Narayan v. Chintaman (2), Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Keshavrai Govind (3) and Venubai v. Dhondo Ganesh (4) held that the objection could be raised in execution proceedings, and upon consideration of the objections rejected the darkhast.

After hearing arguments upon the question whether objections impeaching the validity of the decree of which execution is sought can be entertained in execution proceedings under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, we hold that the question must be answered in the negative. We think Mr. Macpherson has rightly argued that, so far as the reported cases show, this question has never before been fully argued and decided by this Court. In Narayan v. Chintaman (2) objections similar to the objections raised in this case were entertained in execution proceedings by this Court, but the report of the case shows that the point whether such questions could be dealt with under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code was not raised, and apparently was not considered. In Shri Ganesh Dharnidhar v. Keshavrai Govind (3) this point did not arise. In Venubai v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (4) the present point arose, but was not pressed, and the learned Judges referred to the case of Narayan v. Chintaman as an authority without noticing that the point whether the validity of a decree of which execution is sought can be disputed in execution proceedings under s. 244 was not actually decided in that case.

On the other hand there is strong authority for holding that the validity of a decree sought to be executed cannot be impeached in execution proceedings under s. 244. In Ram Dhuni Singh v. Mussamut Mundor Koor (5) the Calcutta High [480] Court held that where the sons of a deceased judgment-debtor, whose estate is declared by the case to be liable to sale, are admitted on the record as his representatives, they are not entitled in the execution stage to re-open the whole case, and to ask for a decision as to whether the debt incurred by the father was not for the benefit of the estate, or was in some other way invalid under the Hindu law and not binding on the joint family. In Ramanogro Singh v. Kishen Kishore Narain Singh (1) the same Court held that the question whether property seized by a judgment-creditor in the hands of his deceased judgment-debtor’s son, is held by the son under such circumstances as render him liable for his father’s debts, cannot be tried in execution proceedings. These cases were cited and followed in Burton Singh v. Ram Purmessur Singh (2).

The Madras High Court has ruled that a question whether the decree was obtained by fraud or collusion is not one which relates to the execution of the decree, but which affects its very substance and validity, and that such a question can only be raised by a separate suit—Sudindra v. Budan (3). In Prosunno Kumari v. Golabchand (4), where the Sebas of an idol sued to set aside decrees obtained against their predecessor on the ground that they were obtained by fraud or collusion, no objection was raised before the Lords of the Privy Council to the Sebas seeking their remedy by suit. Had the suit been barred by s. 244, Civil Procedure Code, there can be little doubt that the point would have been taken in argument.

It is contended by Mr. Rao that as cl. (c) of s. 244 provides for the entertainment of questions as to the stay of execution of decrees, therefore it was intended that the validity of a decree might be impeached in execution. We do not think that the words can be rightly understood in this sense. Questions as to the stay of execution refer, we think, to the stay of execution of valid decrees. Mr. Rao has also referred to the case of Trimbak v. Govinda (5). In that case a decree had been passed against A, and an inam jaghir village was attached in execution.

Thereupon A claimed that the attachment should be removed on the ground that the village being service vatan was not liable to attachment. The claim was rejected. A then sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to attachment and sale. The High Court, agreeing with the lower Courts, held that no suit would lie, the Court which originally rejected the claim made in the execution proceedings having had jurisdiction under the words of s. 244, cl. (c). In that case the decree of which execution was sought created no charge upon the property, but was merely a personal decree against A.

It is also contended by Mr. Rao that in suit No. 1 of 1880 Chintaman Bajaji did not sue as trustee of the savasthan property, and that the decree directed that, in the event of there being obstruction in the way of realizing the money due from the revenues of the village of Man, the money awarded should be paid by Chintaman Bajaji personally. Mr. Rao referred to the deposition of Chintaman Bajaji reported at pages 616 and 617 of I. L. R., 15 Bombay.

"I am the proprietor of the savasthan and my son is the manager. I have been treating the davasthan as my private property. I and Dev (i.e., the deity) are one. So I understand that I am the owner."

In the plaint in suit No. 1 of 1880 plaintiff described himself as, "Shri Chintaman Bajaji Dev Maharaj." He sued as if he considered... himself the incarnation of the deity Mangal Murti, and as if all the savasthan property belonged to him. It seems clear that when he undertook to pay the money awarded, he intended to do so out of the savasthan property.

The trustees-respondents did not object in the lower Court that the decree was only against Chintaman Bajajji. They came in as his legal representatives, but they are only his representatives if the decree was passed against him as a trustee for the savasthan property. If the trustees-respondents are not the representatives of the judgment-debtor in suit No. 1 of 1890, then they are not entitled to come in under s. 244, Civil Procedure Code, and if they are his representatives, they cannot dispute the validity of the decree in execution proceedings.

[482] As no attachment has been placed upon the property, objections cannot be taken under s. 278, and the only remedy for the trustees, if they have any, is by regular suit.

For these reasons we are unable to deal with the objections taken by respondents to the validity of the decree in suit No. 1 of 1890, and we must reverse the decision of the District Court, and direct that the District Court do proceed with the execution of the decree as prayed in the petition. Respondents to bear all costs of this appeal and of the proceedings in the District Court.

Order reversed and proceedings remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

RAMABAI, WIDOW OF RAMKRISHNA BALKRISHNA (Original Defendant), Appellant v. RAYA (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [28th September, 1896.]

Adoption—Second adoption in the lifetime of first adopted son is invalid—Joint enjoyment of property by an owner and a trespasser—Adverse possession—Trespasser’s right by prescription—Compromise—Family settlement, effect of.

Ramkrishna Yeshwant adopted Raya as his son, but as Raya became sickly and was not expected to live, Ramkrishna afterwards adopted Balkrishna (Raya’s brother). Ramkrishna died in 1846; and his widow Ramabai and the two adopted sons continued to live together until her death in 1866, and after her death Raya and Balkrishna still lived together until 1877, when Balkrishna died, leaving a widow Radhabai and a minor son (Ramkrishna). After that event, Radhabai and the plaintiff Raya began to live separately.

After Ramkrishna Yeshwant’s death in 1846, the lands were registered in Balkrishna’s name. In August, 1876, on the application of Radhabai on behalf of her minor son the management of the property was taken from Raya by the Collector, who himself assumed the management. A compromise of the dispute was, however, effected by which the property was to be shared equally between Raya and Ramkrishna, the minor son of Balkrishna, and from 1876 to 1882
the Collector paid them equal moieties of the produce.

In 1890, the plaintiff Raya brought this suit claiming as the adopted son of Ramkrishna Yeshwant either the whole of the property, or in the alternative a moiety of it.

[483] Held, that the adoption of Balkrishna in the lifetime of Raya was invalid.
There can be no second adoption during the lifetime of the first adopted son.

* Second Appeal No. 91 of 1895.
Held, also, that Ramkrishna (the minor son of Balkrishna) was entitled to a moiety of the estate.

Per PARSONS, J.—Ramkrishna’s title to a moiety of the estate was obtained by adverse possession. The adoption of Balkrishna was invalid, and he was not originally entitled to any part of the property and was, therefore, a trespasser; but he (and afterwards his minor son Ramkrishna) and Raya, who was entitled to the whole of it, had been jointly in possession and enjoyment of it for forty-three years. By the adverse possession of Balkrishna and his minor son, Raya lost and Balkrishna and his son gained by prescription a moiety of the estate. That moiety became the absolute self-acquired property of Balkrishna and would descend to his heirs.

Per RANADE, J.—There was no adverse possession by Balkrishna or his heirs until August, 1878, when the management of the estate was taken from Raya on the application of Radhabai. The suit was brought within twelve years of that time so that the plaintiff’s claim was not barred by limitation. But it appeared that the disputes which had arisen in 1878 were settled by a compromise which had been acted on, and of which the plaintiff had received the benefit for many years. A bona fide family arrangement is specially favoured by Courts of Equity, and it binds the parties and their representatives. On that ground I hold that the plaintiff is only entitled to recover a moiety of the property of Ramkrishna as his share, and the other moiety must remain with the appellant.

[R., 1 C.L.J. 383; 4 C.L.J. 323.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of E. H. Moscardi, District Judge of Kanara.

One Ramkrishna Yeshwant in 1845 adopted his cousin’s son Raya. Shortly afterwards, however, Raya being sickly, and not expected to live, Ramkrishna adopted Balkrishna (a brother of Raya). In 1846 Ramkrishna Yeshwant died. Raya was then less than two years old and Balkrishna was twelve, and both of them continued after Ramkrishna’s death to live with his widow Ramabai. The lands were subsequently entered in Balkrishna’s name on the statement apparently by Ramabai that he was her adopted son.

In 1861 Raya attained his majority and began to manage the property. Balkrishna went out in service. As already stated, the land was entered in Balkrishna’s name. But Raya was given a moiety of the produce, and his right to a half share was repeatedly admitted and recognized.

[484] In 1868 Ramkrishna’s widow Ramabai died, and Raya and Balkrishna still continued to live together.

In 1877 Balkrishna died leaving a minor son (Ramkrishna Balkrishna) and a widow named Radhabai. Raya then began to live separately from them.

On the 16th August, 1878, the Collector of North Kanara on the application of Radhabai on behalf of her minor son Ramkrishna deprived Raya of the possession of the property and took it into his own hands. Subsequently the dispute between Radhabai and Raya was compromised, and it was agreed that the property should be shared equally between Raya and the minor Ramkrishna.

In 1890 Raya filed this suit against the minor Ramkrishna Balkrishna claiming as the adopted son of Ramkrishna Yeshwant the whole of his property, or in the alternative a moiety of it.

The defendant denied the plaintiff’s adoption and pleaded limitation.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that plaintiff’s adoption was not proved. On the decree being confirmed by the District Judge, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, which reversed the decree and remanded the case for a fresh decision.

Pending the appeal the minor defendant Ramkrishna Balkrishna died, and his widow Ramabai, the present appellant, was put upon the record.
On remand the District Judge reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and awarded the whole of the plaintiff’s claim.

On second appeal to the High Court the case was again remanded for a finding as to whether the plaintiff’s claim was barred by limitation.
The District Judge found on remand that the suit was not barred.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The decision of this case would have been difficult were it not for authority. The contest is between the representatives of two persons who were both adopted by one and the same man (Ramkrishna Yeshwant). It was found as a fact that Raya (plaintiff) was first adopted and that Balkrishna (defendant) was subsequently adopted by Ramkrishna, because Raya suffered from rickets and was not expected to live. The District Judge considered that under these circumstances the adoption of Balkrishna was valid, and, treating Balkrishna as a member of the family and the whole family as a joint one, held that, on the death of Balkrishna’s son, Ramkrishna, without issue, during the pendency of the appeal, Raya became owner of the whole estate, the widow of Ramkrishna being entitled to maintenance only. This view of the case was clearly wrong, for the adoption of Balkrishna in the lifetime of Raya would be invalid and would confer no legal rights at all on him. The Judge had not then considered the issue of limitation raised in the case: so we remanded that issue to be found upon, and we are now in possession of that finding.

Ramkrishna died in 1846, and Raya attained majority in 1861.
Though the land was entered in the name of Balkrishna, and Raya was never actually in possession or management, yet he was given a moiety of its produce, and his right to a half share of it was repeatedly admitted and recognized. The Judge on these facts found that, though Raya had never been in exclusive possession of the property, he had never been excluded, and, therefore, his suit now would not be barred under art. 127 of the Limitation Act. The Judge, however, was still labouring under the mistaken idea that Balkrishna’s adoption was valid and that the family was joint. As the adoption is invalid we have the fact that a person entitled to the whole of an estate and a person who is not entitled to any part of it and, therefore, a trespasser have been jointly in possession and enjoyment of that estate for some forty-three years. It was argued by Mr. Macpherson for Raya that [486] these two persons would become by prescription either members of a joint Hindu family, and co-sharers in the estate, or tenants-in-common, so that the estate on the death of one would vest in the survivor. This would be, in our opinion, a very curious result, and we can find no authority for the proposition. The case of Mohesh Narain v. Taruck Nath (1) cited for the appellant seems to us practically to dispose of the case; for though there the moieties may have been separated, we do not think that that can make any difference.

(1) 20 C. 487.

In the present case, by reason of the adverse possession of Balkrishna, Raya lost and Balkrishna gained by prescription a moiety of the estate. That moiety would become the absolute self-acquired property of Balkrishna, and would, therefore, descend to his heirs. There is no relationship subsisting between Raya and Balkrishna that would enable Raya to claim the property of Balkrishna at his death. We, therefore, vary the decree of the lower appellate Court by awarding plaintiff one moiety of the property in suit to be partitioned of in execution. We order the costs of the suit and appeals to be paid out of the estate.

RANADE, J.—This is the third time that this case comes before us. It was first remanded for a distinct finding on the question of adoption. When that issue was found in favour of the original plaintiff, the respondent before us, we had to send down an issue for the determination of the question of limitation, and the case now comes before us for final decision.

The District Judge has found that the evidence fully established the priority of the original plaintiff’s adoption. He at the same time held that under the peculiar circumstances of the case, the second adoption of the minor appellant’s father Balkrishna was also proved, and that the two adopted sons were each entitled to a moiety; but as the original defendant No. 1 had died, the respondent-plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the whole property of the joint family.

On the question of limitation the District Judge has found that the respondent’s claim for his moiety of the property was not barred under art. 127 of the Limitation Act, but that, if the second adoption were held to be invalid, the respondent-plaintiff’s claim to recover possession of the whole of the property was barred by the appellant’s and his father’s adverse possession.

As regards the question of adoption, the rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rungama v. Atchama (1), Gopee Lal v. Shri Chandraoles (2), and Mohesh Narain v. Taruck Nath (3) may be held to have settled the law that there can be no valid adoption during the lifetime of the first adopted son. In the present case the direct evidence of the second adoption is chiefly confined to the fact that the thread ceremony of the original defendant No. 1’s father was performed by Ramkrishna, and that Ramkrishna’s funeral rites were performed by the original defendant No. 1’s father. Neither of these acts by themselves are sufficient to prove the factum of adoption, and, therefore, their value is only inferential. As the first adopted son was only a sickly child less than two years old at the time of Ramkrishna’s death, the performance of Ramkrishna’s funeral rites by the other child, who was at the time twelve years old, can easily be accounted for. Even if the gift and acceptance of Balkrishna as adopted son be held sufficient to prove the adoption, it is clear that, under the rulings quoted above, that adoption had no validity, and could confer no rights, as such, on Balkrishna to the prejudice of the first adopted son.

As regards the question of limitation, the principal point to be considered is the time when the alleged adverse possession of the appellant before us must be held to have commenced. The evidence shows clearly that the original plaintiff was less than two years old when Ramkrishna died in 1846. His natural brother Balkrishna was then twelve years old. Both lived with Ramkrishna’s widow Ramabai, and after her death in 1868.

(1) 4 M.I.A. 1. (2) 19 W.R. 12. (3) 20 C. 497. they lived together till Balkrishna’s death in 1877. There were no open differences and no separation in food or residence till after Balkrishna’s death, when apparently Balkrishna’s widow Radhabai and the respondent-plaintiff began to live separate.

The only overt act in derogation of the respondent’s rights in the interval between 1846 and 1877 was the entry of the lands in [488] Balkrishna's khata after Ramkrishna’s death, the transfer being apparently made on the admission of Ramkrishna’s widow Ramabai that Balkrishna was her adopted son. As respondent was at the time only two years old, and not expected to live long, the transfer of khata cannot be held to have been the commencement of Balkrishna’s title by adverse possession from 1847, seeing that Ramabai took care of respondent and Balkrishna alike, and they both lived together apart from their natural father, not only during Ramabai’s but also during Balkrishna’s lifetime for thirty years.
It is further in evidence that when respondent attained majority he managed the household affairs, while Balkrishna was for many years away on service and business. This management of the household by the respondent is not only sworn to by the witnesses (Ex. Nos. 82, 83, 47, 34), but Balkrishna’s widow Radhabai in 1878 admitted this fact before the village authorities and before the Mammatsars in statements made by her before these officers. The assertion made by her in her deposition that she did not make these statements is entitled to no credit since they are satisfactorily proved by the evidence of the Mammadar and his karkun, and the patel and kulkarni.

The adverse possession, if any, must be held to have commenced when, on Radhabai’s application, the management of the lands was taken away from the respondent, and, under the Collector’s order, made over to Appaji Subrao on 16th August, 1878. It appears, however, from the Mammadar’s and his karkun’s depositions that at the time the differences between Radhabai, representing the minor son of Balkrishna, and the respondent-plaintiff were settled by a compromise arranged by a panch to which both parties agreed. This compromise is set forth in Radhabai’s statement, and furnished the basis of the Mammadar’s report, by which after making provision for Radhabai, the property was to be shared equally between the respondent-plaintiff and the appellant. The Collector approved and gave effect to this family arrangement by directing that Rs. 109-12 should be paid each year to appellant, and Rs. 110-11 to respondent for their maintenance. The Collector’s manager Appaji and, after he was removed, the Collector actually paid equal moiecties to both parties from 1878—1882.

[489] It is in reference to this circumstance that the respondent, original-plaintiff, claimed alternative relief, the first prayer being for the recovery of the possession of the whole property, and the second for the recovery of an equal moiety. It is the second prayer which must, under the circumstances, be held to be the proper relief to which the respondent-plaintiff is entitled. The parties began to live separate from the time of Balkrishna’s death in 1877, and the cause of action accrued when the management of the property was taken away out of respondent’s hands.
His plaint was filed within twelve years from that time, but in the meanwhile he became party to the amicable settlement of which he enjoyed the benefit for many years. A bona fide family arrangement is specially favoured by Courts of Equity—Mantappa v. Baswuntrod (1)—and it binds the parties and their representatives. On this ground I hold that the respondent-plaintiff is only entitled to recover a moiety of the property of Ramkrishna as his share, and the other moiety must remain with the appellant.

On these grounds I agree with Mr. Justice Parsons in the final decree. As my reasons for coming to that decision are somewhat different from his, I have deemed it necessary to state them separately at some length.

Decree varied.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hosking.

Amtul Nissa Begam (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. Mir Nurudin Hussein Khan (Original Defendant), Respondent.*

[29th September, 1896.]

Mahomedan law—Gift—Moosha—Gift of an undivided share—Gift of future revenues of villages.

According to Mahomedan law a gift cannot be made of anything to be produced in futuro, although the means of its production may be in the possession of the donor. The subject of the gift must be actually in existence at the time of its donation.

[489] A Mahomedan executed a deed of gift in favour of his wife, by which he agreed to give her and her heirs in perpetuity a sum of Rs. 4,000 per annum out of his undivided share in certain jagbir villages which he had inherited from his father.

Held, that the gift was invalid, as it was a gift in effect of a portion of the future revenues of the villages to the extent of Rs. 4,000 per annum.

[D., 34 A. 465—9 A.L.J. 555—14 Ind. Cas. 587.]

This was an appeal from the decision of Khan Bahadur B. E. Modi,
First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

The plaintiff Amtul Nissa Begam was the widow of Nawab Mir Kamaludin Hussein Khan, a First Class Sirdar of Baroda.

On 9th March, 1899, Nawab Mir Kamaludin executed a deed of gift in favour of his wife (the plaintiff), by which he agreed to give her in perpetuity a sum of Rs. 4,000 a year out of the income of his share of certain jaghir villages, and other property which he had inherited from his father. This document was to the following effect:—

"Out of the villages, acquired as jaghir by inheritance, which are situated in the Surat District, as to whatever share I have got according to the Mahomedan law in the property left by my father, out of the same I have willingly and of my own accord giving to my wife Amtul Nissa Begam alias Mahomedi Begam for ever and continually from generation to generation, and descendant after descendant, a sum of Rs. 4,000 belonging to me and have made her the owner thereof. Whereas the management and the authority in respect thereof have been under my control from ancient times, and as I have always been paying moneys in cash to my other co-sharers, who jointly own this jaghir with me, according to their respective shares, I will in like manner always pay to my wife and her descendants

* Appeal No. 73 of 1891.
the money out of the income of the said property belonging to my wife as I pay to other sharers, without excuse or objection. If she should find on my part any treacherous action or remissness in payment of the amount due to her, which is ascertained and fixed, then she is fully authorized to take from me what is due to her in such a way as she may desire."

Under this deed of gift the plaintiff received the annuity of Rs. 4,000 out of the income of the jagbir villages during the lifetime of her husband. The jagbir villages were joint family property and were managed by plaintiff's husband for himself and for his co-sharers till his death in March, 1885.

On the death of her husband plaintiff filed a suit for partition and to enforce her claim under the deed of gift to the annuity of Rs. 4,000 out of the revenues of jagbir villages.

[491] The First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat decreed partition, but rejected her claim to the annuity, holding that the deed of gift was invalid under the Mahomedan law, as it was a gift of mooshaa, or an undivided share in property capable of division.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

P. M. Mehta (with him M. M. Munshi), for appellant (plaintiff).—The doctrine of mooshaa does not apply. The gift is not of an undivided share, but only a certain sum out of the annual income of his share. The doctrine of mooshaa ought not to be extended. It has been held by the Privy Council to be wholly unadapted to a progressive state of society, and should be confined within the strictest rules—Shekh Muhammad v. Zubaida Jan (1). The deed of gift has been acted upon and the annuity enjoyed for nearly eighteen years without interruption. It is too late now to impeach its validity.

Ganapat Sadashiv Rao, for respondent.—The gift is void, being a gift of mooshaa. It is a gift of a portion of the donor's share in the income of the villages. If the gift of an undivided share be invalid, a gift of a portion of such share is equally invalid. The gift is, moreover, invalid, because it is a gift of the future revenues of the villages. According to Mahomedan law a gift cannot be made of a thing to be produced in future. It must be in existence at the date of the gift—Maconagthen's Mahomedan Law, pp. 50 and 203; Emnabai v. Hajirabai (2).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the gift by the late Nawab Kamaludin of Rs. 4,000 per annum to his wife in perpetuity is valid. It was originally made while he was a minor, but was ratified when he attained his majority. The documents evidencing the gift are Exs. 99, 100 and 101. Counsel for the appellant relies solely on the last mentioned document, so its terms only need be considered. It is dated the 9th March, 1889. The material portion of it runs thus. (His Lordship read the portion of the deed above set forth and continued :) The boundaries and descriptions of the six villages are given at the end of the document, which is registered. The Rs. 4,000 per annum were paid to the plaintiff by her husband [492] Kamaludin while he lived. The document appears to be a gift of Rs. 4,000 annually, or, as English lawyers would term it, a covenant to pay Rs. 4,000 per annum, payable out of the declarant's interest in the six villages and out of the property which he inherited from his father. It is not contended that it is a gift in consideration of marriage or anything other than a gift without consideration.

Now if the gift had been of Kamaludin's undivided share in the villages and in his father's estate the gift would have been bad under the ruling in Emmabar v. Hajimab (1). It would seem to follow a fortiori that a gift of an annual sum payable out of an undivided share would be invalid, but since the decision of the Privy Council in Sheik Muhammad
v. Subbara Jan (2) the application of the doctrine of mooshaa cannot, it is clear, be extended by analogy, and we should hesitate to base our judgment on its consequences.

On the ground, however, that this is a gift in effect of a portion of the future revenues of the villages to the extent of Rs. 4,000 per annum, we think that it is invalid according to Mahomedan law. The law is express upon that subject. A gift cannot be made of anything to be produced in futuro although the means of its production may be in the possession of the donor. The subject of the gift must be actually in existence at the time of the donation—Macneighten's Principles, Chap. V, s. 5. No attempt has been made to support the validity of the document Ex. 101 except as a gift. The finding of the Subordinate Judge on issues 2 and 15 must be confirmed and the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

DAMODAR BHATJI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v.
BHT BHOGILAL KASANDAS AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents. [30th September, 1896.]

Religious endowment—Hindu temple, manager of—Trustees—Removal of trustees—Trustees misappropriating funds by mistake—Jurisdiction of Courts in India—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 639—Scheme of management of Hindu temple, form of.

Courts of Equity in England have always allowed themselves some latitude in dealing with the trustees of a public charity who under a mistake have misapplied the funds of the institution, and Courts in India can similarly allow themselves some degree of latitude in dealing with the managers and pujiars of of public Hindu temples, who for a long time have been accustomed to deem themselves owners of the temples of which in law they are only trustees, managers and priests, and to overlook the past while taking care that for the future the administration of the temple is placed on a sound footing.

The Courts have jurisdiction to deal with the managers of public Hindu temples, and, if necessary for the good of the religious endowment, to remove them from their position as managers. There is, however, no hard and fast rule that every manager of shrine, who has arrogated to himself the position of owner, should be removed from his trust; each case must be decided with reference to its circumstances.

* Cross Appeals Nos. 3 and 7 of 1896.

(1) 13 B. 352. (2) 16 I.A. 305. (3) 16 B. 612.
Plaintiffs sued under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to have the defendants removed from the management of the temple of Koteswar Mahadev and of the lands appertaining thereto; to have new trustees appointed; to have accounts taken from the defendants of the temple and its appurtenances, and to have a scheme prepared for the future management of the temple.

Defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the temple property was not public, charitable or religious property, but private property of their own, and that the suit was brought merely out of enmity [494] and not from any genuine desire to benefit the institution and the public.

The District Judge held that the property in dispute was public property; that the defendants held and managed it as trustees and that they were bound to render accounts. Being, however, of opinion that the suit was the outcome of enmity against the defendants she declined to make an order removing them from their position as trustees and managers of the temple. He, therefore, passed a decree directing the defendants to continue to manage the temple and requiring them to keep accounts, &c., &c.

Both parties appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—We have come to the conclusion in this case not to disturb the decree of the District Court. Courts of Equity in England have always allowed themselves some latitude in dealing with the trustees of a public charity who under a mistake have misapplied the funds of the institution, and we think that we can similarly allow ourselves some degree of latitude in dealing with the managers and pujaris of public Hindu temples who for a long time have been accustomed to deem themselves owners of the temples of which in law they are only trustees, managers and priests, and to overlook the past while taking care that for the future the administration of the temple is placed on a sound footing.

The judgment in the Chinchwad case (Chintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (1)) while it established the jurisdiction of the Courts to deal with the managers of public Hindu temples, and, if necessary, for the good of the religious endowment to remove them from their position as managers, did not, we think, intend to lay down a hard and fast rule that every manager of a shrine who arrogated to himself the position of owner should be removed from his trust, though the Court in that case did remove the manager and appoint new trustees, deeming that course to be for the [495] advantage of the endowment. Each case must, we think, be decided with reference to its own circumstances.

Here the District Judge on a review of all the circumstances relating to the temple of Koteswar Mahadev at Ahmedabad has arrived at the opinion that it is not necessary in the interests of the temple and of the public who resort to it to remove the defendants from the office of pujaris and managers. The devotees of the temple do not appear to desire that course. The suit, the Judge considers, has been brought by an individual out of enmity to the defendants, rather than from a genuine desire to benefit the institution and the public. There are no endowments attached to the temple, which is supported by the offerings of the devotees and worshippers at the shrine, by the rents of some buildings, and land in the vicinity of the temple; and the origin of the temple is so ancient that there is some excuse for the defendants believing and acting on the belief that their uncontrolled and undisputed authority over the funds constituted them in truth the owners of them.

We vary the decree of the District Judge by substituting the following scheme for the management of the temple of Koteshwar Mahadev at Ahmedabad:

1. The defendants and their heirs shall, during their good conduct, be the trustees and managers of the temple of Koteshwar Mahadev at Ahmedabad, and of the property belonging to the said temple.
2. They shall, as Tapodhan Brahmins, be bound to maintain a proper system of worship. The doors of the temple shall be open daily from 7 A.M. till noon and from 2 to 9 P.M.
3. The income of the temple consists of offerings made to the idol, of rents for temple buildings and temple lands, and of an annual cash allowance of two rupees from Government.
4. The managers shall not allow persons of low caste to reside on the temple lands either inside or outside the temple compound, and they shall not allow Kolis or Marwadis to reside within the temple compound.
5. It shall be the duty of the managers to keep the compound and other temple lands in a clean and sanitary condition, and to keep the temple buildings in repair so far as the funds permit.

6. One-third of the rents shall be expended in repairing the temple, compound wall, and buildings belonging to the temple. Out of the remaining income of the temple, the managers shall defray the temple expenses and maintain themselves.

7. The managers shall keep regular accounts of all rents, and of expenditure on repairs. The accounts shall be submitted to the District Court annually within one month after the Diwali, and shall be examined by an auditor appointed by the Court at the cost of the managers. A copy of the accounts shall be supplied by the managers and shall be affixed to the notice-board of the District Court for the information of the public.

These accounts shall be kept from the date of the High Court's decree.

8. This scheme shall be subject to such modifications as may be made hereafter by the High Court on the application of the parties interested in the said temple.

The appellants in each case to bear the costs of the appeal.

Decree varied.

MIYA VALI ULLA (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. SAYED BAVA SAHEB SANTI MIYA AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Opponents.*

[1st October, 1896.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4—Cash allowance allowed to worship of idol—Personal grant.

A plaintiff claimed to be a co-trustee of certain dargas and entitled to a share in the management and in the profits thereof, which consisted of a certain cash allowance from Government. He sued the defendants for an account and for the recovery of his share.

[497] Held, that the suit did not come within the purview of s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and did not require sanction under that section.

A cash allowance attached to the worship of an idol is a grant of money within the meaning of s. 4 of the Pensions Act, 1871.

The Pensions Act applies to religious endowments as well as to personal grants.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) to set aside an order made by Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

The applicant in his plaint alleged that he and defendant No. 1 were equal sharers in a four annas’ share in the management of certain dargas and in the cash allowance made by Government and other property belonging thereto, and that the defendants had excluded him from his share in the management and property. He, therefore, prayed for an account and to recover his share of the allowance and rents and to have a sum of Rs. 176, which he had expended, debited to the darga accounts and recovered from the defendants.

The Subordinate Judge directed the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff, holding that he could not entertain the suit, inasmuch as it was a suit under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and required sanction under that section. He also held that it required a certificate under the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871).

On appeal by the plaintiff the District Judge confirmed that order.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi to set aside the order of the Judge.

JUDGMENT.

HOSKING, J.—The applicant Sheth Miya Vali Ulla valad Habibulla presented a plaint in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad, in which he alleged that he and defendant No. 1, Sayed Bava Saheb Santi Miya, were equal sharers in a four annas' share in the management of two dargas and the cash allowances and other property belonging to the dargas, and that the defendants acting in collusion had excluded him from sharing in the management and in the property; accordingly he prayed for an account and for the recovery of his share of allowances and rents, and also to have Rs. 176-4 expended by him in holding four urus debited to the darga accounts and recovered from defendants.

The First Class Subordinate Judge held that the suit fell under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code and could not be entertained by him; that it required the sanction prescribed by that section, and that it also required a certificate under the Pensions Act, 1871. The Subordinate Judge further expressed an opinion that the claim for Rs. 176-4-0 should be brought in the Small Cause Court. He, therefore, directed the return of the plaint to the plaintiff.

On appeal the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the suit falls under s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, and also requires a certificate under the Pensions Act.

We are of opinion that the lower Courts have erred in holding that s. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code is applicable to the present suit. A suit has only to be brought under s. 539 "in case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public, charitable or religious purposes, or whenever [499] the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust."

The plaintiff does not sue on account of any such breach of trust as is contemplated by these provisions, nor can he be said to require the direction of the Court for the administration of the trust. His complaint merely is, that he, claiming to be a cotrusted, has been excluded from a share in the management and in the profits of such management. We hold that such a suit does not come within the purview of this section. The case cited by the Government Pleader—Sayad Husenmian Dadumian v. The Collector of Kaira (1)—deals with the nature of the reliefs which may be given under s. 539 and the necessity that the sanction should cover the relief sought, but before those questions arise it must be shown that the suit comes within the section.

We think that the lower Courts have rightly held that the suit, so far as it relates to the cash allowances from Government, cannot be entertained without a certificate under s. 4 of the Pensions Act, 1871. It has been ruled in several cases by the Madras High Court that the provisions of the Pensions Act are applicable to personal grants and not to endowments for religious purposes—The Secretary of State v. Abdul Hakim (2); Kolandai Mudali v. Sankara Bharadhi (3); Athavulla v. Gouse (4). These rulings are relied upon by applicant's counsel, but this Court has taken a different view of this question. In Vyankaji v. Sariarao (5), Jardine and Parsons, JJ., have held that a cash allowance attached to the worship of certain idols is a grant of money within the meaning of s. 4 of the Pensions Act, and that a suit by the trustees of the devasthan to recover such an allowance

(2) 5 M. 302.
(3) 11 M. 283.
(4) 16 B. 597.
would not lie in the absence of the Collector's certificate. The Madras rulings are not mentioned in the judgment, but the learned Judges refer to Maharaval Mahansingji v. The Government of Bombay (1) in which the Lords of the Privy Council say that the expression 'grant of money or land revenues' in the Pensions Act is not to be limited to rights "ejusdem generis with pensions. We concur [500] in the view taken in Vyankaji v. Sarjana, and hold that the Pensions Act applies to religious endowments as well as to personal grants.

We accordingly reverse the decrees of the lower Courts, and direct that the First Class Subordinate Judge do accept the plaint, and allow the plaintiff a reasonable time to obtain a certificate as to the cash allowances under s. 4 of the Pensions Act, as we presume that there will be no objection on the part of the Collector to grant it, but should the certificate not be granted, the Subordinate Judge will proceed with the hearing of the rest of the claim. Costs of this application to be costs in the suit.

Decree reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

ABDUL RAHIMAN AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants Nos. 1 and 4), Appellants v. MAIDIN SAIBA AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [5th October, 1896.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 179—Decree—Appeal against part of decree only—Appeal dismissed—Execution—Application for execution of original decree—Time runs from date of appellate decree.

On the 26th June, 1891, in a suit against seven persons who were members of a Mahomedan family, the plaintiff obtained a decree on mortgage. The decree directed the sale of 2/3 of the mortgaged property, but it exonerated from liability the share of a female member (defendant No. 2) of the family, which was 1/3 of the whole estate. The plaintiff appealed as to the 2/3 share only. He made all the defendants respondents to the appeal, but the name of the first defendant was afterwards struck out, as he could not be served with notice. His interests, however, were identical with those of defendants Nos. 3 to 7. On the 30th July, 1892, the plaintiff's appeal was dismissed. On the 3rd July, 1893, the plaintiff applied for execution of the original decree. The defendants contended that as the appeal related only to that part of the decree which related to the 2/3 share of the second defendant, the rest of the decree was unaffected by the appeal, and that consequently the plaintiffs' application for execution of that [501] decree was barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), not having been made within three years from the 26th June, 1891.

Held, that the application was not barred. The date of the appellate decree and not that of the original decree was the date from which limitation began to run:

Per Parsons, J.—The word "appeal" in art. 179 does not mean only an appeal against the whole decree and by which the whole decree is imperilled: it means any appeal by any party.

Per Ranade, J.—Except in the case where a nominally single decree awards separate reliefs against separate defendants, the words of art. 179 must be construed in their natural sense as permitting an extension of limitation where an appeal is preferred and is not withdrawn.

* Second Appeal No. 452 of 1896.

(1) 8 I. A. 77.
SECOND appeal from the decision of E. H. Moscardi, District Judge of Kanara, confirming an order passed by Rao Sahib N. B. Muzamdar, Subordinate Judge of Honavar, in an execution proceeding.

On the 26th June, 1891, one Maidin Saiba bin Hasan Saiba obtained a decree on a mortgage against seven persons who were members of a Mahomedan family. The decree directed the plaintiff Maidin Saiba to recover his mortgage-debt and costs by selling \( \frac{65}{72} \) share of the mortgaged property,—the share of \( \frac{7}{72} \) belonging to defendant No. 2, who was a female member of the defendants' family, being held not liable to the debt.

The plaintiff appealed with respect to this \( \frac{7}{72} \) share. The first defendant was originally a party respondent to the appeal, but his name was afterwards struck out, as he could not be served with notice. His interests, however, were identical with those of defendants Nos. 3 to 7.

The plaintiff's appeal was dismissed on the 30th July, 1892.

On the 3rd July, 1895, the plaintiff having died, his heirs applied for the execution of the original decree. The first defendant contended \( \text{(inter alia)} \) that this application was barred by limitation, as it was not made within three years from the 26th June, 1891, the date of the original decree.

The Subordinate Judge found that under art. 179, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), time began to run from the date of the appellate decree, and as the application for execution was presented within three years from the date of that \( [502] \) decree, it was not barred. He, therefore, granted the application.

On appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 4, the Judge confirmed the order. They, therefore, preferred a second appeal.

Scott with S. R. Bakhil, for the appellants (defendants Nos. 1 and 4).—The first defendant was not a party to the appeal, and the appellate decree which was passed in his absence cannot affect him. Further, the plaintiff's appeal related only to a part of the decree, viz., the liability of the second defendant's share \( \left( \frac{7}{72} \right) \) of the mortgaged property. The whole decree was, therefore, not imperilled by the appeal. The part of the decree which dealt with \( \frac{65}{72} \) share was not appealed against and was not judicially before the appellate Court. So far, therefore, as the first defendant is concerned, the decree which can be executed against him is the original decree, and the present application being made after the expiration of three years from the date of that decree, is time-barred.

[PARSONS, J., referred to Sakhlechand v. Velchand(1).]

In that case, the liability of the parties against whom execution was sought, was in question both in the original suit and in appeal, while in the present case the shares of the parties were defined and the appeal related to one definite share, the other shares being excluded from it.

BRANSON with SHAMRAV VITHAL and DATTATRAYA A. IDGUNJI, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—When a decree is appealed against, the whole decree is before the appellate Court and it can deal with it as a whole. It cannot be said that one portion of the decree is before the Court and the other not. Article 179, sch. II of the Limitation Act is quite explicit on the point. It does not refer to portions of a decree. Our application for execution was made within three years from the date of the appellate decree and was, therefore, in time. There is a conflict of cases on the point, but the ruling of our High Court in Sakhalchand v. Velchand (1) supports our contention.

[503] The following cases were cited during arguments:—Muthu v. Chellappa (1); Raghunath Pershad v. Abdul Hye (2); Masihatunnissa v. Bani (3); Sakhalchand v. Velchand (4); Nur-ul-Hasan v. Muhammad (5); Mundan Lall v. Rai Joykishen (6); Kristo Churn Dass v. Radha Churn Kur (7).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The suit, in which the decree now sought to be executed was passed, was brought against the members of a Mahomedan family to recover a debt by the sale of the whole estate. The Court of first instance exonerated from liability the share of a female member, the second defendant, which amounted to \( \frac{7}{12} \) of the whole estate, and ordered the sale of the remaining \( \frac{55}{72} \). The plaintiffs appealed as to the \( \frac{7}{12} \) share only. They made, however, all the defendants respondents in the appeal, and though the name of the first defendant was afterwards struck out, as he could not be served with notice, his interests and those of the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 were identical. The appellate Court confirmed the decree.

Within three years of the date of the appellate decree, but more than three years after the date of the decree of the Court of first instance, the plaintiffs have now applied for execution. The appellants (original defendants Nos. 1 and 4) contended that the application was time-barred.

The decision depends upon whether the date of the decree or the date of the appellate decree is to be taken as the starting point from which limitation begins to run as against them. Article 179 of the Limitation Act provides that an application for execution must be made within three years from the date of the decree, or (where there has been an appeal) the date of the final decree of the appellate Court. Here there has been a decree and there has been an appeal, so that if the clause is construed in its plain and natural sense the application would be in time. The decision in Sakhalchand v. Velchand (4) adopts this construction. The other High Courts in India have, however, [504] placed a different construction on the clause. The Madras High Court considered that the appeal referred to in the clause must be one that impairs the whole decree, and it consequently held that where an appeal was presented only against that portion of a decree which exonerated the shares of defendants Nos. 5 to 9, the time for applying for execution against the shares of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 was not extended though they were actually parties to the appeal—Muthu v. Chellappa(1). The majority of the Judges of the Allahabad High Court considered that the appeal referred to in the clause could not be taken advantage of by persons who were in no way concerned with the appeal and whose rights under the decree could not be affected by the appeal to which they were not parties, or whose liabilities under the decree could neither be limited nor extended nor varied by the appeal to which they were not parties, unless such appeal came within the scope of s. 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The other two Judges following Nur-ul-Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (1) considered that the clause applied, without any exceptions, to decrees from which an appeal had been lodged by any of the parties to the original proceedings—Mashiatunnissa v. Rani (2). A Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Nundun Lall v. Rai Joykishen (3) laid down the following principle, namely, that as regards parties who were not parties to the appeal, where the appeal made by one of the parties to the suit did not and could not affect the decree as against others of the parties concerned in the case, the decision in the appeal would not alter the period of limitation in respect of the execution of the decree as between other parties to the suit. In order to alter the period the whole decree must be imperilled by the particular appeal which is preferred. In Kristo Churn Dass v. Radha Churn Kur (4), however, another Division Bench refused to go into the question whether or not the whole decree was or might have been or became imperilled in the Court of appeal, and applied the clause because all the defendants were parties to the appeal. There is, therefore, this difference between the Courts. The [505] Madras High Court construes the word "appeal" to mean an appeal by which the whole decree is imperilled. The Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts construe it to mean an appeal to which the parties seeking to profit by the clause must either be parties or come within the scope of s. 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This High Court and a minority of the Judges of the Allahabad High Court give the word "appeal" its plain meaning, and hold that it means any appeal by any party. In our opinion, the latter is the correct construction. Even if it were otherwise, the clause ought, we think, to be applied in the present case, for all the defendants except the defendant No. 1 were parties to the appeal, and the interests of the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 to 7 were identical, so that it is impossible to say that the decree was not imperilled by the appeal presented by the the plaintiffs, since the defendants could in it have taken any objection to the decree that they could have taken by way of appeal, and the appeal as regards the defendant No. 1 would come within the scope of s. 544 of the Code. We, therefore, confirm the order of the lower appellate Court with costs.

RANADE, J.—In this case the respondent-plaintiffs obtained on 26th June, 1891, a decree on a mortgage bond, which directed that the mortgage-debt should be recovered by the sale of $\frac{65}{72}$ share of the mortgaged property; the remaining $\frac{7}{72}$ share belonging to defendant No. 2 being held not liable to satisfy the mortgage-debt. The plaintiffs appealed against the decree in respect of the rejected portion of the claim, but the decree was confirmed in appeal on 30th July, 1892. Defendant No. 1 was not a party to the appeal, and when the plaintiffs applied for execution on 3rd July, 1895, this defendant pleaded that as against him the execution was time-barred, counting the three years' period from 26th June, 1891, the date of the original decree. This objection was overruled by both the lower Courts. Mr. Scott on behalf of the appellants contended before us that the lower Courts were in error in overruling the objection, because the decree of the appellate Court could not be executed as against the appellant, original defendant No. 1, who was not a party to the appeal. Mr. Scott sought to distinguish the present case from Sakhalchand [608] v. Velchand (5) on the ground that in that case the amount of money due was not fixed till the appellate Court confirmed the decree; whereas here the appeal was confined to the $\frac{7}{90}$ share, and did not imperil the claim as against the $\frac{69}{72}$ share.

The question we have thus to decide is, whether, under the circumstances of this case, the three years' limitation should be held to commence from the date of the original or the appellate decree, when the person against whom execution is sought, was not a party to the appeal. Clause 2 of art. 179 of Limitation Act in general in its terms, and does not specify any details about parties or subject-matter. Admittedly where all the parties to the original suit are parties to the appeal, the original decree is merged in the appellate decree, whether the latter confirms, amends or reverses the original decree, and it is the appellate decree which can alone be executed—Shohrat Singh v. Bridgman (1); Muhammad Sulaiman v. Muhammad Yar Khan (2); Sakhalchand v. Velchand (3); Daulat v. Bhukandas (4); Noor Ali v. Koni Meah (5); Kistokinker Ghose v. Burrodacount Singh (6). Similarly, where an appeal is preferred, but subsequently withdrawn, it is the original decree which has to be executed, and the three years' term has to be computed from the date of that decree—Mahant Ishwargar v. Chudasama Manabhai (7); Patloji v. Gangu (8); Chudasama Manabhai v. Mahant Ishwargar (9). While there is no dispute in regard to both these positions, there is some difference of opinion in regard to the intermediate classes of cases, where the whole of the subject-matter is or is not involved in peril by the appeal, or the parties to the appeal do not include all the parties to the original suit.

It is true that in Sangram Singh v. Bujharat Singh (10) it was held that where there are more defendants than one, against whom the first decree is passed, and only one defendant appeals, it is the first Court's decree, and not the appellate decree which can be executed against the non-appealing defendant, where there [507] is no common ground or interest between the several defendants. Where there is such a common ground, as, for instance, where the decree is a joint decree; or is a joint and several decree, and only one defendant appeals, execution can only be taken out of the appellate decree, even as against the non-appealing defendant—Mullick Ahmad v. Mahomed Syed (11); Gungamoyee Dasses v. Shib Sunkar (12). Where the decree is for separate sums found to be due from separate defendants, and only one defendant appeals, execution as against the non-appealing defendant can only be of the original decree—Muthu v. Chellappa (13); Hur Proshad v. Enayet Hossein (14); Wise v. Rajnarain Chukerbutty (15); Raghunath Pershad v. Abdul Hys (16); Mashiathamissa v. Rani (17).

The principle underlying these cases is stated to be that the whole decree is not in peril, and plaintiff might execute his decree against the non-appealing defendants without waiting for the decision of the appeal—Nundun Lall v. Rai Joykissen (18); Kristo Churn Dass v. Radha Churn Kur (19); Nurul Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (20). Where, therefore, the whole claim is or may be in danger either on an appeal by the plaintiff or by the defendant, there the period for execution must be counted from the appellate decree. The Judges who decided these last cited Calcutta cases, while holding themselves bound to follow the previous rulings as far as they went, have expressed themselves against introducing further refinements or limitations, not suggested by the general words of art. 179, cl. 2.

In the remarks made above, I have tried to reconcile as far as may be the apparent conflict of opinions between the several Courts. The words of the article contain no limitations or conditions such as those which have been laid down in these conflicting rulings. They appear, evidently, to have been intended to give the plaintiff a right to bring his claim, so far as it is disallowed, before a Court of appeal without requiring him to hasten the execution of the claim so far as it had been awarded. In many cases when plaintiff's appeal in respect of a portion of a claim not awarded, the other side puts in objections at the hearing of the appeal, under s. 561, in regard to the claim awarded. So that by virtue of the appeal, the whole claim is brought before the Appellate Court. Similarly where there is a common ground or interest amongst the plaintiffs or the defendants, an appeal by one is virtually an appeal by all under s. 544, though they may not be parties to the record. Bearing the operations of these sections in mind, it appears to me that, except in the case where the nominally single decree awards separate reliefs against separate defendants, the words of the clause must be construed in their natural sense, as permitting an extension of limitation, where an appeal has been preferred, and is not withdrawn. In the present case the cause of action was single and joint as against all the defendants, being based on the mortgage bond of the whole property. And though the appeal was necessarily confined to the portion disallowed, it did not follow that the plaintiff was bound to take out execution against the defendant not a party to the appeal, without waiting to see if he could not sell the whole property mortgaged. The case of Sakhalchand v. Velchand(1) is a clear authority on this point, and this High Court has generally interpreted the section as it stands without any conditions. The distinction sought to be made between money amounts and shares in landed property is more or less fanciful, as what plaintiffs sought here was to recover the money by the sale of the property. We, therefore, confirm the order of the lower Court and reject the appeal with costs.

Order confirmed.

[509] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

BAI DIWALI (Original Applicant), Appellant v. MOTI KARSON (Original Opponent), Respondent.* [5th October, 1896.]

Hindu law—Marriage—Marriage of a minor in disobedience of Court's order—Doctrine of fantaum valet—Presumption—Presumption as to completion of marriage ceremonies—Guardian and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 24—Court's power to make order as to marriage of minor.

If there is sufficient evidence to prove the performance of some of the ceremonies usually observed on the occasion of a marriage, a presumption is always to be drawn that they were duly completed until the contrary is shown.

* Appeal No. 65 of 1896.

(1) 18 B. 203.
A Hindu widow, who was appointed guardian of the person of her minor daughter eight or nine years old, married the minor in disobedience of the order of a civil Court directing her to make over the minor to her paternal uncle for the purpose of getting her married.

Held, that the principle of factum valet applied. Neither the disobedience of the Court’s order, nor the disregard of the preferable claims of the male relations, would invalidate the marriage.

Quere—Whether the marriage of a minor eight or nine years old can be regarded as falling within the scope of s. 24 of Act VIII of 1890, especially when the marriage of a minor female terminates the power of the guardian of the person.

APPEAL from the order of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad. This was an application under Act IX of 1861 (the Minor’s Act) for the custody of Rakhi, a girl aged eight or nine years.

The girl was living with her mother Bai Diwali, who had been appointed guardian of her person under Act VIII of 1890.

The applicant was Rakhi’s paternal uncle, and he sought to take her from her mother for the purpose of getting her married.

On the 2nd January, 1896, the District Judge of Ahmedabad passed an order declaring the right of the paternal uncle to dispose of the girl in marriage in preference to the mother, and directing Bai Diwali to give her up to him four days before the date fixed for the marriage.

On the 9th January, 1896, Bai Diwali married Rakhi to one Govind in defiance of the order of the District Judge.

[510] On the 17th January, 1896, the paternal uncle made the present application, alleging that he had already betrothed the girl to a suitable husband, and praying that she should be handed over to him for the purpose of completing the marriage.

Bai Diwali replied that she had already given Rakhi away in marriage.

The District Judge found on the evidence that the alleged marriage was not proved. He, therefore, passed an order, directing Bai Diwali to make over the girl to the custody of her paternal uncle for the purpose of marriage.

Against this order Bai Diwali appealed to the High Court.

C. H. Setalvad, for the appellant.—The marriage of the girl is proved. That being so, the uncle has no right to the custody of the girl, who is living with her mother, her lawful guardian.

G. M. Tripati, for respondent.—The mother has contracted a Natra marriage. She has gone into a different family. She has ceased to act as Rakhi’s guardian. The alleged marriage is found by the lower Court to be a fiction, got up for the purpose of preventing the paternal uncle from completing the marriage of the girl, whom he had already betrothed to a suitable husband. The witnesses who speak to the marriage speak as the true witnesses. There is no evidence that the saptapadi, which is the essential part of the marriage ceremony, was performed. The marriage is, therefore, not proved.

But assuming that it is proved, it is invalid. The mother was not competent to give away the girl in marriage. Under the Hindu law the paternal uncle is her legal guardian for the purpose of marriage. He has a preferential right to dispose of the girl in marriage—Shridhar v. Hiralal (1). His right was declared by the District Court in this case, and the mother was ordered to give the minor to him for the purpose of marriage. In defiance of this order, the mother pretends she has given her away in marriage. The alleged marriage is, therefore, invalid.

(1) 12 B. 480.

Setalvad, in reply.—The doctrine of factum valet applies in this case. Neither disobedience of the Court's order, nor [511] disregard of the paternal uncle's rights, would invalidate a marriage duly solemnized—

Bee Rulyat v. Jeeychund Kewul (1); Khushalchand v. Bai Mani (2);

Namasewamy Pillay v. Annammai Ummal (3). It is contended that the essential ceremonies which constitute a valid marriage were not performed. But the evidence of the officiating priest shows that the usual ceremonies were performed, and the presumption is that the marriage ceremony was duly completed—Brindabun Chundra v. Chundra Kurmakar (4).

Section 24 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) does not authorize the Court to pass any order relating to the marriage of a minor.

JUDGMENT.

Ranade, J.—It is admitted in this case that the appellant Bai Diwali is not only the natural mother of the minor, but was also appointed guardian of the minor's person, and this appointment continues still to be in force, though Bai Diwali has contracted Natra marriage with a second husband. The respondent, who is uncle of the minor child, claiming to have a preferable right as against Bai Diwali to dispose of the minor in marriage, applied to the District Court and obtained from that Court an order on 2nd January, 1896, directing Bai Diwali to make over the minor into respondent's charge four days previous to the date fixed for marriage, —20th January, 1896. Bai Diwali did not obey this order, and, therefore, respondent applied to the District Judge on 17th January, 1896, for a fresh order directing Bai Diwali to make over the minor into his charge at once. Bai Diwali in her answer to this fresh application replied that she had given away the minor in marriage to Govind, and that the minor was in the charge of her husband. The District Judge thereupon made Govind a party to the proceeding, and held, on the evidence adduced before him, that the alleged marriage did not take place, and Bai Diwali was again ordered to hand over the minor to the custody of the respondent.

In the appeal before us exception is taken to the correctness of the District Judge's finding on the question of fact, namely, that the alleged marriage had not taken place. The District Judge [512] appears to have taken no notice of Govind's sworn statement, that his marriage with the minor took place on 9th January, 1896. Of the other four witnesses examined, one is a Patidar, another is a Brahmin priest, the third is a carpenter, which is the caste of the parties, and the fourth is a Bania vendor of opium. They are all residents of the place where the marriage is alleged to have been celebrated. None of them are related to the parties.

The District Judge disbelieved the evidence of Somaram Pitambar, though that witness admittedly gave clear evidence about the marriage, chiefly because he stated in cross-examination that no male person was present with Bai Diwali to give away the girl. There was obviously some mistake here, because the witness had stated that Bai Diwali's son gave away the girl, his sister, in marriage. The Brahmin priest was disbelieved, because he professed not to recognize the bride or know her name. It is quite possible that this ignorance was feigned. It at least rebuts the suggestion that the witnesses were tutored to give their evidence. While the husband and four independent witnesses gave evidence on Bai Diwali's behalf, there was no rebutting evidence on the other side, although the names of several persons were mentioned as being present on the occasion.

On the whole, we feel satisfied that the marriage of the minor did take place as stated by these witnesses. If the evidence was sufficient to prove the performance of some ceremonies usually observed on such occasions, a presumption is always to be drawn that they were duly completed, until the contrary was shown—Brindabun Chandra v. Chandra Kurmokar (1) and Inderun v. Ramasaumy (2). Bai Diwali was, no doubt, guilty of disobeying the order of the District Judge; but neither that circumstance by itself, nor the disregard of the preferable claim of the male relations would invalidate the marriage. Even where the dispute was between husband and wife, the doctrine of factum valet was allowed to prevail—Bae Rulyat v. Jeychund Kewul (3); Modhoosoodun v. Jabez Chunder (4); Khushalchand v. Bai Mani (5); Namasevyanam Pillay v. Annamai Unmal (6).

[513] In the view we have taken of the facts it is unnecessary to consider the question how far the District Judge's order in this case fell within the scope of the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, VIII of 1890. Mr. Goverdhanram referred to s. 43 as authorizing the orders of the District Judge, but that section, which provides for orders regulating the conduct or proceedings of a guardian, must necessarily be read along with and in relation to the sections in which are laid down the duties of a guardian of the person of a minor—ss. 24 to 26. These provide only for the support, health and education and advancement of a minor. It is true that besides the specific objects above-named there is a general reference to "all such matters as the law to which the minor is subject requires." Whether the marriage of a minor child at or before nine years can be regarded as falling within the scope of these general words, especially when the marriage of a minor female terminates the powers of the guardian of the person (s. 41), is, we think, doubtful. It is, however, unnecessary to consider further this view of the question. For the reasons stated above, we reverse the order of the District Judge, and dismiss the application. Respondent to bear all costs.

Order reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hosking.

SHANKAR (Plaintiff) v. MUKTA (Defendant).* [6th October, 1896.]

Account stated or adjusted (ruyyakha) — Cause of action — Such account only evidence of the existing debt, not itself a fresh contract on which a suit may be brought — Interest — Damuspati — Practice — Procedure.

In June, 1883, the plaintiff's father advanced a loan to the defendant at compound interest. The account of this debt with interest was adjusted and signed from time to time. In June, 1893, it was adjusted and signed, the amount found due being Rs. 28-8-0. In February, 1896, the plaintiff sued to recover this amount.

* Civil Reference No. 7 of 1896.

(1) 12 C. 140. (2) 18 M. I. A. 141. (3) Bellasis Rep. 43.

Held, that the account (ruzukhata) was merely an acknowledgment of the debt and of the correctness of the calculation of interest upon it.

[514] Held, also, that the plaintiff was not entitled to treat the amount so found due as principal and to claim interest upon it. The debt to be sued on was the amount originally advanced, and the interest recoverable was limited by that amount according to the rule of damdupat.

By English law an account stated could be sued on as implying a promise to pay. Formerly this was the rule also in Bombay (as shown by the earlier cases) where the account was signed. If, however, it was not signed, it could not be sued on as a new contract. The Indian Limitation Act required an acknowledgment or admission of the debt to be signed; and an admission not made in the manner prescribed by law (i.e., signed) for the purpose of preventing a debt from becoming barred does not imply a promise to pay if it should become barred.

According, however, to the latter authorities an account stated or adjusted (ruzukhata) cannot be sued on as a fresh contract. The suit must be brought in respect of the original transaction, and the subsequent stated or adjusted accounts (ruzukhata) are only evidence of the debt arising from them, and serve to prevent the operation of the Act of Limitation.

Suit on an account stated. The defendant was the widow of one Sankra, who in June, 1883, had borrowed certain jari from the plaintiff's father. The account (ruzukhata) of this loan with compound interest was made up from time to time. The last account stated (ruzukhata) was dated the 13th March, 1893, and showed a balance of Rs. 28-8-0 due to the plaintiff. On the 15th February, 1896, the plaintiff demanded payment, but the defendant refused to pay. The plaintiff, therefore, brought this suit, claiming Rs. 29 due upon the account.

The account was duly signed by Sankra, and the material part of it was as follows:

"The 10th of Falgun Vadya—own handwriting.
"26½ on making an account of the last khata the amount found due for principal together with interest is Rs. 26½ in letters twenty-eight and a half. The interest payable on this is Rs. 1 per cent. per month.
"I admit this to be correct. The handwriting of Damodhar Narayan Mamvadkar, inhabitant of Yedalgav.
"Signature across a receipt stamp of Sankra valad Bhawani Patil—my own handwriting."

[515] As the suit was a small cause suit in which there was no appeal, the Subordinate Judge through the District Judge of Nasik referred the following questions to the High Court:

1) Is the ruzukhata sufficient evidence of the promise alleged by plaintiff?
2) Can a suit lie on such promise?
3) Is plaintiff entitled to treat Rs. 28-8-0 as principal for the rule of damdupat?

Mahadev B. Chaudal (amicus curiae) for the plaintiff.—We contend that a suit lies upon this stated account. It is duly signed and admits the amount with interest to be payable, and implies a promise to pay.

[FARRAN, C. J.—The question is whether a mere signed statement of account sets aside the rule of damdupat and becomes itself a sufficient basis of suit. Is it not merely an acknowledgment which, being signed, keeps alive the original debt under s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877)?

We submit that it contains a stipulation to pay interest on the amount found due, and that implies a promise to pay the whole amount of the khata as principal—Tribhovan v. Amina (1); Vishnav v. Dalpat (2); Jodhara v. Raghaugir (3). It is, therefore, not a mere acknowledgment, but a new contract upon which a suit lies.

Vasudev G. Bhandarkar (amicus curiae), for the defendant.—The ruskhat in question is merely an account stated, upon which no suit can be brought. It is merely an acknowledgment of a debt already existing. It keeps alive that debt and enables the plaintiff to sue for it, but he cannot sue upon the account stated as on a fresh contract. The promise to pay interest, if there is one, is a promise without consideration. Where there are cross demands in the account, the setting off of the items against each other constitutes a consideration; but where, as here, there is only one item, there is no consideration—Damodar v. Devji (4); Umedchand v. Bulakidas (5); Mulchand [516] v. Girdhar (6); Hargopal v. Abdul (7); Amrital v. Manikial (8); Nahani Bai v. Nathu (9).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—We have been much assisted in this case by the learned pleaders, who, as amicus curiae, argued the reference. After referring to the numerous decisions which bear upon the question which has been submitted to us, we cannot say that we feel no doubt as to the answer which we should give to the question, though we think that the Subordinate Judge would have been safe in following the latest authorities in this Court.

Under English law, an account stated, even though it amount to nothing more than the totalling up of the items of an account and adding interest and acknowledging their correctness (which a simple ruskhat usually consists in) could have been directly sued on. “The claim upon an account stated lies where there is an absolute acknowledgment made by the defendant to the plaintiff of a debt due from him to the plaintiff and payable at the time of action brought.” See Bullen and Leake’s Pleadings, Vol. I, p. 33, 4th Ed. (1832), where numerous authorities are cited in support of that view including Buck v. Hurst (10). “An account stated alone is not conclusive between the parties, but the debts respecting which it was stated may be examined” (Bullen and Leake, Vol. I, p. 34), and it may be shown that the debt in respect of which the account is stated is not due. These are, however, in the nature of defences to the action. If no defence is established, on mere proof of the defendant’s handwriting on the acknowledgment, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover—Buck v. Hurst (10).

This law was adopted on the Original Side of the High Court in Umedchand v. Bulakidas (5), and it was assumed in Dhondu v. Narayan (11). Where, however, such an acknowledgment was oral or unsigned, the provisions of the Limitation Act rendered it inoperative as an exception to the plea of limitation; and when that Act intervened, such an acknowledgment could not be directly sued upon as a new contract. “An admission of a [517] debt doubtless” (says Melvill, J.) “implies in law a promise to pay it; but an admission not made in the manner which the law prescribes for the purpose of preventing a debt from becoming barred by time, does not at all imply a promise to pay such debt if it should become barred by time"—Mulchand v. Girdhar (1). Accordingly in a long series of decisions—Hargopal v. Abdul (2); Amritlal v. Maniklal (3); Hanmantmal v. Rambabai (4); Ramji v. Dharma (5); Nahantibai v. Nathu Bhau (6); Chowksi Himullal v. Chowksi Achuttal (7)—it was held that an unsigned acknowledgment could not form the basis of a suit when the statute intervened, nor could a signed acknowledgment be sued upon if made in respect of a time-barred debt, unless it contained an express promise to pay. Throughout this series, the judgments for the most part still recognize the principle that from an acknowledgment of a debt the law implies a promise to pay it. The principle is stated with great terseness and lucidity by Melvill, J., in Amritlal v. Maniklal (3): "The entry is nothing more than an acknowledgment of an existing debt from which the law implies a contract or promise. The consideration for the contract is expressed in writing, but not the contract itself. The entry is not a contract in writing, but a writing from which an unwritten contract may be inferred."

If the authorities stopped there, we should have no difficulty in applying the English law and holding that ruzukhata or adjustment of an account could be sued on as "an account stated" where the Limitation Act did not impose a bar to that being done.

In Mathur v. Krishnasht (8) the Court intimated an opinion that "the khata" (which in that case seems to have been in the nature of a ruzukhata) "might serve as evidence of the existence of that debt" (the debt sued for) "although not as the basis of it." In Trikhovan v. Amina (9) there does not appear to have been any question of limitation. The Subordinate Judge referred the [518] question whether the suit could be brought on a ruzukhata, being of opinion that it could not, as it was not "an account stated" within the narrower and more accurate definition of that expression. The Court expressed its opinion that the Subordinate Judge was right in treating the khata in question as a mere acknowledgment, from which it would appear that they thought the Subordinate Judge was also right in holding that the suit could not be based upon it. The Judges, however, pass that point over. In Govind v. Devchand (10) it was held by the Court (Sargent, C.J., and Nanabhai Haridas J.), in second appeal that the acknowledgment in the khata put in evidence in that case could not be made the basis of a suit, though it could serve as evidence of the existence of a debt. The same view was expressed by Birdwood and Parsons, JJ., in Nasarvanji v. Gangadas (11) following the above decision and following also Vishnav v. Dalpat (12) to the same effect. In Damodar v. Devji (13) the learned Judges (Sargent, C.J. and Candy, J.) also express themselves to the effect that the mere existence of a ruzukhata is not, unsupported by evidence of a contemporaneous oral contract founded on consideration, sufficient to form the basis of a fresh contract. The case of Jodharaj v. Baghavgir (14) is not perhaps altogether consistent with the above, but the circumstances of the case were peculiar, and the Court did not consider that the above authorities applied to it. There is thus, we consider, a strong current of later authorities to the effect that a ruzukhata cannot form the basis of suit, but that, the original transactions forming the basis of the suit, the subsequent ruzukhatas are only evidence of the debt due serving to prevent the operation of the statute of limitation. No reasons are assigned by the Courts for the view which they have adopted in opposition to the view that a ruzukhata is an unequivocal admission of a debt, from which the law implies a promise to pay, and thus (except for limitation purposes) contains in itself all the requisites of a valid contract which can form the immediate basis of a suit. The decisions are possibly based on the provisions of s. 50 of the Civil Procedure Code, which apparently contemplates that the plaintiff should [519] state his original cause of action and treat acknowledgments of it as exceptions taking the case out of the range of the limitation law. However that may be, we think that the authorities are so numerous and uniform as to prevent us from following the technical English law upon this subject. It is also, we think, clear that, having regard to the relations between capitalists and borrowers in the mofussil, the rule laid down by these decisions is more likely to result in doing justice between the parties than would be the opposite rule.

Turning to the ruzukhata in this case it is, as translated by our Court Interpreter, as follows:

"Creditor Shankar Ramkrishna Shett Wani, a minor, by his guardian his mother Bhagiribai kom Ramkrishna Shet Malegaokar.

"The khata of Sankra valad Bhawani Patil, inhabitant of mouja Chandanpuri at present at Malegav. The 10th of Falgun Vadya Shak 1814. The 13th of March 1893.

"7. The 2nd of Jeshta Shudh Shak 1815.

28½ On making an account of the last khata the amount found due for principal together with interest is Rs. 28½, in letters twenty-eight and a half. The interest payable on this is Rs. 1 per cent. per month.

I admit this to be correct.
The handwriting of Damodhar Narayan Mamvadkar, inhabitant of Yedalgav.

Signature across a receipt stamp of Sankara valad Bhawani Patil—my own handwriting."

We think that the admission or agreement that the statement is correct refers to the whole entry and is not an agreement as to the interest alone and a promise to pay it at ¼ per cent. In this view the ruzukhata in this case presents no peculiar feature and is an acknowledgment of the correctness of the calculation and of the rate of interest and nothing more.

[520] The transaction, therefore, amounts to this. There was an original debt advanced on (as the ruzukhatas show) compound interest, and the sum now due at the foot of the account is Rs. 28½. How much of this due for principal and how much for interest is a matter of calculation, but the interest recoverable by suit is limited by the amount of principal originally advanced. This decision is in accord with that in Motilal v. Shivram (second appeal No. 43 of 1894) not reported.

The first and second questions should be answered in the negative, the third also in the negative, the amount of interest recoverable by the plaintiff being limited by the principal amount due on the original transactions.

Order accordingly.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir O. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Hosking.

Balkrishna Indrabhan (Original Defendant), Applicant v. Mahadeo Babaji Kulkarni (Original Plaintiff), Opponent. *

[13th October, 1896.]

Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 12, 13, 53 and 54—Mortgage—Provisions in lieu of interest—Loan not secured—Provision that mortgage not to be redeemed until unsecured loan paid off—Mortgage paid off out of profits—Balance of profits applied to interest on loan—Special Judge, power of, to vary decree—Review.

A lent B Rs. 150 for which B gave him a bond, dated 6th July, 1872. Of this loan Rs. 100 were advanced on the mortgage of certain land, and the bond contained the terms of the mortgage, one of which was that the profits of the land were to be taken by the mortgagee in lieu of interest on the Rs. 100. The remaining Rs. 50 of the loan were advanced under the bond were made repayable with compound interest at Rs. 1 8-0 per cent, per mensem. The bond further provided that the mortgage should not be redeemed until the latter sum of Rs. 50 with interest should be paid off. B sued for redemption of the mortgage. The first Court found that the mortgage had been paid off, and ordered redemption on the plaintiff paying Rs. 50 with interest, which under the rule of damuspat increased the amount to Rs. 100. The plaintiff applied to the Special Judge for review on the ground that he had already paid the Rs. 50. The Special Judge did not review the case on that ground, but acting under the power given him by ss. 53 and 54 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act varied the decree by ordering redemption on payment of Rs. 50 only, holding that as the mortgage had been long since paid out of profits, balance of such profits should be applied to payment of the interest due on the Rs. 50. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that the Special Judge had jurisdiction proprio motu under the provisions of s. 53 to vary the decree of the lower Court while not reviewing the case on the ground applied for by the plaintiff.

Held also, that the Courts while inquiring into the merits of a case under s. 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act had authority under s. 13 to treat the original advance of Rs. 100 and Rs. 50 as a single transaction and to set aside the agreement of the parties to treat part of the loan as a mortgage loan and part as an unsecured loan, and to deal with the whole case (as in substance it was) as an advance on a mortgage.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Khan Bahadur Nowroji Dorabji, Acting Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879).

Suit for redemption of a mortgage dated 6th July, 1872.

The bond which contained the mortgage, was given to secure a loan of Rs. 150, and it provided that only Rs. 100 of that sum should be deemed to be advanced on the security of the land thereby mortgaged, and that in lieu of interest on that sum of Rs. 100 the mortgagee should take the profits of the said land. The remaining Rs. 50 of the loan were, by the bond, made repayable with compound interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem, and it was provided that the mortgage should not be redeemed until this sum of Rs. 50 and interest should be paid off.

* Application No. 174 of 1896, under Extraordinary Jurisdiction.

The Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage-debt had been already paid off out of the profits of the land; and he ordered redemption on payment of Rs. 50 with interest, which under the rule of damdupat made a total sum of Rs. 100 to be paid by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff applied to the Special Judge for review on the ground that he had repaid the Rs. 50. The Special Judge did not review the case, but varied the decree by directing redemption on payment by the plaintiff of Rs. 50 only, holding that as [522] the mortgage-debt had long since been repaid out of the profits of the land, the balance of such profits ought to be applied in reduction of the interest which had accrued due on the Rs. 50.

The defendant applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the decision of the Special Judge should not be set aside on the grounds that the decision was against the provisions of the Dekkhin Agriculturists' Relief Act as interpreted by the decisions of the High Court, that the Special Judge was wrong in applying the profits enjoyed by the defendant as mortgagee to the payment of interest on the unsecured amount, and that the effect of the decision was to compel the mortgagee to refund profits enjoyed by him under the terms of the bond, which was passed long before the Dekkhin Agriculturists' Relief Act came into force.

Mahadev B. Chaukat, appeared for the applicant (defendant) in support of the rule.—The Judge was wrong in appropriating the profits enjoyed by us to the payment of interest on the unsecured debt. There were two debts due to us; one secured by a mortgage, the other not secured. The two debts are quite distinct though there is only one bond. And the terms of the bond relating to the mortgage do not apply to the other debt. Under the bond the mortgagee is entitled to the profits of the land until redemption, but the Special Judge has applied part of the profits towards the payment of the unsecured debt. The effect of that is, that the mortgagee has to refund profits to which he is entitled under the terms of the mortgage executed long before the Dekkhin Agriculturists' Act came into force. The ruling in Janoji v. Janoji (1) is an authority that such a thing cannot be done. If there had been only the mortgage-debt, then in taking an account of the profits the Court could not have ordered any refund. The plaintiff did not contend that the debts should be considered as one. In his application for revision before the Special Judge, the plaintiff sought to get himself absolved from liability on grounds other than those given by the Judge. The Judge was wrong in making out a new case for the plaintiff—Gorakh Babaji v. Vithal (2).

[523] Sadashivo R. Bakhle, for Balaji A. Bhagwat, for the opponent (plaintiff) showed cause.—The Judge was right under ss. 12 and 13 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). Courts are at liberty to inquire into the history of the transaction. The Judge did so, and he found that in fact the sum of Rs. 150 was one debt, and not two separate debts, as would appear from the bond. Regarding the debt as a single debt and the transactions as a single transaction, the Judge was right in dealing with the accounts as he did.

As to the objection that the Special Judge should have decided only the points raised in the plaintiff’s application for review and should not have gone into other questions, we submit that the powers of the Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act are wider than those of other Courts. He is a Court of revision, and in that capacity he can vary the decree proprio motu under the provisions of s. 53 of the Act. His jurisdiction is not limited to the points taken before him.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—We are of opinion that we ought not in this case, in the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction, to interfere with the order of the Revisional Judge.

The plaintiff sued to redeem a mortgage dated the 6th of July, 1872. The bond which contained the mortgage was given to secure an advance of Rs. 150. It provided that of that sum Rs. 100 should be deemed to be advanced on the security of the mortgaged land, the profits of which were to be taken by the mortgagee in lieu of interest on that sum. The residue (Rs. 50) was made repayable with compound interest at Rs. 1-8 per cent. per mensem, and it was provided that the mortgage should not be redeemed until the Rs. 50 with interest should be paid off.

The Subordinate Judge, First Class, found that the mortgage-debt had been paid off out of the profits of the land, and decreed redemption on the plaintiff repaying by instalments the Rs. 50 with interest, which, the rule of damdupat being applied, amounted to Rs. 50 more, or Rs. 100 in all.

The plaintiff applied to the Special Judge to review the case on the ground that he had repaid the Rs. 50. The Special Judge [524] did not review the case on the ground applied for by the plaintiff, but acting, we presume, under the power conferred upon him by ss. 53 and 54 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act, varied the decree by directing that the plaintiff should be at liberty to redeem on payment of Rs. 50 only, deeming that, as the mortgagee had been long since repaid the Rs. 100 out of profits, the balance of such profits should be applied to payment of the interest due on the Rs. 50. This he considered to be an equitable order.

Mr. Chauhan contends that this is, in effect, an order directing the defendant to refund the profits which he has received in accordance with the terms of his mortgage and so is contrary to the ruling in Janoji v. Janoji (1). He also contended that the Special Judge had no jurisdiction under the circumstances to make a new case for the plaintiff different from that which he set forth in his application for review, citing Gorakh Babaji v. Vithal (2).

As to the latter objection we think that the Special Judge had jurisdiction proprio motu to vary the decree under the provisions of s. 53, and the authority quoted does not, therefore, apply to the present case. As to the former, we think that the Courts while under s. 12 inquiring into the merits of the case had authority under s. 13 to treat the original advance of Rs. 100 and Rs. 50 as a single transaction and to set aside the agreement of the parties to treat part of the loan as a mortgage loan and part as an unsecured loan and to deal with the whole sum (as in substance was) as an advance on mortgage. The arrangement to deal with the Rs. 50 as an unsecured debt, but to make the mortgage irredeemable until it was paid in effect, though not in law, made the property a security for the Rs. 50—Yashwanth Shenai v. Vitthoba Shet (1); Sundar Mahur v. Bomji Shridar (2). If such a device were allowed to prevail, it would be adopted in many cases, and the provisions of the Dekhlan Agriculturists' Relief Act would be defeated. The mortgagee has himself interlaced the two loans and cannot complain of their being treated substantially as one. Though the Special [525] Judge has not dealt with the case exactly on the footing upon which we have considered it, we think that we ought not on that ground to exercise our extraordinary powers. Rule discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

IMPERATRIX & VANMALI AND OTHERS. [31st October, 1896.]

Easement—Entry on land in order to repair—Dominant and servient owners, rights and liabilities of—Indian Easement Act [V of 1882], s. 24, ill. (a)—Right of entry—Indian Railway Act [IX of 1890], s. 122.

The Rajnagar Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Company had a mill on one side of the B. B. & C. I. Railway line and a ginning factory on the other. To bring water from the mill to the factory a pipe had been laid beneath the railway line, and brick reservoirs built at each side to preserve the proper level of the water. Servants of the company having entered on the railway premises to repair the pipe and reservoirs without having first obtained the permission of the Railway Company, were convicted by a Magistrate under s. 122 of the Indian Railway Act [IX of 1890] of an unlawful entry upon a railway. It was proved that the repairs were necessary.

 Held, reversing the convictions and sentences, that, as the pipes and reservoirs belonged to the Spinning and Weaving Company and were kept in repair by them, they, as owners of the dominant tenement, had a right to enter on the premises of the Railway Company, the owners of the servient tenement, to effect any necessary repairs, and that, the entry in question, being in the exercise of that right, could not be called unlawful.

APPLICATION under the Revisional Jurisdiction of the High Court under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The Rajnagar Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Company, Limited, at Ahmedabad had a spinning and weaving mill on one side of the B. B. & C. I. Railway and a ginning factory on the other, the railway line passing between the two.

The plots on which the mill, the factory and the railway line were situate formed originally one piece of ground owned by one [526] individual; but when the Railway Company acquired the intervening piece of land for their line, an arrangement was made with the Railway Company that the water should be conveyed from the mill to the factory by means of a pipe laid under the railway line; and two tanks were erected, one on either side of the permanent way, within the railway limits, to keep the water on the same level. One of the tanks having got out of order, the servants of the mill entered the land belonging to the Railway Company and repaired the tank, but without first having asked permission from the railway authorities to do so. Thereupon the railway authorities prosecuted the servants of the mill under s. 447 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) and s. 122 of the Indian Railway Act (IX of 1890) before the First Class Magistrate of Ahmedabad.

The Magistrate refused to frame any charge under the Penal Code, but convicted the accused under s. 122 of the Railway Act (IX of 1890) and sentenced them to a fine of annas 4 each.

Against these convictions the accused applied to the High Court.

Chimanlal Harilal Setalwad, for the accused.—The tanks which are in the land belonging to the Railway Company, and to repair which the petitioners entered the land, are admittedly the property of the mill whose servants the petitioners are. The owners of the tanks have the right to repair them which they have always exercised without obstruction, but they cannot do so without going upon the land. The Railway Company is the owner of a servient tenement and cannot complain of the lawful exercise of the rights possessed by the holders of the dominant tenement, viz., the mill authorities. The position of the tanks precluded any possibility of danger or accident to the working of the railway line, and the Railway Act, therefore, has no application in this case. The petitioners were there in the exercise of their right of easement, and cannot be convicted as trespassers—Indian Easement Act (V of 1882), s. 24 and illustration (a); Colebeck v. Girdlers Company (1).

Rao Sahib Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—The accused had no right to enter the railway limits [527] and commence any work without first having obtained permission from the railway authorities. The railway authorities would have granted such permission had they been properly approached. The act of the accused was dangerous and might have resulted in loss of life and property.
The Easement Act has no application to this case.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The Magistrate finds that the company whose servants the accused are, have a mill on one side of the railway line and a ginning factory on the other, and that to bring water from one to the other there is a pipe laid beneath the railway line and brick reservoirs at each side to preserve the proper level of the water. He has convicted the accused under s. 122 of the Indian Railway Act, 1890, because they entered on the railway premises to do some repairs to the pipe and reservoirs without having first obtained the permission of the Railway Company to their entry. But it appears to us that as the pipe and reservoirs belong to the company, and are kept in repair by them, they, as the dominant owners, would have a right to enter on the premises of the Railway Company, the servient owners, to effect any repair that might be necessary. See the Indian Easement Act, s. 24, and illustration (a) and Colebeck v. Girdlers Company (1). The evidence shows there was such necessity at this time, the flow of the water through the pipe being stopped.
An entry in exercise of a right, cannot be called unlawful. We, therefore, reverse the convictions and sentences.

Convictions and sentences reversed.

[528] PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:

The Lord Chancellor, Lord Hobhouse, Lord Davey and Sir R. Couch.

[On petition from the High Court at Bombay.]

BAL GAN GADHAR TILAK (Petitioner) v. THE QUEEN-EMpress.
[19th November, 1897.]

Privy Council—Leave to appeal—Refusal of leave to appeal from a conviction and sentence—Alleged misdirection to a jury—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 124-A.

The petitioner applied to the Privy Council for leave to appeal from a verdict finding him guilty on a charge under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

Held that, consistently with the rules hitherto guiding the Judicial Committee in recommending the grant of leave to appeal from convictions in criminal cases, the petitioner's case was not one in which leave should be granted.

PETITION for leave to appeal from a conviction and sentence (14th September, 1897) of the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction.

Under an order, dated 26th July, 1897, of His Excellency the Governor in Council, in accordance with s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), the Official Translator laid an information against Bal Gangadhar Tilak, editor and proprietor of the Kesari, a weekly journal published by him, in the vernacular, at Poona and at other places, in respect of articles in that newspaper alleged to offend against s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code (1). Tilak was committed for trial at the next sessions in Bombay, [529] and was held to bail. He was tried before Strachey, J., and a special jury on the 8th September, 1897 and the five following days, and was found guilty of having, on the 15th June, 1897, attempted to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government by publishing in the Kesari the articles specified. That was the verdict of the majority of the jurors (six against three), and it was accepted by the Judge, who sentenced him to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

The Kesari of the 15th June, 1897, contained a report of the proceedings at the Shivaji festival, then recently held at Poona. An historical lecture about the killing of Azul Khan by Shivaji, was followed by speeches, of which one was delivered by Bal Gangadhar Tilak, who defended that act as justifiable, and alluded to other circumstances. The

(1) Section 124-A, Indian Penal Code, is as follows:—"Whoever by words, either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs, or by visible representation, or otherwise, excites, or attempts to excite, feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, shall be punished with transportation for life, or for any term, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, to which fine may be added, or with fine."

"Explanation:—Such a disapprobation of the measures of the Government as is compatible with a disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of the Government, and to support the lawful authority of the Government against unlawful attempts to subvert or resist that authority, is not disaffection. Therefore, the making of comments on the measures of the Government, with the intention of exciting only this species of disapprobation, is not an offence within this clause." (Act XXVII of 1870, s. 5), charge was based on the report, and also on a collection of Marathi verses, published in the same issue of the Kesari, describing an imaginary awakening of the Maharaja from the sleep of centuries, and representing him as lamenting, in figurative language, over the decadence of Mahrashtra, as well as discoursing upon other matters in a strain of discontent.

The petition stated the above facts, and mentioned that the petitioner had been elected by the native community on the 23rd May, 1897, to represent them in the Legislative Council of the Governor of Bombay; and that his election had been accepted on the 24th June, 1897, by the Government.

The principal grounds on which the petition sought for leave to appeal from the verdict and sentence were:

(1) That the order, or authority, purporting to be under s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) in not stating, either expressly or by reference, the words on which the charge was to be based, was insufficient; and that this defect was not rendered immaterial by s. 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882).

(2) That the Judge had misdirected the jury as to the meaning of s. 124-A on a material point affecting the merits of the case and their finding, both as to the meaning of disaffection and in directing them to consider, in regard to the intention of the accused, a state of excitement among his readers, no such feeling having in fact been proved to exist by evidence given at the trial.

(3) That the Judge had not, as he should have done, drawn the attention of the jury to editorial notes in the Kesari of the 18th May, showing that the cause of excitement, arising in regard to the sanitary operations had, in consequence of the request on the part of the native community, been removed before the publication of the Kesari of the 15th June.

The petition set forth the Judge’s charge: see supra pp. 133 to 144.

Asquith, Q. C. (with whom were J. D. Mayne, Womesh Chandra Banerji, and G. A. Blair), for the petitioner, argued that the Judge had misdirected the jury as to the meaning and application of s. 124-A. The ruling in Reg v. Bertrand (1) would support this petition, which sought to raise a question of “great and general importance” as affecting the right of political discussion. The principal argument was that too wide a meaning had been given to the words of the section; and that, in fact, it would appear doubtful whether the petitioner had exceeded the bounds within which a writer might express opinions. The Judge had directed the jury that “disaffection” meant ill-will in any form to the Government, “disloyalty” being, perhaps, the best term, and had said that he agreed with the definition given in Queen-Empress v. Jogendra Chunder Bose (2), where the Chief Justice of Bengal had stated the word to mean the absence of affection. It was obvious that this might vary in degree from indifference to extreme hostility, and that the term was vague. The word “sedition” used in English law, explained as “disloyalty in action,” was more clear. The question should not be tied to the one word, and it was submitted that the learned Judge’s direction came to this, viz., that if the evidence showed that the intention of the accused was to excite hatred of the Government in the minds of his readers, that alone would be sufficient to bring him within the scope of the section. The "explanation," in that section, had been treated by the Judge as if it formed by itself an exhaustive description of all that was not to fall within it. It was [531] submitted that this was not its true construction. The word "measures" used in the "explanation" was not the governing word; and comments upon measures should be understood as comprehending comments upon the whole course of Government without their being limited, as the Judge had limited them. The protection afforded to comments had been unduly restricted by the Judge's construction; and the protection should have been extended to comments such as had been made in this case, where the feelings, attempted to be excited, were such as to be "compatible with the disposition to render obedience to the lawful authority of the Government, and to support that authority against unlawful attempts to subvert it." The protection was applicable in a more general sense than that to which the Judge has limited it. The criticism of a Government generally took the form of criticizing some, or one, of its measures. The learned Judge should have told the jury to keep in mind the question—was the spirit, which the words were alleged to have been designed to engender, compatible or incompatible with the disposition to obey lawful authority? The contention now was that the articles, and the rhetorical verses, were merely intended as comments upon the course of Government, and upon the change in social habits and institutions which had been brought about since the days of Maratha rule; and that there was nothing to be found in the words used which necessarily tended to excite a disposition not to render obedience to lawful authority. The dividing line would have been passed if it had been shown that the feeling sought to be excited was incompatible with the disposition to render such obedience. Thus it appeared that the learned Judge had not suggested that construction of the section which was the true one. Further, he had, at various stages, referred to a state of disquiet or unrest as existing in the minds of those to whom the words of excitement were addressed, without evidence having been put before the jury of the existence of that state of agitation. This had been spoken of as requiring, if found to exist, a more severe construction of the language used than the latter might have called for at another time, or in another place. Thus a case of misdirection had, it was submitted, been made out. It had been said that a mere ordinary misdirection [532] to a jury would not be sufficient ground for such an application as this, should no grave injustice be shown. Misdirection, leading to results of serious importance, might, on a consideration of circumstances and consequences, be the occasion of their Lordships' recommending the grant of special leave to appeal. Here, if no such leave were granted, this case, as it stood, must form a precedent guiding other Courts in future; and its importance would appear for this reason. Reference was made to Reg. v. Bertrand (1), where the opinions in Re Ames (2), in The Queen v. Joykissen Mookerjee (3) and in The Falkland Islands Company v. The Queen (4) were cited.

(1) (1897) L. R. I P.C. 520.
(2) 19 Q. 35.

Cohen, Q. C., with whom was J. H. A. Branson, only mentioned Ex parte Carew (5) in which the rule laid down in Re Dillett (6) was stated as follows:—"Her Majesty will not review, or interfere with, the course of criminal proceedings unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done."

JUDGMENT.

LORD HALSBURY.—Their Lordships are of opinion, taking a view of the whole of the summing-up, which is of very great length, that there is nothing in that summing-up which calls upon them to indicate any dissent from it or necessity to correct what is therein contained, looking at the summing-up as a whole, and looking at each part of what was said by the light of what else was said. Speaking generally of the argument which has been presented to their Lordships, they are of opinion that no case has been made out consistently with the rules by which their advice to Her Majesty has been hitherto guided in giving leave to appeal in criminal cases; and, therefore, they will humbly advise Her Majesty that this is not a case in which leave should be granted.

[533] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice B. Tyabji.

Khimji Jairam Narromji (Plaintiff) v. Morarji Jairam Narromji and Others (Defendants). [20th, and 21st December 1897.]

Will—Construction—Gift to a class—Members of class not in existence at testator's death—Void gift—Intention of testator—Gift to widows of sons is a gift to a class.

A testator gave his property to his executors and trustees, who were to apply the income as directed. He further directed that after the death of the last survivor of his five sons the property should be divided as directed among the sons of his sons and daughters of his sons, and provision was made, in certain events, for the widows of his deceased sons. He left him surviving his five sons, three grandsons and three grand-daughters. After his death two more grand-daughters were born.

 Held, that the gifts to the sons, daughters and widows of deceased sons were void. They were gifts to a class of which some members were not in existence at the time of the testator's death.

The principle deducible from the authorities is that it is the primary duty of the Court so to construe the will as to carry out, as far as possible, the intentions of the testator, and that if the Court comes to the conclusion that the testator had the primary intention of benefiting all the members of a class and if such intention fails by reason of its being void, yet if the Court can deduce a secondary intention that at least such members of the class should take as were in existence at the time of the testator's death, then effect should be given to such secondary intention, but not otherwise. For the purpose of ascertaining these primary and secondary intentions it is, of course, necessary to take all the material facts as to the testator's family into consideration and to read the various provisions of his will as a whole.

A gift in a will to widows of sons is, in the case of Hindus, a gift to a class, as Hindus by their law are permitted to have more than one wife at the same time.

SUIT by an executor for the construction of a will.

One Jairam Narroji died at Bombay on the 19th April, 1890, leaving a considerable amount of property. Probate of his will, dated 1st January, 1890, was granted to his son, the plaintiff, on the 15th December, 1893.

[534] The testator left a widow, five sons, viz., Liladhur, Khimji (plaintiff), Morarji, Callianji and Magaji; three grandsons, one of them being a son of the plaintiff and the other two being the sons of Liladhur, and three grand-daughters, of whom one was the daughter of the plaintiff and two the daughters of Liladhur. The testator had a sixth son (Karsondas), who, however, predeceased him and left a widow (defendant No. 15).

Liladhur died in 1892, leaving a widow (defendant No. 16) and also the two abovementioned sons.

Subsequently to the testator’s death two daughters were born to the plaintiff (defendants Nos. 7 and 8).

The testator’s widow and mother and the Advocate General of Bombay were defendants in the suit.

By his will the testator directed that a lakh and a half of his property should be “set apart in trust” and held by his executors as trustees, and he directed that out of the income arising therefrom monthly allowances should be made to his mother and widow and daughter-in-law, and that the residue should be applied to the support of a certain sadarvarat and to the maintenance and education of his family, all of whom were to reside together.

He further directed that, if any son should live separate, the trustees, after paying the above allowances, were out of the surplus of such income to give to the son so living apart his equal share.

On the death of the last of his sons the trust was to come to an end, and the trust property to be divided among the sons of his sons. Such sons were to take their deceased father’s share, and if any of his sons had no son but had daughters, such daughters were to get half their father’s share, the other half going to the sons of the other sons.

The above directions are contained in the following clauses of the will:

“7. If until (the expiration of) the period appertaining to this trust and before the distribution of the trust property according as mentioned below my sons cannot live together, and if any one of them should live separate, then after making the outlays and paying the sums mentioned in the above written clauses (Ka) to (Dna) as to the surplus which may remain out of the income [535] of the trust property, out of the same my trustees shall give to the son so living apart his equal share. And for the purpose of fixing the amount of the share appertaining to each of the sons in this manner an equal share shall be given to my worshipful and respectful mother Jivibai and my wife Shamavahu (i.e.) to each of them during their lifetime for their boarding expenses. And after the decease of such son the amount of the income coming to his share shall be given to his sons. And if he should have no sons, and (but) if he should have a widow and daughters, the trustees shall give them out such sums for their boarding and maintenance expenses as may be reasonable and just.

“8. When the decease of the last of my sons shall take place, the time in respect of this trust shall expire. And my trustees shall divide and distribute this trust property among the sons of my sons. And the sons of each of (my) deceased sons shall be given their deceased father’s equal share. And if there should be no sons born of the loins of any one of my sons, but if there should be daughters, a moiety of the share of such deceased son shall be given to his daughters. And the remaining moiety shall be divided and distributed amongst the sons of my other sons, who may get the remaining property. The same shall be given in such a way that the sons of each of (my) sons shall get one equal share, that is to say, the distribution shall take place on the principle of what in English is called stirpes (per stirpes). And if such deceased son should have no children whatever, the whole share of such deceased son shall be given to the sons of his other deceased brothers agreeably to what is written above."

Besides the trust property the testator had other property out of which he made certain bequests and finally gave the following directions as to the residue of his estate:

"18. After setting apart the trust property and legacies or (and) after making the outlays appertaining to ornaments and marriages and the outlays appertaining to the uttar kriya (ceremonies) mentioned above, as regards whatever property of mine may remain over the whole of such property shall be divided into as many equal shares as there may be my sons and one for me. And if accounts should not have been opened after making a division in my lifetime in the name of each of my sons in respect of his such share, the several accounts should be opened. And whatever sum may come to the share of each of (my) sons should be considered as given in gift to him by me. And out of the amount of my share outlays shall be made according to what is mentioned below; that is to say, a sanitarium should be built for the use of Bhatias or a ‘svavat khana’ (lying-in hospital), or chawls for poor Bhatias to live therein on payment of cheap rents........ should be built and therein some accommodation should be provided for my friends to put up at. After this shall have been done, all of my sons together and jointly with each other and in peace and harmony shall carry on the business which I at present carry on, or any other business. [536] And whatever profit or loss may arise therein, the same shall respectively be credited or debited to the account of each son in equal shares.

If any of my sons should not be of age,—that is to say, should not have completed the age of eighteen years,—the executors shall credit his share and income in his name. And I recommend my executors and my sons as follows:—They should live unanimously as far as practicable and by doing so they will always be benefited. But if any of my sons should not be in peace and harmony (with others) the amount which may be due to the account of such son should be paid in full (to him) and he should be separated from the partnership. And as long as the other sons can live together, and carry on the business, they shall live together and conduct themselves agreeably to what is mentioned above. And when they shall separate in business, or should desire to do so, (those) remaining sons shall divide and receive in equal shares my remaining property and the income thereof whatever the same may be. And if the decease of any one of (my) sons should have taken place before that time, his sons, if he has any, shall be entitled to his share: and if he has no sons (his said share) shall be apportioned in such a way as may have been directed in the will if such deceased son should have made one. And if he should not have made a will, and if the widow only of such deceased son should have been left, she shall get the income of (such share) as long as she may be alive. And on the decease of the said Bai, my other sons shall become entitled to the said property in equal shares. But if he should have daughters (a sum of) Rs. 5,000, namely five thousand, shall be paid to each of such daughters. Out of the remaining property coming to the share of such deceased son, outlays relating to the marriage of such daughters shall be made agreeably to my respectability. And after making such outlays as regards whatever may remain over, (my) other sons shall divide and receive the same in equal shares."

The plaint set forth the various questions of construction to be decided by the Court. The main point, however, raised at the hearing and the only one material to this report was whether under the gifts made in the will to "sons of sons," "daughters of sons" and "widows of sons" the members of those classes could take who were living at the death of the testator, excluding those who afterwards came into existence, or whether the gifts to those classes were wholly void.

Lang (Advocate General) and Inevahersity appeared for the plaintiff.

Anderson, Lowades and Jametram Namabheey appeared for the defendants.

The following authorities were cited:—Krishnanath v. Atmaram (1); Mangaldas v. Tribohovandas (2); Krishnanath v. Benabai (3); [537] Jamiall Satt v. Kanaiiall Satt (4); Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 104; Rai Bishen Chand v. Mousumut Asmvida Koor (5).

JUDGMENT.

TYABJI, J.—This suit is filed by the plaintiff as the surviving executor of his father Jairam Narrooji for the purpose of getting the will of the testator construed and the rights of the parties interested under the will to be ascertained by the Court. The facts of the case are simple and undisputed. It appears that the testator Jairam Narrooji, a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, died on the 19th April, 1890, having made his will in the Gujarati language dated 1st January, 1890. Probate of the will was granted to the plaintiff as the sole surviving executor on 15th December, 1893. The testator at the time of his death was possessed of considerable property, all of which was self-acquired.

The testator left him surviving five sons, namely, the plaintiff Khimji and his brothers Morarji (first defendant), Callianji (third defendant), Meghji (fourth defendant) and Liladbur, who died afterwards on the 18th June, 1892. Liladbur had two sons, namely, the ninth and tenth defendants, and two daughters, namely, the eleventh and twelfth defendants, all of whom were born before the death of the testator. Liladbur also left a widow, the sixteenth defendant. The testator also left him surviving his mother Jivibai (fourteenth defendant), his widow Shamavahu (thirteenth defendant), his daughter-in-law Monghibahu (fifteenth defendant), who is the widow of his predeceased son Karsandas. The plaintiff’s son Vallabhdas (fifth defendant) and his daughter Manekbai (sixth defendant) were also born before the death of the testator. The plaintiff’s daughter Monghibai (seventh defendant) and Manibai (eighth defendant) were born after the testator’s death. The first, third and fourth defendants have no issue.

Under these circumstances various questions have arisen as to the true construction of the will, and it will be convenient to deal with them seriatim in their order.

The main question, however, on which the construction of the different clauses of the will turns is whether the terms “sons of sons,”

(1) 15 B. 548. (2) 15 B. 652. (3) 20 B. 571.
(4) 12 O. 669. (5) 11 I. A. 164 (176).
"daughters of sons," "widows of sons," which occur throughout the will, denote a class, so that the gift to all of them would be wholly void, as only a very few members of the class were in existence at the time of the testator's death, or whether the gift to any of the members of the class who were in existence at the time of the testator's death takes effect. Before expressing my conclusion upon this point I may at once say that the case has been argued before me on behalf of the various parties in an extremely friendly spirit with a desire so to construe the will, if that be possible, as not to prejudice any members of the class who were intended to be benefited by the testator. Indeed, I may say that the efforts of counsel were directed to prevent the hardships that would arise if such a construction were to be put upon the various clauses of the will as to benefit only some members of the testator's family to the exclusion of others standing in precisely the same position. The question, therefore, before me is how far I can give effect to the desire of the parties by putting upon the clauses of the will the construction which is most equitable and which they all seem to desire.

It is, of course, beyond doubt that the expressions "sons of sons" and "daughters of sons" must necessarily be treated as denoting a "class" as defined in Leake v. Robinson (1) and Jarman on Wills (4th Ed.), p. 268. The term "widows of sons" raises more difficulty; but as Hindus are, by their law, permitted to marry and to have more than one wife at the same time, I must hold that they also form a "class." It follows, therefore, that a gift to any of these three classes would be bad under the Tagore case (2), as some of the members of each of these classes were not in existence at the time of the testator's death.

The question, however, is whether, under the provisions of this will, I must or ought to hold the gift to be good in favour of such members of these three classes as were in existence at the time of the testator's death to the exclusion of all the others as decided in Ram Lal v. Kanai Lal (3), Krishnanath v. Atmaram (4), Mangaldas v. Tribhovandas (5), Tribhovandas v. Gangadas (6), and Krishnarao v. (539) Benabai (7). The principle I deduce from these authorities is that it is the primary duty of the Court so to construe the will as to carry out, as far as possible, the intentions of the testator, and that if the Court comes to the conclusion that the testator had the primary intention of benefiting all the members of a class, and if such intention fails by reason of its being void, yet if the Court can deduce a secondary intention that at least such members of the class should take as were in existence at the time of the testator's death, then effect should be given to such secondary intention. For the purpose of ascertaining these primary and secondary intentions it is, of course, necessary to take all the material facts as to the testator's family into consideration and to read the various provisions of his will as a whole. Adopting this test, I have come to the conclusion that in this case the testator intended to benefit all the members of the three classes as a whole and that he had no intention of benefiting any particular member of any of the classes in the event of the gift to the classes as a whole failing by reason of the non-existence of some of the members at the time of the testator's death. In other words, I can discover no indication whatsoever of the intention of the testator to benefit his three grandsons (fifth, ninth and tenth defendants) to the exclusion of his other grandsons by the same or other sons. Similarly I can discover no such indication in favour of his grand-daughters (sixth, eleventh and twelfth defendants) to the exclusion of his other grand-daughters born afterwards. Nor can I see any direct intention to favour the sixteenth defendant to the exclusion of any other widows that Liladhr might have left. No member of any of these three classes is named, or specifically designated in the will, or referred to in any manner whatsoever as to show that the testator had him specially in mind. This observation, of course, does not apply to the fifteenth defendant for whom special provision has been made in the will and whose husband had died before the testator's death. Reading the will as a whole I have come to the conclusion that the testator intended to benefit no members of the class unless he could equally benefit all of them whether born before or after his death.

[540] Having made these general observations I will now proceed to construe the various clauses in their order. (His Lordship then decided the issues raised on the clauses of the will and continued:—)

The construction I have put upon the various clauses of the will makes some of its provisions absolutely void and that causes intestacy, but under the peculiar circumstances of the testator's family it is clear to my mind that the intestacy will indirectly bring about practically the same results that the testator had in view. Under the intestacy the testator's five sons will inherit the property which must necessarily enure to the benefit of the testator's grandsons and grand-daughters and the widows of the testator's sons and grandsons, that is, for the benefit of the very persons whom the testator had intended to benefit. If, on the other hand, I had held the provisions to be good and valid in favour of the few members of the three classes who were in existence at the time of the testator's death, it is obvious that they would have absolutely taken the whole benefit of the estate and would have excluded many of those for whom the testator intended to provide.

I record my findings upon the issues in accordance with the above conclusions and I direct that the costs of all parties should come out of the estate as between attorney and client.

Before Mr. Justice Fulton.

W. B. Stokes (Plaintiff) v. Soondernath D. Khote and Another (Defendants). [11th January, 1898.]

Broker—Brokerage—Suit for brokerage—Contract effected by broker not carried out by purchaser—Quantum meruit.

The plaintiff was employed by the defendants as broker to sell certain property. The defendants' letter dated 3rd January, 1895, engaging him as [541] broker stated as follows:—"It is understood that the brokerage will be paid on receipt by us of the money, and that this transaction is to be completed within a fortnight from date." The plaintiff negotiated with one Penchani Patel and his brother, who eventually agreed to become purchasers, but stipulated for four or five months within which to pay the purchase-money. On the 1st February, 1895,

the defendants, through the plaintiff, finally closed the contract with the purchasers, one of the terms of which provided that Rs. 10,000 should be paid immediately, as earnest, and the balance (Rs. 27,000) of the purchase-money should be paid within four months. The purchasers were, however, unable to pay the Rs. 10,000 earnest-money and they handed to the defendants three Bank of Bombay shares as security for the performance of the contract. One of the purchasers shortly afterwards died. The defendants apparently abandoned the idea of enforcing the contract, and at the end of the year they returned to the purchasers' family two of the Bank of Bombay shares, having (as they alleged) sold the third to defray the expenses which they had incurred in connection with the transaction. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,500 as brokerage from the defendants.

Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the Rs. 1,500, but only to a quantum meruit, there being no previous agreement as to the time when the brokerage was to be paid; and that he was only entitled to a percentage (5 per cent.) on the value of the shares which had been actually received by the defendants. Part of the business for which the plaintiff was employed was to find a solvent purchaser.

SUIT for brokerage. The plaintiff alleged that by a writing dated the 3rd January, 1895, he was employed by the defendants to procure a purchaser of their shares in the agency commission of the New Dholera Cotton Pressing and Ginning Company, Limited, and that for doing so he was to receive a brokerage of Rs. 1,500; that he had procured a purchaser and concluded a contract between him and the defendants, and he was, therefore, entitled to be paid his brokerage. He also claimed the said sum for work and labour under the ordinary money counts.

The defendants pleaded that they were not bound to pay any brokerage or commission to the plaintiff, as the purchase which he had negotiated had never been completed and the purchase-money had never been paid.

The writing of the 3rd January, 1895, mentioned in the plaint, was a letter addressed by the defendants to the plaintiff and was as follows:—

"With reference to our talk re the sale of our shares in the agency commission of the New Dholera Cotton Press and Spinning Company, Limited, [542] we agree to let you have, as bonus or brokerage, the sum of Rs. 1,500 only, if you succeed in selling a twelve-annas share in the commission for shares of the value of Rs. 42,000 of the said company at par value. If not, you may sell a six-annas' share in the said commission for shares of the said company of the value of Rs. 22,000 (sic) at par value for which we shall be glad to let you have Rs. 750 for your trouble. It is understood that the brokerage will be paid on receipt by us of the money, and that this transaction is to be completed within a fortnight from date."

It appeared that subsequently to the receipt of that letter the plaintiff negotiated with one Pestonji Patel and his brother Jamsetji, who eventually agreed to become purchasers.

They, however, stipulated for four or five months within which to pay the purchase-money. On the 30th January, 1895, the defendants wrote to the plaintiff to inquire who the proposed purchasers were, and having obtained the information from the plaintiff they wrote the following letter next day to the plaintiff:

"To Messrs. STOKES & Co., Bombay.

"Dear Sirs,—With reference to your letters to us dated 21st and 30th instant, informing us that Messrs. Pestonji and Jamsetji Dadabhoy..."
Patel are willing to purchase from us a portion of our share in the agency commission and its emoluments of the New Dholera Cotton Pressing and Ginning Company, Limited, on certain conditions, we beg to inform you that we shall be glad to meet them on the following conditions” (then followed the conditions, of which the following are material):

“(1) That they are to get a ten-annas’ share in the agency commission of the company on their taking up 74 shares of the said company of Rs. 500 each at par value, their Mr. Ratilal retaining the remaining six-annas’ share.

“(2) That a sum of Rs. 10,000 should be paid immediately down in cash as earnest-money; the balance of the purchase money, namely, Rs. 27,000, to be paid within four months from date whereon interest is to run in the meantime at Rs. 6 per cent., but at the same time that it should be open to Messrs. Patel to pay it up within that period.”

On the following day the plaintiff wrote as follows to the defendants:

“Dear Sirs,—We duly received yours of the 31st January and have submitted the contents to Messrs. Patel Brothers. The following items are their replies to yours” (the items are then set forth, but only the following is material):

[843] “2. That Messrs. Patel Brothers are ready to pay cash money on the completion of the agreement and pukka transfer of the shares.

“Awaiting the favour of your confirmation,”

On the same day the defendants wrote as follows to the plaintiff accepting the terms of purchase:

“1st February, 1895.

“To Messrs. Stokes & Co.,
Brokers, Bombay.

“Dear Sirs,—We beg to acknowledge your letter of date and to inform you that we confirm the terms mentioned therein, with the variation contained in the para. in the postscript.

“2. As arranged personally with you, we shall request our solicitors, Messrs. Chitnis, Motilal and Malvi, to draw up the regular deed of agreement.”

The Patels, however, were unable to pay the Rs. 10,000 earnest-money and they handed over to the defendants three Bank of Bombay shares as security for the performance of the contract. In May, 1895, Pestonji Patel died.

No brokerage was paid to the plaintiff, although (as he alleged) he repeatedly applied for it. On the 2nd August, 1895, he wrote the following letter to the defendants:

“I think it is now time you paid me my brokerage, seeing that the late Mr. Pestonji Patel (the purchaser) paid you five (sic) Bank of Bombay shares as a deposit.

“You must know that as soon as the contract is finished, and deposit paid, I am entitled to my brokerage.”

The defendants apparently abandoned the idea of enforcing the contract and at the end of the year they returned to the Patel family two of the Bank of Bombay shares. The third they sold for Rs. 1,800, in order (as they stated) to reimburse themselves for expenses which they had incurred in the transaction. Before they had returned the share, however, the plaintiff had written the following letter to the defendant:

22 B. 540.

"11th December, 1895.

Dear Mr. Khote,—I met Mr. Patel's uncle yesterday. He wants you to hasten to return the shares. I informed him that whatever was done, my commission would be deducted first.

Therefore I must ask you not to part with the shares until my commission is paid. I performed my part and I think you should square up now. I do not see why you should delay when you have the value in hand. Awaiting your reply."

The plaintiff now sued to recover Rs. 1,500 as brokerage.

Russell, for defendants.—The plaintiff is not entitled to any brokerage. The letter of 3rd January employing him clearly states that the brokerage is to be paid on receipt of the purchase-money. The defendants' object in making that arrangement was to secure a solvent purchaser. The purchaser procured by the plaintiff was not solvent and the purchase-money was never paid. The receipt of the purchase-money by the defendants was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to demand his brokerage.

Kirkpatrick, for the plaintiff.—A broker does not ordinarily guarantee the completion of the contract which he makes for his principal. His work is done when the contract is made. The plaintiff did what he agreed to do, and the defendants accepted the purchaser he found. He could not enforce the contract. The defendants could have enforced it, but apparently they did not try. They have lost their money by their own default. The plaintiff ought not to suffer. In any case the plaintiff was entitled to be paid his brokerage out of the shares deposited by the purchasers. The defendants instead of insisting on the purchase-money consented to receive them in place of it, i.e., as security for it. He cited Fisher v. Drewett (1); Pricket v. Badger (2); Green v. Lucas (3); Rimmer v. Knowles (4); Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Cuwerji Hirji (5).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The plaintiff sues to recover brokerage on the sale of a certain agency commission belonging to the defendants. It appears that on 29th December, 1894, the defendants wrote to Mr. Stokes, asking him to find a purchaser, and said as follows:—"As regards your bonus or brokerage it would be much better if you made your demand, which, if deemed reasonable, I shall accept." Some reply is stated to have been written, but the defendants' papers are missing and plaintiff has no copy and it is [545] evident from the terms of the next letter that the amount of the brokerage was proposed in conversation. On the 3rd January the defendants sent a letter to the plaintiff, in which they wrote as follows:

"With reference to our talk re the sale of our shares in the agency commission of the New Dholera Cotton Press and Spinning Company, Limited, we agree to let you have, as bonus or brokerage, the sum of Rs. 1,500 only if you succeed in selling a twelve-annas' share in the commission for shares of the value of Rs. 42,000 of the said company at par value. If not, you may sell a six-annas' share in the said commission for shares of the said company of the value of Rs. 22,000 at par value, for which we shall be glad to let you have Rs. 750 for your trouble. money, and that this transaction is to be completed within a fortnight from date."

Subsequently terms were arranged with one Pestonji Patel, who stipulated for four or five months for payment in his letter of the 18th January. On the 21st January, Pestonji signed a "bought note" for 74 shares for which payment was to be made on or before four or five months at his option. A "sold note" in similar terms was presented to the defendant, but was not signed owing to the necessity of consulting certain directors. On 30th January, the defendants wrote to ask who Pestonji D. Patel and others were; and on the same day the plaintiff wrote to say that the "others" were Pestonji's brother Jamsetji.

On 31st defendants wrote agreeing to sell on the following conditions to Messrs. Pestonji and Jamsetji:—

1. That they are to get a ten-annas' share in the agency commission of the company on their taking up 74 shares of the aforesaid company of Rs. 500 each at par value, their Mr. Ratilal retaining the remaining six-annas' share.

2. That a sum of Rs. 10,000 should be paid immediately down in cash as earnest-money, the balance of the purchase-money, namely, Rs. 27,000, to be paid within four months from date whereon interest is to run in the meanwhile at Rs. 6 per cent., but at the same time that it should be open to Messrs. Patel to pay it up within that period."

There were also certain other conditions which for the purposes of this case it is not necessary to recapitulate.

On the 1st February the plaintiff wrote to the defendants that Messrs. Pestonji and Jamsetji Patel agreed to take twelve annas in eighty shares, and were ready "to pay cash money on the [546] completion of the agreement and pukka transfer of the shares. On the same day this proposal was accepted by the defendants.

After this, difficulties arose. The Patels were unable to pay the deposit of Rs. 10,000, and Pestonji, through his solicitors, gave three Bank of Bombay shares as security for his performance of the contract. About May Pestonji died. Then the defendants, apparently under some pressure, returned two of the Bank shares to Pestonji's grandmother, who claimed them and sold one for Rs. 1,300, out of which they re-imburse the expenses to which they had been put. The shares, it may be explained, stood in the grandmother's name, but were received by the defendants with blank transfer papers signed by her.

What the arrangements were about the payment of brokerage to Mr. Stokes it is difficult to say. The letter of the 3rd January, 1895, was clear. If that arrangement had held good, his brokerage was made conditional on the payment of the money by the purchaser. But it was argued, reasonably enough on his behalf, that the extension of time given for payment for the purchase-money necessarily implied some modification of this provision. Mr. Stokes says that Mr. Khote had verbally promised to pay the brokerage when the deposit of Rs. 10,000 was received, but apparently he thought himself entitled to the amount as soon as the agreement with the Patels was negotiated. On the other hand, Mr. Khote says he only promised to pay a proportionate part of the brokerage on Rs. 10,000 being received, and he considered that as the Patels never carried out their agreement, the plaintiff was not entitled to anything. It is very difficult to say, for certain, that any agreement on the subject was come to, or that the matter was ever discussed with any precision. No reference to such discussion is mentioned in letters K or L in which plaintiff...

claimed payment. In the circumstances I think the plaintiff can only recover a quantum meruit, there being no precise agreement as to the time when his brokerage was to be paid. Whether the condition about payment was inserted in the defendants' letter of 3rd January in special reference to Patel as stated by the defendants, or without such special reference as contended on behalf of the plaintiff, is not very material. That condition, I think, clearly showed that the defendants only intended to pay brokerage in case a solvent purchaser was procured.

Mr. Kirkpatrick relied on the cases of Prickett v. Badger (1), Rimmer v. Kewles (2), Green v. Lucas (3), Fisher v. Drewett (4) to show that, in the words of Lord Justice Bramwell in Fisher v. Drewett, "the current of modern opinion is to the effect that those who bargain, to receive commission for introductions have a right to their commission as soon as they have completed their part of the bargain, irrespective of what may take place subsequently between the parties." But, after all, neither this case nor the others referred to above—any more than the case of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Curverji (5)—is really in point. If the bargain is merely that the broker is to introduce the purchaser, and effect an agreement between him and the seller, it is clear that he is entitled to be paid when his part of the transaction is performed. But in each case I think the nature of the contract must be carefully considered, and if part of the business for which the broker is employed is to find a solvent purchaser, he will not, I think, be entitled to his brokerage till he has done so.

Now in the present case it seems that the stipulation in the letter of the 3rd January, that the brokerage was only to be paid when the money had been received, governed the whole of the subsequent dealings between the parties, and showed that the broker to the extent of his brokerage was to be answerable for the solvency of the purchaser. And I think that even when the terms of the sale were modified, and payment was deferred, Mr. Stokes, if he wished to get rid of this liability, ought to have got the matter clearly settled. Instead of this it is evident that nothing was definitely settled, and it was left in doubt whether he was to be paid in full or proportionately when the deposit of Rs. 10,000 was made. Doubtless if the contract with the Patels had fallen through, as in Prickett v. Badger and Green v. Lucas and Fisher v. Drewett, through the default of the defendants, the plaintiff would have had a strong case for the recovery of the whole of his commission; but here this was not the case. It is clear that the defendants were anxious and willing to sell, and their failure to do so was due not to their own but to the default of the purchaser introduced by the plaintiff. It was said they ought to have sued Pestonji or his legal representatives, but the defendant Khote says that he knew it was useless to do so, and there is no evidence to contradict him. Whatever the agreement between the defendants and Stokes was, it cannot be suggested that it in any way required them to involve themselves in litigation, possibly of a hopeless nature.

Then it was urged that at any rate they ought not to have surrendered the two Bank shares deposited with them. There is, I think, force in this contention. The Patels had deposited them as security for the fulfilment of their contract, and the circumstances under which they were surrendered to the grandmother have not been shown. The legal necessity for this surrender was not apparently sufficient to prevent the defendants insisting on retaining one share for their own expenses; and if they were entitled to do so I cannot see why they were not equally entitled to keep the other two. The Patels had handed them over to them as security for the performance of their contract with the grandmother's authority to transfer signed in blank, and it is doubtful whether she was legally entitled to have them back. In the absence of all evidence as to how Pestonji got the shares from her, I think the presumption is that the defendants were, at law, entitled to retain them, having obtained possession bona fide, and to the extent of the value of these shares the purchasers were solvent. (Vide Contract Act, s. 108.) To that extent, then, the plaintiff seems entitled to his remuneration of 5 per cent. not on the whole bargain, but on the portion of it which the defendants could have enforced against the purchasers. The value of these three shares may be set down at Rs. 3,900, as one of them was sold for Rs. 1,300. There will be a decree for plaintiff for Rs. 195. Both parties being equally responsible for the vagueness of the contract, and neither party being, in my opinion, wholly right about it, I make no order as to costs.

[549] CRIMINAL REVISION.
Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IMPERATRIX v. SADASHIV NARAYAN JOSHI.* [23rd July, 1896.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 525, 497—Transfer of case—Notice to accused—Bail—Order admitting to bail not revisable by District Magistrate—Practice.

An order under s. 525 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) transferring a case for inquiry or trial from one Magistrate to another ought not to be made without notice to the accused.

An order admitting an accused person to bail made by a Magistrate is not revisable by a District Magistrate. If the latter considers the order wrong, he can refer it to the High Court.

APPLICATION for revision under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The petitioner was charged with theft of property in a dwelling-house, and was sent up by the police to the First Class Magistrate at Poona. An application was made to the Magistrate to release him on bail on the grounds (inter alia) that he was a "man of a respectable family, and a man of riches, and it was not possible that he would commit theft," and also that the evidence would clearly exonerate him from the charge. The Magistrate under s. 497 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) made an order admitting him to bail.

* Application for Revision No. 127 of 1896.
This order being brought to the notice of the District Magistrate, he, without giving any notice to the accused, transferred the case from the Court of the First Class Magistrate to that of the City Magistrate, recording the following order:

"The District Magistrate is of opinion that the reasons given in the Magistrate, First Class's order, dated 18th June, 1896, under s. 497, Criminal Procedure Code, do not justify the release of the accused on bail, and that the Magistrate's action shows a tendency to treat the accused with undue leniency."

The petitioner applied to the High Court to set aside this order.

Daji Abaji Khare and Vinayak Vishnu Ranade, for the petitioner.—They referred to In the matter of Ratanji Premji (1); Imperatrix v. Mulubhai Bavaji (2).

[550] Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.—The District Magistrate had authority to transfer the case at any stage under s. 528 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). If the order is bad for want of notice to the accused, the District Magistrate should be directed to rehear the matter after giving notice, as was done in the case of Re Petition of Mahadu Sadashiv (3).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The District Magistrate transferred this case under s. 528 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) from the Magistrate, First Class, to the Court of the City Magistrate for the following recorded reasons:—"The District Magistrate is of opinion that the reasons given in the Magistrate, First Class's order, dated 18th June, 1896, under s. 497, Criminal Procedure Code, do not justify the release of the accused on bail, and that the Magistrate's action shows a tendency to treat the accused with undue leniency." We reverse the order of transfer because.

1. It was passed apparently ex proprio motu, and certainly without any notice being given to the accused, and it is, therefore, illegal: see In the matter of Ratanji Premji (1); Imperatrix v. Mulubhai Bavaji (2); In the matter of Teacotta Shekdar (4).

2. The discretionary power vested in a Magistrate by s. 497 of the Code was not revisable by the District Magistrate. If the District Magistrate considered the order wrong, he could have referred it to this Court. He ought not to have made a transfer the mode of giving effect to his opinion that the order was wrong.

It is a ground of transfer that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in a Court, but no authority has been shown to us to the effect that a transfer is justified on the part of the Crown because the Magistrate's action in exercising a jurisdiction vested in him by law, viz., releasing an accused person on bail, shows a tendency to treat the accused with undue leniency.

We may express a hope that Magistrates will be always lenient to accused persons, at any rate until they are convicted.

Order reversed.

[551] APPELLATE CIVIL—FULL BENCH.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Ranade, Mr. Justice Fulton and Mr. Justice Hosking.

VASUDEO VISHNU MANOHAR (Original Defendant), Appellant v. RAMCHANDRA VINAYAK MODAK (Original Plaintiff), Respondent. * [18th November, 1896.]

Hindu law—Adoption—Adoption by widow of predeceased son of owner after the estate had vested in the daughters of the deceased owner—Assent of a minor daughter in whom the estate had vested to the adoption—Ratification by the minor on attaining years of discretion—Adoption invalid—Acquiescence not equivalent to consent.

On the death of one Vishnu his estate vested in his two daughters, one of whom was a minor. Six months after Vishnu’s death his daughter-in-law Savitri (widow of his predeceased son) adopted the plaintiff. It was alleged that the daughters consented to the adoption.

Held, that the adoption was invalid, as the minor daughter could not give such a consent to it as would operate to divest her of her estate.

Per Fulton and Hosking, J.J.—Subsequent assent to an adoption cannot give it validity if it was invalid when made.

Per Ranade, J.—The adoption of the plaintiff was invalid for the double reason that Savitri had no power to adopt, as she was not the widow of the last male holder, and the nearest heiress, the daughter of the deceased Vishnu, were not proved to have given their consent to the divesting of the estate which had come to them by inheritance, in favour of Savitri or the plaintiff.

Mere presence at the ceremony and the absence of any objection might imply acquiescence, but mere acquiescence is not equivalent to consent.

APPEAL under s. 15 of the Amended Letters Patent against the decision of the Division Bench confirming the decree of T. Walker, Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri.

The plaintiff claimed to recover certain property which originally belonged to one Vishnu Modak, who died in 1874. He alleged that he had been validly adopted by Savitri, the widow of Vishnu’s predeceased son, and in virtue of that adoption he claimed the property.

[552] The facts appear from the following table:—

Vishnu at his death in 1874 left only two daughters, Dwarki and Godi (a minor), and a daughter-in-law, Savitri, the widow of his predeceased son Vinayak. The plaintiff was adopted by Savitri after Vishnu’s death.

The defendant pleaded that the adoption was invalid, having been made by an untensured widow without the consent of the other members of the family, and that the right to the property in suit had passed to, and was vested in, other persons prior to the plaintiff’s adoption.

* Appeal No. 97 of 1896 under the Letters Patent.
The Subordinate Judge rejected the claim.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri found that the plaintiff was Vinayak’s adopted son and succeeded both to his property and to Vishnu’s. He, therefore, reversed the decree and allowed the claim.

The defendant having preferred a second appeal, the High Court after hearing arguments sent down the following issue for a finding:—

"Is plaintiff the adopted son of Vinayak and entitled, as such, to inherit the property of Vishnu?"

The Judge (M. P. Khareghat) found that the plaintiff was the adopted son of Vinayak and that he was entitled to inherit the property of Vishnu.
He further held that the adoption took place with the consent of Dwaraki and Godi, the latter of whom ratified her act after she attained majority.

The above finding having been certified, the case came on for argument before the Division Bench consisting of Parsons and Candy, JJ.

Daji A. Khare appeared for the appellant (defendant).
Ganesh K. Deshmukh appeared for the respondent (plaintiff).

[553] Parsons, J.—I accept the finding of the lower Court that Dwaraki and Godi consented to the adoption. It is one of fact, and no illegality has been shown to justify interference.

As the widow had not attained puberty, tonsure would not be required.

The only other objection raised to the validity of the adoption rests on the proposition that Savitri, as the widow of Vinayak, the predeceased son of Vishnu, had no power to adopt after the death of Vishnu and the vesting of the estate in Dwaraki and Godi. As, however, Dwaraki and Godi consented to the adoption and to the divesting of their inheritance, I consider that objection unsound. It is directly contrary to our recent decision in Babu Anaji v. Ratnaji (1). As my colleague differs, the decree appealed from is confirmed under s. 575 of the Code with costs.

Candy, J.—The question is whether plaintiff’s adoption was valid.
In my opinion it was not.

At Vishnu’s death the estate had vested by inheritance in Dwaraki and Godi. Vinayak was not the last male holder. The adoption was not made by the widow of any previous holder. Vinayak was not a holder at all. "Under no other circumstances will an adoption made to one person divest the estate of any one who has taken that estate as heir of another person"—Mayne’s Hindu Law, s. 179, p. 210 (6th Ed.). This is the principle on which the decision of this Court was given in Krishnarav v. Shankarav (2) and in Shri Dharmidhar v. Chinto (3). In Babu Anaji v. Ratnaji (1) a contrary decision would appear to have been given.
In that case the learned Judges ruled that "for the purposes of inheritance the adoption may be considered as relating back to the death of the adoptive father, divesting all estates which have during the intermediate period become vested as it were conditionally in another. See Raje Vyankatrao v. Jayavantrao (4); Mayne’s Hindu Law, s. 171." I cannot find the words underlined in the case quoted. Mr. Mayne’s remarks in s. 171 must be read with those in the subsequent paragraphs.

[564] With regard to "the assent of those capable of giving the validating assent" it must be remembered that the need of the kinsmen’s sanction does not arise from their right in the property, but from their family relations to the widow (see the authorities collected at p. 128 of

---

I.L.R., 15 Bom.). Here the assent of the two girls Dwarki and Godi would not confer validity on an adoption which was otherwise invalid. From the moment that Vishnu died, and his estate was vested in his daughters, the right of his daughter-in-law, Savitri, to adopt for the purposes of inheritance was at an end. See judgment of West, J., in Keshav v. Govind (1) and Shri Dharnidhar v. Chinto quoted above. What would have been the position of the parties had Savitri adopted plaintiff before Vishnu’s death and with his assent as head of the family, it is unnecessary to enquire. I cannot hold the adoption of the plaintiff to be valid without going contrary to the decisions in Krishnarav v. Shankarrav (2) and Shri Dharnidhar v. Chinto (3) and the numerous authorities quoted in those two cases. As my learned colleague holds that the adoption was valid, and would accordingly confirm the decree of the lower appellate Court, that decree will stand.

The Judges having thus differed, and the decree of the Assistant Judge having been confirmed under s. 575 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the defendant appealed under s. 15 of the Amended Letters Patent.

Daji A. Khare, for the appellant (defendant).—The adoption was invalid ab initio, because the authority of Vinayak’s widow to adopt came to an end after Vishnu’s death, and the daughters could not by their consent give authority to adopt. After Vishnu’s death the estate vested in his daughters, and when the estate vests in another person, the power of a widow to adopt comes to an end.

Ganesh K. Deshmukh, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The finding of the Judge as to the consent of Dwarki and Godi to our adoption is a finding of fact. Godi was at the time of the adoption a minor, but she never disputed the adoption after attaining majority. Estoppel applies to minors. An estate (555) although vested can be divested in three ways. See Mayne’s Hindu Law, para. 179.

The cases referred to in the following judgments were cited and discussed during the argument.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—I am of opinion that the adoption of the plaintiff by Savitri in this case was invalid upon the ground that Godi, in whom jointly with Dwarki the estate was vested, was a minor at its date and could not for that reason give such a consent to it as would operate to divest her of her estate or as a waiver of it in favour of the boy adopted by Savitri. Such a consent, whatever view of the law upon this subject may be taken, was, I think, clearly necessary to validate the adoption. The Acting District Judge was of opinion that though Godi could not by reason of her minority validly consent to the adoption, yet she subsequently ratified it by her conduct; but the adoption must, in my opinion, have been either valid or invalid at the time when it took place, and its validity cannot depend upon the subsequent action of Godi: see West and Bübler, p. 1099.

In this view it becomes unnecessary for me to express an opinion in this appeal between the conflicting views, which the learned Judges in the Division Court expressed, upon the effect which the consent of the person, in whom the estate is vested in the case of a divided family, has in validating what would otherwise be an invalid adoption, or as to whether the case of Babu Anaji v. Ratnoji (1) following Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (2) was rightly decided. When that decision was arrived at, the case of Annammah v. Mabbu (3) was not brought to our notice, nor was I aware of the dictum of the Court in Shri Dharmidhar v. Chiento (4) I shall, therefore, feel at liberty to consider the principle of that decision when it again arises and calls for determination. I cannot, however, as at present advised, bring myself to consider that the question involved in it has been impliedly decided by the Privy Council, or that the decision in Babu Anaji v. Ratnoji (supra) is at variance with any judgment of their Lordships. So far as I am aware, their [556] Lordships have not considered or expressed an opinion upon the question: see Kally Prosanno v. Gocool Chunder (5). The result, however, is that in my opinion the appeal in this case should be allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court reversed, and the plaintiff’s suit dismissed with costs throughout on the plaintiff.

RANADKE, J.—I agree with Mr. Justice Candy in holding that the adoption of the respondent plaintiff is invalid for the double reason that Savitri had no power to adopt, as she was not the widow of the last male holder, and the nearest heirs, the daughters of the deceased Vishnu, are not proved to have given their consent to the divesting of the estate which had come to them by inheritance in favour of Savitri or the respondent. Savitri, as the widow of a predeceased son of Vishnu, had no right to the property of Vishnu, which devolved on Vishnu’s daughters as his only heirs. At the time when the adoption took place six months after Vishnu’s death, his property had become vested in his daughters as his sole heirs, and Savitri had only a right to maintenance. Her adoption of the respondent-plaintiff could not, therefore, confer on the plaintiff any right to the property of the last male holder. The principle of this decision was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Musummat Boobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore (6) and has been affirmed by their Lordships in Padmakumari Debi v. Court of Wards (7) and Thayammal v. Venkatarama (8). The Madras High Court followed this same principle in Annammah v. Mabbu (3). In our own Presidency, this same view has been given effect to by a series of rulings commencing with Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (2); Ramji v. Ghamaum (9); Kheshau v. Govind (10); Chandra v. Gojarabai (11); Krishnarav v. Shankarav (12).

The facts of the case reported in Gayabai v. Shridharacharya (13) are exactly in point, for there, as here, it was held that if the [557] last male holder was separated from his brothers, his daughters would succeed as heirs, and the widow of a predeceased son of the last male holder could not make a valid adoption without the consent of the daughters.

This brings us to the consideration of the second question, whether the daughters Dwarki and Godi gave their consent in the present case. One of the daughters was only twelve years old, and the other twenty-five, and they were present on the occasion of the adoption. The Court of first instance held that such presence would not amount to consent. The lower Court of appeal at first refused to go into this question, as the original defendants were strangers, and did not claim under any of the alleged heirs.

(10) 9 B. 94. (11) 14 B. 463. (12) 17 B. 164.
(13) P.J. (1881), p. 145.
On remand from this Court, it inquired into this issue, and found that though their consent was never personally taken at any time, yet as they did not object at any time, and are shown to have taken part in the ceremony, this was proof of their substantial consent to the adoption. The District Judge has relied chiefly on the authority of the ruling in Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (1), where consent was held to be proved. The party giving her consent was a major, and had herself taken part in celebrating and proclaiming the adoption. This can hardly be asserted of the two daughters in the present case, one of whom was admittedly a child twelve years old. Mere presence at the ceremony, and the absence of any objection, might imply an acquiescence, but it has been ruled that mere acquiescence is not equivalent to consent—Ramamani Ammal v. Kulanthai Natchear (2) and Rungama v. Atchama (3).

Under these circumstances the finding of the lower Court of appeal, that the daughters must be held to have consented, cannot be accepted as a binding adjudication of fact. On the whole, I feel satisfied that the adoption in this case was void for want of legal power in the adoptive mother Savitri to make a valid adoption, and that this defect was not cured by the consent of the real heirs.

FULTON, J.—As Godi was only twelve at the time of the adoption she was. I think, incompetent to give an assent thereto such [558] as to satisfy the requirements of justice alluded to in Mr. Justice Melvill’s judgment in Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (1). The adoption, therefore, cannot be upheld having regard to the decision in Gayabai v. Shridharacharya (4), for there seems no authority for holding that subsequent assent can give validity to an adoption which was not valid when made. It is unnecessary, then, to discuss the question whether, after the estate has passed by inheritance to a daughter or other heir of the last made holder, the widow of a predeceased co-parcer can adopt to her husband with the assent of the heir in whom the estate has vested.

I think, therefore, the decree of the Assistant Judge and the Division Bench must be reversed and the claim rejected with costs on plaintiff throughout.

HOSKING, J.—I agree in holding the adoption invalid on the grounds that Godi being at the time only twelve years of age was unable to give such an assent as would bind her, and that the adoption being ab initio invalid could not be made valid by any subsequent ratification by Godi on attaining years of discretion.

Accordingly I concur in reversing the decree of the Division Bench.

Decree reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL—FULL BENCH.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Parsons, Mr. Justice Ranade, Mr. Justice Fullon and Mr. Justice Hosking.

RAMCHANDRA BHAGAVAN (Original Defendant), Appellant v. MULJI NANABHAI (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.*

[24th November, 1896.]

Hindu law—Widow—Adoption—Motive—Inquiry as to motives in making adoption irrelevant.

Held by a Full Bench (Hosking, J., dissenting) that in the Bombay Presidency, a widow having the power to adopt, and a religious benefit being caused to her deceased husband by the adoption, any discussion of her motives in making the adoption is irrelevant.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Khan Saheb Nowroji Byramji, Subordinate Judge of Umreth.

Suit by a reversioner to set aside an adoption alleged to be made by a widow from improper motives, and to recover possession of property.

The plaintiff was the nearest reversionary heir of one Bhagavanbhai Naranji who died in the year 1836. Bhagavanbhai left a widow Bai Harkore and a minor son Motilal, the latter of whom died in 1839 while still a minor. Shortly after Motilal’s death the widow Bai Harkore quarrelled with the plaintiff and gave the management of her affairs to her own relatives. Litigation took place between her and the plaintiff in which the plaintiff was successful. In March, 1888, she adopted the defendant and on the 12th July, 1888, she died.

In March, 1894, the plaintiff filed this suit against the defendant to set aside his adoption and to recover the property to which he had succeeded on Bai Harkore’s death. The ground on which the plaintiff sought to invalidate the adoption was that “it was made maliciously, wrongfully and in anger with the intent to injure the rights of the plaintiff and to deprive him of his lawful inheritance.”

The Subordinate Judge allowed the claim, holding that the adoption had been made from improper motives.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge confirmed the decree.

The defendant having preferred a second appeal to the High Court, it came on for hearing before a Division Bench consisting of Farran, C.J., and Parsons, J., who referred the matter to a Full Bench. The following is the referring judgment:

FARRAN, C.J.—The plaintiff, as the next reversionary heir of Bhagavanbhai, and of his infant son Motilal after the death of Bai Harkore, widow of Bhagavanbhai, sued to recover possession of a house and room at Umreth from the defendant Ramchandra, the adopted son of Bai Harkore, and to have the adoption of the latter declared invalid and set aside.

Bai Harkore died on the 12th July, 1888. The suit was brought on the 3rd March, 1894. The adopted son had thus been nearly six years in possession of the property after the death of Bai Harkore and during that time had been recognised by the caste as the son of Bhagavanbhai.

* Second Appeal, No. 273 of 1896.
There was no ground for disputing the factum of the adoption, or that the requisite ceremonies to give it full efficacy had been performed, and both the lower Courts have so found. The ground on which the plaintiff sought to invalidate the adoption was that "it was made maliciously, wrongfully, and in anger with the intent to injure the rights of the plaintiff and to deprive him of his lawful inheritance." It has to be determined, in second appeal, whether the plaintiff is entitled to set aside the adoption and to recover the property.

The Subordinate Judge found the following facts which the District Judge has adopted as the basis of his judgment. Bhagavanbhai died in the year 1836, leaving his widow Bai Harkore and a minor son Motilal, who died still a minor about three years after his father. Soon after Motilal’s death Bai Harkore became on unfriendly terms with the plaintiff, her husband’s cousin and the next heir Pranshankar. Bai Harkore’s affairs were thenceforth managed by her relations Surajram Sanmukh and Ganpat Sanmukh, the defendant’s natural father and uncle respectively, both of whom resided with her. On the 24th of October, 1873, Bai Harkore executed a mortgage in favour of Sanmukh, and on the 24th August, 1875, she made a will in favour of Surajram and Ganpat. The plaintiff and Pranshankar filed a suit in 1876 to have the mortgage and will declared invalid and not binding on the reversionary heirs of Bhagavanbhai. The plaintiff obtained a decree in that suit in their favour. It was confirmed, in second appeal, on the 31st January, 1881.

On the 5th March, 1888, Bai Harkore adopted the defendant Ramchandra, the son of Surajram. A distant relative of Bhagavanbhai and Ravasbhankar, the son of Pranshankar, were present at the adoption, and the latter signed the deed of adoption. The Subordinate Judge thinks that he could not have understood the full significance of his action. There were sons of other cousins of Bhagavanbhai from amongst whom Bai Harkore could have adopted a son. Bai Harkore died about four months after the adoption. She was a very old woman and infirm, but mentally capable of adopting a son. From these facts the Subordinate Judge drew the conclusion which he states in the following words:

"It is, therefore, proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that Bai Harkore had owed an unquenchable grudge against the plaintiff since 1839 until she died, that she was all this time under the influence of her own relatives, who were impecunious, who attended upon her and nursed her, and who were maintained by her, and her sole aim in the latter part of her old age was to reward and benefit her own relatives, and that on her previous attempts towards that having failed, she took a boy of their own family in adoption only four months before she died in furtherance of her original motive."

The plaintiff must be, therefore, held to have succeeded on clear evidence in discharging the heavy burden which lay on him in proving that the adoption in question was made with the sole object of benefiting her own relatives and defeating the interest of the plaintiff, and that she was not inspired in the performance of the act by the sense of the paramount religious duty of benefiting her husband’s soul.”

