Neither the provisions of s. 33 of Act XI of 1859, nor those of s. 2, Bengal Act VII of 1868, affect the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit to set aside a sale under a certificate on any of the following grounds, namely, that no arrears were due at all, that no notice was served in accordance with the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1860, or that the provisions of s. 290 of the Civil Procedure Code were infringed.

The words "in respect of sales in execution of decrees" in s. 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1860, do not include any proceedings instituted after the sale for setting it aside. Sections 311 and 312 therefore of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to sales under a certificate.

The infringement of the provisions of s. 290 of the Civil Procedure Code is not a mere irregularity, but it vitiates the sale—Bakshi Nand Kishore v. Malak Chand (1).

The provision in s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1860, as to the certificate becoming absolute and acquiring the force and effect of a final decree, [2] does not come into operation unless the notice required by s. 10 is actually served.

The only remedy of a judgment-debtor whose property has been sold in execution of a certificate issued under Bengal Act VII of 1860, and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, is by way of an appeal under s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868.

The effect of s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1860 is that Act XI of 1859, and Bengal Act VII of 1868, and Bengal Act VII of 1880, are to be considered as if the provisions contained in them were contained in one Act so far as such construction is consistent with the tenor of the last mentioned Act. By the force therefore of s. 2 of the Act of 1880, the provisions of s. 2 of the Act of 1868 became applicable to a sale, under an execution issued upon a certificate made under the Act of 1880.

Bengal Act VII of 1880 is an Act for the recovery of all kinds of public demands, and therefore applies to cases of road or other public cesses.

Plaintiffs (appellants) were the owners of 1 anna 4 pie out of 5 annas 4 pie of Mehal Deapore, which fractional share forms an estate by itself. Under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, separate accounts for payment of Government revenue were opened in respect of the shares of the plaintiffs (1 anna 4 pie), of one Nand Kishore (10 pie), and of one Achabur (10 pie), leaving the residue (2 annas 2 pie) joint. In the Collector’s register 10 pie, 1 anna 4 pie, 10 pie, and 2 annas 2 pie shares bear the numbers 112, 113, 114 and 111, respectively.

A certificate No. 46 for the realization of the arrears of road and public works cesses due up to the September kist of 1880 from No. 113 was prepared on the 3rd of January 1881.

On the same date a notice was issued upon the plaintiffs under the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880, calling upon them, within a certain time, to pay up the arrears.

A return having been made of the due service of this notice, and the arrears not having been paid within the time mentioned in the notice, on the 18th April 1880 the certificate was recorded as a decree in favour of the Secretary of State for India against the plaintiffs.

The certificate was enforced as a decree under the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880, and a sale notification, dated the 15th August 1881, was issued under s. 287 of the Civil Procedure Code, fixing the 16th September 1881 as the date of the sale [3] of 1 anna 4 pie of the mehal in dispute belonging to the plaintiffs. It was sold on that date and purchased by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the name of the defendant No. 1. On the 2nd November 1881, plaintiffs made an application for setting aside the sale on the grounds mentioned in it. But the Collector rejected it, treating it as an application under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code. He rejected it on the ground that it was not made within the time (30 days from the date of the sale) prescribed in the Limitation Act for such applications. An appeal was preferred to the Commissioner, who rejected it on the 11th August 1882, on the ground that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code for the reversal of an auction-sale on the ground of irregularities do not apply to a sale held under Bengal Act VII of 1880; that, under s. 2 of Act VII of 1868, an appeal lies to the Commissioner against such sale, but that the said appeal was not preferred within the time allowed by it.

On the 8th August 1883, the present suit was brought for setting aside the sale and for the recovery of the possession of the disputed mehal, it being alleged that the defendants’ auction-purchasers took possession of it in the month of October 1882.

The Secretary of State for India (defendant No. 4) and the auction-purchasers (defendants) filed written statements answering the suit on various grounds.
The lower Court dismissed the suit without taking any evidence, holding, first, that under s. 33 of Act XI of 1859 the suit was barred, no appeal having been preferred to the Commissioner under s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868; and, secondly, that even if the aforesaid enactments did not govern the proceeding instituted for setting aside the sale, but it was governed by ss. 311 and 312 of the Civil Procedure Code, the present suit was barred by the provisions of the latter section.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Munshi Mahomed Yusuf, for the appellants.

Baboo Anoda Persad Banerji and Baboo Kali Kissen Sen, for the respondents.

In appeal it is contended before us that the present suit is not barred, because the sale sought to be set aside was null and void. This contention is based upon three grounds: first, that there were no arrears due at all; secondly, that no notice was served upon the plaintiffs as is required by the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880; and, thirdly, that the provisions of s. 290 of the Civil Procedure Code were infringed, inasmuch as the auction-sale was held before the expiration of thirty days, calculated from the date on which the copy of the proclamation had been fixed up in the Court-house of the Collector, who in this case acted as the Judge ordering the sale.

We are of opinion that this contention is valid, and that the Subordinate Judge was not right in dismissing the suit, upon a preliminary point, without taking evidence. We shall state hereafter the grounds upon which our decision is founded. But as the defendants have taken another preliminary objection in bar of the suit, it will be convenient to dispose of it here.

It was contended by the defendants in the lower Court that, as no suit was brought by the plaintiff within one year from the date of the service of notice upon them, the certificate issued against them became absolute and acquired the force and effect of a final decree of a Civil Court under s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1880. This contention cannot stand, because, in considering this preliminary point before taking any evidence at all in the case, we must assume the facts stated in the plaint to be correct. One of these facts is, that no notice was served upon the plaintiff under s. 10 of the Act. Section 8, clause (b) provides that the judgment-debtor may, at any time, within one year after the service upon him of such notice as is mentioned in s. 10, bring a suit in the Civil Court to contest his liability. Section 10 requires a notice to be served upon the judgment-debtor with a copy of the certificate issued. It further provides that, from and after the service of such notice, such certificate shall bind all immoveable property of such judgment-debtor situate within the jurisdiction of such Collector, in the same manner and with like effect as if such immoveable [5] property had been attached under the provisions of s. 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Then to come back again to s. 8, it lays down that, if no such suit is instituted within the said period of one year, or if any such suit having been instituted is decided against such judgment-debtor, such certificate shall become absolute, and shall have to all intents and purposes the same force and effect as a final decree of a Civil Court.

It is clear to us from these provisions that, unless the notice required by s. 10 is actually served, the provision in s. 8, as to the certificate becoming absolute and acquiring the force and effect of a final decree of a Civil Court, does not come into operation. Consequently the contention of the defendants upon this point cannot prevail, until the question raised in the plaint, namely, whether or not the notice required by s. 10 was served upon the plaintiffs, is decided against them. Then, again, supposing that the notice was served, the certificate issued in this case would then by efflux of time have the effect of a final decree. But even in that case, if the plaintiffs establish the third ground set forth above, they would be entitled to have the sale set aside, because that ground has nothing to do with the validity or otherwise of the certificate issued in this case.

That the non-service of notice required by s. 10 is an irregularity in the Collector's proceedings, which the Civil Court has the power of taking cognizance of in deciding the question, whether such certificate should be held to bind the judgment-debtor, was decided by this Court in Hem Lotta v. Sreedhone Borooa (1).

Having disposed of this preliminary ground, we shall now deal with the grounds upon which the decision of the lower Court is founded. We shall take up, first, the question whether the present suit is barred by the provisions of s. 312 of the Civil Procedure Code. The sale in question in this case was confirmed by the Collector under a rubokari, dated the 15th September 1882. The Collector confirmed the sale under s. 312 of the Civil Procedure Code. One of the questions we have to decide in this case is whether that section is applicable at all.

Supposing that there are material irregularities in publishing or conducting a sale held in execution of a certificate issued under [6] Bengal Act VII of 1880, and supposing such irregularities have caused substantial injury to the owner of the property sold, what are his remedies? Is he entitled to proceed under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, or s. 2, Bengal Act VII of 1868 by way of appeal to the Revenue Commissioner against such sale? Or is he entitled to pursue both these remedies? There is no express provision in Act VII of 1880, or the cognate Acts, that the judgment-debtor in a case like this would be entitled to pursue both remedies. It would also create very great confusion, and might result in conflicting orders of concurrent Courts if it were held that both these remedies were open to him. Section 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 says that all the practice and procedure provided by the said Code of Civil Procedure in respect of sales in execution of decree, &c., &c., shall apply to every execution issued to enforce a certificate. It seems to us that the words "in respect of sales in execution of decrees," do not include any proceedings instituted after the sale for setting it aside. We think, therefore, that only the provisions of the Procedure Code up to the stage on which the auction-sale is held apply to an execution issued to enforce a certificate and therefore the provisions of ss. 311 and 312 are not applicable. Section 312 is therefore no bar to the present suit; but even if Section 312 were applicable, the plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed if they establish that the sale in question was wholly null and void.

(1) 3 C. 771.
We are of opinion that the only remedy of a judgment-debtor whose property has been sold in execution of a certificate issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880, and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, is by way of an appeal under s. 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868. This view has been taken by the lower Court, and we concur in it. But we do not think that the ground upon which this conclusion of the lower Court is based is the correct ground upon which it should be based; because the words, "not being a sale made under and by virtue of any execution issued upon a certificate made as hereinafter provided," in s. 2, Bengal Act VII of 1868, having been repealed by Act VII of 1880, it does not necessarily follow that the Legislature intended that an appeal should lie to the Commissioner of Revenue against [7] a sale held under Act VII of 1880, in execution issued to enforce a certificate. It may be reasonably held that those words were repealed, because all the provisions regarding a sale under an execution issued upon a certificate contained in the subsequent part of Act VII of 1868, were also repealed by Bengal Act VII of 1880. But we think that, by the force of s. 2 of Act VII of 1880, the provisions in s. 2, Bengal Act VII of 1868 became applicable to a sale under an execution issued upon a certificate made under Act VII of 1880. Section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 is to the following effect: "This Act, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, shall be construed as one with Act XI of 1859, passed by the Governor-General in Council, and Act VII of 1868 passed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in Council. The powers given by this Act shall be deemed to be in addition to, and not in derogation of, any powers conferred by any Act now being in force for the recovery of any due debt or demand to which the provisions of this Act are applicable." The effect of this section is, that Act XI of 1859 and Act VII of 1868 and Act VII of 1880 are to be considered as if the provisions contained in them were contained in one Act so far as such construction is consistent with the tenor of the last mentioned Act. That being so, the sale in this case may be considered as a sale under Act VII of 1868 within s. 2 of that Act. The appeal under that section against the sale, therefore, lies to the Revenue Commissioner. Similarly all sales under Act VII of 1880 would become final in the manner and at the time provided in s. 27 of Act XI of 1859. But it is doubtful whether s. 33 of Act XI of 1859 is applicable to the present case. That section says: "No sale for arrears of revenue or other demands realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable, etc." There is no provision in any Act or Regulation that we are aware of by which a demand for road and public cesses is realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable. But it is not necessary for us to express any decided opinion upon this point in the view which we take of this case. We think that, if the three grounds which are taken before us are established, s. 33 of Act XI of 1859 would be no bar to the plaintiffs' success even if it be conceded that it is applicable to the present suit. If [8] these grounds are established, the sale in question would, in our opinion, be deemed null and void, and according to the ruling of the majority of the Judges of the Full Bench in Lala Mobarak Singh v. The Secretary of State for India (1), s. 33, Act XI of 1859 cannot be set up as a bar to a suit of this nature.

(1) II C. 200.
As regards the third ground taken before us, it is alleged in the fourth paragraph of the plaint that a copy of the sale proclamation was fixed up on the Court-house of the Collector on the 18th of August 1881, and the sale took place on the 16th September 1881. If these facts are substantiated, then it is quite clear that the provisions of s. 290 of the Civil Procedure Code were infringed, and such an infringement is not a mere irregularity, but it vitiates the sale—Bakshi Nand Kishore v. Malak Chand (1).

Then as regards the first ground, it is true that there is no clear allegation in the plaint that there were no arrears due at all. But it seems to us that the facts stated in it are consistent with a case based upon an allegation of this nature. But this issue, in our opinion, ought not to be raised until the plaintiffs amend their plaint and insert therein a clear allegation to that effect.

There remains to notice only one other point which was raised before us. It was contended that the sale in this case was bad, inasmuch as the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880 are wholly inapplicable to the present case. It is said that under s. 98 of Act IX of 1880, arrears of road and public cesses are not realizable under Bengal Act VII of 1880. Section 98, Bengal Act VII of 1880, is to the following effect. "Every amount due, or which may become due, to any Collector, under the provisions of this Act in respect of any arrears of cess, of any expenses, incurred, of any fee or costs payable, of any notices served, of any fines imposed or on any other account, may be realized by such Collector by any process provided by any law for the time being in force for the realization of public demands, and shall be deemed to be a public demand under such law." It is contended before us that, as there is no Act or Regulation in force for the realization of public demands generally, this provision has no operation. It is true that the preamble of Act VII of 1880 and the heading of it describe the Act as an Act to amend the law for the recovery [9] of certain public demands, but s. 1 says that this Act may be called (The Public Demands Recovery Act, 1880). It seems to us that by the words "any law for the time being in force for the realization of public demands" used in s. 98, Act IX of 1880, the Legislature referred to Act VII of 1880. It was not an Act for the recovery of certain public demands, but it was an Act for the recovery of all kinds of public demands. The heading and the preamble indicate that it was enacted for amending the law for the recovery of certain public demands. But the Act itself is an Act for the recovery of all kinds of public demands. We are, therefore, of opinion that this contention cannot succeed.

The result is that the decree of the lower Court will be set aside, and the case will be remanded to that Court to decide it in accordance with the remarks contained in this judgment. Costs will abide the result.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Porter.

Ram Logan Ojha and Another (Two of the Defendants) v. Bhawani Ojha and Another (Plaintiffs).* [23rd July, 1886.]

A suit will lie in a Civil Court to set aside a sale held under Bengal Act VII of 1880, where the sale proclamation is issued against the whole sixteen annas of the estate, but a sale held only of a portion thereof.

The effect of s. 19 of that Act is, that it relates to the practice and procedure in respect of sales, that is, to the practice and procedure of executing Courts in the carrying out of sales.

[Cons., 26 C. 414 (F.B.) =3 C.W.N. 233; 22 C. 419 (123); 5 C.W.N. 521=29 C. 73 (F.B.); 29 C. 94 N.6 C.W.N. 246; R., 11 C.W.N. 745 (756)=34 C. 787; D., 6 C.W.N. 302 (305).]

This was a suit brought to set aside a sale held under the Certificate Act, Bengal Act VII of 1880, on account of arrears of road cess for an instalment due in June 1881. The plaintiff stated that he held a two-anna share in three out of the four villages composing Mehal Ismailpore Koel, and that his co-sharers in the remainder were the defendants, that he had opened on the 5th May 1882, a separate account for payment of the road and public works cesses on his own share, and had paid all cesses due therefor; that on the 15th May 1882, his share in mouza Ismailpore Koel was attached and sold under the Public Demands Act by the Collector, and was purchased by defendant No. 25; that on the 14th June 1882 he (the plaintiff) took objection to the sale before the Deputy Collector, but his objection was rejected and the sale confirmed; that on the 29th June he appealed to the Commissioner, but without success, and therefore brought this suit for the purposes above mentioned on the 10th March 1882 on the following grounds, viz.:—

(1) That the sale certificate was issued against the whole sixteen annas of the mouza, whilst his, the plaintiff’s, share was alone sold.

(2) That the sale was advertised for noon, but was held at 8 a.m.; and that he had suffered material injury, as the property had been sold at an inadequate price.

(3) That the sale proclamation was not duly published.

The defendants put in various written statements, the chief defendants contending that no suit would lie in a Civil Court to set aside a sale held under Bengal Act VII of 1880; that the plaintiff had no right to appeal from the order of the 14th June 1882, to the Commissioner, the order of the Collector being final under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code; that the suit was barred, it not having been brought within one year from the date of the order confirming the sale of the 14th of June 1882.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was maintainable; that s. 312 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply; that the plaintiff had not paid all arrears due for road cess; that limitation ran against the plaintiff from the date of the confirmation of the sale on the 14th June 1882, no appeal lying to the Commissioner; that, although there was no appeal to the Commissioner, yet the plaintiff, having appealed to that officer in all good faith, was, under s. 14 of the Limitation Act, entitled to deduct the time during which he was prosecuting that appeal, and that, therefore, the suit was not barred; that the sale was void, inasmuch as the sale proclamation had been issued against the whole sixteen-annas of the mehal whilst the plaintiff's share therein was alone sold; and inasmuch as the sale proclamation was not duly published in all of the villages composing the mehal, and as the sale was [11] held at 8 A.M., whereas it had been published as to be held at noon, that the plaintiffs had suffered material injury from such sale, as there was abundant evidence to show that the property was of far greater value than the price it was sold for; he therefore set aside the sale.

Two of the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Evans, Mr. C. Gregory, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the appellants.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, and Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Porter, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit brought substantially to set aside a sale of an undivided share in Mouzah Ismailpore, forming a part of a mehal which also includes other mouzahs. The plaintiff being one of the sharers in the mehal, his interests were sold for arrears of road cess; and he sues the purchaser and the other persons interested in the transaction.

The lower Court has given a decree in the plaintiff's favour.

It is said, first, that such a suit will not, in any case, lie in a Civil Court; and the ground for that contention is that, in Bengal Act VII of 1880, s. 19, it is said that a certificate may be enforced and executed by all or any of the ways and means mentioned and provided in the Code of Civil Procedure for the enforcement and execution of decrees for money; and that all the practice and procedure provided by the Code of Civil Procedure in respect of sales in execution of decrees, and in various other matters enumerated, shall apply to every execution issued to enforce such certificate. It is said that the effect of this is to incorporate the whole of the enactments of ss. 311 and 312, and the following sections of the Code of Civil Procedure into the certificate procedure; and that therefore, if a judgment-debtor is desirous of objecting to a sale which has taken place, his remedy is to put in his objection in the Court of the Revenue Officer before the sale is confirmed, and then, if his claim be disallowed, to [12] appeal to this Court against the disallowance of his claim; and that under s. 312 no civil suit will lie.

We are distinctly of opinion that that is not the effect of s. 19. Section 19 relates to the practice and procedure in respect of sales, that is, the practice and procedure of executing Courts in the carrying out of sales; and that that is the meaning of the section is rendered clear by the words which follow, giving a number of particular matters beyond the mere conduct of the sale to which such practice and procedure apply. That is, we think, the natural construction of the words; and it has been held to be the true construction by another Division Bench of this Court (Mitter and Norris, JJ.) in Sadhusaran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal (1). The suit therefore will lie if the facts justify it.

(1) 14 C. 1.
It is unnecessary to inquire whether the effect of s. 2, Bengal Act VII of 1880, incorporating the provisions of Act VII of 1868, and at the same time amending it, was to give, in a case like the present, an appeal to the Commissioner. In the case already referred to, Mitter and Norris, JJ., answered that question in the affirmative. In this case it does not arise, because, rightly or wrongly, an appeal to the Commissioner was made. Nor is it necessary to inquire whether the provisions of s. 33 of Act XI of 1859 have any effect in a case of this kind; and whether therefore it is a condition precedent to the filing of a suit in a Civil Court that an appeal should be made to the Commissioner, because here such an appeal was made.

Then, again, no question of limitation arises in this case, because the appeal to the Commissioner did or did not lie. If it did lie, then it is clear that the plaintiff's period of limitation would begin to run from the date of the Commissioner's decision and the plaintiff is consequently in time. On the other hand, if the appeal to the Commissioner did not lie, then the plaintiff is in time for another reason, because under s. 14 of the Limitation Act the period during which the proceedings were pending before the Commissioner would have to be deducted. This disposes of the questions of law raised in the case.

[13] As to the merits, we do not entertain the slightest hesitation in agreeing with the lower Court in the conclusion at which it has arrived. The subject-matter of the suit is a share in a mouzah, forming part of a mehal, in which there are a large number of shareholders. The certificate was made against Bhawani Ojha, one of the present plaintiffs "and others." Now, one or other of two things must be the case about that certificate. Either the words "and others" mean the other shareholders in the mehal, or else the certificate is an absolute nullity, because, on the face of it, it does not show against whom it is made. If it means the other shareholders, then it is a certificate against this man and his co-sharers; and, though it is drawn up in an unsatisfactory manner, we think that that is probably the true construction of the certificate. Taking it, therefore, that the certificate was made against Bhawani Ojha and the other shareholders of the mehal, what follows? A sale proclamation was issued in which the thing advertised for sale was the whole sixteen annas of the mehal, subject to the whole of the sudder jumma; and that was the only thing that could be sold. When the time for the sale came, however, what was sold was not the mehal, nor any part of the mehal, nor one or more of the mouzahs in the mehal, but the interest of a person entitled to a share in three out of the four mouzahs of the mehal. That, it appears to us, made the sale an absolute nullity. One thing was advertised for sale, and another was sold, so that in fact there was no sale proclamation at all. But even if that did not make the sale a nullity, and if it were necessary to inquire whether any damage had arisen by reason of the irregularity in the sale, there would be no doubt in the matter. There is necessarily grave damage in a case where an estate is liable to be sold, and is offered for sale, and then one shareholder is selected as a victim, and his property only is sold for the debts of all the shareholders.

For these reasons we think that the decree of the lower Court is correct, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[14] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Lalit Mohun Roy (Judgment-debtor) v. Binodai Dare, Minor, Moharani of Burdwan, by her next friends, Lalla Bunbehari Kapur and another, Managers under the Court of Wards (Decree-holder).* [26 August 1886.]

Sale for arrears of rent—Under-tenure—Bengal Act (VIII of 1869), ss. 34, 59—61 and 65—Sale of property other than under-tenure.

Where a decree had been obtained for arrears of rent of an under-tenure and in execution thereof application was made for the attachment and sale of a certain property of the judgment-debtor, other than the tenure for which the arrears were due—objection was taken that the kabuliát stipulated that the tenure itself should be first sold in execution of the decree. Held, that the kabuliát not being referred to, or incorporated with, the terms of the decree, it was not open to the judgment-debtor to go behind the decree, as to the mode in which it was to be executed. But, held, on the construction of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59—61 and 65, that the under-tenure should first be sold before any other immovable property could be made available. Section 34 of that Act (introducing the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code into rent suits, "save as is in Act VIII of 1869 otherwise provided") made no alteration in this respect, ss. 59—61 and s. 65 specially providing for such mode of execution.

In this case a decree was obtained by the managers, under the Court of Wards, of the Burdwan Raj, against the appellant for arrears of rent, and an application was made for execution of that decree by the attachment and sale of a certain property, other than the tenure for which the arrears of rent were due. The judgment-debtor objected to the attachment, on the ground that it was stipulated in the kabuliát that the tenure itself should be first attached and sold in satisfaction of a decree for arrears of rent, and that such a decree could only be otherwise executed should the tenure fetch less than the amount due.

The first Court allowed the objection, and refused the application for the attachment and sale of the property other than the tenure itself.

[15] On appeal the Judge reversed this decision, holding in accordance with the case of Kristo Ram Roy v. Janokee Nath Roy (1), that the decree-holder was not ordinarily bound to proceed first against the tenure, for arrears of rent of which the decree had been obtained; and that if he had bound himself by any agreement, that agreement should have been incorporated in the terms of the decree. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

The judgment of the Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.) after shortly stating the facts, proceeded as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Two questions have been raised before us by the learned counsel for the appellant. 1st, that under the terms of the kabuliát, creating

*Appeal from Order No. 425 of 1885, against the order of A. Gillon, Esq. Officiating Judge of Hooghly, dated the 9th of November 1885, reversing the order of Baboo Saroda Prosad Chatterji, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 1st of August 1885.

(1) 7 C. 748.
the tenancy between the parties, the landlord is bound to sell the tenure itself in the first instance; 2nd, that under the provisions of the Rent Law (Bengal Act VIII of 1869) the decree-holder is not entitled to sell any other immoveable property before bringing to sale the tenure itself.

As regards the first of these two contentions we are of opinion that it cannot be sustained. The decree was an ordinary decree for rent; and no reference whatever was made in it to the kabuliat or to the terms thereof, and it does not appear that the kabuliat was even filed in the rent suit. That being so, it is not open to the judgment-debtor to go behind the decree, and to insist that the terms of the kabuliat should regulate the rights and liabilities of the parties as regards the mode in which the decree should be realized.

The second point is by no means free from difficulty. Under the provisions of Act X. of 1859, there seems to have been no doubt that such a proceeding as the decree-holder now desires to adopt was unauthorized —see Desarotulla v. Nazim Nazar Ally (1), [16] and Jokhee Lall v. Nursing Narain (2). But then the question arises whether under Bengal Act

VIII of 1869 it is authorized.

The learned Government Pledger who appeared for the decree-holder contended that, under Act VIII of 1869, the decree-holder was entitled to sell either the tenure or any other immoveable property as he pleased; and in support of his contention he relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Doolar Chand Sahoo v. Lalla Chabil Chand (3), and upon the case of Kristo Ram Roy v. Janokee Nath Roy (4) decided by a Divisional Bench of this Court.

The Divisional Bench which decided that case has put a certain construction upon the abovementioned decision of the Judicial Committee, and it is a construction which is certainly favourable to the decree-holder; and if we were prepared to adopt the same construction, there would be no difficulty in holding that the judgment-debtor’s contention must fail. But we entertain doubts whether the result of the Judicial Committee’s decision is what it has been held to be by the Divisional Bench. It will be observed from an examination of the case before the Privy Council that the only question that came before it for consideration was what passed under the sale held by the Court on the 25th of July 1872, whether it was the tenure or simply the right, title and interest of the judgmentdebtor therein; and their Lordships held that what the decree-holder intended to sell, and what was in fact sold by the Court, was not the former, but the latter. In arriving at this decision they referred, among other matters, to the petition of the decree-holder, and the inventory attached to it, describing the property which he requested to be sold, and also the provisions of ss. 59 and 34 of Act VIII of 1869; and then they observed—’that although the Maharaja (the decree-holder) might, if he had pleased, have applied to sell the tenure in execution of his decree, he had also the power to proceed against the property of the judgmentdebtor.” The words “the property of the judgment-debtor” as used by the Judicial Committee in this passage evidently refer to the property described in the decree-holder’s petition and [17] inventory, and were not used by them, as we understand, as denoting any property other than the tenure. And we are inclined to think that the question whether it

(1) 1 B. L. R. A. C. 216. (2) 4 W. R. Act X 5.
(3) 6 I. A. 47=3 C. L. R. 561. (4) 7 C. 748. was competent to the decree-holder to sell any other immoveable property than the tenure in the first instance, was not considered by the Judicial Committee, and that it is still an open question.

Upon an examination of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and comparing the several sections thereof, so far they bear upon the matter before us, with the corresponding sections of Act X of 1859, it would appear that, barring the provisions of s. 34 of Act VIII of 1869, the law on the subject was substantially the same under both the Acts; and the question that arises is, whether by reason of that section the decree-holder has the right that is now claimed for him.

Section 34 of the Act runs as follows:—

"Save as in this Act is otherwise provided, suits of every description brought for any cause of action, arising under this Act, and all proceedings therein, shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure passed by the Governor-General in Council in relation to Civil Procedure as now are, or from time to time may be in force; and all the provisions of the said Act and of such other enactments shall apply to such suits."

The matters for consideration upon this section are: (1st), whether there is any provision in the Act itself regulating the order in which the under-tenure and other immoveable properties belonging to the judgmentdebtor should be sold; (2nd), whether the words ""all proceedings therein shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure"" confer upon the decree-holder the right of electing to sell, in the first instance, the tenure, or any other property, as he pleases.

Upon the two matters indicated above, we are of opinion that there is distinct provision in ss. 59 to 61 and 65 of Act VIII of 1869 indicating that, in the case of a decree for rent accruing upon an under-tenure, the under-tenure should be sold in the first instance before any other immoveable property can be sold; and that, therefore, notwithstanding that it is optional with the decree-holder either to sell the whole tenure under the Rent Law, or simply the interest of the judgment-debtor, as it may exist upon [18] the day of sale, under the Civil Procedure Code, he is bound to follow the order in which the property, upon which the rent has accrued, and other properties belonging to the tenant, may be brought to sale, as indicated in the above sections.

In view of the opinion expressed by the Divisional Bench in the case referred to above, we should, had we considered the question raised in this appeal one of general importance and likely to recur, have thought it proper to refer this case to a Full Bench. But Act VIII of 1869 has been repealed, and an entirely new Act has come into operation, and so we think a reference to a Full Bench is unnecessary.

We direct that the order of the District Judge, so far as the sale of the immoveable properties is concerned, be set aside, and that of the Sub-Judge restored.

The appellant must have his costs in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 246 (1)—Execution of cross-decrees—Jurisdiction—Bona fide purchaser—Presumption of validity of order for sale.

If a Court ordering a sale in execution of a decree has jurisdiction, a purchaser of the property sold is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the order for execution any more than into the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues. Notwithstanding anything in s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he is not bound to inquire whether the Judgment-debtor holds a cross-decree of higher amount against the decree-holder any more than he is to inquire, in an ordinary case, whether the decree, under which execution has issued, has been satisfied or not. These are questions to be determined by the Court issuing execution.

Where property, sold in execution of a valid decree, under the order of a competent Court, was purchased bona fide, and for fair value: Held, that the mere existence of a cross-decree for a higher amount in favour of the judgment-debtor, without any question of fraud, would not support a suit by the latter against the purchaser to set aside the sale.

This was a question as to the construction of s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877, providing that, if cross-decrees between the same parties, and for the payment of money, are produced to the Court, execution shall be taken out only by the holder of the decree for the larger sum, and only for the balance.

The decree of the High Court, against which this appeal was preferred, set aside a sale made in execution of one Khub Lal’s decree against Mussamut Radheh Koeri, now deceased, and represented by the respondent Ram Kishen Singh.

The High Court did not examine the question of fraud, their opinion in regard to s. 246 rendering it unnecessary so to do. Briefly stated, the circumstances connected with the sale were that Khub Lal had originally taken a lease of mouzah Mokandpur from Radheh Koeri, paying to her an advance, to be held in deposit by her as security for the rent; and cross suits resulted in 1877. The lessor sued for two years’ rent, and the lessee for a refund of the advance, or zuripeshgi. The Munsif of Jamoi heard the suit together, recording one judgment (7th September 1877), but refusing to set the one sum off against the other.

before decree; and making two decrees, one for Rs. 788 in favour of Radhe Koeri and the other for Rs. 661 in favour of Khub Lal. The latter on execution issued by the former (10th November 1877), was imprisoned for a period, but released on her failure to pay diet money. Another application (29th March 1878) made by her for execution of her decree gave no credit for the amount due by her to Khub Lal; but, amongst other things, asked for the attachment and sale of his decree against her.

The application was refused by the Munsif, exercising his discretion under s. 230 of Act X of 1877; but on appeal, was granted by the District Judge (26th July 1878), and from this order Khub Lal appealed to the High Court. Pending this appeal, Khub Lal, applied (31st December 1878) for the execution of his decree by the attachment and sale of Koeri's interest in the said mouzah Mohamda. This application was made in the same [20] Court in which she was already carrying out execution of her cross-decree. The Court, without applying s. 246 to the case, made an order (4th November 1878) for the sale of Mohamda which accordingly took place, resulting in the purchase of it by the appellant.

Radhe Koeri then applied, under s. 311 of the Code, to have the sale set aside, alleging that Khub Lal's decree ought not to have been executed, her own decree standing against him in the same Court for a larger amount. She alleged that the execution proceedings had been fraudulently carried on, and the property sold for about half of its value. The Munsif of Jamoi found that there had been no fraud, and rejected the application, passing an order, under s. 312, confirming the sale. This was upheld on appeal (22nd September 1879), the District Judge holding that, after a sale has taken place, the Court having jurisdiction, and the purchaser having become an interested party, inquiries as to irregularity must be restricted, under s. 311, to what had occurred in publication of the attachment, the giving notice, and holding the sale, with consequent material injury to the judgment-debtor. Of the latter there was none here.

Radhe Koeri having failed in getting the sale set aside under s. 311, instituted the present suit. The proceedings thereupon having been fully stated in the judgment on this appeal are not here recounted. The High Court reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the suit. The Judges determined the question upon s. 246 alone, holding that the effect of that section was to render the sale invalid under the circumstances.

For the appellant, Mr. C. W. Arathoon argued that the High Court had misapplied s. 246, Act X of 1877, disregarding the important consideration that Rewa Mahton was a bona fide purchaser, who had paid a fair value of the property sold by the Court's order in execution of decree. As against him, there were no grounds for setting aside the sale.

The respondent did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR B. PEACOCK.— This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta in a suit in which the respondent, Mussamat [21] Radheh Koeri, was the plaintiff, and Khub Lal and the appellant Rewa Mahton, and others, were the defendants. Koeri died pending this appeal, and Ram Kishen Singh, her son and heir, was substituted for her.
It appears that on the 7th of September 1877 the Munsif of Jamoi, in the district of Bhagalpur, made two decrees, one in favour of the respondent against Khub Lal for Rs. 788-0-9, and the other in favour of Khub Lal against her for Rs. 661. On the 10th November 1877 the respondent took out execution against Khub Lal for the whole amount of her decree without giving him any credit for the Rs. 661 which he had recovered against her. Under that execution Khub Lal was arrested and detained in prison for a period of about two months, at the expiration of which time he was released on the failure of the respondent to lodge the necessary diet-money. Subsequently, on the 26th March 1878, the respondent made another application for execution against Khub Lal upon her decree, and in that application she gave him no credit for the Rs. 661 which he had recovered against her. Upon that execution being granted, an application was made to the Munsif by Khub Lal to set it aside. The Munsif granted that application, but his decision was, on the 26th July 1878, reversed by the District Judge, who held that the respondent was entitled to execute her decree for Rs. 788, notwithstanding all that had previously taken place. Upon that Khub Lal appealed to the High Court, and whilst the matter was pending before that Court, viz., on the 31st of August 1878, he applied for execution against the respondent for the total amount of his decree for Rs. 661. The execution was issued, and under it the property of the respondent, consisting of a 2 annas share of mouzah Mokandpur Mohamda, was attached and sold to the appellant for a sum of Rs. 9,775. Application was made to set aside that sale under ss. 311 and 312 of Act X of 1877. The Munsif disallowed the application and confirmed the sale, and his order was on appeal affirmed by the Judge. By the last paragraph of s. 312 it is enacted that "No suit to set aside on the ground of such irregularity an order passed under this section, shall be brought by the party against whom such order has been made."

[22] The present respondent, however, brought a regular suit against Khub Lal, and the present appellant, the purchaser under the execution, and others alleging that, owing to her having a decree against Khub Lal for an amount greater than that of his decree against her, the latter decree was not fit to be executed; that the sale under it was contrary to the powers of the Court, and was not binding upon her; and that the purchaser acquired no right under the sale; and, further, that the purchase by the present appellant took place in collusion with Khub Lal; that Khub Lal was really the purchaser; that he, by fraud, had kept her from knowing that the execution had issued; and consequently that the sale in execution ought to be set aside. She prayed: "(1) that the Court will be pleased to hold that the processes of execution of decree of Khub Lal, the defendant No. 1, were carried out entirely in contravention of law; and that in reality, according to law and justice, the defendant aforesaid had nothing to obtain from your petitioner, the plaintiff; and that the sale which has been held is invalid. (2) That the Court will be pleased to hold that the processes of the sale aforesaid, and the sale in question, were executed and held fraudulently. (3) That the Court will be pleased to cancel this sale." Written statements were put in on the part of the several defendants, and issues were settled. The Subordinate Judge in the first instance settled two issues in bar. The first was: "Is this case in the regular department,"—that is, is this suit which is brought as a regular suit—"unfit for hearing under the last portion of s. 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or not?" Second: "Was it necessary for the defendant, first party, to set off the amount of the decree of the plaintiff against his own decree under s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or not?" Subsequently he settled further issues of fact. He said: "To-day the arguments of the pleaders for both parties on the first issue were heard. After hearing the arguments of the pleaders for both parties, I come to the conclusion that issues on facts also ought to be framed; that, after receiving the evidence, I shall try, on all the issues, as to whether this sale has been held fraudulently or not, and determine whether, in case fraud be proved, a regular suit will lie for cancelment of the sale in question." Then he settled [23] the following issues of fact: 1st, Did the defendant No. 1 take the proceedings for execution of decree and service of attachment processes and a sale notification fraudulently (and) surreptitiously, with a view that the plaintiff might not be aware of it; or were the proceedings of execution of decree and the issue of attachment processes and sale notifications executed in a bona fide manner without fraud? 2nd. Is the defendant No. 2 "— that is the present appellant—" furzi for the defendant No. 1 in the auction-purchase, or is he the real purchaser; and were the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 aware of the fraud stated by the plaintiff at the time of the auction-purchase or not? 3rd. Has the property sold at auction been sold for a small value owing to the fraud alluded to, or not? Those issues came on for trial. Witnesses were heard on both sides, and the Judge delivered judgment, by which, after stating that the pleas in bar were overruled by his predecessor, he decided in favour of the defendants. With regard to the principal point as to the fraud, he said: "There is no proof of the allegation that Khub Lal purchased the share in question in the name of Rewa Mahton." And again: "In my opinion Rewa Mahton is the real purchaser, who made the other defendant, Omed Ali, a partner in his purchase. I do not think that Khub has any interest in the property." He also held that the property was not sold for an inadequate price. An appeal was pre-ferrred to the High Court, and that Court, without entering into the question of fraud, or no fraud, but assuming that the defendant, the present appellant, was a bona fide purchaser at the sale, proceeded to consider the question whether the sale in execution was valid or not in consequence of the Munsif's having granted Khub Lal's execution when the plaintiff held a decree for a larger amount against him.

That question depends upon s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure.
Act X of 1877, which enacts as follows: "If cross-decrees between the same parties and for the payment of money be produced to the Court "—that is the Court to which the application is made for execution, and which is dealing with the case as to whether execution shall be issued or not,—execution shall be taken out only by the party who holds the decree for the larger sum, and for so much only as [24] remains after deducting the smaller sum and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered on the decree for the larger sum as well as satisfaction on the decree for the smaller sum." In this case the plaintiff's decree was not brought before the Court when Khub Lal applied for execution. At that time he brought before the Court only his own decree, and the Court ordered that an attachment should issue to satisfy his judgment for Rs. 661, and the property was attached. We cannot in this suit enter into the question whether the decisions upon the petition to set aside the sale under ss. 311 and 312 were correct or not. Those decisions cannot, in consequence of s. 312, be impeached in this suit on the ground of any irregularity which was the subject of those decisions,
The High Court determined the question simply upon s. 246. They said: "The provisions of s. 246 are explicit, that if cross-decrees between the same parties and for the payment of money be produced to the Court, execution shall be taken out only by the party who holds the decree for the larger sum, and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum. It was not competent to the Munsif by his judgment to modify this provision of the law, even if it were his intention to do so which is by no means clear." The High Court does not say that the decree of the plaintiff was brought before the Munsif, or that the two decrees were before him at the time when he awarded execution for the smaller decree. They go on: "Nor does it appear to us that there was anything in the plaintiff's conduct which could render legal and valid proceedings of the defendant, which were without the sanction of law. When the defendant on the 31st August, applied for execution of his cross-decree for a smaller amount he must have been aware that the plaintiff's decree had been produced to the Court, and that since the order of the Appellate Court, 26th July, 1878, it was capable of execution. The defendant accordingly had no right to execution, except as provided by s. 246, and the whole of the subsequent proceedings taken in execution of the defendant's decree were, in our opinion, a nullity, and must be set aside." The Court, therefore, notwithstanding the finding of the lower Court that the defendant—the present [25] appellant—was a bona fide purchaser at the sale under the execution, and without themselves entering into the question of fraud or no fraud, held that the execution issued by the Munsif and all the subsequent proceedings, were a nullity, and must be set aside. The defendant-appellant purchased bona fide, and for a fair value, property exposed for sale under an execution issued by a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a valid judgment.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court came to an erroneous decision with regard to the construction of s. 246, and that the judgment of the High Court in that respect must be set aside. A purchaser under a sale in execution is not bound to inquire whether the judgment-debtor had a cross-judgment of a higher amount any more than he would be bound in an ordinary case to inquire whether a judgment upon which an execution issues has been satisfied or not. Those are questions to be determined by the Court issuing the execution. To hold that a purchaser at a sale in execution is bound to inquire into such matters would throw a great impediment in the way of purchases under executions. If the Court has jurisdiction, a purchaser is no more bound to inquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues.

It would have been more satisfactory if in this case, which was one appealable to Her Majesty in Council, the High Court had not decided the case merely upon the construction of s. 246 without expressing their opinion upon the other issues which were raised and determined by the Subordinate Judge. Their Lordships, being of opinion that the decision of the High Court with reference to s. 246 is erroneous, have been obliged to determine the other issues, and for that purpose to go through the evidence in the absence of the respondent, who did not appear before them on the argument of the case, without having the advantage of any expression of the High Court's opinion as to the effect of that evidence. If the High Court had determined the other issues and had concurred with the Subordinate Judge in his findings, the case would have fallen within the [26] rule of concurrent findings of fact, and the examination of the evidence by their Lordships would in all probability have been unnecessary.

Their Lordships having examined the evidence very carefully have come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that there was no fraud; that the defendant was a bona fide purchaser under the execution; and that the property was not sold for an inadequate price.

Under these circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal to the High Court with costs, to reverse the judgment of that Court, and to affirm the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

RAGHNATH PERSHAD (Decree-holder) v. ABDUL HYE AND another (Judgment-debtors).* [2nd June, 1886.]

Limitation Act (V of 1877), art. 179 (para. 2)—Appeal against part of decree—Execution against judgment-debtors who were not joined in the appeal.

By a decree of a Court of first instance, dated the 16th August 1880, Rs. 15,260-5-6 was found due against A and Rs. 20,099-2-6 against A and B jointly, the suit being dismissed as against two other defendants who were alleged to have been sureties. The plaintiff appealed against so much of this decree as dismissed the suit against the alleged sureties, not making either A or B parties respond nts; this appeal was dismissed on the 1st May 1885. On the 27th April 1885 plaintiff applied for execution against A and B: Held, that the application was barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act.

22 B. 500; D., 23 C. 876 (878).]

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff against Wajiruddin, Abdul Hye, Mussamut Batulan, Abdul Huq, and Abdus Sanad, [27] to recover a sum of Rs. 35,359-8 due under a deed, dated 19th February 1874, the defendants Mussamut Batulan and Abdul Huq being sued as the heirs of one Mussamut Basiran under a security bond executed on her behalp by Abdul Hye on the 2nd March 1874. On the 16th August 1880 the plaintiff obtained a decree against Abdul Hye for Rs. 15,260-5-6, and against Abdul Hye and Wajiruddin jointly for Rs. 20,099-2-6, the suit as against Mussamut Batulan and Abdul Huq being dismissed; the claim against Abdus Sanad having been withdrawn at the hearing. The plaintiff appealed against so much of the decree as dismissed the suit against Mussaut Batulan and Abdul Huq, without making any of the other defendants parties respondents. On the 1st May 1882 this appeal was dismissed ; and on the 27th April 1885 the plaintiff applied for execution against Abdul Hye and Wajiruddin. The Subordinate Judge refused the application, holding that it was barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act.

*Appeal from Order No. 297 of 1885, against the order of Moulvi Mahomed Nurul Hosein, Khan Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 25th of July 1885.
inasmuch as no appeal was preferred against the portion of the original decree which made Abdul Hye and Wajiruddin liable.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Mr. C. Gregory, for the appellant, contended that the words in para. 2 of art. 179 of the Limitation Act must be construed strictly, and that where there has been an appeal, whether against the whole or part of a decree, limitation did not run till the date of the appellate decree; and cited Mullick Ahmed Zumma v. Mahomed Syed (1); and Bhoobunessuree Debia v. Chunder Monee Debia (2).

Mr. O'Kinealy (with him Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf), for the respondents, contended that where there are in reality separate decrees, though on one piece of paper, and there is an appeal against part of the decree only, limitation, so far as the unappealed from part of the decree is concerned, would run from the date of the original decree; and cited Wise v. Rajnarain Chuckerbotty (3); and Hur Proshad Roy v. Enayet Hossein (4).

The judgment of the Court (Porter and Agnew, JJ.) omitting the statement of the facts, was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

[28] Article 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877 provides a period of three years' limitation for an application to execute a decree or order of any Civil Court, not provided for by art. 180, or by the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 230, to be computed from (a) the date of the decree or order; (b) where there has been an appeal the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court; and the question we have to decide in this case is, what construction is to be put upon the words, "where there has been an appeal." Are these words to be read in their widest sense, as including every case in which there has been an appeal against the whole or part of the decree of the lower Court; or are they to be read in a more limited sense, in cases like the present, where a portion of the decree is not appealed against? For the appellant it is contended that these words must be read strictly, and that where there has been an appeal, whether against the whole or part of the decree of the first Court, limitation does not begin to run till the date of the final decree of the Appellate Court, though that decree does not, and cannot, affect any portion of the original decree. For the respondents it is contended that, where, as in this case, there are really separate decrees, though on one piece of paper, and there is an appeal against part of the decree only, limitation, so far as the unappealed from part of the decree is concerned, begins to run from the date of the original decree.

There does not appear to be any precise authority on the question before us. In Ram Charan Bysak v. Lakhi Kant Bannik (5) a Full Bench of this Court held that the decree passed by the Appellate Court becomes the final decree in the suit, following the decision of the Madras High Court in Arunachellathudayan v. Veludayan (6). The decree, however, in the Full Bench case was a joint decree, and it was not necessary to consider the effect of an appeal against part of a decree only. In Kisto Kinker Ghose Roy v. Barodacant Singh Roy (7) their Lordships of the Privy Council seem to doubt whether these last mentioned cases were rightly decided, though they did not express dissent from them. In this case also the decree of the first Court was [29] a joint, decree and the whole decree was before the Court. In Gungamoyee Dassee v. Shib Sunkur Bhutacharjee (1) the appellant obtained a decree on the 12th November 1872, by which the respondents and one Choitun were made jointly and severally liable for a certain sum of money. The decree was ex parte against the respondents, but not so as against Choitun who appealed successfully to the High Court. On the 1st August 1876 the appellants took out execution against the respondent. It was held by the District Judge that, though cl. 2 of art. 167 of the 2nd schedule of Act IX of 1871 (corresponding with art. 179 of the present Limitation Act) provided that three years' limitation was to run, where there had been an appeal from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court, yet it could not apply where co-defendants, non-appellants, were in no way affected by the order on appeal. The High Court, however, reversed this decision. Morris, J., said: "We see nothing in the terms of the Act to warrant such a conclusion as this. Here the decree was admittedly a joint decree. Owing to the appeal of Choitun, the decree was amended, and this amended decree, therefore, became the final decree in the cause. The Judge is not justified in supposing that there were two final decrees in this suit—one applicable to the non-appealing defendants and the other to the appealing defendant alone. But even if a doubt could exist on this point, the words of the Act are so wide and comprehensive that the appellants are clearly entitled to the benefit of their natural import. This is the view that has been taken by another Bench of this Court—In re Dolley Chand v. Nirban Singh—in which precisely the same point was raised and decided on June 18th, 1878. Their Lordships say: "There are no qualifying words as to by whom the appeal is to be made, or what the nature of the appeal to be made should be; but simply that when there has been an appeal, the time shall begin to run from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court. The Court is not authorised to make the terms of the Limitation Act more stringent against the decree-holder than they actually are." That case approaches nearest to the present (30) one. But it is to be observed that the decree was joint and several, and the whole decree was before the Court of Appeal.

In Mullick Ahmed Zumma v. Mahomed Syed (2), there was a decree for possession with costs against three defendants. Possession was claimed by only one of the defendants. He appealed, and was successful before the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and obtained a decree restoring the decision of the first Court. More than three years after the date of the original decree, the plaintiff applied to execute it against one of the defendants who had not appealed. The District Judge held upon the authority of Hur Proshad Roy v. Enayet Hossein (3), a case which we shall notice hereafter, that the application was barred. The High Court reversed this decision. Pontifex, J., said: "The reason why in that case it was held that limitation would apply was because the appeal there was on the part only of a ten-pie shareholder of the property, leaving the decree capable of execution against the remainder of the property which could not be affected by the result of that appeal. But in the present case the appeal of the one defendant related to the whole case of the plaintiff, and he was successful in getting the suit dismissed by the lower appellate Court, which would have deprived the plaintiff of his right to any costs at all. In special appeal the plaintiff succeeded in getting the Judge's decree reversed; and therefore the original decree for costs was restored." In this case again the decree was joint, and the appeal related to the whole case.

These appear to be the only authorities in support of the appellant's case. In none of them was the express point that is raised here decided.

The authorities most applicable to the respondent's case are Wise v. Rajnarain Chuckerbutty (1) and the case already referred to of Hurproshad Roy v. Enayet Hossein. (2).

In the first of these cases the suit was for arrears of rent against two persons, and a decree was made as against one, for the rent for a certain period, and as against the other for the remaining period. Execution was taken out against one of the [31] defendants. Subsequently an application was made for execution against the representatives of the other defendant, and it was held to be barred. On appeal to the High Court the following question was submitted for the opinion of a Full Bench: "Whether in the case of such a decree as was sought to be executed in this case, proceedings in execution against one of the defendants are sufficient to prevent the law of limitation applying to process of execution against the other." This question was answered in the negative, Couch, C.J., saying: "Although these persons were joined in the suit in this way, yet we must treat the decree as what it must have been by law—a decree against one person for the rent of one period, and a decree against the other person for the rent of another; and I think such a decree as this, though it is on one piece of paper, is in fact two decrees, a separate decree against each for the sum for which each is liable. When we come to apply to that the terms of s. 20 of the Law of Limitation, there is really no difficulty; the decree is to be kept in force against each, and to be treated as a separate decree against each in such a case as this, as it would be in the case of persons sued for contribution, because it is a separate liability, and each is liable only for his own share. I think that, although the decree is made in one suit, it is in reality and substance a separate decree against each for the portion for which each is declared to be liable." In the other case Hur Proshad Roy and others obtained a decree against Muzhur Hossein and Enayet Hossein for possession of certain property. This decree was reversed on the 6th April 1872, so far as concerned the property in the hands of Muzhur Hossein. In August 1872, an application was made for execution, and some steps were taken to put Hur Proshad into possession. On the 30th May 1873 Enayet Hossein objected to the execution proceedings, on the ground that they had been carried on without his knowledge, and that execution had become barred by limitation. His application was refused. He then sued Hur Proshad and his co-plaintiffs in the previous suit to have the execution proceedings of 1872 declared invalid and inoperative, on the ground that the decree was barred by limitation. Both the lower Courts concurred in granting the [32] decree asked for, and their decisions were upheld in this Court. The Court said: "The original decree was in form made against the three defendants collectively; some of them appealed, but their appeal was dismissed on the 23rd May 1869. Muzhur Hossein, one of the appellants, preferred a special appeal, but not against the whole decree so as to give the Appellate Court jurisdiction.

under s. 337 to reverse the decree altogether. His appeal only related to his own ten-pie share. As to the rest of the subject of dispute and the remaining defendants, the judgment of the 23rd May 1869 was final; execution of the decree against them could not have been stayed in consequence of Muzhur Hossein's appeal, and no question between them and the decree-holder was dependent on the result of Muzhur's appeal. It is obvious that, though the decree was drawn up in the form of a single order, it did in fact incorporate in that order separate decrees against Muzhur and the others, and that it did not relate to property in which the defendants had such a common interest and a common defence that the appeal by any one imperilled the whole decree. The reason for suspending the operation of the law of limitation during the pendency of an appeal is, that it is manifestly undesirable to force an execution of a decree, while there exists any doubt as to the rights of the decree-holder against the appellant; but this reason does not apply to such a case as this, in which there had been a final determination of rights between the decree-holder and the present plaintiff which could not be reopened by the separate appeal of Muzhur Hossein."

The reasons given in these two cases for holding that limitation continued to run seem to us to apply clearly to this case. Here the cause of action against the defendants Abdul Hye and Syed Wajiruddin was totally distinct from the cause of action against the defendants Mussamut Batulan and Abdul Huq, and separate suits might have been brought against each set of defendants. Though there was only one suit, yet there really were separate decrees against each set of defendants. The defendants had no such common interest that an appeal by one set would imperil the whole decree; in fact, if there had been a final decree against all the defendants, it would have had to be executed against different properties.

[33] The plaintiff could not object to the decree so far as it affected the defendants Abdul Hye and Syed Wajiruddin. The defendants Mussamut Batulan and Abdul Huq could not have objected to the decree as far as they were concerned, nor as against their co-defendants who accepted their liability. They could not have obtained a reversal of the whole decree under s. 544 of the Civil Procedure Code, for it did not proceed on grounds common to all the defendants. The decree which it is sought to execute is the original decree which became final as against the defendants Syed Wajiruddin and Abdul Hye, when the period for appealing against it had expired. If the plaintiffs had then taken out execution those defendants could not have resisted execution on the ground that an appeal was pending with respect to a part of the decree which did not affect their liability. For even if the High Court had held that the defendants Mussamut Batulan and Abdul Huq were sureties, that would not have cut down the liability of the other defendants as principals.