On the issues he found that the defendant’s adoption was invalidated by reason of its having been made maliciously and in anger. The District Judge in appeal laid down only one issue—"Is it proved that the adoption of the defendant was made capriciously and maliciously"—which he found in the affirmative. It considerably detracts from the value of his finding that he has assumed as the basis of it that there was no religious necessity for Bai Harkore’s adopting a son. He says: "Bai Harkore’s husband died in A.D. 1836. He left a minor son, who was competent to perform all the religious ceremonies connected with the obsequies of his deceased father. No religious necessity can be shown why Bai Harkore should at any time after her husband's death adopt a son to him." This undoubtedly would have been so if the son had reached majority and acquired full ceremonial competency, but as he did not acquire this competency the religious duty of Bai Harkore to adopt a son still we think continued. This is indeed one of the principal grounds upon which the widow of a husband who has left a son who dies subsequently without heirs in the lifetime of the widow is allowed to adopt to her husband—Goudappas v. Girimallappa (1). The finding, however, remains, and the important question which it raises calls for determination.

We agree with the view taken in Mahableshvar v. Durgabai (2) notwithstanding that this Court has in several cases assumed that the Courts are at liberty to consider the motives of a widow in making an adoption, there has been no decision upon the point and the question is still open. We ourselves incline to the opinion that it ought to be held that the presumption that a widow has acted from a due sense of her religious duty where such exists ought to be deemed an irrebuttable presumption. It appears to us to be most dangerous to allow the right to property to depend upon the view which civil Courts may take of the motives which operate upon the mind of a Hindu lady making an adoption. From the same facts different Courts may and often do draw the most opposite inferences. In the present case the facts which we have set out might lead rather to the inference that the adopting mother selected the boy to be adopted on account of her affection towards the family from which she chose him than to the conclusion that she adopted him out of a feeling of ill-will towards the plaintiff, the evidence of which is drawn from a written statement affirmed by her about seven years before the adoption, which rather shows that she considered the plaintiff to be unfriendly to her than that she was at enmity with him. That the lady had not her religious duty in view there can be no positive proof.

The question is so important having regard to the frequency with which it has of late arisen, and the contrary view to that to which our opinion inclines has been so frequently assumed in the judgments of this Court, that we consider that the matter ought to be considered by a Full Bench.

We, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the following questions:—

1. Whether (in this Presidency) in the case of a widow having the power to adopt and a religious benefit being caused to her deceased husband by the adoption, any discussion of the adopting widow's motives in making the adoption is not irrelevant?

2. Whether if such an adoption can be referred to proper religious motives, the Courts ought not to presume that the widow performed the ceremony of adoption from such motives?

The reference was argued before a Full Bench consisting of Farrier C. J., and Parsons, Ranade, Fulton and Hosking, JJ.

Gokuldas K. Parekh, for the appellant (defendant).—The Court cannot inquire into the motives of a widow in making an adoption. In all cases of adoption, the husband receives the spiritual benefit of the adoption and, therefore, the question of motive is immaterial. The text books have nowhere laid down that an adoption should be held illegal, because the motive of the widow in making the adoption was improper. Unless a widow is specially prohibited from making an adoption, she has the right to adopt in this Presidency. By adoption as by marriage a person not born in the family is brought into it. A marriage cannot be set aside, or hold invalid, because of the motives of the parents of the bride or bridegroom. So neither can an adoption. It would be impossible to ascertain the motives of an adopting widow. It would be dangerous to make the validity of an adoption depend upon such considerations—Mahabaleshwar v. Durgabai (1); Bhimawa v. Sanyava (2); Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal (3).

(1) 19 B. 331 (337).
(2) 22 B. 199.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The question raised in this case has never been considered by the Courts. It was incidentally raised in The Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga (4). No doubt where kinsmen consent to an adoption, the motives of the widow in adopting need not be considered. But a widow may not act from mere caprice or from other improper motive. For instance she should not adopt a stranger if a boy in the husband’s family is available for adoption. A widow can adopt a stranger only when there is no kinsman available—West and Bühler, pp. 974, 975, 1018 to 1022; Mandlik’s Hindu Law, p. 57; Bhagubai v. [564] Kalo Venkaji(5); Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (6); Narayan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (7); Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (8); Bhagwandas v. Rajmal (9); Mahabaleshwar Fondba v. Durgabai(1); Ramji v. Ghantai(10); Vithoba v. Basu (11); Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal (12).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—I have had an opportunity of reading the several judgments which my learned colleagues are about to deliver, and I agree with the majority of them that the first question referred for our opinion should be answered in the affirmative. I adhere to the view expressed in Mahabaleshwar v. Durgabai (1) that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has left the question open in Rajah Vellanki Venkata v. Venkata Rama (13) and consider that it is incumbent upon us now to solve it for this Presidency. After the best consideration which I have been able to give to the question, and it has occasioned me much thought, I have come to the conclusion above expressed.

The doubt which I have mainly felt is whether in so deciding we are not running counter to an assumption so long and consistently made in the judgments of this Court as to have become an integral part of the law which we are called upon to administer. That doubt is, however, considerably lessened, if not entirely removed, by a consideration of the circumstance referred to in the judgment of my learned colleague Mr. Justice Fulton that in no case (for I do not consider Bhagubai v. Kalo Venkaji(5) to be an exception) has an adoption made by a widow been successfully impeached in this Court on the ground of its having been made capriciously and from a corrupt motive. The Court has, it appears to me, felt that the ascertainment of the exact motives which actuate a Hindu lady in making an adoption is beyond its ken, and being, therefore, unable to find in the affirmative on the issue as to caprice, has always been compelled to affirm.

the validity of adoptions assailed on that ground. When we turn to the case of Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (1), the judgment [565] in which forms the basis upon which the above assumption is founded, we see that neither in the texts nor in the answers of the Shastris nor in the judicial precedents upon which that judgment rests is it suggested that it is the duty of the Court to inquire into the motives which actuate a Hindu lady when she adopts a son to continue the line of her husband in a divided family. The assumption made in the judgment, that such a duty devolves upon the Courts, rests entirely upon the oft-quoted passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in the Ramnad case which their Lordships have commented on and explained in Rajah Vellanki v. Venkata Rama, and, but for the passage, presumably would not have found its way into it. Under these circumstances I feel that we ought not to treat that assumption as law binding upon the Court. For the rest I concur in the judgments which my colleagues who agree with me are about to deliver and generally for the reasons given by them, to which I feel that I cannot usefully add anything. To hold otherwise would, I think, in effect be to substitute in this Presidency the approval of the Court of an adoption, for the assent of kinsmen required in the Madras Presidency to its validity, for which, I think, no warrant exists.

PARSONS, J.—I answer the first question in the affirmative. In the case of Sri Raghunadha v. Sri Broso Kishore (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "It is impossible not to see that there are grave social objections to making the succession of property—and it may be in the case of collateral succession...the rights of parties in actual possession—dependent on the caprice of a woman subject to all the pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over, property. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of the Courts to keep the power of adopting strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it." We have, therefore, to see how far the law has limited the power of a widow in a divided family to adopt. The case of a widow who has the express permission of her husband to adopt presents no difficulty. The case above [566] cited is an authority showing that she can adopt whomsoever she pleases from among those capable by Hindu law of being adopted. In cases where there is no express permission given to adopt, but no actual prohibition or restriction of the exercise of the right placed on it by the husband, the law as laid down by the Courts on this side of India (differing no doubt from that in force elsewhere) is that she may adopt whomsoever she chooses and that she does not need to obtain the assent of her husband's kinsmen to her adoption; but the Judges have added a proviso that the act of adoption must be done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive. It is the use of these last words which has caused the present reference. Granting the truth of the saying as a precept of morality, the point is, Are the Courts to be the Judges of her motives? I think not, and I can find no authority for the proposition that a Court can ever question the motives of a person who does an act that he has an absolute right to do. The power of a widow to adopt at all must be ascribed to the fact that her husband has either expressly or impliedly allowed her to adopt. If he has not exercised his right either of prohibition or restriction, then it seems to me to follow necessarily that she is left free and unfettered to exercise her own choice in the matter. I can make no difference between permission by express terms and permission by implication; in either case there is permission and the result is the same. Whenever the widow has this power to adopt, any enquiry into her motives must be irrelevant, for her action is that of a person who does what she has the right to do. Where, however, she has not this full power, but is obliged to obtain the consent of other persons to her action, the case seems to me to be very different. Even in such a case, however, I conceive, motives would be quite irrelevant if the consent of all the persons whose consent was requisite had been obtained. The point only arises where the consent of some has been obtained, and the question is whether that consent is binding on the others. In such a case the Privy Council say: "There should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and [667] neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive," and again "there should be such proof of assent on the part of the sapindas as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives, or in order to defeat the interest of this and that sapinda, but upon a fair consideration by what may be called a family council, of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband" —Rajah Vellanki v. Venkata Rama (1). These rulings can only apply to the case of an adoption by a widow who is obliged to obtain the assent of her husband’s kinsmen, but who has obtained the assent of some one or more and not of all of them. In such a case the motives of the assenting kinsman or kinsmen would be relevant and, if fraudulent, would invalidate the adoption. See Karunabadi Ganesa v. Gopala Ratnamaiyar (2). They cannot be applicable to the case where no consent of kinsmen is required, and where no family council need be called or consulted. I think, therefore, that the learned Judges of this Court wrongly applied the language of the Privy Council in the Ramnad case to the case of a widow who had in herself full and free power to adopt. I think in the latter case her motives in adopting are wholly irrelevant, as irrelevant, in fact, as they would be if the Courts were enquiring into a will disposing of her property made by her under a right vested in her.

(1) 5 B.H.C.R.A.C.J. 181.
(2) 3 I.A. 154 (193).

RANADE, J.—My reply to both the questions is in the affirmative. The widow of a separated householder, who adopts a son to continue the line of her husband, performs this act under an express or implied authority from her husband, and presumably her exercise of this right, independently of the wishes of reversionary heirs, must be as free as if the husband himself effected the adoption. It was, however, contended by Mr. Goverdhanram that this analogy did not hold good, inasmuch as the widow’s power of alienation by will or by gift inter vivos is subjected to restrictions, which find no place in respect of the powers of disposal enjoyed by her husband. This circumstance, however, is due to the limited nature of her interest as a Hindu widow for purposes of enjoyment. When she disposes of the [668] estate to satisfy her husband’s debts or other necessary purposes, her power of alienation is admittedly not subject to similar restrictions, and it is this last analogy which must regulate the freedom of her choice when she adopts a son to her husband.

This freedom of choice, moreover, follows as a necessary consequence from the fact that, in Western India, the necessity of express authority from the husband, or of the assent of kindred, is not recognized as essential. The principal case—Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga (1)—in which their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that the widow’s choice must not be influenced by capricious or corrupt motives, came from the province of Madras, where the restrictions on the widow’s choice are more strictly enforced. The remarks of their Lordships in the Ramnad case no doubt suggested the observations to the same effect first made in Rakhmabai v. Rakhbhai (2) and subsequently alluded to in Bhagubhai v. Kalo Venkaji (3), Ramji v. Ghamau (4), Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (5), Roshav v. Govind (6). Following, however, the observations made by their Lordships in more recent judgments—Sri Raghunada v. Sri Brozo Kishore (7) and Rajah Vellanki v. Venkata Rama (8)—in which they have stated that their remarks in the Ramnad case were not intended to justify an inquiry into the widow’s motives to see if she was moved by caprice in making her choice, this Court has in Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal (9) ruled that when the motives were mixed, the presumption was very strong in favour of the widow having acted from a sense of religious duty and this view has been further given effect to in Bhimawa v. Sanga-wa (10) and Mahabaleshwar v. Durgabai (11) where improper motives were sought to be established by proof of alleged ill-will or personal advantage. These decisions virtually leave but little scope for an investigation into the motives which may possibly influence the widow to effect an adoption.

(1) 4 I.A. 1 (14).

(2) 7 I.A. 173.

It may be, moreover, observed that the person who suffers most by an adoption is the widow herself, for she becomes thenceforward only a member of the family entitled to receive maintenance from the adopted son. It is not likely that she would wantonly or capriciously run such a risk to spite her reversioners. Caprice in the matter of adoption can have reference only to the choice of strangers, and the time when this choice may be made. It has, however, been frequently ruled that the adoption of an asogotra stranger in preference to nearer sagotra relations is not prohibited by the Hindu law, and this rule has been laid down both for Brahmins and Sudras—Dharma v. Ramkrishna (12); Raje Vyankatrav v. Jayavantrav (13); Lakshmappa v. Ramava (14). Their Lordships of the Privy Council have also ruled that the injunction to adopt the nearest kinsman has only a moral obligation, being directory and not mandatory—Srimati Uma Deyi v. Gokoolanund Das (15); Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Upur Singh (16).

As regards the delay in making the choice, the postponement of the adoption for twenty-five or thirty years was held not to be an index of a capricious choice—Giriowa v. Bhimaji (17).

On the whole, therefore, both on grounds of analogy and principle, it seems to me that, in Western India, in the case of a widow of a separated Hindu, adopting a son to continue the line of her husband, any discussion of the adopting widow’s motives, is irrelevant, and that, if the act can be referred to proper religious motives, the Courts ought to presume that she was influenced by these motives and not by caprice.

FULTON, J.—The question "whether in this Presidency in the case of a widow having the power to adopt and a religious benefit being caused to her deceased husband by the adoption any discussion of her motives in making the adoption is not irrelevant" is one which involves considerations of some difficulty.

In the Ramnad case (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council in dealing with an adoption governed by the law of Southern [570] India, after pointing out that in an undivided family the assent of the father-in-law or, in default of him, of all the brothers would be required to supply the want of positive authority from the deceased for an adoption by his widow, continued as follows:—

"Where, however, as in the present case, the widow has taken by inheritance the separate estate of her husband there is a greater difficulty in laying down a rule. The power to adopt when not actually given by the husband can only be exercised when a foundation for it is laid in the otherwise neglected observance of religious duty as understood by Hindus. Their Lordships do not think there is any ground for saying that the consent of every kinsman, however remote, is essential. The assent of kinsmen seems to be required by reason of the presumed incapacity of women for independence rather than the necessity of procuring the consent of all those whose possible and reversionary interests in the estate would be defeated by the adoption. In such a case, therefore, their Lordships think that the consent of the father-in-law, whom the law points as the natural guardian and venerable protector of the widow would be sufficient. It is not easy to lay down an inflexible rule for the case in which no father-in-law is in existence. Every such case must depend on the circumstances of the family. All that can be said is that there should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

In Rakhambai v. Radhabai (2), in which the judgment of this Court was delivered by Sir R. Couch very soon after the decision of the Ramnad case, his Lordships remarked as follows:—"Upon the review which we have made of the authorities applicable in this part of India we are of opinion that, in the Maratha country wherein the property in question in this suit is situate, a Hindu widow may without the permission of her husband and without the consent of his kindred adopt a son to him if the act is done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

[571] In Narayan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (3) Chief Justice Westropp referred to this passage in Rakhambai v. Radhabai, but added, "How this may be, it is unnecessary for us now to express any opinion."

In Rupchand v. Rakhambai (4) Mr. Justice Melvill in referring to the same case said: "The decision in Rakhambai v. Radhabai and the authorities on which it is based may be accepted without hesitation as showing that in the Maratha country a widow in whom the estate is vested may show by other evidence than the assent of a responsible kinsman that (to use the words adopted by the learned Judges from the decision of the Privy Council above referred to) the act of adoption was done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capri-ciously nor from a corrupt motive."

(3) 5 B.H.C.R.A.C.J. 181 (191).
(4) 8 B.H.C.R.A.C.J. 114 (119, 120).
In Bhagvandas v. Rajmal (1) Chief Justice Westropp said: "It has even been held here that the consent of the kinsmen of the husband is not essential to adoption by a widow if the act be done in the bona fide performance of a religious duty and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

The next case in order of time which it is necessary to notice is Bhagubai v. Kalo Venkaji (2) which is of importance as it is the only case to which we have been referred in which apparently an adoption was successfully attacked in this Court on the ground under consideration. But this case is not a satisfactory precedent to rely on, for the reasons on which the Court acted are not very clearly stated and, though their Lordships held that the validity of the adoption set up was not proved in that proceeding, they intimated that it was not to be understood that they pronounced definitely against it if it should come into question in a regular suit.

In Ramji v. Ghama (3) Chief Justice Westropp again referred to the passage from Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, but merely for the purpose of showing it to be inapplicable to the case under consideration.

[572] In Mr. Justice Candy’s decision in Vithoba v. Bapu (4) will be found an exhaustive discussion of the authorities on adoption by widows. It was held that in a united family an adoption made by a widow with the assent of her father-in-law, being the head of the family, was valid irrespective of her motives.

In Patel Vandran v. Patel Manilal (5) Sargent, C.J., after referring to the remarks in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai and to the views of the Privy Council expressed in the Ramnad case and in Rajah Vellanki v. Venkata Rama (6) said: "This would seem to imply, as Mr. Mayne appears to have understood the remark of their Lordships (see p. 113), that where the assent of sapindas has been obtained it must be presumed that the widow acted from proper motives and it was so held in Vithoba v. Bapu. Where, however, the assent of sapindas is not required, as in this Presidency, where the family is divided, then there will only be the ordinary presumption that the widow has performed a duty from proper motives, and the onus lies heavily on him who seeks to set aside the adoption on the ground of corrupt motive."

Excepting the case of Bhagubai v. Kalo Venkaji all the above cited cases have been referred to in the judgment delivered by Farran, C.J., in Mahableswar Fondba v. Durgabai (7), but I have thought it necessary once more to recapitulate them in order to show clearly the differences between the view expressed in Patel Vandran v. Patel Manilal and the dictum in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai as explained in Rupchand v. Rakhmabai. In the latter case it appears to have been assumed that it was for the widow to show by some evidence that the adoption was performed as a religious duty, while in Patel Vandran v. Patel Manilal the burden of proof was thrown heavily on the party impugning the adoption.

Now it must be remarked that if we except the case of Bhagubai v. Kalo Venkaji, which is of doubtful authority, no case has been referred to in which this Court has ever set aside an adoption by a widow having express or implied authority from her [573] husband to adopt on the ground that she was acting under the influence of improper motives.

It is true that the Court has frequently expressed the opinion that the widow when adopting must be actuated by proper motives, but it has never determined how those motives are to be ascertained.

In Southern India, we know, on the authority of the Ramnad case, that the assent of kinsmen is held sufficiently to evidence the correctness of the widow's motives. Here, however, no such settled rule prevails. Mr. Govardhaniram endeavoured to show that although in this Presidency assent of kinsmen was not essential, there should be some evidence of good motive such as might be furnished by the selection of the nearest sapinda, or the approval of the caste, or the Government, or the relatives. But he was unable to refer to any clear authority on the subject, and the very vagueness of the suggestions shows that they could not form a rule for the guidance of the community. The fact is that Hindu law as applied in this Presidency does not appear to lay down any rule by which the bona fides of the widow can be ascertained, and under these circumstances the Court, I think, cannot supplement the law by making such a rule. A definite rule such as prevails in Southern India may be desirable. Adoptions can safely be made with reference to it, and the check which it imposes on the caprice of widows may be beneficial. But here there is no rule of the kind, and I do not think the Court can by way of substitute attempt to divine into the secrets of the widow's mind in order to ascertain what her real motives were. In some cases the facts may be such as to justify the Court in presuming that bad motives had influence in the widow's mind, but who can ever say that she was not also influenced by good motives? Worldly desires often creep in and suggest the performance of religious duties, but it would usually be very rash in any given case to say that they were the only cause of action. For years a widow may have neglected her duty to her husband and at last she may have adopted one of her own relatives in preference to his; but no one in this world can say for certain that religion and a desire to benefit his soul, accompanied possibly by a feeling of compunction for her past neglect, may not have had some influence in leading her to adopt, although the more apparent cause may be the desire to benefit her own family and prevent the estate from going into the possession of the sapindas whom she dislikes. In the case now under consideration the widow who made the adoption has been dead some years, and we are asked to uphold the finding that she was acting solely from motives other than religious. But it seems to me manifest that such a finding cannot be come to with any certainty, as the widow alone knew what her motives were, and inferences on the subject are very apt to be erroneous.

An enquiry of this sort certainly incurs the danger adverted to in Rajah Vellanki v. Venkata Rama (1) of introducing into the consideration of these cases of adoption nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow. As, however, the Hindu law of this Presidency has not prescribed any criterion of those motives, I do not think the Courts are justified in introducing one which must from the very nature of the case work almost as capriciously as the widow's mind. If the general sentiment of the Hindu community had required that the widows in divided families should be controlled in matters of adoption, the feeling would ere now have been crystallized in some definite rule as in Southern India. But the fact that no such rule exists shows that the law as here administered leaves the propriety of the adoption to the widow’s discretion and, though it expects her to act discreetly, it does not prescribe any means of limiting her exercise of the powers conferred on her.

The matter seems summed up in the answer quoted in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (1) of eight Poona Shastris to the question, “Can a woman adopt a son after her husband’s death without his order for the purpose, given on his death-bed?” The reply was, “It may be done, and it is the best way, by the consent of the father and other relations within the seventh degree, and of the caste. It is also done without any order or consent at all.”

Under the circumstances I think that the first question must be answered in the affirmative and that the second question, therefore, does arise.

[576] HOSKING, J.—Upon the two questions referred by the Division Bench I find as follows:

1. In this Presidency in the case of a widow having the power to adopt, and a religious benefit being caused to her deceased husband by the adoption, discussion of the adopting widow’s motives in making the adoption is not irrelevant.

2. If such an adoption can be referred to proper religious motives, there is nevertheless no irrebuttable presumption that the widow performed the ceremony of adoption from such motives.

I come to these conclusions with much reluctance, but it appears to me that to decide otherwise would be to alter what has been for many years the recognized law in this Presidency.

In 1868 a Full Bench consisting of Couch, C. J., and Newton and Warden, JJ., after very full consideration of the authorities said: “Upon the review which we have made of the authorities applicable to this part of India, we are of opinion that in the Maratha country, wherein the property in question in this suit is situate, a Hindu widow may, without the permission of her husband, and without the consent of his kindred, adopt a son to him, if the act is done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive”—Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (1). The condition qualifying the power of adoption is expressed in the words used by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of The Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga (2) known as the Ramnad case, but the Judges remark that the judgment in that case does not determine what is the law in this part of India, and they base their ruling on the law applicable to the Maratha country. This statement of the law as to the limitations upon a widow’s power to adopt in this Presidency has since been frequently referred to in judgments of this Court as authorities—Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (3); Bhagandas v. Rajmal (4); Bhagubai v. Kalo Venkaji (5); Ramji v. Ghamaun (6); Girino [576] v. Bhimaji (7); Patel Vandran v. Patel Manilal (8). See also Mayne’s Hindu Law, 5th Ed., s. 118.

In Narayan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (9) and in Bhagandas v. Rajmal (4) Sir Michael Westropp refers to the ruling in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai with some doubt, but the nature of the doubt is shown by the same learned Chief Justice’s judgment in Ramji v. Ghamaun. There

Sir Michael Westropp giving the judgment of a Full Bench, held that in the Maratha country "the widow of a Hindu, dying with male issue, may, if her husband were separated from his family in estate, adopt without any express authority from him (if he have not prohibited her from so doing or otherwise implied his intention that she should not adopt); and without the consent of his relatives," and his Lordship expressed concurrence with the remarks of Melvill, J., in Rupchand v. Rakhmabai. Mr. Justice Melvill there says: "The decision in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, and the authorities on which it is based, may be accepted without hesitation as showing that in the Maratha country a widow in whom the estate is vested may show by other evidence than the assent of a responsible kinsman that (to use the words adopted by the learned Judges from the decision of the Privy Council above referred to) the act of adoption was done by her in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

In 1876 the Judicial Committee in Rojah Vellanki v. Venkata Rama (1) explained what their Lordships had said in the Ramnad case as to a widow adopting in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty. "Their Lordships think it would be very dangerous to introduce into the consideration of these cases of adoption nice questions as to the particular motives operating on the mind of the widow, and that all what this Committee in the former case intended to lay down was that there should be such proof of assent on the part of the sapinda as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives, or in order to defeat the interest of this or that sapinda, but [377] upon a fair consideration by what may be called a family council, of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband. If that be so, there seems to be every reason to suppose that in the present case there was such a consideration, both on the part of the widow and on the part of the sapinda; and their Lordships think that in such a case it must be presumed that she acted from the proper motives which ought to actuate a Hindu female, and that, at all events, such presumption should be made until the contrary is shown."

Commenting upon this decision Mr. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law, 5th Ed., paragraph 116, says: "It does not seem quite clear, even now, whether their Lordships are of opinion that the motive which operates upon the mind of a widow in making an adoption can be material upon the question of its validity, where she has obtained the necessary amount of assent: that is, whether evidence would be admissible which went to show that the widow was indifferent to the religious benefits supposed to flow from an adoption to her husband, or even disbelieved in the efficacy of such an adoption; and that her real and only object in making an adoption was to enhance her own importance and position, and to prevent the property of her late husband from passing away to distant relations." Mr. Mayne is of opinion that the Judicial Committee did not intend to lay down that such evidence would be material or admissible. I am unable to agree in the view taken by Mr. Mayne. If the Judicial Committee had held that there was an irrebuttable presumption that a widow, who had obtained the assent of other members of the family upon a fair consideration of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband, had acted from the proper motives which ought to actuate a Hindu female, their Lordships would not, I think, have said that, at all events, such presumption should be made until the contrary is shown. And if where the assent of sapindas is necessary, the presumption in favour of the widow acting from proper motives is not irrebuttable, still less can there be such a presumption where the widow requires no assent.

(1) 4 I. A. 1.

965

If it be proved that the main motive of a widow in this Presidency in making an adoption was mere caprice or was corrupt, [578] then, though the adoption might in part be attributed to a religious motive, the adoption would, I think, be invalid. The following remarks of the Judicial Committee in Sri Raguandha v. Sri Brozo Kishore (1), although made with reference to the need of the assent of kindred, are, I think, important in considering the present questions. Their Lordships say: "It may be the duty of a Court of Justice administering the Hindu law to consider the religious duty of adopting a son as the essential foundation of the law of adoption; and the effect of an adoption upon the devolution of property as a mere legal consequence. But it is impossible not to see that there are grave social objections to making the succession of property dependent on the caprice of a woman, subject to all the pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women, possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over, property. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of the Courts to keep the power strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it."

In this Presidency the law as it has been interpreted for many years has declared that a widow in making an adoption must neither set capriciously nor corruptly. The judgment of the Privy Council in the Ramnad case was at first understood to throw upon the widow the onus of proving the absence of capricious or corrupt motives.

In Patel Vandravan v. Patel Manilal Sir Charles Sargent and Mr. Justice Candy after considering the judgments of the Privy Council in the Ramnad case and in Rajah Veillangi v. Venkata Rama say: "Where, however, the assent of sapindas is not required, as in the Presidency, where the family is divided, then there will be only the ordinary presumption that the widow has performed a duty from proper motives, and the onus lies heavily on him who seeks to set aside the adoption on the ground of corrupt motive." The learned Judges also held that in this matter, apart from local or caste custom, there is no reason for drawing any distinction between Gujarat and the Maratha Country properly so called.

In my opinion the learned Judges gave the fullest effect which ought to be given to the late judgment of the Judicial Committee.

[579] Doubtless the decision of my learned colleagues simplifies the administration of the law on a different matter, but I am unable to see with them the main point at issue before us as an open question.

Upon the answer of the Full Bench, the Division Bench reversed the decree of the Courts below and dismissed the suit.

Decree reversed.
ABAIJ PARASHRAM v. SECRETARY OF STATE

22 Bom. 580

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

ABAIJ PARASHRAM (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Original Defendant).*

[18th November, 1896.]

Jurisdiction—The Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 11—Suit against Government—Practice—Procedure—Appeal from an order of a Revenue officer—Presentation of such appeal.

All that s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) requires is that the appeal referred to therein shall be presented. When, therefore, the only appeal allowed by law against a certain order of the Collector lay to the Commissioner, and such appeal was presented.

Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to wait for a reply before filing his suit against Government.

[R., 22 B. 598 (599); 36 B. 1325 = 14 Bom. L.R. 332 = 15 Ind. Cas. 517.]

APPEAL from the decision of F. C. O. Beauman, District Judge of Thana.

The facts as alleged by the plaintiff were as follows:—

Plaintiff was the vatanadar khot of the village of Ambadasi in the Thana District.

Before the passing of Bombay Act I of 1865, the khots of the village were allowed to receive from the tenants ardhāl (half the crop) of rice lands and tardāl (one-third of the crop) of varkas lands.

[580] After that Act came into force the Revenue authorities altered the amount payable to the khot and required him (the plaintiff) to pass a kabulayat in accordance with the new arrangement.

The plaintiff, however, refused to pass a kabulayat for 1892-93 in the prescribed terms, and insisted on recovering his dues according to the usual custom.

On the 31st October, 1892, the plaintiff made an application in this matter to the Collector of Thana, but the Collector rejected this application and ordered plaintiff’s village to be attached if he failed to pass the kabulayat in the prescribed form.

Plaintiff thereupon passed the required kabulayat under protest.

On the 16th November, 1892, plaintiff presented an appeal from the Collector’s order to the Revenue Commissioner.

As no reply was received from the Commissioner, plaintiff petitioned Government on 2nd July, 1893, but the petition was returned for want of a copy of the Commissioner’s decision.

Hence the present suit, which was filed on the 28th November, 1893.

The plaintiff prayed (1) for a declaration that the kabulayat obtained from him by the Revenue authorities for 1892-93 was null and void; (2) for a declaration that he was not liable to pass similar kabulayats in future years; and (3) for a perpetual injunction restraining defendant-plaintiff from attaching the plaintiff’s village in case of his refusal to pass such a kabulayat.

Section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) is as follows:—

“11. No Civil Court shall entertain any suit against Government on account of any act or omission of any Revenue officer unless the plaintiff

* Appeal No. 169 of 1895.
first proves that previously to bringing his suit he has presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force as within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit it was possible to present.”

The District Judge raised the following preliminary issue:—

"Has plaintiff shown that he has presented all such appeals allowed by the law in force (viz., ss. 203 and 204, Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879), as it was possible for him to present within the time allowed by law for the suit?"

On this issue the District Judge recorded the following finding and dismissed the suit:—

"After taking time to consider the matter, I am reluctantly compelled to find this issue against the plaintiff. I say reluctantly, because it is, I suppose, nothing more than a preliminary which will put the litigation one stage back, and prevent very important issues from coming to a clear settlement at once. But suppose that the Commissioner’s reply, which the plaintiff received long after the filing of the suit, had been in his favour, could it then denied that his suit was premature? Would he have had any cause of action at all? And surely the object of these restrictive measures is to ensure that the Revenue authorities shall have a full opportunity of deliberating and pronouncing finally upon the need for any particular measure before Government is dragged into the Court to defend it. In this view, and taking the facts and dates as given by the plaintiff, I must hold that he had not exhausted his remedies before bringing the suit, and it is, therefore, premature and must be dismissed.”

Against this decision plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Daji A. Khare for appellant.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—It appears that there was a dispute between the Collector of Thana and the plaintiff as to the terms of the kabulayat that the latter was bound to pass for the management of his village, which culminated in the latter’s making the application to the Collector (Ex. 12) dated 31st October, 1892. The Collector passed an order thereon dated November 4th, 1892, refusing the plaintiff’s application and requiring him to pass a kabalayat in the form prescribed by him. Against this order the plaintiff, on the 16th November, 1892, appealed to the Commissioner.

Having obtained no reply to this appeal he, on the 2nd July, 1893, petitioned Government, but his petition was returned on the 17th July, 1893, for the reasons that a copy of the decision of the Commissioner was not attached to the petition. The plaintiff then gave the statutory notice to Government and filed this suit on the 28th November, 1893. The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that “the plaintiff had not exhausted his remedies before bringing the suit, and it is, therefore, premature.”

Section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, 1876, is as follows:— “No Civil Court shall entertain any suit against Government on account of any act or omission of any revenue officer unless the plaintiff first proves that, previously to bringing his suit, he has presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force as, within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit, it was possible to present.” The only appeal allowed by law in the present case against the order of the Collector lay to the Commissioner (see ss. 203 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879). There would be no appeal to Government (see s. 204). The plaintiff presented an appeal to the Commissioner. It is true he filed this suit before he got a reply, but he was not bound to wait for a reply. All that the Act requires is that the appeal shall be presented. There is no provision that the time occupied in the appeal shall be excluded from the period allowed by the law of limitation, so that a suit might easily become time-barred before a reply was received. As a matter of fact in the present case the appeal was not decided by the Commissioner until the 8th November, 1894. In so far, therefore, as this suit brings into question the legality of the order of the Collector of the 4th November, 1892, it is not barred by s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. The other acts complained of by the plaintiff need not, in our opinion, have been separately appealed from. They are merely the outcome of the order of the Collector: acts done in the carrying out of the order and the legality of which depends entirely upon the legality of the order itself. We reverse the decree and remand the suit for trial on the merits. We make costs costs in the cause.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

[583] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

RANCHOD HARIBHAI AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v.
The Secretary of State for India (Original Defendant), Respondents.* [15th October, 1897.]

Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Act X of 1876), s. 11 (1)—Meaning of the words "appeal allowed by law"—Construction,

The words "an appeal allowed by law" used in s. 11 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Act X of 1876) do not mean "an appeal within the time allowed by law." They refer to the appeals which the law prescribes, and have no reference to the limitation of time, which the law may impose upon the bringing of such appeals.

APPEAL from the decision of C. Fawcett, Assistant Judge of Broach. The plaintiffs sued to recover certain land which they alleged to belong to them and for Rs. 150 damages. They complained that in 1891 the Collector of Broach issued a notice under s. 202 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) requiring them to vacate, and that in February 1892, the Mamladarr of Aomd had taken the land into his possession and had pulled down a house which stood on part of it.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was not maintainable, the plaintiffs not having exhausted all rights of appeal in the Revenue Courts.

* Appeal, No. 50 of 1897.

(1) Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Act X of 1876), s. 11:—

11. No Civil Court shall entertain any suit against Government on account of any act or omission of any Revenue officer, unless the plaintiff first proves that previously to bringing his suit, he has presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force as, within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit, it was possible to present.
On this point the Judge dismissed the suit, although, on the merits, finding in favour of part of the plaintiffs' claim. The following is the material part of his judgment:

"I take up issue 7 first, as it is really a preliminary issue which should have been decided before the suit was entertained on its merits. The notice (Ex. 32) was issued by the Assistant Collector to Haribhai Khushbhai on the 17th January, 1891, but no action was taken upon it until the 19th February, 1892, when the building erected upon a portion of the land in dispute was pulled down, and the plaintiff's possession over the remainder of the ground disturbed. This is the cause of action alleged, and it is to be seen whether the plaintiffs have proved under s. 11 of Act X of 1876 that, previously to bringing their suit, they had presented all such appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force as, within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit, it was possible to present. Now in this case the acts complained of were done at the orders of the Assistant Collector in revenue charge of the taluka of Amod purporting to act under ss. 61 and 203 of the Land Revenue Code read with s. 10 of the same Act. Under s. 203 of the Code an appeal lay from the Assistant Collector's order to the Collector and, as the final words of the section show, from the Collector's decision in appeal to the Commissioner, N.D. Under s. 204, no appeal lay to the Governor in Council, as the Commissioner's decision would be passed by him on appeal from a decision itself recorded in appeal by an officer subordinate to him. Such being the law, what are the facts? From Exs. 88 and 98 it appears that on the 23rd February, 1892, the deceased plaintiff Ranchod Haribhai through a vakil Mr. Ambashankar Harprasad sent by post an application to the Assistant Collector protesting against the pulling down of the building on the 19th February, 1892, and reasserting the plaintiff's ownership over the land in dispute, but owing to the application being insufficiently postage-stamped, it was received back through the Dead Letter Office and re-forwarded on the 31st March, 1892. To this the Assistant Collector replied on the 26th April, 1892, that he did not think proper to interfere in the matter by doing otherwise than what had been done (Ex. 93). This may be considered the Assistant Collector's final decision in the matter, and it is to be seen whether plaintiffs presented the requisite appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force therefrom. Before the Assistant Collector had given the above reply, Ranchod Haribhai had already on the 2nd March, 1892, presented through Mr. Ambashankar Harprasad an appeal to the Collector (Ex. 102). This was returned on the 4th March, 1892, for attaching a copy of the Assistant Collector's order as required by s. 205 of the Land Revenue Code. It was again sent to the Collector, with a copy of the order of the Assistant Collector, on the 6th June, 1892. On this date, therefore, the proper appeal was presented to the Collector, and it was accordingly presented within the prescribed period of sixty days from the decision of the Assistant Collector on 26th April, 1892 (s. 205, Land Revenue Code). The Collector replied on the 18th June, and his answer, though it appears based on a misapprehension of the real facts as to the notice under s. 203 having already been executed, must be taken as one confirming the decision of the Assistant Collector. From this decision an appeal lay, as already mentioned, to the Commissioner, N.D., and the law prescribes (s. 205) that such appeal shall not be brought after the expiration of ninety days, exclusive of the time required to prepare a copy of the decision or order appealed against. The appeal was not, however, as a matter of fact, preferred until six months afterwards, *viz., on the 8th December, 1892 (Ex. 103). This appeal was, after the institution of the present suit, rejected by the Commissioner as time-barred. (See reply of the Collector to the applicant, dated 27th April, 1893, Ex. 99).

[585] "The question, therefore, arises whether this appeal to the Commissioner, being presented after the prescribed period of limitation, is an appeal "allowed by the law for the time being in force" within the meaning of s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, 1876. I am of opinion that the question must be answered in the negative. A person cannot, I think, be properly said to have presented an appeal 'allowed by law,' when it is presented under circumstances in which the law distinctly disallows its being made. The language of s. 205 is positive 'no appeal shall be brought after the expiration of,' &c., and the only qualification to this express provision is contained in s. 206 under which an appeal may be admitted after the period of limitation 'when the appellant satisfies the officer......to whom he appeals that he has sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within such period.' In this particular case it is to be presumed, from the Commissioner rejecting the appeal as time-barred, that he was not satisfied by the appellant on the point; although in his appeal appellant Ranchod Haribhai put forward excuses for the late presentation of the appeal. It is not, I think, open to this Court to consider in this suit whether as a matter of fact Ranchod Haribhai had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within time, the decision on this point being under s. 206 of the Code left to the officer appealed to; but supposing that it was open to the Court to do so, plaintiffs have certainly failed to make out any such 'sufficient cause.' * * * Section 206 of the Land Revenue Code will not, therefore, help the plaintiffs, and a time-barred appeal not being an appeal "allowed by law" any more than an appeal to a wrong officer or an appeal which violates rules 108 and 109 of those under s. 214 (2) of the Land Revenue Code, the plaintiffs have failed to prove what is required under s. 11 of Act X of 1876. This interpretation of the meaning of the words of that section is, I think, in accordance with common sense, because otherwise the object of the provision embodied therein could always be successfully evaded by the mere expedient of going through the form of presenting an appeal, which the appellant knows will be rejected as time-barred and which he presents for that purpose. By this means he would prevent the appeal being enquired into on its merits and so deprive the higher Revenue authorities of the opportunity which s. 11 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act is intended to provide of rectifying an illegality or admitting a claim in respect of which the person aggrieved hopes to obtain better redress, pecuniarily or otherwise, in a Court of Law. If it be said that thereby a person may be innocently and unjustly deprived of his eventual right of recourse to a civil suit, through his failing to present an appeal in time to the proper Revenue authorities, the answer is that, if he fails to do so for any sufficient cause, s. 206 of the Land Revenue Code provides sufficient remedy, and that if it be without any sufficient cause, then he has only himself to blame and is not entitled to any special favour, in order to relieve him of the consequences of his own negligence or wilful delay. * * * The appeal to the Commissioner was actually made on the day after the notice of intention to file a suit against Government (Ex. 96) was given by the plaintiffs to the Collector, and they had been threatening to bring a civil suit in regard to the matter ever since the 19th February, 1892, when the house was pulled down.

[586] (see Ex. 96). Under these circumstances I can only conclude either that the failure to appeal to the Commissioner within the prescribed period was deliberate on their part, or that it was due to the most extraordinary negligence; and in neither case are they entitled to any sympathy from the Court.

"I know, however, of no previous ruling on the point, and as it may, therefore, be considered a doubtful point of law, especially in view of the rule that statutes which encroach upon the rights of the subject, whether as regards person or property, must be construed strictly and their words not put into operation unless they accurately fit the case in point (cf., as to Limitation Acts, cases reported at I. L. R., 1 Bom. 19; I. L. R., 9 Bom. 403; I. L. R. 6 Bom., 724; and I. L. R. 14 Bom. 272), and as the suit has been tried and argued on its merits, I will also record my findings on the other issues, so that in the event of the appellate Court disagreeing with me on this point of law, it may not be necessary to remand the suit to this Court for further bearing."

"But for my finding on issue 7, I would, therefore, pass a decree in their (plaintiffs') favour for the recovery of possession of so much of the gabhan in dispute as will give the plaintiffs' gabhan a clear breadth of 8 feet along its whole length, i.e., along the west side of the ground in dispute, adjoining the land at present in possession of the plaintiffs, land measuring 3 feet 6 inches in breadth for a length of 21 feet and 2 inches at the northern end and land measuring 5 feet and 3 inches in breadth for a length of 34 feet 10 inches at the southern end. I would also allow the plaintiffs Rs. 10 as compensation for damage caused to them by the wrongful removal of part of the building standing on 81 square feet out of the gabhan in dispute, and would dismiss the rest of the plaintiffs' claim."

Plaintiffs appealed.

Gokuldas K. Parekh, for the appellants (plaintiffs).

Rao Bahadur Vasudev J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader), for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—Upon the merits of this case we do not feel that we can do otherwise than confirm the findings of the Assistant Judge upon the first five issues. (His Lordship after commenting upon the evidence continued:) I pass to consider whether the plaintiff has lost his right to the limited relief to which the Assistant Judge considers (with us) that he was entitled to. The technical defence to the plaintiff's suit is based upon the provisions of s. 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) which enacts that "no Civil Court shall entertain any suit against Government on account of any act or omission of any revenue officer unless the plaintiff first proves that previously to bringing his suit he has presented all such [587] appeals allowed by the law for the time being in force within the period of limitation allowed for bringing such suit it was possible to present."

Now, as shown by the Assistant Judge, the appeals allowed by law in this case were (1) an appeal from the order of the Assistant Collector to the Collector; (2) an appeal from the order of the Collector to the Commissioner. No further appeal to Government was allowed by law. The Assistant Judge has treated the expression "an appeal allowed by law," as equivalent to "an appeal within the time allowed by law," but I think that it rather refers to the appeals which the law prescribes, and has no reference to the limitation in point of time which the law may impose upon the bringing of such appeals. The plaintiff in this case appealed to the Collector. No objection has been taken to that appeal. He also appealed to the Commissioner, but his appeal was rejected on the ground that it was not within time. He has, therefore, preferred all the appeals which the law allows, unless it can be predicated of his last appeal that it was not an appeal because it was not presented in time. The term "allowed by law" cannot, I think, do double duty and be held to be both descriptive of the nature and number of the appeals which a claimant must present and also be employed to impose a limit of time within which he must bring such appeals. These words do not, I think, assist in determining whether the plaintiff has brought all the requisite appeals. The question rather I think is: "Is an appeal which is rejected as time-barred, an appeal within the meaning of the Act?" Such an appeal clearly satisfies, I think, the words of the statute. The bringing of such an appeal is a literal compliance with its terms. There is not, in my opinion, any reason for construing the term "appeal" in the Act before us in other than its literal meaning. The section in question is not, in my opinion, a complex statute of limitation for the protection of Government. Its object is to prevent Government from being exposed to law suits arising out of the orders of its subordinate officers before its superior officers have been afforded the opportunity of considering, and it may be, of disallowing the executive orders of its subordinate officials.

Now although s. 205 of the Land Revenue Code imposes a limit upon the time within which an appeal may be brought, s. 206 gives power to the officer appealed to, to admit the appeal after the expiration of such limit if he is satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not presenting it within time; and s. 211 gives power to a superior officer to call for and examine the proceedings of an inferior officer at any time and to modify, annul or reverse the order. No period of time is fixed for the exercise by the superior officer of this power, and there is nothing to prevent him from exercising it upon facts brought to his notice by a time-barred appeal. If I have rightly apprehended the object of the section in question, there is no reason to suppose that its object will be defeated by a ruling which ascribes a natural meaning to the direction to present an appeal. Statutes imposing restrictions upon the subject's right of suit should be construed strictly, and such restrictions should not be extended beyond what the words used actually cover.

In the present case it has been contended by the appellant that his appeal to the Commissioner was in fact in time. His allegation is that though the Collector's order was passed on the 8th June, he did not receive notice of it until October. It certainly did not reach the officers of the plaintiff's village until the 25th July. There is no evidence other than the statement of the plaintiff in his petition to the Commissioner as to when the order was communicated to the plaintiff. If an appeal to the Commissioner must, in order to satisfy the requirements of s. 11 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act, be brought within ninety days, the plaintiff certainly has not proved that his appeal was brought in time, but it is difficult to suppose that the Legislature intended that a man's claims to property, valuable it may be, should depend upon the solution of the question whether he has appealed to the Commissioner in time or whether he had sufficient cause for not doing so. I cannot suppose that a subject can be deprived of his rights because a Commissioner in his discretion does not accept as sufficient the excuses which the subject brings forward to justify his delay. The question is doubtless a difficult one, but the above is, I think, its correct solution. I would, therefore, allow the appeal and pass the decree which upon the merits the Assistant Judge considers that the plaintiff is entitled to.

[589] CANDY, J.—On the merits of the case I have nothing to add. On the technical question whether the plaintiff’s right to the relief, to which he would be otherwise entitled, is barred by s. 11 of Act X of 1876, I have felt considerable difficulty. After careful consideration I am of opinion that the conclusion arrived at by the learned Chief Justice should prevail.

The intention of the Legislature in enacting s. 11 of Act X of 1876 was doubtless to enable Government or superior executive officers to correct the errors or omissions of subordinate revenue officers, and thus avoid litigation in Civil Courts. In the present case the plaintiff’s appeal to the Commissioner was, after the institution of the suit, rejected by the Commissioner as time-barred. Plaintiff was not bound to wait for the Commissioner’s reply to his appeal—Abaji v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1). Plaintiff may have thought that the Commissioner would be satisfied with the alleged cause for delay. Even if not so satisfied, the Commissioner might, on a perusal of the appeal and of the copy of the Collector’s decision, have thought it necessary to call for the proceedings and satisfy himself as to the propriety of the Assistant Collector’s order (Land Revenue Code, s. 211).

It cannot, therefore, be said that the Assistant Judge by entertaining the suit was acting contrary to the spirit of the letter of s. 11 of Act X of 1876. The words “all appeals allowed by law” in that section naturally mean cases in which appeals are allowed, viz., where the decision is not final, (cf. s. 212 of the Land Revenue Code). Here an appeal was so allowed: it was presented: the fact that the Commissioner subsequently rejected it as time-barred should not annul the right entertainment of the suit by the Civil Court.

The decision of the Assistant Judge will, therefore, be reversed, and the claim awarded to the extent set out by the Assistant Judge. As the Assistant Judge states that this amounts to about half the claim, plaintiff will obtain half his costs throughout. The rest of the costs will be borne by the parties, each paying his own costs.

Appeal allowed.

(1) 22 B. 579.
Hindu law—Adoption—Adoption by widow—Uninsured widow—Delegation of authority to adopt—Ceremony of adoption.

Under the Hindu law the widow only can adopt a son to her husband, and she cannot delegate this authority to any other relation.

Where a widow performs the principal part of the adoption ceremony—namely, the gift and acceptance—the fact that at her request the religious part of the ceremony is completed by a relation, does not vitiate the adoption.

In the case of a young widow, the fact that she was uninsured at the time of the adoption is not such a disqualification as vitiates the adoption.

Appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Gangadhar V Limaye, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar.

The plaintiffs sued, as reversionary heirs of one Shankar Malhar, to obtain a declaration that the defendant was not the adopted son of the deceased, and to recover possession of the property in dispute.

The property in suit originally belonged to Malhar Guddo. On Malhar’s death it was inherited by his son Shankar, who died in November, 1885, leaving a childless widow Nagubai, about fifteen years old. Nagubai adopted the defendant in 1886, and immediately afterwards applied to the Revenue authorities to have her husband’s kulkarni vatan entered in the name of her adopted son. The Collector thereupon entered the vatan in the defendant’s name, and appointed him to the office of kulkarni.

In 1893 Nagubai died. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued, as the next of kin of the deceased Shankar Malhar, to set aside the defendant’s adoption and recover the property from his possession.

The plaintiff alleged (inter alia) that even if the factum of the adoption were held proved, it was invalid on the ground that the adoptive mother was an uninsured Hindu widow, and, therefore, incompetent to adopt a son to her deceased husband by reason [591] of her religious impiety, and that as a matter of fact she did not herself take part in the adoption ceremony, but delegated the duty to her relative Krishnarao.

The First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar, who decided the case, found that the defendant was taken in adoption by Nagubai; that she herself performed the essential part of the adoption ceremony, namely, the receiving the boy from his natural father; and that at her request and direction the Datta Homa and other ceremonies were performed by her relation Krishnarao.

The Subordinate Judge held that though the adoptive mother was an uninsured Hindu widow, the adoption was not on that account invalid, or contrary to Hindu law or caste custom.

The suit was, therefore, dismissed.

Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Scott (with D. A. Khare), for appellants.—We contend that the adoption is invalid (first) because the adoptive mother did not take part in the adoption ceremony and (secondly) because she was incompetent.
the adoption. The evidence shows that Nagubai was ununtioned at the time of the alleged adoption. According to the Sbastras and usages of the Hindus she was in a state of religious impurity. She could not perform any religious ceremony, and so the Datta Homa and the other religious portions of the adoption ceremony were performed at her request by her relative. We submit that she could not delegate this duty to any relative. According to the Hindu law, a widow must herself adopt a son to her deceased husband; she cannot delegate this authority to others—Bhagvandas v. Rajmal (1). In the present case the widow got the whole adoption ceremony performed by her relative. The adoption is, therefore, absolutely null and void.

The adoption is further vitiated by the fact that she was ununtioned at the time of the adoption. The remarks of Farran, J., on this point in Ravji Vinayak v. Lakshmibai (2) are obiter dicta as not necessary for the decision of the case. The experts, who were examined in this case—the local Sbastras and Pandits—stated [592] that an ununtioned widow is incompetent to perform a religious act like that of adoption and they are supported by the Dharmaṇiddu and other authorities.

Macpherson (with him Manekshah Jehangirshah), for respondent.—It is found as a fact by the lower Court, and the evidence conclusively shows, that the essential part of the adoption ceremony—namely, the gift and acceptance—was performed by the adoptive mother herself. It was Nagubai who asked for the boy, and received him in gift from his natural father. That being the case, the mere fact that the religious part of the ceremony was performed at her request by her relative does not invalidate the adoption. The essential requisites of an adoption are gift and acceptance. They are the operative part of the ceremony, being that part of it which transfers the boy from one family to another. Nothing else is so essential as gift and acceptance. Even the Datta Homa is treated as a mere matter of unessential ceremonial—Mayne's Hindu Law, s. 141. That being the case, the fact that the religious part of the ceremony was performed in the present case by a relative at the widow's request, cannot invalidate the adoption.

As to the second objection to the validity of the adoption, there is no text, and no authority in support of the proposition, that an ununtioned widow cannot adopt. The case of Ravji v. Lakshmibai (2) is a distinct authority to the contrary. The Dharmaṇiddu is a work of a very recent date, and cannot be treated as an authority on the subject.

JUDGMENT.

Ranade, J.—The appellants (original plaintiffs), who claim to be the reversionary heirs of Shankar Malhar on the death of Shankar's widow Nagubai, sought in this suit to set aside the adoption of the respondent by Nagubai, and also to recover possession of the property of deceased Shankar. The factum of adoption was not seriously disputed by the appellants' counsel, Mr. Scott, who, however, questioned its validity on the double ground that Nagubai, the adoptive mother, did not perform the ceremony of receiving the respondent in adoption herself, and that she was incompetent to take such a gift by reason of her ceremonial impurity.

[593] As regards the first ground, it was contended that Nagubai took no part in the adoption ceremony, but delegated it, on account of

(1) 10 B. H.C.R. 241.
(2) 11 B. 381.
her impurity, to her relation Krishnarao, into whose hands the respondent was made over by his natural father at the time of the adoption ceremony.

There can be no doubt that a widow alone can adopt a son to her husband, and that she cannot delegate this authority to any other relation — Bhagvandas v. Rajmal (1). There is, however, no evidence in this case that there was any such delegation of authority on the part of Nagubai in respect of the principal portion of the ceremony, namely, the gift and acceptance. Not only is the deed of adoption, Ex. 74, explicit on the point, but it was followed up by Nagubai’s applications to the Collector, Exs. 75, 76, of June 1896, and April 1891, in which applications she asked that the vatan might be entered in respondent’s name. It was not till 1892, when Nagubai had attained majority, and the Collector made over the estate to her charge, that any objection was raised by Nagubai to the validity of the adoption (Exs. 80, 81). As regards the oral evidence, the original plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2, had no knowledge on the point. Exhibits, 64, 86 and none of the witnesses examined on their behalf gave any evidence in regard to the ceremony. They were all witnesses in regard to the effects of the alleged impurity (Exs., 114, 115, 116). On the other hand, respondent’s witnesses, including his natural father, the priest who officiated at the ceremony, and the relation and stranger who wrote and attested the adoption deed, distinctly swore that the boy, respondent, was made to sit on the lap of Nagubai, who asked him in gift from his natural father (Exs. 100 and 103).

Nagubai was only a girl of fifteen years at the time, and had just lost her husband, and there is nothing surprising, therefore, in her remaining in the inner room, and asking her elderly relation to complete the Homa and the other religious portion of the celebration, which, indeed, as a woman, she could not directly take on herself to perform. The doubtful evidence given by witness Ganesh, Ex. 95, and the total denial of all knowledge of the adoption by plaintiff No. 3, Ex. 105, were very properly (594) discredited by the lower Court, as Ganesh had a grudge against the respondent, being dismissed from Nagubai’s service, and plaintiff No. 3 had an interest in completely ignoring the fact of adoption. On the whole, therefore, we must hold with the lower Court that Nagubai herself received the respondent in adoption and that her requesting Krishnarao to complete the religious ceremony did not in any way vitiate the act.

The second ground on which the validity of the adoption was questioned has reference to the alleged incompetency created by the fact that Nagubai had not removed the hair on her head, and was thus ceremonially impure. The lower Court has considered this point at great length, though in the appeal before us, Mr. Scott did not seem to lay much stress on it. In Rauji v. Lakshmibai (2) this same question was raised, but it was not found necessary to decide the question, as it was held that the party, who sought to raise it, was estopped by her acts from denying the adoption. Three witnesses were examined on this point in the present case, none of whom appeared to be entitled to any great weight. The Purushot of the family admitted that the receiving and giving must be done by the principals themselves, and the rest of the ceremony can be performed by a priest appointed for the purpose. As regards the impurity, the same witness was of opinion that the adoption by a widow, who had not removed her hair, required expiation—in other words, her act was not absolutely void, and the defect might be cured by certain payments made to Brahmins.

(2) 11 B. 381.
The only authority he cited was the Dharmasindhu, which is a very recent compilation by a Pandharpur Shastri. Nirmayasindhu and Dharmasindhu indeed quote texts said to be found in Skanda Puran to the effect that "if a widow braids her hair, the braided hair prevents the liberation of the husband, and that, therefore, the widow must remove her hair by shaving them." This is only a Puran text and of doubtful validity. The Smriti texts of Yama, Parashar and Apastamba, which are superior in authority to such Puran texts, expressly provide that in the case of women who have to perform penance either for cow-slaughter or other equally heinous sins, the "mundana," or shaving of the head, is to be performed [596] by holding up the hair, and cutting off the ends to the extent of one or two fingers. Other texts are cited by the authors of Smriti Ratnakar and similar collections, which direct, on the authority of Apastamba and Vyasa, that "wapan" is obligatory on sons and widows and other sorrowing relations of the deceased, but wapan must be understood here, and in fact has been described, to be equivalent to mundana as defined above, and it must reasonably be interpreted in the same sense both for male and female relations.

There is thus admittedly no authoritative Smriti text on the point, and whatever the efficacy of ceremonial strictness may be, the Courts which administer the law in British India must be guided by what is the received practice and custom of the country or the class to which the parties belong. Plaintiffs' own witness Guracharya admitted that ceremonial strictness, such as the texts advocate in the case of Brahmjn widows, is now not observed in the vast majority of cases, and another witness on appellants' behalf stated that no exception was taken to Nagubai's conduct by the head priest of the caste. The adoption deed bears the signatures of many persons, and it is in evidence that a large number of persons dined in Nagubai's house on the day of adoption.

It is well known that among the Doshasta Brahmjns in the Deccan, widows are allowed, in most cases, to retain their hair, and among all classes there is no compulsion in the case of young girls before they attain majority. The observations in West and Buhler, pp. 999, 1084, reflect the view of the Pandits and not of the learned authors, and the observation relates to purely religious acts and observances, and not to secular acts such as adoption, &c. On the whole, therefore, we feel satisfied that the alleged impurity of Nagubai was not, in the case of a young girl like her, such a disqualification as vitiated the adoption.

As we find in favour of the adoption, it is unnecessary to discuss the question of limitation incidentally raised in the pleadings before the lower Court. We reject the appeal and confirm the decree with costs on appellants.

Decree confirmed.
IMPERATRIX v. JIJIBHAI GOVIND

22 B. 596.

[596] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IMPERATRIX v. JIJIBHAI GOVIND. [*] [14th December, 1896.]

The accused complained to the Police that A and B had robbed him. After inquiry the police reported to the Magistrate that the charge was false. The Magistrate thereupon struck off the case without holding any further inquiry himself. The accused was subsequently charged and convicted under s. 211 of the Penal Code of making a false charge. On appeal it was contended that as the accused had not been given an opportunity of substantiating his complaint before a Magistrate, his prosecution was illegal, or, at the most, he ought to have been charged under s. 182, and not s. 211.

Held, that in order to constitute an offence under s. 211 it was not necessary that the complaint should be made to a Magistrate. It was enough that it was made to the Police authorities and related to a cognizable offence, and that action was thereupon taken by the Police.

Held, also, that the fact that no opportunity was allowed to the accused by the Magistrate to substantiate his complaint before striking it off, was not a circumstance which invalidated the commitment duly made, and the conviction otherwise good could not be set aside on account of such omission. The trial before the committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court gave ample opportunity to the accused to substantiate his complaint, and he was not prejudiced by the omission.

The positive prohibition under s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), viz., that statements to the Police other than dying declaration shall not be used in evidence against the accused, cannot be set aside by reference to s. 157 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872).

APPEAL from the decision of C. Fawcett, Joint Sessions Judge of Broach.

The accused was charged under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) with having falsely charged Anop Talsia and two other persons with theft before the District Inspector of Police, Broach, and thereby causing criminal proceedings to be instituted against the said persons. In January, 1896, the accused was going from the village of Haldar to Wagusna. On his way he had an altercation with a gang of [597] railway coolies. On his arrival at Wagusna he gave information to the police patrol there that he had been robbed by the railway coolies of Rs. 25. The police patrol thereupon went with him to the place where the alleged robbery was committed, and the accused identified one Anop Talsia as one of those who robbed him.

The police patrol at the request of the accused reported the complaint to the chief constable and the accused himself made a further complaint to the Inspector of Police, who took it down in writing. The Inspector also went with the accused to the place of the robbery and the accused identified a second person (Hussein) as one of the three who had committed the offence. The person so identified was arrested and a watch was kept upon his house, which was searched. Nothing, however, was found to incriminate him. The Inspector of Police then transferred the inquiry to the chief Constable under a written order in which he expressed an opinion that the complaint was false.

The Chief Constable, after a further inquiry made a report under s. 157, Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) to the First Class Magistrate, in which he stated that his opinion was that the charge was false, and he asked that the complaint should be struck off. The Magistrate concurred, and characterized the complaint as maliciously false.

The accused was then charged under s. 211 of the Penal Code.

The Joint Sessions Judge, disagreeing with both the assessors, found the accused guilty, and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for a year and a half, and a fine of Rs. 500.

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court.

Chimanlal H. Setalvad, for the accused. — There has been no magisterial enquiry into the complaint of theft which the accused made and which is alleged to have been "maliciously false." Without such enquiry the prosecution of the accused is illegal, because he was not allowed an opportunity of proving the truth of the complaint made by him—Government v. [598] Karimdad (1); Empress v. Grish Chunder (2); Giridhari Mondul v. Uchit Jha (3); Queen-Empress v. Sham Lall (4). Then there were no proceedings instituted—only a complaint to the police. This is not an offence—Queen-Empress v. Bisheshwar (5). The statements of witnesses taken by the police during the investigation have been used as evidence to corroborate the evidence for the prosecution. This is contrary to the provisions of s. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Rao Sahib Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—The accused has had ample opportunity in the Sessions Court to prove the truth of his complaint. He tried to do so and failed. He has, therefore, rightly been convicted.

Accused's complaint was, no doubt, to the police, but action was taken thereupon, and that amounts to an institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). See Karim Bulsh v. Queen-Empress (6).

As to the admission of the statements of witnesses before police as evidence in this case, no doubt s. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure prohibits their being used against the accused, but they are not inadmissible in evidence (see s. 157 of the Evidence Act I of 1872). Independently of these statements there is other reliable evidence to support the conviction. So the accused is not prejudiced.

JUDGMENT.

Ranade, J.—In this case the Joint Sessions Judge of Broach disagreeing with the assessors convicted the accused of an offence under the first part of s. 211, and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for 1½ years, and a fine of Rs. 500.

Mr. Chimanalal in arguing the appeal before us, raised two preliminary points of law which must first be disposed of before considering the case on its merits. The first point had reference to the fact that the prosecution in this case was ordered without any proper enquiry before a Magistrate into the truth or falsehood of the charge brought by the accused. The complaint of robbery [599] or, as the Joint Sessions Judge has found it-to be, of theft, or misappropriation, brought by the accused against Anop and Hussain was not preferred before a Magistrate. It was made to the police inspector, and after the police had made enquiries it was reported by the police chief constable to be a false complaint, and, therefore, it was struck off by the orders of the Magistrate. Mr. Chimanlal contended that as no opportunity had been allowed to the accused to substantiate his complaint before the Magistrate directed it to be struck off, the prosecution was not legal in its inception, and that at the most the charge ought to have been brought under s. 182.

(1) 6 C. 496.  (2) 7 C. 87.  (3) 8 C. 485.

We are unable to accept this contention. In _Reg v. Arjun_ (1) and _Empress v. Arjun_ (2) it has been held that when one person specially complains that another has committed an offence, and such complaint is shown to have been falsely made with the object of injuring that other person, the offence falls under s. 211, and not under s. 182. There is also ample authority for holding that to constitute an offence under the first part of s. 211, it is not necessary that the complaint should have been made to a Magistrate, but that it is enough if it is made to the police authorities, and relates to a cognizable offence, and action is taken thereupon by the police authorities concerned—_Queen v. Subbanna_ (3); _Empress v. Abul Hasan_ (4); _Empress v. Salik_ (5); _Empress v. Parabu_ (6); _Queen-Empress v. Karim Buksh_ (7). A person who sets the criminal law in motion by making to the police a false charge in respect of a cognizable offence institutes criminal proceedings under the first part of s. 211.

On this point there is no divergence of views between the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts. That divergence is confined to the question whether the latter part of s. 211 applies to such cases of complaints to the police which are disposed of without a formal magisterial inquiry. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has held that the latter part of [600] s. 211 would apply to such cases when the charge related to the more serious offences—_Karim Buksh v. The Queen-Empress_ (8), while the Allahabad High Court has dissented from that view, and decided that, unless the matter was enquired into by a Magistrate, the latter part of s. 211 would not apply—_Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar_ (9). There has been no ruling on the point in this Court, and it is not necessary to decide it here, as the Joint Sessions Judge has convicted the accused of an offence under the first part of s. 211 about the applicability of which there is no dispute.

As regards the allegation that no opportunity was allowed to the accused by the Magistrate to substantiate the charge before he ordered the complaint to be struck off, we are of opinion that such a course is no doubt very desirable in the ends of justice, but its omission is not a circumstance which invalidates a commitment duly made, and a conviction otherwise good cannot be set aside on account of such omission—_Queen-Empress v. Ganga Ram_ (10); _Government v. Karimdaq_ (11); _Reg v. Navimal_ (12); _Ramasami v. The Queen-Empress_ (13). The trial before the Committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court offered ample opportunity for the accused person to substantiate his complaint, and the omission is not one which has prejudiced the interests of the accused.

We must, therefore, overrule both these contentions. Turning next to the merits (here His Lordship reviewed the evidence and continued). On the whole, therefore, we feel satisfied that the Joint Sessions Judge has correctly appreciated the probabilities of the case, and the conviction must stand.

We note for the information of the Joint Sessions Judge that the procedure followed by him in admitting as corroborative evidence against the accused all the statements (Exs. 32—42) made by the witnesses to the police was distinctly opposed to the provisions of the law on this behalf and the rulings of this Court in Queen-Empress v. Sitaram Vithal (1) as also Raghunath Singh v. [601] The Empress (2). The positive prohibition under s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be set aside by reference to s. 157 of the Evidence Act. This irregularity has not affected the merits and calls for no further notice. We confirm the conviction, but alter the substantive sentence of imprisonment to one of six months' rigorous imprisonment.

Conviction confirmed.

RAMANGAVDA AND OTHERS (Original Opponents), Appellants v. SHIVAPAGAVDA (Original Applicant), Respondent.* [18th December, 1896.]

Vatan—Share of vatan—Vatan divided into takshims or shares—Decree by holder of one share against holder of other—Execution of decree—Collector's certificate forbidding alienation—Vatan Act (Bom. Act III of 1874), s. 4 and 10 (3)—Validity of Collector's certificate.

There cannot be two separate vatans in connection with one hereditary office; therefore, when a vatan is broken up into shares or takshims, those takshims do not constitute separate vatans.

(3) Section 4 of the Vatan Act (Bom. Act III of 1874) :

4. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context, "Vatan property" means the moveable or immovable property held, acquired, or assigned for providing remuneration for the performance of the duty appertaining to an hereditary office.

It includes a right to levy customary fees or perquisites, in money or in kind, whether at fixed times or otherwise.

It includes cash payment in addition to the original vatan property made voluntarily by Government, and subject periodically to modification or withdrawal.

"Hereditary office" means every office held hereditarily for the performance of duties connected with the administration or collection of the public revenue, or with the village police, or with the settlement of boundaries, or other matters of civil administration.

The expression includes such office even where the services originally appertaining to it have ceased to be demanded.

The vatan property, if any, and the hereditary office, and the rights and privileges attached to them together constitute the vatan.
SECOND appeal from the decision of R. S. Tipnis, Assistant Judge (Full Power) of Sholapur-Bijapur at Bijapur, confirming the order of Rao Sahib Krishnarao M., Subordinate Judge of Bagalkot.

The patilki vatan of the village of Murnal, taluka Bagalkot in the Bijapur District, was divided into two takshims (shares), one called the Lingayat Takshim and the other Rady Takshim. These two takshims were held by two different families, who were in no way related to each other. In the year 1885, one Ramangavda, a representative of the Rady Takshim, got a decree against Shivapagavda, a member of the Lingayat Takshim, for the recovery of certain lands which formed part of the Lingayat Takshim. The Collector, however, issued a certificate under s. 10 of Vatan Act (Bom. Act III of 1874) forbidding the alienation. The certificate was in the following terms:

"The lands below mentioned belong to the Lingayat Takshim; therefore, they cannot be alienated to others than vattandars of that same vatan. The decree should be set aside."

Relying on this certificate Shivapagavda applied to the Subordinate Judge to set aside the decree.

The decree-holders contended that there was no objection to the alienation of the property to them, as they were the vattandars of the same vatan, and entitled to have the property made over to them in accordance with the decree.

The Subordinate Judge, however, acting on the Collector's certificate declared that the decree could not be executed, in so far as it related to the lands mentioned in the certificate.

On appeal by the opponents the Judge confirmed the order.

The opponents preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Branson with Dattatraya A. Idgunji, for appellants (the decree holders).—The owner of a takshim (share) of a vatan is a vattandar of the whole vatan. Each takshim does not form a separate vatan. The office connected with the two takshims is the same. There cannot be different vattans for the same office. The certificate of the Collector is, therefore, illegal, and cannot be given effect to. Civil Courts have the right to question the validity of the Collector's certificate—Shankar Gopal v. Babaji (1); Bhau Balapa v. Nana (2); The Collector of Thana v. Bhaskar Mahadev (3).

Inverarity with Vasudev G. Bhandarkar, for respondent (aplicant).—

The certificate issued by the Collector is in accordance with s. 10 of the Vatan Act. It states that the property is vatan and, therefore, not

Section 10. When it shall appear to the Collector that by virtue of, or in execution of, a decree or order of any British Court any vatan, or any part thereof, or any of the profits thereof, recorded as such in the Revenue records or registered under this Act and assigned under s. 23, as remuneration of an official, has or have after the date of this Act coming into force, passed or may pass without the sanction of Government into the ownership or beneficial possession of any person other than the officier for the time being; or that any such vatan or any part thereof, or any of the profits thereof, not so assigned has or have so passed or may pass into the ownership or beneficial possession of any person not a vattandar of the same vatan, the Court shall, on receipt of a certificate under the hand and seal of the Collector, stating that the property to which the decree or order relates is a vatan or part of a vatan, or that such property constitutes the profits or part of the profits of a vatan, or is assigned as the remuneration of an official, and is therefore inalienable, remove any attachment or other process then pending against the said vatan, or any part thereof, or any of the profits thereof, and set aside any sale or order of sale or transfer thereof and shall cancel the decree or order complained of so far as it concerns the said vatan, or any part thereof, or any of the profits thereof.

alienable. The Collector considered that the land in question belonged to one takshim, and that such takshim was in itself an independent vatan. In his opinion the two takshims were distinct and separate, and could not be intermixed. He treated them as two vatans. He may be wrong, but the Civil Courts cannot interfere with his decision. The parties aggrieved may appeal to the Commissioner or Government. As long as the certificate stands, the Civil Courts cannot go behind it. The technical requirements of the certificate being complied with, the Civil Courts are bound to accept it as valid.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The definition of "vatan" in s. 4 of Bombay Act III of 1874 shows that there cannot be two separate vatans [604] in connection with one hereditary office, or, in other words, that when a vatan is broken up into shares or takshims, those takshims do not constitute separate vatans. The definition states that the vatan property, if any, and the hereditary office and the rights and privileges attached to them together constitute the vatan, and is inconsistent with the supposition that there can be two separate vatans connected with the same office. The material part of the Collector's judgment which has been set forth in the decision of the Assistant Judge is as follows:—"The land is not assigned for the payment of an officiator, but it is part of the vatan of the Lingayat takshim of the patilki vatan of Murnal, taluka Bagalkot, and it is likely to pass into the hands of the representative of Ramangavda, who is not a vatanar of the Lingayat Takshim of that vatan, but is a vatanar of the Radi Takshim. I accordingly issue another certificate to that effect to the Subordinate Judge."

Very possibly, if there had been different offices to which the separate takshims were severally attached, the finding of the Collector, that the two takshims constituted separate vatans, might have been binding on the Courts as suggested by Mr. Justice Birdwood in his decision on an earlier stage of this litigation, P. J. for 1890, p. 263, but as the Collector has clearly decided that the two shares are merely takshims appertaining to one patilki, it is impossible to say that it appeared to him that by virtue of the decree complained of, any part of the vatan was likely to pass into the hands of a person not a vatanar of the same vatan. He doubtless thought that this was the case, but it was in consequence of his understanding the meaning of the word "vatan" in a sense different from that in which it is used in the Act.

Under these circumstances we think that as the Collector's decision was based on a misunderstanding of the term "vatan," and as under the circumstances s. 10 of the Act gave him no jurisdiction to issue a certificate, it is not open to the Court to accept that certificate.

We, therefore, reverse the decrees of both Courts and reject the application with costs on the applicant throughout.

Decree reversed.

22 B. 605.

[605] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

SHIDMALLAPPA NURANDAPPA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. THE GOKAK MUNICIPALITY (Original Defendants), Respondents. [8th January, 1897.]

Municipality—District Municipal Act (Bom. Act II of 1884), s. 48 (1)—Suit for damages, possession and injunction—Notice of action.

In a suit brought against a Municipality to recover possession of a piece of land taken by it, for damages for pulling down a wall on the land, and for an injunction,

Held, that as regards damages the suit came under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act II of 1884), but as regards possession and injunction notice of action was not necessary under the section.

SECOND appeal from the decision of F. C. O. Beam, District Judge of Belgaum, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb V. D. Joglekar, Subordinate Judge of Athni.

The plaintiff sued the defendants to recover possession of a certain piece of land alleged to have been wrongfully taken by them and Rs. 25 for loss occasioned to him by their pulling down a wall which stood on the land, and for an injunction restraining them from interfering with him in the free use and enjoyment of the said land in future.

The defendants pleaded that the land was theirs, and that they had pulled down the wall after giving the plaintiff notice under s. 33 of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873). They also contended that the suit was not maintainable [606] for want of notice under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act Amendment Act (Bom. Act II of 1884).

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff.

On appeal by the defendant, the Judge reversed the decree, holding that the suit was not maintainable for want of notice under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act Amendment Act (Bom. Act II of 1884).

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (plaintiff).

Mahadev V. Bhat, for the respondents (defendants).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The suit in so far as it is a suit for damages is clearly such a suit as is contemplated by s. 48 of the Municipal Act, but

* Second Appeal, No. 639 of 1896.

(1) Section 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act II of 1884):—

48. No action shall be commenced against any Municipality or against any officer or servant of a Municipality, or any person acting under the orders of a Municipality, for anything done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance of this Act, or of the principal Act, without giving to such Municipality, officer, servant or person one month's previous notice in writing of the intended action and of the cause thereof, nor after three months from the date of the act complained of; and in the case of any such action for damages, if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before the action was brought, the plaintiff shall not recover more than the amount so tendered, and shall pay all costs incurred by the defendant after such tender.
in so far as it is a suit for possession it falls within the Full Bench ruling in Manohar Ganekh v. The Dakor Municipality (1) and consequently notice of action was not necessary under that section. The injunction is merely ancillary to the ejectment suit, and in regard to such relief notice has always been held to be unnecessary—Flower v. Local Board of Low Leyton (2). The decree must, therefore, be reversed and the appeal remanded to be heard on the merits. Costs, costs in the cause.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

22 B. 602.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

GANESH (Original Defendant), Appellant v. GYANU (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [14th January, 1897.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 85—Mutual account—Test of mutuality—Shifting balance not a decisive test.

The dealings between the plaintiff and defendant consisted of loans from one to the other. Interest was charged on such loans. The parties were, besides, partners in certain transactions, and the shares of profit and loss falling to each partner’s share were debited and credited in their accounts. The dealings lasted from 1884 to 1890. In 1892 the plaintiff sued to recover the balance due to him in respect of all these dealings. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was barred by limitation.

[607] Held, that the account was a mutual, open and current account within the meaning of art. 85 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that the suit was not barred by limitation. The fact that in such an account the balance is a shifting balance, sometimes in favour of one party and sometimes in favour of the other, though valuable as an index of the nature of the dealings, is not always decisive as to the nature of the account.

The dealings to be “mutual” must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely creating obligations on one side, and the other side being merely discharges of these obligations.

SECOND appeal from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona.

The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 4,971-6-3 as the balance due on a mutual, open and running account between the parties.

The dealings between the parties began on the 15th July, 1884, and ended on 12th November, 1890. This suit was brought in 1892. The defendant denied that the dealings were such as to make the account between him and the plaintiff a mutual, open and current account within the meaning of art. 85 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and he pleaded that the plaintiff’s claim was barred, and that in respect of dealings which fell within the period of limitation a balance was really due from the plaintiff to him.

* Second Appeal, No. 422 of 1896.

(1) 22 B. 269.

(2) 5 Ch. D. 347.
It appeared that the transactions in the account were mutual loans. The plaintiff and defendant had borrowed from each other from time to time, and charged interest on such loans. They were, moreover, partners in certain forest contracts, and each was debited and credited in the account with his share of the profits and losses incurred in the partnership business.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff’s claim was not barred, and passed a decree in his favour for Rs. 4,500.

This decree was confirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge. The following is an extract from his judgment:

“... I have to see what the nature of the dealings between the parties was, and I observe, in the first place, that in his written statement defendant contends that a balance of Rs. 291.8-6 is due to him by the plaintiff. In his deposition he states he used to borrow small sums from the plaintiff; he also says he furnished [605] funds for himself and the plaintiff, and that plaintiff’s share of the profits used to be entered in the account books. In his purskis he again admits that he used to borrow money from time to time for immediate necessities, as the shop was in Ganesh Peth and the treasure chest in Shanvar Peth; he also says he used to pay plaintiff’s share of debts due to sawars, as plaintiff had no means. The entries also show certain sums credited to defendant in the accounts for goods supplied by him. * * * * * * In the present case, we have, by defendant’s own admission, a shifting balance, as he claims that a balance of Rs. 291.8-6 is still due to him by plaintiff. I find, then, art. 85 of the Limitation Act applies to this suit, and it is not barred.”

Against this decision defendants preferred a second appeal.

The main question argued at the hearing of the appeal was whether the account between the parties was a mutual, open, and current account within the meaning of art. 85 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Inverarity (with him S. V. Bhandarkar), for appellant.

Branson (with him N. G. Chandavarkar), for respondent.

The following authors were referred to in argument:—Narrandas v. Vissandas (1); Hajee Syud Mahomed v. Mussamut Ashrufoonissa (2); Khushalo v. Behari Lal (3); Velu Pillai v. Ghose Mahomed (4); Lakshmayya v. Jagannatham (5); Mangalore Krishnappa v. Bakminibai (6).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The contentions about interest and about the set-off of sums due by the parties to one another allowed by the District Judge were disposed of by us in the course of the hearing of this appeal, and the only point reserved for judgment related to the question of limitation. Mr. Inverarity contended for the appellant that the account between the parties was not a mutual, open and current account under art. 85 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) as there were no reciprocal demands between the parties, and the balance was always in respondent plaintiff’s favour. Exception was taken to the District Judge’s view that the account was mutual, inasmuch as the appellant in his written statement had claimed that the final balance was in his favour. This observation of the District Judge was only [609] made incidentally, and no great stress was placed upon it in the judgment of the lower Court. The District Judge based his view about the nature of the dealings between the parties chiefly on the admission of the appellant in his deposition, Ex. 36, and his pursis, Ex. 53, from which it appeared that appellant used to borrow sums on occasions from the respondent, just as the latter also borrowed money from him, and that the respondent's share of the profits was credited against these sums. The real question at issue, therefore, is whether the dealings between the parties, as disclosed by their accounts and admissions, were of the nature of dealings which created reciprocal demands within the meaning of art. 85.

We feel satisfied that the District Judge has correctly decided this point in respondent's favour. The dealings between the parties in the present case were admittedly in the nature of mutual borrowings, and where the transactions are of that character, the test of a shifting balance, sometimes in favour of one party, and sometimes in favour of the other, though valuable as an index of the nature of the dealings, is not always decisive. This test of a shifting balance was first suggested in Ghaseeram v. Manohar Doss (1), and accepted by the Allahabad High Court in Khushalo v. Behari Lal (3), and by the Calcutta High Court in Hajee Syud Mahomed v. Mussamut Ashrufoonnissa (3). The same test was adopted by Sir C. Sargent in Narrandas v. Vissandas (4) with the important qualification that the dealings should be such as may possibly lead to such a shifting balance. This was the interpretation put upon Sir C. Sargent's judgment by the Madras High Court in Velu Pillai v. Ghose Mahomed (5), and by this Court in Mangalore Krishnappa v. Bakminibai (6). The mere fact that the balance was on some occasions in favour of the defendant is not always sufficient to constitute by itself a mutual, open, and current account—Hajee Syud Mahomed v. Mussamut Ashrufoonnissa (3).

The dealings to be mutual must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely creating obligations on one side, and the other side being merely discharges of these obligations—Hirada Basappa v. Gadigi Muddappa (7). As examples of the first class of dealings we may refer to Shrinathdas v. Park Pittar (8), Lakshmanaya v. Jagannatham (9) and Sitayya v. Ranga Reddi (10), and of the latter class, Hajee Syud Mahomed v. Mussamut Ashrufoonnissa (3). The dealings in the present case clearly fall within the first class. Both parties claim to have the balance in their favour. Both admit they borrowed from each other, and charged interest on such loans. They were besides partners in forest contracts, and the shares of profit and loss falling to each partner's share were debited and credited in their accounts. In this state of things, the District Judge has very properly decided that the dealings between the parties fell within art. 85, and that the respondent's claim was not time-barred. We must confirm the decree of the District Judge and reject the appeal with costs on appellant.

Decree confirmed.

PANDURANG v. BHIMRAV

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir O. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

PANDURANG SHERSHAGIR (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BHIMRAV KKHAR HIRALIKAR AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Respondents.

[18th January, 1897.]

Vendor and purchaser—Sale of land—Trees standing on land—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 8.

Trees being attached to the earth are included in the legal incidents of the land and pass to the transferee under a deed of sale of the land on which they stand, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied. No such intention is necessarily implied because the trees are mortgaged prior to the sale and no mention of the mortgage is made in the sale-deed.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. Jacob, District Judge of Sholapur-Bijapur, reversing the decree of Rao Bahadur K. N. Kher, First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur.

[611] Plaintiff sued for possession of certain mango trees standing on certain land which had been sold to him by defendant No. 2.

Defendant No. 1 pleaded that he had been in possession of the trees as mortgagee of defendant No. 2.

The lower Court held that the trees had been mortgaged to defendant No. 1, and that subject to the mortgage the trees had been sold by defendant No. 2 to the plaintiff. It, therefore, passed a decree directing possession of the trees to be given to the plaintiff on his paying defendant No. 1 the amount of the mortgage-debt (Rs. 100), together with costs of suit.

The District Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, holding that the parties to the plaintiff’s deed of sale did not contemplate the conveyance of the trees to him. In his judgment he said:

"Further I am of opinion that under the circumstances an intention to convey the trees with the land cannot be read into the deed of sale under which the plaintiff claims. His vendor himself had not exclusive title to the trees, and the omission to refer to his half share in them is almost conclusive evidence of the fact that they were outside the contemplation of the parties to the transaction, especially as it is clear that possession of the trees was not given to plaintiff or to Apparao Sheshgir, his predecessor in title to the land, but was continued with the mortgagee, to whom no reference is made in the deed of sale though he held under a registered mortgage-deed."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

G. S. Dandavate and N. G. Patwardhan, for the appellant (plaintiff).

Mahadev V. Bhat, for respondent No. 1 (defendant No. 1).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—Section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, which merely confirms a previously existing rule of law, provides that, "unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property, and in the legal incidents thereof." The question in the present case is whether certain mango trees which stood on the land sold passed under the deed of sale of the land to the plaintiff. Trees being attached to the earth are included in the legal incidents of the land and they would, therefore, pass unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied. No such intention is expressed in the sale-deed: but it is argued that it is necessarily implied because the trees had been prior to the sale mortgaged to the defendant and no mention of the mortgage is made in the deed of sale. We do not think that from this any necessary inference arises that the intention of the parties was that the vendor's interest in the trees should not pass to the plaintiff.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. Costs in this and the lower appellate Court to be on the defendant Bhimrav. The six months' time allowed for redemption will run from this date.

Decree reversed.

MATRIMONIAL JURISDICTION.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

A (Husband), (Plaintiff) v. B. (Wife), Defendant.*

Divorce—Decree absolute—Appeal, right of—Limitation for such appeal—Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 55, 56 and 57 (1)—Section 7, construction of—Limitation Act (IV of 1877), art. 151.

Under the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) an appeal lies from a decree absolute although the decree nisi has been left unchallenged.

An appeal against a decree absolute must be filed within twenty days from the date of decree, that being the period prescribed for appeals from decrees made on the original side of the High Court under the law for the time being in force (see s. 55 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869).

[613] The principles and rules referred to in s. 7 of Divorce Act (IV of 1869) are not mere rules of procedure such as the rules which regulate appeals, but are the rules and the principles which determine the cases in which the Court will grant relief to the parties appearing before it or refuse that relief—rules of quasi-substantive rather than of mere adjective law.

* Suit No. 514 of 1896.

(1) Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 55, 56 and 57:

"55. All decrees and orders made by the Court in any suit or proceeding under this Act shall be enforced and may be appealed from, in the like manner as the decrees and orders of the Court made in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction are enforced and may be appealed from under the laws, rules and orders for the time being in force:

"Provided that there shall be no appeal from a decree of a District Judge for dissolution of marriage or of nullity of marriage; nor from the order of the High Court confirming or refusing to confirm such decree:

"Provided also that there shall be no appeal on the subject of costs only.

[613]" 55. Any person may appeal to Her Majesty in Council from any decree (other than a decree nisi) or order under this Act of a High Court made on appeal or otherwise, and from any decree (other than a decree nisi) or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of a High Court or of any Division Court from which an appeal shall not lie to the High Court, SUIT for divorce. The husband had obtained a decree nisi on the 30th November, 1896, which was made absolute on the 14th June, 1897.

On the 9th December, 1897, a memorandum of appeal was presented by the wife. The officer of the Court refused to accept it, being of opinion that it was barred by limitation. Next day it was presented in Court, and leave was obtained to move as of that date for the admission of the appeal. The questions which arose were (1) whether, in divorce suits an appeal lay from the decree absolute and (2) as to the limitation for such appeal.

Inverarity, for the intending appellant (the wife).—We have presented an appeal, but the officer of the Court has refused to receive it on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The decree nisi was passed on the 30th November, 1896, but the decree was not made absolute until the 14th June, 1897. Our memorandum of appeal was presented on the 9th December, 1897, i.e., within six months of the passing of the decree absolute. We contend that the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) does not apply to divorce suits, and that under s. 57 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869) six months is the time given for appeal. The time runs from the decree absolute. The decree nisi does not dissolve the marriage. He referred to ss. 7, 45, 55, 56 and 57 of Act IV of 1869; Abbott v. Abbott (1); Browne on Divorce, p. 377; Stat. 44 and 45 Vict., c. 68, s. 10; Stat. 20 and 21 Vict., c. 85; Stat. 23 and 24 Vict., c. 144; Stat. 31 and 32 Vict., c. 77; Warters v. Warters (2).

Lang (Advocate-General) contra.—The appeal is too late, and being an appeal from a decree absolute ought to be to the Privy Council. See s. 56 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869). He referred to ss. 7, 16 and 55 of that Act, and to Stat. 31 and 32 Vict., c. 77.

JUDGMENT

FARRAN, C.J.—The question before us is whether the appeal in this case should be admitted. The Prothonotary has refused to accept it as out of time.

The decree nisi was made on the 30th November, 1896. The decree absolute was pronounced on the 14th June, 1897, and the appeal was presented to the Prothonotary on the 9th December following, that is to say, within six months of the pronouncement of the decree absolute.

Section 55 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) gives a general right of appeal from all decrees in suits or proceedings under the Act under when the High Court declares that the case is a fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

XIII.—Re-marriage.

"57. When six months after the date of an order of a High Court confirming the decree for a dissolution of marriage made by a District Judge have expired, or when six months after the date of any decree of a High Court dissolving a marriage have expired, and no appeal has been presented against such decree to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction, or when any such appeal has been dismissed, or when in the result of any such appeal any marriage is declared to be dissolved, but not sooner, it shall be lawful for the respective parties to the marriage to marry again, as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death:

Provided that no appeal to Her Majesty in Council has been presented against any such order or decree.

When such appeal has been dismissed, or when in the result thereof the marriage is declared to be dissolved, but not sooner, it shall be lawful for the respective parties to the marriage to marry again as if the prior marriage had been dissolved by death."

the laws, rules and orders for the time being in force. "Decrees" in this section include, we think, both decrees nisi and decrees absolute, as, throughout the Act, when it is intended to distinguish between these two classes, they are distinguished in appropriate language. See e.g., ss. 44, 56 and 57. When no such distinguishing language is used, "decrees" includes both clauses. It might be thought that no appeal [615] would be allowed from a decree absolute in cases where the decree nisi was left unchallenged upon questions peculiarly within the purview of the decree nisi, but looking to the history of legislation upon this branch of the law no support is to be found for the supposition. In the Act of 1850 (23 and 24 Vict., c. 144), which introduced the practice of granting decrees nisi in the first instance, an appeal was given to the House of Lords from the decree absolute and not from the decree nisi. This was the state of the law in England when the Indian Divorce Act was passed, save that in 1868 it had been provided by 31 and 32 Vict., c. 77, s. 3, that in suits for a dissolution of marriage no respondent or co-respondent not appearing and defending the suit on the occasion of the decree nisi being made should have any right of appeal to the House of Lords against the decree when made absolute unless the Court upon application made at the time of the pronouncing of the decree absolute should see fit to permit an appeal. In 1881 by the Judicature Act of that year (44 and 45 Vict., c. 68, s. 10) it was enacted that "No appeal from an order absolute for dissolution * * * of marriage shall henceforth lie in favour of any party who having had time and opportunity to appeal from the decree nisi on which such order may be founded, shall not have appealed therefrom." This was the case here. The appellant allowed the decree nisi to be made in her absence. It was faintly contended by the Advocate-General for the respondent that, therefore, no appeal lies in this case, because by s. 7 of the Indian Divorce Act it is enacted that, subject to the provisions contained in the Act, the High Court shall in all suits and proceedings thereunder act and give relief on principles and rules which in the opinion of the said Court are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial causes in England for the time being acts and gives relief. The principles and rules here referred to, are not, we think, mere rules of procedure including rules which regulate appeals which are laid down in the subsequent sections (45 and 55) of the Act, but are the rules and principles which determine the cases in which the Court will grant relief to the petitioner appearing before it or refuse that relief—rules of quasi-substantive rather than mere [616] adjective law. Exactly the same language was used in giving the Matrimonial Court in England jurisdiction to deal with cases over which the Ecclesiastical Courts had theretofore such jurisdiction: see 20 and 21 Vict., c. 85, s. 22. The above was the view taken is Abbott v. Abbott(1), and is, we think, the correct view.

The main contention, however, of the Advocate-General was based upon the language of s. 55 of the Indian Divorce Act itself, which provides that all matrimonial decrees * * may be appealed from under the laws, rules and orders for the time being in force. The laws and rules which impose a limit upon the time within which an appeal can be brought are doubtless within the scope of that section. At the time when the Act was passed, a rule of the Bombay High Court made twenty days the limit of the time for appealing from a decree. This rule was, however, superseded

(1) 4 B.L.R. O.J., 51.
by the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 151, which now by reason of s. 4 governs the presentation of appeals in the High Court's original jurisdiction, and the former rule finds no place in the rules of the Bombay High Court published since the passing of the Limitation Act.
Hence it is contended that there is no rule for the limitation of the presentment of original side appeals except that laid down by the Limitation Act, and that the Limitation Act, s. 1, enacts that nothing contained in Parts II and III applies to suits under the Indian Divorce Act. We cannot, however, it is said, have recourse directly to that enactment to determine within what time a party to a matrimonial suit is bound to appeal. Indirectly, however, the Advocate-General contends that an out-of-time matrimonial appeal is prohibited, since s. 55 places such an appeal under the laws, rules and orders for the time being in force for other original side decrees, and original side decrees must be appealed from within twenty days (we omit the provisions as to obtaining copies, as it does not affect the argument) from the time when they are made.
Mr. Inverarity on the other hand contends that the above provision of the Limitation Act, which is later in point of time, virtually repeals so much of
s. 55 of the Divorce Act as is inconsistent with it. The short answer to that argument appears to us to be that by s. 3 "suit" does not include an appeal, and there is nothing, therefore, in the Limitation Act which interferes with the full scope of s. 55 of the Divorce Act. In this view, the appeal is out of time, and the application to have it admitted must be refused.

ABDUL RAZAK (Plaintiffs) v. J. G. KERNAN (Defendant).+
[11th February, 1898.]

Insolvency—Official Assignee—Vesting order—Lease—Leasehold property—Right of Official Assignee to accept or disclaim—Effect of taking possession—Liability for rent.

In a Presidency town, the Official Assignee has the right to elect whether he will accept or repudiate onerous (e.g. leasehold) property belonging to an insolvent and as such vesting in the Official Assignee under the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21).

Except under exceptional circumstances, the taking of possession of leasehold property by the Official Assignee is proof of election on his part to take the lease.

A held certain premises in Bombay from the plaintiff as a monthly tenant at a rent of Rs. 125, with liberty to either party to terminate the tenancy on giving one month's notice. On the 9th April, 1896, A was adjudicated insolvent by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Madras, and on that day the usual vesting order was made vesting all his estate and effects in the defendant as Official Assignee. On the 20th August, 1896, the Sheriff, who had taken possession of the premises in execution of a decree passed against A, handed over possession of them to the agent of the defendant, who remained in possession until the 30th September, 1896, when he gave them up to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant for the rent (Rs. 750) due from 1st April, 1896, to the 30th September, 1896.

Small Cause Court

[R., 15 Ind. Cas. 268.]

[618] Case stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), by C. W. Chitty, Chief Judge—

"1. This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 750, being the amount of rent due to him for certain premises situate in Apollo Street, Bombay, from the 1st April to the 30th September, 1896, at a monthly rental of Rs. 125, or, in the alternative, the same sum as compensation for use and occupation of the same premises during the said period.

"2. The defendant is the Official Assignee at Madras and, as such, the assignee of the estate and effects of one A. Sahapatty Moodelian an insolvent.

"3. The facts of the case on which my decision was based and the reasons for that decision are fully set out in my judgment, a copy of which is hereto annexed, and to which for brevity's sake I crave leave to refer. I gave judgment for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed and costs, and at the request of the defendant's attorney made my judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court."

The following is the statement of facts referred to in the above paragraph, taken from the Chief Judge's judgment:—

"The plaintiff is the landlord of certain property in Apollo Street which he purchased in January, 1895. At the time of the purchase, a set of offices in the plaintiff's building was in the occupation of the firm of A. Sahapatty Moodelian and Co. as monthly tenants at a rent of Rs. 125, with liberty to either party to terminate the tenancy on giving one month's notice. The actual premises included in the lease consisted of one floor and a room on the floor above. Rent was paid regularly by the firm of A. Sahapatty Moodelian and Co. down to the 31st March, 1896. On that day the firm gave to the plaintiff a notice to determine the tenancy on the 30th April, 1896 (Ex. A), but such notice was never acted on. Indeed the defendant was apparently unaware of it until it was produced in Court by the plaintiff's attorney. On the 9th of April, 1896, A. Sahapatty Moodelian (who was, as I understand, the manager of a joint Hindu family carrying on a family business in Bombay, Madras and elsewhere in that name) was adjudicated an insolvent by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Madras, and on the same day the usual vesting order was made vesting all his estate and effects in the defendant. On the 9th April, Sardarmal Jugonath obtained a decree against the insolvent in the High Court at Bombay and on the same day the Sheriff in execution of that decree attached property of the insolvent consisting of office furniture and books lying at the premises in question. The Sheriff kept the property on the premises which he closed with his own lock. The Sheriff remained in custody from the 11th April until the 20th August, 1896. On the 15th April, Mr. Turner as constituted attorney of the defendant wrote to the Sheriff asking him to remove the attachment. As this request was not complied with, Mr. Turner on 6th May, 1896, took out a Judge’s summons in the High Court to have the attachment removed. That summons was made absolute on the 11th August, 1896. The proceedings and judgment are reported at length in I.L.R., 21 Bom., at p. 205. On the 20th August, 1896, the Sheriff handed over possession of the attached property to the defendant’s agent, Mr. Turner. Mr. Turner gave up possession of the office premises to the plaintiff on the 30th September, 1896. It should be here stated that the room on the upper floor was before the date of insolvency and during all the six months for which rent is now claimed in the occupation of one J. A. Grant, who had originally entered as a sub-tenant of the insolvent. The delivering up of possession by Mr. Turner, the Official Assignee, on the 30th September, 1896, was by mutual agreement between him and the plaintiff. Before that date the plaintiff was able to secure new tenants on most favourable terms. He was able to let the office premises to the proprietors of the ‘Advocate of India’ at Rs. 105, and to agree with Mr. Grant for the payment of rent direct to him for the upper room at Rs. 30, an advance on the whole of Rs. 10. It was also arranged that the new tenancies should commence from such date as the defendant should vacate, and they did actually commence from the 1st October, 1896. I mention these facts in order to dispose of the argument of the plaintiff’s attorney that if the plaintiff really considered himself entitled to claim rent from the defendant he would also have assuredly claimed an extra month’s rent in lieu of notice. It will be patent, from the facts stated, that such a claim, if made, could not have been substantiated. It would, in effect, be a claim for damages which the plaintiff admittedly has not suffered. On the 9th June, 1896, and again on the 24th July, 1896, the plaintiff’s attorney wrote to the Sheriff demanding the rent which had on those dates accrued due, but no notice was taken of his demands. On the 17th September, 1896, plaintiff for the first time addressed Mr. Turner, and a lengthy correspondence ensued which eventually terminated in the filing of this suit.”

The following were the questions referred to the High Court:—

(1) Whether in a Presidency town in India, in cases of onerous property (e.g., leasehold property) belonging to an insolvent and as such vesting in the Official Assignee under the Indian Insolvency Act, the Official Assignee has the right to elect whether he will accept or repudiate such property?

(2) Whether the taking of, or remaining in possession of leasehold property by an Official Assignee is tantamount to an election on his part to accept the lease?

(3) Whether, on the facts stated, the defendant must not be deemed, in law, to have been in possession of the premises in question during the six months for which rent is claimed?

(4) Whether the defendant is not liable to pay to the plaintiff such rent?

(5) Whether, in the alternative, the defendant is not liable to compensate the plaintiff for use and occupation of the premises from 9th April to 30th September, 1896?

Lawyers for the defendant. —The notice of the 31st March, 1896, terminated the tenancy on the 30th April, 1896.—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 111; Woodfall’s Landlord and Tenant (14th Ed.), p. 357. The continuing in possession was not a continuance of the tenancy. The Sheriff entered into possession on 11th April. The assignee is not liable till he elects. There was no election here—Turner v. Richardson (1); Copeland v. Stephens (2); Griffiths on Bankruptcy, Vol. I, p. 287; Levi v. Ayers (3); Statute 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21, ss. 7 and 11; Stat. 1 and 2 William IV, c. 56; Bankruptcy Act, 1849, s. 145; Goodwin v. Noble (4). More laches is not election. The possession of the Sheriff was not the possession of the assignee. There was no use and occupation before the 20th August—Woodfall’s Landlord and Tenant, p. 567; Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 116; Churchward v. Ford (5); Hyde v. Moakes (6). The Sheriff was in possession. The assignee is not liable for use and occupation till he enters—How v. Kennett (7); Jones v. Reynolds (8); Woodfall’s Landlord and Tenant, p. 569; Edge v. Strafford (9); Sardarnal v. A. Sabhapathy (10). He cited also Robson on Bankruptcy, p. 443; Atkinson on Sheriffs, p. 303; Titterton v. Cooper (11); Woodfall’s Landlord and Tenant, Ch. VII, s. 11.

Scott, for plaintiff.—There was a waiver of notice. Any act showing an intention to continue the lease is a waiver of notice. [621] See Act IV of 1882, s. 113, illustration. The lease vested at once in the Official Assignee as part of the personal estate of the insolvent. He might disclaim it. Abandonment is not equivalent to disclaimer. He referred to Stat. 49 Geo. III, c. 121, s. 19; Stat. 5 Geo. IV, c. 98, s. 73; English Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ss. 23 and 24; Aga Mohamed v. Koolsom Beebee (12); Ex partis Dresslar (13).

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—We agree with the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court that the first question should be answered in the affirmative. Before us it was not argued that the Official Assignee was bound to take upon himself against his will the liabilities arising out of a leasehold vested in the insolvent at the date of his insolvency. That contention was not, we think, open to the plaintiff after the decision of the Privy Council in Levi v. Ayers (3), which recognises the general law as settled by Turner v. Richardson (1) and other cases to be that “assignees in bankruptcy are not bound to accept a damnosa hereditas and that they have consequently an option to accept or repudiate property which is or may be injurious to the estate.”

The argument for the plaintiff was confined to the contention that the right of the Official Assignee was to disclaim the lease, or rather that he was bound by the lease, unless or until he expressed his intention by words or acts not to take it as part of the assets of the insolvent. In our opinion that contention cannot be supported. The earlier cases upon the question cited to us were Bouridillon v. Dalton (14); Wheeler v. Bramah (15); Turner v. Richardson (1); Copeland v. Stephens (2). Though loose expressions such as “abandonment” by the assignees are used by Judge at nisi prius, the considered judgments make it, we think, quite clear that a lease was not considered to vest in the assignees unless they accepted it. In the last cited case Lord Ellenborough delivering the judgment of the Court says at p. 604 of the report: “We are of opinion that the general assignment of a bankrupt’s personal [622] estate does not vest a term of years in the assignees unless they do some act to manifest their assent to the assignment, as it regards the term, and their acceptance of the estate, and upon this ground alone our judgment in the present case is given." The whole judgment places the question beyond doubt. This view of the law was recognised by the Legislature in 5 Geo. IV, c. 98, s. 73, and was always acted upon in England until the law was altered by the passing of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869—Ex parte Dressler (1); Titterton v. Cooper (2). In our opinion it is now the law in the Presidency towns in India.

2. The taking of possession of leasehold property of an insolvent by the Official Assignee has always been regarded as proof of election on his part to take the lease. This has been laid down in the earliest cases, Turner v. Richardson, Copeland v. Stephens, and was re-stated by the Judges in Ex parte Dressler and Titterton v. Cooper. In the latter case, Brett, L.J., says: "It is not easy to enumerate what may be called unequivocal acts, but I may mention the taking of possession of the premises demised by the lease;" and Cotton, L.J., in the same case says: "It is true that in many of the cases possession is referred to; but possession of leasehold property is the very strongest proof that a person to whom a conveyance has been made has accepted it, and has become assignee of the lease." The Judges in Ex parte Dressler are equally emphatic upon the effect of possession. Goodwin v. Noble (3) was much relied upon in this and the next branch of the case. The circumstances in that case were very peculiar. The landlord was informed of the purpose for which the assignees wished to remain in possession, and the Court was of opinion that he could not reasonably have inferred, from what the defendants did, that they meant to take the lease. Our answer to the second question will be that, except under exceptional circumstances, the taking possession by the Official Assignee of leasehold property is tantamount to an election on his part to accept the lease. As to the Official Assignee remaining in possession we do not see how the question arises.

[623] 3. Upon the third question, we do not think that the defendant must be deemed, in law, to have been in possession of the premises during the six months for which rent is claimed.

4. The fourth question must, we think, be answered affirmatively to the effect that the defendant is liable for the rent. On the 9th April, Moodiar, the lessee of the premises, was declared an insolvent. He had some furniture and books on the leasehold premises, These the Sheriff attached on the 11th of April entering into possession and putting his lock on the doors. The Official Assignee took steps to remove the attachment, which he succeeded in doing on the 11th August. Down to this time the Official Assignee had done nothing to show an election to take over the lease. On the 20th August, the Sheriff made over the attached property to the Official Assignee, who on the same day entered into possession of the premises. He did not inform the plaintiff, the landlord, that he entered with any limited object or for any special purpose. There is nothing to distinguish the case from the ordinary one of an Official Assignee entering into possession of leasehold premises and thus consenting to become assignee of the lease. Having made the election the usual consequences follow. The acceptance of the lease dates back to the vesting order and the Official Assignee becomes liable for the rent during the period that he continues to be the assignee of the lease—his liability ending when with the landlord’s assent he surrenders the term—Titterton v. Cooper (1), or otherwise gets rid of his obligation.

It was contended for the defendant that the notice given on the 31st March, 1896, terminated the lease on the 30th April and that the tenancy came to an end on that day. It has, however, been founded as a fact that that notice was not acted on or in other words was waived. It does not appear to us that we have been asked whether what took place really amounted to a waiver. I have asked the Chief Judge whether he intended us to consider that question and he replied that he stated the notice and its waiver merely as facts in the history of the case. The waiver of the notice, he said, was not contested before him.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Parsons.

MARTAND BALKRISHNA Bhat AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Appellants v. DHONDO DAMODAR KULKARNI (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [19th January, 1897.]

Mortgage—Mortgage by manager of undivided family—Redemption—Sale of mortgaged property under money decree obtained by mortgagee in respect of other debts—Purchase by mortgagee at Court sale—Right of member of family to redeem—Transfer of Property Act 17 of 1889, s. 99—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1889),
s. 294.

Shankraji, his son Shridhar and his grandson the plaintiff Dhondo (son of a deceased son) were undivided. In 1875 Shankraji mortgaged the property in dispute to Hamirmal with possession. After Shankraji’s death in 1877 Shridhar managed the whole estate. In 1878, during Dhondo’s absence from his native village, Hamirmal sued Shridhar as the heir and representative of Shankraji in respect of other debts and, obtaining a money decree against him, attracted the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. After the attachment, Hamirmal without notifying or disclosing his mortgage lien caused several of the properties to be sold and, without obtaining leave from Court to bid at the sale, purchased some of them in the names of his dependants at an undervalue and benami for himself. In 1892 Dhondo brought this suit against Hamirmal, Shridhar and the benami purchasers to redeem the properties so bought by Hamirmal. The lower Courts found that the money decree which Hamirmal obtained, and the execution proceedings thereon, bound the estate.

It was contended that the execution sales had not been objected to under s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code and were, therefore, valid, and that the plaintiff, consequently, could not redeem.

Heard, that the plaintiff might redeem although he had not taken proceedings under s. 294. The fact that the mortgagee Hamirmal had sold the property in execution of a money decree did not free him from the liability to be redeemed as mortgagee. The sale was rendered nugatory, not by the provisions [624] of s. 294 (though permission to bid granted under that section might have validated the purchase), but by the impossibility of a mortgagee by such sales and purchases freeing himself from the liability to be redeemed.

* Second Appeal No. 172 of 1895.
† [Without leave of Court.—Ed., I.D., N.S.]
(1) 9 Q.B.D. 473.
SECOND appeal from the decision of Arthur H. Unwin, District Judge of Nasik, confirming the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge.

Suit for redemption. One Shankraji Ramchandra and his son Shridhar and grandson the plaintiff Dhondo (the son of a predeceased son) were members of an undivided family. On the 31st March, 1875, Shankraji mortgaged the property in question to the defendant Hamirmal and his father Khoemchand with possession. Shankraji died in 1877-78, and after his death Shridhar managed the estate. The plaintiff Dhondo had left his village before Shankraji’s death and only returned there occasionally.

During Dhondo’s absence Hamirmal sued Shridhar as heir and representative of Shankraji, and obtained a money decree in respect of other debts against him, and in execution he attached the mortgaged properties. The lower Courts found, and the High Court accepted the finding, that the decree and execution proceedings against Shridhar as manager were binding on the plaintiff Dhondo as if he had been a party.

Hamirmal without disclosing his mortgage sold the mortgaged properties in execution of his money decree, and without obtaining leave to bid at the sale he bought several of them in the names of his servants.

Dhondo now brought this suit to redeem the properties so purchased by Hamirmal and to recover possession. He made Shridhar and the benami purchasers parties to the suit.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff and his uncle Shridhar were the heirs of Shankraji and that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the mortgage; that the purchases by the defendants were collusive and benami for Hamirmal (defendant No. 1); that the mortgage was fully satisfied, and that nothing was due in respect of it. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff’s claim for redemption and possession.

On appeal by defendants the Judge confirmed the decree. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appealed to the High Court.

[626] Daji A. Khare appeared for the appellants (defendants Nos. 2 and 3).—The plaintiff was joint with Shridhar against whom in his representative capacity Hamirmal obtained the money decree. Shridhar was the manager of the family and, therefore, the plaintiff was bound by the decree and the sales held under it, the debt for which the decree was passed being an ancestral debt. The first Court held that our purchases were benami for Hamirmal (defendant No. 1), and applying s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act allowed the claim. We contend that the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is not applicable, because the sales took place in 1880 and 1891 and the Act did not come into force in this Presidency until the year 1893.

Hamirmal did not bid at the auction-sales. We purchased the property at the auction and have got nothing to do with him. Even supposing that he did purchase the mortgaged property at the auction, still his purchase would not be void ab initio. The plaintiff should have proceeded either under s. 244 or s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). No separate suit lies—Javherbhai v. Haribhai (1); Chintamanrao v. Vithubai (2); Paramasiva v. Krishna (3).

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan appeared for the respondent (plaintiff).—Hamirmal, who was himself the mortgagee, purchased the equity of redemption at the Court sales without the leave of the Court. The general law of mortgage is that a mortgagee cannot purchase the mortgaged property without the leave of the Court—Kamini, v. Ramlochan (4). When mortgagee himself purchases the equity of redemption of his mortgagor under his own money decree, he thereby deprives the mortgagor of his equity of redemption—Bhuggobutty Dossee v. Shamachurn Bose (5).

We were not joined as a party to the suit in which the money-decree was obtained. The suit was against Shridhar alone. We are, therefore, not bound by the sales in execution of the decree. The right, title and interest of Shridhar alone was sold. It was, therefore, not necessary for us to proceed under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—The facts which give rise to this appeal as found by the lower Courts are these:—On the 31st March, 1875, Shankrai Ramchandra mortgaged the several properties, which the plaintiff, his grandson Dhondo Damodar, seeks to redeem, to the defendant Hamirmal and his father Khamchand with possession. The lower Courts have found that Shankrai Ramchandra and his son Shridhar and his grandson Dhondo were undivided, though Shridhar lived separate from his father. Shankrai died in 1877-78, and after his death Shridhar managed the whole estate. The plaintiff Dhondo had left his native village Dindori before his grandfather's death and only occasionally returned to stay there after that event.

During the absence of the plaintiff in the Berars the defendant Hamirmal (in suit No. 522 of 1878) sued Shridhar as the heir and representative of his father Shankrai Ramchandra and obtained a money decree against him, and in execution of that decree attached the mortgaged premises. The lower Courts have held that Shridhar sufficiently represented his father's estate for the purposes of that suit, and that the money decree which the defendant Hamirmal obtained (if in other respects valid) bound the estate, and that the execution proceedings which followed upon the decree similarly bound it. We think that we must accept this finding and hold that the decree obtained against Shridhar as manager of the property and representative of Shankrai was binding upon the plaintiff as though he had been made a party-defendant to perfect the representation.

The defendant Hamirmal without notifying or disclosing his mortgagee-lien caused several of the mortgaged properties to be sold in execution of his money decree; and without obtaining leave from the Court to bid at the sale, purchased several of them in the names of his dependants and servants. The lower Courts have found that the purchases were made collusively and at an under value benami for the defendant Hamirmal, who was himself the real purchaser. Under these circumstances the plaintiff sues to redeem the several mortgaged properties which [628] were so bought by the defendant Hamirmal, and has made the several benami purchasers or their heirs, as well as his uncle Shridhar, parties to the suit.

The questions which present themselves for consideration are whether the plaintiff is debared, by the sales in execution to which we have referred, from redeeming, and whether he can redeem without having had the sales set aside in execution proceedings. The lower Courts have applied to the case the principle deducible from s. 299 of the Transfer of Property Act and have decreed redemption. For the appellants it is contended that the purchase by the execution-creditor without leave does not of itself vitiate the execution proceedings and sale, but only gives the judgment-debtor the right to object to the sale under s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code. When no objection is taken to the purchase under that section it is argued that the purchase is as valid as if the leave of the Court had been obtained to the execution-creditor himself bidding and purchasing. The authorities cited by the appellants—Javerbhai v. Haribhai (1), Chintamanrao v. Vithabai (2), Paramasiva v. Krishna (3)—bear out that contention. The learned pleader for the respondent, while conceding that general principle, sought to bring the case within the authority of the ruling of the appellate Court in Bhuggobutto Dossec v. Shamaichurn Bose (4), where the earlier authorities are cited, and where it is laid down, as a general proposition, that "a mortgagee is not entitled by means of a money-decree obtained on a collateral security, such as a bond or covenant, to obtain a sale of the equity of redemption separately, because by so doing he would deprive the mortgagor of the privilege which, upon the principle of considering the estate as a pledge, a Court of Equity always accords to a mortgagor, namely, a fair allowance of time to enable him to discharge the debt and recover the estate. This privilege is an equitable incident of the contract of mortgage, and it would be inequitable to permit the mortgagee to evade it; to do that circuitously which he could not do directly." That is the principle which in an extended form is enacted as law in s. 299 of the Transfer of Property Act. The section extends it to an attachment arising out of any claim of the mortgagee against the mortgagor in respect of which he brings a suit. In the case above cited, as in those in accordance with which it was decided, the money-decree was based upon a claim arising out of the mortgage transaction itself, but it is difficult to read the judgments in these cases without seeing that the same reasoning applies to a mortgagee buying the equity of redemption under a decree obtained upon a claim independent of the mortgage as applies to a decree obtained upon a collateral instrument to secure the mortgage-debt. We refer particularly to the remarks of Macpherson, J., in Kamini v. Ramlochan (6).

In the present case it seems impossible to say that "the mortgagee did not avail himself of his position to obtain an undue advantage in the purchases or otherwise act mala fide." The question is one of much difficulty and doubt, but seeing that the Legislature has now adopted the principle in its widest aspect we think that we are justified in acting upon it. In this view the sale is rendered nugatory, not by the provisions of s. 294 of the Code (though permission granted under that section to bid might have validated the purchase, but by the impossibility of a mortgagee by such sales and purchases as these freeing himself from his liability to be redeemed. In this view, the fact that Dhondo did not take proceedings under s. 294 to set aside the sales does not affect his present right to redeem. We, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

(1) 5 B. 575. (2) 11 B. 588. (3) 14 M. 498. (4) 10 C. 331.

ANTU AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Applicants v. VISHNU GOVIND BAWA AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Opponents.*

Mamladars’ Act (Bom. Act III of 1876), s. 8—Suit for possession—Parties—Tenants of defendant proper parties to suit—Practice—Procedure.

Defendant No. 1 having obtained a decree against the plaintiffs for possession of certain land in the Mamladar’s Court leased the land to defendant Nos. 2 and 3. Shortly afterwards the Mamladar’s decree was reversed by the High Court on the plaintiffs’ application. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued the first defendant and his tenants (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) who were in actual possession to recover the land. The Mamladar rejected the plaint, holding that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, one suit being brought against different persons for different causes of action arising at different times.

Held, that the Mamladar should accept the plaint and hear the suit on its merits. The defendant, who had obtained possession under a decree which had been reversed, could not improve his position by letting third parties into possession as his tenants. They stood in the shoes of their lessor and were jointly liable with him to be ousted by proceedings taken in the Mamladar’s Court.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb V. K. Sathe, Mamladar of Satara, in a possession suit.

The first defendant Vishnu obtained a decree against the plaintiff for possession of the land in question in the Mamladar’s Court and under that decree was put in possession on 26th March, 1896. On the 1st June, 1896, he let the land on lease to defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

On the 1st September, 1896, on the application of the plaintiffs, the High Court reversed the above decree of the Mamladar.

On the 19th September, 1896, the plaintiffs brought this suit against Vishnu (defendant No. 1) and his tenants (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) to recover possession.

The Mamladar returned the plaint for amendment by striking out the names of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, holding that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, viz., that against defendant No. 1 [631] having arisen on the 26th March, 1896, and that against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the 1st June, 1896. The plaintiffs, however, again presented the plaint in the same form, urging that the suit should be proceeded with as it stood against all the three defendants. The Mamladar thereupon rejected the plaint.

* Application No. 257 of 1896 under the extraordinary jurisdiction.
The plaintiffs now applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court and obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendants to show cause why the order of the Mamladhar should not be set aside.

\textit{Branson with Vasudeo R. Joglekar, appeared for the applicants (plaintiffs) in support of the rule.}—The Mamladhar was wrong in requiring plaintiffs to strike out the names of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. If they were not proper parties he should have dismissed the suit as against them. Defendant No. 1 dispossessed us on the date stated in our plaint and subsequently he let out the property to defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were, therefore, in possession through defendant No. 1. We desired to recover possession, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were, therefore, necessary parties. The Mamladhar was wrong in holding that two different causes of action were joined. Our causes of action, strictly speaking, was against defendant No. 1 alone. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 held under him. The Mamladhar acted with material irregularity in rejecting the plaint.

\textbf{FARRAN, C. J.}—I am of opinion that a person obtaining possession of land otherwise than by due course of law cannot alter or improve his position by letting third parties into possession as his tenants. Such tenants seem to me to stand in the shoes of their lessor and jointly with him to be liable to be ousted by proceedings taken in the Mamladhar’s Court. The setting out of the circumstances under which such tenants obtained possession is not an irrelevant allegation which the Mamladhar can order to be struck out under s. 8. If the law were otherwise, the Mamladhars’ Act would be little better than a dead letter. I would, therefore, set aside the Mamladhar’s order rejecting the plaint and order him to proceed to deal with it upon the merits. \[632\] In the present case the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 came into possession pending the former litigation and are as much bound by the final order made in it as is the defendant No. 1. It is, moreover, the defendant No. 1 who is urging his own act in letting the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 into possession to defeat the jurisdiction of the Mamladhar. The defendant Nos. 2 and 3 do not appear to take any objection to the plaintiffs' proceedings. I would make the rule absolute. Costs, costs in the cause.

\textbf{PARSONS, J.}—I see no illegality in the plaintiff suing in the Mamladhar’s Court for possession on the ground of illegal ouster, joining as defendants in his suit not only the person who he alleges has illegally ousted him, but also the other persons who after the ouster have obtained possession from the person who ousted him and are in possession at the time of suit. The date and cause of action would be that of the original ouster, while the subsequent transfer of possession to the other defendants would be a mere narration of the circumstances under which the cause of action arose as against those defendants. To hold the contrary would be to greatly detract from the benefit of the Act, for if the plaintiff were to sue only the persons actually in possession, they might plead that they had not ousted the plaintiff, and if he sued only the person who had ousted him, the other persons might in execution say that, as they were not parties to the decree, they could not be ousted under it. We make the rule absolute. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Stamp—Stamp Act (I of 1879), ss. 33, 34, 35, 37 (a) (b), 45 and 50—Collector's decision that an instrument is chargeable with duty not conclusive—Duty of Civil Court—Practice—Procedure.

The decision of the Collector under cl. (b) of s. 37 of the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879), that a particular instrument is chargeable with duty [633] and is not duly stamped, is not final and conclusive. If his decision under that clause is not obeyed, and the duty and penalty are not paid, any Civil Court before which the document may come has the duty cast upon it under s. 33 of examining it and of determining for itself whether it is duly stamped or not, and if not, of taking the steps laid down in ss. 33, 34 and 35, that decision being subject to revision under s. 50.

REFERENCE by Rao Saheb B. S. Joshi, Subordinate Judge of Karad in the Satara District, under s. 49 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879).

The will of one Haribai was presented for registration as a will. The Sub-Registrar, however, on perusing it considered that it operated otherwise than as a will and should be stamped, and he impounded it under s. 33 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879) and sent it to the Collector under cl. 2 of s. 35.

The Collector having obtained the decision of the Revenue authority under s. 45 of the Stamp Act as to its chargeability required the payment of stamp duty and penalty according to that decision (see s. 37) and detained the document pending the payment.

In this suit the defendant pleaded that the debt in respect of which he was sued by the plaintiff was originally due by him to Haribai, but had been remitted by the terms of her will. It became necessary, therefore, to refer to the document, and the Subordinate Judge having required its production, the Collector sent it to the Court with a karkun. The Subordinate Judge on examining the document was of opinion that it was a will and was not chargeable with duty. By letter he requested the Collector to allow the will to remain with the record of the suit. The Collector having refused, the Subordinate Judge submitted the following question to the High Court:

"1. Whether the Collector's decision that the instrument in question is chargeable with duty is binding on this Court? and if not,

"2. Whether the instrument is chargeable with duty, and if so, what is the amount of duty leviable on it."

The opinion of the Judge on the first question was in the negative and on the second that the instrument (being a will) was not chargeable with duty.

[634] Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar (Government Pleader) appeared for Government (the Collector).—The Revenue authorities hold that the document required to be stamped. Their decision under s. 45 is final and binding. The Collector acts under ss. 33, 35, 37 and 39 of the

* Civil Reference No. 9 of 1895.

Stamp Act, 1879. Until the stamp duty is paid, the document must remain impounded.

Some portions of the document in question operate as a gift and some as a release. Therefore the document requires to be stamped.

Shamrao Vithal, for the defendant.—The question is whether the Commissioner's decision is binding on the Civil Court. The document was produced before the Subordinate Judge and he was entitled to deal with it under the Evidence Act. The Commissioner's decision is final only for fiscal purposes. Under s. 162 of the Evidence Act it is open to the Civil Court to decide the question of admissibility of a document in evidence. If the Legislature had intended that the decision of the Commissioner should be final for all purposes, they would have made a provision to that effect. There is no provision in the Stamp Act making the Collector's decision as to impounding a document final.

The document is clearly a will. No doubt it contains recitals of completed transactions, but it came into force after the death of the testatrix.

ORDER.

PARSONS, J.—The following two questions have been referred to this Court by the Subordinate Judge:—

1. Whether the Collector's decision that the instrument in question is chargeable with duty is binding on this Court? and if not,

2. Whether the instrument is chargeable with duty, and if so, what is the amount of duty leviable on it?

The reference has been made under the Stamp Act, but it has been argued, and we deal with it, as made both under the Stamp Act under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It appears that the instrument in question was presented for registration as a will, and that the Sub-Registrar impounded it under s. 33 of the Indian Stamp Act, 1879, as it appeared [635] to him that the instrument was not duly stamped, and sent it to the Collector under the 2nd clause of s. 35. The Collector under s. 37, having first obtained the decision of the chief controlling Revenue authority under s. 45, required the payment of stamp duty and penalty according to the decision of the chief controlling Revenue authority, and detained the instrument pending the payment. In a suit filed in the Subordinate Court of Karad the Subordinate Judge required the production of the instrument, and the Collector sent it with a karkun. The Subordinate Judge perused the document and was of opinion that the instrument was a will and was not chargeable with duty, and he has asked us the above two questions.

In regard to the first, it must be remarked that while the Act makes the certificate of the Collector given under cl. (a) of s. 37 conclusive evidence, there is nothing in it which provides that his decision under cl. (b) shall be final or conclusive. If his decision is compiled with, and the duty and penalty paid, then under s. 39 the instrument will be admissible in evidence; but nothing is said in the Act as to what shall be done if the decision is not obeyed and the duty and penalty not paid. It appears to us that under these latter circumstances a Civil Court before whom the instrument may come has the duty cast upon it, under s. 33, of examining the document and of determining for itself whether the instrument is duly stamped or not, and, if not, of taking the steps laid down in ss. 33, 34 and 35, whatever decision it may come to being subject to revision under s. 50. We, therefore, answer the first question in the negative. We answer the first part of the second question also in the negative. The instrument in question is clearly a will, and it does not become a deed of gift or a release or a deed of assignment merely because some past acts of disposition are recited in it.

Order accordingly.

Municipality—District Municipal Act Amendment Act (Bom. Act II of 1884)—Suit for an injunction to restrain municipality—Sections of the Act not applicable.

A suit was brought by the plaintiff against a municipality for an injunction to restrain them from laying water pipes on his land. The lower Courts dismissed the suit for want of notice under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act Amendment Act (Bom. Act II of 1884).

Held, reversing the decree, that the suit was not a suit for anything done in pursuance of the Act, but to prevent the municipality from doing what the plaintiff alleged to be an illegal act, and that s. 48 did not apply.

Second appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Rao Bahadur V. V. Vagle, First Class Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff sued to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from laying water pipes on his land.

The defendants denied that the land was the plaintiff’s and alleged that it was public property. They further contended that the suit would not lie without notice under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act Amendment Act (Bom. Act II of 1884).

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that it was not maintainable for want of notice under the Act (s. 48).

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellant (plaintiff):—We sued for an injunction, Section 48 of the District Municipal Act relates to something done in pursuance of the Act. A suit for an injunction is not a suit for anything done. We rely on President of the Taluk Board, Sivaganga v. Narayanan (1).

Ramdatt V. Desai, for the respondents (defendants).—The plaintiff seeks to prevent the municipality from acting in pursuance [637] of the District Municipal Act. Such a suit is governed by s. 48 of the Act—Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (2).

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, Subordinate Judge, First Class, with appellate powers at Dhulia, in appeal No. 232 of 1896.

[638] The plaintiff brought this suit against the Municipality of Faizpur, alleging that there were three otas in front of his house, which he allowed the municipality to pull down in July, 1894, for the purpose of constructing a gutter under an agreement that they should rebuild the otas at their own cost after the gutter was constructed; that after the completion of the gutter the municipality refused to rebuild the otas in accordance with the agreement; that thereupon he applied to the general body of the municipal councillors, who decided against him on 24th August, 1895.

Under these circumstances the present suit was filed on 9th January, 1896, to compel the municipality to rebuild the otas, or, in the alternative, to recover damages for breach of the agreement.

The Court of first instance rejected the claim, holding that the suit was time-barred under s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884, as it was not filed within three months from the date of the act complained of.

On appeal, this decision was reversed by the Subordinate Judge A.P., who held that s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 had no application to the present case. The suit was, therefore, remanded for a fresh decision on the merits.

Against this order of remand the defendant municipality appealed to the High Court.

D. P. Kirloskar, for the appellant.—Section 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 is wide enough to cover a case like this. The plaintiff complains of a breach of agreement by the municipality and seeks to recover damages for such breach. Such a suit is within the scope of the section—Nagusha v. The Municipality of Sholapur (1). Moreover, in pulling down the plaintiff's ota in order to construct a gutter, the municipality were acting in exercise of the powers vested in them by the Act; the present suit is, therefore, an action against the municipality for an act done in pursuance of the Act. On this ground also the suit falls within s. 48 of the Act, and ought to have been brought within three months after the accrual of the cause of action.

[539] N. V. Gokhle, for respondent.—The contract made by the municipality with the plaintiff before his ota were pulled down, may no doubt be said to be an act done in pursuance of the District Municipal Act. But the Act does not, and cannot authorize the municipality to commit a breach of a contract. This suit is, therefore, not "an action for anything done or purporting to have been in pursuance of the Act" within the meaning of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884. Our cause of action is not the contract, but the breach thereof. The section does not apply to suits based on contracts—Mayandhi v. McQuaie (2); see also Manohar v. The Dakor Municipality (3), where Ranade, J., remarks that "claims based on contracts can never be included under this section." The ruling in Nagusha v. The Municipality of Sholapur(1) is practically overruled by the Full Bench decision in the case of the Dakor Municipality(3).

ORDER.

Parsons, J.—This suit was brought on the allegations that the plaintiff allowed the defendant municipality to remove some ota belonging to him, and that the latter agreed that they would rebuild them on the completion of a gutter which they intended to build beneath the site but that they now refuse to perform their agreement. It is thus a suit for specific performance of a contract, or for damages for breach thereof. Such a suit is not an action for anything done or purporting to be done in pursuance of the Bombay District Municipal Act; for the Act, though it may give the municipality power to make contracts, does not authorize them to refuse to perform them, and no section of the Act has been quoted as one under which they are now purporting to act. That s. 48 does not apply to actions on contracts was ruled in Mayandhi v. McQuaie (1), and was also stated in the judgment of Ranade, J., in Manohar v. The Dakor Municipality (3).

We confirm the order with costs.

[640] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

NEMAGAUDA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. PARESHA (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [2nd February, 1897.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 283 and 12—Execution—Attachment—Claim to attached property by holder of several mortgages—Order made on claim—Claim partly allowed and partly disallowed—Sale in execution—Suit for redemption by auction-purchaser within a year—Claim by defendant (mortgagee) in respect of mortgage disallowed by order—Such claim barred—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 11.

Certain property was attached in execution of a money decree. A intervened, and applied to have the property sold, subject to the incumbrances created in his favour by the judgment-debt under six mortgage-bonds. The Court after investigating A's claim passed an order directing the property to be sold subject to the mortgage-debt due under five out of the six mortgage bonds. This order was made on the 30th February, 1893.

In November, 1893, i.e., (within a year of the above order), B, who had purchased the property at the Court-sale, filed a suit to redeem the five mortgages subject to which the property had been sold. A contended that the property was also liable to the debt due under the sixth mortgage-bond. The District Judge held that A was entitled to have his claim under the sixth bond investigated in this suit, inasmuch as the plaintiff had filed this suit before the expiration of the year allowed to A to establish his right by art. 11 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), being of opinion that once the present suit had been filed A could not have sued under s. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). On appeal to the High Court.

Held, that A could not claim in the present suit in respect of the sixth mortgage-bond which had been disallowed by the order in execution on the 20th February, 1893. The rule is that an unsuccessful intervenor in execution proceedings must establish his right by a regular suit within twelve months, at the expiration of which the order passed in execution becomes conclusive against him. The fact that the purchaser had filed the present suit before the year had expired, did not exempt the defendant from this rule.

Section 12 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) did not affect the question. That section only provided that no suit shall be tried if the same issues are involved in a previously instituted suit. It does not dispense with the institution of a suit within the proper time when the law requires such institution.

[641] APPEAL from the order of remand passed by F. C. O. Beman, District Judge of Belgaum.

Suit for redemption. The property in question had been mortgaged by one Nemappa to the defendant under six mortgage-bonds.

In execution of a money decree obtained against Nemappa by another creditor, the property was attached. Thereupon the defendant intervened under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and asserted his lien as mortgagee upon the attached property under the six mortgage-bonds passed in his favour by Nemappa. On the 20th February, 1893, the Court passed an order directing that the property attached should be sold subject to the mortgage-lien created by five out of the six mortgage-bonds produced by the defendant. His claim under the sixth bond was disallowed.

* Second Appeal No. 29 of 1896.
The property was accordingly sold in execution, and plaintiff purchased it at the Court-sale.

In November, 1893, (i.e., nine months after the order in the execution proceedings) plaintiff as purchaser of the equity of redemption filed this suit to redeem the property from the mortgage-debts subject to which the property had been sold.

The defendant (mortgagee) contended that the property was also liable to the debt due under the sixth mortgage-bond.

The Court of first instance held that as the defendant had not sued to establish his right under this bond within one year from the date (20th February, 1893) of the order in the execution proceedings, that order had become conclusive under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that, therefore, the property was not liable to the debt due under the sixth mortgage-bond.

This decision was reversed, on appeal, by the District Judge, who held that as the present suit by the purchaser had been brought within a year of the order of the 20 February, 1893, (i.e., before the expiration of the time within which the defendant could have sued to establish his claim) the defendant had not lost his right to prove his claim in this suit. He was of opinion that once this suit was filed, a suit brought by the defendant for the purpose would have been barred by s. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On these grounds the Judge reversed the decision of the Court of first instance and remanded the case for trial on its merits.

Against this order of remand the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

S. R. Bakhte, for the appellant.

T. R. Kotwai, for the respondent.

The following authorities were referred to in argument:—Krishnaji v. Bhaskar(1); Nilo Pandurang v. Rama(2); Yashwant Shenvi v. Vithoba Shethi(3); Shivapa v. Dod Najaya(4); Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf(5); Bailur Krishna v. Lakshmana(6); Velayuthan v. Lakshmana (7).

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case, the lands in dispute belonged originally to one Nemappa, and were mortgaged by him with the respondent, original defendant. A creditor of Nemappa attached the lands in execution of his decree against him, and in these attachment proceedings the respondent applied that the sale might be ordered subject to the incumbrances created in his favour by Nemappa. On 20th February, 1893, the Subordinate Judge passed an order directing that the sale should take place subject to the mortgage-debt represented by five out of the six bonds produced by respondent. The sale accordingly took place, and the present appellant became the purchaser of the equity of redemption: and in November, 1893, he brought his suit for possession of the lands, offering to pay off the debts subject to which the sale had taken place.

The respondent in his written statement claimed in addition the debt due under the sixth bond. The Court of first instance held that as the respondent had not brought a suit under s. 283, his right to claim repayment of the disallowed debt was lost, and that the auction-purchaser was not bound to pay off that debt. A decree was passed directing redemption on payment of the sum due on the other bonds.

(5) 1 A. 381.  (6) 4 M. 302.  (7) 8 M. 506.
The District Judge in appeal reversed this decree on the ground that as the one year's period allowed by art. 11 of the Limitation Act to the respondent to establish his right had not expired when the suit was brought by the auction-purchaser, the order of 20th February, 1893, had not become conclusive, and that the respondent had not lost his right to require the Court to inquire into the validity of his claim on the disallowed bond. He also expressed his opinion that as the auction-purchaser had already brought his suit, a counter suit by respondent would have been open to the bar created by s. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code. He accordingly remanded the case back for a final decision on the merits.

The principal question we have to consider in this case is thus whether the respondent's right to claim re-payment of the disallowed mortgage-bond was or was not barred by reason of his not having brought a suit to establish the right which he claimed under it. We are of opinion that the District Judge was in error in holding that the bar did not operate in the present case, because of the fact that the appellant auction-purchaser's suit against the respondent was brought within twelve months from the order dated 20th February, 1893. The authorities are quite clear about the general position that the unsuccessful objector or intervenor, whether he happens to be plaintiff or defendant in the regular suit, is equally bound by the order in the miscellaneous proceedings, and that the only way open to him is to establish his right by a regular suit brought within twelve months, at the expiration of which period the order becomes conclusive as against him. The Court of first instance referred in its judgment to Nilo Pandurang v. Rama Patilji (1), Yashwant Shewri v. Vithoba Shetti (2) and Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf (3).

The District Judge does not appear to have discussed any of these cases in his judgment, nor were the earlier and later rulings on the same point represented by Rango v. Bikhivadas (4), [644] Krishnaji v. Bhaskar(5), Bailur Krishna v. Lakshmana(6), Velayuthan v. Laksmana (7) brought to his notice.

The law was clearly laid down in the first of these Madras cases in which the judgment states that "where a summary declaration of want of title in the objector is made in answer to a claim made by him to property under attachment, and when this order is not set aside by a regular suit within one year, it becomes equivalent to a final adjudication against him." In most of the cases noted above, the unsuccessful objector was defendant in the regular suit, and the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court have held that this circumstance was not at all pertinent and made no difference.

The District Judge appears to think that the present case was distinguished from the rulings noted above by the fact that in the present case the one year's time allowed by law had not expired when the suit was brought and the written statement was filed. We do not think that this circumstance warrants any departure from the general rule of law. It is true, in most of the cases noted above, the one year's time had expired, but apparently this was not the case in the two Madras cases. The judgment in Velayuthan v. Laksmana observes in regard to the earlier case—Bailur Krishna v. Lakshmana—that though the suit in that case had been brought within one year allowed to the objector, it was nevertheless held that the latter could not plead his right, though he might have himself brought a suit to establish it. Looking at the wording of s. 283, it is plain that the Legislature intended to provide only one remedy, that of a regular suit, to set aside the otherwise conclusive effect of the miscellaneous order, and it cannot be open to the objector to adopt any other alternative to get rid of the adverse order.

The respondent's pleader faintly suggested that there was no binding order in the present case, as the order in the miscellaneous attachment proceedings was silent about the disallowed debt, and only makes mention of the five other bonds. We cannot accept this contention. The circumstances of the present case clearly resemble those of Yashwant Shewri v. Vithoba Sheti, where out of two mortgage-bonds the debt due under one of them was recognized as a valid charge, and nothing was said of the other bond, apparently because it only provided that this latter debt should be paid off before the mortgage-debt was paid off. This circumstance did not, however, affect the order, so far as it disallowed the charge claimed.

It was also urged that the order was binding only as between the parties to it, and that the appellant-plaintiff, who was auction-purchaser, was not a party. This contention also must be disallowed. The question of parties raised in Shivapa v. Dad Nagaya (1) and Kartick v. Tilukdhari Lal (2) had reference to the rights of the judgment-debtor, who under the procedure now adopted is not a party to the attachment proceedings as between the attaching creditor and the intervenor or objector. The mortgagee-objector in the present case was admittedly a party, and he was unsuccessful, and the section gives clear directions as to what the unsuccesfully objecting party should do to prevent the adverse order from becoming conclusive against him.

Finally, the District Judge's reference to s. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code appears to be inconclusive. That section only provides that no suit shall be tried if the same issues are involved in a previously instituted suit in a competent Court. This provision is merely intended to secure general convenience; it cannot be construed as dispensing with the institution of a suit within the proper time when the law expressly requires such institution. On the whole, we feel satisfied that the District Judge was in error in reversing the decree of the Court of first instance and remanding the case for fresh inquiry.