We think, therefore, that there were separate decrees against each set of defendants, that there was no appeal as against the decree affecting the respondents in this appeal, and that the Judge was right in holding that the application for execution was barred by limitation. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Jogeshuri Chowdhrain (Defendant No. 2) v. Mahomed Ebrahim and Others (Plaintiffs).* [2nd June, 1886.]

Suit for arrears of rent—Ejectment—Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869), ss. 22, 52.

A landlord who sues for arrears of rent, for the whole of one year, and a portion of the next, and also for ejectment, is not entitled to a decree for the latter.

The right to ejectment under s. 22 of the Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869), accrues at the end of the year, and forfeiture or determination of the tenancy thereupon takes place, but if the landlord sues for subsequent arrears, he treats the defendant as his tenant, and the right acquired under that section must be taken to have been waived.

[34] In this case the plaintiffs sought to recover the rent due in respect of certain jotes held by the defendants for the year 1290 (1883) and the year 1291 (1884) up to the Pous (December) kist and for ejectment. Defendant No. 2 alone contested the suit, and pleaded certain payments on account of the rents claimed, and tender of the balance, and that she was not liable to ejectment. The first Court, however, found the issues of fact against the defendant and that the amount of rent claimed was due, and accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree for the amount with a declaration that if the amount were not paid within 15 days, the defendants should be ejected from the lands in respect of which the arrears were claimed.

Defendant No. 2 thereupon appealed against that portion of the decree which declared her liable to ejectment, and it was argued on her behalf that because the arrears of rent were not admittedly due for the whole of the year 1291, she was not liable to ejectment in consequence of a decree obtained for the aggregate of those arrears and the arrears due on account of the year 1290.

The lower appellate Court, however, declined to acquiesce in this contention and confirmed the decree for ejectment of the Court below.

The same defendant now preferred this second appeal to the High Court, and the same objection was urged as was taken before the lower appellate Court.

Babu Issur Chunder Chuckerbati, for the appellant.

Babu Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Mitter and Grant, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent for the year 1290 and for a portion of the year 1291, that is, up to the Pous kist of 1291; and also for ejectment.

The Munsif awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the arrears of rent proved to be due from the defendant for the period in suit, and also for ejectment, under the provisions of s. 52. On appeal it was

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 313 of 1886, against the decree of C. A. Kelly Esq., Judge of Dinagepore, dated the 2nd of February 1886, modifying the decree of Baboo Surbessur Mozumdar, Munsif of Thacoorgai, dated the 18th of August 1885.
contended that the plaintiff, having sued for the rent of a portion of the year 1291, was not entitled to a decree for ejectment. But the District Judge was of opinion that this [35] argument was untenable.
He says: "It seems inequitable that the defendant should be thus protected, merely because the suit for arrears due on account of both years has been brought," * * * * And then, further on, the Judge says: "The Munsif's order will be so far modified that it will be specified in the decree what the amount of arrears decreed for 1290 are, plus the proportionate costs on those arrears, apart from damages decreed, and if the defendant pays in that amount within fifteen days from the date of the decree, execution will be stayed." The same objection has been urged before us here. We are of opinion that the appellant's contention is valid. It is also supported by a decision in the case of Peër Bux v.
Mowzah Ally (1). The facts of that case are, that a suit for ejectment was brought by a landlord against his tenant, alleging that the tenant was liable to be ejected in consequence of his having defaulted to pay the rent of the whole of the year 1267 at the end of that year. It was proved that the plaintiff had distrained for the recovery of arrears of 1268, and recovered a portion of the rent for that year. Upon these facts, it was held that the landlord, having received rent for the year 1268 from the tenant, it was a recognition of the tenancy for that year; and therefore the landlord was not entitled to eject the tenant on account of arrears due on account of the year 1267. Applying that principle to this case, we think that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim ejectment at all. He has sued for arrears of rent for a portion of the year 1291, and by that he has admitted that the defendant continued in possession during that portion of the year as tenant; and having admitted that, according to the principle laid down in the case referred to above, the plaintiff cannot treat the defendant as a trespasser, and obtain a decree for ejectment under s. 22 of the Rent Law.

It was contended before us that the contention of the appellant is opposed to the provisions of s. 52, because under that section a landlord has a right to bring a suit for ejectment and for arrears in the same action.
But we are of opinion that that is not the proper construction of s. 52.
Section 52 only lays down the procedure by which the right, which the landlord has under s. 22 of extinguishing the tenancy, is enforceable, and [36] the claim for rent mentioned therein is the rent on account of which the tenant is liable to be ejected. The Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869) may be divided into two portions—the first twenty-three sections deal with the substantive law defining the rights of landlords and tenants and the rest of the Act lays down the procedure by which those rights are to be protected and enforced. Section 22 runs as follows: "When an arrear of rent remains due from any ryot at the end of the Bengali year, or at the end of the month of Jeyt of the Fusli or Willayttee year as the case may be, such ryot shall be liable to be ejected from the land in respect of which the arrear is due, provided that no ryot having a right of occupancy, or holding under a pottah the term of which has not expired, shall be ejected otherwise than in execution of a decree or order under the provisions of this Act." The right that is given to the landlord is this, namely, that if any arrears are due at the end of the year, the tenant is liable to be ejected for non-payment of rent for that year,— that is, the landlord has a right to put an end to the tenancy. And the mode of enforcing those rights in the class of cases mentioned in the proviso is given in s. 52 of the Act. But forfeiture or determination of tenancy takes place when the tenant defaults to pay the rents due at the end of the year. If the landlord still treats the defaulter as his tenant, the right he has acquired under s. 22 must be taken to have been waived. The act of the landlord suing for the rent of the succeeding year would have the effect of an admission that the defendant’s possession in that year is that of a tenant. Take the case of a tenant not having a right of occupancy. Under s. 22 he is liable to be ejected from his holding without having recourse to any proceeding in a Court of Justice. But if the landlord brings a suit for arrears of rent for the succeeding year against the tenant, before ejecting him, he cannot afterwards eject him in the middle of the year, because by bringing a suit against him for rent for the next year the landlord admits his tenancy.

We, therefore, dismiss the claim of the plaintiff for ejectment. The decree of the lower appellate Court will be modified accordingly. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this Court and of the lower appellate Court.

[37] APPELLATE CIVIL.
Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Ghose.

KRISHNA KINKUR ROY AND ANOTHER (Petitioners) v. RAI MOHUN ROY AND ANOTHER (Objectors).* [2nd September, 1886.]
Probate Act (V of 1881)—Will of Hindu made before Hindu Wills Act XXI of 1870—Succession Act, s. 187—Application for letters of administration.

Since the passing of Act V of 1881 the District Courts have jurisdiction to entertain applications for the grant of probate or letters of administration in respect of wills of Hindus made before the 1st September 1870, that is to say, wills of Hindus to which the Hindu Wills Act, XXI of 1870, did not apply.

Semble.—Section 187 of the Succession Act not being made applicable to such wills, it is not obligatory on executors or legatees under them to take out probate or letters of administration in order to establish their rights in a Court of Justice.

This was an application by Krishna Kinkur Roy and Chunder Mohun Roy, made on the 23rd August 1884, for letters of administration under the will of their grandfather, Horo Chunder Roy, who died on the 6th Bhadro 1281 (31st August 1874).

The will was dated 16th Magh 1273 (29th January 1867). By it the bulk of the testator’s property was left to his four grandsons, viz., the two petitioners, Kedarnath Roy who was dead, leaving a widow and a daughter, and Shitanath Roy; and Revati Dassi, the testator’s widow, was appointed sole executrix. The application was opposed by Rai Mohun Roy, one of the sons of the testator, and by Revati Dassi, on several grounds, the only one material to this report being that the will was executed before the Hindu Wills Act came into force, and the procedure of that Act and of the Probate Act 1881 did not apply; and that the petitioners were therefore not entitled to the letters of administration they asked for.

The following order was made by the District Judge:

"I dismiss the application on the ground that this will purports to have been executed before the 1st September 1870, and that under Act XXI of 1870 this Court has no jurisdiction to grant [38] letters of administration in respect of any will executed prior to that date—Bharti v. Bharti (1)—a disability which Act V of 1881 has done nothing to remove. The Bombay High Court, referring to the provisions of Act V of 1881, is of opinion—Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Eesa (2)—that the object of the framers of that Act was to frame an Act which will be applicable to all natives of this country, whilst leaving the existing law as to those Hindus to whom the Hindu Wills Act applied untouched." Revati, I may add, has not accepted or renounced her post as executrix.

"I award no cost because, but for the defect of jurisdiction of this Court, I think the applicants would have been entitled to the letters they ask for."

From this decision the petitioners appealed.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, Babu Amarendra Nath Chatterjee and Babu Sharoda Prosunna Roy, for the appellants.

Dr. Gooro Dass Banerjee and Babu Gyanendra Nath Dass, for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.).

Norris, J. (after shortly stating the facts and reading the final order of the lower Court) continued:

JUDGMENTS.

It was contended before us by the learned pleader for the appellants that Act V of 1881 has altered the law as laid down in Bharti v. Bharti (1), and that it is now competent to the Mofussil Courts to grant probate or letters of administration in respect of a will not coming within the provisions of the Hindu Wills Act, that is to say, of wills of Hindus, Jainas, Sikhs, and Buddhists in the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and in the towns of Madras and Bombay made prior to 1st September 1870.

In order to determine this point, it was necessary to see what the course of legislation has been.

In 1865 the Indian Succession Act was passed. Section 331 of that Act provided that "the provisions of this Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Mahomedan, or Buddhist."* * * In 1870, the Hindu Wills Act was passed; s. 2 of that Act, provided that certain [39] portions of the Indian Succession Act 1865, viz., "ss. 46, 48, 49, 50, 51 55, and 57 to 77 (both inclusive), ss. 82, 83, 85, 88 to 103 (both inclusive), ss. 106 to 177 (both inclusive), ss. 179 to 189 (both inclusive), ss. 191 to 199 (both inclusive), so much of parts XXX and XXXI as relates to grants of probate and letters of administration with the will annexed, and parts XXXIII to XL (both inclusive), so far as they relate to an executor and an administrator with the will annexed, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in s. 331 of the said Act, apply to all wills and codicils made by any Hindu, Jaina, Sikh, or Buddhist, on or after the 1st day of September 1870, within the said territories," (i.e., the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal) "or the local limits of the ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the High Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay."

The effect of this section was, amongst other things, to make a District Court of the Lower Provinces of Bengal a Court of competent jurisdiction, for the grant of probate or letters of administration, under the provisions of the Indian Succession Act in respect of wills of Hindus, Jainas, Sikhs, and Buddhists made within the Lower Provinces of Bengal after 1st September 1870; and also to prevent the establishment of any right as executor or legatee unless probate or letters of administration had been granted—see s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act.

In 1881 the Probate and Administration Act was passed; the preamble of that Act recites "that it is expedient to provide for the grant of probate of wills and letters of administration to the estates of deceased persons in cases to which the Indian Succession Act does not apply." The provisions of the Indian Succession Act did not apply—(a) to the intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Mahomedan; (b) the intestate or testamentary succession of any Hindu, Jaina, Sikh, or Buddhist within the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal or the local limits of the ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Courts at Madras and Bombay, whose will was made prior to 1st September 1870, or who died before that date; (c) to any will made or intestacy occurring before 1st January 1866; (d) to races, sects, or tribes exempted by the Governor-General in Council from the operation of the Act. Section 154 of [40] the Probate and Administration Act provides, amongst other things, "that the following amendment shall be made in the Hindu Wills Act (namely) for the portion of s. 2 commencing with the words 's. 179' and ending with the words 'Administrator with the will annexed,' the words 'and s. 187' shall be substituted." The effect of this amendment was to make the provisions of the Indian Succession Act with respect to the grant of probate of wills and letters of administration to the estates of deceased Hindus, Jainas, Sikhs, and Buddhists in the Lower Provinces of Bengal and in the towns of Madras and Bombay where such wills were made subsequent to the 1st September 1870, or where such persons died after that date, inapplicable, and at the same time to leave the executor or legatee of such persons under the obligation of obtaining probate or letters of administration from a Court of competent jurisdiction before his rights as such executor or legatee could be established in a Court of Justice.

How then was this obligation to be discharged? Section 2 of the Probate and Administration Act provides that "Chapters II to XIII, both inclusive, of this Act" (which contain provisions identical with those of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, which under s. 154 of the Probate and Administration Act were struck out of the Hindu Wills Act) "shall be applicable to the case of every Hindu, Mahomedan, Buddhist, and person exempted under s. 382 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, dying before, or after the 1st day of April 1881."

Section 187 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, is not incorporated in the Probate and Administration Act. The Bombay High Court in the case referred to says: "It is impossible to suppose that this exclusion of s. 187 from the Act of 1881 could have been done inadvertently; on the contrary, it bears from the very manner in which it was done all the marks of having been done advisedly and of intention; the effect is to bring all Hindus, Mahomedans, and other persons exempted from the operation of the Indian Succession Act by s. 332 of that Act either immediately or as soon as the local Government, with the assent of the Governor-General in Council, may think fit, under all the provisions of that Act relating to grant of probate and letters of administration, excepting s. 187, which, however, [44] remains in force in those cases to which the Hindu Wills Act of 1870 was made applicable. The object seems to have been to frame an Act which would be applicable to all natives of this country, whilst leaving the existing law as to those Hindus to whom the Hindu Wills Act applied untouched. Not only, therefore, is there no express provision in the Act of 1881 making s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act applicable to Mahomedans and Hindus (except in such cases of Hindu wills as the Hindu Wills Act applies to), but it would appear that, so far as the intention can be gathered from the express provisions of the Act, it was the intention of the Legislature to exclude its operation."

This view of the law may be correct; but why executors of, and legatees under, the wills of Hindus, Jainas, Sikhs, and Buddhists in the territories subject to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal and in the towns of Madras and Bombay made subsequently to the 1st September 1870, should be under the disability created by s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act, and the executors of, and legatees under, the wills of other natives should be relieved from the liability, I am at a loss to understand. But however this may be, I am clearly of opinion that the Bombay case does not decide that a District Judge cannot grant probate or letters of administration of the will of a Hindu whose case does not come within the Hindu Wills Act; it seems to me to decide by implication that he can, but that such grant is not a condition precedent to the establishment by an executor of, or legatee under, such a will of his rights in a Court of Justice.

I am of opinion that the order appealed against should be reversed with costs, and the District Judge be directed to grant letters of administration to the applicant.

GHOSE, J.—I agree with my learned colleague in the conclusion at which he has arrived. I think that whatever might have been the state of the law before the passing of the Probate Act (V of 1881) the District Courts are now fully competent under that Act to entertain applications for the grant of probate or letters of administration in respect of wills made before the 1st of September 1870, although in respect to such wills, the provisions of s. 187 of the Succession Act, making it [42] obligatory upon executors or legatees to take out probate or letters of administration, are not applicable.

The learned Judge of the District Court has found that but for the "defect of jurisdiction," which he supposed to exist, the applicants would have been entitled to the letters they ask for. That being so, I agree with my learned brother in holding that the Judge should be directed to grant letters of administration.

In the matter of the petition of F. W. Gibbons.

Review of judgment of High Court—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 369.

The verdict and judgment of a Divisional Bench of a High Court, coupled with the sentence in a criminal case, are absolutely final, and as soon as they have been pronounced and signed by the Judges, the High Court is functus officio, and neither the Court itself, nor any Bench of it, has any power to revise that decision or interfere with it in any way.

This was an application in which the petitioner prayed that the High Court would review or revise the judgment and sentence of a Division Bench of the said Court.

The petitioner's case had been tried before the Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, and on the trial the jury unanimously acquitted him of the offence with which he was charged. The Judge differed from the verdict, and consequently referred the case to the High Court, under s. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The case came before a Division Bench of the Court, (Mitter and Grant, JJ.) who reversed the verdict of acquittal and convicted and sentenced the petitioner to one year's rigorous imprisonment, and a fine of Rs. 1,000, or in default to suffer six months' further imprisonment.

Subsequently on the 31st August Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. Evans) applied to the Chief Justice to appoint a Bench to hear an application to review such order, and considering the importance of the case Mr. Pugh asked that a special Bench consisting of [43] more than two Judges, might be appointed. This application was based upon a petition in which the accused prayed that the judgment and sentence of the Division Bench of the High Court might be reviewed and revised, and that he might in the interim be released on bail. Upon that application the Chief Justice appointed the present Bench to hear the questions raised in the petition argued, but in doing so stated that Mr. Pugh was to understand that upon the application being heard, all objections, if any, would have to be considered as to whether the Bench so appointed had any jurisdictio to hear the application at all.

The application now came on for hearing.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Evans, for the petitioner.

Mr. Pugh.—I apply upon petition for a review or revision of the judgment, or order passed by a Bench of this Court consisting of Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Grant, and shall not read the petition further than is necessary to show your Lordships the points which I propose to raise.

Petheram, C.J.—The first question is, whether there is any power to review or revise that judgment, whether there is any jurisdiction or not.

SEP. 4.

FULL BENCH.

14 C. 42
(F.B.).

14 C. 42
(F.B.).
Mr. Pugh.—I shall only go into such facts as will illustrate the points which will arise.

Wilson, J.—To my mind there is an earlier question, and that is whether this Bench, as at present constituted, can entertain the question.

Mr. Pugh.—There is the case of In the matter of Abdool Sobhan (1) in which the late Chief Justice considered an order made by Mr. Justice Cunningham and Mr. Justice Prinsep, and in the course of that hearing the Chief Justice observed that the Original Bench had expressed their willingness to hear the case again, and it was taken up.

Mitter, J.—If I remember right that judgment was against your contention. The Chief Justice distinctly ruled that he had no power to constitute a Bench.

Mr. Pugh (after reading the judgment in that case).—In applying for this review and hearing I applied for it on the grounds of the extreme gravity of the questions involved. In that case the circumstances were that the Judges declined to hear the matter themselves, which is not the case here. No doubt in that case the late Chief Justice thought it was within his competence to order that such a Bench should sit, but I do not know how he arrived at that conclusion. There is no rule on the subject in the Code of Criminal Procedure. Supposing there had been a miscarriage of justice or any error committed, there was no rule that that should only be rectified by the Judges who passed the order and not by a Full Bench of the Court. I contend that such a matter could be heard before any Bench, and that it is within the province of the Chief Justice to appoint a Bench of a larger number than two Judges to hear such a matter.

Wilson, J.—As I understand, the case is this: A Bench of this Court, consisting of two Judges, has duly heard and disposed of the matter, and you now ask that another Bench should be appointed to overrule their decision.

Mr. Pugh.—I contend that the Court has power to grant a review in a criminal matter of this nature. Since the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861, under which this Court had no power to grant a review, considerable legislation and numerous changes in the law have taken place. In England, there always existed the " writ of error " to the Court of Queen’s Bench from the decisions of inferior Courts. When, however, the Court of Queen’s Bench was itself in error,—when the error appeared on the face of the judgment, the subject had still his remedy, and under recent legislation he is enabled to go to the Court of Appeal, the section of the Judicature Act conferring such right being in the widest terms. Here the only thing corresponding to that right is the right to ask for a review, and the tendency of legislation here between the two Acts of 1861 and 1882 shows that the intention of the Legislature has been to provide the subject with a more easy and quicker remedy.

Petheram, C.J.—You must go the length of saying that if there is power to review a judgment of conviction there is also power to review a judgment of acquittal.

Mr. Pugh.—Of course I must go that length. Section 369 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in limiting the power of Courts [45] other than a High Court to alter or review its judgment after it has been signed, by implication shows that a High Court has the power to review its judgments. I contend that that section is an enabling one and should, in matters such as these, receive a liberal interpretation. Upon the point I rely also on s. 439.

Mr. Pugh then proceeded to refer to an unreported case No. 69 of 1885, Ramdass petitioner, in which he stated that a Bench consisting of Prinsep and Pigot, JJ., reheard a case after judgment had been signed when he was stopped by the Chief Justice who intimated that he must decline to look into or be guided by unreported cases.

Mr. Evans followed on the same side.

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench:

OPINIONS.

PETHERAM, C.J.—I quite agree with the remark of Mr. Evans that this is a matter of very grave importance, and it was because I thought that it was a matter of very grave importance, and not because I had any doubt about the law, that I constituted this Bench for the purpose of hearing it argued, and I was all the more led to do so by the fact that I was told that a Division Bench of this Court had expressed a doubt as to whether there was not a power inherent in the Court itself to review a judgment of a Division Bench in a criminal case; and when I say, to review a judgment of a Division Bench, I mean, to review a judgment of a Division Bench by itself, because, in my opinion, every Division Bench constitutes a Court in itself for the purpose of its judgment, and every judgment of a Division Bench is a judgment of the Court; and speaking for myself, and (as to this I wish to guard myself, from expressing any opinion but my own) I do not think any difference exists between one Bench, and another so that it must be constituted of the same Judges to review a judgment of the Court, supposing it to be a judgment which is subject to review.

Speaking for myself, and, indeed, in this matter I think for the whole of the Judges constituting this Bench, I have no doubt whatever that, in cases of this kind, no power of review resides in the Court or in any Bench of the Court. This is an opinion which I have expressed before in the High Court at Allahabad [46] [Queen-Empress v. Durga Charn (1)], and it is an opinion which has been expressed in the High Court at Bombay [Queen-Empress v. Fox (2)] and in opposition to which, so far as I know, there is no reported case to be found.

The question arises under various sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the first section that applies to the matter is section 306.

Section 306 provides that where an accused person has been acquitted or convicted by a jury, the Judge shall either record judgment of acquittal or pass sentence on him according to law.

So far as that section is concerned, unless there was another section that qualified it, that acquittal or conviction stands, in my opinion, exactly on the same footing as an acquittal or conviction by the verdict of a jury in England, and is final as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, so far as Courts of Justice are concerned.

Then, following upon that, comes s. 307, and that section provides that, where the Sessions Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury, he may, if he thinks fit, submit the case to the High Court with his reasons for so disagreeing, and the High Court is then invested with this power in dealing with the case; the High Court “may convict or acquit the accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge

(1) 7 A. 672.
(2) 10 B. 176.
framed and placed before it; and, if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Sessions."

So that, as it seems to me, the effect of s. 307 read with s. 306 is to say that if the Judge who tries the case is dissatisfied with the verdict and the High Court, upon a consideration of the whole case, accepts his view, they may substitute their verdict for the verdict of the jury, and upon that being done, may pass sentence upon him; but there is nothing whatever in these two sections to place the judgment and verdict of the High Court, under the circumstances, in any different position from that in which the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the Court would have been if it had been accepted by the Judge and he had passed sentence accordingly; and the verdict, [47] judgment and sentence, under s. 306, would, under such circumstances, have been final.

That being so, the question then arises, whether this state of things is varied by any of the following sections; and whether those sections give, either a power of appealing from the Division Bench which heard the matter to some other Bench of this Court, or give the Court itself, or the Bench constituted in the same way, a power of revision.

The first section which is relied upon is s. 369. Section 369 states that "no Court, other than a High Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except as provided in s. 395 or to correct a clerical error."

In my opinion the effect of the words "other than a High Court" is precisely the same as if in place of them the legislature had at the end of the section added these words, "this section does not apply to the High Court." There is no substantive enactment in that section with reference to the High Court, and all it does is to reserve the powers which existed in the High Court before, so that they are in no degree taken away. What the powers of the High Court were before, it is unnecessary to consider, but whatever they were, they were reserved and they were in the same position after this section was passed as they had been in before; and inasmuch as it is not shown to us that, before the passing of this section, any power of revision existed in the High Court, that section did not, in my opinion, create any such power, and therefore it appears that this section does not help the applicant.

I should say that in the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock in this Court, (1) which was upon the law which was in existence before, he expressly decides that, as the law then stood, no such power to review existed; and therefore that shows clearly that no such power as that existed before, and that, taken along with the construction which we have put upon the section, that it did not create any such power, shows clearly that no power of review exists in this Court, so far as that section is concerned.

The only other section relied upon is s. 439. That section opens in this way: "In the case of any proceeding the record [48] of which has been called for by itself, or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may," et cetera. In my opinion, the first four lines of that section show, beyond all possibility of doubt, that the record which is referred to in that section is the record of some Court other than that of the High Court, because it is obvious that what is meant is, the record of the case which has been called up and brought before the High Court, and not the record of the case which is in the High Court itself, and which it therefore has in its possession and has no need to call for.

Under these circumstances, I think that neither s. 369 nor s. 439 helps the case on which the present application has been made, and that it must therefore fall back on the condition of things created by ss. 306 and 307, and, as I have said before, the verdict and judgment of a Division Bench of this Court, coupled with the sentence, are, in my opinion, absolutely final. As soon as they have been pronounced and signed by the Judges, this Court is functus officio, and neither the Court itself nor any Bench of it, has any power to revise that decision or interfere with it in any way.

Mitter, J.—I am of the same opinion. I desire only to add that the last part of s. 439 was enacted in order to meet a case of this kind. Section 266 says: "In this chapter, except in s. 307, the expression High Court means a High Court of Judicature established or to be established under the 24th and 25th Victoria, Chapter 104, and includes the Chief Court of the Punjab, and such other Courts as the Governor-General in Council, may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare to be High Courts for the purposes of this chapter."

The last part of this section empowers the Governor-General in Council to extend the procedure laid down by this chapter to the trials of cases before any Court subordinate to this Court. That is the real effect of it. It may happen that a Court subordinate to this Court may make an entry under s. 273; the procedure laid down in Chapter XXIII of the Code having been extended to the trial of cases before that Court. The last part of s. 439 lays down that in that case this Court, although possessing revisional power over the said Court in all other respects, would not have the power of reversing or interfering with any order passed by that Court under s. 273.

As regards the question whether this Court as constituted has any jurisdiction to entertain this application, I express no opinion.

Wilson, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion on the main question. There is only one point on which I desire to add anything. The point is not really one of any practical importance, because the Court, as now constituted, does contain both the learned Judges whose judgment we have been asked to review, and therefore the decision of this Court, as at present constituted, will, by reason of their presence, be a valid and efficacious decision; but I have myself very grave doubt whether it does not derive the whole of its efficacy from the fact of those two Judges being present.

I entertain considerable doubt whether, assuming that such an application as this is one that could be entertained in law, any Division Bench of this Court could entertain it with respect to a judgment of another Division Bench, and I think the view taken by Sir Richard Garth in the case of Abdul Sobhan (1) tends strongly to confirm this doubt. I only say this by way of safeguard, because, as I said before, the Bench being constituted as at present, the point is not really of any practical importance.

Macpherson, J.—I concur with the Chief Justice.

Grant, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice.

ANANDO KISHORE DASS BAKSHI (one of the judgment-debtors)

v. ANANDO KISHORE BOSE AND ANOTHER (Decree-holders).*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 7 and 8, and sch. II, art. 178—Mesne profits, Decree for—execution—Application for assessment of mesne profits—Limitation—Joint-decree-holders—Minor, Right of, to execute whole decree when remedy of major joint-decree-holder is barred.

In execution of a decree for possession of certain lands and for mesne profits, dated the 15th August 1878, possession having been obtained in August 1880, two decree-holders, one of whom was a minor, applied on the 4th April 1882 for ascertaining the amount of such mesne profits. Upon that application the Amin was directed to ascertain the amount due, but after repeated reminders had been sent him, and no report being submitted, the execution case was struck off the file on the 19th October 1882. The minor judgment-creditor having attained his majority on the 17th April 1885, an application was made by both decree-holders for execution of the decree by ascertaining of the amount of mesne profits and for the recovery of the amount when so ascertained. The judgment-debtors pleaded limitation.

Held, that the application was not an application for execution of the decree. The decree was divisible into two parts, and the present application must be treated as for the purpose of obtaining a final decree regarding the mesne profits, the previous decree having been in that respect merely interlocutory—Baroda Sundari Dabia v. Fergusson (1), and Dilidar Hossain v. Mugeedunnissa, (2), followed: Hem Chunder Chowdhury v. Brojo Soondari Debee (3), dissented from.

Held, also, that the provisions of art. 178 of sch. II of the Limitation Act apply to an application by a decree-holder to make a decree complete (Baroda Sundari Dabia v. Fergusson (1), upon this point dissented from) and further that s. 8 of that Act had no application to the case, and that therefore, so far as the application of the major decree-holder was concerned his remedy was barred, as his application should have been made within at least three years from the date of the delivery of possession of the lands decreeed.

[51] Held, further, that under s. 7 of the Limitation Act, the remedy of the minor decree-holder was not barred, as the other decree-holder could not give a valid discharge without his concurrence—(Ahumudden v. Grish Chunder Shamunn (4) distinguished) and that under s. 231 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he was entitled to execute the whole decree, as, though the remedy of the major decree-holder was barred his right was not extinguished.

In this case Anando Kishore Bose and Rukini Mohun Bose obtained a decree on the 15th August 1878 for possession of certain lands and for mesne profits from the date of dispossession up to the date of recovery of possession, Rukini Mohun Bose was a minor at the date the decree was passed, and it was not disputed in the case that he did not attain his majority till the 17th April 1885. The application, out of which this appeal arose, was for execution of the decree, in so far as it appertained to the mesne profits, and was made on the 18th September 1885. After the decree was passed, it appeared that on the 4th April 1882 the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree and ascertainment of the amount of mesne profits, possession of the lands in suit having been obtained in August 1880. Upon that application the Court ordered the Amin to ascertain the amount of mesne profits. It appeared that the Amin did not submit his report up to the 22nd September 1882, and that in the interval that elapsed between the 4th April and that date, the Court on some five or six occasions issued reminders to the Amin to submit his report. On the 9th October 1882 the application for execution was struck off the file of the Court.

*Appeal from Order No. 111 of 1886, against the order of Babu P. N. Banerji, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 16th of December 1885.

(1) 11 C. L. R. 17. (2) 4 C. 629. (3) 8 C. 89. (4) 4 C. 350.

In answer to the present application the judgment-debtors pleaded limitation, on the ground that no step had been taken within three years to keep the decree alive. The lower Court considered that the reminders issued by the Court to the Amin, between the 4th April 1882 and the 22nd September 1882, constituted steps taken in the execution proceedings, inasmuch as they formed a continuation of the step taken by the decree-holders by their application on the 4th April 1882, because the decree-holders could do nothing further in the matter, until the Amin submitted his report. Upon that ground the lower Court [52] held that the present application was not barred, as it was made on the 18th September 1885, or within three years of the 22nd September 1882. The lower Court was further of opinion that, even if the period of three years was to be counted as running from the 4th April 1882, the application was not barred, inasmuch as Rukini Mohun Bose did not attain his majority till the 17th April 1885, and consequently under the provisions of s. 7 of the Limitation Act he was entitled to apply for execution at any time within three years of that date; and further that Anando Kishore Bose was equally now entitled to take out execution, as by the provisions of s. 8 of the Limitation Act it held that time would not run against any of the joint judgment-creditors until the minor attained his majority, as till that occurred the decree-holder could not give a valid discharge.

The lower Court accordingly overruled the objection of the judgment-debtors, and granted the application for execution.

Against that order, Anando Kishore Dass Bakshi, one of the judgment-debtors, preferred this appeal to the High Court.

Babu Ratnessur Sen, for the appellant.
Babu Durga Mohan Dass, for the respondents.

The nature of the arguments and the cases cited upon the hearing of the appeal appear sufficiently in the judgment of the High Court (Mitter and Grant, J.J.,) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The respondents Rukini Mohun Bose and Anando Kishore Bose obtained a decree against the appellant and others on the 15th August 1878 for possession of certain lands and mesne profits thereof from the date of dispossession to the date of the recovery of possession. Rukini Mohun Bose was then not of age, and was represented by a guardian. The decree directed the amount to be fixed in execution under ss. 211 and 212 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Rukini Mohun attained his majority on the 17th April 1885. In execution of this decree possession was taken in the month of August 1880.

On the 4th of April 1882 the respondents applied to the Court for the ascertainment of the mesne profits. The Civil Court Amin was directed by the Court to make the necessary inquiry, and [55] notwithstanding repeated reminders from the Court, the Amin not having completed his inquiry, the application was struck off on the 9th October 1882.

On the 18th September 1885 the present application was made for the ascertainment of the wasilat, and for the realization of the amount which might be fixed, by the attachment and sale of the judgment-debtors' property. The judgment-debtors pleaded limitation, and the lower Court having overruled it, one of them has preferred this appeal.

The lower Court treated the present application as one for execution of a decree under art. 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. It has overruled the plea of limitation upon two grounds: It has presumed that the reminders to the Amin appointed to inquire into the amount of mesne profits in the year 1882 must have been given at the instance of the decree-holders. These reminders in the lower Court's opinion constituted steps taken in aid of execution; and as the present application is within three years from the last of these steps, the execution is not barred. The other ground is, that as one of the decree-holders was a minor, till within three years from the date of the present application, his remedy is not barred, under s. 7 of the Limitation Act, and as regards the other decree-holder, his remedy is equally not barred under s. 8, because he could not give a valid discharge without the concurrence of the other decree-holder, during the minority of the latter.

The lower Court is in error in thinking that under s. 8 of the Limitation Act, the remedy of the decree-holder, who was of age at the date of the decree, is not barred; because the last part of that section, upon which the lower Court evidently relies, applies to a case of all the joint creditors or claimants being under a legal disability.

But it seems to us that the present application is not an application for execution of a decree.

The decree in this case is divisible into two parts: one for possession of land and the other for mesne profits. That part of it which directs possession to be awarded to the decree-holders is final. But the other part of it is merely an interlocutory decree, declaring that the decree-holders are entitled to recover [54] mesne profits, and it would become final when the amount of the mesne profits would be fixed by the Court. The present application is therefore, an application by which the decree-holders moved the lower Court to make a final decree regarding mesne profits. Although in form it is an application for execution, in reality it is not so—see Baroda Sundari Dabia v. Fergusson (1); Dildar Hossein v. Mujundunissa (2); contra Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Debee (3). In the last of these cases the first two cases were not cited, and we agree in view taken in those two Rulings. But in the case of Baroda Sundari Dabia v. Fergusson (1), the Judges were of opinion that the decree-holder is not bound to apply for making the decree complete within three years. But the provisions of art. 178 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act were not considered by the learned Judges. We are of opinion that that article applies to an application by a decree-holder for making the decree complete.

Applying this article to the present application, it seems to us that so far as the decree-holder, who was not a minor at the date of the decree is concerned, his remedy is barred. So far as he is concerned, the application should have been made within three years—at least, from the date of the delivery of possession of the lands decreed. But the remedy of the other decree-holder is not barred, because he attained majority within three years from the date of the present application. His remedy is not therefore barred under s. 7 of the Limitation Act. Section 8 has no application, because in our opinion the other decree-holder could not give a valid discharge without his concurrence. Upon this point our attention was called to the case of Ahamudden v. Girish Chunder Shamunt (1). But that was a case of money due to joint creditors under a contract. In the present case the judgment-debtors were made liable as wrong-doers. We are of opinion that in this case a discharge given by one of the decree-holders could not have been a valid discharge binding upon the other.

The remedy of the respondent Rukini Mohun Bose being not barred, and he being one of the two joint decree-holders, he [55] should, in our opinion, be allowed to execute the whole decree under s. 231 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We make this order, because in our opinion the remedy only of the decree-holder, Anando Kishore Bose, is barred, but his right is not extinguished. We are aware of a conflict of decisions upon this point—Nursing Doyal v. Hurryhr Saha (2); Krishna Mohun Bose v. Okhilmoni Dossee (3); Ram Chunder Ghosaul v. Juggut Moumohiney Dabee (4). But we agree in the view that the remedy only is barred. But we desire to guard ourselves from being understood to say that the remedy barred under a repealed Limitation Act would be revived under the Repealing Act, even if there be no express provision to that effect. We express no opinion upon that point.

The result is, that the order of the lower Court will be varied as directed above.

The appellant will pay the respondent's costs.

by his nearest friend and guardian, his mother, Khyama Sunduri Chowdhrai." The suit was for contribution on account of Government revenue and cesses alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff, on account of the defendants, in respect of a certain share of a mehal, of which they were joint proprietors. There were five defendants, of whom Nos. 2, 3, and 4 did not enter appearance. No. 1 appeared after the issues had been settled and applied for leave to file a written statement, but he was not allowed to do so. The fifth defendant, who was also a minor, represented by his mother Tripura Sunduri Chowdhrai, alone contested the suit. In her written statement she stated, amongst other things, that the plaintiff and defendant No. 5 were members of a joint Hindu family, and that they were living jointly at the date of the suit, and that the affairs relating to the joint properties were managed on behalf of the minor by his guardian and mother the said Khyama Sunduri Chowdhrai. It was not alleged in the written statement that the plaintiff was not a minor, or the suit not properly framed, nor was any issue raised on that point. It appeared, however, that an objection was taken at the hearing that he was not a minor, but the Court of first instance finding that this plea had not been raised, and that it was only supported by a vague statement of one witness, declined to entertain it, and accordingly decided the case on its merits and gave the plaintiff a decree against the first four defendants, but dismissed his suit against defendant No. 5.

Against that decree, in so far as it dismissed his suit against defendant No. 5, the plaintiff appealed, making defendant No. 5 sole respondent. In the title of the appeal the plaintiff was described as "late a minor, by Khyama Sunduri Chowdhrai, his next friend, but now of full age." Upon the appeal coming on to be heard the lower appellate Court found from the plaintiff's application and affidavit to discharge his guardian, that he was stated to have been 21 years and five months on the 18th May 1885, and as the suit was instituted on the 1st August 1883, unless he was a ward of Court under Act XL, the Court below should have rejected the suit in limine. As it was not [57] clear whether or not he was a ward of Court, the District Judge, adjourned the hearing of the appeal for the purpose of having that question ascertained. Upon the appeal coming on again, the lower appellate Court found that an application for the purpose of making the plaintiff a ward of Court was made on the 18th May 1875, and an order granting the application passed on the 8th March 1876, but that no certificate was ever taken out. That Court, therefore, held that the plaintiff had attained his majority upon the institution of the suit, and dismissed the suit against all the defendants.

Against that decree the plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court, making all the defendants respondents.

Baboo Kishori Lal Sircar and Baboo Kashinath Moitra, for the appellant.

The following cases were referred to during the course of the arguments:

Stephen v. Stephen (1); Stephen v. Stephen (2); Chunee Mul Johary v. Brojonath Roy Chowdhry (3).

(1) 8 C. 714. (2) 9 C. 901. (3) 8 C. 967.
The judgment of the High Court (Mitter and Grant, JJ.) (after shortly stating the facts) proceeded as follows:—

At the time when the case was argued before the Subordinate Judge, it seems that a somewhat similar objection was pressed, but the Subordinate Judge dismissed it, with the remark that it was not put in issue, and not only was it not put in issue, but, as already pointed out, it was an admitted fact that the plaintiff was a minor, and that his property was managed by his guardian and mother Khyama Sunduri Chowdhrani. An appeal was preferred against the decision of the Subordinate Judge by the plaintiff against the defendant No. 5, the suit having been dismissed as against him. There was no appeal by the other defendants against whom the decree was passed. The District Judge, on an application being made by the minor on attaining majority for discharging the guardian under the provisions of the Procedure Code, allowed an objection to be taken to the frame of the suit based upon a statement contained in the afore-mentioned application. That statement amounted to this, that on the date of the institution of the suit Girish Chunder Chowdhry was over 18 years of age; and the Judge says: "The suit was instituted on the 1st August 1883; so that, unless appellant was a ward of Court under Act XL, the suit below should have been rejected in limine. As it is not clear whether he was or was not such ward, the case may stand over till the 16th of September, at the request of his pleader, who consents to pay Rs. 10 postponement fees." Then it was taken afterwards, and the District Judge found that an application for a certificate was made by the mother on the 18th of May 1875, and an order was passed in March 1876 appointing her manager and guardian of her son, but there was nothing to show that a certificate was actually issued. In this state of things the District Judge, being of opinion that the suit was not properly brought in the name of Girish Chunder Chowdhry as a minor represented by his mother, dismissed the whole suit even against the defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 4. As regards the defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 4, it is quite clear that the District Judge was not right in setting aside the decree of the Court below. That part of the decree of the first Court was not before him, and he had no right to interfere with it. That part of the decree of the District Judge must, therefore, be set aside. Then, as regards the defendant No. 5, against whom the appeal was preferred, it seems to us that the objection upon which the suit was dismissed should not have been allowed by the District Judge to be put forward by the respondent. Not only was no objection taken by the respondent at first upon this point, but the respondent admitted that the plaintiff was a minor, and that his property was managed by his mother Khyama Sundari. That being so, the point should not have been allowed to be urged in the lower appellate Court; but even if it had been open to the defendant No. 5 to urge this objection, we should have been inclined to hold that, under s. 3 of the Majority Act, the plaintiff Girish Chunder Chowdhry was a minor at the date of the institution of the suit. Section 3 of the Majority Act says "Every minor, of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice, and every minor under the jurisdiction of any Court of Wards, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Succession Act or in any other enactment, be deemed to have attained his majority when he shall have completed his age of twenty-one years and not before." The question is, whether in this case... the guardian was appointed under Act XL of 1858 by a Court of Justice. In this case we find that on an application (we must take it that it was so, as it is not proved otherwise) by the mother to be appointed manager of the minor's estate and guardian of his person, an order was made appointing her his guardian, and according to the admission of the defendant she was managing the property of the minor. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the requirements of s. 3 of the Majority Act were fulfilled. Whether the person appointed actually took out a certificate or not is not material in the view which we take of the provisions of s. 3 of the Majority Act. As soon as an application is made for the appointment of a guardian, and an order is passed appointing a person to be guardian of the minor, the minor becomes a ward of Court, and when he becomes a ward of Court, we think it was the intention of the Legislature to extend the period of majority to 21 years under the Act. The language of the section is also in favour of this view. It simply says: "Every minor of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice." It does not say that every minor in respect of whose person or property a certificate of guardianship has been issued. It being the intention of the Legislature to extend the age of minority to 21 years in those cases where a minor becomes a ward of Court, and the language of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act carrying out this intention, we are inclined to think that, upon a proper construction of this section, the age of minority is extended to 21 years when an order is made appointing a guardian. Our attention has been called to three decisions of this Court in the cases of Stephen v. Stephen (1); Stephen v. Stephen (2); and Chunee Mul Johary v. Brojo Nath Roy Chowdhry (3). The last mentioned decision is in favour of the view we now take; the other two take a contrary view. If the point was actually before us, with great deference to the Judges who decided [60] those cases, we should be inclined to hold that the plaintiff should not be considered to have attained his majority when the plaint was filed.

We reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court and remand the case to that Court to be decided as between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 5. Costs as between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 5 will abide the result.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 must pay the costs of the plaintiff in this appeal.

APPellate civil.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Khodabuxh Mundul and others (Defendants) v. Monglai Mundul and others (Plaintiffs).* [8th September, 1886.]

On the 6th of July 1882 the Joint-Magistrate of Krishnagur, on a complaint made by A, ordered B to demolish a cow-shed which he had built some months previously, the land on which the cow-shed had been built being part of a public way. Thereupon B brought a suit against A for a declaration of his right to enjoy the land as his private property and for confirmation of possession. The plaint did not allege that B, in causing the Magistrate to initiate proceedings against A, had been actuated by malicious motives and had acted with the intention of wrongfully injuring the plaintiff.

Held, that the suit would not lie. Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lal Roy (1) disentd from.

The facts of this case are stated as follows in the judgment of the Court of first instance, which was delivered on the 28th of March 1883:

"The plaint states that the bit of land defined in the plaint being about 21 cubits in length and 16 cubits in breadth, appertains to the jamai holding of plaintiffs; that they are in exclusive [61] possession of the same; that in Chait, 1288, they erected a cow-shed on the same without any objection being raised by any one; that on the complaint of the defendants to the effect that the land forms a part of the public way, the Joint Magistrate of this place issued, on the 6th July last, an order requiring plaintiffs to demolish the cow-shed within 15 days: that as the land is not a part of the public way, and as the same is the private property of plaintiffs, this suit is instituted for declaration of their right to the land and confirmation of possession.

"Defendants plead that this suit being instituted virtually to set aside the order of the Criminal Court is not maintainable; that the suit cannot be heard in the absence of Government and of the landlord of the place, and that the land in suit is part of the public way. They also plead limitation."

The following issues were framed by the Court:

1. Whether this suit is maintainable in spite of the finding of the Magistrate that the land in suit is a part of the public way?
2. Whether there is a defect of the necessary parties to this suit?
3. Whether this suit is barred by limitation?
4. Whether the disputed land is the property of plaintiffs, and whether they were in exclusive possession of the same?

The Court of first instance decided the first issue in the plaintiffs' favour on the authority of Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lal Roy (1). He also found the second and third issues in the plaintiffs' favour, and in regard to the fourth issue he found that a portion of the land claimed was the property of the plaintiffs and in their exclusive possession. In respect of this portion he gave the plaintiffs a decree. Both parties appealed from this decision to the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, who found the fourth issue in plaintiffs’ favour, and gave them a decree for all the land claimed by them. The defendants appealed to the High Court on the following grounds, amongst others,—

(1) For that the Courts below are wrong in omitting to try the real question in the case whether the land in dispute formed a part of the public thoroughfare, and if it was so, whether the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

[62] (2) For that the Courts below should have held that the present suit was not maintainable for defect of necessary parties.

Babu Jugut Chunder Banerjee, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

On information given by the defendants the Magistrate proceeded under Chapter X of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and directed the plaintiffs to remove a hut that they had erected on land found by him to be a public thoroughfare. The plaintiffs now sue for a declaration of their title and confirmation of their possession of the land as their private property as against these defendants.

The defendants pleaded that the suit will not lie to set aside the order of the Magistrate that the land forms part of a public thoroughfare. Both Courts have relied on the judgment in the case of Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lal Roy (1), in which it was held that a Civil Court can, irrespective of such an order by a Magistrate try the question whether the land, which formed the subject of that order, is private property and not a thoroughfare or public place as between the parties to such suit and those who claim under them. Field, J., one of the learned Judges who decided that case, seems to have gone even further, but White, J., limited the operation of the order of a Civil Court to the parties before it, and we cannot accept that case as an authority beyond that. But we are of opinion that the law laid down in that case is not in accordance with previous decisions on the point. Those cases were not referred to in the argument raised or in the judgments of the learned Judges.

In Meecho Chunder Sircar v. Ravenshaw (2), Couch, C.J., and Kemp, J., held that, the matter having been tried in the manner provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure, “the plaintiffs have had what the law gives them, and are not at liberty to have the question tried again. The consequence of that would be that there might be another order by the Magistrate, then another suit, and so on.”

[63] No doubt in that case the question between the plaintiff and the Magistrate had been referred to a jury, who had found that the land in suit was part of a public thoroughfare, but such reference to a jury would be entirely optional with a person in the position of the plaintiffs, and because he had not applied for a jury and preferred to show cause against the Magistrate’s order, the finality of that order after termination of the proceedings would be none the less binding. Rooke v. The Peari Lall Coal Co. (3), is an authority in the same direction, and in Chinta Monee Bapoolee v. Digambur Mitter (4), it was held that there would be no cause of action against persons who cause the Magistrate to initiate proceedings unless it could be shown that they 'were actuated by malicious motives and with the intention of wrongfully injuring the plaintiff.'

If the orders of the lower Courts be maintained, and it be held in accordance with the precedent cited that, as against defendants the plaintiffs had established a private right of property, and if the plaintiffs were again to erect a building on that spot, the Magistrate would not be precluded from acting as before or even enforcing his previous order which is still in force. If therefore a decree in the present suit is inoperative as against the Magistrate (and the decision in Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lal Roy goes to that extent) the interminable procedure condemned by Couch, C.J., in Meechoo Chunder Sircar v. Ravenshaw would result. But upon the authority of the case of Chinta Monee Bapoolee v. Digambur Mitter reported in 10 W. R., 400, no case would lie against the defendants before us. These cases are not referred to in the decision of Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lal Roy, and we are therefore not embarrassed with that precedent. We also observe that the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, passed since that judgment was delivered in s. 123 declares that no order duly made by a Magistrate under that section shall be called in question in any Civil Court.

The suit must therefore be dismissed with costs in all Courts, the orders of both the lower Courts being set aside.

P. O'K. Orders set aside and suit dismissed.

Kedarnath Bhattacharji (Plaintiff) v. Gorie Mahomed (Defendant)* [26th November, 1886.]

Right of Suit—Subscription, Suit for—Liability of subscribers to a proposed Town Hall.

A suit will lie to recover a subscription promised; the subscriber knowing that, on the faith of his and other subscriptions, an obligation is to be incurred to a contractor for the purpose of erecting a building to be paid for out of the monies subscribed.

This was a reference from the Howrah Court of Small Causes.

It appeared that it was thought advisable to erect a Town Hall at Howrah, provided sufficient subscriptions could be got together for the purpose. To this end the Commissioners of the Howrah Municipality set to work to obtain the necessary funds by public subscription, creating themselves, by deed, trustees of the Howrah Town Hall Fund. As soon as the subscriptions allowed, the Commissioners, including the plaintiff, who was also Vice-Chairman of the Municipality, entered into a contract with a contractor for the purpose of building the Town Hall; estimates and plans were submitted to, and approved by, the Commissioners, the original estimate amounting to Rs. 26,000. This estimate, however, was increased to Rs. 40,000, and it was found that the subscriptions would cover this amount, and the original plans were therefore enlarged and altered.

The defendant was a subscriber to this fund of rupees one hundred, having signed his name in the subscription book for that amount. The defendant not having paid his subscription was sued in the Howrah Court of Small Causes by the plaintiff as Vice-chairman and trustee, and therefore as one of the persons who had made himself liable to the contractor for the costs [65] of the building, to recover the amount entered in the subscription book. Leave to sue, on behalf of himself and all others in the same interest with himself, was granted to the plaintiff by the Registrar of the Court under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The defendant contended that the plaintiff had no right to sue. The Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the Registrar had no power to grant leave to sue; that the Town Hall being trust property, the case was one falling under s. 437 of the Code; and that, therefore, the suit was bad ab initio. And on the question as to whether such a suit would otherwise lie, after referring to the case of Kedar Nath Mittra v. Alisar Rahoman (1) he found that the defendant was a man of no education, and it could not therefore be expected that he had put his name to the subscription book with a full knowledge of the object and utility of the Town Hall. He, therefore, found that the defendant was under no legal obligation to pay, and dismissed the suit, making his judgment contingent on the opinion of the High Court on the following points:—

(1). Whether the suit as laid by the plaintiff was legally maintainable? (2). Whether, upon the facts stated, the trustees were entitled to judgment?

On the reference coming up before the High Court,—

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Uma Kali Mukerji, appeared for the plaintiff.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Beverley, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—The questions which are proposed for us in this Reference from the Small Cause Court are, first, whether the suit as laid by the plaintiff is legally maintainable; and, secondly, whether, upon the facts stated in the reference, the trustees are entitled to judgment.

The facts of the case appear to be these: The plaintiff is a Municipal Commissioner of Howrah and one of the trustees of [66] the Howrah Town Hall Fund. Some time ago, it was in contemplation to build a Town Hall in Howrah, provided the necessary funds could be raised, and upon that state of things being existent, the persons interested set to work to see what subscriptions they could get. When the subscription list had reached a certain point, the Commissioners, including the plaintiff, entered into a contract with a contractor for the purpose of building the Town Hall, and plans of the building were submitted and passed, but as the subscription list increased, the plans increased too, and the original cost, which was intended to be Rs. 26,000, has swelled up to Rs. 40,000; but for the whole Rs. 40,000 the Commissioners, including the plaintiff, have remained liable to the contractor as much as for the original contract, because the additions to the buildings were made by the authority of the Commissioners and with their sanction. The defendant, on being applied to, subscribed his name in the book for Rs. 100, and the question is, whether the plaintiff, as one of the persons who made himself liable under the contract to the contractor for the cost of the building, can sue, on behalf of himself, and all those in the same interest with him, to recover the amount of the subscription from the defendant.

We think he can. Without reference to his being a trustee or a Municipal Commissioner, we think that under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure he is entitled to bring an action on behalf of himself and others jointly interested with him. If the action could be maintained on behalf of all, and there were no other section which would preclude this being done, that would cure any technical defect in the case.

Then the question is, whether this is a suit which could be maintained by the whole of the persons who made themselves liable to the contractor if they were all joined.

It is clear that there are a great many subscriptions that cannot be recovered. A man for some reason or other puts his name down for a subscription to some charitable object, for instance, but the amount of his subscription cannot be recovered from him because there is no consideration.

But in this particular case, the state of things is this: Persons were asked to subscribe, knowing the purpose to which the money was to be applied, and they knew that on the faith of their subscription an obligation was to be incurred to pay the contractor for the work. Under these circumstances, this kind of contract arises. The subscriber by subscribing his name says, in effect.—In consideration of your agreeing to enter into a contract to erect or yourselves erecting this building, I undertake to supply the money to pay for it up to the amount for which I subscribe my name. That is a perfectly valid contract and for good consideration; it contains all the essential elements of a contract which can be enforced in law by the persons to whom the liability is incurred. In our opinion, that is the case here, and therefore we think that both questions must be answered in the affirmative, because, as I have already said, we think that there is a contract for good consideration, which can be enforced by the proper party, and we think that the plaintiff can enforce it, because he can sue on behalf of himself and all persons in the same interest, and, therefore, we answer both questions in the affirmative, and we consider that the Judge of the Small Cause Court ought to decree the suit for the amount claimed, and we also think that the plaintiff ought to get his costs including the costs of this hearing.