We reverse the order of the District Judge and restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The respondent to bear appellant's costs in both the appellate Courts.

Order reversed.

VAMAN TATYAJI v. MUNICIPALITY OF SHOLAPUR 22 Bom. 847

[646] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

VAMAN TATYAJI and others (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v.
THE MUNICIPALITY OF SHOLAPUR (Original Defendants), Respondents. *[15th February, 1897.]

Municipality—Municipal fund—Misapplication of fund by municipality—Right of taxpayer to sue to restrain municipality from such misapplication—Parties—Practice—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1862), s. 30—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 56
cl. (k).

A suit will lie at the instance of individual tax-payers for an injunction restraining a municipality from misapplying its funds.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of G. Jacob, District Judge of Sholapur.

The plaintiffs, who were three in number, were tax-payers of Sholapur. They sued for an injunction to restrain the Municipality of Sholapur from expending any sum out of the municipal funds on the purchase of musical instruments for a band, which they had resolved to establish. The plaintiffs contended that this was not one of the purposes for which the municipality was authorized by law to spend municipal funds.

The municipality pleaded that the plaintiffs had no right to sue; that they had no cause of action; and that the proposed expenditure of municipal funds was not illegal.

The Joint Subordinate Judge of Sholapur, Rao Saheb A. G. Bhave, held that the plaintiffs as tax-payers were interested and were entitled to see that the money contributed by them to the municipal funds was properly applied; that the plaintiffs were, therefore, competent to sue. He further held that the municipality was not authorized to expend municipal funds in the manner proposed, and he, therefore, granted the injunction sought, restraining the municipality from carrying their resolution into effect.

On appeal the District Judge held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue in their individual capacity without proof of special damage. He, therefore, reversed the lower Court's decree and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

[647] The following extract from his judgment gives his reasons:—

"I am of opinion that the plaintiffs, as mere individual voters and taxpayers, representing their own opinions and wishes alone, have no right to sue for such relief. It is not pretended that the expenditure proposed will have the effect of adding to the burdens of the taxpayer, nor is it alleged that the presence of a band will be likely to trouble or annoy the plaintiffs in any way. They merely want to force their opinions against the majority of the commissioners, who voted in favour of the resolution.

"I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to sue as individuals without proof of special damage (see Broom's Common Law, 8th Ed., pp. 723–4). This would also, I think, be deducible from s. 56 (k) of the Specific Relief Act.

"If any individual were at liberty to harass a municipality by suits to set aside resolutions which do not meet with their personal approval, the conduct of the municipal affairs would obviously become impossible."

* Second Appeal, No. 565 of 1896.

1013
Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

M. B. Chauhgal, for appellants.

Rao Bahadur V. J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

TYABJI, J.—This suit was instituted by the plaintiffs as voters and tax-payers of Sholapur for an injunction restraining the Municipality of Sholapur from expending any sum of money out of the municipal funds on the purchase of a band of music on the ground that the resolution in favour of such a purchase was ultra vires.

The contention of the municipality was, that the plaintiffs had no cause of action, that they were not competent to sue, and that the purchase of a band was not illegal. The Subordinate Judge decided all these points in favour of the plaintiffs and passed a decree against the defendants.

The District Judge without deciding the question whether the purchase of the band would or would not be ultra vires reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the plaintiffs’ suit with costs, on the ground that the plaintiffs, as individual voters and tax-payers, could not maintain the suit. I am, however, of opinion that the District Judge was wrong in [648] the course pursued by him and that he ought to have decided the question of the legality of the proposal to purchase the band.

First, as to the question of pleading. It is no doubt true, as a general rule, that Courts of Justice will not permit individuals interested in any fund or estate to institute or maintain a suit without bringing before the Court all persons who are interested in the matter. The convenience and indeed the necessity of this rule is obvious; for, otherwise, different individuals might file different suits against the same defendants in respect of the same cause of action, and such defendants might thus be unnecessarily harassed by a multiplicity of suits. The ordinary method of avoiding this inconvenience and difficulty is by the plaintiff suing not only on his own behalf but also on behalf of all other persons in the same situation as himself (see Daniell’s Chancery Practice, 6th Ed., p. 194). This general rule has been expressly recognized by s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code and by cl. (5) of s. 13 which makes a decision in such a suit res judicata against all persons interested in the subject-matter of the suit. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the best and safest course for the plaintiffs would have been to proceed under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This general rule, however, is not without exceptions, and it is now clearly settled that any individual member of a corporation may file a suit for the purpose of restraining the corporation from doing any act which may be illegal or ultra vires of the corporation. In Simpson v. Westminster Palace Hotel Co. (1), Lord Campbell, Lord Chancellor, observed: “The funds of a joint stock company established for one undertaking cannot be applied to another. If an attempt to do so is made, this act is ultra vires, and although sanctioned by all the directors and by a large majority of the shareholders, any single shareholder has a right to resist it and a Court of Equity will intervene on his behalf by injunction.” This doctrine is more fully explained by Jessell, M. R., in Russell v. Wakefield Waterworks Co. (2), where he says: “It remains to consider what are those exceptional cases in which for the due attainment of justice, such a suit (that is a suit by [649] individual members) should be allowed. We are all familiar with one class of cases which are certainly the first exception to the rule. They are cases in which an individual corporator sues the corporation to prevent the corporation either commencing or continuing the doing of something which is beyond the powers of the corporation. Such a bill, indeed, may be maintained by a single corporator not suing on behalf of himself and of others, as was settled in the House of Lords in the case of Simpson v. Westminster Palace Hotel Co." Again in Hoole v. The Great Western Railway Co.(1), Lord Cairns, L.J., said : "I have a very strong opinion that any corporator or member of a company may maintain a bill against the corporation and the executive, to restrain them from doing an act which is ultra vires, and therefore illegal."

I confess I can see no substantial distinction between an individual share-holder or an individual policy-holder suing a company, in the funds of which he is interested, and an individual ratepayer suing a municipal corporation, to the funds of which he contributes, and in the proper application of which he is necessarily interested. His personal interest may be small, but it is not less real. The case of Attorney-General
v. Vestry of Bermondsey (2), which was relied on by the defendant's pleader, is not in any way inconsistent with this judgment. That suit was no doubt filed by the Attorney-General, jointly with an individual ratepayer, but there is nothing in it to show that even according to the practice in England, the individual ratepayer could not have maintained it by himself without the intervention of the Attorney-General. On the contrary, I think, it is an authority in support of our conclusion that a ratepayer has a sufficient interest in the funds of the Vestry to maintain an action, provided only it is properly framed.

Again in the case of Mayor &c. of Liverpool v. The Charley Water Works Co. (3), it was held that the plaintiffs there who sued without the intervention of the Attorney-General, were entitled to maintain that suit in so far as they had shown that they were in any way interested in the subject-matter of the suit, [650] and that they were not entitled to maintain it in so far only as they were absolute strangers. There Lord Cranworth in delivering judgment at p. 660 observed: "Still the question arises whether the acts of the defendants ...are acts of which the plaintiffs have any right to complain, or demand the prevention in the actual circumstances; for, though we accede to the general observation, that persons, obtaining from the Legislature powers like those before us...are bound strictly to adhere to the powers so conceded to them—to do no more than the Legislature has sanctioned ... yet it does not follow that any one of Her Majesty's subjects has a right to complain whenever Parliamentary powers of this nature are intended to be transgressed. In such cases (we of course except any proceeding at the instance of the Attorney-General) a plaintiff seeking the assistance of a Court of Equity by way of injunction is bound to show that he has an interest in preventing the defendants from doing what is in fact, or may well be called, a violation of their contract with the Legislature. He must show, not only that the defendants are committing or intend to commit a wrong, but also that the wrong, complained of, does occasion or will occasion loss or damage to him; that he has a special or private interest in confining the defendants within the limits of their Parliamentary powers. Now in this respect the corporation of Liverpool appear to us to have failed. The plaintiffs have no interest whatever in the lands, through or over which the water may be made to flow; and to them it must be matter of indifference, of no importance in any sense, whether it is carried by a longer or shorter line,—by an open channel or a culvert,—by a course convenient or inconvenient to the defendants."

From these observations it seems to me to be clear that although in England the Attorney-General may sue in every case for the purpose of preventing a corporation from exceeding its powers, yet a private individual can sue and indeed may only sue without the intervention of the Attorney-General, if, to use Lord Cranworth's words, "he has an interest in preventing the defendants from violating their contract with the Legislature." The principle on which, in England, the Attorney-General intervenes on behalf of the public for the purpose of preventing improper application of public funds, is thus stated by Sir J. L. Knight [651] Bruce, V. C., p. 427: "Where property affected by a trust for public purposes is in the hands of those who hold it devoted to the trust, it is the privilege of the public that the Crown should be entitled to intervene by its officers for the purpose of asserting on behalf of the public generally that public interest and that public right which probably no individual could be found willing effectually to assert, even if the interest were such as to allow it"—Attorney-General v. Compton (1).

It, therefore, follows that if there are individuals sufficiently interested and sufficiently public-spirited to enter into litigation with a powerful public body, there is nothing especially in a place like Sholapur, where there is no such public officer as the Attorney-General, to prevent their doing so. This right of the individuals to sue, is also forcibly stated by Green, J., in Shepherd v. The Trustees of the Port of Bombay (2), in these terms: "There can, I think, be no doubt that if the Port Trustees or any other corporation or public company in Bombay were to do or attempt to do any act in excess of their powers, as contained in the charter or legislative act from which they derive their being, and such act would be injurious to the rights of property of an individual, such individual would, on general principles, have a right to the protection of this Court by injunction or other appropriate relief." These authorities seem to me to show very clearly, first that the plaintiffs can sue in their individual capacity if they are sufficiently interested in the municipal fund, and secondly, that any interest however small is sufficient to entitle them to do so.

As I have already said before, the plaintiffs in the present case, as ratepayers, are, in my opinion, not mere strangers, but are directly interested in the proper application of the municipal funds. The absence of interest could have been urged against them with great force, if they had been merely inhabitants of Sholapur and not ratepayers, and as such contributors to the fund. It would, in my opinion, have been fatal to them if they were not even residents of Sholapur and, therefore, not interested in the administration of the Sholapur Municipality at all. In [652] this case, however, the observations of Lord Cranworth already quoted above, directly apply to the plaintiffs, and in my opinion sufficiently dispose of the District Judge's argument based upon s. 56 of the Specific Relief Act, cl. (k), as to the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' interest as individual ratepayers.

(1) 1 Y. & C. (Ch.) 417. (2) 1 B. 132 (149).
I am, therefore, of opinion that the decree must be reversed. We must remand the case to the lower Court with a direction to record a finding on the issue, whether the resolution in favour of purchasing the band is ultra vires or not, having regard to the provisions of s. 24 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873).

PARSONS, J.—This suit was brought by three taxpayers against the Municipality of Sholapur to obtain an injunction restraining the latter from expending any money out of the municipal fund on the purchase of a band which they had resolved to buy, the allegation being that such expenditure was ultra vires and unauthorized by law. The District Judge without deciding upon this allegation dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue as individuals without proof of special damage.

I am of opinion that this decision cannot be supported. Section 18 of the Bombay District Municipal Act of 1873 creates the municipal fund, and s. 17 of the same Act vests it in the municipality to be held and applied by them as trustees for the purposes of the Act, which purposes it proceeds to state in detail. An appropriation, therefore, of the fund or any part thereof to a purpose not allowed by the Act, would be a breach of trust on the part of the municipality. In the case of individuals and companies, co-trustees or beneficial owners or individual shareholders would be entitled to sue for an injunction to prevent such a breach of trust; see s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, illustrations (b), (c), (d).

It is, however, argued before us that the plaintiffs as individual taxpayers have no personal interest in the fund or its application, and cannot, therefore, maintain the suit—see s. 56 (k) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. I am unable to accept this argument as sound. No doubt the personal interest [653] of an individual taxpayer in a large municipality, and in the case of a small expenditure from the fund, might be very little indeed; but it would always be something, and in the case of a small municipality and a large expenditure it might be very great; much, too, would depend upon the amount of taxes the individual had paid or was liable to pay. It is clear, therefore, that the actual amount of personal interest must be disregarded, and that it is sufficient if there is any personal interest at all. That personal interest must, I think, be held to exist in the case of every individual taxpayer, since he who is liable to contribute to the fund cannot but be interested in its proper application. It was conceded in argument by the pleader for the defendant that the suit for an injunction would lie if brought by the whole body of taxpayers, or if brought by one on behalf of all the others under the provisions of s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code. But if the whole body of taxpayers can sue, it can only be because they are interested in the proper application of the fund; and if the whole body are so interested, it can only be because they contribute and are liable to contribute to the fund. It seems, therefore, to me to follow that each individual who contributes, and is liable to contribute, to the fund, must be held to be personally interested in the due application of that fund and does not, therefore, fall within the prohibition of cl. (k) of s. 56 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. My learned colleague has dealt with the case on the English law authorities. I am glad to be able to come to the same conclusion on the Indian statute law, for there is no Attorney-General in this country in whose name such suits as these could be filed, and it would, I think, be monstrous if a municipality seeking to misapply its funds were not liable to a suit to restrain them so doing at the instance of a taxpayer for whom they really hold the fund in trust. We agree to reverse the decree and remand the appeal for a decision on the real point at issue, viz., the legality of the expenditure which the

The proviso to sub-clause (i) of cl. 18 of the Civil Circular Orders of the High Court (1), namely, that a pleader may appoint another pleader on his behalf, and that in such case the hearing will proceed, unless the Court see reason to

[R. 9 O.C. 65.]

REFERENCE by F. G. O. Beaman, District Judge of Belgaum, under
s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The circumstances which gave rise to the reference were stated by the Judge as follows:—

“ar pleader of the Athni Court appointed another pleader to appear for him without the authorization of the client. The (Subordinate) Judge refused to recognize the appointment, and held that the party was not represented. In my opinion the Judge below was right. Section 54 of Reg. II of 1827 (2) contains the statute law on the subject. According to that, there [685] can be no doubt that the action of the pleader was illegal, and that the Judge was right in refusing to recognize it. * * The difficulty arises out of the words of cl. (i) of s. 18 of the High Court Circular order.
The only judgment on the point with which I am acquainted, is reported

* Civil Reference, No. 13 of 1896.

(1) Bombay High Court Civil Circulars, 1889, No. 18, cl. (ii).—The Courts have no-power to give leave of absence to pleaders. Any pleader unable to attend the Court for any cause contemplated in cl. 1 of s. 54 of Reg. II of 1827 should follow the procedure therein laid down: Provided that he may appoint another pleader to appear in his behalf, and in such case the hearing will proceed, unless the Court see reason to the contrary.

(2) Bombay Reg. II of 1827:—

Section 54—First.—If a pleader is unable to attend the Court in consequence of indisposition or other necessary cause, he shall notify the same to the Court in writing, in which case proceeding in the suit shall be stayed for such time as the Court deems reasonable to enable the party to transfer by endorsement or otherwise his power of attorney (either temporarily or until the suit is determined) to another pleader: and any pleader absenting himself without written notice as above prescribed may be punished by fine not exceeding Rs. one hundred, to be adjudged by the Court in which the failure of duty occurred, and levied as the amount of a decree by the same.

Second.—In case of the resignation, dismissal or death of a pleader, proceedings in the suit shall in like manner be stayed.
at p. 67 of Printed Judgments, 1895, where the Judges of the High Court gave full effect to the provisions of the Legislature. * * I may add that since the proviso in cl. (i) of s. 18 of the Circular Orders practically overrides s. 54 of the Regulation and can scarcely be held to be consistent with either the terms or the policy of that section, while it is difficult to show with what part of the Civil Procedure Code it is consistent, it may well be doubted whether the order is not ultra vires."

The opinion of the Judge was that one pleader could not appoint another for him without the authorization of the client.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan (amicus curiae) appeared against the reference.—Section 18 of the Circular Orders does not contravene but merely extends the operation of s. 54 of the Regulation. Section 652 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) empowers the High Court to frame rules. See also s. 635 of the Code and s. 15 of the Charter Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104. The Allahabad High Court has also framed a similar rule and it was held to be valid—Matadin v. Ganga Bai (1). The case of Shivdayal v. Khetu (2) is distinguishable. In that case the defendant did not accept the substituted pleader as his pleader, while in the present case the party did so.

Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar (amicus curiae) appeared in support of the reference.—Section 18 of the Circular Orders is ultra vires and is not consistent with s. 652 of the Civil Procedure Code. The ruling in Shivdayal v. Khetu (2) shows that the Civil Procedure Code does not allow the transfer of a case by one pleader to another. Regulation II of 1827 merely declares the common-law rule, that one agent cannot appoint another agent. Section 15 of the Charter Act also requires that the rules framed by the High Court should not be inconsistent with the law in force. Section 18 of the Circular Orders is inconsistent with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and Reg. II of 1827.

JUDGMENT.

FABRAN, C.J.—This reference directly raises the question as to the legality of the proviso to cl. 18 (i) of Chap. I of the Circular Orders of this Court printed at p. 11 of the publication which directs that a pleader may appoint another pleader to appear on his behalf, and that in such case the hearing will proceed unless the Court sees reason to the contrary. In Shivdayal v. Khetu Gangu (2), it was held by Sargent, C. J. and Fulto, J., that under the Civil Procedure Code a duly appointed pleader could not delegate to another pleader his authority to appear for his client in the Presidency Court of Small Causes so as to render the appearance of the latter an appearance for the client. The Civil Circular above referred to did not apply to the Small Cause Court, so that decision does not really touch the question now before us. The decision was based upon the principle that potestas delegata non potest delegari unless expressly or impliedly authorized by the Legislature, and that it was not so authorized. The Legislature could, there can be no doubt, vary that principle in connection with pleaders, and a rule duly made under legislative authority would have the same effect as if enacted by the Legislature itself. A similar rule was held to be a valid rule by the High Court at Allahabad in Matadin v. Ganga Bai (1). That rule, however, applied only to pleaders appearing in the High Court itself. It was made under s. 635 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(1) 9 A. 613. (2) 20 B. 293.
The power of the High Court to make general rules for the procedure and conduct of business in the Subordinate Courts is derived from Statutes 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104, s. 15, and from s. 652 of the Civil Procedure Code. Under the former statute it is provided that such general rules shall not be inconsistent with the provisions of any law in force, and under the latter such rules must be consistent with the Civil Procedure Code itself.

The first question which has to be determined is whether the above rule is consistent with cl. 1 of s. 54 of Reg. [657] II of 1827 which is a law still in force. It ensues that when a pleader is unable to attend the Court in consequence of indisposition or other necessary cause, he shall notify the same to the Court in writing, in which case proceedings in the suit shall be stayed  to enable the party to transfer by endorsement or otherwise his power of attorney (either temporarily or until the suit is determined) to another pleader. That enactment plainly does not authorize one pleader getting another pleader to hold his brief, but the question is whether a rule which gives that additional power to a pleader is inconsistent with it. Can the two stand together? The section is intended to prevent a client being prejudiced by the absence of his pleader. It does not appear to us to be inconsistent with that protection that a pleader should (still being himself responsible) request another pleader with the leave of the Court to appear for him. The legality of the rule does not appear to us to be affected by that enactment. The rule merely adds a proviso to the section which is not at variance with its general purport.

We must now consider whether the Rule (i) can stand having regard to ss. 36 and 39 of the Code. Section 36 is an enabling section and (omitting reference to authorized agents with which we are not now concerned) enables any appearance, application or act which is required or authorized to be done by a party to be done by a pleader duly appointed to act in his behalf. Section 39 provides that the appointment of a pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act shall be in writing and filed in Court. The result is that a pleader whose appointment is in writing and filed in Court can appear for his client just as the client could do himself. We cannot see, as the Allahabad High Court could not see, anything inconsistent with that enactment in a rule which authorizes a pleader (without ceasing to be responsible to client) to ask another pleader to hold a brief for him. This is what the rule does by way of proviso to the section—"Provided that a pleader may appoint another pleader to appear in his behalf and in such case the hearing will proceed unless the Court see reason to the contrary." The section regulates the mode in which a party must appoint a pleader. The rule provides how in certain cases the pleader so appointed may with [658] the leave of the Court transact the business with which he is so entrusted. The rule was passed to facilitate the work of the Court, and to obviate the unnecessary postponements of cases, and is one which has, we believe, worked well. For many years it has been in existence without objection being made to it.

As to the objections now made to it by the District Judge, they refer more to its possible abuse than to its legality. With reference to them it must be remarked that the rule is merely permissive with the leave of the Court. If a client objected, the Court would doubtless see reason to the contrary, and so if it considered that the rule was being abused. It was certainly never intended to allow experienced pleaders to transact their clients' business by the agency of inexperienced juniors, but only to avoid unnecessary adjournments in unimportant matters when the pleader engaged by the party is temporarily absent. We answer the question in the negative.

Order accordingly.

Marriage—Contract of marriage—Contract to pay money to a father for giving his child in marriage—Public policy.

A contract which entitles a father to be paid money in consideration of giving his son or daughter in marriage is against public policy and cannot be enforced in a Court of law.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb V. M. Metha, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.

Suit for recovery of damages for breach of a marriage contract.

The defendants were the minor son and the widow of one Chhagan Purshotam, deceased. The plaintiff alleged that Chhagan in his lifetime had contracted to give his daughter Ganga in marriage to his (the plaintiff's) son, and the plaintiff now sued to [659] recover Rs. 605 as damages in breach of that contract. The following statement of facts is taken from the judgment of Tyabji, J.:

"The plaintiff had a son, and one Chhagan Purshotam had a daughter, and it was agreed between the plaintiff and Chhagan that Chhagan should give his daughter in marriage to the plaintiff's son and should also pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 337 for pischeramni and Rs. 51 for purat, making together Rs. 388. In furtherance of this agreement the plaintiff gave to Chhagan's daughter a kudda worth Rs. 15. Chhagan having died, and his widow and son having refused to carry out the agreement, this suit was brought. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the value of the kudda, but refused to allow the plaintiff's claim to the Rs. 402 for pulla given by the plaintiff to the other girl, whom the plaintiff's son afterwards married, on the ground that the plaintiff would, according to his own admission, have been obliged to pay the same amount of pulla to Chhagan's daughter if the agreement had been carried out. He also rejected in toto the plaintiff's claim to the Rs. 388, on the ground that the agreement by Chhagan to pay any such sum to the plaintiff was immoral and against public policy.

* Second Appeal No. 735 of 1896.
“On appeal, the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge and confirmed the decree on the ground that the agreement to pay the peheramni and the purat to the plaintiff was void.”

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Goverdhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellant (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arises, sued to recover damages from the defendants, the widow and son of one Chhagan Purshotam, for breach of a contract, whereby Chhagan agreed to give his daughter in marriage to the plaintiff’s son. The agreement provided that Chhagan should pay the plaintiff Rs. 337 as peheramni and Rs. 51 as purat at the time of the marriage.

[660] The plaintiff, when the marriage contract was broken, married his son to another girl to whom he gave Rs. 402 as pulia, but he received no peheramni from the father of the bride. He admitted that he would have had to pay the same sum as pulia to Chhagan’s daughter had the original contract been carried out, so that on that account the breach of the contract caused him no loss. The only damages which he could show as arising out of the defendants’ breach of Chhagan’s contract were, therefore, loss of the peheramni and purat which Chhagan had agreed to pay to him at the time of the marriage. The lower Courts have held that the agreement, in so far as it stipulated that the plaintiff should be paid Rs. 388 on the marriage of his son, was contrary to public policy and void under s. 23 of the Contract Act.

The argument for the appellant is twofold: (1) that peheramni thus paid to the father of the bridegroom at the marriage is, in reality, made as a provision for the bridegroom, or bridegroom and bride (as pulia is given as a provision for the bride) and does not constitute a payment to the father for his own benefit; and (2) that the payment of peheramni to a father upon the marriage of his son is a customary caste payment regulated by the usages of the caste, and that there is nothing immoral or contrary to public policy in a father stipulating for such a payment, or for its amount.

As to the first argument, I think it is plain upon the pleadings, and it was so understood in both the lower Courts, that the claim was made by the plaintiff in his own right, and not by him suing on behalf of his son. The extracts which Mr. Goverdhanram has read to us from Boradaile’s Caste Customs show that peheramni on occasions of marriage is sometimes given to the bridegroom and sometimes to his father, and at times to his other relations to secure their approval of the marriage, or to disarm their opposition to it. There is no ground, therefore, for the contention that it should be assumed that the peheramni in the present case is sued for by the father on behalf of his son. We must, I think, take it, as the lower Courts have done, that the plaintiff is suing on his own account and that the contract was that it should be paid to him. Were it otherwise, it is the son who should sue for damages under this head, and not the father.

[661] The suit is, I think, in effect, though not in form, a suit to give effect to the agreement of the father for peheramni on the marriage of his son. The question, therefore, directly arises whether a contract which entitles a father to be paid peheramni on the marriage of his son is against public policy. When a father or other guardian of a boy or girl has to betroth his ward, his primary and only consideration ought to be the happiness and welfare of the child. The stipulating for a monetary payment for himself is, or may be, I think, an incentive to the parent or other guardian to have regard to other considerations than the child's happiness in marrying him or her into another family. The danger is manifestly less obvious in the case of a father seeking a wife for his son than in that of a father seeking a husband for his daughter, but in principle it would be difficult to distinguish between the two. Such an agreement would clearly be invalid under English law. The principal authorities are collected by Jardine, J., in Dulari v. Vallabdas (1).

Such contracts do not appear to me to be less opposed to public policy because the children to be married are of tender years and have no voice in the matter. The duty imposed on the parent is, I think, even more direct and imperative in such cases. The English law has been followed in our High Court by Jardine, J., in Dulari v. Vallabdas (supra) and by Scott, J., in an earlier case there referred to, and I think that we ought also to follow it. The decision on the reference in Jogeswar v. Panch Kauri (2) is somewhat opposed to this view. There the pun money had been paid to the brother of the girl who was to be married. The marriage having gone off, the intending bridegroom sued to recover it back, and it was held that he could do so. There was no argument, and the judgment, for which no reasons are assigned, was based upon the particular circumstances of the case. It was not, I think, intended as a decision that such pun money could be recovered in an action by the brother. This case was followed in Ram Chand Sen v. Audaito Sen (3), but Garth, C. J., expressed in his judgment in the latter case a strong opinion that a suit to enforce such an agreement would [662] not lie. The other cases cited before us—Umed Kika v. Nagindas (4); Mulji v. Gomti (5); Rambhat v. Timmayya (6)—have no direct bearing upon the question which I am considering. They decided that damages, if suffered, can be recovered for the breach of such a contract as the present, and that money paid or ornaments given for the benefit of the bride or bridegroom, or of both, can be recovered by suit if the marriage contract is broken.

As to the argument of Mr. Goverdhanram that to enforce such a payment is merely giving legal effect to a legal caste custom, I think that there is a great distinction between a father contracting for a sum to be received by him on the marriage of his child and receiving a customary present upon such an occasion. The latter is a voluntary payment enforceable possibly by caste rules and regulations, but not affording ground for an action at law. The former is the reduction to the form of a binding agreement of a custom harmless in itself so long as it is voluntary and in accordance with caste rules, but capable of abuse and opposed to public policy when it takes the shape of a contract which the Courts are called upon to enforce. If this Court were to enforce such a contract when the agreed amount is small and in accordance with caste principles, it would be impossible, I think, to treat other contracts of a similar kind, but differing only in amount, as unenforceable. I would confirm the decree appealed from with costs.

TYABJI, J.—In this case the plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 790 as damages for the breach of a contract of marriage, and Rs. 15 as the value of a kudda ornament given to the intended bride. The sum of Rs. 790 was made up as follows:—viz., Rs. 337, which was agreed to be paid to the plaintiff as peheramni, Rs. 51 which was agreed to be given to him as purat at the time of the marriage, and Rs. 402 which was the amount of the palla which had to be paid to another girl after the breach of the defendant's agreement.

The facts of the case are as follows (His Lordship stated the facts as above set forth and continued):

[663] On appeal, the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge, and confirmed the decree on the ground that the agreement to pay the peheramni and the purat to the plaintiff was void.

The only question argued before us was, whether the lower appellate Court was right in holding that the agreement, so far as the peheramni and the purat to the plaintiff were concerned, was invalid.

In considering this question it must be remembered that the plaintiff was the father of the intended bridegroom, and, therefore, stood in the position of a guardian. We take it to be quite clear, that under the English law an agreement to pay money to a father in consideration of his giving his child in marriage would be considered as being against public policy, and would not be enforced.—See Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity, Vol. I, p. 260 (5th Ed.), Duke of Hamilton v. Lord Mohun (1), Osborne v. Williams (2) and the cases collected under Scott v. Tyler in White and Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity (7th Ed.), Vol. I, p. 535.

The same doctrine has been applied by the Bombay High Court to the cases of Hindu fathers and guardians. In Jaikisondas v. Harkisondas (3), Green, J., followed and applied the injunction of Manu, where it is laid down (s. 51):—"Let no father who knows the law receive a gratuity, however small, for giving his daughter in marriage, since the man who through avarice takes gratuity for that purpose is a seller of his offspring." Again in Pitambar v. Jagajivan Hansraj (4), Scott, J., said: "Was this contract, in so far as it promised money payment for the negotiation of a marriage by a third party, immoral and contrary to public policy? In England such a contract would not be enforced at law—Keane v. Potter (5). It would be held to be against public policy and public interest as having a tendency to cause matrimony to be contracted as a mere matter of bargain and sale, a 'kidnapping into conjugal servitude,' as one of the Judges expressed it." See also Dulari v. Vallabdas Pragji (6) where Jardine, J., approved and followed Scott, J.'s decision.

[664] The above authorities seem to me to establish conclusively that a promise to pay money to a Hindu father, in consideration of his giving his son or daughter in marriage, cannot be enforced in a Court of law. It is no doubt true, however, that the Asura form of marriage, which is legal among the lower castes, is nothing more than the purchase of a wife from her father by the husband. It has, therefore, been contended that so long as such a form of marriage is permitted, payment of money to the father of a boy or girl cannot be illegal and must be enforced. I agree, however, with Scott, J., in thinking that this argument is not well-founded, for though the Asura form of marriage when actually performed may be recognized as valid, it does not follow that an agreement for such a marriage would be legally enforced. Manu himself condemns it strongly, and lays it down in s. 24 that "the ceremonies of Asura must never be performed." I think, therefore, that though the money if actually paid to the father in consideration of the marriage cannot be recovered back when once the marriage is solemnized, it by no means follows that a suit to recover the money, where it has not been paid, would lie. It is no doubt true that it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a suit will lie to recover money paid to the father or guardian if the contract for the marriage is broken: see Jogeswar v. Panch Kauri (1) and Ram Chand Sen v. Audaito Sen (2). It must be observed, however, that in this last case Garth, C.J., drew a distinction between a case to enforce an agreement for payment such as this is and a case to recover back money already paid such as was before him. There the defendant in consideration of a hundred rupees had promised to give his minor daughter in marriage to the plaintiff; the defendant failed to fulfil his part of the promise, and the plaintiff brought the suit to recover the money which he had paid as consideration for the promise, and Garth, C.J., at p. 1055 observed:—

"In this case I have grave doubts whether the opinion of the Judge of the Small Cause Court" (who had held that the suit was not maintainable as being contrary to public policy) "is not correct: and if we were now asked to enforce an agreement to [665] pay pont to a girl's father in consideration of his giving her in marriage, I should have wished to refer the case to a Full Bench. But the facts are these. The plaintiff paid Rs. 100 to the defendant No. 1 in consideration of his giving his daughter to him in marriage, and the defendant No. 2, who is a brother of the defendant No. 1, was a party to the contract. After the money was paid, the defendant No. 1 failed to fulfil his promise and gave his daughter in marriage to some one else. The plaintiff now seeks to recover back his money, and the defendant attempts to take advantage of the illegality of the contract by way of a defence to the claim. Under these circumstances I consider that the case referred to Jogeswar v. Panch Kauri (1) is directly in point, and apart from the question whether the contract is illegal, the justice of the claim is entirely with the plaintiff. Upon the authority of that case, therefore, and because it is manifest justice that the defendants should not be allowed to retain the money, I agree that the claim should be decreed.

"Had the question been whether as against the plaintiff we could enforce payment of the Rs. 100 to the defendant No. 1, I should have doubted very much whether we ought to do so. In England, a bargain of this kind, for payment of money to a father, in consideration of his giving his daughter in marriage, is considered to be a marriage brokerage contract and illegal as against public policy ... And without going the length of saying at present, that I consider such contracts to be illegal in this country, I certainly should be disposed, as at present advised, to hold that they were so far void as to be incapable of being enforced by the rules of equity and good conscience."

I am of opinion that the distinction drawn by Garth, C.J., is clear and well-founded, and that, though payment of money once made to a father cannot be recovered if the marriage is performed, as in the case of an Asura marriage, and that though it can be recovered if already paid when the marriage is not performed, as in the cases before the Calcutta High Court, yet no suit will lie to enforce the payment if not already made as in the cases before Scott and Jardine, JJ. This conclusion will, I think, be [666] found to reconcile all the cases which are to be found on the subject (see Rambhai v. Timmayya (1), Umed Kika v. Nagindas (2), Mulji Thakersey v. Gonti (3), Ranee Lallun Monee Dossee v. Nobin Mohun Singh (4) and Amratlal v. Bapubhai (5)).

Applying the above principles to the present case, it seems to me that the plaintiff must fail, from whatever point of view his claim is considered. If Chhagan's promise to pay the peheramni and the purat to the plaintiff was the consideration for the plaintiff giving his son in marriage to Chhagan's daughter, it is void as being contrary to public policy; for I can see no distinction between the father of a girl and the father of a boy, so far as this point is concerned. If on the other hand the peheramni and the purat formed no part of the consideration, but was an independent collateral arrangement, sanctioned or recognized by the caste—if, in other words, it was not to be the consideration for the marriage, but merely as a voluntary gift or present to the plaintiff as the bridegroom's father, I see nothing in it which can be properly considered immoral or against public policy. It is the practice among most communities in India to make presents not only to the bride and the bridegroom but also to their parents and relations, and nothing which I have said in this judgment is intended to convey that I look upon such a practice as improper or vicious from a moral point of view, however much I may deploreat it on other grounds. It is obvious, however, that even in this view of the case, which is, however, not the view taken by the lower Courts, the plaintiff must fail; for, a promise to make a present or gift being without consideration cannot be enforced in a Court of law. In this connection I may observe that the distinction between the Bombay and the Calcutta cases will be more intelligible, and the apparent conflict between them will be better reconciled, if we remember that in the Bombay cases the payment was the direct consideration for the marriage, whereas in the Calcutta cases it was more in the nature of a gift or present made in contemplation of the marriage, on the understanding that it was to become absolute and complete if the marriage actually took place, but was to be returned if it was broken off. It is true that this is not directly stated to be the ground on which the Calcutta decisions were based, but it seems to me to be the ground on which they can be best supported consistently with the doctrine that it is illegal for a father to receive money in consideration of giving his child in marriage, as laid down in the Bombay cases.

It was, however, contended before us that though the peheramni and the purat was ostensibly to be given to the plaintiff, yet he was to receive it in reality for the benefit of his son, and can, therefore, be recovered. It is a sufficient answer to this argument to say that the suit is brought by the plaintiff personally, and not on behalf of his son, and that there is nothing in the case to support this contention. It is clear that presents such as peheramni and purat are often made to the father and other relations of the boy for their own benefit (see 2 Boradoraile's Gujarat Caste Rules, p. 597, Question 25), and there is nothing in the case to show that these were intended for the plaintiff’s son rather than for the plaintiff personally. For the above reasons, we must hold that the promise to pay the peheramni and the purat to the plaintiff personally cannot be enforced, and we must, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed with costs.

Possession—Symbolical possession obtained in execution of former decree—Fresh suit against the same defendants to obtain actual possession.

A plaintiff who has obtained only symbolical possession in execution of a former decree is entitled to maintain a fresh suit against the same defendant to obtain real possession.

[F., 25 B. 358 (361); R., 25 B. 275 (280); 16 C.P.L.R. 109; 17 M.I.J. 598.]

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Gangadhar V. Limaye, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar.

[668] Suit for possession of land and for mesne profits.

The plaintiffs alleged that in October, 1875, their father had obtained a decree for possession against the defendants which decree was finally confirmed by the High Court in 1878; that in January, 1886, in execution of that decree they had obtained symbolical possession, but that when they applied for actual possession it was, at the defendant's instance, decided that having obtained symbolical possession, no further possession could be awarded to them in execution. They, therefore, now sued to recover actual possession of the land in question together with mesne profits.

The defendants contended (inter alia) that the suit was not maintainable, and that the plaintiff's remedy lay in the execution of the former decree.

The Subordinate Judge found that the delivery of symbolical possession to the plaintiffs in execution of the former decree was not proved, that a suit for the recovery of the land was barred by the former suit, but not the claim for the recovery of mesne profits. He, therefore, rejected the claim for possession, and awarded to the plaintiffs Rs. 2,023-2-0 for mesne profits.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Inverarity with Shamrao Vithal, for the appellants (plaintiffs).

Branson with Vishnu K. Bhatavdekar, for the respondents (defendants).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—If the plaintiff obtained symbolical possession under the decree of October, 1875, it is in our opinion unquestionable law that the plaintiff can maintain a fresh suit to obtain real possession from the defendants, and the Court will not scan with too great nicety the averments of the plaintiff, if his plaint in substance shows that he seeks to recover the possession which the original decree in his favor awarded him.

Such being the plaint in this suit, and the defendants being admittedly in possession after the alleged symbolical possession, the only question for determination is, did the plaintiff obtain symbolical possession. In the original suit when the plaintiff asked for further possession, it was at the defendants' instance [669] decided that the plaintiff had 'already obtained symbolical possession, and that no further possession could be awarded to him in execution. This appears to us to be decisive of the question. The matter has become res judicata between the parties, and it is immaterial upon what grounds the judgment proceeded, and it is also immaterial that the plaintiff did not originally in his pleadings rely upon the judgment as absolutely decisive in his favour. He put the judgment in evidence, and full effect ought, in our opinion, to have been allowed to it. We must allow the appeal with costs.

CHAMANLAL AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Appellants v.
BAPUBHAI (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.*
[25th February, 1897.]

Vatan—Cash allowance—Suit for arrears of share—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. 11, art. 62—Res judicata—Point of law decided in previous suit between same parties—Decree for future payment of share—Practice—Procedure.

The plaintiff in this suit sought to recover eleven years' arrears of his share in a certain Government allowance received by the defendants and also prayed for an order directing the defendants to pay him and his heirs his proper share in future. The defendants contended that under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) only three years' arrears could be recovered. In a previous suit brought by the plaintiff in 1874 against the same defendants it was decided by the High Court that twelve years' arrears could be recovered. The lower Court now held that this decision continued to bind the parties, and that, therefore, the present claim should be allowed. It accordingly passed a decree for the amount claimed and also directed that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff and his heirs for the future his share in the allowance.

Held (varying the decree) that the plaintiff under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was only entitled to recover arrears for three years.

A point of law though decided in a suit between the same parties can never be res judicata.

Held, also, that the order in the decree as to payment in future was bad. It could not be executed, as the amount of the allowance was variable and the [1870] defendants were not liable until they obtained payment of the allowance from Government.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

In 1894 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover eleven years' arrears (viz., 1882-1893) of his share in a cash allowance received annually by the defendants from the Government treasury and for an order directing the defendants to pay him and his heirs his proper share in future.

The defendants pleaded that under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 62, the plaintiff could only recover three years' arrears.

* Second Appeal No. 739 of 1896.
It appeared that in 1869 the plaintiff had obtained a decree declaring his title to a share of this allowance, and by that decree six years’ arrears were awarded to him.

In 1874 he sued again for arrears for twelve years, viz., from 1862 to 1874, and in that suit the High Court awarded the whole of his claim, holding that it was not barred by limitation under s. 132 of Act IX of 1871 (I.L.R., 5 Bom., 68).

In the present suit the Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff’s claim, and also directed the defendants to pay in future to the plaintiff and his heirs his share in the allowance.

This decree was confirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge, who held that the High Court’s decree in the former suit of 1874 being between the same parties was conclusive and binding on the parties as to the plaintiff’s right to claim twelve years’ arrears. His judgment on this point was as follows:

"The next point which arises is that of limitation. While the plaintiff claims eleven years’ arrears, the defendant contends that he can claim only three years’ arrears. In the judgment in I.L.R., 5 Bom., p. 68, the High Court held that the plaintiff could recover up to twelve years. It is true that that ruling has been dissented from by their Lordships in I.L.R., 7 Bom., 191, and I.L.R., 8 Bom., 426. I am, however, humbly of opinion that the early ruling, which was in a suit between the same parties, continues to bind those parties, although in other causes and as between other litigants the ruling may have been dissented from or overruled. The only way in which the decision in I.L.R., 5 Bom., 68 can be set aside as between the parties is by a judgment of the Privy Council, and pending such decision I hold that the plaintiff can recover up to twelve years of arrears."

[671] Against this decision the defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Ghanasham Nilikant with G. S. Rao, for appellants.—The lower Court was wrong in holding that the High Court’s ruling in the former suit on the question of limitation operates as res judicata between the parties. That ruling is no longer good law. It is expressly dissented from in subsequent cases—Harmukhgowri v. Harisukhprasad (1); Maneklal v. Shivlal (2); Dulabh v. Bansidharrai (3). A decision on a question of law does not operate as res judicata—Purhasaradi v. Chinnakrishna (4).

G. M. Tripathi, for respondent.—The ruling in Chhaganlal v. Bapubhai (5) is conclusive and binding on the parties to this suit.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—We do not think that the decision of this High Court in a suit between the same parties, that arrears for twelve years could be awarded—Chhaganlal v. Bapubhai (5)—is res judicata in the sense that this Court is bound ever after to decide that a claim for twelve years’ arrear is good. That decision was passed when either Act XIV of 1859 or Act IX of 1871 applied to the claim. The present suit was brought after Act XV of 1877 came into force, and it, therefore, must be applied. This Court has, in several more recent cases, held that the decision in Chhaganlal v. Bapubhai was not correct one—see Harmukhgowri v. Harisukhprasad (1); Desai Maneklal v. Desai Shivlal (2); Dulabh Vakjii v. Bansidharrai (3). It appears to us that a point of law can never be res judicata. It has been held in Parthasaradi v. Chinnakrishna (1) that:

"the erroneous decision by a competent tribunal of a question of law directly or substantially in issue between the parties to a suit does not prevent a Court from deciding the same question, arising between the same parties in a subsequent suit, according to law."

We must, therefore, decide this case according to what we believe to be the correct interpretation of the law contained in the Limitation Act and reduce the amount of arrears awarded to [672] that due for the three years preceding suit, viz., Rs. 17-7-10. We can find no precedent for such an order in the decree as that the defendants shall pay in future to the plaintiff and his heirs his share in the allowance without giving any further trouble. It could not be executed, for the amount of the allowance is variable, and defendants are not liable till they recover payment from Government. We must erasure that from the decree, substituting therefor a declaration of the plaintiff's title. We amend the decree in the two points above mentioned; in other respects we confirm it. The respondent must bear the costs of this appeal.

Decree confirmed.

RAVJI APPAJI KULKARNI and ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. MAHADEV BAPUJI KULKARNI (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [2nd March, 1897.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 22—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 27—Court sale—Benami purchase—Suit by benami purchaser—Addition of real purchaser as co-plaintiff—Continuation of suit.

The plaintiff Ravji as owner of certain land brought this suit on the 31st January, 1894, for damages for loss of crops, and in respect of loss caused by the defendant's obstructing him in cultivating the land. The dates of the causes of action set forth in the plaint were, respectively, the 12th September, 1891, the 12th March, 1892, February, 1892, and 27th October, 1892. In the course of the proceedings, the defendant ascertained that Ravji was not the real owner of the land, but had purchased it and was holding it benami for his uncle. Ravji admitted that he had no interest in the land. On the 30th March, 1896, Ravji's uncle applied to be made a party to the suit, and was thereupon added as second plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge on the merits passed a decree awarding damages to the second plaintiff. The defendant appealed, and in appeal for the first time objected that Ravji (plaintiff No. 1) being only a benamidar could not bring the suit in his own name, and that the claim of the second plaintiff, or a large portion of it, was barred by limitation under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The District Judge reversed the decree on the point of limitation and dismissed the suit. On second appeal to the High Court.

[673] Held that the lower appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the suit, and that the appeal should be heard on the merits.

Per Parsons, J.—That any defect there might have been in the suit as originally filed by the first plaintiff, who was only benamidar, had been cured by the Court acting under s. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Bhola Pershad v. Ram Lall(2) and Subodini Debi v. Cumar Ganoda(3) followed.

* Second Appeal No. 688 of 1896.

(1) 5 M. 304. (2) 24 C. 34. (3) 14 C. 400.
Per RANADE, J.—The first plaintiff as benami purchaser had full right to bring the suit. If the true owner holds back, a decree against a benami owner would bind him as res judicata. The present suit was, therefore, properly instituted. The addition of the second plaintiff’s name made no difference in the character of the suit. The defendant was stopped by his conduct in the previous proceedings, carried on between him and the first plaintiff for over seven years, from questioning his right to sue. The rights of the parties must, therefore, be dealt with on the footing that the first plaintiff had a right to bring this suit, and that he fully represented in his own person all the rights of the second plaintiff, for whom he acted as agent all along. The joinder of plaintiff, No. 2 on 30th March, 1895, did not, therefore, deprive plaintiff No. 1 of his rights or create a new period of limitation as held by the lower Court of appeal.

SECOND appeal from the decision of S. Tagore, District Judge of Satara, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Islampur.

Suit for damages. The defendant Mahadev and his brother Balkrishna were owners of certain land which Balkrishna mortgaged. Subsequently in execution of a decree against Balkrishna his right, title and interest in the land were sold. The plaintiff Ravji became the purchaser, and then paid off the mortgage-debt and obtained possession of the property. The defendant Mahadev then sued Ravji for his half-share of the land, and obtained a decree for partition on payment of his portion of the mortgage debt. The defendant paid the amounts into Court in September, 1889, and partition was effected in September, 1890. The plaintiff Ravji objected to the partition as unfair, and a fresh partition was made in October, 1892.

On the 31st January, 1894, the plaintiff Ravji alone brought this suit against the defendant Mahadev for Rs. 1,695 as damages, alleging that after the first partition was made the defendant on [674] 12th September 1891, took possession of the crops of 1890 which had been raised by plaintiff. He complained also of the loss of the crops of 1891, putting the date of that loss as the 12th March, 1892, of loss by the defendant’s obstructing him in cultivating the land in 1892, and of the loss of certain manure wrongfully taken by the defendant. The dates of those two last mentioned causes of action were the 27th October, 1892, and February, 1892, respectively.

The defendant answered (inter alia) that the plaintiff had no right to claim the standing crops, inasmuch as they were raised after the partition decree was passed; that he never obstructed the plaintiff in the cultivation of his share; and that he had not taken any manure belonging to the plaintiff.

In the course of the proceedings, the defendant ascertained that Ravji (plaintiff No. 1) had purchased the property benami for his uncle. He thereupon objected that the plaintiff had no right to sue in his own name. On the 30th March, 1895, Ravji’s uncle applied to be made a party to the suit, and was made a party plaintiff (plaintiff No. 2). Ravji (plaintiff No. 1) admitted that he had no interest in the property.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the second plaintiff, awarding as damages Rs. 702.

The defendant appealed and raised the objection that the suit was barred by limitation under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The Judge allowed the objection and reversed the decree, holding that plaintiff No. 1 being only a benami could not sue in his own name, and that the second plaintiff was added as a party too late, viz., more than three years after the date of the cause of action.

The plaintiffs filed a second appeal.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—Though plaintiff
No. 1 admittedly purchased the property benami for plaintiff No. 2, still he being the certified purchaser could maintain the suit—ss. 315 and 317 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). A benamidar can bring a suit in his own name—Nand Kishore Lal v. Ahmad Ata (1), Shangara v.
Krishnan (2). [675] No issue was raised in the first Court as to whether plaintiff No. 1 alone could institute the suit, or as to whether the claim was time-barred. It was only in appeal that the defendant raised the point of limitation. Even supposing that plaintiff No. 1 was not entitled to bring a suit in his own name, still the whole of our claim would not be time-barred. Our claim to damages for the year 1892 was not barred.

Further, no change was effected in the nature of the suit by joining plaintiff No. 2 at a later stage. After joining him the same suit continued at the instance of two plaintiffs instead of one.

Gangaram B. Relle, for the respondent (defendant).—A benamidar is not entitled to bring a suit in his own name—Kalee Prosunno Bose v.
Dinonath Bose (3); Hari Gobind Adhikari v. Akhy Kuar (4). The suit as it was originally brought was not properly constituted, being brought by plaintiff No. 1 alone. Plaintiff No. 2, being the real owner, was the proper person to bring the suit, and when he was joined, the claim was clearly time-barred.

JUDGMENT.

Parsons,J.—The District Judge has reversed the decree of the first Court and dismissed the plaintiffs’ suit on the ground that plaintiff No. 1 was a benami purchaser for plaintiff No. 2, and plaintiff No. 2 not having been added as a party till the 30th March, 1895, the claim by him is time-barred. He has overlooked the fact that for the crops of 1892 the cause of action is said not to have arisen till the 27th October, 1892, so that that claim would not be time-barred.

The correctness of the rest of the decision depends upon whether the suit was rightly brought in the name of the first plaintiff. It appears that at the Court sale the right, title and interest of Balkrishna, who had mortgaged the property to the Belages, was purchased by the first plaintiff.
He then sued the Belages and obtained a decree for redemption and was placed in possession on payment of the amount of the debt. He was then sued by the present defendant, who obtained a decree for partition on payment of his share of the debt. This suit is the result of what was done in the execution of that decree.

[676] No objection was taken to the suit when it was filed by the plaintiff in January 1894. It was not till the 30th March, 1895, that the defendant said the plaintiff had admitted in another suit that the land was not his, and asked that his suit be dismissed, upon which the second plaintiff asked to be joined as a co-plaintiff and was so joined; but the point of limitation was not raised until the case came up to the Court of appeal. The benami character of the purchase is admitted by the plaintiffs, so that there is no doubt that the second plaintiff is the

(1) 18 A. 69. (2) 15 M. 267. (3) 19 W.R. 435. (4) 16 G. 364.
owner of the property. Considering, however, that all the former transactions were in the name of the first plaintiff, I should hesitate before deciding that this suit was wrongly filed in his name.

The decision as to whether a suit can be maintained in the name of the benamidar only are somewhat conflicting. In what is perhaps the latest reported case on the point, Bhola Pershad v. Ram Lal (1) it was held that a decree could be made in his favour, unless objection was taken, but I need not examine these cases here, since any defect that there may have been in the suit as originally filed has now been cured by the Court acting under s. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). In a similar case the Calcutta High Court has ruled that the original suit is continued and that the change of names does not affect the question of limitation. See Subodini Debi v. Cumar Ganoda (2). Adopting that decision for the purposes of this suit I would reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court, and remand the appeal for disposal on the merits. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Ranade, J.—In this case, appellant No. 1 (as sole plaintiff) instituted this suit on 31st January, 1894, to recover damages in respect of four items, the causes of action for which were stated to have accrued due on four different dates, for the crops of 1890 on 12th September, 1891, for the loss of crops of 1891 on 12th March, 1892, for loss by obstruction caused in 1892 on 27th October, 1892 and for the value of certain manure in February, 1892.

Appellant No. 1 as auction-purchaser of the right, title and interest of one Balkishna, brother of respondent, had paid off a mortgage-debt due by Balkishna and respondent, and taken possession of certain land. Later on, respondent obtained a decree for a partition of his half-share in the land, and in execution of this decree the first partition took place on 12th October, 1890, and this was set right by a second partition effected on 27th October, 1892. The respondent (original defendant) did not, in his written statement, question appellant No. 1's right to bring the suit in his own name, but later on he raised the objection, and thereupon appellant No. 2 was made a co-plaintiff on 30th March, 1895, on his own application, as being the party really interested in the field, and for whom appellant No. 1 had purchased at the auction, and had carried on the subsequent execution and partition proceedings. The Court of first instance disposed of the claim on its merits by awarding a part of the damages claimed to appellant No. 2.

In appeal, a preliminary objection under s. 22 of the Limitation Act was raised by the present respondent, and the District Judge held that the objection was fatal to the claim of both plaintiffs, as plaintiff No. 1, being only a benamidar, could not bring the suit in his own name, and the claim of plaintiff No. 2, his uncle, was made more than three years after the cause of action accrued due, reckoning the date of the institution of the suit to be 31st March, 1895, when he was joined as a party. He held that the claim was barred under art. 109.

Mr. Bhagvat on behalf of the appellants contended, chiefly on the authority of the ruling in Nand Kishore Lal v. Ahmad Ata (3) and Shangara v. Krishnan (4), that the lower Court was in error in holding that the appellant No. 1 as benamidar could not institute the suit in his own name. It was further contended that even accepting the view of the lower Court on this point to be correct, it was in error in holding that the claim in respect of all the four items was time-barred, seeing that the cause of action for the third item accrued due on 27th October, 1892, within three years from the date when appellant No. 2 was made a party.

As regards the first objection, I am of opinion that there was nothing irregular in the institution of the suit by appellant [678] No. 1. He was the certified purchaser. He obtained possession by paying off the mortgage-debt. Respondent sued him in the partition proceedings. Even in this suit he did not raise any objection to appellant No. 1’s right to sue in his written statement. Under these circumstances appellant No. 1’s admission later on that he was only a benamidar purchaser for his uncle, who was the real owner, did not affect the right under which he had carried on these proceedings for so many years, in his own name, at least as between him and the respondents. A benamidar, who is a certified purchaser, acquires certain rights under his certificate of sale, and among these rights is the right to recover possession of the land, and not even the true owner for whom he made the purchase can under s. 317 question his right except in the way pointed out in the latter part of the section. The object of that section has been judicially declared to be to protect third parties who might deal with the certified purchaser against the claims of the undeclared or secret owner who put forward the certified purchaser as legal owner—Bodh Singh v. Guneshchunder Sen (1), Mor Joshi v. Muhammad Ibrahim (2). If the benamidar himself raises no objection, and admits the title of the true owner, or the owner obtains a transfer of possession, s. 317 does not come in the way of the true owner asserting his right as against third parties or vice versa—Satapa v. Karbusapa (3) and Karamuddin v. Niamut Fatehna (4), but all this implies the consent of the benamidar.

In Kallir Prosunno Bose v. Dinonath Bose (5) the Calcutta High Court did indeed express an opinion that if the certified purchaser is a benamidar, the name of the true owner should be joined as co-plaintiff, and that the omission to do so would justify the dismissal of the suit. In a later case—Hari Gobind Adhikari v. Akkoy Kumar (6)—it went much further, and held that a benamidar could not maintain a suit for the recovery of the land bought by him. The Allahabad High Court in its judgment in Nand Kishore Lal v. Ahmad Ata has, however, carefully examined all the authorities on the subject, and has shown good reasons for its [678] dissent from the Calcutta ruling. The Madras High Court has adopted a similar view in Shangara v. Krishnan.

We are inclined to agree with the Allahabad and Madras High Courts, and hold that a benami certified purchaser can sue in his own name even when the true owner’s name is disclosed. In Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gunarpersaud Gosain (7) and Mussunmat Buhuns Kowar v. Lalla Buhooree Lall (8) this whole subject has been examined by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and the theory that benami transactions are presumably fraudulent has been shown to be not correct.

This review of the authorities shows clearly that appellant No. 1 as benami purchaser had full right to bring the suit. If the true owner holds back, a decree against the benamidar owner would bind him as res judicata. The present suit was, therefore, properly instituted. The addition of appellant No. 2’s name made no difference in the character of the suit. The respondent was estopped by his conduct in the previous proceedings.

carried on between him and appellant No. 1 for over seven years from questioning his right to sue. The rights of the parties must, therefore, be dealt with on the footing that the appellant No. 1 had a right to bring this suit, and that he fully represented in his own person all the rights of appellant No. 2 for whom he acted as agent all along. The joinder of appellant No. 2 on 30th March, 1895, did not, therefore, deprive appellant No. 1 of his rights, or create a new period of limitation as held by the lower Court of appeal.

We may note also that even if the District Judge's view on the first point be accepted as correct, he was plainly in error in rejecting the claim for Rs. 194 which is alleged to have become due on 27th October, 1892, and part of which was allowed by the Court of first instance.

For these reasons, we reverse the decree of the lower Court and remand the case for a decision on the merits.

Decree reversed and case remanded.
SECOND appeal from the decision of F. C. O. Beaman, District Judge of Belgaum.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land, alleging that the defendants were his tenants and denied his title. Defendant No. 8, who alone resisted the plaintiff's claim, pleaded [681] that he was a co-sharer with the plaintiff and that they owned the land in equal shares.

In the Court of first instance the defendant proposed that, if the plaintiff would take an oath that the defence was false and that he (the plaintiff) had been in exclusive possession and enjoyment of the land in dispute, he would withdraw from the case.

The plaintiff refused to take the oath as proposed.

The Subordinate Judge attached no importance to this refusal by the plaintiff to take the proposed oath, and decided, on the evidence before him, that the plaintiff was the sole owner of the land in dispute, and passed a decree in his favour.

On appeal the District Judge reversed this decision, holding that the plaintiff's refusal to take the oath rendered it impossible to resist the conviction that the truth lay on the side of the defendant. On this ground alone the District Judge reversed the decree of the lower Court and rejected the plaintiff's claim.

The following is an extract from the judgment:

"The defendant's contention is that although the land was entered in the plaintiff's name, that was because it formed a part of the undivided estate (another part outlying in other villages) and that notwithstanding the plaintiff always paid the defendant his share of the rent pursuant to the understanding evidenced in the documents, fraudulent or otherwise, of 1858. The defendant went further and agreed that, if the plaintiff would swear a binding oath that his presentation of the case was false, he (the plaintiff) had had exclusive possession and had never paid to him (the defendant) his half-share of the phala, he (the defendant) would at once withdraw from the case. The plaintiff refused to take the oath on the ground that he was an old man.

"Now it is evident, on the pleadings and record, that, apart from this business of the oath, the evidence is all in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant had to rely on the solitary statement of one witness to prove the payment once of his share eight years ago.

"But I am greatly inclined to decide this case by the ordeal. There is nothing in the Oaths Act, 1873, which enjoins upon a Court the duty of presuming adversely to plaintiff or defendant who refuses to take an oath tendered under its provisions. It was once held (Issen Meah v. Kalvram (1) per Mitter, J.), that a Court was well justified in doing so, and in practically deciding the case on the presumption so drawn. Mitter, J., is of course a particularly valuable [682] authority on such a point; he is especially qualified to gauge the working of a native conscience and apportion the real value to be attached to such a refusal. But in this case more happened. At the hearing I asked the plaintiff to come forward and say why he would not take the oath if his allegations were true. He is an old man and was represented by his son, a priest of apparently about 45. This man was instructing Mr. Chhatre and was the active mover in the case. He refused on behalf of his father to take the oath, though at first he was partly disposed to take it himself. Not being a party, however, that would not do. He then in his turn said that if the defendant would take a similar oath of the truth of his case, he for his part would not oppose the appeal further. This the defendant at once agreed to do. Now I doubt whether such a tender could be made by any one but the actual party, and Mr. Chhatre very rightly declined to ratify the proposal without instructions from his client. Yet the mind of the Court was inevitably influenced by this episode in favour of the defendant (appellant). The point at issue is very simple, and it is one on which while all the evidence might well be (as it is) on the plaintiff's side, there might be a true explanation such as the defendant gives. When, then, such explanation being difficult of proof the defendant comes forward and stakes his whole interest on the plaintiff's oath that his apparently true evidence is really true, and the plaintiff refuses to take that oath; when, in turn, the plaintiff's side tenders a like challenge to the defendant which is promptly accepted, it is impossible to avoid the conviction that truth lies on the side of the defendant. It is all very well to say, as was faintly urged here, that a defendant ought not to have the option of imposing this kind of unpleasant ordeal on a plaintiff; that respectable natives have a great dislike to taking any sort of solemn oath of the sort, and so forth. But it has to be remembered that in tendering an oath under the Act the party so tendering stakes his whole case absolutely on his confidence in his opponent's veracity under a peculiarly solemn sanction, that if the oath be taken it concludes the case against the party tendering it, while if it be refused, the law says nothing about the view which the Judge is to found on the episode; so that it is not an ordeal which could be lightly and generally proffered. I have no doubt at all, from my observation of the demeanour of the parties while the point was under discussion, that the defendant was in the right, and as, after all, the main function of a Court is to see justice done, though the approaches to that result may be a little irregular, I shall venture here to answer the issue in defendant's favour, and hold that he is entitled to one half he claims."

Against this decision plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

B. A. Bhargav, for appellant.
N. V. Gokhale, for respondent.

JUDGMENT.

[683] Parsons, J.—The point which I have to consider is, how far the Judge of the lower appellate Court was justified in disregarding the evidence on the record and deciding the case on a presumption drawn from the refusal of the plaintiff to take a solemn oath under the Oaths Act of 1873 that defendant's presentment of the case was false. I assume that there was such a refusal, because although the statement in the Ex. 39 is signed by plaintiff's pleader, I take it that he had asked his client and was stating to the Court what his client had said. The refusal, however, was made in the Court of first instance, and the Judge of that Court said that under the circumstances of the case he attached no importance to the refusal. There was no refusal by the plaintiff himself in the appellate Court; his son only was present there, and it would have been much better if the District Judge had caused the plaintiff himself to be asked whether he would take an oath or abide by the result of an oath taken by the defendant, before he decided the appeal in the way he has done.
So far as the Oaths Act itself deals with the subject, no presumption one way or the other is directed to be drawn. The refusal to take an oath, then, can only be a piece of conduct, which is evidence to be considered in the case. I do not know, and the Judge does not tell me, why in this particular case the refusal should be considered as conclusive evidence of the falseness of the claim. In order, therefore, to support his decision I should have to hold that in every case in which a plaintiff is called on to take an oath, and refuses to do so, judgment is to be passed against him. I am satisfied that this would not be right. There are many good reasons why a man should refuse to solemnly swear to the truth even of a true claim. It is in the case of a false defence that a defendant would most readily as a last resource risk everything on the chance of an oath being taken by the plaintiff. I think that, at the most, a refusal can only be considered along with other evidence. Where there is evidence on both sides, and a doubt arises as to which is the true case, then a refusal might well be taken into evidence to decide the point. Such was the case in Issen Meah v. [684] Kalam Chand Nah (1). I do not think that a refusal can be held to work as an estoppel, so as to conclusively prove the falseness of the claim made by the person refusing.

As the Judge finds that the evidence is all in favour of the plaintiff, and that the defendant would not resist the claim otherwise than by what the Judge calls the ordeal, and as I think he has wrongly decided the case by the ordeal, I must reverse his decree and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in both Courts of appeal on the defendant.

Ranae, J.—The contest in this case lies between the appellant, who claims the land in dispute to belong exclusively to himself, and the respondent (original defendant No. 8), who contends that he and the appellant are entitled to share it equally as reversionary heirs of Shankar after his widow Umabai's death. The undisputed facts are, that these two parties were reversionary heirs, and had, in 1858, agreed to keep this land joint, when they partitioned other property. In 1864, the appellant took a kabulayat of the land from the tenants in his own name, and in 1866, after Umabai's death, the land was entered in the appellant's name, and all the rent-notes from 1867 to 1893 were taken by him. The respondent contended that the appellant during all this time paid a portion of the rent to him, but the Court of first instance held that these alleged payments were not proved. Respondent then offered to give up his contention, if appellant denied on solemn oath that he ever paid a portion of the rent to respondent. The appellant refused to take the oath, but the Court of first instance attached no importance to this refusal, and awarded the appellant-plaintiff's claim.

In appeal, the District Judge, while admitting that, apart from the oath incident, the evidence was all in favour of the present appellant, held that the appellant's refusal to take the oath prescribed satisfied him that the present respondent was in the right, and he accordingly allowed respondent the half-share claimed by him.

The point we have to consider is, whether the District Judge was justified, by the terms of the Oaths Act, in inferring from [684] the appellant's refusal to take the oath, that he had been paying his half-share of the rent to the respondent, when admittedly all the evidence on the record supported appellant's claim. Section 9 of the Act provides that, if any party to a proceeding offers to be bound by any special oath under s. 8, if such oath be made by the other party, the Court may ask such other party or cause him to be asked if he will make the oath. If such other party agrees to make the oath, the oath may be administered to him (s. 10). The evidence so given shall, as against the party who offered to be bound by the oath, be conclusive proof of the matter stated (s. 11). Finally, if the party refuses to make the oath, the Court shall record as part of the proceedings the nature of the oath, and the fact of refusal with reasons for such refusal (s. 12).

It will be seen from these sections that, while a party, who makes an oath as prescribed by his adversary, confers by so doing on his statement the character of conclusive proof, his mere refusal to make the oath does not, under the terms of the Act, justify any legal presumption against him. The refusal is to be considered apparently as a piece of conduct—evidence in the case, to be judged of along with other evidence. Of course where, as in the case reported in Issen Meah v. Kalaram Chunder Naw (1), there is no such other evidence, the refusal by itself may justify the Court in presuming that his case was false. But where, as in the present case, there is abundant evidence all in favour of the party refusing to make the oath, the mere refusal will not necessarily constitute a sufficient reason to set aside that evidence. As ruled in Muhammad Zahur v. Cheda Lal (2), following in this respect an earlier ruling in Vasudena v. Naraina Pai (3), the Oaths Act does not constrain the Court to pass a decision in favour of a particular party. This is the case, even if the party make the oath prescribed. His statement on such oath will, of course, bind the other party pro tanto, but it does not prevent the Court from exercising its mind judicially in deciding the whole case. A party may well refuse to take the oath prescribed for other reasons than his consciousness that his case is [886] false. He may, as a respectable man, dislike the odium of winning his case on the strength of the oath ordeal, instead of on the strength of his evidence. This seems to have been the case with the present appellant. If the whole evidence was in his favour, he might very well refuse to take the ordeal. The proceedings in the District Court do not even show clearly that appellant was not, like the respondent, ready to stake the case on his adversary’s oath. On the whole, we feel satisfied that the District Judge was bound, under the circumstances, to dispose of the case solely on the evidence before him, irrespective of the oath incident. We accordingly reverse the decree and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. All costs on respondent.

Decree reversed.

[3rd March, 1897.]

*Mortgage—Mortgage-debt payable by instalments—Money decree obtained by mortgagee for two instalments—Execution—Sale of mortgaged property in execution of money decree for such instalments without notice by mortgagee of lien for future instalments—Property sold free of incumbrances—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 237 and 267.

The effect of ss. 237 and 267 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) plainly is to impose a duty on the person applying for execution to disclose to the Court his own lien (which he must know of) in his application for sale, and on the Court the duty of specifying the same in the proclamation.

Where, therefore, in execution of a simple money decree obtained for some of the instalments due on his mortgage-bond a mortgagee brought to sale the property which he held in mortgage, but in his application for execution did not mention his lien on the property for the instalments that were still to fall due.

 Held, that the purchaser, if he supposed that he was purchasing the full proprietary title, purchased the property free of the mortgagee’s lien.

Agarechand v. Rakhatia (1), Kheravji v. Lingaya (2), Sheshgiri v. Salvador Vas (3) and Dhondo v. Raoji (4) referred to.

[687] SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Obunjil Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhubia with appellate powers, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb R. T. Kirtane, Subordinate Judge of Erandol, in the Khandesh District.

Suit by a mortgagee to recover instalments remaining due on his mortgage.

On the 25th April, 1885, the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 mortgaged the property in question to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,000 which was to be repayable in five instalments.

The first instalment was paid by a bond executed to the plaintiff by his debtors. After the second and third instalments fell due the plaintiff brought a suit for their amount, asking in his plaint that the property should continue liable for the instalments that were still to fall due. The Court, however, passed a simple money decree in his favour for the amount sued for.

Having obtained this decree the plaintiff applied for execution by sale of the mortgaged property. In his application he made no mention of his lien upon it for the fourth and fifth instalments of his debt. The execution sale took place, and the right, title, and interest of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was sold to one Dohu, whose widow afterwards sold it to defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The certificate of sale obtained by Dohu described the subject-matter of the sale as the right, title and interest of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the property.

In 1895 the plaintiff filed this suit to recover the fourth and fifth instalments due under his mortgage from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.
personally and by sale of the mortgaged property in the hands of defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 admitted the claim.

Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 contended that the property having been sold in execution, and no notice having been given by the plaintiff of his mortgage, it was sold free of the incumbrance and was no longer liable to the plaintiff’s claim.

The Subordinate Judge passed a personal decree only against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the fifth installment, being of opinion that the fourth was barred by limitation, having fallen due on [683] the 8th November, 1888. He dismissed the suit against defendants Nos. 3 and 4, holding that plaintiff not having given notice of his mortgage at the execution sale the property was free of the incumbrance. On appeal the Judge confirmed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Ratanji R. Desai, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The lower Court was wrong in holding that the mortgaged land was no longer liable, because at the auction sale we did not notify our lien in respect of future installments. No such duty is imposed upon us by the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882)—Dhondo v. Raogi (1). The mortgage was registered and all subsequent purchasers took the property with notice of the mortgage and, therefore, of the unpaid installments.

The Judge erred in not allowing us to recover both the installments. They were a charge on the land. Article 132, seh. II, of the Limitation Act applies, and the whole of our claim was in time—Lallubhai v. Naran (2).

Sadashiv R. Bakhle, for respondents (defendants).—The point of limitation depends upon the view which would be taken as to whether the land continued to be charged. If it is not, the limitation would not be twelve years under art. 132, but six years. Article 132 applies only when money is sought to be recovered out of the property charged with it—Ramdin v. Kolkka Pershad (3); Kameswar v. Rajkumari Rutton Koer (4).

The plaintiff cannot recover the money out of the land by reason of his failure to notify his lien on the property when he brought it to sale in execution of his own decree. The ruling in Dhondo v. Raogi (1) can be distinguished. There it seems it was conceded that if the sale had been in execution of a decree on the mortgage, the decision would have been otherwise. Here the sale was in execution of plaintiff’s own decree on the mortgage for two previous installments. Under s. 267 of the Civil Procedure Code the plaintiff was bound to specify the incumbrance [689] to which the property was subject if he knew of it. Much more was his duty to do so when he brought the property to sale for part of his mortgage-debt—Tinnappa v. Murugappa (5); Agarchand v. Rakhma(6). Owing to the plaintiff’s omission to disclose his lien at the execution sale he is now estopped from claiming out of the mortgaged property. At the sale both the interest of the mortgagor and mortgagee passed to us—Khevraj v. Lingaya(7); Sheshgiri v. Salvadar Vas (8).

If the plaintiff intended to sell only a limited interest in the property he should have stated it, and not having done so we purchased the whole interest not subject to any future installments. We paid full value for the purchase as found by the Judge. We would not have done so if we had known that the property was subject to any charges.

Ratanji R. Desai, in reply,—The Judge had not found expressly as to whether the auction-purchaser was led to pay a full value in consequence of our omission to proclaim our lien. Nor is it a fact that full value was paid, for though originally the property was sold for Rs. 300, it was immediately afterwards mortgaged for Rs. 1,000. The value, therefore, must be more than Rs. 300.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAJ, C. J.—This appeal raises a question upon which the rulings of our Court do not appear to be altogether consistent. On the 25th April, 1885, Jairam, the father of Shamji (defendant No. 1), and the defendant No. 2, Gangaram, by a registered deed mortgaged certain property to the plaintiff to secure payment of the sum of Rs. 1,000 payable by five instalments. For the first instalment the plaintiff accepted a bond from his debtors. After the second and third instalments fell due he filed a suit to recover their amount, asking by his plaint that the mortgaged property should continue liable for the instalments that were still to fall due. The Court, however, passed a simple money decree in his favour, considering, it must be presumed, that the plaintiff by a properly framed application could work out the decree in the manner which he desired in execution.

[690] The plaintiff applied (Ex. 16) for execution of the decree by sale of the property which he held in mortgage, but did not therein mention his lien on the property for the fourth and fifth instalments. The right, title and interest of the defendants in the property in question was accordingly put up for sale and purchased by one Dodhu for Rs. 300.
Dodhu’s widow subsequently sold the property to the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The certificate of sale (Ex. 12) described the subject-matter of the sale as the right, and interest of the defendants in the property.

The lower Courts have found that Rs. 300 was the full value of the property, as the plaintiff to whom it had originally belonged had sold it for that sum to Jairam and Gangaram. This does not appear to us to be a satisfactory mode of ascertaining its value. The plaintiff advanced Rs. 1,000 on the security of the property, which points to its value as being, at the date of the mortgage, considerably more than Rs. 300. The basis which the lower Courts adopted to ascertain the value of the property at the date of the Court’s sale, seems to us to be mere guess work, and if it was of importance to ascertain the value, was not one which should have been so readily assumed.

The plaintiff in 1895 filed the present suit to recover the fourth and fifth instalments due under his mortgage from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 personally and by the sale of the mortgaged premises in the hands of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. This claim as against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 has been disallowed in both the lower Courts, but a personal decree has been passed against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the fifth instalment only, the appellate Court holding that the claim for the fourth instalment was barred by limitation. The latter ruling is plainly correct under the decision of the Privy Council in Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (1) and Kameshwar v. Rajkumari (2). The fourth instalment became due on the 8th

1) 12 I.A. 12.
2) 19 I.A. 394.
November, 1898, while the suit was not brought until 1895, more than six years after that date.

As to the plaintiff's claim against the mortgaged property, it has been held by the lower appellate Court that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had in his previous suit asked for a declaration of his lien for the remaining instalments, which prayer the Court did not grant, he was bound to notify his lien in the execution proceedings, especially when he saw that the purchaser was paying the full value of the property.

In Dhondo v. Raoji (1) it was held that when the holder of a registered mortgage, having obtained a money decree upon a separate claim against his mortgagor, without notifying his lien put up the mortgaged premises for sale, and the same were purchased by a third person without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage, the mortgagee could still, except in the case of a fraudulent concealment, enforce his mortgage against the property in the hands of the bona fide purchaser without notice. The decision is based upon the theory that the purchaser had notice of the mortgage by reason of its being registered, and professes to follow the rulings in P. J. 1877, p. 4 (Motiram v. Hari) and P. J. 1877, p. 83 (Nanabhat v. Lakshman). In these cases the sales took place under the old Civil Procedure Code of 1859. The present Code, s. 237, contains the following provision:

"Whenever an application is made for the attachment of any immovable property belonging to the judgment-debtor, it shall contain * * a specification of the judgment-debtor's interest therein to the best of the belief of the applicant, and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same."

This the applicant is to verify. Section 287 provides that on a sale by the Court of immovable property by auction, the proclamation shall specify any incumbrance to which the property is liable. The effect of these two sections plainly is to impose a duty on the applicant to disclose to the Court his own lien (which he must know of) in his application for sale, and on the Court the duty of specifying the same in the proclamation. This was pointed out in the judgment in Tiwallapa v. Murugappa (2). The old Code did not expressly impose any such obligation on the judgment-creditor. It may, therefore, be doubted whether the decisions above quoted from the P. J. of 1877, really support the decision in Dhondo v. Raoji, and whether the distinction drawn between the latter case and Agarchand v. Rakhma (3) is (492) not too fine.

If an execution-creditor refrains from in any manner notifying that he holds a lien over the property which he brings to sale, it matters little to the purchaser, who does not know of the lien, what the motives of the execution-creditor are in refraining to notify that which he is bound in law to disclose. Fraud is not a necessary ingredient in raising an estoppel. It is not, however, necessary for us to do more than express our doubt as to the soundness of the distinction between the two cases, for it is admitted in Dhondo v. Raoji (supra), that the ruling does not apply to a decree obtained on a mortgage. Upon a Court's sale held at the instance of a mortgagee under a decree upon his mortgage, it has been held that both the interest of the mortgagor and of the mortgagee passes, though the right, title and interest of the mortgagor only is ostensibly sold—Khevraj v. Lingaya (4) and Sheshgiri v. Salvador Vas(5).

(1) 20 B. 290.  (2) 7 M. 107.  (3) 12 B. 678.  (4) 5 B. 2.  (5) 5 B. 5.

This is of course only when the sale is not expressly limited to the lesser interest.

In the present case, it is not expressly found by the appellate Court that the purchaser DodhBau supposed that he was purchasing the full proprietary title in the property which he bought at the Court sale, but there is a finding to that effect by the Court of first instance, and the appellate Court does not dissent from that view and, we think, intends to adopt it. If that be so, we think that under the ruling in Agarchand v. Rakhma (supra) as well as under the decisions above quoted from the 5th Vol. of the Bombay Series of the I. L. Reports, the decree of the lower appellate Court is correct. The purchaser, if he knew of the mortgage, was entitled to assume, unless notified to the contrary, that the plaintiff was selling the whole interest in the mortgage property, and if he did not know of the mortgage, that the plaintiff at all events had no lien over the property which he was bringing to sale, and was not, under the provisions of the present Code, bound to search the register to ascertain whether the plaintiff held a lien over the property or not. Decree confirmed with costs.

HEERA NEMA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. PESTONJI Dossabhoy AND ANOTHER (Defendants). * [4th March, 1898.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 257-A, 259—Settlement of decree without sanction by giving promissory note payable on demand—Note renewed from time to time—Suit on note—Note void under section.

On th 4th December, 1899, the plaintiffs obtained a decree against the defendants for Rs. 941. The decree was made payable in eight days, i.e., on or before the 12th December, 1889. On the 9th December, 1899, i.e., before the decree was capable of execution, it was settled by the defendants' paying Rs. 600 in cash and passing a promissory note for Rs. 341 payable on demand and carrying interest at 3 per cent. per annum. The decree was satisfied and handed over to defendants, and plaintiffs also endorsed the summons to that effect. That compromise was not sanctioned by the Court.

On the 9th November, 1899, and again on the 4th November, 1895, the plaintiffs made up their account with defendants and obtained new promissory notes from them for the amount found due in renewal of the note passed in 1889. The present suit was brought on the note passed on the 4th November, 1895, which was for Rs. 515, and carried interest at 3 per cent. per annum.

 Held, that the note sued on fell within the purview of s. 257-A of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and was void and unenforceable under the provisions of that section.

The consideration for the note given in 1889 was the agreement of the plaintiffs to accept it in satisfaction of the decreetal balance due to them. If that agreement was void, the note given for the void consideration was also void. The note was not, in fact, the agreement, but was given in performance of the agreement.

* Small Cause Court Reference, No. 19624 of 1897.
CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, XV of 1882, by G. W. Chitty, Chief Judge:—

"This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover a sum of Rs. 1,418-1-7 representing the principal moneys and interest due on a promissory note for Rs. 815, dated the 4th November, 1895, and executed by both the defendants.

[694] "2. The facts of the case which are not in dispute, together with the reasons for my decision, are fully set out in my judgment, a copy of which is annexed, and to which for brevity's sake I crave leave to refer.

The following is the statement of facts referred to:—

"In 1889 the present plaintiff and one Lukna Sada, now deceased, filed a suit (No. 24,103 of 1889) against the present defendants for Rs. 821-6-4.

That suit was based on two promissory notes for Rs. 100 each, the balance of the claim being for interest. The defendants were served but did not appear, and on the 4th December, 1889, the plaintiffs in that suit obtained a decree against both the defendants for the full amount and the Court costs, and for a further sum of Rs. 51, professional costs against the first defendant.

The decree was made payable by the first defendant in eight days, i.e., on or before the 12th December, 1889, and execution was stayed against the second defendant for one month, with liberty to him to come in and apply for instalments.

On the 9th December, 1889, i.e., before the decree was capable of execution, it was settled by both the defendants by a payment of Rs. 600 in cash and the passing of a promissory note for Rs. 341 payable on demand and carrying interest at 3 per cent. per mensem. The decree was satisfied and handed over to the defendants, and plaintiffs also made an endorsement on the defendants' summons to the same effect. That compromise was not sanctioned by the Court.

On the 9th November, 1892, shortly before the promissory note for Rs. 341 would become barred by limitation, the plaintiffs made up their account with the defendants and obtained from them a promissory note for Rs. 525 in renewal of the former note for Rs. 341 with interest at 1½ per cent. per mensem in addition; that note also bore interest at 3 per cent. per mensem. On the 4th November, 1895, a similar procedure was adopted, and the promissory note in question in this suit was passed for Rs. 815, the rate of interest being the same.

The sole question in this suit is whether this promissory note is not void and unenforceable by reason of the provisions of s. 257-A of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"3. I came to the conclusion, though not without doubt, that the promissory note was governed by the provisions of s. 257-A of the Code of Civil Procedure. As to the interpretation of that section I considered myself bound by authority, and dismissed the suit, and certified Rs. 51 professional costs of the defendants' counsel, making my judgment contingent on the opinion of the High Court. If that decision is wrong, there [695] would be a verdict for the plaintiffs for the full amount claimed and costs, and Rs. 51 professional costs.

"4. The questions for their Lordships' consideration are:

"(i) Whether the promissory note in question falls within the purview of s. 257-A of the Code of Civil Procedure?
(ii) If it does, whether it is void and unenforceable by reason of the provisions of that section?

5. The plaintiffs have deposited in Court Rs. 51 for the professional costs and Rs. 50 to meet the costs of reference.

6. I may add that, since my judgment was delivered, the December number of the Bombay Law Reports has been published, at p. 819 of which are some remarks of their Lordships on the section in question, which seem to support the view that the interpretation of its provisions may have to be revised by a Full Bench. See Krishna v. Vasudev, I.L.R., 21 Bom. 808.

This is not an agreement for satisfaction of a judgment-debt. It is itself the satisfaction of the debt. The judgment-debt is gone—Madhavrao v. Chiku (5); Ganesh v. Abdullah Beg (6); Davalatising v. Pandu (7); Vishnu v. Hur Patel (8); Swamirao v. Kashinath (9); Bank of Bengal v. Vyabhoy Ganji (10); Krishna v. Vasudev (11); Dan Bahadur v. Anandi Prasad (12); Dali v. Palakdhari (13). It is an agreement in satisfaction of the judgment-debt and not for the satisfaction of such debt. The latter contemplates a further transaction.

[696] He relied on Hukum Chand v. Taharunnessa Bibi (14); Jhabar v. Modan Sonahar (15); Gunamani v. Prankishori (16); Thakoor Dyal v. Sarju (17).

Scott, for defendants, cited Pym v. Campbell (18); Wallis v. Littell (19); Bank of Bengal v. Vyabhoy Ganji (10). The cases of Ramghulam v. Janki Bai (3) and Gunamani v. Prankishori (16) are cases on old s. 258. See Haji Abdul v. Khaja Khaki (4). The scheme of the Code cannot override the plain words of the sections.

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—The first question which we have to consider upon this reference is that suggested by the argument of the Advocate General, viz., whether the promissory note for Rs. 341 payable on demand with interest at 3 per cent. per annum which the plaintiffs make the basis of their claim is an agreement for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt due to the plaintiffs within the meaning of s. 257-A of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). This is not an exact way of stating what is the true question, but it sufficiently explains, I think, the contention of the Advocate General.

On the 9th December, 1889, the plaintiffs held a decree against the defendants for Rs. 934-8-0, and Rs. 6-8-0 were payable to them for expenses in connection with the decree, making a total of Rs. 941. The parties met together. The defendants paid Rs. 600 in cash, and for the balance agreed to give the plaintiffs their promissory note for Rs. 341 payable with interest. That indisputably was an agreement for the satisfaction... of the decree, and, if the contention of the defendants on the main point is correct, it was a void agreement. In pursuance of that agreement, ex hypothesi void, the defendants gave their promissory note to the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs thereupon treated the decree as satisfied, handed it over to the defendants, and endorsed the summons to that effect. The consideration for the promissory note was the agreement of the plaintiffs to accept it in satisfaction [697] of the decree. The plaintiffs have performed their part of the agreement, but none the less on that account is the consideration for the note the agreement of the plaintiffs to accept it in satisfaction of the decreetal balance, and if that agreement is void, the promissory note given for a void consideration is itself void. This is, however, merely a verbal disquisition in answer to a verbal argument. Every adjustment of a decree presupposes an agreement to adjust it, and if the agreement to adjust the decree is void, the adjustment, in so far as it is executory on either side, cannot be enforced. I can see no essential difference between an agreement for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt and an agreement in satisfaction of the same. In numerous cases decided upon the section, the agreements ruled to be void were similar to the agreement in the present case, and this objection was never suggested. The concluding clause of the section makes the matter, I think, quite clear. In this view it is unnecessary to consider the argument of Mr. Scott, that the agreement was also an agreement to give time for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt. The promissory note was not, in fact, the agreement, but was given in pursuance of the agreement.

Upon the main question discussed I am of opinion that the previous rulings of this Court upon the effect of s. 257-A are correct and should be followed. I wish to express my full concurrence in the view forcibly expressed by the learned Chief Justice of Allahabad in the following passage: "Where the Legislature has thought fit to declare an agreement void, unless the Legislature expressly limits the application of its enactment, Courts are bound to give effect to it. There is no such limitation to be found in s. 257-A"—Dan Bahadur Singh v. Anandi Prasad (1). After considering the reason relied upon in the decision of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts for limiting the operation of s. 257-A to the Courts executing the decree I have come to the conclusion that it is not entitled to the weight which the learned Judges who took part in those decisions attribute to it. The Legislature evidently, I think, judging from the section which they framed, considered that the power of executing a [698] decree placed the holder of it in a position to exercise undue pressure over the judgment-debtor and enabled him to obtain terms too favourable to himself from the latter, whose interests needed protection at the hands of the Court which passed the decree. Therefore, it was resolved to enact the law now contained in s. 257-A of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The question would naturally then present itself: In what enactment should such a provision of law find place?* Not, I think, in the Code of substantive law relating to contracts. That Code deals generally with void agreements, but a provision that a particular agreement shall be void unless approved by a Court would naturally find its place in an enactment prescribing the procedure of the Court rather than in an Act dealing with general principles. At all events, it is not, I think, out of place in such an enactment. The argument based upon its position in a Procedure Code has, therefore, I think no substantial force. Mr. Scott put the case concisely when he said: In determining the meaning of a legislative enactment "you cannot let the scheme of the Code outweigh the expressed will of the Legislature." When considering the meaning of the language of s. 257-A it is not, I think, out of place to contrast it with the language of the succeeding section. "An adjustment of a decree not certified to the Court shall not be recognized as an adjustment by a Court executing the decree" (s. 258). "Every agreement for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt" (which provides better terms for the decree-holder than the decree gives him) "shall be void unless it is made with the sanction of the Court which passed such decree" (s. 257-A). In instituting this contrast I do so with the recollection of the circumstances under which the language of s. 258 was varied. It does not, in my opinion, detract from the force of the comparison. It is impossible, I think, to conceive that the Legislature intended to express the same meaning by such entirely different language. In short, if the section in question were found in an enactment other than a Procedure Code, it would be impossible, I think, to contend that it had the limited application ascribed to it by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts. Its position in a Procedure Code and in a chapter of that Code which is headed "of the execution of decrees" does not, in my opinion, alter its meaning. If the language was ambiguous it would be permissible to resort to these aids to interpretation, but not, I think, when the language is plain. The Legislature, for reasons which seemed to it to be good, has declared that such agreements shall be void unless sanctioned by the proper Court. It is, I conceive, the duty of the Courts to give effect to that clearly expressed declaration, and not to explain it away.

I may add that the facts of this case show the undue advantage which grasping decree-holders would be in a position to obtain from their judgment-debtors in the absence of the provision which has been referred for our construction. It would be of little advantage to the latter to be protected from the Courts executing the decree against them if their judgment-creditors could obtain the full fruits of their undue pressure by regular suit.

We answer both questions in the affirmative. Costs costs in the case.

CANDY, J.—If the first question is answered in the affirmative, then in my opinion the second question must also be answered in the affirmative.

On the second question I have but little to add to the remarks of the learned Chief Justice.

No doubt the arguments used by Mabmood, J., in Ramghulam v. Janki Rai (1); by Garth, C. J., and Ghose, J., in Jhabar v. Modan Sonahar (2); by Prinsep and Ghose, J.J., in Hukum Chand v. Taharunnessa Bibi (3) and by Muttusami Ayyar and Best, J.J., in Jugi v. Annal (4) deserve the fullest consideration; but I agree with the learned Chief Justice at Allahabad (5) that where the Legislature has thought right to declare an agreement void, unless the Legislature limits the application of its enactment, Courts are bound to give effect to it. There is no such limitation to be found in s. 257-A. Cases may occur where a merciful judgment-creditor may give time for the satisfaction of a judgment-debt by taking an instalment bond from his judgment-debtor and seeking no advantage to himself. On the other hand, cases may occur where the judgment-creditor armed with the decree may extort a bond from his judgment-debtor with onerous conditions. The Legislature must be taken to have had regard to these considerations when enacting the plain provisions of s. 257-A. It was open to the Legislature in 1888 to amend s. 257-A just as it amended s. 258. It did not do so, and, therefore, we are bound by the plain words of the law.

As to the first question, it seems to me, on a comparison of the language of ss. 257-A and 258, that whereas an adjustment of a decree under s. 257-A may also fall within the terms of s. 258, an adjustment under s. 258 cannot fall within the terms of s. 257-A unless it is an agreement which gives time for the satisfaction of the decree, or unless it provides for payment of something in execution of the decreetal debt. To the argument of the learned Advocate-General, that the bond in the present suit is an adjustment of the decree under s. 258, there is an obvious answer. Granted, but it also falls within the terms of s. 257-A. If so, the agreement is void. Not only are the requisites laid down in s. 257-A, and the effect of the absence of the requisites, different, but the subject-matter is different. Section 258 would seem to apply to a satisfaction in presenti pro tanto of a decree. Illustrations of the section may be gathered from numerous reported cases, e.g., payment of money or delivery of grain, cattle or ornaments or such like, the decree-holder being satisfied with this compromise in satisfaction pro tanto of his decree. All that is necessary for such payment or delivery to be recognized by the Court executing the decree is that it must be certified. But s. 257-A would seem to apply to an agreement for the satisfaction, in futuro, of a judgment-debt: the money is admitted to be due, and the parties agree as to the manner in which the money is to be paid. That agreement is the foundation of a new contract; but if the agreement gives time for the payment of what is admitted to be due, or provides for the payment of more than what is due under the decree, then so far the consideration fails, for such an agreement being void is not capable of being the foundation of any legal right.

[701] This distinction between the subject-matter of the two sections may not have been prominently brought out in some of the reported cases, but that it exists seems clear to me on a careful consideration of the language.

In the present case, the promissory note of 9th December, 1889, provided for payment of more than what was due under the decree. Therefore it was void. I would answer both the questions in the affirmative.

Sorabji Cursethi Sett (Plaintiff) v. Rattonji Dossabhoy Karani (Defendant).* [12th April, 1898.]

A suit for foreclosure is not a suit for land within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, and the High Court of Bombay on its original side has jurisdiction to entertain such suits, although the property in question is situated outside the town and island of Bombay.

Holkar v. Dadabhai C. Ashburner (1) followed.

In a suit for foreclosure by a puisne mortgagee, the prior mortgagee should be made a party to the suit under s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

In a suit where a prior mortgagee was not a party, the Court at the hearing of the suit ordered that he should then be made a party.

Mata Din v. Kastim Husain (2) followed.

SUIT for foreclosure. The defendant resided at Salsette, outside the jurisdiction of the High Court, and the mortgaged properties were all situated outside the jurisdiction.

[702] There were two mortgages in question, and both were executed in Bombay. By the first, dated the 18th September, 1894, the defendant mortgaged to the plaintiff three properties situated at Vesava in the island of Salsette for Rs. 8,750. By subsequent indentures, also executed in Bombay, the said lands were further charged with large sums.

On the 22nd June, 1897, the defendant executed in Bombay another mortgage of two other properties, also situated at Vesava, and it was provided that the whole of the money due to the plaintiff should be repayable to the plaintiff on the 1st July, 1897. One of the last-mentioned properties was already subject to a mortgage in favour of one Jivraj Ludha for Rs. 6,300. Jivraj Ludha was not made a party to this suit. The plaintiff was in possession of the properties comprised in the mortgage.

The sum alleged to be due to the plaintiff on foot of the above mortgages at date of suit was Rs. 41,286-12-0 with interest from the 17th January, 1898. The plaintiff prayed for a decree for this amount, and, in default of payment, for foreclosure.

The suit came on for hearing as a short cause. On behalf of the defendant it was contended (1) that the Court had no jurisdiction, the suit being a "suit for land" situate outside the jurisdiction; (2) that, having regard to s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), the suit should be dismissed, Jivraj Ludha not having been made a party.

Scott, for the plaintiff.—The question as to jurisdiction in cases of foreclosure is concluded by authority—Holkar v. Dadabhai C. Ashburner (1). That was a decree of the Court of Appeal, and it has been followed by several unreported cases: suit No. 114 of 1894; suit No. 371 of 1894; suit No. 481 of 1897. In Kessowji Damodar v. Khimji Jafram (3) Farran, J., granted foreclosure of land in Zanzibar, the defendant residing in Cutch; but the mortgage having been executed in Bombay, a preliminary issue as to jurisdiction was raised in that case and decided in the plaintiff’s favour on the 19th March, 1894.

As to the question of parties, Jivraj Ludha is not a necessary party, as he is not a person interested in the mortgaged property. [703] The property mortgaged to the present plaintiff was the equity of redemption in the property on which Jivraj Ludha had a mortgage, but Jivraj Ludha was not interested in the equity of redemption. Therefore, the rule laid down in s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply. He cited Fisher on Mortgages, p. 801.

Branson, for defendant.—Under the words of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, it is clear that this Court has no jurisdiction. A suit for foreclosure is a suit for land. It is not a suit in personam. The later decisions in effect overrule Paget v. Ede (1); see Heath v. Pukh (2); Harlock v. Asb-berry (3); Bibee Jan v. Meenza Mahammed (4); Sreemutty Lalmoney v.

Sudurudeen (9); Prem Chand v. Mokkoda (10); Jairam v. Atmaram (11); Vithalroo v. Vaghoji (12).

Further, the suit should be dismissed having regard to s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, inasmuch as Jivraj Ludha has not been made a party. See Shehan’s on the Transfer of Property Act, p. 284; Ghulam Kadir v. Mustakim (13); Balmakund v. Sangari (14)

JUDGMENT.

STRACHEY, J.—This is a suit for foreclosure of certain mortgages of land situate at Vesava, outside the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court. The defendant resides at the same place.
It is not alleged that he carries on business or personally works for gain within the local limits. All the mortgages were executed in Bombay.
The plaintiff is in possession of the lands comprised in the mortgages.
Upon the admission of the plaint, leave was granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. The suit is a short cause, and no written statement has been filed; but Mr. Branson on behalf of the [704] defendant contends that the suit is a “suit for land” situate outside the local limits of the Court’s original jurisdiction, and that, therefore, the Court has, under cl. 12, no jurisdiction to entertain it.

The question is whether a suit for foreclosure is a “suit for land” within the meaning of the clause. The expression is a wide one, and, in the absence of authority upon the point, I should have had great difficulty in holding that it does not include a suit for foreclosure. The High Court of Calcutta has held, upon the construction of the corresponding clause of its Letters Patent, that suits for foreclosure or sale, suits for redemption, suits by a purchaser for specific performance of a contract for sale of land, and, generally, suits for the purpose of establishing title to or acquiring possession of or control over land, are “suits for land”—Land Mortgage Shaw: 1), the Delhi and London Bank v. Wordie (2), Kellie v. Fraser (3) and Sreenath Roy v. Cally Doss Ghose (4). But in this Court a more restricted meaning of the expression "suits for land" has been adopted. In Holkar v. Dadabhai Cursetji Ashburner (5), Sargent, C.J., and Scott, J., held that the Court had jurisdiction under cl. 12 to try a suit for specific performance of an agreement made in Bombay, but relating to land situate outside the original jurisdiction, and to order a mortgage-debt to be realized by sale of the land. In that case, as in the present, the defendant did not reside or carry on business or personally work for gain in Bombay. The judgment cites with approval the decision in Yenkoba B. Kasar v. Rambhai (6) in which Gibbs and Melvill, JJ., held that a suit for the recovery of a mortgage debt by sale of the mortgaged property was not a "suit for land" within the meaning of s. 5 of Act VIII of 1859, the Civil Procedure Code then in force, and that a suit for land was a suit which asked for delivery of the land to the plaintiff.

[705] At first I had some doubt whether the decision of Sargent, C.J., and Scott, J., was binding upon me in this case, as that was not a suit for foreclosure. But when the ratio decidentis is examined, I think that it does bind me. It proceeds in part upon Paget v. Edel (7), which was a foreclosure suit, and in effect it holds that, in using the expression "suits for land," the framers of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent had in view the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in reference to suits relating to land situate out of England, and intended to exclude from the Court's jurisdiction only such suits relating to land as, if brought in England, the Courts would have refused to entertain on the ground that the land was situate abroad. Now the rule in England, as stated in Dicey's Conflict of Laws, is that the Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain an action for the determination of the title to or the right to the possession of, land situate out of England, or for the recovery of damages for trespass to such land. To this rule there is an exception, namely, that the Courts have jurisdiction to entertain an action against a person who is in England respecting land situate out of England on the ground of a contract or an equity between the parties with reference to such land. The principle of the distinction is that while the Court will not give judgments concerning foreign land which it cannot render effective, still, where, from a person's presence in England, the Court has jurisdiction over him, it will, acting in personam and not in rem, compel him to give effect to obligations which he has incurred with regard to the land. The judgment in Holkar v. Dadabhai Cursetji Ashburner (5) applies this distinction to the expression "suits for land" in cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, and holds that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for specific performance of a contract relating to land, or for a sale of mortgaged property, situate outside the local limits, on the ground that such suits are among those which a Court of Equity in England will entertain; that the High Courts in India have all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for enforcing their decrees in personam; and that, had it been intended to exclude suits in personam as well as suits in rem from the jurisdiction of the High Courts, the framers of the Letters Patent, who were presumably English lawyers, would have employed different language. The only difference between that case and the present is that there the Court was dealing with one kind of suit in personam, while I am dealing with another. Both suits for specific performance of contracts relating to land and suits for foreclosure are given by Mr. Dicey as instances of the action of the Courts in England in personam, and the authority cited in connection with foreclosure (and assumed to be still good law, notwithstanding the observations in Heath v. Pugh (1) on which Mr. Branson's argument was largely based), is Paget v. Ede (2), on which Sargent, O. J., and Scott, J., rely. In In re Hawthorne (3), decided in 1883, two years after Heath v. Pugh, Mr. Justice Kay referred to Paget v. Ede as an authority. I think, therefore, that the decision in Hollar v. Dadabhaji Cursetji Ashburner (4) governs the present case, and I need not consider whether, apart from authority, I should think it justifiable to import the doctrines of the Court of Chancery regarding land situate out of England into cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, especially in cases where the defendant does not reside, though the cause of action wholly or in part arises, within the local limits of the Court's ordinary original jurisdiction.

If the question were res integra, it would be necessary to consider in connection with it not only Heath v. Pugh, but the effect of a foreclosure decree under ss. 86 and 87 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and Nos. 109 and 129 of the fourth schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is a later (unreported) decision more directly in point, the case of Kessowji Damodar v. Khimji Jairam decided by the present Chief Justice in 1894. That was a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage of property situate in Zanzibar. The defendant resided and carried on business in Cuttack. The mortgage was executed in Bombay. A preliminary issue was argued raising the question of jurisdiction, and, on the 19th March, 1894, Farran, J., held that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, which accordingly was heard and decided on the 24th November, 1894. Following these decisions, I must hold [707] that this is not a "suit for land" within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, and that I have jurisdiction to entertain it.

Another point raised by Mr. Branson is that the plaint shows that one of the properties to which the suit relates is subject to a prior mortgage in favour of one Jivraj Ludha, and that under s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the prior mortgagee ought to have been joined as a party to the suit. On the other hand, Mr. Scott contended that the expression in s. 85 "the property comprised in a mortgage" would include an equity of redemption, and that as the first mortgagee had no interest in the equity of redemption which alone is comprised in the mortgage so far as regards the property in question, the section does not apply. The whole question was very fully considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Muta Din Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain (6), and I see no reason to dissent from the opinion of the majority that in a suit by a puisne mortgagee a prior mortgagee must be joined as a party. The question then is what should now be done. I see no reason why the first mortgagee should not now be joined. In Kessowji Damodar v. Khimji (6), Farran, J., ordered that the assignee of a mortgagee should be made a party, after the hearing of the preliminary issue to which I have referred. I, therefore, direct that Jivraj Ludha be now made a party to this suit.

[708] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IN RE RANGU.* [2nd July, 1896.]

Municipality—Bombay District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873), s. 84, as amended by Bombay Act II of 1884—Arrears of rent—Penalty in addition to arrears of rent cannot be imposed.

Section 84 (1) of the Bombay District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873) allows penalties to be imposed in addition to arrears of cesses or taxes, but it does not provide for the imposition of a penalty in addition to the arrears of rents.

The reference was in the following terms:—

"I have the honour to enclose proceedings in case No. 4 of 1896 of the Court of Assam Ramrao Vyaerao Desi, Special Magistrate, Third Class, Dharwar Town.

"2. In this case the Magistrate proceeded against the accused for default in paying within the specified time Rs. 1-12-0 charged as rent by the Dharwar Municipality for a shop in the market.

"3. The Magistrate ordered the rent (Rs. 1-12-0) and a penalty of annas 4 to be recovered from the accused.

"4. The rent and the penalty have been paid.

[709] "5. I called for the papers on a scrutiny of criminal return No. IV.

"6. On going through the papers I am of opinion that the rent charged by the municipality comes under the word ‘rents’ in cl. 4 of s. 84, Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873). No provision for penalty for non-payment of rents is attached thereto. The penalty inflicted by the Magistrate appears to me to be illegal.

"7. I recommend that the order of the Magistrate, so far as it relates to the levy of the penalty, be quashed and the amount ordered to be refunded."

The reference came on for final hearing and disposal before a Division Bench (Parsons and Ranade, JJ.).

There was no appearance for the accused or for the municipality.

* Criminal Reference No. 45 of 1896.

(1) Section 84 of Bombay Act VI of 1873, as amended by Bombay Act II of 1884, provides as follows:—

"Every prosecution under this Act or under the bye-laws made in accordance with the provisions of this Act may be instituted before any Magistrate whether the said Magistrate may be a Municipal Commissioner or not, and every fine or penalty imposed under or by virtue of this Act or any bye-law made in pursuance thereof, as also, upon information laid by order of the Municipality, all arrears of cesses or other taxes and such penalties, in addition to the said arrears, not exceeding in any case one-fourth of the amount of the said arrears, as shall be adjudged by the said Magistrate, and all arrears of stallage and other rents and fees and all expenses, may be recovered by a summary proceeding before such Magistrate in the manner provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure.
ORDER.

PER CURIAM.—Section 84 of the Bombay District Municipal Act allows penalties to be imposed in addition to the arrears of cesses or other taxes, but it does not provide for the imposition of a penalty in addition to the arrears of rent. We, therefore, reverse so much of the Magistrate’s order as imposes a penalty of annas four.

Order varied.

The amount was to be paid, under the contract, in three instalments of Rs. 44, 43 and 43 on prescribed dates, and it was agreed also that Jagu should pay interest on overdue instalments. He failed to pay on the settled date (25th November, 1895) the second instalment of Rs. 43. The municipality, therefore, sent him to the Third Class Magistrate of taluka Purandhar for recovery of the amount of Rs. 43 together with interest due.

"The Third Class Magistrate convicted Jagu on the 20th March, 1896, and passed the following order:

"I, therefore, order that the accused should pay the amount as follows:

"The conviction and sentence appear to the District Magistrate to be illegal. The amount of the contract cannot be said to be either a 'cess,' or 'tax,' or 'reuts,' or 'fees' mentioned in s. 84 of the Act, and as such would not be recoverable under that section. Much less could interest be included within their terms quoted above.

"In these circumstances the District Magistrate recommends that the conviction and sentence be reversed, and the amounts paid by the accused ordered to be refunded."

There was no appearance for either party.

ORDER.

PER CURIAM.—As pointed out by the District Magistrate, the sums that may be due under the contract in the present case do not come within any of the matters provided for by s. 84 of the Bombay District Municipal Act. We, therefore, reverse the order of the Magistrate.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IN RE SAMSUDIN.* [6th August, 1896.]

A complaint was lodged against the accused, charging him with offences under ss. 182 and 500 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). The complainant's solicitor, finding that no sanction had been obtained as required by s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) for proceeding with the charge under s. 182, applied to the Magistrate for leave to withdraw the complaint, which the Magistrate granted, adding to his order the words "accused is discharged."

The complainant having subsequently obtained the requisite sanction filed a fresh complaint on the same charges. It was objected on behalf of the accused that the accused had been acquitted under s. 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) and that further proceedings were now barred under s. 403. The Magistrate allowed the objection and stopped the proceedings. On application to the High Court,

Held, that the order of the Magistrate should be reversed and the complaint investigated. The order stopping the proceedings would be legal only if the accused had been acquitted by a Court of competent jurisdiction, which was not the case, as the Magistrate could not take cognizance of the charge under s. 182 [712] of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) without a sanction having been previously obtained.

As to the charge under s. 500 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) the proper procedure in respect of it was that prescribed for warrant cases. The only legal order that could be made in such a case was an order of discharge under s. 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) and not of acquittal, and it was an order of discharge that was actually made.

[R., 13 A.L.J. 4; D., 29 M. 126 (143) = 3 Cr. L.J. 274 = 16 M.L.J. 79 = 1 M.L.T. 31.]

* Criminal Revision No. 115 of 1896.
APPLICATION for revision under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The applicant lodged a complaint against one Ebrahim Daadoo and others in the Court of the Fourth Presidency Magistrate, Khan Bahadur P. H. Dastur, charging the accused with giving false information to a public servant in order to cause him to use his lawful power to the injury of the complainant, and also with defamation, offences punishable under ss. 182 and 500, respectively, of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

On the 21st April, 1896, the complainant’s solicitor, finding that the complainant had not obtained sanction to prosecute under s. 182 of the Penal Code, as required by s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), applied to the Magistrate to be allowed to withdraw the complaint. Thereupon the Magistrate passed the following order:—”As there is no sanction, prosecution withdraws the charge. Accused is discharged.”

The complainant having subsequently obtained the requisite sanction filed a fresh complaint against the accused on the same charges.

It was contended on behalf of the accused that as the complainant had withdrawn the case on the previous occasion, and the accused had been acquitted under s. 248 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the present proceedings were barred under s. 403 of that Code.

The Magistrate allowed this objection, and on the 29th April, 1896, ordered the proceedings to be stopped.

The complainant thereupon moved the High Court, under its Revisional Jurisdiction, to set aside the Magistrate’s order.

Daphtry and Ferreira, for complainant.
M. K. Lakhaka (with R. M. Paymaster) for accused.

JUDGMENT.

[713] PER CURIAM.—It appears in this case that a complaint was made to the Magistrate against the accused of offences under ss. 182 and 500 of the Penal Code. On the 21st April, 1896, when the accused appeared before the Magistrate, the Magistrate passed the following order:—”As there is no sanction, prosecution withdraws the charge. Accused is discharged.”

Sanction having been obtained, a fresh complaint was lodged against the accused of the same offences. The Magistrate on the 29th April ordered that proceedings be stopped, considering apparently that they could not be taken by reason of the provisions of s. 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

This order would be legal only if the accused had been acquitted by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Clearly in this case they have not. In the first place, by reason of there being no sanction, the Court on the 21st April could not take cognizance of the offence under s. 182, and could not, therefore, acquit the accused of that offence. The offence mentioned in s. 500 of the Penal Code is not a summons case. The procedure, therefore, in the investigation of this complaint was that prescribed for warrant cases. Although the Magistrate says now that he passed the order under s. 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the only legal order he could have passed was under s. 253 of the Code (see Rajnarain v. Lalai Tamot (1)); and the wording of the order shows that he did so pass it, for he did not acquit the accused but discharged them.

(1) 11 C. 91.

There having been thus no acquittal of the accused of the offences charged, the present complaint must be inquired into. We reverse the order of the Magistrate staying proceedings and direct him to investigate the complaint.

Order reversed.

IN RE SULEMANJI GULAM HUSEN.* [6th August, 1896.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 133—Excavations near a public place—Magistrate's power to order the excavations to be fenced, and not to be filled up.

Under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) a Magistrate has no power to order excavations adjacent to a public way or any public place to be filled up; he can only order them to be fenced.

APPLICATION under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The applicant was the owner of a piece of land at Godhra.

On the 20th April, 1896, the District Magistrate issued a notice to the applicant in the following terms:—

"You were directed, under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to fill in the excavations made by you for taking out earth for the bricks that are being manufactured by you in Survey No. 189 within the limits of Godhra, and to bring them up to the level of the adjacent road, and to make the land one whole level, and to take such steps as would not allow water to be accumulated therein, and likewise take such steps as would not leave the possibility of any accident happening; or, in the alternative, to appear before me to show cause why the said order should not be brought into force. Upon looking into the statement made by you, &c., &c., it appears that the order already passed is just and proper. The said order is, therefore, confirmed.

The applicant moved the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction to set aside the above order.

Gokaldas K. Parekh, for the applicant.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM:—The District Magistrate issued an order, purporting to be made under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) requiring the applicant "to fill in the excavations made by him for taking out earth for the bricks that were being manufactured by him in Survey No. 189 within the limits of Godhra, and to bring them up to the level of the adjacent road, and to make the land one whole level, and to take such steps as would not allow water to accumulate therein, and likewise take such steps as would not leave the possibility of any accident happening." It is objected, on behalf of the applicant, that this order is illegal, and we think that the objection is a good one. Section 133 allows a Magistrate to order excavations adjacent to a way which is or may be lawfully used by the public, or to any public place to be fenced. Under that section, therefore, if it be assumed that the excavations are adjacent to such a way or public place, the Magistrate could only order them to be fenced; he could not order the applicant to fill them up. We reverse the order.

* Criminal Revision No. 106 of 1896.

Police—District Police Act (Bom Act IV 1890), s. 48, cl. (1) (a)—Construction—Procession—Order as to conduct of procession.

A District Superintendent of Police issued a notification to the following effect:—"No member of any sect can be permitted to proceed naked to the tirth to bathe, nor while there to bathe naked, nor to pass the streets naked on any account. If any one does this, he will be dealt with according to law."

Held, that this notification was not illegal or ultra vires. It was not any order or command as to costume, but merely a warning to the people that an indecent exposure of the person was an offence under the law and would be dealt with as such.

APPLICATION for revision under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal (Act X of Procedure 1882).

Towards the close of 1895, on the occasion of the Sinhast festival of Trimbak, the District Superintendent of Police at Nasik issued a proclamation to the following effect:—

[716] "No member of any sect can be permitted to proceed naked to the tirth to bathe, nor while there to bathe naked, nor to pass the streets naked on any account. If any one does this, he will be dealt with according to law.

The applicants, who were Gosavis of Trimbak, applied to the District Magistrate of Nasik to set aside the above proclamation.

The District Magistrate having declined to interfere, the applicants applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—Clause (a) of s. 48 of the Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890) gives a District Superintendent of Police power to "make rules for, and direct the conduct of assemblies and processions and moving crowds or assemblages on or along the streets, and prescribe, in the

* Criminal Revision No. 136 of 1896.

(1) The Bombay District Police Act (Bombay Act IV of 1899), s. 48:—
"(1) The District Superintendent or an Assistant Superintendent may, subject to any rule or order which may at any time be legally made by any Magistrate or other authority duly empowered in this behalf,—
"(a) make rules for and direct the conduct of assemblies and processions and moving crowds or assemblages on or along the streets, and prescribe, in the case of processions, the routes by which, the order in which, and the times at which the same may pass."
case of processions, the routes by which, the order in which, and the times at which the same may pass." We construe the word "conduct" to mean the act or method of leading, guiding or managing the guidance or management, and not to mean the mode of action or behaviour of an assembly, and therefore, we cannot hold that the clause gives a power to direct what costume shall be worn or not worn by the members of a procession. At the same time we do not consider that the District Superintendent has in the present case made any order as to costume. What is said in the order is this,—"No member of any sect can be permitted to proceed naked to the tirth to bathe, nor while there to bathe naked, nor to pass the streets naked on any account," and in the Marathi the words are added that "if any one does this he will be dealt with according to law." We look upon this not as an order or command, but as a piece of advice or warning to the people telling them in what light the authorities will view certain acts. If the District Superintendent had said, "No nuisance or offence will be permitted," that clearly would not have been an order not to commit those acts. So it is not an order to say that one particular form of alleged nuisance or offence, namely, walking and bathing naked, will not be permitted. Wilful and indecent exposure of the person, is itself an offence punishable under cl. (o) of s. 61. If, [717] therefore, any one in the procession should commit this act, he would be liable to arrest and punishment under that clause. The proclamation, we think, directs attention to this fact. It does not prohibit the act, so as to make the commission of it punishable as a breach of the order, but it says such an act will not be permitted, and that if it is done, the perpetrator will be proceeded against according to law; that is, that proceedings will be taken against him on the ground that he has committed an offence by reason of the commission of the act itself. In those proceedings the question whether the act is or is not an offence will have to be considered and determined. On this view of the case we decline to interfere.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

IN RE BASTOO DUMAJI* [24th September, 1896.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 546—Compensation—Award of compensation illegal where no fine is inflicted.

Where an accused is discharged and no fine is imposed, no order for payment of compensation can be legally passed under s. 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).

This was a reference under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) by R. E. Candy, District Magistrate, Thana.

The material portion of the reference was as follows:—

"The accused was committed by the Bassein Police to the Court of the Third Class Magistrate for trial under s. 379 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of palm leaves cut and removed by the accused from palm trees standing on Government land and farmed out to one Ramchandra Anant. The Magistrate found the accused not guilty of the charge on the ground of absence of dishonest intention in him in cutting and removing the leaves worth Rs. 2, and passed an order of discharge under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

[718] "In this order of discharge the Magistrate directed the accused Bastoo to pay Rs. 2 to the complainant as compensation for the loss of the palm leaves. This order is presumed to have been passed under s. 545, Criminal Procedure Code, though the Magistrate has not quoted the section. The Magistrate cannot, I hold, legally pass such order when the accused is discharged. Such order can only be given on conviction of the accused, as the amount of compensation is laid down by s 545 to be paid from the amount of fine recovered. If no fine is imposed, I believe that no compensation could be awarded."

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Parsons and Ranade, JJ.).

There was no appearance for the Crown or for the accused.

OPINION.

PER CURIAM.—As no fine was imposed in this case, an order for payment of compensation could not legally be passed under s. 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code. We reverse the order.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

CHANDARSANG VERSABHAI AND OTHERS (Original Defendants Nos. 1 to 3), Appellants v. KIMABHAI RAGHABHAI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [17th March, 1897.]

Practice—Procedure—Right of appeal—Death of one of several appellants pending appeal—Death of one of several respondents pending appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 366, 368, 544 and 582.

Any plaintiff or defendant has a right to appeal without the concurrence of any of the parties to the suit. The mere fact of the death of one of several appellants cannot affect the right of the other appellants to proceed with the appeal if they choose to do so.

One of several appellants (defendants) died after appeal filed, but before the hearing. An application to have the name of his heir entered on the record as an appellant was rejected as too late. One of the respondents (plaintiffs) also died pending the hearing of the appeal, and an application to enter the name of his heir as respondent was rejected for the same reason. When the appeal came on for hearing it was dismissed as defective for want of parties.

[719] Held, that the proper course for the appeal Court was to order that the appeal had abated so far as the deceased appellant (defendant) was concerned and to proceed with the hearing so far as the remaining appellants were concerned.

Held, also, with reference to the death of the respondent (plaintiff), that the appeal Court ought to have proceeded under the provisions of s. 368 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and to have either declared that the appeal had abated as to him and proceeded against the rest of the respondents under s. 544 of the Civil Procedure Code, or else to have directed that the legal representatives of the deceased respondent should be placed upon the record.

* Second Appeal No. 638 of 1896.

SECOND appeal from the decision of E. H. Leggatt, Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dhandhuka.

Suit for possession of land. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were in possession of certain land (Survey Nos. 10, 11 and 12), defendant No. 5 being their tenant. The plaintiffs, who were nine in number, claimed the eastern portion of this land and filed this suit to recover it, alleging that the defendants had unlawfully taken possession of it.

The Subordinate Judge found that the land claimed belonged to the plaintiffs and that the defendants had removed the boundary marks and taken possession of it, and he passed a decree for the plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed, but pending the appeal one of them (Harisang) died, and an application to have the name of his heir entered on the record as an appellant was rejected by the District Judge as too late.

One of the respondents (plaintiff No. 3) also died pending the appeal, and an application to have the name of his heir placed on the record as respondent was also rejected by the District Judge as barred by limitation.

When the appeal came on for hearing it was dismissed by the Assistant Judge on the ground that "the land being held in common, the appeal is, therefore, obviously defective for want of parties."

The defendants preferred a second appeal.

Sitanath G. Ajinkya for the appellants (original defendants Nos. 1 to 3):—The Judge was wrong in dismissing our appeal [720] without going into the merits of the case. Under ss. 366 and 368 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) the appeal would abate with respect only to those persons whose representatives were not brought on the record. Section 371 provides that the Court may, after passing the order of abatement, pass an order for the restoration of the appeal to the file. Under s. 544 the Judge could, in the absence of the representatives of the deceased, have proceeded to hear the appeal and dispose of it on the merits. The suit was for recovery of land and not for partition. When the suit is for recovery of possession, the Court can proceed to decide it with respect to the survivors on the record.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi for the respondents (original plaintiffs).

JUDGMENT.

TYABJI, J.—This suit was originally filed by nine plaintiffs against five defendants. The plaintiffs sought to recover possession of certain land, alleging that they were the owners of the eastern portion of Survey Nos. 10, 11 and 12, and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were the owners of the western portions of the same survey numbers. The defendant No. 5 was alleged to be a tenant of the first four defendants.

The plaintiffs' case was that the defendants took unlawful possession of three-fourths of a bigha of their land out of Survey Nos. 11 and 12, and of one-fourth of a bigha of their land out of Survey No. 10. The plaintiffs accordingly prayed for possession of the lands so alleged to have been unlawfully taken possession of by the defendants. The Subordinate Judge held that the land in dispute belonged to the plaintiffs, and that the defendants had removed the boundary marks and taken possession of the plaintiffs' land, and he accordingly passed a decree in favour of plaintiffs. Against this decree the defendants appealed. Before, however, the appeal could be heard, one of the appellants, viz., the fourth defendant Harisang Kanubhai, died, and an application to the District Judge to have the name of the heir of Harisang entered as an appellant was rejected as time-barred. One of the respondents, viz., the third plaintiff Samatsang Bhagubhai, also died before the hearing of the appeal, and an application to have the name of his heir entered as [721] a respondent was also rejected as time-barred. When the appeal came on for hearing, it was dismissed by the Assistant Judge on the ground that, "the land being held in common, the appeal is, therefore, obviously defective for want of parties."

We think that the learned Judge was wrong in dismissing the appeal. We take it to be quite clear that any plaintiff or defendant has a right to appeal without the concurrence of any of the other parties to the suit. In this case the proper course for the learned Judge was to have proceeded under the provisions of ss. 366, 368 and 582 of the Civil Procedure Code. The cases of Balkrishna v. The Municipality of Mahad (1), Nundun Lal v. Lloyd (2) and Bindu Basini Dasi v. Pears Mohun Bose (3), which have been cited to us, seem to us to have no application. Those cases merely decide that one individual co-sharer cannot maintain a suit for recovering any part of the joint land, or the whole of the joint land, without bringing the other co-sharers before the Court, as the suit would be defective in their absence. Here the suit was properly framed, and all the parties interested in the subject-matter were before the Court. The decree having been passed against the defendants, it was open to any one of them to appeal against it, and if the ground of appeal was common to all the defendants, it was open to the lower appellate Court to deal with the appeal under s. 544 of the Civil Procedure Code. The mere fact of the death of one of the appellants cannot affect the right of the other appellants to proceed with the appeal if they choose to do so. As regards the appellants, therefore, the proper course for the lower appellate Court was to order that the appeal had abated so far as Harisang Kanubhai was concerned, and to have proceeded with the hearing of the appeal so far as the remaining appellants were concerned. So far as the death of the respondent Samatsang is concerned, the lower appellate Court ought to have proceeded under the provisions of s. 363 of the Civil Procedure Code, and to have either declared that the appeal had abated as to him and proceeded against the rest of the respondents, under s. 544 of the Civil Procedure Code, or else to have directed that the [722] legal representatives of Samatsang should be placed upon the record.

Under any circumstances we think that the order dismissing the appeal was wrong, and we must set it aside and remand the case to the lower appellate Court to dispose of the appeal in the light of the observations contained in this judgment. The costs of this appeal to be dealt with by the lower appellate Court at the time of passing the final decree.

Order set aside and case remanded.

LATE

TRIMBAK BAPUJI PATWARDHAN (Original Decree-holder and Applicant), Appellant v. KASHINATH VIDYADHAR GOSAVI (Original Judgment-debtor and Opponent), Respondent.* [30th March, 1897.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 19 and Sch. II, Art. 179 (4)—Decree—Execution—Payment of bhatta for the issue of the sale proclamation—Step in aid of execution—Payment of process fee—Limitation—Payment of part of the judgment-debt—Acknowledgment of liability by judgment-debtor's pleader.

To satisfy the requirements of art. 179 (4) of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), there must be an application to the proper Court, and time runs from the date of the application and not of the order made upon it. The application need not, however, necessarily be in writing; where the law does not require a writing, an oral application satisfies its requirements. Where an order made in aid of execution is of such a nature that the Court would not have made it without an application by the judgment-creditor, it may be presumed that due application has been made for it.

Quere:—Whether the payment of bhatta is sufficient proof of an application to the Court to take the step in respect of which the bhatta is paid. Mere payment of a process-fee under circumstances from which no application can be inferred, does not satisfy the requirements of the article.

The payment of part of the judgment-debt by judgment-debtor, with the acknowledgment of liability by his pleader, is sufficient, under the provisions of
s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), to give a fresh period of limitation.

[723] SECOND Appeal from the decision of John Fitz Maurice, District Judge of Thana, reversing the order of Rao Saheb N. M. Samant, Subordinate Judge of Alibag.

Appeal from an order rejecting an application for execution of decree.
On 6th January, 1896, the appellant (plaintiff) applied for execution of a decree obtained by him against the respondent (defendant). The application was resisted by the defendant on the ground that it was barred by limitation under art. 179 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

It appeared that on the 10th August, 1892, he had made an applica-cation for execution by the attachment and sale of certain immoveable property of the defendants. Proceedings were taken on that application, and on the 17th January, 1893, an order for sale was made by the Court, and on the 19th January, 1893, the plaintiff paid bhatta for the issue of the proclamation sale.

On the 14th March, 1893, the defendant applied for a stay of the sale for two months, as he was trying to raise money to satisfy the decree privately, and on the 6th June, 1893, the plaintiff asked permission to withdraw his darkhast, as he said defendant had paid him Rs. 100 and had promised to pay the rest. On the 24th June, 1893, the Court made an order allowing the withdrawal.

The Subordinate Judge granted the present application. He held that the payment of bhatta by the plaintiff on the 19th January, 1894, was a step-in-aid of execution and that, therefore, the application was not barred by limitation. The District Judge, however, on appeal reversed the order and dismissed the appellant's application as barred by limitation.

* Second Appeal No. 501 of 1896.
The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Sadashiv R. Bakhle, for the appellant (original plaintiff, decree-holder and applicant).—The payment of the bhatta for issuing the proclamation of sale was a step-in-aid of execution. The present application was made within three years from that date and was, therefore in time—Narendra v. Bhupendra (1); Bhoma Motiram v. Kamaji (2); Rada Prosad v. [724] Sunder Lall (3). It is not necessary that the application contemplated by art. 179 (4) of the Limitation Act should be in writing. An oral application would be quite sufficient—Villaya v. Jaganatha (4); Ali Muhammad v. Gur Prosad (5); Maneklal v. Nasia (6); Kesavvial v. Pitamberdas (7). Such an application must be presumed from the fact of payment, for Courts cannot be supposed to take any steps without being moved by a party—Bapuchand v. Mugutrao (8); Villaya v. Jaganatha (4).

Further, the present application was within time under s. 19 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The defendant admitted his liability under the decree on the 14th March, 1893, and by his subsequently paying Rs. 100 in June, 1893.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for the respondent (original defendant, judgment-debtor and opponent).—The time to be counted is from the date of the previous application. From that date the present application is clearly barred. The payment of bhatta or process-fee is not a step-in-aid of execution—Dwarkanath v Anandrao (9). No presumption can be made that there was an application. Article 179 of the Limitation Act requires an application and it must be shown that some application was made. In Ambica v. Surdhari (10), there was an express oral application. It was for the plaintiff to prove that such application was made, and he has failed to do so.

As to the alleged acknowledgment of the defendant, such an acknowledgment must be signed by the party. The application by the judgment creditor for withdrawing the darkhast, and stating that he had received Rs. 100, is not sufficient. We submit that no acknowledgment, as such, is proved in the case.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the District Court of Thana rejecting, on appeal, the darkhast of the plaintiff for execution of the decree in the suit. The material dates as stated to us by the pleader for the appellant and assented to by the pleader for the respondent are as follow:—

[725] On the 10th August, 1892, the plaintiff by darkhast applied to the Court for the attachment and sale of certain immovable property of the judgment-debtor. It is not suggested that this application was not in time. On the 23rd August an order was made for attachment of the property. After this the matter was referred to the Nazir, who made a report, which was considered on the 12th September following. A summons to the defendant to attend was issued on the 16th of September. After some postponements, the matter came on before the Court on the 21st November, when some evidence was taken. On the 2nd December a notice was issued to the mortgagee, and on the 17th January, 1893, an order for sale was made by the Court, and on the 19th of the same month the plaintiff paid the bhatha for the issue of the sale proclamation.

On the 14th March the defendant presented an application, asking that the sale be stayed for two months, as he was trying to raise money to satisfy the decree privately, and on the 6th June the plaintiff asked to be allowed to withdraw his darkhast, as he said defendant had paid him Rs. 100, and had promised to pay the rest, but wanted time for that purpose. The order of the Court allowing its withdrawal is dated the 24th day of June, 1893.

The present application for execution was made on the 6th January, 1896. The Subordinate Judge treated the payment of bhatha on the 19th January, 1893, as a step taken in aid of execution and allowed the plaintiff’s application as having been made within three years of that date.
The District Judge dismissed the application as time-barred.

In considering the time within which the execution of a decree or order must be sought under art. 179 (4) of the schedule to the Limitation Act, it is necessary to bear in mind the exact provisions of the article. It allows a period of three years from “(4) the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some steps in aid of execution, of the decree or order.” To satisfy its requirements there must be an application to the proper Court, and time runs from the date of the application and not of the order made upon it—Fakir [726] Muhammad
v. Ghulam Hussain(1). The application, moreover, must be to the proper Court in accordance with law for the execution, or to take some steps in aid of execution of the decree or order. The application need not, however, necessarily be in writing; where the law does not require a writing, an oral application satisfies its requirements—Dharanamma v. Subba(2); Ali Muhammad v. Gur Prasad(3); Maneklal v. Nusia (4); Keshavlal v.
Pitamberdas(5). And where an order made in aid of execution is of such a nature as that the Court would not have made it without an application by the judgment-creditor, it may be presumed that due application has been made for it—Bapuchand v. Mugutra(6). Whether the payment of bhatha is sufficient proof of an application to the Court to take the step in respect of which the bhatha is paid, is doubtful according to the reported cases.
The mere payment of a process-fee under circumstances from which no application can be inferred does not, of course satisfy the requirements of the art. 179 (4)—Dwarkanath v. Anandrao(7). In Ambica v. Surdhari(8) there appears to have been an oral application to issue the proclamation, but there is nothing to show this in Norendra v. Bhupendra (9). In Bhoma Motiram v. Kamaji (10) the Court appears to have presumed an application from the payment of the process fee. A similar presumption was regarded as permissible in Vellaya v. Jaganatha (11), while in Radha Prosad v. Sundur Lall (12) the mere payment of nilami fees was regarded in itself as sufficient to give a fresh starting point for limitation, but all the words of the clause are not noticed in the reported judgment, as observed by Jardine, J., in Dwarkanath v. Anandrao (supra).

We do not, however, consider it necessary to decide whether in the present case we could have presumed an application to issue a sale proclamation when the plaintiff paid the bhatha fees on the 19th January, 1893, or whether the case is not within the [727] ruling in Dwarkanath v. Anandrao (supra). Nor do we consider it necessary to consider whether an application should not be presumed under the circumstances from the order of the 17th January, 1893, as we are clearly of opinion that the payment of the Rs. 100 with the acknowledgment of liability by the defendant's plead r, when he asked for time, is quite sufficient, under the provisions of s. 19 of the Limitation Act, to take the subsequent application out of purview of the statute. The decisions upon this point are, we believe, uniform—Venkatratn Bayw v. Bisesing (1); Muhammad v. Payag Sahu (2); Toree Mahomed v. Mahomed Mabood (3); Norendra v. Bhupendra (4).

We set aside the decree of the District Judge, and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, with costs in both Courts of appeal upon the present respondent.

DUNGARSI DIPCHAND (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. UJAMSI VELSI AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Opponents. [31st March, 1897.]

Award—Decree—Consent decree—Application by creditor of defendant to be made a party to suit—Objection by creditor to filing award—Practice—Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 484.

The plaintiff applied to file an award and for a decree in terms thereof, to which the defendant consented. K., a creditor of the defendant, thereupon applied to be made a party to the suit and objected to the filing of the award and to the decree, alleging that the award was fraudulent and fictitious and had been made in order to save the defendant's property from his creditors. The Subordinate Judge made K., a party to the suit and refused the plaintiff's application. On application to the High Court, Held, that K. ought not to have been made a party to the suit. His remedy was to apply under s. 484 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) for an attachment before judgment of the defendant's property.

[728] Held, also, that the Judge was bound to file the award, the defendant having raised no objection to it and no illegality appearing on the face of it.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court, (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882), against the order of Rao Sahab Tribhovandas Lukshmidas, Subordinate Judge of Dhandhuka and Gogha, in the Ahmedabad District.

The plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Judge to file an award and to pass a decree in terms thereof. The award in question directed the defendant to pay the plaintiff Rs. 2,372. The defendant admitted the award and consented to the decree.

One Keshavlal Vundravan, however, applied to be made a party to the proceedings and contended that the plaintiff's application should be rejected on the ground that the award was fictitious and fraudulent and was made merely for the purpose of saving the defendant's property from his creditors and to defeat the execution of certain decrees which he (Keshavlal) and others expected to obtain in suits which they had filed against the defendant.

The Subordinate Judge granted Keshavlal's application and made him a party-defendant to the suit. He rejected the plaintiff's application and refused to file the award, or to pass a decree in its terms.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule calling on the defendants to show cause why the order of the Judge should not be set aside.

Ghanasham N. Nadori appeared for the applicant (plaintiff) in support of the rule.

Sitanath G. Ajinkya, appeared for the opponent (defendant No. 2) to show cause.

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.— We think that it is clear that the defendant No. 2 ought not to have been made a party to the attachment proceedings or allowed to contest the award. He had no locus standi whatever. If he thought that the award proceedings were a device on the part of the defendant Ujamasi to protect his property from his creditors, including the defendant No. 2, and that the defendant Ujamasi was about to allow his property to be attached for that purpose in pursuance of a fraudulent decree, his remedy was to apply under s. 484 for an attachment before judgment of defendant No. 1's property. That course is still open to him. As the defendant No. 1 raised no objection to the award, the Subordinate Judge was bound to file it, no illegality appearing on its face. We must direct the Subordinate Judge now to do so. The award would not have prejudiced the defendant No. 2 if he had not intervened in the suit. This order will also be without prejudice to his rights. Rule absolute.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tyabji.

MAHOMED NATHUBHAI (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. HUSEN AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Opponents.* [31st March, 1897.]

Jurisdiction—Small Cause Court—Subscription for building a temple—Person receiving such subscriptions—Trustee—Practice—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 30.

A person collecting and receiving subscriptions for the purpose of building a temple, in pursuance of a resolution come to at a meeting of the community, holds them in the capacity of a trustee, and a suit in respect thereof should be filed, under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), in a Subordinate Judge's Court and not in a Small Cause Court.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court, s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 368-10-11 from the defendants, who were the heirs of one Kassam Gulab, under the following circumstances:—

At a meeting held in November, 1889, by the Mahomedan Vepari (trading) panchayat of the Katpore market at Broach, it was resolved that a subscription be raised to build a dehera (temple) over the dargah of Pir Latifshah at Broach. The subscriptions were to be collected by the said Kassum Gulab. Kassum Gulab accordingly collected subscriptions and continued recovering them until August, 1892, when he died. The subscriptions in his hands at that date amounted to Rs. 368-10-11.

* Application, No. 23 of 1897, under the Extraordinary Jurisdiction.

The panchayat employed the plaintiff to build the temple and in February, 1895, he requested the defendants (sons of Kassum Gulab) to pay him the amount subscribed, but they failed to do so.

The panchayat thereupon authorized the plaintiff to file this suit against them.

The plaintiff accordingly presented the plaintiff in the Court of the Small Causes at Broach, but that Court held that the suit related to a trust, and that under art. 18 of sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) it had no jurisdiction. It, therefore, returned the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court.

The plaint was thereupon presented to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, who was of opinion that the suit was for money had and received, and that it should be brought in the Court of Small Causes. He, therefore, returned the plaint.

The plaintiff then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.

_Purshotam P. Khare_, for the applicant (plaintiff).

There was no appearance for the opponents (defendants).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—We think that Kassum Gulab after receiving the subscriptions from the subscribers (who could not re-claim their subscriptions) held their amount in the capacity of a trustee for the community for the purpose of expending it upon the dargah and that the Subordinate Judge and not the Small Cause Court ought to have entertained the suit. We, therefore, direct that the Subordinate Judge do accept the plaint and dispose of the suit. The plaintiff should amend his plaint by suing (with the permission of the Court) on behalf of the community under s. 30, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Subordinate Judge directed to accept plaint.

[10th June, 1897.]

Ganapat Bhagvan obtained a money-decree against Mahadev and in execution applied for his arrest and imprisonment. Before the warrant of arrest was issued, but after Mahadev had appeared in Court in obedience to a notice under ss. 245-B of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), another judgment-creditor applied for execution of another decree against him. Thereupon Mahadev applied under s. 344 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to be declared an insolvent, and in his application mentioned Ganpat Bhagvan as one of his creditors (s. 345). The Subordinate Judge referred to the High Court the question whether pending the inquiry into Mahadev’s insolvency he could be arrested in execution of Ganpat Bhagvan’s decree against him.

* Civil Reference No. 6 of 1897.

Held, that there was no provision in the Code to prevent the Court from issuing a warrant of arrest against him.

Where, however, such a judgment-debtor is brought before the Court under a warrant of arrest, or comes before it upon notice under s. 245-B, the Court has a discretionary power not to put the warrant in force under s. 349 or not to issue it under s. 336 (where the requisite notification has been published by the Local Government) if the applicant furnishes security for his appearance when called upon.

In such cases the Court can also act under s. 337-A of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

[R., 9 O.C. 42 (46).]

REFERENCE by Rao Baijadar Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dholia in the Khandesh District, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

One Ganpat Bhagvan obtained a money decree against Mahadev Hari and applied for execution by arrest and imprisonment of the defendant. Before the warrant of arrest was issued, but after Mahadev had appeared in Court in obedience to a notice under s. 245-B of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), another judgment-creditor applied for execution of another decree against him. Mahadev thereupon applied to be declared an insolvent under s. 344 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). In his application he inserted the name of Ganpat Bhagvan as one of his creditors. Pending inquiry into the said application, the Subordinate Judge referred the following question:

"Whether the defendant can be arrested in execution of the decree of Ganpat Bhagvan pending an inquiry into the defendant’s application for insolvency?"

The opinion of the Judge was in the negative.