FAHAMIDANNIISSA BEGUM AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND ANOTHER (Defendants).* [14th August, 1886.]

Assessment of re-formed land after Diluviation—Act IX of 1847, ss. 1, 6, 7 and 9, Effect of—Jurisdiction of Board of Revenue, Its extent—Civil Court, Power of—Survey Maps, their evidentiary value.

Whereon inspection of a survey map, and after its comparison with a former thatk map, the Board of Revenue assessed certain land as alluvial increment, which, however, the Civil Court in a suit against the order of the Board, found upon further evidence to be a re-formation on the original site of a [68] permanently-settled estate, in respect whereof the plaintiff had all along paid revenue without abatement:

Held, that the land was not liable to fresh assessment under the provisions of s. 6 of Act IX of 1847, nor was the comparison of the two maps by the Revenue Officer conclusive on the question of addition to the estate—Surat Sundari Debi v. The Secretary of State (1), partially overruled.

Held, also (Mitter, J., dissenting) that the order of the Board of Revenue fixing the land with liability to assessment was not final, and could be set aside by the Civil Court as ultra vires—Deewan Ram Jewan Singh v. The Collector of Shahabad (2); Ram Jewan Singh v. The Collector of Shahabad (3) overruled.

Held, by the majority of the Full Bench that the language of s. 9 was not such as would prohibit the present suit; and unless the meaning were clear, its operation should be limited to suits for damages on account of anything done in good faith; for instance, in a case of ouster under s. 7—The Collector of Murshidabad v. Roy Dhunput Singh (4) approved.

Held, (Mitter, J., dissenting)—Section 1 of Act IX of 1847 repealed everything in the Regulations which enacted by what officers and how the question of liability to assessment should be tried, and therefore took away from Collectors and Boards of Revenue the power of giving any binding decision on the point.

Held, also (Mitter, J., dissenting) that the effect of the words “shall be final” in s. 6 was to make the assessment final in every case in which there was jurisdiction to assess, but to leave it open to the Civil Courts to inquire in each case whether there was such jurisdiction, or whether the lands assessed were liable to assessment.

Per Mitter, J.—Section 1 has not abolished the judicial functions of the Revenue Authorities under Regulation II of 1891; all that has been abolished by that section are the tribunals constituted by Regulation III of 1828.

Per Mitter, J.—The proceedings of the Revenue Authorities under s. 6 embrace an inquiry upon two questions, viz., the question of the liability to assessment and the rate of assessment, and under the express wording of the section the finality attaches to the whole order of the Sudder Board of Revenue.

This case was referred to a Full Bench by Field and Macpherson, JJ., on the 2nd of March 1886, with the following opinion:

The plaintiff in this case is the proprietor of the permanently-settled estate Chur Mohun Sureswar. He alleges in his plaint that the estate Chur Mohun Sureswar according to a butward [69] made in the year 1792, consisted of 69 drones odd of land, equivalent to over 10,000 bighas; that subsequently a large plot of this land was washed away, leaving only 37 drones in existence; that Government resumed the estate, but it was afterwards released in 1838 upon the objection of the plaintiff’s predecessor in title: that when the thak measurement was made in 1859, the greater portion of the estate was under water, some four drones only, equivalent to 652 bighas odd, being above water, that this quantity of land above water was shown upon the thak map; that at the time of the survey measurement, which followed the thak measurement, the whole estate was under water; that subsequently to the survey measurement, some 2,000 bighas were re-formed upon a part of the site of the estate; that the Denga Deputy Collector, finding that no land of the estate was shown upon the survey map, and proceeding under Act IX of 1847, dealt with the land so re-formed as land which Government was entitled to assess with revenue; that on the 20th of October 1879 the land which was shown in the thak map as being in existence, viz., 652 bighas, was released, but the rest of the land was resumed and re-assessed; and that the Board of Revenue confirmed these proceedings on the 19th of April 1881. The plaintiff's case is that the land which has been so resumed and assessed with revenue under the provision of s. 6 of Act IX of 1847, is a re-formation on the original site of his estate Chur Mohun Sureswar, and that the Revenue authorities have no jurisdiction to deal with this land under Act IX of 1847, and assess it with revenue as land added to the estate under the provisions of s. 6 of that Act.

It has been found as a fact by both the Courts below that the land which forms the subject of the present suit is a re-formation on the site of the plaintiff’s estate. It was therefore included within the boundaries of that estate as settled at the time of the decennial and permanent settlements.

The learned counsel for the appellant, Mr. Evans, contends that the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration; first, that the land in question is part of the plaintiff’s permanently-settled estate Chur Mohun Sureswar; and, secondly, that the proceedings of the Revenue authorities in assessing this land with revenue under the provisions of s. 6 of Act IX of 1847 were ultra vires.

[70] We may observe that there is no doubt that the plaintiff has paid the full amount of revenue assessed at the time of the permanent settlement upon the estate, i.e., upon the 69 drones odd, which are said to have been comprised in such estate at the time of the permanent settlement. There is no contention that the plaintiff has ever received any abatement for land diluviated or washed away; and any question therefore of abandonment by the plaintiff of his rights does not arise.

There are several cases decided by this Court which are adverse to the contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellant.

The first of these in the case of Ram Jawan Singh v. The Collector of Shahabad (1). In this case it was held that ss. 5 and 6 of Act IX of 1847 are to be read together, and that where there is an addition to the estate appearing upon the inspection of the new map, even although such an addition is a re-formation upon the old site, it comes within s. 6, and is land added to the estate; and it was held that the decision in Lopez v. Maddan Thakur (1) as to land re-formed on the old site, not being land gained within the meaning of cl. 1 of s. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825, did not affect the construction of Act IX of 1847. It was further held that the 9th section of this Act precluded any suit of this nature brought to question the exercise by the Revenue authorities in good faith of the powers conferred by the Act. It may be observed that this opinion of the effect of the 9th section of the Act has since been dissented from, and a different view now obtains—see the case of The Collector of Moorsheadabad v. Roy Dhanput Singh (2) and the Full Bench case of Chunder Sikhar Bundopadhya v. Abboy Churn Bagchi (3).

The next case is that of Ranjeewan Singh v. The Collector of Shaka-bad (4). This follows the case in 14 B. L. R., 221, decided by Couch, C. J., and Ainslie, J., but in this later case Phear, J., concurred in the decision.

[71] The third case is that of The Collector of Moorsheadabad v. Roy Dhanput Singh (2) already referred to in connection with the construction of s. 9 of Act IX of 1847. In this case it was held that where the Revenue authorities had assessed, under the provisions of s. 6 of Act IX of 1847, as an addition to the estate of J. N., land which really belonged to the estate of R. D., having been re-formed on the original site of R.D.'s estate, although a suit would not lie against Government to contest the assessment made by its officers, still R. D. could maintain a suit against J. N. to assert his title to, and obtain possession of, the land which really belonged to R. D., but which had been settled with J. N. as an addition to J. N.'s estate.

The fourth case is that of Sarat Sunduri Debe v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (5).

Having carefully considered these cases, we find ourselves unable to agree in the opinion which, deriving support therefrom, would preclude the plaintiff in the present suit from obtaining the remedy which he asks. As, after giving our best attention to the whole subject, we find ourselves unable to concur in the view of the effect of Act IX of 1847 which has been accepted by more than one Division Bench of the Court, we think we ought to state fully the difficulties which present themselves to our minds, and which we are unable to overcome, so as to accept a view which has no doubt great weight of authority in its favour.

By s. 4 of Regulation I of 1793, it was declared that, at the expiration of the decennial settlement, no alteration would be made in the assessment which actual proprietors of land had respectively engaged to pay, but that they and their heirs and lawful successors would be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever. At the same time the Governor-General reserved to himself the right of assessing lands at that time alienated, and paying no public revenue,—see cl. (8), s. 8 of the same Regulation.

After the permanent settlement it was found that there were in many parts of Bengal large tracts of waste land not [72] included within the limits of permanently-settled estates, and Government became acquainted by experience with the changes caused in the limits of settled estates by the action of the great rivers in the Bengal delta which from year to year caused these changes, vary considerably increasing the area of some estates by the addition of alluvial land. In order to assess revenue on both these classes of land, and so secure to Government an additional income which the State was justified in claiming, Regulation II of 1819 was passed.

The preamble of this Regulation contains the following passage: "It further appears to be necessary, in order to obviate all misapprehension on the part of the public officers or of individuals, to declare generally the right of Government to assess all lands which at the period of the decennial settlement were not included within the limits of an estate for which a settlement was concluded with the owners, not being lands for which a distinct settlement may have been made since the above period, nor lands held free of assessment under a valid and legal title; and at the same time formally to renounce all claim on the part of Government to additional revenue from lands which were included within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement has been concluded, at the period when such settlement was so concluded, whether on the plea of error or fraud or on any pretext whatever, saving of course mehals expressly excluded from the operation of the settlement."

The first clause of s. 3 enacts "that all lands which at the period of the decennial settlement were not included within the limits of any parguna, mouza or other division of estates for which a settlement was concluded with the owners, not being lands for which a distinct settlement may have been made since the period above referred to, nor lands held free of assessment under a valid and legal title," shall be liable to assessment, and that the revenue assessed thereon shall belong to Government.

The second clause of the same section enacts that the same "principles shall be deemed applicable, not only to tracts of land such as are described to have been brought into cultivation within the Sunderbuns, but to all churs and islands formed since the period of the decennial settlement, and generally to all lands [73] gained by alluvion or dereliction since that period, whether from an introcession of the sea, an alteration in the course of rivers, or the gradual accession of soil on their banks."

This Regulation, therefore, asserts the right of Government to assess revenue upon the two classes of land just indicated, i.e., (1) waste land not included within the limits of any permanently-settled estates; and (2) alluvial additions to such estates. Now, it is impossible to say since the decisions of the Privy Council in the cases of Lopez v. Maddan Thakur (1) and of Nogendra Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esof (2) that "land re-formed on an old site" is, within the meaning of the second clause of the section just quoted, "land gained by alluvion or dereliction, whether from an introcession of the sea, an alteration in the course of rivers or the gradual accession of soil on their banks."

The 31st section of this Regulation, in order to prevent any misconception, provides that nothing in the Regulation shall affect the right of proprietors of permanently-settled estates "to the full benefit of all waste lands included within the ascertained boundaries of such estates respectively at the period of the decennial settlement and which have since been * * * reduced to cultivation."
The proviso relates to the first of the two classes of lands just mentioned.

The second clause of the same section contains a corresponding proviso applicable to the second of those classes. This clause enacts "that all claims by the Revenue Authorities on behalf of Government to additional revenue from lands which were at the period of the decennial settlement included within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement has been concluded, whether on the plea of error or fraud or any pretext whatever—saving of course the case of lands expressly excluded from the operation of the settlement, such as lakheraj and thanadari lands—shall be and be considered wholly illegal and invalid."

It would thus appear that the Legislature, while asserting the right of Government to assess revenue on waste land and alluvial land, not included at the time of settlement within the limits [74] of permanently settled estates, was careful to declare that these provisions were not to be construed so as to justify the assessment of revenue upon any land which fell within the ascertained boundaries of permanently-settled estates. When we use the term "land," here, we may bear in mind the words of the Privy Council in the case of Lopez v. Maddan Thakur: "Their Lordships are unable to assent to any distinction between surface and site."

We now pass to cl. 1 of s. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825. This clause, using language similar to that of cl. 2 of s. 3 of Regulation II of 1819, provide that "when land is gained by gradual accession, whether from the recess of a river or of the sea, it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed;" and in the case of land annexed to an estate held immediately from Government, it is provided that this shall not entitle the holder of the land to exemption from the payment to Government of any assessment of public revenue to which he may be liable under the provisions of Regulation II of 1819, or of any other Regulation in force. It would appear clear from these provisions that it was the intention of the Legislature to assess with revenue only such alluvial land as was "gained" within the meaning of the clause just quoted; and that "land re-formed on the old site of an estate" is not "land gained" within the meaning of the provision was settled as far back as 1848 in the case of Imam Bandi v. Hur Gobind Ghose (1), where it was said that, whoever was the owner before the inundation, remained the owner while the land was covered with water and after it became dry; and again more recently in the case of Lopez v. Maddan Thakur (2) and Nogendro Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esof (3).

In 1828, Special Commissioners were appointed for the purpose of enforcing the claims of Government to additional revenue derivable from waste land, alluvial land, and land held under invalid revenue free grants; and the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, so far as it existed in matters of this nature, was suspended [75] and transferred to the Special Commissioners. By cl. 1, s. 4 of Regulation III of 1828, when the jurisdiction of a Commissioner had been established in any particular district, it was competent to the Collector or other local Revenue Officer to institute the inquiries specified in Regulation II of 1819 in regard to any land which he might have reason to believe was held free of assessment.

At that time the revenue survey of Bengal had not been completed, and in the absence of any good maps, such inquiries must have been difficult and troublesome to all parties concerned. As soon as the revenue survey was completed, Act IX of 1847 was passed. No doubt the great object of this Act was, as is well pointed out by Couch, C. J., in Budrunissa Chowdhrai v. Prosunno Kumar Bose (1) to prevent the great inconvenience which arose from the surveys being made at different times of a number of small portions of land at a great expense.

That this Act of 1847 was a Procedure Act, and not intended to interfere with the substantive law, was decided in the case last quoted. Couch, C.J., there said (page 267): "Looking at the first section, the Act does not appear to have been intended to do more than make different provisions for the investigations regarding the liability of the lands to assessment or the rights of Government, and it was not intended to alter in any way the right which existed in the law before that Act was passed." If we are to suppose that this Act was intended to alter the substantive law contained in the old Regulations, and to render liable to a fresh assessment of revenue, land situated within the ascertained boundaries of a permanently-settled estate, then we must suppose that it was the intention of the Legislature to alter the declaration already referred to and contained in s. 31 of Regulation II of 1819. In the case of Lopez v. Maddan Thakur (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council, speaking of Regulation XI of 1825, said: "There are no words which imply the confiscation or destruction of any private person's property whatever. If a Regulation is to be construed as taking away anybody's property, that intention to take away ought to be [76] expressed in very plain words, or be made out by very plain and necessary implication."

Now, if the Revenue authorities are justified by Act IX of 1847 in imposing a fresh assessment of revenue upon the land which forms the subject of the present suit, although this land is included within the boundaries of the estate for which the plaintiff has paid up to this time the revenue assessed upon it at the time of the permanent settlement, it is impossible to say that there is not a confiscation or destruction of his proprietary rights as defined and declared by the Regulations of 1793. Most certainly Act IX of 1847 contains no words which express this intention, and we cannot see that there is anything in the provisions of this Procedure Act which conveys this intention by plain and necessary implication. The words "gained from the sea or from a river by alluvion or dereliction," which occur in the first section of the Act, are the same words which are found in cl. 1, s. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825; and looking at the whole of the legislation in pari materia, it does seem to us that the same construction is to be put upon these terms in the Act of 1847 as has been put upon them in the Regulation of 1825.

It has been held that title by re-formation on an old site prevails against any claim by Government under cl. 3, s. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825, on the ground that the land thrown up is an island (see Moni Lal Shahu v. The Collector of Sarun (3) and The Collector of Rajshahye v. Shama Sundari Dabi (4),) and it may well seem that the same principle should apply in the case now before us.

(2) 13 M. I. A. 467=5 B. L. R. 521.
If this view be adopted, the procedure of Act IX of 1847 applies only where land is gained within the meaning adopted by the Privy Council in construing the Regulation of 1825, and to all investigations concerned with such land, and has no application to land which is not gained in this sense, but which is a re-formation upon an old site of a permanently-settled estate.

We think it right to say that the view which we take does not, in our opinion, conflict with those decisions in which it has [77] been determined that Civil Courts cannot interfere with the action of the Revenue Authorities so long as they act with their jurisdiction; but it has been repeatedly held that Civil Courts are not debarred from inquiring whether the Revenue Authorities have or have not exceeded their jurisdiction, or from affording a remedy where such jurisdiction has been exceeded, even although the officers concerned were acting bona fide,—see for example the cases of Baij Nath Sahu v. Lala Sital Prasad (1), Madan Mohun Mazumdar v. Baistop Charan Mondal (2), Hargobind Das v. Baroda Prasad (3), Spencer v. Pukul Chowdhry (4) and Sarat Sundari Debi v. Secretary of State for India (5).

We think then that we ought to refer the following questions to a Full Bench:

First.—Whether the provisions of Act IX of 1847 are applicable to land re-formed on the site of a permanently settled estate, the revenue of which estate has been paid without abatement since the permanent settlement.

Secondly.—Whether, if these provisions are not so applicable, a Civil Court should, in the exercise of its discretion, make a decree declaring that the proceedings of the Revenue Authorities in respect of such land are ultra vires.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, for the appellants.—Act IX of 1847 is a Procedure Act and abrogates the Regulations pro-tanto. The substantive law on the subject remains unaffected. The land in suit which has been assessed by the Revenue Authorities forms part of a permanently settled estate. The plaintiff has all along paid the full amount of revenue assessed at the time of the Permanent Settlement upon the estate. The land in question has since been for some time under water; but it cannot be said that the Permanent Settlement has been abrogated quoad submerged lands. There is no difference here between land covered by water and land covered by crop. The Permanent Settlement implies a perpetual contract that the zamindar should hold the land for ever, [78] whether under water or not. In the present case there has been, as a matter of fact, no "gain," the land being a re-formation on the old site. There was nothing to assess. It cannot be said that the Act contemplates the confiscation of private rights; nor is there anything in the Act which expressly or by implication takes away any such rights. Section 6 of the Act should be strictly construed. The functions of the Revenue Court are merely to assess, and the order of the Board of Revenue is final only in respect thereof. There being nothing to assess in this case, the Act does not apply, and the Revenue Courts in assessing the land have exceeded their power. The Civil Court has jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Board of Revenue as ultra vires. The Act has abolished by s. 1 all the previous procedure for the judicial investigation of the question of liability to assessment; the Civil Court, therefore, must try the question.

The Civil Courts have exercised jurisdiction in analogous cases under the Butwara Law, the Revenue Sale Law, and the Waste Lands Law. The evidentiary value of survey maps is never of a conclusive character.

The Senior Government Pleader (Baboo Annoda Pershad Bannerjee), for the respondent.—The order of the Board of Revenue is final and cannot be questioned in a Civil Court. The land here has been assessed by the Revenue Authorities under s. 6 of the Act, and it has been so assessed on inspection of the survey map. The Board of Revenue has acted within its jurisdiction, and therefore this Court cannot interfere with the order. The proprietary right to the land is not the question in this case; the question is in regard to the assessment. We cannot now go behind the survey map. Section 1 of the Act did not abolish the power of the Board of Revenue to investigate judicially the question of liability to assessment. Sections, 5, 6, 7 and 9 have to be read together. The right of civil suit is confined only to certain cases; s. 7 expressly gives a right of civil suit, and by implication excludes such right in a case under s. 6 which governs the present case. There can be no suit under s. 5. Take the analogy of a case under s. 14 of Reg. VII of 1882; the Civil Court has no power to consider whether the new rate of assessment fixed by the Collector is reasonable. The following authorities were cited: Dewan Ram Jewan Singh v. The Collector of Shahabad (1); Ram Jewan Singh v. The Collector of Shahabad (2); Bishonath Dutt v. Foot-Chand Birjobashee (18); Ram Chund Bira v. The Government (19); Narain Chunder v. OPINIONS.

WILSON, J. (PETHERAM, C. J., and PRINSEP and O’KINEALY, JJ., concurring).—The lands to which this suit relates are a part [80] of Chur Mohun Sureswar, and are included within a permanently-settled estate of the plaintiffs. At the time when the first survey map was made, the whole chur had become diluviated; when a second survey map was made under Act IX of 1847, the part of the chur now in question had re-formed on the old site. The Revenue Authorities have assessed the land with land revenue under Act IX of 1847. This suit was brought to establish the plaintiffs’ right to hold the land as part of their permanently-settled estate, free from liability to any such additional assessment as has been imposed upon it. The first Court gave the plaintiffs a decree, the lower appellate Court reversed it. Against that reversal the present appeal has been brought, and the case has been referred to us by the Division Bench. The questions which we have to decide are substantially two:—

(1) Has a Civil Court jurisdiction to inquire whether the lands in question were assessable under Act IX of 1847? (2) If so, were these lands so assessable? The answer to these questions must depend upon the construction to be placed upon the provisions of Act IX of 1847; but in order to understand that Act it is necessary to examine the earlier legislation.

The first enactment which it is necessary to consider is Regulation II of 1819. The preamble to that Regulation states, amongst other things, that it “appears to be necessary in order to obviate all misapprehension on the part of the public officers or of individuals, to declare generally the right of Government to assess all lands which, at the period of the decennial settlement, were not included within the limits of an estate for which a settlement was made with the owners, nor being lands for which a distinct settlement may have been made since the above period, nor lands held free of assessment under a valid and legal title, and at the same time formally to renounce all claim on the part of Government to additional revenue from lands which were included within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement has been concluded at the period when such settlement was so concluded.” Section 3 accordingly expressly declares that all lands not included within a permanently-settled estate, nor subsequently settled, nor held free of assessment under a valid title, are liable to assessment; and the section expressly says further that this [81] principle is applicable “to all churs and islands formed since the period of the decennial settlement, and generally to all lands gained by alluvion or dereliction since that period, whether from a retrocession of the sea, an alteration in the course of rivers, or the gradual accretion of soil on their banks.”

This preamble and this section contain the substantive law on the subject. All that follows in this and subsequent Regulations refers to procedure for giving effect to that law. That procedure falls under two heads—the determination of the question whether particular lands are or are not liable to assessment, and the assessment of lands found to be liable. These two matters have been dealt with quite separately; one group of enactments declared by whom and under what procedure the liability to assessment should be decided; another group of enactments gave the rules for assessment.

The Regulation II of 1819 deals almost entirely with the first head—the trial of the question of liability. By s. 5 things were to be set in motion when a Collector had reason to believe that lands within the sphere of his control were liable to assessment. By s. 7 the Collector in such case was to " institute a full and particular inquiry into the circumstances and condition of the land in question at the period of the decennial settlement, and in cases of alluvial land, into the period of its formation." By s. 20 the Collector " having closed his proceedings " was to " record his opinion in a Persian rubokari detailing the grounds on which it is founded, and whether the lands appear liable to assessment or otherwise." He was to forward the proceedings to the Board of Revenue and to give a copy of his rubokari to the party. By s. 21 the Board in their turn were to record their " opinion " in a rubokari, and give a copy to the party. The final rubokari of the Collector and the Board were to contain a distinct statement of the subject-matter of the case, the grounds on which the decision may be given," and other matters. If the Board should " pronounce " against the liability, the decision was final except on proof in a Court of fraud or collusion. In the event of the Board " declaring the lands liable to assessment," the Collector was to inform the party of " the decision of the [82] Board," and then, and not before, he was to proceed " to fix an assessment on the principle of the general regulations on such information as may be procurable." Sections 22 and 23 provided for the suspension of the assessment proceedings, on certain conditions pending a suit to be at once instituted in a Civil Court, and s. 24 gave a right to sue afterwards within certain limits of time. Section 81 asserts in general terms that " it being left to the Courts of Judicature to decide, on all contested cases, whether lands assessed under the provisions of the Regulation were included at the period of the decennial settlement within the limits of estates for which a settlement has been concluded in perpetuity, and to reverse the decision of the Revenue Authorities in any case in which it shall appear that lands which actually formed, at the period in question, a component part of such an estate, have been unjustly subjected to assessment under the provisions of the Regulation, the zamindars and other proprietors of land will be enabled, by an application to the Court to obtain immediate redress in any case in which the Revenue Authorities shall violate or encroach on the rights secured to them by the permanent settlement."

At each point in the process for ascertaining the liability of land to assessment rules of procedure were given by this Regulation. These were modified in some respects by s. 5 of Regulation IX of 1825, but the provisions I have cited remained so far substantially unchanged.

The next Regulation to which it seems necessary to refer is Regulation VII of 1822. That is a long Regulation, containing an elaborate set of rules for conducting settlements and assessments. It applied only to the Ceded and Conquered Provinces and other districts in which the permanent settlement had never been introduced. It did not deal with the first of the two heads of inquiry to which I have referred, namely, the liability to assessment, but with the second, the assessment itself. It does, however, provide that in a variety of matters arising in the course of a settlement, the Revenue Officers should deal with questions of title; and in every such case recourse to the Civil Courts is carefully provided for as in ss. 14, 15, 16 and 17.

Regulation IX of 1825 applied the last mentioned Regulation [83] VII of 1822 to " all lands not within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement has been concluded." It also, as has been already mentioned by s. 5, modified in some respects the procedure for trying the liability to assessment provided by Regulation II of 1819.
Regulation XI of 1825, which deals with the title to churs and accretions, by s. 4 reserves any right to assess such lands, which belonged to Government under Regulation II of 1819.

The next regulation is Regulation III of 1828. The preamble refers to the provisions of Regulation II of 1819 as to inquiries with a view to the resumption and assessment of all lands held free of rent or at an inadequate rent under invalid tenures, adding: "such provision having been made with the intention that the decisions of the Collectors and of the Board should be held and considered to be judicial awards, and that the suits preferred to the ordinary Courts being of the nature of appeals should be speedily disposed of." It goes on to show that speedy decisions had for various reasons not been secured, and that it was "expedient to appoint Special Commissioners competent to decide finally all cases of the nature above described." Accordingly s. 2 empowered the Governor-General in Council to appoint in any district Special Commissioners for the final determination of all cases investigated by Collectors under Regulation II of 1819 as to the liability of lands to assessment, as well as certain other cases. It provided further, that in any district in which Special Commissioners were appointed, the powers of the ordinary Civil Courts in such cases should be suspended, and no appeal should lie to them from the decisions of Collectors or Boards of Revenue. By s. 5 the proceedings of the Collector were left much the same as under Regulation II of 1819, except that he might proceed to assess as soon as he had himself decided the question of liability. The award is spoken of as a "decision" and as a "judgment," and it is declared to have the force of a decree. The decisions of the Special Commissioners were made final except in cases in which, if the decision had been by the Sudder Court, an appeal would have lain to the Privy Council, in which case the appeal was preserved. Section 10 provided that suits in Civil Courts to contest decisions of Boards of Revenue should not stay execution, and that such suits should be heard as regular appeals. Other parts of the Regulation related to entirely different matters.

This was the state of legislation prior to the passing of Act IX of 1847. The result of that legislation appears to me to have been this.

The substantive law on the subject was clear. Any land alluvial or otherwise, included in a permanently-settled estate, was not liable to further assessment; any land not so included was liable to assessment.

The determination of the liability of land to assessment, and its assessment if so liable, were distinct questions dealt with by the Legislature in separate groups of provisions: the one was always treated as and declared to be a matter for Courts of Justice, the other for the Revenue Authorities as such.

The question of liability to assessment might be tried and decided—

First—By the Collector, subject to an appeal to the Board of Revenue and to the Civil Courts in districts where there were no Special Commissioners and to the Special Commissioners where there were such.

Secondly—By the Board of Revenue; on appeal from the Collector in districts where there were no Special Commissioners.

Thirdly—In the same districts, by ordinary Civil Courts on appeal from the Board of Revenue.

Fourthly—By Special Commissioners, when such were appointed on appeal from the Collector.

All the authorities alike, the Collector and the Board of Revenue no less than the ordinary Civil Courts and the Special Commissioners, appear to me, when trying and deciding the question of liability to assessment, to have been judicial tribunals, making judicial investigations, and passing judicial decisions. So far as the nature of the question tried and determined affects the matter, this would certainly seem to be so; the question was as to the existence of a proprietary right expressly conferred by Statute. In Regulation II of 1819 the finding of the Collector and of the Board of Revenue are spoken [85] of indiscriminately as "opinions" and as "decisions," and the Board are said to "pronounce against the assessment" or to "declare" the lands liable (ss. 20, 21, 22). Regulation III of 1828 in the preamble says in plain terms that the Legislature had always intended those decisions to be "judicial awards," and the proceedings in the ordinary Courts to question them to be "of the nature of appeals." In this last mentioned Regulation the proceedings are frequently termed "suits," the findings are now called sometimes "decisions," sometimes "judgments," and they have the force of decrees. For these reasons I think that both before and after 1828 the Collector and the Board of Revenue, just as much as the ordinary Courts and Special Commissioners, when trying the question of liability to assessment, were not doing an executive act as officers of the revenue, but were acting as Courts of Justice exercising a Special civil jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Regulations.

I now come to Act IX of 1847. That is "an Act regarding the assessment of lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction within the Provinces of Bengal, Behar and Orissa." Section 1 enacts "that such parts of the Regulations of the Bengal Code as establish tribunals and prescribe rules of procedure for investigations regarding the liability to assessment of lands gained from the sea or rivers, by alluvion or dereliction, or regarding the right of Government to the ownership thereof, shall cease to have effect within the Provinces of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, and that all such investigations pending before the Collectors and Deputy Collectors,... shall forthwith be discontinued, and that no measures shall hereafter be taken for the assessment of such lands, or for the assertion of the right of Government to the ownership thereof, except under the provisions of this Act." Section 3 empowered the local Government, at any time after ten years had elapsed from a previous survey, to order a fresh survey of lands on the banks of rivers or on the sea-shore, in order to ascertain the changes that have taken place in the meantime, and to cause a new map to be made. Section 5 directed that if on inspection of the new map it appeared that land had been washed away from a revenue-paying estate a deduction should be made from the sudder jumma, as to which [86] the orders of the Board of Revenue should be final. Section 6 says "Whenever on inspection of any such new map, it shall appear to the local Revenue Authorities that land has been added to any estate paying revenue to Government, they shall, without delay, assess the same with a revenue payable to Government according to the rules in force for assessing alluvional increments, and shall report their proceedings to the Sudder Board of Revenue, whose orders thereupon shall be final." Section 7 directed that when on a like inspection it appeared that "an island has been thrown up in a large and navigable river liable to be taken possession of by the Government under cl. 3, s. 4, Regulation XI of 1825," the local Revenue Authorities should take possession of it, and assess and settle it, and that the orders of the Board of Revenue "in regard to the assessment" should be final: "Provided, however, that any party aggrieved by the act of the Revenue Authorities in taking possession of any island as aforesaid, shall be at liberty to contest the same by a regular suit in the Civil Court." Section 9 says that,
"except as regards the proprietary rights to islands, no suit or action in any Court of Justice shall lie against the Government, or any of its officers on account of anything done in good faith in the exercise of the powers conferred by this Act."

These are the sections which have to be considered, and the broad questions to be decided are, first, whether they have taken away from the Civil Courts all power of inquiring into the liability to assessment of alluvial lands which have been assessed; and, secondly, whether they have made lands liable to be assessed which were not so before. I think it worthy of observation, in the first place that the Legislature of this country has always acted in these matters upon a clear policy, namely, that questions of title are for the Courts of Justice, questions of assessment for the Revenue Authorities. That principle had, prior to 1847, been acted upon for 50 years in the case of alluvial lands, and it is still applied, so far as I know, in all other cases. The construction contended for reverses the settled policy in this one particular instance; it involves a direct infringement of rights of property, amounting in the present case, on the facts found, to [87] confiscation; and it takes away from people their ordinary power of having their legal rights of property determined by Courts of Justice. I think we ought not to adopt such a construction unless the intention of the Legislature has been expressed in clear and unmistakable language; and I can find no clear expression of such an intention; on the contrary, I think the language of the Act shows with reasonable clearness another intention altogether.

The first thing I propose to examine is the meaning of the words in
s. 1, which repeals "such parts of the Regulations as establish tribunals and prescribe rules of procedure for investigations regarding the liability to assessment" of alluvial lands. By the word tribunal, I understand simply a man or body of men constituting a Court of Justice, and I have already given my reasons for thinking that Collectors and Boards of Revenue were Courts of Justice when trying questions of liability to assessment. And the parts of Regulations dealing with this matter of liability are a branch of legislation which has always stood apart, so that, understanding the words as I do, nobody could have the least difficulty in pointing out the parts of Regulations referred to. In my judgment this section repealed everything in the Regulations which enacted by what officers and how the question of liability should be tried, and therefore took away from Collectors and Boards of Revenue the power of giving any binding decision on the point. I am confirmed in this view by the words which follow, which directed Collectors to discontinue, not pending assessments, but pending investigations regarding the liability to assessment.

Then as to s. 6, it is said that under it the orders of the Board are conclusive of the question of title. There seem to me only three possible grounds on which this can be contended. The first is to say that this is a taxing section, and the words "shall assess the same" render liable to assessment all lands which, on comparison of the two maps, the Revenue Officer thinks have been added in the interval between them, whether included in an estate already assessed or not. But it has already been held by a Full Bench—and I think there is no doubt rightly held—that [88] this is only a Procedure Act: Budrunissaa Chowdhraia v. Prosunno Kumar Bose (1).

Secondly, it may be said, and has been said, that though this is only a Procedure Act and not intended to make any land subject to assessment which was not so before, yet it does, as a matter of procedure and evidence, make the former survey map conclusive as to the original limits of each permanently-settled estate, and therefore make the comparison of the two maps by the Revenue Officer conclusive on the question of addition to the estate. This view was acted upon in Dewan Ram Jeevan Singh v. Collector of Shahabad (2); Ram Jeevan Singh v. Collector of Shahabad (3); and Sarat Sundari Debi v. The Secretary of State for India (4). But this is a very strong effect to attribute to a survey map by ex post facto legislation. And a consideration of s. 7 seems to show that the view cannot be correct; the same words exactly are used with reference to an island chur that on inspection of the map appears to be the property of Government, but it is obviously impossible that any inspection of maps can show whether the island when formed was or was not separated from the shore by a fordable chanel. Moreover, this construction of the section does not appear to be the view ordinarily acted upon by the Revenue Authorities; it certainly was not acted on by them in the present case. I think that the comparison of the maps is not conclusive, but that what is meant is that the comparison is to set the Revenue Authorities in motion, and that they may then, on the best materials they can procure, proceed to assess what they deem to be assessable.

Thirdly, and this was the main contention before us, it is said that the words which say that the orders of the Board of Revenue "shall be final" are conclusive. What is declared to be final is the order of the Board upon the Collector’s assessment. The effect, in my opinion, is to make the assessment final in every case in which there is jurisdiction to assess, but to leave it open to the Civil Courts to enquire in each case whether there was such jurisdiction. There is jurisdiction to assess if the lands [89] assessed are liable to assessment; that question is therefore open to the Civil Courts. The case seems to me the same in principle as a number of cases decided upon other enactments containing similar clauses of finality. Thus by s. 83 of the Revenue Sale Act (Act XI of 1859) it was enacted: “No sale for arrears of revenue or other demands realizable in the same manner shall be annulled by a Court of Justice” except upon certain specified grounds. It was held by a Full Bench that this did not preclude a Civil Court from inquiring whether at the time of a sale any arrear was due, and whether therefore there was any jurisdiction to sell—Baijnath Sahu v. Lala Situl Prasad (5). So s. 20 of Regulation XIX of 1814, declared the determination of the Board of Revenue upon a Collector’s paper of partition to be final. It has been held more than once that that means final as to the matters which the Revenue Authorities are empowered to decide, the jumma and its division, and the mode of division of the lands, and that it is for the Civil Courts to try the title to the land and any question as to the shares—Spencer v. Puhul Chowdhy (6); Kunj Behari Singh v. Neru Singh (7). Similar principles were acted on in Hargobind Das v. Barodas Prasad Das (8). Of course the case would be otherwise if the Revenue Authorities were empowered not only to assess but also to try the liability to assessment. But that power, I think, was taken away by the first section of the Act.

Stress was laid in argument upon the words in s. 7 expressly giving a right of civil suit to any one aggrieved by the Government taking possession of an island chur. It was suggested that this tends to negative the right of suit in other cases. I do not think so. Under s. 6, if my view be correct, the Revenue Officers decide nothing as to proprietary rights, and their action in assessing does not necessarily interfere with the enjoyment of such rights; there was no necessity, therefore, for saying anything about a civil suit. But taking possession of an island chur under s. 7 would, if it were private property, be a direct infringement of private right; there was, therefore, reason for reserving the right to sue. So that the assertion of the right [90] to sue in s. 7 seems to me only to show that the Legislature in 1847 intended to maintain, not to abandon, its traditional policy.

Section 9 was also relied upon as excluding such a suit as the present. That section is not very clear, and two constructions have been placed upon it. In Dewan Ram Jewan Singh v. Collector of Shahabad (1) Couch, C. J., and Ainslie, J., held it to prohibit suits to establish title. In Collector of Moorsheabad v. Roy Dhunput Singh (2), Phear and Morris, JJ., limited it to suits for damages. I prefer the latter view; the mention of good faith is strong in favour of it. The exception in the case of islands tends the other way, but not, I think, very strongly; there is a great difference between allowing a suit for damages for an actual ouster under s. 7 and for an assessment under s. 6. At any rate, unless the meaning be clear, we should not, I think, adopt a construction which infringes rights of property.

The general conclusion I have arrived at on the examination of this Act is, that the Legislature has abolished all the special provisions for trying the liability to assessment in the case of alluvial lands, has cast it upon the Revenue Authorities to form and act on the best judgment they can in the matter, and has left the question of liability to be decided by the Civil Courts as and when the question may arise. No doubt the Revenue Authorities are right in making the careful inquiries which I understand they do make before assessing such lands; I think, however, that their conclusions are not of binding force, but that the Civil Courts have, in a suit like the present, jurisdiction to inquire into the question of liability. And this would not make any very great change from the previous law; under Regulation II of 1819 it was entirely in the discretion of the party affected to apply to the Civil Courts before the assessment, or to wait till afterwards. Nor can I see any such obvious inconvenience in this view as to lead me to doubt its correctness. If the Revenue Authorities are sufficiently sure of their right to assess, I suppose they will, as I suppose they do, make an assessment, and, on the basis of that assessment, settle the land with some one according to the ordinary rules, unless a suit like the present [91] is first brought, and then leave the rival claimants to fight the matter out between themselves.

If I be right in thinking that the Civil Courts can deal with the question, I think further, for the reasons already stated, that the lands in question in this case were not liable to be assessed.

I would only further notice a little more in detail certain cases bearing upon this question relied upon in the course of the argument, and to which I have already referred. The first is Dewan Ram Jewan Singh v. Collector of Shahabod (1), decided by Couch, C.J., and Ainslie, J. Nothing is reported except the judgment, but it would seem from that judgment that the case was very similar to the present. The suit was dismissed on two grounds—that it was barred by s. 6 of Act IX of 1847, and that it was barred by s. 9. It is said: "Since in this case there has been an addition to the estate appearing upon the inspection of the new map, although it is, as stated in the plaint, a re-formation upon the old site, it comes within s. 6, and is added to the estate." And again, it is said: "This is a case coming within s. 6, where power is given to assess the land which had been re-formed, and then the same section says expressly that the orders of the Sudder Board of Revenue shall be final. I have stated in detail the reasons which lead me not to agree in this view. As to s. 9, I am also unable to agree in thinking that it applies; the view taken in the case already referred to seems to me preferable.

In Ram Jewan Singh v. The Collector of Shahabod (2) it is impossible to say from the report what the case before the Court was. But the learned Judges (Couch, C.J. and Phear, J.) appear to have expressed approval of the case previously mentioned.

In the Collector of Moorsshedabod v. Roy Dhunput Singh (3), before Phear and Morris, JJ., a portion of the plaintiff's zemindari had been washed away and re-formed. Being then found in contact with, and an apparent addition to, the estate of one of the defendants, the Revenue Officers assessed it under Act IX of 1847 and settled it with the latter. The plaintiff sued that defendant, with another who claimed under him, and the Government, to recover the land on the strength of his original [92] title. The Court held he was entitled to recover, that the assessment under Act IX of 1847 was no doubt binding on the defendant who had accepted a settlement under it, but that it bound no one else. In this decision I wholly concur.

The last case is Sarut Sundari Debi v. The Secretary of State for India (4). I was a party to the judgment in that case with Beverley, J. The suit was the same in character as the present, and the facts alleged by the plaintiff were similar; and it was held that the suit was barred by s. 6 of Act IX of 1847. It was held, first, that the Civil Court had power to inquire in such a suit whether the Revenue Authorities had jurisdiction to make the assessment they had done; and I think it was rightly so held. It was held, secondly, following the earlier cases, that the former survey map was conclusive as to the boundaries of the estate, and that, therefore, the Revenue authorities had acted within their jurisdiction in making the assessment; in this I think, for reasons I have stated, that we were wrong.

I should set aside the decree of the District Judge by which he reversed that of the Subordinate Judge, and I should affirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge with costs in all Courts.

MITTER, J.—I would answer the first question in the negative. The provisions of Act IX of 1847 are applicable to lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction. But land re-formed on the site of an estate, the proprietary right in which is vested in a private individual, does not fall under the category of lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction.

The second question referred to us is substantially this—whether a Civil Court is competent to entertain a suit, the object of which is to establish that land assessed by the Revenue Authorities as an alluvial increment under Act IX of 1847 is not liable to assessment, on the ground that it does not fall under the category of lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction. The decided cases bearing upon the question are all one way, laying down that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was taken away by s. 6, Act IX of 1847. Dewan [93] Ram Jeyan Singh v. Collector of Shahabad (1); Ram Jeyan Singh v. Collector of Shahabad, (2); Collector of Moorsshedabad v. Roy Dhunput Singh (3); and Sarat Sundari Dabi v. Secretary of State for India (4). In this last mentioned case, it was also held that Civil Courts have power to try, whether the Revenue Courts have jurisdiction under s. 6 of Act IX of 1847.

In order to arrive at a correct conclusion, regarding the interpretation of the provisions of Act IX of 1847, it is necessary to examine the previous legislation on the subject of the assessment of alluvial increments.

There is no special provision in the Code of 1793 regarding the assessment of alluvial increments. But, under s. 8 of Regulation III of 1793, the Civil Courts were authorized to take cognizance of all suits respecting revenues, &c. It follows, therefore, that, if any demand for assessing alluvial increments had to be enforced, it had to be enforced by a suit in a Civil Court. That this was the law is declared in the preamble of the following Regulations: viz., Regulations VIII of 1811, V of 1813, XI and XXIII of 1817.

By this last mentioned Regulation, the Revenue Officers were, for the first time, authorized, in certain specified districts, to try summarily the question of liability to assessment of alluvial increments. But by s. 12 a party aggrieved by the decision of the Revenue Authorities could "institute a suit in the Courts of Judicature against Government to try the merits of the said decision."

Then came Regulation II of 1819 by which all the previous Regulations were repealed, and an elaborate procedure was laid down for the investigation, by the Revenue Officers, of the question of the liability of lands held revenue free to be assessed with Government revenue. But the right of the party aggrieved by the decision of the Revenue Authorities to contest the correctness thereof was preserved.

By Regulation III of 1828 the jurisdiction of Civil Courts to entertain suits of the above description was taken away in the districts where, under s. 2 of the Regulation, the [94] Governor-General in Council appointed Special Commissioners, who were vested with the power of the final determination of all cases which had been or might be investigated by Collectors and Deputy Collectors or other officers exercising the powers of a Collector under Regulation II of 1819.

In this state of things Act IX of 1847 was passed.

The 1st section of the Act is as follows:—

"It is hereby enacted that such parts of the Regulations of the Bengal Code as establish tribunals and prescribe rules of procedure for investigations regarding the liability to assessment of lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction, or regarding the right of Government to the ownership thereof, shall from the date of the passing of this Act, cease to have effect within the Provinces of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, and that all such investigations pending before the Collector and Deputy Collector in the said Provinces at the said date, shall be forthwith discontinued, and that no measure shall hereafter be taken for the assessment of such lands or for the assertion of the right of Government to the ownership thereof except under the provisions of this Act."

It seems to me that the scope of the Act, so far as it may be gathered from the title of the Act and the 1st section, is, that it lays down rules for the investigation regarding the liability to assessment of alluvial increments, abolishing tribunals and rules of procedure created and prescribed by parts of the Regulations of the Bengal Code for holding such investigation.

The same view was taken by Couch, C.J., in the Full Bench decision —Budrunnissa Chowdhrai v. Prosunno Kumar Bose (1). He says:—"Now looking at the first section, the Act does not appear to have been intended to do more than make different provisions for the investigations regarding the liability of the lands to assessment or the rights of the Government, and it was not intended to alter in any way the right which existed in the law before that Act was passed."

The first section expressly declares that "no measures shall hereafter be taken for the assessment of such lands . . . except under the provisions of this Act." The first step in [95] the measures for the assessment must necessarily be the establishment of the right to assess. That step, according to the first section, must be taken under the provisions of the Act. The Revenue Officers acting under it must therefore first investigate the question regarding the liability to assessment. This investigation is consequently within the jurisdiction vested in them by the Act, and the word "assessment" used in the title of the Act and in the latter part of s. 1 and also in s. 6 therefore, in my opinion, includes an inquiry or investigation into the question regarding the liability to assessment.

Passing over for the present the intermediate sections, we come to s. 6 of the Act. It is to the following effect:—

"And it is hereby enacted that whenever on inspection of any such new map, it shall appear to the local Revenue Authorities that land has been added to any estate paying revenue directly to Government, they shall, without delay, assess the same with a revenue payable to Government according to the rules in force for assessing alluvial increments, and shall report their proceedings forthwith to the Sudder Board of Revenue, whose orders thereupon shall be final."

Now the "proceedings" of the Revenue Authorities mentioned in this section would, as shown above, embrace an inquiry upon two questions, viz., the question of the liability to assessment and the question of the rate of assessment. Therefore the "orders" of the Sudder Board of Revenue mentioned in it would also deal with both these questions, and the section says in its concluding part that the said orders shall be final. The language of the section does not, in my opinion, warrant us to curtail the force of the word "final," so as to make it applicable to one part of the order only, viz., that relating to the rate of assessment and not to the other. It seems to me that under the express wording of the section, the finality attaches to the whole order, i.e., the whole order dealing with both these questions.

Now it has been said that there was no procedure laid down in the Act for judicially investigating the question of liability to assessment, the whole of the previous procedure under Regulation II of 1819 and Regulation III of 1828 having been swept away by s. 1 of the Act. But it seems to me that only the [96] "tribunals" established by Regulation III of 1828, and the procedure prescribed for their guidance were abolished by that section. The procedure referred to in s. 1, is the specified procedure laid down for "tribunals" abolished. These tribunals are the Special Commissioners and the Officers vested with the power of resumption under Regulation III of 1828, and do not include Collectors and Officers deciding under Regulation II of 1819 the question of the liability of land held revenue-free to be assessed with Government revenue. The word "tribunals" ordinarily means officers whose chief function is judicial. The chief function of a Collector or a Revenue Officer is executive. They, in my opinion, cannot properly be called "tribunals," because in some special matters they may be vested with judicial power.

There is another reason for thinking that the judicial functions of the Revenue Authorities under Regulation II of 1819 were not abolished by s. 1 of Act IX of 1847.

Section 8 of the Act, which evidently provides for the suits pending in the "tribunals" abolished under s. 1, shows that these were the Resumption Courts established under Regulation III of 1828. It is true that s. 1 says, that proceedings before the Collectors and Deputy Collectors shall be discontinued, but there is no provision for cases pending before the Board of Revenue. I am therefore of opinion that the procedure laid down in Regulation II of 1819 was not abolished.

That being so, and it being provided in s. 6 that the Revenue Authorities shall assess alluvial lands added to an estate "according to the rules in force for assessing alluvial increments," it was intended by the Legislature that the investigation into the question of liability should be conducted by the Revenue authorities under Regulation II of 1819, and on that investigation the Revenue authorities should be guided by the provisions of Regulation XI of 1825 in determining whether the subject-matter in dispute is land gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion and dereliction. The survey maps are not to be deemed final upon the question. The words "whenever on inspection of any such new map" in s. 6 and the other sections of the Act indicate, in my opinion, the condition precedent to the institution [97] of a proceeding under the Act, i.e., that no proceeding under the Act shall be instituted unless it appear on inspection of the new survey map that lands have been added to, or lost from, an estate, or that an island has been thrown up in a large and navigable river liable to be taken possession of by Government under Regulation XI of 1825. But the investigation shall be completed upon the whole evidence that may be adduced, and is not to be limited to the inspection of the new survey map only. In the case of an island, it would be impossible to form any opinion upon the inspection of the map only; because it would not necessarily show whether a channel between it and a neighbouring estate is fordable or not.

Hitherto I have confined my attention to the language of s. 6 only in construing the word "final" used in it. But ss. 5 and 7 afford material help in determining this question. It has been conceded, in the course of the argument (and rightly conceded, I think), that the orders of the Board of Revenue under s. 5 cannot be questioned in a civil suit.
A person may be aggrieved by the order of the Board of Revenue, but still he has no remedy by a civil suit. An owner of an estate may claim reduction of revenue to a larger amount than what he would be entitled to upon the inspection of the new survey map only, and the Board of Revenue may disallow such claim. It is admitted that the owner would not be permitted in that case to establish his right in a civil suit. In other words, the order of the Board of Revenue under s. 5 shall be final in all respects. If the word "final" in s. 5 has this meaning, the same word used in the next following section should not have a more limited signification. The enquiry under either of these sections is of a similar nature. In the one case the amount of revenue to be added and in the other the amount of revenue to be deducted have to be determined. One of the points—and in fact the chief point—for inquiry is the real area of the estate regarding which the investigation takes place. The result of the decision in any particular case under Act IX of 1847, does not affect any title to land, but the amount of revenue payable to Government for the estate in respect of which the investigation takes place.

[98] Then again, s. 8 expressly says, that the order of the Board of Revenue "in regard to the assessment" shall be final. The absence of these words indicates, in my mind that the Legislature intended to make the order of the Board of Revenue under s. 5 or 6 final upon both the points dealt with by such order.

I have already said that the decided cases bearing upon the point under consideration are all one way, and have taken the view that no civil suit will lie. The last case upon the subject—Sarat Sundari Debi v.
Secretary of State for India (1)—makes, however, this reservation, that where the Revenue Authorities are shown to have exceeded their jurisdiction under Act IX of 1847, the Civil Courts can declare the order of the Board of Revenue to be ultra vires. I feel no hesitation in assenting to that view. But in order to ascertain whether the jurisdiction has been rightly exercised or not, the Civil Courts have no power to question the finding of the Board of Revenue. If it appears, upon the face of the procedings of the Revenue Authorities, that they have rightly exercised jurisdiction under Act IX of 1847, the Civil Courts have no power to question their final decision. It appears upon the face of the proceedings of the Revenue Authorities held in this case, that they had jurisdiction under Act IX of 1847, to assess the land in suit as an alluvial increment.

I would therefore return this answer to the second question, that it appearing upon the face of the proceedings that the Revenue Authorities had jurisdiction to assess the lands in suit under Act IX of 1847, a Civil Court has no power to make a decree declaring that the proceedings of the Revenue Authorities in respect thereof are ultra vires.

JULY 24.

PRIVY COUNCIL,

[99] PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:

Lord Watson, Lord Hobhouse and Sir B. Peacock.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

RAMKUMAR GHOSE and others (Defendants) v. KALIKUMAR TAGORE (Plaintiff). [3rd, 6th and 24th July, 1886.]

Kabuliyat, Construction of—Stipulations as to rent of new Chur—Hawaladari tenure—Measurement and Assessment of Chur Land—Landlord and tenant—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 14.

A kabuliyat, executed by the tenant of land held in hawala tenure, provided that on an adjoining chur becoming fit for cultivation the whole land, old and new, held by the tenant should be measured, and the old having been deducted from the total, rent should be paid for the excess land at a specified rate up to five drones, and for any more at the prevailing gunnah rates. It provided also that neither (a) rent should be realized according to law with interest thereon; or that (b) at the close of the year, the owner should, by a notice served on the hawaladar, require him to take a settlement of the excess land and within fifteen days to file a kabuliyat; or (c) the excess land might be settled with others.

Such a chur having been formed, the zemindar measured without notice to, and in the absence of, the hawaladar. He then served a notice on the latter requiring him to execute a kabuliyat within fifteen days for payment of a fixed rent upon the excess land as found by the measurement or to yield up possession.

Disregard of this led to a suit in which the zemindar claimed either khas possession or rent on measurement by order of Court.

Held, that neither the kabuliyat nor the terms of s. 14 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 precluded a suit for assessment of the rent upon measurement; nor did the absence of authentic measurement as prescribed by the kabuliyat have that effect, or affect the measurement by the amin; but that until both the measurement and the assessment of the rent had taken place (which might be either in the manner prescribed or by judicial determination) the zemindar could not put the hawaladar to his choice between (b) executing a kabuliyat for the rent, and (c) yielding up possession.

Appeal from a decree (11th May 1883) reversing a decree (20th June 1881) of the Subordinate Judge of Faridpur.