Mahadev V. Bhat (amicus curiae), for the decree-holder.—The mere fact that the judgment-debtor has inserted the name of the decree-holder in his application to be declared an insolvent, and that his application is pending, does not take away the decree-holder’s right of having the judgment-debtor arrested and imprisoned in execution of his decree. Chapter XIX of the Code deals with arrest and imprisonment of judgment-debtors. There is no section in it which exempts a judgment-debtor from arrest and imprisonment on the ground that an application for insolvency in other execution proceedings is pending.

There is nothing to show that the conditions laid down in s. 336 or s. 337-A of the Code were satisfied in the present case. The Court, therefore, cannot exercise the discretion vested in it by those sections in favour of the judgment-debtor.

Ramdatt (V. Desai amicus curiae), for the judgment-debtor.—A judgment-debtor, who has been arrested and brought before the Court under s. 336 of the Civil Procedure Code, may declare his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent. He may do this as often as he is brought before the Court in execution of decrees against him. Where he has done so in one execution proceeding it would be absurd to arrest and to bring him again before the Court in another similar proceeding where the name of the creditor, who has caused his arrest, has been inserted in the application for insolvency. It is true there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code forbidding a Court from issuing warrants of arrest or notices to show cause why execution should not issue in as many execution proceedings as there may be decrees, but the judgment-debtor so arrested or brought before [733] the Court has merely to repeat his application to be declared an insolvent, and the Court must release him from arrest.

The insertion of the name of the judgment-creditor in the list of creditors given with the application for insolvency, is equivalent to an application for insolvency in each case, and Ganpat Bhagvan's name having been included in the application, the defendant cannot be subsequently arrested at his instance.

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—There is no section in the Code which prevents the Court issuing a warrant of arrest or a notice under s. 245-B of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) against a judgment-debtor who has in other execution proceedings made an application under s. 344 to be declared an insolvent pending the inquiry into such application. Where, however, such judgment-debtor is brought before the Court under a warrant of arrest or comes before it upon notice under s. 245-B, the Court has a discretionary power not to put the warrant in force under s. 349 or not to issue it under s. 336 (where the requisite notification has been published by the Local Government) if the applicent furnishes security for his appearance when called upon. The Court can also act in such cases under s. 337-A.

Order accordingly.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

DAGDU AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. KALU (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [14th June, 1897.]

Adverse possession continuous—Temporary interruption of possession—Wrongful possession given by Court to a third person—Restoration of possession to defendant.

In a suit brought to recover possession of certain land the defendant pleaded limitation. He had held possession of the land adversely to the plaintiff from 1881 up to the date of suit (2nd October, 1895), with the exception of a period of three years (viz., 4th April, 1892, to 9th April, 1895) during which he was dispossessed under a decree of a Civil Court of first instance obtained against him by a third person, which being reversed in appeal he was restored to possession on the said 9th April, 1895.

[734] Held, that the present suit was barred by limitation. The wrongful possession given by the Court to a third person did not (after possession had been restored to the defendant) prevent the statute from running during its continuance against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendant.

[R., 28 M. 338.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge (A.P.) of Khondeesh at Dhulia.

Suit to recover possession of land. The suit was brought on the 2nd October, 1895. The plaintiffs were originally the owners, but had been out of possession since 1881, and during all that time the defendant had been in adverse possession with the exception of a period of three years, viz., from 4th April, 1892, to 9th April, 1895. During that period he had been dispossessed by one Barsu, who, alleging that the plaintiff had given him the land in question, had sued to recover it from the defendant, and having obtained a decree on the 30th January, 1892, was in execution put into possession on the 4th April, 1892. That decree was confirmed, in appeal, on 8th November, 1892, but on second appeal the High Court on the 13th September, 1894, reversed it and in execution of the High Court's decree the defendant was reinstated in possession on the 9th April, 1895.

* Second Appeal, No. 904 of 1896.

The defendant contended that the claim was barred by limitation.

The parties having admitted the findings of the Court in the former suit, and desired the Court to try the issue of limitation only, the Subordinate Judge found that the suit was not time-barred, and awarded the claim.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"It is contended that the present suit is barred by time. Under art. 142 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) time began to run from the date of dispossession or discontinuance, and under art. 144 it began to run from the date when defendant's possession became adverse to the plaintiffs. It is clear, therefore, the present suit has been brought more than twelve years after the commencement of defendant's possession in 1881. The only ground on which it is attempted to show that the suit is within time is that from 4th April, 1892, to 9th April, 1895, the plaintiffs' donee had been in possession, and during that period the plaintiffs could not have sued. This is, no doubt, a strong point, but neither the [735] lower Court nor the respondent's pleader has been able to cite any authority to support it. I cannot agree with the Court below in holding that the possession of the donee was equivalent to plaintiff's possession. The donee had been in possession under his own title and adversely to the plaintiffs. Suppose the donee had continued in possession for more than twelve years, could the plaintiffs have sued to set aside the gift and recover possession on the ground that possession of the donee was simply permissive? I answer this question in the negative. The plaintiffs, therefore, cannot claim the benefit of the possession of their donee. The donee was put in possession by order of Court, but that order was declared erroneous and was set aside by the High Court. The reversal of a decree of a lower Court by the appellate Court has the effect to relegate the parties to the position in which they were at the date of the commencement of the suit. The decree of the lower Courts in favour of the donee having been set aside by the High Court, the defendant was relegate to his position at the date of the donee's suit. The defendant can successfully sue the donee for mesne profits for the period during which the donee had been in possession under the erroneous decrees of the Courts below. It seems to me, therefore, that the possession of the donee was the possession of a person accountable in law to the defendant. In Motee Sing v. Rajah Leelanund, 11 Cal. W. R., 49, it was held that possession obtained by the plaintiff himself under an order which was subsequently reversed was not enough to save his claim from the bar of limitation. I, therefore, hold that the suit is barred by time."

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Daji A. Khare, for the appellants (plaintiffs).
Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the respondent (defendant).
JUDGMENT.

FARRAN C.J.—We are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge, First Class, A. F., in this case has come to a correct decision, and that this decree should be confirmed. The claim of the plaintiffs to recover possession of the land in suit is, we think, time-barred. The plaintiffs have admittedly been out of possession of the land since 1881, and the defendant has been in adverse possession of it from that time until the date of suit, the 2nd October, 1895, with the exception of a period during which he was ousted from possession by a third person who wrongly alleged that he was the donee of the plaintiffs. Under that allegation the alleged donee obtained possession of the land under the decree of a Court of first instance in April, 1892, but that decree was (after having been confirmed by the lower appellate Court) reversed by the High Court and the land was, as the result of the reversal, restored by the Court to the defendant on 9th April, 1895. The reversal of the decree [736] by the High Court relegated the parties to the position which they held at the commencement of the suit. The erroneous action of the Court of first instance cannot, we think, prejudice the defendant, or put him in a worse position than he would have occupied, had the erroneous decree not been made. As remarked by the lower Court, the defendant could have sued the interloper for mesne profits during the time he was in possession under the erroneous decrees of the lower Courts. There was no abandonment of possession here by the defendant as in Agency Company v. Short (1). The defendant was all along asserting his claim of right to the land and its possession, though for a short time he was improperly deprived of the latter.

If the law is correctly laid down by Kay, L. J., in Willis v. Earl Howe (2), it would cover the present case: "A continuous adverse possession for the statutory period, though by a succession of persons not claiming under one another, does," (says that learned Judge) "in my opinion, bar the true owner," but we prefer to rest our decision upon the ground taken by the lower appellate Court that the wrongful possession given by the Court to a third person did not, (after possession had been restored to the defendant), during its continuance, prevent the statute from running against the plaintiffs, and in favour of the defendant. If we assume that the wrongful possession was obtained at the instance of the plaintiffs, the effect would not, we think, be different. Our view is supported by the case of Motee Singh v. Rajah Leelanund (3) cited by the lower Court.

NARBHERAM (Original Opponent), Appellant v. THE COLLECTOR OF BROACH (Original Applicant), Respondent.* [15th June, 1897.]

Bhag—Bhagdari Act (Bom. Act V of 1862), s. 2—Sale of a portion of a bhag in execution of a decree—Process for sale—Collector's right to get the process quashed.

The appellant was the mortgagee of a portion of a bhag under a mortgage dated 1850, and in a suit brought upon the mortgage he obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. An attachment was issued and an order for sale was made. Thereupon the Collector applied, under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1862, to set aside the attachment and order for sale.

Held, that the mortgage of a portion of a bhag was unlawful under s. 3 of the Act, and a process having been issued for sale of such portion, the Collector was entitled to have it quashed.

Ranchoddas v. Ranchoddas (1) distinguished.

SECOND appeal from the decision of C. Fawcett, Assistant Judge, F. P., of Broach.

One Hargovin Parshotum was the owner of a bhag in the village of Asta.

In 1873 he sold a gabhan (or building site), which was appurtenant to his bhag, to one Bhagvan, and in 1880 he mortgaged the remaining portion of the bhag to one Narbheram Sadaram.

In 1888 Narbheram sued upon the mortgage and he having died, his heirs obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property, and in execution the property was attached and ordered to be sold.

Thereupon the Collector intervened (in 1891) and applied to the Court, under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1862, to set aside the attachment and order for sale, on the ground that the property attached was only a portion of a bhag and did not include the gabhan which was appurtenant to it.

The execution creditors contended that the gabhan in question was no part of the bhag; that the judgment-debtor had no title to the gabhan; that the whole of his interest in the bhag was attached, and that the attachment was not illegal.

[738] The Subordinate Judge of Anklesvar found that the gabhan was part of Hargovin's ancestral bhag; that he had sold the gabhan in 1873 in contravention of the provisions of Bombay Act V of 1862; and that as the gabhan was not included in the property attached, the attachment was illegal. He, therefore, set aside the attachment and order for sale, and his decision was confirmed, on appeal, by the Assistant Judge of Broach.

The decree-holders thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Manekshaw Jehangirshah, for appellants.
Rao Bahadur Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The appellant sought to have a portion of a bhag sold in execution of a decree on his mortgage. At the instance of the Collector

* Second Appeal No. 124 of 1897.
(1) 1 B. 591,
taken under s. 2 of the Bhagdari Act (Bom. Act V of 1862) the Court below set aside the process for sale.

It is argued before us that the lower Court was wrong, (1) because the Act does not apply to a sale under a mortgage, (2) because the mortgage was of the whole interest of the mortgagor in the bhag. We think that neither of these arguments is sound.

In support of the first point, Ranchoddas v. Ranchoddas (1) is cited.
No doubt there is a remark in that decision that the words "attachment or sale by the process of any Civil Court" in s. 1 were intended to prevent attachment and sale under simple money decrees, and not to prevent the sale of mortgaged property in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. But the Court there was dealing with a mortgage made before the Act was promulgated, and the remark must be confined to such. The words of s. 2 of the Act are very wide, and s. 3 declares that it shall not be lawful to mortgage any portion of a bhag. Under s. 3, therefore, the mortgage in the present case was unlawful, and as there had been a process issued for the sale of a portion of a bhag, the Collector under s. 2 was entitled to move the Court to quash it.

[739] As to the second point. The mortgage may be of the whole interest of the mortgagor, but we do not see how this can possibly render it legal. The object of the Act is to keep a bhag intact, and with that object it forbids the mortgaging of any portion of any bhag. The mortgagor in the present case was, it is said, at one time the owner of the whole bhag, but he sold a part of it to one Bhagyan in 1873 and he mortgaged the rest to the appellant in 1880. Both of these transactions were illegal under the Act, and the fact of the earlier transaction cannot possibly be held to validate the latter. The true and only test to apply to the case is to see whether what the appellant seeks now to have sold is a portion of a bhag other than a recognised sub-division of such bhag. Both the lower Courts find as a fact that it is, and, therefore, their decision on the law is correct. We confirm the decree with costs.

MANOCKJI DADABHAI v. THE BOMBAY TRAMWAY COMPANY.*

Tramways Act (Bom. Act I of 1874), s. 24—"Regulating the travelling"—Meaning of the words—Regulation made under the section for regulating the conduct of the Company's servants—Illegality of such regulation.

The words "regulating the travelling" in s. 24 of the Bombay Tramways Act (Bom. Act I of 1874) mean laying down rules as to how persons shall travel, that is to say, rules for the conduct and behaviour of the persons who travel, and cannot be held to include rules for the conduct of the Company's servants, prescribing what they shall do, or what they shall not do, in the matter, for instance, of issuing tickets.

Section 24 of Bombay Act I of 1874 authorises the Bombay Tramway Company to make regulations "for regulating the travelling in or upon any carriage belonging to them." Under this section the Company made the following regulation:

---

* Criminal Revision No. 215 of 1896.
(1) 1 B. 581.
"Any conductor who shall neglect to issue a ticket to a passenger, or shall issue to such passenger a ticket bearing a number other than one of the numbers contained in such books, or shall issue a ticket of a lower denomination than the amount of the fare, or non-consecutive in number, or a ticket other than the ticket provided by the Company for the journey to be travelled,—shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding Rs. 25."

Held, that the regulation was ultra vires.

The accused was a tramway conductor in the service of the Bombay Tramway Company.

He was prosecuted by the Company for omitting to issue a half-anna ticket to a passenger after receipt of the fare, as he was bound to do under bye-law 6 framed by the Company under s. 24 of the Bombay Tramways Act (Bom. Act I of 1874), which authorises the Company to make regulations for regulating the travelling in or upon any carriage belonging to them.

The bye-law was as follows:

"Every person travelling on the tramway will, on payment of his fare, be furnished with a ticket specifying the amount of fare, and shall when required show his ticket to any servant of the Tramway Company.

Each tramway car shall be in charge of a conductor, and each conductor will be furnished with books, each containing tickets consecutively numbered. Any conductor who shall neglect to issue a ticket to a passenger, or shall issue to such passenger a ticket bearing a number other than one of the numbers contained in such books, or shall issue a ticket of a lower denomination than the amount of the fare or non-consecutive in number, or a ticket other than the ticket provided by the Company for the journey to be travelled, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding Rs. 25."

The accused was convicted under the above bye-law and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 5 by Khan Bahadur P. H. Dastur, Acting Third Presidency Magistrate.

The accused thereupon moved the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction to set aside the conviction and sentence.

R. B. Paymaster and Dhanjibhai Jehangir, for the accused.

Lang, Advocate-General (with Messrs. Roughton and Byrne), for complainant.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The applicant has been convicted of the offence of failing to issue an half-anna ticket to a passenger on the Bombay Tramway on receipt of the fare, as he was bound to do under bye-law 6 framed under s. 24 of the Bombay Act I of 1874 (The Bombay Tramways Act). The bye-law is as follows:

"Each tramway car shall be in charge of a conductor, and each conductor will be furnished with books, each containing tickets consecutively numbered. Any conductor who shall neglect to issue a ticket to a passenger, or shall issue [741] to such passenger a ticket bearing a number other than one of the numbers contained in such books, or shall issue a ticket of a lower denomination than the amount of the fare or non-consecutive in number, or a ticket other than the ticket provided by the Company for the journey to be travelled, shall, for every such offence, be liable to a penalty not exceeding Rs. 25."
The point is, whether this is a bye-law that could legally be made under the said s. 24, which allows the grantees to make regulations for regulating the travelling in or upon any carriage belonging to them. It is argued by the Advocate-General, for the prosecution, that as the payment of fares and the taking of tickets are essentials of travelling, a regulation as to the issue and grant of the tickets is a regulation of the travelling. We cannot, however, agree with the argument. Sections 16 to 18 of the Act provide for the payment of fares, and give the grantees the power to regulate the place and manner of payment. It may be a preliminary of travelling that a person shall take a ticket, but it is not an essential of travelling that he shall have a ticket, still less a ticket of a consecutive number or of a particular colour. We think the words "regulating the travelling" can only mean laying down rules as to how persons shall travel, that is to say, rules for the conduct and behaviour of the persons who travel, and cannot be held to include rules for the conduct of the Company's own servants, prescribing what they shall do or what they shall not do, in the matter, for instance, of the issue of tickets, which rules are only framed by the Company for their own protection against the possible fraud or dishonesty of their servants. We are confirmed in this opinion by the fact that an express clause to enable bye-laws to be made for regulating the conduct of railway servants was by Act IV of 1883 inserted in the Railway Act, 1879, and now forms part of the Railway Act, 1890.

We reverse the conviction and sentence.

RANADE, J.—The question of law to be considered in this case is whether Rule 6 of the rules framed by the Tramway Company for the regulation of the duties of conductors falls within the scope of any of the clauses of s. 24 of Bombay Act I of 1874. It was contended by the Advocate-General, who appeared on behalf of the Company, that the clause which permitted the Company to make rules for the regulation of travelling, included a power to frame rules for the conduct of the Company's servants. I am unable to accept the correctness of this view. The words used in s. 24 are similar to those used in the Railway Company's Act, s. 47, cl. (g) of Act IX of 1890, which section, however, contains a separate cl. (e), empowering the Company to make rules for regulating the conduct of its own servants. It is quite clear from this that the words used in s. 24 do not imply the power to make rules for the regulation of the conduct of the Company's servants. This becomes still more clear from the fact that s. 8 in the old Railways Act IV of 1879 contained a cl. (e) similar in its import to the words used in s. 24 of the Tramways Act, and that the Legislature deemed it necessary to pass a new Act IV of 1889 by which for the first time power was conferred on railway administration to make rules for regulating the conduct of railway servants. It accordingly appears clear that the words used in s. 24, on which the Advocate-General relies, cannot be understood as conferring a power on the Tramway Company to frame rules for regulating the conduct of its servants in a way to make the negligent omission of the conductor to issue tickets to passengers an offence under the Tramways Act. The Company has the power to dismiss its servants for neglect of duty, but the negligence or omission cannot be dealt with as an offence criminally punishable. The rule is obviously ultra vires, and we must reverse the conviction and sentence passed in this case.

IN RE NAHALCHAND MOTIRAM.* [19th November, 1896.]

Police—Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act VII of 1867), s. 33—"Booth"—Meaning of the word—Structure contemplated by the section must be constructed on a public road and must cause nuisance to the public—Construction.

The accused had a house on each side of a public road. On the occasion of a wedding he put bamboos across the street from the top windows of one house into the top windows of the other house, and laid a covering of cloth over the bamboos, thus making a canopy, or awning, over the street. It was at such a height that no obstruction or inconvenience whatever was caused to persons or animals passing along the street. The accused erected the structure without the permission of a Magistrate or Municipal Commission. For this act the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under s. 33 of the Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act VII of 1867) and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 5.

Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the structure erected by the accused was not a "booth" within the meaning of s. 33 of Bombay Act VII of 1867. The structure contemplated by the section must be on the road itself and cause some nuisance to the public. As no part of the structure in question touched the road, it could not be said to have been constructed on the road.

APPLICATION for revision under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1852).

The accused had a house on each side of a public street.

In December, 1895, he erected a mandap, or pandal, for the purpose of a wedding, by putting bamboos across the street from the top windows of one house into the top windows of the other house. He laid a covering of cloth over the bamboos so as to form a canopy or roof over the street. No part of the structure touched the road, and no obstruction or inconvenience was caused to any person or animal crossing or passing along the street.

The accused put up this structure without obtaining the permission of a Magistrate or Municipal Commission.

The accused was, therefore, convicted before a Magistrate under s. 33 of the Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act VII of 1867), and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 5.

The District Magistrate of Sholapur upheld this conviction and sentence, in appeal.

The accused thereupon moved the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

G. S. Mulgaonkar, for accused.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—Section 33 of the Bombay District Police Act, 1867, says: "Any person who on any public thoroughfare . . . . . . constructs any booth, shed, stable, or the like, &c. . . . . shall be punishable, &c."

The accused in this case owned a house on each side of the street and be

† Section 33 of Bombay Act VII of 1867 provides as follows:—Any person who on any public thoroughfare without the permission of a Magistrate or Municipal Commission constructs any booth, shed, stable, or the like . . . . . . shall be punishable . . . on conviction before a Magistrate, to the extent of fifty rupees' fine, &c."
put bamboos across the street from the top windows of one into the top windows of the other house, and laid a covering of cloth over the bamboos, thus making a canopy, roof or awning over the street. The structure was at such a height that no obstruction or inconvenience whatever was caused to persons or animals passing along the street. It may be that the accused trespassed over the road and did an act to which the owners of the street might object — Nagor Valab Narsi v. The Municipality of Dhandhuka (1); but the point is, whether that the appellant erected was a booth, shed, stable or the like constructed on a public thoroughfare. In Goldstraw v. Duckworth (2) the words “over or upon the pavement” in s. 67 of the 5 Vict., c. 44, s. 2, were construed to mean “over or upon the pavement so as to obstruct the passage along it.” It is remarkable that the word “on” only is used in s. 33, and its use in this section, which deals with “public nuisances,” would seem to imply that the structure complained of must be on the road itself and cause some nuisance. Since no part of the present structure touched the road, it is difficult to see how it can be said to have been constructed on that road. It was, in fact, supported by, and constructed on, the accused’s own houses. As to its being a booth, for which only the Government Pleader has contended, we have to see what a booth really is. In Webster’s Dictionary the word is said to mean “a house, or shed built of boards, boughs of trees or other light materials for temporary occupation.” In Latham’s Dictionary it is said to mean “a temporary house constructed with boards or boughs or canvas.” The structure raised by the appellant does not fall within either of these definitions, and we do not think that it can be held to be a booth. The lower Courts [743] have not dealt with this point. The Magistrate calls the construction a mandap. The District Magistrate calls it a padal.

We think that the conviction cannot be supported, and we reverse it and the sentence.

QUEEN-EMPERESS v. BAI VAJU AND OTHERS. [26th November, 1896.]

Gaming—Prevention of Gambling Act (Bombay Act IV of 1887), ss. 4, 5 and 7—Proof of keeping or of gaming in a common gaming house—Presumption—Evidence.

A number of persons were found by the police in a closed room in the upper storey of a house, gaming with dice, and having cowries and money before them. They were convicted under Bombay Act IV of 1887.

Held, confirming the conviction, that under s. 7 of the Act the facts found were evidence (until the contrary was shown) that the room was used as a common gaming house, and that the persons found therein were there present for the purpose of gaming.

APPLICATION under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused, who were fourteen in number, were charged under ss. 4 and 5 of Bombay Act IV of 1887, accused No. 1 with keeping a common gaming house, and accused Nos. 2 to 14 with gaming in a common gaming house.

* Criminal Revision No. 260 of 1896.

(1) 12 B. 490. (2) 5 Q.B.D. 275.
On the night of the 31st August, 1896, all the accused except No. 1 were found by the police in a closed room on the upper storey of a house, sitting in a circle with dice and cowries (shells), and money before them. The house was attached to a Hindu temple, of which accused No. 1 was the pujari or ministrant.

Accused No. 1 was not in the house when the police appeared on the scene and arrested the other accused.

The accused were tried summarily under Chap. XXII of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) by the First Class [746] Magistrate of Dhandhuka. He held that the house in question was a common gaming house, and that all the accused except two were guilty of the offences charged, and he sentenced them to pay fines varying from Rs. 10 to 40.

Against these convictions and sentences, the twelve accused applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Nagindas Tulsidas (with Ganpat S. Rao), for accused.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—No doubt, as held in Criminal Ruling No. 9 of 1896, in the absence of evidence that a house is used for profit or gain, it cannot be held to be a common gaming house as defined in the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, 1897, s. 3. In the present case, thirteen persons were found in a room in the upper storey of the house in question, sitting in a circle, gambling with dice, and having a quantity of cowries and money before them. Section 7 of the above quoted Act enacts that this shall be evidence, until the contrary is made to appear, that the room is used as a common gaming house, and that the persons found therein were there present for the purpose of gaming. The criminal ruling, therefore, has no application to the facts of the present case, and we see no reason to interfere with the conviction of the applicants 2 to 12. Applicant 1 is convicted under s. 4 of the Act. But she was not in the room, and the Magistrate does not record any finding that she is the owner or occupier of the house or room, but merely that her daughter was sitting outside the door, which was chained. In her case we reverse the conviction and sentence.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Justice Ranade.

[3rd December, 1896.]

Police—Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890), s. 47—Right of the police to have free access to a place of public amusement or resort—Race-course enclosure.

Races were held in a certain enclosed ground at Poona which belonged to the Military authorities, and was lent for the purpose to the Western India Turf Club. The part of the ground to which the public were admitted, was fenced in by ropes, and soldiers were stationed at intervals to prevent any persons entering or leaving the enclosure otherwise than through the passages provided for the purpose. The inspector of police, who was present on duty in that capacity, contrary to the regulations prescribed by the stewards of the races crossed over the fencing ropes into the enclosure instead of going in by the regular entrance. This was reported to the honorary secretary of the club, who had general charge of the arrangements. He sent for the inspector, and after an interview with him ordered two soldiers, who were in attendance to keep order, to put him out of the enclosure. They accordingly did so, laying hands on him in the first instance, but immediately, at his request, letting him go and merely escorting him outside. He thereupon under s. 353 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) charged the secretary of the club with using criminal force to a public servant in the exercise of his duty.

Held, that the offence had been committed. Under s. 47 of the Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890) the police had a right of free access to the race-course.

APPEAL from the order of A. R. Bonus, Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Poona.

The accused (Captain Ross) was the honorary secretary of the Western India Turf Club. At a race meeting held at Poona in August, 1896, under the auspices of the club, on enclosed ground lent for the purpose by the Military authorities, Captain Ross caused Inspector Fleming, a police officer who had (as was alleged) infringed the regulations, to be removed from the racing enclosure.

Inspector Fleming thereupon charged Captain Ross with using criminal force to a public servant in the execution of his duty.

The Magistrate found him guilty and under s. 353 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 51.

The facts of the case, and the points raised in defence, appear from the following extract from the judgment of the Magistrate:

"This case has arisen out of an incident which occurred at the last Poona sky races meeting. There were four days’ racing, the last day being August 11th. Police Inspector Fleming was the police officer on duty in immediate charge of the Civil Police, and on August 11th he came into the first enclosure over the ropes which were used to fence the enclosure, passing through the picket of soldiers who were stationed along the ropes to prevent people from entering, and (as some witnesses add) leaving the enclosure otherwise than by one of the regular entrances provided. This entry being reported to Captain Ross, who at that time was the honorary secretary of Western India Turf Club, under the [748] auspices of which club the race meeting was held, he sent for Inspector Fleming, and the interview between them ended in Captain Ross directing two soldiers of the Royal Irish Rifles to put Inspector Fleming outside the enclosure. The men took hold of Inspector Fleming, then let him go at his request, and escorted him outside the enclosure. These are the undisputed facts of the case, and on these facts a charge of using criminal force to a public servant in the execution of his duty has been framed against Captain Ross.

"The facts stated being admitted, or at any rate not disputed, the burden of proof that he is exculpated rests on Captain Ross; and to establish that exculpation the solicitor for the defence has raised several issues which it is the duty of the Court to consider and adjudicate upon. These issues are partly issues of law and partly issues of fact. They may be stated as follows:

"(1) The race-course enclosure was not a place to which under s. 47 of the Bombay District Police Act of 1890 the police had right of free access.

"(2) If it was, Inspector Fleming was bound to observe the rules and orders made by the stewards of the Western India Turf Club through their secretary and agent Captain Ross, one of which rules and orders was that no one was to be admitted to the enclosure over the ropes.

"(3) The race-course enclosure was not a place of public resort which, under s. 51 of the Act mentioned, the police might enter without a warrant.
"(4) If it was, Inspector Fleming was bound by the rules and orders made by a person lawfully authorized—in this case Captain Ross as honorary secretary of the Western India Turf Club—one of which was the order already referred to. ... As regards the first issue, Mr. Burder has stated that he is not prepared to admit that the enclosure is a public place for the purposes of s. 47 of Act IV of 1890 (Bombay). I do not see that on race days it can possibly be held not to be such a place as is contemplated by the section. It is a place to which, in this case, the public were invited by advertisement in a newspaper; it is, I hold, a place of public amusement. It may be the case, as stated by Mr. Burder, that the enclosure is a part of the ground under the control of the Military authorities, and by them handed over to the Western India Turf Club on certain conditions. That does not, I consider, exclude the enclosure from the operation of s. 47 of Bombay Act IV of 1890 when the public are admitted thereto on payment of entrance money or otherwise. Lords' cricket ground in London is, I believe, the property of Marylebone Cricket Club; The Empire Theatre in London is the property of a limited company; Goodwood racecourse is the private property of an individual as far as I know; but when these places are respectively used for cricket matches, theatrical performances or race meeting, they become places of public amusements, and if they were situated in the Bombay Presidency, I should consider them within the purview of s. 47 of Act IV of 1890 (Bombay). That is my view as regards the race-course ground and enclosures managed by the Western India Turf Club.

[749] "The question of free access to the enclosure may conveniently be considered in connection with the second issue. It is stated by Captain Ross that he informed Inspector Fleming that the whole of the side of enclosure where the ropes were, would be guarded by military pickets, that he (Captain Ross) directed the picket to let no one pass except through the gates, that Inspector Fleming was distinctly told that there would be no ingress or egress except through the gates (Ex. 11). Inspector Fleming states that Captain Ross said that he was going to have soldiers to prevent people entering over the ropes and that Captain Ross may have said that no persons would be allowed to enter except by the gates (Ex. 4). Several of the men who were on picket duty depose to having received orders not to allow any one to enter the enclosure over the ropes. That such orders were issued is, I think, proved; and it remains to be considered whether they were rules by which Inspector Fleming was bound, and whether they contravened the statutory right of Inspector Fleming to free access to the enclosure. I hold that Inspector Fleming was not bound by those rules and that they did contravene the right referred to. Section 47 of Act IV of 1890 speaks of rules and orders lawfully made. The District Superintendent of Police in his evidence states that he considers these rules and orders to be in this case the rules and orders made by the Western India Turf Club authorities for the regulation of the 'internal economy' of the enclosure. He considers that the orders as regards the non-entry of the public over the ropes were 'not legal'; and in answer to questions gives several other opinions about rules which either were or might be promulgated by the authority of the stowards of the Western India Turf Club. These views of Mr. Kennedy are hardly relevant, it being the Court's duty to decide on the matter. Mr. Little, Solicitor for the Crown, has urged that (a) Mr. Kennedy by the word 'legal' meant 'having the force of law'; (b) that the rules and orders referred to in s. 47 refer to rules and orders made under s. 39 of the Act,—leaving it to be inferred that as no rules and orders were issued by the District Magistrate in this instance, the police remained unfettered by any such rules or orders. I do not consider it necessary to discuss point (a), and I am not prepared to restrict the rules and orders mentioned in s. 47 to those mentioned in s. 39. I hold that ‘rules and orders lawfully made’ means rules and orders made under some express authorisation of law. I know of no law so authorizing the stewards of the Western India Turf Club, and if it were intended that such a body when admitting the public to the premises controlled by them should be empowered to restrict the right of entry of the police to such premises, I consider that the Act would have said so in definite terms. If such a power be now conceded, the whole of s. 51 of the Act is nullified. Suppose for instance that the inspector from outside the ropes had seen a man inside the enclosure pick a pocket and then try to sneak quietly away on the far side of the enclosure, would it be seriously contended that the inspector was by the stewards’ rule precluded from crossing the ropes and taking the shortest way to the offender to effect his arrest. Hardly I imagine. But if the inspector [750] might cross the ropes in this particular instance in the exercise of his duty, he might also cross them for the purpose of exercising supervision and keeping order. No distinction in urgency can be recognized. I hold that Inspector Fleming had an absolute right to enter the enclosure by crossing the ropes, and that any rule or order to the contrary made by the stewards of the Western India Turf Club or their secretary was an illegal infringement of the right of free entry conferred by s. 47 of the Act. The question which has been suggested, whether the erection of a high fence round the enclosure would obstruct the police, is beside the point; as a fence is not a rule or order, and if the police saw reason to climb over it in the execution of their duty, they would, I hold, be justified in doing so.

"Issue (3) can be disposed of at once for the reasons stated in connexion with issue (1). I hold that on race days the enclosure is a place of public resort within the meaning of s. 51. If it was not, it would be unnecessary to post a picket to prevent the public from entering without tickets.

"Issue (4) can also be briefly dismissed. I hold that a person ‘lawfully authorized’ means a person authorized by some express provision of law; and does not include the stewards or honorary secretary to the Western India Turf Club. My reasons for this opinion are set forth in the discussion of issue (2) . . . . . . . . . . . . I find Captain Ross guilty of the charge framed against him. The question of sentence can be briefly disposed of. The offence was a very trifling one; in fact, almost technical. As between man and man, it would be sufficiently punished with a simple fine. But the question really at issue is the right of the stewards of the Western India Turf Club to place restrictions on the powers claimed for the police on the authority of Act IV of 1890 (Bombay). That question is one to which I understand both sides desire a definite answer from a higher Court; and I, therefore, pass the lightest sentence which will allow of an appeal.

"The order of the Court is that Captain Ross do pay a fine of Rs. 51 (fifty-one), or, in default, suffer simple imprisonment for seven days."

From this decision Captain Ross appealed to the High Court.

Macpherson with Messrs. Crawford Burder & Co. for the appellant.

Rao Bahadur V. J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.
JUDGMENT.

Parsons, J.—This appeal has been very properly confined to, and argued upon, the purely legal question, namely, whether the police had a right to free access to the enclosed ground on which the Western India Turf Club held a race meeting on the 11th August last.

The facts as set out by the Magistrate in his judgment are that the public were invited by advertisements in the newspapers, &c., to the race meeting, and that the public generally were admitted to the enclosure on payment of varying amounts, and it is conceded that the meeting falls within the definition contained in s. 47, Bombay Act IV of 1890.

The argument on behalf of the appellant is directed to show that under no section of the said Act was a right of free access given to the police to such a meeting under the circumstances of the present case. Sections 39 (m), 47, 51, and 53 of the Act were referred to as the only sections in the Act affording a possible justification of the claim for free access.

On the other side, ss. 47 and 53 were relied on as giving that right. It is sufficient for the purposes of this decision to consider s. 47. Sub-section 2 of that section gives the police free access to every public place of amusement, or to any assembly or meeting to which the public are invited, or which is open to the public for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of sub-s. (1) and to any direction made thereunder. In the present case, no directions were made. The Superintendent of Police says that he left the police arrangements to be made by Inspector Fleming. We must take it, therefore, that Inspector Fleming was in charge of the police arrangements, and that the duty which is clearly imposed on the police by this section, was entrusted to him. That duty, as expressed in the section itself, is "preventing serious disorder or breach of the law, or manifest and eminent danger to the persons assembled." It was argued for the appellant that until there was an apprehension of these things happening, the police would have no right of access, and that at a respectable race meeting there could be no such apprehension, and that, therefore, until the things happened there would be no right of access, but this argument loses sight of the use of the word "prevention." There is always a possibility, even among the most respectable persons at a race meeting, of some such thing happening, and where on payment of a fixed sum the public are admitted there is still more chance of such a possibility. If, in order to prevent such a possibility becoming a certainty,—in other words, if, in order to prevent these things happening,—the policeman in charge of the police arrangements should think it right to place police in various parts of the ground and himself go through these grounds to see that everything was going on satisfactorily, and that as far as he was concerned he had done his duty of prevention, he would clearly be acting within the powers given by this section. It is certainly not for this Court or for any Court to dictate to the police the precise amount of authority they shall exercise within the discretionary power given them by the law, or the precise time at which they shall commence to exercise that authority. The prevention of the things specified in the section under discussion is left to them, and they are given the right of free access in order to effect that purpose. If the arguments for the appellant were correct, the Turf Club authorities could have ordered every policeman off the ground on the excuse that their services were not required at such a respectable and well-conducted meeting where there was no apprehension of any disorder or breach of the peace, or danger. It is, however, for the police authorities to determine the point, and having determined it one way it was not within the power of the Turf Club to ignore the decision and to treat the police as trespassers. We think the conviction right, and we dismiss the appeal.

RANADE, J.—I concur. Though the appeal was preferred under s. 408, cl. (b), the counsel for the appellant took no exception to the statement of facts as set forth in the judgment of the trying Magistrate, and the only point argued before us related to the question of law, whether or not the enclosure from which Inspector Fleming, the complainant, was removed forcibly by the orders of Captain Ross, was or was not a place where the inspector had a right to remain in the performance of his duty as a police officer.

It was contended by Mr. Macpherson that the same general law applied to policemen as to private individuals, except so far as any express statute conferred on a police officer a particular authority to enter upon or remain on private property in the discharge of his duties. Only four sections (ss. 39, 47, 51 and 53) of the Bombay Police Act, IV of 1890, were referred to in the course of the argument as conferring such special authority but the counsel for the accused contended that Mr. Fleming was not protected by any of these sections in asserting his right to remain within the enclosure when asked to go out. Section 39 (1), cl. (m), did not, it was urged, apply, because it presupposes the existence of rules and regulations made in that behalf by the District Magistrate, which was not the case here. Section 47 empowers police officers above a certain rank to give directions in the matter of the admission of the public to places of public amusement, but it was urged that these directions have in view the prevention of disorder or breach of the law, or of imminent danger to the persons assembled, which occasions did not exist or arise in the present case. Further, s. 51, cl. 2, also permits a police officer to enter places of public resort; but this, it was urged, he could only do for the purposes specified in sub-section (1), which purposes are not alleged as justifications in the present case. Lastly s. 53 imposes a duty on police officers to keep order in places of public resort; but it was urged that the enclosure was not a place of public resort in the same sense in which the places specially mentioned in the section are places of public resort, and, therefore, the section did not apply.

The contentions on behalf of the appellant were thus either that the enclosure was not a place of public resort, or that there was no occasion for Inspector Fleming, as police officer, to remain within the place in the discharge of his duties, and that, therefore, his assertion of a right to stay within the enclosure when told to go out was unjustifiable, and his forcible expulsion was not an offence under s. 353 of the Indian Penal Code. It appears to me, however, that the inspector had a full right, under ss. 47 and 53, to be present within the enclosure, which must be held to be, for the purposes of the present inquiry, a place of public amusement or resort. It is admitted that the public were invited to the place by newspaper advertisements and every one who had obtained a ticket could go to the place. The levying of ticket fees could not make any difference. Whenever a large crowd of people assembles, and it becomes necessary to make arrangements for their entry and exit and proper accommodation, the police have a duty to perform which they cannot forego. Though people going to a public theatre pay, for the time being, for the seats they occupy, the theatre is none the less a place of public amusement and resort. In the present case, the services of the police were specially intimated for by the appellant as secretary of the club, and the club had no power to limit their functions to the place outside the enclosure. It is true special arrangements were made by the club to provide for the services of soldiers who are called military police in the correspondence, but that circumstance did not lessen the responsibility of the civil police authorities to keep order and prevent breaches of the law. It was admitted that, if an occasion had arisen for the services of the civil police, they would have had a right to enter within the enclosure itself. If they could do so after disorder had broken out, it follows as a corollary that they had a right to remain within the enclosure to prevent such disorder or breach of law in anticipation. The fact appears to be that the stewards of the Turf Club admitted in the previous correspondence between the Secretary and the District Police Superintendent that Captain Ross had to a certain extent exceeded his authority in expelling the complainant from the enclosure in the way he did. The dispute would never have come before the Courts had Captain Ross expressed his regret more fully. There was a technical offence committed, and the Magistrate's decision of the point of law involved appears to me to be correct.

Appeal dismissed.

22 B. 755.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Fulton.

BHOJABHAI ALLARKHIA AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. HAYEM SAMUEL (Defendant).* [22nd March, 1998.]

Principal and agent—Liability of agent for rent—Honorary secretary to a school maintained by a foreign society—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230—Ejectment—Notice to quit—Service of notice—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106.

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of a certain house in Bombay and for arrears of rent. The defendant pleaded that the house in question was occupied by the Beni-Israel School of Bombay which was maintained by the Anglo-Jewish Association of London, that he was honorary secretary of the school, and as such, and not in his personal capacity, had hived the house, and that he had never paid the rent or expenses of the school out of his own pocket. He contended that he was not liable to be sued personally.

_Held_, that the defendant was liable for the rent. There was nothing to show that the contract for the house was made on the personal credit of any one except the defendant.

The notice to quit had been sent to the solicitors of the defendant. It was contended that this was not sufficient service under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

_Held_, that the service was sufficient.

SUIT for possession of a house and for rent.

The plaint stated that on the 8th November, 1897, the plaintiffs had purchased the house in question, the defendant being at the time a monthly tenant thereof. The defendant duly attorneys to the plaintiffs.

On the 28th December, 1897, the plaintiffs served a notice on the defendant to vacate on or before the 1st February, 1898, but the defendant disregarded the notice and continued in occupation. The plaintiffs prayed for possession and for rent at the rate of Rs. 150 per month from the 8th November, up to the 31st January, 1898, and for compensation for use and occupation subsequently to that date at the rate of Rs. 200 a month.

* Suit No. 69 of 1898.

In his written statement the defendant stated that he was the honorary secretary of the Bani-Israel School of Bombay, which occupied the house in question, and that the said school was in charge of the Anglo-Jewish Association of London, which, out of its funds, paid the rent and all the expenses of the school, that in hiring the said premises he had acted as honorary secretary and not in his personal capacity; and that he had never paid the rent or expenses of the school out of his own pocket. He submitted that he was not liable to be sued personally for the said rent.

He also alleged that the notice to quit had not been served upon him as required by s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and that the notice was, therefore, not a legal notice, and he brought into Court Rs. 565, being the rent due at [756] Rs. 150 per month which he contended was all the plaintiff could claim.

At the hearing the following issues were raised:—
1. Whether defendant is personally liable to the plaintiffs and whether the plaintiffs have any cause of action against him personally?
2. Whether defendant received legal notice to quit?
3. Whether, having regard to the payment into Court, plaintiffs are entitled to any and what relief against the defendant?

Inequity for the plaintiffs.—The defendant, if merely an agent of the London Association, is an agent of a foreign principal, and as such liable. The plaintiffs had no notice that he was merely an agent. The notice to quit was served upon his solicitors, and that is sufficient under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

Lowndes for defendant.—The plaintiffs had full notice that the defendant was merely an agent. The Bombay Branch of the London Association is liable and not the defendant. As to service of notice, s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is clear.

The following authorities were cited:—As to the liability of an agent, Dutton v. Marsh (1); In re New Fleming Spinning and Weaving Co. (2); Farhall v. Farhall (3); Burks v. Smith (4). Storey on Agency, s. 285; Daly’s Law of Clubs and Voluntary Associations. As to service of notice, Papillon v. Brunton (5); Prior v. Ongley (6); Jogendro Chunder v. Dwarkanath Karmokar (7).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—On the first issue I find in the affirmative. Assuming that the former owner when he let the premises to the defendant knew that the latter was the honorary secretary and treasurer of a school committee (which is very possibly the case) still there is nothing to show that the contract was made on the personal credit of any one except the defendant. A fluctuating body like the committees of a society or school cannot contract, though the individuals composing it may do so. Here [787] it is not alleged that any single individual was named as having authorized the amount, and to this day we do not know who were the members of the committee in question and in what way (if at all) they signified their assent to the tenancy accepted by the defendant. Prima facie, looking to the forms of receipt which the defendant accepted, I should say he contracted in his own name, but whether he did so or not, the case seems to fall under s. 230 of the Contract Act, no principal being disclosed. Mr. Lowndes argued that a decision on this issue against the defendant would render precarious the position of honorary secretaries of charitable institutions in general. I do not think that is the case. If secretaries of voluntary societies make contracts without disclosing the names of the persons under whose authority they are acting, they of course render themselves liable for the performance of the contracts they have made, but in practice no real difficulty usually occurs; for the committees of the institutions concerned would, as a rule, naturally feel bound, in honour, to indemnify their officers, and would, in so far as they had authorized the contract, be equally bound to them in law.

On the second issue it appears to me that the notice to quit sent to Messrs. Craigie, Lynch and Owen is sufficient. Either the case falls under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, or it does not. If there is no custom taking the case out of the section it is quite clear, from the defendant’s evidence, that the notice was delivered to him more than fifteen days before the end of January. It was sent to his solicitors, who handed it over to his brother, who in turn passed it on to him within a few days. There can, I think, be no doubt that the notice was in the defendant’s hands before the 15th January, and if so, the wording of s. 106 was complied with. The notice was delivered to the defendant personally. I am asked to say that it was not delivered to the defendant personally, because it was not placed in his hands by the plaintiffs or their agent. But I could not so decide without adding words to the section, which does not determine by whom delivery must be made. So long as the notice is delivered by some one to the defendant, the literal terms of the section are complied with and also, I think, its intention, which is simply to secure due notice to the tenants. I cannot see what difference it makes whether a notice is given, in the first instance, to the solicitors and by him conveyed through a relative or servant to the tenant, or whether it is given direct to the tenant by the lessor in the first instance. In both cases it is either eventually or directly delivered to the tenant personally and that is all that the language or the spirit of the section requires. To accept the argument put forward for the defence it seems to me that I should have to alter the wording of the section, and that in doing so I should clearly be defeating its intention.

On the other hand, if, as seems very probable, the case does not fall under s. 106 owing to the existence of a local custom requiring a month’s notice in the case of bungalows and houses of which the rent is paid monthly, it seems equally clear that the notice of the 28th December was sufficient. It was given to Messrs. Craigie, Lynch and Owen, who did not disclaim authority to act for the defendant, and who caused it to be conveyed to the defendant. They had a few days before written to the plaintiff on the subject, and as a matter of fact they did communicate the notice to the defendant, though possibly not till after 1st January. In these circumstances, then, there is, I think, a presumption that they had authority to receive the notice (see Prior v. Ongley) (1), and consequently the question whether they actually sent it on in time to the defendant, does not arise—Tanham v. Nicholson (2).

I pass a decree for plaintiffs in terms of paras. 1 and 2 of the prayer of plaint and for compensation at the rate of Rs. 150 per month for the use and occupation of premises from the 1st February to the day of receiving possession. I do not think it proved that at the present time plaintiffs could have got a higher rent than what they were receiving from defendant. Defendant to pay costs of this suit.

QUEEN-EMPERESS v. KALU DOSAN.* [10th December, 1896.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 412—Appeal from a conviction by a Magistrate, other than a Presidency Magistrate, where accused pleads guilty—Appeal.

The accused pleaded guilty to a charge of kidnapping from lawful custody, and was thereupon convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class and sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 20. The accused appealed and in appeal denied that he had committed the offence. The Sessions Judge was of opinion that, as the accused had pleaded guilty at the trial, he had no power to deal with the appeal, except as regards the amount of punishment awarded. He, therefore, referred the case to the High Court.

Held, that the Sessions Judge was competent to deal with the whole appeal. Section 412 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) had no application. That section provides for convictions by Courts of Session or Presidency Magistrates only, and the exception is not only as to the extent but also as to the legality of the sentence.

REFERENCE under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused was charged with the offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship under s. 363 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

The accused pleaded guilty, and was convicted on his own plea by the First Class Magistrate of Ahmedabad and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for four months and to pay a fine of Rs. 20.

The accused then appealed to the Sessions Judge, and in appeal denied that he had committed the offence.

The Sessions Judge was of opinion that the conviction was illegal; but as the accused had pleaded guilty at the trial, he held that he had no power to deal with the appeal except as regards the amount of the punishment awarded.

He, therefore, referred the case to the High Court under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

[760] The reference came on for hearing before a Division Bench (Parsons and Ranade, JJ.).

There was no appearance for the Crown or for the accused.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMpress v. HANMA.* [10th December, 1896.]

Criminal law—Practice—Procedure—Sentence—Enhancement of sentence—Power of appellate Court—Conviction and sentence on two separate charges—Retention of sentence where conviction on one of the charges is reversed

Where an accused person is convicted and sentenced on two separate charges, the appellate Court has no power, in appeal, to maintain the whole sentence when it reverses the conviction on one of the charges, as to do so is, in effect, to enhance the sentence.

The accused was convicted by the Second Class Magistrate of Belgaum of the offence of theft and mischief by killing, &c., cattle under ss. 379 and 429 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) and sentenced to one month’s rigorous imprisonment for each offence.

On appeal, the District Magistrate of Bijapur convicted the accused of the offence of mischief only under s. 429 of the Indian Penal Code, but upheld the whole sentence of two months’ rigorous imprisonment.

The High Court sent for the record of the case under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

OPINION.

[761] PER CURIAM.—In this case we do not interfere, as the sentence has expired, but we would point out to the lower appellate Court that it had no power to maintain the whole sentence when it reversed the conviction on one of the charges, such a maintenance being an enhancement of the sentence (see Criminal Ruling No. 41 of 1892).

ANANDRAO BABAJI BARVE v. DURGABAI 22 Bom. 762

22 B. 761.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief, Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

ANANDRAO BABAJI BARVE (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. DURGABAI AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [24th June, 1897.]

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 135—Assignment of mortgage by mortgagee—Suit by assignee—Payment into Court by defendants (representatives of mortgagor) of price paid to the assignor (mortgagee) without admitting the mortgage or assignment—Interest—Payment in grain—Damdupat.

In a suit by the assignee of a mortgage to recover the amount due on it, the defendants (who were representatives of the mortgagor) without admitting the mortgage, or that anything was due under it, paid into Court the amount which the plaintiff had paid for the assignment with interest and expenses, but said that they did not admit the assignment to the plaintiff or the assignor’s right to the mortgage, but that they were willing that the amount should be paid to the plaintiff if he proved that he was the person entitled to recover the mortgage debt.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole amount legally due on the mortgage, and that s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) did not apply. Payment into Court under such circumstances was only a conditional tender and such a conditional tender is not a payment under the section.

Held, also, that the rule of damdupat applied to the mortgage, the advance having been in cash, although the interest was to be paid in grain.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. Fitzmaurice, District Judge of Thana, varying the decree of Rao Saheb G. V. Saraiya, Subordinate Judge of Bassein.

Suit by the plaintiff as assignee of a mortgage. The mortgage had been executed on the 12th January, 1880, by Balkrishna N. Vartak and Narayan Balkrishna Vartak to one Parashram Sadasiv, whose grandson Balkrishna assigned it to the plaintiff. The deed provided (inter alia) that twenty maunds of paddy should be delivered annually to the mortgagors as interest on the sum lent. The plaintiff alleged that no part of the debt had been paid, and now sued the defendants, who were the heirs of the mortgagors, to recover Rs. 250 as principal and Rs. 490 as interest.

The defendants did not admit the mortgage or the assignment, or that anything was due. They pleaded that they had no notice of the assignment as required by ss. 131—133 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), and they alleged that the only consideration paid by the plaintiff for the assignment was Rs. 200. They accordingly paid that sum into Court together with Rs. 3-6-0 as interest and Rs. 3-10-0 as expenses, in all Rs. 207, which they submitted was what the plaintiff was entitled to in case he should prove his right under the mortgage, having regard to s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 670, holding that the plaintiff was entitled to the full amount of the mortgage debt and not merely to the sum which he had paid for the assignment. He also held that the rule of damdupat was not applicable to the case, as the interest was to be paid in grain and not in cash.

On appeal, the Judge varied the decree and awarded only Rs. 207 to the plaintiff, holding that s. 135 applied and that payment of that sum into Court was sufficient under the section.

* Second Appeal, No. 624 of 1896.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

N. G. Chandavarkar, for appellant.—The plaintiff is entitled to the whole mortgage-debt which he purchased. Section 135 does not apply to this case. That section applies only when an unconditional payment is made. Here the payment made by the defendants was not unconditional. It was not made to the buyer, but into Court, and the defendants contested the assignment and the plaintiff’s right under the mortgage—Vishnu v. Dagadu (1); Khoshde v. Satar Mondol (2); Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri (3)

[763] Ganesh K. Deshmukha, for respondents.—The payment into Court was sufficient, and s. 135 applies. The payment was not unconditional. The plaintiff, of course, had to show his right to recover the money. The execution of the mortgage was not contested. The defendants merely pleaded ignorance of the transaction. They had to protect themselves from liability to the mortgagee’s heirs. The payment into Court was sufficient—Debendra Nath v. Pulin Behary (4).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—Section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act has given rise to various different rulings in the High Courts. It is a sweeping and rather drastic section. It enables a person against whom an actionable claim exists, whether disputed or not, to free himself from his obligation for its fulfilment by paying to the assignee by purchase of the claim the price and incidental expenses of the sale with interest on the price from the day that the buyer paid it. The time within which an obligation when assigned can be thus got rid of, is not limited by the Act; and hence payment into Court after suit brought to recover the claim has been held to fulfil its conditions if made before the claim is made clear by evidence and is ready for judgment—Muchiram v. Ishan Chunder (5); and the definition of an actionable claim is so wide that it has been held to extend even to a registered mortgage claim—Nirmal Chaudhuri v. Karam Raji (6); Muchiram v. Ishan Chunder (5); Russick Lall v. Romanath (7); Debendra Nath v. Pulin Behary (4). The latter case is an authority for saying that an offer or tender of the price and expenses with interest is sufficient though not followed by a payment into Court.

The Madras and Allahabad High Courts have even held that the assignee of an actionable claim is not entitled to recover in any case more than he has paid for the claim with interest and expenses—Nilakanta v. Krishnasami (8); Jani Begam v. Jahangir Khan (9). These decisions, however, have not found favour with the Judges of the Calcutta High Court; and this Court, following their view, has ruled that the assignee-plaintiff is entitled to [784] recover the whole amount of the claim assigned to him unless the defendant actively avails himself of the provisions of s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act. We feel no doubt as to the soundness of that decision.

The question here is, whether what the defendants have done is equivalent to payment. They have (without admitting the mortgage-debt upon which they are sued in their representative capacity, or that anything is due under it) brought into Court the amount which the plaintiff has paid for the assignment of the mortgage, but says that they do not admit that the plaintiff’s assignor was the person entitled to the mortgage, or the plaintiff’s assignment, and are only willing that the amount should be paid to the plaintiff if he proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he is the person entitled to recover the mortgage debt. This tender by payment into Court was, in fact, a conditional tender.

In our opinion, a conditional tender such as this does not amount to a payment within the meaning of s. 135. Payment into Court, unless the plaintiff can take it out in satisfaction of his claim, is not payment at all. If the plaintiff had not shown that his assignor was the person entitled to the mortgage, his suit would have been dismissed with costs. The payment into Court did not shorten the trial in any respect except that it avoided the necessity of taking the mortgage account. It doubtless may in some instances occur that the obligee of an actionable claim does not know whether the assignee of the obligor of such claim has a good title to recover it or not. In such cases it may be difficult for the obligee to avail himself of the provisions of s. 135, but we do not think that such a consideration should lead us to hold, as the District Judge has done, that a conditional tender in the shape of payment into Court, coupled with a condition as to its payment to the plaintiff, is equivalent to payment. The payment into Court in this case did not in the least shorten the trial. Issues were raised and the case was fought upon them, and it was only when the plaintiff obtained a certificate under Act VII of 1889, and proved his case, that a decree was passed in his favour.

In the absence of a preamble it is difficult to determine what object the Legislature had in view in passing the section—what the mischief was which they sought to remedy. The word “payment” which they have used in the section cannot, as pointed out in Debendra Nath v. Pulin Behary (1), be read in its usual sense. To so read it would make the Act a dead letter. Under these circumstances one is perforce led to conjecture what the evil was which needed legislation of a somewhat novel and retrograde character to check it. If it was to put an obstacle in the way of assigning even undisputed registered mortgage claims and choses in action of every kind, the Madras rulings are without doubt best calculated to effect that purpose, but it is difficult to suppose that the Legislature had in view a purpose so opposed to modern ideas. If they desired to confer immunity upon debtors from paying the full amount of their debts, the same observation is applicable. If they intended to diminish litigation, the ruling that a strict tender before suit followed by unconditional payment into Court, or unconditional payment into Court where tender before suit is impossible, is necessary in order to bring the obligee within the terms of the section, best effectuates the object of the Legislature. If the suit is to go on notwithstanding the payment, litigation is not avoided. If the Legislature had in view the checking of the common Indian practice of buying up doubtful and disputed claims, the definition of actionable claim in s. 130 is too wide and brings within the scope of the provision undisputed as well as disputed and doubtful choses in action.

We reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, but as we think that the rule of damdupat is applicable to this mortgage—the advance having been in cash though the interest was to be paid in grain—with the variation that the interest must be... limited to the amount of the mortgage-debt, or Rs. 500 in all. There, will be the usual decree for sale in default of payment of that sum with. interest at 9 per cent. within six months of this date. Costs throughout.
in proportion.

Decree reversed.

[766] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

In re LIMBAJI TULSIRAM AND OTHERS.* [17th December, 1896.]

Municipal Act, Bombay (Bombay Act III of 1888), s. 472—Continuing offences—Punishment for such offences after a fresh conviction—Separate prosecution for continuing the offence—Practice—Procedure.

A Presidency Magistrate, having convicted certain accused persons and fined them under s. 471 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1888), proceeded in the same order, purporting to act under the provisions of
s. 472, to fine them so much per day in case they continued the offence.

Held, that the latter order was illegal under s. 472 of the Act. The section requires a separate prosecution for a distinct offence, a prosecution in which a charge must be laid for a specific contravention for a specific number of days, and for which charge, if proved, the Magistrate is to impose a daily fine of an amount which is left to his discretion to determine.

[F., 22 B. 641 (842); D., 7 C.W.N. 853 (858).]

This was a reference under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure

The reference was in the following terms:—

"In Municipal Case No. 883 of 1896, the Magistrate, Mr. Webb, who was acting for me, fined one Limbaji Tulsiram on the 8th September, 1896, for an offence under s. 257 of the Municipal Act (III of 1888).
The order is 'Finod Rs. 5 and Rs. 1 per diem until work completed.'

"The municipality has now made a demand for payment of the daily penalty which they say amounts to Rs. 2, the work being completed on the morning of the 11th September.

"I have the honour to refer the legal question for the favour of the opinion of the High Court, whether I can enforce the payment of this daily penalty.

I have, therefore, the honour to refer the question, which I have put above, for the consideration of the High Court. I do so more particularly, as Mr. Webb has inflicted a daily penalty in a large number of municipal cases, and it is necessary to decide whether I can enforce the payment of such fines."

The High Court sent for the record and proceedings in all the cases referred to by the Magistrate.

[767] The reference came on for final hearing and disposal before a-Divisional Bench (Parsons and Ranade, JJ.)

There was no appearance for either party.

* Criminal Reference, No. 127 of 1896.
JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—The Presidency Magistrate in these cases, having convicted the several accused persons and fined them under the provisions of s. 471 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, proceeded in the same order, purporting to act under the provisions of s. 472, to fine them so much a day in case they continued the offence. We think the latter order illegal. The section (472) provides that "Whoever after having been convicted of contravening any provision of any of the sections * * * hereinafter in this section mentioned * * * continues to contravene the said provision * * * shall be punished for each day that he continues so to offend." Clearly this necessitates a separate prosecution for a distinct offence,—a prosecution in which a charge must be laid for a specific contravention for a specific number of days, and for which charge, if proved, the Magistrate is to impose a daily fine of an amount which is left to him in his discretion to determine. The orders in the present cases are bad as being convictions and punishments for offences which the accused persons had not committed, and with which they were not and could not have been charged, at the time the sentences were passed. The effect of such orders would be to deprive the accused persons of the opportunity to deny the commission of the offence or plead extenuating circumstances, and to take away from the Magistrate, who might have afterwards to levy the fine, the discretionary power vested in him by law to determine the amount that should be inflicted after investigation of the case.

We reverse the orders in all the cases under revision.

[768] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KHANDUSINGH.* [17th December, 1896.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 463 and 471—Using as genuine a false document.

The accused applied to the Superintendent of Police at Poona for employment in the police force. In support of his application he presented two certificates which he knew to be false. One of these certificates was a wholly fabricated document, whilst the other was altered by several additions made subsequently to the issue of the certificate.

Held, that the accused was guilty of offences under ss. 463 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

APPEAL from the conviction and sentence recorded by G. C. Whitworth, Sessions Judge of Poona.

The accused was charged, under s. 471 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), with using as genuine two certificates purporting to be signed by a public servant in his official capacity which he knew to be forged.

The accused was for three years a sapper in the corps of Bombay Sappers and Miners. He obtained his discharge from the corps on the 24th August, 1896. On the 4th September, 1896, he applied to the Police

* Criminal Appeal, No. 346 of 1896.
Superintendent of Poona for employment in the police force. He represented that he had been havildar-major in the Sappers and Miners for nearly four years.

In support of his application he produced two certificates, one purporting to be a certificate signed by Major O'Sullivan, Commanding the Sappers and Miners, and the other a discharge certificate partly in print and partly in manuscript, and signed by the same officer.

Of these, the first certificate was a wholly fabricated document, whilst the discharge certificate was altered by the addition of the word "havildar" after "sapper" in two places, and also by the addition of the figure "9" representing nine months, after the entry "3 years," which expressed the accused person's period of service. These alterations were made subsequently to the issue of the certificate.

[769] The accused was convicted by the Sessions Judge of the offences charged, and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment under ss. 466 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court.

There was no appearance for the Crown or for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—This case is clearly distinguishable from Jan Mahomed v. Queen-Empress (1), where the intention was to produce a false belief that the accused was entitled to a certain dignity only. Neither is it similar to Imperatrix v. Haradhan (2), where the intention was to be permitted to sit for a certain examination.

In the present case, the document was falsely made and used by the accused with the object of obtaining a situation in the police force at Poona. It was thus made and used with the intent to cause a person to enter into an express contract for service, that is, to engage the accused as a police officer. The act, therefore, of the accused comes within the terms of s. 463 of the Indian Penal Code and is indeed the precise illus. (k) given in the Code under s. 464.

The act of using such a document is punishable under s. 471. This is in accordance with the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Abdul Hamid v. Empress (3) and of this Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Vithal Narayan referred to with approval in the case of Queen-Empress v. Ganesh Khanderao (4) and reported as a note to that case. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Soshi Bhushan (5) that decision was agreed with.

QUEEN-EMpress v. BABAJI.* [28th January, 1897.]

Forest Act (VII of 1878), s. 78—Refusal to serve as member of a panch—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 187.

A person was convicted under s. 187 of the Indian Penal Code for refusing, when called on by a forest guard, to serve as one of a panch for [770] the purpose of drawing up a panchnrama with reference to certain wood alleged to have been illegally cut in a reserved forest.

Held, that the conviction was illegal. The accused was not shown to be one of the persons contemplated by the first three paragraphs of s. 78 (1) of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), nor was the purpose for which he was called upon to give his assistance, one of the purposes mentioned in cls. (a) to (d) of the section. He was, therefore, not legally bound to assist the forest guard.

The accused was called on by a forest guard to serve as a member of a panch appointed for the purpose of drawing up a panchnrama with reference to certain wood alleged to have been illegally cut in the reserved forest at Dhulawadi. The accused declined to attend.

Thereupon the forest guard filed a complaint against the accused, under s. 187 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), with having intentionally omitted to assist a public servant in the execution of his public duty when bound by law to give such assistance. Upon this charge the accused was convicted by the [771] Second Class Magistrate of Koregaon and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 5.

The District Magistrate of Satara, being of opinion that the conviction was illegal, referred the case to the High Court, observing as follows:

"The accused in the present case is not shown to be a person contemplated in the provisions of the first three paragraphs of s. 78 Act VII of 1878, and the purpose for which he was called upon to give his assistance is also not one of the purposes mentioned in cls. (a) to (d) of the same section of the Indian Forest Act. Consequently, it is clear that though the guard was a public servant, the accused was not legally bound to assist

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C.F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Candy.

NANDRAM (Original Opponent), Appellant v. BABAJI AND ANOTHER
(Original Petitioners), Respondent.* [29th June, 1897.]

Mortgage—Redemption—Decree for redemption within six months—Expiration of six months without payment—Application after expiration of six months to extend the time for redemption—Practice—Procedure—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) proviso to s. 93.

In redemption suits the original decree (passed under s. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1852), is only in the nature of a decree nisi, and the order passed under s. 93 is in the nature of decree absolute.

Under the proviso to s. 93 of that Act, an application to extend the time for redemption fixed by the original decree may be made at any time before the decree absolute is made.

[772] SECOND APPEAL from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, confirming the order passed by Rao Saheb S. M. Kale, Subordinate Judge of Baramati.

On the 27th January, 1896, the plaintiffs (respondents) obtained a decree for redemption on payment to the defendant (opponent) of the mortgage-debt within six months and ordering that, in default of payment within that period, their right to redeem should be extinguished.

On the 30th July, 1896, i.e., after the six months had expired, but before the final order under s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) was made, the plaintiffs (respondents) applied for an extension of one month for payment of the mortgage-debt.

The opponent (defendant) resisted the application, contending (inter alia) that the plaintiffs ought to have paid the amount in the time ordered by the decree, and that not having done so their right to redeem was extinguished; that the Court could not extend the time; that he being in possession had now become the owner of the property under the terms of

* Second Appeal, No. 337 of 1897.
the decree and was no longer the mortgagee and could not be deprived of the property.

The Subordinate Judge granted the application.

On appeal by the defendant (opponent) the Judge confirmed the order.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Vasudev G. Bhandarkar, for the appellant (opponent).—The order extending the time was in contravention of the decree. If an extension was required, it ought to have been applied for before the six months had expired. Under this decree the plaintiffs were absolutely debarred of their right to redeem on the expiration of six months.

Bailai A. Bhagavat, for the respondents (plaintiffs).—The proviso to
s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) does not require that the application should be made within the time mentioned in the decree. If good cause is shown, the time may be extended—Kanara Kurup v.
Govinda Kurup (1). It [773] is for the mortgagee to get the order made absolute under s. 93. Until that is done, the time for payment may be extended. The Court has a discretion to extend time under s. 93.

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—On the best consideration which we can give to this question, we think that the court has power to give effect to the proviso to
s. 93 if the application for postponement is made at any time before the final decree—the decree absolute—is made. This construction of the section is clearly permissible, and it is, we think, the most reasonable and equitable one to adopt. Our ruling is also in accordance with the practice of the Court of Chancery in England.

The cases upon this subject will be found collected in Seton on Decrees, (4th Ed.), Part IV, Ch. XXV, s. 4; and in Patch v. Ward (2) Rols, L. J., at p. 212 says: “I think it useful to refer to the distinction in practice between asking for an enlargement of time for redeeming a mortgage before the day arrives, and asking to open a foreclosure after the order for foreclosure has been made absolute. * * * I think it will be found that there is a clear distinction between the two classes of cases —that slight circumstances will induce the Court to enlarge the time before the day arrives, but that after the order for foreclosure has been made absolute, it must be shown that the person who seeks to set it aside, or to have it disregarded, fully intended and was prepared to pay the money on the day, but was stopped by some accident from complying with the exigencies of the order.”

To return to the section which we are considering. The original decree is, we think, only in the nature of a decree nisi as was held with regard to foreclosure decrees in Poreesh Nath v. Ramjodu (3) and the order passed under s. 93 is in the nature of a decree absolute. See Ajudhia Pershad v.
Baldeo Singh (4). Order confirmed with costs.

[5th July, 1897.]

Will—Construction of will—Bequest to a person with a direction that it should be used in good works (sara kam)—Direction void as being vague and indefinite—Indian Succession Act (IX of 1865), s. 125.

A testator left a legacy to his wife in the following terms:

"Rs. 2,000 to be credited in our shop in the name of my wife Bai Bapi, interest at 6 per cent. to be paid to her every year. If in her lifetime she demands the money to use in a good work (sara kam), it should be given to her, but if she has not taken it in her lifetime, Jamnadas and Bhagubhai are to dispose of it according to their own pleasure after death."

Held, that this was not a bequest for good works (sara kam), but a bequest to the testator's wife, with a direction to use it in good works (sara kam), and as that direction was void for uncertainty she was entitled to the money as if the will had contained no such direction.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 2,000 together with interest thereon under the will of her deceased husband. The will provided (inter alia) as follows:

"Rs. 2,000. This amount should be credited in the shop of Bhagubhai Hathisang in the name of my wife Bai Bapi. Its interest should be calculated at 6 per cent. per annum which should be paid to her every year. But if in her lifetime she demands it for use in a good work (sara kam), it should be paid to her. But if she has not withdrawn the money in her lifetime, the said Jamnadas and Bhagubhai Hathisang should after her death use the money according to their wishes."

The testator appointed Jamnadas and Bhagubhai Hathisang his executors and also residuary legatees.

The defendants Jamnadas and Bhagubhai Hathisang pleaded that the plaintiff had no absolute right to the sum of Rs. 2,000, that they were willing to pay it to the plaintiff for the purpose of spending it in any good work, but not in order that she might give it away to her brother's son, as she intended to do.

The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim, holding that she was absolutely entitled to the legacy.

On appeal, the District Judge reversed the Subordinate Judge's decree and rejected the plaintiff's claim on the following grounds:

"The present appeal turns on the interpretation to be put on the portion of the will leaving the legacy. That portion of the will must, I think, be interpreted as making a specific legacy to his wife of Rs. 2,000. But she can only obtain the money on the condition that she spends it on sara kam. Much argument has been wasted over the proper meaning to be attached to these words. It appears to me that the meaning is quite

* Second Appeal, No. 876 of 1896.
as vague as that to be attached to the words dharam or dharamada; and I am, therefore, of opinion that following the ruling in Devshankar v. Motiram (I. L. R., 18 B., 136) the bequest in favour of sara kam is invalid by reason of uncertainty. Such being the case, I am of opinion that the plaintiff can only claim to recover interest on the sum of Rs. 2,000 during her lifetime, and at her death the capital sum goes to the residuary legatees."

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellant.—The bequest is not in favour of sara kam (or good works) but to the plaintiff personally. It is not conditional but absolute. It is no doubt coupled with a direction that the plaintiff should be paid the whole sum of money deposited in her name if she required it for a good object. But that direction does not render the legacy void for uncertainty. The money is bequeathed absolutely, and the direction to apply it in a particular manner is inconsistent with the absolute gift and cannot be given effect to—s. 125 of the Indian Succession Act; see also Jarman on Wills, p. 854. The direction is, moreover, vague and uncertain, and, therefore, void.

G. M. Tripathi, for respondents.—The legacy to the plaintiff is not an absolute unconditional gift. It was clearly the intention of the testator that his wife should enjoy the income of the fund deposited with the defendant's firm, and that the corpus should be paid to her only if it was required for some good work. The gift was thus a conditional gift, and unless the condition is fulfilled, the gift cannot take effect. The plaintiff does not state for what purpose she wants the money. She does not specify any good work for which the money is required. She is not, therefore, entitled to claim the corpus. Sections 118 to 123 of Act X of 1865 apply.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The plaintiff in this case is the widow and the defendants are the executors of one Hathisang, who by his will left the plaintiff a legacy of Rs. 2,000 in these terms:—"Rs. 2,000 to be credited in our shop in the name of my wife Bapi. Interest at 6 per cent. to be paid to her every year. If in her lifetime, she demands the money to use in a good work (sara kam) it should be given to her, but if she has not taken it in her lifetime, Jamnadas and Bhagubbhai are to dispose of it according to their own pleasure after death." The plaintiff sues now for the money, as the defendants (Jamnadas and Bhagubbhai) refuse to pay it to her. They say that she does not want it for a good work. The Subordinate Judge awarded the claim, holding that the expression "sara kam" was so vague and indefinite that the condition was invalid. The District Judge by some strange process of reasoning dismissed the claim, because he thought that the bequest in favour of sara kam was invalid by reason of uncertainty. There was, however, no bequest in favour of sara kam, the bequest was to the plaintiff, there was a direction only in favour of sara kam, and if that direction is void then the plaintiff is entitled to the money. In our opinion, the direction is void. It is nowhere expressed in the will what "sara kam" is, or who is to decide whether the purpose for which the plaintiff asks the money is sara kam or not. The defendants as residuary legatees would naturally say that nothing was sara kam. The whole thing is so vague and indefinite that it cannot be given effect to. The case seems to us to come, within the class of cases provided for by
s. 125 of the Succession Act, X of 1865, and the plaintiff is entitled, in our opinion, to the money as if the will had contained no such direction.

The amount due at date of suit is agreed to by both Courts, and we reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the Subordinate Judge. We award the plaintiff interest on the amount decreed at 6 per cent. from date of that decree to payment. Costs throughout on the defendants. The defendants can pay the costs out of the estate.

[777] RANADE, J.—The principal contention in this appeal relates to the proper construction of the will, Ex. 32, so far as it concerns the legacy left therein to the appellant. This portion of the will has been translated in the judgment of the lower appellate Court. It directs that Rs. 2,000 should be credited in respondents' shop in the name of the appellant, and interest should be paid to her every year at 6 per cent., and if appellant in her lifetime demands the money for any good works, the principal sum should be paid to her. If she does not withdraw the money in her lifetime, the respondents should, after appellant's death, use the money according to their pleasure. The Court of first instance held that the expression "for good works" was so vague that the condition was invalid on the ground of its indefiniteness, and as the appellant was allowed full liberty to withdraw the whole sum, she was entitled to the money absolutely. In appeal, the District Judge held that the legacy was a conditional legacy, and that the condition about good works was not valid for reasons of uncertainty, and that the appellant could only recover the interest of the money, and not the principal. We feel satisfied that the construction placed by the District Judge upon the terms of the will cannot be supported. The bequest clearly falls within the class of bequests with directions as to application or enjoyment, and the principal intention of the testator was to bequeath absolutely Rs. 2,000 for the benefit of the appellant, who was his wife, and this gift was meant by him as a provision for her. The will shows clearly that this portion of his estate was clearly separated by the testator from his other estate, and it was only on the default of the appellant to spend the money herself, that it was to become a part of the estate in the hands of the executors. The case thus falls clearly within the analogy of bequests referred to in s. 125 of Act X of 1865, and not of s. 127. There was no condition precedent in this case such as is contemplated in ss. 121 or 123. The mention of good works was not intended to limit the absolute right of appellant to the money. It was only a direction, and not a condition precedent. The same direction is contained in respect of another sum of Rs. 300 bequeathed to the respondents. The lower Court of appeal was certainly in error in thinking that this case fell within the class [778] of uncertain gifts referred to in Devshankar v. Motiram (1). The bequest was not in favour of good works, but of the appellant, who was expected to spend the money on good works.

The fact that the respondents have paid a large sum to the appellant under the terms of the will, both by way of interest and principal, without raising any objection on the grounds now urged by them, is also an additional reason for holding that they understood the gift to be absolute. In their written statement they expressed their readiness to make over the money under certain guarantees to the appellant. On the whole, we must decide this issue in appellant's favour, and against the respondents.

(1) 18 B. 196.
The only other point that now remains for consideration has reference to the cross objections put in by the respondents as regards the details of the payments made by them. There is no serious contest on that point, and we see no reason for disturbing the decision of the Court of first instance on that head. We reverse the decree of the lower Court, and restore that of the Court of first instance.

Decree reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

NASSARVANJI (Applicant) v. KHARSEDJI DHUNJISHAH AND ANOTHER, (Opponents).* [12th July, 1897.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 25—Transfer of execution proceedings—Insolvency—O, possing creditor—Opposing creditor's right to apply for transfer of insolvency proceedings.

The power of transfer given by s. 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) extends to execution proceedings as well as to suits.

An application to be declared an insolvent under the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) is a proceeding in execution, and as such can be made the subject of an order under s. 25 of the Code.

A creditor who has received notice of an insolvent petition, and whose name is entered on the record of the execution proceedings as an opposing creditor, is a [773] "party" within the meaning of s. 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and may apply for a transfer of the proceedings under the section.

[R., 13 Ind. Cas. 542; D., 10 O.C. 139.]

This was an application to the High Court under s. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) for the transfer of certain execution proceedings.

A decree having been passed against one Kharsedji Dhunjishah (opponent No. 1) in the Presidency Small Cause Court at Bombay it was transferred for execution to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, and in execution thereof he was arrested at Dhulia on the 11th December, 1896.

He thereupon applied to the Subordinate Judge at Dhulia to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Notices of this application having been issued to his creditors, the applicant Nassarvaji Sarabji, who was one of them, made the present application to the High Court for the transfer of the execution proceedings, including the insolvency application, from the Subordinate Judge's Court at Dhulia to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Poona.

The grounds on which this application was made were (1) that Kharsedji was a resident of Poona, (2) that most of his creditors who had claims against him to the extent of nearly Rs. 39,000, were also residents of Poona, (3) that the whole of his immoveable property was situate in Poona, (4) that he had fraudulently assigned this property to his relations with the object of delaying and defeating his creditors, and (5) that the attendance of witnesses, &c., relating to this fraudulent transfer could not be procured at Dhulia without much trouble and expense.

* Civil Application, No. 95 of 1897.

The High Court issued a rule nisi to the decree-holder (opponent No. 2) and judgment-debtor (Kharsedji Dhunjishab, opponent No. 1) calling upon them to show cause why the execution proceedings should not be transferred as prayed for.

S. V. Bhandarkar, for Kharsedji Dhunjishab, the judgment-debtor (opponent No. 1), showed cause.—The Court has no power to transfer execution proceedings. Section 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to the transfer of “suits.” The section does not give the power to transfer execution proceedings, which are treated throughout the Code as distinct from suits. Section 647 of the Code as amended by Act VI of 1892 does not apply to applications for execution of decrees. The Legislature has made no provision for transfer of execution proceedings from one Court to another—Kishori Mohun Sett v. Gul Mohamed (1).

V. G. Bhandarkar, for the decree-holder (opponent No. 2).—We also object to the transfer. Assuming that s. 25 applies to execution proceedings, the applicant has no right to move for a transfer of this case. He is not a party to the execution proceedings; he is neither the decree-holder nor the judgment-debtor. He is, therefore, not a “party” within the meaning of the term as used in the section.

Mainekshah Jehangirshah, for the applicant, contra.—Section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code clearly extends to execution proceedings, as such proceedings are but a continuation of the proceedings in the original suit.

Section 647 of the Code as amended expressly says so. That being the case, this Court has the power to transfer the present case. The point is, moreover, covered by authority—Balaji v. Ranchoddas (2); Krishna v. Bhaq (3); Gaja Parshad v. Bhup Singh (4). As to the applicant’s right to move the Court under s. 25 of the Code, he is already served with a notice of the insolvency application, and his name is entered on the record as an opposing creditor. He is, therefore, a party within the meaning of the section.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—In execution of a decree of the Bombay Court of Small Causes transferred to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia the judgment-debtor was arrested by order of the latter Court. Thereupon he applied to it to be declared an insolvent.

The applicant, who is one of the creditors on whom notice was served, has now moved this Court to transfer the whole of the execution proceedings including the insolvency application, to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona. Very good cause has been shown for the transfer: for instance, creditors of the judgment-debtor to the amount of some 39,000 rupees reside at Poona and Sholapur, the whole of the immovable property of the judgment-debtor which he is charged with having fraudulently disposed of is at Poona, and all the evidence relating to the charge pro and con is at Poona. The judgment-debtor has a residence both at Dhulia and at Poona, the judgment-creditor lives in Bombay, so that it is as easy, if not easier, for him to go to Poona as to Dhulia, and his debt is only a small amount, some 275 rupees. The opponents’ objection to the transfer is based merely on the fact that they have spent some money at Dhulia in engaging pleaders which they will have to spend over again at Poona. The applicant, however, has offered to pay this back to them.

(1) 15 G. 177.  (2) 5 B. 680.  (3) 18 B. 61.  (4) 1 A. 180.
Everything, therefore, being in favour of the transfer and nothing against it, the only point is whether this Court has jurisdiction to make it. In my opinion it has. An application to be declared an insolvent under the Civil Procedure Code is a proceeding in execution; it is, therefore, a proceeding in a suit and as such can be made the subject of an order under s. 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This has always been so ruled by this Court. See Balaji v. Ranchoddas (1); Krishna Vellji v. Bhu Mansaram (2).

We make the rule absolute and transfer to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona the execution proceedings and the application of insolvency made therein.

The additional costs incurred at Dhulia by the parties to the decree in engaging pleaders, &c., are to be taxed and paid by the present applicant. All other costs will be costs in the proceedings.

RanaDe, J.—There can be little doubt that, quite apart from the allegations of collusion which are not satisfactorily proved, the balance of convenience is decidedly in favour of the transfer of execution proceedings from Dhulia to Poona, as applied for. The Poona creditors of the judgment-debtor represent debts amounting to 40,000 rupees, and the property said to have been fraudulently conveyed by him to his near relations is also at Poona. It is not shown that the Bombay creditor, who seeks execution of the Small Cause Court’s decree for a small sum by the arrest of the judgment-debtor in Dhulia, will be seriously prejudiced by the transfer of the proceedings to Poona, where the judgment-debtor had previously applied without success to be declared an insolvent.

The point of law involved in the matter is of some complexity. Though the Calcutta High Court has all along held that s. 25 relates only to the transfer of suits, and that it has no application to execution proceedings—Kishori Mohun Sett v. Gul Mohamed (3), Kedarnath Mahata v. Bungshee Dhur Roy (4)—this Court as well as the Allahabad High Court have not followed this view—Balaji v. Ranchoddas (1), Krishna v. Bhu (2), Gaya Parshad v. Bhu Singh (5). It has always been held by these Courts that under the combined effect of s. 25 and s. 647, execution proceedings may be transferred for sufficient cause from one Court to another. The Madras High Court would seem also to be in favour of the more liberal interpretation—Mutralagiri v. Muttayyar (6). Moreover, the ruling in Kedarnath Mahata v. Bungshee Dhur Roy (4), in which the Calcutta High Court first decided this point in the negative, was passed on s. 6 of Act VIII of 1859, which has been considerably modified by the Code of 1882. Finally, that Court appears to have adhered to its previous decision chiefly as a rule of practice—Kishori Mohun Sett v. Gul Mohamed (3)—and does not appear to have considered the effect of the larger powers conferred by s. 13 of the Letters Patent. We must, therefore, in this matter follow the previous decisions of this and the Allahabad Court, and hold that the power of transfer extends to execution proceedings as well as to suits.

It was, however, contended that the applicant before us is not a party within the meaning of that word as used in s. 25 of the Code. This objection seems, however, to have little force. The applicant has received notice, and his name is on the record of the execution proceedings as an opposing creditor. In the second Bombay case referred to above, the transfer was effected [783] on the application of the judgment-creditor in a Samil Cause Court decree, who desired to share in the proceeds of the execution taken out by another creditor under a decree in the First Class Subordinate Judge’s Court. Moreover, s. 25 permits transfer upon the application of parties, as well as of the Court’s own motion without such application. We must, therefore, overrule this objection and grant the application.

GURSHIDAWA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. GANGAYA AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [13th July, 1897.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 315—Court-sale—Sale of property in execution in which judgment-debtor has no interest—Suit by purchaser to recover purchase-money paid at sale—Limitation—Accrual of the cause of action.

Under s. 315 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), a suit will lie to recover purchase-money paid at a Court-sale for property to which it is found that the judgment-debtor has no title. The cause of action in such a case does not accrue till the purchaser is deprived of the property which was sold to him.

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Dharwar, reversing the decree of Rao Bahadur K. B. Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff sued to recover the amount paid by him for certain land at a Court-sale, it having been held that the judgment-debtor had no interest therein.

The circumstances which led to the suit were as follows:—The plaintiff bought the land in question at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained against defendant No. 3, and was duly put into possession.

One Vasishta thereupon sued for the land, alleging that it belonged to him and not to the judgment-debtor (defendant No. 3). He obtained a decree on the 15th October, 1897, the Court holding [784] that the judgment-debtor (defendant No. 3) had no interest in the property. The plaintiff was accordingly dispossessed on 20th February, 1891. On the 2nd February, 1894, he filed this suit to recover the purchase-money which he had paid.

The defendants contended that the plaintiff had been in possession for three or four years, and that his purchase-money had been paid off out of the profits of the land.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the claim.

On appeal by defendants, the Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

“‘The first question is whether the suit was in time.

* Second Appeal No. 884 of 1896.
"I hold that it was not. The Subordinate Judge held it to be in time, on the ground of its having been instituted within three years of the date of plaintiff's dispossession in pursuance of the decision of the High Court.

"I am of opinion that limitation began to run from the date of the decree of the lower Court, where it was held that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the land, and that the period is (6) six years. * * *

"The decree of the original Court is dated 15th October, 1887, and the present suit is of the year 1894. Hence I hold that the suit is time-barred."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The plaintiff's cause of action arose when he was dispossessed. The suit is brought within three years of the date and is in time.

Daji A. Khare, for the respondents (defendants).—We contend that the plaintiff's remedy was in the execution proceedings. No separate suit lies to recover the purchase-money.

[FARRAN, C.J., referred to Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1).]

As to limitation, the plaintiff's cause of action arose when it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The decree of the District Judge must in this case be reversed. The suit was filed, under s. 315 of the Civil Procedure Code, to recover from the defendants the purchase-money which the plaintiff paid at a Court-sale for property to which it was found that the judgment-debtor had no title. That such a suit will lie, was decided by the Full Bench at Allahabad in Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh and we see no reason to dissent from the views there expressed.

The District Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by the law of limitation, taking the cause of action to arise on the date when it was found by the decree that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property, but the words of the section are "when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it." The cause of action under this clause of the section does not, in our opinion, accrue till the purchaser is deprived of property which was sold to him. The double event must occur before he can sue: (1) the property must be found not to have belonged to the judgment-debtor, and (2) the purchaser must be deprived of it. Till the latter event occurs, the cause of action is not complete. The Subordinate Judge has not awarded interest, because the purchaser has received the mesne profits, and the latter and the interest nearly balance one another. That, we think, was a correct course to adopt.

The decree of the District Judge must be reversed and that of Subordinate Judge restored, with costs throughout on defendants.

Decree reversed.

VOHRA MAHAMADALI LUKMANJI (Plaintiff) v. RAMCHANDRA ANANT (Defendant).* [14th July, 1897.]

Stamp—Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 3, cl. (9), sch. I, arts. 5 and 21; sch. II, art. 2—Interest in land—Agreement to sell standing trees.

A document bearing a stamp of one rupee stated (inter alia) "I have sold you the standing trees of the two villages for Rs. 1,601 on conditions that those young trees, whose trunks do not exceed two feet in circumference, should not be cut by you, and that I will give you written information to cut the trees of the said villages when you shall have to cut the trees and remove them within two years, &c."

Held, that the document was sufficiently stamped.

In suit No. 371 of 1896 filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Godhra, the plaintiff tendered in evidence a Gujarati document written on an impressed stamp paper of one rupee. The following is the translation of the document:

"Dated the Aso Sud 2nd, Samvat 1942, corresponding with 11th October, 1893, A.D. To Vohra Mahamadali Lukmanji, resident of Godhra, writer (to this bond). I, Rajeshri Ramchandra Anant, resident of the same village, write that we have inami villages Govindi and Kanku Thamla, in the Godhra Taluka, of Shri Vithal Mandir (temple), that we (I) have sold to you my half-share of the standing mahuda trees of the said two villages for Rs. 1,601, sixteen hundred and one, British currency, on conditions that—1, there is inami land of Rajeshri Krishnarao Govind in Kanku Thamla, you have no right on the trees of that land; 2, those young (mahuda) trees in the said two villages, whose trunks do not exceed two feet in circumference at one foot height from the surface of the earth, should not be cut by you; 3, I have received one-fourth of the abovementioned purchase-money, deducting this, the remaining money should be paid when we (I) give you pass books, and you shall have to pay also the price of the pass books; 4, we (I) will give you written information to cut the trees of the said villages when you shall have to cut the trees and remove them within two years (from that date); or if by reasonable cause you cannot remove them within that period, you can get six months' more time by our permission.

"On the above conditions we (I) have sold my half-share of the mahuda trees of the said villages, and for that I have written this deed of contract of our (my) own free will and good sense. This I admit."

The Subordinate Judge doubted whether a rupee stamp was sufficient for the document; he, therefore, referred the following questions for decision:

1. Whether the document in question is exempted under art. 2, cl. (a), of the second schedule of the Stamp Act?

* Civil Reference No. 8 of 1897.
"2. If not, is it sufficiently stamped?
"3. If it is not sufficiently stamped, what stamp should it bear?"

[787] The opinion of the Subordinate Judge on the above questions was (1) that the document was not exempted under art. 2, cl. (c), of the second schedule of the Stamp Act; (2) that it was not sufficiently stamped; and (3) that it should bear a stamp of twenty rupees.

The reference being called on for hearing, the following judgments were recorded:

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The document in this case is not one which in my opinion needs to be stamped as a conveyance under s. 3, cl. (9), and art. (21) of sch. I of the Indian Stamp Act. Whether it be taken as a sale of trees when cut by the purchaser, in which case it would be a memorandum relating to the sale of "goods and merchandise," or an agreement to allow the contractor to cut and remove the trees on certain conditions, it is, in my opinion, sufficiently stamped either under art. (2) of sch. II or under art. (5) of sch. I of the same Act. The expression "goods and merchandise" is not an equivalent for moveable property, but is borrowed from the English Stamp Act, the language of which is again taken from that of the Statute of Frauds. The cases upon the distinction (often a fine one) between the sale of goods and merchandise in the shape of trees and other produce of land to be cut and removed and a contract for an interest in land will be found collected in Benjamin on Sales, Book I, Part II, Chap. 2. It is unnecessary for me, I think, to decide in this judgment under which category the document in question falls, as in either view it is sufficiently stamped.

I would answer the second question in the affirmative and give no answer to the other questions, as it is unnecessary for us to answer them.

PARSONS, J.—I concur in the above answer to the questions.

CANDY, J.—It would seem from the general proposition stated at p. 121 of the 4th edition of Benjamin on Sales, that the agreement in question would, in England, have been taken as coming within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, as being a contract or sale of lands...or any interest in or concerning them. Though the ownership of the trees may not at once have been transferred, the agreement vested an interest in them in the purchaser before [788] severance. He had under the contract a right to enter on the land and within the space of two years cut such trees as within that period attained a certain size. The intention was that the trees should remain in the land for the benefit of the purchaser, and derive benefit from so remaining. Thus part of the subject-matter of the contract was an interest in land.

But though possibly there was here a contract for the sale of an interest in land within the meaning of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and though the subject-matter of the agreement may be within the definition of immoveable property in s. 2 (5) of the General Clauses Act, 1865, it does not follow that the document in question is a "conveyance" or anything more than an agreement for sale. Under s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act, immoveable property does not include standing timber; and by s. 4 the chapters and sections of the Act, which relate to contracts, shall be taken as part of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

Here there was no sale of ascertained moveable property. There was a contract or agreement by which the purchaser was to be at liberty to cut and take such trees as might within two years attain a certain size.
Such trees as he did not cut before the expiration of the period, remained the property of the vendor. In my opinion, the document was not a "conveyance," but an agreement for sale, and it is sufficiently stamped. I concur in answering the second question in the affirmative.

Order accordingly.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

MAHADEV (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. MAHADU (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [19th July, 1897.]

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 44 and 56—Agreement executed before a village conciliator—Agreement evidencing an intention to create a mortgage —Admissibility and validity of such agreement—Evidence.

On the 1st December, 1891, defendant executed before a village conciliator a kabulayat to the following effect:—

[789] "I admit Rs. 460 are due from me to the plaintiff (under a mortgage). I also owe him Rs. 485 under a consent decree and Rs. 489 as a fresh advance, in all Rs. 1,434. I agree to pay this sum interest at 13 annas per cent. per mensem. For the same I give in mortgage the property mentioned in the said decree, and also my house at Junnar. I will repay the said money in four years.
If I fail, the property should be sold, and the money should be recovered therefrom; should the sale-proceeds fall short, I will personally pay the deficiency.
I have already put the plaintiff in possession of the property herein mentioned....

The village conciliator forwarded this kabulayat to the Subordinate Judge under
s. 44 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), but the Subordinate Judge refused to file it.

Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of the mortgage-debt by sale of the property, or, in the alternative, for an order directing the defendant to execute a mortgage in terms of the kabulayat, and for a personal decree against the defendant for the amount due.

Held, that the kabulayat did not of itself create a mortgage, but only evidenced the intention of the parties to create one. It did not, therefore, fall under
s. 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) and was admissible in evidence to prove the contract entered into.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree directing the defendant to execute a mortgage in terms of the kabulayat.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadake, Joint First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., of Poona.

The plaintiff and defendant had money dealings with each other.

On the 1st December, 1891, the parties appeared before the village conciliator of Junnar, and a kabulayat was passed by the defendant as follows:—

"I admit Rs. 460 are due from me to the plaintiff (under a mortgage). I also owe to the plaintiff Rs. 485 under a consent decree No. 103 of 1890, and Rs. 489 as a fresh advance, in all Rs. 1,434. On this sum I agree to pay 13 annas per cent. per mensem as interest. For the same I give in mortgage the property mentioned in the said decree and also my own house, which is situate in the town of Junnar. I will repay the said money in four years. Should I fail to repay the money in time, the undermentioned property should be sold, and this money together with interest thereon should be recovered therefrom. Should the [790] sale proceeds fall short, I will personally pay the deficit amicably.

* Second Appeal No. 57 of 1897.

"The said house and lands together with their appurtenances, being the property mentioned in the previous decree, are in the possession of the plaintiff with whom they are to continue. Moreover, I have given into the possession of the plaintiff the house which is newly given in mortgage now. As to the aforesaid money in cash which I ask for, the plaintiff has this day paid the same in cash to me, I have taken and received the same. To this the plaintiff has agreed."

The village conciliator, before whom the above kubulayat was executed, forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge under s. 44 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). But the Subordinate Judge under the orders of the Special Judge refused to file it.

Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit, praying for a declaration that the property was mortgaged to him and to recover the debt due with interest by sale of the property, or from the defendant personally, or, in the alternative, for the execution by the defendant of a proper mortgage-deed in terms of the kubulayat.

The Subordinate Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim against the defendant personally, holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to the other reliefs, as the agreement sued upon was a mortgage, or an agreement to mortgage, which not being registered under s. 56 of Act XVII of 1879 could not be enforced.

This decision was upheld, on appeal, by the District Court.

The plaintiff thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

N. G. Chandavarkar, for appellant.—The kubulayat sued upon is not a mortgage. It only evidences an intention to create a mortgage. It does not, therefore, fall under s. 56 of Act XVII of 1879. It is admissible to show the contract entered into by the parties. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to the relief he seeks, namely, that the defendant should execute a mortgage in terms of the kubulayat.

[791] There was no appearance for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The appellant sued for one of three reliefs: (1) for a declaration that certain property was held by him in mortgage and for recovery of the mortgage-debt, Rs. 949, by sale of that property; or (2) for an order directing the defendant to execute in his favour a mortgage of the property for the sum of Rs. 949; or (3) for a personal decree against defendant for Rs. 949. Both the lower Courts concurred in granting the third relief only. They considered the document on which the appellant rested his claim valueless either as a mortgage or as an agreement to mortgage. Inasmuch as the document was not executed in the manner required by s. 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the Judge of the Court below was right in holding that the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee had not been proved to exist between the parties. The ground, however, for holding that the claim to specific relief could not be granted, is not sound.

The facts are these. In 1891, the parties went before a conciliator and came to an agreement finally disposing of the dispute between them. The defendant admitted that he owed the plaintiff 450 rupees on a mortgage and 485 rupees on a decree, and he took a further present advance of Rs. 489 in cash, making Rs. 1,434 in all due by him to the plaintiff. On this he agreed to pay interest at 13 annas per cent. per month. He then goes on to say thus:—"For the same I give in mortgage the property mentioned in the said decree and also my own house which is situate in the town of Junnar. (His Lordship read the rest of the kabulayat as above set forth and continued:—)

He signed this agreement and so did the plaintiff. The conciliator duly forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge, but that Judge acting, it appears, under the orders of the Special Judge, refused to file it. Hence the present suit. It seems to us to be clear that the plaintiff has the right to the relief which the asks for. Had the Subordinate Judge done what he should have done, viz., filed the agreement, there would have been then a proper mortgage deed drawn up. The fact that he did not, and that the plaintiff has had to bring a suit, cannot deprive the plaintiff of the right he has under the agreement. The document which the parties signed before the conciliator when properly considered does not of itself create a mortgage. It merely evidences the intention of the parties to create one. It does not, therefore, fall within the terms of s. 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and it is admissible in evidence to prove the intention of the parties and the contract they had agreed to. The agreement is a perfectly valid and a legitimate one, and, as such, can be enforced. Even if the document be considered as intended of itself to create the mortgage, and if owing to its not being executed in the manner required by law it did not create the intended interest, then apparently under the ruling in Burjorji v. Muncherji (1) the document would still be admissible to show the contract entered into for the mortgage, though not as the mortgage itself. In whichever way, therefore, the document is viewed, the plaintiff's right is clear to obtain the relief he asks.

We vary the decree of the lower appellate Court by substituting for the relief granted an order directing the defendant to execute the mortgage as asked in the plaint, and we order the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs throughout.

RANADE, J.—In this case both parties affected a kabulayat agreement, through the agency of a conciliator, on 1st December, 1891. This settlement provided for a mortgage charge on certain lands in consideration of former debts due to, and fresh advances made by, the appellant-plaintiff to the respondent-defendant. The Junnar Court refused to file this kabulayat on the ground that it contravened the objects of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and the rules framed under it. The present suit was accordingly brought to secure a declaration of appellant's right as mortgagee, and to recover the debt due with interest from the property charged and from the respondent personally, or, in the alternative, to secure the execution, by defendant, of a proper mortgage-bond in the terms of the kabulayat.

Both the Courts below agreed in awarding appellant's claim against respondent personally, but they held that appellant was not entitled to the other two reliefs claimed by him, namely, an order directing the recovery of the money by the sale of the property charged, or requiring the respondent to execute a new mortgage-bond. The only point for consideration is this: Whether the appellant can properly claim either or both the reliefs mentioned above.

(1) 5 B. 143.
It is quite clear that under s. 70 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act, no mortgage, lien, or charge can be validly created in respect of the immoveable property of an agriculturist unless it is created by an instrument in writing, and no such instrument can be received in evidence unless it is registered under s. 56 of the Act. Under the terms of the last section, the agreement or kabulayat of 1st December, 1891, is not admissible in evidence, and it may also be doubted if the said agreement can even be regarded as an instrument in writing. It is thus plain that the appellant had no right to have it declared that he was a mortgagee of the property, and, as such, to recover his debt by the sale of the said property.

The third relief claimed by him stands, however, on a different footing, if the oral agreement between the parties, which was sought to be given effect to by the agreement, could be proved otherwise than by the evidence of that agreement, there appears to be no reason why this oral agreement should not be enforced by requiring the respondent to act up to it, and pass a mortgage-bond in appellant’s favour. Such an oral agreement does not fall within the prohibition of either s. 70 or 56 of that Act. It does not itself create a mortgage, lien, or charge, but only confers a right to obtain such a mortgage instrument in due form.

If the present case were only one of an executory contract, it might be open to question if specific performance should be permitted. The fact appears to be, however, that the appellant advanced a fresh loan of 489 rupees on the day of the kabulayat, and respondent admits the receipt of the same. The evidence of the conciliator proves the oral contract quite independently of respondent’s admission. Such a case clearly falls within the scope of s. 12 of the Specific Relief Act, and there was [794] thus a discretion in the Court which was not properly exercised when it refused to interfere on more or less technical grounds. In the present case, the mortgaged property was also made over into appellant’s possession at the time that he advanced the fresh loan. We accordingly think that this portion of the relief prayed for may be very properly awarded in the present case.

We reverse the decree of the lower Court, and direct that respondent do pass a mortgage-bond in terms of the kabulayat, Ex. 15, to the appellant. Respondent should pay appellant’s costs throughout.

SAMBHU (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. KAMALRAO VITHALRAO DESHMUKH (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [20th July, 1897.]

Land Revenue Code (Bomb. Act V of 1879), s. 3, cls. (16), (17); ss. 71, 79, 85, 86 and 87—Deshmukhi vatan—Alienated land—Registered occupant—Superior holder.

In 1892, Vithalrao, a deshmukhi Vatasdar, died leaving five sons—four by one wife, of whom Kamalrao was the eldest, and one son, Bhavanrao, by another wife. Kamalrao and Bhavanrao each claimed to be the eldest son of Vithalrao. On the 16th June, 1893, the Collector of Satara in proceedings under s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) ordered Kamalrao’s name to be registered in the revenue books in place of Vithalrao’s. Prior to this, however, the plaintiff and other tenants paid Bhavanrao rents for 1892—94. Kamalrao then applied for and obtained from the Collector an order, under s. 86 of the Code, rendering him assistance in recovering these rents. The plaintiff in August, 1894, brought this suit to restrain Kamalrao from recovering the rents and to avoid the order for assistance. The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction, but the District Judge reversed that decision and dismissed the suit on the ground that Kamalrao was the registered occupant of the land and that the order for assistance was valid, and that payment of rent to Bhavanrao did not discharge the tenants. On appeal to the High Court.

Heled, reversing the decree of the District Judge and restoring that of the Subordinate Judge, that the lands in question being alienated by land, s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), did not apply and Kamalrao was not a registered occupant under the Code. The lands passed on Vithalrao's death to his five undivided sons, unless a custom of primogeniture existed in the family, and payment by the plaintiff to Bhavanrao, a co-landlord, was a valid discharge.

Second appeal from the decision of S. Tagore, District Judge of Satara, reversing the decree of Rao Sahib S. B. Gadgil, Acting Subordinate Judge of Isampur.

The plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from collecting certain rents. One Vithalrao died in 1892, leaving five sons—four by one wife, of whom the defendant Kamalrao was the eldest, and one son, Bhavanrao, by another wife. There was a dispute between Kamalrao and Bhavanrao as to which of them was the eldest son of Vithalrao, and accordingly in January, 1893, the Collector of Satara held proceedings under s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) to determine who was the heir of Vithalrao. In that month he made an interim order stating that Kamalrao had been administering the estate; that Vithalrao had left a will dividing the property which he thought should take effect, and postponing his decision under s. 71 until the 15th June, 1893, added that if by that time the will was not brought into force, he would again hear argument and give his decision. Meantime Kamalrao should continue to administer the estate. In consequence of this interim order, the Mamlatdar in February, 1893, told the tenants to pay their rents to Kamalrao.

On the 16th June, 1893, the Collector without alluding to Vithalrao's will declared Kamalrao to be the principal of Vithalrao's heirs and ordered that his name should be registered in the revenue books.

Notwithstanding the above orders of the Collector and Mamlatdar, some of the tenants attorned to Bhavanrao and paid him rents for 1893—94. Kamalrao then applied to the Collector, under s. 86 of the Land Revenue Code, for assistance in recovering these rents from the tenants.

The plaintiff, who was one of the tenants, thereupon brought this suit, praying for an injunction restraining Kamalrao from recovering these rents and to avoid the orders for assistance made under s. 86 of the Revenue Code. He alleged that Kamalrao had no exclusive right to the rents; that the land [796] belonged to all the five brothers jointly; and that he (the plaintiff) had paid the rent to Bhavanrao, and was, therefore, no longer liable.

The defendant Kamalrao contended that his name having been entered in the revenue books as representative tenant he alone had the right to collect the rents, and that the plaintiff might recover from Bhavanrao the rents he had improperly paid him.

The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction, holding that the plaintiff having paid the rent to Bhavanrao was discharged. Bhavanrao was entitled to receive it, the land in question belonging not to the defendant Kamalrao exclusively, but to all five brothers.
The District Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, holding that Kamalrao was the registered occupant of the land; that the order for assistance made in his favour under s. 86 was valid; and that the payment of rent by the plaintiff to Bhavanrao did not discharge the plaintiff.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Branson with Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (plaintiff).
—We paid rent to Bhavanrao, who is defendant's co-sharer, and such payment is a good discharge—Krishnarav v. Manaji (1). The defendant relied upon his right as the person recognized by the Collector. But recognition by the Collector is only for fiscal purposes. It cannot affect a change in the rights of the parties. Further, the Collector's order recognizing the defendant was ultra vires. The land in dispute is alienated land, and there is no provision, in the Land Revenue Code, applicable to the case of an alienated holding. Section 71 of the Code only applies to registered occupants. Section 3 (16) of the Code defines who is a registered occupant. Section 71 consequently cannot be applied to a holder of alienated lands.

Macpherson with Balaji A. Bhagwat, for the respondent (defendant).
—The land in dispute is sherri land and, therefore, it cannot be said that it is an alienated holding. Next, we base our right on the recognition by the Collector. The Collector's recognition enables a person to apply for assistance under s. 86. The Collector has power under that section to make an arrangement pending a decision by a Civil Court. See Sathe's Land Revenue Code, p. 102. Kamalrao was managing the lands during Vithalrao's lifetime and the Collector has continued that arrangement. We submit that the arrangement would not act prejudicially to the plaintiff. If, notwithstanding the arrangement, he paid rent to Bhavanrao, he has himself to blame. The Collector's order is not ultra vires. Payment of rent is to be made through the village officers. Section 85 of the Land Revenue Code imposes a penalty for recovering rents directly from tenants.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The facts may be thus stated:—

The land in suit which the plaintiff held as a tenant or inferior holder from Vithalrao, the superior holder, is alienated land. It was urged, in second appeal, that the land is a "sherri thikan." This point was not taken in the lower Courts, and whether the land be "sherri" or not, and whether it was part of Vithalrao's private property as distinguished from his deshmukhi vatan land, the fact remains that the land is alienated.

Vithalrao died in 1892, leaving five sons—four by one wife, of whom Kamalrao (present defendant) is the eldest, and one son, Bhavanrao, by another wife. Kamalrao and Bhavanrao each claimed to be the eldest son of Vithalrao.

On the 20th January, 1893, the Collector of Satara held what is termed a "proceeding under s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code in the matter of determining the heir to the deceased Vithalrao Deshmukh of Kokruda."

Section 71 of the Land Revenue Code provides that "on the death of a registered occupant the Collector shall cause the name of his eldest son, or other person appearing to be his heir, or the principal of his heirs, to be registered in his stead, and the said heir shall thereafter be deemed the registered occupant." And by s. 3 (16) of the Land Revenue Code, "occupant signifies a holder of unalienated land," and (17) "registered occupant" signifies a sole occupant or the eldest or principal of several joint occupants, whose name is authorizedly entered in the Government records as holding unalienated land. It is obvious, therefore, that s. 71 was inapplicable as regards any private or [798] deshmukhi alienated land belonging to Vithalrao, and on Vithalrao's death (unless the custom of primogeniture exists in the family), belonging to his five undivided sons.

In January, 1893, the Collector wrote:

"As a matter of fact the son Kamalrao carries on the administration of the estate, the son Bhavanrao having been separated from his father for ten years during which time he has been given Rs. 300 from the estate yearly. He also has a portion of the wada assigned to him. The father has left a will in which he has divided the whole of his estate of immoveable property, assigning to each son, his two widows, and daughter what lands they should enjoy. I am of opinion that the will should take effect, and I, therefore, order that I shall not pass a decision under s. 71, Land Revenue Code, until the 15th June, 1893. The son Kamalrao should continue to administer the estate as in his father's lifetime, and Bhavanrao should receive his allowance as before. If by the 15th June the will is not brought into force, and no decree of a competent Court is promulgated, I shall proceed to hear once more the arguments of both parties and shall give a decision under s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code."

As a consequence of this interim order of the Collector, in February, 1893, the Mamladadar told Vithalrao's tenants to pay their rents to Kamalrao. On the 16th June, 1893, the Collector did not allude further to the alleged will or partition (of which there is no mention in the present suit), but proceeded to declare Kamalrao to be the principal of Vithalrao's heirs, because he was apparently the eldest and was selected by his father to manage the estate, and the Collector, therefore, ordered that the name of Kamalrao should be registered in the revenue accounts in the stead of Vithalrao.

As between Government and the heirs of Vithalrao for fiscal purposes this may be a perfectly valid order, but as between the tenants of Vithalrao and the five sons of Vithalrao who, in the absence of any custom of primogeniture, on Vithalrao's death became the landlords of the tenants, it can have no force. There is no allegation now that Bhavanrao was separated from his father, and it is obvious that Kamalrao's management for his father in his father's lifetime would have no effect after Vithalrao's death, unless it was the custom of the family for the eldest son to manage, or unless Vithalrao's sons consented that Kamalrao's management should continue. No such custom or consent is alleged in the present case. Notwithstanding the Collector's [799] and the Mamladadar's orders certain of the tenants attorned to Bhavanrao and paid him their rents for 1892-93 and 1893-94. Kamalrao then applied under s. 86 of the Land Revenue Code for assistance for the recovery of rent from those tenants. An order (the exact date of which has not been stated in this suit and it is immaterial) for rendering assistance was passed. Then the tenants brought several suits against Kamalrao to avoid that order. The present suit was one of them and was brought first in the District Court on 15th August, 1894, and on the plaint being returned for presentation to the proper Court was then brought in the Subordinate Judge’s Court on 12th August, 1895.
The plaintiff claimed (inter alia) that an injunction should issue restraining Kamalrao from recovering rent on the abovementioned order for assistance. The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction; but the District Judge reversed that decision and dismissed the plaintiff’s suit, on the ground that it was admitted that Kamalrao is the registered occupant of the land, and that the order for assistance given by the Revenue authorities was perfectly valid, and that the payment of rent by plaintiff to Bhavanrao did not operate as a valid discharge.

It has been shown above that the defendant Kamalrao is not the “registered occupant” of the land. He is a superior holder of the land; so is Bhavanrao; so are Kamalrao’s brothers superior holders. There is nothing in s. 86 of the Land Revenue Code requiring an applicant under that section to be a “registered superior holder.” The term is unknown in the Land Revenue Code. The nearest approach to it is in s. 79, under which the Collector is not bound to recognize any person to whom any interest in any alienated holding has been assigned, unless the transfer has been recorded in the Revenue records. But Vithalrao’s interest in his deshmukh vatan or sheri lands has not been assigned or transferred to his five sons, whose full interest has accrued on succession. Kamalrao gains no advantage over his brothers under s. 86, because his name is recorded in the Revenue records as representing the estate. The order for assistance in the present case may be perfectly good, and one which a Civil Court cannot cancel, though from the provisions [800] of the second clause of s. 87 it would seem that the Legislature intended that in disputes of this nature the tenants, having already paid the rent to one of the co-proprietors of the estate, the Collector should, in his discretion, refuse the assistance demanded for recovering that rent again. But the order though good in its inception may be incapable of taking legal effect. A superior holder having no co-holders may obtain an order for assistance, and subsequently the rent may be paid to him. It would be manifestly unjust for him under those circumstances to proceed to enforce the order, and a suit would lie by the tenant for an injunction restraining the superior holder from enforcing the same. If this be so, and if in law a payment of rent to one co-landlord by the tenant is a valid discharge—Krishnarav v. Manaji (1), then the Subordinate Judge’s decree in the present suit is right. The District Judge relied on s. 85 of the Land Revenue Code, and remarked that the tenants should have paid their rents to the village officers, “and if they have now to pay twice over they are themselves to blame.” But s. 85 does not provide that tenants must pay their rents to the village officers, or that any rents not so paid will have to be paid twice over. No doubt it imposes a penalty on certain superior holders demanding or receiving payment from their inferior holders otherwise than through the village officers; but there is no corresponding penalty or duty imposed on the inferior holders. Here the rent has been admittedly paid to Bhavanrao. The provisions of s. 85 do not make that payment invalid.

But it may be pointed out that it is doubtful whether the provisions of s. 85 have any application to the present case. They apply to the superior holder of an alienated village or of an alienated share of a village. It appears from the Collector’s proceeding of 20th January, 1893, that “there are 45 villages in which the name of Vithalrao stood as occupant.” The Collector apparently meant “recorded holder of alienated lands" though of course it is quite possible that Vithalrao was also the "occupant," of certain unalienated survey numbers. In any case, it would appear that Vithalrao was not the holder of alienated villages, or alienated shares of villages, but of various survey numbers in 45 different villages. If this be so, then s. 85 may have no application. And support is given to this view by the fact stated above that on the 21st February, 1893, (Ex. 31) the Mambaladar in consequence of the Collector's above quoted directions, told the tenants of the various pieces of land to pay their rents to Kamalrao. This he presumably would not have done had they been bound by law to pay their rents to the village officers. Of course, legally no revenue officer can, under the Bombay Land Revenue Code, tell a tenant of a superior holder of alienated lands that he should pay his rent to such and such a person.

I have discussed the case at greater length than perhaps the nature of the case itself required, my object being to emphasize the provisions and limitations of certain sections of the Land Revenue Code, which are sometimes imperfectly understood. Possibly it might conduce to better revenue administration if the Collector were empowered to hold an inquiry and determine who should be the "recognized" holder of alienated lands to whom tenants should attorn until the decree or order of a competent Court is produced. But such at present is not the law. Any one acquainted with the Descan and Southern Maratha Country must be aware that in the case of large estates, such as deshmukhi and desaigiri vatans, there is a prevalent idea that on the death of the holder the eldest son should manage the estate, even though the rule of primogeniture may not be strictly in force, and that the right to recognize the eldest son as the representative and manager of the family is vested in the Revenue authorities. And that idea has not been eradicated by the tendency of the decisions of our Courts, which require strict proof to give effect to a custom which is in any way opposed to the ordinary rules as to devolution of property according to Hindu law. As to whether there is any such valid custom in Vithalrao's family I offer no opinion, for Kamalrao's brothers are not parties to the suit, and no issue was raised on the point. And as to whether such right to recognize the management of the eldest son should not be vested in the Revenue authorities—as apparently is the case in other provinces, see e.g., North-West Provinces Land Revenue Code, ss. 94, 95, 98, 101,—the matter is one for the consideration of Government and the Legislature.

In my opinion, the decree of the District Judge should be reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. All costs throughout on defendant.

Farran, C.J.—I entirely concur in the judgment which my learned colleague has delivered and in the reasons upon which he has based his decision. I wish, however, to be understood as not expressing any opinion upon the applicability of s. 85, Land Revenue Code, to Vithalrao's holdings, as the question has not been fully argued and the judgments of the lower Courts do not set out their nature; and I have, therefore, not considered the matter. I am also not sufficiently conversant with the subject to offer an opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of extending the provisions of s. 71 of the same Code to alienated holdings or otherwise altering the law upon this subject.

Decree reversed.
Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) and Act I of 1894—Award of compensation—Payment of compensation awarded, how enforced—Appeal from an order irregularly made—Practice—Procedure.

The Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) did not provide for or contemplate an award for compensation being enforced against the Collector by execution proceedings, and there is no general law which enables a Civil Court to enforce such a statutory liability, when imposed upon a Collector or other civil officer, by means of execution proceedings without a suit. The ordinary mode of enforcing such an obligation is by suit, unless the Legislature when it creates the obligation prescribes such other means of enforcing it.

[803] On the 16th February, 1894, under the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), an award of compensation to the claimant for land acquired under that Act was made by the Assistant Judge of Thana, and he subsequently made an order directing the Collector to pay the amount with interest and costs, without however, fixing a date for payment. On the 1st March, 1894, the new Land Acquisition Act (I of 1891) came into force. On the 26th February, 1895, the claimant applied to enforce payment of the amount awarded, and the then Assistant Judge (Mr. Knight) re-affirmed the previous order and directed the Collector to pay it on or before the 30th May 1896. No payment, however, was made, and the matter came before the new Judge (Mr. Fitz Maurice) for final order. He held that neither under Act X of 1870 nor the new Act I of 1891 had he any power to enforce payment against the Collector, and he, therefore, dismissed the claimant’s application. On appeal to the High Court the matter was referred to a Full Bench.

Held, that the Act X of 1870 prescribed no mode of compelling payment by the Collector of compensation awarded under its provisions, but left the persons interested to a suit to enforce such payment. The proceedings under that Act were, therefore, at an end when the award was made. That being so, there were no proceedings pending in the case when the new Act I of 1894 came into force.

Clause 2 of s. 2 of that Act, therefore, did not apply, and no further steps could be taken under that Act.

Per RANADE, J.—The District Judge’s order appealed from was improperly made. The Assistant Judges had jurisdiction to make the previous order, and even if their order was not properly made, it could not be set aside in the way it was done by the District Judge as if an appeal lay to him from such order. That order, however, as now held was wrong, and the irregularity of the District Judge’s order thus led to no failure of justice, and fell under s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Quere—whether an award made under the provisions of Act I of 1894 can be enforced against the Collector by execution proceedings.

Appeal from the decision of J. FitzMaurice, District Judge of Thana, in darkhast No. 2 of 1895.

On the 16th February, 1894, the Assistant Judge of Thana (Mr. Pratt) under s. 15 of the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) made an award of compensation to the claimant.

The Collector subsequently desired to withdraw the proceedings in the matter, as the land to which the award related had been acquired and paid for many years previously, but the District Judge (Mr. Kharegbat) held that the proceedings could not be withdrawn by the Collector after a reference had been made to the District Judge. He ordered the Collector to pay \([804]\) the amount awarded with interest and costs but fixed no date for payment.

* Appeal No. 124 of 1896.

On the 1st March, 1894, the new Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) came into force.

On the 26th February, 1895, the claimant applied to enforce the payment ordered by the award. The Assistant Judge (Mr. Knight) held that although under the old law (s. 34 of Act X of 1870) the Judge had no power to order execution, the new law (s. 53 of Act I of 1894) by making the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to all proceedings under the Act authorized an order for execution. He was also of opinion that the proceedings in this matter must be regarded as pending, and that, therefore, the new Act was applicable under s. 2, cl. 2, of Act I of 1894. He, therefore, re-affirmed the order of payment already made by the Judge, and directed that payment should be made on or before the 20th May, 1896.

The Collector, however, did not make any payment as directed, and the matter came before the new District Judge (J. FitzMaurice) for final order. The Collector again contended that neither under the old nor the new Act had the Judge any power to enforce the award by ordering payment. The Judge agreed with this view, and dismissed the claimant's application for payment.

The claimant appealed to the High Court.

The appeal came on first for hearing before Parsons and Ranade, JJ., by whom it was referred to a Full Bench consisting of Farran, C. J., Parsons and Ranade, J.J.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the appellant.—The Judge made an order for payment. His successor (Mr. FitzMaurice) had no jurisdiction, at the instance of the Collector, who had not appealed, to re-open the matter. Section 40 of the old Act (X of 1870) made it obligatory upon the Collector to pay when the award was made. The new Act (I of 1894) was in force when we applied for payment, and s. 53 of that Act adopts the procedure prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The matter was still pending when the new Act came \([805]\) into force, and, therefore, that Act applies: see cl. 2 of s. 2.

Rao Babadur V. J. Kirtikar, for the respondent.—The award was merely in the nature of a declaration, not of a decree. It could not be executed as a decree. The only mode of enforcing such an award is by a suit. Neither the old Act (X of 1870) nor the new one (I of 1894) does more than provide for fixing the amount of compensation. They do not provide for enforcing the award. The Court becomes functus officio as soon as it fixes the amount. Even if the new Act (I of 1894) be held applicable to this case, it only provides for payment of interest (s. 28). Article 19 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1871) and art. 17 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) show that the Legislature intended that a suit should be brought in cases of compensation under the Act.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.— I am of opinion that the decision of the District Judge in this matter was correct and that the appeal must be dismissed. It appears to me to be quite clear that the "Land Acquisition Act, 1870," which, as its preamble declares, was an Act "to consolidate, and amend the law for the acquisition of land for public purposes and for companies and for determining the amount of compensation to be made on account of such acquisition," did not provide for or contemplate an "award" made under its provisions being enforced against the Collector by execution proceedings. The only provisions which the Act makes for payment are those contained in s. 40 and s. 42, the former of which imposes a statutory liability upon the Collector to pay the compensation according to the award to the person named therein, and the latter imposes upon him the further statutory liability, when the amount is not paid on taking possession, of paying the amount awarded and the added percentage with interest on such amount and percentage at the rate of six per cent. per annum. There is no general law, of which I am aware, which enables a civil Court to enforce such a statutory liability when imposed upon a Collector or other public officer by means of execution proceedings without a suit. The ordinary mode of enforcing such an obligation is by suit, unless [606] the Legislature when it creates the obligation prescribes some other special means of enforcing it. The question, therefore, is "Has the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 prescribed any special mode of action against the Collector?" In my opinion, it has not. Directly it certainly has not done so, and I cannot find any indication of its intention to do so indirectly.

An award under the Act could have been made either by the Collector himself under s. 14, or by the Judge and assessors or concurring assessors (not by the Court) under s. 34. The decision of the Judge (again not of the Court) if he differed from the assessors was not called an "award," but a "decision," and that decision was appealable. There was no provision made for the contingency of there being no appeal from the "decision" of the Judge, but the intention was, I think, in that case, to treat it as an "award." Hence, in the event of there having been no appeal, an award under the Act could be made in three ways: (i) by the Collector under s. 14; (ii) by the Judge and the one or more concurring assessors under s. 34; (iii) by the Judge alone under s. 35, which in this case was called a "decision."

In none of these cases is any provision made for the Court passing a decree in "accordance with the award," nor is s. 205 of the Civil Procedure Code or any section contained in Chap. XVII of the Code made applicable to the proceedings. This consideration would doubtless lose much of its force if the contents of the award drawn up in pursuance of the Act included a direction that the Collector was to pay the amount awarded. The contrary is the case. Section 34 prescribes the particulars which the award is to contain, viz., the amounts awarded under each clause of s. 24 so far as applicable to the particular case together with the grounds of awarding each of the said amounts. So far as the compensation is concerned, that is the only matter which the award is to contain. Costs are differently dealt with, but as to the compensation itself the obligation on the Collector to pay it rests solely on the provisions of the sections (ss. 40 and 42) of the Act to which I have referred and which apply alike whether the award is made by [607] the Collector under s. 14 without reference to the Court or made by the Judge and assessors or the Judge alone after such a reference. The terms of the latter section appear to provide that the percentage payable under it is not to be mentioned in the award. These considerations appear to me to be conclusive against the power of the Court to carry the "award" into effect by execution.

Full Bench.
23 B. 602
(F.B.)
There are some further provisions of the Act which tend very strongly to show that the above conclusion is correct and in accordance with the intention of the Legislature:

(1) The special provisions as to costs contained in the Act. The Collector is to pay them all in the first instance (s. 32), but if he is allowed any costs by the award, a special provision is introduced in his favour, that if he does not deduct them from the amount awarded, they may be recovered from the person interested as if they were costs incurred in a suit and as if the award were the decree therein (s. 34). There is no such provision made in favour of the person interested as against the Collector. The liability of the latter is left to rest upon the statutory obligation contained in s. 32, and the Act prescribes no means for enforcing it.

(2) The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure made applicable by s. 34 of the Act to proceedings before the Court do not include any reference to the execution provisions and sections of the same Code, and upon the general principle expressio unius alterius exclusio their application is apparently excluded.

(3) The Legislature, by art. 19 of the sch. II to the Limitation Act, IX of 1871, recognized a suit as the appropriate remedy against Government for compelling payment of compensation for land acquired for public purposes. The present Limitation Act (XV of 1877) contains a similar provision (art. 17); and Act XIV of 1859, s. 1, cl. 6 (applicable only to Bengal), contemplates suits as the proper remedy open to suitors for enforcing awards under the Bengal regulations therein referred to. For these reasons, I have come, without hesitation or doubt, to the conclusion stated at the beginning of this judgment.

I have gone into this question somewhat fully, because a clear conclusion upon it appears to me to dispose of the appeal. If the Act (X of 1870) prescribed no mode of compelling payment, by the Collector, of the compensation awarded under its provisions, but left the persons interested to a suit to enforce such payment, all proceedings under the Act were at an end when the award was made. Nothing more could be done under the Act, no further step could be taken under its provisions. The proceedings then ceased to be pending. They were at an end. As then no proceedings were pending in this case under Act X of 1870 when Act I of 1894 came into force, on March 1st, 1894, it follows that there were no proceedings to which the provisions of the latter Act could be applied under s. 2, cl. (2). It is, to my mind, quite impossible to continue, under Act I of 1894, proceedings which were completed under Act X of 1870. The order of the Assistant Judge in this case, which was virtually to pass under Act I of 1894 a decree in accordance with the award made under Act X of 1870, was passed without jurisdiction, and the order of the District Judge refusing to proceed against Government under the execution sections of the Code, including s. 429, is correct. The District Judge, as I understand his proceedings, did not purport to set aside the order of the Assistant Judge, but declined to further execute the award notwithstanding the order of the Assistant Judge. Even if this view of his procedure is not correct, it appears to me that we cannot now order execution to issue, which we should have to do if we allowed the appeal.

In the above view it is unnecessary for me to consider whether an award made under the provisions of Act I of 1894 can be enforced against the Collector by execution proceedings. That is a complex problem which has been set by the Legislature for solution by the Judges. Such problems often arise when the provisions of one Act are introduced by reference.
into another and incorporated with it. Whether s. 205 and the execution sections of the Civil Procedure Code are inconsistent with the provisions of Act I of 1894, is a question which may have hereafter to be determined. I shall offer no opinion upon it. It will be for the Collector to consider whether he is not stopped from disputing the applicant's demand for the compensation awarded to him. On that point also I offer no opinion. I would confirm the order dismissing the application. Costs on the appellant.

PARSONS, J.—I concur. The questions at issue have been so exhaustively dealt with that it is quite unnecessary for me to say more.

RANADE, J.—The award in this case was made on 16th February, 1894, by Mr. Pratt, the Assistant Judge, on a reference by the Collector of Thana under s. 15 of Act X of 1870. Later on, an attempt was made by the Collector to withdraw the land acquisition proceedings on the ground that the reference was made by mistake, as the land to which the award related had been acquired and paid for twenty years ago. Mr. Khareghat, the Judge, however, held that there was no provision in the Act for the withdrawal of proceedings by the Collector after a reference had been made to the District Judge. He ordered the Collector to pay the sum awarded with interest and costs, but fixed no date for the payment.

Act No. I of 1894 came into force on 1st March, 1894, a few days after the award was made, and the present application was made by the claimant on 26th February, 1895, to enforce the payment ordered by the award. The application was referred to Mr. Knight, the Assistant Judge, and it was contended before him on behalf of the Collector that the award was incapable of execution. On the 18th February, 1896, Mr. Knight held that although, under s. 34 of the old law, the District Judge had no power to order execution, such power was conferred on the Court by the extended scope of s. 53 of Act I of 1894, and that, though the award was made under the old Act, its enforcement was regulated by the new Act, as the proceedings must be regarded as pending within the terms of s. 2, cl. 2, of the new Act. He accordingly re-affirmed Mr. Khareghat's order, filling up the omission in it of the date of payment, and directed that the payment should be made on or before 20th May, 1896. As no payment was made by the Collector within the time fixed, the matter again came up for final orders before the District Judge. The Collector again raised the contention that neither under the old nor under the new Act had the District Judge any power to enforce the award. This contention was upheld by the District Judge, who accordingly dismissed the claimant's application. The present appeal is against this order of dismissal.

The case was at first argued before Mr. Justice Parsons and myself, but as there was a difference of opinion between us on the points of law raised in the appeal, it was arranged that it should be re-heard before a Bench of three Judges, consisting of the two before whom it was first heard and the Chief Justice.

At this second hearing, a preliminary point was raised that the District Judge had no power to revise and set aside an interlocutory order passed by the Assistant Judge. That order was made after full enquiry on 18th February, 1896, and it re-affirmed the previous order of Mr. Khareghat. The Collector's representation to the District Judge against Mr. Knight's order was not made till 2nd July, 1896. The Bombay Civil Courts' Act (ss. 14—19) regulates the powers of Assistant Judges. It is not clear whether the reference to the Assistant Judge in this case was made under s. 16 for inquiry and report, or whether the Assistant Judge was invested with the powers of District Judge under s. 19. The wording of the order shows that the Assistant Judges, Mr. Kharegbat and Mr. Knight, did not merely inquire and report. Under these circumstances, it may be presumed that they had jurisdiction to pass the order. And even if their order was not proper, it could not be set aside in the way it was done by the District Judge, as if an appeal lay to him from such order. I am, therefore, of opinion that the District Judge’s order appealed from in this case was improperly made.

This circumstance by itself does not, however, preclude this Court in regular appeal from considering the validity or otherwise of the order passed by the Assistant Judge directing the enforcement of the award. It was admitted in the course of the [811] argument, and in fact it is clear from the Assistant Judge’s own reasoning, that, as far as Act X of 1870 was concerned, there was no provision by which the Judge who made the award could direct its enforcement against the Collector, as though it were a decree between the claimant and the Collector. Section 34 of the old law, it is clear, only extended the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code so far as they relate to the inquiry before the award was made. The functions of the Court do not, as remarked by the District Judge, absolutely cease with the determination of the compensation; for in the matter of costs directed to be paid by the claimant, power is given to the Court to enforce an order about costs as though the award were a decree in a suit. This special provision shows that, in other respects, no such power was conferred on the District Judge. Sections 40, 41 do indeed impose a statutory liability on the Collector to make the payment, but there is no procedure laid down by which this liability can be enforced, except by a separate suit as provided for by arts. 17 and 18 of the Limitation Act. This was the view taken by this Court in the ruling referred to by the District Judge, and that decision must govern the present case.

The Assistant Judge, however, was of opinion that the new Act I of 1894 was applicable to this proceeding, and that, therefore, the Courts had power to enforce this award. When the case was first argued, I was inclined to take this view, especially as it appeared to me to be the intention of the Legislature to extend the scope of the old s. 34 re-enacted as s. 53, and thus to make the whole Code applicable as far as possible to land-acquisition disputes. The words employed in ss. 31—34 are also more significant, as they direct the Collector to make the payment with interest and costs, if any. On further consideration of the whole subject, I have come to agree with the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Parsons, and to hold that this case must be disposed of independently of the new Act. The award cannot be held to have been a pending proceeding under s. 2, cl. 2. If the award was not enforceable on the date when it was signed, no subsequent enactment could alter its character, unless there was any express provision to that effect in the Act. Section 2, cl. 2, contains no such provision.

[812] The irregularity of the District Judge’s order has thus clearly led to no failure of justice, and falls under s. 579 of the Civil Procedure Code. The order of dismissal must, therefore, be upheld, and the claimant referred to the only remedy open to him under Act X of 1870.

MULCHAND KUBER (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BHUDHIA AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Respondents.* [26th July, 1897.]

Hindu law—Marriage—Marriage of a girl without her father’s consent—Suit by father to have marriage declared void—Factum valet—Applicability of the doctrine to marriage.

Under the Hindu law a duly solemnized marriage cannot be set aside in the absence of fraud or force, on the ground that the father did not give his consent to the marriage.

The texts relating to the eligibility of persons who can claim the right of giving a girl in marriage, are directory and not mandatory.

Second appeal from the decision of E. H. Leggatt, Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad.

Suit by a father to have the marriage of his daughter (defendant No. 2) to the first defendant declared null and void.

The parties to this suit were Lewa Kunbis by caste. Plaintiff was a resident of Ahmedabad. In consequence of some dispute in the family, his wife (defendant No. 3) left his house and went to live with her mother at Gomtipur, a village about two miles distant from Ahmedabad. She took with her her infant daughter Mahalaxumi (defendant No. 2) who was about 3½ years old.

Thereupon the plaintiff applied to the District Court to obtain the custody of his child and for an injunction restraining his wife from disposing of her in marriage.

This application was rejected. Shortly afterwards the girl was given in marriage to defendant No. 1 by her mother (defendant No. 3) without the consent of the plaintiff and in defiance of his wishes.

The plaintiff then filed this suit praying for the custody of his daughter and for a declaration that her marriage with the first defendant was null and void.

The defendants pleaded inter alia that the plaintiff had given his consent to the marriage of his daughter, that the match was a fit and proper one, and under the Hindu law a marriage once performed could not be annulled.

The Subordinate Judge held that the girl was given in marriage without the plaintiff’s consent or knowledge, that the marriage was celebrated in fraud of his rights, and that the doctrine of factum valet was not applicable. He, therefore, passed a decree for the plaintiff, declaring the marriage null and void, and ordering the defendant to deliver up possession of the minor (defendant No. 2) to the plaintiff.

On appeal, the Assistant Judge held that, though the marriage was performed without the plaintiff’s consent, it was not invalid on that account, in the absence of fraud on the part of the mother. He, therefore, reversed the first Court’s decree and dismissed the suit. His reasons were as follows:

"The Hindu law appears to be that the father has the right to perform the marriage ceremony and not the mother, but it also seems that a marriage once performed is valid, and nothing is said as to the father's consent. As is said in the case referred to, where the Legislature contemplates the invalidity of a marriage to which the father's consent is wanting, it lays down the law in express terms, and if it does not do so, it must be presumed that the father's consent is not absolutely necessary.

* Second Appeal No. 249 of 1897.

"I think, moreover, that I must take into account the fact that the father applied for an injunction restraining his wife from giving his daughter in marriage and failed to obtain the injunction. In refusing to grant his application, the Court gave so much colour to the mother's claim to be allowed to perform the ceremony as to negative any idea of fraud on her part. This being so, the question raised and left undecided by the High Court in the case referred to (I.L.R., 11 Bom., p. 256) as to whether the Civil Court would set aside a marriage on the ground of fraud by the parties intermarrying, has no application and need not be discussed.

"There is not sufficient evidence to show that the marriage was in its own improper one. The father may be able to sue the mother for the money [814] received on account of the marriage of his daughter, on the ground that he was the only person entitled to give her in marriage, but this would not affect the validity of the marriage itself.

"Under the circumstances I think the marriage is valid and cannot be annulled.

"I, therefore, reverse the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the suit."

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashio Rao, for appellant.—It is found, as a fact, that the girl's marriage was performed without her father's consent and authority. Under the Hindu law it is the father's right to dispose of the girl in marriage: failing him the paternal relations have this right, and in their default, the mother. The mother thus stands last on the list of relations who by law are empowered to give a girl in marriage. So long as the father is alive, the mother has no authority to give away her daughter without his consent. A marriage performed without his consent is invalid—Nundal v. Tapeedas (1). It is a fraud on the father's right for the mother to usurp his authority and give their daughter away without his knowledge and consent. Such fraud vitiates the marriage contract and renders it null and void—Arumona Dasi v. Prahlad Chandra (2). The doctrine of factum valet has no application to such a case, for the obvious reason that there is a complete absence of authority in the mother to give away the girl. The prohibition of the law is not merely directory, but mandatory. The cases of Batee Ruljavat v. Jeychund (3) and Khushalchand v. Bai Mani(4) are distinguishable from the present case, because in both those cases the father had abandoned his wife and daughter, and acted in a manner showing that he waived his legal right to dispose of his daughter in marriage.

C. H. Setalwad, for respondents.—According to the Hindu law a marriage once duly celebrated cannot be annulled. The consent of the father is not essential to the validity of the marriage. The case of Khushalchand v. Bai Mani (4) is conclusive on this point. See also Bai Diwali v. Moti Karsan (5). As to the question of [815] fraud, the lower Court finds, as a fact, that there is no proof whatever of any fraud, constructive or actual, on the part of the mother or any other person who brought about this match.

JUDGMENT.

RanaDE, J.—The parties to this suit are Lewa Kunbis. Both the lower Courts have held that the marriage of appellant-plaintiff’s daughter Mahalaxumi, aged 3½ years, with the minor respondent, himself a boy 7 or 8 years old, was celebrated by the child’s mother and her maternal relations without the knowledge and consent of the appellant. The Court of first instance held that there were clear indications of fraud and concealment, and as the cause was one in which re-marriages were permitted, it held that appellant was entitled to the declaration he sought in respect of setting aside the marriage, and the Court also awarded appellant’s claim to the custody of the child.

In appeal, the Assistant Judge was of opinion that the circumstances of the case negatived the existence of fraud, and that the marriage was in other respects not an improper one. He further held that a marriage duly celebrated by the child’s mother could not be set aside on the ground of the absence of the consent of the father, inasmuch as such consent was not absolutely necessary. The Assistant Judge accordingly dismissed the claim for the declaration sought, as also for the custody of the child.

The chief contention raised in appeal before us is that, under the circumstances of the case, the marriage was null and void, as the appellant’s consent and authority were not secured prior to its celebration. The defence in the Court of first instance was made to rest on an allegation that the appellant was present at the time of the celebration. This defence broke down, and the decision was made to rest chiefly on the doctrine of factum valet to which the lower Court of appeal has referred in its judgment. This doctrine of quod fieri non debuit factum valet, or its Sanskrit equivalent, that “a thing cannot be made otherwise by a hundert texts,” has been frequently referred to in our reports in connection with questions relating to marriage, adoption, alienation, and maintenance of widows—Khushaiachand v. Bai Mani (1) [816] Lakshmappa v. Ramava (2); Gopal v. Hanmant (3). The general principles underlying the maxim were laid down in Lakshmappa v. Ramava, and re-affirmed in Gopal v. Hanmant by Sir M. Wastropp.

In the first of these judgments it is stated that the application of the maxim must be limited to cases in which there is neither want of authority to give or to accept, nor imperative interdiction. In cases in which the Shasta is merely directory, or only points out particular persons as more eligible than others, the maxim may usefully and properly be applied if the precept or recommended preference be disregarded. When the defect is one which can be described as one of the nature of non potuit rather than of non debuit, then the maxim does not apply—Gopal v. Hanmant. In the words of West and Bühler’s Digest, p. 909 (a), “prohibition or injunction resting on the essential qualities or mutual relations of its objects is distinguished as indispensable from one going only to an incident or matter of degree, or to the ceremony, a defect in which does not generally vitiate the proposed transaction if the precept has been complied with as far as was reasonably practicable.”

The distinction between directory and prohibitory injunctions being so clear, we have next to see bow far the authority of the father to give his girl in marriage falls under one or the other class of injunctions. The decided cases to which reference was made in the course of the argument leave no doubt on this point. The case of Nundal v. Tapeedas (1) may be left out, for it related only to a betrothal contract, and not to a completed marriage, and the only point decided in it was that contracts of betrothal to be binding must be made by or with the parents of the children. The next case in Bellasis’ Reports (Baee Ruiyat v. Jeychund) is more to the point. There, as here, the dispute was between husband and wife, and the girl was only 3 years old when her mother got her married. The Court held that a duly solemnized marriage could not be set aside on the ground that the father did not give his consent to the marriage. In a Bengal case—

[817] Modhossoodun Mookerji v. Jadub Chunder (2)—it was held that a Koolin father was not such a natural guardian of his child as its mother, and that the absence of his consent would not invalidate a marriage duly solemnized by the mother. The Madras High Court came to a similar decision where the dispute was between the widowed mother and her husband’s brother—S. Namaseayam Pillay v. Annamai Ummal (3). This was also the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Brindabun Chandra v. Chundra Kurnokar (4), where also the mother’s right to dispose of a minor child was questioned by the uncle of the child on the authority of the Smriti texts, which give preference to such relations over the mother in this connection.

Most of these cases were reviewed and considered by this Court in Khushalchand v. Bai Muni, and by the Madras High Court in Venkatascharyulu v. Rangacharyulu (5). In the first of these cases the operation of the maxim factum valet was considered, and Sir C. Sargant observed that, upon a true construction of the texts, the giving of the girl in marriage was not a right, but a duty to be discharged, and, in the absence of express words invalidating the gift in marriage, the consent of the person upon whom this duty devolves is not of the essence of the marriage, and if it is not, the maxim applies. It is true the learned Chief Justice expressed no opinion as to how far the presence of fraud would invalidate such a marriage, but there, as in the present case, there was no reason for interference, on the ground of fraud the existence of which the lower Court of appeal has expressly negatived in the present case.

The appellant’s pleader contended that there was a constructive, not a direct, fraud upon the father’s authority. As the District Court did not grant the injunction which the husband had prayed against his wife, and, moreover, as the District Judge has found expressly that the marriage was not an improper one, there is not much room for presuming constructive fraud. Fraud and force, such as was alleged in the case of Anunja Dasi v. Prahlad Chandra Ghose (6), must vitiate any transaction however solemnly celebrated [818] by the observance of the usual ceremonies, and a suit to set aside the marriage will lie. But, in the absence of these elements, the maxim of factum valet will govern, as the texts only refer to the greater or less eligibility of the relations who can claim the right to make the choice and perform the ceremony. The custom of the caste is not shown to be adverse to the celebration of the girl’s marriage at 3½ to a boy of 7, and no fraud can be presumed from the fact of this early celebration. The circumstance that re-marriage is permitted by the rules of the caste is irrelevant in the decision of the question of the validity of the marriage.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

RATANCHAND (Original Defendant), Appellant v. JAVHERCHAND (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.[6] [26th July, 1897.]

Hindu law—Widow—Funeral expenses of widow—Husband’s estate chargeable with such expenses.

Under the Hindu law the estate of the husband is liable for the funeral expenses of the widow; her stridhan cannot be charged with such expenses.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur V. V. Paranjpe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Broach, A. P.

One Parbhudas Kalliandas died in July, 1875, leaving a childless widow, Bai Divali.

Bai Divali died on or about the 11th April, 1893. She left a will, bequeathing the whole of the property in her possession to her brother, the defendant.

The plaintiff thereupon filed this suit, as the nearest kinsman and reversionary heir of Parbhudas Kalliandas, to recover the property in dispute from the defendant.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the whole of the property [819] in suit belonged to Bai Divali; that she was competent to will it away; and that, even if any portion of the property in his possession were found to have belonged to Parbhudas Kalliandas, he (the defendant) was entitled to retain out of such property a sum of Rs. 400 which he had spent on the funeral ceremonies of Bai Divali.

The Court of first instance held that part of the property in suit, namely, a house, some ornaments and outstanding debts, had been inherited by Bai Divali from her husband; that the rest of the property was her stridhan; and that her husband’s estate was liable for her funeral expenses.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge with appellate powers varied the decree of the first Court by declaring that the defendant should recover the funeral expenses of Bai Divali from her stridhan.

Against this decision the defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

L. A. Shah, for appellant (defendant).

Manekshah Jehangirsha, for respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

RANDAE, J.—The plaintiff in this case claimed the estate of Parbhudas as being his heir and entitled thereto on the death of his widow Divali. The defendant claimed under a will executed by Divali. The Subordinate Judge, A. P., held that the disposition by Divali, in her will, of the property of her husband was invalid, gave the plaintiff a decree for what he found to be the estate of Parbhudas, and left the defendant in possession of the stridhan of Divali.

* Second Appeal No. 306 of 1897.

The only objection raised to the decree in this Court relates to the obligation of paying for the funeral expenses of Divali. The Subordinate Judge has charged the stridhan of Divali with these expenses. We think that this is wrong. We are of opinion that the estate of the husband is liable for them. We can find no express authority on this point, but it has been decided that a widow can charge her husband's estate with the liability to pay these expenses. See Sadasiv v. Dhakubai (1). If the plaintiff [820] were administering the estate of Parbhudas, he would have to pay the funeral expenses of the widow, he would also have to pay the defendant the legacy left him by the widow, and we think that the fact that the defendant now claims his legacy by way of set-off cannot affect the merits of the claim. The Judge of the first Court was evidently right upon his point, and we do not understand why the Subordinate Judge, A. P., raised it, seeing that the plaintiff never made it a ground of appeal.

We vary the decree of the lower appellate Court by awarding the house to the plaintiff to be taken possession of only after he has paid into Court for the use of the defendant the sum of Rs. 150. Costs throughout in proportion, except the costs of Ex. 8 in appeal, which are to be borne by the plaintiff.

Decree varied.

DAGDU (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BALVANT RAMCHANDRA NATU and ANOTHER (Original Defendants Nos. 1 and 2), Respondents.* [27th July, 1897.]

Benami—Benamidar, right of, to sue in his own name—Purchase by a non-agriculturist in name of an agriculturist—Suit by benamidar for redemption—Court fees payable as if real purchaser was plaintiff—Dekhkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879) - Practice—Procedure.

Where a purchase is made benami and a suit is brought by the benamidar in order that the real purchaser may escape the consequences to which the latter would be liable if he purchased and sued in his own name, the Court will look behind the record to see who the real purchaser is.

A benamidar may maintain a suit in his own name, but the Court will put the defendant in the same position as if the real were the actual plaintiff.

One Dagdu, an agriculturist, purchased certain land benami for Kolkar, a non-agriculturist, and brought a suit for redemption under the provisions of the Dekhkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879). Under the notification of the Government of India, No. 2092, dated the 29th July, 1881, the fees in case of suits by agriculturists for redemption were remitted, and the plaintiff, therefore, paid no stamp duty on the plaint.

[831] Held, that Dagdu might maintain the suit in his own name, but must pay the usual stamp fees, and that the suit should proceed as an ordinary suit as though Kolkar was the nominal as well as the real plaintiff.

* Appeal No. 29 of 1897.

(1) 5 B. 460.
APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona.

Suit for redemption. The plaintiff, who was an agriculturist, alleged that he had purchased the land in question at an execution sale. He now sued to redeem it from a mortgage for Rs. 1,000, dated the 8th June, 1874, and for possession.

The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff was merely a benamidar having bought the land benami for one Shridhar Ballal Kelkar, who was the real purchaser and the real plaintiff. They contended that the benamidar was not entitled to bring this suit, and that Kelkar, who was not himself an agriculturist, was using the plaintiff in order to obtain the benefits of the Dekkhon Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff, who was a benamidar for Kelkar, had no right to sue. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"A benamidar can, no doubt, sue in his own name (I. L. R., 18 All., 39), but in this case there are reasons why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue in his own name. The suit is a barefaced attempt to defraud the public revenue. By the plaintiff suing as an agriculturist, a fee of Rs. 484 on the plaint is lost to Government. This suit is, again, an attempt to take undue advantage of the provisions of the Dekkhon Agriculturists' Relief Act, which provides a special mode of taking account in transactions in which agriculturists are concerned, or by which agriculturists are affected (vide ss. 12 and 13 of the Dekkhon Agriculturists' Relief Act). But this is a privilege which is intended for agriculturists only (vide P. J., 1882, p. 424, and P. J. 1884, p. 203)."

The plaintiff appealed.

Balkrishna N. Bhajekar, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The evidence does not show that the plaintiff is a benamidar. Kelkar has expressly disclaimed any interest in the property. But even if the plaintiff is a benamidar he is entitled to bring the suit in his own name—Annaji v. Bapuchand (1); Rawji v. Mahadev (2); [822] Bhola Pershad v. Ram Lall (3). Further, we contend that the Judge ought to have made Kelkar a party to the suit.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for the respondents (defendants).—The Dekkhon Agriculturists' Relief Act was not passed with a view of benefiting persons who are not agriculturists. It was passed for the benefit of agriculturists only—Amichand v. Kanhul (4); Rojaram v. Lakshman (5). On the evidence the Judge found, as a fact, that the plaintiff purchased the property benami for Kelkar. That being so, the plaintiff could not maintain the suit in his own name notwithstanding the disclaimer by Kelkar—Hari Gobind v. Akhoy Kumar (6).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—Upon the issue of fact which arises in this appeal we have arrived at the same conclusion as the Subordinate Judge, First Class, viz., that the purchase by the plaintiff Dagdu of the property in suit at the Court's sale referred to in the plaint was a benami purchase for Kelkar, and that the latter is conducting this suit in the plaintiff's name for his own benefit. Though each strand in the rope of proof may not of itself suffice to establish that position, yet all the threads when taken in combination lead, we think, with irresistible force to that result. The facts are set out in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and it is unnecessary for us to repeat them. The learned pleader for the appellant did not, indeed, discuss them as a whole, but contented himself with contesting that certain facts upon which the Subordinate Judge relied were not inconsistent with an opposite view to that which the Subordinate Judge has adopted, but we should not be justified in reversing a finding of fact upon such a partial review of the evidence. When it is considered as a whole we think that there can be but little doubt that the finding of the lower Court is correct.

The suit has been brought by the plaintiff Daaidu as an agriculturist, under the provisions of the Drikhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, for the possession of field Survey No. 428 or for redemption and possession of this land along with other fields. The plaintiff has correctly valued his claim as found by the Subordinate Judge, [823] but on the ground of being an agriculturist has paid no stamp duty on the plaint, in so far as the suit is one for redemption. The Subordinate Judge has rejected the claim upon that ground. Hence this appeal.

It is not suggested that Kelkar, the real purchaser of the land in suit, is an agriculturist. The question, therefore, arises whether a benami purchaser suing on behalf of the real owner, or, to state the relation in another form, the real owner suing in the name of an agriculturist nominal plaintiff, is entitled to the benefit of the notification of the Government of India, No. 2092, dated 29th July 1881 (1), remitting the fees in the case of suits for the redemption of mortgaged property when the plaintiff is an agriculturist. The case, so far as we are aware, is one of the first impression. In the somewhat analogous case of a pauper suing on behalf of another person really interested in both Courts of Common Law and Equity in England it has been held that he will not be allowed to continue the action or suit unless he gives security for costs —Burke v. Lidwell (2); Andrews v. Marriss (3). The law is thus stated in Chitty's Archbold, Chap. XXXIII, p. 399. Ed. (1885): "It may also be taken as a general rule that where another person is in fact proceeding with an action in the name of the party on the record, and that party is in a state of pauperism and insolvency, the Court will stay the proceedings until security for costs be given." We refer to this practice to show that in some cases the Court will look beyond the record to see who is the real plaintiff in the suit and will put the defendant in the same position as if the real were the actual plaintiff.

It is not, we think, open to us, having regard to the ruling in Ravi v. Mahadev (4), to hold that a benami purchaser is not entitled to maintain a suit in his own name, but that case also shows that the owner subsequently added as a plaintiff is treated as the real plaintiff throughout suing in the name of his benamidar. For the purpose of limitation the subsequent change of names is immaterial. In the leading case upon this subject, Nand [824] Kishore v. Ahmad Ata (5), the Court recognises with approval the principle deducible from the cases of Fuzelun Beebee v. Omdah Beebee (6) and Mehernoissa Bibe v. Hur Churn Bose (7) that where the purchase is made by the real purchaser in the name of a benamidar to escape the consequences in which a purchase in his own name would involve him, the Court will look behind the record to see who the real purchaser is—at least these cases which embody that principle are cited with approval by the Allahabad High Court. In the present case we cannot doubt that Kelkar bought the equity of redemption of the lands in suit in the name of the plaintiff Dagdu to enable him to sue without payment of the usual stamp fee and to obtain the benefit resulting from the provisions of the Relief Act in favour of agriculturists. This, in our opinion, he cannot be permitted to do. We think, however, that the suit should be allowed to proceed as an ordinary suit on payment of the usual stamp fees as though Kelkar was the nominal as well as the real plaintiff. This decision is not, in our opinion, in any way at variance with Annaji v. Basudeb (1) or Gulabpuri v. Pandurang (2) or Amichand v. Ranku (3) though in the latter two cases it was apparent that persons other than the agriculturist plaintiff might under certain circumstances reap a considerable portion of the advantage derived from the suit. That is, however, a result which the Relief Act contemplate in some instances—s. 3 (2). There was no doubt that in these cases the actual plaintiff was an agriculturist and the stamp objection did not arise.

We shall, therefore, remit the case, giving the plaintiff three months’ time within which to pay the legal stamp fee upon the plaint. Should he not do so, the decree will be confirmed with costs. If he does, the case will be heard on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Case remitted.

[828] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

BALA AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. BALAJI MARTAND (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [27th July, 1897.]

Hindu Law—Joint family—Ancestral property—Mortgage by father and one of the sons—Agreement by father alone that mortgagee should enjoy the property for a term of years in satisfaction of debt—Agreement not binding on sons—Alienation—Decree against father—When binding on his sons—Dekkan Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 44 and s. 15-A.

In 1888 one Dhondi and his eldest son Bala mortgaged certain ancestral property for Rs. 1,500. In 1890 Dhondi alone came to an arrangement with the mortgagee by which it was agreed that the mortgagee should enjoy the income of the mortgaged property till 1800 A.D. in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. This agreement was filed in Court under s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879) on 4th April, 1891, when it took effect as a decree.

In execution of this decree the mortgagee sought to attach the property mortgaged. Dhondi having died in the meantime, his sons objected to the attachment on the ground that the decree was fraudulent and collusive. But the objection was disallowed by the Court, and the property was attached. Thereupon Dhondi’s sons filed a suit for redemption of the mortgage of 1888.

Defendant pleaded that the mortgage was merged in the agreement of 1890, and that the plaintiffs had no right to redeem.

Held that the agreement was not binding upon the plaintiffs. By the agreement the right to redeem the mortgage before its fixed period under the provisions of s. 15-A of the Dekkan Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879) ceased.

and the right to the surplus profits in the hands of the mortgagee over and above the mortgage-debt was also lost, without any countervailing advantage or benefit. Such an agreement by a Hindu father is not binding on his sons in respect of ancestral property. It amounts pro tanto to an alienation, by him, of the ancestral estate without consideration.

Held, also, that as the agreement was not binding upon the plaintiffs, the decree against their father based upon the agreement was also not binding upon them.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Thakurdas M., Additional First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., of Poona.

Suit for redemption. The mortgaged property was a mokasa allowance of Rs. 412 annually received from the Government treasury [826] at Bhimthadi in the Poona District. It was ancestral property of one Dhondi and his sons Bala, Aba, Gangaram, and Bapu, a minor.

On the 28th June, 1888, Dhondi and his eldest son Bala mortgaged the mokasa allowance to the defendant to secure the repayment of Rs. 1,500 with interest at 18 per cent. per annum; the mortgage to be redeemable in the year 1900 A.D. on taking accounts in the usual manner.

On the 28th April, 1890, Dhondi came to an arrangement with defendant (mortgagee), by which it was agreed that the defendant should enjoy the allowance till A.D. 1900 in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt.

This agreement was made before the village conciliator, and was forwarded by him to the Subordinate Judge of Bhimthadi, who ordered it to be filed in the Court under s. 44 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) on the 4th April, 1891, when it took effect as a decree of the Court.

Dhondi having died, the defendant applied for execution of the decree against Dhondi's sons and legal representatives Bala, Aba, Gangaram, and Bapu, a minor.

Bala resisted this application on the ground that the decree was fraudulent and collusive and, therefore, not binding on Dhondi's sons. The Subordinate Judge overruled this objection and passed an order for attachment of the mokasa allowance.

Thereupon Bala filed the present suit in 1894 for redemption of the mortgage of 1888, alleging that the mortgage-debt had been satisfied. Bala's brothers were made co-plaintiffs after the institution of the suit.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiffs had no right to redeem; that the mortgage was merged in the consent decree passed between him and the deceased Dhondi in 1891; that all objections taken to the decree by the plaintiffs having been overruled by the Court in the execution proceedings, the plaintiffs were bound by the decree; and that the suit was barred under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that the mortgage was no longer subsisting, having been superseded [827] by the consent decree between the deceased Dhondi and the mortgagee, and that the decree was binding on the plaintiffs as sons and heirs of Dhondi.

This decision was upheld, in appeal, by the First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers. He held that the agreement and the decree made thereon were binding on the plaintiffs; that the mortgage was merged in the decree Navlu v. Raghunath (1); and that the plaintiffs' claim.

was barred by s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, they being the legal representatives of Dhondi. (He cited on that point, Nimba v. Sitaram (1).) Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the appellants (plaintiffs).—Dhondi had no power to deal with joint ancestral property so as to bind his sons, except with their consent or for their benefit. The consent decree between Dhondi and the mortgagee cannot bind the plaintiffs, who were not parties to it. It was, moreover, made in fraud of their rights. It deprives them of their right of redemption. It puts the mortgagee in absolute enjoyment of the property without any liability to account. Though the mortgage-debt has been more than paid off, the plaintiffs cannot under the decree recover the surplus profits in the hands of the mortgagee. Such an arrangement is against the interests of the sons and is beyond the authority of the father. A Hindu father ordinarily represents the family in litigation as well as in other transactions, and a decree obtained against him as manager would, no doubt, bind the family. But the decree must be obtained in bona fide litigation. A consent decree does not stand on the same footing—Assamathem v. Roy Lutchmeepus (2). And no effect can be given to such a decree when it is manifestly injurious to the interests of the sons.

There was no appearance for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—This was a suit filed by Bala to redeem a mortgage which he and his late father Dhondi executed on the 28th June, 1888, in favour of the defendant to secure payment of the sum of Rs. 1,500 with interest thereon at the rate of Rs. 18 per cent. per annum redeemable in Shaka 1822 on making up [828] accounts in the usual way. The mortgaged property consisted of a mokasa (family) allowance of Rs. 412 per annum payable at the Mavalatdar's treasury at Bhimthadi and was ancestral estate. Dhondi and his sons were agriculturists. The brothers of the plaintiff Bala were subsequently made parties plaintiffs to the suit.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the father Dhondi in his lifetime on the 28th April, 1800, had come to an agreement with the defendant before the conciliator of mauji Murum whereby it was arranged that the mortgagee was to enjoy the allowance up to the said Shaka year 1822 in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt. This agreement, which was come to under s. 43 of the Dekkhon Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, was filed in Court under s. 44 of the same Act and thereupon took effect as a decree. Neither Bala nor his brothers were made parties to these proceedings. The lower Courts have held that the mortgage of 1888 became merged in the decree, and that the plaintiffs are bound by the decree as though they had been parties to the proceedings under the Dekkhon Agriculturists' Relief Act. The plaintiffs have appealed, and the question which we have to determine is whether the above ruling is correct. The respondent has not appeared in support of the decision of the lower Courts. So we have heard no argument on his side of the question.

As a Hindu father's powers in respect of ancestral property, though in some respects peculiar when compared with the powers of other Hindu managers, are still of a limited character, we must consider the operation and effect of the agreement of 1890 upon the mortgage of 1888 before determining how far Dhondi's sons are bound by it and by the decree.

passed thereon; for it must be borne in mind that the sons of Dhondi were co-parceners with their father when the agreement was entered into, and that as such co-parceners, and not as the legal representatives of Dhondi, they are now seeking to redeem.

Under the mortgage of 1888 the plaintiffs and their father were entitled to an account and under the provisions of s. 15-A of the [Relief Act were entitled to redeem through the fixed [829] period of the mortgage had not expired; and the Court was also in a redemption suit entitled to reduce the rate of interest stipulated for in the mortgage if it were deemed exorbitant or excessive. A simple calculation shows that even allowing interest at 18 per cent. per annum the mokasa allowance received by the defendant mortgagee would have paid the mortgage debt and interest in between seven and eight years. A large surplus would thus have been due to the mortgagors at the end of the mortgage term. By the agreement which Dhondi entered into, when it under s. 44 of the Relief Act obtained the force of a decree, the right to redeem the mortgage before its fixed period ceased, and the right to the surplus of the mokasa over and above the mortgage debt and interest was lost.

The net result was that the father by the agreement gave up the right of the family to receive the sum of Rs. 1,800 or thereabout, without any countervailing advantage or benefit. Such an agreement by a Hindu father is not, in my opinion, binding upon his sons in respect of ancestral property. It amounts pro tanto to an alienation by him of the ancestral estate without consideration. See upon this point Mayne's Hindu Law, pl. 311, and the cases referred to by the learned author.

It remains to consider whether the filing of such an agreement, operating as a decree under s. 44 is a decree binding upon Bala and his brothers, who were not parties to the proceedings. No case, that I am aware of, has gone as far as that. In the first place, it was a decree founded upon consent, and the Courts draw a clear distinction between adverse decrees obtained in regular course and consent decrees in so far as the interest of third persons not parties to the proceedings is concerned. An example will be found in Assmatem v. Roy Lutchmeput [1]. Besides, if the agreement of Dhondi was not one binding upon his sons, he would not properly represent his sons in a suit filed to enforce it. When the transaction is one by which the sons are bound, then a decree based upon such a transaction is binding upon them even though they are not parties to it. Most of the authorities upon this subject will be found collected in Davalava v. Bhimaji [2]. But when the original transaction is not binding upon the [830] sons, then the decree against their father based upon such a transaction is not binding upon them when they are not parties to the suit in which it is passed. For example, a decree against a father in a suit by a purchaser to recover possession of ancestral estate voluntarily alienated by the former is not binding upon the sons not made parties to the suit, and so even if it is an alienation by the father for debts of an illegal or immoral character which the sons are not liable to pay—Mussamut Nanomi v. Modun Mohun [3]; Davlat Ram v. Mehdi Okand [4]. The present case appears to me to fall within the analogy of these decisions. In the case of Davalava v. Bhimaji [2] the original transaction was clearly binding upon all the heirs of Nur Mahomed. The case of the plaintiff Bala is even stronger than that of his brothers, as he was one of the co-mortgagors in 1888 and was not made a party to the proceedings.

in which the terms of the mortgage which he had executed were altered to his prejudice.

On the whole, I am of opinion that the letter upon redemption imposed by the proceedings of 1890 upon the father of the plaintiffs is not binding upon them as co-parceners even though it acquired under s. 44 of the Relief Act the force of a decree against Dondi himself and his sons as his legal representatives. I notice that the execution proceedings which were relied upon as a bar to the present suit were resisted by the plaintiff Bala in his latter capacity and are not, therefore, available as a defence to this suit.

I would reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the suit to have the mortgage account taken by the Subordinate Judge. The respondent must pay the costs of the appeals in this and the lower appellate Court. Costs already incurred in the first Court to be costs in the cause.

CANDY, J.—I concur, and for the same reasons. I would merely add that it would indeed be unfortunate if we felt bound to hold that the inequitable arrangement, entered into between Dhondi and defendant in 1890, bound Bala and his brothers. It was, on the face of it, in fraud of Dhondi’s sons and co-parceners. This case shows how necessary it was by Act VI of 1895, s. 12. [831] to substitute the present provisions of s. 44 of the Dekkan Agriculturists’ Relief Act for the same section as it stood previously to 1895. Such a case as the present could not have occurred had the present provisions of s. 44 been in force. The Subordinate Judge would at once have seen, on a scrutiny of the agreement, that Bala, who had joined in the original mortgage, was not a party to the agreement.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

KASHINATH DADA SHIMPI (Original Plaintiff) Appellant v. NARAYAN VALAD BAPU SHIMPI (Original Defendant), Respondent.*

[29th July, 1897.]

Easement—Easements Act (V of 1892), s. 28, cl. (d)—Right to discharge smoke over a neighbour’s land—Acquisition of right by prescription.

A right to discharge smoke over adjoining land can be acquired by prescription. The definition of easement in the Easements Act (V of 1892) is wide enough to embrace such an easement, and s. 28, cl. (d), expressly recognizes the right to pollute air as a right capable of being acquired by prescription.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur D. G. Gharapur, First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik with appellate powers, confirming the decree of Rao Sahib G. N. Kelkar, Subordinate Judge of Yeola.

Suit for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to have the smoke from his house discharged through certain smoke holes in the east wall of his house over the defendant’s land and to restrain the defendant from building on his land so as to interfere with the plaintiff’s right.

* Second Appeal No. 375 of 1897.
The Subordinate Judge held (inter alia) that no one had a right to send smoke issuing from his house over the land of another. He dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo V. Bhat, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The lower Courts have held that such an easement as the plaintiff claims cannot be recognised at all. That is not correct—Easements Act [832] (V of 1882), s. 28, cl. (d); Gale on Easements, p. 258; Goddard on Easements, p. 109.

Narayan G. Chandavarkar, for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

Farran, C. J.—We do not consider that there is any warrant, in law, for the Additional Subordinate Judge, A. P., ruling that a right to discharge smoke through smoke holes in a wall over a neighbour's land cannot be acquired by prescription. If this were so, a person after twenty years' user could block up the apertures in his neighbour's wall by which his kitchen was kept free of smoke. The definition of easement in the Easements Act (V of 1882) is wide enough to embrace such an easement, and s. 28, cl. (d), expressly recognises the right to pollute air as a right capable of being acquired by prescription.

In Crump v. Lambert (1) Lord Romilly, M. R., said: "There is, I apprehend, no distinction between any of the cases, whether it be smoke, smell, noise, vapour or water, or any other gas or fluid. * * * It is true that by lapse of time if the owner of the adjoining tenement, which, in case of light or water is usually called the servient tenement, has not resisted for a period of twenty years, then the owner of the dominant tenement has acquired the right of discharging the gases or fluid, or sending smoke or noise from his tenement over the tenement of his neighbour; but until that time has elapsed the owner of the adjoining...tenement * * * retains his right to have the air that passes over his land pure and unpolluted and the soil and produce of it uninjured by the passage of gases, by the deposit of deleterious substances, or by the flow of water."

We send down the following issues:

1. Has the plaintiff a present right acquired by prescription to pass smoke through the smoke holes (dharis) in his wall over the defendant's premises, or through any or which of such smoke holes (dharis)?

2. Does the building erected by the defendant interfere with the free passage of smoke through such smoke holes?

Findings to be certified in a month.

Issues sent down.

DAMODARADAS TAPIDAS v. DAYABHAI TAPIDAS 22 Bom. 834

[833] PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:
Lord Hobhouse, Lord Macnaghten, and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Bombay.]

DAMODARADAS TAPIDAS (Appellant) v. DAYABHAI TAPIDAS AND ANOTHER (Respondents.)
[10th and 11th February, and 1st April, 1898.]

Hindu will—Construction of bequest—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 82 and 111 —Absolute estate given.

This appeal related to three clauses in the will of a Hindu, who bequeathed his property to his two sons, one of whom had a son. The other son was childless, his only issue having died before the will was made. There were gifts over on the death of either son.

The Courts below, construing the first of the three clauses, decided that each of the two sons took a life-interest in the property comprised in that clause, as tenants-in-common; and that the ultimate interest, not having been validly disposed of, fell into the residuary estate.

On this appeal, with reference to s. 82 of “the Indian Succession Act, 1865,” made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the town of Bombay, by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, some doubt was expressed by the Judicial Committee whether in that clause it sufficiently appeared that the estates given to the sons were only estates for life. It was, however, in the view taken of the other clause of which the construction was in dispute, unnecessary to determine that point.

In the next clause to be considered, there were words which had been held by the appellate High Court to give to each of the two sons of the testator only a life-estate in a half share of the residuary estate. Whether those words, which followed a gift to the testator’s two sons of the whole residue in equal shares, were so clear that only this restricted interest was intended to be given to them, was considered in like manner to be open to doubts in regard to the rule of construction imposed by s. 82. But this was also not required to be determined, as this clause, the 13th in the will, was not applicable under the circumstances.

It was now determined that the third and last of the disputed clauses, No. 18 in the will, clearly gave the residuary estate to the testator’s two sons, in equal shares, each an absolute estate, except in the case of the subsequent birth of a son or daughter. The two clis. 13 and 18, were not, in the Committee’s opinion, intended to be read together and reconciled, nor were they mutually explanatory. They were each intended to provide for different circumstances.

Held, that the two sons of the testator must be declared to have each taken an absolute interest in the half share of the residuary estate.

[834] APPEAL from a decree (7th April, 1896) of the appellate High Court, varying a decree (28th March, 1895) of the High Court in its original jurisdiction.

The suit was brought on the 6th November, 1894, by the respondent Dayabhai Tapidas for the construction of a will in the Gujarati language dated the 26th May, 1885, made by his father Tapidas Varajdas, a Hindu of Bombay, who died on the 31st March, 1886, leaving houses and other property in Bombay acquired by himself. The testator left a widow, who died on the 12th August, 1887, two daughters, and two sons, Dayabhai and Damodaradas. The first of these sons, the plaintiff, had a son Karludas, whom he now sued as co-defendant with Damodaradas. The only issue of the latter had died in infancy before the date of the will.

The clauses, the subject of contention, the 8th, 13th and 18th in the will, are set forth in the report of the appeal in the High Court (1), where the judgments of the Courts, original and appellate, are given at length.

(1) 21 B. 1.

The plaintiff, and his son, the second defendant, claimed that, on the true construction of the clauses, the plaintiff and the first defendant were each entitled to a life-interest only in the houses comprised in cl. 8, and in the residuary estate referred to in cl. 13 and 18; and that after the death of the plaintiff and of the first defendant, then the second defendant would be absolutely entitled to all.

In answer to this the first defendant, Damodardas, contended for the construction that he and his brother, the plaintiff, each took an absolute estate as tenants-in-common in all the property comprised in all the three clauses.

On this appeal the principal question was resolved into whether the interest taken by the two brothers in the residuary estate was absolute or only for their lives.

The issues fixed in the Court of first instance appear in the report of the appeal in the High Court (I. L. R., 21 Bom., at p. 5) already referred to.

[835] Upon the first and second of these issues the first Court (Candy, J.) decided that, under the 8th clause of the will, Damodardas and Dayabhai took, on the death of the widow, a life-interest only in the property mentioned in the clause, and the rest of the estate and interest in the same was undisposed of and fell into the residue of the estate. Upon the third and fourth issues he held that the two sons of the testator took an absolute estate as tenants-in-common in the residue, under the provisions of cl. 13 and 18 of the will, subject to the interest of Damodardas being defeasible if he should die without having a son born to him in the life-time of his brother. Upon the fifth and sixth the first Court could not say what the interest of Karsandas would be in the property, while the two sons of the testator were both alive; but that the two sons had power to alienate beyond their lives, subject to the proviso that the interest of Damodardas was defeasible in the case of his dying without having had a son born to him in the life-time of his brother.

An appeal having been heard by a Divisional Bench of the appellate High Court (Farran, C. J., and Strachey, J.), the Judges concurred in the decision of the first Court on the first issue, holding that the testator, when he gave the income of the houses in cl. 8 to his sons equally, did not intend more than that their possession should extend to their lives respectively.

As to the gift of the residue under cl. 13 and 18, they held (p. 17) that the proper construction of cl 13 was that "on the death of one brother before the other, without having had issue sons, or without leaving issue sons, whichever might be the correct interpretation of the words, the gift over to the surviving brother would take effect, although both brothers survived the testator."

They held, in effect, that the estates of the two sons in the residue were life estates. As to the gift over, they held (p. 20) that the most natural meaning to attach to this was that "on one brother dying, not having male issue, the estate of that brother, subject to the provision for his daughter and widow, passed to the surviving brother."

On the whole case the appellate High Court were of opinion that to hold that the testator's sons took only life-estates in the property which they were to divide and take under cl. 13, also given to them by cl. 18, gave better and more complete effect to the declared intention of the testator than to hold (by rejecting the direction in favour of the sons' sons as inoffecual and void) that the two sons of the testator took absolute estates.
The result of the judgment of the High Court was that the construction put upon the clauses was the following:—Dayabhai and Damodardas each took a life estate in a moiety of the houses bequeathed in cl. 8, and in a moiety of the residuary estate under cl. 13 and 18. The reversion of Dayabhai’s share was now vested in his son Karsandas.

If Damodar should die without leaving a son, his moiety would devolve upon his brother Dayabhai, or, if the latter should be dead, upon his son Karsandas. The Court considered it premature to decide what would be the result if Damodar should have a son, or to decide as to the rights of other sons of Dayabhai, should he have any.

Before the decree was settled, it having been made known that Damodardas had had two children, who had died in infancy before the date of the will, and, by consent, argument having been heard thereupon, there was the following alteration. The judgment concluded thus (p. 23): “Reading then the expression ‘have issue’ in the sense of ‘leave issue,’ the sense which we have indicated, the result as to the reversion of Dayabhai’s share being now vested in his son Karsandas must be struck out.”

On this appeal by Damodardas Cohen, Q.C., and Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the High Court had wrongly construed the clauses of the will. The decision should have been that the two sons of the testator each took an absolute interest on the death of the widow, in both the property bequeathed in cl. 8 and in the residuary estate bequeathed in cl. 13 and 18. The Court of construction should have declared the gift, as made to the testator’s sons, to have been an absolute gift to each of an equal share. The limitations over, which were to take effect contingently on the happening of a specified uncertain event, were not to take effect before the period when the property would have been [837] distributed to the sons. They were, therefore, void, not being in accordance with s. 111 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865. Gifts to persons not existing when the gifts should take effect, would not operate. Part XIII of the above Act was referred to, and also Alangamonyori Dabee v. Sonamoni Dabee (1); Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasm Dasi (2); and the Tagore case (3). The period of distribution in this case was not at the death of the testator, but at the death of the son who first should die. The attempted disposition was that the surviving son should succeed to a deceased son’s share; but, if the latter left issue, the surviving brother should not exclude the issue of the deceased brother. The only construction, legally permissible, was that the two sons each took absolute estates, which either originally were, or might have become, indefeasible. The words “have issue sons” meant “have” or “have had issue sons,” and there was no sufficient reason derivable from the will for taking the words to mean “leave issue sons.” If the absolute estate, which, it was contended, was given by s. 13, were defeasible on the death of either son leaving issue, then an adopted as well as a natural-born son would count as an heir. Again, if it was right to conclude, as the High Court had concluded, that the words in cl. 13 “in the event of their” (meaning my sons’) “decese, they” (meaning my sons’ sons) “are their heirs,” were to be taken as words of gift to sons’ sons, that gift would be void, because it would be a gift to persons not necessarily in being at the period of distribution. If, on the other hand, those words were to be taken as meaning that sons, and sons only, should inherit, such a declaration would be void as opposed to the principal rules of inheritance of the Hindu law.

If the High Court were right in their decision, that the interests given to the testator's sons by cls. 13 and 18 were only life-estates, then it followed that the residue had not been disposed of according to law. The consequence would be that this residue would pass at once to the testator's sons as intestate inheritance. Thus in any view they obtained absolute estates.

[838] Jardine, Q. C., and Arathoon, for the first respondent, the plaintiff, Dayabhai, argued that the High Court was right in holding that the appellant did not take an absolute and indefeasible estate in his moiety of either the house property or of the residuary estate. It did not follow that in a Hindu will a gift must be entirely void, if made, for instance, in favour of an uncertain class coupled with persons or a person to whom the gift could validly be made. The legal part of the disposition would take effect—Ram Lal Set v. Kanai Lai Sett (1). In that case the intention of the testator was to make a gift to two persons mentioned in the will, who were capable of taking it, and there were other legatees, unborn at the date of the gift, who were to be permitted to come in afterwards and share in it. The decision was that though the latter part of the disposition was invalid, and inoperative, the former part, or gift to the two, should receive effect notwithstanding that the whole intention of the testator could not be carried out. Part of the judgment in Rai Bishen-chand v. Asmaida Koer (2) was to a similar effect. Here the plaintiff, Dayabhai, was in the advantageous position of having a son who was living at the time of the testator's death, which in this case was the period of distribution. Reference was made to Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, paras. 364, 356, and to the Succession Act, X of 1865, ss. 100, 102.

Cozens Hardy, Q. C., and Branson, for the second respondent. Karsandas, argued that the High Court correctly decided that under cl 8 the two sons of the testator took only life-estates as tenants-in-common, and that the ulterior interest fell into the residue. That Court had also rightly maintained that the true construction of cls. 13 and 18 was that Dayabhai and Damodardas took each a life-interest in a moiety of the residuary estate. And it was the true construction that if either of these brothers should die leaving no issue, his moiety should devolve upon the surviving brother; and that if the brother should not have survived, but should have left male issue, then the moiety should devolve upon such male issue.

Cohen replied.

JUDGMENT.

[839] Afterwards, on the 1st April, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. COUCH.—The suit in this appeal was brought to obtain a judicial construction of the will of Tapidas Varajas, a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, who died on the 31st March, 1886, leaving a widow Navivahu and two sons, the resoundent Dayabhai and the appellant Damodardas, and two daughters. Dayabhai had then two sons living; Damodardas had two infant sons, who died before the date of the will. The widow Navivahu died on the 12th August, 1887.

The will is dated the 26th of May, 1885, and is a long document, in Gujarati, divided into numbered paragraphs. The 8th, 13th and 18th are the only parts of it which it is necessary to refer to in this appeal.
The suit was brought by Dayabhai against Damodadas and Karsandas, one of the sons of Dayabhai, and the plaint, after stating the making of the will and the death of the testator, stated that the residue of his estate, except the house and land at Surat, had been divided and was then being enjoyed in severalty by the plaintiff and the first defendant, the house and land at Surat being enjoyed by them jointly. In the written statement of Damodadas the facts thus set forth in the plaint were admitted, and it was contended that he and Dayabhai took an absolute estate as tenants-in-common in the house mentioned in cls. 8 and in the residue of the testator's estates under cls. 13 and 18. Karsandas in his written statement contended that he was absolutely entitled to the houses and the residue of the property referred to in cls. 8, 13 and 18 after the death of Dayabhai and Damodadas.

The original Court and the appellate Court have both held that Damodadas and Dayabhai took a life-interest only in the houses as tenants-in-common, and that the ulterior interests therein, not being validly disposed of, fell into the residue. On the argument of the appeal before their Lordships this was not disputed, and the contention related only to the construction of cls. 13 and 18. Section 82 of "The Indian Succession Act, 1865" enacted that where a property is bequeathed to any person, he is [840] entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless it appears from the will that only a restricted interest was intended for him. This section is by s. 2 of "The Hindu Wills Act, 1870" made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the town of Bombay, and their Lordships have some doubt whether in the 8th clause it sufficiently appears that the sons were to take only an estate for life. It is, however, in the view which their Lordships take of cls. 13 and 18, unnecessary to determine it.

In the 13th clause the testator after referring to the business carried on in the name of Shah Tapidas Varsjadas and Company, in which he had two shares and Damodadas one share, and his intention to make Dayabhai a partner, says that in the event of his decease the sons remaining joint shall carry on the business, their shares being half and half, and the commission is to be received by them in equal shares. "But if my son Bhai Damodadas should not make Dayabhai a partner in accordance with what is written above, and should not annually give him an equal moiety out of the commission money of the Alliance Cotton Manufacturing Company, Limited, that may be received annually, then out of my property of all descriptions and moneys he shall first give Bhai Dayabhai Rs. 2,00,001, namely, two lakhs and one." Then he says: "Afterwards on what is mentioned in this will be given to all, as to the whole of the property which may remain over, my sons may divide and take the whole," and then follow the words which have been held by the High Court to give to the sons only a life-estate in a half share of the residue. It appears to their Lordships that the latter part of the clause beginning "afterwards" is intended to apply to the case of Dayabhai not becoming a partner in the business and receiving from Damodadas the Rs. 2,00,001. According to the plaint and the admissions in the written statements, the whole of the residue of the estate, except the house and land at Surat, has been divided between the sons and is now enjoyed in severalty by them. There is no statement or any ground in the plaint or written statements for supposing that Dayabhai has received the two lakhs and one rupee. Clause 13, therefore, does not appear to their Lordships to be applicable in the circumstances which have arison, and it may also be observed that what has been said about § 82 [§ 841] of the Succession Act with reference to the 8th clause is applicable to cl. 13. It may be doubted whether the words which follow the direction, that the sons may divide and take the whole of the residue in equal shares, are so clear as to show that only a restricted interest was intended to be given to them. In their Lordships’ opinion, cl. 18 is that which is now applicable to the residue, and there is no difficulty in its construction.
It gives the residue to the sons in equal shares absolutely, except in the case of the subsequent birth of a son or a daughter. Their Lordships cannot agree with the appellate Court in thinking that the two clauses must be read together and reconciled and must be treated, not as antagonistic, but as mutually explanatory of each other. They are intended to provide for different circumstances. They will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the High Court, except the order therein as to the costs of the suit, and to declare that Damodadas and Dayabhai each took an absolute interest in a half share of the residuary estate of the testator.
The costs of this appeal of both parties, to be taxed as between solicitor and client, will be paid out of the property of the testator.

He was convicted by a Cantonment Magistrate at Poona and sentenced to pay, in respect of each of the said houses, a fine of Rs. 15 and a further fine of Rs. 5 for each day the latrine remained unbuilt.

The District Magistrate referred to the High Court the question whether the additional fine for a continuous offence was legal.

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—The reasoning in In re Limbaji (1) applies to "continuing failure" under Rule 2 of the General Order of the Government of India, No. 723, dated 19th June, 1896, (for which see the Bombay Government Gazette, Part I of 1896, p. 615). This rule shows in plain language that the additional fine is not only to be after the first conviction, but is to follow proof that the failure is persisted in. The additional fine cannot be imposed as a threat against possible persistence, which, being in the future, cannot be matter of present proof. The continuing failure must, therefore, be matter of later and separate inquiry and proof. The Court, therefore, sets aside the sentences of further fine of Rs. 5 per day.

Municipality—Bombay District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873), s. 84—Taxation—Duty on goods imported within Municipal limits—"Imported"—Meaning of the word.

A rule of the Thana Municipality provided for the levy of octroi duty on certain articles "when imported within the Thana Municipal District."

Held, that goods merely passing through the Municipal district in the course of transit to Bombay were "imported" within the meaning of the rule and were, therefore, liable to duty.

APPLICATION under s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).

The Municipality of Thana passed a rule or bye-law imposing an octroi duty on certain articles "when imported within the Thana Municipal District." The accused was prosecuted (under s. 84 of Bom. Act VI of 1873) for refusing to pay the duty imposed on certain goods which, it was alleged, he had imported. He contended that inasmuch as the goods in question merely passed through the district in the course of transit from the village of Valva to Bombay they were not "imported" within the meaning of the rule, and were not, therefore, subject to duty.

an additional fine which may extend to five rupees for every day after the date of the first conviction on which the failure is proved to have been persisted in (see Bombay Government Gazette for 1896, Part I, p. 615).

Criminal Revision.

22 B. 543.

It was admitted by the prosecution that the goods passed out of municipal limits on the same day on which they came within those limits.
The Magistrate held that, though the goods merely passed through the municipal limits, they were "imported" within those limits, and were, therefore, liable to pay the duty.

Against this order the accused applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction to set aside the Magistrate's order.

[844] Trimbak R. Kotwal, for the accused.
M. V. Bhat, for the municipality.
Rao Bahadur Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—We must give the word "imported", in the rules of the Thana Municipality, its ordinary meaning. As soon, therefore, as the goods in the present case passed within the limits of the municipality, they were imported, that is, brought within those limits from a place without its boundaries. The only remedy of the applicant, if he exports them, whether that is done on the same day or at some other more distant time, is to claim a refund of the duty paid. We reject the application.

Application rejected.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

IN RE DEVIDIN DURGAPRASAD.* [15th July, 1897.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 517 and 523—Disposal of property produced before a Court during an inquiry—Restoration of previous possession if no offence is committed.

Section 517 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) is the only section under which a Court can make an order for the disposal of property produced before it in the course of an inquiry or trial. And it has jurisdiction to pass the order only if the case falls within the section, that is, if it is property "regarding which an offence appears to have been committed, or which has been used for the commission of an offence." Otherwise, the only legal order which the Court can pass is one restoring the previous possession.

A Presidency Magistrate, finding the evidence not sufficient to warrant a conviction, discharged the accused but ordered the property which had been produced during the inquiry to be detained until the title of the rightful owner was proved before a Civil Court. On a subsequent day he, apparently acting under s. 523 of the Code, ordered the property to be delivered to the complainant, from whose possession it had not been taken.

Held, that both the orders were ultra vires. The Magistrate was, therefore, directed to dispose of the property in a legal manner. If he found that the case fell within s. 517, he should pass such order as he thought fit; if he found that it did not, he must restore the previous possession.

1006 ; 39 M. 375 (376) = 4 Cr. L. J. 233 ; 14 C. P. L. R. 60 (61).]

[845] APPLICATION under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

* Criminal Revision No. 137 of 1897.
The accused was charged under ss. 381 and 411 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) with dishonestly receiving and retaining stolen property consisting of twenty-one currency notes of the collective value of Rs. 275 belonging to the complainant, Motichand Harakhchand.

The accused was arrested by the police and the money was found in his possession. The police produced the money before the Third Presidency Magistrate (Mr. Webb) in the course of the inquiry.

The Magistrate found that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, and discharged the accused. At the same time, he made an order for the disposal of the property produced before the Court, in the following terms:—

"From the statement made by the accused it appears that the money found is not his, and it must be detained until the title of the rightful owner is proved before a Civil Court."

This order was made on the 15th March, 1897.

The accused applied to the Magistrate to have the money returned to him, as it belonged to his master.

The Magistrate issued notice to the complainant, and after hearing both parties passed the following order on the 11th May, 1897:—

"On hearing advocates for the opponent herein, and on reading the statement of applicant Devidin Durgaprasad that the moneys were his master’s and not his, and hearing in view the decision in the case of Queen-Empress v. Joti (1), the order of the Court is that the money, the subject of the notice, be delivered to the opponent, Motichand Harakhchand."

Against this order the accused applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

The applicant appeared in person.

M. V. Bhat, for the complainant.

JUDGMENT.

PER CURIAM.—We do not know under what section of the Code the Presidency Magistrate purported to act when he ordered the property to be delivered to Motichand Harakhchand. He [846] cites Queen-Empress v. Joti (1), so that apparently he considered he was acting under s. 523. But the property in the present case had been produced before his Court in an inquiry, so that s. 517 is the only section that would apply; see In re Ratnalal Rangidas (2). He had, therefore, jurisdiction only in case he found that it was property "regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which has been used for the commission of an offence." Whether he so found or not, is not stated in his order disposing of the case. He discharged the accused, because the evidence was not sufficient to warrant a conviction. At that time (15th March, 1897) he ordered the property to be detained until the title of the rightful owner was proved before a Civil Court. It was in modification of that order that he on the 11th May, 1897, ordered the delivery of the property to Motichand Harakhchand. Both orders appear to us to be made without jurisdiction, and we reverse them, and we direct that he dispose of the property in a legal manner after giving the parties notice. If he finds that the case comes within s. 517, then he can make such order as he thinks fit; if he finds that it does not, then the only legal order he can pass is to restore the previous possession.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Chunilal (Original Defendant), Appellant v. Bai Jethi (Original Plaintiff), Respondent. [2nd August, 1897.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 132—Unpaid purchase-money—Suit to recover the money from the vendee personally and from the property sold—Personal remedy—Limitation.

Unpaid purchase-money is a charge on the property in the possession of the vendee, and a suit to enforce it against the property so charged falls under art. 132 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). But the article does not extend the time allowed otherwise under the Act to claims to recover the money from the defaulter personally or his other property. The limitation for the personal remedy is three years under art. 111.

Virchand v. Kumaji (1) and Ram Din v. Kalka (2) followed.

[F., 21 A. 154 (456); 9 O.C. 284; R., 2 A.L.J. 379=A.W.N. (1905) 144; 3 N.L.R. 81.]

Second appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

In 1890 the plaintiff’s father sold the land in dispute to the defendant for Rs. 283, and the defendant was put into possession. He did not, however, pay the purchase-money, but he signed a khata in the vendor’s books for the price.

In 1895 the plaintiff brought this suit for the purchase-money claiming to recover it from the defendant personally as well as from the property sold.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff had a lien on the land for the amount claimed, and that she could enforce her claim from within twelve years from the sale. It, therefore, passed a decree for Rs. 283 together with interest, and, in default of payment within two months, plaintiff was to recover the amount by sale of the land.

This decree was varied, in appeal, by the District Judge, who held that the defendant was also personally liable to pay the purchase-money. He, therefore, passed a decree for the amount claimed both against the defendant personally and against the property sold.

Against this decision the defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

R. V. Desai, for the appellant.—The decree passed by the lower appellate Court against the defendant personally is bad in law. Article 132 of the Limitation Act applies only to suits brought to recover money charged upon immovable property out of the property so charged—Ram Din v. Kalka Persad (2). Unpaid purchase-money is a charge on the property sold, and a suit to recover the money from the property falls under art. 132—Virchand v. Kumaji (1). But a suit to recover the money

* Second Appeal No. 286 of 1897.

(1) 18 B. 48.
(2) 7 A. 602—12 I.A. 12.
from the vendee personally does not fall under this article. [846] The limitation for such a suit is three years—Dulanbi v. Sakharam (1) and Gangabai v. Venkaji (2). The plaintiff’s claim to a personal decree against the defendant is, therefore, barred by limitation. Strictly speaking, the article which governs the present suit is art. 111 of the Limitation Act. Under that article the suit is wholly barred. The plaintiff has now lost her right to proceed either against the vendee personally or against the property in his possession. As the suit is brought more than three years after the completion of the sale, the suit should, therefore, be dismissed.

G. M. Tripathi, for the respondent.—It is not open to the appellant to object to the decree so far as it allows the plaintiff to recover the money from the property itself. Against this part of the decree the defendant did not appeal in the Court below, and he cannot raise this objection in second appeal. As regards the personal remedy, none of the cases cited expressly rule that it is barred in a case like this. Article 132 of the Limitation Act applies. The remarks of the Privy Council in Ram Din’s case (3) as to the three years’ limitation are obiter dicta. Under art. 111, limitation runs from the date of the completion of the sale. The sale here is not yet completed; the property is not yet transferred to the vendee in the Government records. The personal claim is, therefore, within time.

JUDGMENT.

Parsons, J.—The District Judge in this case gave a decree for the recovery of the money sued for by the sale of the property sold, and in case that proved insufficient, from the defendant personally. It is objected that the latter part of the decree is bad, since the personal remedy is time-barred.

The facts are these. In 1890 the plaintiff’s father conveyed the land to the defendant by a parol sale for Rs. 283. The defendant was placed in possession of the land. No money was paid, but the defendant signed a khata in the plaintiff’s father’s books for the 283 rupees. It is this sum of Rs. 283 with interest that the plaintiff has sought to recover in this suit, which was filed in 1895.

Unpaid purchase-money is a charge on the property in the possession of the vendee, and a suit to enforce it falls under [849] art. 132 of the Limitation Act, 1877. See Virchand v. Kumaji (4). But as ruled by the Privy Council in the case of Ram Din v. Kalka Pershad (3), art. 132 applies only to suits brought for money charged upon immovable property for the purpose of recovering it out of the property so charged. It does not extend the time allowed otherwise under the Act to claims to recover the money from the defaulter personally or his other property. We must, therefore, see whether under art. 111, which is relied on as being the most favourable other article that can possibly apply to the case, the personal claim for the plaintiff is within time. We must hold that it is not, because there can be no doubt that the sale was completed and the title accepted when the defendant was placed in possession of the land. The fact that there has been as yet no mutation of names in the Revenue records, does not show the contrary. Both the lower Courts find that the defendant has been in the enjoyment of the land ever since 1890. There was even a suit in 1891 brought by the plaintiff’s father against the defendant in which the former tried to get back the land on the plea that it had been only let to the defendant, but the suit failed, as the latter successfully pleaded the sale and his possession.

We vary the decree of the lower appellate Court by striking out so much of it as allows the plaintiff to recover anything from the defendant personally, and we order the respondent to bear the costs of the appeals in this and the lower appellate Court.

Decree varied.

APPELATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

BAI FUL (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. DESAI MANORHAI BHAVANIDAS (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [10th August, 1897.]

[Pauper—Pauper appeal—Application for leave to appeal as a pauper—Such application rejected—Limitation for subsequent appeal—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 5 and sch. II, arts. 152 and 170—Sufficient cause for delay—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 400, 410, 413, 582-A and 592.]

[590] A plaintiff whose suit had been dismissed, presented an unstamped memorandum of appeal and with it a petition for leave to appeal as a pauper. Inquiry as to pauperism was directed, and in the result the leave to appeal as a pauper was refused, but the Judge gave leave to amend the memorandum of appeal by stating the claim at a lower valuation, thus reducing the amount of stamp fee required, and a week's time was granted to the appellant to pay the fee. The fee was duly paid, and the appeal was accepted, but when it came on for hearing it was dismissed as barred by limitation. On second appeal to the High Court, Held, reversing the decree and remanding the case that the appeal was not barred by limitation.

BY FARRAN, C.J., on the following grounds:—In the case of appeals, s. 592 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) requires two separate documents to be presented,—a memorandum of appeal and an application for leave to appeal as a pauper. When the Judge disposes of the pauper application he does not thereby necessarily dispose of the appeal. He may still treat it as an existing appeal if the appellant desires to continue it. The rule in s. 413 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot apply to appeals; for, in view of the fact that the Limitation Act (XV of 1877, arts. 152 and 170) prescribes the same time for filing an appeal and for applying for leave to appeal as a pauper, the practical result would be that in every case where an application for leave to appeal as a pauper is refused, the appeal if then presented would be time-barred. These considerations must have been in the mind of the Legislature when it enacted the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, as the Limitation Act was then in existence. The District Judge was, therefore, under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal when he refused the appellant leave to appeal as a pauper, and that he did not do so was clear from the fact that he allowed the memorandum of appeal to be amended.

Section 592-A of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) indicates the will of the Legislature that appeals shall not be rejected on the ground that they are not being sufficiently stamped if such insufficient stamping arose from the appellant's mistake. In analogy thereto I think that the District Judge was acting within his powers when he allowed the appellant to stamp the memorandum of appeal.

BY CANDY, J., on the ground that under the circumstances there was sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the proper time, and that the delay might be excused under s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

* Second Appeal No. 816 of 1896.
SECOND appeal from the decision of E. H. Leggatt, Assistant Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Rao Sabeb Mahadev Shridhar, Subordinate Judge of Nadiad.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for an account of his dealings as her agent, valuing her claim at Rs. 230. [851] The defendant denied that he was plaintiff's agent, or that he had ever managed her property.

The suit was dismissed on the 19th April, 1894. On the 1st June following the plaintiff presented an unstamped memorandum of appeal to the District Judge and along with it a petition for leave to appeal in forma pauperis. The petition was held to be in time, as the vacation had intervened.

In the appeal the plaintiff valued her claim at Rs. 2,500, and not at Rs. 230 as in the original suit, and the stamp fee in the appeal was considerable.

The District Judge directed an inquiry as to the plaintiff's pauperism. The inquiry occupied a considerable time and the result of the inquiry was to show that the appellant could pay the stamp fee, on a valuation of Rs. 230, but not on that of Rs. 2,500.

On the 20th December, 1894, the District Judge, expressing an opinion that the appeal could be made with advantage on the lower valuation, refused the petition to appeal as a pauper, but made the costs of the application costs in the appeal.

The appellant applied for leave to amend her memorandum of appeal by reducing the valuation to Rs. 230, and a week's further time to pay the court-fee on that amount and stamp the memorandum of appeal. This was granted on the 4th January, 1895.

On the 7th January, 1895, she paid the fee; her memorandum of appeal was stamped, and was then accepted by the District Judge.

The appeal afterwards came on for hearing before the Assistant Judge, who dismissed it as barred by limitation. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"The defendant takes two preliminary objections to this appeal: the first is that the plaintiff, who made an application to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis in that application, estimated the relief sought at Rs. 2,500, though the valuation in the original suit was only Rs. 230. The plaintiff's application was rejected, and she thereupon instituted the appeal, valuing her claim at Rs. 230. The defendant urges that having once valued her claim at Rs. 2,500, she cannot now be allowed to reduce her valuation to Rs. 230 in order to avoid paying the necessary court-fees. This question has, however, been already decided by the District Court, and I see no reason to re-open it. The District Court suggested [852] that the plaintiff should reduce her valuation, and the plaintiff having acted on that valuation I cannot now interfere.

"The other objection taken to the appeal by the defendant is that the appeal is time-barred. The application to be allowed to appeal in forma pauperis was made within thirty days of the date of decision in the original suit which was decided on 19th April, 1894. That application was rejected on 20th December, 1894, and the District Judge in an order dated 4th January, 1895, allowed the plaintiff eight days within which to produce the necessary stamp, and the appeal was filed on 7th January, 1895.

"The defendant refers to I. L. R., 20 Bom., p. 508, where it is most clearly laid down that 'the plaintiff's application to sue as a pauper having been disposed of, there was no proceeding pending which could be continued and kept alive by the payment of court-fees. On the rejection of an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the only course open to the applicant is to institute a suit, and the date of the institution of that suit for the purposes of limitation is the actual date thereof. The plaintiff could not then be regarded as a pauper, and s. 4 of the Limitation Act would have no application.

"The plaintiff contends that she had sufficient cause for not instituting the appeal within the prescribed period, and that, therefore, the appeal is admissible under s. 5 of the Limitation Act. She also contends that the District Court having allowed time for the production of the stamp, and the appeal having been admitted, the appeal ought to be considered within time. The case referred to covers the first objection; for the fact that the application for leave to sue as a pauper was rejected, shows that there was no sufficient cause. Moreover a time-barred appeal should be dismissed even though admitted—Illustration (b) of s. 4 of the Limitation Act. I think I am bound, by the ruling cited, to hold the appeal time-barred."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Gokuldas K. Parekh, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The appeal was not barred. It was filed on the day on which the petition to appeal as a pauper was presented. The delay was caused by the order of the Court. Skinner v. Orde (1) applies. Keshav v. Krishnarao (2) is inconsistent with that case. It, however, relates to a suit, not to an appeal.

K. N. Ghodi, for the respondent (defendant).—When the Judge rejected the petition to sue as pauper, there was no proceeding before the Court. The appeal was, therefore, barred. There is no distinction between a suit and an appeal. The order allowing further time for paying the Court-fee was ultra vires. The following (383) cases were referred to:—Ram Sahai v. Maniram (3); Ramey v. Broughton (4); Venkatarayudu v. Nagudu (5); Bechi v. Ashanullah Khan (6); Moshuillah v. Ahmedullah (7); Husaini Begam v. The Collector of Muzzafarnagar (8).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The practice of the High Court on its Original Side is that when a party within the proper time presents an appeal and petition to be allowed to appeal as a pauper, the Court receives them and upon a perusal of the record determines under s. 592 of the Civil Procedure Code, whether it sees reason to think that the decree appealed against is contrary to law or to usage having the force of law, or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. This necessarily takes often a longer time than the twenty days allowed for an appeal from a High Court decree (Limitation Act, 1877, art. 151). If in such cases, as often occurs, the view of the High Court is unfavourable to the appellant, the Court directs the pauper, if he still desires to appeal, to pay the usual stamp fee either forthwith or, if the appellant applies for time, within some reasonable period, and, if the fee is paid in accordance with the order, treats the appeal as having been presented in time.

The above practice has been judicially approved on at least three occasions. In suit No. 2 of 1892, the late Chief Justice Sir Charles Sargent relying on Skinner v. Orías ruled that an appeal was presented in time in a case where a decree was pronounced on the 11th July, 1893, an application to appeal as a pauper was presented with a memorandum of appeal on the 3rd August (a considerable time having been occupied in drawing up the decree), the application was finally rejected on the 18th December following, and the appeal stamp duty was paid on the next day. A similar ruling was made in suit No. 251 of 1896, Tullockhand v. Gokulbhoy (1), and in suit No. 423 of 1895, Junnabai v. Vissondas (2) where after the rejection of the pauper application, the appeal was allowed to be proceeded with in regular course, after the time for appealing had elapsed if the appeal [854] had been treated as being presented on being stamped when the pauper application was rejected. The memorandum of appeal in the former of these cases had, however, been stamped when presented with the application to appeal as a pauper with the usual stamp fee of Rs. 2.

This is the course of practice which the District Judge at Ahmedabad followed in the present instance in accepting the appeal. On the 19th April 1894, the plaintiff’s suit was dismissed. On the 1st June following, the plaintiff presented a memorandum of appeal unstamped, and an application to be allowed to appeal in forma pauperis. This application, on account of the intervention of vacation, was in time. The suit was for an account. The plaintiff in the original Court had valued her claim at Rs. 230. In appeal she valued it at Rs. 2,500. It must be presumed that the District Judge did not see reason to reject the application under s. 592, as he directed the Subordinate Judge to inquire into the pauperism of the appellant. The result of this inquiry, which occupied a considerable time, appears to have been that it was shown that the appellant could pay the stamp fee on Rs. 230, but not on Rs. 2,500. The District Judge on the 20th December, 1894, having expressed his conclusion to that effect and his opinion that the appeal could be prosecuted with advantage on the lower valuation (it being a suit for an account) refused the appellant’s application to appeal as a pauper, but made the costs of the application costs in the appeal.

The appellant thereupon applied for leave to amend her memorandum of appeal by reducing the valuation to Rs. 230 and for time to pay the court fee. This application was disallowed on the 4th January, 1895, when the appellant was allowed a week’s time to stamp the appeal. This she did on the 7th January and her appeal was then accepted. The District Judge did not record whether the appeal was admitted under s. 5 of the Limitation Act on his being satisfied that the plaintiff had sufficient cause for not presenting it within the period of limitation prescribed therefor, or whether he treated the appeal as having been presented within time though unstamped (when he permitted it to be stamped) as if it had been stamped when originally presented.

[855] The Assistant Judge when the appeal came on for hearing dismissed it as time-barred. He relied upon the decision in Keshav v. Krishnarao as governing the case.

In my opinion the above stated practice of the High Court and the action of the District Judge of Ahmedabad in the present case are not inconsistent with any of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and are strictly analogous to the procedure laid down in the amending s. 582-A of that enactment. This view is, I think, supported by the ruling of the

---

(2) 21 B. 578.
Madras High Court in Patcha Sakeb v. Sub-Collector of North Arcot (1), which was based upon the principle of Skinner v. Orde (2). This principle was also applied in Moti Sahu v. Chhatari Das (3).

In dealing with this question, I exclude from consideration the case of an unstamped memorandum of appeal and petition to appeal in forma pauperis fraudulently presented and prosecuted. That gives rise to different considerations. They have no application here. The District Judge did not consider the action of the plaintiff fraudulent, else he would not have given her time to pay the stamp fee.

Now the first point to consider is—Did the memorandum of appeal cease to be a memorandum of appeal when the application to appeal as a pauper was refused? When presented, the application and the memorandum of appeal were two separate documents and in this respect they differ from a petition to sue as a pauper which includes both the plaint, the allegations as to pauperism and the prayer to sue in forma pauperis. In the case of a petition to sue as a pauper, this Court has held that when the pauper petition is rejected under s. 409, the proceedings are at an end and the Judge has no power to allow the petition to be stamped as a plaint, s. 413 providing the only course open to the applicant, viz., to institute a suit in the ordinary manner. In proceedings under s. 592, when the Judge refuses leave to appeal as a pauper, he effectually deals with the pauper application, but does he necessarily thereby deal with the memorandum of appeal which accompanied it? I think not. [856] The section does not say so. In my opinion the rule laid down in the second division of s. 413 is not, by reason of the dissimilarity of the proceedings and for another reason which I shall hereafter refer to, a rule applicable to pauper appeals, and the Judge has, I think, also the memorandum of appeal to deal with when he refuses the application for leave to appeal as a pauper. I see nothing in the Code to prevent his treating it as still a memorandum of appeal if the appellants on being refused leave to appeal as a pauper desires with the aid of borrowed funds or the assistance of friends to continue the appeal. An unstamped memorandum of appeal is not a nullity—Patcha Sakeb v. Sub-Collector of Arcot (supra); Skinner v. Orde (supra).

If s. 413 as interpreted in Kesavan v. Krishnarao (supra) applied to the memorandum of appeal which accompanies an application to appeal as a pauper, the result would be that in every case where such an application is made the appeal would be time-barred when the application is refused. A pauper appellant is allowed thirty days to file his application (Limitation Act, art. 170). The same time is allowed for an appeal (art. 152). If the pauper presents his petition in the time allowed for his doing so, and it is subsequently refused, he cannot appeal. His appeal is time-barred. The liberty reserved to him by s. 413 to file an appeal in the ordinary manner is an unmeaning expression—an idle form of words. Even if he does not avail himself of the full time which the law allows him, the same result follows in almost all cases. It is practically impossible for a Court to deal with a pauper application, except under the proviso to s. 592, within such a period as, in the event of its being dismissed, will leave to the pauper the opportunity of presenting a fresh memorandum of appeal within the thirty days to which the Legislature limits him. "If the statute compels such result, we must" not shrink from construing it correctly, because this construction would... lead to injustice. But if, without violating any legal principle, this can be avoided, I think it ought to be done."

The above are the words of Lord Herschell in Welton v. Saffery (1). The Limitation Act of 1877 was in force when the Code of 1882 was enacted, and these considerations must, I think, have been presented to the mind of the Legislature when they enacted s. 592, else why should they have provided for the presenting of two separate documents, and not one as in the case of a petition to sue as a pauper? The result is that, in my opinion, the District Judge was under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal presented by the appellant in this case when he refused leave to the appellant to appeal as a pauper. That he did not do so, is clear from his making the costs of the pauper inquiry costs in the appeal and subsequently making an order allowing the memorandum of appeal to be amended.

The new s. 582-A of the Civil Procedure Code, which is an enabling section passed to obviate the consequences of certain High Court rulings of great strictness, is not applicable to pauper appeals, but it is indicative of the will of the Legislature that appeals shall not be rejected on the ground of their not being sufficiently stamped if such insufficiency arises from mistake on the part of the appellant. In analogy thereto I think that the District Judge was acting within his powers when he allowed the appellant in the present case to stamp her memorandum of appeal. I rely upon Skinner v. Orde in support of that opinion. I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment of my learned colleague, who does not take the same view of the question as I do. With reference to it, I would only say that, in my opinion, s. 28 of the Court Fees' Act has no application in the case of a pauper appeal.

If I am in error in the view which I have taken of the law upon this point, the same result would be arrived at by considering the presentation in good faith of an application to appeal as a pauper as in general sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal in time. In that case I should refer the order of the District Judge of Ahmedabad to the provision of the law contained in s. 5 of the Limitation Act, and though he has not so expressed himself, treat him as having admitted the appeal after time upon the above ground.

I am unable to agree with the view of the Assistant Judge that the pending of a pauper application, if it is dismissed, cannot be treated, in law, as sufficient cause for not presenting a regular appeal in time, and I should allow the appeal on that ground. I prefer, however, to base my judgment on the more general grounds above indicated.

I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal for a hearing on the merits. Costs, costs in the cause.

CANDY, J.—I am not conversant with the practice of the appeal Court on the Original Side of this Court; and I do not know the reasons which governed the rulings referred to by the learned Chief Justice. But, as regards the Mofussil, on the facts of the present case, it should, I think, be taken that the District Judge, Ahmedabad, excused the delay caused by the inquiry into the pauper application, and so allowed the appeal to be filed on 7th January, 1895. That, in my opinion, was the only course open to him. Section 582-A, which was introduced into the Civil Procedure Code by Act VI of 1892, applies to memoranda of appeals or applications for review in which the insufficiency of the necessary stamp was caused by a mistake on the part of the appellant or applicant as to the amount of the requisite stamp. It is hardly possible to make these words applicable to the case of an appellant who asks to be allowed to appeal as a pauper, and, therefore, presents an application to that effect accompanied by a memorandum of appeal which bears no stamp. There is no mistake as to the amount of the requisite stamp: there is no insufficiency of stamp: there is no stamp at all. It would have been very easy for the Legislature when enacting s. 582-A to have widened its provisions so as to embrace a case such as that now before us. It did not do so, and I doubt whether we should be justified in assuming that there may be a procedure in analogy with the section. By s. 593 the rules in Chap. XXVI are to be applied to pauper appellants "in so far as those rules are applicable." That is the chapter which relates to "suits by paupers." Section 410 is applied as far as it is applicable. Thus, if the application is granted, the memorandum of appeal which accompanied the application is numbered and registered, and is deemed the appeal in the suit. Section 413 should be similarly applied. If the application is rejected, the applicant shall be at liberty to file an appeal in the ordinary manner. There is possibly no objection to the memorandum of appeal, which accompanied his application, being returned to him so that it may be used as the memorandum of appeal "instituted in the ordinary manner," that is, with the necessary court-fee attached, but I can find no rule in the Civil Procedure Code providing that if this is done, then the appeal shall be deemed to have been instituted on the day when the application to appeal as a pauper was presented.

(1) (1897) A. C. 399 (318).

In the present case, the procedure was quite outside any section of the Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge on 20th December, 1894, delivered his written order rejecting the application to be allowed to appeal as a pauper. Then the pleader of the would-be appellant put in an application to be allowed to amend his memorandum of appeal. There was no authority for such an application to be received. No permission of the Court was necessary. The would-be appellant was at liberty to institute an appeal in the ordinary manner, and after the expression of opinion from the District Judge that Rs. 250 would be the right valuation of such an appeal, there could be no mistake about the requisite court fee. But, as I said above, I think we may, without distorting the facts, take it that in effect the District Judge excused the delay, and so allowed the appeal to be instituted beyond time.

The case of Patcha Saheb v. Sub-Collector of North Arcot (1) was not one in which the appellant had tried to appeal as a pauper. The facts were that the appeal memorandum was presented unstamped within the period of limitation to the Sheristadar of the Court on the 11th June, the Court then being in recess. A note was made on the appeal memorandum that the stamp could not be procured and would be filed on the next Court-day. This was not done, and no reason for the default appears in the report of the case. The stamp was ultimately affixed on 25th June, when the appeal was admittedly barred by limitation. The High Court said: "Following the principle laid down in Skinner v. Orde (2) we must hold that the petition must be regarded as an appeal from the date on which it was presented, and not from the date on which the stamp was received."

With the utmost respect I am quite unable to follow that decision. The principle laid down in Skinner v. Orde was that the plaintiff was a pauper when his petition to sue as a pauper was filed. Pending the proceedings to enquire into his pauperism, and before any order was passed thereon, he raised the necessary funds and paid the court-fee. This was a case not provided for in terms by the Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), and the Judicial Committee thought that in the absence of fraud it approached more nearly to the state of things contemplated by s. 308, which provided what should happen if the prayer of the petition was granted, than that by s. 310, which provided what should be the effect of the rejection of the petition. But in the Madras case there was simply an unstamped memorandum of appeal, an unexplained default in filing the necessary stamp on the next Court-day. If the decision of the Mairas High Court is correct, then all that a would-be appellant need do is to file within the period of limitation an unstamped memorandum of appeal, and pay the requisite fee at any time afterwards, and then he can claim that the appeal was duly presented. This would be directly contrary to s. 28, cl. (1), of the Court Fees' Act, and would not be covered by cl. (2), for it could not be said that the memorandum of appeal was through mistake or inadvertence received, filed or used in the Court or office without being properly stamped.

I do not think that the fact that when a would-be appellant presents an application for leave to appeal as a pauper he presents with it a separate memorandum of appeal (whereas a would-be plaintiff asking for leave to sue as a pauper writes his application and plaint all in one), makes any difference. If the Legislature intended that on the Court refusing to allow the would-be appellant to appeal as a pauper, the Court must dispose of the memorandum of appeal, which had been filed with the application, then nothing would have been easier than to enact provisions to that effect. No doubt the short period of limitation given for filing an appeal in a District Court must in most cases make an appeal time-barred if the application to be allowed to appeal as a pauper is refused. This difficulty would hardly arise in the case of suits for which the period of limitation is longer. But then it must be remembered that s. 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply to plaints, whereas it does to appeals.

Possibly the position taken by the Assistant Judge is strictly logical, when he says that the fact that the application for leave to sue (he meant appeal) as a pauper was rejected shows that there was not sufficient cause to excuse delay. But, in my opinion, it might work injustice to draw such a hard and fast line. In the present case, in the absence of fraud, there was, I think, sufficient cause, for delay. The District Judge who inquired into the pauper petition evidently did not think that plaintiff had been acting in bad faith in at first valuing her appeal at Rs. 2,500.
I think, therefore, that we should uphold his action. No doubt the Assistant Judge in hearing the appeal was at liberty to review the question as to the admissibility of the appeal—Munna v. Krishnaji(1), and similarly in second appeal we are at liberty to review his decision, holding that there was not sufficient excuse for delay.

I concur in reversing the decree of the District Court and remanding the appeal to be heard on the merits, costs being costs in the cause.

1 Decree reversed and case remanded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, K.t., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

HARIKrHAI MANEKLAL (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. SHARAF ALI ISAJI (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [11th August, 1897.]

Restraint of trade—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 27—Agreement to share profits of trade—Parties—Practitioner.

Four persons, each of whom owned a ginning factory, entered into an agreement, which (inter alia) provided that they should charge a uniform rate of Rs. 4-8-0 per palla for ginning cotton; that of this sum, Rs. 2-8-0 should be treated as the [862] actual cost of ginning and that the remaining Rs. 2 should be carried to a common fund to be divided each year between the parties to the agreement in proportion to the number of ginning machines which each of them possessed. The agreement was to be in force for four years. The other parties had carried out the agreement, but the defendant, although he had carried the Rs. 2 to a separate account, refused to pay the plaintiff his share of the amount. He also refused to pay the other two parties their shares. The accounts had been duly made up, showing the sums which the defendant under the agreement had to pay both to the plaintiffs and the two other parties to the agreement. The plaintiff sued the defendant for his share. The defendant contended that the agreement was in restraint of trade and was, therefore, not enforceable, and that the plaintiff ought to have made the other parties to the agreement parties to the suit.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his share from the defendant. The only agreement sought to be enforced in this suit was the agreement to divide the profits. That was a lawful agreement founded upon consideration (viz., the mutual agreement to share each other's profits) and might be enforced.

Held, also, that the other parties to the agreement were not necessary parties to the suit. The accounts had been made up and were admittedly correct, and it showed that the defendant had nothing to receive from any of the parties to the agreement, but that he was indebted in a definite sum to the plaintiff.

Per FARRAN, C.J.—"I am inclined to agree with the lower appellate Court that the stipulation that the parties to the agreement are bound to charge at the rate of Rs. 4 8-0 per palla for ginning cotton, is a stipulation in restraint of trade."

Per CANDY, J.—"I am not satisfied that the agreement in question was, as a fact, in restraint of trade—and further, to accurately quote the words of s. 27 of the Contract Act, I am not satisfied that it was an agreement by which any one was restrained from exercising a lawful trade."

[867] Second appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia, with appellate powers, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb R. V. Patki, Subordinate Judge of Nandurbar. Suit to recover Rs. 2,351 from the defendant as the plaintiff's share of profits under an agreement.

The plaintiff alleged that on the 6th September, 1891, he and the defendant and two other persons, each of whom owned a ginning factory, entered into a written agreement which provided (inter alia) that each should work his factory at his own cost, that they should all charge a uniform rate of Rs. 4-8-0 per palla for ginning cotton (such rate to be liable to alteration by mutual agreement); that Rs. 2-8-0 of that sum should be retained by each as expenses, and that the rest should be carried to a common fund to be divided each year among the parties to the agreement in proportion to the number of ginning machines which each of them possessed. The agreement was to last for four years, and the accounts were to be settled every year.

The plaintiff complained that the accounts had been made up according to the agreement, but the defendant refused to pay him his share.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the agreement was opposed to public policy as being in restraint of trade, and that the plaintiff ought to have sued for an account, making all the other parties to the agreement parties to the suit. He also contended that the contract was without consideration.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the agreement was without consideration.

On appeal, the Judge confirmed the decree on the ground that the agreement was in restraint of trade.

The terms of the agreement, as stated by the Judge, were follows:—

"The agreement provided that the executants thereof should work their respective factories at their own respective cost; that they should charge traders of cotton at Rs. 4-8-0 per palla of cotton to be ginned; that of the said Rs. 4-8-0 the owner of the factory should deduct Rs. 2-8-0 on account of the expenses of working the factory and should credit the remaining Rs. 2 as profits to be divided among the four executants in proportion to the number of gins which each of them had; that none of them was at liberty to reduce or increase the said rate of Rs. 4-8-0 without the consent of all; that none of them was at liberty to increase the number of gins, and if any one of them was desirous, he could increase only four gins with an additional boiler; that if any one of them gave sukhdi or dalali to any trader, he was to be liable to a fine of Rs. 2,551; that regular accounts were to be kept; that the accounts should be settled and the profits divided in Jesht every year; and that the agreement was to continue in force for four years; that, in case of any dispute arising, the parties should first resort to arbitration, and if that failed, then to Court."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Macpherson with Ganesh K. Deshmukh, appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—The suit is for specific performance of the [864] agreement and also to recover an ascertained sum due to us by the defendant. The figures and account were stated in the plaint and they were admitted by the defendant to be correct. The question is, whether, by the provisions of the agreement in dispute, any one was restrained from exercising his trade within the terms of s. 27 of the Contract Act. The section has no application. It applies only when any one is restrained from carrying on his trade. In the present case there was, no doubt, an arrangement that a fixed price should be charged and a fixed rate should be deducted from it for expenses. It was a legal stipulation according to which the parties agreed to carry on their business. It did not prevent them from carrying on their trade. There was no restraint on the trade, but only an imposition of certain conditions by agreement of parties—Mogul Steam Ship Company v. McGregor(1). The Tendancy of modern decisions is to amplify the contracting powers of parties. Supposing that the agreement was in restraint of trade, still as a certain part of the agreement was performed by us, we are entitled to relief, at least to that extent. Our claim for money is distinct and separable from a suit to enforce the agreement.

---

(1) 21 Q. B. D. 544.
We claimed relief with respect to that part of the contract which was actually performed.

Lance (Advocate General) with Purushottam P. Khare, appeared for the respondent (defendant).—The suit, as framed, is not maintainable even if the contract is valid. The plaintiff alone is not entitled to sue. He must join the other parties to the agreement. The defendant, cannot make any payment to the plaintiff until the accounts are adjusted in a suit to which all the contracting persons are parties. The agreement restrained the defendant from carrying on its full extent his business of ginning cotton. Partial restraint of trade is not illegal according to English law, but it is illegal according to Indian law. The agreement operated unfairly towards the public and stopped the defendant’s trade to a certain extent. It is, therefore, void. Section 27 of the Contract Act makes no distinction between total and partial restraints of trade. It applies to both equally.

JUDGMENT.

[865] FARRAN, C.J.—The terms of the agreement sued on in this suit are set out in the judgment of the lower appellate Court. It was entered into by the owners of four ginning factories, and provided that the executed should work their respective factories at their own respective costs; that they should charge an uniform rate of Rs. 4-8-0 per palla of cotton to be ginned (but the rate was liable to be altered by mutual agreement), and that they should treat Rs. 2 8 of that sum as the actual cost of ginning, and that the remaining Rs. 2 should be carried to a common fund which was to be divided each year between the firms, the parties to the agreement, in the month of June in proportion to the number of gins which each of them possessed. There were other minor stipulations which were not referred to in argument and which I need not consider in detail. The agreement was to continue in force for four years.

The parties to the agreement appear to have all observed and carried out its working terms. Most of the parties to it have divided the Rs. 2 set aside for division in pursuance of the provisions to that effect. The defendant alone, though he also has carried the Rs. 2 to a separate account, refuses to pay to the plaintiff his share of the amount. There are also two other gin-owners parties to the agreement, whose shares also in the defendant’s separate account he refuses to pay. The accounts have all been made up showing the amounts which the defendant under the agreement has to pay to the plaintiff and to each of the other two gin-owners. The plaintiff has sued to recover his share. The lower appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff’s claim is not recoverable at law. Hence this appeal.

I am inclined to agree with the lower appellate Court that the stipulation that the parties to the agreement are bound to charge at the rate of Rs. 4-8 per palla for ginning cotton is a stipulation in restraint of trade. Agreements of this description whereby traders agree amongst themselves to sell their wares at a fixed price, or labourers so agree to labour only at a stipulated wage, or whereby manufacturers agree with one another to carry on their works under special conditions, have in the English Courts [866] usually been treated as agreements in restraint of trade, but have in some instances been upheld and in some instances been ruled void according as the restraints in such agreements were or were not deemed to be only sufficient to protect the interests of the parties entering into them. An early instance of a case in which such an agreement was held by a majority of the Court to be void will be found in Hilton v. Eckersley (1). A late instance, where some of the stipulations in such an agreement were held valid and some void, is that of Collins v. Locke (2). These were agreements in partial restraint of trade which are in many instances recognized as valid by English law.

The Contract Act, s. 27, as hitherto interpreted by the Courts in India, appears to render void contracts in restraint of trade which do not fall within the exceptions to the general rule laid down in the section to the extent to which they are in restraint of trade—Madhub Chunder v. Rajcomoor Doss (3); Nur Ali Dubash v. Abdul Ali (4); Muckenzie v. Striromiah (5), where other Indian cases are cited.

The balance of these Indian authorities appears to support the Subordinate Judge (First Class) in his view that the covenant of the signatories to the agreement to gin cotton only if the cotton merchant offering it agrees to pay Rs. 4-8 for ginning, is a void covenant. I use the expression "appears," because I have not critically examined each case. That is the effect which a perusal of them collectively has left upon my mind. When it becomes necessary actually to decide the point it will be necessary to consider them minutely as well as the exact language of s. 27. There are other minor covenants contained in the agreement which stand upon the same footing.

This conclusion, if it is correct, is not, however, by any means, decisive of the present case. Covenants of this class, though they may be void and unenforceable, are certainly not illegal in the sense of being contrary to law. That is laid down by almost all the Law Lords who gave judgments in the case of Mogul Steam Ship Co. v. McGregor (6). It is the basis of the decision in [867] that case. Here the four firms in question have agreed to divide what may be called, though not with strict accuracy, the profits of their respective ginning factories amongst themselves in certain proportions, the consideration for each for the contracting parties doing so being the promise of the other contracting parties to do the same by him. This is of itself a perfectly valid contract. The consideration for the promise is not, I think, the mutual covenant to charge an uniform rate of Rs. 4 8 per palla for ginning, although that rate is the main ingredient in arriving at the amount which is divisible under the agreement; but the mutual agreement to share each other's profits is the true consideration. There is no question now of enforcing any of the covenants in the agreement which are in restraint of trade. The parties have throughout observed them without objection. The only agreement which is left to be performed is the agreement to divide the profits. That is a lawful agreement founded upon consideration, and I fail to see why it should not be enforced.

It is contended that the plaintiff cannot sue without making all the other persons who are parties to the agreement parties. That would be a good objection if the accounts had not been made up and the parties had not settled everything between themselves. The accounts which the defendant takes no exception to, and of which he admits the correctness, show that he has nothing to receive from any of the other firms, but that he is indebted to the plaintiff in a certain amount and to two others of the contractors in a definite sum each. There is no reason, that I can see, why the plaintiff should not sue to recover the sum which the defendant owes him.

CIVIL.

22 B. 861.

The arbitration issue is abandoned by counsel for the defendant. I am of opinion that under these circumstances there must be judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, and costs throughout.

CANDY, J.—The question is simply whether the present agreement came within the terms of s. 27 of the Contract Act, i.e., whether by the agreement any one was restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business.

[868] These owners of four ginning factories agreed to do business together for four years, charging Rs. 4½ per palla. The clause in the agreement, on which the lower appellate Court relied as showing that the agreement came within the terms of s. 27 of the Contract Act, is cl. 5. It runs as follows:—“If it be thought that the rate should be lowered or increased, the owners of the abovementioned factories should reduce or raise the rate by unanimous consent.” There was also a further clause providing a penalty for the enforcement of such agreement. It is not alleged that the object of the owners of the factories was to force up the rate for ginning, or that that was actually the result of the agreement. The apparent object was to prevent competition among themselves, which might induce one or more of them to ask absurdly low rates in order to drive the others away. Such a competition would, in reality, be injurious to trade; the present combination was for the advancement of trade. If other factories were set up, or if the cotton traders took their cotton away to other existing factories, the four contracting owners would probably have found it to their advantage to lower the rate for ginning. If cotton became very scarce, they might have found it advisable to raise their rate.

As to whether a combination between traders or business men is or is not in reality “in restraint of trade,” the answer must, of course, depend upon the facts of each particular case, and opinions will be found to differ, even though the facts are admitted. Thus, to take the instance of the well-known facts, which I need not recapitulate, in the celebrated case of Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow and Co. (1), Lord Coleridge, who tried the case, said: “It seems to me it was no more in restraint of trade, as that phrase is used for the purpose of avoiding contracts, than if two tailors in a village agreed to give their customers five per cent. on their bills at Christmas on condition of their customers dealing with them, and with them only.” In the Court of Appeal, Lord Esher, (23 Q. B. D., at p. 610), took the contrary view, that “an agreement among two or more traders, who are not and do not intend to be partners, but where each is to carry on his trade according to his own will, except as regards [869] the agreed act, that agreed act being one to be done for the purpose of interfering, i.e., with intent to interfere with the trade of another, is a thing done not in the due course of trade, and is, therefore, an act wrongful against that other trader, and is also wrongful against the right of the public to have free competition among traders.” It will be noticed that the agreed act in the present case would not come within the terms used by the Master of the Rolls. Lord Bowen, when dealing with the question as to the defendants’ conference or association being illegal as being in restraint of trade said (p. 619) : “If indeed it could be plainly proved that the mere formation of ‘conferences,’ ‘trust’ or ‘associations’ such as these were always necessarily injurious to the public,......and if the evil of them were not sufficiently dealt with by the common law rule, which held such agreements to be void...common law ought to discover...some further remedy...Neither of these assumptions are, to my mind, at all evident.” Fry, L.J., (pp. 626, 628), assumed for the sake of argument that such an agreement was in restraint of trade.

So, too, apparently did Lord Halsbury in the House of Lords, ((1892) Appeal Cases 35), and Lord Watson, (id., p. 40), while Lord Hannen thought (id., p. 58) that it was in restraint of trade. On the other hand, Lord Morris said (id., p. 50): “Was it in restraint of trade? It was a voluntary combination. It was not to continue for any fixed period, nor was there any penalty attached to a breach of the engagement. The operation of attempting to exclude others from the trade might be, and was, in fact, beneficial to freighters. Whenever a monopoly was likely to arise, with a consequent rise of rates, competition would naturally arise.” Lord Field went further. He said (id., p. 57):—“I cannot say upon the evidence that the agreement in question was calculated to have or had any such result” (i.e., as being in restraint of trade). Lord Bramwell hesitated, but was inclined to the opinion that the agreement was not in restraint of trade. He said (p. 45):—“The first position of the plaintiffs is that the agreement among the defendant is illegal as being in restraint of trade, and, therefore, against public policy and so illegal.……..No evidence is given in these public policy cases. The tribunal is to say, as matter of law, that the thing [870] is against public policy, and void. How can the Judge do that without any evidence as to its effect and consequences? If the shipping in this case was sufficient for the trade, a further supply would have been waste. There are some people who think that the public is not concerned with this—people who would make a second railway by the side of one existing, saying "only the two companies will suffer," as though the wealth of the community was not made up of the wealth of the individuals who compose it. I am by no means sure that the conference did not prevent a waste, and was not good for the public. Lord Coleridge thought it was—see his judgment ……..Let it be that each member had tied his hands; let it be that that was in restraint of trade; I think upon the authority of Hilton v. Eckersley (1) and other cases, we should hold that the agreement was illegal, that is, not enforceable by law. I will assume, then, that it was, though I am not quite sure.”

I am inclined to adopt the above language to the present case, and to say that I am not satisfied that the agreement in question was, as a fact, in restraint of trade—and further, to accurately quote the words of s. 27 of the Contract Act, I am not satisfied that it was an agreement by which any one was restrained from exercising a lawful trade.

The exceptions to the section do not enlarge the terms of the section. They apply to cases in which under certain specified circumstances a person agrees to be restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business. In Hilton v. Eckersley (1) certain persons agreed under certain circumstances, which would not come within the exceptions to s. 27 of the Contract Act, to be restrained from exercising their lawful business; they were under those circumstances to absolutely close their businesses. So, too, in the leading case of Madhub Chunder v. Rajcomar Doss (2) the plaintiff agreed not to carry on his business in a certain locality, and it was held that the words "restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business" are intended to apply to a restriction, limited to some particular place. The principle of this ruling has not been extended. In Carlisle, [871] Nephews and Co. v Ricknauth (1) the plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description as they were selling to defendant before a certain date. It was contended that this was a stipulation in restraint of trade within the meaning of s. 27 of the Contract Act; and the case just quoted was relied on. Garth, C.J., said: "This case was of a very peculiar character; but assuming that case to have been well decided, we think it has no application to the present. The language of s. 27 is, no doubt, somewhat general and unsatisfactory; but I am clearly of opinion that it was never intended to prohibit such a stipulation as that with which we are now dealing in contracts for the sale of goods." In The Brahmaputra Tea Company v. Scarch (2) the stipulation, which was held to be void under s. 27 of the Contract Act, was one by which a person was in express terms restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business for a term of years. In Mackenzie v. Striramiah (3) a licensee for the manufacture of salt agreed that all salt manufactured by him should be sold to plaintiffs at a fixed price. Handley, J., said: "Clause 12 of the agreement does not, in my opinion, purport to restrain defendant from exercising his trade or business within the meaning of s. 27 of the Contract Act. It is merely an agreement to sell all the salt he manufactures during a certain period to plaintiffs at a certain price. No doubt a negative covenant not to sell to anybody else may be implied, but that is not such a restraint from exercising his trade or business as the section contemplates ....... I understand the section to aim at contracts by which a person precludes himself altogether, either for a limited time or over a limited area, from exercising his profession, trade or business." In Nur Ali Dubash v. Abdul Ali (4) the stipulations in question came exactly within the terms of s. 27. The High Court said: "The effect of those articles was absolutely to restrain the plaintiff from carrying on the business of a dubash, and also to create a partial restraint upon his power to carry on the business of a stevedore. As to the first, nothing need be said; as to the second, the case of Collins v. Locke (5) shows ... (were [872] authority needed for the proposition) that the plaintiff's agreement 'to act only as ghat serang of the said five ships,' and not to 'do any services to ships belonging to anybody else' (save his old ships), was in partial restraint of trade in the strict legal meaning of the expression." It is equally clear that the words quoted above may well be said to come within the express terms of s. 27. In Collins v. Locke the first clause in the agreement was a stipulation held to be bad; it was one which restrained "three of the four parties to the agreement from exercising their trade, without giving any profit or benefit to compensate for the restriction to either of the four, whilst the combination they have thus entered into is obviously detrimental to the public, by depriving the merchants of the power of employing any of these parties, who are probably the chief stevedores of the port, to load their ships, unless in each case they employ the one of the four to whom the ship, as between themselves, has been allotted, however great and well founded their objections may be to employ him" (p. 685). In short, the contracting parties in express terms restrained themselves from exercising their lawful business. There can be no doubt that such a contract would fall within the terms of s. 27 of the Contract Act. The second clause of the agreement, which was held to be good, contained no terms by which any one was restrained from exercising his lawful business. It provided that if either of the named firms should refuse to allow the stevedoring of any ship to be done by the party entitled to it under the first clause, and should require one of the other parties to do it, such party so required should give an equivalent to the party who lost the stevedoring. I venture to think that such an agreement would not be within the express terms of s. 27. On the agreement as a whole the Judicial Committee remarked (p. 685): "The objects which this agreement has in view are to parcel out the stevedoring business of the port among the parties to it and so to prevent competition, at least among themselves, and also, it may be, to keep up the price to be paid for the work. Their Lordships are not prepared to say that an agreement, having these objects, is invalid if carried into effect by proper means, that is by provisions reasonably necessary for the purpose, though the effect of them might be to create a partial restraint upon the power of the parties to exercise their trade."

(2) 14 B.L.R. 76.

It is apparently contended that because in the case quoted above from 14 B. L. R., p. 76, Sir R. Couch said that the words 'restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business, in s. 27, ' do not mean an absolute restriction, and are intended to apply to a partial restriction, a restriction limited to some particular place," therefore they are intended to apply to an agreement like the present one by which no one is directly restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade or business, because it may be that till outside competition came into play the price agreed upon by the parties would be kept up, and thus partially the parties would be restrained from doing business at a lower rate than what they agreed on. I can find no reported authority in the Indian Courts for putting such an extended meaning on the words of s. 27 of the Contract Act. A partial restriction, a restriction limited to some particular locality, is different from a problematical restriction, which may or may not be the effect of the agreement, but which was not the object of the contracting parties.

I would not extend the meaning of s. 27 beyond what the words primarily mean. There may be contracts which do not come within the terms of that section and its exceptions, and yet may be contracts "in partial restraint of trade," and as such, contrary to public policy and so void (ss. 23, 24, Contract Act). That is the common-law doctrine by which restraints of trade, even though partial, are presumed to be bad, the presumption being rebuttable. It is for the Court to determine whether the contract be a fair and reasonable one or not, and the test appears to be whether it be prejudicial or not to the public interest, for it is on grounds of public policy alone that these contracts are supported or avoided. (Per Parke, B., in Mallan v. May (1)). But in the present case the argument was restricted to s. 27, and it is unnecessary for me to pursue the subject further, because I am clearly of opinion that even if the agreement in question, to have a uniform rate for ginning, is void, that is, not enforceable by law, the present claim by plaintiff to recover his share of the profits is clearly enforceable. It is true that in the case quoted above from 14 B. L. R. the Court said: "If the agreement on the part of the plaintiff is void, there is no consideration for the agreement on the part of the defendant to pay the money; and the whole contract must

(1) 11 M. & W. 658 (665).

be treated as one which cannot be enforced." But in Bishop v. Kitchin (1), Cockburn, C.J., Lush, Hannen and Hayes, JJ., said: "The agreement having been executed, and the plaintiff having submitted to the restraint, he is clearly entitled to recover the consideration due in respect of it."

There is a difference between an action brought to enforce the illegal restraint and an action brought to recover the consideration for the restraint. In Wallis v. Day (2), to the argument of counsel that the contract being an absolute one, binding the plaintiff not to carry on trade for his whole life, not limited in point either of time or place, was void as against public policy, and on the authority of all the cases, Lord Abinger, C.B., remarked (p. 276): Can you show any case, except where the prohibition was attempted to be enforced. I should require a strong authority to say, (although the prohibition would not be binding as against the party himself,) that there being nothing criminal in the contract, he should not have the benefit of it, where he has in fact performed it."

Assuming, however, that these dicta are not applicable to cases under the Contract Act, it is clear, as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, that the agreement in the present case to charge Rs. 4-8-0 per palla is not the consideration for the agreement to divide the Rs. 2 profits. There is, therefore, no valid objection to plaintiff recovering what is clearly his due.

I concur in reversing the decree of the lower Courts and awarding the claim.

Decrees reversed.

[875] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

KARSA. (Original Defendant No. 1), Appellant v. GANPATRAM AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [16th August, 1897.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 293—Order passed in attachment proceedings not binding on judgment-debtor if not a party—Order passed without investigation—Suit to set aside the order—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 11.

One Asha was in possession of certain land as plaintiff's tenant and in his lifetime mortgaged it with possession to the first defendant. After Asha's death, defendant No. 1 obtained a money decree against Asha's heirs and in execution attached the land. Thereupon the plaintiff sought to raise the attachment on the ground that Asha was merely a tenant-at-will whose interest ceased at his death. Defendant No. 1 contended, on the other hand, that Asha was a permanent tenant and that his interest, as such, had descended to his heirs and was liable to attachment. On the 30th February, 1894, the Court ordered the attachment to be removed without deciding the question raised by the parties which it held could not be determined in such a proceeding. Defendant No. 1 did not bring any suit under s. 293 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to set aside the order and establish his right to the land. In 1894 the plaintiff filed the present suit against the first defendant and the heirs of Asha to recover possession of the land. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in his favour against the first defendant, holding that the order in the attachment proceedings was conclusive against the latter, no suit having been filed by him within a year under s. 293 of the Civil Procedure Code. He, however, refused to pass any decree against the heirs of Asha, inasmuch as they had not been parties to the attachment proceedings.

and, moreover, were not in possession of the land. On appeal, this decree was confirmed. The first defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held (reversing the decree of both the lower Courts) that the case must be remanded and tried on the merits.

By Parsons, J., on the ground that although the order in the attachment proceedings had become conclusive as against the first defendant, it did not affect Asha’s heirs, who had not been parties to it. As against them, therefore, the plaintiff had to prove his title, and if he failed to do so he could not recover. The first defendant being in possession might set up this jus tertii and might plead the title of the other defendants.

[R76] By Ranade, J., on the ground that the order in the attachment proceedings having been passed without investigation of the question there raised by the parties, it did not become conclusive against the first defendant notwithstanding his failure to bring a suit within twelve months to set it aside, and that he was not precluded from raising his defence in the present suit.

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., of Broach.

Suit to recover possession of land. The first defendant pleaded that the land had been in the possession of one Asha; that he (defendant No. 1) held it as mortgagee of Asha; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover it without paying off the mortgage.

Defendants Nos. 2 to 6 were Asha’s heirs and did not defend the suit.

It appeared that the land was originally in possession of Asha as the plaintiff’s tenant. Asha mortgaged it to the first defendant, who after Asha’s death obtained a money-decree against his (Asha’s) heir (defendant No. 2) and in execution attached the land. The plaintiff intervened and sought to raise the attachment on the ground that the deceased Asha was his tenant-at-will; that his tenancy had terminated at his death, and that no interest had devolved upon his heir liable to attachment. The first defendant contended that Asha was a permanent tenant and that, as such, he had an interest which came to his heir and was liable to attachment.

Asha’s heirs were not parties to these attachment proceedings.

The Subordinate Judge on the 20th February, 1892, made the following order raising the attachment:

"Upon these admitted facts I am of opinion that the land under attachment should be released from it. The judgment-debtor’s possession and that of his representative in interest are admitted to be as tenants of the petitioners. Whether that possession was that of a permanent tenant and whether the deceased had a saleable interest in the land attached, are mixed questions of fact and law, very intricate and complicated. They cannot be inquired into and decided in the miscellaneous proceeding. Under this view I order that the attached land shall be released from attachment."

The first defendant did not file any suit under s. 283 [877] of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to establish his right to the lands.

In 1894 the plaintiff filed the present suit against the first defendant and Asha’s heirs (defendants Nos. 2 to 6) to recover possession.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree against the first defendant, holding that the above order in the attachment proceedings was conclusive against the first defendant as between him and the plaintiff, no suit having been brought under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. As against the other defendants, he refused to pass any decree, inasmuch as they had not been parties to the attachment proceedings and were not in possession of the land.

This decree was confirmed, on appeal, by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Brench, A.P.

Therefore defendant No. 1 preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for appellant.

C. H. Setalvod, for respondent.

The following authorities were cited in argument:—Bukshi Ram v. Sheo Parghas Tewari (1); Venkata v. Chembisopa (2); Chandra Bhusan v. Ram Kanth (3); Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf (4); Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (5); Khub Lal v. Ram Lochun (6); Kedar Nath v. Rakhal Das (7).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The plaintiffs brought this suit in ejectment to recover possession of a certain field, Survey No. 1243, with mesne profits for three years, alleging that it was their land, let to their tenant Asha, and that on his death in 1888 (Samvat 1994) the lease determined and they became entitled to the possession of the land. They sued the heirs and representatives of Asha (defendants Nos. 2 to 6), and the mortgagee of Asha (defendant No. 1).

Defendant No. 1 alone appeared and contested the claim on the ground that Asha was not the tenant-at-will of the plaintiffs, [878] but a permanent tenant who had mortgaged to him his occupancy rights and placed him in possession.

The Judge of the lower appellate Court refused to enter on the merits of the case, as he was of opinion that the contention of the defendant No. 1 was res judicata by reason of his omission to file a suit within a year of an order passed against him under s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears that the defendant No. 1 had obtained a decree against Asha's heirs for a debt due to him by Asha, and in execution of the decree he attached this property. The plaintiffs objected to the attachment on the ground that Asha had no attachable interest in the property, as he, when alive, only held the property as their tenant. The defendant asserted the permanent nature of Asha's tenancy. The Subordinate Judge passed the following order:

"Upon these admitted facts I am of opinion that the land under attachment should be released from it. The judgment-debtor's possession and that of his representative in interest are admitted to be as tenants of the positerior. Whether that possession was as a permanent tenant and whether the deceased had a saleable interest in the land attached are mixed questions of fact and law, very intricate and complicated. They cannot be enquired into and decided in the miscellaneous proceeding. Under this view I order that the attached land shall be released from attachment."

It must, we think, be taken that this was an order passed under s. 280, releasing the property from attachment, though it did not decide the point at issue between the parties. The defendant, therefore, was bound to bring a suit to establish the right he claimed within a year from the date of the order. (See Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (5); Khub Lal v. Ram Lochun (6).)
The question is, what was the right that the defendant claimed. It was argued that it was merely the right to attach and sell the property in execution of his money decree, and that so far only the order was binding upon him, and Bukshi Ram v. Sheo Pergash Tewari (1) was cited in support of the argument. It may be doubted if the argument is sound. The right the defendant claimed was the right to attach and sell Asha’s equity of [879] redemption of this property. He asserted that Asha had this valuable interest, while the plaintiffs asserted that Asha being dead, no interest at all survived to his representatives or assigns. The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the plaintiffs, leaving the defendant free to establish his case by a regular suit. It would seem, therefore, that the first defendant not having brought the suit within the time allowed by law, is bound by the order.

We do not, however, see how the order can be binding upon the other defendants, who are the heirs and representatives of Asha. They were not parties to the proceedings in which the order was passed, and they were not bound to bring any suit to establish their title. (See Kedar Nath v. Rakhal Das (2) in which this point is fully discussed.) They, therefore, in this suit are free to set up the title of Asha and their own title as his representatives in bar of the plaintiffs’ claim to possession of the property, and the plaintiffs, who sue in ejectment, are bound to prove their title as against them. If the plaintiffs fail to prove their title, or if, in other words, the defendants, who are the representatives of Asha, prove that Asha was a permanent tenant, then the plaintiffs would not be entitled to the possession of the land. The decree in that case should be in favour of the defendants Nos. 2 to 6. It has always been held that a person in possession can plead jus tertii, and, therefore, in this case, the defendant No. 1 can plead the title of the other defendants in support of his possession under a mortgage, the legality of which was never questioned in the execution proceedings. We think, therefore, that the lower Courts were wrong in disposing of the case on the preliminary point of res judicata and in not raising and disposing of an issue as to the title of the plaintiffs as against the defendants Nos. 2 to 6. We, therefore, reverse the decree of both the lower Courts, and remand the case to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. All costs to be costs in the cause.

RANADE, J.—The chief point for consideration in this appeal is whether the order in the execution proceedings (Ex. 6) had the effect of estopping the appellant from pleading the defence raised by him in this suit. Both the lower Courts have held [880] that as that order was passed against the appellant, and he took no steps to set it aside under s. 293, he was shut out from urging his present defence, as the order became conclusive after the statutory period laid down by art. 11 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act had expired.

The facts of the case are clearly set forth in the judgment of the Court of first instance. The appellant obtained a money decree in 1891 against the heirs of deceased Asha Girdhar, and attached the lands in dispute as belonging to his judgment-debtor. The respondents thereupon made an application for the removal of the attachment, alleging that the judgment-debtor had no right, title, or interest in the land, but that he held it as respondents’ tenant, and that the land belonged to the respondents. The appellant answered that the land had been in the possession of his deceased judgment-debtor as a permanent tenant from time immemorial, and that the respondents had only a right to receive Rs. 2 as rent. He further stated that in a rent suit respondents' right had been established in respect of this rent only, and that the land had been mortgaged to him (the appellant), and had been since in his possession as mortgagee. The respondents, on the other hand, alleged in these miscellaneous proceedings that Asha was their tenant-at-will, and not a permanent tenant. On these pleadings, the Subordinate Judge disposed of the application on 20th February, 1892, saying that he "was of opinion, upon these admitted facts, that the land under attachment should be released from it. The judgment-debtor's possession, and that of his representative in interest, are admitted to be as tenant of the petitioners (respondents in the present appeal). Whether that possession was as a permanent tenant, and whether the deceased had a saleable interest in the land attached, are mixed questions of fact and law, very intricate and complicated, and cannot be inquired into and decided in a miscellaneous proceeding." The attachment was accordingly removed. No suit was filed by the appellant under s. 283 to establish the right which he claimed to the property in dispute. The present suit was brought by the respondents to recover possession of the land in dispute against the appellant and the heirs of Asha, and the appellant pleaded that Asha's interest in the land was that of a permanent tenant, and that he was a mortgagee of that interest.

(1) 12 O. 458.
(2) 16 O. 674.

Upon this statement of facts, both the lower Courts have held that the appellant was estopped from raising these defences by reason of the order removing the attachment having become conclusive under the operation of s. 283. Reliance was chiefly placed upon the rulings in Badri Prasad v. Muhammad Yusuf (1) and Sardharn Lal v. Ambika Pershad (2) in support of the view that the order had a conclusive effect. We have now to see how far the present case falls within the purview of these rulings.

In the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council, the application was made by the wife and sons of the judgment-debtor to the effect that as they were not parties to the decree, their interests in the family property were not liable to be sold, and that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor should be sold. The Court thereupon ordered that the property should be released from attachment as it was ancestral property, and that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor should be sold. More than twelve months after this order was made, the attaching creditor brought a regular suit in which he sought for a declaration that the debt was binding upon the judgment-debtor's sons. It was held by both the original and appellate Courts in India that the suit was barred under art. 11, and their Lordships of the Privy Council upheld this decree. The contention before their Lordships was that the order releasing the attachment was passed on a defective investigation, and that the miscellaneous proceeding should have determined the precise extent of the shares of the judgment-debtor and of his sons. Lord Hobhouse, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed, with reference to this contention, that the Code did not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go, and that this would depend upon the circumstances of each case. It seems to me that the ruling furnishes no guidance in deciding a case like the present, where the Subordinate Judge expressly states in his order that he did not inquire into the question of the nature of Asha’s interest in [882] the land, and the question of possession and mortgage raised by the appellant. As regards the Allahabad case, the judgment shows clearly that the order was passed upon investigation, and on a consideration of the oral and written evidence adduced on both sides. It, therefore, furnishes no help in deciding a case in which there was admittedly no investigation.

(1) 1 A. 381.
(2) 15 C. 521.

Where there has been no investigation in the attachment proceedings, it has been held by all the High Courts that the order passed in such proceedings had not a conclusive effect, and that art. 11 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) did not apply to such cases. In the Allahabad Full Bench case noted above, the judgment of Pearson, J., shows the grounds on which that case was distinguished from a previous decision which suggested the reference. In this last case, it was observed that there had been no adjudication on the question of possession, and that, therefore, the order did not operate as res judicata. There are numerous decisions more directly in point, and which clearly show that when the order is passed without investigation, it has no conclusive effect. The wording of s. 278 clearly requires the Court to proceed to investigate the claim or objection. It is only when the application is unnecessarily delayed that there is to be no investigation. Under s. 279, evidence has to be adduced by both sides, and under ss. 280, 282 the Court has to be satisfied, one way or the other, on the point of right or possession. Investigation is thus obligatory, however summary may be the nature of the proceedings. In a case decided by the North-West Provinces High Court, it was laid down that the Judge was bound to inquire and determine the question of possession as between claimant and judgment-debtor—Bholo Dut v. Shakt Ahmed (1). Where again attachment was released without investigation, it was held that it had no effect in the way of stoppel on failure to bring a suit within a year to set it aside—Mussumat Kamran v. Neel Ram (2). In this case the order was very similar to the one in the present case. The Judge had stated that “as the registered sale-deeds were of long standing, the matter cannot be settled without a civil suit. It is not proper [883] at present that the sale should be carried out.” In a Calcutta case it was held that where the Court refused to entertain an application or to order the stay of a sale, because the application was made too late, art. 11 of the Limitation Act, or rather the equivalent provision of the last clause of s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, had no application—Syed Mahomed v. Kanhyalal Lal (3). This Calcutta ruling was followed by this Court in Venkasa v. Chenabasa (4) and by the Madras High Court in Venkataratnam v. Akkamma (5). In Rask Behari v. Budden Chunder (6), the order was to the effect that “To enter into evidence would lead to an adjudication * * of complicated questions of fact, which it would not be at all easy and convenient to try summarily.” It was held that such an order did not become conclusive by reason of failure to bring a suit within one year to set it aside. It is true this ruling referred to an order under s. 335, and not s. 283, but it has been held in Minguet Antone v. Waman Laksman (7), that the rulings under s. 283 must equally apply to those under s. 335. In Bihika v. Sakarlal (8), the order stated that as applicant did not want to proceed further, no investigation was made, and it was held that art. 11 did not apply. In such cases there was, in fact, no order under ss. 280 or 282, and as there was no investigation, there was no estoppel. Similarly in Chandra Bhusan v. Ram Kanth (1), it was ruled under s. 261 that it is only when an order is made after investigation that it operates as estoppel. When an application was rejected because the boundaries did not agree, and it was not likely that applicant would suffer by reason of the sale, it was held that the limitation of one year did not apply. Of course it is otherwise when the claimant gives no evidence, or insufficient evidence, or is absent. In these cases the order operates as though it were passed after investigation—Tripooro Soonduree v. Ijutoonissa Khatoon (2); Gooroo Doss Roy v. Sona Monee (3); Sreemunto Hayrak v. Syud Tajooddin (4).

[884] From a review of all these authorities, it is clear that the order in this case expressly avoided deciding the question of Asha's rights and appellant's mortgage, and as such it must be held to have been passed without investigation, and appellant's failure to bring a suit within twelve months did not preclude him from raising his defence in the present suit.

There is an additional reason for coming to the same finding in the present suit. The respondent-plaintiffs have joined the heirs of the deceased Asharam as parties to this suit. They were not parties to the miscellaneous application, and they cannot be shut out from raising the defence that they have permanent rights in the land. The point, that the judgment-debtor cannot be regarded as being necessarily a party in attachment proceedings under ss. 278, 283, has been settled by a long course of rulings of the several High Courts—Shivapa v. Dod Nagaya (5); Ajibal Narasinha v. Shirekoli Timapa (6); Kedar Nath v. Rakhal Das (7); Manu Lal v. Harsukh Das (8).

For all these reasons, I am of opinion that both the lower Courts were in error in holding that the appellant was precluded in this case from urging his defence in the present suit. He has clearly a right to require the Courts to adjudicate upon the nature and extent of Asha's interest and his own mortgage. We reverse the decrees of both the Courts below.

Decree reversed.

CHUDASAMA NAUDHABHAI AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Appellants v. NARAN TRIBHOVAN AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Respondents.* [19th August, 1897.]

Tulukdar—Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bom. Act VI of 1889), s. 31, cl.2—Sale in execution of a decree—Sale of talukdar estate—Sanction of Government.

A talukdar mortgaged his talukdari estate in 1883, i.e., prior to the passing of the Gujarat Talukdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1889). In 1893 the mortgagee sued on his mortgage and, without having the sanction of the Governor in Council, obtained an order in the District Court for the sale of the mortgaged property, that Court holding that the provisions of s. 31, cl. 2, of Bombay Act

VI of 1889 did not apply to the case of a mortgage effected prior to the passing of the Act. On appeal to the High Court, Held, reversing the order of the District Court, that cl. 2 of s. 31 of Bombay Act VI of 1888 applied to the case and that a sale in execution of a decree was such an alienation as came within the terms of the section and required the previous sanction of the Governor in Council. The Court, however, directed the District Judge to give the plaintiffs reasonable time for the production of the sanction, and ordered that in case they produced it, the order for sale should be affirmed, otherwise the plaintiff's application for sale should be dismissed.

Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai (1) and Doshi Fulchand v. Malek Dajiraj (2) referred to and explained.

APPEAL from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

On 4th October, 1883, one Pathabhar, a talukdar of Dhandhuka, mortgaged his talukdari estate (by san-mortgage) to the plaintiff for Rs. 7,500.

On the 25th March, 1889, Bombay Act VI of 1888 (the Gujarat Talukdars' Act) came into force. That Act contains the following provision:

"Section 31, cl. (2). — No alienation of a talukdar's estate, or of any portion thereof, or of any share or interest therein, made after this Act comes into force, shall be valid, unless such alienation is made with the previous sanction of the Governor in Council, which sanction shall not be given except upon the condition that the entire responsibility for the portion of the jama and of the village expenses and police charges due in respect of the alienated area, shall thenceforward vest in the alienee and not in the talukdar."

In 1893 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover Rs. 5,000, being the amount of instalments due under the mortgage together with interest up to date of suit, by sale of the mortgaged property.

The District Judge of Ahmedabad, who tried the case, held that under the above section he could not pass any decree against the mortgaged property, as it was a talukdari estate. He, therefore, passed a decree on 3rd February, 1894, directing the amount [886] claimed to be recovered from the private property of the talukdar other than the property mortgaged.

In appeal, the High Court in October, 1895, following the ruling in Doshi Fulchand v. Malek Dajiraj, amended the decree of the District Judge by directing that if the judgment-debtors failed to pay the decretal amount within six months from the date of the decree, the decree-holder might apply for an order absolute for sale of the mortgaged property (3).

The judgment-debtors having made default, the decree-holder presented a darkhast (No. 48 of 1896) stating that Rs. 11,666-13-1 were due to him under the decree and praying for the sale of the mortgaged property and for payment of that amount out of the proceeds.

The District Judge raised the following issue:—

"Can the estate of a talukdar, having regard to the provision of s. 31 of Bombay Act VI of 1888, be sold in execution of a decree obtained subsequently to that Act coming into force, in respect of an inereference created on the estate prior to the date of that Act coming into force, without the sanction of the Governor in Council?"

The District Judge found this issue in the affirmative, and directed the mortgaged property to be sold in execution of the decree.

Against this decision the judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

Lang, Advocate General, (with Rao Bahadur Vasudev J. Kirtikar), for the appellants.

N. V. Gokhale, for the respondents.

The following authorities were referred to in argument:—Kalian v. Pathubhai (1); Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai (2); Doshi Fulchand v. Malek Dajiraj (3); Shah Kalidas v. Chudasama Nadhabhai (4).

JUDGMENT.

Ranae, J.—There is no doubt an apparent conflict between the ruling in Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai (2) and the remark made in [887] the judgment in Doshi Fulchand v. Malek Dajiraj (3) in which a doubt is expressed as to the correctness of the extension given in Nagar v. Jivabhai to the principle laid down in Kalian v. Pathubhai (1). In this last case, it was ruled that when the inincumbrancer had obtained a decree for the sale of mortgaged property prior to 25th March, 1889, on which day Bombay Act VI of 1888 came into force, the prohibition under cl. 2 of s. 31 of that Act did not apply, and the decree was capable of execution as before the Act. The facts are not fully reported in Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai, but as the decree in that case was passed in August, 1889, within a few months after the Act came into force, the suit was presumably instituted before the prohibition became operative. This circumstance assimilates the case to the class of cases referred to in Kalian v. Pathubhai.

There is no particular reason to distinguish cases in which a decree was obtained from those in which proceedings had been presumably instituted before the Act came into force. In Dooloddass v. Ramotil (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council had to consider how far retrospective effect could be given to the provisions of an Act of 1848, which declared that “all agreements by way of wager shall be null and void,” and it was held that this prohibition did not affect the validity of existing contracts, at all events not those contracts on which actions had already been brought before the new Act came into force. The test suggested in Moon v. Durden (6), which is a ruling on the English Act against wagers, viz., the use of the word ‘shall’ in that Act, applies equally to s. 31 of Act VI of 1888. The principles of the construction of statutes in this connection were very clearly stated in G. Lee Morris v. Sambanurthi (7), where it was observed that the general principle is that rights already acquired shall not be affected by the retrospect of a new Act, and that the law regulating the acquisition of rights is the law as it stood when the facts out of which the right springs occurred. Of course, this is only a presumption, and if the intention to give retrospective effect can be clearly gathered from the provisions [888] of the new Act, such intention must prevail for reasons such as those referred to in Shivram v. Kondiba (8). These principles appear to me to cover the decision in Nagar Pragji v. Jivabhai (2), and as one of the Judges who decided that case, I see no reason to think that the extension thereby given to the principle of the ruling in Kalian v. Pathubhai (1) was not correct. It was on this account that the same Judges who decided Nagar v. Jivabhai, when they were called upon to decide the case reported in Shah Kalidas v. Chudasama Nadhabhai (4), followed the more cautious procedure suggested in Doshi Fulchand v. Malek Dajiraj (1). In Shah Kalidas v. Chudasama Nadhabhai as the incumbrance was of a date prior to the Act, but the suit was instituted long after the Act came into force, a decree was passed for the amount due, but its enforcement by sale of the property was made subject to the provisions of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, which would, it was observed, make it possible for the creditor to obtain the sanction of Government before the sale actually took place. This direction was in accordance with the course suggested in Doshi Fulchand v. Malek Dajiraj (1). It will be thus seen that there is really no conflict between the several rulings of this Court noted above.

I would follow the course laid down in Shah Kalidas v. Chudasama Nadhabhai (2) in the present case, and vary the order of the District Judge by directing that time may be allowed to the decree-holder to produce the sanction required by s. 31, cl. 2, and only after he produces such sanction steps should be taken to execute the decree.

PARSONS, J.—As my learned colleague distinguishes the case of Nagar Prajap. v. Jivabhai (3) from the case of Doshi Fulchand v. Malek Dajiraj (1) on the ground that in the former the suit had been instituted prior to the coming into force of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, 1888, the necessity to refer this case to a Full Bench pointed out in the latter decision does not exist. In this case, of which a prior stage is reported in Shah Kalidas v. [889] Chudasama Nadhabhai (2), the Act came into force long before the suit was filed and, therefore, under s. 31 (2) there can be no alienation of the estate or any portion thereof without the previous sanction of the Governor in Council. A sale in execution of a decree is such an alienation as comes within the terms of this section (see Kalan v. Pathubhai (4)).

We must, therefore, reverse the order of the District Judge and direct that he give the plaintiffs such time as shall to him seem reasonable for the production, by them, of the sanction of the Governor in Council; in case they produce the same, he can then affirm his present order, otherwise he must dismiss their darkhast. We leave him to dispose of the costs incurred throughout.

Order reversed.

The Magistrate refused to allow the offence to be compounded, on the ground that the damage was done to a village Mahar and, therefore, could not be treated as damage affecting only a private person, as Mahars had duties to perform in connection with the village.

to the public. The fact that the complainant was a village Mahar would not make his personal property the property of the public, or even of the Mahar community generally.

APPLICATION under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The complainant was a vartandar Mahar of the village of Gartad in Khandesh.

[890] The accused was the revenue patel of the village. He was charged with causing damage to the complainant’s property by rooting up the hedge of his threshing floor, and letting in cattle, which consumed a portion of the crops.

At the hearing of the case before the Second Class Magistrate a rajinama was filed, expressing the willingness of the parties to compound the case.

The Magistrate refused to allow the offence to be compounded, on the ground that the damage was done to a village Mahar with a view to driving him out of the village, and, as such, could hardly be treated as affecting only a private person, as Mahars had duties to perform in connection with the village.

The Magistrate convicted the accused of mischief under s. 427 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month and pay a fine of Rs. 50.

This conviction and sentence was confirmed, on appeal, by the Magistrate of the First Class, Khandesh.

The accused thereupon applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction to set aside the conviction and sentence.

G. K. Deshmukh, for accused.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The Magistrate refused to allow the offence to be compounded, because “the damage was done to a village Mahar and, therefore, could not be treated as damage affecting only a private person, as Mahars have duties to perform in connection with the village.” Section 345 of the Criminal Procedure Code says that “mischief, when the only loss or damage caused is loss or damage to a private person, may be compounded by the person to whom the loss or damage was caused.” These words evidently refer to the definition of mischief in s. 425 of the Penal Code, under which the loss or damage may be caused either to the public or to any person. They thus declare that when the loss or damage is caused to the public, the offence cannot be compounded, but that it can when the loss or damage is caused to any person. In the present case, the damage was caused to harvested [891] crops, which were the private property of the complainant. It was, therefore, a loss or damage caused to a private person and not to the public. The fact that the complainant was a village Mahar would not make his personal property the property of the public or even of the Mahar community generally. The Magistrate ought, therefore, to have entertained the application of the complainant to compound the case. We reverse the conviction and sentence, and remand the case to the trying Magistrate with instructions that he should admit the application, and, if he finds that the complainant is desirous of compounding the offence, act accordingly.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

HIRALAL AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. BAI ASI
AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Respondents.*

[7th September, 1897.]

Letters Patent, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104, cl. 15—Appeal from an order of a single Judge of the High Court in the exercise of the Court's revisional or extraordinary jurisdiction—Appeal.

No appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge of the High Court dismissing an application for the exercise of the Court's extraordinary or revisional jurisdiction.

The Letters Patent provide for an appeal only from a judgment passed in the original or appellate jurisdiction of the High Court.

[F., 28 A. 133 = A.W.N. (1905) 218; D., 23 Ind. Cas. 977 = 41 C. 323.]

APPEAL under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, from an order of Mr. Justice Candy.

The plaintiffs sued in the Court of Small Cause at Broach to recover Rs. 75 on a bond executed by Bai Asi for herself and as guardian of her minor son Isaji Saleman.

The Court decreed the claim against Bai Asi alone, holding that she had no authority to bind her minor son.

The plaintiffs thereupon applied to the High Court under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction by calling for the record of the case and allowing the claim against the minor also.

[892] The application came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Candy, who dismissed it.

Against this order of dismissal, plaintiffs preferred an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

K. M. Jhaveri, for the appellants.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—This is an appeal from the order of Candy, J., dismissing an application for the exercise of this Court's extraordinary jurisdiction by calling for the record of a case from the Small Cause Court of Broach under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887. The point is whether under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent an appeal lies from his order.

That clause gives a right of appeal from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court or of one Judge of any Division Court pursuant of s. 13 of the said recited Act. Section 13 of the Act provides for the exercise of the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the High Court. It does not deal with the revisional or extraordinary jurisdiction which is vested in the Court by s. 15 of the Act and by various Acts of the Legislature of this country. If we were to hold that there was an appeal from the order of a single Judge refusing to call for a civil case, we should equally have to hold that there was an appeal from an order calling for a case or calling for a return, or from any other act done in the performance of revisional or extraordinary jurisdiction. It seems to us that the Letters Patent

provide for an appeal only from a judgment passed in the original and appellate jurisdiction of this Court. As the order in question does not fall within that description, there is no appeal therewith. We dismiss the appeal.

RANADE, J.—I concur. This application was made under s. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and prayed for the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. That section by its very wording confers only a discretionary power, and if a Judge of this Court, exercising that discretion, declines to issue a rule nisi, I do not think that any order passed by him can be appealed against as a judgment or order passed by a single Judge within the scope of s. 15 of the Letters Patent.

That section obviously refers, in the first place, to the judgments passed in civil suits in the exercise of the original civil jurisdiction of the Court. It also refers to the orders passed by a single Judge disposing of the original and appellate work of this Court under rules made under s. 13:
of the Act relating to this Court.

The order passed in this application falls under neither category. It is not a judgment, and it does not come within the scope of the work disposed of by a single Judge in accordance with rules framed under s. 13.
It is, moreover, as observed above, a discretionary jurisdiction, and, therefore, no appeal lies from such an order under para. 15 of the Letters Patent. There has been no precedent before where any such appeal was allowed, and we must, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

overholding on expiration of lease—Nature of holding—Tenant by sufferance—Adverse possession—Limitation.

Semple.—Under art. 139, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) time begins to run against a landlord when the period of a fixed lease expires, when there is no evidence from which a fresh tenancy can be inferred, and not at some indeterminate date after that period.

Where a tenant holds over after the expiration of his lease without further agreement, such holding over, though by English law styled a tenancy by sufferance, is wrongful. Slight evidence, however, will suffice to change his position into that of a tenant-at-will.

SECOND appeal from L. Crump, Assistant Judge of Dharwar.
Suit for possession. This suit was filed in 1893. The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff’s claim was barred by limitation.

[893] The house in question had originally belonged to the defendants’ father Gurlingapa. In 1871 he sold it to one Shivamurtaya, but retained possession as Shivamurtaya’s tenant. On 16th February, 1873, he passed a rent-note to Shivamurtaya under which he was to hold the property for a year as tenant to Shivamurtaya and then give up possession.

* Second Appeal No. 160 of 1897.

The material part of the rent-note was as follows:—"The house within these boundaries is let to me by you for (my) residence. I have made an agreement of rent Rs. 6 per year. I will remain for one year, pay the rent of Rs. 6, and at the end of one year from this date make over your house to you. To this effect I have duly given this rent-note to you."

It did not appear that Gurlingapa had vacated the house at the end of the year, in accordance with the rent-note. The only fact proved at the hearing with reference to possession was that the defendants (his sons) had been in physical possession of the house for fifteen years prior to suit.

Shivamurtaya, however, in 1890 sold the house to the plaintiff and in 1893, as above stated, the plaintiff brought this suit for possession.

The lower Court held that the possession by the defendants and their father Gurlingapa had been adverse to the plaintiff and his vendor and that the suit was barred by limitation. In his judgment the Judge said:—

"The evidence for the defendants clearly shows that the defendants have been in physical possession of these two houses for some fifteen years."

"As soon as the year’s tenancy elapsed, the possession of the defendants’ father was ipso facto inconsistent with the subsistence of his landlord’s title, as he had agreed to vacate at the end of the year; nor is it shown that his tenancy was renewed. This is not a case of mere non-payment of rent, as would have been the case had the lease been continued until within twelve years of the filing of the suit. As soon as the year for which the lease was to run terminated, the possession of the defendants’ father ceased to be consistent with the ownership of the plaintiff’s vendor.”

The plaintiff appealed. The question was whether on the expiration of the year 1873, for which the above rent-note was given, the possession became adverse under art. 139 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), or, as stated in the judgment, whether a tenancy is determined upon the expiration of a lease for a defined period.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This appeal raises a question which, having regard to the state of the authorities, is one of difficulty.

On the 26th August, 1871, the father of the defendants by Ex. 48 sold the two houses in suit and some lands to one Shivamurtaya. On the 13th September, 1878, Shivamurtaya mortgaged, and subsequently on the 28th August, 1890, sold the whole property to the plaintiff.
The plaintiff filed the present suit in 1893 to eject the defendants from the two houses. As to one house, both the lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim as being time-barred, and no question now remains as to that house. As to it we dealt with the arguments of the learned pleader for the appellant without calling upon the other side. As regards, however, the tiled house, it is contended that the plaintiff's claim is not time-barred, inasmuch as the defendants' father Gurulingappa in 1870 and 1873 passed rent-notes to Shivamurtaya in respect of it. The former document, which was in the same terms as Ex. 50, we need not further allude to, as it necessarily ceased to have any operation when the later rent-note (Ex. 50) was executed. This latter bears date the 16th of February, 1873, and omitting recitals, runs thus:—"My private tiled house is situated in the village of Kallapur ; the boundaries thereof are  The house within these boundaries is let to me by you for [895] (my) residence. I have made an agreement of rent of Rs. 6 per year. I will remain for one year, pay the rent of Rs. 6, and at the end of one year from this date make over your house to you. To this effect I have duly given this rent-note to you."

The plaintiff put in evidence a further alleged rent-note said to have been passed to him by the defendants after the plaintiff's purchase in respect of this tiled house as well as of the other house. Both the lower Courts have regarded it as unproved. The learned pleader for the appellant has contended that we ought to reject that finding and hold that the document is established, because the Judges in the lower Courts have not specifically noted that the stamp upon it purports to have been issued to the plaintiff and the defendants. We are not at liberty thus to set aside a finding of fact, or to assume that the lower Courts did not consider this circumstance. If the plaintiff intended, when he purchased the houses, to prepare and put forward a false rent-note as having been passed to him by the defendants, he would doubtless represent to the stamp officer that the defendants joined him in purchasing the stamp. The argument, if we were at liberty to consider it, is of little value.

Except that the evidence shows that the defendants have been in physical occupation of the two houses for some fifteen years, and that the above rent-notes were passed by the defendants' father to Shivamurtaya there appears to have been no further fact as to the possession of the house proved in the case. The Subordinate Judge held the suit in respect of the tiled house to be in time. The Assistant Judge held the possession of it by the defendants' father and the defendants to have been adverse, and dismissed the suit. "As soon as the year for which the lease was to run terminated, the possession of the defendants' father ceased" (he says) "to be consistent with the ownership of the plaintiff's vendor." We have to consider whether that view is correct.

Article 139 of the Limitation Act prescribes the period of twelve years "by a landlord to recover possession from a tenant" from the time "when the tenancy is determined." The question is whether the tenancy is determined upon the expiration of a lease for a defined period. The Madras High Court in [897] Adilmulam v. Pir Ravuthan (1) has held that a lessee holding over after the expiration of his lease is a tenant on sufferance and that such tenancy continues until it is determined by some act upon either side, and that it lies upon the person resisting the landlord's claim for possession on the ground of limitation to show that the tenancy is determined. The cases of Dadoba v. Krishna (1) and Tutia v. Sadashiv (2) do not shed any light upon this question, as in the former case the defendant held possession under an indeterminate agreement and the latter was the case of a yearly tenant. The case of Bunchandra v. Sadashiv (3) was that of one mortgagor redeeming for the common benefit, it is presumed, of himself and his co-mortgagors. That also does not assist us. Gangabai v. Kalapa (4) was again the case of a yearly lease. There appears to be no Bombay decision upon the construction of art. 139 as applied to a lease for a fixed period. All that the Bombay cases decide is that non-payment of rent by a tenant does not of itself extinguish the relation between him and his landlord. In Runyo Lall v. Abdool Gaffoor (5) the tenancy was an annual one and the law as to non-payment of rent was laid down in it in the same terms as in the Bombay rulings. The passage at p. 417 of the judgment in Modho v. Tekait Ram Chunder (6)—beginning "We think it is clear"—is rather opposed to the Madras decision we have referred to, as it treats for the purpose of art. 139 the expiration of a lease for a fixed time and the termination of tenancy as synonymous.

We are inclined to think that the termination of the period of a fixed lease, where nothing further occurs, is the time from which limitation begins to run against the landlord within the meaning of art. 139 of the Limitation Act. The law laid down in s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act is this: "A lease of immovable property determines by efflux of the time limited thereby." To constitute the creation of a fresh relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, s. 116 assumes that there must be an assent by the landlord to the tenants continuing in possession evidenced by his acceptance of rent or in some other way. It must be borne in mind that under English law the possession of a tenant holding over after the expiration of a lease for a fixed period without the assent of his landlord, though such holding over was styled a "tenancy by sufferance" was wrongful. "A tenant by sufferance is he who enters by lawful demise or title and afterwards wrongfully continues in possession * * * so any one who continues in possession after a particular estate is ended without agreement." Com. Dig. Tit Estates—Tenant by sufferance. Similarly on the determination of a tenancy by will a tenancy by sufferance arises—Barry v. Goodman (7). The difference between a tenant-at-will and a tenant on sufferance is this: the former is always in by right, but the latter holds over by wrong—Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, p. 242, Ed. 1889. A tenant by sufferance is liable to be sued in ejectment without notice or demand—Barry v. Goodman (supra). There is no substantial difference between his position and that of a trespasser as he is sometimes so styled: see Roe v. Ward (8). Slight evidence will, as the above case of Barry v. Goodman shows, suffice to change the position of a tenant by sufferance into that of a tenant-at-will, as receipt of rent will change it into an annual tenancy; but in the absence of such evidence the original tenancy having determined, the tenant holding over occupies the position of a trespasser. Hence we think that under art. 139 of the Limitation Act time begins to run against a landlord when the period of a fixed lease expires, when there is no evidence from which a fresh tenancy can be inferred, and not at some indeterminate date after that period. This is the view taken by Mr. Starling in his useful edition of the Limitation Act. See p. 281, edition of 1895. It is not necessary for us, however, actually to decide the point in this appeal, as the highest at which the appellant’s case was rested was that the defendants’ father became a tenant by sufferance after the expiration of the lease of 1873. This relation between the parties, even according to the Madras decision, ceased upon his death, and the defendants since then have been holding adversely to the plaintiff. We confirm the decree

[899] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tyabji.

PEROSHA CURSETJI PARAKH (Plaintiff) v. MANEKJI DOSSAHIOY
WATCHA (Defendant).* [14th July, 1898.]

Contract—Wagering contract—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Bombay Act III of 1865—Broker—Suit by, for differences paid in respect of contracts made by him for defendant.

Act III of 1865 (Bombay) is still in force and has not been repealed by the Contract Act (IX of 1872).

Dayabhai v. Lakhmichand (1) followed.

As between the original parties a promissory note which has for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is void and, therefore, not binding in the hands of the original payee.

Ouida v. Harrison (2) distinguished.

In order to constitute a wagering contract neither party should intend to perform the contract itself, but only to pay the differences. In order to ascertain the real intentions of the parties the Court must look at all the surrounding circumstances and will even go behind a written provision of the contract to judge for itself whether such provision was inserted merely for the purpose of concealing the real nature of the transaction.

Todi v. Lakhmidas (3), Eshoor v. Venkatasubba (4) and Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan (5) referred to.

The defendant employed the plaintiff from time to time as a broker to purchase Government paper and shares of the Maneckji Petit Spinning and Weaving Company. The plaintiff did so to the extent of many lakhs of rupees. No delivery was given or taken, but the differences only between the contract price and the price at the date of settlement (the Vaida day in each month) were paid or received by the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant on two promissory notes given to the plaintiff by the defendant in respect of differences due by him in respect of the contracts thus made on his behalf. The defendant pleaded that he was not liable, the contracts being wagering contracts. It appeared from the evidence that the practice in the bazaar, (which was followed in this case), was for brokers to enter into such contracts in their own name and not to disclose the principals. The brokers became liable to give or take delivery. The defendant stated that he did not know the persons to whom the plaintiff sold or from whom he purchased.

[900] Held, (1) on the evidence, that the defendant authorized the plaintiff as his broker to contract on his behalf, but in the plaintiff’s own name, on the understanding that the defendant would indemnify the plaintiff and pay him brokerage in respect of the transactions entered into by him on behalf for benefit of defendant. Accordingly the plaintiff did enter into contracts in his own name with third parties. The defendant was not directly a party to them, nor did his name appear anywhere in the contracts themselves.

(2) That the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the losses which he paid to third parties in respect of the contracts made by the plaintiff on the defendant's behalf and that such losses were a valid consideration pro tanto for the notes sued upon. No doubt, so far as the defendant was concerned, all the contracts were merely wagering or gambling transactions, but there was no evidence to show that, so far as the third parties were concerned, they were otherwise than genuine. The plaintiff was not, as between himself and the defendant, the principal in the transactions. He was merely the broker with a personal liability to the third parties. There was nothing to show that as between himself and the third parties the contracts were not perfectly genuine. The turn-delivery and payment of differences on hand was a matter of subsequent arrangement. If he was liable to be called upon to receive or make actual delivery, then, in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary, a similar liability rested on the defendant himself. Whatever might have been the defendant's own intentions as to the contracts between the plaintiff and the third parties were not void, so the contracts between the defendant and the plaintiff to indemnify the plaintiff in respect of those contracts were also valid.