The respondent, who was plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arose, was zemindar, or owner by other superior tenure [100] of land in Faridpur, the appellants, who were the defendants holding under him by the tenure known as hawaladari (1).

The terms on which the latter were to hold additional land fit for cultivation that might be formed by a chur were entered in a kabuliyat executed on the 23rd April 1850, of which the stipulations are set forth in their Lordships' judgment. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff to recover either khas possession of, or the rent properly payable for land formed in or before the year 1876, by a chur contiguous to the land held in the original hawala tenure granted to the defendants.

The claim to direct possession rested on a provision in the kabuliyat, whereby, in the event of future accretions, measurement was to be made of the land, both original and new and the defendants were to pay a fixed rent for any amount not exceeding five drones (2), and at the prevailing gunnah rate for all land in excess of that quantity.

(1) As to this tenure, see the note to Alimuddi Khan v. Kalikrishna Tagore, reported in 10 C. 895.

(2) A drone is equal to 16 khanis, and a khani equals between 5 and 6 bighas.
In 1876 a measurement was made by the zemindar, and the excess ascertained, but without notice to the hawaladars, and in their absence. Afterwards the zemindar served the latter with a notice requiring them to appear at his cutcherry and make a settlement for the excess land, or in default of their so doing to yield possession of the land.

The defendants did not dispute that a chur had formed within the contemplation of the provisions of the kabuliyat, nor did they deny that the plaintiff, if he had brought himself within the terms of the kabuliyat, was either entitled to additional rent or else to possession. They did, however, deny his right to either of the above, as claimed in the present proceedings, on the ground that (a) the plaintiff had not measured the lands in conformity with the terms of the kabuliyat upon due notice given to them; and (b) that he had not given them such notice as was required in regard to the fixing of the rent.

Issues having been settled as to these points, the Subordinate Judge found that there had been no such measurement as the [101] kabuliyat required, and he ordered that a measurement should be made by an amin of his Court. He found also that neither the assessment of the rent, nor the subsequent demand for it, had been validly made; and he, accordingly, dismissed the suit.

This was reversed by the High Court (Cunningham and Maclean, JJ.) and a decree was made for the plaintiffs. As to the disputed measurement, the Judges held that the evidence established a measurement fairly within the terms of the kabuliyat. They also found that no objection had been taken by the defendants to the notice given of the plaintiff’s claim. They, therefore, considered that the latter was entitled to actual possession of the excess lands, which should be ascertained by reference to the map of the Court amin.

On this appeal,—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, argued that the terms of the kabuliyat as regards measurement not having been complied with, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree. In support of this he referred to part of the judgment in Jardine Skinner and Co. v. Rani Surut Soodandi Debi (1). He added that, even assuming that the amin’s measurement was sufficient ground (which was not admitted) still there could be no decree for direct possession before the defendants had had the option of coming to a settlement with the plaintiff. This was his principal ground. He further objected that there was an entire absence of proof as to the prevailing rate. The pergunnah rates were discussed, and the nature of the proof required in reference to them was explained in Shadoo Singh v. Ramanograha Lall (2). It was essential to prove these rates, as appeared from Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golam Ali Chowdhry (3), which arose in

PRESENT:

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

KALI KRISHNA TAGORE V. GOLAM ALI CHOWDHRY. [20th February, 1884.]
Assessment—Rent—Kabuliyat—Pergunnah rate—evidence.

Judgment of the High Court at Calcutta affirmed, upon the issue of fact.
[102] the same neighbourhood. That was a case in which the rent of a chur having been held by the High Court to be governed by the terms applicable to the parent tenure, in the absence of proof of the pergunnah rate, the plaintiff failed to obtain any other rate on an appeal heard by the Judicial Committee.

For the respondent, Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, argued that the High Court had rightly held on the evidence, and the circumstances of the case, that the measurement was sufficiently made within the terms of the kabuliyat. Also that notice, with demand of settlement, having followed thereon, without objection taken by the defendants, the plaintiff had become entitled to direct possession. It was not a condition precedent to the bringing such a suit as the present, [103] that there should have been a measurement; and the High Court had rightly referred to that of the amin.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered on a subsequent day (July 24th) by

Lord Watson:—The arguments upon this appeal had reference mainly to the construction of the following stipulations in a kabuliyat, dated 23rd of April 1850, executed by the then tenants, under a hawaldari tenure, of certain lands comprised in, "the chur to the east of Makuahkali," forming part of the zemindari now belonging to the respondent:—

"If a new chur accretes contiguous to the aforesaid hawala, and as hakiat of the aforesaid (torn), and no revenue is assessed thereon by the Government, then, when the said chur becomes fit for cultivation,"

On this appeal, not elsewhere reported, the appellant sought to raise the question at what rate rent was to be assessed on a chur which was held to be an accretion, under Regulation XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1, to his under-tenure. Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C. and Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the appellant. Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the respondent. The judgment of their Lordships, SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH, AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE, was delivered by the last named, on the 20th February 1884, as follows:

Having heard the opening of this appeal, their Lordships consider that it would be idle to continue the argument. The Subordinate Judge decided the construction of the Regulation in favour of the appellant, and considered that the accretions ought to be assessed at the pergunnah rate. But inasmuch as the appellant failed to prove any such rate, the Subordinate Judge found no measure of rent except what was given by the kabuliyat, and accordingly he pronounced for that rent. The High Court agreed with the Subordinate Judge in finding that the appellant had not proved the pergunnah rate which he claimed, and with a slight exception they affirmed the decree. But the learned Judges also expressed opinions, adverse to the appellant on the construction of the Regulation. Their Lordships now find that the appellant cannot succeed because of the fatal defect in his evidence. All that Mr. Leith can suggest on that point is that the case should be remanded for an inquiry. But the issue was definitely raised and a great deal of evidence given on it, and the appellant must stand or fall by that evidence. It would not be right now to give him the opportunity of making a new case. That being so, the opinion of their Lordships on the Regulation can have no influence on the result of the appeal, and they do not think it desirable to hear further argument on a question which under such circumstances is not a practical one. All they can do is to decide that the appellant, having failed to prove the pergunnah rate which he alleged, cannot have any more favourable decree than that which the High Court have given him. On this ground, without expressing any opinion on the question which of the two Courts has taken the sounder view of the Regulation their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court and to dismiss this appeal with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant: Mr. T. L. Wilson.

Solicitors for the respondent: Messrs. Oehme & Summerhay.

a fresh measurement shall be made of the land of the said chur and of the aforesaid hawala; and after a deduction of the aforesaid 13-6-16 gundahs of land, we shall pay rent at the rate of Rs. 2-7-7 pie for the excess of land up to five drones, and at the sara (prevailing) pergunnah rates for land exceeding that quantity. If we fail to do so, the rent will be realised according to the law for the realisation of rent, with interest on lapsed instalments according to the demands of the towzi of the said pergunnah; or at the close of the year, you will serve on the spot, and on some conspicuous place in the mahakuma (head-quarters) of any hakim, an itilana (notice) to our address, requiring us to take a settlement of the said excess land, and to file a kabuliyat, and fixing the time at fifteen days; if, thereupon, we do not appear before you and take a settlement and fix a kabuliyat, you will settle the said excess lands with others.

The 13-6-16 gundahs thus referred to was the original extent of the cultivable hawala, and the rent payable for it was fixed by the kabuliyat at Rs. 462. In a suit brought by the zamindar in the year 1865, it was found that 2-11-18 gundahs, &c., had accreted to the said 13-6-16 gundahs, and that for such excess additional rent was payable at the rate of Rs. 2-7-7 pie per khani in terms of the kabuliyat of 1850. The appellants have [104] since continued to be tenants of the hawala and said accreted lands, amounting in all to 16-2-9 gundahs, &c., at a cumulo rent of Rs. 570-1-1, &c.

It is not matter of dispute that, at the commencement of the year 1876, a new chur had accreted to the hawala in question, which was to a large extent composed of land fit for cultivation. The respondent alleges that, in April of that year, a new measurement of the original hawala and of the accreted chur was made by his servants under his instructions.
The measurement was made without intimation to the appellants, and in their absence. The respondent thereafter, on the 28th March 1878, caused a notice to be served on the appellants, who are the registered tenants of the hawala, setting forth the fact of measurement, intimating the precise amount of the increased rent due in respect of the excess land, according to the rates specified in the kabuliyat, and requiring the appellants to appear either before himself or his principal officer within fifteen days from service, "and file a kabuliyat for the said quantity of land and for the said amount of rent; otherwise after the expiry of the said fixed period, under the terms of the said kabuliyat, I shall take khas possession of the land in excess of the said Dr. 16-2-9 gundahs of land for the purpose of settling the same with others."

The appellants paid no attention to the notice, and the respondent, on the 29th March 1879, presented his plaint to the Subordinate Judge, in which he prayed: (1) that the Court should direct a measurement of the excess land and give him khas possession thereof; or otherwise (2) that the Court should, in the event of its declining to give him possession, assess the rent of the excess land payable under the kabuliyat. On the respondent's motion the Judge ordered a measurement of the accreted land, which was made by the Court amin in presence of the parties, and duly reported. Evidence was then heard on both sides, and, on the 29th June 1881, judgment was given dismissing the suit with costs, but the formal decree was not made out and signed until the 27th July 1881. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion, though with some hesitation, that service of [105] the notice of 28th March 1878 was established. He was of opinion that the respondent had failed to prove any measurement of the excess lands as alleged, and had also failed to prove pergunnah rates, both of which he held to be conditions precedent of the respondent's right to possession. And, as matter of law, the learned Judge decided that the stipulation in the kabuliyat with respect to khas possession, which he terms the forfeiture clause, is void. The learned Judge further held that the suit, so far as it prayed for assessment of rent, could not lie, inasmuch as the case was regulated by s. 14 of the Rent Act.

On appeal the decision of the Subordinate Judge was reversed by the High Court, (Cunningham and Maclean, JJ.) who on the 11th May 1888, gave the respondent a decree for khas possession of whatever land might be found, according to the Civil Court amin's map, to be in excess of 16d, 2k, 9g, 2c, 2k. Unfortunately the amin reports two measurements on the map prepared by him, leaving it to the Court to select one or other of them, and the decree does not specify according to which of these the excess lands are to be ascertained.

The learned Judges of the High Court differed in opinion from the Subordinate Judge, as to the fact of a measurement having been made by the respondent before the notice of 28th March 1878 was served. They state that, upon the evidence, they are "unable to find that there has not been a measurement within the terms of the kabuliyat." Upon that view of the facts they seem to have been of opinion—that, on receipt of the notice, the appellants ought to have appeared within the fifteen days, and to have then stated any objections which they had to the measurement or to the rent intimated, and that, seeing they raised no objections to either until the present suit was instituted, the respondent was entitled to the alternative of possession.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge erred in holding that the provisions of s. 14 of the Rent Act apply to the additional rent, which is stipulated in the kabuliyat of 1850. There is nothing in the terms of that document, or of s. 14 of the Rent Act, which can oust the jurisdiction of the Court, either in regard to the measurement of the excess land, or the assessment of the rent which is to be paid for it. It is stipulated that before excess rent is payable, and before the zamindar can call upon his tenants to choose between making a settlement, and yielding possession to him, there shall be a measurement, but the document does not specify by whom that measurement is to be made. If the respondent had given the appellants full notice of his intention to make a new measurement, so as to enable them to be present, if they saw fit, at the time it was made, that would have cast upon them the duty of appearing before him within fifteen days after the notice was served; and if they had failed to appear within that period, the Court, if satisfied that the measurement was made in good faith, would probably have held them precluded by their own laches from objecting to it. But the respondent gave them no intimation of his intention to measure; and in the notice which he served, he did not require them, in terms of the kabuliyat of 1850, "to take a settlement of the excess land, and to file a kabuliyat," but called upon them within fifteen days to "file a kabuliyat for the said quantity of land and for the said amount of rent." The difference between these two requisitions is not one of form merely, but of substance. What the deed of 1850 contemplates is that after a measurement has been made within the knowledge of the tenants, and to which they ought therefore to be prepared to state specific objections, they may be required to come in and say whether they are or are not willing and ready to take a lease of the excess land. It does not contemplate that the new kabuliyat must of necessity be executed within the fifteen days. It is obvious that, after the tenants have come in, and have agreed to take a lease of the excess land, they and the proprietor may differ both as to the precise extent of the land and as to the rent to be paid for it; and in that case their differences must be settled by the Court. On the other hand, their Lordships are of opinion that, under the terms of the kabuliyat of 1850, the proprietor is not precluded from bringing his suit, without taking any preliminary step, in order to have an authentic measurement made and the rent assessed; but, in that case, he cannot put the tenants to their election between paying rent and giving up possession until both these things have been done judicially.

[107] In the present case, their Lordships are of opinion that the measurement of 1876, without intimation to the appellants, coupled with the peculiar terms of the notice of March 1878, is not per se sufficient to entitle the respondent to insist on his claim for khas possession of the excess land, as now ascertained by the measurement of the Court amin. But the respondent is, in their opinion, entitled to have a decree, in terms of the alternative prayer of his plaint, fixing the extent of the excess land, and assessing the rent payable for it, in terms of the kabuliyat of 1850. Their Lordships are unable to concur in the finding of the Subordinate Judge, to the effect that the respondent has failed to prove "the prevailing pergunnah rates" within the meaning of a kabuliyat. The evidence on both sides clearly shows that there is not now, and probably never was, any such thing as a fixed scale of rents for lands like these within the pergunnah, but that circumstance does not warrant the conclusion that no pergunnah rate has been proved. It leads to the inference that the parties to the kabuliyat must have contemplated payment of a fair rent, to be computed according to the average of rents paid by the tenants of similar lands within the pergunnah, due regard being had to the nature of the tenure. Their Lordships are of opinion that, taking into account the character of the appellant's tenure, the pergunnah rate ought, for the purposes of this case, to be fixed at Rs. 6-4 annas per khani.

In the absence of any evidence enabling them to decide between Statements A and B contained in the report of the Court amin, their Lordships are of opinion that (the onus being upon the respondent) the measurements given in Statement B must be adopted as correct. They are further of opinion that the increased rent now assessed ought to be paid by the tenants for their possession, from and after the date when the respondent's notice was served upon them.

It will be necessary to remit the cause, in order that the precise extent of excess land for which rent is now payable, and also the precise amount of the increased rent may be ascertained in the Court below, and decree given accordingly. When that has been done, it will be in the option of the respondent [108] either to realize the rents in terms of law or to serve a fresh notice in terms of the kabuliyat of 1850; and, if the appellants do not come in and make a settlement and file a new kabuliyat, he will then be entitled to khas possession of the excess land which has accreted to the original hawala, and to the lands for which increased rent was found to be payable in the suit No. 178 of 1865.

The parties to this suit seem to have maintained in the Courts below, as they certainly did in this appeal, pleas far in excess of their respective legal rights, the appellants succeeding before the Subordinate Judge, and the respondent, in his turn, succeeding before the Court of Appeal. In these circumstances, it appears to their Lordships that there can be no injustice done by deciding that each of them ought to bear their own costs.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgment of the High Court appealed from, dated 11th May 1883, save in so far as it sets aside the decree of the lower Court, dated the 27th July 1881, and to find that neither the appellants nor the respondent are entitled to the costs of suit incurred by them in either of the Courts below; to declare (1) that the respondent ought to have a decree ascertaining the extent of excess lands in the possession of the appellants, and assessing the rent payable therefor, in terms of the kabuliyat, dated the 23rd April 1850; (2) that for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the said excess land, the measurements contained in Statement B annexed to the report by the amin of the Subordinate Judge’s Court are to be taken as correct, and that from the total area of land in the possession of the appellants ascertained by the said amin to be cultivable and properly assessable with rent, there must be deducted 13d. 6k. 16g. the extent of the original hawala as fixed by the said kabuliyat, the balance remaining after such deduction representing the extent of excess lands for which rent is payable; (3) that the rent payable for the excess lands ascertained as aforesaid is at the rate of Rs. 2-7-7 pie per khani for five (5) drones thereof, and for the remainder thereof at the rate of Rs. 6-4 annas per khani; (4) that rent became payable in respect of the said excess lands from and after the 28th day of March [109] 1878; and, subject to these declarations, to remit the cause to the Court below. There will be no costs of this appeal.

IMAMBANDI BEGAM (Plaintiff) v. KAMLESWARI PERSHIAD AND OTHERS (Defendants.)

Sale for arrears of revenue—Liability to incumbrances—Act XI of 1859, ss. 13 and 54—Mokurari lease—Inquiry as to title of alleged owners of share sold—Benami transfers—Surrender of dur-mokurari interest how proved—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 141.

After the sale of a share in an estate under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, a suit was brought to establish a mokurari lease, as an incumbrance under s. 54, upon the share in the hands of the purchaser. This share having been held by several successive benami holders, the main question was whether those who had granted the mokurari were entitled to all or to any, and what part, of the land comprised in their grant; and as to this point the most important fact was the actual possession or receipt of the rents; this being also material in regard to limitation under Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 144, the twelve years' bar commencing from the date of possession first held adversely.

The mokuraridar having granted a dur-mokurari lease of part of his holding, which was afterwards surrendered for good consideration, ikramamas to this effect were executed, but not being registered were not receivable in evidence.

Held, that to prove the surrender, a formal deed of re-conveyance was not necessary—the receipt of the money and the relinquishment of possession sufficiently showing what had become of the dur-mokurari interest.

The mokurari lease having been established as to so much only of the lands as were covered by the title proved, the decree below, although no question of apportionment had been raised, was conditional that the whole rent reserved should be paid: Held, that this condition should have been omitted, the amount of rent being determinable by a future proceeding, if necessary.

[110] Appeal from a decree (15th February 1881) of the High Court varying after a remand (13th September 1880) a decree (15th August 1878) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur.

The question raised by this appeal was whether a mokurari lease, or permanent tenure at a fixed rent, had been established as an incumbrance under the provisions of s. 54 of Act XI of 1859 (the Zemindari Revenue Sale Law) upon a share, which had been sold for arrears of revenue, and which had partly come into the possession of the purchaser. The share was one separated in the Collectorate books as part of an entire revenue mehal, named Bisthazari, in the Monghyr district, and comprised about thirty-nine villages. The existence of the mokurari lease depended upon whether or not pottas, dated respectively 15th March and 6th April, had been granted by persons having title to the villages, or any of them comprised in the pottas. And this question again depended on whether, after successive transfers made benami, and to fictitious owners, the villages or any of them, were in reality subject to the ownership of Mussamut Bohu Begum, and after her death to that of other heirs of one Abdur Rahman, and were owned by them at the time of the granting of the pottas.

In 1851 the share belonged to two brothers, of whom one was Abdur Rahman, above mentioned. He was the husband of Mussamut Bohu Begum. The other brother, Mokim Khan, had a son named Isa Khan. On the death of Abdur Rahman, some time before 1856, one-fourth of his interests was inherited by Bohu Begum and three-fourths by Mokim Khan, whose son Isa soon after succeeded to the latter on his death. Bohu Begum died in 1864, and her brothers, who were her heirs, executed the two pottas in 1866. At one time Bohu Begum was benamidar for her husband, and a series of benami transfers took place, which are fully stated in their Lordships' judgment. Therein also are given the facts as to decrees made against benami holders; and as to a tenancy obtained by the Raja Rajendernarain, who, and his son after him, obtained possession of five annas and twelve dams of the share for which rent was paid.

To whom they paid it, and whether to Bohu Begum and her [111] heirs after her, down to the year 1866, when the mokurari pottas were granted, were contested points.

As to nine of the villages the plaintiff, alleging that she had been dispossessed by the defendant, asked for restoration of them, and a declaration of her title to them as well as to thirty others.

The defendant not disputing that his purchase was subject to any bona fide and subsisting incumbrance, denied that the plaintiff's alleged tenure was so; or that any possession had been held, either by the plaintiff's lessors, or any one on her account, within twelve years before the institution of the present suit on 26th February 1878.

The Subordinate Judge in his first judgment held the claim to the mokurari interest to be barred by limitation, finding that the alleged grantors had not held possession within twelve years before the suit.

On the plaintiff's appeal the High Court (Mitter and Maclean, JJ.) being of opinion that "the question of limitation could not be entirely separated from the questions of title, and other questions which arose," remanded the suit for further evidence (under s. 566 of Act X of 1877) as to the execution of the leases of 1866, and other points.

A return was made that, in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, the alleged grantors of the mokurari leases of 1866 were at that date out of possession, though the leases had been executed, and that they were not bona fide incumbrances. The High Court, after the return made, differed from the first Court as to limitation, holding the suit not barred, and also, as to the facts, that the leases were bona fide incumbrances. The Judges held that the plaintiff could claim under the leases to the extent of what had actually been the share to which the alleged lessors were entitled at the date of the leases. This was the one-fourth inherited by Bohu Begum, and it was in their opinion reduced by the deduction of a one-nanna part, representing what had been conveyed away in a dur-mokurari lease, and never re-conveyed.

The decree of the High Court was that as to certain of the mouzahs in which the plaintiff claimed possession as mokurarid over a six annas twelve gundas share, she should recover [112] possession over a thirteenth gundas share only; and as to her claim in respect of other mouzahs to have her title declared to a like share, she should be declared entitled to eleven gundas share only. It was further decreed that she should pay Rampersad Das, the auction-purchaser, the whole mokurari rent reserved in the pottas of 1861, viz., Rs. 5,801.

From this decree the present appeal was preferred, and the purchaser last mentioned having died pending it, the name of his son and representative, the first respondent, was substituted on the record.

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that the pottas of 1866 had effect to entitle her to the mokurari interest in the whole share that had fallen to Abdur Rahman. Of this Bohu Begum had been in apparent possession as owner, and her alleged rights had been more than once recognised by Isa Khan in judicial proceedings. If all the indicia of ownership were placed, as they had been here, in the hands of a benamidar, the true owner could only get rid of the effect of an alienation by showing that it was made without his own acquiescence, and that the purchaser had taken with notice of that fact. Here Isa Khan had acquiesced in transfers of the three-fourths as well as the one-fourth, by Bohu Begum. Reference was made to Bhugwan Doss v. Upooch Singh (1); Rameoomar Koondoo v. McQueen (2), and to cases cited in Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, para. 369.

For the respondent, Mr. T. H. Couie and Mr. R. V. Doyne contended that only as to the one-fourth inherited by Bohu Begum could the leases operate. At a revenue sale under Act XI of 1859 it was not only the right, title, and interest that was purchased, but the ownership, subject to any proved and definitely ascertained incumbrance. Section 28 should be contrasted with the terms of s. 259 of Act VIII of 1859. There had been no proof of Isa Khan having abandoned his right to the three-fourths.

Mr. J. D. Mayne replied.

Counsel for the respondent were also heard on the cross-appeal which raised the question whether the whole claim was not [113] barred by limitation under art. 144 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877. Reference was made to Gunga Govind Mundul v. The Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs (1), where this Committee held that the law under the Regulations having established a limitation of 12 years after that time, not simply was the remedy barred, but the title was extinct, in favour of the possessor. The same principle was maintained in the Limitation Acts.

JUDGMENT.

On a subsequent day, July 21st, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—On the 14th of June 1875 Rampersad, the father of the respondent in the original appeal and appellant in the cross-appeal, purchased at a sale for arrears of Government revenue a share of the mehal Bishazari, pergunna Bishazari, for Rs. 64,600, and received a certificate of sale thereof from the Collector of Monghyr. The sale was made under the provision in s. 13 of Act XI of 1859, the 54th section of which enacts that when a share or shares of an estate may be sold under the provisions of s. 13 or s. 14, the purchaser shall acquire the share or shares subject to all encumbrances, and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners. On the 25th of February 1878, the appellant in the original appeal, Imambandi Begum, brought a suit against Rampersad Das and others, claiming to have an encumbrance upon the estate by virtue of two mokurari pottas, one executed by Mirza Tasadduck Hossein Khan, alias Jhoti Khan, on the 1st of March 1866 and the other by Mirze Mahomed Taki Khan, alias Bari Khan, on the 6th of April 1866. They were the brothers and heirs of Mussamut Fatima Begum, alias Nawab Bohu Begun, and they thereby leased in perpetuity to Imambandi Begum, in the names of her servants Syed Jaffer Ali and Mussamut Nazirunissa, the mouzahs specified in the first paragraph of the plaint (being part of the estate purchased by Rampersad Das) at an annual jumma of Rs. 5,801, 7 annas and 6 pie. The main question in the suit and in the appeal is what was the right of Bohu Begum in the estate which was thus leased. The question in the cross-appeal is whether the suit is barred by the law of limitation.

[114] The property in dispute originally belonged to one Abdur Rahman, and it was, along with the share of his brother, Mokim Khan, brought to sale in execution of a decree against them on the 1st of December 1851. It was purchased by their servant, Najaf Ali, and it was proved, and has been found by both the lower Courts, that his purchase was benami for Abdur Rahman and Mokim Khan. Najaf Ali's name appears to have been entered in the Collector's books as the proprietor, and to have remained there till the sale in 1875 to Rampersad Das. On the 26th December 1851 Najaf Ali executed two ikramnamas—one to Sheikh Ahmed Buksh and one to Bohu Begun, who was the wife of Abdur Rahman. In these the sale by auction on the 1st December is mentioned, and it is stated that out of 16 annas of the purchased.

property he purchased 9 annas 1 dam for one Sheikh Ahmed Buksh, and 6 annas 19 dams to Bohu Begum, and that they having failed to procure the earnest-money and the consideration-money, he had obtained it from Mr. Peter Omraet, and had made a conditional sale of parts of the purchased property to Mr. Omraet for Rs. 19,190, and certain leases for nine years of other parts to Omraet and to other persons on zurpeshgi. Then follow these words: "That when the whole and "entire Rs. 19,190, the consideration-money, with interest, will be paid "off from the proceeds of the villages, or in cash, by Sheikh Ahmed "Buksh and Mussamut Nawab Bohu Begum aforesaid to Mr. Peter "Omraet, purchaser, then I will execute deeds of sale according to their "request for the same consideration-money, that is, the auction sale-"price of the entire property purchased by me, that is, in respect of "9 annas 1 dam to Sheikh Ahmed Buksh and 6 annas 19 dams to Mus-"samut Nawab Bahu Begum aforesaid." The statement that the purchase was made for Ahmed Buksh and Bohu Begum was untrue, and the evidence proved that the loan by Mr. Omraet was negotiated for by Abdur Rahman and Mokim, the real purchasers. The intention of the ikramamas appears to their Lordships to have been that, when the mortgage was paid off, Ahmed Buksh and Bohu Begum should be respectively benamidar for each of the brothers in the place of Najaf Ali. If any cash was paid in satisfaction of [115] the mortgage it would be paid in their names to give colour to the transaction.

Abdur Rahman died some time between 1854 and 1856. The precise date does not appear. He left as his heirs his brother Mokim, who was entitled to three-fourths of his property, and his wife Bohu Begum, who was entitled to one-fourth. The date of Mokim's death also does not appear, but it was before January 1861, and he left as his heir his son Isā Khan, who thus became entitled to the three-fourths of Abdur Rahman's property.

On the 8th of January 1861 Najaf Ali executed a deed of sale. It begins with the same false statement as to his purchase as is in the ikramamas. It then refers to the conditional sale to Omraet and the two ikramamas, and after stating that, owing to drought and for payment of Government revenue, Najaf Ali had obtained other loans, and decrees had been obtained against him, it proceeds thus: "Now Mussamut Nawab Bohu "Begum, widow of Khaja Mahomed Abdur Rahman, deceased, has paid "me wholly and in full on account of the purchase-money of the conditional "deed of sale, and the amount of the decree due to the aforesaid gentleman, "in proportion to her own share which has been found due by calcula-"tion, and taken the zurpeshgi due to ticcadars for the aforesaid mouzahs, "and the amounts of debts due to Mahajuns on account of her own share, "upon herself to pay, and asked me to execute and give a deed of sale "in due form." Then Najaf Ali sells and transfers to Bohu Begum the share which was purchased by Abdur Rahman, stating it to be in con-"formity with the ikramama.

There was no evidence of any payment to him by Bohu Begum, and the statement as to that is probably as fictitious as the statement of his purchase having been made for her. The mortgage being a usufructuary one had most probably been paid off from the proceeds of the estate included in it and in the zurpeshgi leases, the expiry of which coincides closely with the alleged payment. The Subordinate Judge thought, from the statement in the deed and the want of proof of payment by Abdur Rahman or out of his estate, that the money was paid by Bohu Begum, and that owing to that payment she had acquired an exclusive right to the share, but the Judges of the High Court were of opinion [116] that there was a mere transfer of names, and the real ownership in the property, after Abdur Rahman’s death, remained in his legal heirs. This is the conclusion to which their Lordships have come.

It is very difficult to understand what was the real character of the transactions which followed upon the deed of sale. On the 23rd of January 1861 Bohu Begum executed a potta, by which, after stating that the estate was especially owned and possessed by her, she leased it in perpetuity at an annual rental of Rs. 6,000, on payment of Rs. 7,000, as nuzurana money, to one Mussiti Khanum. Three days afterwards she executed another deed by which she conveyed her proprietary right to one Hosseini Khanum. These persons, who were described in the instruments as inhabitants of Patna, were slave girls of Bohu Begum living with her in Patna, where she resided. Some time in 1862 Bolakun, the widow of Ahmed Buksh, in whose favour Najaf Ali had executed a deed of sale of Mokim’s share in accordance with the ikrarnama, of 1851, and who is shown to be Isa Khan’s benamidar, brought a suit against Hosseini and Bohu Begum to enforce her right of preemption based upon the alleged transfer of the disputed share by Bohu Begum to Hosseini. On the 21st of April 1863, this suit was decreed by the first Court, but on appeal by the defendants that decree was reversed by the High Court on the 10th of March 1864. It has been seen that before this suit was brought, Isa Khan had become entitled by inheritance to the share of Mokim and three-fourths of Abdur Rahman’s. He did not, however, intervene in this suit, and it may, their Lordships think, be fairly surmised that the sale which was impeached was only a pretended one, and the suit was practically brought by Isa Khan in order to strengthen the benami titles of Bolakun and Bohu Begum, and thereby defeat the creditors of Mokim and Abdur Rahman. It was said in this appeal that it was an admission by Isa Khan that Bohu Begum was the real owner. It may be so, but it is not conclusive and must be looked at with the other evidence.

In May 1856 or 1857 (two documents on the record giving different years) Imambandi Begum had obtained a decree against Bohu Begum for a large sum of money. In execution of that [117] decree an order for the attachment of the disputed property was made on the 18th of May 1861, but the actual attachment was not made till the 27th January 1864. It was probably the apprehension when the property had been transferred into the name of Bohu Begum of this decree being executed that led to the transfers to Mussiti and Hosseini. That proceeding was temporarily successful, for on their intervention the property attached was released on the 6th December 1864. Bohu Begum had died in October 1864, and on the 29th November 1865 Imambandi brought a suit against her brothers and heirs, and Mussiti and Hosseini, to have the order of the 6th December 1864 set aside, and for a declaration that the property was liable to be sold in execution of her decree. In this she was successful, and, having made a fresh application for execution, some of the mouzahs attached in 1864 were sold and realized about Rs. 34,000. At this auction sale Isa Khan was one of the purchasers, which was greatly relied upon as an admission of Bohu Begum’s title. It is such an admission, but it is not sufficient to prevail against the evidence that Bohu Begum was only a benamidar. Imambandi did not in these proceedings disclose the existence of the mokurari pottas which are the foundation of her present suit.

Where there are benami transactions and the question is who is the real owner, the actual possession or receipt of the rents of the property is most important. In this suit it is also the material fact with reference to the law of limitation. On the 16th of December 1862 Raja Mohender Narain, an influential zamindar of the district, obtained a ticca potta from Mussiti Khanum of 5 annas 12 dams of the property in suit in the name of one Gujadhir and a dur-mokurari potta of the remaining one anna of Abdur Rahman’s share. On the same date, or shortly afterwards, Hosseini transferred to the Raja her proprietary interest in the one anna. From that time till the surrender which will be afterwards noticed, Raja Mohender, and after his death his son Raja Ram Narain, was in the actual possession of the property, and the question is, who received the rent of the 5 annas 12 dams which he held as lessee. The Subordinate Judge found that Bohu Begum held possession under the bill of sale until her death. He appears to have done this upon both the oral and documentary evidence. One of the Judges of the High Court was clearly of opinion that till the death of Bohu Begum the Raja held the disputed property as her tenant; the view of the other was that the Rajas held as tenants of Bohu Begum for the owners, -viz., Abdur Rahman’s heirs. With regard to the possession after her death, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that her brothers, whom he calls the two Khans, did not hold possession of the shares in suit, either directly or by collecting the rent from the ticcadar, and that they granted the mokurari to Imambandi while they were out of possession. In his judgment on the first hearing he discusses the evidence and states his reasons for this very fully, and refers to that judgment in his judgment at the hearing on the remand. The Judges of the High Court came to the same conclusion as to the possession of the Khans, but they thought that until the Raja refused to pay the rent to them they were in constructive possession of the property through him.

Both Judges found that there was no payment of rent to Isa Khan till after April 1866, and consequently no adverse possession, and held that the suit was not barred by the law of limitation. The law applicable is art. 144 in the second schedule of Act XV of 1877, which makes the period of limitation (12 years) run from the time when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge thought that Isa Khan got into possession by receipt of the rent from the Raja through Mussiti, but he was unable to fix the time when he did so, and their Lordships see no reason for doubting the correctness of Mr. Justice Mitter’s opinion that Isa Khan did not assume adverse possession through Mussiti till the end of 1869.

The other Judge, Mr. Justice Maclean, was of opinion that in the absence of clear proof of payment by the Raja to Isa Khan, Bohu Begum, and after her, her brothers were in possession as late as April 1866. The Judges therefore held that the suit was not barred by the law of limitation. This decision is supported by the evidence of Raja Ram Narain, who said that the Government revenue used to be paid out of the collection of the mouzahs, and very little was left after the payment of that, and he did not recollect whether he paid it to any one or not. It does not appear to their Lordships that there is any satisfactory evidence of the receipt of rent by Isa Khan twelve years before the suit was instituted, and the finding of the Subordinate Judge that there was, appears to be Based upon a supposition arising from Isa Khan having won over Mussit the benami lessor to his side, and not upon evidence of a receipt of rent directly from the Raja. Therefore, upon the main questions in the appeals, their Lordships have come to the conclusion, that Bohu Begum was the real owner of the one-fourth only, which she took by inheritance from Abdur Rahman, and that her suit as to that is not barred.

The High Court has made a decree in her favour as to the one-fourth, but with two qualifications, which it appears to their Lordships ought not to have been made. The first is in regard to the one anna, the subject of the dur-mokurari to the Raja Mohender. As to this the evidence of Raja Ram Narain was that in 1874, having been dispossessed and being ready to bring a suit, the servants of the heirs of Bohu Begum and Imambandi Begum came to him, and having taken Rs. 7,000, he made a settlement of the ticca and dur-mokurari and relinquished them to the heirs of Bohu Begum and Imambandi Begum. Ikrarnamas were executed, but through some neglect they were not registered within the time required by law to give them validity. The High Court, on the ground that there was no valid reconveyance of the one anna share either to the plaintiff Imambandi or her lessors, deducted it from the one-fourth share. This, in their Lordships' opinion, ought not to have been done. A formal reconveyance of the one anna share was not necessary. The receipt of the Rs. 7,000 and relinquishment of possession by the Raja to Imambandi or her lessors was sufficient to make it subject to the lease and to give a title against Rampersad Das.

The second qualification is that, although entitled to recover only a one-fourth share, she was held bound to pay the whole of the rent reserved by the mokurari pottas, and the decree in her favour is expressly made subject to that condition. The question whether the rent should be apportioned or not does not appear to have been raised, and ought not to be decided in this suit. That condition should be omitted from the decree, leaving [120] the liability for rent to be determined hereafter if it should become necessary. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to vary the decree of the High Court in manner following that is to say, that where the plaintiff is decreed to recover a 13 gundas share out of the mouzahs mentioned therein, she shall be decreed to recover a share of 1 anna 13 gundas, and where she is decreed to recover a share of 11 gundas out of the mouzahs mentioned she shall be decreed to recover a share of 1 anna 11 gundas and that the part of the decree whereby she is ordered and decreed to pay the whole of the mokurari rent to Rampersad Das shall be omitted, and that in other respects the decree shall be affirmed. Their Lordships think that the parties should bear their own costs of these appeals and the application to file the cross-appeal, and they therefore make no orders as to them.

Decree varied.

Evidence of title—Resumption—Chittas.

Government resumption chittas, in the absence of the resumption proceedings, are not conclusive evidence of title as against third persons. Ram Chunder Sao v. Bunseedhur Naik (1) followed.

[F., 1 C.W.N. 530.]

This was a suit brought to recover possession of eight plots of land claimed by the plaintiffs as belonging to their resumed taluk No. 4830.

[121] The defendant, who alone appeared, the putnidar of the village in which the land was situate, denied the plaintiffs' title to four of such plots, and pleaded limitation.

The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree for the four plots as to which the plaintiffs' right was not disputed, and as regarded the four disputed plots, he held that, even assuming that they belonged to the plaintiffs' taluk No. 4830, they had been dispossessed therefrom more than twelve years previous to the filing of the suit, and that therefore the suit, as regarded those plots, was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge, on appeal by the plaintiffs, held that the plaintiffs had made out their title to the lands, relying on a copy of a resumption chitta referring to the four plots in dispute; and relying on this proof of their title presumed that the plaintiffs had been in possession within 12 years from the date of suit.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, for the appellant, contended that the copy of the resumption chitta was not a public document, and should not have been admitted in evidence, citing Ram Chunder Sao v. Bunseedhur Naik (1), and that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in presuming that the plaintiffs were in possession of the property because they had in his opinion proved their title.

Baboo Ashutosh Dhur, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Beverley and Porter, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of certain plots of land which they claim as appertaining to their resumed taluk No. 4830. The claim was resisted by the putnidar who claimed the lands as appertaining to his zemindari.

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs had failed to establish their title, and also to prove their possession within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1077 of 1886, against the decree Baboo Parbutty Coomer Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 15th of March 1886, reversing the decree of Baboo Jadu Nath Ghose, Munsif of that district, dated the 29th of September 1885.

(1) 9 C. 741.
The lower appellate Court reversed that decision, holding that a certain resumption chitta, which was filed by the plaintiffs, afforded sufficient and conclusive evidence of the plaintiffs' title; and relying upon this proof of their title, the Sub-Judge went [122] on to presume that the plaintiffs had been in possession within twelve years.

It is contended before us that the chitta relied upon by the lower appellate Court was not evidence in the case, and that it was certainly not such evidence as concluded the parties. We think that this contention must prevail. This point arose in the case of Ram Chunder Sao v. Bunseedhur Naik (1), in which it was held that a resumption chitta, in the absence of the resumption proceedings, was not evidence to prove the resumption of the particular lands in suit.

The present case appears to be precisely similar. The resumption proceedings have not been put in, and, in their absence, it is impossible to say that the chitta in question correctly describes the lands that were resumed in those proceedings. The lower appellate Court was, therefore, wrong in our opinion in relying upon that chitta as by itself proving the plaintiffs' title.

We think, therefore, that the decree of the lower appellate Court must be set aside and that the first Court restored. The appellant will have his costs in this and in the lower appellate Court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Jogendra Nath Mukerji (Plaintiff) v. Jugobundhu Mukerji and Another (Minor), by their Mother and Guardian, Nistarini Dabi and Others (Defendants).*

[24th November, 1886.]

Partition—Suit for partition of a portion of joint property.

Held, (Petheram, C. J., doubting), following the weight of authority, that a suit will not lie for partition of a portion only of joint family property. In dismissing the suit leave was reserved to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit including the whole property.

This was a suit for partition of certain joint family property consisting of a house and gardens. The plaintiff had admittedly [123] not included in his suit certain property which he alleged to be his separate property, but which the defendants alleged to be a portion of the joint property, and they contended therefore that the suit must be dismissed. As to its being joint property, both the lower Courts found that issue in favour of the defendants, viz., that it was joint property. The only question material to this report was whether the suit must be dismissed because all the joint property had not been included. The suit having been dismissed on this ground by the Subordinate Judge, and this decision affirmed on appeal by the Judge, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jogendranath Bose, for the appellant.
Baboo Gopi Nath Mookerjee, for the respondent.

The following authorities were cited:
- For the appellant—Padmamani Dasi v. Jagadamba Dasi (1) Mayne’s H. L., s. 417.
- For the respondent—Ramjoy Ghose v. Ram Runjun Chuckerbutti (2); Parbati Charm Deb v. Ainuddeen (3); Ram Lochnu Pattack v. Rughooob Dyal (4); and Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (5).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J. (who, after disposing of a point not material to this report, continued).—Another question that arises is, whether a suit of this kind must be dismissed because it appears that the plaintiff has sought to partition only a portion of the joint property. It is a point upon which I should have thought there was room for doubt, but looking at the authorities I find that the authorities are in favour of such a suit being absolutely dismissed because it cannot be brought in that form, and therefore it seems to me we are bound to follow those authorities and to dismiss this appeal; but in dismissing it we make this addition that we reserve to the plaintiff liberty to bring a fresh suit for the partition of this property bringing in the whole of the family property. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Omission to describe the property to be attached—Act XIV of 1892 ss. 237, 245—Limitation.

A decree-holder, on the 8th July 1885, applied for execution of a decree, dated the 10th July 1873, omitting to set out specifically in such application a description of the immovable property sought to be attached. On the 24th July he applied for and obtained one month’s time to file a list of these properties; and on the 7th August, after filing the list, applied for the attachment and sale of such properties. The judgment-debtor contended that execution was barred by limitation. \textit{Held}, that the omission to file on the 8th July the list describing specifically the properties sought to be attached was a mere defect of description which could be remedied under s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure by allowing an amendment to be made, and further that the two applications of the 8th and 24th July should be considered as one entire application dating from the 8th July. Syud Mahomed v. Syud Abedoolah (1) followed.

On the 10th July 1873 the plaintiff obtained against the defendant a decree for rent.

On the 8th July 1885 the plaintiff applied for execution both against the person and property of the judgment-debtor generally, annexing no list of the specific properties which he sought to attach.

On the 24th July 1885 he applied for three months' time in which to file a list of the specific immoveable properties he sought to attach; on this application an order was made granting [125] him one month's time. On the 7th August 1885, the decree-holder filed a list of the immoveable properties, and asked for their attachment and sale.

The judgment-debtor objected to the application, on the ground that it was barred, more than twelve years having elapsed since the date of the original decree.

The Subordinate Judge held that the application for further time to file the list of the properties attached was not a new application, but was a continuation and part of the application of the 8th July; and distinguishing the case of Sreenath Gooho v. Yusoof Khan (2) allowed execution to issue.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge, who held that the case was very similar to that of Sreenath Gooho v. Yusoof Khan (2) which laid down the principle that no supplementary list of property can be allowed to be put in after the expiry of the period of limitation; and distinguishing the cases of Hurry Charan Bose v. Subaydar Sheikh (3) and Syud Mahomed v. Syud Abedoolah (1); inasmuch as in the first case there had been previous applications for attachment made, and in the second the defect in the decree-holder's application was one of form,—held that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in allowing execution to issue.

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Nilmadub Bose, for the appellant, contended that the petition for leave to file a list of properties after time was not a separate application for execution, but was an application in amendment and continuation of the application of the 8th July.

Baboo Kamal Krishna Bhuttacharjea and Baboo Sirsh Chunder Chowdhry, for the respondent.

\textbf{JUDGMENT.}

\textit{Petheram}, C.J.—I think that this appeal must be allowed.

The question here is from what period a particular application is to date, with reference to the period of limitation.

The application in this case was an application to execute a decree which was dated on the 10th July 1873, and on the 8th July 1885 an application was made to execute that decree. The decree-[126] holder applied to execute the decree by arresting the judgment-debtor and by the attachment and sale of his property.

(1) 12 C. L. R. 279. (2) 7 C. 556. (3) 12 C. 161.
It is perfectly clear that this is an application not to attach and sell any specific portion of the judgment-debtor's property, but to attach and sell the whole wherever it is; and the question is, whether this is an application to attach and sell his property within the meaning of ss. 235 and 237 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Section 230, which is the first section that applies to this matter, provides that when the holder of a decree desires to enforce it, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree, or if the decree has been sent to another Court, then to such other Court; and s. 235 says that the application shall be in writing and shall contain certain particulars. And then s. 237 provides that, whenever an application is made for the attachment of any immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, it shall contain certain particulars; and finally it is provided by s. 245 that where the requirements of ss. 235 to 238 have not been complied with, the Court may allow the applicant, within a time to be fixed by the Court, to amend the mistake or omission.

The first question then is, whether this was an application to attach any immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, because it appears from s. 237 that in that case it is necessary to give some indication of what immoveable property of the judgment-debtor it is required to attach; and, therefore, if the application were to attach half the property of the judgment-debtor, I should think myself that that would not be an application at all within the meaning of the section, because it would not show what portion of the property it was intended to attach. But, where the application is to attach and sell the whole of the judgment-debtor's property, it is clear there could be no mistake as to what portion of the property it was intended to attach, because what the creditor says is, I want to take the whole.

The section says that, in addition to stating what property he wants to attach, the applicant shall describe it, and that is essential for the purpose of showing what property it is intended to attach; but sufficiency of description cannot be essential, where it is accompanied by a declaration that the creditor intends [127] to take the whole. If, however, s. 237 does apply, it is a mere defect of description, and that defect can be remedied under s. 245; and all the decisions under the cognate sections of the Code show that, where an application is made on a particular date, and it is afterwards amended under another section the date from which limitation is to run in respect of that application is the original date of its presentation; and that shows that, where the application is afterwards amended by giving the particulars required by s. 237, on an application made at a later period, the two applications become an entire application, dating from the date the first application was presented. Therefore, in my opinion, the date which must be taken as the date from which limitation is to count is the 8th July 1885, and therefore, I think, this petition was in time.

The only other matters which it is necessary to notice are the two or three cases on the subject which were referred to in the course of the argument. The case of Syed Mahomed v. Syud Abedoolah (1) decided by Mr. Justice McDonell and Mr. Justice Field is, in my opinion, a case clearly in point. It decides the same point that we decide here; and if we had any doubt about this case, it would be our duty to follow that decision. So far as the cases are concerned we decide in accordance with them, unless it can be said that a note of Mr. Justice Mitter in the case of Hurry Charan Bose v. Subaydar Sheikh (1) looks the other way; and at first sight it may be said to do so. He says: "When the case goes back the Munsif will take care that execution does not issue against any property not mentioned in the petition of the previous execution case No. 30 of 1884."

Now that note seems to imply that, in that particular application, some property was mentioned as being the property of the judgment-debtor, but in this case no specific property is mentioned in the application, and the property which is mentioned in it is all the property which the judgment-debtor has, and therefore the case does not come within the view expressed by Mr. Justice Mitter in that note. In that case, as I said before, the particulars of the property would appear to [128] have been given, but here no particulars are given which would go beyond the description "the whole of the debtors' property."

For these reasons I think that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was right, and that of the District Judge was wrong. His judgment will, therefore, be reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs, both in this Court and in the Court below.

T. A. P.                  Appeal allowed.

CRIMINAL MOTION.
Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Beverley.

IN THE MATTER OF Luchminarain, Petitioner.*
[23rd November, 1886.]
Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 234, 537—Charge of three offences of the same kind—Irregularity occasioning a failure of justice.
An accused was charged with criminal breach of trust as a public servant, in respect of three separate sums of money deposited in the Savings Bank under three separate accounts.

The third of these charges related to the misappropriation of Rs. 195 composed of two separate sums of Rs. 150 and Rs. 45, alleged to have been misappropriated on the 16th and 25th November respectively. These sums the accused in his statement at the trial stated he had paid over on those dates to the depositor, and produced an account book showing entries of such payments on those dates. This statement was proved to be untrue, and the accused was convicted.

On an application to quash the conviction on the ground that the trial had been held in contravention of s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, held, that the entries in the account books did not clearly show that the misappropriation of the sum of Rs. 195 took place on two dates, or consisted of two transactions, the entries having been made for the purpose of concealing the criminal breach of trust; and that under the circumstances the criminal breach of trust with regard to the Rs. 195 was really one offence and could be included in one charge.

Semple (Per Petheram, C. J.).—That if a man were tried for four specific offences of the same kind at one trial, such a procedure would not be merely [128] an irregularity which could be cured by s. 537 of the Code, but a defect

* Criminal Motion No. 450 of 1886, against the order passed by H. W. Gordon, Esq., Sessions Judge of Sarun, dated the 26th of July 1886, modifying the order passed by A. L. Clay, Esq., Officiating District Magistrate of Sarun, dated the 10th of June 1886.

(1) 12 C. 161.
in the trial which would render the whole trial inoperative, unless possibly it could be cured by some subsequent proceeding by striking out some portion of the charge.

One Luchminarain Dass, a Savings Bank clerk in the Chupra Post Office, was charged before the Officiating District Magistrate of Chupra with criminal breach of trust as a public servant in respect of three separate sums of money deposited in the savings bank under three separate accounts.

The charge sheet comprised only three counts, but the third count which related to the misappropriation of a sum of Rs. 195, belonging to one Narain Dass, comprised two separate items of Rs. 150 and Rs. 45, alleged to have been criminally misappropriated by the accused on the 16th and 25th November 1885 respectively. It appeared from entries made in the handwriting of the accused, that he had paid the sum of Rs. 195 to the depositor on two different occasions, and this was so stated by the prisoner at the trial. The circumstances relating to the withdrawal of the sums of Rs. 150 and Rs. 45 from the deposit account of Narain Dass were so closely interwoven and connected together that in trying the accused on a charge regarding either of these sums, it was next to impossible to adduce evidence which did not bear upon the withdrawal of the other.

The Magistrate held that the statement made by the accused as to the payment of the sum of Rs. 195 to the depositor was untrue, and finding the accused guilty, sentenced him to an aggregate punishment of six years' rigorous imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 600, or in default to undergo 18 months' additional rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner appealed to the Sessions Judge, who found the charges to have been clearly proved, holding that, although the third count embraced two distinct offences and made up, with counts one and two, four separate offences all of the same kind, yet the circumstances of the withdrawal of the two sums of Rs. 150 and Rs. 45 (composing the third count) were so interwoven together that if the prisoner had been specifically charged with misappropriating either the Rs. 150 or the Rs. 45, the evidence for the prosecution would have been precisely the same as was taken on the third [130] count, and that therefore the prisoner had not been prejudiced in his defence so as to cause a failure of justice, although the proceedings of the Magistrate on this point might have been irregular; he therefore declined to direct a new trial on that account, having regard to s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to the ruling of The Empress v. Uttom Koonoo (1), and dismissed the appeal. But he found that the sentence passed by the Officiating District Magistrate was illegal, as he had exceeded the power conferred on him by s. 35, cl. (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and therefore reduced the sentence to one of rigorous imprisonment for one year and four months, and to a fine of Rs. 200, on each of the three counts, or in default to four months' additional rigorous imprisonment, or in all to four years' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 600, or in default to one year's additional rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner applied to the High Court under the revisional sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, and obtained a rule calling upon the Crown to show cause why the order made in the case should not be set aside.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), who appeared to show cause, contended that the third count could not be split up so as to form two distinct offences.

And even supposing it to be so considered, the irregularity could be cured by s. 537 of the Code, the prisoner not having been prejudiced in his defence.

Baboo Umbica Charan Bose, contra, contended that the trial was bad in law under s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; that the offences charged against the prisoner being in respect to different sums of money belonging to different persons, he should not have been tried and convicted on one trial; and that this irregularity had materially prejudiced him in his defence; he further contended that the sentence passed was too severe.

ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—In this case the prisoner, who was a clerk in the Post Office Savings Bank, has been charged and tried for embezzling various sums of money which were deposited by various depositors in the same Bank, and the present application is really an application upon a rule which has been obtained to quash the whole proceedings on the ground that the trial is illegal, because the prisoner has been tried for four offences of the same kind at the same trial, whereas under s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure he could only be tried for three such offences.

It is clear from the terms of that section that a man can only be tried for three separate offences of the same kind at the same trial, and, speaking for myself, I think that if a man were tried for four specific offences at one trial, it would not be merely an irregularity which could be cured by s. 537 of the Code, but a defect in the trial which would render the whole trial inoperative, unless it were cured by some subsequent proceeding by striking out some portion of the charge, and as to the propriety and legality of such a proceeding we do not at present express any opinion.

The first question is whether the prisoner was tried for more than three distinct offences. The charges in respect of which the trial took place were charges for embezzling the money of the Post-Master-General, the money having been deposited in his hands, and he being the person responsible for it. What appears to have been proved was that the prisoner was the man whose duty it was to receive deposits and make payments, and also to enter in the books of the Post Office, and also in the pass books supplied to the customers, the amounts received by the Post Office and the amounts paid out by him. In some way or other suspicion arose and enquiries were made, and as the result of those enquiries it was ascertained that this man’s cash was short by a certain sum of money. Having found out that, the next thing to be done was to enquire what had become of it, and it does appear from the books kept by him that this deficiency was in respect of the accounts of three depositors. Those depositors’ accounts showed that they had received particular sums of money, but on an enquiry being made from the depositors it was found that they had not received them, and the inference was that the cash of the prisoner being short by those amounts, and the depositors not having them, those sums were embezzled by him.