The mere fact that the plaintiff, knowing the defendant's position and means, must have inferred that he did not mean or intend to perform the contracts in specie, was not, per se, without more, sufficient to render the contracts invalid and not binding on the defendant. The inference of the plaintiff would not be, per se, a binding agreement.

[Suit to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 6,852-6-1 due on two promissory notes payable on demand, one dated 21st December, 1897, for Rs. 5,788, and the other dated 30th December, 1897, for Rs. 1,000. The residuum of the sum claimed, viz., Rs. 64-6-1, was for interest.

The suit was filed as a summary suit under Chap. XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The defendant filed an affidavit setting forth his defence, and obtained leave to defend. His affidavit was taken as a written statement.

His defence was that the plaintiff acted as his broker in buying and selling Government paper and shares of the Manekji Petit Spinning and Weaving Company; that the contracts made on his behalf were mere wagering contracts, and that it was never intended that either the Government paper or the shares should be actually delivered, but merely that the differences in price should be paid or received, in fact, that there was an express agreement to that effect between them, and that the notes sued on were given by him to the plaintiff for money due in respect of such differences. He stated that the aggregate amount of dealings which resulted in the debt sued for, amounted to over nine lakhs of rupees. He pleaded further that there was no consideration for the promissory notes.

The issues raised at the hearing were the following:—

(1) Whether there was any valid consideration for the two promissory notes?

(2) Whether the promissory note for Rs. 5,788 was passed to the plaintiff for the amount of differences claimed by the plaintiff in respect of wagering contracts and interest?

(3) Whether the note for Rs. 1,000 was passed to the plaintiff in substitution of another note for the same amount dated 21st December, 1897?

(4) Whether the note of 21st December, 1897, was passed by the defendant for the amount of differences claimed by the plaintiff in respect of wagering contracts and interest?]
(5) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount claimed or any part thereof?

JUDGMENT.

TYABJI, J.—This suit was originally filed as a summary suit to recover the sums of Rs. 5,788 and Rs. 1,000 and interest upon two promissory notes dated, respectively, the 21st and 30th December, 1897. Leave was, however, granted to the defendant to defend the suit, which was accordingly heard before me as an ordinary long cause. As the points involved were of some importance, not only to the parties themselves, but to the public in general, I thought it right to take time to consider my judgment.

The principal defence is that the two notes in question (Exs. A and B) were given for wagering contracts, and are, therefore, void under s. 30 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) and under Bombay Act III of 1865. The onus lay clearly upon the defendant, and evidence was first led on his behalf.

A preliminary point was taken by Mr. Rivett-Carnac on behalf of the plaintiff that Bombay Act III of 1865 was no longer in force and must be taken to have been repealed by implication, inasmuch as it forms part of Act XXI of 1848, which is expressly repealed by Indian Contract Act. This contention, however, seems to me to be untenable, as the contrary has been expressly ruled by Birdwood and Wedderburn, JJ., in Dayabhai v. Lakhmichand (1).

It was also contended for the plaintiff, on the authority of Oulds v. Harrison (2), that the promissory notes having been admittedly passed by the defendant, the Court ought not to go behind them and enquire whether the consideration for the notes was the loss sustained by the defendants in respect of wagering contracts. That was, however, a suit by the endorsee and not by the original holder of the bill of exchange, and it has been expressly decided by Westropp, C. J., and Gibbs, J., in Trikam v. Lala Amichand (5) that as between the original parties, a promissory note which has for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is void and, therefore, not binding in the hands of the original payee.

The main question, therefore, is whether the consideration for the two notes in question was the loss sustained by the defendants in respect of wagering contracts. Now I take it to be well [903] established by a long series of authoritative decisions that in order to constitute a wagering contract neither party should intend to perform the contract itself, but only to pay the differences—Tod v. Lakhmidas (3); Eshoor v. Venkata- subba (6). In order to ascertain the real intentions of the parties the Court must look at all the surrounding circumstances and would even go behind a written provision of the contract to judge for itself whether such provision was inserted merely for the purpose of concealing the real nature of the transaction—Universal Stock Exchange, Limited v. Strachan (1).

Now the facts of the present case may shortly be summed up as follows:—The defendant is a comparatively young man who inherited property worth about Rs. 3,000 on the death of his father in 1889. He seems to have become acquainted with the plaintiff, who is a confirmed stock-broker, in 1893-94 according to the plaintiff and in 1895 according to the defendant. It is proved to my satisfaction that he sold some miscellaneous shares through the plaintiff in September and October, 1894. In 1895, 1896, and 1897, however, the defendant launched into an enormous number of speculative contracts both in Government paper and in shares of the Manekji Petit Spinning and Weaving Company, Limited, to the extent of many lakhs of rupees. The magnitude of these transactions, in all of which the plaintiff was the broker, and the fact that the defendant did not in any single case take or give delivery of a single scrap of Government paper, or of a single share, coupled with the fact that no written demand was ever made upon the defendant for the performance of a single one of his numerous contracts, but that on the contrary “differences only” were received or paid, proves to my mind conclusively that, as far as the defendant is concerned, he had no intention of performing a single contract which was entered into through the plaintiff. So far as the defendant is concerned, therefore, all these contracts were merely wagering or gambling transactions.

The next question is, whether the other party to the contracts also entered into such contracts with no intention of receiving (904) or giving delivery, but simply with the intention of receiving or paying differences:—in other words, was their intention the same or different from that of the defendant? Now in this connection it is material, in the first place, to ascertain exactly who “the other party” to the contracts was so far as the defendant is concerned. In one sense it was the plaintiff, in another sense the parties with whom the plaintiff, acting as broker for the defendant, made the contracts. The position of the plaintiff in this case was peculiar. He is a stock-broker. He acted as such for the defendant and received his brokerage in respect of every contract made by him for the defendant. The course of dealing between the parties is described by the defendant as follows. He says:

“After I commenced to deal in Government paper through plaintiff, whenever I wanted Government paper I used to instruct plaintiff to go and buy at the market-rate. Sometimes plaintiff used to communicate the result through Ardeshar Hormasji Major. Sometimes by letter, and sometimes by telephone, that he had bought. Afterwards I made a note in my memo book according to what plaintiff told me. When I wanted to sell the notes purchased through plaintiff, I used to tell plaintiff directly or through Ardeshar. I did not give him the market rate, but used to tell him to sell at the bazar rates. Plaintiff used to inform me, either by letter or through Ardeshar, that he had sold. This was always done before the Vaisa day. I did not know to whom the plaintiff sold the notes or from whom he purchased them. I simply knew the plaintiff and I had to pay to or receive from him. Whether he had to pay to or receive from others,

I cannot say. The course of dealing through plaintiff in Manekji Petit shares was the same."

The account given by the plaintiff is substantially the same. He says:

"It is true that defendant gave me orders to purchase at the bazar rate or at the rate which he liked. I had entered into contracts in the bazar to purchase, and after entering into the transactions I informed defendant that I had done so. In the case of sales, a similar practice was followed. This was the way the business was conducted both in the case of Government paper and Manekji Petit shares. When I bought Government papers for the defendant I entered into a contract in my own name in the bazar. Such contracts were entered into with the broker of the party selling."

The broker Jetha Indarjit describes the general practice in the bazar as follows:

"The practice is when the broker gets an order to buy or sell Government paper he enters into the contract in his own name. By so doing he becomes liable to take or give delivery. The broker looks to his customer to guarantee him against such liability. It is the practice in the market not to disclose the names of the principals. The same practice is followed in the case of Manekji Petit and other shares."

Now in this case no less than twenty-eight written contracts for Government paper (Ex. D) and no less than seventy-eight contracts for Manekji Petit shares were produced. All these contracts are with the plaintiff on the one hand and with some other party on the other hand. The defendant is not directly a party to them, nor does his name appear anywhere in the contracts themselves. Having regard, therefore, to the evidence before me and to the general practice in the bazar and the course of dealing adopted by the parties to the suit, I must hold that the defendant authorized the plaintiff, as the defendant's broker, to make the contracts in the bazar on defendant's behalf, but in plaintiff's own name, on the understanding that the defendant would indemnify the plaintiff and would pay him brokerage in respect of the transactions entered into by the plaintiff on behalf or for the benefit of the defendant.

Now there is no evidence before me to show that the transactions thus entered into by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendant were otherwise than genuine, so far as the third parties were concerned. There is nothing from which I can gather that such third parties did not, at the time they entered into the contracts, intend to receive or give delivery. The contracts on the face of them are regular, formal contracts in the usual form for the sale or purchase of Government paper and shares. They are made with different parties at different times and for different amounts. Under these circumstances if the contest had been between the plaintiff and the defendant on the one hand and these third parties on the other hand, I could not, upon the evidence before me, hold that the transactions were gambling contracts so far as these third parties are concerned. They knew nothing about the defendant or his means or his intentions. They merely made the contracts in the ordinary course of business through a recognised broker and they were engaged to enforce them. If, therefore, this had been a suit by those third parties against the plaintiff [906] or against the defendant, a decree must necessarily have gone in their favour upon the principles so lucidly explained by our present Chief Justice in Tod v. Lakhmidas (1).

Does it, then, make a difference that this suit is filed not by the third parties but by the plaintiff for the losses in respect of those contracts? I have already said that, in my opinion, the plaintiff was not, as between himself and the defendant, the principal in the transactions. He was merely the broker with a personal liability to the third parties. There is nothing to show that, as between himself and the third parties, the contracts were not perfectly genuine. It is true that he admits that except in one or two cases he never made or received actual deliveries under the contracts and that he almost always settled them by paying the differences. But that was a matter for subsequent arrangement. If, then, he was liable to be called upon to receive or make actual delivery, it seems to me that, in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary, a similar liability rested on the defendant himself, whatever might have been the defendant's own intentions. I must hold, therefore, that as the contracts between the plaintiff and the third parties were not void, so the contract between the defendant and the plaintiff to indemnify the plaintiff in respect of these contracts must also be held to be valid.

But it is alleged by the defendant that there was an express arrangement between him and the plaintiff that the plaintiff should only enter into suatta contracts for the defendant, and that the defendant should only be called upon to pay or receive differences to or for the plaintiff, whatever might be the nature of the plaintiff's own liability to third parties. I do not think that this express agreement has been established by the defendant. It is true that there is nothing inherently improbable in it, and that it is not inconsistent with the main facts proved in the case. It is, however, an agreement which can be easily invented and set up for the purpose of getting rid of one's legal liability. Moreover, the evidence in support of it is not only not satisfactory, but inconsistent. The defendant swears that that agreement was made at his house near the Grant Road Station in 1895. His witness, Ardeshar Framji Major, however, contradicts him and swears that the agreement was made in the "Friendly Union Club" in Church Gate Street, Fort. This seems to me such a glaring discrepancy as to throw doubt upon the defendant's story. Moreover, the defendant swears that he did not know the plaintiff before 1895 at all, and that he was introduced to him for the first time in that year by Ardeshar when the agreement was made; and he denied all knowledge of having sold shares through the plaintiff in 1893-94. I have, however, no hesitation in accepting the plaintiff's evidence on this point and I think it proved that he knew the plaintiff before 1895 and that the defendant did at least sell through the plaintiff in October, 1894, the two shares in David Mills Company, Limited, as proved by the transfers (Ex. P). I, therefore, look upon the express agreement of 1895 as a myth. No other express agreement at any other time or place is set up.

It is true, as I have already said before, that, so far as the defendant is personally concerned, he entered into these contracts as merely gambling transactions. It is more than probable that the plaintiff could guess the defendant's real intentions. He must have known the defendant's position and means. He could have had no difficulty in thinking or inferring that the defendant did not mean or intend to perform the contracts in specie. His accounts and his course of dealing with the defendant are consistent with the supposition, on plaintiff’s part, that the defendant only meant to pay or receive differences. But I cannot hold that such supposition or inference on the plaintiff’s part is, per se, without more, equal to a binding agreement. The consent on his part was wanting. It stated both to pay and receive the differences. The plaintiff acquiesced in settling the contracts in that way. But there is nothing to show that he never possessed the right to call for the actual performance of the contracts if at any time he choose to do so. In other words, it has not been shown that these speculative contracts were also wagering contracts.

I have accordingly come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the losses which he paid to third parties in respect of the contracts made by the plaintiff on the defendant’s behalf and that such losses form a valid consideration pro tanto for the notes now sued upon.

[988] It is not necessary for me to discuss, in detail, the evidence relating to the adjustment of the accounts between the parties and the execution by the defendant of the two original notes for Rs. 5,788 (Ex. A) and Rs. 1,000 (Ex. 4). I accept, in the main, the evidence of the plaintiff and his witness Nowroji Darasba Reporter upon this point. I think that the loans of Rs. 300+150+40 and interest at 9 annas per cent. per mensem formed portion of the consideration for the two notes. The difference on this point is far more consistent with the actual facts and figures than the evidence of the defendant himself. As to the execution of the substituted note (Ex. B), it is immaterial to inquire into the motives of the plaintiff for taking it in lieu of the original note (Ex. 4). It may be that he thought, as the defendant suggests, that it would be safer for him to substitute a different date so as to dissociate it from the adjustment of the 21st December, 1897, in respect of the contracts in question. As, however, in my opinion, the original note (Ex. 4) was not void for want of a valid consideration, so equally the note now sued upon (Ex. B), which was taken in substitution for it, is also valid.

I accordingly hold that there was full and valid consideration for both the notes, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amounts due upon them.

I now proceed to record my findings upon the issues:

1. In the affirmative and for the plaintiff.
2. In the negative and for the plaintiff.
3. In the affirmative.
4. In the negative and for the plaintiff.
5. In the affirmative; and I pass a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 6,788 with interest at 8 per cent. per annum upon Rs. 5,788 from 21st December, 1897, and upon Rs. 1,000 from the 30th December, 1897, till this day and costs. Further interest on judgment at six per cent. per annum till payment.

[909] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Strachey.

HIRJIBHAI CURSETJI BHANDUPWALA (Plaintiff) v. BARJORJI SORABJI ASHBURNER AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[12th July, 1898]

 Parsis—Intestate succession among Parsis—Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), s. 7.
Sch. II, cl. 2—Construction—N.xi of kin.

One Jerbai, a Parsi widow, died intestate and without issue, her father, mother, three brothers and two sisters having predeceased her. Two of her brothers and one sister had left children. Some of these children had also predeceased her, leaving children (grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Two of this last mentioned class had also predeceased her, leaving children (great-grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai).

Held, that Jerbai's property should, in the first instance, be divided into three shares, i.e., one for each of the two predeceased brothers who left children, and one for the predeceased sister who left a child. Each brother's share to be two-fifths and the sister's one fifth. The shares to be sub-divided among the descendants of the two brothers and the sister respectively, no descendant being entitled to share concurrently with his or her ancestor and, on each division and sub-division, each male taking double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity.

In art. 2 of the second schedule of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865) the gift to lineal descendants is substitutional in the sense that they take nothing if the head of their branch of the family is living, whereas if he is dead, they stand in his place and take the share which he would have taken. In distributing an estate, therefore, "among brothers and sisters and the lineal descendants of such of them as have predeceased the intestate," the primary division must be per stirpes. If there are surviving brothers and lineal descendants of a predeceased brother, then each surviving brother will take equal shares with the lineal descendants collectively. If all the brothers are dead, then the share which each would have taken, had he survived, will be taken by his lineal descendants. If in either case the predeceased was a sister, her lineal descendants will take her half-share only.

In both ss. 6 and 7 of the Parsi Succession Act the words "next-of-kin" and "relatives" are synonymous, and are collective names for the persons mentioned in the first and second schedules respectively.

ORIGINATING summons (under rule 82 of the High Court Rules) taken out by the plaintiff in order to ascertain the mode in which the estate of an intestate Parsi should be distributed, having regard to the provisions of the Parsi Intestate Succession Act.

[910] One Jerbai, a Parsi widow, died intestate and without issue, in April, 1897, leaving considerable property. Her father and mother, and brothers and sisters, were all dead. She left, her surviving, a number of nephews and nieces (children of her predeceased brothers Sorabji and Cursetji). Other nephews and nieces had predeceased her, leaving children (i.e., grand-nephews and grand-nieces of Jerbai), and some also of these grand nephews and grand-nieces had died in Jerbai's lifetime and had left children. There were thus three generations of claimants to the estate, viz., nephews and nieces, grand-nephews and nieces, and great-grand-nephews and nieces.

* Suit No. 101 of 1898.
The annexed table sufficiently shows the family. Those who are stated to be dead therein had died in the life-time of Jerbai.

Jerbai’s eldest brother Sorabji had left a son Burjorji and three daughters, viz., Ratanbai, Manekbai and Dinbai. The daughters predeceased Jerbai, but all of them left children, and two of them (Manekbai and Dinbai) both children and grand-children.

Thus it appeared that some of Jerbai’s nephews and nieces survived her and some had already died. Those who had died had left children (both sons and daughters); and two nieces (Manekbai and Dinbai) had left both children and grand-children.

The plaint was filed in March, 1898, by Hirjibhai, who was one of the nephews of Jerbai (son of her brother Cursetji) and the administrator of her estate.

The second paragraph of the plaint stated the names of the surviving nephews (seven in number) and nieces (two in number) of the deceased Jerbai, being the children of her two brothers Sorabji and Cursetji.

The third paragraph stated that others of her nephews and nieces had died in her life-time, leaving children whose names were set forth.

The fourth paragraph set forth the names of the great-grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai.

On the day the plaint was filed, an originating summons was also filed by the plaintiff stating the following questions for the Court:

1. Whether the persons named in paragraph 2 of the plaint herein (i.e., nephews and nieces) are not the only persons entitled to share in the estate of Jerbai, deceased, in the plaint mentioned.

2. Whether the persons named in paragraph 3 of the plaint, or any of them (i.e., grand-nephews and nieces) are entitled to any share in the said estate.

3. Whether the persons named in paragraph 4 of the plaint, or any of them, (i.e., great-grand-nephews and nieces) are entitled to any share in the said estate.

4. Into what shares the said estate is to be divided among those declared to be entitled to it.
The questions raised depended on the construction of s. 7 and cl. 2 of the second schedule of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), which are as follows:—

"7. When a Parsi dies leaving neither lineal descendants nor a widow or widower, his or her next-of-kin, in the order set forth in the second schedule hereto annexed, shall be entitled to succeed to the whole of the property as to which he or she shall have died intestate.

The next-of-kin standing first in the same schedule shall always be preferred to those standing second, the second to the third, and so on in succession: provided that the property shall be so distributed as that each male shall take double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity."

[912] "Art. 2, sch. 2:—Brothers and sisters and the lineal descendants of such of them as shall have predeceased the intestate."

It was (inter alia) contended that the words "next-of-kin" in the above section meant nearest of kin and that by the section it was intended that those members of the various classes of relatives mentioned in the schedule who were the nearest of kin to the intestate should take the estate, the effect being in this case that the estate would go to the surviving nephews and nieces to the exclusion of their children and grand-children.

On the other hand, it was contended that under the above article of the second schedule all the lineal descendants of the intestate's predeceased brothers and sisters were entitled to a share of the estate.

Starting, for the plaintiff.

Lang (Advocate General), Anderson, Rivett Carnac, Scott, Rikes and Lowndes, appeared for the various defendants.

JUDGMENT.

STRACHEY, J.—This originating summons raises an important question of the law of intestate succession among Parsis, upon which there is no authority. It relates to the construction of s. 7 and art. 2 of the second schedule of the Parsi Succession Act, XXI of 1865, and to the distribution of the property of a Parsi dying intestate whose nearest living relatives are the lineal descendants, in different degrees, of predeceased brothers or sisters. The question arises in this way. Jerbai, a Parsi lady of Bombay, the widow of Pestoji Hormusji Suntoke, died intestate in 1897, leaving property of considerable value. She left her surviving no lineal descendant, father or mother, brother or sister. There had predeceased her three brothers, Sorabji, Cursetjee and Naoroji, and two sisters, Meherbai and Cursetbai. Naoroji and Meherbai died without issue. Sorabji left a son now living and three daughters who predeceased the intestate. Of the first daughter the issue now living are two children, of the second nine children and a grand-child by a deceased daughter, of the third a child and six grand-children by a deceased son. Cursetji left eight children now living and a son who predeceased the intestate, leaving a daughter who survives her. Cursetbai left a daughter who predeceased the intestate, leaving a daughter still living. I understand that some of [913] these living nephews and nieces, grand-nephews and grand-nieces, great-grand-nephews and great-grand-nieces of the intestate have issue born before the intestate's death, so that the genealogical table (Ex. A) which has been accepted as correct by all parties, but which does not mention any one whose father or mother is alive, is not a complete statement of all the persons now living who are lineally descended from the intestate's brothers and sisters. This summons has been taken out by the administrator of Jerbai’s estate, who is a son of her brother Cursetji, for the purpose of determining who are the persons entitled to share in the estate, and into what shares it is to be divided among them. The defendants represent all the persons other than the plaintiff who could be entitled to share in the estate as lineal descendants of the brothers and sisters of the intestate.

The questions to be determined depend, first, on s. 7 of Act XXI of 1865, which provides for the case of a Parsi who dies intestate leaving neither lineal descendants nor a widow or widower. In that case, “His or her next-of-kin in the order set forth in the second schedule hereto annexed shall be entitled to succeed to the whole of the property as to which he or she shall have died intestate. The next-of-kin standing first in the same schedule shall always be preferred to those standing second, the second to the third, and so on in succession, provided that the property shall be so distributed as that each male shall take double the share of each female standing in the same degree of proinquity.”

The second schedule consists of eighteen sub-divisions or articles, the first of which is “father and mother,” and the second, on which this case depends, “brothers and sisters and the lineal descendants of such of them as shall have predeceased the intestate.”

Before dealing with these words, it is necessary to understand s. 7 with which they must be read. That section refers to the schedule by providing that the persons entitled to succeed are the “next-of-kin, in the order set forth in the second schedule.” It has been argued that this means that, in determining the persons entitled, one must look not only to the order in which the articles of the schedule stand, but also to differences in respect of nearness of kin within the particular articles themselves, so that although art. 2, for instance, includes in one general class all lineal descendants of predeceased brothers and sisters, a nephew, being nearer of kin to the intestate, should be preferred to a grand-nephew, a grand-nephew to a great-grand-nephew, and so on. It has been contended that, on this principle, a grand-nephew or grand-niece can never share with nephews and nieces, and that, therefore, the only persons entitled to share in Jerbai’s estate are her nephews and nieces to the exclusion of all remoter descendants of her brothers and sisters. I do not agree with this construction of the word “next-of-kin.” As used in s. 7, it appears to me to be merely a collective name for all the persons and classes enumerated in the schedule. It merely incorporates the schedule in the section, and the effect is exactly as if the Legislature had said that, in the case of a Parsi dying intestate without lineal descendants or widow, his next-of-kin should be entitled to succeed to his property, and that in reckoning his next-of-kin his father and mother, if living, should be deemed nearest, the relatives mentioned in the second article next, and so on, throughout the schedule. The argument with which I am dealing is inconsistent with the principle, which was admitted on all hands, that, under art. 2, surviving brothers or sisters would not exclude but would share with the children of a predeceased brother or sister. Again, s. 7 and the second schedule must be construed, as far as possible, upon principles which are in harmony with s. 6 and the first schedule. Both sections deal with the case of a Parsi dying intestate without leaving lineal descendants, the difference being that, in the case of s. 6, he leaves a widow who takes a moiety, so that only a moiety has to be distributed among his next-of-kin, while, in the case of s. 7, he leaves no widow, and the next-of-kin take the whole. The first schedule is substantially, though not verbally, identical with the first six articles of the second; so that the moiety which the next-of-kin take where there is a widow, and the whole estate which they take where there is none, descend in the same way, except that in the former case, if there are no relatives on the father’s side, the widow, and not the maternal relatives, takes the whole. It is, therefore, improbable that the words in s. 7 “next-of-kin in the order set forth in [915] the second schedule” were intended to introduce into the articles of that schedule any principle of priority or exclusion which his absent from s. 6 and the first schedule. But in the third paragraph of s. 6, the words used are “the intestate’s relatives on the father’s side in the order specified in the first schedule,” from which no preference as between the lineal descendants mentioned in any article of the first schedule can be deduced. In the fourth paragraph of s. 6, just as in the second paragraph of s. 7, the word “next-of-kin” and not “relatives” is used, and then in the last paragraph the word used is again “relatives.” Mr. Starling pointed out that the word “relatives” could not have been accurately used in s. 7, as the son’s widow mentioned in art. 10 of the second schedule and the brother’s widow mentioned in art. 11 not being related to the intestate by blood are not, in strictness, his relatives. Exactly the same objection, however, applies to the use of the word “next-of-kin,” for the son’s or brother’s widow is no more “of kin” to the intestate in the strict sense than “related” to him. I draw the inference that in both sections the word “next-of-kin” is used as synonymous with relatives, and as a collective name for the persons mentioned in the first and second schedules respectively. So far, then,
s. 7 affords no reason for supposing that under art. 2 of the second schedule nephews or nieces exclude grand-nephews or grand-nieces of the intestate.
Taking next the second paragraph of the section, the words down to the proviso only mean that all persons mentioned in the first article of the schedule must be dead before any person mentioned in the second article can succeed, and so on throughout the schedule. The only preference or exclusion suggested is as between persons mentioned in different articles;
one is indicated as between persons mentioned in the same article inter se.
But then comes the proviso to the section: “provided that the property shall be so distributed as that each male shall take double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity.” This does undoubtedly imply some distinction between the different degrees of propinquity to the intestate, and it is necessary to see what the distinction is. A “degree of propinquity” does not mean an article of the schedule, and standing in the same degree of propinquity [916] does not mean included in the same article. If that were the meaning, the words would be superfluous, as exactly the same result would follow if they were left out of the section. A “degree of propinquity,” then, can only refer to nearness of blood to the intestate, so that, within a particular article, such as art. 2, there may be persons of different degrees: nephews and nieces are of one degree, grand-nephews and grand-nieces of another, and so on.
But the proviso does not, like s. 41 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), say or suggest that a nearer degree of propinquity is to exclude or be preferred to a more remote. All that it says is that, in any given degree, each male is to take double the share of a female, a brother double the share of a sister, a nephew double the share of a niece. As between different degrees the rule of each male taking double the share of each female does not apply: a grand-nephew does not necessarily take double the share of a niece, nor a great grand-nephew double the share of a grand-niece. Nor does the section say that all males \textit{inter se} or all females \textit{inter se} standing in the same degree of propinquity, must necessarily take equal shares. It is consistent with its terms that some nephews make take larger shares than others, and the same as regards nieces.

Therefore, in construing the schedule, s. 7 so far helps us as to show (1) that where it was intended that any class of relatives should, if living, absolutely exclude any other, they were placed within a separate article; (2) that, within the particular articles, differences in propinquity of blood are so far recognized that each degree constitutes a class, not for the purpose of excluding or being preferred to any other, but for the purpose of giving each male double the share of each female with it; (3) that all males within a particular article, or even within a particular degree of propinquity, do not necessarily take equal shares. Apart from s. 7 there are no other legal provisions which appear to me to throw much light on the construction of art. 2. It would not, in my opinion, be safe to base any inferences regarding the article upon the provisions of the English law or those of the Indian Succession Act in reference to the distribution of an intestate's property. Act XXI of 1865 was enacted for the express purpose of withdrawing the Parsis from the English law [917] of intestate succession, which until then had governed them. Section 8 was enacted for the express purpose of exempting them from parts III, IV and V of the Indian Succession Act which was passed in the same year. I am not aware of any usage, as distinct from law, existing among Parsis prior to 1865, upon which art. 2 may have been based or which might throw light upon its instruction. There is no decided case on the subject. There are somewhat analogous cases in the law of testamentary succession—decisions upon the construction of gifts expressed in words more or less similar to art. 2—explaining what gifts are to be construed as substitutional and what as concurrent, in what cases parties take \textit{per stirpes} or \textit{per capita} and so on. Some of these cases have been cited. Perhaps there is something to be gained in conceiving of the provisions of a law of intestate succession as a sort of testamentary directions provided by the Legislature where the deceased has left none of his own, and in this connection it should be remembered that the law of testamentary succession contained in the Indian Succession Act, and the English decisions upon which it is chiefly based, are fully applicable to Parsis. But the difference between construing a will and construing an Act is so great that the usefulness of analogies of this kind is extremely small.

The article, read with the section, gives the estate to "brothers and sisters, and the lineal descendants of such of them as shall have predeceased the intestate." In this case there are no brothers or sisters, but there are lineal descendants in different degrees of two predeceased brothers and one predeceased sister. The words used are capable of more than one construction. Is the estate to be divided \textit{per capita} among all persons within the description of lineal descendants of a brother or sister, in equal shares, subject to the rule that each male is to take double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity? If it is to be divided \textit{per capita}, can you exclude grand-nephews or great-grand-nephews either on the ground that others are nearer of kin to the intestate, or on the ground that no one can be deemed the lineal descendant of a brother, unless every intermediate ancestor is dead? Is the estate to be divided not \textit{per capita} but \textit{per stirpes}, and if so, what \textit{stirpes} are to be taken as the basis of division? These [948] are the questions which have been discussed. The second can be disposed of in a few words. If the division is to be per capita. I have already stated why, in my opinion, the word "next-of-kin" in s. 7 affords no reason for preferring nearer lineal descendants to more remote. That disposes of one of Mr. Starling's arguments for the plaintiff. Nor, if the division is to be per capita, can I agree with Mr. Raikes that the children or remoter issue of his clients or of other living descendants should be excluded. I think that, in the case supposed, they would take concurrently with their parents. I think that the expression "lineal descendants" is used in the schedule in the same sense as in s. 86 of the Indian Succession Act, and I can see no ground for the view that the grandson of a deceased brother is not a lineal descendant during his own father's lifetime but becomes one for the first time upon his father's death. Art. 2 clearly implies the contrary, for otherwise it would have said merely "and their lineal descendants," and the remaining words would be surplusage. If, therefore, the division is to be per capita, I think that all lineal descendants whatever of predeceased brothers and sisters must be entitled to share, the most remote equally with the nearest, children and grand-children taking concurrently with their parents and grand-parents.

The question is, whether the division is to be per stirpes or per capita. Now, in considering art. 2, the most obvious point is that the lineal descendants entitled are exclusively those of brothers and sisters who have predeceased the intestate. Lineal descendants of surviving brothers or sisters are entirely excluded. Suppose the case of an intestate having four brothers, all of whom survive him having numerous children and grand-children. The brothers take the whole estate in equal shares; none of their children or grand-children take anything. The Legislature thought that the families would be sufficiently provided for by giving the estate to their heads, the brothers. Now suppose that, instead of all four brothers surviving, one of them dies a day before the intestate, leaving five sons and five grandsons. It is common ground that in such a case, the three surviving brothers would not exclude, but would share with the deceased brother's family. If the division is to be per capita, the [9.9] result of the one brother's death a day before the intestate's is that each of the surviving brothers, who in the event of the deceased having lived a day longer, would have taken one-fourth of the estate, now gets only a one-thirteenth share for himself and his family—a family which is as closely connected with the intestate as that of the deceased brother, which may be far more numerous, but which is absolutely excluded from the division. Each member of the deceased brother's family—son, grandson, or great-grandson—by reason of that brother's death at that particular time is placed on an equal footing with each surviving brother of the intestate, and on a superior footing to every member of the surviving brothers' families. If each of the families of the surviving brothers is larger than that of the deceased brother, then the practical effect of that brother predeceasing the intestate may be to give the smallest family a much greater portion of the estate than is taken by the three larger families put together. These results are still more singular if the predeceased, instead of being a brother was a sister of the intestate, who, if she had survived him, would have taken only half as much as each of her brothers, that is, one-seventh of the estate. By reason of her death a day before the intestate, a division per capita distributes among her branch of the family ten-thirteenths of the whole, each male member, near or remote, sharing equally with her brothers. These consequences would necessarily flow from a division of the estate per capita.
Other results equally anomalous were pointed out by Mr. Scott and Mr. Lowndes. I do not think that such a method of division can have been intended by the Legislature. I think that the gift to lineal descendants is substitutional, in the sense that they take nothing if the head of their branch of the family is living, whereas, if he is dead, they stand in his place and take the share which he would have taken. The object is to provide for a branch of the family which has lost its natural head, not to diminish the provision for the heads of other branches, nor to give a smaller branch a greater portion than a larger one merely because its head has predeceased the intestate. I think, therefore, that in distributing the estate among "brothers and sisters and the lineal descendants or such of them as shall have predeceased the intestate [920] the primary division must be per stirpes. If there are surviving brothers, and lineal descendants of a predeceased brother, then each surviving brother will take equal shares with the lineal descendants collectively. If all the brothers are dead, then the share which each would have taken had he survived, will be taken by his lineal descendants. If, in either case, the predeceased was a sister, her lineal descendants will take her half-share only. I do not think that this construction does violence to the language of s. 7 and art. 2. The Act provides that the lineal descendants of deceased brothers and sisters shall, in certain events, succeed to the property of the intestate, and succession per stirpes is as consistent with such terms as succession per capita, and is, I think, more consistent with the context and with the probable objects of the Legislature.

But if the primary division is per stirpes, what is the secondary division? The lineal descendants of a predeceased brother are to take the share which he would have taken, but how are they to take it? Is the division among them also to be per stirpes, or is it to be per capita? I think that it must be per stirpes. If the Legislature intended the lineal descendants to take per stirpes, I do not think that you can stop at the first or any other generation, and say that those following are to take per capita. I think, to use the words of Lord Romilly in Gibson v. Fisher (1), "that the rule of the stirpes must run through every descent, considering that per stirpes is an expression which means that all the persons who are to take are to take per stirpes, and that this must run through the whole range of the descents."

The only difficulty to my mind is to reconcile this mode of division with the proviso to s. 7, that the property must be so distributed as that each male shall take double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity. If, for instance, there were a division per stirpes among the children of two predeceased brothers, of whom one left a son and a daughter and the other six sons, it is obvious that the intestate's niece would take one-sixth of the estate, or twice as much as each of her male cousins. The only way to get over this difficulty is to read the proviso as if the words "within the same stirpes" or similar words were added. That would, for instance, make the proviso applicable as between the children of Cursetji inter se, but not as between the children of Cursetji and the children of Sorabji. No doubt a construction which requires words to be read into a section is objectionable if it can be avoided. But what is the alternative? If the division is to be per capita, it will be found that the words "standing in the same degree of propinquity" are wholly superfluous. You cannot, in such a division, give every nephew double the share of every niece without also giving him double the share of every grand-niece, nor without giving every grand-nephew or great-grand-nephew double the share of every niece, so that what you do is really to give every male double the share of every female, irrespective of differences in degree of propinquity altogether. Yet the words "standing in the same degree of propinquity" were clearly enacted with some object; and a construction which ignores words is as objectionable as a construction which inserts them. There is, however, no other alternative. On the other hand, a division per stirpes does give effect to the distinction contemplated by the proviso, if the proviso is read in a sense which, on the assumption of such a division, is reasonable.

The conclusion at which I have arrived is that the intestate's property should be divided according to the principle explained in Gipson v. Fisher, the first division being into three shares corresponding with the predeceased brothers Sorabji and Cursetji and the sister Cursetbai. What may be called Sorabji's share is two-fifths of the estate, Cursetji's share also two-fifths, and Cursetbai's one-fifth. These shares will be sub-divided among the male descendants of Sorabji, Cursetji and Cursetbai, respectively, no descendant being entitled to share concurrently with his or her ancestor, and, on each division and sub-division, each male taking double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity.

The answer to the first question stated in the summons is in the negative.

The answer to the second and third questions is that all the living persons named in the third and fourth paragraphs of the plaint are entitled to share in the estate.

[922] The answer to the fourth question is as follows:—The whole of Cursetbai's one-fifth share will go to her grand-daughter, the third defendant Bhicaiji. Cursetji's two-fifths share will be divided among his children, each son taking double the portion of each daughter, the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 taking the portion of their assignor Hormusji (without prejudice to any question which may hereafter be raised with reference to the assignment), and Ratanbai taking the portion of the deceased Rustomji. Sorabji's two-fifths share will be divided so that a two-fifths portion goes to the first defendant Barjorji. A one-fifth portion of the same share will be taken in equal parts by Bapuji and Bomoni, the sons of Ratanbai. Another one-fifth portion of the same share will be taken by the children of Manekbai, each son taking double the portion of each daughter, and the grand-child Pirozbai taking the portion of the deceased Awabai. Of the remaining one-fifth portion of Sorabji's share, Framji, the son of Dinbai, will take a moiety, and the other moiety will be taken by the children of Dadabai, each son taking double the portion of Golbai. The costs of all parties to this summons will be paid out of the estate. The plaintiff's costs to be taxed as between attorney and client.

BALARAM BHASKARJI AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. RAMCHANDRA BHASKARJI AND OTHERS (Defendants).*  [29th and 30th August, 1898.]

The plaintiff sued for partition of certain property, alleging it to be joint family property. It consisted of a house in Bombay and certain lands at Vavla [923] in the Thana District, outside the jurisdiction of the Court. The parties were all resident in Bombay.

Held, that as to the Vavla property the Court had no jurisdiction, the plaintiff not having obtained leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, but that suit might proceed as regards the property in Bombay.

Punchanan v. Shib Chunder (1) followed.

As to the house in Bombay, the first defendant alleged that it was his self-acquired property; that he had purchased it in his own name in 1863 out of his private funds that there were no family funds and that neither his father nor his brothers (the latter of whom were then very young) were in a position to contribute anything towards the purchase; that by his invitation his father and brother had lived with him in the house; that his father had died then and that one of his brothers had subsequently left the house and with his family had gone to reside elsewhere; that the plaintiff (the youngest brother of the first defendant) had continued to occupy a room in the house by the first defendant's permission up to the date of suit. The plaintiff, on the other hand, relied on the facts that the house was purchased and used as a family residence while the father and sons were all living in union; that it was bought in the name of the eldest son (defendant No. 1), who was then the manager of the family; that the father lived and died there, and that he himself (the plaintiff) and his family had continued to live there, even after he had separated in fact from his brother (defendant No. 1).

Held, that the house was liable to partition. No doubt the onus of proof was upon the plaintiff. The facts, however, proved by him or admitted by the first defendant raised a strong presumption that the house was family property and against it there was only the first defendant's statement that the house was bought with his own money. But there was nothing to show that he kept a private fund apart from the family funds. He was the manager of the family and he kept no separate accounts.

SUIT for partition. The plaintiff was the third son of one Bhaskarji Bhikaji, who died intestate in 1867 leaving, him surviving, four sons and three daughters.

The first defendant was the eldest son and he was in possession of the property in dispute. The property consisted of—

(a) a house in Khatargalli in Bombay alleged by the plaintiff to have been purchased in 1863 out of family funds, but in the name of the first defendant, who as eldest son was then the manager of the family;

(b) certain fields at Vavla in the Thana District (outside the [924] jurisdiction), some of which the plaintiff alleged had descended from his grandfather and some had been purchased in his father's lifetime out of family funds, but in the first defendant's name;

* Suit No. 64 of 1897.
(1) 14 C. 885.
(c) other fields, also in the Thana District, purchased after his father’s death by the first defendant in his own name, but out of the family funds.

The plaintiff in his plaint claimed partition of all the above property. The first defendant denied that the plaintiff was entitled to partition. He alleged that all the above property, with the exception of one field in class (b), was his own self-acquired property purchased by himself out of his own earnings. He denied that there had ever been any common family funds.

At the hearing it was (inter alia) contended on behalf of the first defendant that the suit should be dismissed on the grounds (1) that the suit was a suit for land partly within and partly outside the jurisdiction of the Court, and, therefore, leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, was necessary, but had not been obtained; (2) that the suit having thus been improperly brought, the plaintiff could not now elect to abandon or postpone his claim to the property outside the jurisdiction and proceed as to part of his claim, nor could the Court hear the suit so altered; (3) that the rule was that there could not be a suit for partial partition; that the plaintiff must claim complete partition, and that the law having provided a procedure for so doing when the property lay in different jurisdictions, that procedure must be followed or the plaintiff must fail.

The arguments and authorities cited appear from the judgment.

Bahadurji and Jina for the plaintiffs.

Kirkpatrick and Settur for the first defendant.

In addition to the authorities mentioned in the judgment, the following cases were also referred to. As to jurisdiction in cases of partition, Ramacharya v. Anantacharya (1). As to suing for partial partition, Radha Churn v. Kripa Sindhu (2). As to onus of proof, [925] Dhunookdharee v. Gunpat (3); Phoolbas Koer v. Lall Juggessur (4); Pran Kristo v. Sreemutty Bhagereute (5); Obhoy Churn v. Govind Chunder (6); Nanabhai v. Achrabhai (7); Toolseydas v. Premji (8); Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbooy (9); Denonath Shaw v. Hurrnaryain Shaw (10).

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—In this suit the plaintiff claims partition of land and immovable property situated in Bombay and at Vavla in the Thana District. The parties all live in Bombay. The preliminary question arises as to the jurisdiction of the Court to try such a suit.

This question depends upon the construction of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of this Court (His Lordship read the clause and continued). The uniform practice of the three High Courts at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras has apparently been to read that clause as if it ran as follows:—

"The said High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive, try, and determine suits of every description if.

(a) in the case of suits for land or other immovable property, such land or property shall be situated either wholly, or in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court, or if

“(b) in all other cases the cause of action shall have arisen either wholly, or, in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court, or if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within such limits.”

I confess, were the matter res integra, I should be inclined to doubt the correctness of the above construction, but there are obvious difficulties in whatever way we regard the clause, and I am not prepared after this lapse of time to question the uniform practice of all the Courts.

As authorities for the proposition that the words as to leave being first obtained apply both to suits for land or other immovable property, and also to all other cases, I may refer to the judgment of Norman, J., in Prosanna Mayi Dasi v. [926] Kadambini Dasi (1) followed by Phear, J., who alluded to the uniform practice in Jagadambo Dasi v. Padmamani Dasi (2) and by Sir A. Collins, C.J., Parker, J., and Shephard, J., in Seshagiri Rao v. Bama Rao (3), and by West, J., in Jairam Narayan Raju v. Atmaram Narayan Raju (4). The words “in all other cases” in cl. 12 mean those suits in which immovable property is not involved—per West, J., in Jairam v. Atmaram, supra.

As authorities for the proposition that the condition as to defendant’s residence or carrying on business relate solely to all other cases, and not to suits for land or other immovable property, I may refer to the judgment of Macpherson, J., in Bibi Jaun v. Meerza Mahomed Hadee (5), where it was held that as the land was not within the local jurisdiction, the suit could not be entertained by the Court merely on the ground that defendant was personally dwelling in Calcutta; and to the judgment of Phear, J., in Khalut Chunder Ghose v. Minto (6), where it was held that as defendant dwelt within the local limits the Court had jurisdiction unless it was a suit for land not within the local limits. Further support for this proposition may be obtained from the fact that it has never been apparently contended that a defendant residing in Bombay could be sued in the Bombay High Court for land, say in Calcutta, simply because the defendant resided in Bombay. That a suit for partition of landed property is a suit for land, there can be no doubt (See judgment of Phear, J., in a former stage of the above noticed case, Padmamani v. Jagadambo (7).

Applying the above law to the present case it is seen that it is a suit for land partly in Bombay and partly at Vavla in the Thana District. No leave of the Court has been obtained under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. Therefore this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as regards the property at Vavla.

So much cannot be denied; but Mr. Kirkpatrick for the first defendant goes further, and says that, as this suit is a suit for partition, it must include all the property alleged to be liable to partition, and as it cannot be so framed without the leave of the Court having been first obtained, the suit is in its inception bad, and should be dismissed. I hold that the suit could proceed as regards immovable property in Bombay, and my reasons for so holding were as follows:—The case of Punchanut

Mullick v. Shib Chunder Mullick (1) was a suit on all fours with the present one. Trevelyan, J., held that the suit was not liable to be dismissed on the ground that partial partition of a property cannot be granted, but the claim might be decreed as far as the property within the jurisdiction was concerned. Mr. Mayne says (5th edition, s. 452): "Every suit for a partition should embrace all the joint family property, unless different portions of it lie in different jurisdictions, in which case suits may be brought in the different Courts to which the property is subject." And, though all the cases quoted by Mr. Mayne in his note to the above passage do not apparently entirely support his proposition, one of them (Subba Rau v. Rama Rau (2)) is strongly in favour of it. That case had reference to ss. 11 and 12 of Act VIII of 1859; and Scotland, C. J., and Ellis, J., pointed out that the right of suit would no doubt have been absolute, and not, as it is, conditional on the leave of a superior Court, if the provision had been intended to be imperative. So here it is optional with the plaintiff to obtain the leave of the Court to bring the Vavla property within the jurisdiction of the Court. He has not done so, therefore, the suit as regards the Vavla property is bad, but as regards the Bombay property it remains good. No doubt cases may be easily imagined in which it might be inconvenient for separate suits to be brought. Mr. Justice Norman alluded to this in the judgment (Prasannamayi v. Kadambini (3)), quoted above. He said: "Partition suits are in all cases necessarily expensive enough. It would be most unfortunate if in all such cases we were obliged to say that two suits must be brought, one in the mofussil, and one within the local jurisdiction. The expenses would be doubled, and the decree would necessarily be far less satisfactory than that which would be arrived at when all the facts are before a single Judge in the same suit." Here the facts connected with the Vavla property are quite distinct from those connected with the Bombay property. The former was acquired at a different time and under different circumstances. In Hari Narayan Brahme v. Ganapatray Daji (4), Kemball, J., said: "No doubt the rule that every partition suit shall embrace all the joint family property has been held to be subject to certain qualifications, as, for instance, where different portions of it lie in different jurisdictions... but I am not aware of any authority for the proposition that a member who sues for partition of property in the hands of the defendant can refuse to bring into the hotchpot any undivided property held by himself on the ground that it is situated within another jurisdiction... It is obvious that when a plaintiff seeks to recover a share of property in the hands of the defendant, it is necessary for the Court to decide whether, under the circumstances of the case, his is entitled to that partition." So here: The plaintiff seeking partition is not refusing to bring into hotchpot any undivided property held by himself. Defendant does not assert that the Vavla property is undivided and liable to partition; he strongly asserts the contrary. Similarly in the Calcutta case (Padmamani v. Jagadamba (5)) quoted above, Phear, J., said: "I find nothing to make me think that the plaintiff must necessarily bring a suit, if he brings a suit at all, for partition of the whole of the joint property... If on the part of his client (the defendant) he (the Advocate-General) can go further than he has done, and would give me ground for thinking that a fair and equitable division of the joint property could not be come to without bringing in the mofussil property, and making that the subject of division together with the Calcutta property, I think I might possibly consider it right to stay the proceedings in this suit upon his undertaking to file a plaint within a reasonable time, embracing the whole of the property, and of course to ask for the necessary leave for that purpose.” So here I could stay proceedings for the same object, or to enable plaintiff to file a suit in the Thana Court for the Vavla property, and to then apply to this Court under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent for a removal of that suit to this Court, when both suits could be consolidated [939] and disposed of by one Judge. But there is no necessity for such a course. The question as to the Vavla property stands on its own footing quite apart from the Bombay property. Plaintiff wishes this suit as to the Bombay property to be disposed of on its own merits. He is willing to run the risk of his suit in a Thana Court for the Vavla property, if he files such a suit, being met with the plea that he relinquished his claim for the Vavla property, when he could have legally sued for the same by first obtaining the leave of the Court, and that, therefore, his second suit is bad. I express no opinion on such a plea. I have simply to deal with the Bombay property.

As to that property on the merits, the following facts are admitted or proved beyond doubt. Many years ago Bhaskar left his relatives and whatever family property there was at Vavla and came to earn his living in Bombay. This was at any rate before his eldest son (Ramchandra, the first defendant) was born in 1833. Bhaskar was then living with his wife in Vithalwadi where also his younger sons were born—viz., Sitaram about 1849, Balaram (plaintiff) about 1850, and Srikrishna about 1853. There were also three daughters. Bhaskar was a customs pass-writer, and apparently earned from Rs. 30 to Rs. 60 a month for six months at least in a year. The eldest son, Ramchandra, it will be noticed, was much older than his brothers, and of course he became capable of earning a salary long before they did. In 1858 he was married, and in that year he also began to earn a regular salary, which, though small at first (Rs. 10) gradually increased till in 1881 he was earning Rs. 88; and in 1882 he retired on a pension of Rs. 41 odd. In 1861 or 1862, Bhaskar’s wife, the mother of these sons, died. From that time the eldest son, Ramchandra, managed the family affairs. His wife was the senior lady in the house, and the father, Bhaskar, was getting old. In December, 1867, he died; but prior to that in 1863, he and his family had removed from Vithalwadi to the Khattargalli house, the subject of the present suit. It was purchased in the name of Ramchandra in partnership with one Sakbaram, whose share was subsequently partitioned of. In Ramchandra’s share he and his father and brothers all lived together. Four months after his father’s death, i.e., in 1868, [930] Sitaram (who had been married in 1864, and who in 1866 began to earn a salary, all or most of which he handed over to the family manager) left the Khattargalli house, and with his wife resided separately from the other members of the family. With his own earnings he subsequently purchased a house for Rs. 800, which, after his death in 1881, his widow, Savitribai (third defendant), sold. He left two sons, the third and fourth defendants. One of these now lives with his uncle, Ramchandra, the first defendant; the other lives with his mother. It is admitted that the house purchased by Sitaram, after he had separated in residence from his brethren, was his self-acquired property and not joint. It is also admitted that if the Khattargalli house is liable to partition, then defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are entitled to one-third share therein. Savitribai would also be entitled to residence.
Srikrishna, the fourth son, was married in 1878, and he lived in the Khattargalli house till his death in 1886. He did not earn any fixed salary. His widow is Radhabai, the second defendant. These defendants (second, third, fourth, and fifth) have taken no active part in the present suit.

There remains the third son, Balaram, the present plaintiff. He was a youth of thirteen when the family moved to the Khattargalli house in 1863. In 1872 he was married, and in that year also he began to earn a fixed salary, which has risen from Rs. 20 to Rs. 35 in 1882. This he asserts he paid over almost entirely to his eldest brother. He also asserts that he published a book in 1877, the profits of which were taken by his eldest brother or by the wife of the latter. This latter assertion is not denied. Ramchandra also admits that plaintiff paid him monthly Rs. 15, and from 1877 Rs. 20. In 1885, Balaram had a dispute with his brother Ramchandra, and from then ceased to take food with him; but he has continued to occupy a room in the house.

These are the main facts, and on them the question is, whether plaintiff is entitled to say that the Khattargalli house is joint property. In the arguments at the Bar stress was laid on the burden of proof, and various dicta were quoted from several cases. But I agree with Mr. Mayne that it is impossible to lay down an abstract proposition of law which will govern every case, [931] however different its facts (5th edition, s. 267). Of course the onus is primarily on the plaintiff. He comes into Court and asserts that the house is joint family property. It is for him to show prima facie that it is so. He points to the fact that it was purchased as a family residence while the father and his sons were all living in union; it was bought in the name of the eldest son, Ramchandra, who was then the manager of the family; the father lived and died there. Balaram and his family have continued to live there, even after he has separated in food from his brother. If defendant's witness is to be believed, Ramchandra tried to eject Balaram, and the latter refused to go.

What has Ramchandra got to show against the strong presumption from those facts? He says that he purchased the house with his own private funds. Rs. 50 were paid by him as earnest-money and Rs. 50 by Sakharam. Then each paid Rs. 450 when the deed of sale was signed. Then each paid Rs. 20 a month for seven years, after which there was a balance paid in a lump sum. All this is, no doubt, perfectly true, but what is there to show that these moneys were paid by Ramchandra from his private purse quite apart from the family funds? No separate accounts were kept, that is admitted. Sakharam, to support his former partner says that to procure the Rs. 450, in his presence Ramchandra's wife took the ornaments off her person and handed them to him for sale—a story hardly worthy of credit. The ornaments are said to have been sold to a person whose son is alive, and who could have been called with the accounts to show the sale. The facts that Ramchandra subsequently raised Rs. 1,000 by a mortgage of his house (partly he says to make additions to this house and partly to pay for the marriage expenses of his brother, the plaintiff), which sum was repaid by installments, as also were three bonds (one for Rs. 200 in October, 1869, one for Rs. 450 in November, 1870, and one for Rs. 100 in March, 1873), point to the conclusion that Ramchandra treated the house as joint family property. He was evidently a generous eldest brother, educating two of his sisters' sons, and making due arrangements for raising funds for the marriages and other ceremonial expenses of his brothers and their families, without plunging the family into debt.

[932] It no doubt seems hard that he, the eldest and largest wage-earner in the family, should, when partition takes place, be in no better position than the youngest member of the family. But that is just one of the paradoxes to be met with in the system of the Hindu joint family. Of course, if Ramchandra could establish the fact that he kept a separate private purse, apart from the family funds which were used for the maintenance of all the members of the family, and if he could show that he purchased the house from the private purse, and always treated the house as his own separate property, then the fact that he let his father and brothers live in the house with him—possibly from love and affection—would not show that he had waived his separate rights as owner. But I have no doubt that, as so often is the case, Ramchandra had no thought of separate ownership apart from the other members of the family. Now that he has quarreled with the plaintiff he, not unnaturally, is loth to agree to partition. Hence the suit, fostered possibly by the touts who wrote the lawyer’s letters which are the cause of more than half the litigation in this Court.

I find that the Khettargali house is liable to partition. There must, therefore, be a decree for the plaintiff, and the case will go to the Commissioner to effect a partition, and if necessary under the Partition Act to sell the same. The costs of effecting partition will come out of the estate, but costs of plaintiff up to date must be borne by first defendant, as he has practically caused the suit. This will not include costs (if any) connected with the Vavla property. The plaintiff must bear all those. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 have incurred no costs. The Commissioner will make due provision for the maintenance and residence of the ladies Radhabai and Savitribai.

QUEEN-EMpress v. BABAJI LAXMAN.* [9th September, 1897.]

Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 11—Forest Act (VII of 1879), s. 69—Cattle straying in a reserved forest—Seizure by a forest officer of such cattle.

Section 11 of the Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871) having been applied to forests by s. 69 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1879), the seizure by a forest officer of cattle found straying in a reserved forest is legal, even though no damage has actually been done.

REFERENCE under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The facts, as found by the District Magistrate of Poona, were as follows:—

"The accused, Babaji Laxman, a forest guard, and Shankar Balvant Kulkarni were tried for illegal seizure of cattle (20 sheep and 5 goats) belonging to the complainant. The complainant alleged that his cattle did not trespass into the forest, but went by a public road. The evidence, however, showed that the cattle were grazing inside the forest. The Magistrate on personal inspection, though he found that the place where the cattle were alleged to have been grazing was forest, seems to have thought that it was not far enough from the road to justify their being impounded."

On these facts the Magistrate passed an order to the following effect:

"As the forest guard has illegally impounded the cattle, I direct that he should pay to the complainant Re. 1-9-0 on account of cattle-pound fees and Re. 1-9-0 on account of Court-fee expenses, &c."

The District Magistrate, being of opinion that this order was illegal, referred the case to the High Court.

The High Court issued notice to the complainant to show cause why the Magistrate's order awarding compensation should not be set aside.

Sadashiv R. Bakhale, for the complainant.

There was no appearance for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

[934] PARSONS, J.—The Magistrate has adjudged the seizure of the cattle in question illegal and awarded compensation to the owner under s. 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, because he was of opinion that they had done no damage even if they had strayed into the reserved forest in which it is alleged they were found straying, and were seized by the accused who was the forest officer in charge of the reserved forest. The Magistrate has apparently lost sight of the words "or found straying thereon" which occur in s. 11 of the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, which is applicable to forests by s. 59 of the Indian Forest Act, 1878. If the cattle were found straying in a reserved forest, as alleged by the accused, the seizure would be legal even if no damage had actually been done. There is no finding, that we can see, by the Magistrate on this point. We reverse the order and remand the case for re-trial.

[986] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

In re Chotalal Mathuradas.* [16th September, 1897.]

A Collector, on receiving information that his Deputy Chitnis had attempted to obtain a bribe, ordered his Assistant Collector to make an inquiry into the matter, with a view to taking action under s. 32 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879). The Assistant Collector found, on inquiry, that the charge of bribery was unfounded, and gave a sanction to prosecute the informant and his witnesses for giving false evidence. This sanction was revoked by the Collector. The Chitnis appealed to the High Court against the order revoking the sanction.

Held, that the inquiry made by the Assistant Collector was a departmental inquiry, and not a judicial proceeding, and that the Assistant Collector, while holding the inquiry, was not a Court. No sanction for prosecution was, therefore, necessary under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).

[Sec. 195. Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).]

APPLICATION under s. 435 of Act X of 1882.
The applicant, Chotalal Mathuradas, was the Deputy Chitnis of the Collector of Kaira.
The Collector received information that Chotalal had attempted to obtain a bribe from one Dungan Garud in respect of an official act.
The Collector thereupon ordered the Assistant Collector to make an inquiry into the matter with a view to his taking action under s. 32 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879).
The Assistant Collector found, on inquiry, that the charge of bribery was entirely unfounded, and was made maliciously. He, therefore, gave sanction to prosecute the informant and his witnesses for giving false evidence.

On appeal to the Collector the sanction was revoked.

[937] Against this order of revocation, the Deputy Chitnis, Chotalal, made the present application to the High Court under its Revisional Jurisdiction.

C. H. Setalvad, for applicant.—The Collector had no power to revoke the sanction. The only authority that could revoke the sanction was the Sessions Judge or, failing him, the High Court—s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). The Collector’s order is, therefore, ultra vires. Refer to Sheo Prasad Singh v. Kastura Kuar (1); In re Parsotom Lal v. Bijai (2).

Rao Bahadur Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—The order of revocation was right, for the sanction is unnecessary and was erroneously granted. The inquiry in the course of which the informant is alleged to have committed perjury was a departmental inquiry and not a judicial proceeding. There are certain inquiries under the Land Revenue Code which are expressly declared to be judicial proceedings. Section 196 of the Code shows what those inquiries are. They are called "formal or summary" inquiries. The inquiry in the present case is not either a formal or summary inquiry. It is an ordinary departmental inquiry falling under s. 197 of the Code. As such, it is not a judicial proceeding, and the officer who held the inquiry is not a Court. The distinction between a judicial and an administrative inquiry is pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Tulja (3).

Gokaldas K. Parekh, for accused.—This Court has no jurisdiction to interfere in revision with the Collector’s order. The proceedings before the Collector cannot be treated as a judicial inquiry. And the Collector did not profess to act as a Judge, in revoking the sanction granted by his Assistant. The sanction itself was not granted under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Under the Land Revenue Code, orders passed by the Assistant Collector are appealable to the Collector. See ss. 9 and 203 of the Code. The Collector had, therefore, authority to revoke the sanction in appeal.

JUDGMENT.

[998] Parsons, J.—Several important points have been raised and argued in this case, but the only one with which we propose to deal is

(1) 10 A. 119 (121).
(2) 6 A. 101.
(3) 12 B. 86.

whether the office of the Assistant Collector before whom the evidence alleged to be false was given was "a Court" within the meaning of the word as used in s. 195 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

We think that there can be no doubt that it was not. The facts are these. The Collector received information that his Deputy Chitnis, Chotalal, had been trying to obtain a bribe from one Dungar, and after examining him and certain other persons he ordered the case against Chotalal to be sent to the Assistant Collector for inquiry under the Land Revenue Code. It was in the inquiry held by the Assistant Collector in pursuance of this order that the alleged false evidence was given, and it is material to ascertain if his office at the time of holding the inquiry was a Court or not; for if it was not, then no sanction will be necessary for a prosecution.

 Apparently there is some difference of opinion among the High Courts in India as to the meaning to be attached to the word "Court" as used in s. 195, but we are not concerned with that in the present case. We consider that the Legislature has in the Bombay Land Revenue Code decided that point for us. Section 196 of that Code declares that "a formal summary inquiry under this Act shall be deemed to be a judicial proceeding" within the meaning of ss. 193, 219 and 228 of the Indian Penal Code, and the office of any authority holding a formal or summary inquiry shall be deemed a Civil Court for the purposes of such inquiry."

The mention of these inquiries in this section excludes all other inquiries and the authority holding them, and s. 197 makes an express provision how these latter inquiries are to be conducted. It is clear that the inquiry held in the present case was one that the Act did not require to be either formal or summary. When the Code requires a formal or summary inquiry it says so in plain language (see ss. 59, 67, 91, 93, 118, 125, 129). The present inquiry, if provided for at all by the Code, can only be so under the implied authority given by [989] Chap. IV. It was a mere departmental inquiry held in order to ascertain whether there was any truth in the charge of bribery laid against Chotalal such as would justify the Collector in taking action under s. 32 of the Code. If a formal or summary inquiry was intended, such would certainly be stated in s. 33, but neither that section nor any other section of this chapter mentions the nature of the inquiry. It must, therefore, be held to be an ordinary inquiry falling within the provisions of s. 197. As such, it would not be a judicial proceeding and the office of the authority holding the inquiry would not be a Court.

No sanction, therefore, for prosecution is required under s. 195 (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

We dismiss the application and return the papers in all the three cases, and the applications will be struck off as dismissed.
SHIVJIRAM v. WAMAN NARAYAN JOSHI

22 B. 939.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Candy.

SHIVJIRAM SAHEBRAO MARWADI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v.
WAMAN NARAYAN JOSHI (Original Defendant), Respondent.*

[20th September, 1897.]

Lis pendens—Mortgage—Decree on mortgage—Sale of mortgaged land pending proceedings in execution of decree.

On the 22nd August, 1882, Yesu and Krishna mortgaged certain land to the plaintiff by an unregistered mortgage. On the 17th May, 1884, Yesu alone mortgaged the same land to the defendant. This mortgage was duly registered. Subsequently to the date of the defendant’s mortgage the plaintiff sued Yesu and Krishna on his mortgage, and on 26th August, 1884, he got a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. On 1st November, 1884, he applied for execution of his decree, and in August, 1885, the execution sale took place and the property was sold to one Dagdu, who was the plaintiff’s nominee. Meanwhile, however, and pending the plaintiff’s execution proceedings, Yesu and Krishna on the 14th March, 1885, sold the property to the defendant by a registered deed of sale. The plaintiff now sued the defendant for possession.

Held (1) that the sale to the defendant on the 14th March, 1885, pending the plaintiff’s execution proceedings was a sale pendentive sale and void as against the plaintiff.

(440) (2) That the plaintiff as purchaser at the Court’s sale in August, 1885, took the property subject to the defendant’s mortgage of Yesu’s share to the defendant in 1884, but free from the effect of the subsequent sale by Yesu and Krishna to the defendant.

(3) As this was a suit for possession, and as Yesu’s share had been mortgaged to the defendant with possession, the plaintiff was only entitled to joint possession of the property with the defendant. He could file a separate suit to redeem defendant.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur D. G. Gharpure, Additional First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik with appellate powers, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb L. K. Nulkar, Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge.

Suit for possession of land. Yesu and Krishna were the original owners of the land; and on the 22nd August, 1882, they mortgaged it to the plaintiff for Rs. 50 by an unregistered mortgage.

On 17th May, 1884, Yesu alone mortgaged the land to the defendant for Rs. 50 with possession. This mortgage was registered on the 12th June, 1884. As to Yesu’s interest in it, therefore, took priority under s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877).

Subsequently to the date of the defendant’s mortgage the plaintiff sued Yesu and Krishna on his mortgage. On 26th August, 1884, he got a decree, and the mortgaged property was ordered to be sold.

On the 1st November, 1884, the plaintiff applied for execution of his decree, and after some delay in the proceedings the property was sold in August, 1885, to one Dagdu, who was the plaintiff’s nominee.

Meanwhile, and pending the execution proceedings which resulted in the sale of the property under the plaintiff’s decree, Yesu and Krishna on

* Second Appeal No. 401 of 1897.
14th March, 1885, sold the property to the defendant by registered deed of sale.

The plaintiff now sued the defendant for possession.

The lower Court dismissed this suit.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (plaintiff).

Mahadeo V. Bhat, for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

[941] Farran, C. J.—The plaintiff, who is the transferee of one Dagdu, the purchaser at a Court’s sale of the land in question, sued to recover possession of it from the defendant.

The original owners of the land were Yesu and Krishna. On the 22nd of August, 1882, they mortgaged it to the plaintiff for Rs. 50. This mortgage was unregistered. On the 17th May, 1884, Yesu alone mortgaged the land to the defendant for Rs. 50, and his mortgage was registered on the 12th June following. This mortgage, which the Subordinate Judge considered to have been sham and colorable and passed without consideration to defeat the plaintiff’s mortgage, has been upheld by the appellate Court as genuine and bona fide, and we must deal with it as such. It had, therefore, so far as Yesu’s interest in the land is concerned, priority over the plaintiff’s mortgage under s. 50 of the Registration Act, 1877.

Some time about the date of the defendant’s above mortgage—the lower appellate Court thinks after its execution—the plaintiff brought a suit upon his mortgage against Yesu and Krishna for the purpose of bringing the mortgage property to sale and realising his mortgage debt. A decree was passed in that suit for the plaintiff on the 26th August, 1884, in the usual form, and the mortgaged property was ordered to be sold. On the 1st November, 1884, the plaintiff applied by dakhast for execution of his decree, and the usual proceedings ensued. Some delay occurred in bringing the property to sale, but it was eventually sold on the 22nd or 26th August, 1885 (the actual date is not clear) to Dagdu, the plaintiff’s nominee.

Meanwhile, during the period when the plaintiff was engaged in bringing the property to sale, Yesu and Krishna on the 14th March, 1885, sold the property to the defendant. The deed of sale was subsequently registered.

It is objected that the defendant could take nothing under that sale, for two reasons:—

(1) Because the plaintiff’s decree came under s. 50 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) in competition with, and being prior in point of time defeated, the defendant’s subsequent sale-deed.

[942] (2) Because the plaintiff’s suit against Yesu and Krishna in respect of this property was, at the date of the sale by them to the defendant, still pending, and the defendant took the property under his sale-deed subject to the ultimate result of the plaintiff’s suit.

The law upon the subject of lis pendens was considered by Sargent, C.J., in Venkatesh Govind v. Maruti (1). The ground of the actual decision in that case was that when a decree had been obtained upon an unregistered mortgage, directing that the plaintiff should recover the mortgage-duty " on the liability of the lands mentioned in the plaint," and no steps were taken under the decree for several years, the lis pendens was at an end. In the previous case of Kanu Khandu v. Krishna Bhulaji (1) it had been decided that a decree obtained upon an unregistered mortgage did not operate to give such instrument priority over a subsequent purchaser at a Court’s sale with possession. That decision was, however, passed in reference to the registration law as it existed prior to the Registration Act of 1864, and the doctrine of lis pendens was not relied upon in it.

In neither of the above cases was the question actually decided whether the doctrine of lis pendens applied to protect a plaintiff actively seeking to bring the mortgaged property to sale under a decree which he has obtained upon his mortgage, from the effect of an alienation by the judgment-debtor. If in taking such steps the property is attached, s. 276 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) effectually secures the plaintiff, but in the present case though the plaintiff sought to have the property attached, the Court considered that such action was unnecessary, as the decree directed a sale in default of payment of the mortgaged property, and no attachment in consequence was levied upon the land. The plaintiff has, therefore, to rely upon the lis pendens doctrine.

Now the general rule of law is that the lis pendens, except in administration suits and suits for an account and in suits of a similar nature in which the decree is the inception of subsequent proceedings, ends with the decree. This was laid down by [943] Lord Hardwicke in Worsely v. Earl of Scarborough (2) and was recognised by Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in the above cited case of Venkatesh v. Maruti (supra). In Kinsman v. Kinsman (3), Lord Lyndhurst says: "After decree and before execution it was not pretended that lis pendens could any longer exist." The question would, therefore, seem to come to this. Do the execution proceedings in a case like the present, revive or give continuance to the lis pendens? That question was answered in the affirmative in Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhur (4). The dates there were as follows:—The defendant sued upon his mortgage bond in December, 1871, and obtained a decree upon it for sale of the mortgaged property in February, 1872. A few days before the 18th April, 1872, the property mentioned in the mortgage was attached under the defendant’s decree and it was sold in the month of May, 1872, when the defendant himself purchased it. That was the defendant’s title. A creditor of the mortgagor attached the same property on the 7th November, 1871, under a money decree, and on the 18th of April, 1872, brought it to sale, when the plaintiff became the purchaser. It was held that the plaintiff’s purchase was a purchase pendente lite. I have stated the above dates and facts partly from the above report and partly from the judgment of the Privy Council in the case next to be referred to. That is the case of Radhamadhur v. Manokur (5), and though the decision in it proceeded upon another ground, their Lordships expressed their concurrence in the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in the above cited decision in unequivocal language. Sir Richard Couch in his judgment in Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhur, while admitting that there was no English precedent for his decision, considered that the principle laid down in Bellamy v. Sabane (6), that "the doctrine (of lis pendens) is not founded upon any peculiar tenets of a Court of equity as to constructive notice, but prevails alike in law and equity resting on this foundation that it would be impossible that any action or suit could be brought to a successful termination if alienations pendente lite were permitted to prevail", was applicable to proceedings to [944] realize a mortgage after a decree for sale. This case was followed in Jharoo v. Raj Chunder (1).

These Calcutta authorities apply to the case before us, and we think that we ought to follow them approved, as in principle they have been approved, by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Though they are not entirely consonant with the remarks of Sargent, C. J., in the earlier portion of his judgment in Venkatesh v. Maruti, they are quite consistent with the decision in that case. They were, moreover, not brought to the notice of the Court in that case and were not considered by it.

Having come to this conclusion upon the second of the above objections to the decree, it becomes unnecessary for us to consider the first objection. Had we to determine it, we should probably have felt it desirable to refer the matter to a Full Bench.

The result is that the plaintiff as purchaser at the Court's sale takes the property subject to the defendant's mortgage over Yesu's share, but free from the effect of the subsequent sale by Yesu and Krishna to the defendant. As this is only a suit for possession, and as the defendant's mortgage is with possession, plaintiff is entitled only to joint possession with the defendant Godam. He can, if so minded, file a separate suit to redeem the defendant. The decree will be drawn up accordingly.

Decree varied as above with costs in the lower appellate Court, and each party to bear his own costs in this Court.

Decree varied.

22 B. 945.

[945] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

MAGANLAL (Original Defendant No. 3), Appellant v. SHAHRA
GIRDHAR (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [20th September, 1897]

Registration—Unregistered san-mortgage—Sale—Subsequent unregistered mortgage of same property—Decree on latter mortgage and sale in execution—Sale certificates registered—Priority—Interest passing on sale of mortgaged property in execution of a money decree and of a decree on mortgage.

One Harilal and his sons Baji and Ohhangan executed a san-mortgage of certain ancestral property in plaintiff's favour in 1885. The mortgage was unregistered. In 1886 the same property was mortgaged by Ohhangan alone by a deed which was also unregistered. In 1889 Ohhangan's mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property, and in execution put up the property to auction in 1892, when defendant purchased it. Defendant got his sale-certificate registered.

In 1894 the plaintiff brought this suit to enforce his mortgage-lien on sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant contended that, as to Ohhangan's share, his certificate of sale having been registered, his claim had priority to the plaintiff's unregistered mortgage.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. His claim was superior to the defendant's. The defendant had purchased the interest which Ohhangan had mortgaged in 1889. But that mortgage was unregistered and was, therefore, subject to the plaintiff's mortgage, which although also unregistered was earlier in date. The defendant by registering his certificate of sale could not enlarge the estate which the certificate conveyed to him.

By a sale of mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained by a mortgagee against the mortgagor upon the mortgage, the interests both of the mortgagor and mortgagees passes to the purchaser. But by a sale of mortgaged property in execution of a money-decree obtained by the mortgagees against the mortgagor, the interest of the defendant (mortgagor) alone passes to the purchaser.

[947] In 1886 the same property was mortgaged by Chhagan alone by an unregistered mortgage bond. Upon this bond the mortgagee obtained a decree against Chhagan in 1889, and brought the property to sale. Defendant No. 3 purchased the property at the Court-sale on 21st September, 1892. The certificate of sale was registered.

In 1894 plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 84-4-0 due under his san-mortgage of 1885, by sale of the mortgaged property.

Defendant No. 3, who alone defended the suit, pleaded (inter alia) that the san-mortgage was false and fictitious, and could not, under any circumstances, prevail over his registered certificate of sale.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the bond sued upon was not proved.

On appeal the Assistant Judge held the bond sued upon was proved, and that the defendant No. 3 purchased the property at the Court-sale subject to the plaintiff’s san-mortgage.

The Assistant Judge, therefore, reversed the decree of the first Court, and directed the defendants to pay Rs. 84-4-0 to the plaintiff within six months, or in default the plaintiff was to recover the same from the san-mortgaged property.

From this decree defendant No. 3 preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellant (defendant No. 3).—Our certificate of sale being registered has priority over plaintiff’s unregistered san-mortgage—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 50; Jethabhai v. Girdhar (1).

R. V. Desai, for respondent (plaintiff).—The registration of the certificate of sale cannot give it priority over the plaintiff’s san-mortgage. The plaintiff’s mortgage, though unregistered, is a valid charge. As a purchaser at a Court-sale the defendant bought the right, title and interest of Chhagan, the judgment-debtor, subject to all existing equities against the property sold—Sobhaqand v. Bhaichand (2).

JUDGMENT.

[947] Farran, C. J.—Haribhai and his sons Baji and Chhagan executed a san-mortgage in favour of the plaintiff in 1885. This mortgage was not registered. The mortgaged property—a house—is found by

(1) 20 B. 155.
(2) 6 B. 193.
the Assistant Judge to have been the joint property of Haribhai and his sons. In 1886 Chhagan alone mortgaged the same property. The mortgage was not registered. In 1889 Chhagan’s mortgagee having sued Chhagan upon his mortgage, obtained a decree for the sale of the mortgaged premises and the same were sold in execution by auction-sale in 1892 when the defendant No. 3, Maganlal, purchased them. He caused his sale-certificate to be registered. The house appears to be in the actual possession of the defendants Nos. 4 and 5.

The plaintiff by the present suit seeks to have his san-mortgage realized by the sale of the mortgaged property. As to the shares therein of Haribhai and Baji, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to the relief which he seeks against the appellant (defendant No. 3), as that defendant has only purchased the share of Chhagan in the same. The substantial question in the appeal relates to Chhagan’s interest which the defendant No. 3 has acquired under his registered sale-certificate. Had the plaintiff purchased at a sale held in execution of money decree, the Full Bench decision in Sobhagchand v. Bhachchand (1) would have been conclusive in favour of the plaintiff’s san-mortgage against the defendant No. 3 as purchaser at a Court-sale although the defendant No. 3’s sale certificate had been perfected by registration. “When the Court sells the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in property, it cannot be regarded as selling more than the judgment-debtor himself could honestly sell. He could honestly sell only subject to any equities existing against himself on the property; and if by concealment of a san-mortgage or other mortgage, he sold property as free of that charge, he would commit a fraud. The Court cannot be deemed to do that which would be a fraud if done by the judgment-debtor.” (2) Per Westropp, C. J., at p. 202. This must, we think, be taken now to be the settled law of this Court.

It is also clear that, if the mortgage by Chhagan had been registered when executed, the defendant No. 3 claiming under that mortgage would have had a preferential title to the plaintiff’s claiming under an unregistered san-mortgage—Jethabhaji v. Girdhar (3). This case was decided upon the language of s. 50 of the present Registration Act (IV of 1877).

The distinction between a decree for the sale of mortgaged property obtained by a mortgagee upon his mortgage, and a decree for the sale of such property under a money decree, is that notwithstanding the form of the words used in the proclamation of sale in the former case, the respective interests both of the mortgagee and of the mortgagor (the respective interests both of the plaintiff and of the defendant) pass to the purchaser, while in the latter case the interest of the defendant alone passes—Khevan v. Lingaya (3) and Sheshgiri v. Salvador (4). The defendant No. 3 consequently took under his purchase both the interest of Chhagan’s mortgagee and that of Chhagan.

The mortgagee unaware of the plaintiff’s san-mortgage would, it may be contended, commit no fraud in selling to the defendant No. 3 without informing him of the plaintiff’s san-mortgage, and the Court, therefore, in selling the property would not be carrying out any fraud on the part of mortgagee plaintiff; and hence the ratio decidendi in Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand (supra) does not apply.

The distinction is, we think, too fine and cannot be given effect to. It is clear that what the Court sells is the judgment-debtor’s interest in the property as it existed at the date of the mortgage, i.e., subject to all valid incumbrances existing at that date—Kasandas v. Pranjivan (1); Mohan Manor v. Togu Uka (2). The Court does not guarantee the property as having been [949] free from incumbrances at that time. The purchaser knows that he is purchasing under an unregistered mortgage and, therefore, subject to unregistered incumbrances of prior date. Therefore it would appear to follow that he is in no better position than the mortgagee under whose mortgage he purchases. The root of his title is an unregistered mortgage. The Court conveys to him that title and no more, and the reasoning in Sobhagchand v. Bhaichand (supra) then applies. He cannot by registration of his Court’s conveyance enlarge the scope of the estate which the Court has by its certificate conveyed to him.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiff’s san-mortgage has priority over the purchase of the defendant No. 3, and that the decree appealed against should be confirmed. Decree confirmed with costs.

Decree confirmed.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

IN re HARI LAL BUCH.* [27th September, 1897.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 96—Search warrant—Issue of search warrant illegal, in the absence of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding pending before Magistrate—Power of revision in criminal cases—Revision.

Some treasure belonging to the Native State of Radhanpur was missing. The Administrator of Radhanpur sent a telegram to the District Superintendent of Police at Ahmedabad, stating that part of the missing treasure was in the possession of the accused, who was a resident of Ahmedabad, and asking that his house should be searched. In consequence of this telegram, the City Police Inspector applied for a search warrant to the City Magistrate of Ahmedabad. Thereupon the Magistrate issued a search warrant under s. 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). In execution of this warrant the house of the accused was searched, and the police seized and took away certain property belonging to the accused, to his wife, and to his servant. The accused was subsequently arrested under a warrant issued by the Political Superintendent of Palanpur under s. 11 of the Extradition Act XXI of 1879, but he was admitted to bail by the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad. On the 12th [960] June, 1897, the District Magistrate passed an order refusing to deliver up the property seized by the police to the Political Superintendent of Palanpur, but allowing the police to retain the property for some time, as it was possible that a prosecution would be instituted in British India in respect of the stolen treasure. The Magistrate directed that, if no prosecution were instituted within two months, the property should be restored to the persons from whose possession it was taken.

The District Magistrate subsequently reversed this order as being erroneous, and passed a fresh order on the 3rd August, 1897, directing the property to be delivered up to the Political Superintendent of Palanpur.

* Criminal Revision No. 318 of 1897.

(1) 7 B.H.C.R.A.O.J. 146.
(2) 10 B. 224.

1216
Held, that the City Magistrate had no authority to issue a search warrant under s. 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), as at the time of issuing the search warrant there was no investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding under the Code pending before the Magistrate, for the purposes of which the production of the articles seized was necessary or desirable.

Held, also, that the search warrant being illegal and ultra vires, the subsequent orders relating to the detention and delivery of the property seized were also illegal and unjustifiable.

Per RANADE, J.—The District Magistrate had no power to review his own previous order of the 12th June, 1897, passed on full inquiry and after hearing both parties.

The power of revision in criminal cases is very strictly confined, and the same considerations which prevent Subordinate Courts from altering their judgments on review, hold good in respect of final orders which are of the nature of a judgment.

This was an application under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The following statement of the facts of this case is taken from the judgment of Parsons, J.:

"The facts so far as we have been able to obtain them from the papers on the record and the statements of the counsel for the applicant and the Government Pleader are as follows. Some treasure belonging to the Radhanpur State was missing, and on the 26th March, 1897, the Administrator of the State, Major Lyde, telegraphed to the District Superintendent of Police, Ahmedabad, to say that 'the hidden treasure here has been discovered. Rani has given written document that from it she handed over thirty thousand rupees to Harilal Buch lately, probably more was handed over before. Please have the house [951] of Harilal Buch in Ahmedabad searched, and Harilal Buch watched. Am prepared to prove he knew that this money belonged to the State.' The City Police Inspector in consequence applied to the City Magistrate of Ahmedabad for a search warrant, and that officer on the 30th March issued a warrant, in these terms:

"Search Warrant, Criminal Procedure Code, s. 96.

"To Rao Bahadur, City Police Inspector, Ahmedabad.

"Whereas information has been laid before me of the commission of the offence of the stolen treasure of the Nawab Sahib of Radhanpur having been brought to and kept at Ahmedabad, and whereas it has been made to appear to me that for the purposes of the investigation which is being made into the said offence it is essential to find out the said stolen treasure, as also to examine and produce in that connection account books of some traders, this is to authorize and require you to search, in order to find out the above, the house in which Harilal Buch lives, and such other houses which it may on enquiry be found necessary to search, to examine account books it may seem necessary to examine, and search the houses in which they may be, and in the event of the same being found produce them forthwith before this Court, and to return this warrant soon after it is executed, endorsing thereon what you may have done in virtue of the same. Given under my hand and the seal of the Court this day, the 30th of March, in the year 1897.

'DADABHAI DINSHAW,'
'F. O. Magistrate.'

1216.
"In execution of this warrant the house of the applicant was searched, and the police seized and took away therefrom Rs. 300 belonging to the applicant, Rs. 300 belonging to his servant Kamraj, the gold bangles of the wife of the applicant worth about Rs. 700, and all the private letters and papers of the applicant. They also made one Hathising Magan pay up the sum of Rs. 2,600 which he owed to the applicant, and took that money also (see the telegram of the 31st March). On the 7th May, Lieutenant-Colonel Jackson, the Political Agent, Palanpur, issued, under s. 11 of the Extradition Act XXI of 1879, a warrant for the arrest of the applicant on a charge of theft in a dwelling-house and receiving stolen property committed at Radhanpur. The applicant was arrested under that warrant and released on bail to appear within five days before the Deputy Assistant Political Superintendent of Palanpur. The political Agent appears then to have asked that the whole of the property [952] found and seized under the search warrant should be sent to him. The matter then came before the District Magistrate, we cannot say whether legally or otherwise, as we do not know under what circumstances he took cognizance of the case. After hearing the applicant he on the 13th May, 1897, passed the following order:—

"I will cause to be delivered up any property out of the property seized which can be reasonably suspected to be stolen property. I think in order to ascertain this it will be well if the Political Superintendent should send a man here. A list should meanwhile be made of the property, and the City Police Inspector by questioning the man sent (if sent) by the Political Superintendent, and inspecting any articles or documents to which his attention is drawn by such man, will satisfy himself as to what articles, including documents, if any, can be reasonably suspected to be stolen property; such articles can be delivered over to the Political Superintendent, Palanpur. All other articles, that is, all articles which cannot be reasonably suspected to be stolen property, should, for the present, be detained in the custody of the City Police Inspector. Before reading any document, or allowing the man sent by the Political Superintendent to read it, the City Police Inspector should be satisfied by questioning the man sent or otherwise that it has or may have connection with the present case.

"The matter again came before the District Magistrate, and he after hearing both parties on the 12th June, 1897, passed the following order:—

"The only real question for decision is, can the provision under ss. 94 and 96, Criminal Procedure Code, as to production of documents and things useful in evidence, be held to apply in case of proceedings or trials out of British India in cases in which the extradition of an accused has been demanded under the Extradition Act. As to the warrant, if the above is answered in the affirmative, any defect in the warrant might be rectified or on enquiry a fresh warrant issued. It is contended on behalf of the prosecution that s. 8 of the Extradition Act brings a case in which accused is extradited under the Criminal Procedure Code, and rule 11 of the rules made by Notification 319 of 12th March, 1875, by the Government of India is referred to. No precedents have been referred to on either side. Looking to the wording of s. 8 it appears to me that it would be a straining of words to apply it to anything except the actual proceedings and trial in the Native State. It is clearly made for the production of the subject of Her Majesty living in a Native State. It is not made for the extension of the power of the officers demanding extradition. I do not see anything in rule 11 which supports the case, for the prosecution. It might be contended that if there is no provision compelling the production of evidence, the object of the Extradition Act fails, as trials cannot be satisfactorily conducted without evidence. But this consideration did not cause the Legislature to make provision for compulsory attendance of witnesses. These can, it is true, be examined by commission, but examination of witnesses by commission is much less conducive to satisfactory trial than is actual hearing of witnesses. In cases where evidentiary documents exist in British India respecting offences committed in Native States, it would frequently, I imagine generally, be the case that some kindred offence (e.g., disposal of stolen property) had been committed in British India. However that may be, the wording of the law cannot be strained on grounds of expediency. For the above reasons I refuse to deliver up the property seized. As I understand that it is possible a prosecution will be instituted in British India in which this property may be used as evidence, I order that the property be for the present retained by the police. Copy to City Police Inspector; orders as to what shall be done with the property should be asked for after two months. Copy to Political Superintendent, Palanpur. If no prosecution is instituted within two months, then (unless this decision is reversed on appeal) the property will be handed over to the person or persons from whom it was taken.

"The District Magistrate apparently was not satisfied with the correctness of this order, and he re-opened the matter by giving notice to the parties, and after hearing the applicant, who alone appeared, he, on the 3rd August, 1897, passed the following order:"

"On the first point I rule that the order made by me, which was merely an order in regard to procedure, is not such a judgment as is contemplated by s. 369, Criminal Procedure Code. On the main question the real question is, does s. 8 of the Extradition Act apply to procedure in British India previous to trial, and are the sections of the Criminal Procedure Code in regard to search for evidentiary documents applicable to offences tried out of British India, in regard to documents and things in British India? I ruled by my former order that it did not. There does not appear to be any authority one way or the other, and after hearing both parties, and giving my best attention to the case, I decided as I did. Certain arguments have now been brought to my notice why s. 8 should apply and why the sections of the Criminal Procedure Code which are applicable should apply. My attention has been called to the preamble of the Act and to a judgment of the Bombay "High Court, in which it was ruled that all questions of jurisdiction concerning British subjects must be dealt with with reference to the Criminal Procedure Code, and it has been pointed out that the same principle can be applied to procedure. It has also been contended that a trial in Palanpur would be a proceeding under the Criminal Procedure Code, so that s. 94, Criminal Procedure Code, would directly apply. I hold, therefore, that my previous order was wrong, and I direct the delivery of all the property in the possession of the Ahmedabad Police and seized from Harilal Buch to the Political Superintendent, Palanpur. As, however, the opposite party have had no opportunity of meeting the arguments in consequence of which I have made my order, I rule that the delivery shall not take place till after fourteen days, or, in the event of an application to the High Court being made on behalf of Harilal Buch, till the decision of the High Court is given. Inspection cannot be made till after the expiry of the above period or till after the order of the High Court is passed."
The accused applied to the High Court under its Revisional Jurisdiction to set aside the above order of the 3rd August, 1897.

Anderson (with him Gokaldas K. Parekh), for applicant.—The proceedings in this case have been altogether illegal and invalid. The search warrant issued by the City Magistrate was illegal and ultra vires. It purports to be issued under s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). But that section must be read with s. 94, and it is clear that a search warrant can be issued only in the course of some inquiry, trial or other proceeding actually pending before a Magistrate. Here there was no proceeding of any kind pending before the Magistrate at the time of issuing the search warrant. There was no complaint nor information before the Magistrate upon which he could take cognizance of any offence under s. 191 of the Code. The telegram to the District Superintendent of Police, upon which the Magistrate appears to have acted, cannot be treated as a complaint or information. No person appeared before the Magistrate as a complainant charging the accused with any offence. The Magistrate, therefore, acted without jurisdiction in issuing a search warrant. If so, all subsequent proceedings before the District Magistrate were also illegal and ultra vires. Further, the District Magistrate had no power to review his own previous order of the 12th June, 1897. Section 369 of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down that no Court other than a High Court can alter or review its judgment after it is passed. The order of the 13th June, 1897, is in the nature of a judgment. It was made after both parties had been heard, and after a full consideration of the merits of the case. If it was wrong, the High Court alone could set it aside either on reference or in revision. Refers to Queen-Empress v. Fox (1).

Rao Bahadur Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—It is stated in the City Magistrate's order for the [955] issue of a search warrant that information was actually laid before him of the commission of an offence. It is upon this information that he acted, as he had power to act under s. 191 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is true that there was no regular inquiry or trial pending before him at the time. But he need not wait till an inquiry is held and witnesses are examined by the prosecution. If there is a complaint or information lodged before him, and he proceeds on such complaint or information to issue a search warrant under s. 96 of the Code, his action would be perfectly legal and valid—Queen-Empress v. Mahant of Tirupati (2). As to the question, whether the District Magistrate had power to review his own previous order, I submit that s. 369 of the Code applies to judgments of Criminal Courts, and not to orders of the kind passed in the present case, relating to the retention or delivery of property suspected to be stolen. It is admitted that there was no inquiry, and no trial. There was, therefore, no judgment either convicting or acquitting the accused. This being so, it was open to the Magistrate to reconsider his previous order, and pass a fresh one for the delivery of the property to the proper authorities.

JUDGMENT.

Parsons, J. (after stating the facts as given above).—The applicant has now applied to this Court, and his counsel has called in question the legality of the whole of the proceedings, and has contended, first, that the search warrant was issued by the City Magistrate without authority; 2nd, that the search warrant issued was bad in form; 3rd, that the search warrant only authorized the seizure of what was suspected to be stolen treasure; and 4th, that there was no power in the District Magistrate to order delivery to the foreign State of the property seized, or at any rate that the power, if it existed at all, only extended to what was reasonably suspected to be stolen treasure. We deal with the first of these contentions only, as upon it we are able to dispose of the case.

The question that has to be decided is, whether the City Magistrate had authority to issue the search warrant in the present case. The warrant purports to be issued under s. 96 of the [956] Code of Criminal Procedure. This section relates back to s. 94, and authorizes the issue of a search warrant by the Court for the purposes of an investigation, inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure by or before such Court as is expressly stated in s. 94. It is necessary, therefore, in order to justify the issue of a search warrant by a Magistrate, that there shall be some investigation, inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under the Criminal Procedure Code, pending before him. This is practically the decision of the Madras High Court in Queen-Empress v. Mahant of Tirupathi (1) where the Judges say that the Magistrate need not, before issuing a search warrant, wait until evidence has been recorded. He can act upon information which he considers credible, provided it is based upon a complaint, and the complainant is examined upon solemn affirmation according to law. The form of a search warrant, No. VIII in sch. V, also makes this clear: "whereas," it says, "information has been laid (or complaint has been made) before me of the commission (or suspected commission) of the offence of —— and it has been made to appear to me that the production of —— is essential to the inquiry now being made (or about to be made) into the said offence." The City Magistrate follows the wording of this form, but as a matter of fact the wording he uses is inaccurate. No legal information had been laid before him of the offence of stolen treasure of the Nawab Saheb of Radhanpur having been brought to and kept at Ahmedabad. A telegram is not information. The only information upon which a Magistrate can act under the Code is set out in s. 191. It is, first, a complaint as to which see the definition of complaint in s. 4 (a) and the provisions of s. 200. No complaint in the present case was made to the Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code of Criminal Procedure that the applicant had committed an offence. Had there been, the Magistrate would have issued a summons for the attendance or a warrant for the arrest of the applicant. There was merely a request for a search warrant on the strength of the telegram. Secondly, it is a police report as to which see s. 173. There is no police report in the present case. It is not [957] alleged that the Magistrate acted upon his own knowledge or suspicion, which is the third kind of information.

Again, if we assume that there had been the offence committed of bringing into Ahmedabad the treasure stolen at Radhanpur, the City Magistrate was not holding any inquiry, investigation, trial, or other proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect of it. The only inquiry that was being made was being made at Radhanpur by the Political authorities there. This is clear from the record and from the order of the District Magistrate of the 12th June, wherein he says: "As I understand that it is possible a prosecution will be instituted in British India." For this reason, therefore, namely, that at the time of issuing the search warrant there was no investigation, inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure pending before the City Magistrate for the purposes of which the production of the articles seized was necessary or desirable, we hold that his order in issuing a search warrant was ultra vires and illegal, and we reverse it and all subsequent orders dealing with the property seized, and we direct the return of the whole of it to the several persons from whose possession it was taken.

RANADE, J.—The applicant is a native Indian subject resident at Ahmedabad, and he was suspected of being concerned in the offence of theft and of receiving stolen property belonging to the Radhanpur State, which is subordinate to the Political Superintendent of Palanpur, and is now under British management. The Political Superintendent of Palanpur issued a warrant, under s. 11 of Act XXI of 1879, for his arrest and subsequent surrender, and the warrant was sent to the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad on 7th May, 1897. The applicant was arrested on 10th May, and subsequently admitted to bail on his undertaking to appear before the Radhanpur authorities to stand his trial. Five weeks before this arrest was made, the City Magistrate of Ahmedabad had issued, on the application of the City Inspector of Police, a search warrant. The City Magistrate stated in his order that he had received certain information of the commission of an offence in regard to certain treasure belonging to the Radhanpur State, and that it was necessary for the inquiry into the matter of this offence that a search should be made of applicant’s among other houses for books of account, &c. This warrant was issued on 30th March, 1897, and some property in cash and ornaments, and books of account and other papers, were seized by the City Police. The City Magistrate asked the Radhanpur authorities to send some one to recognise the alleged stolen property, but the applicant objected to his account books being so inspected, and the books were not shown to the Radhanpur official. Then followed the applicant’s arrest and his release on bail. After this it was proposed to send the property found in the search to Radhanpur, but applicant again objected, and on the 13th May the District Magistrate ordered the City Police Inspector that only such property, as was reasonably suspected to be stolen, should be sent to Radhanpur, and the rest retained at Ahmedabad. The Radhanpur official was not able to identify any particular property to be stolen property, and asked for permission to examine the account books. On the 12th June, the District Magistrate, after issuing notice to both parties, passed an order refusing to send any of the property found in the search to Radhanpur. After the District Magistrate reviewed, suo motu, his own order on 3rd August, 1897, and directed that the property should be sent to Radhanpur.

It is this last order of which the applicant complains, and the chief grounds on which revision is sought are—(1) that the District Magistrate could not review his own order; (2) and that the City Magistrate had no authority to issue the search warrant in connection with an inquiry or trial not held in British India.

The points in issue are thus:—(1) Whether the District Magistrate could suo motu, review his own order of the 12th June, and set it aside.
in the way he has done? (2) Whether the search warrant was properly issued in this case? On the first point I am inclined to hold that the District Magistrate had no power to review his own previous order passed on full inquiry, and after hearing both sides. It is true s. 969 only refers in express terms to judgments under Chap. XXVI, but it is clear that the principle laid down therein applies to final orders which are of the nature of a judgment. It has been expressly ruled that an order for compensation is a part of the judgment. An order discharging a rule in detention cases under Chap. XXXVII is a judgment. Appeals from orders are expressly allowed under s. 89, or under s. 118. The power of revision is very strictly confined, and it is quite plain that the same considerations which prevent Subordinate Courts from altering their judgments on review, hold good in respect of final orders passed by them. If the District Magistrate in this case had returned the property to the applicant as the result of his first order, it is plain he could not have compelled its reproduction. It was a mere accident that the property was retained in police custody, and so the second order could operate upon this property. The only course open to the District Magistrate was to make a reference to the High Court, and have his own first order cancelled if he thought that order was erroneous.

This point, however, was not pressed by the counsel for the applicant, as he chiefly laid stress on the illegality of the original proceeding, which led to the issue of the search warrant. It thus becomes necessary to consider the second point noted above. The search warrant in the present case was admittedly issued under s. 96. The question to be considered is, whether the City Magistrate had authority to issue such a warrant? I shall assume for the purpose of this argument that ss. 94, 96, which must be read together, apply to proceedings taken at the instance of political officers of Native States acting under the Extradition Act. It is plain, however, that before a Magistrate in British India can issue a summons under s. 94 or a warrant under s. 96, he must be satisfied in regard to certain points. There must be an inquiry, investigation, trial, or proceeding under the Code by or before such Court or before a police officer, for the purposes of which the production of the document is desirable. There is nothing on the record of the case to show that there was any such inquiry or investigation under the Code going on in the City Magistrate’s Court or before the City Inspector at the time it issued the warrant. The arrest of the accused took place long after the issue of the warrant. The Government Pleader, after the conclusion of the argument put in a paper which shows that the City Police Inspector made what is called a complaint to the City Magistrate on or about 30th March. The Political Agent’s letter, dated 9th April, 1897, however, shows clearly that it was not till that date that he made up his mind to make a specific charge against the applicant. It is, therefore, not at all likely that the City Inspector could have made any specific complaint before the City Magistrate issued his search warrant on the 30th March, 1897. He appears to have done this, as the warrant itself states, upon some vague information communicated by the police. That information did not relate solely to the applicant, but it prayed for a General search of a number of houses for the purpose of finding out evidence to be used hereafter in certain contemplated proceedings at Radhanpur. It is quite clear that the issue of such a warrant at this stage was clearly ultra vires. It is not, therefore, necessary to discuss the further question suggested by the points noticed by the District Magistrate in his conflicting orders of 12th June and 3rd August, 1897. I may, however, note that s. 8 of the Act of 1879 as also Rule 11 in the notification of March, 1875, have obvious reference to the law and procedure to be followed by the Courts out of British India in dealing with British subjects who are made over to them for trial. The laws of British India are, as far as possible, to be followed in such trials. The rules of the notification of March, 1875, have no operation under a latter notification of October, 1875, in respect of Native States directly administered by British officers, such as Radhanpur now is. Neither the Act nor the Rules were intended to regulate the action of the regular British Courts in India, which must follow the Code of Criminal Procedure. In this view of the matter, I am inclined to think that the District Magistrate's first order was correct in the circumstances of this case. We reverse both the orders and direct that the property should be returned to the applicant.

[961] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

BHANABHAI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. CHOTABHAI (Original Defendant), Respondent.* [21st September, 1897.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 337-A—Lunatic—Arrest of a lunatic in execution of a decree—Court's power to order the arrest of a lunatic discretionary—Lunacy a good ground for disallowing application for his arrest.

Under the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), a Court is not bound to order the arrest of a lunatic in execution of a decree passed against him. The power to order his arrest is discretionary.

The lunacy of a judgment-debtor is good cause within the meaning of s. 337-A of the Code for disallowing an application for his arrest.

APPEAL from the order of Rao Bahadur V. V. Paranjpe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

On the 9th April, 1895, plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree against the defendant on the Original Side of the High Court.

The decree was transferred for execution to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

The decree-holder applied for the execution of the decree by the arrest, and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor.

The Court issued a notice under s. 245-B of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), requiring the judgment-debtor to show cause why he should not be committed to jail in execution of the decree.

Thereupon the judgment-debtor's wife appeared in Court, and stated that her husband had been adjudged a lunatic under Act XXXV of 1858 by the Joint Judge of Ahmedabad, and was, therefore, unable to pay the decreetal amount.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application, holding that as the judgment-debtor was a lunatic, the application for his arrest and imprisonment could not be granted.

Against this order of dismissal the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal No. 10 of 1897.
Shivram V. Bhandarkar and N. G. Chandavarkar, for appellant.
Daji Abaji Khare, for respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Parsons, J.—The Subordinate Judge was right in saying that the darkhast in the form in which it was presented to him, viz., against the judgment-debtor personally, could not be proceeded with, because the judgment-debtor had been declared a lunatic under the provisions of Act XXXV of 1858, and his wife and father had been appointed managers of his estate and guardians of his person by the District Judge of Ahmedabad. Under the provisions, however, of s. 443 of the Civil Procedure Code, which are applied to the case of lunatics by
s. 453, it was the duty of the Court to have appointed a guardian for the suit for the lunatic. This we have done, and we have now to determine the question whether, under the Civil Procedure Code, a Court is bound to order the arrest of a lunatic in execution of a decree passed against him. We think that it is not. There is no provision of the Code which expressly exempts lunatics from arrest as there is in the case of women (245-A), but it is clear that the power to order an arrest at all is discretionary. Section 245-B allows the Court to issue a notice calling on the judgment-debtor to appear to show cause why he should not be committed to jail in execution of the decree. Section 337-A provides that on such appearance if it appears to the Court that the judgment-debtor is unable from poverty or other sufficient cause to pay the amount of the decree, the Court may make an order disallowing the application for his arrest and imprisonment. In the present case such a notice was issued, and the wife of the judgment-debtor appeared and showed the cause of her husband’s lunacy and consequent inability to pay the amount of the decree, and the Subordinate Judge accepted this case and rejected the darkhast. We see no reason to interfere with this exercise by the Subordinate Judge of his discretionary powers. There ought never to have been a decree passed against the judgment-debtor personally.
Had the Judge of the High Court on its Original Side been aware that the defendant had been declared a lunatic in March, 1895, he would not, in April, 1894, have passed an ex parte decree against the [963] defendant personally. It was by concealment of this fact that the decree-holder obtained the decree, and we are not disposed to assist him in the execution thereof. If there is any property of the lunatic in the hands of his managers and guardians, he can proceed against that, but we think that the lunacy of the judgment-debtor is good cause within the meaning of the Code for disallowing an application for his arrest. Authorities have been cited to us showing that, under the old English law, a lunatic could be arrested. These are to be found collected in Phillips on Lunatics, p. 37, but we do not think that they apply to this case which has to be decided under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.
S. KAVASJI MANCHERJI v. DINSHAJI MANCHERJI 22 Bom. 964

22 B. 963.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Ranade.

SHEET KAVASJI MANCHERJI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. DINSHAJI MANCHERJI (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [4th October, 1897.]

Jurisdiction—Appeal—Administration suit—Suit filed in Second Class Subordinate Judge’s Court—Decree in such a suit—Appeal from such decree to District Court—Practice—Procedure—Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869).

The plaintiff filed an administration suit in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class, valuing the relief claimed at Rs. 130. The Subordinate Judge found that the property in suit was worth over a lakh of rupees, that the liabilities came to Rs. 5,729, and that the defendant was indebted to the estate in the sum of Rs. 15,199. He drew up a preliminary decree, directing (inter alia) that the defendant should pay this amount into Court within two weeks. Against this order the defendant appealed to the District Court. The District Judge returned the appeal for presentation to the High Court, on the ground that the subject-matter exceeded Rs. 5,000.

Held, reversing the order of the District Judge, that the appeal lay to the District Court.

[R., 6 O. C. 255 (258).]

APPEAL from the decision of T. D. Fry, Acting District Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiff filed this suit for the administration of the estate of his deceased father Mancherji and for the recovery of his share of the property.

[964] Plaintiff valued his claim at Rs. 130, and expressed his willingness to pay the court-fee on any larger amount that might be awarded to him.

The suit was filed in the Court of the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class at Ahmedabad.

The Subordinate Judge, after referring the case to two Commissioners for taking accounts, found that the estate of the deceased Mancherji consisted of properties worth over a lakh of rupees that the liabilities amounted to Rs. 5,729, and that the defendant was indebted to the estate in the sum of Rs. 15,199.

The Subordinate Judge thereupon passed an interlocutory order, directing the defendant to pay into Court the said sum of Rs. 15,199 within two weeks.

Against this order defendant appealed to the District Court.

The Acting District Judge returned the appeal for presentation to the High Court, holding that the subject-matter exceeded Rs. 5,000.

The defendant appealed from this order to the High Court.

O. H. Setaivad, for appellant.

Wadia with Lalubhai A. Shah, for respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The suit out of which the present appeal arises, was brought for the administration of the estate of the deceased Mancherji and for the recovery of the share of the residue of the property of the said Mancherji to which the plaintiff might be found entitled. The plaintiff valued the relief claimed at Rs. 130, expressing his willingness to pay court-fees on any larger amount that might be awarded to him. The suit was filed in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, Second Class, the value of the claim being within his jurisdiction.

The Subordinate Judge on the 22nd March last recorded findings that the estate of Mancherji consisted of certain properties (the value of which admittedly is over a lakh of rupees), that the liabilities came to Rs. 5,729, and that there was due to the estate by the defendant No. 1 a sum of
Rs. 15,199, and he drew up a kind of preliminary decree, one of the orders in which was that the defendant should pay this amount into Court within two weeks. [965] The defendant appealed against the decree to the District Court. The Judge of that Court passed the following order:—
"I return this appeal for presentation to the High Court, holding that the subject-matter exceeds Rs. 5,000."

The Defendant has now appealed against this order, and he has also presented an appeal from the decree to this Court, and we have either in our appellate or revisional jurisdiction to determine whether the appeal lies to the District Court or to the High Court. We have no doubt that it lies to the District Court. Section 8 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act, 1869, enacts that "except as provided in ss. 16, 17 and 26, the District Court shall be the Court of appeal from all decrees and orders passed by the Subordinate Courts from which an appeal lies under any law for the time being in force." Sections 16 and 17 refer to Assistant Judges. Section 26 provides that "In all suits decided by a Subordinate Judge of the First Class in the exercise of his ordinary and special original jurisdiction of which the amount or value of the subject-matter exceeds five thousand rupees, the appeal from his decision shall be direct to the High Court." The present is not a suit decided by a Subordinate Judge of the First Class. It is decided by a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class. The District Court is, therefore, the Court of appeal from a decree or order passed in it.

The principle of the ruling in Ibrahimji v. Bejanji (1) has apparently been accepted by another Division Bench of this Court: see Gangadh
v. Vinayak (2). I have some doubt of its correctness, and would point out what seems to me an anomaly, viz., that though a plaintiff is allowed to place any value he pleases on his claim in order to select the forum in which he may file his suit, the permission does not extend beyond decree, the forum of appeal being governed not by that value but by the value decreed. No difficulty arises when the suit is filed in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class, and he passes a decree for a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000, but a difficulty may arise when in a suit valued at above Rs. 5,000 he passes a decree for a less sum, and when, as here, the suit is filed in the Court of a Subordinate [966] Judge of the Second Class, whose jurisdiction is limited to claims not exceeding Rs. 5,000 in value, the question will be sure to arise whether he can pass any decree or order for a sum exceeding that amount. We have not, however, now to deal with these questions.

We reverse the order of the District Judge returning the appeal, and direct him to admit it and dispose of it according to law. We make all costs in this appeal costs in the cause.

RANADE, J.—In this case the respondent's counsel raised a preliminary objection that the order passed by the District Judge was not a decree, and no appeal lay therefrom. The rulings he cited no doubt support this contention—Mahabar Singh v. Behari Lal (3); Bindeshri Chaubey v. Nandu (4). Appellant's pleader did not much contest this point, and in fact asked that Court to interfere in its extraordinary jurisdiction. We think this is a fit case for the exercise of that jurisdiction.

The District Judge has returned the appeal filed before him on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to entertain it, as the value of the subject-matter exceeded Rs. 5,000. This value, however, has not been determined yet finally by the Subordinate Judge. He has only passed what is virtually a preliminary order, and the value of Ardosir's share has yet to be determined. As the original suit was valued at Rs. 130, and was tried by a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class, no appeal lies to this Court. Section 26 of Act XIV of 1863 is quite clear upon this point. We understand that the District Judge had heard other appeals from previous orders passed in this case, and that his orders were confirmed on second appeal.

We must reverse the order of the District Judge, and direct him to admit the appeal on his file, and dispose of it according to law.

Order reversed.

[967] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Candy.

BAPUJIRAO AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Appellants v. FATESING SHAHAI BHOSLE (Original Plaintiff), Respondent. *

[10th December, 1896 and 14th October, 1897.]

-Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1862), s. 331—Execution—Resistance to execution by third party—Such party may prove title against the decree-holder—Possession—Evidence—Burden of proof.

The plaintiff had obtained a decree for possession of certain land against his tenant Bayaji. On proceeding to execute his decree he was obstructed by the defendants. He, therefore, filed a claim against them for possession under s. 331, of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1862) which was duly registered as a suit. The lower Court found as a fact that the plaintiff through his tenant Bayaji had been in possession of the land. The defendants pleaded that the land had belonged not to the plaintiff but to one Jotyaji, on whose death they were entitled to it.

Held, that in a proceeding under s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code where possession is shown to have been with the plaintiff, the defendants are not, without showing title in themselves, at liberty to impeach the plaintiff's title, or to set up a jus tertii. The onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff's rests with them, and they may prove their title as a defence.

Second appeal from the decision of T. D. Fry, Assistant Judge of Satara, reversing the decree of Rao Sabeb K. H. Kirkire, Subordinate Judge of Khatsav.

Proceeding in execution under s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1862). The plaintiff had obtained a decree for possession of certain land against his tenant Bayaji.

On proceeding to execute his decree he was resisted by the defendants, who alleged that they were entitled to the land as the nearest heirs of the last owner, one Jotyaji.

Second Appeal No. 414 of 1896.
The plaintiff thereupon filed an application against these defendants to remove the obstruction, &c. This application was, under s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), registered as a suit. On investigation the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff’s title was not proved.

On appeal the Judge held that the plaintiff was in possession of the land as against the defendants, and that they had failed to prove a better title than the plaintiff. He, therefore, reversed the decree and awarded the claim.

Defendants preferred a second appeal.
Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the appellants (defendants).
Gangaram B. Rele, for the respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—It is found as a fact by the Assistant Judge in this case that Bayaji was the tenant of the plaintiff and that the plaintiff through his said tenant had been in possession of the land in suit (which is deshmukhi vatan) for a long time claiming to hold under an alienation by one Jotyaji Rao. This possession for the purpose of s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code is, as held by the Assistant Judge, as good as actual possession—Bhurub Sircar v. Sham Manjee (1).

The plaintiff obtained a decree for possession against his tenant Bayaji, but when he proceeded to execute it he was obstructed by the present defendants. He accordingly filed an application against them, which was registered as a suit under s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code, to remove the obstruction and to recover possession.

We agree with the Assistant Judge that in such a suit, when possession is shown to have been with the plaintiff, the defendants are not, without showing title in themselves, at liberty to impeach the plaintiff’s title, or to set up a jus teritii. The only successful defence, which they can urge, is that they are the owners of the land, or, as the Assistant Judge puts it, the onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff’s will rest upon them—Rakhal Churn v. Watson & Co. (2). If, however, the Assistant Judge meant to go further and say that, even if the defendants in such a case are in a position to prove that they are at time of suit entitled to the land, such a defence is not open to them, we cannot assent to that view. It is contrary to the ruling in Moulakhan v. Gorikhan (3), which, in our opinion, correctly expresses the law upon this subject. The suit under s. 331 is to be tried in the same manner as if a suit had been instituted [969] by the decree-holder against the claimant under the provisions of Chapter V and is to have the same consequences.

The following passage in the judgment of the Assistant Judge leads us to doubt whether he considered that it was open to the defendants to effectually defend themselves by showing that on Jotyaji’s death the land reverted to them as his nearest bhauband, notwithstanding the alienation by Jotyaji to the plaintiff. “In this suit the plaintiff is in the advantageous position of having obtained a decree against Bayaji for possession of the land and, as remarked above, if it is proved that plaintiff or Bayaji was in possession as against the defendants, the onus of proving a better title will rest upon the latter, who will not be allowed to assail plaintiff’s original title. That title can only be assailed by one suing plaintiff and not by those who are merely obstructing him in the execution of a decree.”

(1) 15 W. R. 70. (2) 10 C. 50. (3) 14 B. 697.
Before us it is alleged that the defendants on the death of Jotyaji, who was in the position of a life-tenant, succeeded to the deshmukhi vatan land in dispute as his nearest bhaubands. To enable us effectually to dispose of the appeal we send down the following issue:

"Are the defendants, as the nearest heirs of Jotyaji, entitled to succeed to his deshmukhi vatan property"?

Finding to be certified within two months. We adopt this course as, if they are, the determination of the present suit against them would be a bar to their hereafter asserting their claim to the land in that right—Moulakhan v. Gorikhan (1).

Issue sent down.

The Assistant Judge having recorded a finding in the negative on the issue sent to him for trial, the High Court on the 14th of October, 1897, confirmed the decree appealed from, with costs.

GOPAL GUNDAPA NAiK (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. VISHNU KRISHNA NAiK (Original Defendant), Opponent.

[9th November, 1897.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 59, 62, 63, 64—Plaint registered—Copy extract from account books annexed—Books of account not produced for confirmation—Penalty for non-production of books—Practice—Procedure.

On the 14th April, 1897, a plaint was presented and was numbered and registered as a suit. Annexed to it was a copy of an extract from the plaintiff’s account books. The matter was adjourned to the 2nd June, 1897, for the production of the account books, in order that the copy might be compared and verified. On that day neither the plaintiff nor his pleader appeared with the books, whereupon the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint, holding that no summons could be issued unless the copy extract annexed to the plaint was found to be correct.

Held (reversing the order) that the plaint having been registered on the 14th April, summonses ought to have been issued on the 2nd June. There was no provision in the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) justifying the rejection of the plaint. The penalty which the plaintiff incurred for not producing his original accounts was that prescribed in s. 63, viz., not being able to put in that account without the special leave of the Judge.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order of Rao Bahadur Gangadhar V. Limaye, First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum, in Small Cause Suit No. 279 of 1897.

On the 14th April, 1897, being the last day of the sitting of the Court before the summer vacation, the plaintiff presented a plaint to recover the balance due on an account. Annexed to the plaint was a copy of an extract from plaintiff’s account books. The plaint was duly numbered and registered under s. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code and the matter was adjourned to the 2nd June, 1897, which was the first day of sitting after the vacation, for the production of plaintiff’s account books in order that the annexed copy might be compared with the books (s. 63). On that day neither the plaintiff nor his pleader being present in Court with the account books, the Subordinate Judge [972] rejected the plaint, holding that no summons could be issued to the defendant unless the copy of the extract from the books was found to be correct after comparison with the books themselves. Subsequently the plaintiff applied to the Court to have the suit placed on the file on the ground that he had been prevented by illness from attending the Court on the 2nd June and that his pleader was not bound to be present on that day as it was not the day of hearing.

The Court rejected the application.

The plaintiff, therefore, applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and contended that the order dismissing the suit was not warranted by any provision of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and that the Judge had no jurisdiction to make it. A rule nisi having been issued calling on the defendant to show cause why the suit should not be restored to the file.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for the plaintiff, appeared in support of the rule.
There was no appearance for the opponent (defendant) to show cause.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—In this case there has apparently been no contumacious refusal by the plaintiff to produce his books, and there is no direct provision of the Code, that we can find, which justifies the action which the Subordinate Judge has adopted. The plaint having been registered under s. 58 on the 14th April, the Subordinate Judge ought, on the 2nd of June, to have issued summonses. The penalty which the plaintiff incurred for not producing his original account on that day is that prescribed by
s. 63, viz., not being able to put in that account without the special leave of the Judge.

We set aside the order dismissing the suit, and direct that the Subordinate Judge do issue summonses under s. 64, and proceed with the hearing of the suit in due course. Costs, costs in the cause.

Order set aside.

[973] APPELLATE CIVIL.

BAI NANI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. CHUNILAL (Original Plaintiff), Respondent. [22nd November, 1897.]

Hindu law—Adoption—Adoption of her brother's son by a Hindu widow—Validity of such adoption.

Under the Hindu law a widow may adopt her brother's son.

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. D. Fry, Joint Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiff sued as the adopted son of Joyshankar Utamram to establish his title to the certain cash allowance annually received from the Government treasury of Daskroi.

Joyshankar, the original recipient of the cash allowance, was a Bra-min. He died in 1881, leaving two widows and a daughter, the child of the senior widow, who was the defendant in the present suit.

On Joyshankar's death the allowance was transferred to the name of his older widow.

* Second Appeal, No. 682 of 1897.
On 9th October, 1892, the elder widow died. Thereupon the allowance was entered in the name of the younger widow and was paid to her. On the 29th May, 1894, the younger widow adopted the plaintiff, who was her brother's son. The younger widow died on 17th February, 1895. Thereupon the allowance was entered in the name of the defendant (the daughter of the elder widow) and was paid to her. This led to the present suit.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff's adoption was illegal and invalid (1) because he was the brother's son of his adoptive mother, and (2) because the adoption was made from corrupt and capricious motives with the object of defeating the defendant's rights of succession and inheritance to her father's estate.

The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that the adoption was made from improper motives for the [975] purpose of injuring and defrauding the defendant, and that the plaintiff's adoption (being the adoption by a sister of her brother's son) was invalid under the law of the Mayukha, which was the paramount authority in Gujarat.

This decision was reversed, on appeal, by the Joint Judge of Ahmedabad. He held, on the authority of Sriramulu v. Ramayya (1), that the plaintiff's adoption was not invalid under the Hindu law. He allowed the plaintiff's claim.

Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellant.—The question is, whether an adoption by a sister of her brother's son is valid under the Hindu law. The Dattaka Manas (s. 4, pl. 33 and 34) lays down that such an adoption is invalid for the same reason that a sister's son cannot be adopted by a brother. The principle of adoption is that the son adopted should be the "reflection of a son." The rule originally laid down was accordingly that a legal marriage must be possible between the adopter and the the mother of the adoptee. This rule was afterwards extended so as to cover a case like the present. And it was laid down that a legal marriage should also be possible between the adoptive mother and the natural father of the adopted son. See West and Bühler's Digest, p. 1032. The responses of the Sastris quoted at p. 1033 of the Digest show that a Brahmin widow is not allowed by the Vyavahar Mayuka to adopt a brother's son. In Giriowa v. Bhimaji (2), West, J., refers to the objection that might be taken to the validity of such an objection. Battas Kuar v. Lachman Singh (3) is a direct authority. It lays down that a widow cannot affiliate a brother's son. See also Dagumbaree v. Taramone referred to in F. MacNaughten's Hindu law, p. 170. The lower Court relies on Sriramulu v. Ramayya (1), but that case is not in point, as there the adoption was made not by a widow, but by the adoptive father.

[PARSONS, J.—Suppose the plaintiff had been adopted by Jeyshankar, would the adoption have been illegal?]

[975] No. Jeyshankar was competent to adopt the plaintiff, because he could have legally married plaintiff's natural mother.

[PARSONS, J.—Suppose the adoption had been made by Jeyshankar's senior widow. Would the adoption have been valid?]

I admit that in that case also the adoption would have been valid, and for the same reason, namely, that a legal marriage was possible between the senior widow and the real father of the adopted son. But no legal marriage could possibly take place between the junior widow and her own brother. It is on this ground we contend that the plaintiff’s adoption by the junior widow is illegal.

(1) 3 M. 15. (2) 9 B. 58. (3) 7 N. W. P. 117.

Goverdhan M. Tripathi, for respondent.—It is conceded that the plaintiff’s adoption would have been perfectly valid, if it had been made by Jeyshankar himself. If so, why should the adoption be invalid when made by his younger widow? The widow did not adopt to herself, but to him. She acted under an implied authority from him. And if he was competent to adopt the boy, she was equally so. No doubt, it is now a well-established rule of law that the boy to be adopted must be one whose natural mother the adopter could have legally married; and according to this rule the daughter’s son or sister’s son is not eligible for adoption. But there is no foundation, in law, for the proposition that a legal marriage must also be possible between the adoptive mother and the natural father of the adopted son. The Dattaka Mimansa has been cited in support of this rule. But there is not a single text to support the statement in the Dattaka Mimansa. On the contrary both Mr. Mandlik and Mr. Mayne refuse to accept Nanda Pandita’s authority on this point, and pronounce in favour of the validity of the adoption by a sister of her brother’s son: see Mandlik’s Hindu Law, pp. 479—481, and Mayne’s Hindu Law, s. 125. The case of SriRamulu v. Ramayya (1) is conclusive on this question. It shows that there is no prohibition, in law, to the adoption of a wife’s brother’s son. Even if there were any prohibition, it is directory, not mandatory.

JUDGMENT.

RanaDe, J.—The adoption of the respondent-plaintiff in this case was questioned in the lower Courts on various grounds, but, [976] in the appeal before us, the only ground on which its validity was disputed had reference to the fact that the respondent was the son of the brother of the adoptive mother, Bai Diwali. It was admitted that the adoption was made by the widow to continue the line of her husband Jeyshankar, who could have contracted a valid marriage with the natural mother of the respondent. It was further conceded by Mr. Rao, the appellant’s pleader, that if Jeyshankar had adopted the respondent, no valid objection could have been urged on this ground. It was, however, contended that Jeyshankar’s widow could not validly receive in adoption her own brother’s son, because of her natural relationship to her brother, for the same reason in fact that Jeyshankar could not have validly adopted his own sister’s son.

The question thus raised is one which has never been formally decided in this Presidency. There was indeed an incidental reference made to it in the judgment of West, J., in Girionua v. Bhimaji (2). The boy whose adoption was in dispute in that case was the son of the brother of the adopting widow, but no objection was taken on that ground to the validity of the adoption, presumably because the case arose in the Southern Maratha Country, where the prohibition of the adoption of daughter’s and sister’s son is not universally in force. As the present case comes from Gujarat, this reason does not hold good, and the appellant’s pleader contended that Mr. Justice West’s dictum was an argument in his favour. He also relied upon the ruling in Battas Kuvar v. Luchman Singū (3) in which the adoption of her brother’s son by a widow was held to be invalid. On the other side, much reliance was placed on a ruling of the Madras High Court in which it was laid down that the adoption of a wife’s brother's son was not invalid—Sriramulu v. Ramayya (1). These were the only decided cases cited on either side in the course of the argument before us, which have a direct bearing on the point more immediately under consideration. Mr. Justice West's opinion is, however, only an obiter dictum. As regards the Allahabad case, it appears from the judgment of the Chief Justice of Allahabad in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (2), that the adoption referred to in Batta Kaur v. Lachman Singh (3) was held to be invalid because the widow had adopted the boy without any authority from her husband. In the Madras case above referred to, the adoption was not made by a widow, but by the adoptive father, and it is conceded in this case that if Jeyahankar had adopted the respondent, no objection could properly have been urged. It will be thus seen that the three cases cited are not much in point, and we must decide the present dispute on a general consideration of the nature and force of the alleged prohibitions based on near relationship in the matter of adoption.

There is a general unanimity among the authorities that there is nothing in the Smriti texts, or in the commentaries of Mitakshara and Mayukha, chiefly in force in Gujarat, which suggests any such particular limitation in the matter of adoption.

The prohibitions based on near relationship had their origin chiefly in the Dattaka, Mimansa, a work of Nanda Pandita, who relied solely upon the texts of Shaunaka and Sakala. The originals with translations of these texts will be found in Rao Sahib Mandlik's work, as also in the elaborate judgments of Banerji, J., one of the dissenting Judges, and of the Chief Justice and a majority of the other Judges, in the Allahabad Full Bench case referred to above. These original texts expressly lay down, among negative prohibitions, the cases of the daughter's son, the sister's son, and the son of the mother's sister, as ineligible for adoption in the case of the three higher castes of Hindu society. Nanda Pandita further enlarged their scope by analogical reasoning, and expressed an opinion that for the same reason that a brother could not adopt his sister's son, a sister could not adopt a brother's son. It is on this latter extension of the prohibitive texts that the contention of the appellant is based, and we have now to see how far this extension can be accepted as legitimate, and allowed weight not merely as directory, but as a mandatory rule.

[978] In so far as daughter's and sister's sons are concerned, it is now too late on this side of India to raise the question which has been solemnly settled for the three higher castes by this Court in a series of decisions—Gopal v. Harman (4), Bhagirtibai v. Radhabai (5), and otherwise for the Shudra caste in Ganpatrao v. Vithoba (6), Laksmappa v. Ramava (7).

These rulings indeed cover not only the case of the sons of daughters and sisters, and mother's sister, but also of any other woman whom the male adopter could not by reason of propriety marry. This enlargement, however, does not cover the present case which falls under the extension of the analogy of the male adopter to his widow as suggested by Nanda Pandita. As far as sister's son, and daughter's son, and mother's sister's son are concerned, Nanda Pandita had the authority of express texts to support him, and his remarks in respect of them furnished only the reason of the rule. In respect of the further extension of the prohibition to the,

(1) 3 M. 15.  (2) 17 A. 294.  (3) 7 N. W. P. 117.
(4) 3 B. 273—6 B. 107.  (5) 3 B. 298 N.
near relations of the adopting widow, there is no such textual authority, and the commentator cannot legitimately claim the functions of the Smriti writers.

Mr. Justice Muttusami Ayyar, in the Madras case cited above, has very properly observed that there is no foundation in the text of Shaunaka or Sakala, on which Nanda Pandita relies, for the rule he seeks to draw from it, namely, that the adopting mother must also be a person who might have legally married the natural father of the adopted boy. The rule only requires that marriage should be possible between the person for whom the adoption is made, and the natural mother of the adopted boy—Minakshi v. Ramanada (1); China Nagayya v. Pedda Nagayya (2). The extension sought to be given by Nanda Pandita in the Dattaka Mimansa, and after him by the author of the Dattaka Chandrika, is clearly far beyond the scope of a commentator's functions; and unless such an extension has secured general adherence in the general consciousness or the habits and practices of the people, British Courts of justice, administering Hindu law, are not bound to give effect to it as part of the general law—Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga (3).

[979] The logical unsoundness of the particular reasons assigned by Nanda Pandita for the view enunciated by him, is discussed at great length by the Chief Justice of Allahabad, who has in this matter largely endorsed the comments made by Rao Sahib Mandlik in his work.

For the purposes of the present appeal, it seems unnecessary to go into the question of the authority of the two works on adoption, the Dattaka Mimansa and Chandrika. Allowing them the full weight claimed for them, it is clear that they must be treated as only declaring the law, and not making it; and on this basis there is no ground for accepting the extension of the prohibition proposed by them to the widow’s relations when it is not supported by express texts of the Smriti writers.

It must also be borne in mind that the adoption in this case was made by the widow to Jayshankar, and not to herself. She acted under an implied authority from her husband. This husband had two widows, the elder and the younger Diwali. It must be a very far-fetched construction of the law which would permit the husband or the elder widow to make a valid adoption of the respondent, while denying this same validity to the act of the younger widow, solely because the boy’s natural father happened to be her brother.

The Calcutta High Court has for similar reasons discouraged an extension of the principle of exclusion in another direction, when it was sought to hold that a grand-nephew could not be adopted as a son, because of the rule requiring the adopted son to be a reflection of a natural born son—Haran Chunder v. Hullo Mohun (4).

Lastly, it deserves notice that, for the reasons which led their Lordships of the Privy Council to rule in Srimati Uma v. Gokoolanand (5) that the positive restrictions laid down by Nanda Pandita were only directory and not prohibitive, even if this extension to the widow’s near relations were permissible, the restriction would be at best directory only, and not mandatory, proper to be observed, but not obligatory and enforceable as positive law.

For these several reasons, we disallow the contention raised in this appeal and confirm the decree of the District Court with costs.

Decree confirmed.

Municipality of Bombay v. Sunderji.* [1st December, 1897.]

22 B. 980. Municipality—Bombay City Municipal Act (Bomb. Act III of 1888), s. 461 (d)—By-law—By-law restricting the height of buildings on a site previously built upon—Validity of such by-law.

The Municipality of Bombay has power under s. 461, cl. (d) (1) of Bombay Act III of 1888 to make a by-law restricting the height of a new building erected on a site which has been previously built upon.

This was a reference under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) by W. R. Hamilton, Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate.

The following are the material clauses of the reference:

"One Sunderji Shivji has been charged under s. 353 of the Municipal Act for not carrying out the orders with reference to the height of his building. It appears he had pulled down an old building and has rebuilt it to one and half times the width of the street on which it abuts. He was, therefore, ordered to reduce the height.

2. The road is 25 feet 2 inches wide and the height of the house is 60 feet 7 inches (39' 3"+ 21' 4").

3. Section 461 (d) of the Municipal Act (Bomb. Act III of 1888) empowers the Corporation to make by-laws to regulate 'the provision and maintenance of sufficient open space, either external, or internal, about buildings to secure a free circulation of air and of other means for the adequate ventilation of buildings.'

4. The by-laws published in the Government Gazette of the 3rd August, 1892, provide as follows:

'30. A person who shall erect a new building which abuts on a street of less than 50 feet in width or any part of which is within a distance of half the width of such street from a street of less width than 50 feet, shall not without the written permission of the Commissioner erect such building to a greater height than one and a half times the width between the point [981] at which such building approaches nearest to the street and the opposite side of such street.'

5. The accused is charged with an infraction of this by-law. His solicitor contends that the by-law is ultra vires, because s. 461 (d) does not give any power to regulate the height of a building. It does give power to secure sufficient open space round about a building, but it gives no power to restrict its height. The height is expressly regulated by s. 348 (c), which restricts the height to one and a half times the width of the street it abuts on when the street is of a less width than 50 feet. And this s. 348 applies to buildings newly erected on any site previously unbuilt upon, and it is implied that rebuilding on a site previously built upon cannot be restricted as to height. So that if a man had

* Criminal Reference No. 106 of 1897.

(1) Section 461, cl. (d) provides—

"The Corporation may from time to time make by-laws, not inconsistent with this Act, with respect to the following matters (namely),

(d) The provision and maintenance of sufficient open space, either external or internal, about buildings to secure a free circulation of air, and of other means for the adequate ventilation of buildings."
a house 100 feet high he might pull it down and rebuild it 100 feet high, although it may be in excess of the height of 1½ times the width of a narrow street.

"6. It was also argued that the height of the front part of the building is only 18 inches more than the 1½ times the width of the road, and that all the Municipality can insist upon (if they have the power under the by-law) is to reduce that height by 18 inches.

"7. The house then goes back 13 feet where there is an open terrace and rises by 21 feet 4 inches. It is contended that the by-law, if valid, does not apply to this part of the building, which in fact is distant from the street by 13 feet, which is more than half the width of the street.

"8. The solicitor for the Municipality contends that the by-law is not ultra vires. Section 348, he argues, applies to buildings on new sites. Whereas this is a building on an old site. The by-laws can regulate the height of buildings on old sites, and secure air to the neighbouring buildings by limiting the height. If houses could be built to any height, they would seriously interfere with the ventilation of smaller houses and the access of air to them. The words 'sufficient open space' apply to the space above a building as well as to the space on the sides. The same object is secured in the model by-laws of the Local Government Board in England (Knight's Annotated Model By-laws, s. 54, on p. 169), when the space to be left at the back of a building must not be less than 10 feet, or 15 feet, if the opposite house is 15 feet higher, 20 feet if the opposite house is 25 feet high, and 25 feet if the opposite house is 35 feet high or more.

"9. He also contends that if any part of the house is within a distance of half the width of the street from the street, the by-law applied. The front part of this house abuts on the street, and the height of the whole house must be regulated by the by-law. It is not allowable to divide the house into two parts and restrict the height of the front part only and let the height of the back part be unrestricted.

"13. In my opinion, I believe that s. 461 (d) does not give power to regulate the height of a building, and that the power to regulate open spaces about buildings applies only to lateral open spaces, and it may also apply to new buildings on sites previously unbuilt upon. The by-laws cannot be inconsistent with the Act, and it would be inconsistent to restrict the height of a building by a by-law which was purposely left unrestricted by s. 348.

"14. As the question is one of considerable importance, I beg to refer the question for the favour of the opinion of the High Court, and to ask, whether the Municipality have the power under the by-law quoted to restrict the height of a new building on a site which has been previously built upon."

The reference was argued before a Division Bench (Parsons and Ranade, JJ.).

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate (Mr. W. R. Hamilton) has referred to this Court the following question, viz., whether the Municipality have the power under by-law 30 to restrict the height of a new building on a site which has been previously built upon. By-law
30 is as follows: "A person who shall erect a new building which abuts on a street of less than fifty feet in width, or any part of which is within a distance of half the width of such street from a street of less width than fifty feet, shall not, without the written permission of the Commissioner, erect such building to a greater height than one and a half times the width between the point at which such building approaches nearest to the street, and the opposite side of such street. Provided that nothing herein contained shall debar any person from building up to the full height of any building (belonging to himself) which has stood within two years on the same site, and on which he has not been precluded from building by any injunction or order of a Court." It purports to have been passed under the authority conferred by s. 461 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888 (hereinafter called the Act). Clause (d) of this section is as follows:—

(d) the provision and maintenance of sufficient open space, either external or internal, about buildings to secure a free circulation of air and of other means for the adequate ventilation of buildings. The Magistrate thinks that the by-law is illegal, as being inconsistent with the Act. Section 348 of the Act, he says, makes certain provisions in respect of buildings, which are to be newly erected on sites previously unbuilt on. Buildings already existing are left unprovided for [983] and unrestricted by s. 348: a by-law, therefore, providing for the application to them of any of the matters or restrictions mentioned in s. 348 is inconsistent with the Act. No doubt s. 348 of the Act does deal with buildings to be newly erected on sites previously unbuilt on, and one of its clauses (c) regulates the height of such buildings. It may, therefore, be argued that there must be very clear words used elsewhere in the Act to enable the Municipality to make a by-law which shall affect buildings to be newly erected on sites already built on. The obvious reply, however, to this argument is that s. 461 of the Act contains these very clear words. Except in cl. (c), it deals entirely with already existing buildings, premises, and conditions of things. It could never be argued that because s. 348 of the Act enacts certain regulations to be observed in the case of new buildings to be erected on new sites, there could be no power given elsewhere by the Act to make by-laws enjoining similar or even the same regulations to be observed in respect of buildings either already standing or to be erected on old sites. Undoubtedly, such a power could be given, and in our opinion s. 461 clearly gives the power to make by-laws in respect of the matters mentioned in cl. (d). There is nothing, therefore, illegal or ultra vires in the by-law.

The only point mentioned by the Magistrate which remains for decision is whether cl. (d) allows of a by-law which restricts the height of a building. The Magistrate thinks that it does not, but that it only applies to lateral open spaces. We cannot see the distinction. We assume that the word "buildings" means the building that is standing or is being erected, in respect of which a circulation of air and ventilation is required to be provided. It seems to us that the result is exactly the same whether the regulation be, for example, that if a house is 20 feet high a space of 20 feet shall be left in front of it, or that the height of a house shall not be more than 20 feet, if the space left in front of it is only 20 feet wide. The model by-law quoted by the Magistrate shows this. It regulates the width of the open spaces by the height of the houses. It thus regulates the height of the houses just as the by-law in question here does. In the present case all that the accused has to do, if he wishes to [983] build, his house 60 feet high, is to build it so far back from the road as to leave the necessary open space required by the by-law for that height "between the point at which the building approaches nearest to the street, and the opposite side of such street." We return the case with our answer to the question in the affirmative.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir O. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

ANANDIBAI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. RAJARAM CHINTAMAN
PETHE (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.* [6th December, 1897.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 266 (k)—Execution—Attachment—Spes successionis—"Expectancy of succession by survivorship"—Not attachable—Widow —Widow’s estate.

One Sadashiv Anant devised a house, which was his self-acquired property, to his widow (the defendant), and died leaving a son, Vasudev. The will did not effectively give the widow power to dispose of it. The plaintiff in execution of a decree against Vasudev sought to attach Vasudev’s interest in the house. The lower Court held that as the interest taken by the defendant in the house under her husband’s will was only a widow’s estate, Vasudev as her husband’s son had an interest in the house which might be attached by the plaintiff.

Held (reversing the decree) that Vasudev had no interest in the house. He had only a spes successionis—an expectancy of succession by survivorship, and such an expectancy is not attachable under s. 266 (k) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The entire estate was vested by the testator in the defendant. No doubt her estate was a widow’s estate. Her estate in it closely resembled that of a married woman in England to whom property is given with a restraint against alienation.
That being so, she was unable to dispose of it, but still she was its full owner.
The whole property passed to her from the testator. Nothing was left in him.
But until she died it could not be known who would inherit the house.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bhadur D. G. Gharpure, Additional First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik with appellate powers, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb L. K. Nulkar, Joint Subordinate Judge.

[1897] The plaintiff sued for a declaration that a certain house belonged to his judgment-debtor Vasudev and was liable to be sold in execution of a decree against him. The defendant, who was Vasudev’s mother, denied that Vasudev had any interest in the house. She claimed to be the owner, alleging that it had been the self-acquired property of her husband Sadasiv, and that he had left it to her by his will.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the house in dispute was not Vasudev’s property, and that it was not liable to be attached in execution of the decree against him.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge reversed the decree and allowed the claim on the ground that Sadasiv’s will did not convey absolute title to the defendant, but only a widow’s estate.

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

* Second Appeal No. 861 of 1897.
(1) 17 B. 503.

1289
Judge Farran, C. J.—We do not entertain any doubt in this case that the document upon which the defendant Anandibai bases her title to the house in suit is a will, and that the deceased testator Sadashiv Anant by it validly devised the house to her. As the will does not expressly give the defendant Anandibai (who was the testator’s widow) a power of disposing of the house, the question remains whether Vasudev, one of the testator’s sons, had any attachable interest in it at the time when the plaintiff attached it, Anandibai being still alive. We are of opinion that he had not. The testator, when he devised the house to his widow, vested the entire estate in her. No reversion was left in the testator to descend upon his heirs as undisposed of estate. The Subordinate Judge, A. P., speaks of the estate which the widow Anandibai took in the house as a widow’s estate, and in all essential particulars it is of that character. The law imposes upon her the disqualification of being unable to dispose of it, but still she is its full owner. Her estate in it closely resembles that of a married woman in England to whom property is given with a restraint against alienation. In the case of such a gift or bequest the whole estate in the property given passes from the [986] donor or testator. Nothing is left in him. Until the defendant Anandibai dies, it cannot be known who will inherit the house. Vasudev, as one of her husband’s sons, has only a spes successionis, “an expectancy of succession by survivorship,” and such a hope or expectancy is not attachable under s. 266 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code. The law upon which that exception is founded will be found in Ram Chunder v. Dhurmo Narain (1). The case of Anaji v. Chandrabai(2) was different. There it was expressly found that the donor only gave to the donee a life estate. The reversion expectant on the determination of the life estate given to the donee was left undisposed of, and consequently remained vested in the donor, and was, therefore, as such held to be attachable. The fact that the donor only gave a life estate to the donee was the ratio decidendi in that case.

The decree of the appellate Court is, for these reasons, reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs throughout on the plaintiff.

Govind Gopal (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. Balwantrao Hari (Original Defendant), Opponent. [23rd November, 1897].

Promissory note—Express promise to pay.

A document is not a promissory note if it does not contain an express promise to pay.

(1) 15 W. R. F. B. R. 17.  (2) 17 B. 503.
APPLICATION to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887) against the decision of Khan Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, Judge of the Court of Small Causes, at Poona.

Plaintiff sued in the Court of Small Causes, at Poona, to recover the sum of Rs. 351-12-0 alleged to be due on a khata account.

[987] The khata was in the following form:

"Dated 15th April, 1893, to Govind Gopal Phadke from Balwantrao Hari Raswadkar.

"(On debit side as follows:—) Rs. 300 cash in Surat currency have been received: for them interest at eight annas per cent. per mensem, having made an agreement of five months, have been taken—three hundred."

The above was stamped with a one-anna stamp. On its being tendered in evidence, an objection was taken that it was insufficiently stamped.

The Court allowed the objection and rejected the document, holding that it was a promissory note and not adequately stamped as such.

The plaintiff then applied for leave to amend the plaint and to sue for the amount as for money had and received. The Judge refused the application and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court and obtained a rule to set aside the order.

Purshotam P. Khare, for the applicant (plaintiff), in support of the rule.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the opponent (defendant), contra.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The document in question is headed "khata," that is, "account." Then it proceeds—"dated 15th April, 1893, to Govind Gopal Phadke from Balwantrao Hari Raswadkar." Then on the debit side occur these words (literally translated):

"Rs. 300 cash in Surat currency have been received: for them interest at 8 annas per cent. per mensem, having made an agreement of five months, have been taken—three hundred."

We are unable to hold that this document is a promissory note. There is no promise to pay; and there is no authority for holding that an implied promise is sufficient to constitute an instrument a promissory note. The document is a receipt or an acknowledgment or an agreement. In either case the plaintiff was entitled to proceed with the suit.

The rule must be made absolute and the case remanded for the Small Cause Court Judge to proceed with it according to law. Costs to follow the result.

FULTON, J.—As the document in question does not contain any express promise to pay, I do not think it is a promissory note. It [988] appears to me to be simply an acknowledgment of liability, and as such to be sufficiently stamped with one anna. I would accordingly reverse the decision and remand the suit for retrial on the merits. A day should be fixed for the hearing, and the Judge, after taking such evidence as the parties may tender, should proceed to determine whether this money is justly due by the defendant to the plaintiff. For this purpose I do not think that any amendment of the plaint is necessary, but if it were, it seems to me to be a case in which it might properly be allowed. Costs should follow the result.

Where a dispute arose between the proprietors of two talukdari villages situate on the banks of a river about the diversion of the course of the river by means of a dam and a trench made by one of them in the current of the river, and each talukdar claimed the river as his own private property.

Held, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to interfere under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).

This was an application under s. 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).

The applicant was the Thakor of Limdi, and proprietor of the talukdari village of Wadhia in the Ahmedabad District.

The river Utavali separates the lands of this village from those of another talukdari village called Navda, which belongs to one Latif Khan. The river forms the boundary between these two villages for some distance. It then bifurcates, one branch [999] passing through Wadhia, the other through Navda, until both are lost in marshy swamps.

On the 20th April, 1883, the Thakor obtained a decree establishing his right to have the water of the river Utavali flow freely at all times and in all seasons towards his village of Wadhia, and directing the Talukdar of Navda to remove the obstruction he had caused by erecting a dam across the river.

The proceedings in execution of this decree lasted till June, 1896.

On the 26th September, 1896, the Talukdar of Navda made a complaint to the Collector of Ahmedabad, stating that the Talukdar of Wadhia had dug a trench and erected a dam in the bed of the river, and thereby diverted the water from his channel, to the great injury of the people of Navda, who were his tenants. The material portion of this complaint was as follows:-

'My village of Navda is within the jurisdiction of the Dhandhuka Taluka. The river of that village is named Utavali, and its water is used for all purposes by the inhabitants of that village. No one has a right except myself to use the water of the river for crops and produce. Therefore, on payment to me of the fixed amount and obtaining my permission, people of the opposite side as well as others use it. In the meantime the Limbdi Darbar put us several times indirectly to great loss. The matter was many times enquired into and finally determined by the High Court. Several execution proceedings have taken place in the matter. The land on the opposite side of the river has been broken for cultivation. But as the current of the water is on this side, the water remains on this side. I have now received reliable information from my men that a number of men were engaged by the Limbdi Darbar, the land dug, and the earth therefrom thrown into the current of the river, and the flow of the water obstructed, and steps taken to divert it to the opposite side. By these means the persons residing in my village and my giras have undoubtedly suffered, and will suffer an immense loss. I bring all the facts to your notice and request your Honour to avert this loss."

* Criminal Revision No. 297 of 1897.

On receipt of this complaint the Collector made an inquiry into the matter, and directed the Assistant Public Prosecutor to institute criminal proceedings against the Talukdar of Wadhela.

Thereupon the Public Prosecutor laid information against the talukdar before the First Class Magistrate of Ahmedabad, who issued the following notice to the accused under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure:—

"The river Utavali flows towards Navda along the border of your village Wadhela. The people of Wadhela and other villages named in the margin have, by your [990] order, performed some digging in the current of that river, and, in order to stop the water flowing towards Navda, have raised a mound by filling in earth and thereby diverted the flow towards Wadhela; they have thus caused obstruction to the cultivators of Navda and other villages who maintained themselves by cultivation with the help of the water. It has been shown to me that the obstruction still continues.

"I hereby, therefore, do order and enjoин you that you should, within the period of 10 days, abstain from the work of diverting the flow of the water, remove the obstructions caused by you to the usual flow of water, and restore the channel to its original condition; otherwise you should appear in my Court on the 5th July, 1897, to show cause why the order should not be enforced."

In answer to the above notice, the Talukdar of Wadhela pleaded that the river was not a public river, but his private property so far as it flowed within the limits of his village; that he had caused no obstruction to the public and had done nothing so as to cause a public nuisance; that this was a private dispute between two neighbouring talukdars, and the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to interfere under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Magistrate overruled these objections, and passed an order under s. 140 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) directing the Talukdar of Wadhela to remove the obstruction complained of.

In his judgment the Magistrate remarked as follows:—

"The principal contention of the respondents is that the place where the alleged obstruction has been caused, is not public, and that the river where the obstruction is said to have been caused is of the private ownership of the Talukdar of Wadhela, i.e., the Limbdi Thakor. On this point also the evidence of the Talati of Navda, the Bandh Karkun, the Aval Karkun, the Mamlatdar (B. S. Chaggaona,) and the late Mamlatdar of Dhandhuka and now Deputy Collector, Mr. Parmanandas Surajram, is corroborative throughout. They each and all allege that the river is public and that it does not belong to any particular individual. All the villages by which the river passes make use of the water, and in a survey map of Wadhela the Utavali river has not been shown at all, though it has been in the map of village of Navda. The evidence of the above witnesses is quite consonant with the principle that every riparian holder has the right to use the water flowing past his land. He cannot, however, interfere, as the Talukdar of Wadhela (Limbdi Thakor) has done in the present case, with the rights of other holders in his neighbourhood and cause such a serious loss as that now inflicted upon the neighbouring Navda Talukdar.

[991] The artificial filling and digging made by the Wadhela Talukdar forces the water in the direction of his village and checks its free flow towards Navda. No one in the present case disputes the right of the Wadhela Talukdar to use the water flowing naturally past his land, but he must remain content with that, and that only, and not try to get more by sensibly diminishing, by artificial means, the supply of water to his neighbours above and below the stream."

Under these circumstances the Talukdar of Wadhela made the present application to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction to set aside the Magistrate's order under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Anderson (with him Rao Bahadur Vasudeo J. Kirtikar and Ramdutt V. Desai) for the applicant:—The Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass the order in question. The dispute is one of a purely civil nature between two neighbouring talukdars, each of whom claims the bed of the river to be his own private property. The obstruction complained of, affects the interests of the Navda Talukdar alone. It is on his complaint that the present proceedings were instituted. The public have no cause for complaint and do not complain of any public nuisance. The two talukdars have been disputing with each other in the Civil Court for years about this river. A dispute of a private nature relating to private property does not give jurisdiction to the Magistrate to proceed under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure—Empress v. Prayag Singh (1); Basaruddin v. Bahar Ali (2); Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (3); Luckhee v. Ram Kumar (4). Where a bona fide question is raised as to whether the way, road or channel in public or private property, s. 133 does not apply—Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu (5). Here both the talukdars assert that the river where the alleged obstruction was caused is a private and not a public river. The river is neither a tidal nor a navigable river. We submit that the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction.

Lang, Advocate General (with him G. K. Parekh) for the opponent.—The Magistrate has found as a fact that the river is a public river and that the obstruction complained of affects a large [992] number of people. The whole evidence shows that the river does not belong to the rival talukdars or to any other private individual. All the villages by which it passes use the water of this river. No member of the public can be restrained from using it. It is then a river "which is, or may lawfully be used by the public" within the meaning of s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is this public user which has been obstructed by the dam erected across the river by the Thakor of Limbdi. His acts amount to a public nuisance. The Magistrate had, therefore, jurisdiction to interfere and remove the obstruction under s. 133 of the Code.

JUDGMENT.

Parsons, J.—In this case the Magistrate has ordered the applicant, who is the Thakor of Limbdi and the owner of the village of Wadhela, to remove an obstruction from the river Utavali. The real point for our decision is whether the obstruction is such as could be the subject of an order,

(1) 9 O. 103.  (2) 11 O. 8.  (3) 12 O. 197.  (4) 15 O. 564.  (5) 17 O. 669.
under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The river Utavali is said to have its rise in Kathiawar, to run through the lands of several villages, and after a course of some 25 miles to come to the villages of Wadhela and Navda. It forms their boundary for some short distance. It then bifurcates; and the two streams end by absorption into the soil of the respective villages. The Thakor of Limbdi has, to use the words of the Magistrate, performed some digging in the current of the river and has raised a mound by filling in earth, and has thereby diverted the flow towards Wadhela; in other words, he has, by means of a trench and a dam, diverted the course of the river, so that now the greater portion of the water of the river flows into Wadhela and little or no water runs into Navda, whereas before the water was pretty evenly distributed between the two. Navda is like Wadhela a talukdari village and was owned by one Latik Khan, who made the original complaint in the matter (Ex. 8) on the 25th September, 1896. There had been prior to this a long standing litigation between the two talukdars relative to the water of the river. In 1877, a suit was filed by the owner of Wadhela against the owner of Navda, because the latter had erected a dam, which prevented the water flowing into Wadhela. It was decided in 1883 by this High Court, which declared the plaintiff entitled to have a [993] free flow of water into Wadhela. The proceedings in execution of this decree were not finally concluded till 1896. (See Printed Judgments, 1896, page 480.) It must have been very soon after this that the acts now complained of were done.

Section 133 of the Code deals only with an obstruction in a way, river, or channel which is, or may be, lawfully used by the public. These words seem to imply not only that the river or channel must be one of public use, but that the obstruction must be of that public use.

The questions, therefore, that arise are:—1. Whether the Utavali is a river which is, or may be, lawfully used by the public. 2. If so, whether there has been any unlawful obstruction caused to that use by the acts of the applicant. The best definition of the word "river" that I can find is given in the Tagore Law Lectures, 1889 (Riparian Rights), viz.:—"A running stream of water arising at its source by the operation of natural law and by the same law pursuing over the earth's surface a certain direction in a defined channel, being bounded on either side by banks, shores, or walls until it discharges itself into the sea, a lake or a marsh." This, however, says nothing about size, and, therefore, ought, I think, to be supplemented by the definition in Webster's Dictionary, viz.:—"A large stream of water flowing in a channel on land towards the ocean, a lake, or another river; a stream larger than a rivulet or brook." This so-called river, the Utavali, is scarcely shown to come within this definition. It seems to be merely a collection of rain water in hollow ground which has a certain flow owing to the low level and porous nature of the soil in Navda and Wadhela. There is no evidence of its condition in the dry weather, and no one says that it flows the whole year round. I do not even know whether it flows wholly in one direction. The map shows it to be broadest in the middle part of its course and to dwindle away on each side. Further inquiry, however, would be necessary in order to be able to properly answer this part of the question. Assuming, however, that the Utavali is a river, it is clear that no user of it by the public, either actual or possible, is proved. Apparently it is nowhere even alleged to be a public river. At common law all rivers above the flow and reflow of the tide are prima facie deemed [994] to be private. A public river would be one that was intended for the use of the public, subjected, that is to say, by-law to a kind of servitude in favour of all members of the State.
The Utavali is neither tidal nor navigable. It is not the property of the State.
It is used by the inhabitants of the villages through which it runs, but they make no other use of it than that of ordinary riparian occupants, and the talukdars, who are the parties to this proceeding, expressly claim it as their private property, because it runs through their land. In his complaint, Latif Khan calls Navda his village, and says that "the river of that village is named Utavali and its water is used for all purposes by the inhabitants of that village. No one has a right, except myself, to use the water of the river for crops and produce. Therefore, on payment to me of the fixed amount and obtaining my permission, people of the opposite side as well as others use it." A similar claim was made in the civil suit by the Talukdar of Wadhela. Each riparian proprietor claims the stream as his own and the use of the water for his benefit alone. It is, therefore, impossible to answer the first question otherwise than in the negative.

2. The answer to the second question is given by the Magistrate himself. "Every riparian holder," he says, "has the right to use the water flowing past his land. He cannot, however, interfere, as the Talukdar of Wadhela (Limbdi Thakor) has done in the present case, with the rights of other holders in his neighbourhood, and cause such a serious loss as that now inflicted upon the Navda Talukdar." This, too, was the complaint of the Navda Talukdar, that his private rights as a riparian proprietor had been infringed. Just as in the former case the Wadhela Talukdar complained against his neighbour of Navda, so here the Navda Talukdar complains against him of Wadhela of an obstruction of his private rights as owner of property, a private injury causing private loss. I am of opinion that s. 133 cannot extend to such an obstruction. My learned colleague agrees with me in this opinion, and, therefore, we reverse the order of the Magistrate.

RANADE, J.—A series of decisions on s. 133—Queen-Empress v.
Bisseesur Sahu and another (1), Basaruddin v. [995] Bahar Ali (2), Ramkumar Mukherjee (4)—clearly establish that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction under it where a bona-fide dispute exists as to whether the place where the obstruction is made is public or private property, though at the same time the Magistrate has power to enquire and determine whether or not the objection is a bona-fide one. In the present case, the applicant raised the contention in the Court below that the river Utavali was not a public stream, but belonged to him, and it was urged for him by the Government Pleader that the place where the alleged obstruction was caused was not public place, but belonged to the applicant. The evidence recorded before the Magistrate raises indeed some presumption that the river Utavali is a public stream. It takes its rise in Kathiawar, and after flowing for 20 miles past some fourteen villages in the Dhandhuka Taluka belonging some to Government and others to different talukdars and girassias, it loses itself in the khari or marsh of Bawaliari. Such a stream, not being over its whole length the property of any private owner, and being used by all, may be assumed to have some of the characteristics of a public stream.
In the view I have taken of the facts of the case, the point is not very material. Section 133 contemplates not only that the river should be public, but that the obstruction must be caused to some public right. The chapter under which this section occurs is headed "Public Nuisances," and the section itself requires that the obstruction to be removed must be in a way, river, or channel, which may be lawfully used by the public. The prosecution, though instituted by the Assistant Government Pledger, was the result of a complaint made by the Talukdar of Navda, who in his complaint claimed full and sole ownership of the river within the limits of his village. The former complaint was made some eight months after the alleged obstruction. The applicant, who is the Talukdar of Wadhela, a neighbouring village, also claimed the river at the place where the obstruction has taken place to be his property. The villagers of Navda have no independent rights to the use of the water in the river for irrigation purposes. The loss and advantage in this dispute is solely of the Talukdar of Navda or [996] of Wadhela. It was on the same footing that the two talukdars fought the previous suit in respect of the removal of a dam higher up the river which the Navda Talukdar had placed, and in which case this Court upheld the applicant's right to the unrestricted flow of water at all seasons into the channel of Wadhela. The present obstruction is in one sense the result of the full execution of that decree, the digging in the channel and the filling up of the bed of the river being intended to ensure a permanent flow of water in the channel.

(1) 17 C. 562. (2) 11 C. 8. (3) 12 C. 137. (4) 16 C. 564.

It is thus clear that the obstruction is not a public nuisance and is not an invasion of a public right. The dispute is really, as before, between two neighbours, owners of private property, on the bank of the river. The Magistrate had thus no jurisdiction to proceed under s. 133, but ought to have referred the parties to the remedy of a civil suit.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Candy.

LAKSHMIBAI AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Appellants v.
RAJAJI BIN DADI (Original Plaintiff), Respondent.*

[8th December, 1897.]

Hindu law—Adoption—Specifying a child for adoption does not necessarily prevent the adoption of another if the one specified die or be refused.

Where a husband authorizing an adoption specifies the child he wishes to be taken, but that child dies or is refused by his parents, the authority given warrants (at least in Bombay) the adoption of another child. The presumption is that the husband desired an adoption, and by specifying the object merely indicated a preference.

[Appr., 26 M. 691 : R., 16 C.L.J. 304 = 17 C.W.N. 319 = 15 Ind. Cas. 817.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal D. Kavibankar, Additional First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara with appellate powers.

One Bhau bin Bhagoji Patil died on 26th March, 1890, leaving two widows named Tanu, the next friend of the plaintiff (a minor), and Laksibhimbai (defendant No. 1). Tanu was the senior widow. The plaintiff alleged that on the 9th June, 1893, he was adopted by Tanu, and sued for a declaration of his status as such.

Evidence was given that the deceased Bhagoji had directed Tanu to adopt one Balu, who was the son of his sister Goju, or had at all events indicated a preference for that child, but that, as Goju refused to give her son in adoption, Tanu had adopted the plaintiff. The defendants disputed the validity of the plaintiff’s adoption.

Both the lower Courts held that the plaintiff’s adoption was valid, and that he was entitled to the declaration prayed for.

The defendants preferred a second appeal.

Lang (Advocate-General) with Vishnu K. Bhavadekar appeared for the appellants (defendants).

Inverarity with Mahadeo V. Bhat appeared for the respondent (plaintiff).

The following authorities were cited:—Ramchandra v. Bapu (1); Bayabai v. Bala (2); West and Bühler, p. 965.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—We think that the passage cited from West and Bühler, Vol. II. p. 965, correctly lays down the law for this Presidency. “It is common for a husband authorizing an adoption to specify the child he wishes to be taken. Should that child die, or be refused by his parents, the authority would still be held, at least in Bombay, to warrant the adoption of another child, unless indeed he had said ‘such a child and no other.’ The presumption is that he desired an adoption, and by specifying the object merely indicated a preference.” It is, we think, borne out by the ruling in Ramchandra Baji v. Bapu Khandu (1). Westropp, C.J., thus states the law:—“Lalitabai could not have lawfully adopted Shivaji or any person other than Pudaji, so long as Pudaji lived and were willing to be adopted,—for there could not be any consent on the part of Bhavanji to such an adoption implied in derogation of his express direction in favour of Pudaji.”

It is not, however, actually necessary that we should decide the question in this case, for the Subordinate Judge, A. P., has found as a fact that the deceased Bhaum did not so much direct that Balu, his sister’s son, should be adopted, as indicate a preference for that boy, and in the absence of any objection raised by the appellants to the plaintiff’s adoption on this ground, and having regard to the vagueness of the language used by Tanu and the other circumstances stated by the Subordinate Judge, A. P., we cannot say that his inference from the language used is incorrect. It is found as a fact, independently of the objection that the indicated boy was the sister’s son of Bhaum, that the mother of Balu refused to give him in adoption. Decree confirmed with costs.

Decree confirmed.

APPENDIX CIVIL.

Before Sir C. F. Farran, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Candy.

JEDDI SUBRAYA VENKATESH SHANBHOG (Original Opponent and Plaintiff), Appellant v. RAMRAO RAMCHANDRA MURDERSHI (Original Petitioner and Defendant), Respondents.*

[13th December, 1897, and 12th March, 1898].

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 179—Decree partly in favour of plaintiff and partly in favour of defendant—Application for execution by one party does not prevent limitation running against the other—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 593.

A. obtained a decree against B. for possession and for Rs. 27 mesne profits. In execution he got possession. On appeal, however, the decree was reversed so far as it ordered possession to be given to him, and the amount of mesne profits awarded to him was reduced to Rs. 13-8-0. The appellate decree was passed on the 6th June, 1889.

On the 16th December, 1891, the defendant B. applied to be restored to possession. That application was dropped, and on the 24th September, 1893, he made a second application. There had been nothing done in the interval except that in 1892 and again in 1894 the plaintiff had applied for execution in respect of the Rs. 13-8-0 awarded to him. The lower Courts were of opinion that the application in 1895 by the defendant was not barred by limitation by reason of the plaintiff's applications in 1892 and 1894, which they held to be an acknowledgment by the plaintiff of the defendant's right to execute his part of the decree.

Held (reversing the order of the lower Court) that the defendant's application was barred by limitation. The plaintiff's application in 1892 and 1894 did not operate as an acknowledgment so as to prevent limitation.

SECOND APPEAL FROM the decision of E.H. Moscardi, District Judge of Kamala, confirming the order of Rao Sahib T. V. Kalsulkar, Subordinate Judge of Kurna, in an execution proceeding.

The plaintiff obtained a decree No. 89 of 1887 against defendant, awarding him possession of certain land and Rs. 27 as mesne profits, and in execution obtained possession.

Subsequently, in appeal, the decree was reversed so far as it ordered possession to be given to plaintiff, but was affirmed as to payment of mesne profits, the amount of which, however, was reduced to Rs. 13-8-0.

The appellate decree was passed on the 6th June, 1889.

On the 18th December, 1891, the defendant applied to be restored to possession, but the application was dropped.

In 1892 and again on 24th September, 1894, the plaintiff applied for the recovery of the Rs. 13-8-0 awarded to him by the appellate decree, but both applications were disposed of for want of prosecution.

On 24th September, 1895, the defendant filed the present darkhast applying to be restored to possession.

The plaintiff contended that the application was barred by limitation, and that the defendant had no right to claim mesne profits.

The Subordinate Judge held that the darkhast was in time, and adjourned the case to determine the amount of mesne profits.

On appeal by plaintiff, the Judge confirmed the order. The following is an extract from his judgment:

"On the point raised I find that the application is in time. The darkhasts of the plaintiff were requests for the execution of the District Court's decree, and were accompanied by copies of that decree, thereby implying, as it appears to me, that the decree was still in force, not only as regards the rights of the plaintiff thereunder, but also as regards those of the defendant. Now under s. 19 of the Limitation Act, if before the expiration of the period prescribed for an application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing, signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed. Consequently I think that the darkhast of 1892 and 1894 kept the defendant's claim alive, and that the lower Court was right in its conclusion that the present darkhast was in time."

[1000] The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.
Ganpatrao S. Mulgaumkar, for the appellant (plaintiff).
Dattatraya A. Idgumji, for the respondent (defendant).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The original decree in this case awarded possession of the land claimed in the plaint to the plaintiff and Rs. 27 as mesne profits. An appeal was filed by defendant, but before it was heard, possession of the land was in execution made over to the plaintiff. The decree of the appellate Court was passed on 6th June, 1889. It reversed the original decree in so far as that decree awarded possession to the plaintiff, and reduced the amount of mesne profits to Rs. 13-8-0. The final decree was thus a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 13-8-0, and the defendant under s. 583 of the Civil Procedure Code was entitled in virtue of it to have possession of the land restored to him. In that sense it may be said to be a decree in favour of each party, though strictly speaking there was no part of the decree of which the defendant could demand execution. It is an express provision of the Code which gave the defendant the right to be re-instated in possession upon the reversal of the decree of the lower Court. If that decree had not been executed before the decree in appeal was passed, the defendant could not have invoked the aid of the Court in execution at all.

On the 18th December, 1891, the defendant applied to be re-instated in possession. The application dropped. The defendant again on the 24th September, 1895, presented a darkhast to be re-instated.

The defendant's application is prima facie time-barred. The lower Courts have held that it is in time, because the plaintiff in 1892 and again in 1894 applied for execution of the decree in respect of the Rs. 13-8-0 awarded to him. They have done so on the ground that the plaintiff by applying for execution of the decree in his favour acknowledged the defendant's right to execute his portion of the decree. We are unable to concur in that view. Admitting that an acknowledgment in writing is sufficient to give a fresh starting point in the case of the execution of a decree, as to which see Trimbak v. Kashinath (1), we think that [1001] here there is certainly in terms no acknowledgment by the plaintiff of the defendant's right, nor do we think that there is such an acknowledgment by necessary implication. If the defendant had bound himself not to re-demand possession from the plaintiff, the plaintiff's application for

(1) P. J. (1897), 101 = 22 B. 732, execution of his money decree would have been couched in precisely the same language. The case of Dharma v. Govind (1) shows what are the essentials of an acknowledgment relied upon to give a fresh starting point in limitation. In the cases referred to by Mr. Idgunji—Janki Prasad v. Ghulam Ali (2), Fateh Muhammad v. Gopal Das (3), and Hingan Lal v. Mansa Ram (4)—there were actual acknowledgments of liability under the decree. In this case, as we have said, there is none.

It is, however, contended that the plaintiff's application for execution satisfies the requirements of art. 179. We think that there is no force in that contention. The decree here is not like a partition decree, which, though not in terms joint, enures equally for the benefit of the defendant and of the plaintiff—Narayan v. Vithal (5), Mohun Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder (6), but is a several decree awarding Rs. 13-8-0 to the plaintiff and giving the defendant the right to be restored to possession of the lands in suit. The decree and application fall, we think, both within the letter and spirit of the first explanation to the article. See Venubai v. The Collector of Nasik (7).

The order of the lower Court is reversed and the application is rejected with costs throughout on applicant.

Order reversed.

Note.—On the 12th March, 1898, this order was reversed on review. It appeared that in the darkest of 24th September, 1894, the defendant had applied for restitution under s. 598 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The lower Court's had omitted to notice this fact, and it was not, therefore, brought to the notice of the High Court in hearing the above second appeal. The defendant applied for a review and the High Court reversed the above order, holding that by reason of defendant's application of 24th September, 1894, the present application was not barred.

Account.

(1) Stated or adjusted (rusukhata)—Cause of action—Such account only evidence of the existing debt not itself a fresh contract on which a suit may be brought—Interest—Damdupat—Practice—Procedure.—In June, 1883, the plaintiff's father advanced a loan to the defendant at compound interest. The account of this debt with interest was adjusted and signed from time to time. In June, 1893, it was adjusted and signed, the amount found due being Rs. 28-8-0. In February, 1896, the plaintiff sued to recover this amount.

_Held_, that the account (rusukhata) was merely an acknowledgment of the debt and of the correctness of the calculation of interest upon it.

_Held_, also, that the plaintiff was not entitled to treat the amount so found due as principal and to claim interest upon it. The debt to be sued on was the amount originally advanced, and the interest recoverable was limited by that amount according to the rule of damdupat.

By English law an account stated could be sued on as implying a promise to pay. Formerly this was the rule also in Bombay (as shown by the earlier cases) where the account was signed. If, however, it was not signed, it could not be sued on as a new contract. The Indian Limitation Act required as acknowledgment or admission of a debt to be signed; and an admission not made in the manner prescribed by law (i.e., signed) for the purpose of preventing a debt from becoming barred does not imply a promise to pay it if it should become barred.

According, however, to the later authorities an account stated or adjusted (rusukhata) cannot be sued on as a fresh contract. The suit must be brought in respect of the original transaction, and the subsequent stated or adjusted accounts (rusukhata) are only evidence of the debt arising from them, and serve to prevent the operation of the Act of Limitation. Act X of 1873 (Oaths).
(1) Refusal to take an oath—Effect of such refusal—Estoppel—Evidence.—The plaintiff sued to recover certain land from eight defendants, alleging it to be his exclusive property. One of the defendants pleaded that he was a co-owner with the plaintiff, who had hitherto paid him his share of the rent. In the course of the case he offered to withdraw his opposition to the plaintiff’s claim if the plaintiff would swear a binding oath that his (the defendant’s) allegations were false and that the plaintiff held exclusive possession of the property. The plaintiff refused to take the proposed oath. The Court, however, attached no importance to the refusal, and on the evidence passed a decree for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed and in the appellate Court the plaintiff’s son on behalf of his father refused the oath, while on the other hand the defendant said he was willing, if required to swear to the truth of his case. The Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff’s refusal to take the proposed oath and the defendant’s readiness to take it was, under the circumstances of the case, conclusive, and disregarding the recorded evidence be reversed the decree of the lower Court and allowed the defendant’s claim.

Held, (reversing the appellate decree and restoring the decree of the lower Court) that the appellate Court was wrong in deciding the case on the ground of the plaintiff’s refusal to take the proposed oath. That refusal did not conclusively prove the falsity of the plaintiff’s claim. It was merely a piece of conduct which was evidence to be considered in the case together with the other evidence. In this case there was abundant other evidence all of which was in favour of the plaintiff, and his refusal to take the oath did not necessarily constitute a sufficient reason to set aside that evidence.

GENERAL INDEX.

Act X of 1873 (Oaths)—(Concluded).

A party who makes an oath as prescribed by his adversary confines by so doing on his statement the character of conclusive proof, but his mere refusal to make the oath does not under the terms of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) justify any legal presumption against him. Such refusal is to be considered merely as a piece of conduct to be considered along with the other evidence. CHINTAMAN v. SHRINIVAS, 22 B. 580 1035

(2) S. 9—Offer by one party to be bound by oath of other party if taken in a certain form—Acceptance of the offer—Subsequent revocation of the offer—Administering of the oath discretionarily with the Court.—The plaintiff offered under s. 9 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873) to be bound by the oath or affirmation of the defendant in a prescribed form upon a certain point. The defendant accepted the offer and took the oath.

Held, that the plaintiff could not retract his offer to be bound by the oath.

(f), 5—Survey and Settlement Act (Bombay Act I of 1865), s. 32—Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), ss. 38 and 39—Free pasturage—Land set apart by Government for grazing—Subsequent sale by Government of part of such land—Right of pasturage by the inhabitants of a village over Government waste lands—Right of Government over such land—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts.—The land comprised in three survey numbers situated in the village of Mahim were set apart by Government as free grazing land for the cattle of villagers. Out of this land about 2,600 acres was sold by Government to one Manchesha (defendant No. 2) in 1891. The extent of the area over which village cattle grazed before the sale being thus curtailed, the plaintiff for himself and on behalf of the other villagers brought this suit against the Secretary of State and Manchesha, alleging that the land left for grazing after the sale of 2,600 acres was insufficient for the pasturage of the village cattle and praying (in the alternative) that Government should set apart so much of land as might be necessary for free grazing, &c., and that until such land as was necessary had been set apart, the plaintiff might be declared to have the right of using the land comprised in the three survey numbers as heretofore, and that an injunction might be granted accordingly.

Government alleged that the land that was left after the sale to Manchesha was sufficient for the bona fide needs of the villagers, and contended (inter alia) that the suit was barred under s. 4, cl. (f), of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876).

Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court dismissing the suit, that while the Courts consistently with the course of legislation may have jurisdiction to declare that the villagers of a specified village are entitled to rights of free pasturage over Government waste lands within the limits of their village, yet they can proceed no further and enjoin the Collector to pursue any particular course in connection with them while he is acting bona fide in pursuance of the power which the provision of the statute confer upon him.

The claim being against Government respecting the occupation of waste land belonging to Government, the Civil Courts are precluded from entertaining it under s. 4 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act (Bombay Act X of 1876). A question relating to the discontinuous occupation of the village wastes by the village cattle is as much a question of land revenue as one relating to the permanent occupation of them or a portion of them by an individual.

(4) Ss. 12, 13, 53 and 54—Mortgage—Profits in lieu of interest—Loan not secured—Provision that mortgage not to be redeemed unless secured loan paid off—Mortgage paid off out of profits—Balance of profits applied to interest on loan—Special Judge, power of, to vary decree—Review.—A lent B Rs. 160 for which B gave him a bond, dated 6th July, 1872. Of this loan Rs. 100 were advanced on the mortgage of certain land, and the bond contained terms of the mortgage, one of which was that the profits of the land were to be taken by the mortgagor in lieu of interest on the Rs. 100. The remaining Rs. 50 of the loan unsecured by the bond were made repayable with compound interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per annum. The bond further provided that the mortgage should not be redeemed until the latter sum of Rs. 50 with interest should be paid off. B sued for redemption of the mortgage. The first Court found that the mortgage had been paid off, and ordered redemption on the plaintiff paying Rs. 50 with interest, which under the rule of damdaspot increased the amount to Rs. 100. The plaintiff applied to the Special Judge for review on the ground that he had already paid the Rs. 50. The Special Judge did not review the case on that ground, but acting under the power given him by ss. 53 and 54 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act varied the decree by ordering redemption on payment of Rs. 50 only, holding that as the mortgage had been long since paid out of profits, the balance of such profits should be applied to payment of the interest due on the Rs. 50. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that the Special Judge had jurisdiction proprio motu under the provisions of s. 53 to vary the decree of the lower Court while not reviewing the case on the ground applied for by the plaintiff.

Held, also, that the Courts while inquiring into the merits of a case under s. 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act had authority under s. 13 to treat the original advance of Rs. 100 and Rs. 50 as a single transaction and to set aside the agreement of the parties to treat part of the loan as a

(7) Ss. 44 and 56—Agreement executed before a village conciliator—Agreement evidencing an intention to create a mortgage—Admissibility and validity of such agreement—Evidence.—On the 1st December, 1891, defendant executed a before a village conciliator a kabulayat to the following effect:—

"I admit Rs. 460 are due from me to the plaintiff (under a mortgage). I also owe him Rs. 489 under a consent decree and Rs. 489 as fresh advance, in all Rs. 1,434. I agree to pay on this sum interest at 13 annas per cent. per mensem. For the same I give in mortgage the property mentioned in the said decree, and also my house at Junner. I will repay the said money in four years. If I fail, the property should be sold, and the money should be recovered therefrom; should the sale-proceeds fall short, I will personally pay the deficiency. I have already put the plaintiff in possession of the property herein mentioned.......

The village conciliator forwarded this kabulayat to the Subordinate Judge under s. 44 of the Dekkhau Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), but the Subordinate Judge refused to file it.

Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of the mortgage-debt by sale of the property, or, in the alternative, for an order directing the defendant to execute a mortgage in terms of the kabulayat, and for a personal decree against the defendant for the amount due.

Held, that the kabulayat did not of itself create a mortgage, but only evidenced the intention of the parties to create one. It did not, therefore, fall under s. 56 of the Dekkhau Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) and was admissible in evidence to prove the contract entered into.

Held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree directing the defendant to execute a mortgage in terms of the kabulayat. MAHADEV v. MAHADU, 22 B. 798 1110

(1) S. 3, cls. (16), (17); ss. 71, 79, 85, 86 and 87—Deshmukhi vatan—Alienated land—Registered occupant—Superior holder.—In 1892, Vithalrao, a deshmukhi vatandar, died, leaving five sons—four by one wife, of whom Kamalrao was the eldest, and one son, Bhavanrao, by another wife. Kamalrao and Bhavanrao each claimed to be the eldest son of Vithalrao. On the 16th June, 1993, the Collector of Satara in proceedings under s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) ordered Kamalrao's name to be registered in the Revenue books in place of Vithalrao's. Prior to this, however, the plaintiff and other tenants paid Bhavanrao rents for 1892—94. Kamalrao then applied for and obtained from the Collector an order, under s. 86 of the Code, rendering him assistance in recovering these rents. The plaintiff in August, 1894, brought this suit to restrain Kamalrao from recovering the rents and to avoid the order for assistance. The Subordinate Judge granted the injunction, but the District Judge reversed that decision and dismissed the suit on the ground that Kamalrao was the registered occupant of the land and that the order for assistance was valid, and that payment of rent to Bhavanrao did not discharge the tenants. On appeal to the High Court.

Held, reversing the decree of the District Judge and restoring that of the Subordinate Judge, that the lands in question being alienated lands, s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879) did not apply, and Kamalrao was not a registered occupant under the Code. The lands passed on Vithalrao's death to his five undivided sons, unless a custom of primogeniture existed in the family, and payment by the plaintiff to Bhavanrao, a co-landlord, was a valid discharge. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 294—Mortgage with possession—Default by mortgagee in payment of assessment—Sale for arrears of revenue—Certified purchasers—Purchase for mortgagee—Purchasers or mortgagee trustees for mortgagee—Suit by mortgagee for redemption—Execution—Sale in execution—Purchase by judgment-creditor without leave of Court—Remedy of judgment-debtor.—In 1872, the plaintiffs’ father mortgaged three plots of land (Nos. 303, 304 and 305) to the first defendant with possession. In 1880 and 1881 the first defendant having made default in paying the assessment, plots Nos. 303 and 305 were sold by the Revenue authorities and were bought respectively by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. In the latter year (1881), plot No. 304 was sold in execution of a money-decree obtained by the mortgagee (defendant No. 1) against the mortgagor and was purchased by his (the first defendant’s, undivided) brother without leave of the Court. In 1892, the plaintiffs (heirs of the mortgagor) brought this suit against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to redeem the said three plots of land from the mortgage of 1872.

Defendant No. 1 pleaded that he had inherited plot No. 304 from his brother, who had become the owner of plot No. 304 by his purchase at the execution sale in 1881. He disclaimed all interest in plots Nos. 303 and 305. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 answered that they had become absolute owners by the purchase at the revenue sales. As to these latter, it was alleged that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were in possession of the said two plots for the first defendant. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 contended that by s. 182 of the Land Revenue Code (Bomb. Act V of 1879), the plaintiffs were precluded from raising this point.

Held, that though s. 182 forbade the Court to entertain a suit against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the ground that they had bought the land for defendant No. 1, it did not deprive it from entertaining a suit against them on the ground that subsequently to the sale they were holding on behalf of defendant No. 1, or against defendant No. 1 on the ground that he was himself really in possession through defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as his agents or tenants. The same principle of equity which would make defendant No. 1 a trustee for the mortgagees if he had bought in his own name, would make defendants Nos. 2 and 3 trustees for them if subsequently to the sale they held the land on behalf of defendant No. 1 and would also make defendant No. 1 himself a trustee if subsequently to the sale the property came into his possession as beneficially entitled thereto owing to an agreement between him and the certified purchasers.

Where a judgment-creditor without leave of the Court buys the property of his judgment-debtor at a Court-sale, the remedy of the latter is by application under s. 394 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) and not by separate suit. GENU v. SAKHABAM, 22 B. 277 ... 763

(2) Adverse possession of a partial interest (e.g., a tenant’s) in land—Title by adverse possession asserted by a plaintiff against the true owner as well as alleged as a defence—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 38 and art. 144.—Adverse possession for more than twelve years by one claiming to hold land as its full owner not only extinguishes the title of the true owner to the land so held and debars him from suing for its recovery, but creates a title by negation in the occupant which he can actively assert, if he loses possession, even against the true owner.
Adverse Possession—(Concluded).

A partial interest in land may be lost by adverse possession as well as the whole interest, and the right to such partial interest may be asserted by suit.

So where a landlord seeks to recover from his tenant possession of land in his tenant's occupancy and the latter alleging a perpetual tenancy successfully resists on that ground the landlord's attempt to dispossess him, the tenant may, after the statutory period has expired, plead limitation in bar of a subsequent suit in ejectment by the landlord.

A landlord, allowing the tenant to assert the validity of an invalid lease for the statutory period of more than twelve years may be debarred from subsequently questioning the right of the tenant to hold under its terms. Budesar v. Hanmantu, 21 B. 599

(3) Continuous—Temporary interruption of possession—Wrongful possession given by Court to a third person—Restoration of possession to defendant.—In a suit brought to recover possession of certain land the defendant pleaded limitation. He had held possession of the land adversely to the plaintiff from 1881 up to the date of suit (2nd October, 1895), with the exception of a period of three years (viz., 4th April, 1892 to 9th April, 1895) during which he was dispossessed under a decree of a Civil Court of first instance obtained against him by a third person, which being reversed in appeal he was restored to possession on the said 9th April, 1895.

Held, that the present suit was barred by limitation. The wrongful possession given by the Court to a third person did not (after possession had been restored to the defendant) prevent the statute from running during its continuance against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendant. Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 484.—The plaintiff applied to file an award and for a decree in terms thereof, to which the defendant consented.
K., a creditor of the defendant, thereupon applied to be made a party to the suit and objected to the filing of the award and to the decree, alleging that the award was fraudulent and fictitious and had been made in order to save the defendant's property from his creditors. The Subordinate Judge made K. a party to the suit and refused the plaintiff's application. On application to the High Court, Held, that K. ought not to have been made a party to the suit. His remedy was to apply under s. 484 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) for an attachment before judgment of the defendant's property.
Held, also, that the Judge was bound to file the award, the defendant having raised no objection to it and no illegality appearing on the face of it.

Benami Transaction.

(1) Benamidar, right of, to sue in his own name—Purchase by a non-agriculturist in the name of an agriculturist—Suit by benamidar for redemption—Court fees payable as if real purchaser was plaintiff—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879)—Practice—Procedure.—Where a purchase is made benami and a suit is brought by the benamidar in order that the real purchaser may escape the consequences to which the latter would be liable if he purchased and sued in his own name, the Court will look behind the record to see who the real purchaser is. A benamidar may maintain a suit in his own name, but the Court will put the defendant in the same position as if the real were the actual plaintiff. One Dagi, a agriculturist, purchased certain land benami for Kellkar, a non-agriculturist, and brought a suit for redemption under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879). Under the notification of the Government of India, No. 3052, dated the 29th July, 1881, the fees in case of suits by agriculturists for redemption were remitted, and the plaintiff, therefore, paid no stamp duty on the plaint. Held, that Dagi might maintain the suit in his own name, but must pay the usual stamp fees, and that the suit should proceed as an ordinary suit as though Kellkar was the nominal as well as the real plaintiff. An attachment was issued and an order for sale was made. Thereupon the Collector applied, under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1863, to set aside the attachment and order for sale. Held, that the mortgage of a portion of a bhag was unlawful under s. 3 of the Act, and a process having been issued for sale of such portion, the Collector was entitled to have it quashed. Per Farran, C.J., Jardine, Parsons and Hanade, JJ.—The superstructure of a house belonging to a ‘bhag’ in a bhagdari village is exempt from attachment under the provisions of the Bhagdari Act (Bomb. Per CANDY, J.—Having regard to the decision in 4 B.H.C.R. 46 and the object of the Bhagdari Act (Bomb. Act V of 1863), it is doubtful whether the Legislature intended to exempt from attachment the materials of a house belonging to a ‘bhag’. Collector of Broach v. Venilal, 21 B. 693 (F.B.) 334.

GENERAL INDEX.

Bill of Lading.

Contract of carriage—General words of exemption—"Or otherwise"—Construction—Short delivery of goods—No evidence as to how goods were lost—Burden of proof.—The plaintiff was the consignee of a large consignment of goods shipped from Bombay in bags on board the defendants' steamerhip "Java" for carriage to Zanzibar. On arrival of the "Java" at Zanzibar, the goods were landed by the defendant company and placed in the customs godown, where the plaintiff in due course demanded delivery. Some of the bags were not forthcoming, but the evidence did not show how the loss had occurred. The bill of lading contained the following condition:—

"The company's liability shall cease as soon as the packages are free of the ship's tackle, after which they shall not be responsible for any loss or damage, however caused. If stored in receiving ship, godown or upon any wharf, all risks of fire, dacoity, vermin or otherwise shall be with the merchant, and the usual charges shall be paid before delivery of the goods. Fire insurance will be covered by the company's agent on application."

In a suit brought by the plaintiff for short delivery of goods:

Held, that the defendants were liable. They did not show how the loss occurred, and as it might have occurred from causes not covered by the exception (e.g., from misdelivery) they did not bring themselves within the protection afforded by the exemption.

The general words "or otherwise," contained in the 10th clause of the bill of lading could not be read so as to cover all possible losses, for that would make them include wilful misconduct on the part of the defendants' servants, and general words are not read with such an extended meaning. Nor would they include misdelivery for that was provided for in the eighth clause. BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY v. RATANSI, 22 B. 184.

Broker.

(1) Brokerage—Suit for brokerage—Contract effected by broker not carried out by purchaser—Quantum meruit.—The plaintiff was employed by the defendants as broker to sell certain property. The defendants' letter dated 3rd January, 1895, engaging him as broker stated as follows:—"It is understood that the brokerage will be paid on receipt, by us, of the money, and that this transaction is to be completed within a fortnight from date." The plaintiff negotiated with one Pestonji Patel and his brother, who eventually agreed to become purchasers, but stipulated for four or five months within which to pay the purchase-money. On the 1st February, 1895, the defendants through the plaintiff finally closed the contract with the purchasers, one of the terms of which provided that Rs. 10,000 should be paid immediately as earnest and the balance (Rs. 27,000) of the purchase-money to be paid within four months. The purchasers were, however, unable to pay Rs. 10,000 earnest money and they handed to the defendants three Bank of Bombay shares as security for the performance of the contract. One of the purchasers shortly afterwards died; the defendants apparently abandoned the idea of enforcing the contract, and at the end of the year they returned to the purchaser's family two of the Bank of Bombay shares, having (as they alleged) sold the third to defray the expenses which they had incurred in connection with the transaction. The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,500 as brokerage from the defendants.

Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the Rs. 1,500, but only to a quantum meruit, there being no previous agreement as to the time when the brokerage was to be paid; and that he

Annexed to it was a copy of an extract from the plaintiff’s account books. The matter was adjourned to the 2nd June, 1997, for the production of the account books, in order that the copy might be compared and verified. On that day neither the plaintiff nor his pleader appeared with the books, whereupon the Subordinate Judge rejected the plaint, holding that no summons could be issued unless the copy of extract annexed to the plaint was found to be correct.

Held (reversing the order) that the plaint having been registered on the 14th April, summons ought to have been issued on the 2nd June. There was no provision in the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) justifying the rejection of the plaint. The penalty which the plaint incorrent for not producing his original accounts was that prescribed in s. 63, vis, not being able to put in that account without the special leave of the Judge. (20) S. 244—Amending Act VII of 1888—Agreement before decree by the decree-holder not to recover costs which the decree might award—Question to be determined in execution and not by a separate suit.—Devidas and Harilal obtained a decree on an award with costs against Shankarlal and Laldas. When they applied for its execution against Laldas in order to recover his half share of the costs, he pleaded that, before the proceedings had commenced, the plaintiffs had entered into an agreement with him that none of the costs which might be awarded by the Court should be recovered from him.

Held, that the existence and validity of such an agreement ought to be determined in execution under the provisions of s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) and not in a separate suit. LALDAS v. KISHORDAS, 22 B. 463. (F.B.)

(22) S. 244, cl. (c)—Decree—Declaratory decree—Execution of decree raising question of mismanagement of property—Execution.—In a partition suit brought by the plaintiff a decree was passed in 1882 which provided (inter alia) that the defendant should manage certain devasthan lands and apply the income thereof to devasthan purposes; and that if he failed to manage the lands properly, or alienated them by sale or mortgage, the plaintiff and his younger brother should enjoy the lands and apply the proceeds towards the maintenance of the devasthan.

In execution of this decree, plaintiff presented an application on the 28th November, 1894, praying that he should be put in management of the devasthan lands, on the ground that the defendant was guilty of mismanagement and misapplication of the devasthan property.

This application was rejected by the Court of first instance on the ground that the question of mismanagement did not fall within s. 244, cl. (c), of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). This order was confirmed on appeal on the ground that the decree was a declaratory decree and, therefore, incapable of execution.
GENERAL INDEX.

Held, on second appeal, that the decree was not declaratory only, and that it could be enforced in execution under s. 344 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). MADHAVRAO v. RAMRAO, 22 B. 267 ...

(27) Ss. 257-A, 258—Settlement of decree without sanction by giving promissory note payable on demand—Note renewed from time to time—Suit on note—Note void under section.—On the 4th December, 1889, the plaintiffs obtained a decree against the defendants for Rs. 941. The decree was made payable in eight days, i.e., on or before the 12th December, 1889. On the 9th December, 1889, i.e., before the decree was capable of execution, it was settled by the defendants’ paying Rs. 600 in cash and passing a promissory note for Rs. 341 payable on demand and carrying interest at 3 per cent. per mensem. The decree was satisfied and handed over to defendants, and plaintiffs also endorsed the summons to that effect. That compromise was not sanctioned by the Court.

On the 3rd November, 1892, and again on the 4th November, 1895, the plaintiffs made up their account with defendants and obtained new promissory notes from them for the amount found due in renewal of the note passed in 1889. The present suit was brought on the note passed on the 4th November, 1895, which was for Rs. 813, and carried interest at 3 per cent. per mensem.

Held, that the note sued on fell within the purview of s. 257-A of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) and was void and unenforceable under the provisions of that section.

The consideration for the note given in 1889 was the agreement of the plaintiffs to accept it in satisfaction of the decreed balance due to them. If that agreement was void, the note given for the void consideration was void also. The note was not, in fact, the agreement, but was given in performance of the agreement. HEERA NEMA v. (30) S. 266 (k)—Execution—Attachment—Sps successionis—"Expectancy of succession by survivorship "—Not attachable—Widow—Widow’s estate.—One Sadashiv Anant devised a house, which was his self-acquired property to his widow (the defendant), and died leaving a son, Vasudev. The will did not expressly give the widow power to dispose of it. The plaintiff in execution of a decree against Vasudev sought to attach Vasudev's interest in the house. The lower Court held that as the interest taken by the defendants in the house under her husband's will was only a widow's estate, Vasudev as her husband's son had an interest in the house which might be attached by the plaintiff.

Held (reversing the decree) that Vasudev had no interest in the house. He had only a sps successionis—an expectancy of succession by survivorship, and such a hope or expectancy is not attachable under s. 266 (k) of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882).
The entire estate was vested by the testator in the defendant. No doubt her estate was a widow's estate. Her estate in it closely resembled that of a married woman in England to whom the property is given with a restraint against alienation. That being so, she was unable to dispose of it, but still she was its full owner. The whole property passed to her from the testator. Nothing was left in him. But until she died it could not be known who would inherit the house. ANANDIBAI v. RAJARAM, 22 B. 984.

A intervened, and applied to have the property sold, subject to the incompatibilities created in his favour by the judgment-debtor under six mortgage-bonds. The Court after investigating A's claim passed an order directing the property to be sold subject to the mortgage-debt due under five out of the six mortgage-bonds. This order was made on the 20th February, 1893.

In November, 1893 (i.e., within a year of the above order), B, who had purchased the property at the Court sale, filed a suit to redeem the five mortgages subject to which the property had been sold. A contended that the property was also liable to the debt due under the sixth mortgage-bond. The District Judge held that A was entitled to have his claim under the sixth bond investigated in this suit, inasmuch as the plaintiff had filed this suit before the expiration of the year allowed to A to establish his right by art. 11 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), being of opinion that once the present suit had been filed, A could not have sued under § 13 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). On appeal to the High Court, held, that A could not claim in the present suit in respect of the sixth mortgage-bond which had been disallowed by the order in execution on the 20th February, 1893. The rule is that an unsuccessful intervenor in execution proceedings must establish his right by a regular suit within twelve months, at the expiration of which the order passed in execution becomes conclusive against him. The fact that the purchaser had filed the present suit before the year had expired, did not exempt the defendant from this rule.

S. 12 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) did not affect the question. That section only provides that no suit shall be tried if the same issues are involved in a previously instituted suit. It does not dispense with the institution of a suit within the proper time when the law requires such institution. NEMAGAUDA v. PARESHA, 22 B. 640.

Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), releasing part of the property from attachment, and to have it declared that such part or some fraction of such part is liable to attachment. BALAJI v. MOROBA, 21 B. 58.

(40) S. 283—Order passed in attachment proceedings not binding on judgment-debtor if not a party—Order passed without investigation—Suit to set aside the order—Limitation (Act XV of 1877), art. 11.—One Asha was in possession of certain land as plaintiff’s tenant and in his life-time mortgaged it with possession to the first defendant. After Asha’s death, defendant No. 1 obtained a money decree against Asha’s heirs and in execution attached the land. Thereupon the plaintiff sought to raise the attachment on the ground that Asha was merely a tenant-at-will whose interest ceased at his death. Defendant No. 1 contended, on the other hand, that Asha was a permanent tenant and that his interest, as such, had descended to his heirs and was liable to attachment. On the 20th February, 1892, the Court ordered the attachment to be removed without deciding the question raised by the parties which it held could not be determined in such a proceeding. Defendant No. 1 did not bring any suit under s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV 1882) to set aside the order and establish his right to the land. In 1894 the plaintiff filed the present suit against the first defendant and the heirs of Asha to recover possession of the land. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in his favour against the first defendant, holding that the order in the attachment proceedings was conclusive against the latter, no suit having been filed by him within a year under s. 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code. He, however, refused to pass any decree against the heirs of Asha, inasmuch as they had not been parties to the attachment proceedings and, moreover, were not in possession of the land. On appeal, this decree was confirmed. The first defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held (reversing the decree of both the lower Courts), that the case must be remanded and tried on the merits.

By PARSONS, J., on the ground that although the order in the attachment proceedings had become conclusive as against the first defendant, it did not affect Asha’s heirs, who had not been parties to it. As against them, therefore, the plaintiff had to prove his title, and if he failed to do so he could not recover. The first defendant being in possession might set up this jus tertii and might plead the title of the other defendants.

By RANADE, J., on the ground that the order in the attachment proceedings having been passed without investigation of the question there raised by the parties, it did not become conclusive against the first defendant notwithstanding his failure to bring a suit within twelve months to set it aside, and that he was not precluded from raising his defence in the present suit. (42) S. 286—Execution—Sale—Attachment of same property by different Courts—Sale by both Courts—Titles of the respective purchasers at such sales.—A and B obtained decrees against C. A’s decree was obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Surat. B’s decree was obtained in the Small Cause Court at Surat. In execution of their respective decrees both A and B obtained orders of attachment on the same day of a certain debt due to C by the Municipality of Surat. Notice of the attachment was given by the Subordinate Judge to the Small Cause Court, under s. 285 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). On the 16th November,
GENERAL INDEX.

1899, the Subordinate Judge issued an order for sale of the attached debt, and on the 18th December the Small Cause Court issued a similar order. Both Courts sold the debt on the 6th January, 1894, the Small Cause Court selling first in point of time. At the sale by the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff bought the debt and the defendant was the purchaser at the sale by the Small Cause Court. The defendant after his purchase sued the municipality for the debt, making the plaintiff a party defendant, and he obtained a decree against the municipality. The plaintiff also sued the municipality, making the defendant a party, and he also obtained a decree which was confirmed by the District Court. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Held, that the plaintiff had the better title. The defendant had bought at the sale held by the Small Cause Court. The sale by that Court after it had received notice of the attachment proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge was in direct contravention of the provisions of s. 285 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Small Cause Court had full notice of the proceedings in the Subordinate Judge's Court and there was no reason to suppose that the defendant himself had not similar knowledge. The defendant did not set up the plea that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice.

Per Farran, C.J.—The sale by the Small Cause Court was an act done in the irregular exercise of admitted jurisdiction. But when property is attached by more Courts than one, although each has jurisdiction to sell, that jurisdiction should be exercised by the Court of the highest grade (s. 285). If by a mistake of law, or in ignorance of an earlier attachment in a Court of a higher grade, a Court of lower grade proceeds to sell, it is not deprived of jurisdiction to do so by s. 285. The jurisdiction of a Court cannot depend upon its knowledge of facts. If an attachment in a higher Court deprives a Court of lower grade of jurisdiction to sell, the sale must be, I apprehend, invalid, whether the Court of lower grade knows of it or not. If the sale is held to be in such cases only irregular, the purchaser will take an indefeasible or defeasible title according to whether he knows or does not know of the irregularity. If he buys bona fide and without notice, his title would be perfect, and he will not be affected by the irregularity of the proceedings in the sale. If he purchases with notice, he runs the risk of his purchase being set aside. Abdul Karim v. Thakordas, 22 B. 88

Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), to pay the balance of the purchase-money into Court on the 19th June, 1896. On the 17th June he paid in the amount to the Post Office at Yellapur and obtained a money order which he sent to the Nasir of the Court. The Nasir did not receive the money until the 22nd June.

Held, that the payment was not in time. The Post Office is not the agent of the Court, and the purchaser was bound to see that the money reached the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of s. 307. Ramchandra v. Belya, 22 B. 415

46) S. 315—Court-sale—Sale of property in execution in which judgment-debtor has no interest—Suit by purchaser to recover purchase-money paid at sale—Limitation—Accrual of the cause of action.—Under s. 315 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), a suit will lie to recover purchase-money paid at a Court sale for property to which it is found that the judgment-debtor has no title. (48) S. 331—Execution—Resistance to execution by third party—Such party may prove title against the decree-holder—Possession—Evidence—Burden of proof.—The plaintiff had obtained a decree for possession of certain land against his tenant Bayaji. On proceeding to execute his decree, he was obstructed by the defendants. He, therefore, filed a claim against them for possession under s. 331 of Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), which was duly registered as a suit. The lower Court found as a fact that the plaintiff through his tenant Bayaji had been in possession of the land. The defendants pleaded that the land had belonged not to the plaintiff but to one Jotyaji, on whose death they were entitled to it.

Held, that in a proceeding under s. 331 of the Civ. Pro. Code, whose possession is shown to have been with the plaintiff, the defendants are not, without showing title in themselves, at liberty to impeach the plaintiff’s title, or to set up a jus tertii. The onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff’s rests with them, and they may prove their title as a defence.

If the consent has not been obtained before the commencement of the suit, the Court should dismiss the suit or allow the plaintiff to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh suit under s. 373 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Where an insufficient consent has been obtained by the plaintiff, the defendant may by his conduct waive the defect, so that notwithstanding the absence of a valid consent under the section the suit can be heard and determined on its merits.

(64) S. 539—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4—Cash allowance allowed to worship of idol—Personal grant.—A plaintiff claimed to be a co-trustee of certain dargas and entitled to a share in the management and in the profits thereof, which consisted of a certain cash allowance from Government. He sued the defendants for an account and for the recovery of his share.

Held, that the suit did not come within the purview of s. 539 of the Civ. Pro. Code (act XIV of 1882) and did not require sanction under that section.

Held, also, that the suit, so far as it related to the cash allowance from Government, required a certificate under s. 4 of the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871).

A cash allowance attached to the worship of an idol is a grant of money within the meaning of s. 4 of the Pensions Act, 1871.

It is not competent to the Court to enlarge the scope of the suit and grant reliefs other than those included in the terms of the sanction. SAYAD HUSSEIN v. COLLECTOR OF KAIRA, 21 B. 257 174

(78) S. 692—High Court, interference by—Mamladat—Jurisdiction.—The plaintiff sued in a Mamladat's Court for possession of certain land, alleging that the defendants held them under a lease, the time of which had expired.
The Mamlatar found the execution of the lease proved, but held it to be colourable, and that the defendants did not hold under it. He, therefore, rejected the plaintiff’s claim. The plaintiff applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule to set aside the order, contending that the Mamlatar had no jurisdiction to decide that the lease was colourable and that he ought not to have admitted evidence upon that point.

Held (discharging the rule) that the matter was not one for the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court under s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Mamlatar had not declined jurisdiction. He had considered the materials laid before him and had come to a conclusion. That conclusion, if erroneous, ought to be corrected in a regular suit and not by an application to the High Court under s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). KASHINATH v. NANA, 21 B. 731

(1) Winding up—Suit against manager of company—Company not a party to the suit—Attachment before judgment of company’s property—Remedy of liquidator—Appeal—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 283, 483, 494, 485, 487, 588 and 622—Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 177.—The Dhulia Manufacturing Company, Limited, carried on business at Dhulia and had its registered office at Bombay. One Ahmad Mahomed was the manager at Dhulia, and he had authority to borrow money and draw hundis on behalf of the company. In August, 1894, the directors opened negotiations for the sale of the company’s factory to one Haji Umer, and in September, 1894, while the negotiations were pending a special resolution was passed to wind up the company voluntarily. The resolution was confirmed in October, 1894, and Mir Ali Patel was appointed liquidator under s. 177 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882). In December, 1894, the liquidator agreed to sell the factory to Haji Umer for the said sum of Rs. 38,000. Under the agreement Haji Umer was to enter into possession of the factory, but the company was to have a lien upon it until the completion of the purchase which was to take place in May, 1895. A month before the date fixed for the completion of the sale, one Biharilal filed a suit in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia against Ahmad Mahomed, the manager of the company, in his individual capacity and as manager of the company. His claim was professedly against the company, but he did not make the company, which was then in liquidation, a party to the suit. Subsequently Biharilal applied for and obtained an order for attachment before judgment of the company’s factory at Dhulia. No notice of the application or of the order made on it was given to the liquidator. He at once applied to the Court to raise the attachment, contending that the Court had no power to attach the property of the company which was not a party to the suit. The Court made the company a party and dismissed the liquidator’s application confirming its previous order for attachment. The liquidator appealed to the High Court.
Company—(Concluded).

Held, that the order of attachment should be reversed. The intended sale by the liquidator, which was the sole reason for making the order, was not with intent to obstruct any decree that the plaintiff (Biharilla) might obtain against the company, but was being effected by the liquidator in the course of his duty and in pursuance of a contract, entered into long before the suit was instituted. The plaintiff’s claim, if established, would be satisfied pari passu with the other debts of the company. The plaintiff was not entitled to security for his claim in preference to the other creditors.

It was contended that no appeal lay against the order of the Subordinate Judge, and that the liquidator’s sole remedy was by suit under ss. 283 and 487 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Held, that the company having been made a party to the suit, the order of attachment was made under s. 485 of the Civ. Pro. Code and consequently under s. 598 an appeal lay from that order. If the company had not been made a party, the High Court would have set aside the order of attachment under s. 622 of the Code, as in that case the Subordinate Judge would have had no jurisdiction to make it. Goods consigned to agent for sale on commission—Hundis drawn against goods and paid by agent—Railway receipt sent to agent—Equitable assignment of goods by consignor—Goods attached by judgment-creditor of consignor—Claim by agent—Priority—Civ Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 260.—One Ukerda Punja at Virangam consigned certain bags of seed to Velji Hirji and Co. at Bombay for sale on commission, and drew hundis against the goods for Rs. 3,200, which, at his request, Velji Hirji and Co. accepted and paid on receiving the railway receipt by post. The goods were to be sold on arrival on Ukerda Punja’s account and the proceeds credited to him as against the advances made by the payment of the hundis. On the arrival of the goods at Bombay they were attached by Bharmal Shirpal and Co., who had obtained decrees against Ukerda Punja.

Held, that Velji Hirji and Co. were entitled to the goods. They had made specific advances against the goods. Bharmal Shirpal and Co. as attaching creditors occupied the same position as Ukerda Punja himself and had no better claim to the goods than he had, and if he had attempted to prevent the goods reaching the hands of Velji Hirji and Co., who at his request had made specific advances against them, he would have been restrained by injunction.

Held, also, that at the date of attachment the goods were in possession of Ukerda Punja by the Railway Company "on account of or in trust for"

(1) Acts relating to procedure—Retrospective operation of—Practice—Procedure—Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 73—Act VI of 1895.—In this suit the Subordinate Judge of Karmala held that the defendant was an agriculturist, and that, therefore, the suit could not be maintained without a certificate under s. 47 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists’ Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879). Under s. 73 of that Act the finding of the Subordinate Judge upon the point was final. The plaintiff appealed, the appeal including other points of objection to the decree as well as that with regard to the status of the defendant. Pending his appeal, Act VI of 1895 was passed, which repealed s. 73. At the hearing of the appeal the Judge considered the question of the status of the defendant, and held that he was not an agriculturist, overruling the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon that point.

Held, that the Judge in appeal was right in entertaining the question. The provisions of Act VI of 1895 altered the procedure and were, therefore, applicable to proceedings already commenced at the time of their enactment.

Held, also, that even if the General Clauses Act (I of 1868), s. 6, applied to Acts not conferring rights, but simply concerning judicial procedure, it could not affect the present case, as the repeal is not one of the Act itself, but only of a section in the same relating to procedure. (2) Gift to the heirs of A from generation to generation—Agreement.—The members of a Parsi family, the heirs of one Framji Cowasji Banaji, deceased, entered into an agreement, dated the 24th May, 1851, by which they agreed that the remaining income (after paying the deceased’s debts) of a certain estate which had belonged to the deceased, called the Powai estate, situated in the island of Salsette, should be appropriated in certain shares among themselves as heirs of the deceased and “after their death their shares are to be enjoyed and received by their heirs and children from generation to generation for ever.” In a previous suit (6 Bom. 151) it was decided that under this agreement the signatories thereto took only a life-interest in their respective shares. In the present suit it was contended and was held by the Division Court that the subsequent gift to the “heirs and children (of the signatories) from generation to generation for ever” was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. On appeal, Held, that the settlement in favour of the heirs and children of each signatory was in law a valid settlement and not void as creating a perpetuity. In the absence of words in the context showing that they were intended to take less, the respective heirs and children of the signatories took an absolute estate.

A gift to the heirs of A from generation to generation confers on them when ascertained the same estate as if the gift were to X and Y, the heirs of A nominatim, FERDUNJI M. BANAJI v. MITHIBAI, 22 B. 355

Contract.

(1) Condition against sub-contract—Sub-contract made notwithstanding condition—Suit by sub-contractor—Illegality of sub-contract—Compensation for work done—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23.—Defendant contracted with the Executive Engineer of the Public Works Department to supply materials for the construction of a public road. One of the conditions of the contract was that no work was to be underlet, or let by sub-contractor, by the contractor without the express permission, in writing, of the Executive Engineer or his duly authorized agent. Subsequently the defendant without obtaining the requisite permission entered into an oral agreement with the plaintiff, under which the plaintiff was to do the contract work and the defendant to pay him all moneys received from the Executive Engineer under the contract after deducting ten per cent. as the defendant’s profit. It did not appear that the plaintiff knew of the condition against underletting contained in the contract.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for the balance of money due to him under the oral agreement. The first Court found that the plaintiff had executed the whole of the contract work; that the defendant had received from the Executive Engineer a total sum of Rs. 2,766-11-11 and of this had paid to the plaintiff Rs. 2,334-13-6, leaving a sum of Rs. 431-14-5 still in his hands. It ordered the defendant to pay this sum to the plaintiff less 10 per cent. of the whole sum of Rs. 2,766-11-11, and passed a decree accordingly for Rs. 165-3-8.

On appeal the Judge varied the decree by awarding to the plaintiff the whole sum of Rs. 431-14-5. He found that it had been agreed that the defendant should retain 10 per cent., but held that the agreement to assign or sublet the contract was contrary to public policy and had been contrary to the Contract Act (IX of 1872). On appeal to the High Court, Held, (reversing the decree of the Judge and restoring that of the first Court) that as it did not appear that the plaintiff knew of the condition in the contract and as the objection of illegality was not taken by the defendant, the plaintiff was not precluded from enforcing against the defendant his own contract. Even if, however, the plaintiff could not enforce the contract, he would, under the circumstances, be entitled to receive from the defendant compensation for the work and labour of which the defendant had received the benefit. The only question was how the work done should be valued. There was no direct test of its market value. The best available test was the amount which the plaintiff at the time when he entered into the agreement accepted as sufficient, namely, the amount to be paid by the Executive Engineer less 10 per cent. The High Court, therefore, restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Gangadhara v. Damodhar, 21 B. 522.

(3) Contract to deliver—Suit for non-delivery—Clause exempting from liability in case of loss of carrying ship—Loss of ship—Declaration of ship after date of loss—Appropriation of goods after goods lost.—The defendants by a contract, dated 10th January, 1896, sold 2,500 tons of coal to the plaintiff of the February and March shipment to be delivered in Bombay. No ship was named in the contract, which contained the following clause:—"In the event of the ship being lost, this contract shall be null and void." February and March shipments ordinarily arrive in Bombay on or before the 30th April following. All of the coal contracted for was duly delivered to the defendants except 1,376 tons, which still remained to be delivered to the plaintiffs. By a letter, dated 25th April, 1896, addressed to the plaintiff, the defendants declared the B. S. "Eastby Abbey," as the ship. carrying the said 1,376 tons of coal remaining due under the contract. There was no evidence of any appropriation of coal on board the "Eastby Abbey" to the purpose of the above contract prior to the declaration. It subsequently transpired that the "Eastby Abbey" had run on a reef in the Red Sea on the 16th April and had been so seriously damaged that being taken to Suez (where such of her cargo as had not been thrown overboard was sold) she was found unable to proceed to Bombay, and she returned to England for repairs. The plaintiff sued the defendants for non-delivery of 1,376 tons of coal. The defendants pleaded that the ship having been lost, they were exempt from liability under the above clause in the contract.

Held, that the defendants were liable for the non-delivery of the coal. There having been previously to the declaration of the ship no appropriation of the coal on board to the purposes of the contract, the exemption clause did not apply.

Semble.—In case of a contract containing such an exemption clause as the one in question, the declaration of a ship so as thereby to appropriate goods on board to the purposes of the contract is useless if made after the ship has been lost, whether the fact of the loss is known to the declarant or not. DADABHAI HORMUSJI DUBASH v. C. J. KHAMBATI, 22 B. 189.

Jurisdiction—Cause of action—Counter-claim—Set-off—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 111—Practice—Procedure—Costs of preparing a deed—Stamp duty.—In December, 1892, the plaintiffs agreed to supply the defendants with machinery for their mill near Calcutta. The defendants being unable to pay for it in accordance with that agreement entered into a supplementary agreement with the plaintiffs on the 10th August, 1894, whereby it was arranged that the plaintiffs should accept shares in the defendants' company and debentures charged on the property in satisfaction of their claim. The agreement provided that the defendant company should forthwith execute an indenture of trust in favour of trustees to be named by the plaintiffs for the purpose of securing the said debentures, such indenture to be prepared by the plaintiff's solicitors together with the debentures at the expense of the company and should be approved by the company's solicitors. It was lastly provided that this agreement should be treated as forming part of and supplemental to the agreement of December, 1892. This agreement was signed in Bombay by J. Marshall on behalf of the plaintiffs. The indenture and debentures were duly prepared by the plaintiffs and approved by the defendants' solicitors in Bombay. The plaintiffs having paid in Bombay the solicitor's bill of costs in respect of the preparation of the indenture and debentures now sued to recover the amount from the defendants under the terms of the above agreement of 1894.

The defendants contended that the Court had no jurisdiction, on the ground that they did not reside or carry on business in Bombay, and that no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay. They also alleged that the plaintiffs had failed to carry out their part of the agreement of 1892, and contended that they were entitled in this suit to claim damages against the plaintiffs and to set them off against the plaintiffs' claim.

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction. The agreement of August, 1894, was signed in Bombay by the plaintiffs' agent on their behalf, and, therefore, part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. Further, it appeared that the payment to be made by the plaintiffs should be made in Bombay, where both the plaintiffs' agent and solicitors resided.

Held, also, that the defendants should not be permitted in this suit to claim damages against the plaintiffs for their alleged failure to carry out their part of the contract of 1892. Their counter-claim or set-off did not fall under s. 111 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), as it was not a claim for an ascertained sum of money, and that being so they could not claim as of right to have it investigated in this suit. Nor was there any equitable ground for admitting the counter-claim, as it could not be doubted that there would be considerable delay in investigating it, and there was no reason why the plaintiffs should have to wait so long for the money to which they were now legally entitled.
GENERAL INDEX.

Contract—(Concluded).

_Held_, also, that the plaintiffs were entitled to include in their claim the stamp duty paid on the trust deed. The agreement contemplated that the defendants should pay all the costs incidental to the execution of the deed. _DOBSON and BARLOW v. THE BENGAL SPINNING AND WEAVING COMPANY_, 21 B. 126 ... 86

(6) Sale of goods—Contract to supply goods at fixed price—Duty imposed on material subsequently to date of contract—Liability to supply goods—Indian Tariff Act (VIII of 1894), s. 10.—On 2nd November, 1894, the defendant contracted to supply the plaintiff with a certain quantity of dhotars made of European or Egyptian yarn No. 80 at the rate of 225 pairs each month for a period of one year. In January, 1895, an import duty of five per cent. was imposed by Government on the yarn. The defendant thereupon declined to supply the dhotars unless the plaintiff paid the duty in addition to the contract price. _Held_, that under s. 10 of Act VIII of 1894 the defendant could call on the plaintiff to pay the duty which he had paid on the yarn, that is, he could add so much to the contract price as would be equivalent to the duty which he himself had paid. The question was whether the dhotars supplied to the plaintiff were actually made out of yarn on which duty had been paid by the defendant. _TRIKAMLAL v. KALIDAS_, 21 B. 638 ... 421

The agreement was to be in force for four years. The other parties had carried out the agreement, but the defendant although he had carried the Rs. 2 to a separate account, refused to pay the plaintiff his share of the amount. He also refused to pay the other two parties their shares. The accounts had been duly made up, showing the sums which the defendant under the agreement had to pay both to the plaintiff and the two other parties to the agreement. The plaintiff sued the defendant for his share. The defendant contended that the agreement was in restraint of trade and was, therefore, not enforceable, and that the plaintiff ought to have made the other parties to the agreement parties to the suit. _Held_, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his share from the defendant. The only agreement sought to be enforced in this suit was the agreement to divide the profits. That was a lawful agreement founded upon consideration (viz., the mutual agreement to share each other's profits) and it might be enforced.

_Held_, also, that the other parties to the agreement were not necessary parties to the suit. The accounts had been made up and were admittedly correct, and they showed that the defendant had nothing to receive from any of the parties to the agreement, but that he was indebted in a definite sum to the plaintiff.

The suit was brought in 1894. It was contended for the defendant that s. 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882), which was in force at the date of the institution of the suit, applied to the case, and that under that section the plaintiffs although successful were not entitled to their costs.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover costs. The power to award costs is derived entirely from Acts of the Legislature, and in making the award the Court cannot base its decision on provisions which have been repealed and are no longer effective at the time its order is passed.

Criminal Procedure.

(1) Continuing offence—Cantonments Act (XIII of 1889), s. 26—R. 2 of the Rules made under s. 26—Additional fine for continuing offence.—The additional fine referred to in r. 2 of the Rules framed under s. 26 of the Cantonments Act, XIII of 1889, is not only to be imposed after the first conviction, but is to follow proof that failure is persisted in. The additional fine cannot be imposed as a threat in case of possible persistence, which, being in the future, cannot be made matter of present proof. The continuing failure must be matter of later and separate inquiry and proof, QUEEN-EMPERESS v. WILLIAM PLUMNER, 22 B. 841. ... 1144.

(2) Criminal law—Practice—Procedure—Sentence—Enhancement of sentence—Power of appellate Court—Conviction and sentence on two separate charges—Retention of sentence where conviction on one of the charges is reversed—See PRACTICE, 22 B. 760.

(1) S. 96—Search warrant—Issue of search warrant illegal in the absence of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding pending before Magistrate—Power of revision in criminal cases—Revision.—Some treasure belonging to the Native State of Radhanpur was missing. The Administrator of Radhanpur sent a telegram to the District Superintendent of Police at Ahmedabad, stating that part of the missing treasure was in the possession of the accused, who was a resident of Ahmedabad, and asking that his house should be searched. In consequence of this telegram, the City Police Inspector applied for a search warrant to the City Magistrate of Ahmedabad. Thereupon the Magistrate issued a search warrant under s. 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). In execution of this warrant the house of the accused was searched and the police seized and took away certain property belonging to the accused, to his wife and to his servant. The accused was subsequently arrested under a warrant issued by the Political Superintendent of Palanpur under s. 11 of the Extradition Act XXI of 1879, but he was admitted to bail by the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad. On the 13th June, 1897, the District Magistrate passed an order refusing to deliver up the property seized by the police to the Political Superintendent of Palanpur, but allowing the police to retain the property for some time, as it was possible that a prosecution would be instituted in British India in respect of the stolen treasure. The Magistrate directed that if no prosecution were instituted within two months, the property should be restored to the persons from whose possession it was taken.

The District Magistrate subsequently reversed this order as being erroneous, and passed a fresh order on the 3rd August, 1897, directing the property to be delivered up to the Political Superintendent of Palanpur.

Held, that the City Magistrate had no authority to issue a search warrant under s. 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), as at the time of issuing the search warrant there was no investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding under the Code pending before the Magistrate, for the purposes of which the production of the articles seized was necessary or desirable.

Held, also, that the search warrant being illegal and ultra vires, the subsequent orders relating to the detention and delivery of the property seized were also illegal and unjustifiable.

GENERAL INDEX.

Per RANADE, J.—The District Magistrate had no power to review his own previous order of the 13th June, 1897, passed on full inquiry and after hearing both parties.

The power of revision in criminal cases is very strictly confined, and the same considerations which prevent subordinate Courts from altering their judgments on review, hold good in respect of final orders which are of the nature of a judgment. In re Harilal Buch, 22 B. 949 adjacent to a public way or any public place to be filled up; he can only order them to be fenced. In re Sulemanji Gulam Husein, 22 B.

(3) S. 133—River—Obstruction in a public river—meaning of obstruction as used in the section.—S. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) contemplates not only that the way, river, or channel where an unlawful obstruction is made, must be one of public use, but also that the obstruction must be of that public use.

Where a dispute arose between the proprietors of two talukdari villages situate on the banks of a river about the diversion of the course of the river, by means of a dam and a trench made by one of them in the current of the river, and each talukdar claimed the river as his own private property.

Held, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to interfere under s. 133 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882). In re Maharanji Shri Jaswant-

(5) Ss. 164, 364, 533—Evidence—Confession—Statement of prisoner made before inquiry—Statement of prisoner made in the course of or after inquiry.—The sections comprised in Chapter XIV of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) (except s. 155) do not apply to the Police in the Presidency town, and consequently a statement or confession made to a Presidency Magistrate does not within s. 164 and the procedure prescribed in regard to the recording of statements or confessions by that section, and (by reference) s. 364 does not apply to statements and confessions recorded by a Presidency Magistrate before the commencement of the trial. But such statement or confession though not taken under s. 164 is admissible in evidence against the prisoner.

During an inquiry before a Presidency Magistrate after the evidence for the prosecution was taken, the Magistrate examined the accused under ss. 209 and 342 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882). The accused was examined in Marathi, but the questions and answers were recorded in English.
The Magistrate deposed at the trial that it was the invariably practice in his Court to take down depositions in English and that he could not himself have accurately recorded the prisoner’s statement in Marathi. He also deposed that the statement was correctly recorded in English and that each question and answer when recorded was interpreted to the accused in Marathi, and that the accused then made his mark at the end of the recorded statement. He further stated that there were at hand native subordinate officials of his Court who could have recorded the statement in Marathi, but that he himself had not sufficient knowledge of Marathi as to be able to read what was written by such a subordinate, or to satisfactorily check or test the correctness with which it represented the statement made by the accused.

Held, that, assuming that it was practicable to record the statement in Marathi and that consequently it was irregular with reference to s. 364 of the Code to record it in English, the statement was nevertheless admissible in evidence under s. 533, the irregularity not having injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. Queen-Empress v. Vishram Baraji, 21 B. 495

(6) S. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Departmental inquiry into the misconduct of a revenue officer—Judicial proceeding—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom-Act V of 1979), ss. 196, 197.—A Collector, on receiving information that his Deputy Chittnis had attempted to obtain a bribe, ordered his Assistant Collector to make an inquiry into the matter, with a view to taking action under s. 32 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879). The Assistant Collector found, on inquiry, that the charge of bribery was unfounded, and gave a sanction to prosecute the informant and his witnesses for giving false evidence. This sanction was revoked by the Collector. The Chitnis appealed to the High Court against the order revoking the sanction.

Held, that the inquiry made by the Assistant Collector was a departmental inquiry, and not a judicial proceeding, and that the Assistant Collector, while holding the inquiry, was not a Court. No sanction for prosecution was, therefore, necessary under s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1862). In re Chotalal Mathuradas, 22 B. 996 ...

(7) S. 195—See Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), 22 B. 112.

(8) Ss. 248, 253 and 403—Practice—Procedure—Complaint of offences under ss. 182 and 500 of Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Necessary sanction not obtained—Withdrawal of complaint—Discharge of accused—Fresh complaint lodged on same charges—Effect of previous discharge of accused.—A complaint was lodged against the accused, charging him with offences underss. 182 and 500 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). The complainant's solicitor, finding that no sanction had been obtained as required by s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1862) for proceeding with the charge under s. 182, applied to the Magistrate for leave to withdraw the complaint, which the Magistrate granted, adding to his order the words "accused is discharged."

The complainant having subsequently obtained the requisite sanction filed a fresh complaint on the same charges. It was objected on behalf of the accused that the accused had been acquitted under s. 248 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1862) and that further proceedings were now barred under s. 403. The Magistrate allowed the objection and stopped the proceedings. On application to the High Court,

Held, that the order of the Magistrate should be reversed and the complaint investigated. The order stopping the proceedings would be legal only if the accused had been acquitted by a Court of competent jurisdiction, which was not the case, as the Magistrate could not take cognizance of the charge under s. 182 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) without a sanction having been previously obtained.

As to the charge under s. 500 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) the proper procedure in respect of it was that prescribed for warrant cases. The only legal order that could be made in such a case was an order of discharge under s. 263 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1862) and not of acquittal, and it was an order of discharge that was actually made. In re Samsudin, 22 B. 711 ...

(9) S. 345—Compounding offences—Mischief—Mischief done to the private property of a village Mahar.—The accused was charged with mischief for causing damage to crops which were the private property of a village Mahar. The Magistrate refused to allow the offence to be compounded, on the ground that the damage was done to a village Mahar and, therefore, could not be treated as damage affecting only a private person, as Mahars had duties to perform in connection with the village.

Held, that the offence was compoundable under s. 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1862), as the damage was caused to a private person and not to the public. The fact that the complainant was a village Mahar would not make his personal property the property of the public, or even of the Mahar community generally. In re Motiram, 22 B. 999 ...

(10) S. 412—Appeal from a conviction by a Magistrate, other than a Presidency Magistrate, where accused pleads guilty—Appeal.—The accused pleaded guilty to a charge of kidnapping from lawful custody, and was thereupon convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class and sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 20. The accused appealed and in appeal denied that he had committed the offence. The Sessions Judge was of opinion that, as the accused had pleaded guilty at the trial, he had no power to deal with the appeal except as regards the amount of punishment awarded. He, therefore, referred the case to the High Court.

GENERAL INDEX.

Crim, Pro, Code (Act X of 1882)—(Concluded).

Held, that the Sessions Judge was competent to deal with the whole appeal, S. 412 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) had no application. That section provides for convictions by Courts of Session or Presidency Magistrates only, and the exception is not only as to the extent but also as to the legality of the sentence. *Queen-Empress v. (11) S. 418—See Evidence, 22 B. 235.

(12) Ss. 517 and 523—Disposal of property produced before a Court during an inquiry—Restoration of property if no offence is committed—S. 517 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) is the only section under which a Court can make an order for the disposal of property produced before it in the course of an inquiry or trial. And it has jurisdiction to pass the order only if the case falls within the section, that is, if it is property “regarding which an offence appears to have been committed, or which has been used for the commission of an offence.” Otherwise, the only legal order which the Court can pass is one restoring the previous possession.

A Presidency Magistrate, finding the evidence not sufficient to warrant a conviction, discharged the accused, but ordered the property which had been produced during the inquiry to be detained until the title of the rightful owner was proved before a Civil Court. On a subsequent day he, apparently acting under s. 523 of the Code, ordered the property to be delivered to the complainant from whose possession it had not been taken.

Held, that both the orders were ultra vires. The Magistrate was, therefore, directed to dispose of the property in a legal manner. If he found that the case fell within s. 517, he should pass such order as he thought fit; if he found that it did not, he must restore the previous possession. In re Devi Dind Durgaprasad, 22 B. 844 ...

(13) Ss. 528, 497—Transfer of case—Notice to accused—Bail—Order admitting to bail not revisable by District Magistrate—Practice.—An order under s. 528 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) transferring a case for inquiry or trial from one Magistrate to another ought not to be made without notice to the accused.

An order admitting an accused person to bail made by a Magistrate is not revisable by a District Magistrate. If the latter considers the order wrong, he can refer it to the High Court. Imperatnix v. Sadasiv, 22 B. 549 ...

(14) S. 545—Compensation—Award of compensation illegal where no fine is inflicted.—Where an accused is discharged and no fine is imposed, no order for payment of compensation can be legally passed under s. 545 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882). In re Basto Do Duma, 22 B. 717 ...

(15) S. 545—Compensation—Injury caused by the offence committed—Indirect consequences resulting from the offence.—Compensation for loss caused by inability of the complainant to attend to his work on account of his time being taken up with the prosecution of the accused, cannot be ordered to be paid under s. 545 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), which deals with expenses incurred in the prosecution and with compensation for the injury only. Imperatnix v. Narayan, 22 B. 438 ...

(16) S. 560—Compensation for vexatious complaint—Compensation illegal where the complainant is a police officer.—S. 560 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) does not authorise a Magistrate to pass an order for compensation to be paid by the complainant to the accused, where the complaint is instituted by a police officer. *Queen-Emress v. (1) Interest—Payment in grain—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 135—Assignment of mortgage by mortgagee—Suit by assignee—Payment into Court by defendants (representatives of mortgagee) of price paid to the assignor (mortgagee) without admitting the mortgage or assignment—See TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT (IV OF 1882), 21 B. 761.

(3) Mortgage—Mortgage by Mahomedan to Hindu—Assignment of mortgaged land by mortgagee to Hindu assignee—Subsequent suit by mortgagees against assignee—Amount of interest allowed—Liability of land.—A, a Mahomedan, having in 1859 mortgaged certain land for Rs. 61 to B., a Hindu, afterwards assigned it to C, who was also a Hindu. At the date of this assignment the interest due on the mortgage (Rs. 129-15-10) was much more than the principal debt. B (the mortgagees) subsequently sued A. and C for Rs. 270, being Rs. 61 for principal and Rs. 209 for interest. A did not appear. C contended that the plaintiff and himself being Hindus the law of damdupat applied and that only as much interest as principal could be recovered. The lower Courts passed a decree for the principal (Rs. 61) together with all interest due at the date of the assignment to C. They disallowed subsequent interest, as the amount then due was already more than damdupat. On appeal to the High Court, Held (confirming the decree) that C was not personally liable to pay anything at all, but that the land which he had purchased was charged with the amount due at the date of his purchase. Unless, therefore, he wished the land to be sold, he should pay that amount.

The rule of damdupat did not apply in this case to the original mortgagor, who was a Mahomedan. He charged the land with a debt which included principal and interest, and he and his land were liable for both. He could not by any assignment prejudice his creditor or reduce the amount due to him, nor could he by assigning his land to a Hindu free it from any charge that existed on it at the date of the assignment. HARIKAN GIRDHARILAL v. NAGAR JEHAN, 21 B. 38

(4) Mortgage—Original mortgagor a Hindu—Mortgage to a Mahomedan—Hindu mortgagor's interest subsequently purchased by a Mahomedan—Suit by Mahomedan purchaser for redemption—Rule of damdupat how far applicable.—A Hindu mortgaged his property in 1843 to a Mahomedan for Rs. 150 with interest at 12 per cent per annum. On 5th April, 1880, the Hindu mortgagor's interest was sold to the plaintiff, who was a Mahomedan. In March, 1843, the plaintiff sued for redemption, both parties to the suit being Mahomedans.

Held, that as long as the mortgagor was a Hindu (i.e., until 1880), the rule of damdupat applied, and that as soon as the interest doubled the principal, further interest stopped. The sum of Rs. 300 was, therefore, the full amount of debt for which the land could be charged and liable in the hands of a Hindu debtor. But on the 5th April, 1880, the plaintiff (a Mahomedan) became the debtor. The rule of damdupat then no longer applied; the stop was removed and interest again began to run. The decree, therefore, ordered the plaintiff to redeem on payment of Rs. 300 (i.e., double the principal Rs. 150) with further interest at Rs. 12 per annum from the date of his purchase (5th April, 1880) until payment. Declaratory Decree.

(2) Right to sue for declaration—Mortgage—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 257—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42.—Dinsha Edalji mortgage certain property to plaintiff. After Dinsha's death plaintiff obtained a decree for recovery of his debt by sale of the mortgaged property. Before the property was advertised for sale, the defendants, who were Dinsha's brothers, objected under s. 237 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), alleging that Dinsha was not the sole owner of the property; that they were joint owners with him; that they had set aside the property for religious purposes, and that Dinsha had no right to mortgage it. The Court executing the decree thereupon ordered that the applicants' (defendants') claim should be notified in the proclamation of sale. Plaintiff then filed a suit against the defendants, praying for a declaration that the property belonged to Dinsha exclusively, and the defendants had no right or interest in it.

Held, that under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for.

Plaintiff having himself purchased the property after his claim for declaration had been allowed by the Subordinate Judge, it was contended that he was not entitled any longer to a declaratory decree.

Held, that the change of circumstances brought about by the plaintiff himself purchasing the property did not take away the right to sue which had already accrued to him. WAMANRAO v. RUSTOMJI, 21 B, 701

Decree.

(4) Rectifying decree—Practice—Procedure.—By a written agreement the defendants agreed to purchase from the plaintiff certain land comprising 5,200 square-yards or thereabouts at the rate of Rs. 1-1-6 per square yard. The sum of Rs. 1,000 was paid on the date of the agreement in part-payment of the price. The plaintiff sued for specific performance of the agreement. The plaint set forth the facts and the part-payment, and prayed that the defendant might be ordered specifically to perform the agreement and to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the purchase-money, viz., the sum of Rs. 4,475. On the 9th September, 1897, judgment was given for the plaintiff ordering "specific performance as prayed and costs." The decree was accordingly drawn up in terms of the prayer of the plaint. It was afterwards discovered that the sum mentioned in the prayer (viz., Rs. 4,475) and inserted in the decree was incorrect and ought to have been Rs. 4,775, the latter being the real balance due at the rate mentioned in the agreement after deducting the Rs. 1,000 paid as earnest. On 6th November, 1897, the plaintiff gave notice of motion to rectify the decree by altering the figure Rs. 4,475 to Rs. 4,775. On motion to rectify the decree,

Held, that the decree should be rectified. PHEROZSHA P. RANDERIA v. THE SON MILLS, 22 B, 370

Railway line and a ginning factory on the other. To bring water from the mill to the factory a pipe had been laid beneath the railway line, and brick reservoirs built at each side to preserve the proper level of the water. Servants of the company having entered on the railway premises to repair the pipe and reservoirs without having first obtained the permission of the Railway Company, were convicted by a Magistrate under s. 122 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890) of an unlawful entry upon a railway. It was proved that the repairs were necessary. Heid, reversing the conviction and sentences, that as the pipes and reservoir belonged to the Spinning and Weaving Company, and were kept in repair by them, they, as owners of the dominant tenement, had a right to enter on the premises of the Railway Company, the owners of the servient tenement, to effect any necessary repairs, and that the entry in question, being in the exercise of a right, could not be called unlawful. (1) Parties to suit—Right of action—Defendant.—If the plaintiff, in an ejection suit, can make out a legal title to the land, he is entitled to maintain a suit against the person in actual juridical possession of such land for its recovery without making the person under whom the latter claims to hold a party to the suit.

So where plaintiffs based their title to the land in dispute on a lease granted by Government giving occupancy right to their predecessors-in-title, and sued the defendants in ejection, and the defendants claimed to hold the land under an occupancy title conferred on them by Government subsequent to the plaintiffs' lease, it was held that though Government might have properly been made a party so as to bind it by the decree and prevent future litigation, it was not a necessary party to the suit. Ajamkhun, however, continued in occupation of the property. In 1879 the plaintiff sued Ajamkhun and Gopal for possession and obtained a decree. On 6th April, 1880, in execution of the decree, he was put in formal possession by the Court under s. 263 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877) in the presence of Ajamkhun, who made no objection. At the time of these proceedings, Ajamkhun's sons (the present defendants) were living with him in the house, and they continued to do so subsequently. Ajamkhun died in 1885, and his sons continued in possession of the property and cultivated it. On the 4th April, 1892, the plaintiff brought this suit to eject them. They pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, contending that the execution proceedings in 1880 did not bind them, as they were not parties to that suit.

 Held, that as the present suit would not have been barred against Ajamkhan had he survived, it was not barred against the defendants, whose rights were derived from him. The defendants living with their father had no independent jurisdictional possession of the premises. The father Ajamkhan was the only person in possession. The possession which the plaintiff Pralhad obtained through the Court from Ajamkhan in 1860 operated as well against the defendants (his sons) as against himself. Pandharinath v. Mahabun Khan, 21 B. 98

(3) Proof of title—Inference of title from acts of ownership—Finding of lower Court on such a question—Mixed question of law and fact—Second appeal—High Court's power to interfere—Mamlatdar's Act (Bomb. Act III of 1879), s. 13—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 98, sch. II, art. 47—Dismissal of suit by Mamlatdar—Ejection suit—Title.—In an ejectment suit the evidence of the plaintiff's title to the property consisted of evidence of acts of user, from which the Court was asked to infer ownership in the absence of proof of a better title by the defendant. Upon review of the evidence the District Judge held that the plaintiff's title was not proved.

 Held, that this finding, which was a mixed one of law and fact, was a finding with which the High Court could not interfere on second appeal.

When from the facts found by the lower Court the legal inference to be drawn is certain, the High Court in second appeal may correct erroneous conclusions drawn by the lower appellate Court. Where, however, the legal inference to be deduced from facts is doubtful, it is not open to the High Court in second appeal to interfere with the findings of the lower Court. A test which often presents itself to an English lawyer is this: Would a Judge withdraw the case from a jury on the ground that there was no evidence of the question to be found upon, such as adverse possession or title, to go to them; or would he, on the other hand, on certain facts being established, direct them to find in a particular manner? In either of these cases it would be open to the High Court in second appeal to come to a different conclusion from the lower appellate Court. But where the question upon the facts and law is one which the Judge would lay before the jury to decide, there it is not open to the High Court to consider the propriety of the finding of the lower appellate Court.

In 1891 the plaintiff brought this suit to eject the defendant from certain land. In 1888 the defendant's predecessor and vendor (Sakharam Potnis) had sued the plaintiff's tenant, Amrit Parasin, in the Mamlatdar's Court, alleging that Amrit had disturbed his possession by putting sweepings upon the land and asking to be protected in his enjoyment. He did not appear on the day fixed for hearing, and his suit was dismissed under s. 13 of Act III of 1876. He did not file a suit to set aside this order of dismissal. It was contended in the present suit now brought by the plaintiff that after three years by the combined operation of art. 47 and s. 28 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the defendant's vendor, Sakharam Potnis, had lost his title to the land which thus became vested in the plaintiff.

 Held, that except as evidence of the plaintiff's title to the land, the proceedings in the Mamlatdar's Court in 1888 and his decree did not affect the present suit in ejectment. As such evidence they were before the lower Court. Rajaram v. Ganesh Hari Karkhanis, 21 B. 91

GENERAL INDEX.

Execution of Decree.

(1) Arrest—Application of judgment-debtor to be declared insolvent—Subsequent proceedings in execution against him—Practice—Procedure—Civ. Pro Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 264-B, 335, 387-A, 344 and 349.—Ganpat Bhagvan obtained a money-decree against Mahadev and in execution applied for his arrest and imprisonment. Before the warrant of arrest was issued, but after Mahadev had appeared in Court in obedience to a notice under s. 245-B of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), another judgment-creditor applied for execution of another decree against him. Thereupon Mahadev applied under s. 344 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) to be declared an insolvent, and in his application mentioned Ganpat Bhagvan as one of his creditors (s. 345). The Subordinate Judge referred the question whether pending the inquiry into Mahadev’s insolvency he could be arrested in execution of Ganpat Bhagvan’s decree against him.

Held, that there was no provision in the Code to prevent the Court from issuing a warrant of arrest against him.

Where, however, such a judgment-debtor is brought before the Court under a warrant of arrest, or comes before it upon notice under s. 245-B, the Court has a discretionary power not to put the warrant in force under s. 349 or not to issue it under s. 336 (where the requisite notification has been published by the Local Government, if the applicant furnishes security for his appearance when called upon.

In such cases the Court can also act under s. 337-A of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). GANPAT V. MAHADHEV, 29 B. 731. ... 1069

(3) Attachment—Attachment of property of third person—Payment into Court of amount of decree by owner of property in order to release property—Application in execution for refund of money so paid—No jurisdiction to order refund—Separate suit necessary—Practice—Procedure—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 278.—A certain box was attached in execution of a decree against one Mathur, whose father, alleging that it was his property and not Mathur’s, paid the bailiff the amount of the decree in order to release it from attachment. He then applied to the Judge to have the money refunded to him. The Judge held the box to be his property, and directed re-payment.

Held, that in making the order for re-payment the Judge acted without jurisdiction, there being no provision in the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) under which it could be made. The proper course was to have taken steps under s. 278 of the Code to have the attachment on the property raised. By paying the amount of the decree into Court it became necessary to file a suit for the recovery of the money so paid. VARAJALAL v. KACHIA, 29 B. 473 887

(4) Attachment in execution—Suit to declare property attached not liable in execution—Injunction against sale of property pending decision of suit on plaintiff giving security for interest on the sum representing value of attached property—Subsequent dismissal of suit with costs—Application by defendant in execution of decree for the interest for which security ordered by injunction—Application disallowed—Remedy under s. 497, Civ. Pro. Code—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 283, 492, 497.—Kastur having obtained a decree against one Vanmali attached a house in execution. Varajal intervened under s. 278 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), and applied that the house if sold should be sold subject to his mortgage. His application was dismissed and he thereupon brought a suit (No. 498 of 1887) for a declaration that the house was not liable in execution of Kastur’s decree. That suit was dismissed by the lower Court, and Varajal appealed. Pending the hearing of the appeal he applied for and obtained under s. 493 of the Civ. Pro. Code an injunction restraining the sale until the result of the appeal on his giving security for interest at six per cent on Rs. 2000, the acknowledged value of the house. The appeal was heard in due course and was dismissed with costs, and thereupon Kastur in execution of the decree in this last mentioned suit (No. 648 of 1887) applied to recover the interest for which security was ordered to be given by the District Court.

Held, that he was not entitled to recover it. A Court of execution cannot award interest when the decree is silent. The respondent (Kastur) had his remedy under s. 497 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and that remedy was obtainable on application not to the Court of execution, but to the Court which issued the injunction. Varaialal v. Kastur, 22 B. 42

(7) Death of a party to a suit after argument and before delivery of judgment—
—Execution against the heirs of deceased judgment-debtor—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 234, 248, 250—Practice—Procedure,—On the 30th November, 1893, an appeal in the High Court was argued and the case adjourned for judgment.

On the 12th June, 1893, one of the defendants-respondents died.

On the 16th July, 1893, the High Court pronounced its judgment, and a decree was drawn up as if the deceased respondent was still living.

On the 15th December, 1893, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, but the application was rejected by the Court of first instance on the ground that as the heirs of the deceased defendant had not been placed on the record before the judgment of the High Court was delivered, the decree was incapable of execution.

Held, reversing the lower Court’s decision, that the decree was on its face a good decree, and it could be executed against the heirs of the deceased defendant under ss. 231 and 248-250 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), without placing them on the record. Ramacharya v. Anantacharya, 21 B. 314

(8) Death of judgment-debtor after decree but before execution—Legal representatives not made parties to proceedings—Sale in execution without notice to legal representatives under s. 248 of Civ. Pro. Code—Notice given to wrong persons—Title of purchaser—Mortgage—Redemption—Limitation—Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 234, 248, 311.—On the 28th March, 1877, one Nagappa mortgaged certain property to the defendant. On the 27th June, 1877, one Hanumant Vithal obtained money-decree against Nagappa, but before it could be executed, Nagappa died leaving all his property to his daughters the plaintiffs. On the 22nd November, 1878, Hanumant applied for execution against Nagappa deceased, by his heir and nephew Ramlinga. Ramlinga appeared and stated that he was not the heir, but that the heirs of Nagappa were his daughters (the plaintiffs). The plaintiffs, however, were not made parties to the execution proceedings, nor were notices served on them under s. 248 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act X of 1877). The execution proceedings were continued and the mortgaged property was sold on the 9th June, 1890, and was bought by the defendant (the mortgagee) subject to his mortgage. The sale was confirmed and a certificate of sale was duly issued to the defendant, who got formal possession on the 11th October, 1880, he being already in possession as mortgagee. In 1889 the plaintiffs sued the defendant to redeem the mortgage. It was contended that the defendant having purchased at a Court-sale was entitled to the property free from the claim of the plaintiffs.

Held, by Candy and Jardine, JJ., that even assuming that the execution proceedings and sale had conveyed an absolute title to the purchaser, the present suit, which was brought within twelve years of the sale, did in effect challenge the sale, and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to redeem.

Held, by Ranade, J., that in respect of the plaintiffs, who were not parties, the sale proceedings were invalid and null, and without jurisdiction; that the auction-purchaser acquired no rights under his certificate of sale as against this legal representatives, and that as against them he could only claim title by adverse possession not falling short of twelve years. As the present suit was admittedly brought within that period it was maintainable. ESHAVA v. SIBRAMAPPA, 21 B. 424 (F.B.)...

(9) Death of the judgment-debtor leaving minor sons—Widow in possession—Sons not parties to execution proceedings—Sale in execution after judgment-debtor’s death—Minor sons represented by their mother and guardian on record—Minors—Guardian—Purchase of judgment-debtor’s interest by decree-holder—Subsequent suit by sons to recover the property—Civil Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 210. — Under s. 210 of the Civil Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859) an execution sale of the property of a deceased judgment-debtor was binding, if the estate of the deceased was sufficiently represented quoad such property.

A Hindu judgment-debtor died, leaving a widow and two sons who were minors. His widow was placed on the record as his heir, and not his sons. Certain property of the deceased was sold in execution. The sale certificate issued to the purchaser stated that he had purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property. In a suit subsequently brought by the sons.

Held, that they were bound by the sale. The widow of the deceased judgment-debtor, who as natural guardian of the minor sons was in possession of the property, was upon the record, and it was clear that it was the interest of the judgment-debtor, and not that of the widow, that was intended to be sold. AMRUT v. MANJUNATH, 21 B. 539...

(10) Execution sale—Sale in execution of decree already satisfied—Bona fide purchaser at such sale—Right of such purchaser.—Where a person, a stranger to the proceedings, purchases property bona fide at an auction-sale held in execution of a decree, the sale to him cannot be set aside on the ground that the decree had already been satisfied out of the Court at the time the sale was held. YELLAPPA v. RAMCHANDRA, 21 B. 463...

(12) Mamladars—Dispossession of a third person not a party to suit—Jurisdiction of Mamladars—Remedy of person so dispossessed—Civil Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1859), s. 693—Practice—Procedure.—G. got a decree for possession against P. in a Mamladar’s Court. In execution the Mamladar directed the ouster of C., who was in possession and who was not a party to the decree.

Held, that the Mamladar’s order for the execution of the decree by the ouster of C. was without jurisdiction, and that it should be set aside under s. 622 of the Civil Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1859). CHINAYA v. GANGAYA, 21 B. 775...

(13) Order for the sale of mortgaged property in execution—Application by judgment-debtor to be declared insolvent—Sale in execution pending application—Subsequent declaration of insolvency does not affect sale—Civil Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1859), s. 344, 351—Decree.—An order for the sale of mortgaged property having been made on the application of the mortgagee who had got a decree, and before the sale had taken place, the mortgagor (judgment-debtor) applied to be made insolvent under s. 344 of the Civil Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1859). Five months after the sale he was duly declared an insolvent under s. 351.

Held, that the subsequent declaration of the mortgagor’s insolvency did not affect the sale or render it illegal. No consequences in derogation of the ordinary rights of judgment-creditor follow from an application by the judgment-debtor under s. 344 of the Civil Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1859). It is only when a receiver is appointed under s. 351 that the property of the insolvent vests in the receiver under s. 354 and the rights of the creditor are interfered with. It is not provided that such an order shall have any retrospective effect. ISHVAR LAXHMIDAT v. RABJIVAN, 21 B. 681...

Executor.

(1) Executor de son tort—What constitutes an executor de son tort—Liability of such executor to creditors of deceased—Intermeddling with estate after order for probate made but before issue of probate—Receipt of assets with consent of person appointed executor—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 255—Act XL of 1865.—Probate is necessary to complete the title of a rightful executor, and until it is actually taken out, a person, intermeddling with the assets constitutes himself executor de son tort.

The executrix appointed by the will of one Jamsetji Jehangir applied to the High Court for probate of will, and Nawazbai, the widow of Jamsetji, entered a caveat. By a consent decree, dated 25th February, 1892, it was ordered that probate should issue to Ratanbai, and by the same decree it was declared that Ratanbai as executrix was not entitled to a sum of Rs. 4,178-10-0 or any other sum or sums of money to be received from the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company. In that same year, Nawazbai obtained payment from the Railway Company of the said sum of Rs 4,178-10-0 and of another sum of Rs. 166 due to the deceased. On the 3rd February, 1893, probate was issued to Ratanbai. In 1894 the plaintiff sued Nawazbai and Ratanbai for Rs. 166 due to him by the deceased Jamsetji. He claimed against Nawazbai as executrix de son tort.

Held, that probate not having actually issued to Ratanbai at the time that Nawazbai received the money from the Railway Company, although an order for probate had been made, she had by receiving it constituted herself executrix de son tort and was, therefore, liable to the plaintiff and could be joined as co-defendant with Ratanbai in the suit.

Held, also, that the fact that by the terms of the consent decree of the 25th February, 1892, she was allowed to receive the money and retain it, was no defence. The consent decree did not bind the creditors or free her from her responsibility to them to the extent of the assets which she received. Nawazbai v. Pestonji, 21 B. 400

(2) Lease—Power of executor to lease—Acquiescence in lease granted by executor—Estoppel—Landlord and tenant—Buildings improvements of tenant—Compensation for such improvements.—The executors of the will of a Hindu, to which neither the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, nor the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, apply, have such authority only to deal with the estate as the terms of the will confer on them.
GENERAL INDEX.

Executor—(Concluded).

Neither a power to "manage the estate as they may deem proper," nor a power to sell it, will authorize executors to lease any part of it for 999 years, or (seem) for any period exceeding 21 years.

Where the devisee of an estate for six years after coming of age and succeeding to the estate signed rent-bills in respect of land which the executors of his testator had purported to lease for 999 years, and such rent-bills contained a representation that the land had been given to the lessees on fuzendari tenure.

Held, that in the absence of any evidence that the lessees had been deceived by or had acted upon such representation, the devisee was not estopped from contesting the validity of the lease.

A man cannot be precluded from asserting his own rights by acquiescence in acts of other parties inconsistent with them unless (1) he has actual knowledge as distinguished from the means of knowledge of his rights; (2) he has knowledge that the persons acting inconsistently with them are doing so under the mistaken belief that they are exercising rights of their own; (3) he has encouraged the parties so acting to spend money or do other acts either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal rights.

A tenant who has erected buildings and effected improvements on the landlord's property is not entitled to be paid their value on the determination of the tenancy merely because he has acted under the mistaken belief shared by his landlord that he had a larger interest in the property than he really had. JUGMOHANDIAS v. PALLONJEE, 32 B. 1

(8) Will—Arbitration—Power of executor to refer the question of execution of a will to arbitration—Evidence—Evidence to explain written document—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), ss. 92 and 94—Practice—Stale—An executor against whose application for probate a caveat has been entered, cannot submit to arbitration the question whether the will propounded by him was duly executed by the deceased.

An executor having propounded a will, and applied for probate, a caveat was filed denying the execution of the alleged will, and the matter was duly registered as a suit. The executor and the caveatrix subsequently referred "the dispute" to arbitration, signing a submission paper, which was as follows:—

"To Bhangsrai Kalidas Ramji, written by us the undersigned. By this instrument we give to you in writing as follows:—In the matter of an application presented by Ghellabhai Amaram Tambuwala to obtain 'power' (probate) from the High Court for the administration and enjoyment between us two persons of the property of late Godwari, widow of Darji (thalir) Bhovan Deva Dave, I, Nandubai, the wife of Muli Ji Maha, having raised an objection have got a caveat registered in the High Court. In the matter thereof we the said plaintiffs and defendant have appointed you an arbitrator to bring about a settlement of the said dispute. As to whatever award you may make and give on arriving at a decision, the same is to be agreed to and abided by us two persons. In this matter we each other agree and consent to act according to your 'award.' This submission paper we of our free will and pleasuring and in sound mind and conscience have made and delivered after having read and understood the same. It is agreed to and approved of by us, and our heirs and representatives in Court (and) the Declarant, Bombay. The English date the 30th of October in the year 1893."

Before the arbitrator the parties were represented by solicitors, witnesses were called and examined, and the arbitrator made an award finding that the alleged will had not been executed. The executor nevertheless subsequently proceeded with his application for probate. The caveatrix contended that he was bound by the award. He alleged that the parties had never really intended to refer the question of the execution of the will to arbitration, and tendered evidence to prove this.

Held, that the evidence was admissible. The language of the submission paper was not so plain in itself, nor did it apply so accurately to existing facts, as to prevent the evidence being given—8. 94 of the Evidence Act (1 of 1872). GHELLABHAI v. NANDUBAI, 31 B. 355

Held, that there was no bona fide or valid sale, but a mere colourable transaction without consideration not intended to transfer the property to the plaintiff. NANA v. RAUTMAL, 22 B. 255

Friendly Society.
Rules—Power to alter rules.—The Bombay Uncoovenanted Service Family Pension Fund was a voluntary society established in 1850. Its object was to provide pensions for the widows of its members. One of its rules provided that the rules of the society were subject to such additions and alterations as might from time to time be sanctioned by the general body of subscribers, and by the form of application for admission as a member each applicant promised and engaged to abide by the rules of the society.

The plaintiff became a member in 1875. At that time one of the rules (which had been passed in 1971) provided that the pensions of widows resident in Europe should be payable to them at the rate of 5s. per rupee.

On the 30th July, 1895, the society passed a new rule which provided that all pensions due or becoming due after the 31st July, 1895, should be paid to incumbents residing in Europe or the colonies at the market-rate of exchange on the day of remittance.
GENERAL INDEX.

Friendly Society (Concluded).

The plaintiff contended that the society was not competent to alter the rule passed in 1871 by which he had been induced to join the society, and he prayed for a declaration that his wife, if and when she became a widow, would be entitled to have her pension paid at par.

Held, dismissing the suit, that the society was competent to alter its rules, and that the plaintiff was bound by such altered rules. The contract with the plaintiff was that his widow, if he left one, should receive such pension as the rules prescribed, and that the rules were liable to alteration by a majority at a general meeting to which he would be subject so long as he remained a member. The definition of “hereditary office” does not extend to duties of a carpenter, which though useful to the village community are not matters with which Government has any direct concern.

GENERAL INDEX.

Hindu Law—3.—Adoption.

(1) Adoption by widow—Motives of widow in adopting—Adoption from corrupt motives—Presumption.—In Bombay, according to the authorities, if it can be predicated of an adoption by a widow (in a case where the consent of the husband’s kinsmen is not required) that the ceremony has been performed, not as a religious duty, but from sinful and corrupt motives, it is on that account invalid, and the authorities appear to impose upon the Court the duty of inquiring into the motives of the adopting widow where her motives are called in question. Whether the presumption that an adopting widow has performed her duty from proper motives or from motives not to be deemed an irrebuttable presumption, is a question which still remains to be judicially decided.

The fact that the motives of the widow were of a mixed character is not sufficient to rebut the presumption.

The fact that the widow has made terms for herself with the father of the boy to be adopted, or that she has solicited a boy whose father will be likely to accede to her wishes, is not sufficient to render the adoption invalid.

Where a widow had adopted a son, and it was found by the Courts that unless she had been assured by the father and guardian of the adopted boy that she would receive Rs. 4,000 she would not have adopted him, but it was not found that she had not the special benefit of her husband in view when she made the adoption,

Held, that the presumption that she made the adoption from motives of duty was not rebutted, and that presumption should be allowed to prevail.

MAHABALESHVAR v. DUNGABAI, 22 B. 199

714...

(2) Adoption by widow of a predeceased son of owner after the estate had vested in the daughters of the deceased owner—Assent of a minor daughter in whom the estate had vested to the adoption—Ratification by the minor on attaining years of discretion—Adoption invalid—Acquiescence not equivalent to consent.—On the death of one Vishnu his estate vested in his two daughters, one of whom was a minor. Six months after Vishnu’s death his daughter-in-law, Savitri (widow of his predeceased son), adopted the plaintiff. It was alleged that the daughters consented to the adoption.

Held, that adoption was invalid, as the minor daughter could not give such consent to it as would operate to divest her of her estate.

Per FULTON and HOSKING, JJ.—Subsequent assent to an adoption cannot give it validity if it was invalid when made.

Per RANADE, J.—The adoption of the plaintiff was invalid for the double reason that Savitri had no power to adopt, as she was not the widow of the last male holder, and the nearest heir, the daughters of the deceased Vishnu, were not proved to have given their consent to the divesting of the estate which had come to them by inheritance, in favour of Savitri or the plaintiff.

Mere presence at the ceremony and the absence of any objection might imply an acquiescence, but mere acquiescence is not equivalent to consent.

VASUDEO v. RAMCHANDRA, 22 B. 551 (F.B.)...

(3) Adoption by widow relates back to her husband’s death—Succession of a brother to a deceased brother’s estate—Subsequent adoption by deceased’s widow divests estate—Conditional vesting of estate in heir—Inheritance—Hindu law.—See HINDU LAW (REVERSIONER), 21 B. 319.

(4) Adoption by widow—Umtouured widow—Delegation of authority to adopt—Ceremony of adoption.—Under the Hindu law the widow only can adopt a son to her husband, and she cannot delegate this authority to any other relation.

Where a widow performs the principal part of the adoption ceremony—namely, the gift and acceptance—the fact that at her request the religious part of the ceremony is completed by a relation, does not vitiate the adoption.

In the case of a young widow, the fact that she was unmourned at the time of the adoption is not such a disqualification as vitiates the adoption.

Hindu Law—3.—Adoption.—(Continued).

(6) Death of only son leaving widows in life-time of father—Subsequent death of father—Vesting of father’s estate in son’s widows—Adoption by son’s senior widow without consent of junior widow—Divesting of estate—Hindu law—Jains.—By custom the Jains are governed in matters of adoption by the ordinary rules of Hindu law.

Where an only son has died in his father’s life-time leaving a widow, an adoption by her after the father’s death, and after she has inherited the estate, is valid.

Where the son has left two widows, an adoption by the senior widow after the father’s death is valid although the younger widow does not consent and although such adoption divests the estate which she has inherited from her father-in-law.

The authority of a widow to adopt is at an end when the estate after being vested in her son has passed to the son’s widow.

An adoption by a widow in a divided family cannot divest any estate other than her own and her co-widow’s, except perhaps with the consent of the heir in whom the estate has vested. AMAVA v. MAHADGAUDA, 22 B. 416 860

(7) Lingayats—Adoption in dwyamushyayana farm—Divided brothers.—Amongst Lingayats the dwyamushyayana form of adoption is not obsolete. The adoption can take place in cases in which brothers are divided as well as where they are joint. CHENAVA v. BASANGAVDA, 21 B. 105 72

(8) Motive in adopting—Adoption made by a widow to defeat the claim of her co-widow to a share in her husband’s estate.—Validity of such adoption—Hindu law.—An adoption made by a Hindu widow is not invalid merely because it is made with the object of defeating the claim of a co-widow to a share in her husband’s property. BHIMAWA v. SANGAWA, 22 B. 206... 719

(9) Motive—Inquiry as to motives in making adoption irrelevant—Hindu law—Widow.—Held by a full Bench (Hoasking, J., dissenting) that in the Bombay Presidency a widow having the power to adopt, and a religious benefit being caused to her deceased husband by the adoption, any discussion of her motives in making the adoption is irrelevant. RAMCHANDRA v. MULJI NANABHAI, 22 B. 558 (F.B.) 954

(10) Second adoption in the life-time of first adopted son is invalid—Joint enjoyment of property by an owner and a trespasser—Adverse possession—Trespasser’s rights by prescription—Compromise—Family settlement, effect of—Hindu law.—Ramkrishna Yeshwant adopted Raya as his son, but as Raya became sickly, and was not expected to live, Ramkrishna afterwards adopted Balkrishna (Raya’s brother). Ramkrishna died in 1846; and his widow Ramabai and the two adopted sons continued to live together until her death in 1865, and after her death Raya and Balkrishna still lived together until 1877, when Balkrishna died, leaving a widow Radhabai and a minor son (Ramkrishna). After that event Radhabai and the plaintiff Raya began to live separately.

After Ramkrishna Yeshwant’s death in 1846, the lands were registered in Balkrishna’s name. In August, 1878, on the application of Radhabai on behalf of her minor son, the management of the property was taken from Raya by the Collector, who himself assumed the management. A compromise of the dispute was, however, effected by which the property was to be shared equally between Raya and Ramkrishna, the minor son of Balkrishna, and from 1878 to 1882 the Collector paid them equal moieties of the produce.

In 1890, the plaintiff Raya brought this suit claiming, as the adopted son of Ramkrishna Yeshwant, either the whole of the property, or in the alternative a moiety of it.

Held, that the adoption of Balkrishna in the life-time of Raya was invalid. There can be no second adoption during the life-time of the first adopted son.

Held, also, that Ramkrishna (the minor son of Balkrishna) was entitled to a moiety of the estate.

Per Parsons, J.—Ramkrishna’s title to a moiety of the estate was obtained by adverse possession. The adoption of Balkrishna was invalid, and he was not originally entitled to any part of the property and was, therefore, a trespasser; but he (and afterwards his minor son Ramkrishna) and Hindu Law—3.—Adoption.—(Concluded).

Raya, who was entitled to the whole of it, had been jointly in possession and enjoyment of it for forty-three years. By the adverse possession of Balkrishna and his minor son, Raya lost and Balkrishna and his son gained by prescription a moiety of the estate. That moiety became the absolute self-acquired property of Balkrishna and would descend to his heirs.

Per. RANADE, J.—There was no adverse possession by Balkrishna or his heirs until August, 1978, when the management of the estate was taken from Raya on the application of Radhabai. The suit was brought within twelve years of that time, so that the plaintiff’s claim was not barred by limitation. But it appeared that the disputes which had arisen in 1978 were settled by a compromise which had been acted on, and of which the plaintiff had received the benefit for many years. A bona fide family arrangement is specially favoured by Courts of Equity and it binds the parties and their representatives. On that ground I hold that the plaintiff is only entitled to recover a moiety of the property of Ramkrishna as his share, and the other moiety must remain with the appellant. RAMABAI v. RAYA, 22 B. 482

(11) Specifying a child for adoption does not necessarily prevent the adoption of another if the one specified dies or be refused.—Where a husband authorizing an adoption specifies the child he wishes to be taken, but that child dies or is refused by his parents, the authority given warrants (at least in Bombay) the adoption of another child. The presumption is that the husband desired an adoption, and by specifying the object merely indicated a preference. LAKSHMRIBAI v. RAJAJI, 23 B. 996

See \textit{Hindu Law (Reversioner)}, 21 B. 319.

(3) Succession—Widow—Widow's estate—Heirs after widow's death—Female heirs—Widow of gotraja sapinda—\textit{Stridhan}.—Narotam and Harjivan were divided brothers. Harjivan died first, leaving a son named Tulsidas. Narotam afterwards died childless, leaving his widow Jasoda, who took possession of Narotam's property. Tulsidas died childless, leaving only his widow Bai Mani, who succeeded to the property on Jasoda's death. After the death of Bai Mani the plaintiff, who was the son of Tulsidas's sister, sued to recover the property from the defendants, who were distant samandaka relations of Narotam. It was contended on the plaintiff's behalf that, on Jasoda's death, Bai Mani took the property as her \textit{stridhan} acquired by inheritance, and that the plaintiff as bhandhu of her husband Tulsidas was heir to Bai Mani, who died without issue.

Heid, confirming the decree dismissing the suit that on Jasoda's death (Narotam and Harjivan being divided), Bai Mani succeeded to the property as a \textit{gotraja sapinda} being the widow of Tulsidas, the nephew of Narotam. As such she took only a life interest in the property, and had no absolute interest in it as in her \textit{stridhan} proper.

In the Presidency of Bombay female heirs who by marriage enter into the \textit{gotra} of the male whom they succeed (including widow, mother, grandmother the widow of a \textit{gotraja sapinda}, &c.) take only a widow's estate in property which they inherit from the last male owner. Whether the estate inherited by these female heirs is called their \textit{stridhan} or not, their restricted rights over it are admitted by all schools. \textit{Madhavram v. Dave Trumbake}, 21 B. 739

(5) See \textit{Hindu Law (Marriage)}, 22 B. 921.

12.—Joint Family.

(1) Alienation of his share by a co-parcener—(His position and rights after such alienation—Position of purchaser—Subsequent death or birth of other co-parceners—Effect on position of purchaser—Rights of alienor.—1. The alienation by a Hindu co-parcener of his rights in part or the whole of the joint family property does not place the purchaser of such rights in his own position. The purchaser becomes a sort of tenant-in-common with the co-parceners, admissible, as such, to his distributive share upon a partition taking place.

2. Such an alienation before partition does not deprive the alienating co-parcener of his rights in the joint family.

3. As the purchaser does not by the death of the vendor lose his right to a partition, so his position is not improved by the death of the other co-parceners before partition.

4. The purchaser like his alienor is liable to have his share diminished upon partition by the birth of other co-parceners if he stands by and does not insist on an immediate partition.

Three undivided brothers, viz., Sidmalapa, Nijlingappa and Muryappa, were the owners of a certain house which on the 1st August, 1915, Nijlingappa mortgaged with possession to one Shidlingappa. In 1917 the house was vested in the respective sons of the said three brothers, viz., Basapa (son of Sidmalapa), Revapa (son of Nijlingappa), and Ruhbana (son of Muryappa). In September, 1917, in execution of a decree against Basapa alone, the house was sold \textit{ex nomenis} (not merely Basapa's interest) to one Gurpadapa. Formal possession was given to the purchaser, but the actual possession remained with the mortgagees (Shidlingapa). After this sale took place no other family property remained in which Basapa had an interest.

Khubana died in 1880 and Revapa died in 1888, no partition having been made between them and Basapa. In March, 1891, Basapa sold his interest in the house to the plaintiff, who in 1892 filed this suit to redeem the mortgage of 1845. The lower appellate Court dismissed the suit, holding that when in 1878 Gurpadapa purchased Basapa’s right and interest in the last remaining portion of the family property, Basapa ceased to be a co-partner with Khubana and Revapa, and consequently took nothing by survivorship on their death, their shares going to Gurpadapa. On appeal to the High Court,

\[\text{Held, that Basapa's right to succeed to his brothers' shares were not affected by the sale of his interest in the last item of joint family property to Gurpadapa so long as the latter did not proceed to work out his rights by partition. Basapa became entitled on the death of Khubana and Revapa to their respective shares. GURLINGAPA v. NANDAPA, 21 B. 797} \]

\((2)\) Ancestral property—Mortgage by father and one of the sons—Agreement by father alone that mortgagee should enjoy the property for a term of years in satisfaction of debt—Agreement not binding on sons—Alienation—Decree against father—When binding on his sons—Dekkhak Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 44, and s. 15.—In 1883 one Dhondi and his eldest son Bala mortgaged certain ancestral property for Rs. 1,500. In 1890 Dhondi alone came to an arrangement with the mortgagee by which it was agreed that the mortgagee should enjoy the income of the mortgaged property till 1900 A.D. in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. This agreement was filed in Court under s. 44 of the Dekkhak Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879) on 4th April, 1891, when it took effect as a decree.

In execution of this decree the mortgagee sought to attach the property mortgaged. Dhondi having died in the meantime, his sons objected to the attachment on the ground that the decree was fraudulent and collusive. But this objection was disallowed by the Court, and the property was attached. Thereupon Dhondi’s sons filed a suit for redemption of the mortgage of 1889.

\[\text{Held, that the agreement was not binding upon the plaintiffs. By the agreement the right to redeem the mortgage before its fixed period under the provisions of s. 15 A of the Dekkhak Agriculturists’ Relief Act (XVII of 1879) ceased, and the right to the surplus profits in the hands of the mortgagees over and above the mortgage-debt was also lost, without any countervailing advantage or benefit. Such an agreement by a Hindu father is not binding on his sons in respect of ancestral property. It amounts \textit{pro tanto} to an alienation by him, of the ancestral estate without consideration.} \]

item in a long series of borrowings, the particular purpose for which it was borrowed. It will be sufficient for him to show that the family was in chronic need of money for the current outgoings of the family life or its trade necessities, and that the moneys were advanced on the representation of the manager that they were needed for such objects. And if the fair inference to be drawn from all the circumstances of the case leaves no doubt that the moneys were borrowed for family reasons, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, although he is not able to indicate the particular purpose for which each sum has been borrowed.

Where mortgage bonds were passed for debts due on decrees, and the execution of the bonds (which had been sanctioned by the Court) and the amounts for which they were passed were certified to the Court, and the Court recorded the adjustment without objection, and the decrees by reason of such certified and recorded adjustment became incapable of execution.

Held, that sufficient had been done by the Court to satisfy the requirements of s. 257-A of the Crv. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), although no formal sanction had been recorded. KRISHNA v. VASUDEV, 21 B. 898 544

(5) Undivided family—Ancestral property—Self-acquired property made ancestral by agreement—Operation of such agreement—Effect of such agreement on accumulations and accretions of the property.—By his Will, the testator left the residue of his self-acquired property to the University of Bombay. His sons and plaintiffs alleged an agreement between themselves and their father containing an admission by the latter that the property therein mentioned was ancestral and not self-acquired and contended that the accretions and accumulations to such property were also ancestral so as not to be included in the residue specified in the Will.

On appeal from the judgment of Tyabji, J. (20 B. 316) and his decree dismissing the plaintiffs’ suit, the Appeal Court reversed the decree holding that the accretions and accumulations in question were ancestral property as well as the corpus itself and passed as such to his sons and not to the University under the Will. (1) Mortgage—Assignment of the mortgaged property as maintenance of a widow—Subsequent redemption of the mortgage—Widow entitled to the redemption money—Partition.—A field held in mortgage by the family of the parties was assigned to a widow in the family for her maintenance when the family divided. The mortgage money was subsequently paid into Court in pursuance of a decree for redemption.

Held, that it was clear on the assignment that the widow was entitled to the money just as she was entitled to the field, i.e., to the usufruct of it for her life. GAMBHIRMAL v. HAMIRMAL, 21 B. 747 503

14.—Marriage.

(1) Betrothal—Contract of marriage—Suit against father of betrothed girl to have betrothal declared void and for damages for breach of contract—Kapole Bania caste.—The plaintiff, who had been betrothed to the defendant’s daughter Kamalavanti, sued for a declaration that unless the defendant was willing that the marriage should be performed before the expiration of the month of Vaishakh 1952 (May-June, 1996) the contract for the marriage should no longer be binding on the plaintiff and that the betrothal was void, and for Rs. 25,000 damages for breach of the contract of betrothal and marriage.

The defendant pleaded that his daughter Kamalavanti was not willing to marry the plaintiff within the period mentioned, and that he had no right to force his daughter against her will. At the trial Kamalavanti stated that she was unwilling to be married for three or four years. The Court found that in the Kapole Bania caste, to which the parties belonged, marriages ordinarily took place when the bride was between twelve and fifteen years of age. Kamalavanti was born on the 2nd May, 1881, so that she was nearly fifteen at the date of suit (16th January, 1896). Before filing the suit the plaintiff had called upon her and the defendant (her father) to fix a date for the marriage, but the defendant had declined to do so on the ground that his daughter did not wish to marry at that time and that he would not force her to marry against her will.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. The marriage of Hindu children is a contract made by the parents, and the children themselves exercise no volition. This is equally true of betrothal and there is no implied condition that fulfilment of the contract depends on the willingness of the girl at the time of marriage.

It was contended that plaintiff could not obtain damages; that defendant had not broken the contract, the plaint assuming that the contract of betrothal was still in force, and the defendant having a locus standi until Vaishakh 1902 (May-June, 1896).

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages. There was practically a repudiation of the betrothal. The plaintiff's willingness to marry Kamalavanti at any time before the end of Vaishakh May-June did not disentitle him to damages, seeing that Kamalavanti had declared her unwillingness to be married to plaintiff then, and the defendant had declared that he could not compel her to change her mind. (4) Marriage of a girl without her father's consent—Suit by father to have marriage declared void—Factum valet—Applicability of the doctrine to marriage. A Hindu widow, who was appointed guardian of the person of her minor daughter eight or nine years old, married the minor in disobedience of the order of a Civil Court directing her to make over the minor to her paternal uncle for the purpose of getting her married.

Held, that the principle of factum valet applied. Neither the disobedience of the Court's order, nor the disregard of the preferable claims of the male relations, would invalidate the marriage.

(4) Partition made under a bona fide mistake as to property subject to partition—Repartition—Hindu law.—The parties to a partition under a bona fide mistake included in the division certain property which did not belong to the family, but was held in mortgage from a third person who subsequently brought a suit for redemption and recovered it from the party to whom it had been allotted at the partition. Held, that the party who had lost his share was entitled to claim a repartition. MARUTI v. RAMA, 21 B. 333 235

(5) Property in different jurisdictions—Suit for partial partition—Suit for land—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 12—Practice—Procedure—Joint family—Omis of proof—Evidence of separate acquisition—Jurisdiction.—The plaintiff sued for partition of certain property, alleging it to be joint family property. It consisted of a house in Bombay and certain fields at Vavla in the Thana District, outside the jurisdiction of the Court. The parties were all resident in Bombay. Held, that as to the Vavla property the Court had no jurisdiction, the plaintiff not having obtained leave to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, but that the suit might proceed as regards the property in Bombay. As to the house in Bombay, the first defendant alleged that it was his self-acquired property; that he had purchased it in his own name in 1863 out of his private funds; that there were no family funds, and that neither his father nor his brothers (the latter of whom were then very young) were in a position to contribute anything towards the purchase; that by his invitation his father and brothers had lived with him in the house; that his father had died then and that one of his brothers had subsequently left the house and with his family had gone to reside elsewhere; that the plaintiff (the youngest brother of the first defendant) had continued to occupy a room in the house by the first defendant's permission up to the date of suit. The plaintiff, on the other hand, relied on the fact that the house was purchased and used as a family residence, while the father and sons were all living in union; that it was bought in the name of the eldest son (defendant No. 1), who was then the manager of the family; that the father lived and died there; and that he himself (the plaintiff) and his family had continued to live there, even after he had separated in food from his brother (defendant No. 1). Held, that the house was liable to partition. No doubt the omis of proof was upon the plaintiff. The facts, however, proved by him or admitted by the first defendant raised a strong presumption that the house was family property and against it there was only the first defendant's statement that the house was bought with his own money. But there was nothing to show that he kept a private fund apart from the family funds. He was the manager of the family and he kept no separate account. BALARAM v. RAMCHANDRA, 22 B. 922 1198
Hindu Law—16.—Partition.—(Concluded).

(6) Suit for partition—Exclusion—Burden of proof—Hindu law.—In a suit for partition of joint family property, the defendants pleaded that the plaintiff's branch of the family had been separated more than thirty years ago. The plaintiff proved that the family property was joint, and that he had a share in it.

Held, that under the circumstances it lay on the defendant to prove plaintiff's exclusion from the joint estate for more than twelve years and an exclusion known to the plaintiff. JIVANBHAT v. ANIDHAT, 32 B. 259 ...

Hindu temple, manager of—Trustees—Removal of trustees—Trustees misapplying funds by mistake—Jurisdiction of Courts in India—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 589—Scheme of management of Hindu temple, form of.—Courts of Equity in England have always allowed themselves some latitude in dealing with the trustees of a public charity who, under a mistake, have misapplied the funds of the institution, and Courts in India can similarly allow themselves some degree of latitude in dealing with the managers and pujari of public Hindu temples, who, for a long time, have been accustomed to deem themselves owners of the temples, of which in law they are only trustees, managers and priests, and to overlook the past while taking care that for the future the administration of the temple is placed on a sound footing.

The Courts have jurisdiction to deal with the managers of public Hindu temples, and, if necessary for the good of the religious endowment, to remove them from their position as managers. There is, however, no hard and fast rule that every manager of a shrine, who has arrogated to himself the position of owner, should be removed from his trust; each case must be decided with reference to its circumstances. 18.—Reversioner.

(1) Interest of reversioner expectant on widow's death does not pass on insolvency to Official Assignee—Adoption—Adoption by widow relates back to her husband's death—Succession of brother to deceased brother's estate—Subsequent adoption by deceased's widow divests estate—Conditional vesting of estate in heir—Inheritance—Hindu law.—Balvant and Mahadev were brothers. Mahadev was adopted by his cousin's widow and as adopted son had succeeded to property. He died childless in 1870 or 1872 leaving his widow Mathurabai as his heir. His brother Balvant was next reversionary heir after Mathurabai and in 1880 he (Balvant) became insolvent, and his estate vested in the Official Assignee, who sold to the plaintiff his interest in certain mortgaged property which had belonged to Mahadev and was then in the possession of Mathurabai as his heir. Mathurabai died in 1886 and after her death the plaintiff sued to redeem the property from the mortgage.

Held, that at the date of his insolvency Mathurabai being then alive the interest of Balvant as reversionary heir in the said property was only a spee succession which could not vest in the Official Assignee. The plaintiff, therefore, took no interest in the property by his purchase from the Official Assignee.

Atmaram and Sakharam were two divided brothers. Atmaram died leaving his brother Sakharam and a daughter-in-law Gangabai (the widow of his deceased son Govind) him surviving. On Atmaram's death, Sakharam inherited his property as his heir, but shortly afterwards Sakharam gave his son Mahadev in adoption to Gangabai, who duly adopted him as son to her deceased husband Govind.

Held, that Mahadev on his adoption became not only the son of Govind, but also the grandson and heir of Atmaram. Having been adopted with the assent of Sakharam he as the adopted grandson of Atmaram divested the estate in Atmaram's property which had vested in Sakharam. An adoption to the deceased taking place in the meanwhile does not curtail such period or impose upon the reversioner the necessity of filing a suit to have it declared invalid during the lifetime of the widow under pain of losing the inheritance upon the widow's death. Art. 113 of Act XV of 1877 does not operate to give validity by lapse of time to an invalid adoption, if no suit is brought by the reversionary heirs within six years of its taking place to obtain a declaration that it is invalid.