[132] As to two of the depositors, the entries made in the books of the prisoner were entries of sums which were alleged to have been paid by him on one particular date, but that is not made out, the fact being that the money having been embezzled by him, the entries were made by him on that particular date for the purpose of concealing the embezzlement, but in the case of these depositors, no question arises to there being more than one offence, and there is no ground for suggesting that more than two offences were committed.

In respect of the third depositor, the amount was short by Rs. 195; that is the amount by which his cash would be short, and is the amount which he says he has not received. The first step to be taken in regard to that was to examine the books which were kept by him in order to see what had become of the money, and that appears in his own hand an entry which shows that he paid the money to this depositor on two different occasions, and he says so in his statement. The statement that he paid the money is proved to be untrue, and is a statement which was made to conceal the fraud and the embezzlement of the money of which he had been guilty.

Then the question arises, does the entry clearly show that the embezzlement of this sum of Rs. 195 took place on two dates and consisted of two separate transactions, so that it was an offence on which the man would have to be charged on two charges. But the offence is an offence of embezzling the sum of Rs. 195; so far as we know, it may have been embezzled at one and the same time, and the only use of two false entries was to make them part of the evidence in the general charge of embezzlement. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the embezzlement of the Rs. 195 was really one offence, and could be included in one charge, and though it covers the two entries it is not shown that it was two offences.

Under these circumstances, I do not think it is shown that the prisoner was tried for more than three offences in one trial, and that there is any ground for saying that the trial was illegal; and therefore the rule must be discharged.

[133] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Grant.

Bissessuri Debi Chowdhrai (Defendant) v. Hem Chunder Chowdhry (Plaintiff).* [6th August, 1886.]

Enhancement of Rent—Dependant taluk—Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, ss. 48—52—Bengal Regulation XLIV of 1793, ss. 2—5. A purchaser of a zamindari at a public sale may, by virtue of his ordinary right as zamindar, enhance the rent of a dependant taluk from time to time under the provisions of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, and is not barred from so doing by the provisions of s. 5 of Bengal Regulation XLIV of 1793.

*Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 300 and 331 of 1886, against the decrees of J. F. Stevens, Esq., Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 10th of November 1885, affirming the decrees of Baboo Parbatii Kumar Mitter, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 30th of March 1885.
The words "for the same period as the term of their own engagements with Government" in s. 48 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, refer to the period of the decennial settlement and do not mean "in perpetuity"—Doorga Sondree v. Chunder Nath Bhadooree (1), dissented from.

In an enhancement suit of the nature indicated above, the rate of rent to be fixed as payable by the under-tenure holder must ordinarily be fixed with reference to the rents paid by ryots within the tenure itself and not with reference to those paid by ryots in the neighbourhood outside the limits of the tenure.

In the suit out of which this appeal arose, the plaintiff was the proprietor of four annas share of Pergunnah Pukhuria Jainshye. Under a butwara the said four annas share at the date of suit constituted two different estates, No. 5513 and No. 4806.

It was alleged by the plaintiff that the said four annas share had been sold for arrears of Government revenue and purchased by the Government; that in course of time one Bhoirubendro Narain Roy became the representative of the Government, and that the plaintiff's ancestor had purchased two annas of the said share from him and obtained a putni settlement of the other two annas; and that he subsequently purchased at an auction sale the zamindari right in the last-mentioned two annas.

[134] The defendant was the owner of a dependant taluk within the aforesaid pergunnah, and paid the rent thereof in proportion to four annas to the plaintiff.

This suit was brought to enhance the rent of the four annas share of the said taluk after service of notice under s. 51 of Regulation VIII of 1793.

The grounds upon which the enhancement was sought were thus stated in the plaint:

"The rates at which the defendant has been paying rent are lower than those paid in this pergunnah by similar class of talukdars with the defendant for similar mehals and for similar lands. The rent of the said mehal has undergone variation as has been stated above. The productive powers of the lands of the said mehals have increased, and a greater portion of the area has been brought under cultivation, without the care, labour, and agency of the defendant; and a new chur, by the name of Nowdanga, has appeared in the front of Jamalpur, and all these have tended to render the aforesaid mehals capable of bearing an enhanced rent; such being the case, the defendant is in every way bound to pay a higher rent.

"That having regard to the stith jama of the mehals in defendant's possession at the rates paid in the pergunnah and the neighbourhood by similar class of talukdars as the defendant, the rent of the four annas share of the defendant's alleged aforesaid taluk comes to Rs. 703-2-2, as shown in the subjoined Schedule No. 1 and deducting therefrom Rupees 105-7-6 on account of allowance to the defendant for her alleged talukdari interest and collection charges at 15 per cent., there remains a balance of Rs. 597-10-8, to which should be added Rs. 18-10-10 on account of road and public works cesses, irrespective of the mehals within the Municipality. The plaintiff is, therefore, annually entitled to a total rent of Rs. 616-5-6 from the defendant."

It was further stated in the plaint that a previous suit for enhancement of rent was brought by the plaintiff's predecessor in title against the defendant's predecessor in title. That the aforesaid suit was decreed on the 25th July 1851, the defendant's plea of the rent of the taluk having been fixed in perpetuity being found to be untenable.

(1) S. D. A. (1852) 642.
For the purpose of this report it is only necessary to notice the following points raised in the defence to the suit, as they alone were material in the view of the case taken by the High Court:

1st.—That the rent of the taluk having been fixed in accordance with the enhancement decree of 1851, it could not be further raised.

2nd.—The rent of the taluk having been fixed originally in perpetuity, it was not now (i.e., after the first enhancement decree) liable to enhancement.

3rd.—That the increased rent demanded was excessively high.

As regards the first two objections the Court of first instance was of opinion (a) that as the taluk had been once enhanced in 1851, it was not protected from enhancement under s. 16 of the Rent Act; (b) that the contention that a dependant taluk once enhanced cannot be enhanced a second time was unfounded; and (c) that the decree dated the 26th July 1851, had not the effect of fixing the rent of the taluk in perpetuity. With reference to (b) and (c) the Court of first instance discussed the cases of Doonga Soondree v. Chandernath Bhadooree (1), Mohini Mohun Roy v. Ichamoyee Dassea (2), and Bunchanand v. Hurgopal Bhadery (3), cited before it, and came to the conclusion that they did not support the contention put forward in the defence.

For fixing the rent of the taluk the Court of first instance issued a commission to a Sub-Deputy Collector, who, after taking evidence regarding the rates paid by the ryots in the adjacent places outside the limits of the taluk in respect of lands of similar description, prepared a rent-roll of it. The Court accepted the report of the Commissioner and deducting 20 per cent. on account of collection charges and the talukdari profits from the gross assets fixed by the Commissioner in the way mentioned above, decreed the suit, assessing the annual rent at Rs. 440-11.

The defendant appealed against this decree, and urged amongst others the following points:

[136] (1) That the rent of the tenure having been already once enhanced since the permanent settlement could not be enhanced a second time.

(2) That the rates ascertained should have been those of the villages comprised in the tenure itself, and not those of adjacent villages.

The District Judge who heard the appeal concurred with the first Court substantially for the reasons given by it in deciding the first point against the appellant.

With reference to the second point he said:

"It was found impossible to determine the rent of the tenure in question by comparison with the rents of other similar tenures. It is assumed in objection 5 (para. 2 above mentioned) that no attempt has been made to ascertain what are the rates actually paid by the ryots in the tenure, and that the rent payable by the appellant has been calculated on fancy rates which in fact are not prevalent within the tenure. This does not, however, appear to be the case. As I understand it, both parties had full opportunity of producing to the lower Court whatever evidence they thought proper as to the rates current within the tenure, and the lower Court took all such evidence as was adduced before it; but that evidence was checked by the Sub-Deputy Collector's inquiries as to the rates of adjacent villages. I do not think that there was anything to object to in this."

(3) 1 Sel. Rep. 192=6 I. D. (O. S.) 142.
The District Judge then dismissed the appeal, upholding the decree of the lower Court.

In the present second appeal to the High Court, these same two points were again urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerji and Baboo Girish Chunder Chowdhry, for the appellant.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Guru Das Banerji, Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, and Boboo Kishori Lall Sirer, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Mitter and Grant, JJ.) sufficiently states, for the purpose of this report, the nature of the [137] arguments and the authorities relied on, and was as follows (after setting out the facts stated above):

JUDGMENT.

With reference to the first point it has been urged (a) that in 1851 the plaintiff’s predecessor in title having obtained a decree for enhancement under s. 5 Regulation XLIV of 1793, by virtue of his auction purchase right, it would be contrary to the intention of the Legislature as expressed in that Regulation, to allow the plaintiff to raise the rent, again; (b) that under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1793, it was intended that a zemindar should have the power of enhancing the rent of a dependant taluk where he establishes such right under s. 51 of the said Regulation, once for all, and that he has no right to enhance the rent a second time; (c) that supposing the contention (d) is untenable, a zemindar seeking to enhance the rent of a dependant taluk a second time, on the ground that he is entitled to enhance the rent by the special custom of the district, cannot succeed by proving the existence of such custom generally, but must establish that the custom upon which he relies enables him to enhance the rent a second time.

In support of (a), the case of Mohiny Mohun Roy v. Ichamoyee Dassea (1) has been cited. Although this case supports the contention, still it does not help the appellant, because the plaintiff is seeking in this case to enhance the rent of the taluk, not by virtue of his right of an auction-purchaser, but by virtue of his ordinary right of a zemindar to enhance the rent of an under-tenure from time to time. In the case cited, the plaintiff’s claim for enhancement under this ordinary right was disallowed, because the defendant established that her tenure was a mokurariistemrari one. In the present case the defendant has failed to prove this fact, and in the previous suit, which resulted in the decree of 1851, the contention that the taluk was mokurariistemrari was negativated. Although therefore the contention (a) is good, it has no effect upon this appeal.

doorce (2) has been cited. There are some observations in this judgment which support the contention. The question [138] for decision, however, was the true construction of a decree of 1806, by which the rent of the dependent taluk in question in that case had been previously enhanced. The lower Court held that the decree of 1806 fixed the rent in perpetuity. The Sudder Court in upholding that construction says:

"The proprietor, from whom the plaintiff purchased, sued, in the case decided in 1806, to have the talukdari rent fixed, according to clause 1, s. 51, Regulation VIII of 1793, at Rs. 4,581 per annum, and the rents for back years realized for him at that rate. The mention of the section in question carries with it the intention of permanency in regard to the jama then demanded; for that section had application solely to persons of the class of 'dependant talukdars.' Now the principle of settlement with dependant talukdars prescribed by the law s. 48, Regulation VIII of 1793, was that the zemindars were to settle with them 'for the same period as the term of their own engagement with Government,' that is, in perpetuity, after the decennial settlement made with the zemindars had been extended to a permanent settlement. Different provisions are made in ss. 48 to 51 for as regulating the rate of rent to be paid by dependant talukdars, but the rate, once adjusted upon those rules, was to be settled as the jama of the zemindar. It is only as to the 'remaining lands' of the zemindaris, that is, all but the lands of dependant talukdars, that s. 52 of the Regulation goes on to say that the zemindars are entitled to lease them, 'under the prescribed restrictions, in whatever manner they may think proper.'"

(1) 4 C. 612.  (2) S. D. A. (1852) 642.

With deference to the learned Judges who decided that case it seems to us that the words "for the same period as the term of their own engagements with Government" in the above extract have been erroneously held to mean "in perpetuity." The Regulation VIII of 1793 was a re-enactment with certain modifications of the Regulation which was passed on the 23rd November 1791 (see Preamble) embodying the principles on which a decennial settlement of revenue had been made in Bengal on the 18th September 1789. In 1791 this decennial settlement had not been made permanent. The "period" mentioned in the above extract, i.e., in s. 48 of Regulation VIII [139] of 1793, therefore means the period of the decennial settlement, i.e., ten years. That this is the right construction appears to be clear from the provisions of s. 2, Regulation XLIV of 1793, which was passed on the same date on which Regulation VIII of 1793 was passed. Section 2, Regulation XLIV of 1793, says: "No zemindars, independent talukdars, or other actual proprietors of land, nor any person on their behalf, shall dispose of a dependant taluk to be held at the same or at any jama, or fix at any amount the jama of an existing dependant taluk for a term exceeding ten years, etc. etc." It provides therefore that no proprietor shall fix at any amount the jama of an existing dependant taluk for a term exceeding ten years. This provision and the provision in s. 48 of Regulation VIII of 1793 would be contradictory to one another, if we construe the words "for the same period" in the latter as meaning in perpetuity.

Even if the words "the same period" in s. 48, Regulation VIII of 1793, mean "in perpetuity," it does not provide that the rent of the taluk is to be fixed in perpetuity. On the other hand, s. 48 itself and the three following sections contain provisions which show that there may be dependant taluks with variable rents.

We have not been referred to any provision in the Regulations which either expressly or impliedly shows that the rent of a dependant taluk once enhanced cannot be enhanced again. On the other hand the provisions of ss. 48 to 51 indicate that the burden of proof being thrown upon the zemindar, the question of enhancibility of a dependant taluk would depend upon the terms of the contract under which it has been created. The right given to a zemindar to enhance the rent of a dependant taluk under s. 51, by the proof of the special custom of the district entitling him to do so is, in our opinion, also referable to the terms of the contract. Because whenever such custom is established, it would be presumed, unless the contrary appeared, that the parties contracted with reference to it, i.e., having regard to the custom the parties intended that enhancibility of the rent would be one of the incidents of the tenure. We are, therefore, unable to accept the contention (b) as valid.

[140] The contention (c) is, in our opinion, equally untenable. If the enhancibility of the tenure be established by proof of the special custom of the district as one of the incidents of the tenure, it would be for the tenant to establish, on the other hand, that that incident is in any way qualified. We are, therefore, of opinion that the lower Courts are right in deciding that the defendant's tenure is liable to enhancement.

But the contention of the appellant regarding the assessment of the rent is in our opinion valid. The assessment should be fixed with reference to the rates of the villages comprised in the tenure, i.e., it should be fixed upon the existing assets of the taluk. Ordinarily this is the principle upon which the new rent should be fixed. But there may be cases where the talukdar, by making improvident grants of leases at fixed rents, may have reduced the assets of the mehal so as to render the application of this principle unjust to the zemindar. But that case was not set up in the plaint here.

The District Judge also accepts this contention as good; but he thinks that the lower Court acted in accordance with it. In his opinion the lower Court referred to the evidence of the neighbouring rates in order to check the evidence regarding the rates paid by the ryots of the villages comprised in the tenure. But in this respect the District Judge has fallen into an error. The Court of first instance, as it appears from its judgment, fixed the rent with reference to the neighbouring rates only. It accepted the report of the Sub-Deputy Collector, and it has been shown to us that that report wholly proceeded upon the rents paid by the ryots in the neighbourhood outside the limits of the taluk.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the enhanced rent has been fixed on a wrong principle. It should be fixed upon the existing assets of the taluk, allowing to the talukdar the deduction that has been allowed by the lower Courts. We set aside the decree of the lower Courts only as regards the rent fixed by it, and remand the case to the Court of first instance to assess the rent again upon the existing assets of the taluk. We leave it to the discretion of that Court to decide whether it should allow the parties to adduce fresh evidence or not. Costs will abide the result.

[141] CRIMINAL MOTION.

Before Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Grant.

BAIDYA NATH SINGH (Petitioner) v. MUSPRATT AND OTHERS

Sections 200 to 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be read together, and a Magistrate dismissing a complaint under the provisions of s. 203 on any one of the three grounds, viz.:

* Criminal Motion No. 376 of 1886, against the order passed by L. Hare, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Maldah, dated the 21st of July 1886.
(1) If he, upon the statement of the complainant, reduced to writing under s. 200, finds no offence has been committed;

(2) If he distrusts the statement made by the complainant; and

(3) If he distrusts that statement, but his distrust is not sufficiently strong to warrant him in acting upon it, except upon a further enquiry as provided for in s. 202—

must record his reasons for so doing, for if such reasons were not recorded it would be impossible for the High Court, exercising its revisional powers under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to consider whether the discretion of such Magistrate has been properly exercised.

It was never contemplated that a Magistrate should call for a report from an accused person under s. 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of the complaint if such accused happened to be an officer subordinate to the Magistrate.

Where, therefore, a complaint was made against a police officer and complainant’s statement was duly recorded, and the Magistrate acting under the provision of s. 202 called for a report from such police officer, and acting upon that report dismissed the complaint under s. 203:

 Held, that he had acted illegally, and that his order made under the last named section should be set aside, and the case proceeded according to law from the time at which the complaint was made and the complainant’s statement so recorded

The facts upon which this rule was issued were as follows: On the night of the 27th June, some unripe indigo was cut and carried off from certain land, and a charge of theft was laid against one Gopi Mohun Misser and others with regard to that indigo. In the course of investigating that case, Mr. Muspratt, Assistant Superintendent of Police, accompanied by Mr. Hemming, an indigo planter and complainant in the case against Gopi Mohun Misser and Mr. Rice, his manager, proceeded to the Nurutunpore Indigo Factory, which belonged to the accused, where it was alleged the stolen indigo had been taken, for the purpose of enquiring into the matter. On the 5th July a complaint was preferred by one Bairiya Nath Singh, a servant of Gopi Mohun Misser, against Mr. Muspratt, Mr. Hemming and Mr. Rice, charging them with theft, criminal trespass and assault. The complainant alleged that the three accused, accompanied by others, walked into the factory of Gopi Mohun Misser without any authority, broke open an iron chest, and took some money from it, and that they committed mischief by digging up the floor of the room, going into the cook-house and breaking the cooking pots and spitting into the food that was being cooked. It was also alleged that some of Gopi Mohun’s servants had been assaulted. After the complaint was filed Bairiya Nath Singh was examined on the same day on solemn affirmation in support of it, and he deposed to the truth of the facts contained in the complaint.

After that evidence had been taken the Magistrate recorded an order upon it to the following effect:—“Forwarded to the Assistant Superintendent, who is requested to state the circumstances under which the house of Gopi Mohun Baboo was searched, if it was searched at all.”

In answer to the Magistrate’s request, Mr. Muspratt submitted a report, and on the 13th July the Magistrate recorded the following order:—“The search complained of was clearly within the power of the Police, and from the report submitted by the Assistant Superintendent, it does not appear that it was improperly conducted. A prima facie case of theft had been made out of which the accounts appeared to disclose an intention on the part of the accused to use violence or force, if necessary, for the accomplishment of his purpose, and under these circumstances a search to discover if there were arms without license or even lattices in unusual number was reasonable. The complaint will be filed.

On the 16th July the complainant, Baidya Nath Singh, applied to the Magistrate by petition to know what orders had been passed on his complaint, and prayed that he might be allowed to pay the process fees, and that a summons should issue against the accused and witnesses, and that the case might be tried.

On the 21st July the Magistrate recorded the following order: "The complaint does not disclose any offence having been committed. The search was in accordance with the provisions of the law, and the Assistant-Superintendent was acting within his powers in making the search. As to the other parties named, it appears from the Assistant-Superintendent's report that they merely accompanied him as witnesses. Complaint is dismissed."

On the 17th August the complainant moved the High Court to set aside that order under the provisions of s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was not warranted by law, and that his petition and statement, taken in support of it on solemn affirmation, clearly disclosed facts which constituted offences under the sections under which he charged the accused.

Upon that application the present rule was issued, calling upon the Magistrate to show cause why his order dismissing the complaint should not be set aside, and why he should not proceed to hear the complaint and try the case.

The rule now came on to be heard.

Mr. M. M. Ghose and Mr. A. P. Gasper, for the petitioner.

Mr. Kilby and Mr. M. P. Gasper, for Government.

The judgment of the High Court (MITTER and GRANT, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This rule was issued on the 17th August last upon the Magistrate to show cause why his order, dated the 21st of July last, dismissing the complaint of the petitioner who obtained this rule, should not be set aside. The order of the Magistrate came to be passed under the following circumstances. The petitioner filed a petition before the District Magistrate on the 5th of July last complaining of certain offences having been committed by the three accused persons. He was examined on the same date, and after recording his examination, the Magistrate passed the following order on the same date: "Forwarded to the Assistant Superintendent, who is requested to state the circumstances under which the house of Gopi Mohun Baboo was searched, if it was searched at all." It may be mentioned here that the Assistant Superintendent who was requested to state the circumstances was the accused person No. 3. Upon that the Assistant Superintendent submitted his report, we are informed, on the 11th of July. Although that report is part of the record of this case, and although the record was sent for, the report has not been appended to the record that has been sent up. That the report is part of the record appears from the final order passed in this case, to which we shall refer hereafter. On that report being submitted on the 13th of July, the Magistrate recorded the following order: "The search complained of was clearly within the power of the Police, and from the report submitted by the Assistant Superintendent it does not appear that it was improperly conducted. A prima facie case of theft had been made out, of which the accounts appeared to disclose an intention on the part of the accused to use violence or force, if necessary, for the accomplishment of his purpose; and, under these circumstances, a search to discover if there were arms without license or even lattices in unusual number was reasonable. The complaint will be filed." Then on the 21st of July the Magistrate dismissed the complaint, and he did so apparently under s. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, although that section is not mentioned in the order itself. The order dismissing the complaint is to the following effect: "The complaint does not disclose any offence as having been committed. The search made was in accordance with the provisions of the law, and Assistant Superintendent was acting within his powers in making the search. As to the other parties named, it appears from the Assistant Superintendent's report that they merely accompanied him as witnesses. Complaint is dismissed." This is the order with reference to which this rule was obtained. It was passed, as already stated, under s. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That section gives very large powers to the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint without issuing a process at all against the accused persons, but certain conditions are laid down in the chapter in which that section occurs, and those conditions must be strictly fulfilled in making an order under [145] s. 203. Section 200 provides that, "a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence on complaint shall at once examine the complainant upon oath, and the substance of the examination shall be reduced to writing and shall be signed by the complainant, and also by the Magistrate." Then s. 201 provides the procedure to be adopted by the Magistrate if he finds himself not competent to take cognizance of the case. Section 202 lays down that "if the Chief Presidency Magistrate, or any other Presidency Magistrate whom the local Government may from time to time authorize in this behalf, or any Magistrate of the first or second class, sees reason to distrust the truth of a complaint of an offence of which he is authorized to take cognizance, he may, when the complainant has been examined, record his reasons for distrusting the truth of the complaint, and may then postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against, and either inquire into the case himself, or direct a previous local investigation to be made by any officer subordinate to such Magistrate, or by a police officer, or by such other persons, not being a Magistrate or police officer, as he thinks fit, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint." Then comes s. 203 which says: "The Magistrate before whom a complaint is made, or to whom it has been transferred, may dismiss the complaint if, after examining the complainant and considering the result of the investigation (if any) made under s. 202, there is in his judgment no sufficient ground for proceeding." Reading all these sections together, it seems to us that a Magistrate may dismiss a complaint under s. 203 on any one of these three grounds. In the first place under s. 203 if he, upon the statement made by the complainant, reduced to writing under s. 200, finds that no offence has been committed; in the second place, if he distrusts the statement made by the complainant he may also dismiss the complaint; and in the third place, if he distrusts the complainant's statement, but his distrust is not sufficiently strong to warrant him to act upon it, he may direct a further enquiry as provided in s. 200, and he may either conduct this inquiry himself or depute a subordinate officer to conduct it. These are the three cases in which a Magistrate has power to dismiss a complaint under s. 203 and refuse the issue of process. It is [146] clear to us that under s. 202 if he distrusts the statement of the complainant, he must record his reasons. In any case he is bound to record his reasons for distrusting the complaint. That appears to us to be quite reasonable. Under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, this Court is vested with the power of revising the order passed by Courts subordinate to it under s. 203, and it would be impossible for this Court to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate under s. 203 had been properly exercised, unless the Magistrate recorded his reasons for dismissing the complaint under s. 203. Now in this case it appears to us that the grounds upon which the Magistrate has dismissed the complaint are such as would warrant this Court in revising the order made by him. The first ground is, that the complaint does not disclose that any offence has been committed. We have read the statement in the complaint, and we think that if that statement is believed and not distrusted, there was sufficient foundation for some kind of criminal charge against the accused persons. Then the order goes on to say: "The search made was in accordance with the provisions of the law, and the Assistant Superintendent was acting within his powers in making the search. As to the other parties named, it appears from the Assistant Superintendent's report that they merely accompanied him as witnesses." The Magistrate in recording these reasons has entirely proceeded upon the report of the Assistant Superintendent. That appears clear because he asks for that report, and on that report being submitted on the 11th of July, he recorded the order, extracted above, on the 13th, and in his final order he refers to that report and acts upon it. Now it seems to us that the Magistrate acted illegally in calling for a report from the Assistant Superintendent, who in this case was one of the accused persons, and it was never contemplated that under s. 202 any report could be called for from an accused person if that accused person happened to be an officer subordinate to the Magistrate. Upon this irregularity alone we think that the order of the Magistrate refusing to entertain the complaint must be set aside. We therefore set it aside and return the record to the Magistrate, and direct that he proceed with the case in accordance with the provisions of the law. [147] His procedure up to the time of recording the complaint was quite regular and legal, and he must take up the case at that stage. Taking up the case at that stage, he will proceed to deal with it in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:

Lord Hobhouse, Sir B. Peacock and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

HURRINATH RAI (Plaintiff) v. KRISHNA KUMAR BAKSHI

(Defendant) * [13th, 16th and 24th July, 1886.]

Principal and agent—Suit by principal for an account—Object of a decree for an account, as distinguished from a decree made upon the hearing—Costs—Limitation under Act IX of 1871, sch. II, art. 118.

A continued agency, or employment as dewan, for the purpose of drawing and expending the money of a principal, resulted in a suit by the latter, who alleged that more had been drawn than expended for him, and that a specific sum, or balance, stood against the defendant, having been misappropriated by him. The principal claimed also any further sum that might be proved to be payable. The dewan having denied the receipt of the money, and any kind of accountability, it was found against him that the relation of agency existed between the parties. But, on the ground that it was impossible to decide, upon the evidence adduced at the hearing, how much of the principal’s money was unaccounted for, though the attempt had been made to prove a balance due, the appellate Court dismissed the suit. Held, that such a suit was essentially one for an account, and that the Courts below should have followed the regular course, viz., to order an account to be taken of the defendant’s dealings, with the plaintiff’s money. This was without any expression of opinion that, in a suit for an account, an issue may not be raised, at the outset, so clearly as to be ready for decision. But the general rule being the other way, this suit was an example of it.

As, however, the defendant had falsely denied his fiduciary position, he was ordered to pay the whole costs of this suit hitherto, including the costs of this appeal, without regard to the result of the account. Limitation under Act IX of 1871, s. 118, which was applicable, commenced from the date on which the agency ceased.

Appeal from a decree (18th February 1881) of the High Court which dismissed appellant’s suit, with costs, reversing a decree [148] (11th September 1878) of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, who decreed the claim in part.

The question now raised related to the liability of a continuing agent to account to his principal for money drawn and expended; where among other things affecting the question, the claim was made for a specific sum alleged to have been appropriated by the defendant, but not decreed by the appellate Court, which found it impossible to determine on the evidence, how much, if any, of the principal’s money was unaccounted for.

The suit was brought on the 1st June 1877 by the appellant against the respondent, who had been the raja’s dewan and manager of estates, from 1263 to 1283 B. S. (1856 to 1876 A. D.) for a balance of Rs. 19,925, “being the sum misappropriated by the defendant,” who, for the above period, had alone had authority as the raja’s dewan to order disbursements on his account of money in the custody of the raja’s khezanchi.

The plaint further alleged that, on the plaintiff commencing an inquiry, the defendant left his service without notice, and without rendering any account, whereupon an examination of the serihshta led to this suit.
The defendant in his written statement denied the receipt of the money, the misappropriation, or any liability in respect of it, alleging that all disbursements had been made by the raja himself. Among other defences, he relied on limitation under Act IX of 1871. He did not allege that he had, in fact, accounted either himself or by others.

The Subordinate Judge, on issues framed on the above points, found that Rs. 1,369 had been misappropriated. In the absence of any account produced by the defendant, the judgment was asked for, and was given, upon estimates presented by the raja of what would have been the reasonable expenditure, and upon an account representing the sums drawn by the defendant, or upon his order, for the purpose of carrying on litigation, on behalf of the raja, in what was termed in the record the "two-anna case." By this were meant three suits in the Court at Rampur Beaulia, all of which were appealed to the High Court, and one to Her Majesty in Council [149] relating to a two annas share in an estate. The total shown by such accounts to have been drawn was Rs. 40,353, consisting of two sums of Rs. 35,266 and Rs. 5,087; while evidence was given to show that the reasonable expenditure would not have exceeded Rs. 23,500 thus leaving a difference of Rs. 16,853, which had, therefore, it was contended, been overcharged to the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge, however, found that most of the disbursements in the "two-anna case" were made through Tarinkant Chakerbatti, the plaintiff's general mukhtear. He found also that liability was brought home to the defendant only for sums amounting to Rs. 4,388. This was subject to reductions, bringing it down to Rs. 1,369, for which a decree was made.

The plaintiff appealed and the defendant cross-appealed to the High Court.

The Judges of a Divisional Bench (Morris and Tottenham, JJ.) reversed this decree and dismissed the suit. They held that the accounts were insufficient; and that in the absence of the jumma-kharach accounts, as rendered by Tarinkant, it was impossible to fix the amount of the defendant's liability or to say how much, if any, of the money drawn remained unaccounted for. In their judgment they dealt first with limitation as follows:

"It seems to us that either art. 90, or art. 118, which provides six years from the date of accrual of the right to sue, will apply to the present case. It has been argued for the defendant that if this be a case under art. 90, then no cause of action is shown to exist, because it does not appear that an account has been demanded and has been refused. We think, however, that the departure, without notice, of the defendant from the plaintiff's service when the plaintiff's suspicion had been aroused and enquiry commenced, may be construed as a refusal to deliver an account of the money that has passed through his hands. And there is evidence that an account was demanded, while the defendant himself expressly deposos that he was responsible for no account, and that he never gave any. We have no doubt that upon the facts alleged in the plaint there is a right to bring a suit, and if it does not properly fall under art. 90, it will fall under the wider scope of art. 118. The suit [150] was brought within one year after the defendant's alleged desertion, and we hold that it is not barred by limitation."

Then, in regard to the merits: "We cannot say that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff is the best that was at his disposal, or that it is sufficient to warrant a decree against the defendant. The oral evidence is that of the treasurer, who deposes to the correctness of each item debited to the defendant in the accounts filed, and the testimony of other amlas of the plaintiff, and of various paiks who carried money on various occasions to the defendant at Rampur. But the accounts filed are apparently nothing but the rough sehas kept by the treasurer, showing the actual disbursements made by him from day to day, with here and there the adjustment of particular advances; and these accounts are simply loose slips of paper stitched together in bundles. A few only of them bear marks of the defendant’s scrutiny and approval as dewan. These accounts are obviously only part of the materials for the complete yearly accounts, which should be regularly prepared and recorded in a zemindar’s office. But nothing of this kind has been produced, and not one of the defendant’s letters calling for remittances, nor of his written acknowledgment of the receipt of such remittances, is forthcoming. The plaintiff was called upon to produce these accounts, but did not do so on the plea that there were no such papers in his office. He did not then say that the defendant had made away with them, though this has since been suggested.
In the face of the evidence on both sides as to the establishment maintained by the plaintiff for the purpose of keeping accounts, and as to the custom prevailing in his office, that a jumma-kharach should be rendered by those who received advances for the plaintiff’s business, we cannot believe that no accounts other than those produced were really kept up; and we refuse to believe that the defendant was allowed to make away with them when he left the plaintiff’s service. Had he done so, plaintiff would have taken measures to recover them, and bring their abstraction to the notice of the authorities. The absence of the complete accounts is not a merely formal defect in the plaintiff’s case, for, without them, it seems to us impossible to fix the amount, if any, of the defendant’s liability.
We have the direct evidence of Tarinikant Chakerbatti, the naib, [151] that at least a very large portion of the expense incurred in the two-anna case, he says Rs. 30,000 or Rs. 35,000, passed through his hands, and that he rendered to the plaintiff a jumma-kharach of that amount. If this be so, that jumma-kharach was an essential document to be produced in this case, and it seems impossible but that the plaintiff did require such a jumma-kharach to be laid before him from time to time. If he did not require it, then it is scarcely reasonable to expect to get it now so many years afterwards. If he did get a jumma-kharach, as alleged by Tarinikant, we must presume from his long silence that he acquiesced in it.

The above were the principal reasons upon which the High Court dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

For the appellant, Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. H. Cowell argued that the High Court had erred in making a final decree instead of ordering that the account between the parties be taken in the usual manner. The suit was one for an account, having been so treated in the plaint and written answer, as well as in the memoranda of appeal and cross-appeal; also it was so described by the High Court in its judgment. An analysis of the evidence was made to show that there was sufficient ground for a decree for an account, and no ground whatever for dismissing the suit without one. The suggestion that the defendant might be exonerated by the existence of a liability to account on the part of the khezanchi, Tarinikant, was not only insufficient as a ground for the dismissal of the suit, but was not borne out by the facts. And the defendant's case having all along been that he never received the money, as soon as it was prima facie proved that he had received money as agent, it could not be held that a presumption arose as to the effect of Tarinikant's accounts in clearing the defendant as agent, nor was there any presumption arising from the plaintiff's assumed acquiescence in that mode of accounting. There was no reason why either party, the principal or the agent, should regard the accounts of the treasurer as mutually binding upon them. And there were two grounds on which the appellant could rely: First, that the relation of agency had been established, notwithstanding the defendant's denial; secondly, that [152] there was nothing to show that accounts rendered by Tarinikant, if rendered, were or could be taken to be authorized, vouched for, or explained by the defendant; who also was bound to show that the expenditure had been rightly incurred. Consequently, there should have been an account ordered by the Court below of all moneys come to the hands of the defendant as dewan, and for that purpose the suit should have been remanded to the Court of first instance with costs. The decision as to the law of limitation was not disputed. Reference was made to Annoda Persad Rai v. Dwarka Nath Gangopadhyya (1).

The respondent did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered on a subsequent day, July 24th, by

Lord Hobhouse.—The plaintiff in the suit, who is the present appellant, is the owner of a large estate, and the defendant acted as his dewan for some twenty years or so. Some months before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff demanded an account of the defendant's dealings, but the defendant left the place without rendering any. In June 1877 the plaint was filed. After stating the defendant's position and duties as dewan, the plaintiff alleged that he had taken money out of the treasury in the year 1866, and at other times, and had misappropriated it. He then specified certain sums taken, and certain allowances to which the defendant was entitled, and concluded thus: "There is a balance against him of Rs. 19,925-14 annas, for the recovery of which I institute this suit. If by the decision of the Court a larger sum should be proved to be payable to me by him under proofs and papers, the prayer is also for recovery of the same."

The High Court has said that this is a suit virtually for an account. Their Lordships agree with that view. They think that, though the pleading may not be quite precise or technical, it is impossible to assign any other character to a plaint alleging a continued agency in the defendant for the purpose of drawing and expending the plaintiff's money, and praying relief on the ground that the agent had drawn from his principal more than he had expended for him. To such a claim by a principal the agent [153] may answer that accounts have been settled between him and his principal, or that, though none have been settled, he has in the course of his agency applied for the principal's benefit as much as he has received or more. Nothing could prevent the defendant in a suit framed like this from claiming the benefit of an account if in his favour, just as the plaintiff claims it if a larger sum than he specifies should be found due to him.

(1) 6 C. 754.
Such a suit is essentially one for account. In his written statement, the defendant did not set up the defence of settled account, nor that the account, when taken, would be in his favour. He denied his accountability altogether. He denied the receipts of money which were ascribed to him, and alleged that all the expenditure was effected through the plaintiff’s own treasurer and Poddar, agreeably to his own instructions. As for the papers produced from the treasury to show drawings of money by the defendant, he charged that they were false and fabricated. Such a line of defence was perfectly legitimate, if true; but it has been found by both the Subordinate Judge and the High Court to be false. The Subordinate Judge finds the plaintiff’s treasury accounts to be genuine, and he finds further that in the majority of instances the defendant expended the plaintiff’s money without his authority, meaning, as their Lordships understand, that he expended the money by his own general authority as dewan, and did not take the plaintiff’s orders for each specific payment. As regards amount, the Subordinate Judge finds that, setting aside two smaller sums which have been sufficiently accounted for in the suit, two larger sums, amounting altogether to Rs. 40,353-8 annas, are proved to have come into the hands of the defendant.

Such findings as these establish a relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant under which the latter is accountable for his receipts. Their Lordships think that the regular course would have been to order an account to be taken of the defendant’s dealings with the plaintiff’s money as his dewan or agent. In taking the account, either party might waive inquiry as to particular periods of time or particular departments of expenditure, and that is often done. But neither could shut out the other from inquiry into any part of the defendant’s transactions as dewan. In such an account the agent is prima facie liable for [154] what he has received, and is bound to discharge himself; but the evidence, which is considered sufficient to discharge him, may vary as to different items, and he certainly would be entitled to all such intenments and presumptions as are made in favour of one who is called upon to render an account of transactions which have taken place long ago, though under circumstances which prevent any absolute bar by lapse of time.

The Court, however, seems to have thought that its duty was to make a final decree at the hearing upon the items specified in the plaint and the accounts appended to it. And taking a distinction between sums for which the defendant had marked papers, and other sums for which, though paid to him or to his order, he had not marked, the Court found that a sum of Rs. 1,369 was due to the plaintiff, and made a decree for that amount, apportioning the costs of the suit rateably according to the proportion of the amount claimed to the amount recovered. Both parties appealed to the High Court, who dismissed the suit altogether with costs. The present appeal is from that decree. The defendant has not appeared, so that the hearing, has been ex parte, and the evidence bearing on the points now material has been minutely examined. Their Lordships have now to weigh the reasons assigned by the Courts below for their decrees.

It is first necessary to deal with the plea of limitation, which is raised by the defendant, and which is governed by Act IX of 1871. Both Courts have decided that there is no such bar in this case. The only articles suggested as applicable to it are those numbered 60, 90 and 118. Their Lordships think it sufficient to say, with both Courts, that time must be counted from the date on which the defendant ceased to discharge the duties of dewan by departing from the plaintiff's service, and, therefore, whether three years or six years be the limit, there is no bar.

The principal reason assigned by the Subordinate Judge for his conclusion is that the defendant's mark appears on some of the sehas which show advances made to him or to his orders, and does not appear on others. And he cites the plaintiff's treasurer as saying that he was released from liability for the marked items, but was liable for the unmarked ones, and that the defendant was not liable for them. The treasurer's evidence shows that the [155] payment of money on the defendant's orders, without his mark, was an irregular procedure not giving to the treasurer complete immunity from responsibility. But they cannot find that he has anywhere said that the defendant was not responsible to the plaintiff for the money paid out on his orders; and if he had said so it would be a mistake of law. The Subordinate Judge was in error when he held that the defendant was not bound to discharge himself of all the sums which he ordered to be drawn from the treasury.

The only other reason assigned by the Subordinate Judge is that most of the disbursements in some law suits called the two-anna case were made through Tarinikant, the plaintiff's general muktear; that Tarinikant had filed accounts in the plaintiff's treasury which the plaintiff had not produced; and that the plaintiff had sued Tarinikant for an account, and had claimed against him the sum of Rs. 6,725, which again was claimed in the present suit.

It is not quite clear what the Subordinate Judge considered to be the exact bearing of Tarinikant's interventions in these matters. He did not apply them so as to discharge the defendant of any specific items of charge. And if he thought that the plaintiff was bound to clear up his dealings with Tarini before he could charge the defendant with money taken for the two-anna case, it is difficult to see why such an objection as that does not apply to marked items as well as to unmarked. The High Court appear to have so applied it, and they are logical and consistent in doing so. But it is necessary to see whether the existence of unproduced accounts between the plaintiff and Tarini supplies any reason why a decree for account should not be made between the plaintiff and the defendant. If it does, it appears to their Lordships that the plaintiff was harshly treated in not being allowed an opportunity to produce them, for the defendant did not rely upon them in his written statement, did not call for their production, and apparently did not ask the plaintiff's witnesses any question about Tarinikant, except a quite general one put in the cross-examination of the treasurer. This is one of the circumstances showing what miscarriages are likely to occur if the Court attempts to make a [156] final decree at the hearing of a suit for account, instead of the regular decree for account.

The plaintiff's suit against Tarini was instituted almost simultaneously with his suit against the defendant; and both were before the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahiye. The suit was for an account, and the plaintiff charged Tarini with receiving as muktear, on various accounts, the sum of Rs. 17,677-6 of which he had properly spent no more than Rs. 17,227-6, leaving Rs. 450 due from him on those accounts. He also alleged a misappropriation of Rs. 800 on account of which the items were not specified by him, or which do not appear in the present record. Tarini admitted the receipt of some amounts, denied the receipt of others, and claimed a balance due to himself on the account. The suit was compromised in the year 1878, and was dismissed, each party paying his own costs.

With regard to the sum of Rs. 6,725, which the Subordinate Judge says the plaintiff has sought to recover against both Tarini and the defendant, their Lordships cannot find such a sum; but it is perhaps a misprint for the sum of Rs. 6,525 which appears in the accounts of both suits. In the Tarini suit it is charged as received by him by way of instalment on the 23rd of Aughran 1280, but it is part of the accounts upon which only Rs. 450 is claimed, and therefore it must be almost, if not wholly, written off in the legitimate expenses which the plaintiff allows to Tarini. In the present suit, a sum of Rs. 6,525 is charged against the defendant as a howlat taken in the name of Tarini on the 23rd Aughran 1277, but it is wholly written off as part of the legitimate expenses which the plaintiff allows to the defendant. Even supposing that there is some error in the dates, and that the two sums relate to the same transaction, their Lordships cannot see that it is proved, or probable, that the plaintiff is seeking to recover the same amount twice over. It is very likely that both the dewan and the mukhtear are bound to account to the plaintiff for the same sum of money,—the dewan, because he ordered its payment, the mukhtear, because he received it and had the application of it. It is very likely that full accounts could not be stated between the principal and his two agents without including some of the same [157] money in both accounts. That might make it expedient for Tarini to be joined with the defendant as an accounting party—a point which need not now be considered, as no objection has been taken to the frame of the suit on that ground. But the appearance of the same items in accounts against two persons, both responsible for them, does not show that the plaintiff is claiming those sums against both. To show that, it would be necessary to go deeper into the accounts, and to find that the plaintiff is trying to get the benefit of the same charge twice over by writing it off against a different set of discharges in each case. Nothing of that kind appears on the record. And their Lordships think that the finding is another illustration of the inconvenience likely to result from making a final decree when a decree for account is the proper one.

The High Court considered that the plaintiff’s evidence was defective. The Subordinate Judge thought that the sehhas produced, being rough sheets in the nature of a day-book, were written at the time when the work was being done, and were better evidence than anything copied from them could be. The High Court think them only part of the materials for a complete yearly account, such as should be regularly prepared and recorded in a zemindar’s office. Yearly accounts of this kind were called for by the defendant, and none were produced. The High Court attach great importance to the position of Tarini; they comment adversely on the non-appearance of the plaintiff as a witness, and they consider that there must have been some statement of account filed because the word “adai” is written over two of the items of charge. Their conclusion is that it is impossible to say how much, if any, of the sums remains unaccounted for, and therefore the suit must be dismissed. So far do they carry their view, that the plaintiff ought to suffer from not having given the best evidence, that they refuse to give him any relief as to the sum of Rs. 4,388, though the receipt of it is admitted by the defendant, who does not show how it was discharged.

If this were the proper occasion for deciding whether the plaintiff should recover anything, their Lordships would have to consider long before assenting to the views taken by the High Court. It appears to them that sufficient weight has not been [158] given to the onus thrown upon the defendant by his fiduciary position. They observe that the treasurer states that there were no such yearly accounts as the High Court suppose. If there are such, they may yet be produced, though whether they or the contemporary sehás are the better evidence, must depend on circumstances which at present are not known. The plaintiff excused himself from examination in Court on a plea of ill-health, which may have been false. But it was supported by certificates from the Civil Surgeon of Rajshahye. The Subordinate Judge believed it, and he issued an order for a commission to examine the plaintiff, which, as appears from a petition in the record, the defendant prayed to have reversed. On the subject of Tarini their Lordships have already made observations.

But all their Lordships wish to do now is to avoid prejudice to a proper inquiry by anything falling from either the High Court, or this Committee, in the course of what they consider to be a premature attempt to make a final decision. Whatever weight may be attributed to the reasons given by the High Court for the disallowance of any item of the charge, they are inapplicable to a decree for account. The defendant is the plaintiff’s agent, and has drawn from his treasury substantial sums of money to be applied in the plaintiff’s business on the defendant’s responsibility. On proof of those facts there is a clear case for an account, in which the defendant must discharge himself in some way from the money he has drawn. In taking that account, any relevant papers in the plaintiff’s treasury may be called, for, evidence may be got as to particular items, it may be ascertained whether, as to any item, the plaintiff has already got the benefit of it in his account with Tarini, the appearance of the word “adai” may be accounted for, and its effect determined. Their Lordships are not expressing an opinion that in a suit for account, it may not appear at the hearing that the issue is so simple and so clearly raised, and met by evidence, as to be ready for decision at that time. But the general rule is the other way. And this suit is an example of the general rule.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court should have remanded the suit to the Subordinate Judge to take a general account of all dealings and transactions between the [159] plaintiff and the defendant in the character of the plaintiff’s dewan, only not disturbing any settled account, if such there be. And inasmuch as the defendant has taken the course of denying his receipts, his fiduciary position and his accountability in toto, a defence which the High Court say is shown to be false by a mass of evidence adduced by the plaintiff, he should have been ordered to pay the whole costs of the suit up to and including the appeal to the High Court. If he had been truthful and honest, he would have submitted at once to a decree for account, and thus have saved great delay and expense. Their Lordships will now humbly advise Her Majesty to make such a decree, and the defendant will be ordered to pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed with costs. Suit remanded.

FULL BENCH.

Bhaba Pershed Khan, Minor, by his Guardians, Ramsakhi Dabi Chowdhrain and another (Plaintiffs) v. The Secretary of State for India in Council and others (Defendants).*

Minor, Suit on behalf of—Objection to description of minor—Permission to sue, Proof of—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 440, 578—Act XL of 1858, s. 3.

Although the proper and regular manner of giving permission to sue on behalf of a minor is by an order recorded in the order-sheet, there is, nevertheless, nothing in the nature of the sanction provided by s. 3 of Act XL of 1858 which takes it out of the general rule of evidence, that sanction may be proved by express words or by implication.

Where on a construction of the plaint and the pleadings, it is found that the minor is the real plaintiff, the mere fact of his not having been properly described in accordance with s. 440 of the Civil Procedure Code is no ground for setting aside a decree passed in the suit.

[F., 9 A. 506 (509) ; 166 P.R. 1889.]

[160] This case was referred to a Full Bench by Wilson and Ghose, JJ., on the 6th April 1886, with an opinion, of which the following is the only portion material to this report:—

"The question which we desire to refer to a Full Bench arises in this way.

"The suit purported to be brought by 'Ramsakhi Dabi Chowdhrain, of Putia, mother and principal ussies (executor) and Boroda Churn Surma Khan, deputy executor of Bhaba Pershad Khan Chowdhray, minor, plaintiffs.' The plaint began by saying that 'we Ramsakhi And Boroda Churn on behalf of the said plaintiff Bhaba Pershad Khan, minor, state as follows.' It alleged the title to the land to be in the minor, and it said: 'we the executors on behalf of the minor, the plaintiff,' pray for a decree 'declaring the right of the minor, and awarding the minor plaintiff possession' with other relief.

"The written statement raised the contention that 'as Bhaba Pershad Khan, the minor, has not been made a plaintiff under the provisions of law, and as the plaintiffs have neither stated what kind of ussies (executors) there are, nor filed any document to show the same, the plaint is inadmissible.'

"The Subordinate Judge, who tried the case in the first instance, said as to this: 'Defendant did not deny that plaintiff was the guardian of the minor, and if she had denied the fact, plaintiff might prove it by producing the certificate of guardianship. If she is the constituted guardian of the minor, she need not describe herself as the next friend of the minor, and the suit can proceed at her instance. It appears that defendant does not seriously contend that plaintiff is not the guardian, and raises the plea merely for the sake of doing it: If she had any reasonable doubt

as to the representative character of plaintiffs, she would no doubt have applied under s. 442 of the Civil Procedure Code to have the plaint taken off the file, and would never have remained satisfied with making an equivocal statement in the written statement. From the plaint it appears that the suit has been brought for the benefit of the minor, and if plaintiff is not the constituted guardian as stated by her, she can be allowed to proceed with the suit as the next friend of the minor, though she has not described herself as the next friend, inasmuch as it [161] is not equitable to throw out the plaint at this stage for a formal defect. For the above reasons I hold that the suit is maintainable at plaintiff's instance. The District Judge on appeal says as to the point now in question—

"There can, I think, be no doubt that the suit was bad as not being brought in accordance with s. 440 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and I must express my great surprise that when this objection was brought to the notice of the Subordinate Judge, he did not return the plaint for rectification of the error. The objection was raised at the earliest possible stage, and should have been at once disposed of. Further, no certificate under Act XL of 1858 was filed by the plaintiff; nor was permission given to her to sue for the minor under s. 8, Act XL of 1858. All that appears on the record is a vague affidavit by the plaintiff's general agent to the effect that such a certificate was obtained from the Judge of Rajshahye and 'has been filed in some case or other,' so cannot be found. This is not at all sufficient. If there was such a certificate in existence, it should either have been produced, or if it could not be found, a duplicate should have been procured and produced. I would call the Subordinate Judge's attention to the cases of Minamoyi Dabia v. Jogodishuri Dabia (1); and Russick Das Bairagy v. Preonath Misree (2).

"There can be no doubt that the minor was not described in the plaint according to the form indicated in s. 440 of the Civil Procedure Code, but at the same time it is clear that the suit was one on behalf of the minor and for his benefit. The Court of first instance apparently regarded it as such, and accordingly allowed the suit to proceed. There is some inconsistency between the cases bearing upon this matter, and which have been noticed by us in our reference in Special Appeal No. 1512 of 1885, and we therefore think it right to refer to a Full Bench the following question:

"Where a suit is brought by a next friend on behalf of a minor, and for his benefit, and where the Court of first instance allows it to proceed, whether the objection that the minor was not properly described according to s. 440 of the Civil Procedure [162] Code, or that the next friend was not a certificated gurdain under Act XL of 1858, or that no express permission was granted to him by the Court to sue on behalf of the minor, is fatal to the suit?"

Baboo Srinath Das (with him Baboo Kishori Mohun Roy), for the appellants.—Reading the whole plaint it is clear that the minor is the real plaintiff in the case, and there is no relief claimed except of the minor. The form of the title of the plaint is not material. A Court may in its discretion authorize a next friend without a certificate of guardianship to institute a suit on behalf of a minor. It is not necessary that the Court should record its permission in a separate proceeding. In this case it is apparent on the face of the proceedings that the Court gave the permission. Permission so appearing is sufficient in law—Goono Monee Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, for the respondent.—In order to make a person a party to a suit one must comply with the form prescribed by the law. Section 440 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down the form of the title in a suit on behalf of a minor. In this case the title of the suit is so framed that the minor does not appear as the real plaintiff. The title of the plaint is equivocal. This suit ought not to have been allowed to proceed, as the real plaintiff was not before the Court. Suppose the suit is dismissed on the merits, would not the minor on attaining majority be entitled to say that he was not a party to the suit? Permission of the Court is necessary under s. 3 of Act XL of 1858 to enable a next friend to bring a suit on behalf of a minor. The permission should be formally recorded in a separate proceeding which was not done in this case. The suit is bad. [163] Mrinomoyi Dabia v. Jogodishuri Dabia (8); Russick Das Bairagy v. Preonath Misree (9).

Baboo Sreenath Das in reply.—In Russick Das Bairagy v. Preonath Misree (9) an opinion was expressed against my contention; but the case was decided upon another point.

The following opinion was delivered by the Full Bench:

OPINION.

The learned Judges, who heard this case in Special Appeal, have held on the construction of the plaint that the minor was the real plaintiff. They have, however, referred the following question to the Full Bench:

Where a suit is brought by a next friend on behalf of a minor and for his benefit, and where the Court of first instance allows it to proceed, whether the objection that the minor was not properly described according to s. 440 of the Civil Procedure Code, or that the next friend was not a certificated guardian under Act XL of 1858, or that no express permission was granted to him by the Court to sue on behalf of the minor, is fatal to the suit.

In regard to the first portion of this question, we are of opinion that the fact that the Judge allowed the suit to proceed is evidence that the Court trying the case allowed the institution of the suit, and the referring Judges have found to that effect.