Where a Hindu by his will directed that after his death his wife was to take possession of and enjoy his property, and in another passage declared that "just as he was the owner so she was to be the owner," but there were no words of inheritance used, nor did he directly give his wife any power of disposition over the property.

Held, that she took only a life-interest in the property.

The Courts have always leaned against such a construction of the will of a Hindu testator as would give to the widow unqualified control over his property. HARILAL v. BAI REWA, 21 B. 376

Motiba died in 1887. In 1890, the plaintiffs, who were divided collaterals of Hathibhai, sued to recover the lands, alleging that they succeeded thereto on the death of Hathibhai, widows and daughters being excluded from inheritance according to the custom among the Gohel Girassias. The lower Courts found that the lands were never in plaintiff’s possession; that Motiba held them till December, 1882, since which time defendants Nos. 1—3 had them in their enjoyment as purchasers from her; that the custom proved excluded daughters, but not widows, from inheritance; and that the claim was within time, having been made within twelve years of the death of Motiba.

On second appeal to the High Court, Held, (1) that the alleged custom, excluding daughters, was not proved;

(2) that the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to shift the basis of their claim from an alleged custom which excluded both widows and daughters to one which only excluded daughters;

(3) that since limitation must be applied to the plaintiffs’ claim as they made it, and tried to prove it, Motiba’s possession was adverse to them and, being for more than twelve years, barred the suit.

If the decree appealed against is based on wrong views of the law of evidence, or on misconception of the canons which the Privy Council and the High Court have defined as to how a special custom should be proved, the High Court will interfere in second appeal. Held, that the widow was not entitled to a separate maintenance, but might be allowed, if she so desired, to occupy during her lifetime a portion of the land, not exceeding one-third. GODAVARI BAI v. SAGUNABAI, 22 B. 52.

(11) Powers of management.—Lease granted by the widow for long term of years.—Lease voidable on the widow’s death, but not ipso facto void.—Suit by heir to recover property from lessee six years after widow’s death.—Compensation for tenants’ improvements.—Lying by.—Landlord and tenant.—A Hindu widow adopted a son, but reserved to herself for life the right of managing her husband’s property. The adopted son sold his interest in the property to the plaintiff. In 1895 the widow granted a lease of the property to defendants for fifty-nine years at a rent of Rs. 50 a year. She died the following year (1896). The defendants continued in possession of the property under the lease and expended money in improvements. In 1899 the plaintiff as purchaser from the adopted son sued for possession.

Held, that he was entitled to recover and to have the lease set side, but only on payment to the defendants of compensation for the sum properly expended by them in improving the land after the widow’s death.

Hindu Law - 22. - Widow. (Concluded).

The lease granted by the widow Jackibai was not ipso facto void, but only voidable by the plaintiff on her death. It did not necessarily determine at her death. That being the legal position of the defendants, the plaintiff allowed the defendants to go on improving the property, and took no steps to warn the defendants until he brought this suit to recover possession. His conduct was such as to induce a belief in the mind of the defendants that the lease would be treated as valid. There was not merely a lying by, but a lying by under such circumstances as to induce a belief that a voidable lease would be treated as valid.

— 23. - Will.

(1) Construction—Bequest by a Hindu to his wife—Life estate—Reversioner—Vested remainder—Contingent bequest. One Jamnadas Natha died in 1876, leaving a will which after stating his property in detail provided as follows:—"When I die, my wife named Suraj is owner of that property. And my wife has power to do in the same way as I have absolute power to do when I am present, and in case of my wife’s death, my daughter Mahalaxmi is owner of the said property after that (death)."

Held, that Suraj took only a life estate under the will, with remainder over to Mahalaxmi after her death.

Held, also, that the bequest to Mahalaxmi was not contingent on her surviving Suraj, but that she took a vested remainder which upon her death passed to her heirs.

(2) Construction—Bequest to wife—Take possession of and enjoy ’—Direction that she was to be owner just as testator was owner—Life-interest. See HINDU LAW (REVERSIONER), 21 B. 376.

Construction—Gifts and wills—Executory bequests—Power to direct who should take executory bequests—Restriction to donee living at testator's death—Limitation of the exercise of the power. —Even if Hindu wills are not to be regarded, in all respects, as gifts to take effect upon the death of the testator, they are generally to be regarded, as to the property which they can transfer and as to the persons to whom transfer can be made, as regulated by the Hindu law of gift.

A Hindu testator devised his immovable property upon trust for the income to be appropriated to the maintenance of his widow and of his daughter, and if the children that might be born of her, the property to be divided among the heirs of such children. If there should not be any children born of his daughter, the property under the will should devolve upon those "to whom she might direct it to be delivered by making her will."

The daughter having had no children, and questions having arisen between the daughter and the widow as to the administration of the estate according to the will.
GENERAL INDEX.

Held, that there was not an absolute gift to the daughter, and that the person to whom the property was given, though to be designated by her, did not take the gift from her, but from the testator. The judgment in Hixon v. Oliver (13 Ves., 198) not applicable.

According to the already settled law, if the testator himself had designated the persons to take, in the event of his daughter having no child, the gift would have been valid as an executory bequest, supported by preceding life-interests, but valid only under the following restriction, viz., that to render the gift valid, the taker so designated must have been, either actually or in contemplation of law, in existence at the death of the testator.

In this case, no principle of Hindu law stood in the way to prevent the testator from substituting his daughter for himself as the person empowered to designate; but the same limitation held good as to the existence being requisite of the donee at the end of the donor’s life, in order that the power might be validly exercised.

There was no application of the English law of “powers,” which was not fit to be applied generally to Hindu wills. Subject to the above restriction, the power in question was valid.

It was not decided upon whom the property would devolve, if the power should not be exercised. BAI MOTIVAHU v. BAI MAMUBAI, 21 B. 709 (P.C.) = 24 I.A. 93 = 1 C.W.N. 366 = 7 Bar. P.C.J. 140

(4) Construction—Gift to a class—Members of a class not in existence at testator’s death—Void gift—Intention of testator—Gift to widows of sons is a gift to a class.—A testator gave his property to his executors and trustees, who were to apply the income as directed. He further directed that after the death of the last survivor of his five sons, the property should be divided as directed among the sons of his sons and daughters of his sons, and provision was made, in certain events, for the widows of his deceased sons. He left him surviving his five sons, three grandsons and three granddaughters. After his death two more grand-daughters were born.

Held, that the gifts to the sons, daughters and widows of deceased sons were void. They were gifts to a class of which some members were not in existence at the time of the testator’s death.

The principle deducible from the authorities is that it is the primary duty of the Court so to construe the will as to carry out, as far as possible, the intentions of the testator, and that if the Court comes to the conclusion that the testator had the primary intention of benefiting all the members of a class, and if such intention fails by reason of its being void, yet if the Court can deduce a secondary intention that at least such members of the class should take as were in existence at the time of the testator’s death, then effect should be given to such secondary intention, but not otherwise. For the purpose of ascertaining these primary and secondary intentions it is, of course, necessary to take all the material facts as to the testator’s family into consideration and to read the various provisions of his will as a whole.

A gift in a will to widows of sons is, in the case of Hindu, a gift to a class, as Hindu by their law are permitted to have more than one wife at the same time. KHERIJ v. MVARJI, 29 B. 633

(5) Construction—Gift to sons—Life-estate—Intestacy.—Tapidas Varajdas, a Hindu, died leaving a widow (Navivahu) and two sons (Damodar and Dayabhai), and a grandson Karsandas, the son of Dayabhai. Damodar had had two sons born to him in Tapidas’ lifetime, but both had died in infancy and before the date of Tapidas’ will. This fact was not known at the hearing of the suit or of the appeal to any of the counsel appearing in the case, and was only disclosed after the first judgment of the Appeal Court had been delivered. By his will dated 1855 Tapidas disposed of certain dwelling-houses which belonged to him and of the residue of his estate as follows:

8. “I have given the houses to my wife Navivahu for her to enjoy the income thereof.—

"In the event of the decease of my wife Navivahu, my sons Bhai Damodar and Bhai Dayabhai may take in equal shares, half and half, the income that may be received, and may enjoy and may expend and may make donations for religious charitable purposes, and the heirs also of both these my sons may always take the income from time to time, and may divide and take the income. To the same no one has any claim or title."

13. "Afterwards giving to all what is written in this will, all the residue of the estate (sakamat) the whole of it should be divided and taken in equal shares by my sons Damodaradas and Dayabhai.

And on the death of the two sons (kaasa raza) he who may have issue sons that issue is in every way the heir of his father's property, and if in the lifetime of the two above-mentioned sons one should not have issue sons, then on his death, if any other son should be alive, he should get all the estate, cash and whatever else there may be, in that no son can raise a dispute. As to the rest, whoever son of mine may survive (hayaturo hae) should get all that is given by me, and should there be no survivorship of that child, and should he have a son or sons, then he (or they) should get all, according to what is written above; in that no one can raise an objection."

Held. (confirming Candy, J.) that under cl. 8 Damodar and Dayabhai took only a life-interest in the house as tenants-in-common, and that the ulterior interest therein not being validly disposed of fell into the residue.

Held, also (varying the decree of Candy, J.) that Damodar and Dayabhai each took a life-estate in a moiety of the residuary estate, and that if Damodar died without leaving a son, his moiety should devolve upon Dayabhai, or, if he were dead, upon his son Karsandas (if then living), and if Dayabhai should die without leaving a son, his moiety should devolve upon Damodar if then living. DAMODARDAS TAPIDAS v. DAYABHAII, 21 B. 1

(6) Construction of bequest—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 81 and 111 —Absolute estate given.—This appeal related to three clauses in the will of a Hindu, who bequeathed his property to his two sons, one of whom had a son. The other son was childless, his only issue having died before the will was made. There were gifts over on the death of either son.

The Courts below, construing the first of the three clauses, decided that each of the two sons took a life-interest in the property, comprised in that clause, as tenants-in-common; and that the ulterior interest, not having been validly disposed of, fell into the residuary estate.

On this appeal, with reference to s. 82 of "the Indian Succession Act, 1865," made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the town of Bombay, by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, some doubt was expressed by the Judicial Committee whether in the clause it sufficiently appeared that the estates given to the sons were only estates for life. It was, however, in the view taken of the other clauses of which the construction was in dispute, unnecessary to determine that point.

In the next clause to be construed there were words which had been held by the appellate High Court to give to each of the two sons of the testator only a life-estate in a half share of the residuary estate. Whether those words, which followed a gift to the testator's two sons of the whole residue in equal shares, were so clear that only this restricted interest was intended to be given to them, was considered, in like manner, to be open to doubt in regard to the rule of construction imposed by s. 82. But this was also not required to be determined, as this clause, the 13th in the will,
was not applicable under the circumstances.

It was now determined that the third and last of the disputed clauses, No. 18 in the will, clearly gave the residuary estate to the testator's two sons, in equal shares, each an absolute estate, except in the case of the subsequent birth of a son or daughter. The two clauses, 13 and 18, were not, in the Committee's opinion, intended to be read together and reconciled, nor were they mutually explanatory. They were each intended to provide for different circumstances.

Held, that the two sons of the testator must be declared to have each taken an absolute interest in the half share of the residuary estate. DAMO-

Hindu Law—23.—Will—(Concluded).

(7) Construction of will—Bequest to a person with a direction that it should be used in good works (sara kam)—Direction void as being vague and indefinite—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 125.—A testator left a legacy to his wife in the following terms:

"Rs. 3,000 to be credited in our shop in the name of my wife Bai Bapi. Interest at 6 per cent. to be paid to her every year. If in her lifetime she demands the money to use in a good work (sara kam), it should be given to her, but if she has not taken it in her lifetime, Jamnadas and Bhagubhai are to dispose of it according to their own pleasure after death.

Held, that this was not a bequest in favour of good works (sara kam), but a bequest to the testator's wife, with a direction to use it in good works (sara kam), and as that direction was void for uncertainty she was entitled to the money as if the will had contained no such direction. BAI BAPI v. JAMNADAS HATHISANG, 22 B. 774 ... 1100

(9) Dharam—Gift to dharam—Charity—Reversioner—Limitation applicable to reversioner—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Art 141.—One Calltanjar Sawji died without issue on 5th January, 1869, leaving two widows Cooverbai and Nenavahoo, who thereupon took a widow's estate in such of his immovable property as was not validly disposed of by him. By his will, dated 6th January 1869, he appointed the defendant Vundravandas and two others his executors and trustees. The two latter were dead at the date of this suit. By his will he left two immovable properties to his wife Cooverbai for life and two to his wife Nenavahoo, and the residue of his property he left to his trustees, directing them to apply the same in charity (dharam). The properties left to his widows were to revert on their death to the charity fund held by the said trustees. Cooverbai died in 1871. Nenavahoo survived till 1888 and died in November of that year, leaving a will.

The plaintiff was the nephew (brother's son) and heir of the testator and he sued to have his rights in and to his uncle's estate ascertained. He contended that the bequests for dharam were void and that the property bequeathed for that purpose was undisposed of. He claimed to be entitled to the whole of the testator's immovable property including that which had been devised to the widows for life.

The defendant pleaded that he and his co-executors had held and dealt with the estate in accordance with the testator's will, and contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

Held, that the devise to dharam was too general and indefinite for the Court to enforce and was, therefore, void.

Held, also, that under art. 141 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the plaintiff's claim to the immovable properties left by the testator was not barred by limitation. VUNDRAVANDAS v. CURSONDAS, 21 B. 646 ... 435

(9) Mayukha—Widow—Widow's power to dispose of moveable bequeathed to her by her husband.—Held, that a widow in Gujarat under the law of Mayukha had power to bequeath movable property taken by her under the will of her husband which gave her express power of free disposition.

Per RANADE, J.—There is a three-fold distinction between the moveable and immovable property, between title by bequest and title by inheritance, and a distinction between the Mayukha and Mitakshara, which must be borne in mind before the rights of a widow in Gujarat, claiming under a will which gave her express powers of free disposition over the residue of moveable property, are negatived solely on the authority of the Full Bench decision quoted above. If Rewa Bai had made no disposition herself, the moveable property, in respect of which freedom of disposition had been allowed her, would have gone to the reversioners as her husband's heir. Hundi.

(1) Bill of exchange—Suit by holder and indorser against payee and indorser—Presentment to acceptor—Local usage as to presentment—Usage of presentment at Bhusire—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1891), ss. 70, 71.—The plaintiff as holder and indorser of a hundi drawn on one Haji Mirza sued defendant as payee and indorser to recover Rs. 1,193-4-0 on a hundi which had been dishonoured by the acceptor.

It was found by the Court (1) that the local usage at Bushire was to present the hundi for payment at the bank and for the acceptor to call at the bank at due date and effect settlement; (2) that the hundi in question was presented for payment to the authorized agent of the acceptor at the bank on the due date; (3) that the said agent refused payment and informed the bank that the acceptor would not pay the hundi. It was argued that presentation at the bank was not good presentation having regard to ss. 70, 71 and 137 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881).

Held, that the local usage made the presentation a good presentation.

Husband and Wife.

(1) Divorce—Suit for nullity of marriage—Suit by wife against husband—Costs of wife—Alimony—Maintenance—Suit between Mahomedans—Mahomedan law.—The English law which makes the husband in divorce proceedings liable prima facie to the wife's costs, except when she is possessed of sufficient separate property, does not apply to divorce proceedings between Mahomedans.

A wife sued her husband for dissolution of marriage (both parties being Mahomedans) on the ground of his impotence and malformation. An interlocutory order was made by the Court adjoining the further hearing of the suit for one year, in order that the parties might resume cohabitation for that period. The husband desired to carry out the order of the Court and was anxious that his wife should live with him; she, however, refused to do so and only paid occasional visits to his house. The suit was subsequently dismissed with costs. The wife appealed and subsequently applied for alimony until the disposal of the appeal.

Held, that having regard to the conduct of the wife she was not entitled to alimony. By Mahomedan law a husband's duty to maintain his wife is conditional upon her obedience, and he is not bound to maintain her if she disobeys him by refusing to live with him or otherwise. A v. B. 21 B. 77

(2) Restitution of conjugal rights—Defence—Plea of impossibility of sexual intercourse—Legal defences to suit for restitution—Judge has no discretion to refuse decree except when legal plea is proved.—A plea by a wife that sexual intercourse with her is impossible owing to her incurable disease or physical malformation is not in itself a good defence to a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights.

A Judge has no discretion to refuse a decree for restitution of conjugal rights for other causes than those which in law justify a wife in refusing to return to live with her husband, and he cannot abstain from passing a decree in favour of a plaintiff-spouse, because he considers that it would not be for the benefit of either side that the decree should be granted.

Where, therefore, the lower appellate Court found that there was no cruelty, but that the suit was brought by the husband as a counter-move to defeat the claim of his wife for separate maintenance and a considerable time after she had ceased to live in his house and because on the last occasion when she returned to live with him she left the house crying.

Held, that these circumstances were not sufficient in law to justify the Court in refusing the husband's claim for restitution of conjugal rights. Purshotamdas v. Bai Mani, 21 B. 610

Insolvency.

(1) Adjudication of insolvency.—Concurrent proceedings in two Insolvent Courts in India.—Jurisdiction—Discretion of Court to which second application for adjudication order is made—Act of Insolvency.—Departure from jurisdiction with intent to delay creditors—Indian Insolvency Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21; ss. 9, 49)—On the 23rd April, 1896, A. was adjudged insolvent under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvency Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21) by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Bombay at the instance of certain creditors resident in Bombay. He subsequently took out a rule to annul the order of adjudication on the ground that at the date of the said order he had already left, on the 9th April, 1896, been adjudged an insolvent by the Insolvency Court at Madras.

Held, discharging the rule, that the prior adjudication of the Madras Court did not deprive the Court at Bombay of jurisdiction to adjudicate him an insolvent at the instance of a Bombay creditor. The latter Court, however, was not bound under s. 9 to make such order, but had a discretion to refuse it if, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, it considered that adjudication in Bombay would be useless.

Subsequently to the order of adjudication in Bombay, and while it was still in force, the insolvent obtained his personal discharge in the Insolvency Court at Madras under s. 49 of the Indian Insolvency Act.

Held, that there being no longer any ground for apprehending that the proceedings in the Madras Court would be discontinued, the proceedings in the Court at Bombay should be stayed, leaving the Bombay creditors to take such steps in Madras as they might think proper. It would not be just or equitable to allow the proceedings in both Courts to go on concurrently. As the proceedings in Madras were prior in time and all the assets of the insolvent were vested in the Official Assignee there, the Court at Bombay ought to yield to the prior claim of the Court at Madras.

A debtor in Bombay summoned his creditors to a meeting fixed for the 28th March, 1896. He attended that meeting which was adjourned to the 30th March, and at the adjourned meeting he submitted a statement showing that he had a sum of Rs. 11,000 in cash in his hands. Two of his creditors asked him to give inspection of his Bombay books of accounts, but he refused to do so. A further meeting was summoned for the 8th April. On the 8th March or last April two of his Bombay creditors served him with a summons in an action of debt. On the 8th April he left Bombay for Bellary taking the said sum of Rs. 11,000 with him, in order (as he admitted) to prevent the said two creditors from attaching it. The creditors attended the meeting of the 8th April, but it was dissolved when it was discovered that A. had left Bombay. The books were not produced.

_Held,_ that under these circumstances the Court was justified in concluding that A. had left the jurisdiction of the Court with intent to defeat and delay his creditors within the meaning of s. 9 of the Indian Insolvency Act. Re _Aravanayal Sahapathy_, 21 B. 297

(2) _Indian Insolvency Act_ (Stat. 11. and 12 Vict., c. 21), s. 436—Order for examination of witnesses where witnesses are defendants in a suit brought by insolvent prior to his insolvency—Practice—Procedure.—One Bhagwandas Narotandas filed a suit against the three appellants Chunial, Dharamdas, Dharamdas Dullabram and Chotatal Ishwardas praying for a declaration that he was their partner in a certain business, &c. Chunial Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram filed their written statements, and affidavits of documents were made and inspection given and taken on either side; but Chotatal Ishwardas did not file either his written statement or his affidavit of documents. On the 28th July, 1897, the plaintiff Bhagwandas was adjudicated an insolvent, and on the 4th September, Chotatal Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram obtained an order under s. 370 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), directing the Official Assignee to elect, on or before the 18th September, 1897, whether he would proceed with the suit, and if so, to give security for costs.

On the 4th October, 1897, one Haralil Ramdas, a creditor of the insolvent, obtained an order from the Insolvent Court under s. 36 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11. and 12 Vict., c. 21) for the examination of Chunial Dharamdas, Dharamdas Dullabram, and Chotatal Ishwardas with reference to the estate and effects of the said insolvent, and the 10th November, 1897, was appointed for their examination. On the said 10th November they obtained an order from the Insolvent Court to set aside the said order for their examination, or in the alternative to postpone their examination until after the above suit in which they were defendants should be heard. The rule was subsequently discharged and the examination was ordered to proceed. On appeal, _Held,_ that Chunial Dharamdas and Dharamdas Dullabram ought not to be prejudiced in their defence in the suit brought against them by the insolvent by being subjected to an examination until that case was heard. By filing their written statements, and giving inspection of documents, they had given all the information they could be required to give until the hearing should take place.

As to Chotatal Ishwardas, however, the order for examination was confirmed, be not having filed any defence in the civil suit, nor given inspection. In re _Bhagwandas Narotandas_, 22 B. 447

(3) Insolvency of one partner—Vesting order—Subsequent decree against insolvent and attachment of the firm property in execution—Claim by Official Assignee to set aside attachment—Civ. Pro. The schedule contained the names of thirteen creditors. The insolvent afterwards settled with four of them. The remaining nine, whose aggregate claims amounted to Rs. 1,150-7-0, sold their claims. Certain assets belonging to the insolvent's estate having subsequently come into the hands of the Official Assignee, the purchasers claimed to be paid the full amount of the scheduled debts which they had bought. It appeared that the debts in question were debts incurred on certain promissory notes passed by the insolvent. The insolvent contended that under s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) the purchasers were only entitled to the amount which they had actually paid for the debts they had bought.

Held, that they were entitled to be paid the full amount of the scheduled debts. If the debts at the time of purchase were to be regarded as debts in respect of promissory notes, s. 139 of the Transfer of Property Act applied, and if the claim was under the judgment entered up against the insolvent, then clause (d) of s. 153 applied. (5) Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 344 to 359—Second Class Subordinate Judge’s Court invested by the Local Government with insolvency jurisdiction—A debt of a scheduled creditor exceeding Rs. 5,000.—Where a person arrested in execution of a decree for money by the Court of a Second Class Subordinate Judge invested under s. 360 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) with the powers conferred on District Courts by ss. 344 to 359, makes an application to the Subordinate Judge’s Court under s. 344, that Court has power to entertain it and to make the declarations referred to in ss. 344 to 359, and the fact that a debt due to a scheduled creditor exceeds Rs. 5,000 does not deprive it of jurisdiction. Shankar v. Vithal, 21 B. 45.

(6) Jurisdiction—Insolvent Court of Bombay, jurisdiction of—Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21). s. 5—High Court Charter, clts. 18 and 44—Act V of 1872—Trader at Karachi presenting petition in Bombay—Relation of Insolvent Court to High Court—Acts limiting jurisdiction of High Court limit jurisdiction of Insolvent Court—J. C., a European British subject residing at Karachi in Sind, failed in business in 1895, and on 11th June of that year he filed his petition in the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors in Bombay.

Held, that, having regard to Act V of 1872 read with cl. 18 of the Letters Patent, 1865, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition.

By s. 5 of Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21, the Insolvent Court was given jurisdiction over residents within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Bombay. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court extended over all inhabitants of the town and island of Bombay and over European British subjects in any of the factories subject to or dependent on the Government of Bombay.

The jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court as defined by the above section remained unaffected by the establishment of the High Court in the place of the Supreme Court, except so far as it may be limited by cl. 18 of the Letters Patent, 1865.

A European British subject residing with the Presidency of Bombay, though outside the town and island of Bombay, may petition the Insolvent Court of Bombay for relief.

The powers and authorities originally of the Supreme Court and now of the High Court given by the Insolvent Act form a branch of the jurisdiction of the High Court and are, therefore, subject to any legislative restriction of that jurisdiction whether imposed by the Letters Patent or by any subsequent enactment.

The power of the High Court and any Judge of it, to exercise the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court, whatever the jurisdiction may be, is locally limited by cl. 18 of the Letters Patent, 1865, to the Presidency of Bombay and cannot be exercised outside that Presidency or outside any area within it to which it may by subsequent enactment be restricted.

The effect of cl. 44 of the Letters Patent, 1865, which makes the provisions of cl. 18 subject to the legislative powers of the Governor General in Council, must be that any Act of the Governor General in Council, still further limiting the jurisdiction of the High Court and excluding it from any place even within the Presidency, must also still further narrow the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court, for otherwise the Judge of the High Court presiding as Commissioner would be exercising jurisdiction in a place where his jurisdiction under cl. 18, by virtue of which alone he could act as Commissioner, had been abolished. Act V of 1872 is such an Act. In the matter of James Currie, 21 B. 405.

(7) Official Assignee—Vesting order—Lease—Leasehold property—Right of Official Assignee to accept or disclaim—Effect of taking possession—Liability for rent.—In a Presidency town the Official Assignee has the right to elect whether he will accept or repudiate onerous (e.g., leasehold) property...

... A held certain premises in Bombay from the plaintiff as a monthly tenant at a rent of Rs. 125, with liberty to either party to terminate the tenancy on giving one month's notice. On the 9th April, 1896, A was adjudicated insolvent by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Madras, and on that day the usual vesting order was made vesting all his estate and effects in the defendant as Official Assignee. On the 20th August, 1896, the Sheriff, who had taken possession of the premises in execution of a decree passed against A, handed over possession of them to the agent of the defendant, who remained in possession until the 30th September, 1896 when he gave them up to the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought this suit against the defendant for the rent (Rs. 750) due from 1st April, 1896, to the 30th September, 1896.

... Held, that the defendant was liable. By entering into possession on the 30th August, 1896, the defendant had elected to accept the lease and had thereby become assignee of it. The acceptance dated back to the vesting order, and the Official Assignee (the defendant) became liable for the rent during the period that he continued to be assignee, his liability ending when with the landlord's consent he surrendered the term. The law as laid in (20 B. 721) is not limited only to cases in which at date of suit an account between the mortgagor and mortgagess is actually kept. In a suit brought by a mortgagee against his mortgagor (both parties being Hindus) the decree ordered the defendant to pay interest from the date of suit to decree upon the total found due after applying the rule of damdupat at the date of suit. It was objected that this order of further interest violated the rule of damdupat.

The defendant was the supervisor, Public Works Department, in charge of the work. From time to time defendant borrowed money from the plaintiff, and (inter alia) four sums amounting to Rs. 385 which he paid as wages to labourers working under him. It was not proved, however, that he had borrowed the moneys as supervisor, and the defendant did not plead that he borrowed them in his official capacity.

Held, that as much as a Public Works supervisor has not usually authority to borrow money for the purpose of the work of which he may be in charge, or any way to pledge the credit of Government, the mere statement of the defendant when he borrowed the moneys that he wanted them to pay the labourers was not under the circumstances enough to show that the defendant borrowed them in his official capacity, and that the Subordinate Judge had authority to entertain the suit in respect of them.

In claims arising out of contract the same test must be applied to determine the question of jurisdiction as in those having their origin in tort, viz., was the loan contracted by the defendant in his official capacity.

(c), s. 33 of the Khoti Settlement Act (Bombay Act I of 1880) without recording that the rent had been so fixed by agreement. Held, that the entries of the rent payable by the occupancy tenants were duly made under s. 17 of the Khoti Settlement Act (Bombay Act I of 1860) according to the provision of s. 33 so as to make them conclusive.

In April, 1889, the Collector, on the application of the plaintiff, revised the former record, which, as revised, showed that the defendant was liable to pay one-third of the produce of his land as rent to the khot.

A question having arisen as to the legality of the revised entry by the Collector, Held, that the revised entry in the record was duly made by the Collector under s. 17 of the Khoti Settlement Act (Bombay Act I of 1880) and was conclusive and final evidence of the liability established by it. It is not open to a civil Court to inquire into the legality or otherwise of the reasons, which may have led to the determination of the amount of rent payable.

The Khoti Settlement Act (Bombay Act I of 1880) does not make the decision of rent final. In s. 17 it only makes the entry, which is the result of the decision, final and conclusive evidence. Under s. 33, an appeal lies from a decision, and the decision can be revised under s. 211 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) by the authorities therein mentioned. Gopal v. decision is, under s. 21 of the Act binding upon the parties affected thereby until reversed or modified by a final decree of a competent Court. The burden of proof in such case lies upon the party seeking to vary the decision.

Statements of facts made by a Settlement Officer in the column of remarks in the sharepatrak, but not his remarks for the same even though they may consist of statements of collateral facts, which it was no part of his duty to inquire into, are admissible in evidence as being entries in a public record stating facts, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, within the meaning of s. 35 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872).

Act I of 1880) having determined and entered in the survey register that the defendants held the lands in suit as occupancy tenants, the plaintiffs, who were the khoti of the village, objected to the decision and brought a suit for its reversal and to obtain a declaration that the lands were held by them on the dhara tenure, and that the defendants were ordinary tenants thereof. The Judge dismissed the suit in appeal, holding that the survey entry was conclusive proof of the tenant's liability and that it gave no cause of action to the plaintiffs.

Held, reversing the decree, that the decision of the Survey Officer as to tenure is not final, and that a suit like the present will lie.

Land Acquisition (Act X of 1870).

Act I of 1894—Award of compensation—Payment of compensation awarded how enforced—Appeal from an order irregularly made—Practice—Procedure.—The Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) did not provide for or contemplate an award for compensation being enforced against the Collector by execution proceedings, and there is no general law which enables a Civil Court to enforce such a statutory liability, when imposed upon a Collector or other civil officer, by means of execution proceedings without a suit. The ordinary mode of enforcing such an obligation is by suit, unless the Legislature when it creates the obligation prescribes such other means of enforcing it.

On the 16th February, 1894, under the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), an award of compensation to the claimant for land acquired under that Act was made by the Assistant Judge of Thana, and he subsequently made an order directing the Collector to pay the amount with interest and costs, without, however, fixing a date for payment. On the 1st March, 1894, the new Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) came into force. On the 26th February, 1895, the claimant applied to enforce payment of the amount awarded, and the then Assistant Judge (Mr. Knight) re-affirmed the previous order and directed the Collector to pay it on or before the 20th May, 1896. No payment, however, was made, and the matter came before the new Judge (Mr. Fitz Maurice) for final order. He held that neither under Act X of 1870, nor the new Act I of 1894 had he any power to enforce payment against the Collector and he, therefore, dismissed the claimant's application. On appeal to the High Court the matter was referred to a Full Bench.

Held, that the Act X of 1870 prescribed no mode of compelling payment by the Collector of compensation awarded under its provisions, but left the persons interested to a suit to enforce such payment. The proceedings under that Act were, therefore, at an end when the award was made.

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870)—(Concluded).

That being so, there were no proceedings pending in the case when the new Act 1 of 1894 came into force. Clause 2 of s. 2 of that Act, therefore, did not apply, and no further steps could be taken under that Act.

Per RAMADEV, J.—The District Judge's order appealed from was improperly made. The Assistant Judges had jurisdiction to make the previous order, and even if their order was not properly made, it could not be set aside in the way it was done by the District Judge as if an appeal lay to him from such order. That order, however, as now held was wrong, and the irregularity of the District Judge's order thus led to no failure of justice, and fell under s. 579 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882).

(4) Inamdar—Notice of relinquishment of land by tenant—Valid notice—Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 74—Tenant must give vacant possession—Remedy of landlord when vacant possession not given—Damages.

On the 20th March, 1893, the defendants, who held seven fields as tenants of the plaintiff, the inamdar of the village of Kaneri, gave him notice of relinquishment of six of them. The notice stated that these six fields were no longer in their possession, and that they would not be responsible for the assessment. The plaintiff notwithstanding brought this suit to recover the assessment for the year 1893-94. The Subordinate Judge held that the defendants continued to be tenants of the fields in question and were liable to the assessment on the ground that the notice of relinquishment did not purport to give vacant possession to the plaintiff. He thereupon passed a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decree, holding that the notice was a conditional relinquishment which terminated the tenancy. On appeal to the High Court, Held (confirming the decree of the lower appellate Court) that the defendants were not liable to the assessment.

Section 74 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879) only declares the customary common law on the subject of relinquishment of tenancy.

A notice of relinquishment is not invalid because it does not purport to give and does not in fact give vacant possession to the inamdar. The result is the same whether the fact that the possession is not vacant appears on the face of the notice or is shown otherwise.

A tenant giving up demised land to his landlord is bound to give him vacant possession. The result, however, of his not doing so is not to continue the tenancy, but to create a claim for damages on the part of the landlord. The tenant is liable in damages to the extent of the loss of rent which the landlord sustains during the actual period for which he is kept out of possession and the expenses he is put to in recovering possession of the land. stating that he held the land on payment of Government assessment only, refused to quit. The inamdar more than twelve years after the date mentioned in the notice sued the tenant to recover enhanced rent.

Held, that the plaintiff's (inamdar's) right to enhance the rent and to recover the land in default of payment of such rent was barred by limitation, the tenant so far as the right was concerned having been holding adversely to him for more than twelve years.

Held, also, that s. 23 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) had no application to the case. Gopal Row v. Mahadevrao, 21 B. 394

(7) Lease—Sub-lease—Ejectment of tenant—Position of sub-tenant—No privity of contract between landlord and sub-tenant—Notice to quit—Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 54.—A sub-lease differs from an assignment of lease in that it creates no privity of contract between the sub-tenant and the landlord. The landlord has to deal with his lessee and not with the sub-tenants of the latter.

(10) Possessory suit by landlord—Lease—Tenant can show that lease determined by sale.—In a possessory suit before a Manmadadar, though it is not competent to a tenant to deny his landlord's title at the date of his lease, it is open to him to show that it has since determined, e.g., by a sale to him by the landlord, in which case the tenant no longer holds under a title derived from the landlord. Vedu v. Nikanth, 22 B. 438

(11) Yearly tenancy—Notice to quit—Notice to make a fresh agreement with the landlord or to quit at the end of the year—Sufficient notice.—On the 28th September, 1931, the plaintiff gave defendants, who held his land as annual tenants, a notice in the following terms:—

"Therefore, within two days from the receipt of this notice, meet us, increase the rent and give us a legal writing, or in default, on the 31st March, 1932, we shall keep present two good men and take full possession of the said land with all trees, &c., on that day, and no contention of yours in that matter will avail; and if you raise a contention we shall have recourse to a regular suit to obtain possession, and you will be responsible, &c."

Held, that the notice was a good and valid notice to terminate the tenancy.

(6) Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 22—Civil Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1852), s. 97—Court sale—Renami purchase—Suit by benami purchaser—Addition of real purchaser as co-plaintiff—Continuation of suit.—The plaintiff Ravji as owner of certain land brought this suit on the 31st January, 1894, for damages for loss of crops and in respect of loss caused by the defendant's obstructing him in cultivating the land. The dates of the causes of action set forth in the plaint were, respectively, the 12th September, 1891, the 12th March, 1892, February, 1892 and 27th October, 1892. In the course of the proceedings, the defendant ascertained that Ravji was not the real owner of the land, but had purchased it and was holding it benami for his uncle. Ravji admitted that he had no interest in the land. On the 30th March, 1893, Ravji's uncle applied to be made a party to the suit, and was thereupon added as second plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge on the merits passed a decree awarding damages to the second plaintiff. The defendant appealed, and in appeal for the first time objected that Ravji (plaintiff No. 1) being only a benamidar could not bring the suit in his own name, and that the claim of the second plaintiff, or a large portion of it, was barred by limitation under s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The District Judge reversed the decree on the point of limitation and dismissed the suit. On second appeal to the High Court, Held, that the lower appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the suit, and that the appeal should be heard on the merits.

Per PARSONS, J.—That any defect there might have been in the suit as originally filed by the first plaintiff, who was only a benamidar, had been cured by the Court acting under s. 37 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1852).

Per RANADE, J.—The first plaintiff as benami purchaser had full right to bring the suit. If the true owner holds back, a decree against a benamidar owner would bind him as res judicata. The present suit was, therefore, properly instituted. The addition of the second plaintiff's name made no difference in the character of the suit. The defendant was stopped by his conduct in the previous proceedings, carried on between him and the first plaintiff for over seven years, from questioning his right to sue. The rights of the parties must, therefore, be dealt with on the footing that the first plaintiff had a right to bring this suit, and that he fully represented in his own person all the rights of the second plaintiff, for whom he acted as agent all along. The joinder of plaintiff No. 2 on 30th March, 1895, did not, therefore, deprive plaintiff No. 1 of his rights or create a new period of limitation as held by the lower Court of appeal. RAVI v. MAHADAY, 22 B. 672

(7) Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 22—Suit by heirs of deceased Mahomedan—Suit originally filed in time by one heir—Another heir subsequently made co-plaintiff beyond time of limitation—Letters of administration obtained only by second plaintiff—Parties—Practice—Procedure.—The plaintiff as widow and heir of a Khajo Mahomedan sued on a promissory note dated 21st October, 1893, passed by the defendant to her deceased husband. The suit was filed on the 9th October, 1895. Disputes subsequently arose between her and her father-in-law as to the succession to her husband's property and she applied to the High Court for letters of administration. On the 9th September, 1896, the plaintiff's father-in-law, on his application, was made a co-plaintiff in the suit. Subsequently the plaintiffs came to terms, and the widow withdrew her application for letters of administration, and her father-in-law applied for and obtained letters of administration instead. On the 14th November, 1896, the suit came on for hearing.
Limitation—(Continued).

The first plaintiff did not produce any letters of administration or certificate under the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1899. The second plaintiff produced the letters of administration obtained by him.

Held, that the suit was barred by s. 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). When the second plaintiff was added as a party, the suit was barred against him. If the letters of administration had been obtained by the plaintiff Fatmabai, her suit would not have been barred, and the Court could have passed a decree in her favour.

Section 22 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) in terms applies as well to plaintiffs suing in their representative capacity as in their personal capacity.

Held, also, that the second plaintiff was properly joined as party plaintiff. When one or more heirs sue, there is no objection to joining all to make the representation complete. Fatmabai v. Pirbhai, 21 B. 580 = Chitty's S.C.O.R. 527

(12) Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 179—Decree—Appeal against part of decree only—Appeal dismissed—Execution—Application for execution of original decree—Time runs from date of appellate decree.—On the 26th June, 1891, in a suit against seven persons who were members of a Mahomedan family, the plaintiff obtained a decree on a mortgage. The decree directed the sale of $\frac{2}{3}$ of the mortgaged property, but it exonerated from liability the share of a female member (defendant No. 2) of the family, which was $\frac{1}{3}$ of the whole estate. The plaintiff appealed as to the $\frac{2}{3}$ share only. He made all the defendants respondents to the appeal, but the name of the first defendant was afterwards struck out, as he could not be served with notice. His interests, however, were identical with those of defendants Nos. 3 to 7. On the 30th July, 1892, the plaintiff's appeal was dismissed. On the 3rd July, 1895, the plaintiff applied for execution of the original decree. The defendants contended that as the appeal related only to that part of the decree which related to the $\frac{2}{3}$ share of the second defendant, the rest of the decree was unaffected by the appeal, and that consequently the plaintiff's application for execution of that decree was barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), not having been made within three years from the 26th June, 1891.

Held, that the application was not barred. The date of the appellate decree, and not that of the original decree, was the date from which limitation began to run.

Per PARSONS, J.—The word "appeal" in art. 179 does not mean only an appeal against the whole decree and by which the whole decree is imperilled; it means any appeal by any party.

Per RANADE, J.—Except in the case where a nominally single decree awards separate reliefs against separate defendants, the words of art. 179 must be construed in their natural sense as permitting an extension of limitation where an appeal is preferred and is not withdrawn. (12) Art. 85—Mutual account—Test of mutuality—Shifting balance not a decisive test.—The dealings between the plaintiff and defendant consisted of loans from one to the other. Interest was charged on such loans. The parties were, besides, partners in certain transactions, and the shares of profit and loss falling to each partner’s share were debited and credited in their accounts. The dealings lasted from 1884 to 1890. In 1892, the plaintiff sued to recover the balance due to him in respect of all these dealings. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was barred by limitation.

Held, that the account was a mutual, open and current account within the meaning of art. 85 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that the suit was not barred by limitation. The fact that in such an account the balance is a shifting balance, sometimes in favour of one party and sometimes in favour of the other, though valuable as an index of the nature of the dealings, is not always decisive as to the nature of the account.

Held, that the interest was a charge on the property and that the claim for interest fell under art. 132 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). MANAGER VITHOBA v. VIGNESHWAR, 22 B. 107

(19) Art. 132—Unpaid purchase-money—Suit to recover the money from the vendee personally and from the property sold—Personal remedy—Limitation.—Unpaid purchase money is a charge on the property in the possession of the vendee, and a suit to enforce it against the property so charged falls under art. 132 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). But the article does not extend the time allowed otherwise under the Act to claims to recover the money from the defaulters personally or his other property. The limitation for the personal remedy is three years under art. 111.

Where certain land was sold and possession given to the vendee in 1890, and a suit was brought in 1895 to recover the unpaid purchase-money from the vendee personally as well as from the property sold,

Held that the personal claim was time-barred. CHUNILAL v. BAI JETHI, 22 B. 846 (20) Art. 134—Purchaser for value—Mortgage—Mortgage in 1842—Subsequent mortgage in 1872 by mortgagor representing himself to be owner—Decree on second mortgage—Sale in execution—Purchaser at auction sale—Right of original mortgagee in 1892 to redeem mortgaged property.—In 1842 Andoji, the grandfether of the plaintiff, mortgaged the land in question to one Manekchand with possession. On 9th May, 1872, Manekchand's son Lakhmichand, who was then still in possession, representing himself to be the owner mortgaged the property with possession to Tuljiram, (defendant No. 2) and Sirupchand, the grandson of Lakhmichand Gulabchand (defendant No. 3). These defendants sued upon their mortgage of May, 1872, and obtained a decree and sold the property in 1881 in execution, purchasing it themselves. Defendant No. 3 subsequently sold his share to one Pulchand (defendant No. 4). In 1892, the plaintiff, who was the grandson of Andoji, the original mortgagee in 1842, sued the first defendant (the grandson of the original mortgagee Manekchand under the mortgage of 1872) for redemption, making Tuljiram and Lakhmichand and Pulchand (defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4) party-defendants.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. By the sale in 1881, the interest of defendant No. 1 (grandson of original mortgagee under the mortgage of 1842) became vested in defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff could then have redeemed them on paying off the amount due under the mortgage of 1842, disregarding the mortgage of 9th May, 1872, altogether. But when the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had held possession under that mortgage for twelve years it is, on 9th May, 1884) that mortgage, under art. 134 and s. 28 of the Limitation Act, became a valid mortgage as regards the plaintiffs, and they could not after that date recover possession without redeeming it also. The purchase by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 at the auction sale in 1881 could not avail them, as the present suit was brought within twelve years from that date.

Though a mortgagee is a purchaser for value he is not an out-and-out purchaser, but only a purchaser sub modo. He purchases a mortgagee's interest in the land, viz., a right to hold the mortgaged property until the debt is paid.

A mortgagee is pro tanto purchaser for value within the meaning of art. 134 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). MALUJI v. FAIRCROCH, 22 B. 295 732

(21) Art. 139—Landlord and tenant—Least—Tenant overholding on expiration of lease—Nature of holding—Tenant by sufferance—Adverse possession—Limitation.—Semble—Under art. 130, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) time begins to run against a landlord when the period of a fixed lease expires, when there is no evidence from which a fresh tenancy can be inferred, and not at some indeterminate date after that period.

Where a tenant holds over after the expiration of his lease without further agreement, such holding over, though by English law styled a tenancy by sufferance, is wrongful. Slight evidence, however, will suffice to change his position into that of a tenant-at-will. KANITEPPA v. SHERAPP, 22 B. 363. ... 1178

(27) Art. 179—Application for execution of decree—Limitation.—An application for execution of decree was made in 1885, and the second in 1891. The latter was at first allowed, but subsequently struck off for some default of the applicant. The third application was made in 1893.

Held, that the second application having been made at a time when it was barred by reason of the three years' period having been exceeded, the third was barred though presented within three years of the second.

The phrase “in accordance with law” in art. 179 of the Limitation Act is adjectival not only to the words “to the proper Court for execution,” but also to the words “to take some step in execution.” BHAGWAN v. DHONDJI, 22 B. 83 ... 637

(23) Art. 179—Decree partly in favour of plaintiff and partly in favour of defendant—Application for execution by one party does not present limitation running against the other—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 588.—A obtained a decree against B for possession and for Rs. 27 mean profits. In execution he got possession. On appeal, however, the decree was reversed so far as it ordered possession to be given to him, and the amount of mean profits awarded to him was reduced to Rs. 13-8-0. The appellate decree was passed on the 6th June, 1889.

On the 18th December, 1891, the defendant B applied to be restored to possession. That application was dropped, and on the 24th September, 1895, he made a second application. There had been nothing done in the interval except that in 1892 and again in 1894 the plaintiff had applied for execution in respect of the Rs. 13-8-0 awarded to him. The lower Courts were of opinion that the application in 1895 by the defendant was not barred by limitation by reason of the plaintiff's applications in 1893 and 1894, which they held to be an acknowledgment by the plaintiff of the defendant's right to execute his part of the decree.
GENERAL INDEX.

Limitation Act (XV. of 1877)—(Concluded).

_Held_ (reversing the order of the lower Court) that the defendant’s application was barred by limitation. The plaintiff’s application in 1892 and 1894 did not operate as an acknowledgment so as to prevent limitation.

He is an officer exercising on an extraordinary occasion some such powers under the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), s. 15. AMARCHAND v. SAVALYA, 21 B. 738

(5) Jurisdiction—Remedy as between joint owners.—In execution of the decree obtained in 1886 in a Civil Court the plaintiff and the defendants were put into joint possession of certain land. The plaintiff subsequently brought this suit in the Mamlatdar's Court to recover possession of the said land, alleging that the defendants by taking cocoonuts from trees standing thereon had dispossessed him of the said land otherwise than by due course of law. The Mamlatdar held that the plaintiff had been thereby dispossessed, and passed a decree ordering the defendants to deliver up possession of the land to the plaintiff, together with the trees growing thereon.

Held, that the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to pass the decree. The Civil Court had passed a decree giving the parties joint possession of the land, and the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to override that decision and to place the plaintiff in exclusive possession. By the decree of the Civil Court they were determined to be joint owners, and the remedy in case of unequal possession or taking of produce was a suit for an account or for partition. BHOK v. Shortly afterwards the Mamlatdar's decree was reversed by the High Court on the plaintiffs' application. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued the first defendant and his tenants (defendants Nos. 2 and 3), who were in actual possession, to recover the land. The Mamlatdar rejected the plaint, holding that there was a misjoining of causes of action, one suit being brought against different persons for different causes of action arising at different times.

Held, that the Mamlatdar should accept the plaint and hear the suit on its merits. The defendant, who had obtained possession under a decree which had been reversed, could not improve his position by letting third parties...

Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 287 and 287.—The effect of ss. 287 and 287 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) plainly is to impose a duty on the person applying for execution to disclose to the Court his own lien (which he must know of) in his application for sale, and on the Court the duty of specifying the same in the proclamation.

Where, therefore, in execution of a simple money-decree obtained for some of the instalments due on his mortgage-bond a mortgagor brought to sale the property which he held in mortgage, but in his application for execution did not mention his lien on the property for the instalments that were still to fall due,

Held, that the purchaser, if he supposed that he was purchasing the full proprietary title, purchased the property free of the mortgagor's lien. RAMCHANDRA v. JAIM, 22 B. 696... 1040

(4) Mortgage or sale—Test of mortgage—Practice—Procedure—Finding on unnecessary issue between co-defendants—Res judicata.—In an instrument dated the 30th June, 1886, styled a sale-deed, it was recited that in consideration of Rs. 2,600 certain specified properties (already mortgaged to the so-called vendees and in their possession) were "given in sale" to them and were to be enjoyed by them for ten years in any manner they liked. At the expiration of that time the vendors were to pay the Rs. 2,600 and take back the property. In 1893 the plaintiff (a son of the so-called vendee) brought this suit treating the above instrument as a mortgage and praying for redemption. The main question in the suit was whether the instrument sued on was a mortgage or a deed of sale with the option of re-purchase after ten years.
Mortgage—I.—General—(Concluded)

Held, that the instrument was a mortgage. The test was whether after the execution of the deed there continued to be a debt from the so-called vendors to the vendee, or whether the pre-existing debt became extinguished on the execution of the deed.

A finding between co-defendants unnecessary for the determination of the suit, or the rights of the parties involved in the suit, is not res judicata. BAPU v. BHAVANI, 22 B. 245 ... 746

(5) Sale—Conditions for re-purchase.—The plaintiffs sued to redeem an alleged mortgage made in 1923 by their ancestor to the ancestor of the defendant. The alleged mortgage recited a previous mortgage under which the mortgagee Gopal Gokhale was in possession, and it stated that a sale had been contemplated, but the parties could not agree as to price, but that they had now settled it at Rs. 125 and the amount due on the mortgage at Rs. 200, and that the following arrangement was come to, viz., that if within four years the mortgagee paid Rs. 125 with interest, he should get back the land; if not, that the land should be the absolute property of Gokhale.

Held, that this was not a mortgage but a sale. It was an agreement which put an end to the previously existing mortgage. A mere stipulation for re-purchase does not make a transaction a mortgage. To make a mortgage there must be a debt, and here there was no debt, nor was the property here conveyed as security. VASUDEV v. BHAG, 21 B. 528 ... 354

(2) Of mortgage debt—Question of apportionment first raised in second appeal—Practice.—A plaintiff, who had purchased part of certain mortgaged property and sued for possession, obtained a decree ordering that he should get possession on payment of the whole mortgage-debt. He did not in the lower Courts ask that the mortgage-debt should be apportioned, but did so in second appeal to the High Court. Under the circumstances the High Court refused to interfere with the decree. The plaintiff had a remedy by suit for contribution. YADAO BABAIA v. AMBO, 21 B. 567...

3.—Equitable.

Payment of mortgage-debt by a third person at request of mortgagor—Deposit of mortgage-deed and documents of title with such third person at request of mortgagor—Effect of transaction—Equitable mortgage by deposit—Costs—Appeal as to costs.—The first defendant held a mortgage as a security for a loan of Rs. 350. On the 23rd June, 1893, the mortgagors themselves paid him the interest due on the mortgage and on the same day at the request of the mortgagors the plaintiff paid him the principal sum of Rs. 350, which payment was endorsed upon the mortgage-deed. The deed so endorsed together with another document of title was thereupon handed over to the plaintiff by direction of the mortgagors. The plaintiff subsequently brought this suit, alleging that the defendant had agreed to assign over the mortgage to him and praying that he might be ordered to execute a transfer. The lower Court found that there was no agreement to assign the mortgage, but, that the plaintiff was, under the circumstances, entitled to have an assignment executed to him by the defendant. It, however, ordered the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs of suit, being of opinion that the defendant had been justified in refusing to execute a transfer.
Mortgage—3.—Equitable—(Concluded).

On appeal by the plaintiff,

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an assignment of the mortgage from the defendant. If he had been so entitled he ought not to have been ordered to pay the defendant’s costs. But

Held, also, dismissing the appeal, that the plaintiff had no right of suit against the defendant. The defendant’s mortgage was at an end. It was paid off, and nothing remained for the defendant to do but to re-transfer the property to the mortgagor or to such person as they should direct; but as there was no contract or privity between the defendant and the plaintiff, the latter could enforce no right against the defendant. His remedy was against the mortgagors. When the defendant at the request of the mortgagors handed over the endorsed mortgage-deed and the other document of title to the plaintiff, a new mortgage, viz., an equitable mortgage by deposit of title-deeds, was effected by the mortgagors in favour of the plaintiff. What rights that deposit gave against the mortgagors, depended on the agreement between them.

The law as to the right of appeal on a question of costs is correctly laid down in the judgment in 15 B. 676. KHUSHAL v. FUNAMCHAND, 23 B. 164 ... 691

(1) Execution—Attachment of equity of redemption—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 266 and 274—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 60.—The equity of redemption of the mortgagee is immovable property, and is, as such, liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree under s. 266 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). Its attachment can be effected under s. 274 of the Code by an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from dealing with it in any way and all persons from receiving it, such order being proclaimed and notified as therein directed. ———6.—Marshalling.

Subsequent mortgage to another person of part of the mortgaged property—Notice to pursue incumbrancer—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)—Marshalling of securities—Attachment.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 mortgaged three properties, viz., A, B and C, to the plaintiff and afterwards mortgaged one of them (A) only to one Pranjivan. Subsequently the plaintiff obtained a money-decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in respect of another debt, and in execution attached and sold their equity of redemption in C and purchased it himself, thus becoming full owner of C, which he then sold to another person for Rs. 100.

Pranjivan sued on his mortgage and obtained a decree, and in execution property A was sold to defendant No. 3. Subsequently the plaintiff sued to recover his debt by the sale of properties A and B only. Defendant No. 3 claimed that the securities should be marshalled and that the debt should be apportioned, and that property C should bear its proportion of the debt.

Held, that the third defendant was entitled to have the debt apportioned, and that property C should bear its proportion of the debt. When the plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption in C he purchased it subject to its due proportion of the mortgage-debt due to himself. On his purchase he could not claim to have the debt reduced by that amount. The proportion of the debt thus wiped out depended on the proportion of the value of property C to the rest of the mortgaged property.

Held, also, that the third defendant had a right to have the securities marshalled. That right extends to a purchaser and is not confined to a puisne incumbrancer.

Held, also, that the fact that the third defendant had notice of the plaintiff’s mortgage did not affect his right to have the securities marshalled. The question of notice was immaterial prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). LAKHMIDAS v. JAMNADAS, 22 B. 304 (F.B.) 786
Mortgage—7.—Redemption.

(1) Decree for redemption within six months—Expiration of six months without payment—Application after expiration of six months to extend the time for redemption—Practice—Procedure—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), proviso to s. 93—In redemption suits the original decree passed under s. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) is only in the nature of a decree nisi, and the order passed under s. 93 is in the nature of a decree absolute.

Under the proviso to s. 93 of that Act an application to extend the time for redemption fixed by the original decree may be made at any time before the decree absolute is made. NANDRAM v. BABAJI, 22 B. 771 ... 1098

(2) Mortgage by joint owner—Mortgages becoming purchaser of part of mortgaged property—Redemption—Redemption of part of mortgaged property—Apportionment of mortgage debt—Right of mortgagee to keep security entire—Right of purchaser of mortgagee's interest to sue for partition—Joint possession—Practice.—When a mortgagee acquires by purchase the interest of some of the mortgagors, he acquires only a right to sue for partition after the redemption of the entire security has been effected. He must first surrender or restore the mortgage security and then urge what title he may have acquired by the purchase.

The general rule is that a mortgagee has a right to insist that his security shall not be split up, but in the following cases there is no objection to do so and to rateably distribute the mortgage debt:

(a) When the mortgagee does not insist on keeping the security entire.

(b) When the original contract itself recites that the mortgagees join together in mortgaging their separate shares.

(c) When the mortgagee bars himself split up the security, e.g., when he buys a portion of the mortgaged estate. In this case he is estopped from seeking to throw the whole burden on that part of the property still mortgaged with him.

In 1872 the plaintiff's father (Khushal) and brother (Bapu) mortgaged seven lots of land with possession to the father of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Four of these lots were subsequently sold to defendants Nos. 4 to 8 with the consent of the mortgagees, who continued in possession of the remaining three lots. In 1878 in execution of a decree, Bapu's interest in these latter three lots was sold and was purchased by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. In 1889 the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 sold these three lots to defendant No. 9. In 1891 the plaintiffs (sons and brothers of the original mortgagees) sued to redeem all the lands comprised in the mortgage of 1872. The first Court held that the plaintiffs, who had been in adverse possession of the first four lots for more than twelve years and that as to them the suit was barred. As to the remaining three lots it passed a decree for redemption of the plaintiff's three-fourths share of the lands and directed that on payment within six months by them of Rs. 600 to defendant No. 9 (who stood in the place of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3) they should be put in possession of the lands jointly with defendant No. 9. In appeal the decree was confirmed as to the first four lots, but as to the remaining three lots the Judge found that the mortgage debt had been paid and that a sum of Rs. 348 5-0 was due from the mortgagees in possession (defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 9) to the plaintiff. He, therefore, ordered payment of three-fourths of this amount by defendant No. 9 to plaintiffs, and directed that they should be put in possession of their three-fourths share of the lands jointly with defendant No. 9. On appeal to the High Court as to the right to redeem the said three lots.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the whole of the said three lots which had been admittedly mortgaged in 1872 and not merely a three-fourths share thereof, and were also entitled to the whole of the surplus sum of Rs. 348 found due by the mortgagees in possession.

Held, also, that defendant No. 9, who had acquired from the mortgagees (defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3) the equity of redemption in part of the mortgaged property, was not entitled to possession of his share jointly with the plaintiffs. The mortgaged property should first be restored to the plaintiffs and then defendant No. 9 might bring a separate suit for partition. NARAYAN v. GANPAT, 21 B. 619 ... 415

(3) Mortgage by manager of undivided family—Redemption—Sale of mortgaged property under money decree obtained by mortgagee in respect of other debts—Purchase without leave of Court by mortgagee at Court sale—Right of member of family to redeem—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 99—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 294.—Shankrjali, his son Shridhar and his grandson the plaintiff Dhondo (son of a predeceased son) were undivided. In 1875 Shankrjali mortgaged the property in dispute to Hamirmal with possession. After Shankrjali’s death in 1877, Shridhar managed the whole estate. In 1878, during Dhondo’s absence from his native village, Hamirmal sued Shridhar as the heir and representative of Shankrjali in respect of other debts and, obtaining a money-decree against him, attached the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. After the attachment, Hamirmal, without notifying or disclosing his mortgage lien, caused several of the properties to be sold and, without obtaining leave from Court to bid at the sale, purchased some of them in the names of his dependants at an under value and benami for himself. In 1892 Dhondo brought this suit against Hamirmal, Shridhar and the benami purchasers to redeem the properties so bought by Hamirmal. The lower Courts found that the money-decree which Hamirmal obtained and the execution proceedings thereon bound the estate.

It was contended that the execution sales had not been objected to under s. 294 of the Civ. Pro. Code and were, therefore, valid, and that the plaintiff, consequently, could not redeem.

Held, that the plaintiff might redeem although he had not taken proceedings under s. 294. The fact that the mortgagee Hamirmal had sold the property in execution of a money-decree did not free him from the liability to be redeemed as mortgagee. The sale was rendered nugatory, not by the provisions of s. 294 (though permission to bid granted under that section might have validated the purchase), but by the impossibility of a mortgagee by such sales and purchases freeing himself from the liability to be redeemed. MARTAND v. DHONDO, 22 B. C. 24

(4) Mortgagee in possession—Payment by mortgagee of assessment payable by mortgagor—Right of mortgagee to tack amount so paid to mortgage debt—Tender—Offer by letter to pay debt.—Where a mortgagee in possession pays the assessment on the mortgaged land which was payable by the mortgagor, he has a right to tack on the amount so paid to his mortgage debt.

A mere offer by a debtor by letter to pay an amount cannot be treated as a tender either in law or in equity. In order to stop interest, a strict tender should be proved. KAMAYA v. DEVAPA, 22 B. 140

(5) Mortgagee—Mortgagor taking other land in exchange for mortgaged land—Land so taken in exchange is subject to the mortgagor’s right to redeem—Forest Act (VII of 1878), s. 10, cl. (d)—Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 56.—In 1876 one Babaji mortgaged certain land (Survey Nos. 51 and 52) to Gautapa, who died, and his brother Gautapa succeeded him. The Forest Department being desirous of acquiring the mortgaged land entered into negotiations with Gautapa, who admitted that he was only a mortgagee. Babaji (the mortgagor) had left the village and could not be found. Under these circumstances it was arranged that Gautapa should allow the assessment to fall into arrear, upon which Government would forfeit the holding and that Gautapa should receive other land (Survey No. 105) in exchange. This arrangement was actually carried out; Gautapa received Survey No. 105 in exchange for the mortgaged land. In the order giving the land in exchange, Gautapa was styled mortgagor. The heir of Babaji (the mortgagor) subsequently brought this suit to redeem Survey No. 105 from the mortgage of 1876. The defendant contended that this land was not subject to the mortgage and that by the exchange Gautapa had acquired the full ownership in it.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem Survey No. 105. The mortgagee Gautapa had lost the mortgagor’s equity of redemption in the mortgaged land by fraud, and the land (Survey No. 105) which he obtained in exchange was, therefore, subject to the mortgage. He held the equity of redemption in this land as trustee for the mortgagee. BABAJI v. MAGNIRAM, 21 B. 896

(6) Mortgagee purchasing equity of redemption from one without title to it—Adverse possession of mortgagee against true owner of equity of redemption—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 148.—In the absence of any act showing that the mortgagee is asserting himself against the owner of the equity of redemption, his possession is not adverse against the latter as regards limitation. The mere assertion of his claim by the mortgagee would not affect the right of the real owner of the equity of redemption where a person having no right in the property pretends to sell to the mortgagee the equity of redemption. (9) Subsequent mortgage of same land—Decree on first mortgage—Sale in execution of same of mortgaged land—Purchase by subsequent mortgagees subject to their own mortgage—Effect of such sale—Redemption—Subsequent suit by mortgagees for redemption of lands other than those sold—Redemption of part of mortgaged property—Apportionment of mortgage-debt.—In 1874 plaintiffs mortgaged to one Samudrala seven fields, of which four were Survey Nos. 22, 23, 40 and 41. In 1876, they mortgaged these same four fields with other lands to the defendants. In 1877 Samudrala obtained a decree upon his mortgage and in execution sold only Nos. 22, 23 and 41, which realized sufficient to satisfy his decree. These three fields were upon the application of the defendants sold subject to their mortgage, and they themselves purchased them at the sale. The plaintiffs now sue to redeem the remaining lands comprised in the mortgage of 1876, exclusive of those which had been sold in execution.

Held, that they were entitled to redeem this part of the mortgaged property, as the mortgagees had themselves acquired the plaintiffs' (mortgagors') interest in the other part and so severed their claim under the mortgage.

Held, also, that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem on payment of such portion of the mortgage-debt as remained after deducting the portion of it to which the lands purchased by defendants were liable. PIRJADA AHMADMIYA v. SHA KALIDAS KANJI, 21 B. 544

8.—Sale.

(1) Decree on mortgage—Sale of mortgaged land pending proceedings in execution of decree—Lis pendens.—On the 22nd August, 1883, Yusu and Krishna mortgaged certain land to the plaintiff by an unregistered mortgage. On the 17th May, 1884, Yusu alone mortgaged the same land to the defendant. This mortgage was duly registered. Subsequently to the date of the defendant's mortgage the plaintiff sued Yusu and Krishna on his mortgage, and on 26th August, 1884, he got a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. On 1st November, 1884, he applied for execution of his decree, and in August, 1885, the execution sale took place and the property was sold to one Dagdu, who was the plaintiff's nominee. Meanwhile, however, and pending the plaintiff's execution proceedings, Yusu and Krishna on the 14th March, 1885, sold the property to the defendant by a registered deed of sale. The plaintiff now sued the defendant for... possession.
GENERAL INDEX.

Mortgage—8—Sale—(Concluded).

Held, (1) that the sale to the defendant on the 14th March, 1885, pending the plaintiff's execution proceedings was a sale pendente lite and void as against the plaintiff.

(2) That the plaintiff as purchaser at the Court's sale in August, 1885, took the property subject to the defendant's mortgage of Yeshu's share to the defendant in 1884, but free from the effect of the subsequent sale by Yeshu and Krishna to the defendant.

(3) As this was a suit for possession, and as Yeshu's share had been mortgaged to the defendant with possession, the plaintiff was only entitled to joint possession of the property with the defendant. He could file a separate suit to redeem defendant. Shivajiram v. Waman, 22 B. 999...

Right of mortgagee to sell mortgaged property—Reg. V of 1837—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1892), s. 67—Covenant to pay interest—Separate suit to recover arrears of interest—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 43.—The breach of covenant in a mortgage-bond to pay interest each year which covenant is not confined to the fixed period of the mortgage and is distinct from and independent of the claim of the mortgagee to recover the principal sum, and the performance of which is secured in a different manner, gives rise to a distinct cause of action which can be sued upon without suing for the principal, and a decree obtained on such bond for overdue interest does not, under s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), bar a subsequent suit to recover the principal and interest by sale of the mortgaged property.

Where a mortgage provides that possession of the mortgaged property, if taken by the mortgagee, is only to be taken for securing due payment of the interest, the mortgagee paying the balance (if any) of the profits to the mortgagor, the mortgage is not a usufructuary mortgage, but a simple mortgage, and is governed by the general law applicable to mortgages of this nature. In such a case, although there is no covenant to pay the principal other than that implied in the statement that the principal has been received, and that the property has been mortgaged for the stipulated term of years, and although there is no express provision that it is to be recovered from the mortgaged property, Reg. V of 1837 gives the mortgagee the right to bring the property to sale, and s. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1892) confers upon him the same privilege. Yashvant v. Vithal, 21 B. 267

A scheme of taxation drafted by the Committee was subsequently adopted by the Municipality, and it included a new house and property tax. The Municipality then issued a notice with regard to this last mentioned tax under the provisions of s. 21 of Act VI of 1873 setting forth the particulars of the proposed tax and requiring objections to be lodged within a fortnight from the date of the notice. A number of objections were received which were laid on the table for twenty-one days for perusal and consideration by the Municipal Commissioners. At the end of that time a special meeting of the Commissioners was held at which it was resolved that the objections were invalid, and the scheme and the rules with regard to the levying of tax were forwarded to Government and were sanctioned. The plaintiffs sued for an injunction restraining the Municipality from levying the tax, contending that it was illegal, on the ground (1) that there was no Municipality desirous of imposing the tax for any of the purposes allowed by the Act, inasmuch as the Commissioners who passed the resolution to impose the tax did not know for what purpose the tax was to be imposed; (2) that the resolution imposing the tax was illegal because the notice calling the meeting of the Commissioners which passed the resolution did not specify this tax as the object of the meeting; (3) that the notice given under s. 21 of Act VI of 1873 was bad, as it did not state the purpose of the proposed tax; (4) that the nature and the amount of the tax were not sufficiently stated in the notice; (5) that the notice ought to have stated the mode in which the valuation of property for the purpose of the tax was to be made; (6) that the objections of the rate-payers were not sufficiently considered; (7) that it did not appear whether the tax was to be paid in advance or not; and (8) that the assessment of the tax was made on a wrong basis.

Held, (1) that the purpose of the tax was sufficiently known to the Commissioners; (2) that the resolution imposing the tax was not invalid, although the notice convening the meeting did not specify the object of the meeting; (3) that the notice need not specify the purpose of the tax; (4) that as to the nature and the amount of the tax the notice was sufficient, as it stated that the amount would depend on the valuation of the property; (5) that the notice need not define the mode of valuation; (6) that the objections were sufficiently considered; (7) that the tax was to be paid partly in advance; (8) that the assessment would not affect the validity of the tax, but would give a right of appeal to have the valuation set right.

Held, therefore, that the tax was legally imposed. THE SURAT CITY MUNICIPALITY v. OCHHAVARAM, 21 B. 630 ...

(6) Bombay District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873), s. 84—Taxation—Duty on goods imported within municipal limits—"Imported", meaning of the word.—A rule of the Thana Municipality provided for the levy of octroi duty on certain articles “when imported within the Thana Municipal District.”

Held, that goods merely passing through the municipal district in the course of transit to Bombay were “imported” within the meaning of the rule and were, therefore, liable to duty. In re RAHIMU BHAJNI, 32 B. 843...

(7) District Municipal Act Amendment Act (Bombay Act II of 1884)—Suit for an injunction to restrain municipality—Sections of the Act not applicable.—A suit was brought by the plaintiff against a municipality for an injunction to restrain them from laying water pipes on his land. The lower Courts dismissed the suit for want of notice under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1884).

Held, reversing the decree, that the suit was not a suit for anything done in pursuance of the Act, but to prevent the municipality from doing what the plaintiff alleged to be an illegal act, and that s. 48 did not apply. HARILAL v. HIMAT, 22 B. 636...

Held, reversing the decree, that the rule must be construed as permissive and not mandatory. It referred to departmental procedure only and did not deprive the institution of the civil suit. VASUDEVACHARYA v. MUNICIPALITY OF SHOLAPUR, 22 B. 884...

(9) District Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1884) s. 48—Suit for damages, possession and injunction—Notice of action.—In a suit brought against a Municipality to recover possession of a piece of land taken by it, for damages for pulling down a wall on the land, and for an injunction,

Held, that as regards damages the suit came under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1884), but as regards possession and injunction, notice of action was not necessary under the section. SHIDMAL-LAPPA v. GOKAR MUNICIPALITY, 22 B. 605...

He remained in possession and in 1884 he sold this land to the Municipality of Mahad (defendant No. 2). The mortgagor subsequently sued the municipality and its vendor to recover possession. The municipality contended that the suit was barred by limitation under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bombay Act II of 1884).

Held, that the suit was not barred by s. 48. That section does not apply to actions of ejectment brought against a municipality. Such an action

(12) Ejectment suit against Municipality.—Notice of action—Bombay District Municipal Act (II of 1884), s. 48—Notice.—The plaintiff was the inamdar of the village of Daker. He filed an ejectment suit against the Municipality of Daker, alleging that the municipality had illegally and wrongfully encroached upon a portion of the Gomti Lake at Daker by laying the foundations of a building which they intended to erect for the purpose of a dharmshala.

The municipality pleaded (inter alia) that the suit was bad for want of notice of action under s. 48 of the Bombay District Municipal Act II of 1884.

Held (by a majority of the Full Bench) that the provisions of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884 do not apply to actions for the possession of land brought against a municipality.

Per Parsons, J.—The provisions of s. 48 apply only to actions for the possession of land, whereas the plaintiff has been dispossessed by the municipality acting or purporting to act under some section of the Municipal Act, which empowers them to take possession of, or oust any one from, that land.

Per Ranade, J.—Section 48 does not generally apply to suits for the possession of land except in those cases where the claim arises on account of some act or omission of the Municipality when it acts in pursuance of its statutory powers, and encroaches upon private rights. (14) Municipal Act, Bombay (Bombay Act III of 1888), s. 472—Continuing offences—Punishment for such offences after a fresh conviction—Separate prosecution for continuing the offence—Practice—Procedure.—A Presidency Magistrate, having convicted certain accused persons and fined them under s. 471 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1888), proceeded in the same order, purporting to act under the provisions of s. 472, to fine them so much per day in case they continued the offence.

Held, that the latter order was illegal under s. 472 of the Act. The section requires a separate prosecution for a distinct offence, a prosecution in which a charge must be laid for a specific contravention for a specific number of days, and for which charge, if proved, the Magistrate is to impose a daily fine of an amount which is left to his discretion to determine. s. 33, ch. 3, of Bombay Act VI of 1873—Court's power to interfere with such discretion—Bombay Act II of 1884, s. 48.—A suit for an injunction to restrain a municipality from removing a certain building or construction is not an action "for anything done, or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the Act" within the meaning of s. 48 of Bombay Act II of 1884. Such a suit can, therefore, be brought without giving previous notice to the municipality.

Apart from the provisions of s. 33 of Bombay Act VI of 1873, it is only if the site of a building is vested in a municipality under s. 17 that this body is empowered, whether by s. 42 or by any other section, to take steps for the removal of the building.

The discretion of taking action or otherwise under the 3rd clause of s. 33 is vested in the municipality, which alone can determine whether or not the removal of a building erected contrary to the provisions of s. 33 is or is not a measure likely to promote the public convenience. If the municipality adopt the proper procedure, no Court can review its decision on the ground that in the opinion of the Court the removal of the building is not likely to promote public convenience. The Legislature has confided to the municipality, and the municipality alone, the duty of deciding what measures within its legal powers are for the public convenience, and its discretion is not subject to control by the Courts. (2) Jurisdiction—Subordinate Judge—Patil and kulkarni of village—Impression of bullocks by patil and kulkarni of village for use of Government officer—Suit for damage—Act X of 1876—Act XIV of 1869, s. 32.—The patil and kulkarni of a village having impressed a pair of bullocks belonging to the plaintiff for the use of an akbar inspector, the plaintiff sued them for damages in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to try the suit under the Bombay Revenues Jurisdiction Act (X of 1786).

Held, that the suit was properly instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, as the defendants were sued in their private capacity.

It is not clear that the rules about impression of carts found in Chap. 1 of Nairne's Revenue Handbook actually order the village patil to impress carts against the owner's will; neither is it clear what officers are to be supplied. There is nothing to show that any law ever imposed this duty on a kulkarni, or that provision was made after the repeal of the Regulation of 1818 as regards patils except for military bodies. Parsis.

(1) Intestate succession among Parsis—Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865), s. 7, sch. II, cl. 2—Construction—Next of kin.—One Jerbai, a Parsi widow, died intestate and without issue, her father, mother, three brothers and two sisters having predeceased her. Two of her brothers and one sister had left children. Some of these children had also predeceased her, leaving children (grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai). Two of this last-mentioned class had also predeceased her, leaving children (grand-grand-nephews and nieces of Jerbai).

Held, that Jerbai's property should, in the first instance, be divided into three shares, i.e., one for each of the two predeceased brothers who left children, and one for the predeceased sister who left a child. Each brother's share to be two-fifths and the sister's one-fifth. These shares to be subdivided among the descendants of the two brothers and the sister respectively, no descendant being entitled to share concurrently with his or her ancestor and, on each division and sub-division, each male taking double the share of each female standing in the same degree or propinquity. In art. 2 of the second schedule of the Parsi Succession Act (XXI of 1865) the gift to lineal descendants is substitutional in the sense that they take nothing if the head of their branch of the family is living, whereas if he is dead, they stand in his place and take the share which he would have taken. In distributing an estate, therefore, "among brothers and sisters and the lineal descendants of such of them as have predeceased the intestate," the primary division must be per stirpes. If there are surviving brothers and lineal descendants of a predeceased brother, then each surviving brother will take equal shares with the lineal descendants collectively.
GENERAL INDEX.

Parsi—(Concluded),

If all the brothers are dead, then the share which each would have taken, had he survived, will be taken by his lineal descendants. If in either case the predeceased was a sister, her lineal descendants will take her half share only.

In both ss. 6 and 7 of the Parsi Succession Act the words "next-of-kin" and "relatives" are synonymous, and are collective names for the persons mentioned in the first and second schedules respectively. HIRJIBHAI v. BARJORNJI, 22 B. 509

(2) Marriage—Infant marriage among Parsis—Custom—Suit for declaration of nullity of infant marriage—Age of majority applicable in case of such suit—Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), ss. 2 and 3—Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), s. 3—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 190—Practice—Second appeal—Filing of lower Courts as to custom.—A Parsi female, within three years after she had attained the age of twenty-one, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Broach for a declaration that a marriage ceremony performed in 1869, when she was not three years old, did not create the status of husband and wife between her and the defendant. She had never lived with the defendant as his wife. The Subordinate Judge held that the marriage was valid and binding, being of opinion that the custom of infant marriage among the Parsis was well established and recognised. On appeal the Judge confirmed the decree, holding that at all events in 1869, when the marriage took place, the custom was common and recognised as binding. On second appeal the High Court concurred with the opinion expressed in 13 B. 392 that the Zoroastrian system did not contemplate marriage in infancy, but the lower Courts having found a custom had grown up among Parsis in India validating such marriages, and that the custom was in force in 1869, did not consider it open on second appeal to arrive at an independent finding as to whether the evidence established the existence of such a custom.

Held, that a Parsi suing to have a marriage declared void is "acting in the matter of marriage" and, therefore, the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), which makes the age of eighteen the age of majority, does not apply to a question of limitation with regard to such suit. The age of majority in such a case is that prescribed by the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act (XV of 1865), viz., twenty-one years.

Held, also, that art. 190 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was applicable to the above suit and that the plaintiff having for the purpose of bringing the suit attained her majority at twenty-one, the suit was not barred.

Act XV of 1865 contains no provision as to the age at which a Parsi marriage can be validly contracted, the matter being left to the general law which governs Parsis in that particular, just as the English Marriage Act (4 Geo. IV, c. 76) leaves it to be dealt with by the common law of England. BAI SHIRJIBHAI v. KHASHEDEJI, 22 B. 430

(2) Insolvency—Insolvency of one partner—Vesting order—Subsequent decree against insolvent and attachment of the firm’s property in execution—Claim by Official Assignee to set aside attachment—Civ. In a suit brought in the High Court of Bombay against him as manager of the said joint family a decree was passed on the 11th April, 1896, which was in terms against the defendant alone. On the same day certain property in Bombay, in which (as found by the Judge) the nephews and the defendant were jointly interested, was attached in execution of the decree. Two days previously, however, viz., on the 9th April, 1896, the defendant had been adjudged an insolvent by the Insolvency Court at Madras under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvency Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21). On the 6th May, 1896, the Official Assignee took out a summons to have the attachment removed.

Held, that the claim of the Official Assignee must prevail and the property be released from attachment. As at the time of the claim of the Official Assignee the defendant’s schedule had not been filed, the claim was, therefore, governed by s. 278 and the following sections of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). As at the time of the attachment the defendant’s interest in the property had by the vesting order been completely divested from him and vested in the Official Assignee, the property was in his possession partly on account of the Official Assignee and partly on account of the solvent partners of his firm; that is, wholly on account of other persons. All his property and all he could honestly dispose of, whether for his own benefit or for the benefit of the joint family, had prior to the attachment passed to the Official Assignee, and, consequently, there was nothing which the decree-holder could attach and sell.

Where subsequently to the insolvency of one of several partners a decree is obtained against the firm and property of the firm is attached in execution, such attachment should be removed. By allowing the execution the solvent partners abandon their right of administering the joint estate, and in the interest of the joint creditors the decree-holder must be restrained from going on with the execution, and the partnership assets will be applied by the Insolvency Court in paying the joint creditors rateably, the Official Assignee receiving the insolvent’s share of the surplus and the rest being handed over to the solvent partners.

By mistake the summons in this case purported to be taken out by the Official Assignee of Bombay, omitting to describe him as constituted attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras.

Held, that the summons might be amended at the hearing by substituting the name of the Official Assignee of Madras and disposed of on that basis.

It was contended that the creditor’s petition in the Madras Insolvency Court disclosed no act of insolvency which could legally justify an adjudication under s. 9 of the Indian Insolvency Act (11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), and that the adjudication order was, therefore, made by a Court not competent to make it within the meaning of s. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) and that, consequently, both it and the vesting order were nullities, and the Official Assignee of Madras had no title to the attached property.

Held, that the order, although it might be erroneous and subject to reversal on appeal, was within the competency of Madras Insolvency Court.

Held, also, on the evidence that there was no proof of such collusion between the creditor and the insolvent in obtaining the order of adjudication as would bring that order within s. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872).

Pauper.

Pauper appeal—Application for leave to appeal as a pauper—Such application rejected—Limitation for subsequent appeal—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 5, and sch. II, arts. 152 and 170—Sufficient cause for delay—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 410, 411, 413, 582-A and 592.—A plaint which suit had been dismissed, presented an unstamped memorandum of appeal and with it a petition for leave to appeal as a pauper. Inquiry as to pauperism was directed, and in the result the leave to appeal as a pauper was refused, but the Judge gave leave to amend the memorandum of appeal by stating the claim at a lower valuation, thus reducing the amount of stamp fee required, and a week's time was granted to the appellant to pay the fee. The fee was duly paid, and the appeal was accepted, but when it came on for hearing it was dismissed as barred by limitation. On second appeal to the High Court, Held (reversing the decree and remanding the case), that the appeal was not barred by limitation.

By FARRAN, C.J., on the following grounds:—In the case of appeals, s. 592 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), requires two separate documents to be presented, a memorandum of appeal and an application for leave to appeal as a pauper. When the Judge disposes of the pauper application he does not thereby necessarily dispose of the appeal. He may still treat it as an existing appeal if the appellant desires to continue it. The rule in s. 413 of the Civ. Pro. Code cannot apply to appeals; for, in view of the fact that the Limitation Act (XV of 1877, arts. 152 and 170) prescribes the same time for filing an appeal and for applying for leave to appeal as a pauper, the practical result would be that in every case where an application for leave to appeal as a pauper is refused, the appeal if then presented would be time-barred. These considerations must have been in the mind of the Legislature when it enacted the Civ. Pro. Code of 1882, as the Limitation Act was then in existence. The District Judge was, therefore, under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal when he refused the appellant leave to appeal as a pauper, and that he did not do so was clear from the fact that he allowed the memorandum of appeal to be amended.

S. 582 A of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) indicates the will of the Legislature that appeals shall not be rejected on the ground of their not being sufficiently stamped if such insufficient stamping arose from the appellant's mistake. In analogy thereto I think that the District Judge was acting within his powers when he allowed the appellant to stamp the memorandum of appeal.

By CANDY, J., on the ground that under the circumstances there was sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the proper time, and that the delay might be excused under s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). BAI FUL v. DESAI MANORBHAI, 22 B. 849 used in a special sense as meaning political alienation or discontent, a spirit of disloyalty to the Government or existing authority.

An attempt to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government is equivalent to an attempt to produce political hatred of Government as established by law, to excite political discontent, and alienate the people from their allegiance.

This meaning of the word "disaffection" in the main portion of the section is not varied by the explanation.

Per Parsons J.—The word "disaffection" used in s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code cannot be construed as meaning an absence of or the contrary of affection or love, that is to say, dislike or hatred, but is used in its special sense as signifying political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government, which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government.

Per Rana J.—"Disaffection" is not a mere absence or negation of love or goodwill, but a positive feeling of aversion which is akin to disloyalty a defiant insubordination of authority, or when it is not defiant, it secretly seeks to alienate the people and weaken the bond of allegiance and profess the minds of the people with avowed or secret animosity to Government—a feeling which tends to bring the Government into hatred or contempt by imputing base and corrupt motives to it, and makes them disposed to obey or support the laws of the realm, and which promotes discontent and public disorder. (3) S. 124-A—Evidence—Writings showing intention or animus—Letters of contributors published in newspapers—Disaffection—Orders to prosecute—Crime. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 196—Construction—Reference to proceedings in Legislative Council.—The accused, who was the editor, proprietor and publisher of the Kesari newspaper was charged under s. 124-A of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) with exciting and attempting to excite feelings of disaffection to Government by the publication of certain articles, &c., in the Kesari in its issue of the 15th June, 1897.

At the trial an order for the prosecution given by Government under s. 196 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) in the following form dated July 26, 1897, was tendered in evidence:—

"Under the provisions of s. 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Mirza Abas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government, is hereby ordered by His Excellency the Governor in Council to make a complaint against Mr. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, B.A., LL. B., of Poona, publisher, proprietor and editor of the Kesari, a weekly vernacular newspaper of Poona, and against Mr. Hari Narayan Ghokale of Poona, printer of the said newspaper, in respect of certain articles appearing in the said newspaper, under s. 124A of the Indian Penal Code and any other section of the said Code which may be found to be applicable to the case."

Counsel for the accused objected that the order was too vague and should have specified the articles with reference to which the accused was to be charged.

Held, that the order was sufficient and was admissible, but that if it were not sufficient, the commitment might be accepted and the trial proceed with under s. 332 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In order to show the intention of such publications, counsel for the prosecution tendered in evidence a certain letter signed "Ganesha" which appeared in the issue of the Kesari of May 4, 1897. Objection was taken that it was not admissible, inasmuch as letters to newspapers often express opinions which are not the opinions of the editor and publisher.

Held, that the letter was admissible to show intention and animus.

S. 124-A of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) explained. Meaning of the word "disaffection."

At the close of the Judge's charge to the jury, counsel for the first accused asked that the following points might be reserved for the decision of the Court under s. 434 of the Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), viz.:—

1352

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—(Continued).

1. Whether the order for the prosecution was sufficient under s. 196 of the Crim. Pro. Code.

2. Whether the High Court had power, in the absence of a sufficient order, to accept the commitment of the accused under s. 532 of the Crim. Pro. Code and to proceed with the trial.

3. Whether the meaning given to the term “disaffection” by the Judge in his charge to the jury was correct.

The Judge declined to reserve the above points.

The first accused having been convicted applied to a Full Bench under cl. 41 of the Amended Letters Patent, 1865, for a certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. The points upon which he desired to appeal were those which his counsel at the close of the trial asked the Judge to reserve as above stated.

The Full Bench refused to grant the certificate. QUEEN-EMpress v. BAL GANGADHAR TILAK, 22 B. 112

(4) S. 161—Public servant—Revenue and police patrol—Agreement to restore village Mahals to office on payment of Rs. 300 towards repair of a village temple—Gratification—Official act.—The Mahals of a certain village having been suspended from their office for some months, a meeting of the villagers was held at the house of the Patel, at which the Patel was present, to consider the question of their restoration to office, and an agreement was there come to that they should be restored on their paying a sum of Rs. 300 towards the repair of the village temple.

Held, that the Patel, being a public servant, had committed an offence under s. 161 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). IMPERATRIX v. APPAJI

(6) S. 187—Forest Act (VII of 1878), s. 73—Refusal to serve as member of a panch.—A person was convicted under s. 187 of the Indian Penal Code for refusing, when called on by a forest guard, to serve as one of a panch for the purpose of drawing up a panchayat with reference to certain wood alleged to have been illegally cut in a reserved forest.

Held, that the conviction was illegal. The accused was not shown to be one of the persons contemplated by the first three paragraphs of s. 73 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), nor was the purpose for which he was called upon to give his assistance, one of the purposes mentioned in cls. (a) to (d) of the section. He was, therefore, not legally bound to assist the forest guard. QUEEN-EMpress v. BABAJI, 22 B. 769

(7) S. 211—False complaint to police—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), s. 152—Statements of witnesses before police not admissible against accused—Evidence.—The accused complained to the police that A and B had robbed him. After inquiry the police reported to the Magistrate that the charge was false. The Magistrate thereupon struck off the case without holding any further inquiry himself. The accused was subsequently charged and convicted under s. 211 of the Penal Code of making a false charge. On appeal it was contended that as the accused had not been given an opportunity of substantiating his complaint before a Magistrate, his prosecution was illegal, or at the most he ought to have been charged under s. 192, and not s. 211.

Held, that in order to constitute an offence under s. 211 it was not necessary that the complaint should be made to a Magistrate. It was enough that it was made to the Police authorities and related to a cognizable offence, and that action was thereupon taken by the police.

Held, also, that the fact that no opportunity was allowed to the accused by the Magistrate to substantiate his complaint before striking it off, was not a circumstance which invalidated the commitment duly made, and the conviction otherwise good could not be set aside on account of such omission.

The trial before the committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court gave ample opportunity to the accused to substantiate his complaint, and he was not prejudiced by the omission.

(10) Ss. 426 and 441 — Criminal trespass — Mischief — Who may complain. — The words "any person in possession" in s. 441 of the Indian Penal Code do not mean only "a complainant in possession."

Certain persons were prosecuted under ss. 426 and 447 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) for committing mischief and criminal trespass by entering upon a certain field which was in the possession of the complainant’s tenants and destroying the seed sown therein.

The defence raised was an alibi; it was also contended on behalf of the accused that the field belonged to one of them, and that the complainant had no title whatever to it.

The Magistrate, who tried the case, declined to go into the question of title; he found that the complainant’s tenants were in possession of the field; and disbelieving the evidence of alibi he convicted the accused and sentenced them to fine.

On application in revision to the High Court it was urged (inter alia) that the complainant, not being the person in possession, could not legally institute the criminal proceedings, and that, therefore, the conviction was bad.

Held that, looking to the nature of the false defence set up by the accused, this was not a case for interference in revision, as to do so would encourage perjury.

Held, also, that the words "any person in possession" in s. 441 of the Indian Penal Code do not mean only "a complainant in possession," there being no authority for taking the offences of mischief and criminal trespass out of the general rule which allows any person to complain of a criminal act. IMPERATRIX v. KESHAVLAL, 21 B. 536

(11) Ss. 463 and 471 — Using as genuine a false document. — The accused applied to the Superintendent of Police at Poona for employment in the police force. In support of his application he presented two certificates which he knew to be false. One of these certificates was a wholly fabricated document, whilst the other was altered by several additions made subsequently to the issue of the certificate.

Held, that the accused was guilty of offences under ss. 463 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KHANDUSINGH, 22 B. 768

(3) Responsibility of, in conduct of case—Suspicious document used in a case—"Guilty knowledge"—Indian Penal Code (Act XI of 1860), s. 471—Sanction for prosecution.—Sanction was given for the prosecution of a pleader who in the conduct of a case had presented to the Court for his clients a document of suspicious appearance and which his clients were charged with having forged. The sanction was granted by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the document bore on its face such marks of concoction that the pleader’s suspicions must have been aroused at the first sight of it, and that had he examined it, as he ought to have done, he would either have rejected it, or have advised his client to produce it in Court at his own risk. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that the sanction should be revoked. A pleader is under no higher obligation than any other agent would be, and to justify his prosecution it should be shown that he had been a party (principal or accessory) to the concoction of the document, or that he had the knowledge that it was concocted.

The mere fact that his suspicions ought to have been aroused by the sight of the document was not prima facie evidence that he knew, or had reason to believe, the document to be forged. In re RANJHODDAS, 22 B. 317 ... 793

Police.

(1) Bombay District Police Act (Act VII of 1867), s. 33—"Booth," meaning of the word—Structure contemplated by the section must be constructed on a public road and must cause nuisance to the public—Construction.—The accused had a house on each side of a public road. On the occasion of a wedding he put bamboo across the street from the top windows of one house into the top windows of the other house, and laid a covering of cloth over the bamboos, thus making a canopy, or awning, over the street. It was at such a height that no obstruction or inconvenience whatever was caused to persons or animals passing along the street. The accused erected the structure without the permission of a Magistrate or Municipal Commission.

For this act the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under s. 33 of the Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act VII of 1867) and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 5.

Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the structure erected by the accused was not a “booth” within the meaning of s. 33 of Bombay Act VII of 1867. The structure contemplated by the section must be on the road itself and cause some nuisance to the public. As no part of the structure in question touched the road, it could not be said to have been constructed on the road. In re NAHALCHAND, 22 B. 742 ... 1078

(2) Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890), s. 47—Right of the police to have free access to a place of public amusement or resort—Race-course enclosure.—Races were held in a certain enclosed ground at Poona which belonged to the Military authorities, and was lent for the purpose to the Western India Turf Club. The part of the ground to which the public were admitted, was fenced in by ropes, and soldiers were stationed at intervals to prevent any persons entering or leaving the enclosure otherwise than through the passages provided for the purpose. The Inspector of Police, who was present on duty in that capacity, contrary to the regulations prescribed by the stewards of the races, crossed over the fencing ropes into the enclosure instead of going in by the regular entrance. This was reported to the honorary secretary of the club, who had general charge of the arrangements. He sent for the Inspector, and after an interview with him ordered two soldiers, who were in attendance to keep order, to put him out of the enclosure. They accordingly did so, laying hands on him in the first instance, but immediately at his request letting him go and merely escorting him outside. He thereupon under s. 353 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) charged the secretary of the club with using criminal force to a public servant in the exercise of his duty.

Held, that the offence had been committed. Under s. 47 of the Police Act (Bomb. Act IV of 1890) the Police had a right of free access to the racecourse. QUEEN-EMpress v. ROSS, 22 B. 746 ... 1080

(3) District Police Act (Bomb. Act IV of 1890), s. 48, cl. If any one does this, he will be dealt with according to law.

Held, that this notification was not illegal or ultra vires. It was not any order or command as to costume, but merely a warning to the people that an indecent exposure of the person was an offence under the law, and would be dealt with as such. In re HUKUMPURIBAVA GOSAVI, 22 B. 715 ... 1059

He was thereupon convicted under s. 53, cl. (2) and s. 65 of the Bombay District Police Act (Bomb. Act IV of 1890).

but her application was refused on the 21st September, 1896. On the 17th October, 1896, she petitioned for leave to appeal in forma pauperis against the order of the 21st September and annexed to her petition an unstamped memorandum of appeal. On the 4th December, 1896, her petition for leave to appeal in forma pauperis was rejected, and she was directed by the Court to appeal in the ordinary way if she desired to appeal. On the 11th December, 1896, she applied for further time to pay the stamp fee on the memorandum of appeal and to deposit the usual security. The Court made no order as to the stamp fee, but gave her time to furnish security until the opening of the Court after the Christmas vacation. On the 21st December she tendered to the officer of the Court the proper stamp, asking to have it affixed to her memorandum of appeal, but he refused on the ground that it was too late. The plaintiff, therefore, now applied to the Court of appeal asking that the stamp should be affixed and the appeal filed,

Held, that the application should be granted. As the Court had made no order on the 11th December as to the day on which the stamped duty should be paid, the case should be considered as if the stamp had been affixed to the memorandum of appeal on the 21st December, i.e., the day on which the officer of the Court refused to receive the stamp. That being so, the memorandum of appeal should be regarded as presented on the 17th October, 1896, and consequently within the time of limitation.

The appellant also applied for a further extension of the time for giving security for the costs of the appeal on the ground that in the exceptional state of things in Bombay caused by the prevalence of the plague she had been unable to raise the money required.

Held, that under the circumstances the application should be granted, B. 549 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) does not absolutely preclude such an order if the circumstances render it just to do so. The Court cannot lay down a hard and fast rule that in no case after the time for giving security has expired can an appellant be allowed further time.

(6) Procedure—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 379—Suit for injunction or damages—Payment into Court by defendant to satisfy plaintiff’s claim—Costs in such case—Costs.—The plaintiffs sued alleging certain windows in their house to be ancient windows and complaining that a building in course of erection by the defendant would, when completed according to the building plan, obstruct the light through the said windows. In his written statement the defendant denied that the plaintiffs' windows were ancient and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the light and air as an easement. At the time of filing his written statement the defendant paid into Court the sum of Rs. 200, which in his written statement he stated was more than sufficient to compensate the plaintiffs for any damages they might sustain and which he (defendant) paid in without prejudice to his contentions, but for the sake of peace and to avoid litigation. At the hearing the plaintiffs abandoned their claim for injunction, but insisted that they were entitled to more than Rs. 200 as damages. The Court found that the plaintiffs' windows were ancient, but that the Rs. 200 paid into Court was sufficient damages.

should pay all the plaintiffs' costs up to the date at which the Rs. 200 were paid into Court, and as to their subsequent costs that the defendant should pay three-fourths of the plaintiffs' subsequent costs and the plaintiffs should pay to the defendant one-fourth of the defendant's subsequent costs.

The Court offered to simplify its order by directing the defendant to pay all the costs of the plaintiffs up to the date of paying the Rs. 200 into Court and half the plaintiffs' taxed costs subsequent to that date. The defendant appealed, contending that under s. 379 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) the plaintiffs should have been ordered to pay all the defendant's costs subsequent to the payment into Court.

Held, that the suit was not one to recover a debt or damages, and, therefore, s. 379, Civ. Pro. Code, did not apply. That being so, the Judge had full discretion under s. 220 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to apportion the costs, and the Court of Appeal would not interfere with that discretion.

Held, also, that in cases not being suits to recover a debt or damages where money is paid into Court, the principle underlying s. 379 of the Civ. Pro. Code, ought to regulate the discretion of the Court in directing the payment of costs. LUXUMON NANA PATIL v. MOROBA RAMKRISHNA, 21 B. 502. 757

(9) Procedure—Contentious matter — Duty of Registrar—When a petition for probate or letters of administration becomes contentious—Non-appearance of caverter—Form of order.—So long as a petition for probate or letters of administration is "non-contentious" it is to be dealt with by the Registrar. As soon as it becomes "contentious" it is to be treated as a plaint in a suit, and the suit is governed, as far as practicable, by the procedure prescribed by the Civ. Pro. Code.

The petition becomes contentious not upon the entry of a caveat, but upon the filing of the affidavit in support of the caveat.

Where, in consequence of the finding of the affidavit, the matter becomes a suit, the whole suit must be disposed of by the decree of the Court. Where, therefore, at the hearing of the suit the defendant does not appear in support of the caveat, it is not a correct procedure for the Court merely to dismiss the caveat, leaving it to the Registrar to dispose of the petition as a non-contentious matter. The proper form of order is that the caveat be dismissed and that probate or letters of administration issue, provided that the Court is satisfied that the papers are in order. CHOTA-LAL v. (12) Procedure—Dismissal of case in first Court without hearing all the witnesses —Appeal—Duty of appellate Court to call the remaining witnesses before reversing the decree of first Court.—The Subordinate Judge having heard all the witnesses for the plaintiff and some of the witnesses for the defendant intimated that he did not consider it necessary for the defendant to call any more evidence. He then dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge upon the recorded evidence reversed the decree and allowed the plaintiff's claim. The defendant appealed to the High Court, contending that the lower Court ought not to have found against him without allowing him an opportunity to call the witnesses whose evidence had been dispensed with by the Subordinate Judge.

The Letters Patent provide for an appeal only from a judgment passed in the original or appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. HIRALAL v. BAI ASIT, 22 B. 591

(16) Procedure—Right of appeal—Death of one of several appellants pending appeal—Death of one of several respondents pending appeal—Civ. Pro. Code, (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 366, 368, 544 and 592.—Any plaintiff or defendant has a right to appeal without the concurrence of any of the parties to the suit. The mere fact of the death of one of several appellants cannot affect the right of the other appellants to proceed with the appeal if they choose to do so.

One of several appellants (defendants) died after appeal filed, but before the hearing. An application to have the name of his heir entered on the record as an appellant was rejected as too late. One of the respondents (plaintiffs) also died pending the hearing of the appeal, and an application to enter the name of his heir as respondent was rejected for the same reason. When the appeal came on for hearing, it was dismissed as detector for want of parties.

Held, that the proper course for the appeal Court was to order that the appeal had abated so far as the deceased appellant (defendant) was concerned and to proceed with the hearing so far as the remaining appellants were concerned.

Held, also, with reference to the death of the respondent (plaintiff), that the appeal Court ought to have proceeded under the provisions of s. 368 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), and to have either declared that the appeal had abated as to him and proceeded against the rest of the respondents under s. 544 of the Civ. Pro. Code, or else to have directed that the legal representatives of the deceased respondent should be placed upon the record. CHANDRABHAN v. KHIMACHAI, 22 B. 718

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. HANNA, 22 B. 760.

(20) Procedure—Summons—Service of summons—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 93, 82.—Where a defendant is temporarily absent from home, and is not represented at his house by an agent or male member of his family, a Judge is not justified in treating the fixing of a summons to his door as due service. The summons should be again sent to the defendant's house to be served upon him when the inquires made show that he is likely to be at home and to be found there.

The Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) in the matter of the service of a summons does not take into account the female members of a defendant’s family, and does not rely upon the presumption that they will take steps to inform the defendant of what takes place in his absence. Liability of agent for rent—Honorary secretary to a school maintained by a foreign society—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230—Ejectment—Notice to quit—Service of notice—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106.—The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of a certain house in Bombay and for arrears of rent. The defendant pleaded that the house in question was occupied by the Beni-Israel School of Bombay which was maintained by the Anglo-Jewish Association of London, that he was honorary secretary of the school, and as such, and not in his personal capacity, had hired the house and that he had never paid the rent of or expenses of the school out of his own pocket. He contended that he was not liable to be sued personally.

Held, that the defendant was liable for the rent. There was nothing to show that the contract for the house was made on the personal credit of any one except the defendant.

The notice to quit had been sent to the solicitors of the defendant. It was contended that this was not sufficient service under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

Held, that the service was sufficient. BHOJABHAI v. HAYEM SAMUEL, 22 B. 754 ... 1096

(1) Leave to appeal—Refusal of leave to appeal from a conviction and sentence—Alleged misdirection to a jury—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 124-A.—The petitioner applied to the Privy Council for leave to appeal from a verdict finding him guilty on a charge under s. 124-A of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

Held, that, consistently with the rules hitherto guiding the Judicial Committee in recommending the grant of leave to appeal from convictions in criminal cases, the petitioner's case was not one in which leave should be granted. Probate.

(1) Application by executors for probate—Order refusing probate—Subsequent suit by executors as persons entitled under will to property of deceased—Res judicata—Probate and Administration Act (VI of 1881), s. 12, Chap. V., ss. 59 and 83—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).—The plaintiffs applied to the District Court at Poona under the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) for probate of a will of which they were appointed executors. The defendants opposed their application, and on appeal the High Court rejected it, holding that on the evidence the execution of the will was not proved. The plaintiffs subsequent filed the present suit as the persons beneficially entitled under the will for a declaration that the property of the deceased belonged to them, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from obstructing them in the enjoyment of it. The defendant contended that the suit was barred as res judicata.

Held, that this suit was not barred by the order refusing probate of the will. The refusal to grant probate does not conclusively show that the will pronounced is not the genuine will of the testator. Ganesh Jagannath Dev v. Ramchandra, 21 B. 563...

(2) Costs of obtaining probate—Fund liable.—The appellant cited the respondent, who was the executor of one Tulsidas Varajdas, to bring in and prove his testator's will. The Division Court (Starling, J.) ordered the respondent to lodge the will in Court and to take out probate, but directed that the appellant should pay half the costs of obtaining probate. On appeal, Held, (varying the order of Starling, J., as to costs) that the fund primarily liable to the costs of probate was the residuary estate; and part of the residuary estate being as yet undistributed, it should, in the first instance, be applied to this purpose, and after that the appellant and respondent should contribute in equal shares. Held, that no probate duty was payable on the value of the share of the deceased as a partner in the firm of David Sassoon and Company or the properties of the firm situated in British India at his death. In the goods of Sir A. A. D. Sassoon, 21 B. 673...

(1) Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17—Mortgage—Change of name in Government records—Mortgage or sale—Subsequent agreement to re-transfer land in Government records on payment of debt.—Document creating a right in land.—In 1877 the plaintiff being indebted to the defendant transferred certain land to the defendant's name in the Government records. In July, 1879, the defendant executed the following document to the plaintiff reciting the previous transfer and agreeing to retransfer the land to the plaintiff's name on the 12th July, 1880, if the debt which would then be due should be paid off:—

"In the village of Behrampur is your (plaintiff's) field, Survey No. 146, measuring 5 acres 3 gunthas, bearing assessment Rs. 15. You (plaintiff) have got it transferred to our name. The field, therefore, stands in our (defendant's) name in the Government records. You owe a debt to us. On account of that debt you have transferred it to our name. The field shall be transferred to your name when you repay the said debt to me. You have cultivated the field for the produce of Samvat 1936, and a lease in respect thereof you have this day passed to me. And a stamp paper was purchased at the time of the transfer for the execution of this agreement, but no agreement was then passed. This agreement is, therefore, this day passed to you when the lease is executed. And you owe me (a) debt bearing interest. I will pay out of my pocket the expenses to be incurred at present in cultivating the field. The debt due to me would in all amount to Rs. 100. If you repay all these rupees due to me till the Vaishakh Shudh 6th, Samvat 1936. I will take them and retransfer the field to your name. And if you fail to pay (them) till Vaishakh Shudh 4th, you will have no claim whatever to the said field. I shall not take the rupees after the 4th, (chauth), nor shall I give (or transfer) the field to you.... I shall lease the field to any one I like without keeping any claim of you as regards cultivation, manure and hedge. You have no claim or right whatever...."

This document was not registered. The plaintiff brought this suit to redeem the land, alleging that it had been mortgaged to the defendant and that the debt had been paid off. The defendant contended that the transaction in 1877 was not a mortgage but a sale of the land to him, and that the document of July, 1879, was an agreement to resell it to the plaintiff, which was not admissible in evidence as it was not registered.

Held, upon the evidence, that the transaction in 1877 was a mortgage to the defendant and not a sale.

Held, also, that the document of the 11th July, 1879, did not require registration. It created no rights in land, but only amounted to a personal covenant to effect a mutation of names in the Government books when the debt due by the plaintiff was satisfied. PATIL RANCHOD v. BHIKA-BHAI, 21 B. 704

(2) Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17, cls. (c) and (h)—Receipt for purchase-money—Document creating or extinguishing a right to immovable property.—The plaintiffs sued to recover the property sold to them by the defendants. The defendants set up a re-purchase and produced a receipt passed to them by the plaintiffs which stated that the plaintiffs had no longer any interest in the property, and that they would execute a new sale-deed. The plaintiffs contended that the receipt required registration.

Held, that as the receipt created or declared or extinguished a right to the property with a superadded covenant to execute a stamped document to the same effect on a future occasion, it required registration. PARASHRAM v. GANPAT, 21 B. 533 357

(3) Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 50—Notice—Registration is notice only of registered documents, not of unregistered documents under which holders of registered documents derive their title—Priority.—The plaintiffs sued to recover possession from the defendants of certain land which they had purchased from one Ram by a registered deed of sale dated the 22nd August 1882.

Ram had been given the land by one Harichand by a registered deed of gift dated 15th November, 1881.

Harichand, however, had purchased the land from one Vithoba on the 22nd March, 1876, and the deed of conveyance to him of that date was not registered.

On the 2nd April, 1894, the sons of Vithoba (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) sold the land to the third defendant by a deed of that date which was duly registered.

The third defendant contended that the plaintiff’s title depended on the unregistered deed of the 22nd March 1876, executed by Vithoba (father of his vendors), and that his (defendant’s) purchase by registered deed, dated 2nd April, 1894, had priority.

Held, that the plaintiffs’ claim must be dismissed. They were mere strangers to the land unless they could rely on the unregistered conveyance by Vithoba to Harichand on the 23rd March, 1876, but this conveyance had no effect when brought into competition with the registered conveyance to the third defendant on the 2nd April, 1894.

Though the register is notice of registered documents, it is not notice of unregistered documents under which holders of registered documents derive title. CHUNILAL v. RAMCHANDRA, 22 B. 219 724

(5) Suit for registration—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 24 and 77. No suit lies under s. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) against an order made under s. 24 of that Act refusing to direct a document to be accepted for registration. GANGAVA v. SAYAVA, 21 B. 393 470

(6) Suit to compel registration—Discretion of registrar in acceptance of document for registration under s. 24 of the Registration Act—Registrable document with another document annexed, the latter, if presented by itself, being beyond time—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 24, 73, 75 and 77. A registrable document, which had been executed by the plaintiff on the one part and by the defendant Tullockchand and one Motichand on the other part, was accepted for registration by the Sub-Registrar of Bombay after four months from the date of execution under s. 24 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). Motichand subsequently admitted execution, and the document was registered as against him; but the defendant Tullockchand objected to its registration and the Registrar refused to register it. The plaintiff then brought the suit under s. 77 of the Registration Act praying for an order directing the registration of the document. The defendant contended that the document ought not to have been accepted for registration without inquiry as to whether the failure to present it within four months had been caused by urgent necessity or unavoidable accident, and at the hearing of the case counsel for the defendants proposed to ask the Registrar’s clerk in his examination whether any such inquiry was made.

Held, following 6 A. 460 that the question should be disallowed, the Court having no jurisdiction to inquire into the exercise of the Registrar’s discretion under s. 24 of the Registration Act.
The defendants executed and delivered two documents, A and B, to the plaintiff, A being an agreement of equitable mortgage and B an agreement that they would register A and do all things necessary therefore, and in case they failed to do so, to pay whatever the plaintiff could claim under A if it had been registered. The plaintiff obtained an order for the registration of A, but failed to present it for registration within thirty days after such order as required by s. 75 of the Registration Act, and when he did present it, registration was consequently refused. He subsequently lodged document B for registration with A as an annexure to it, and it was accepted on payment of a penalty under s. 24 of the Registration Act. The Registrar, however, refused to register B on the grounds (1) that without A there would be nothing to show to what property B referred, and (2) that to register A as an annexure to B would be contrary to the provisions of s. 75, which limited the time for registration to thirty days. The plaintiff then brought this suit under s. 77 praying for an order for the registration of B, with its accompaniment A within thirty days from the date of decree.

Held, that B being a registrable document of which execution had been admitted, and it having been presented within time and accepted under s. 24 of the Registration Act ought to be registered, the document A being copied out as an annexure. Decree accordingly.

Quaere as to the effect such registration might have on A and whether it would render it efficacious as a registered document. GOKULBHOY v. TULLOCK-CHAND, 21 B. 69...

(7) Suit to compel registration—Document referring to another document—
Two documents when registrable as one—Duties of Registrar—Further period for presentation allowed by s. 34 of Registration Act—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 24, 34, 77.—The defendants executed and delivered two documents A and B to the plaintiff—A being an agreement of equitable mortgage and B an agreement that they (the defendants) would register A and do all things necessary therefor, and, in case they failed to do so, to pay whatever the plaintiff could claim under A if it had been registered. The plaintiff obtained an order for the registration of A, but failed to present it for registration within thirty days after such order as required by s. 75 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), and, when he did present it, registration was consequently refused. He subsequently lodged B for registration, with A as an annexure to it, and it was accepted on payment of a penalty under s. 24 of the Registration Act. The Registrar, however, refused to register B on the ground (1) that without A there would be nothing to show to what property B referred, and (2) that to register A as an annexure to B would be contrary to the provisions of s. 75 which limited the time for registration to thirty days. The plaintiff then brought this suit under s. 77 praying for an order for the registration of B, with its accompaniment A, within thirty days from the decree. The Division Court made the order as prayed for. On appeal by the defendants, Held, that the decree ordering the registration of B was correct. That document was a mere personal covenant to do a particular act with reference to a particular document. There was nothing on the face of it to show that the accompanying document referred to in it related to immovable property. The registering officer would travel out of his functions if he were to institute an enquiry as to what was the nature of the document referred to.

When a Registrar has directed under s. 24 that the document shall be accepted for registration, the Court cannot inquire under ss. 77 and 74 into the propriety of that direction.

Durga Singh v. Mathura Das, (I. L. R., 6 All., 460) approved of and followed.

The proviso to s. 34 allows a further period of four months (in addition to the four months allowed by s. 24) within which to appear subject to the conditions set out in the proviso.

Held, also, (varying the decree of the lower Court) that document A should not be copied as an annexure to document B. If document A were in the nature of a schedule or appendix to document B, then the two documents could be registered as one; but as they appeared to be two distinct documents separately stamped and executed for different objects, they could not be so registered. The Registrar had no power to inquire what document was referred to in the document he was asked to register. If he could not register the two documents as one, neither could the Court do so under s. 77. TULJOCHECHAND v. GOKULBHoy, 21 B. 724... 487

(8) Unregistered san mortgage—Sale—Subsequent unregistered mortgage of same property—Decease on latter mortgage and sale in execution—Sale certificate registered—Priority—Interest passing on sale of mortgaged property in execution of a money decree and of a decree on mortgage.—One Harilal and his sons Baji and Chhagan executed a san-mortgage of certain ancestral property in plaintiff's favour in 1885. The mortgage was unregistered. In 1896, the same property was mortgaged by Chhagan alone by a deed which was also unregistered. In 1899, Chhagan's mortgagee obtained a decree on his mortgage for sale of the mortgaged property, and in execution put up the property to auction in 1892, when defendant purchased it. Defendant got his sale-certificate registered.
In 1894, the plaintiff brought this suit to enforce his mortgage lien by sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant contended that, as to Chhagan's share, his certificate of sale having been registered, his claim had priority to the plaintiff's unregistered mortgage.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. His claim was superior to the defendant's. The defendant had purchased the interest which Chhagan had mortgaged in 1892. But that mortgage was unregistered and was, therefore, subject to the plaintiff's mortgage, which although unregistered, was earlier in date. The defendant by registering his certificate of sale could not enlarge the estate which the certificate conveyed to him.

By a sale of mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained by a mortgagee against the mortgagor upon the mortgage, the interest both of the mortgagor and mortgagee passes to the purchaser. But by a sale of mortgaged property in execution of a money decree obtained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, the interest of the defendant (mortgagor) alone passes to the purchaser. (1) S. 52, Appendix L—Act I of 1946, s. 7—Costs—Fee of pleader—Maintenance Partition—Party to suit claiming only maintenance—Fee of pleader of such party.—The plaintiff sued for partition and made two widows, who were entitled to maintenance out of the estate, co-defendants in the suit. The plaintiff and the male defendants compromised the suit and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise. By the compromise the costs of the widows were to be paid by the estate, and in estimating the costs the lower Court allowed each widow a separate set of costs and calculated the amount to be paid to each as pleader's fees on the value placed on his claim by the plaintiff. On appeal to the High Court.

Held, that the pleaders of the widows were not employed in prosecuting or defending an original suit of the value of the plaintiff's claim, so as to be entitled under s. 52 Regulation II of 1827, to a percentage on the amount that the plaintiff sued for according to the rates specified in Appendix L. The widows were in reality prosecuting a suit for their maintenance, and their pleaders were entitled to a percentage only on the amount claimed by them for maintenance.

Resumption.
Land granted with condition of service—Land granted as remuneration for service—Service attached to grant of hereditary office—Adverse possession—Limitation—Land granted with a condition of service attached to the grant cannot be resumed when the service is no longer required.
GENERAL INDEX.

Resumption—(Concluded).

But land granted as remuneration for service may be resumed when the service is no longer required, except when there has been a grant of an hereditary office to those who are to perform the service. In that case, the land can only be resumed when the need of such service altogether ceases. Where the services are still required, and the grantee has a right to the hereditary office, he cannot be deprived of the land on the mere ground that the grantor prefers to appoint some one else to officiate.

The ancestors of the plaintiff appointed the ancestors of the defendants as hereditary kulkarnis and granted to them certain lands as remuneration for service as kulkarni, and as karkun. The service required as karkun ceased in 1863-64. Members of defendants' family officiated as kulkarnis for more than two hundred years. They continued to officiate till 1887. Their services were then dispensed with, and a stranger was appointed kulkarni by the plaintiff. In 1894, the plaintiff sued to recover all the lands.

Held, (1) that the appointment of the defendants' family as hereditary kulkarni was valid.
(2) That the claim to recover possession of part of the lands assigned for the remuneration of the defendants as karkun was time-barred by the defendants' adverse possession since 1863-64.
(3) That the defendants' possession of the lands assigned for the remuneration of the defendants as kulkarni was not adverse to the plaintiff previously to 1887, but that as the hereditary kulkarnis of the village the defendants were entitled to enjoy the land so long as the services of a kulkarni were required, whether their services were accepted or were refused, provided they duly discharged the duties of the office should their services be required. Act (III of 1877), ss. 3 and 17—General Clauses Act (Bomb. Act III of 1886)—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 252.—Plaintiffs sued in the Court of Small Causes at Poona to recover Rs. 400 for arrears alleged to be payable to them under an agreement by the defendant’s father to pay Rs. 150 per annum, of which Rs. 50 were for maintenance of plaintiff’s mother and the residue was to be applied towards defraying the expenses of a temple. The terms of the agreement showed that it was intended that the payment for the expenses of the temple should be continued in perpetuity. The Judge dismissed the suit, holding that being for a hereditary allowance it was a claim for immoveable property and came under clauses (4) and (13) of sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). He also held that the claim came within the meaning of ss. 3 and 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), and that the document creating it required registration and not being registered was inadmissible in evidence. On application by the plaintiffs to the High Court under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887).

 Held, reversing the decree, that the suit was not for possession of immoveable property or recovery of an interest in such property within the meaning of art. 4, nor did it come within the purview of art. 13 of sch. II of the Act. The Small Cause Court had, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

 Held, further, that the document did not require registration, as it was not an instrument purporting or operating to create or declare an interest in immoveable property within the meaning of s. 17, or create an hereditary allowance in the sense in which that expression is used in s. 3 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). VISHNU GANESH JOSHI v. YESHWANTRAO, 21 B. 387

(2) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Jurisdiction of the High Court.—An error of law or procedure in the Small Cause Court confers jurisdiction upon the High Court to exercise the power committed by s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887).

The powers conferred by the section are, however, purely discretionary, and the section does not give a right of appeal in all Small Cause Court cases either on law or on fact. The High Court is to determine in what cases it shall exercise the powers conferred upon it.

It is not the practice of the Bombay High Court to interfere under s. 25 of the Act when there are no substantial merits in the case of the applicant. It interferes to remedy injustice. It is slow to interfere where substantial justice has been done by the Subordinate Court, although that Court may technically have erred.

The provisions of s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) do not afford a safe guide for the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). The wording of the two sections is wholly different, that of s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act being of the widest description and conferring the most ample discretion on the High Court, while it has been held by the Privy Council that s. 622 of Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882) ought to be construed in a very restricted and limited sense. POONA CITY MUNICIPALITY v. RAMJI, 21 B. 250

(3) Small Cause Court suit—Second appeal—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 586—Suit to recover a certain sum on account of a share in property—Amount to be found due on taking account—Title.—Plaintiffs sued to recover, on account of their share in the produce of certain dhara and khota properties Rs. 339-14-2 or any other sum which might be found due to them on taking account from the defendant, who was the managing khot. The defendant denied the plaintiffs' right to the produce of some of the properties. The first Court and the Court of appeal found that the amount due to plaintiffs was Rs. 72-14-11. On second appeal, Held, that the suit was a Small Cause Court suit, and no second appeal lay.

The mere fact of a question of title arising does not prevent a suit being cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. By merely asking, in the alternative, for an account of the profits, a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court cannot be converted into one of a different nature. NABAYAN v. BALAJI, 21 B. 248

Act VI of 1889). In 1898 the mortgagor sued on his mortgage and, without having the sanction of the Governor in Council, obtained an order in the District Court for the sale of the mortgaged property, that Court holding that the provisions of s. 81, cl. 2, of Bombay Act VI of 1888 did not apply to the case of a mortgage effected prior to the passing of the Act. On appeal to the High Court,
GENERAL INDEX.

Talukdar—(Concluded).

Held, reversing the order of the District Court, that cl. 2 of s. 31 of Bombay Act VI of 1888 applied to the case and that a sale in execution of a decree was such an alienation as came within the terms of the section and required the previous sanction of the Governor in Council. The Court, however, directed the District Judge to give the plaintiffs a reasonable time for the production of the sanction, and ordered that if in case they produced it, the order for sale should be affirmed, otherwise the plaintiff’s application for sale should be dismissed. Tramways.

Tramways Act (Bom. Act I of 1874), s. 24—“Regulating the travelling”—Meaning of the words—Regulation made under the section for regulating the conduct of the Company’s servants—Illegality of such regulation.—The words “regulating the travelling” in s. 24 of the Bombay Tramways Act (Bom. Act I of 1874) mean laying down rules as to how persons shall travel, that is to say, rules for the conduct and behaviour of the persons who travel, and cannot be held to include rules for the conduct of the Company’s servants, prescribing what they shall do, or what they shall not do, in the matter, for instance, of issuing tickets.

S. 24 of Bombay Act I of 1874 authorizes the Bombay Tramway Company to make regulations “for regulating the travelling in or upon any carriage belonging to them.” Under this section the Company made the following regulation:

“Any conductor who shall neglect to issue a ticket to a passenger, or shall issue to such passenger a ticket bearing a number other than one of the numbers contained in such books, or shall issue a ticket of a lower denomination than the amount of the fare, or non-consecutive in number, or a Trust.

A mistake by a hereditary trustee of a devasthan as to his true legal position does not of necessity afford a ground for removing him from his post of manager, and entrusting it to new hands.
The management of a devasthan being found to be lax and improvident, but not fraudulent and dishonest, the Court declined to remove the manager, but appointed a devasthan committee to supervise and control him, and framed a scheme for the management of the trust. Trustees.

(1) Charity—Public charity—Suit for removal of trustees of a public charity and for account—Jurisdiction—District Court—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539.—A suit to remove the trustees of a public charity, and to compel them to account and to make good the losses sustained by the charity in consequence of their default, is a suit which falls within the scope of s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), and must, therefore, be instituted in a District Court, and not in a Subordinate Judges Court. SAYAD HUSSEINMAN v. COLLECTOR OF KAIRA, 21 B. 48...

(2) Charity—Suit against de facto manager or trustees by jure trustees—Dismissal of such suit as barred by limitation—Subsequent suit against same defendant by Advocate-General under s. 539 of Civ. Pro. Code—Such suit not affected by first suit—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 539—Res judicata.—In 1887 certain persons alleging that they had been appointed trustees of a temple and its property by its founder Purshotam, brought a suit to evict Purshotam's son from the premises, alleging that he had been their gummasta, but that they had dismissed him and that he refused to give up the property. The High Court dismissed that suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation.

In 1999 the plaintiffs brought the present suit with the consent of the Advocate-General, under s. 539 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), against the same defendant, alleging that after Purshotam's death the defendant had entered into possession of the property and for some years had carried on the trusts created by his father Purshotam; but that latterly he had claimed the property as his own and refused to perform the trusts. They prayed that trustees might be appointed and the property made over to such trustees. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs in both the suits were the same, viz., persons representing the same castrues que trustent, i.e., the devotees of the temple or the general public; that they sued in the same right, and that as the plaintiffs in the former suit were held barred by limitation, the plaintiffs in the present suit were also barred.

Held, that the present suit was not barred. The plaintiffs in the former suit had no general warrant, such as is conferred on plaintiffs suing under s. 539 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to represent the public, the objects of the charity. They based their title to sue on their particular appointment by Purshotam, and when it was found that they had by limitation lost their rights to the title derived from that appointment they ceased to represent the public just as though they had been removed from their office. The de jure managers and trustees of a public charity losing their right by limitation to oust the de facto trustee does not confer on the latter immunity from suit on the part of the Advocate-General or the temple.

Consular Court—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Consular Court over persons not resident within a British Protectorate—Aiding the waging of war against a friendly power—Africa Orders in Council, 1889, 1892, 1893.—Two natives of a German Protectorate were convicted by the English Consular Court of Uganda of aiding and abetting the King of Unyoro in waging war against the King of Uganda and the Queen-Empress under ss. 48 and 50 of the Africa Order in Council of 1893, as supplemented by the Order of Council of 1892 and 1893. One of them was also convicted of slave-dealing.

Held, that the English Consular Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the accused, even if subjects of a Signatory Power, were not resident, and other offences were not committed, within a British Protectorate.

Held, also, that the alleged fact that the 'lucus in quo' was in British military occupation gave no jurisdiction to the Consular Court. Imperatrix v. Juma, 22 B. 54

The defendants contended that under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) only three years' arrears could be recovered. In a previous suit brought by the plaintiff in 1874 against the same defendants it was decided by the High Court that twelve years' arrears could be recovered. The lower Court now held that this decision continued to bind the parties, and that, therefore, the present claim should be allowed. It accordingly passed a decree for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, and also directed that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff and his heirs for the future his share in the allowance.

Held, varying the decree, that the plaintiff under the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) was only entitled to recover arrears for three years.

A point of law though decided in a suit between the same parties can never be res judicata.

Held, also, that the order in the decree as to payment in future was bad. It could not be executed, as the amount of the allowance was variable and the defendants were not liable until they obtained payment of the allowance from Government. Chamanlal v. Bapubhai, 22 B. 669

(2) Inheritance—Bom. Act V of 1886, s. 2—Retrospective effect—Vatan—Vatan becoming the property of widow and daughter—Heirs.—S. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886 is not retrospective.

A vatan having devolved on the widow and daughter of a deceased Mahomedan as his heirs, and each having become owner of her share in it, in so far as a vatan can be held in ownership.

Vatan—(Concluded).

Held, that on the death of the widow in 1900, leaving no qualified male heirs, the daughter was entitled to succeed as her heir. RAHIMKHAN v.

(3) Kulkarni vatan—Joshi wriiti—Purchaser of share in—Obstruction in performance of duties—Injunction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54.—The plaintiff, who had bought a share in a kulkarni vatan and joshi wriiti, was obstructed by the defendants in the performance of his duties.

Held, that he was entitled to an injunction against the defendants. MORO
v. ANANT, 21 B. 821

(4) Share of vatan—Vatan divided into takshims or shares—Decree by holder of one share against holder of other—Execution of decree—Collector's certificate forbidding alienation—Vatan Act (Bomb. Act III of 1874), ss. 4 and 10 —Validity of Collector's certificate.—There cannot be two separate vatans in connection with one hereditary office: therefore, when a vatan is broken up into shares or takshims, those takshims, do not constitute separate vatans.

Where the Collector's certificate under s. 10 of the Vatan Act was based on a misunderstanding of the term "vatan."

Held, that his certificate was illegal and could not be accepted by the Court.
RAMANGAVDA v. SHIVAPAGAVDA, 22 B. 601

(5) Vatanar—Vatanar family—Hereditary Offices (Bombay Act III of 1874), s. 25—Suit for declaration of right to represent family—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the branch of the Gavda family which he represented was older than that represented by one of the defendants. The object which he desired to obtain by a declaration in that form was to influence the Collector in determining whether he should be recognized as the representative vatanar in respect of the four annas' share which the Gavda family possessed in a patelki vatan.

Held, that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, since the declaration sought, if made, would in effect be a declaration of plaintiff's status as representative vatanar. This, however, equally with the duty of ascertaining the custom of the vatan as to service was a duty which by s. 25 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) was imposed on the Collector and not upon the Civil Court. RAOJI v.

Vatanar.

(1) Who a—Person having an hereditary interest—Hereditary interest, what is —Hereditary Offices Act (Bomb. Act III of 1874), ss. 4 and 5—Amending Act (Bomb. Act V of 1886), s. 2.—Giriappa by his will devised all his property, which was vatan property, to Vekanguda, a distant cousin. The plaintiff as the nearest heir of Giriappa claimed the property, contending that Venkanguda had not an "hereditary interest" in the vatan within the meaning of s. 4 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, III of 1874, that he was not a "vatanar" capable of taking under the will of Giriappa, within the meaning of s. 5, and that the will of Giriappa was, therefore, inoperative.

Held, that Venkanguda had not "an hereditary interest" in the vatan, and that the devise to him was, therefore, inoperative. The expression in
s. 4, "persons having an hereditary interest in a vatan," means persons having a present interest of an hereditary character in the vatan and does not include persons who may have a spee successionis however remote.
"Hereditary interest" means an interest acquired by inheritance as distinguished from an interest acquired by purchase, gift or other modes of acquisition. CHINAYA v. BHIMANGUDA, 21 B. 797

Vendor and Purchaser.

(1) Contract to purchase—Construction—Good title—Property in Cantonment—Rights of Government in such property—Contract making no mention of Government rights—Knowledge of purchaser—Suit by purchaser for specific performance or return of earnest-money.—Earnest-money when repayable—Amendment of plaint so as to claim refund of earnest-money—Practice—Procedure.—On October 12th, 1887, the first defendant executed the following agreement, in favour of plaintiff with respect to certain property situated in the Poona Cantonment:—"I have agreed to sell to you both my bungalows described above, including the sites and buildings in the compounds, rooms for servants, stables, out-houses... and I have this day received from you Rs. 5,000 as earnest-money. After the sale deed in regard to the said bungalows is executed I will get them transferred to your name in the Brigade-Major's office." On the same day the first defendant received from the plaintiff Rs. 5,000 as earnest-money. A notice of the proposed sale was published in the newspapers, upon which the Poona Cantonment Committee wrote to the plaintiff stating that Government possessed certain rights over the property.
Plaintiff then demanded that the first defendant should obtain from Government and transfer to him a full and complete title in the property.
The defendant refused and prepared a draft deed transferring the ordinary cantonment tenure, which was a mere occupancy, and sent it to plaintiff. Plaintiff declined to accept it and brought this suit to compel the first defendant to execute a deed transferring to him a full and complete title for possession of the property and for rent and damages.
Although apparently not arising upon the pleadings, an issue was raised by the parties as to whether by his conduct the plaintiff had forfeited his right to have the earnest-money returned to him. This issue was, however, struck out at the trial by the Subordinate Judge, who also refused to allow the plaint to be amended by inserting a claim for the repayment of the earnest-money, on the ground that it would change the character of the suit from being one based on the contract of the 12th October, 1887, into a suit based on the fact that there had never been a contract at all between the parties. He dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and contended that the contract was that the defendant should give an absolute title to the property, and that as he was unable to carry out this contract he should return the earnest-money to the plaintiff.

 Held (1), upon the evidence (Candy, J., dissentient) that the knowledge that the property in question was held upon cantonment tenure was not brought home to the plaintiff, and that the Court could not impute such knowledge to him; that the terms of the contract itself were calculated to induce the plaintiff to believe that the defendant was selling not a mere reversible license to occupy the land, but the land itself. The defendant agreed to sell the land, and having done so the onus lay upon him to show not only that he intended to sell only cantonment occupancy rights, but also that the plaintiff understood that he was purchasing the same.

(2) That the defendant being in default, and being unable to give the title contracted for, should return the earnest-money to the plaintiff.

 Held (by the Full Bench) that the amendment of the plaint so as to make it include a claim for the refund of the earnest-money ought to have been allowed, although not asked for until a late stage of the case.

The right to specific performance of a contract, or, in the alternative, to a return of the earnest-money should be determined in one and the same suit, and the plaintiff failing to obtain a decree for specific performance should not be driven to a separate suit to recover back his deposit, if he is entitled to relief in that form.

The circumstance that a purchaser is not entitled to specific performance is by no means conclusive against his right to a return of the deposit. If, having regard to the terms of the contract, he is justified in refusing to accept the title, which the vendor is able to give, he is entitled to a refund of the deposit. IBRAHIMBHAI v. FLETCHER, 21 B. 827 (F.B.) ... 556

(2) Covenant for title—Breach—Damages—Measure of damages.—A purchaser evicted from his holding is entitled to recover from a vendor who has guaranteed his title the value of the land at the date of the eviction.

Though in ordinary cases a mortgagee when deprived of his security can only recover his mortgage-money as the damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, yet where the mortgage deed contains a covenant on the part of the mortgagee not to pay off the mortgage for a term of years, the mortgagee is entitled to damages for being deprived of a favourable and long enduring investment.

(3) Deed of sale set aside for want of consideration—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25.—On the 15th November, 1892, A executed to B a deed of sale of certain land. The deed was duly registered and it recited that the consideration money, Rs. 90, had been duly paid. B got into possession of the land. A subsequently brought a suit to set aside the deed of sale, and to recover possession, alleging that he had been induced to execute the deed when incapacitated from illness, and that the consideration money had not been paid. Both the lower Courts found that the consideration money had not been paid. The lower appellate Court dismissed the suit, holding that A’s remedy was to sue for the consideration money if it was unpaid, and that he had a lien on the land for the amount, but that he could not set aside the deed.

Held, that the deed should be set aside, and the plaintiff should recover possession.

Per FULTON, J.—The sale was void for want of consideration. Section 25 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) applied to the transaction.

Per FARRAN, C.J.—The judgment itself appears to me to disclose a state of facts which shows that there was no sale at all and that the plaintiff was tricked into executing and registering the conveyance. I am not, however, as at present advised, prepared to assent to the train of thought which puts conveyances of lands in the Mofussil perfected by possession or registration, where the consideration expressed in the conveyance to have been paid has not in fact been paid, in the same category as contracts void for want of consideration. TATTI v. BABAJI, 22 B. 176

(4) Sale of land—Trees standing on land—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 8.—Trees being attached to the earth are included in the legal incidents of the land and pass to the transferee under a deed of sale of the land on which they stand, unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied. No such intention is necessarily implied because the trees are mortgaged prior to the sale and no mention of the mortgage is made in the sale-deed. PANDURANG v. BHIMRAO, 22 B. 610

(5) Specific performance—Suit by purchaser against vendor for specific performance of contract of sale—Covenant by purchaser to build a temple—Specific performance refused—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 21.—On the 15th November, 1893, the first defendant agreed to sell a house to the plaintiff. The contract contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiff to build a temple and to secure an annuity to the vendor and his wife. On the 31st of the same month, the first defendant sold and conveyed the same house to the second defendant and put him in possession. In a suit brought by plaintiff against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for specific performance of the contract of the 15th November.

Held (1) that the second defendant was a proper party to the suit.
(2) That specific performance could not be granted, the covenants contained in the agreement being such as the Court could not enforce. RAMCHANDRA GANESHER v. RAMCHANDRA KONDAI, 22 B. 46

Wagering Contract.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Bombay Act III of 1865.—Act III of 1865 (Bombay) is still in force and has not been repealed by the Contract Act (IX of 1872).

As between the original parties a promissory note which has for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is void and, therefore, not binding in the hands of the original payee.

In order to constitute a wagering contract, neither party should intend to perform the contract, itself, but only to pay the differences. In order to ascertain the real intentions of the parties, the Court must look at all the surrounding circumstances and will even go behind a written provision of the contract to judge for itself whether such provision was inserted merely for the purpose of concealing the real nature of the transaction. The defendant employed the plaintiff from time to time as a broker to purchase Government paper and shares of the Manekji Petit Spinning and Weaving Company. The plaintiff did so to the extent of many lakhs of rupees. No delivery was given or taken, but the differences only between the contract price and the price at the date of settlement (the Vadia day in each month) were paid or received by the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant on two promissory notes given to the plaintiff by the defendant in respect of differences due by him in respect of the contracts thus made on his behalf. The defendant pleaded that he was not liable, the contracts being wagering contracts. It appeared from the evidence that the practice in the bazaar, (which was followed in this case), was for brokers to enter into such contracts in their own name and not to disclose the principals. The brokers became liable to give or take delivery. The defendant stated that he did not know the persons to whom the plaintiff sold or from whom he purchased.

Held (1) on the evidence, that the defendant authorized the plaintiff, as his broker to contract on his behalf, but in the plaintiff's own name, on the understanding that the defendant would indemnify the plaintiff and pay him brokerage in respect of the transactions entered into by him on behalf or benefit of defendant. Accordingly the plaintiff did enter into contracts in his own name with third parties. The defendant was not directly a party to them, nor did his name appear anywhere in the contracts themselves.

(2) That the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the losses which he paid to third parties in respect of the contracts made by the plaintiff on the defendant's behalf and that such losses were a valid consideration pro tanto for the notes sued upon. No doubt, so far as the defendant was concerned, all the contracts were merely wagering or gambling transactions, but there was no evidence to show that, so far as the third parties were concerned, they were otherwise than genuine. The plaintiff was not, as between himself and the defendant the principal in the transactions. He was merely the broker with a personal liability to the third parties. There was nothing to show that as between himself and the third parties the contracts were not perfectly genuine. The non-delivery and payment of differences on hand was a matter of subsequent arrangement. If he was liable to be called upon to receive or make actual delivery, then, in the absence of any express agreement to the contrary, a similar liability rested on the defendant himself, whatever might have been the defendant's own intentions. As the contracts between the plaintiff and the third parties were not void, so the contracts between the defendant and the plaintiff to indemnify the plaintiff in respect of these contracts were also valid.

The mere fact that the plaintiff, knowing the defendant's position and means, must have inferred that he did not mean or intend to perform the contracts in specie, was not, per se, without more, sufficient to render the contract invalid and not binding on the defendant. The inference of the plaintiff would not be, per se, a binding agreement. PEROSHA CURSETJI PARAKH v. MANEKJI DOSADHOY WATCHA, 23 B. 899

Will.
(1) Execution of will—Codicil—Testamentary acts—Incacity from illness—Influence not amounting to coercive influence.—A Khoja Mahomedan resident in Bombay made his will in 1886, appointing his wife, and his eldest son by a former wife, to execute it. The testator died on the 9th February, 1891, having at different times, in the interval, made four codicils. The widow, applying for probate of all the above, propounded a fifth codicil, alleging it to have been made by her husband on the 9th February, 1891. The son petitioned for probate to be delivered to him and to the widow, but only of the will and of the first two codicils, contesting the three later codicils as having been made under undue influence exercised by the wife. He disputed the last codicil, not only on the ground of undue influence, but the codicil had been, in fact, executed, but because at the time of the alleged execution, his father was almost unconscious, and unable to understand what he was doing.

The High Court, in its original testamentary jurisdiction, refused probate of the three disputed codicils, granting probate of the will and of the first two codicils only. The Appellate High Court granted probate of the will and of the five codicils, finding that no undue influence had been exercised, and that the fifth had been executed by the testator with knowledge and comprehension of its contents, and of his free will.

The Judicial Committee affirmed the judgment of the Appellate Court as to the absence of undue influence. In their opinion, if there was no evidence, and there was not, to show coercion in the special matter of the codicils, general assertions of the wife's commanding character, and of the husband's weakness, and of their differences, went for little.

But, in regard to the fifth codicil, they affirmed the judgment of the original Court, finding the evidence to have left upon the inference that the testator had been, at the time when it was alleged by the widow that he had made this codicil, too exhausted and ill for such a testamentary act.