In regard to the next part of the question, namely, whether the objection that the minor was not properly described according to s. 440 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is fatal to the suit, we are of opinion that it is not. In all cases the question to be decided is whether on a construction of the plaint and the pleadings the minor is really a party to the suit or not, and if he be, any irregularity in this description is provided for by s. 578 of the Code which declares: “No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded in appeal on account of any error, defect or irregularity, whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit, or otherwise not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.”

In regard to the third portion of the question, namely, whether the objection that no express permission has been granted by the [164] Court on behalf of the minor, is fatal to the suit; this, if answered in the affirmative, would mean that no evidence, except evidence of express permission, would be admissible to show that the Judge had sanctioned the institution of the suit. We think there is nothing in the nature of the sanction given under s. 3, Act XL of 1858, which takes it out of the general rule of evidence that sanction may be proved by express words or by implication. We are, therefore, unable to hold that the want of express permission is fatal to a suit. At the same time we must say that, according to the practice in the Mofussil Courts, every order is entered in the order-sheet attached to the record, and the proper and regular manner of proving permission would be by the production of the order-sheet or a certified copy thereof.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

JASPATH SINGH v. QUEEN-EMpress.* [21st December, 1886.]

Charge to jury—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 298—Duty of Judge when the jury are uncertain as to the offence committed—Evidence disbelieved in some parts and accepted in others.

A jury, after retiring, returned to the box, and after unanimously finding both prisoners not guilty of the charges framed against them, stated to the Judge that they thought an offence had been committed by one of the prisoners, but were uncertain as to the section of the Penal Code applicable to his case; the Judge thereupon made over to them a copy of the Penal Code, leaving them to decide under what section the offence fell. Held, that he had failed in his duty, and that he should have asked the jury what doubts they had as to the crime which had been committed, and should have explained to them the law and informed them of the facts. The facts were proved against the prisoner if they believed those facts.

Where the evidence at a trial is in part disbelieved, as to which part it is thought that the witnesses had committed perjury, it is unsafe to accept the evidence of those witnesses in other parts and to convict the prisoner thereunder.

[165] JASPATH SINGH and Dino Nath Sen were charged under ss. 304 and 326 of the Indian Penal Code.

At the trial before the Sessions Judge, amongst a large number of witness for the prosecution, five spoke to the fact that Jaspath Singh struck the blow (which caused the death of one Tara Chand, deceased) at the direction of Dino Nath Sen. As to the effect of the evidence the Judge, in charging the jury, amongst other things, said: "There are five alleged eye-witnesses of the occurrence, and the question for you to decide is, do you believe these witnesses; if you do believe them there can be no doubt that there is ample proof against the accused; if, however, you do not believe the witnesses, and consider that the real facts have been suppressed, as suggested by the prisoner's counsel, and that there had been a mutual fight, you ought to acquit; but it is only if the real facts have been misrepresented in important matters that you would be justified in throwing over the solid body of evidence adduced.'

As regards the law, the Judge charged as follows:—

"If you believe the evidence it can hardly be doubted that the offence is one of culpable homicide; it is well known that the head is a dangerous part of the body to strike especially with a latti, the man who struck the deceased must have intended to kill him, or at least knew that it was likely that he would do so; he would therefore be guilty under one of the clauses of s. 304. You may, however, form a different opinion, and may, if you like, find the prisoners guilty under s. 326. If you have any reasonable doubt you must give the prisoners the benefit of that doubt."

The Jury eventually acquitted both prisoners of the charges under ss. 304 and 326 of the Penal Code; but thought that Jaspath Singh had committed some offence, although they were uncertain as to the section of the Penal Code under which the offence (if any) fell; thereupon the Judge handed to the jury a copy of the Penal Code, leaving them to apply it to the case against Jaspath Singh. The Jury, after retiring, returned and said they were of opinion that Jaspath Singh was guilty of an offence under s. 325 of the Penal Code.

The Judge thereupon, notwithstanding the fact that he had never questioned the jury as to the doubts which they had inferentially expressed and had not explained the law as set out in s. 325 to them, sentenced Jaspath Singh to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Ghose, for the appellant, contended that the jury having acquitted on the charges under ss. 304 and 326, the Judge should have accepted that verdict; that the conviction under s. 325 was unsustainable on the evidence, and that the Judge was wrong in leaving the jury to find out from the Penal Code the section under which the appellant, Jaspath Singh, was to be found guilty.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Petheram C.J., (Beverley, J., concurring).—I think that this appeal must be dismissed, and for the reason that this is a finding of the jury with which this Court has no power to interfere, and that if the verdict of the jury is correct, and I must take it to be correct, because, as I have just said, I have no power under the circumstances to interfere with it, the punishment which has been inflicted on the prisoner for killing this man is not too great.

The case comes before us in a way which discloses a state of things as to the mode in which trials by jury are conducted in this country, that is much to be depredated, and in what I say now I am speaking for myself alone—I do hope that Judges in explaining the law to juries in cases in which juries are to act will take more pains in explaining the sections of the Code, and not leave the Code to the juries for them to find out the meaning of it themselves.

I think that in this case there is a possibility, I will not say probability, that there has been a miscarriage of justice, and if there is, as I think there is this possibility, it arises from the fact that the Judge did not sufficiently explain the law to the jury, and my reason for thinking that there is a possibility of a miscarriage of justice in this case, is, that the Judge in his charge to the jury shows that he had come to the conclusion that the evidence for the prosecution was to be taken as a whole, and that the only thing for the jury to do, if they disbelieved [167] it as a whole, was to acquit the prisoner. The jury did not take that course. They found a verdict which showed that they disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution in certain parts as to which they thought the witnesses were committing perjury, and they say that story is untrue, but they accepted that evidence in other parts, and convicted one of the prisoners upon it. The charge of the Judge shows that that was unsafe, and, speaking for myself, I quite agree with him. I think it absolutely unsafe to take the story of certain witnesses which is shown to be prejured as to a portion and to accept their statements and act upon it. Therefore I think that in this particular case, on the Judge’s own view, there is a miscarriage of justice, but as I said before I am not able to interfere on that ground, because the Code gives us no power to interfere with the verdict of a jury in cases where there is evidence to go before them, and in this case there was evidence to go before them.

Then the question is, how far that state of things arose from the fact of the law being insufficiently explained to the jury by the Judge. As the charge was originally drawn against these two men, it was a charge of inflicting injury which either amounted to homicide or grievous hurt, and there was no question before the Judge as to there being any provocation on either of those charges, and the Judge charged the jury from the point of view that they would convict on one of those charges taken simply, and practically his charge amounted to this:—These are the two matters in respect of which these men are being tried, and it will be for you to say whether you believe the evidence for the prosecution. If you do, you must convict the prisoners, but if, on the other hand, you do not believe that evidence, you must acquit them--; and the only matter before the jury was the question of these two substantive charges taken simpliciter without any question of mitigating circumstances. It appears, so far as the prisoner before us is concerned, that the jury came in an uncertain state of mind, and they told the Judge that they could not say under what section the offence came. Now, upon that, I think the duty of the Judge was to have asked the jury what doubt they had as to the crime which had been committed, and if he had done that, he would have found that it was not [168] a doubt as to whether the offence amounted to culpable homicide or grievous hurt, but a doubt under a totally different section which was not explained to them, as to whether if this man had inflicted hurt he did it under circumstances of grave and sudden provocation. If the Judge had asked that question he would have carried out his duty, and he would have been able to explain to the jury how it is that, in questions of this kind, the substantive offence would be affected by the qualifying clause of the next section. But he did nothing of the kind; instead of doing that, he simply gives the Penal Code to the jury in order that they may read it themselves and apply it in the best way they could. In doing that, I can only say, and I must say it here, that I think that the Judge did not do his duty. I think that it is the duty of a Judge to explain the law to the jury, and to tell them what offence the facts would prove against the prisoner if they believed them, and it is then for the jury to say whether, within the definition given by the Judge, the facts as proved constitute the offence. If the Judge had done that, I do not think that the complications would have arisen which have arisen in this case, and I think this case is a good illustration to show how very important it is that Judges should not leave the Code to the jury in this kind of way for them to read.
and interpret it for themselves, but as I said before they must explain the law to the jury and tell them, not under what section they are to convict the accused, but in some kind of popular language which they can understand of what offence they are to convict him, whether it be homicide or grievous hurt, or any other. It is for the Judge to construe the law; it is for the jury to find the facts, and I hope that, in future, Judges, in these jury trials, will be careful not simply to leave the Code to the jury but be at the pains to explain it themselves. For these reasons, having in mind that there was evidence of the crime of which the prisoner has been convicted, that the question of fact was for the jury, and that there was no appeal from their verdict. I think that this appeal must be dismissed.

RAJA BABU (Petitioner) v. MUDDUN MOHUN LALL (Opposite Party.)*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Possession—Title—Symbolical possession.

A Magistrate, trying a case under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in determining the question of possession, took into consideration the question of title. Held, that he had a right to discuss the question of title, if in his opinion it was material upon the question of possession; and that the mere fact that he had considered and discussed the question of title, would not invalidate his decision on the point of possession, provided that there was evidence before him as to who was in possession.

Semble.—In the absence of any other evidence of possession, a Magistrate would be justified in finding possession to be with a person to whom symbolical possession has been shown to have been given in execution of a decree, although possibly slight evidence would be sufficient to rebut such evidence of possession.

This was a rule obtained on the 29th October, 1886, by Raja Babu and others, calling upon Muddun Mohun Lall and others to show cause why an order, dated the 21st September, 1886, passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr, declaring Muddun Mohun and his party to be in possession of a certain orchard, should not be set aside.

The facts of the case were that Muddun Mohun Lall had obtained a decree against one Sital Pershad, the father of Raja Babu, for Rs. 4,000 on the 8th August, 1884; and on the 17th September, 1884, had applied for execution, and attached the orchard above referred to, the sale being fixed for the 16th March, 1885. The sale was postponed, and the orchard eventually sold to Muddun Mohun Lall some time in 1885; this sale was confirmed on the 16th May, 1885. Sital appealed to the High Court against the order confirming the sale, but his appeal was dismissed. On the 19th January, 1886, the Subor-[170] dinate Judge issued an order for the delivery of the orchard to Muddun Mohun, and on the 24th January he was given symbolical possession.

* Criminal Revision No. 461 of 1886, against the order passed by Baboo Mohendro Nath Gupto, Deputy Magistrate of Monghyr, dated the 21st of September 1886.
On the 5th January, 1886, Raja Babu put in a petition before the Magistrate alleging that on the 4th March, 1884, he had, in execution of a decree obtained by some third party against Sital Pershad, purchased the orchard in the name of one Nursing Sahai, and he prayed that possession of the orchard might be given to him, he already having been in legal possession. This application was, however, rejected; on the 26th January Nursing Sahai applied unsuccessfully for possession on his own account.

On the 25th March, disturbances having taken place between the parties, the Joint-Magistrate stepped in and required both parties to show cause why they should not be bound down to keep the peace; proceedings under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code were also initiated, Raja Babu setting up the facts alleged in his petition of the 5th January—the case under s. 107 resulting in Sital Pershad, Raja Babu and his servants being bound down to keep the peace; and the case under s. 145 resulting in Muddun Mohun Lall being declared to be in possession of the orchard. Raja Babu then moved the High Court in both cases; and the order under s. 107 was set aside as against him, the order under s. 145 being also set aside, on the ground that no evidence as to possession of the orchard had been taken on his behalf.

On the 20th June, 1886, in consequence of further disturbances between the parties, the Deputy Magistrate directed the police to make enquiries, the police reporting that Raja Babu was in possession, and that Muddun Mohun Lall had attempted to dispossess him. The Deputy Magistrate, after himself visiting the spot, took up the case on the petition of Raja Babu under s. 145, and after entering into the question as to whether the first purchase had been made benami, and as to whether symbolical possession had or had not been given by the Court previous to Muddun Mohun Lall, held on the 21st September, 1886, that Muddun Mohun Lall was entitled to retain possession of the orchard.

[171] Raja Babu then obtained the present rule calling upon Muddun Mohun to show cause why the order of the 21st September should not be set aside.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. Twidale) appeared to show cause, stated the facts out of which the case arose, and contended that the Magistrate had sufficient evidence before him showing who was in possession at the time of enquiry, irrespective of the other matters touched upon in his judgment, to justify him in coming to the decision given.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. Amir Ali) appeared for Raja Babu in support of the rule, and contended that the Deputy Magistrate had enquired into the question as to whether the orchard had or had not been purchased benami, whereas he ought to have confined his attention to the point of actual possession; that the Deputy Magistrate had further made his order on the strength of the symbolical possession given by the Civil Court, and cited Juggobundhu Mookerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (1) as showing that symbolical possession was no possession as against third parties, and was no evidence of actual possession; that the Deputy Magistrate, in accordance with Ambler v. Pushong (2), should have alone decided who was at the time of the institution of the proceedings under s. 145 in possession. That all the proceedings held by the Deputy Magistrate had been vitiated by the manner in which the case had been tried, because (a) the Deputy Magistrate had in his order discussed the question of benami, and determined that no formal possession was given until after the sale to Muddun Mohun Lall, (b) because he had discussed the question as to whether possession was delivered to Muddun Mohun Lall by the Courtpeon; and, (c) because the evidence in the enquiry showed that Raja Babu was in actual possession, the evidence on Raja Babu’s side having been given by the police, whereas the evidence on the other side was that of the retainers of Muddun Mohun Lall. He further contended that, if possession was with Raja Babu from the 8th March, 1884, to the 24th June, 1886, the presumption of law was that possession remained in him until it was altered, but that the Magistrate had, by his order of the 21st September, found that Sital Pershad was [172] in possession; he had therefore tried a question not in his power and had drawn inferences from that. The learned counsel further referred to In re. Kali Krishto Thakur (1).

ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) was delivered by

Petheram, C.J.—This was a rule which was obtained to set aside an order dated the 21st September in this year, declaring the possession of a particular person to some property under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Magistrate appears to have been set in motion by a police enquiry which was held in consequence of there being a likelihood of a breach of the peace in the neighbourhood, and having been so set in motion, he proceeded to enquire, as it was his duty to do under the section, who was in possession of this property, for the purpose of maintaining him in possession until the parties could get their rights decided by Civil Court.

This rule was obtained, so far as I recollect, upon the ground argued to-day by Mr. Woodroffe, that the Magistrate had failed to try the question of possession at all, and that he had confined his attention to the question of title; and no doubt upon the face of his judgment, it appears that, to a great extent, he considered who was the person entitled by law to the enjoyment of this property, and it was pressed before us that he had considered that to such an extent that he had lost sight of the real question before him, and which he had a right to try, namely, who was in possession at the time, and had a right to be maintained in possession under this particular section of the Code.

That being the case, it is for us to consider whether the Magistrate had materials before him on which he was justified in coming to the conclusion, which he undoubtedly came to, that the person in whose favour he has made the order was in the actual possession of this property. It is true that in arriving at the conclusion he has considered who had title, and the last authority cited by Mr. Woodroffe, shows that, if he thought that material upon the question of possession, he had a right to consider it and to discuss it, and the mere fact that he considers and [173] discusses it, does not invalidate his decision on the question of possession, provided there is evidence as to who is in possession.

Then on the question, whether there was any evidence of possession, the evidence is, that this person whom he found to be in possession of this particular piece of property purchased it at execution, when it was put up for sale at his instance under a decree of Court after the regular forms of attachment and advertisement had been gone through. The advertisement was made in the way sales are advertised in this country, that is, the notification of the sale was stuck up in the Court-room, and the sale took place on the date fixed in the notification, and after the purchase had been made, the form was gone through of giving possession to the purchaser. This is proved. No doubt, it may be said that this is a mere symbolical possession, but in the absence of anything else, the question is whether, under such circumstances, a Judge is justified in finding possession, if he is satisfied that possession was thus taken. We think he is, even supposing there was no other evidence. When it is proved that a property was purchased at an execution sale, and that subsequently thepeon of the Court went through the form of giving possession to the purchaser, we think that is some evidence that the purchaser took possession. It may be that the customs of the country are such that very slight evidence would suffice to rebut that, and the Magistrate had to find on the facts whether there was evidence of the slightest character; but in this case, the Magistrate says there was other evidence on which he comments; and upon that evidence, and the other evidence to which I have alluded, he comes to the conclusion that this man took possession under his purchase, and that he had been in possession since that date, and having come to that conclusion he makes an order confirming his possession.

As I said before, the only question we can consider is whether there was evidence on which the Magistrate could come to that conclusion. We think there was, and therefore his order cannot be disturbed, and consequently this rule must be discharged.

[174] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr Justice Beverley.

Moteeram (Petitioner) v. Belaseeram (Opposite Party).*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 370 (cl. i)—Summary Procedure—Conviction, Reasons for.

The meaning of s. 370 (cl. i.) of Act X of 1882 is that, where the offence found is sufficiently grave to involve a fine of Rs. 200 or imprisonment as the substantive sentence, the Magistrate is bound to record his reasons for the conviction, so as to enable the party to bring the matter up to the High Court; but in petty cases, which can be met by a fine of a few rupees, the decision of the Magistrate may be recorded shortly. A sentence of a fine of Rs. 10, and imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of the section.

In this case the accused was tried summarily before a Presidency Magistrate for an assault, and convicted, the Magistrate passing the following order: "The charge of assault is proved against the accused under s. 352 of the Penal Code. He is fined Rs. 10 or one week's rigorous imprisonment."

*Criminal Revision No. 473 of 1886, against the order passed by Syed Ameer Hossein, Khan Bahadur, Officiating Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 21st September, 1886."
The prisoner obtained a rule calling upon the Magistrate to show cause why this order should not be set aside, on the ground that, under s. 370 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate should have given reasons for the conviction.

Mr. Handley, in support of the rule.

Baboo Boidonath Dutt, contra.

ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—We think that this rule must be discharged. These proceedings were held under s. 370, and the only matters which the Presidency Magistrate is bound to record are the matters provided in that section. The first question and the real question in this case is whether, in a sentence of this kind, the Magistrate was bound to record any reasons at all. The sentence is a sentence of a fine of Rs. 10, and, in default of payment of the fine, a short term of imprisonment is imposed. The question is, whether that is a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning [175] of s. 370 (cl. i). In our opinion it is not. We think that it is a sentence of a fine, and that the latter part of the sentence is a mere mode of compelling payment of the fine, and that the meaning of that section is that, where the offence was sufficiently grave to involve a fine of Rs. 200 or imprisonment as the substantive sentence, the Magistrate was bound to record his reasons so as to enable the party to bring the matter up to this Court. But in petty cases which the Magistrate thought would be met by a fine of a few rupees the Legislature thought that his decision ought to be recorded shortly, and if the parties wanted to bring it up they could do so in some other form. For these reasons we think the Magistrate’s order was quite sufficient under s. 370, and that the rule must be discharged.

T. A. P. Rule discharged.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

IN THE MATTER OF NEAZ v. MONSOR AND ANOTHER.*
[20th December, 1886.]

Cattle Trespass (Act I of 1871), s. 22—Joint fine—Fine and compensation.

Proceedings under s. 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act are quasi-civil in their nature; a Magistrate being at liberty under that section to assess and enforce, in a summary manner, compensation for an injury for which a civil action might be brought.

An order, therefore, for the payment of a sum as fine and compensation, passed against two persons under that section which does not specify the proportionate amount payable by each, is good.

* Criminal Reference No. 222 of 1886, made by F. W. J. Rees, Esq., Sessions Judge of Tipperah, dated the 6th of December, 1886, against the order passed by Moulvi Buzoolol Karim, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Brahmanbariah, dated the 18th of September, 1886.
In this case the Deputy Magistrate of Brahmanbariah found that two persons, Monsor and Dengoo, had illegally impounded 19 head of cattle belonging to the complainant, thereby causing him to pay a sum of Rs. 7-2 for the release of the cattle; the Magistrate therefore convicted them under s. 22 of Act I of 1871 (The Cattle Trespass Act), directing them to repay the sum of Rs. 7-2 to the complainant as a fine, and also Rs. 20 as [176] compensation; the order containing no direction as to the proportion in which the sums referred to should be paid by Monsor and Dengoo.

The Sessions Judge, considering the order to be illegal on the ground that Monsor and Dengoo had been fined jointly Rs. 27, sent up the record of the case to the High Court under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

No one appeared at the hearing for either party.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) was as follows:—

ORDER.

In this case we are of opinion that under s. 22 of Act I of 1871 the order made by the Deputy Magistrate was a legal order. The matter in which that order was made was not a regular criminal proceeding, but a quasi-civil proceeding, in which a Magistrate is authorized to assess and enforce in a summary manner compensation for an injury for which a civil action might be brought. Under these circumstances we think that, in the present case, the so-called accused are jointly and severally liable for the compensation and costs awarded, and we see no reason to interfere.

A covenant in a lease reserved to the lessor, on default of payment of rent, a power of re-entry; there being no mention in such covenant of a similar power being also reserved to his "heirs, successors or assigns."

The lessor sold his rights in the property leased to third persons, and such third persons endeavoured to re-enter under the covenant. Held, that although re-entry was reserved only to the lessor, yet his vendees could take advantage of the covenant, the operative part of the Statute 32, Hen. [177] Held, further, that the forfeiture having been waived by subsequent demands for rent, and there being no legal demand for rent on the last day on which rent at a date subsequent to the waiver fell due, the vendees were not entitled to make use of their right of re-entry.

On the 16th December, 1874, one Gungapersaud, who was the owner of a certain house and premises No. 8, Dhurrumtollah Street, in Calcutta, leased the said house and premises to one Thomas Fletcher Brown for 15 years, from the 1st of January, 1875, at a rental of Rs. 210 per month. The lease contained a covenant by T. F. Brown that he would, during the said term, pay the rent at the times and in manner therein mentioned; and further contained the following clause that "if the said monthly rent thereby reserved or any part thereof should not be paid on the days and times and in manner therein mentioned, or if any of the covenants or agreements therein contained on the part of the said Thomas Fletcher Brown should not be by him well and truly observed, performed, &c., then it should be lawful for the said Gungapersaud into and upon the said property or any part thereof in the name of the whole to re-enter, and the same to have again, re-possess and enjoy as if the said indenture had never been made, anything therein contained to the contrary notwithstanding." Under this lease Thomas Fletcher Brown entered into possession of the premises.

On the 9th August, 1878, Gungapersaud sold the said house and premises to one Gobind Chunder Koondoo and one Kristo Nath Koondoo, their heirs, representatives and assigns. T. F. Brown attorned to the purchasers, and subsequently, after the death of the said Gobind Chunder Koondoo, to the present plaintiffs, who were Kristo Nath Koondoo, and the heirs of Gobind Chunder Koondoo.

In April 1882, T. F. Brown disposed of his business, which was that of a horse-dealer, on the premises No. 8, Dhurrumtollah St., to a Limited Company, which was duly registered under the Companies' Act, 1866, he himself becoming the manager of the Company. From that time up to 13th September, 1885, T. F. Brown regularly paid rent to the plaintiffs. Subsequent rent was not paid, though it appeared that bills were drawn out but [178] not presented, and the plaintiffs thereupon gave notice to T. F. Brown that they claimed to be entitled to re-enter on the premises.

On the 3rd December, 1885, a petition was presented for the compulsory winding up of the Company, and on the 10th December one David Cowie was appointed liquidator with power to carry on the business of the Company, and under this order the liquidator entered into possession.

On the 26th January, 1886, the plaintiffs wrote to T. F. Brown, calling upon him to quit the premises. No answer was however received from T. F. Brown, but the official liquidator wrote stating that he was in possession of the premises, warning the plaintiffs that if they attempted to re-enter, the attempt would be resisted, and the plaintiffs held responsible for all consequences. The plaintiffs therefore not having ever recognized the Company or the Official Liquidator as their tenants brought their suit against T. F. Brown, the Company and the Official Liquidator for the following purposes:

(1) To have it declared that they were entitled after the 15th November, 1885, to re-enter on the premises.
(2) For possession.
(3) For rent from T. F. Brown.
(4) For such sum as the Court might think fit for use and occupation of the premises as against the Official Liquidator.

The Company put in a written statement stating that, although they had taken no under-lease from T. F. Brown, yet they had entered into possession of the premises in pursuance of an agreement, dated 22nd February, 1882 between T. F. Brown and one Henry Glass Smith, purporting to be a trustee for the Company then in course of formation; that they had not received any notice to quit; and that the original lease by Gungapersaud contained no provision for the re-entry of any persons other than Gungapersaud.

The Official Liquidator merely alleged that he was in possession under the order of Court appointing him Official Liquidator.

T. F. Brown did not enter appearance.

At the hearing, the following issues were raised:

(1) Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to take advantage of the clause of re-entry in the lease.

[179] (2) Whether Brown's tenancy had been determined, and if so, how and when.

(3) Whether, if the lease was determined, there had been any waiver.

(4) Did Cowie ever have possession, and if so in what capacity.

Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Bonnerjee, for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Kennedy.—The covenant for re-entry can be sued upon by the plaintiffs, the purchasers from the original lessor. The condition is one without naming any assign, and is such as could be taken advantage of by any assign. See Greenaway v. Hart (1), which shows that a condition which does not point to entry being reserved to the person to whom the rent is reserved, is valid. The Court there held that the rent, although reserved to the lessor's heirs and assigns, should go to the person who was entitled to the reversion—placing therefore on the covenant the same construction as if the words "heirs and assigns" had been omitted. It could never have been the intention that, if Gungapersaud died, the rent was not to be payable at all. The reservation of rent shows that it is payable to the person entitled to the reversion. The forfeiture here took place on the 15th November, 1885. A person may perform a condition although he is not the person named. See s. 325, Coke on Littleton, p. 205 (b). The effect of the Statute 32, Hen. VIII, Cap. 34, is to transpose the assignee in the place of the assignor, and to give him all the rights which the assignor would have had.

Isteev v. Stonely (2) is in point. Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, although not applying as the lease is prior to the Act, shows what the law now is.

The Official Liquidator, it is said, is only a servant, but the cases of In re Paraguessa Steam Tramroad Co. (3) and Grand Trunk Railway, Official Manager of v. Brodie (4), show that the Official Liquidator is responsible for costs and rent, although he may be entitled to an indemnity from the Company. If he is [180] a servant, and he appears, he is liable—see Cole on Ejectment, 124.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Kennedy, after proving that the conveyance of the 9th August, 1878, was executed by one Mohesh Doss, tendered a power-of-attorney authorizing Mohesh Doss to sign for the vendor, and submitted that, under ss. 3 and 57 of the Evidence Act, it was not necessary to prove the power as it had been registered, the

This was objected to by Mr. Pugh, but the Court after argument admitted the power.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. O'Kinealy for the Company and the Official Liquidator.

Mr. Pugh.—The plaintiffs have sued Brown for the whole rent and the Liquidator for use and occupation; this cannot be done, neither are they entitled to take advantage of the power of re-entry given to Gungapersaud. The covenant for re-entry does not run with the reversion; previous to the Statute of Henry VIII, it did not run with the reversion even if the assigns were named. I may take it, the covenant runs with the land and not with the reversion—see Comyn's Digest title "Condition," p. 129; Spencer's Case (1). The Statute of Henry does not bear out the contention of the other side. It only applies to leases under seal, and to such as contain the word "assigns." It applies to leases made between the lessor, his heirs and successors, and the grantee, his executors and assigns. The word "successor" includes "assigns." There are therefore two conditions under which the Act applies: (a) The lease must be under seal; (b) the word "assigns" must be used; as to the first of these conditions—see Smith v. Eggington (2). The present lease is under seal, and the first condition has been complied with but the preamble to the Statute equally limits the words of the Statute to leases containing the word "assigns," and that condition has not been complied with. As to what persons are assigns [181] within the meaning of the Statute see Spencer's Case (3); Greenaway v. Hart (4).

[Trevelyian, J.—In the present case rent is only payable to Gungapersaud.] Yes, but rent comes under another category—see William Saunders, 248 (note a.)

Suing upon the contract the plaintiffs cannot re-enter; their object is not to get the rent, but to break up the lease. Non-payment of rent does not work a forfeiture; until the lessor takes steps to demand rent there can be no forfeiture. Supposing they were entitled to the benefit of the covenant for re-entry, they should have made a formal demand for rent according to law. See Duppa v. Mayo (5); Wheeldon v. Paul (6); Hill v. Kempshall (7).

The lease is not void but voidable—see Roberts v. Davey (8); Davenport v. The Queen (9). Then as regards waiver, a subsequent demand for rent is a waiver of the forfeiture; and they are out of Court as regards ejectment, as in the third para of their plaint they claim rent up to the time of the filing of the suit, and they also claim it under the lease—see Dendy v. Nicholl (10).

Mr. Kennedy, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

Trevelyian, J.—The main object of this suit is to obtain possession of the premises in which the business of T. F. Brown and Company, Limited, was generally carried on. At the date of the institution of this suit those premises were in the possession of the Official Liquidator of that Company.

On the 16th of December, 1874, Gungapersaud the then owner of the premises, leased them to Mr. T. F. Brown, who is a defendant in this case, for a term of 15 years, commencing on the 1st of January 1875 at a monthly rent of Rs. 210.

By a subsequent verbal agreement Mr. Brown undertook to pay an additional rent of Rs. 2 a month.

On the 9th of August 1878 Gungapersaud conveyed to Gobind Chunder Koondoo and the plaintiff Kristo Nath Koondoo, their [182] heirs, representatives and assigns all his interest in the property in question.

Mr. Brown then paid the rent to these two Koondooes. On the 13th of April, 1879, Gobind Chunder Koondoo died leaving four sons who are the plaintiffs in this suit. Mr. Brown then paid the rent to Kristo Nath Koondoo and the sons of Gobind Chunder Koondoo.

In April, 1882, Mr. Brown formed his business into a limited company, but the plaintiffs recognized the company as their tenants.

No rent since that, which fell due on the 15th of September, 1885, has been paid.

The plaintiffs now claim possession of the premises under the proviso for re-entry contained in the lease. They also claim rent from the defendant Brown, and damages for use and occupation against the defendant Cowie, who is the Official Liquidator. The issues raised by Counsel were as follows:

1. Are the plaintiffs entitled to take advantage of the proviso for re-entry contained in the lease?
2. Has the tenancy of T. F. Brown under the lease been determined, and if so, at what time, and by what means?
3. Whether, if the lease was in fact determined, forfeiture was not waived?
4. Did Mr. Cowie enter into possession otherwise than as Official Liquidator of the Company?

On the first issue I think that I must find in favour of the plaintiffs. The proviso for re-entry contained in the lease is as follows: ‘Provided also and in addition to the remedy by distress lastly herein reserved to the said Gungapersaud, it is hereby agreed that if the said monthly rent hereby reserved, or any part thereof, shall not be paid on the days and times and in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, or if any of the covenants and agreements herein contained on the lessee’s part shall not be by him well and truly observed, performed and kept according to the true intent and meaning of these presents, then and thenceforth it shall be lawful for the said Gungapersaud into and upon the said message and premises or any part thereof in the name of the whole to re-enter, and the same to have [183] again, re-possess and enjoy as if this lease had never been made or executed, anything herein contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.’

It is contended that Gungapersaud alone could take advantage of this provision, and that his heirs, representatives and assigns, as they are not named, cannot exercise any power of re-entry.

The question turns upon the terms of Statute 32, Henry VIII, Cap. 34. It is not an easy one, but after giving to it a great deal of consideration it seems to me that, although the power of re-entry is reserved only to Gungapersaud by the lease, his heirs and assigns can take advantage of such a condition. I think there is no doubt that the words of the operative part of the Statute are wide enough to cover the present case. There is no doubt also that the words of the preamble are limited to the case where the deed gave the remedy to the heirs and assigns.

It is almost impossible to deduce from the cases any very clear rule as to how far a preamble cuts down a Statute, but I think the tendency of the cases is not given effect to the preamble unless it be quite clear that the Legislature can have only had in contemplation the particular mischief to which the preamble relates, and the words of the operative part are ambiguous. In many cases it has been held that the remedy provided in the Statute has been intended to be more extensive than was necessary to get rid of the mischief to which the preamble relates.

Mr. Pugh relies on the authority of certain cases which have held that this Statute applies only to leases under seal, and he contends that the operative portion of this Statute must be confined entirely to the cases mentioned in the preamble. In those cases, and in others to which I have referred, the question seems to have been taken as settled and to have been decided without argument. I take it that the original reason for this decision must have been that, at the time of the Statute, the law required the leases referred to in the preamble of the Statute to be under seal. If this be so, these cases are of no assistance to me in the present question.

Unless I see any good reason to the contrary I ought to give full effect to the operative part of the Statute.

[184] The plaintiffs are, I think, under the Statute, entitled to the benefits of the proviso for re-entry. The next question is as to the forfeiture.

In order that there may be a forfeiture, there must, under the authorities, be a demand of the rent on the last day and not on any other day before or afterwards. I have looked carefully through the evidence and cannot find that there is any evidence sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the law. The evidence is this: Mr. Brown says: "The Liquidator did not pay the rent, and they applied to me for rent. They received cheques all along from the Company for the rent. He did not pay and I have paid no rent since." He afterwards says: "Subsequently they refused to receive rent from the Liquidator."

Mothur Nath Sircar, the head gomastah of the plaintiffs, says:

"I did not go there after January to demand rent. Bills are usually made out at the end of every month. The bills were made out after the month of January, but bills were made out in August. I drew the bills for September, October, November, and December at Rs. 212 a month. I did not make out any other bills because we did not get any money. We don't get money without making out bills." This is the whole evidence on the subject. It shows, I think, a demand of rent for each month up to and including December. As by a subsequent demand of rent the breaches on account of the preceding month were waived, the only question is whether there was such a demand of December's rent as to work a forfeiture. I do not think there is any evidence from which I can hold that the requirements of the law have been fulfilled. I must therefore decide the second issue against the plaintiffs, and must dismiss the suit with costs on scale No. 2 as against the defendants other than Mr. Brown; there must be a decree against Mr. Brown for six months' rent at Rs. 212 per month, i.e., for Rs. 1,272.

[185] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Rutnessur Sein and Others (Decree-holders) v. Jusoda and Another (Judgment-debtors).* [6th December, 1886.]

Execution of decree—Decree on Mortgage Bond—Costs against judgment-debtors personally.

Certain plaintiffs were the holders of the following decree obtained on a mortgage bond: "It is ordered that the defendants shall pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 2,550 and costs Rs. 312, total Rs. 2,862, within two months from the date of the signing of the decree; interest will run on the said amount at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum up to realization. If the defendants do not pay the amount within the time prescribed, they will lose their right of redeeming the property mortgaged, and possession thereof will be given to the plaintiffs."

On the judgment-debtors making default the decree-holders applied for execution, the Subordinate Judge directed execution to issue, but held that execution could not be had for costs under the terms of the decree; and this order was upheld by the District Judge on appeal.

Held, that the decree-holders were entitled to their costs of the suit from the judgment-debtors personally, or from properties belonging to the judgment-debtors other than those mortgaged.

In a suit brought for foreclosure on a mortgage by conditional sale, the plaintiff obtained the following decree: "It is ordered that the defendants shall pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 2,550 claimed and costs Rs. 312, total Rs. 2,862, within two months from the date of the signing of the decree. Interest will run on the said amount at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum up to realization. If the defendants do not pay the amount within the time prescribed, they will lose their right of redeeming the property mortgaged, and possession thereof will be given to the plaintiffs."

The defendants, judgment-debtors, made default in making the payment directed, and the decree-holders then applied that [186] the mortgage might be foreclosed; and a final decree for foreclosure was passed. Upon the plaintiffs, decree-holders, applying to be put into possession of the property, the question arose as to whether they were entitled to the costs as well as to possession of the land. The Subordinate Judge held that execution could not be had for costs under the terms of the decree; and this order was upheld by the District Judge on appeal.

On appeal by the plaintiffs, decree-holders, to the High Court—Mr. Bell and Babu Hari Mohun Chuckerbutty appeared for the appellants.

Babu Guru Das Banerji, for the respondents.

Mr. Bell contended that the decree for costs was a personal decree against the defendants, quite independent of the debt of Rs. 2,550 secured by the mortgage. The Transfer of Property Act had altered the procedure.

* Appeal from Order No. 342 of 1886, against the order of W. H. Page, Esq., Judge of Dacca, dated the 3rd of June, 1886, affirming the order of Baboo Moti Lal Sirkar, Subordinate Judge of that District dated the 26th of November, 1885.

with regard to suits on conditional sales, but it had made no alteration with regard to the costs of the suit. Under the former procedure a notice of foreclosure was first served, and if the money due was not paid within the year, the mortgagor then brought a suit for possession, and if successful he received his costs as a matter of course. Section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act authorizes the Court to award costs of suit, and these costs are a personal decree against the debtor. The Court cannot give a personal decree for the money lent, because if the money is not paid the mortgagor has to take the mortgaged property in satisfaction of his debt, but the debt only is discharged, not the costs of the suit, which the mortgagor has been compelled to incur owing to the mortgagor's default.

Dr. Guru Das Banerji, for the respondents contended that the decree merely said that, if the decreal money was not paid, the debtors would lose their right of redeeming the property mortgaged, and possession could be given to the plaintiffs, but it contained no provision as to costs. This was the interpretation put upon the decree by the Judge who had originally passed it. It must be assumed that he knew the meaning of his own decree, and he says that costs were not awarded. The decree is for a total sum of Rs. 2,862, which comprises principal and interest and costs; and the costs must be considered as a charge upon [187] the property equally with the mortgage debt; and if the debtor is not personally liable for the mortgage debt, he is not personally liable for the costs, which are included in the decree with the original debt.

Mr. Bell was not called upon to reply.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.).

JUDGMENTS.

Petheram, C.J.—I think that this appeal must be allowed.

This is an action to recover certain mortgage money, and the only question in the case is whether the plaintiffs, in addition to recovering the mortgage money from the property, are entitled to recover the costs of the suit from the debtors personally, that is to say, whether they can get execution against any other property of theirs after the mortgage property has been exhausted. In my opinion the only question is, whether the decree, as given by the Judge who tried the case, intended to give the costs against the debtors personally, because I am clearly of opinion that, under s. 220 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Judge had jurisdiction to decree the costs against the debtors personally if he thought fit to do so. Therefore, as I said before, the question is, whether upon a construction of the decree which was made by him we are to hold that he has decreed the costs against the debtors personally.

I think that he has. The decree proceeds to assess the amount which was due for principal and interest, and the amount due for costs, and then to make an order that the mortgagor shall pay the whole, that is to say, the debt and costs. By the terms of the security it is admitted that the Judge had no right under that security to give judgment against the debtors personally for the amount of the principal and interest, but by virtue of s. 220 he had jurisdiction to give judgment against them personally for the cost. Reading the decree as a whole it declares, as I said before, that this man shall pay the whole of both sums of money. A declaration that he shall pay the whole means that he shall pay it out of any property of his; the liability to pay is not limited to any particular property.

The only question is, having decided that this is an order [188] against the debtors to pay the whole, whether such an order is capable of execution. Now, it may be that, so far as the principal and interest are concerned, if it were sought to put the decree in execution to recover those sums against the debtor personally, there might be an answer, because, looking to the terms of the mortgage security, the property and not the individual was made liable; but this is not an application to execute the decree for the mortgage money and interest, but for the costs only; and inasmuch as the decree stands for the whole sum, and as the legal difficulty does not exist to bar execution for the costs which would exist with reference to the mortgage money and the interest, because the Judge had power under s. 220 of the Code of Civil Procedure to direct that the defendants should pay this money personally, I see no reason why the plaintiffs should not be allowed to execute the decree for this sum. The Judge has refused to allow them to execute the decree for this sum. I think that he is wrong, and therefore this appeal must be allowed, and the plaintiffs, the mortgagees, must be allowed to execute their decree for costs amounting to Rs. 312 against the defendants personally or against any other property of theirs.

The appellants will have their costs in all the Courts.

BEVERLEY, J.—In addition to what has fallen from my lord the Chief Justice, I wish to add that, in my opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to execute their decree for costs under s. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act. I think we must take it that the decree in this case was amongst other things, a decree for costs, the exact sum being named, and the real question before us is, whether the personal liability to pay those costs is discharged by the decree absolute for possession of the property. Now the 4th clause of s. 87 says, that the foreclosure will only discharge the debt secured by the mortgage, and therefore it seems to me it was not intended that the foreclosure should discharge the decree for costs.

I accordingly concur in allowing this appeal.

T. A. P.

Appeal allowed.

[189] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Porter.

THE SHAMNUGGER JUTE FACTORY CO., LD., AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. RAM NARAIN CHATTERJEE AND OTHERS.

Company—Trading by a Company under its Memorandum of Association—Memorandum of Association—Ultra Vires—Mandatory injunctions, when to be granted—Judicial discretion—Injunction—Damages.

The doctrine that a Company can do nothing which is not expressly or impliedly warranted by its memorandum of Association, or other instrument of incorporation, must be reasonably understood and applied. A Company, therefore, in carrying on the trade for which it is constituted, and in whatever may be fairly regarded as incidental to, or consequential upon, that trade, is free to enter into any transaction not expressly prohibited by its Memorandum of Association.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1164 of 1885, against the decree of J. P. Grant, Esq., District Judge of Hooghly, dated 20th April, 1885, reversing the decree of Baboo Kristo Mominhun Mookerjee, Third Sub-Judge of that district, dated the 29th March, 1884.

In granting or withholding an injunction, a Court should exercise a judicial discretion, and should weigh the amount of substantial mischief done or threatened to the plaintiff, and compare it with that which the injunction, if granted, would inflict upon the defendant.

There is no such broad proposition as that one co-owner is entitled to an injunction restraining another co-owner from exceeding his rights, absolutely, and without reference to the amount of damage to be sustained by the one side or the other from the granting or withholding of the injunction.

Cas. 642.]

This was a suit brought by the Shamnagger Jute Factory Company, Limited (a joint stock company registered in Scotland, under 25 and 26 Vict., c. 89), and Raja Gopal Bose, against Ram Narain Chatterjee, James Luke and others, for a declaration as to their title to certain lands on the right bank of the river Hooghly; and for an injunction restraining the defendants from building a jute factory on these lands, which were, as the plaintiff Company alleged, agricultural and horticultural.

The Memorandum of Association stated the objects of the Company to be as follows:—

"The acquiring by purchase, lease, or otherwise, of such lands and hereditaments, including railways in India and elsewhere, as may be required for the objects herein appearing or any of them."

[190] "The erection, pulling down, rebuilding, fitting up, making, maintaining and working of factories, warehouses, stores, buildings, railways, wharves, jetties, tramways and machinery, and apparatus whatsoever, on any part of the lands and hereditaments so purchased or otherwise acquired as aforesaid for carrying on the business of the Company."

"The carrying on in all branches of the trade or business of cultivators and dealers in jute, cotton, flax, hemp and other similar materials of a vegetable, fibrous and textile substance and their products, including their cultivation, transmission, purchase, preparation, pressing, cleaning, manufacturing, dyeing, spinning, weaving, or otherwise operating upon them, and the sale or other disposal of the same, either in a raw, manufactured, or other state, in India or elsewhere, and the carrying on of any trades or business of a like nature, and of general, mercantile, or other business on commission or otherwise, and of trade or business in any manner collateral, incident to, or connected with any of the trades or businesses aforesaid."

"The building, leasing, selling, chartering and navigating of steamships, sailing vessels, boats and other crafts."

"The selling, leasing, under-letting, sub-letting, charging, mortgaging, or otherwise dealing with and disposing of all or any lands and hereditaments, buildings, sites for buildings, machinery and works erected and executed, or in process of completion by the Company or their agents on such terms as the Company may think fit."

"The execution of all such additional or extended objects and purposes as the Company may, from time to time, by special resolution, determine and resolve upon, and the doing of all such other things as are collateral incidental, or conductive to the attainment of the above objects or such additional objects or purposes."

On the 20th of July, 1883, the plaintiff-Company obtained, in the name of a servant, one Raja Gopal Bose, a putni pottah from the defendant, Raj Narain Rai, purporting to give a two-and-a-half-anna share of a fourteen-anna share in mouzah Telinipara and another share in mouza Digrah, the lease containing the words "the cultivable and waste land and churs you shall take possession of." They also on the 31st of July, 1883, obtained from the [191] defendant No. 3, one Denobundhu Mukerji, a putni lease of similar shares in mouzahs Telinipara and Digrah; this lease did not, however, mention any chur lands, but did make mention of the general words "alluvion and diluvion." The plaintiff-Company thus, on the face of the pottahs, became putniders of an undivided five-anna share of a fourteen-anna share in mouzah Telinipara, with a share in mouzah Digrah. The remaining shares in the fourteen annas of Telinipara remained in the defendants in the following proportion: Defendant No. 5, Pearly Mohun Mukerjee, the putni-holder of a five-anna share; the defendants Nos. 6, 7 and 8 being the zamindars of the remaining six annas share. Subsequently to the dates of the plaintiff-Company's pottahs, defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 purchased the zamindari interest in the shares covered by these pottahs.

On the 30th of September, 1883, and 4th of November, 1883, defendants Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 granted to James Luke a mokurari pottah over 119 bighas of the lands in mouzahs Digrah and Telinipara, on the chur lands of the latter of which James Luke commenced to build a jute mill. In consequence of this course taken by the defendants, the plaintiff-Company brought a suit to have their title to the lands declared, and for an injunction restraining the building of the jute mill, having, before the defendants commenced to build, given formal notice to them that they objected to their building on the lands.

The defendants alleged that the plaintiff-Company had no right to the chur lands of Telinipara, their putni leases relating merely to the usli lands of Telinipara and Digrah; that James Luke had obtained a mokurari lease, which included therein the chur lands; that the object of the plaintiff-Company in instituting the suit was to obstruct and delay as long as possible the establishment of a rival mill on the lands.

The case was heard by the Third Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, who granted the injunction prayed for. On appeal the District Judge held that the taking of the putni leases was ultra vires on the part of the Company under their Memorandum of Association, and set aside the order for an injunction, but awarded money damages to the plaintiffs. Against that decree the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

[192] The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and Mr. Handley (instructed by Messrs. Morgan & Co.) for the appellants.

Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Bell, for the respondent Peari Mohun Mookerjee.

Mr. Gasper, for the respondent Luke.

Baboo Biprodas Mukerji and Baboo Pran Nath Pandit, for the other respondents.

The Advocate-General.—The chief questions arising in the appeal are:

1. Whether the chur lands, on which Luke had commenced to build, formed part of the lands included in the plaintiff-Company's putni leases?
Whether the taking by the plaintiff-Company of these putni leases was ultra vires on the part of the plaintiff-Company, as being beyond the scope of their Memorandum of Association?

Whether, under the circumstances, the acts which the defendant Luke contemplated doing, and has now done, amounted to a wrong, giving a right of action to the plaintiff-Company?

Whether a mandatory injunction should issue, or whether the plaintiff should be left to the remedy in the form of damages given them by the Court below, or to claim for partition?

The words of the leases clearly included the chur lands; the pottah would have been useless to the plaintiffs if the chur lands had not been included. The plaintiffs' putni gave them not only a right to collect rent but to possession where there were no ryots.

As to the second point, viz., ultra vires, the case of Pudsey Coal Gas Co. v. Corporation of Bradford (1) shows that no outsider could call in question a transaction by a public Company on the ground of ultra vires, even if he had sustained damage or loss by the transaction; and the fact of the defendants being landlords did not make them any the less strangers—The Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche (2).

[Wilson, J.—That was a case of contract; and it was decided that what was done was ultra vires of the Company, and not merely of the Directors.] The Attorney-General v. G. E. Railway. [1931] Co. (9) lays down that an act is not ultra vires unless prohibited. This case was affirmed on appeal (4). It is admitted that, if a rival mill is established, some damage will result—we say to the extent of Rs. 50,000 a month for the first three or four months. I say no stranger has a right to question the Company's powers—see also London and N. W. Railway Co. v. Price (5). In our case possession was taken of the land leased, and therefore I submit (a) that the question does not arise in the case, and (b) if it does, the taking of the lands was incidental to the object of the undertaking.

[Wilson, J.—I would refer you to the case of Mulliner v. Midland Railway Co. (6), which apparently lays down that the Company could not part with their land, and that a stranger could interfere to prevent them.] I distinguish that case by saying that nothing passed in that case.

As regards transactions outside a Company's proper enterprise, I would refer to In re the Port Canning Land Investment Reclamation Company (7) and the case of Ingraham v. Speed (8) cited in Brice on Ultra Vires, p. 197, which latter case shows that railways cannot acquire land to prevent competition, but that is not the present case. [Wilson, J.—In the case before Phear, J., suppose the rice had been stolen; could no one have been prosecuted for it? It seems to be the same with land assuming it was improperly acquired.] As to what are transactions incidental to the main business of a Company, see Brice, p. 191.

Raja Gopal had a good title even if the factory had not. If the Company could not take a lease through Raja Gopal, then Raja Gopal holds freed from the trust. Partition would be no relief at all. [Wilson, J.—Can a putnidar claim partition?] No he cannot; and the Board of Revenue have just decided that there can be no partition of this very estate. [Wilson, J.—As to compensation; if compensation was granted the plaintiffs would then be entitled to a share in the mill.] As to whether we are entitled to an injunction or damages see Krekh v. Burrell (1), [195] also Smith v. Smith (2). When the lower Court discharged the rule for a temporary injunction, the defendant was warned that he would go on with the work at his own risk. As to one co-owner's power to forbid any thing being done to the common property altering its nature without consent, see Jankee Singh v. Bukhorree Singh (3), which case was confirmed in Indurdeonarain Singh v. Toolseenarain Singh (4); see also Gurudas Dhur v. Bijoy Gовind Bural (5); Holloway v. Mahomed Ali (6). There is a case which says that, when no injury has been done by such change, the Courts will not interfere; see Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (7). Here injury has been done, but I submit Sir Barnes Peacock was wrong, for an injunction is founded on a legal right. [Wilson, J.—Surely Sir Barnes Peacock's judgment means that there was no injury, and that the maxim "de minimis non curat lex" applies.] See also Sceopersad Singh v. Leela Singh (8); Rajendro Lall Gossami v. Shama Churn Lahorî (9); Stalkart v. Gopal Panday (10).

Mr. Gasper, for the respondent Luke.—The plaintiffs sue as putnidars and not as mill owners; the land has not been damaged by our buildings; it is better for them to collect and recover rent from a mill owner than from a number of ryots. An injunction should not be granted unless injury is proved; see Noyma Misser v. Rupikun (11); Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (7); Massim Mollah v. Panjoo Ghormanee (12); Nicholl v. Tarinee Churn Bose (13); Mohima Chunder Ghose v. Madhub Chunder Nag (14); Kerr on Injunctions, p. 51. Partition is their remedy—see Gokool Kishen Sen v. Issun Chunder Roy (15).

Mr. Woodroffe, for the respondent Peari Mohun Mookerjee.—The plaintiffs are in no way injured by the mill, nor is their position altered. Section 54 of the Specific Relief Act [195] lays down the law as to when perpetual injunctions may be granted. There is a distinction between legal and equitable waste. Between co-owners the Courts will only interfere in cases of equitable waste, and then only when no other remedy is adequate. In cases of trespass no injunction will be granted, unless the trespass is done in execution of a right. There can be no trespass in respect of co-owners, as they have proprietary rights in the whole of the land—Hole v. Thomas (16); and the cases cited on pp. 306 and 307 of Collett's Specific Relief Act; also Smallman v. Onions (17); Goodwyn v. Spray (18); Jacob v. Seward (19); Balavantrav Ose v. Ganpatrav Jadhav (20); also Job v. Potton (21); Bailey v. Hobson (22). All co-sharers may do what they like with their own, subject to the maxim "sic utere tuo ut alienum non lades." The plaintiffs have a solvent tenant in Luke, and he is ready to pay rent. Some material injury must be shown before an injunction will issue—Curriers Co. v. Corbett (23); Durrell v. Pritchard (24); Doherty v. Allman (25); Isenberg v. E. I. House Estate Co. (26); Kerr on Injunction, 51. As to the considerations

JUDGMENT.

[196] The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Porter, JJ.) (omitting a statement of the facts) after deciding that the church lands did form part of the lands included the plaintiff-Company's putni leases, ran as follows:

The next question argued was whether the taking of these putni leases was ultra vires on the part of the plaintiff-Company. The District Judge has answered this question in the affirmative (here followed certain passages from the judgment of the District Judge). The learned District Judge has not found in express terms for what purpose the pottas were taken; but we think what he intended to find appears with sufficient clearness. If we rightly understand the District Judge, what he finds is that the Company, being largely dependent for the work of its mill upon the supply of labour drawn from the other side of the river and from the neighbourhood of the lands in question, took these putnis in order to prevent, if they could, the erection of a rival mill upon these lands, which would naturally cut off their labour-supply. We have to say whether this transaction was ultra vires on the part of the Company (here followed the objects for which the Company was formed as set out in the Memorandum of Association).

The general principles of law applicable to this question were not disputed. They are authoritatively laid down by the House of Lords in Ashbury Railway Carriage & Iron Co. v. Riche (5) and Attorney-General v. Great Eastern Railway Company (7). For the present purpose we think the result may be sufficiently stated by saying that the powers of a Company depend upon its Memorandum of Association or other instrument of incorporation, and it can do nothing which that document does not warrant expressly or impliedly. A Company, therefore, formed to carry on one trade cannot engage in another. But, on the other hand, this doctrine must be reasonably understood and applied. And a Company, in carrying on the trade for which it is constituted, and in "whatever may be fairly regarded as incidental to, or consequential upon, that trade," is free to enter into any transaction not expressly prohibited.

In the present case we take the finding to be that the Company [197] took the putnis, not for the purpose of engaging in some new business, but for the purpose of endeavouring to secure the continuance of the supply of labour for its jute business. The maintenance of a supply of labour must, we think, be regarded as incidental to, or consequential upon, the carrying on a manufacture of this nature. It would be a serious thing to lay down that an Assam Tea Company could not import labour or contract for the supply of labour, or take land for dwellings for labourers, or to grow food for them. Could it be said that this Company could not buy land across the river for a landing ghat for its work-people, or to make a road for them to the river bank? Might it not buy land to prevent some one building a wall which would bar the road to the river for the labourers? And it is difficult to see a difference in principle between doing this and buying an interest in land in order to try and prevent the lands being used for a purpose which, if carried out, would practically divert the labour-supply. It is what a prudent man, aiming only at carrying on the business profitably, would try to do, and, if so, can it be said that it is not reasonably incidental to, or consequential upon, the business of the Company? We are unable to agree with the District Judge in thinking that the taking of these putnis was ultra vires on the part of the Company under the Memorandum of Association.

It is unnecessary for us to express an opinion on the further question considered in the Court below, and argued before us, whether the question of ultra vires can be raised in this form and under the circumstances, by persons in the position of the defendants, or whether, even if this purchase were ultra vires, the title of the plaintiff-Company must not be held good as against the defendants, until the transaction be set aside at the instance of some one having a better right to do so than the defendants.

The next question is, whether, under the circumstances, what the defendants contemplated doing, and have now done, amounts to a wrong towards, and gives a right of action to, the plaintiffs. To see what the question is here precisely, it is necessary to see what the facts found are. The case put in the plaint was that the lands in question were agricultural and horticultural. [198] This was denied, and the fourth issue was "what is the nature of the lands in dispute? Are they agricultural or horticultural lands? Can the defendants convert them into building or manufacturing purposes?" The finding of the first Court is at the close of its judgment: "It is in evidence that the chur lands were used by tenants for agricultural and horticultural purposes. This being so, Mr. Luke has legally no right to convert them into building purposes without the consent of the plaintiff-Company, who own an undivided five annas share." Mr. Gasper, one of the learned counsel who argued this case for the defendants, and who appeared also before the District Judge, told us that he urged the District judge to reverse the finding of the first Court as to the land being agricultural or horticultural. The District Judge does not say in terms what his view on this point was. But he mentions the allegations on the one side and the other, and refers to the issues. And then he goes on to state "the question in appeal." The meaning of this, we think, is that he rejects Mr. Gasper's contention on this point, and affirms the finding of the first Court. We take it, therefore, to be found that the lands in question were agricultural or horticultural lands, and there is no doubt that a jute mill has been built upon them. On the other hand, there is a distinct finding by the District Judge that the plaintiffs have sustained no injury. He says: "There is nothing to prevent plaintiffs from continuing to collect their share of the rent, the existence of the mill notwithstanding. Thus they have suffered no injury." And it is obvious that the value of the land has been largely increased.

It was pressed upon us on behalf of the defendants, chiefly on the authority of English cases, that no exercise of rights of ownership by one co-owner is a wrong towards, or gives a right of action to, another co-owner, unless what is done amounts to a destruction of the subject-matter, or an actual eviction of the co-owner, or waste attended by substantial damage. On the other side, it was contended, chiefly on the authority of Indian decisions, that every act of one part owner of land by which he permanently alters the character and condition of the land, as by building upon it, excavating a tank, or changing the nature of the cultivation, is a wrong to the other part owners and gives [199] them a right of action. Had it been necessary to determine what the true rule of law is on this subject in India, we should have had to examine with care the decided cases which bear upon the matter. But it is unnecessary to do so, for this reason. The District Judge has given damages to the plaintiff, and the defendants' counsel elected not to urge their objections to the awarding of damages or to the quantum awarded, if our opinion were against them on the questions already considered.

The remaining question is an important one, whether a mandatory injunction should issue, or whether the plaintiffs should be left to the remedy in the form of damages which has been given to them by the District Judge, or to claim partition. On the part of the plaintiffs it was contended that where a part owner of land permanently alters its character, as by building on it, at any rate where he does so after notice of objection from his co-owners (as the defendants certainly did in this case) an injunction ought to go as a matter of course. It was contended, on the other hand, that in every such case the Courts must exercise a judicial discretion, and particularly must compare the possible injury on the one side and the other, the injury to the plaintiffs if the injunction is refused, and that to the defendants if it is granted. The question is obviously important to the parties to this suit, because if the plaintiffs have the absolute right which they claim, merely by reason of their part ownership and without regard to any other circumstance, they are not bound to give their reasons, but may use their rights as putnidars of Telinipara to protect their interests as owners of the Shammugger Factory on the other side of the river; whereas, if the Court is to exercise a judicial discretion, it can only take into account the injuries they have sustained or may sustain as putnidars of Telinipara. The granting of injunctions is now regulated by ss. 54 and 55 of the Specific Relief Act. But those sections have never been understood as introducing new principles of law into India, but rather as an attempt to express in general terms the rules acted upon by Courts of Equity in England, and long since introduced in this country, not because they were English law, but because they were in accordance with equity and good conscience. It is necessary, therefore, to inquire [200] on what principle the Courts have acted in England and in India.

In England injunctions have been sought for the protection of various kinds of proprietary rights, such as to restrain the infringement of easements, to protect the interests of landlords against their tenants, and of tenants in common against their co-tenants. And the principle is well settled that, in granting or withholding an injunction, the Courts exercise a judicial discretion, and weigh the amount of substantial mischief done or threatened to the plaintiff, and compare it with that which the injunction, if granted, would inflict upon the defendant. The doctrine is very clearly explained in Doherty v. Allman (1). And the fact that the plaintiff

(1) L. K. 3 App. Cas. 709.
has given notice of objection to what is threatened before it has been carried out does not make the injunction a thing of course. This appears from the case just cited, and from Isenberg v. East Indian House Estate Co. (1). English Courts have certainly not shown any special facility in granting injunctions between co-tenants; such injunctions are of very rare occurrence. In this country, as might be expected, questions of this nature arise much more frequently between co-owners than in England, and the decided cases are numerous. We do not think it necessary to examine the whole series of cases in detail. It is enough to say that there are many cases in which an injunction has been granted; and in some cases very general language has been used as to the right of a part owner to restrain his co-owner. It is enough to refer to Jankee Singh v. Bukhooree Singh (2); Inderdeonarain Singh v. Toolseeinarain Singh (3); Gurudas Dhur v. Bijoy Gobind Bural (4); Holloway v. Mahomed Ali (5); Stalkart v. Gopal Panday (6).

But we are not aware of any decision which establishes the broad proposition contended for by the plaintiffs, that one co-owner is entitled to an injunction restraining another co-owner from exceeding his rights, absolutely, and without reference to [201] the amount of damage to be sustained by the one side or the other from the granting or withholding of the injunction. On the other hand, a rule in conformity with the English decisions has been acted upon in a number of cases—Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (7); Dwarkanath Bhooyea v. Gopeenath Bhooyea (8); Sree Chand v. Nim Chand Sahoo (9); Crowdy v. Inder Roy (10); Massim Mollah v. Panjoo Ghoramee (11); Nicholl v. Tarinee Churn Bose (12); Mohima Chander Ghose v. Madhub Chunder Nag (13); Rajendro Lall Gossami v. Shama Churn Lahori (14); Nocury Lall Chuckerbutty v. Bindabun Chunder Chuckerbutty (15).

We think that the granting of an injunction is a matter in the judicial discretion of the Court, and that the District Judge took a correct view of the law applicable to the case. We think also that having regard to the facts of the case, he exercised his discretion rightly in refusing the injunction asked for. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 188—Co-sharers, Suit by.

Section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to such matters as a landlord is, under the Act, authorized or required to do; there is nothing in that Act which requires or authorizes a landlord to sue thereunder for arrears of rent.

One of several joint landlords is competent to sue for the entire rent due from a tenant making his co-sharers parties to the suit.

[202] This was a suit for arrears of rent of thirty-one bighas of paddy and homestead lands held jointly by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under the plaintiff, and two other persons, defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

The plaintiff, on account of the refusal of defendants Nos. 2 and 4 to join with her as plaintiffs in the suit, made them pro-forma defendants bringing the suit for the arrears due to all the co-sharers, and praying for a decree (a) for the entire rent; and (b) for the amount due to her as her share therein, together with costs and damages.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alleged in their written statements that they were unaware that the plaintiff had a right to claim a share of rent from them; that they were unaware whether the plaintiff was a co-proprietor with the pro-forma defendants, or that she had ever been in receipt and enjoyment of the rents jointly with the latter; and submitted that the suit being for fractional shares of rent would not lie under s. 188 of Act VIII of 1885.

The Munsiff held that the suit would not lie, and that the plaintiff should first sue to establish her right as a co-proprietor, as this right had been virtually denied; but that even had this been done, the suit would not lie, there being no agreement, either express or implied, by the defendants to pay the rent in fractional shares; that moreover s. 188 of the Rent Act provided that the joint landlords could not sue separately to recover their rent, but must either sue jointly or through a manager; he therefore dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who held that s. 188 merely laid down that, when persons are joint landlords, any act which they were required or authorised to do under the Tenancy Act must either be done by them acting jointly or acting through a joint manager. But that, as under that Act, a landlord was neither authorised nor required to sue for rent, the suit was not liable to be dismissed under that section. He therefore allowed the appeal.

The defendants appealed to the High Court, making the plaintiff and pro-forma defendants respondents in the appeal.

suit to be registered and summons to be issued on the defendants. N. C. then filed a written statement, alleging that she held the land in suit on behalf of the minor.

Held, that having regard to the orders of the Court and the allegations made in the plaint and written statement, the suit was substantially brought against the minor, and the error of description in the plaint being one of mere form, could not without proof of prejudice invalidate a decree against him in the suit.

Held, also, that the want of a formal order appointing a guardian ad litem was not fatal to the suit, when it appeared on the face of the proceedings that the Court had sanctioned the appointment.

Held, (O’Kinealy, J., dissenting) that the fact that an order appointing a guardian ad litem at the instance of the plaintiff was made ex parte was not necessarily fatal to the suit, unless it could be shown that the minor had in any manner been prejudiced thereby.

Per Mitter, J. (Etheram, C.J., concurring) that, although the matter of the appointment of a guardian ad litem is left to the discretion of the Court, it is always desirable that the appointment at the instance of the plaintiff should not be made, unless the minor, or his friends and relatives in whose care he may be failed to move the Court for that purpose within a reasonable time after receiving notice of the institution of the suit.

[205] Per Prinsep and Wilson, JJ.— No order appointing a guardian ad litem for an infant defendant, on the application of the plaintiff, should be made ex parte, and no such order should be made until the Court is satisfied that the infant has been duly served, and there has been an opportunity for making an application on behalf of the infant.

Per Wilson, J.— Quaere. Whether service on a guardian ad litem is good service under the Code.

Per O’Kinealy, J.—Having regard to the provisions of s. 443 of the Civil Procedure Code, no ex parte order made at the instance of the plaintiff for the appointment of a guardian ad litem is valid, without notice to the minor in the mode prescribed by s. 100, and any decree in the suit under the circumstances is absolutely void as against the minor.

Cas. 317; D., 14 C. 754 (756).]

This case was referred to a Full Bench by Wilson and Ghose, JJ., with the following opinion:—

The point on which we reserved our judgment was this: The description of the second defendant in the plaint is: “Nitobashini Chowdhrai, guardian on behalf of her own minor son Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry.” A written statement was filed by Nitobashini, who, in her verification, described herself as “defendant.” In the body of the written statement she sets out the title of the minor and speaks of herself as owning and holding possession on behalf of the minor. No objection was raised to this mode of suing in the first Court or in the lower appellate Court, and a decree has been made in the plaintiff’s favour. Suresh Chunder, the minor, has appealed, and the eleventh ground of appeal is that, he not having been made a party in the proper form, and no order having been recorded appointing his mother guardian ad litem, the suit against him ought to have been dismissed.

We find that the suit was throughout regarded by the Court, and by all those who took part in it, as one against the minor, and that the Court sanctioned the representation of the minor by his mother as guardian ad litem, though no order was drawn up on the subject.

The cases which deal with the question how far the omission to comply with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as to the form in which infants are to sue and be sued, vitiates the suit, when the objection is raised in appeal, seem to us to be scarcely reconcileable.
We refer particularly to the following [206] cases—Mrinamoyi Dabi
v. Jogadishuri Dabi (1); Russick Das Bairagy v. Preo Nath Misser (2); Durga Churn Shaha v. Nilmoni Das (3); Guru Churn Chuckerbutty v. Kali
Kishen Tagore (4); Jogi Singh v. Kunj Behari Singh (5); Alim Baksh
Fakir v. Jalalo Bibi (6); Komul Chunder Sen v. Surbessur Doss Gupto
(7); Greesh Chunder Mukerjee v. Miller (8); Aukhil Chunder v. Tripura Sooderee (9); Kedar Nath v. Dabi Din (10).

As similar questions frequently arise, we think it well to refer to a Full Bench the question whether under the circumstances the decree ought to be set aside as against the appellant on either of the grounds mentioned in his eleventh ground of appeal.

The case then came up before the Full Bench.
Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the appellant.—The minor is not a party to the suit, and consequently is not bound by the decision. The frame of the suit being bad, the final decision is bad. The minor must be properly on the record as party, otherwise he will not be bound. The guardian must be legally appointed. In the case of a minor plaintiff the Court is not required to appoint a guardian. This is the case of a defendant. No appointment was made.

The following authorities were cited: Durga Pershad v. Keshopershad
Singh (11); Guru Churn Chuckerbutty v. Kali Kishen Tagore (4); Jungee
Lall v. Sham Lal Misser (12); Russick Das Bairagy v. Preo Nath Misser (2); Gourah Kocri v. Gujadhr Pershad (13).

Mr. Woodroff (with him Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen) for the respondent.—The minor is either a party to the suit or he is not. If he is then this reference is unnecessary; if he is not a party to the suit, he is not entitled to be heard. Having regard to s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code, the objection is not tenable [207] in appeal. The present case is distinguishable from Durga Churn Shaha v. Nilmoni Das (3); here the Court gave direction in the filing of the plaint that the provisions of ss. 453 and 456 should at once be complied with. Having proceeded in the suit throughout it is not open to the minor to impugn the decree at this stage.

The following authorities were cited: Sherafutoollah Chowdhry v.
Abedoonissa Bibee (14); Komul Chunder Sen v. Surbessur Doss Gupto (7); Janki v. Dhurm Chaud (15); Greesh Chunder Mookerjee v. Miller (8).

The opinions of the Full Bench were as follows:

OPINIONS.

MITTER, J.—The plaintiff filed the plaint in this suit on the 13th May, 1885, to recover possession of 4 hals, 1 kader, 4 joists and 3 reks of land appertaining to pottahs Nos. 36891 and 161, which he purchased in execution of a decree as the property of one Sham Pershad. The suit was brought against Tarini, defendant No. 1, and three other persons.
The second defendant is described in the plaint as Nitobashini Chowdhrain, guardian on behalf of her minor son, Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry.

(9) 22 W. R. 525. (10) 4 A. 165. (11) 8 C. 656. (12) 20 W. R. 122.
The plaintiff alleged that defendant No. 1 and the husband of Nitobashini Chowdhrain and father of the minor Suresh Chunder, viz., Durga Churn, dispossessed him. All the defendants are stated in the plaintiff as living in commensality, i.e., are members of a joint family. On the 14th May the Subordinate Judge directed the plaintiff to produce within one day an affidavit to the effect that the mother of the minor defendant is his guardian. He, the Subordinate Judge, evidently understood from the plaintiff that the defendant No. 2 was the minor Suresh and not his mother Nitobashini, and the pleader who presented the plaintiff was evidently also of the same view. On the plaintiff making an application with the required affidavit, the Court on the 15th May passed the following order:—

The plaintiff having with an application produced the affidavit regarding the minor defendant being under the guardianship of his mother, and the said papers being brought up with the plaint, it is ordered that the suit be registered [208] and the summons be issued upon the defendants, &c., &c. The defendants, other than the defendant No. 2, filed a written statement disclaiming their connection with the land in suit and denying having dispossessed the plaintiff. Nitobashini Chowdhrain filed a written statement alleging that a portion of the land in suit appertained to pottah No. 165, and had been the property of her co-wife; that on her death it devolved upon her husband under the law of inheritance, and that since the death of her husband she has been in possession of it "on behalf of the minor defendant."

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a portion of the land claimed, finding that it appertains to the plaintiff's estate and not to the defendants' estate. The minor Suresh Chunder, represented by his mother as guardian, has preferred this second appeal.

The question that has been referred to us is, whether, under the circumstances, the decree ought to be set aside as against the appellant on either of the grounds mentioned in his eleventh ground of appeal. That ground is as follows:—

"That the minor Suresh Chunder Chowdhry not being made a defendant in proper form, and no order having been recorded by the Court appointing his mother Nitobashini Chowdhrain guardian ad litem, the suit ought to have been dismissed."

As to the first branch of this ground, it appears to me that the suit was substantially brought against the minor. This appears from the orders of the Court referred to above and from the allegations made in the plaint and the written statement. The dispossession, it is alleged in the plaint, was by defendant No. 1, and the father of the appellant, and I gather from the judgment of the lower Courts that evidence was adduced to the effect that the father of the appellant was in possession of the disputed land. On the death of the father of the appellant, the appellant, and not his mother, would represent the interest of the deceased person in the property in dispute. In the written statement filed by Nitobashini it was claimed as the property of the minor. An issue was framed with reference to the question of title set up respectively by the plaintiff and Nitobashini [209] Chowdhain on behalf of the minor appellant, and the District Judge has found that issue in favour of the plaintiff. Under these circumstances I agree with the learned Judges who have referred the case, "that the suit was throughout regarded by the Court and by all those who took part in it as one against the minor." That being so, the appellant ought not, in my opinion, to succeed on the ground that there was merely an error of form in describing him as defendant when he has not been prejudiced by that error. Section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code says that no decree shall be reversed on account of an error of this description.

The second branch of the eleventh ground of appeal is that no order was recorded by the lower Court appointing Nitobashini Chrowdhrain as guardian ad litem of the appellant. Now it seems to me that the Court, on the affidavit of the plaintiff being filed, applied its mind to the question whether the mother was a fit person to act as guardian ad litem, and I agree with the learned Judges who have referred this case, that it "sanctioned the representation of the minor by his mother as guardian ad litem, though no order was drawn up on the subject." If we are satisfied that the Court applied its mind to the consideration of the question of the representation of the minor, the mere omission to record a formal order sanctioning the representation by a particular person would not be a valid ground to reverse a decree; it would be a defect coming within the purview of s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code already referred to.

I have said all that is necessary to answer the question referred to us. But another question has been argued before us. It is this, whether the appointment by the Court of the mother of the appellant as his guardian without any notice to him is void, and whether on the ground of this error the decree against the minor is liable to be reversed. The answer to this question will mainly depend upon the examination of the provisions of Chapter XXXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is, the chapter dealing with the subject of suits by and against minors. I find that the provisions of this chapter have been taken from the rules framed by this Court, regulating the practice in its Original Side on the 10th June 1874, and published in the [210] Calcutta Gazette of 1874, page 1008. Of the rules adopted by this Court on that date, Nos. 8 to 35 bear upon this subject.

The first section of the Chapter, viz:—

Rule No. 24 has not been taken at all.

Section 456, as it stood in the Code of 1877, was taken from Rule No. 25. In the Code of 1877, the words "or by the plaintiff" to be now found in the section in question, which were added to it in 1882, were omitted.

Section 457 has been taken from Rule No. 26.
The Rules Nos. 27 and 28 were not incorporated in the Act. These rules are as follows:

"27. If no application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem be made on behalf of a defendant [or respondent to any application] who is an infant [or a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition], the plaintiff, or applicant, may, if default be made by the defendant [or respondent] in appearing to the suit, or answering the application, apply by summons at chambers that a guardian ad litem may be appointed, and the Judge on being satisfied that such defendant [or respondent] is an infant [or a person of weak or unsound mind not so proved by inquisition], so that he is unable of himself to protect his interests in the suit, or application, may assign a guardian of such defendant [or respondent] by whom he may appear to and defend such suit, or answer such application."

"28. No such order is to be made, unless it appears to the Judge, on the hearing of the application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, that a copy of the summons was duly served, and that notice of such application was, after the time within which the defendant or respondent was required to appear or answer, and at least four clear days before the hearing of such application, served upon the person with whom or under whose care such defendant or respondent was at the time of serving the summons; and in case of such defendant, or respondent, being an infant not residing with, or being under the care of, his father or guardian, that notice of such application was also served upon the father or guardian, if any, of such infant, unless the Court or a Judge, at the time of hearing the application, shall think fit to dispense with such last-mentioned service."

"Section 458 has been taken from Rule No. 30
" 459 "  "  "  "  "  "  "  29
" 460 "  "  "  "  "  "  "  31
Rules Nos. 32 and 33 were not taken.
Section 461 has been taken from Rule No. 34
" 462 "  "  "  "  "  "  "  35"

Thus all these sections have been taken from these rules, some of which were not incorporated into the Act. Of this latter class, the omission of Rules Nos. 27 and 28, extracted above, is essentially material for the decision of the question now before us. These rules laid down rigid rules as to the stage of the suit at which, and the conditions under which, the plaintiff was authorized to move the Court for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of a minor defendant. The Legislature intentionally rejected these rigid rules, and in their stead substituted the words " or by the plaintiff " in s. 456, which words were omitted from this section in 1877, when the Code was originally passed, evidently from an oversight. It seems to me clear from the above comparison of the sections of the Code with the aforesaid rules, that the Legislature, instead of adopting the Rules Nos. 27 and 28, which definitely laid down the stage of the suit at which, and the conditions under which, the plaintiff was to be allowed to move the Court for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of a minor defendant, has left the matter to the discretion of the Court.

Although it has been thus left to the discretion of the Court, it is always desirable that the appointment at the instance of the plaintiff should not be made unless the minor or his friends and relatives, in whose care he may be, failed to move the Court for that purpose within a reasonable time after receiving notice of the institution of the suit. The observance of this rule in the matter of the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court is likely to protect the interests of the minor more effectively than a departure from it. There might be cases in which a departure from it would seriously prejudice the interests of the minor, and, if such prejudice be established, the Appellate Court would be warranted in reversing the decree against the minor on this ground alone. But in this case it has not been shown that the minor has been prejudiced at all. There is nothing in the record which would go to show that the appellant has arrived at an age to form any opinion regarding the appointment of his own guardian. If he has not, it is the mother who, as his natural guardian, would have exercised her judgment for him in order to form an opinion on the subject. On the other hand, if the appellant be of an age to exercise his judgment in this matter, he has, in the exercise of it, chosen his mother as his guardian in preferring this appeal. Furthermore, in the grounds of appeal filed in this case, it has not been urged that the minor has been in any way prejudiced by the appointment of his mother as his guardian ad litem without any notice being given to him. In this case, therefore, no prejudice has been established.

Another objection has been started, viz., that the summons in this case was not served upon the minor defendant at all. If the appointment of the mother as his guardian ad litem was not invalid, this question would not arise. The defendant having appeared and defended the suit through his guardian, it is too late now for him to take any objection regarding the service of the summons.

PETHERAM, C.J.—I concur.

PRINSEP, J.—I have had the advantage of seeing the written judgment which my learned colleagues propose to deliver, and [213] concur generally with Wilson, J. I cannot undertake to form any opinion regarding the intention of the Legislature in the direction indicated by Mitter, J., or to say whether the omission to incorporate Rules 27 and 28 in the Code of Civil Procedure was intentional or accidental. If a person, who is made a defendant, has not been formally adjudicated a minor under Act XL of 1858 by the appointment of a guardian, a summons should, in my opinion, be issued for his appearance, otherwise he can have no opportunity of showing that he is not a minor. The Court cannot properly "be satisfied of the fact of his minority so as to appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit" (s. 443) until the defendant shall have had an opportunity of appearing. Any evidence otherwise obtained must necessarily be ex parte, even if the affidavit of the plaintiff be so far corroborated by one standing in some relationship to the defendant and willing to act as guardian for the purposes of the suit. For it may so happen that the defendant may be able to show that he is not a minor, and his friends or relations, residing in the same house with him, if they have received proper notice through a summons issued against the defendant, might be able to show that the person appearing before a Court is not a proper person to be so appointed. But, though I am of opinion that this procedure should be followed, I am unable to hold that a neglect to follow it is necessarily fatal to the suit. It is rather an irregularity, and should not vitiate all subsequent proceedings, unless it can be shown that the minor has been prejudiced either by an improper person being appointed as guardian ad litem, or by some misconduct on the subsequent conduct of the case arising from the manner in which the appointment has been made, such as has affected the trial of the suit in the interests of the minor. At the same time I think it very necessary that the lower Courts should be more precise in their proceedings so as to make them strictly in conformity with the law; for it is notorious that it rarely happens that a minor, whether plaintiff or defendant, is properly described in the proceedings; and consequently, much valuable time and money is needlessly spent in the Courts of Appeal in determining [214] the exact position which such a person really occupies in the case. Such irregularities have been repeatedly noticed by this Court, and I trust that the prominence now given to them will have the desired result.

Wilson, J.—In order to make an infant effectively a defendant to a suit, so as to bind him by a decree in the suit, three things must in any judgment appear: First, that on the face of the plaintiff it purports to be against the infant; secondly, that the infant has been duly represented by a guardian; thirdly, that he has been duly summoned, or that something has occurred to dispense with service of summons. In the present case, I agree with Mitter, J., that the first condition has been complied with. I read the body of the plaint in the same sense as he does, and that being so, I do not think the fault in the form of the title is fatal, though I do think such defects are most mischievous, inasmuch as they give rise to such uncertainty as has arisen in this case, and often prolong litigation, or afford grounds for an appeal to determine a point on which no doubt should possibly exist.

The real difficulty in the case is as to the other two conditions—service and representation of the infant. The procedure adopted was this. The plaintiff in his plaint named the infant's mother as his guardian. When he presented his plaint the Judge required an affidavit as to guardianship, and when the required affidavit was produced, an order was made that the plaint should be registered and summons issued. The Judge intended by this order, as is found, to sanction the representation of the infant by his mother; but no formal order to that effect was drawn up. The summons was then served upon the mother. I do not think the absence of a formal order appointing the guardian is fatal, whereas here the record shows that the Judge has arrived at a judicial determination upon the point. But the procedure followed seems to me open to grave objection. The procedure for obtaining the appointment of a guardian ad litem is contained in s. 456 of the Procedure Code. "An order for the appointment of a guardian for the suit may be obtained upon application in the name and on behalf of the minor, or by the plaintiff. Such application must be [215] supported by an affidavit verifying the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest in the matters in question in the suit adverse to that of the minor, and that he is a fit person to be so appointed. Where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit, the Court may appoint any of its officers to be such guardian, provided that he has no interest adverse to that of the minor."

That section, I think, contemplates that an application by a plaintiff is to be made at such a stage of the proceedings that the infant has at least an equal opportunity of applying. I am of opinion that no order appointing a guardian ad litem for an infant defendant, on the application of the plaintiff, should be made ex parte, and that no such order should be made, until the Court is satisfied that the infant has been duly served, and that there has been an opportunity for making an application on behalf of the infant. But, though not without much hesitation, I have come to the conclusion that the fact of the order having been made ex parte, and having been made before service of summons, is not necessarily fatal; but that those defects fall within the terms of s. 578. I have arrived at this conclusion substantially for the reasons stated by Mitter, J.

The question as to service of summons is one of some difficulty. There are no special provisions as to the service of summons upon infants, and therefore the same rules appear to apply as in the case of adults. There should be personal service under s. 75 of the Procedure Code, or service in some of the ways provided in the following sections, if the circumstances are such as to render any of those sections applicable, or failing service in these ways, there should be an order under s. 82, directing the mode in which service is to be effected. I should hesitate to say that service on a guardian ad litem is good service under the Code. But if the appointment of the guardian, however irregular, was not a nullity, it follows, I think, that the guardian had power to waive, and by appearing and defending did waive, all objections arising from want of service or defect in the service of summons. At the same time I think it right to say that in my opinion such a procedure as has been adopted in this case is liable to lead to the gravest consequences. It is not generally very difficult [216] to make out a plausible case on affidavit, when there is no fear of cross-examination and no chance of contradiction, and the Judge has nothing but the Affidavit itself to look to. And under this procedure it would be quite possible that a plaintiff might succeed in making the Court believe, at the time he presented his plaint, that his own nominee was a fit guardian for an infant defendant, and might then carry on the litigation to the end, without the infant or any one really interested in his welfare ever hearing of it.

In the particular case before us, I think it is fairly clear that the interests of the infant were as well protected as if the proceedings had all been in order. I therefore concur in answering the questions referred to us in the negative.

O'Kinealy, J.—In this case Jugut Chunder Deb sued several defendants for possession of land. The second defendant was described in the plaint as Nitobashini Chowdhry, guardian on behalf of her own minor son, Suresh Chundra Wum Chowdhry. The third defendant was described as Ichhamoyi Chowdhry, widow of the late Ram Cumar Wum Chowdhry. On the back of the plaint there is an order directing plaintiff to produce an affidavit to show that Nitobashini was the guardian of Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry. On the 14th of May an affidavit was filed, in which it was stated that the lady had charge of the minor as guardian, and that her interest was in no way hostile to his. On the 15th the Judge, having before him both the plaint and the affidavit, directed that the plaint should be registered, the defendants summoned, and the 18th June fixed for the hearing of the case. On the 22nd May summons was issued against the defendants as they were described in the plaint, and subsequently the Nazir made a return that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 being purdahashim ladies did not appear, and therefore he affixed the summons to their house. The case proceeded on this footing to trial, and now it is contended in appeal that the minor is not bound by the suit.

After a plaint has been filed, the first duty of the Court is, under s. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to issue a summons, calling on the defendant to appear and answer the claims on a day specified therein, either in person or by pleader duly [217] instructed, or accompanied by some person able to answer all material questions. The only exception to this rule is where the defendant appears on the presentation of the plaint, and admits the plaintiff's claim. Consequently it appears to me that the duty of the Judge on receiving the plaint was to issue a summons on the defendant. If the defendant was the minor, he should have been summoned. If the defendant was Nitobashini alone, she should have been summoned. From the return it appears that the lady was treated as a party in the case, for the Nazir reported that because she was a purdanashin she could not be served. No summons was issued or served on the minor defendant. Subsequent to the issue of summons, the Court must, in the case of a minor, proceed under s. 443 to satisfy itself of the fact of minority; and when it is so satisfied, to appoint a proper person as guardian to put in a defence.

In this case the Judge issued no summons on the defendant, minor; came to no finding that he was a minor; made no order appointing the lady his guardian, but contented himself by directing that summons should issue on the defendants. It thus seems that in no one single respect has the first Court complied with the provisions of the Procedure Code. The minor had no notice of the action. The case was allowed to go on against him without any decision as to whether he was a minor or not, and he had no voice in the determination of whether he was a minor, or whether the lady was a proper guardian for him.

One of the elementary rules of pleading is that no decree or order finally deciding a question between parties should be made absolute, ex parte, without previous notice to the party affected by it. In the case of Ferguson v. Mahon (1), Lord Denman, C.J., refused to recognize a decree of the Irish Court of Common Pleas, on the ground that the defendant had no notice of the action. In that case the defendant pleaded “that he was not at any time arrested upon, or seved with, any process issuing out of the said Court of Common Pleas in Ireland” * * * * "nor did he, defendant, at any time appear in the said Court to answer the plaintiff in the said action," and Lord [218] Denman held that the judgment appearing to have been obtained behind the back of the defendant, it could not be made the foundation of an action in England. In Buchanan v. Bucker (2), Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said: "It was contrary to the first principles of reason and justice that in either Civil or Criminal proceedings a man should be condemned before he was heard, and further that if such a practice were passed, it was an evil practice, and could not be sanctioned." This opinion though subsequently modified in regard to artificial modes of citation, seems, so far as the question of no notice is concerned, to be the present law. The doctrine, therefore, that a decree against a person in a cause, who has never been summoned and has had no opportunity to defend himself, is not binding on him, does not rest upon any technical pleas or rules of English pleading, but, as it is put in the different decisions, upon the ground that it is opposed to natural justice. If that be so, it appears to me impossible to say that the Subordinate Judge, by allowing the case to be carried on, without determining the status of the so-called minor defendant, without ever hearing him or giving him notice of the claim, and thus acting in contravention of the clear spirit of the Code, could have passed any order or decree that would bind the minor.

It may be urged that under s. 453 an application may be made ex parte, and there is nothing in the Code prohibiting the Court from deciding that a person is a minor without giving him notice to show cause. Section 448 declares that the Court shall be satisfied of the fact of the minority,

and I take it that the Court is to be satisfied of that fact in the way in which it is to be satisfied with regard to other questions that may arise in the case and is governed by the ordinary Procedure. In other words, before the Court comes to a decision ex parte on any such question, it must, in the words of s. 100, be "proved that the summons was duly served," and it lies upon those who contend that the procedure which may be followed under s. 453 is not the ordinary procedure of the Courts, but is a procedure which is declared by the Courts of England to be against natural justice, to show authority for it.

[219] I am, therefore, of opinion that both on principles of justice and on the Procedure Code itself, no guardian should be assigned on the application of the plaintiff, unless it has been proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendant is a minor; that summons has been duly served on him; and that he has had notice of the application. It seems, therefore, to me impossible to support the decree of the lower Court, and I think that all proceedings against the minor, after the filing of the plaint, should be set aside, and the plaintiff should, if he wishes to proceed against the minor, do so by a new trial and in a regular manner.

14 C. 219.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

IN THE MATTER OF THE INDIAN COMPANIES' ACT, 1882, AND IN THE MATTER OF T. F. BROWN & COMPANY, LIMITED.

Companies' Act (Act VI of 1882), s. 162—Extraordinary power of the Court under the Companies' Act—Examination of witness—Costs.

Certain persons connected with a Company then in course of liquidation, who were also some of the defendants in a pending suit brought by the Company (and revived subsequent to the order for winding up by the Official Liquidators) for an account and for the recovery of certain sums alleged to have been paid to the promoters of the Company, having been examined under an order obtained under s. 162 of the Companies' Act, 1882, applied through their counsel for costs incurred on such examination: Held, that no order as to such costs could be made.

The Official Liquidator of T. F. Brown and Co., Ltd., in liquidation, having applied under s. 162 of the Companies' Act for the examination of Mr. Barrow, Mr. Thomson, and others in the pending suit of T. F. Brown & Company, Limited v. Barrow and others, and an order having been passed thereon directing Messrs. Brown and Thomson to attend Court for the purpose of being examined, these two gentlemen were duly examined on the 13th and 28th August, 1886. At a day subsequent to the close of their examination—

Mr. Bonnerjee, on behalf of Mr. Barrow and Mr. Thomson, applied for the costs occasioned by the examination; the [220] matter then stood over for argument. On a subsequent day the matter came on for argument.

Mr. Pugh, for the Official Liquidator.—A separate application should be made for costs. There are no cases directly in point; but a witness, although entitled to the attendance of Solicitor and Counsel—see Brooch

Loading Armoury Co., In re Merchants Company (1)—is not entitled to costs of employing them. Ex parte Waddell (2). In the case of In re Cambrian Mining Company (3), no order was made as to the costs of the witness examined. The cases of The Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan (4), and The Lisbon Steam Tramways case (5), refer only to costs of the particular motions then being heard. So also In re Financial Insurance Company (6); In re Contract Corporation, Ex parte Carter (7) a case of a roving enquiry, only costs of motion were allowed—In re Land Credit Company of Ireland, Trower and Lawson’s case (8) there is no mention of their being entitled to costs, but costs were to have been given against them if they refused to attend. See also the cases of Ramniday Koondoo v. Rajah Ojoodhyaram Khan (9); In the matter of Nursey Kessowji (10). [TREVELYAN, J.—In the case of In re Hurruck Chand Golicha (11) costs of an incidental enquiry were added to the claim.] Yes, but the witness in that case was supporting the insolvent.

Mr. E. T. Roberts (with him Mr. Bonnerjee), for Barrow and Thomson.—The evidence taken has disclosed nothing more than appeared in the pleadings of the pending suit. Nothing having therefore been gained by employing this procedure, costs should be allowed. The Code of Civil Procedure gives absolute discretion to the Court in the matter of costs, and this is a proper case to exercise such discretion in our favour. The case of In re Hurruck Chand Golicha (11) is somewhat in our favour.

ORDER.

[221] TREVELYAN, J.—The question which I reserved for consideration was as to how I should dispose of the costs of the examination of the witnesses who had been examined, and the reason why I reserved the consideration of this question was that Mr. Pugh, who appeared for the Official Liquidator, asserted that there was no report of any case in any book, as far as he remembered, or any record in this Court, or any case in England, where any witness examined under this section, or a similar section of the Companies’ Act in England, or any witness examined under the similar section of the Insolvency Act, could be given costs for attendance of counsel or attorney. I have not been able to find any case, with the exception of, perhaps, the case, cited during the argument, of Hurruck Chand Golicha. On examination I do not think that that is an authority on this question. Since the adjournment granted for the purpose of ascertaining whether such an order had ever been made, I have not been referred to any case where any such order has ever been made under the Companies’ Act or the Bankruptcy Act, and I am not quite certain that this Court has any power whatever to make any such order. But prima facie a witness in any proceeding is only entitled to his ordinary expenses, although he might in some of those proceedings be entitled to appear by counsel or attorney as the case might be, and be examined by them. It does not follow from that that the other side is to pay him the costs of appearing by counsel and attorney. There is nothing very extraordinary in the facts of this case. The Official Liquidator wished to get certain information from these gentlemen (Messrs. Barrow and Thomson), who were connected with the Company which was under liquidation.

Inasmuch as there is no precedent for witnesses getting such costs, I think that this is not a case in which such an order ought to be made.

Application refused.

[222] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Beverley.

GOKOOL NATH GUHA AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. Issur Lochun Roy (Plaintiff), and Issur Lochun Roy (Plaintiff) v. Gokool Nath Guha and Another (Defendants), and Sham Das Roy (Defendant) v. Issur Lochun Roy (Plaintiff).*

A testator by his will directed that his executors should "get a Shiva’s temple erected at a reasonable cost in a suitable place within the compound of the brick-built baitakhana house, inclusive of the building and garden thereto" in which he had constantly resided:

Held, that the direction was not void for uncertainty, and that under the circumstances 3 per cent. of the testator’s moveable estate was a proper sum to allow for the cost of erecting the temple;

Held, also, that a direction to the executors to "perform all the acts properly and bona fide, to the best of their respective information and judgment, and according to the provisions of this will," did not give the trustees an absolute discretion to fix the amount proper to be expended on the erection of the temple.

The testator further declared that "the said executors or any of his "heirs and representatives" should "not be able to make any kind of gift, sale or alienation, or create any incumbrance on the," said baitakhana house, "and none of" his "heirs" should "be able to claim it in his own right: but that the executors" should "be competent to allow" the testator’s "brother Issur Lochun Roy and" his "sister’s son Shama Das Roy to use the said baitakhana and rooms, &c."

Held, that this clause did not operate to dedicate the baitakhana house to the idol Shiva, nor to vest it in the executors, but that on the death of the testator it descended to his heir-at-law, freed from any prohibition against alienation.

The testator further directed that his executors should "keep in deposit Government promissory Notes of Rs. 9,500 (nine and half thousand rupees) for the preservation and suitable repairs of" the baitakhana "house in proper [223] time, and for the daily and periodical worship of the said god Shiva, for his shoba (worship) and for the repairs of the temple;" the expenses of these acts to be defrayed out of interest of the Rs. 9,500.

Held, that (there abiding been no dedication of the baitakhana house to the idol) the sum of Rs. 9,500 must be apportioned, one moiety going to the heir at law to whom the baitakhana house had descended, and the other to the executors for the repairs of the temple and worship of the idol.

The testator further declared that, "if after the performance of all the above acts there remains any money or moveable property as surplus, then the executors shall be able to spend the same in proper and just acts for" the testator’s "benefit."

Held, that the direction contained in this clause was void for uncertainty.

Held, also, that such direction did not amount to a valid precatory trust. Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor (1) cited.

[14 Cal. 224] [Vol.

This was a suit for the construction of the will of one Rai Rajib Lochun Roy Bahadur, for an injunction, account, a receiver and other relief. The plaintiff was the heir-at-law of the testator. The plaint stated that the testator died on the 9th Assin, 1288 (24th September 1881) having previously made and published his last will and testament bearing date the 30th of Bysack, 1288 (11th May 1881) of which he appointed the defendants Gokool Nath Guha and Boykunt Nath Sen Baral executors, who obtained probate of the will from the Court of the Judge of Moolshedabad on the 25th of October, 1881. The plaintiff then charged that many of the provisions of the will were invalid, that the will did not dispose of a large portion of the testator’s properties, and that he was entitled thereto as the testator’s heir-at-law. The material paragraphs of the plaint are as follows:—

8. The provisions contained in paragraph 17 of that Will, to the effect that within the baithakana house in Saidabad, inclusive of the building and the garden attached thereto, in which the testator had continued to have his fixed abode, i.e., in a proper place within that house and the compound, the said executors shall get a Shiva’s temple erected at a reasonable cost, and [224] shall get the god Shiva consecrated therein, and that for the proper preservation and repairs of the said house in due time, and for the daily and periodical worship of that idol, Shiva, and for the repairs of the temple, the said executors shall keep in deposit Promissory Notes of the value of Rs. 9,500, and continue to perform these acts as described with the amount of interest thereof are indefinite, vague and not expressive of any definite intention (uncertain), and are therefore invalid under the law. And the said sum of Rs. 9,500 is to be reckoned as falling within the undisposed of property of the testator, and the plaintiff is entitled to get it.

9. Paragraph 18 of the Will provides that the said executors or the testator’s heirs and representatives shall not be competent to make gift or sale or any kind of alienation of the baithakana house described in paragraph 17, nor will they be able to create any encumbrance therein, and that none of the testator’s heirs will be able to claim it on his own right, but the executors will be able to allow the said baithakana house, &c., to be used by brother Issur Lochun Roy and the nephew (sister’s son) Sham Das Roy. By this provision of the Will, the said property was not disposed of or vested, and so the said property is to be reckoned as the testator’s undisposed of property, and the plaintiff is entitled to get it. The direction contained in respect of the use of that property is invalid and cannot be given under the law.

10. The direction contained in paragraph 19 of that Will with regard to the surplus money being spent by the executors in proper and just acts for the testator’s benefit is also not definite or clear or expressive of any definite intention (certain), and therefore that direction is invalid, and the defendant’s executors are bound to make over to the plaintiff by adjusting account of the testator’s estate.

(1) 9 I.A. 79=4 A. 500.
11. There is a direction contained in the Will that the executors shall recover and include in the testator’s Tehvil (fund) the money which was due to the testator from Premanund Mohunt Thakoor of Srikhando in Zillah Burdwan. By that the money due from the said Mohunt is undisposed of, and as this has not been the subject of any provision, the plaintiff is entitled to that also.

12. By that Will no provision has been made with regard to the interest of all the testator’s Promissory Notes due up to the time of the testator’s death. This is to be reckoned as undisposed of property, and the plaintiff is entitled thereto.

13. The executors have not yet raised the Shiva’s temple or consecrated the Shiva as mentioned in paragraph 17 of the Will, and the plaintiff does not believe that all the directions given in the Will have been fully carried into effect. If the Shiva’s temple be erected, and the Shiva be consecrated on the strength of the above indefinite and invalid provisions, and if the defendants do anything in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 19 of the Will, there will be serious loss to the plaintiff.

[226] 14. The plaintiff is entitled to the whole residue of the entire estate of the testator, with the exception of the gifts, legacies and charges mentioned in the Will, which are in accordance to law.

The defendants contended that the Will was valid, and denied that the plaintiff was the heir-at-law of the testator, on the ground that, during the lifetime of the latter, the plaintiff was a purnavishikta lingly. The defendant Sham Das Roy, the son of the testator’s uterine brother, claimed to be the testator’s heir-at-law.

The Subordinate Judge settled the following issues: (1) Was plaintiff purnavishikta or lingly during the lifetime of the testator, and is he in consequence disqualified from inheriting his property according to the Hindu Law? (2) Are the directions contained in clauses 17th, 18th, 19th and 21st of the Will null and void for vagueness, uncertainty, and indefiniteness? (3) Did the testator leave any and what portion of the property referred to in the aforesaid clauses undisposed of? (4) Are the executors, i.e., defendants Nos. 1 and 2, liable to render accounts? (5) Have the executors full discretion to determine the reasonable cost for the erection and dedication of the Shiva temple and the consecration of the Shiva? (6) If not, what sum should be considered by the Court reasonable for the same, and from what fund should that cost be paid? (7) To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled upon a proper construction of the aforesaid clauses of the Will?

On these issues the Subordinate Judge decided: (1) That the plaintiff was not a purnavishikta, and that even if he had been, that would not debar him from inheriting the property of the testator; (2) and (3) “That the directions contained in the 17th clause about the erection of a Shiva temple at a reasonable cost upon a suitable space within the compound of the baitakhana house of the testator as well as for the consecration of the Shiva indicate a definite intention on his part and are not void for uncertainty, and that the further direction to the executors to keep in reserve Government Securities of Rs. 9,500 is void only in respect of half the amount, the interest of which was impliedly intended to be appropriated to the occasional necessary repairs of the baitakhana house, but is perfectly valid [226] as creating a lawful bequest in respect of the other half, the interest of which was by a necessary implication intended to be applied for the daily worship of the Shiva and the repairs of the Shiva temple. That the expressions used in the 18th clause of the Will with regard to the baitalkhana house do not indicate the least intention on the part of the testator to in any way dispose of the same, and evidently fail to create a valid testamentary disposition of it; that the attempt made by the testator to disinherit his heirs was void and inoperative, being an attempt to override the law and to restrict the course of lawful succession, and that the discretion given to the executors regarding the use of the house by the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 is also inoperative; that the attempt to create a residuary bequest of the surplus, referred to in the 19th clause, must fail by reason of uncertainty in the object and subject of the bequest, as well as of want of a definite intention on the part of the testator; and that by the 21st clause of the Will the testator did not intend to make any sort of bequest in respect of the debt which was supposed to be due from Premanund Mohunt Thakoor of Srikhand."

(4) That the executors being responsible to the heir for the undispoused portion of the testator's estate, were bound to render accounts; (5) and (6). That the reasonable costs for the erection of the Shiva temple and the consecration of the Shiva was a matter to be determined by the Judge, and he fixed 3 per cent. of the value of the testator's moveable property as a reasonable sum. The Subordinate Judge also found that the interest on the testator's promissory notes due at the time of the testator's death passed to the persons to whom those notes had been bequeathed, and he directed that Rs. 2,843-10-6, being 3 per cent. of the testator's moveable estate, should be allowed to the executors for defraying the cost of the building of the Shiva's temple.

The following authorities were referred to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge:—Mayne's Hindu Law, ss. 506, 517; Dwarka Nath Bysack v. Burroda Pershad Bysack (1) Surbomungola Dabee v. Mohendra nath (2); Succession Act, ss. 76, 82. Ramtonu Mullick v. Ram Gopal Mullick (3); 2 W. & T.L.C., 3rd ed., 283.

[227] Both the plaintiff and defendants appealed to the High Court. The 17th, 18th and 19th clauses of the Will are set out in the judgment of the High Court. The 21st clause is as follows:—

21. "To the best of my information and belief, I am not indebted to any body in any way for any amount of money. The executors shall recover the money which is due to me from Premanund Mohunt Thakoor of Srikhand in Zillah Burdwan, and include the same within my estate and tehvil."

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

PRINSEP, J.—These three appeals arise out of a suit which was brought by the plaintiff Issur Lochun' Roy, in respect of the proper construction of the Will of his elder brother Rai Rajib Lochun, Rai Bahadur, of which Will probate was taken out in 1881 by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the executors. The plaintiff who instituted his suit on the 19th March, 1884, alleged that certain provisions of the Will were void for uncertainty, and that he as heir-at-law was entitled to the whole residue of the estate of the testator which, upon a proper construction of the Will, might be found to have been undisposed of. Defendant No. 3 is the son of a sister of the testator, and was made a defendant after the institution of the suit.

(1) 4 C. 443.  (2) 4 C. 508.  (3) 1 Knapp's P. C. 245.

In answer to this suit, the defendants alleged that the plaintiff by becoming a purnavishikta lingi in the testator's lifetime had rendered himself incapable of succeeding as heir, and that the preferential heir was defendant No. 3. They further maintained that the provisions of the Will were good and effectual.

On the question of heirship, the lower Court found that it was not proved that the plaintiff had become a purnavishikta lingi, and that, even assuming that he had become a purnavishikta, he [228] was not thereby disqualified to succeed as heir. On this point the appeal has not been pressed, and it is therefore unnecessary to say more in this place.

The clauses of the Will as to which the parties are at issue are the 17th, 18th and 19th, which run as follows: —

17. "After performing all the acts above mentioned, the said executors shall get a Shiva's temple erected at a reasonable cost in a suitable place within the compound of the brick-built baitakhana house, inclusive of the building and garden attached thereto, in which I have been continuously living as my fixed place of residence, and which is situated in Saidabad, Division Sujagunge, within this district of Moorshedabad and east of the Bhagirati, west of the public road, south of the lane and north of another lane and of Ramtonu Mistry's Ghat, and they shall get the god Shiva consecrated therein. And the said executors shall keep in deposit Government Promissory Notes of Rs. 9,500 (nine and half thousand rupees) for the preservation and suitable repairs of that house in proper time, and for the daily and periodical worship of the said god Shiva, for his sheva (worship), and for the repairs of the temple, and the acts specified in these paragraphs will be continued to be performed with the amount of interest derived therefrom."

18. "The said executors or any of my heirs and representatives shall not be able to make any kind of gift, sale or alienation, or create any encumbrance on the baitakhana house situated in Saidabad and within the boundaries described above in paragraph 17, and none of my heirs shall be able to claim it in his own right. But the executors shall be competent to allow my brother Issur Lochun Roy and my sister's son Sham Das Roy to use the said baitakhana and rooms, &c."

19. "If after the performance of all the above acts there remains any money or moveable property as surplus, then the executors shall be able to spend the same in proper and just acts for my benefit."

In respect of these clauses the findings of the lower Court are to the effect that the provision for the erection of a Shiva's temple in the compound of the baitakhana was good and valid, and that such a temple should be erected by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at a cost not exceeding 3 per cent. of the personal estate of the testator; that a moiety of the sum of Rs. 9,500 should be set apart for the daily worship of the idol and for the repairs of the temple; that the baitakhana house was undisposed of by the terms of the Will, and that therefore the plaintiff succeeded to it as upon an intestacy as well as to the other moiety of the sum of Rs. 9,500; that the residuary bequest sought to be created by the 19th clause.
was void for uncertainty, and that the [229] plaintiff succeeded to the residue as heir. The lower Court further held that the interest which had accrued at the time of the testator's death on the Government Promissory notes which were to be distributed by the executors in payment of various legacies went to the legatees and not to the residue. Defendant No. 3 was made to bear his own costs; the costs of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 being payable out of the estate. None of the other findings of the lower Court are material for the purposes of these appeals.

Appeal No. 9 of 1885 is preferred by the executors who question the correctness of the lower Court's construction of cls. 17—19 of the Will.

Appeal No. 308 of 1885 is preferred by the plaintiff against those portions of the lower Court's decree which have reference to the Shivaloy, to the accrued interest on the Government Securities, and to the costs of defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Appeal No. 311 of 1885 is preferred by defendant No. 3 and has reference to his right to use the baitakhana house under cl. 18 of the Will, and to the question of his costs.

It will be convenient to dispose of the three appeals together. The first question relates to the provision for the erection by the executors of a Shiva's temple at a reasonable cost in a suitable place within the compound of the baitakhana.

For the executors it was contended that cl. 17, read with cl. 13 of the Will, conferred on them an absolute discretion as to the reasonableness of the cost, and that the lower Court was not justified in limiting the amount to 3 per cent. of the personal estate. Clause 13 provides that the executors "shall perform all the acts properly and bona fide to the best of their respective information and judgment, and according to the provisions of this Will."

For the plaintiff it was contended that the entire provision regarding the erection of this temple was void for uncertainty.

In the course of the argument, it transpired that the stone for the temple in question had been brought from Benares, and that, before the institution of this suit, the executors had already spent a sum which does not fall far short of that allowed by the lower Court for the purpose of erecting the temple. The plaintiff, it is [230] to be observed, did not bring his suit till two years and a half after the death of the testator. It was accordingly very properly intimated by his counsel that, in the event of our reversing the decree of the lower Court on this point, he would not press for a refund of the money already laid out upon the work.

We are not disposed, however, to interfere with the finding of the lower Court on this point. We think that the testator's intention was sufficiently indicated in the Will. He directed that a Shivaloy should be erected at a reasonable cost on a suitable site, within the compound of the baitakhana. The locality and nature of the building were described, and we think that the Court has fixed a very reasonable and proper scale of expenditure for the erection of the temple in question. The next question relates to the baitakhana house; and on this question we also agree with the finding of the lower Court that cl. 18 of the Will neither operates to dedicate the house to the idol Shiva nor to vest it in the executors. All that the clause in question says is that neither the executors nor any of the testator's heirs and representatives shall be at liberty to alienate or encumber it. But it remains undisposed of under the Will, and therefore goes to the heir-at-law, and the provision that none of the testator's heirs shall be able to claim it in his own right' is inoperative. So also is the further provision enabling the executors to allow defendant No. 3 to use the house. The house being undisposed of under the Will, the plaintiff as heir-at-law became entitled to it on the testator's death, and the executors have no power or authority to allow defendant No. 3 to occupy it.

As regards the fund of Rs. 9,500 which the testator set apart for the preservation and repair of the baitakhana house, for the worship of the idol and for the repair of the temple, the lower Court held that the fund in question should be divided into moieties, one of which was to be applied to the worship of the idol and the repair of the temple, and the other, which was intended for the repair of the baitakhana, to fall into the residue. It is contended on behalf of the executors that the testator had three objects in view, that is to say: (1) the repair of the baitakhana; (2) the worship of the idol; and (3) the repair of the temple; and that the bequest being good as to the [231] two latter, two-thirds of the fund should have been appropriated for those purposes.

The plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that the whole bequest is bad, and that the Court was not justified in holding it to be good as regards one portion and bad as regards another. We have already held that the provision as to the erection of a Shivaloy is sufficiently definite to constitute a valid bequest, and we think it clear that the testator intended to make provision for its preservation and repair and for the worship of the idol. And we think that these objects are distinct from the repair of the baitakhana, which we have held was undisposed of by the Will. It is quite clear, we think, that the testator had two things in his mind in setting apart this sum of Rs. 9,500 from the rest of his estate.
These two things were: (1), the support of the idol; and (2), the preservation of the baitakhana. The question is whether the entire sum can be apportioned between these two objects, and if so, in what proportion the sum should be divided. We are of opinion that the sum ought to be divided in order that the testator's intention may be carried out and a fund provided for the support of the idol. But a difficulty arises when we come to consider in what proportion the sum should be divided. The Will affords no indication of the sum which the testator wished to set apart for each of the objects he had in view. The lower Court has adopted the rough and ready solution of dividing the sum equally between the two objects abovenamed, and we are not prepared to say that that solution was wrong. We think it may fairly be said that, when a fund is provided for two objects, and there is no indication to show how much is intended for each, it may be presumed that, in the absence of anything to the contrary, the intention was that they should benefit equally, i.e., that half the fund was intended for one object and half for the other. As regards the contention that the Shivaloy should benefit to the extent of two-thirds of the fund, we are unable to recognize any clear distinction between the worship of the idol and the repair of the temple so as to be able to say that a separate sum should be set apart and appropriated to either object. We consider that 'the preservation and suitable repairs of the house' was one thing and the 'daily and periodical [232] worship of the said god Shiva, his sheba and the repairs of the temple' another thing.
And we are not prepared, therefore, to disturb the decree of the Sub-Judge on this point. We think he exercised a very proper discretion in the matter, and that neither the plaintiff nor the defendants have any cause to be aggrieved at the manner in which the fund has been allotted.

We now come to clause 19 of the Will, which deals with the residue of the moveable estate.

It is contended on behalf of the executors that that clause creates a good and valid trust reposed in them to expend the residue of the personality on "proper and just acts" for the benefit of the testator. We are of opinion, however, that the lower Court was right in holding that the bequest contained in this clause fails on account of vagueness and uncentainty.

It is true that the Courts in this country do recognise and will enforce charitable and religious trusts, and that in doing so they are not necessarily fettered by the same considerations which influence the Court of Chancery in England in dealing with such bequests. But it is obvious that, before any Court can deal with a trust of this kind, it must be in a position to form some definite idea of the object which the testator had in his mind. In the present case we think that there is no sufficient indication of the testator's wishes, and that the bequest must fail in consequence of the impossibility of ascertaining his intention. The words of the clause in question run as follows: "If after the performance of all the above acts there remains any money or moveable property as surplus, then the executors shall be competent to spend the same in proper and just acts for my benefit." Now what did the testator mean by his "benefit"? Did he mean his spiritual benefit, or his posthumous fame, or what? This, in the first place, is wholly uncertain. But even supposing that there were no vagueness in this part of the clause, and that the spiritual benefit of the testator was intended, what are the "just and proper acts" which the testator considered would be for his spiritual benefit, and which he intended should be performed. There is absolutely nothing to indicate the nature of these acts—whether acts of benevolence were intended, or acts of charity or religious service. The expression is wide enough to cover [233] anything from digging a tank or founding a scholarship, to performing a shradhi or feeding Brahmans. We think then that, on the ground of vagueness and uncertainty, this bequest must be held to fail, and that the lower Court has rightly held that the plaintiff is entitled to take the residue.

We are of opinion that the bequest contained in this clause must also fail on another ground, as being in the nature of a precatory trust; and such trusts, it has been frequently held, must be definite both as to the subject and as to the object of the gift. In the case of Mussoorkee Bank
v. Raynor (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "These rules are clear with respect to the doctrine of precatory trusts, that the words of gift used by the testator must be such that the Court finds them to be imperative on the first taker of the property, and that the subject of the gift over must be well defined and certain." We are not prepared to hold in this case that words giving the executors authority to dispose of an indefinite surplus in an indefinite manner are words sufficiently imperative to constitute a precatory trust.

As regards the accrued interest on the Government Securities, the learned counsel for the executors is unable to support the finding of the lower Court. The Sub-Judge has relied on s. 82 of the Indian Succession Act, but it appears to us that he has not only misinterpreted that section

but overlooked s. 309 et seq which deal with the matters in question. Whether or not the legatees are entitled to the interest on the Government securities from the date of the testator's death, it is settled law that they are not entitled to any interest which accrued due before his death, and the finding of the Sub-Judge on this point must therefore be set aside. The testator died leaving several pieces of Government Promissory Notes, and his Will directed his executors to give certain persons such notes in various specified amounts. He did not give legacies of special notes, so that to adopt any rule, such as that allowed by the lower Court, would enable the executors to favour some of the legatees so as to give them notes with the largest outstandings of unrealized interest. On general principles, therefore, the Judge should have been induced to refuse such a claim.

[234] On the subject of costs, it is pressed upon us that none of the defendants are entitled to have their costs paid out of the estate in consequence of the nature of the defence set up as regards the plaintiff's status. We are unable to see that defendant No. 3 is entitled to any costs at all. As regards the executors, we observe that certain costs amounting to Rs. 478 were disallowed in the lower Court, and as regards them there is no appeal. It is said that the estate was unnecessarily put to great expense on account of the excessive issue of commissions, but there is nothing before us showing the costs incurred on this account. We therefore see no sufficient reason to interfere with the order of the lower Court as to costs. Each party will pay his own costs in this Court.

Execution of decree—Resistance to execution—Application against a claimant resisting execution how treated—Order under Civil Procedure Code, s. 331, Nature of.

An application in furtherance of execution of a decree for possession against a person who resists execution, claiming the property as his own, is an application within s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code, and should be treated as a plaint.

Fonindro Deb in execution of his decree proceeded to take possession of a family dwelling-house, but met with resistance from Rani Jugodishwari Dabi, a third party, who claimed the property as her own. In consequence of the obstruction the decree-holder applied to the Court in the execution department, and the District Judge rejected the application on the ground that, inasmuch as the Rani was no party to the suit or decree, and claimed to hold the property in her own right, she was not bound by the decree. Fonindro Deb having appealed to the High Court, it was objected on the part of the Rani, respondent, that the order was not appealable.

[235] Baboo Kali Mohun Dass and Baboo Grish Churn Chowdhry, for the respondents.

The following was the judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Agnew, J.J.):

JUDGMENT.

The appellant obtained a decree for possession of certain property, and in execution proceeded against a family dwelling-house said to have been occupied by Jugodishwari Dabi, who was not the judgment-debtor in the suit in which the decree was obtained. Obstruction was made, and, upon this matter coming before the District Judge, he dismissed the application for execution against this property on the ground that the lady was no party to the suit or decree. Against this order the decree-holder has appealed. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies against this order of the District Judge. The matter, as represented to us, comes under s. 331 of the Code, and the order of the District Judge is practically a refusal to number and register the claim as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the claimant as defendant. The decree-holder complains that by this proceeding he has lost the opportunity of proving that the claimant is not entitled to protection under s. 331. The law declares that proceedings in a case under s. 331 are to be conducted in the same manner and with the like power as if a suit for the property had been instituted by the decree-holder against the claimant under the provisions of Chapter V of the Code. Chapter V provides for matters relating to the institution of suits. The refusal of the District Judge to number and register the claim as a suit is therefore of the same effect as the refusal to register a plaint; or, in other words, it amounts to rejecting a plaint. Regarding the case from this point of view, the order of the District Judge would be appealable as being within the definition of a decree under s. 2 of the Code. The matter raised must, therefore, be tried in the manner provided for by s. 331. We accordingly set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that he do proceed in accordance with the law.

JOY CHUNDER RUKHIT (Defendant) v. BIPPRO CHURN RUKHIT (Plaintiff).* [19th November, 1886.]

Co-sharers—Right to deal with joint property—Excavation of tank on joint property—Discretion of Court in granting injunction—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 55

Before a Court will, in the case of co-sharers, make an order directing that a portion of the joint property alleged to have been dealt with by one of the co-sharers without the consent of the other should be restored to its former condition (as) for instance, where a tank has been excavated, a plaintiff must show.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 652 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Dwarka Nath Bhattacharjee, Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 18th of December 1885, affirming the decree of Baboo Mohendro Nath Dass, Munsif of Gouripura, dated the 16th of February 1885.
that he has sustained, by the act he complains of, some injury which materially affects his position. Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (1) applied in principle; Shamnagar Jute Factory Co. v. Ram Narain Chatterjee (2) approved. The fact that a portion of the land on which a tank had been excavated by the defendant was fit for cultivation does not constitute an injury of a substantial nature such as would justify an order of that nature.

The plaintiff brought this suit to have his right declared to the half share of 2 kanis 9 gunadas of land in three plots, which he alleged to be held jointly by himself and the defendant, and for an order directing the defendant to fill up a tank excavated thereon by the defendant, and to bring the land into its former state.

Several defences were raised, the only contention material to this report being that the land was not the joint property of the plaintiff and defendant, but had been allotted to the defendant on a partition, and that the defendant had excavated the tank with the plaintiff's consent, and without any opposition on his part.

Both the lower Courts found that the land was the joint property of the parties, and that the tank had been excavated without the consent of the plaintiff.

The Court of first instance in its judgment said: "I find it as a fact in this case that the plaintiff did take reasonable steps in time to prevent the excavation of the tank in dispute in this [237] case. The plaintiff did tell the defendant not to excavate the tank on the joint property, and he did tell the defendant when the tank was commenced to be excavated. The question is, is the Court, under the circumstances of this suit, warranted in exercising its discretion to interfere and direct the filling up of the tank? The land on the eastern portion of the plot No. 2, whereon the tank has been excavated, was not fit for cultivation; there was an excavation on the east of the plot No. 2, but the portions of the plots Nos. 1 and 3, whereon part of the tank has been excavated, were fit for cultivation. The defendant has, by causing the tank to be excavated, taken in a manner exclusive possession of the space whereon the tank has been excavated. The plaintiff will not be able to gain any income out of the tank."

The Court of first instance decreed the suit, and ordered that the plaintiff do recover joint possession of the land; and that the defendant should, within four months, fill up the tank and bring the land to its former condition.

On appeal by the defendant this decree was confirmed.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rashbehari Ghose, for the appellant.

Baboo Trilockya Nath Mitter, for the respondent.

The following cases were cited in argument: Gurudas Dhar v. Bijoy Gobind Bural (3); Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (1); Holloway v. Mahomed Ali (4); Sheo Persad Singh v. Leela Singh (5); Stalkartti v. Gopal Panday (6); Massim Mollah v. Panjoo Ghorangee (7); Tarince Churn Bose v. Ramjee Paul (8); Mohima Chunder Ghose v. Madhub

SHAMA CHURN LAHURI (6); NOYNA MISER v. RUFIKUN (7); NOCURY LALL CHUCKERBUTTY v. BINDABUN CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY (8); and SHAMNAGAR JUTE FACTORY Co. v. RAM NARAIN CHATTERJEE (9).

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and AGNEW, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The parties to this suit are joint proprietors in some land. The defendant, in spite of the protest of the plaintiff, has dug a tank in a portion thereof. The plaintiff now sues to have his title declared in the land so occupied, and he asks for an order directing the defendant to fill up the tank that has been dug, so as to restore the land to its former condition.

The plaintiff has obtained a decree in both the lower Courts.

It has been contended before us, as it has been found by the lower Courts, that the conduct of the defendant in proceeding to excavate the tank in spite of the protest in itself justifies the order passed. The learned pleaders who have argued this case with great care have cited a great number of cases bearing on the subject commencing from Gurudas Dhar v. Bijoy Gobind Bural (10); and Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (11); down to that of Nocury Lal Chuckerbuddy v. Bindabun Chunder Chuckerbuddy (8). We are also referred to a case recently decided by Wilson and Porter, JJ. (Second Appeal 1164 of 1885), on the 20th of April last, Shamnagar Jute Factory Co. v. Ram Narain Chatterjee (9), in which the cases cited before us were also considered. We fully adopt the opinion expressed by the learned Judges in that case. The result of the cases cited before us seems to be in accordance with the principle laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock in the case of Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (11), which is to the effect that before the Court will proceed in the manner asked by the plaintiff in this case, he must show that he has sustained some injury by the act complained of. We understand the term "injury" to mean something substantial, something that materially affects the position of the parties. In the present case, the first Court describes the [239] injury caused to the plaintiff in the following terms: "The land on the eastern portion of plot No. 2, whereon the tank has been excavated, was not fit for cultivation. There was an excavation on the east of the plot No. 2, but the portions of the plots Nos. 1 and 3, whereon part of the tank has been excavated, were fit for cultivation. The defendant has by causing the tank to be excavated taken in a manner exclusive possession of the space whereon the tank has been excavated. The plaintiff will not be able to gain any income out of the tank." The lower appellate Court expresses no opinion on this point, but we may take it that it was not disputed by the defendant, and that it correctly represents the result of the excavation of the tank. The fact found that a portion of the land on which the tank was excavated was fit for cultivation does not, in our opinion, properly describe any injury of a substantial nature to the plaintiff; such as would justify the order of the lower Courts, in putting the defendant to the expense of re-filling the tank. The proper remedy in the present case seems to be for the parties to partition the land so as to hold exclusively that which represents their respective shares. With regard to the ground on which the lower Courts gave the plaintiff a decree, and which has been pressed on us in this Court, we would refer to the judgment of Mr. Justice Wilson in Shannagar Jute Factory Co., v. Ram Narain (1), in which he says: "But we are not aware of any decision which establishes the broad principle contended for by the plaintiff that one co-owner is entitled to an injunction restraining another from exercising his rights absolutely, and without reference to the amount of damages to be sustained by the one or the other from the granting or withholding of the injunction;" and the same principle would apply to the case now before us in which the Court is asked to compel the defendant to undo the effect of an act committed by him without the consent of the co-owner. Under such circumstances we think that the order of the lower Courts should be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

MOHUN SHAHA AND ANOTHER, MINORS, BY THEIR MOTHER AND GUARDIAN SURDOJOYA (Decree-Holders) AND ANOTHER (Auction-Purchaser).* [2nd December, 1886.]

Civil Procedure Code, s. 311—"Any person whose immovable property has been sold."

Interpretation of.

The words "any person whose immovable property has been sold," in s. 311, are sufficiently wide to include a person who is neither the decree-holder, nor the judgment-debtor, nor the auction-purchaser, but who alleges that the property sold in execution is his.

[Overruled, 15 C. 488 (F.B.); F., 12 A. 410 (F.B.) = 10 A. W. N. 103; R., 19 M. 167

In execution of a decree obtained by Pyari Mohun Podder against Rahaman Bibi and others, certain immovable property alleged to belong to the judgment-debtors was sold and purchased by Haran Chunder Ghose. Before the sale was confirmed, the appellants Abdul Huq Mozoomdar and another objected to it on the ground that the property sold was theirs, and was in their possession at the time of the attachment and sale, and they applied under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code to have the sale set aside. The decree-holders and the auction-purchaser opposed the application. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, upon the facts disclosed in their application, the objectors could not be said to have sustained any injury by reason of any material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, which is the only ground on which a sale could be set aside under s. 311, as their right and title to the property, if their case was true, would be wholly unaffected by it; and he dismissed the application.

adding that, if the objectors were dispossessed by the auction-purchaser, they might come in under s. 335 of the Code.

The objectors appealed.

[241] The following cases were referred to in argument.—Bhagabati Churn Bhattacharjee v. Bishenwar Sen (1) and Panye Chunder Sircar v. Hurchander Chowdhry (2).

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Agnew, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The question raised in this appeal is whether the appellants, who claim to hold the property which has been sold in execution of a decree against a third party, are entitled to object to the sale in execution of that decree under s. 311 of the Code. Section 311 allows the decree-holder, "or any person whose immoveable property has been sold," in execution of decree, to make such an objection. The appellants allege that their immoveable property, held under a title created by a tumliknana, has been sold. The Subordinate Judge has refused the application, stating that the applicants can object under s. 335 of the Code when the auction-purchaser attempts to take possession. They may have this remedy, but the question is whether they cannot also object within the terms of s. 311. We are of opinion that the words, "any person whose immoveable property has been sold," are sufficiently wide to include a person in the position of the appellants. We accordingly direct that the Subordinate Judge do proceed to hear the objections raised as provided by s. 311.

The costs will abide the result.

Rudra Perkash Misser and another (Defendants) v. Krishna Mohun Ghatuck (Plaintiff).* [26th November, 1886.]

Transfer of Property Act, s. 6, cl. (d)—Property—Actionable claim—Transferable claim—Civil Procedure Code, s. 266—Execution of decree—Attachment.

Under the Transfer of Property Act, property includes an actionable claim.

There was sold in execution of a decree the judgment-debtor's right to get by division a quantity of land which had been reserved by him [242] for his own use in a deed of gift; but which, at the time of the execution sale, was in the possession of the donee of the estate, the land never having been appropriated by measurement as provided in the deed. In a suit brought by the auction-purchaser, decree-holder for the area of the land reserved, by measurement and division: Held, that the claim of the judgment-debtor to the land was a transferable claim, and therefore capable of being attached and sold in execution under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code.

*Appeal from Original Decree No. 71 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Dwarka Nath Mitter, Rai Bahadur, Second Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, dated the 28th of December, 1888.

(1) 8 C. 367.
(2) 10 C. 496.
Shib Perkash Misser, the father of a Mitakshara family, by a deed of the 30th July 1883, made a gift of the entire ancestral estate to his minor son, Rudra Perkash, with the exception of 150 bighas of land which he reserved for himself by a clause in the deed in these terms: "Bighas 150 by measurement in Mouzah Phulbaria or any other mouzah shall remain in my possession for zerat (cultivation); the measurement and demarcation shall be made as soon as possible, and the said land should remain in my possession without payment of any rent for cultivation." By an order of the District Judge under s. 12 of Act XL of 1858, the Collector took charge of the estate on behalf of the minor. The 150 bighas of land, however, were neither marked out nor appropriated by the grantor under the provision contained in the deed of gift. On the 19th October 1882, Krishna Mohun Ghatuck brought a suit against Shib Perkash for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 5,000 due on a rukka, and in execution of his decree for the amount purchased "the judgment-debtor's right to get by division or separation 150 bighas of land by measurement in Mouzah Phulbaria or in any other mouzah within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Tegra for the purpose of cultivation," and obtained the sale certificate on the 28th March 1884; but having failed to get possession of the land from the Court of Wards, he brought a suit for that purpose on the 24th November 1884. For the defence it was contended that the suit was not maintainable, inasmuch as the agreement to give 150 bighas of land in Phulbaria or other village was void by reason of uncertainty under s. 29 of the Contract Act; that s. 21, cl. (c) of the Specific Relief Act stood in the way of its enforcement; and that the right to the land was one which, having regard to the provisions of s. 6, cl. (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, did not fall within the meaning of property which could be [243] attached and sold under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the land, though not ascertained, was ascertainable, and that what was sold was not merely a contingent or possible right or interest, but a tangible right of which Shib Perkash was the owner, his property in the 150 bighas remaining untouched by the deed of gift. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim, leaving the question open as to the subsequent devolution of the land in dispute on the death of the judgment-debtor.

On appeal to the High Court similar objections were taken.

Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar, Baboo Saligram Singh and Baboo Kishori Lall Gosswhani, for the appellants.

Baboo Sree Nath Das and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O'KINeAlY, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

It appears in this case that a person of the name of Shib Perkash Misser, in the year 1873, executed a deed of gift in favour of the first defendant, who was then his only minor son, with a reservation of certain benefits in favour of any afterborn son. The second defendant is a son who was afterwards born. The grantor retained for himself an interest in these terms: "From this date the guardian and manager for the time being shall pay me a monthly allowance of Rs. 400 for my maintenance and necessary expenses out of the profits of the gifted property, and besides that 150 bighas of land of Mouzah Phulbaria or any other mouzah, shall, on measurement, be held by me for the purpose of cultivation, and the measurement and thakbust (fixing boundaries) of the same shall be made as soon as possible, and such land shall be held and cultivated by me free of all rents.'"

Some years after the execution of this deed of gift, the present plaintiff obtained a decree against the grantor, Shib Perkash Misser. He proceeded to execute his decree, and himself became the purchaser at the execution sale. What he purchased appears from the sale-certificate, dated the 7th January 1884: It was "the judgment-debtor’s right to get by division or separation [244] 150 bighas of land by measurement in Mouzah Phulbaria, or in any other mouzah within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Tegra for the purpose of cultivation."

The plaintiff having purchased that interest brought this suit with a view to obtain the benefit of the clause in the deed of gift about 150 bighas: in other words, to have 150 bighas assigned to him.

It does not appear that at any time there was any real answer to the claim on the merits. The controversy appears to have been whether the plaintiff might not be induced to make, or compelled to submit to, some declaration as to the duration of his title to the land to which he was entitled, the doubt being whether he should hold the land only for the life of Shib Perkash Misser, or on a larger title. That question obviously does not arise now, and may very likely not arise for years, and possibly may not arise at all. However, the suit was defended, and the plaintiff obtained a decree, and this appeal has been filed before us. The only real point suggested before us is that the interest of Shib Perkash Misser in 150 bighas under the deed was not such an interest as could be attached and sold in execution of a decree. Section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code describes what property is liable to attachment and sale in execution, and after mentioning a variety of matters, it says that, "except as hereinafter mentioned, all other saleable property, moveable or immoveable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he had a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, &c." Therefore any interest which is saleable is attachable and subject to sale in execution. It is perfectly clear from the terms of the Transfer of Property Act that the interest in question is saleable. Under s. 6 of that Act, "property of any kind may be transferred, except as otherwise provided by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force." The framers of that section clearly considered that property includes an actionable claim, because cl. (c) of that section says: "A mere right to sue for compensation for a fraud or for harm illegally caused cannot be transferred." Besides this there is a whole chapter in the [245] Act, Chapter VIII, dealing with the subject of such claims, thereby placing it beyond doubt that a claim such as this is a transferable claim, and therefore capable of being attached and sold in execution within the meaning of s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Moreover the remedy sought in this suit is a proper one. It is really a suit for specific performance of the condition in the agreement about 150 bighas. Section 25 of the Specific Relief Act says: "Except as otherwise provided by this chapter, the specific performance of a contract may be obtained by (a) any party thereto; (b) the representative in interest, or the principal, of any party thereto." The plaintiff is the representative in interest of the original holder of the interest in 150 bighas. Therefore this suit was a proper suit. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

ORIGINAL CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

EMPERESS OF INDIA v. KALIPROSONNO DOSS AND OTHERS.

[26th January and 2nd February, 1886.]

The giving of any documentary evidence by an accused person, during the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, and before he is asked under s. 289 if he means to adduce evidence, does not give a right of reply to the prosecution. The Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerjee (1) followed.

In a trial before the Sessions Court the prosecution is not bound to tender for cross-examination all witnesses called before the committing Magistrate. The Court would not call a witness on whose evidence it could not put implicit reliance.

[Diss., 11 M. 339=2 Weir 381; 14 A. 212=12 A.W.N. 63; Appr., 14 A. 521=12 A.W.N. 110; F., 17 C. 930; R., 16 A. 84 (F.B.).]

The prisoners in this case were charged with cheating and abetment of cheating under ss. 420, and 109 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code.

The charges were brought at the instance of one Shoshee Bhusan Bose upon the allegation that he had been induced to pay the prisoners a sum of Rs. 3,850, and to give them to [246] promissory notes for Rs. 1,150 and a cheque for Rs. 300, upon the statement that he would be employed as the manager of their jute business at Naraingunge and Seraigunge.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips) and Mr. Dunne, for the prosecution.

Mr. M. P. Gasper and Mr. K. N. Mitter, for Kaliprosonno Doss and another.

Mr. Henderson, Mr. A. F. M. Abdur Rahman and Mr. Panioty, for the other prisoners.

During the cross-examination of the complainant Shoshee Bhusan Bose by Mr. Henderson, counsel put into the witness's hands a Thanna book containing an entry of the charge against some of the accused, which had been made at the Thanna by the complainant, and which entry purported to be signed by the complainant, and sought to prove the signature of the complainant, and to put in the entry as evidence for the defence. Before doing so, however, Mr. Henderson asked for a ruling of the Court as to whether by putting in documentary evidence during the cross-examination of the witnesses for the Crown, the prosecution thereby would be entitled to the right of reply after he had addressed the jury. He referred to the decision in the case of The Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerjee (1) as an authority that the prosecution would not be entitled to reply, and relied on the provisions of s. 289 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Dunne contended that the prosecution would be entitled to reply and stated that the decision of Mr. Justice Field relied on by Mr. Henderson had not been invariably followed, and referred to an unreported case in which Mr. Justice Norris had ruled the other way.

Trevelyan, J.—It seems to me that, having regard to the provisions of s. 289 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the putting in of documentary evidence by an accused during the hearing of the evidence of the prosecution, before he is asked whether he intends to call any evidence, does not give a right of reply to the Crown. I am referred to the decisions of Mr. Justice Field in the case of The Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerjee (1), and of Mr. Justice Norris in a case which has not been reported. The reasons for the latter decision do not appear, and I prefer to follow the decision of Mr. Justice Field above referred to, and I therefore hold that by putting in this document the accused does not give the Crown the right of reply.

After Mr. Phillips had examined a number of witnesses for the prosecution, and tendered others for cross-examination, who had been called before the Magistrate, he closed the case for the prosecution without calling Brahma Pershad Singh, an Inspector of Police, or tendering him for cross-examination. Brahma Pershad Singh was the Inspector of the Sukhea Street Thanna, where the original charge had been laid by the complainant, and he had been called as a witness for the prosecution before the Magistrate.

Mr. Gasper thereupon contended that the prosecution were bound to tender Brahma Pershad Singh for cross-examination, or that the Court should call him so as to give the prisoners an opportunity of cross-examining him, and he referred to the case of In the matter of The Empress v. Grish Chunder Talukdar (2) as an authority in support of his contention, and also to Roscoe’s Criminal Evidence, 9th Ed., p. 138. He submitted that at all events the witness should be called by the Court.

Mr. Henderson referred to s. 540 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and contended that it was clear that he was a witness of the class referred to in that section, as his evidence was essential to the just decision of the case. He also referred to the cases of R. v. Simmonds (3) and R. v. Bodle (4).

Mr. Phillips contra.—The prosecution are not bound to call any witness or to tender a witness called before the Magistrate for cross-examination. All that they are bound to do is to have such witnesses in attendance, so that the defence can call them if they like. The prosecution cannot be forced to put forward a witness on whose evidence no reliance can be placed.

RULING.

Trevelyan, J. (after taking time to consider the question)—I have been asked by Mr. Gasper to call Brahma Pershad Singh as a witness so as to give the defence an opportunity of cross-examining him. Brahma Pershad Singh was the Inspector of the Sukhea Street Thanna and was called as a witness at the Police Court. I have been referred by Mr. Henderson to the provisions of s. 540 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to two English decisions on the subject. In a case in which there is a matter necessitating enquiry, or there is a question to be cleared up, and the witness proposed to be called is one upon whose testimony the Court could place confidence, I think I should call him, but I certainly should not call any witness on whose evidence I could not place reliance, at any rate in a case in which the prisoner is defended by counsel.

I have again read over the deposition of Brahmo Pershad Singh before the Police Magistrate, and I do not think I could put implicit reliance on his evidence. I therefore decline to call him. I do not think that the prosecution is bound to tender him for cross-examination or do more than have him present in Court for the accused to call him or not as they may think fit.

Interest—Penal clause in contract—Enhanced rate of interest on default of payment of principal on due date—Penalty—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Act XXVIII of 1855, s. 2.

In a suit on a bond, wherein it was stipulated that the loan was to be repaid on a certain date and to bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, but that if the loan were not repaid on the date named the principal was to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per mensem from the date of the loan:

[289] Held, on the authority of the decision in Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (1), that the stipulation as to the payment of interest at the higher rate was not in the nature of a penalty, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount due on the bond with interest at the increased rate from the date of the bond, and that, whether the interest at the increased rate, in case of non-payment on the date fixed in the contract, was payable from the commencement of the loan or from the date fixed for the repayment of the loan, s. 74 of the Contract Act was not applicable, Mackintosh v. Crow (2) upon this point dissented from.

The decision in the case of Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (1) overrules the decision in the case of Muthura Persad Singh v. Luggung Koer (3), and all similar cases cited in Mackintosh v. Crow (2), which held that the stipulation for the payment of a higher rate of interest in the event of the non-payment of the debt on the date fixed in the contract, from the commencement of the loan, is in the nature of a penalty.

in the bond was that the loan was to bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem. It then went on to provide that, if the money were not repaid on the date mentioned above, that is, on the 14th of December, 1888, the principal should bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per mensem from the date of the loan, namely, the 14th December, 1881. The defendant, amongst other pleas taken in defence, contended that the stipulation, regarding the payment of interest at the higher rate, was in the nature of a penalty, and that he was entitled to be relieved from its full operation being enforced against him. The Subordinate Judge overruled that plea, and held that he was bound by the contract. He accordingly decreed the suit for the full amount claimed in the plaint. On appeal by the defendant the District Judge, relying upon the decision in the case of [250] Mathura Persad Singh v. Luggun Koer (1), and referring to other rulings by the Allahabad High Court to the same effect, held that the stipulation for the payment of interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per mensem should be treated as being in the nature of a penalty so far as the period, which elapsed from the date of the bond to the date fixed for repayment, was concerned. He accordingly modified the decree of the lower Court, and allowed the plaintiff interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem for that period, and at the rate of 4 per cent. per mensem for the remaining period.

Against the decree the plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Nilkant Sahoy, for the appellant.

Moulvie Mahomed Yusooof, for the respondent.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry contended that the decision of the lower Court was wrong, and that the provision as to the payment of the increased rate of interest in the event of the non-payment of the amount on the due date was not in the nature of a penalty, and therefore governed by s. 74 of the Contract Act, but was a perfectly valid agreement which fell within the provisions of s. 2 Act XXVIII of 1855. He also contended that the present case was governed by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (2).

Moulvie Mahomed Yusooof, for the respondent, contended that the case was governed by s. 74 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as the sum payable under the bond, in the event of a breach, was easily ascertainable by a mere mathematical calculation, and was therefore a sum "named" and in the nature of a penalty, and that the lower Court should have gone further than it had done, and held that the stipulation as to the increased rate of interest was of a penal nature even after the due date of the bond. He also contended that the case of Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (2) was not in point, because there the solehnama was the basis of a decree, and the rule with reference [251] to penalties does not apply to the directions contained in decrees. He also cited and relied on the following cases: Mazhar Ali Khan v. Sardar Mal (3); Bansidhar v. Bu Ali Khan (4); Behary Lall Doss v. Tej Narain (5); and Sungut Lal v. Baijnath Iloy (6).

JUDGMENTS.

Mitter, J. (after stating the facts set out above continued).—The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal, and it is contended before us that the decision of the lower appellate Court is contrary to law. The decision upon which the lower appellate Court specially relies is that in the case of Muthura Persad Singh v. Luggun Kooer (1). There the stipulation in the bond was that, in case of default of payment of the principal sum with interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem on a certain date, interest should be paid at the rate of two per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. Mr. Justice Wilson, in delivering the judgment of the Court, refers to certain cases apparently taking a contrary view, but he distinguished them from the case before him in the following way: "The former of these cases probably dealt with a document executed before the Contract Act, but however that may be, such cases differ materially from the present. In them the agreement to pay an increased rate of interest from a future day may will be regarded as a substantive part of the contract, not as a penalty for its breach; but where, as here, an increased rate of interest from the date of the bond is made payable on default, we cannot regard it in any other light than as a sum named in the contract to be paid in case of breach within the meaning of s. 74 of the Contract Act." He has more fully explained this view in a later case, namely, Mackintosh v. Crow (2). He says in the decision in that case: "Two rules of law are established by the Legislature of this country:

"First, that a man is free to contract to pay any rate of interest that he chooses upon money borrowed, and the Courts must enforce it against him (Act XXVIII of 1855, s. 2), and [252] there is nothing to hinder his agreeing with regard to the future as well as the present. He may contract to pay no interest at present, but interest hereafter; or to pay one rate of interest now and a higher or lower rate hereafter."

"Secondly,—By s. 74 of the Contract Act, 'when a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, the party complaining of such breach is entitled, whether or not actual damage is proved to have been caused thereby, to receive from the party who has broken the contract, reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named.'"

"This section, it will be observed, does away with the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages; and this must be borne in mind in dealing with cases decided before the Contract Act, many of which turned upon this distinction. Under this section, whether a sum would formerly have been held a penalty or liquidated damages, if it be named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of breach, it is to be treated, much as a penalty was before, as the maximum limit of damages."

Then he considers the question as to whether the particular case before him fell within the first or the second of the above-mentioned two rules. In the case before him the stipulation as to the payment of interest was that, in case of default, the higher rate of interest would be paid from the date of the default and not from the date of the bond. He comes to the conclusion that, where the higher rate is stipulated to be paid from date of default as in the case before him, the provisions of s. 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, would apply, but where the higher rate is, under the terms of the contract, payable from the commencement of the loan in the event of the principal being not paid on the date agreed upon, the provision of s. 74 of the Contract Act would apply. Referring to a variety of cases, all set out in his judgment, he says that: "In all such cases this element is present, that by the terms of the contract a sum is made payable by reason of the breach, capable of calculation at the time of the breach, and payable in all events, though in the second class of cases the payment is spread over a term. But where as here, the contract is merely that if the [253] money is not paid at the due date it shall thenceforth carry interest at an enhanced rate, I do not see how it can be said that there is any sum named as to be paid in case of breach. No one can say at the time of the breach what the sum will be. It depends entirely on the time for which the borrower finds it convenient to retain the use of the money. It is a fresh sum becoming due month by month, or, as the case may be, for a new consideration. And, in my opinion, the case falls under the first rule of law above mentioned, not under the second. This view of the law was acted upon by this Court in Mackintosh v. Hunt (1)."

(1) 9 C. 615.

(2) 9 C. 689.

It seems to me, with deference to his opinion, that whether the interest in the case of non-payment of the principal on the date fixed in the contract is payable from the commencement of the loan, or from the date fixed for the repayment of the loan, s. 74 of the Contract Act has no application. That section says: "When a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, the party complaining of the breach is entitled, whether or not actual damage or loss is proved to have been caused thereby, to receive from the party who has broken the contract reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named." In either of the cases mentioned above no amount is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of breach. It is true that on the date when the breach took place, the amount that under the contract would be due on that date to the creditor could be ascertained by arithmetical calculation, but that is not a case where it can be said that that amount is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of a breach. Then, again, the amount which may be ascertained by such calculations is not the whole amount which is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of a breach, even if it be conceded that the use of the word "named" does not make any difference. The whole amount which, in consequence of the breach, would be payable to the creditor cannot be precisely ascertained on the date of the breach even by arithmetical calculation, because the breach continues so long as the money [254] is not repaid after due date, and, therefore, to use the language used in the judgment of Mr. Justice Wilson, "no one can say at the time of the breach what the sum will be." One or two illustrations will help to throw considerable light on the question, whether a case of this description falls under s. 74 of the Contract Act. Suppose a loan is advanced on the condition that it is to be repaid on demand; that interest at a certain rate is to be paid upon the amount borrowed if it be paid within a certain time; but if not paid within that time but paid within another fixed time, interest is to be paid at a certain other rate, and that if, again, the money borrowed with interest be not repaid within the last mentioned time, the principal should carry interest at a certain other rate; suppose no demand is made for the payment of the money till all these dates expire, certainly it could not be said that a case of this description would fall under

(1) 2 C. 2.
s. 74, because no amount would be named here as payable in case of a breach as the higher rate of interest became payable before the demand and therefore before the date of breach. Suppose, again as it was the case in Arjan Bibi v. Asgar Ali Chowdhuri (1), no interest is chargeable under the contract for a certain time, and that if the money be not paid within that time interest would be payable at a certain stipulated rate from the commencement of the loan. Here also the case cannot fall under s. 74 of the Contract Act. It seems to me, therefore, that in both classes of cases mentioned in the judgment of Wilson, J., s. 74 of the Contract Act is not applicable. The law that is applicable is contained in s. 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, which says: “In any suit in which interest is recoverable, the amount shall be adjudged or decreed by the Court at the rate (if any) agreed upon by the parties.” In the case before us the rate agreed upon by the parties is 24 per cent. under one set of circumstances, and double that rate under another set of circumstances. It is not a case of any sum being payable in case of a breach of the contract, but the stipulation amounts to this that two different rates of interest are payable for the loan under two different sets of circumstances. The decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Balkishen Das [255] v. Run Bahadur Singh (2) fully supports the view we take. In that case the defendant executed in favour of the plaintiff a solehnama, upon the basis of which a decree was passed. The solehnama stipulated for the payment of a debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff by instalments, and it provided that the plaintiff should get interest on the decretal money at the rate of 6 per cent. per mensem from the defendant. Then it further provided that, if the first instalment be not paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fusi, then the decree-holder shall have the power to realize the principal with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem from the date of the solehnama. The date of the solehnama was the 29th March 1873, corresponding with the month of Choitro 1280. Therefore it is clear that the stipulation in the solehnama was that, in case of non-payment of the first instalment on the due date, that is, on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fusi, interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum was to be paid from the date of solehnama, that is from Choitro 1280. The rate otherwise agreed upon to be paid was 6 per cent. per annum. The High Court had held, with reference to this provision, that the double rate of interest was in the nature of a penalty. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, with reference to this decision, say: “Independently of the fact that no appeal was preferred against that decision, their Lordships are of opinion that the construction of the decree was substantially correct, though they do not concur with the High Court that the payment of a double rate of interest was in the nature of a penalty. The solehnama was an agreement fixing the rate of interest, which was to be at the rate of 6 per cent. under certain circumstances, and 12 per cent. under others.” Then further on they say: “It is scarcely necessary to refer to the argument that the stipulation for payment of interest at 12 per cent. per annum upon the whole decretal money was a penalty from which the parties ought to be relieved. It was not a penalty, and even if it were so, the stipulation is not unreasonable, inasmuch as it was a mere stipulation of interest at 12 instead of 6 per cent. per annum in a given state of circumstances.” It seems, therefore, that the case cited by the lower

Appellate Court and all the other similar cases cited in the judgment of Mr. Justice Wilson, in the case of Mackintosh v. Crow (1), ruling that the stipulation for the payment of a higher rate of interest in the event of the non-payment of the debt on the date fixed in the contract, from the commencement of the loan, is in the nature of a penalty, have been overruled by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case cited above.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will, therefore, be reversed, and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all the Courts.

Macpherson, J.—I think we are bound to follow the view taken by the Privy Council in the case referred to, and which practically overrules the decisions of this Court to which reference is made. I concur, therefore, in reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

DOYA NARAIN TEWARY (Plaintiff) v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Defendant).*

Jurisdiction—Letters Patent, 1865, s. 12—Carrying on business and personally working for gain—Secretary of State—Cause of Action—Limitation—Acknowledgment—Statute 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106, s. 65—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 19, 20.

Section 65 of 21 & 22 Vic., c. 106, does not constitute the Secretary of State a body corporate, but simply lays down that that officer and department are to be sued as a body corporate. A suit, therefore, brought against the Secretary of State is not one against any person or any real body corporate, but is one brought against a nominal defendant, such nominal defendant being put upon the record merely to enable the plaintiff to obtain the remedy secured to him by s. 65.

The words "cause of action" in s. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, mean all those things necessary to give a right of action; and in a suit for breach of contract, where leave has not been obtained to sue under that section, it must be established that the contract as well as the breach have taken place within the local limits of the Court.

[257] The work carried on by the Government of India in governing the country, in salt, opium &c., although carried on by Government officers in charge of the several departments of Government, is not, properly speaking, business carried on by Government, but work carried on for the benefit of the Indian Exchequer. The words of s. 12 "carry on business or personally work for gain" are, however, inapplicable to the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The plaintiff, a purchasing agent, sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover certain sums of money alleged to be due to him for the purchase of stores, etc., for the Second Cabul Campaign. This suit was brought more than three years after the termination of the plaintiff’s agency and more than three years after the last supply made by him as purchasing agent, but, within a few months after the final refusal of the Commissariat Department to pay him the amount claimed; held that it was doubtful if art. 61 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act would apply, as against the Secretary of State for India in Council but even if not, the suit was barred by art. 115.

The plaintiff in this case, one Doya Narain Tewary, had been appointed and posted at Peshawar, having been engaged at Cawnpore as one of the purchasing agents and gomastahs of the Commissariat Department of the Government of India in connection with the Second Cabul Expedition, on a salary of Rs. 100 per month, his appointment dating from October 1879 to October 1880, both months inclusive. As such purchasing agent and gomastah it was, as he alleged, amongst other things, his duty to make purchases of stores, miscellaneous articles, taut bags, and other things required by the Commissariat Department; to take delivery of all articles purchased by him, and to carry them to the godowns of the Commissariat Department; to remove wheat and barley from such godowns and to cause such wheat and barley to be ground, and to carry the same when ground back to the Commissariat godowns; to make advances of all sums necessary for the above purposes (although admitting that at times the Government had made advances to him for the purpose); to submit the bills to the Director and Paymaster of the department, whose duty it was to examine such bills and to forward the same with his own observations thereon to the Examiner of Commissariat Accounts, by whom the said bills were further checked and passed for such amounts as the said Examiner deemed to be proper; and that any retrenchments made by the latter officer were subject to appeal to the Comptroller of Military Accounts and to further reference to the Government of India, and that any balance in his favour, if any, would not become due until the final adjustment of the bills by the abovementioned officers.

Between the months of October 1879 and October 1880 the plaintiff made various purchases and did various acts falling under the category of the duties set out above, giving Government credit in his accounts for certain payments made, and eventually sending in a bill for the balance of the amount due to him amounting to Rs. 2,52,084-14-5. Correspondence passed between the plaintiff and the officers of the Commissariat Department regarding the payment of this balance, and also between the plaintiff's attorney and the Commissariat officers.

The following are extracts from some of the letters from officers of the Commissariat Department to the plaintiff or his attorney, put in by the plaintiff as tending to show that the account was treated as an open account, and as showing acknowledgment of liability on the part of the defendant, viz:—

12th July 1881.—"Your bill dated 6th January 1881 is returned for explanation why charges for November 1879 were not submitted until January 1881. As regards your charges for empty bags a statement is sent which shows that the cash, as far as has been ascertained, of 7,777 bags only is due to you."

(Sd.) C. F. Hallett,
Deputy Accountant-General.

13th July 1882.—"In reply to your letter, dated 6th July 1882, I have to state as regards meeting your client amicably, I am prepared to entertain any just claims of his for which he can furnish vouchers and authority without your definitely stating the dates and amounts charged on each of the bills referred to......I believe that all claims for which vouchers were furnished have been allowed, and if your client wishes other claims passed to him without proper vouchers he should appeal to higher authority, as this office has no power to pass charges unless properly vouched."

(Sd.) C. E. Tatten,
Assistant Commissary-General.

4th August, 1882.—"I request you will direct Doya Narain Tewary to proceed to the office of the Deputy Commissary-General, Lower Circle, and submit to him all the orders received in original, when the Deputy Comptroller-General will personally investigate the entire matter.

(Sd.) W. C. K. Mylne, Commissary-General.

[259] 12th August, 1882.—"In reply to your letter, dated 4th August, 1882, I beg to request you will communicate with the officer in charge, Commissariat Field Account Office, Calcutta, who will enquire into and consider your client's claims.

(Sd.) A. W. Montague, Col.,
Assistant Commissary-General.

27th June, 1882.—"Informs him that his bill for taut bags is under reference, and that claim for 508 maunds barley has been disallowed by the Examiner. His other re-charged bills are received and will be taken in hand shortly."

(Sd.) C. E. Hallet,
Deputy Accountant-General.

7th October, 1882.—"With reference to your letter of the 30th September, 1882, I request reference to my letter, dated 4th September, 1882, intimating that had the case been brought to notice of this office earlier it might have been settled, and that now I see nothing for it but to let it stand over till the return from England of Captain Patch in April next."

(Sd.) A. W. Montague,
for Commissary General.

Enclosure contained in letter of the 7th October, 1882, dated 4th September, 1882, from the Commissary-General to plaintiff's attorney.—"In Captain Patch's absence there are no means of ascertaining how it came to pass that the articles said to have been ordered were not taken over. Lieutenant-Colonel Judge died lately, and therefore it is not possible at present to give orders on the case, as for some of the articles it is shown that verbal orders were alone given. It may be that, owing to delay in delivery, the articles were not received, and the records must be looked into on the office arriving in Calcutta next October to ascertain if any orders were issued cancelling those, copies of which have been submitted to Doya Narain......I see nothing but to let the case stand over till return from England of Captain Patch in April next."

(Sd.) A. W. Montague,
Assistant Commissary General.

20th December, 1882.—"Informs him with reference to his letter of the 9th December, 1882, that the eleven bills of his client Doya Narain Tewary aggregating Rs. 1,11,365-12-4, will after check in this office be submitted for the orders of the Comptroller of Military Accounts."

(Sd.) C. F. Thomas,
Examiner of Commissariat Accounts.
23rd December, 1882.—"Is informed with reference to his letter dated 22nd instant, that the claims preferred by Doya Narain Tewary have been submitted to and are now with the Government of India whose instructions in the matter are awaited."

(Sd.) W. T. Chitty, Comptroller of Military Accounts.

[260] 20th January 1883.—"Instructions have just been received from the Government of India, authorizing the payment to Doya Narain Tewary of such sum as the Examiner of Commissariat Accounts is prepared to admit as correct. Any claims which cannot be adjusted at present must, I am to say, be held over until the return from furlough in April next of Deputy Commissary General Captain R. Patch, who was in charge of the Field Department at the time the purchases were made."

(Sd.) W. Chitty, Comptroller of Military Accounts.

22nd January 1883.—"A statement of the amounts" (due to Doya Narain Tewary) "that can now be admitted is under preparation in this office, and will be forwarded to him as soon as the same is complete."

(Sd.) C. F. Thomas, Examiner of Commissariat Accounts.

8th February 1883.—"Has the honour to inform him...that his client's claim to costs of taut bags, &c., has again this day been referred to the Comptroller of Military Accounts, to whom his letter has been sent. On receipt of instructions the matter will be disposed of."

(Sd.) C. F. Thomas, Examiner of Commissariat Accounts.

15th February 1883.—"Has the honour to inform him that the claim for Rs. 36,041-11-3 preferred by his client Doya Narain Tewary on account of taut cloth bags, &c., alleged to have been purchased by him during the late Cabul Expedition will be enquired into on the return from furlough of Captain Patch in April next."

(Sd.) C. F. Thomas, Examiner of Commissariat Accounts.

6th March 1883.—"Has the honour to forward a statement showing the amount that can now be admitted from the claims preferred by his client Doya Narain Tewary. The items in this statement marked B cannot be disposed of for the reason stated against each. His client should furnish the information or vouchers required. The final statement of the remaining items claimed by his client must be held over till the return of Captain Patch from furlough next month."

(Sd.) C. F. Thomas, Examiner of Commissariat Accounts.

1st May 1883.—"With reference to his letters, noted in the margin, has the honour to state that a statement of the unadjusted claim of his client Doya Narain Tewary is under preparation, and will be forwarded to the Deputy Accountant-General with the least possible delay."

(Sd.) C. F. Thomas, Comptroller of Military Accounts.
Payment of the amount claimed was refused. The plaintiff therefore brought this suit in the High Court of Calcutta on the [261] 19th April, 1884, against the Secretary of State, on notice under s. 424 of the Civil Procedure Code, not having obtained leave to sue in the High Court under s. 12 of the Charter, to recover the amount due and for an account, stating that his cause of action accrued in January 1884, when the authorities in charge of the Commissariat Department, after a protracted correspondence on both sides, refused to pay the amount claimed, partly at Cawnpore where he was engaged, partly at Peshawar where he supplied goods, and partly in Calcutta where he was refused payment; and as claiming exemption from the effect of the Limitation Act, he stated that the correspondence above referred to contained ample acknowledgments of an open account and of the liability of the Secretary of State, and that on the 23rd January, 1884, the Commissariat Officer had made part payments to him on account of work done by him in his capacity as such agent and gomastah.

The defendant denied that it was part of the plaintiff’s duty to advance monies for the purpose of carrying out orders, and alleged that it was the plaintiff’s duty to submit daily bills of all purchases made to the Commissariat officers for signature, which were then returned to the gomastahs to be submitted as vouchers in support of their bills when payment was required. That the decision of the Commissariat officer, in regard to amounts disallowed in bills, was final, but that it was the custom to allow agents to submit re-charge bills, so as to give an opportunity to the agents of producing any vouchers or evidence in support of the charges disallowed, which they had failed to produce with the original bills. He further stated that the plaintiff had persistently failed to submit monthly accounts, and stated that payment of all that was justly due to the plaintiff had been made, and alleged that the suit was barred by limitation, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the case.

The suit came on for hearing before two Judges on the Original Side of the Court, when documentary evidence was put in as tending to show what were the duties of the plaintiff and the rules under which he worked, as also the correspondence which passed between the plaintiff or his attorney and the Commissariat officer. The plaintiff also called certain witnesses who proved that [262] the Secretary of State carried on business in Calcutta, and worked for gain there by selling jail produce at the jail depot, by the sale of opium at the Government opium sales held in Calcutta, and the receipt of money therefor, and by charging for advertisements issued in the Gazette of the Government of India, and by taking receipts from the Eastern Bengal State Railway.

It was, however, agreed by counsel on both sides that the two following preliminary issues should first be decided, and that if they were decided in favour of the plaintiff, the question of the examination and of the adjustment of accounts should be referred to an officer of the Court.

Issues: (1) whether or not the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit; and (2) whether or not the suit was barred by limitation.

Mr. Pugh, Mr. Gasper, and Mr. Stephen, for the plaintiff.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and the Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. Bonnerjee), for the defendant.

Mr. Pugh contended that the cause of action arose wholly in Calcutta, because the money claimed in the suit was payable at Calcutta; that a cause of action is said to arise wholly in a place where a breach of contract upon which a particular suit is brought takes place; and that if the business of governing the country was not considered to be business within the meaning of s. 12 of the Letters Patent, still the Government carried on various trades, viz., in opium, in salt, in printing, and the principal places of business of such trades were located in Calcutta; and cited in support of these points the following cases, viz., on the question of jurisdiction given by the Secretary of State "dwellings and carrying on business at Calcutta."—Biprodas Dey v. Secretary of State for India (1), a case similar to the present, in which Pigot, J., decided on the 8th June 1885 that the High Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. [The judgment of that case, so far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned, will be found in a note* attached hereto,] [263] Penin-

(1) Suit No. 357 of 1884. 14 C. 262 N.

Biprodas Dey v. Secretary of State for India in Council. The plaintiff sued the Secretary of State claiming a sum of Rs. 31,300, alleged to be [263] the balance then remaining unpaid of monies which became due to him in respect of his employment as station gomastha at Quetta during the first Cabul Campaign. Counsel appeared for both parties.

The question of jurisdiction was raised by the defendant, and the following is the judgment on that point given by Pigot, J., on the 8th June 1885, sitting alone on the Original Side of the High Court: "As to jurisdiction, it was contended that the Secretary of State does not carry on business within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Court; and that, therefore, as no part of the cause of action arose here, the suit would not lie, or that, as some part at least of the cause of action arose outside the jurisdiction, and leave has not been obtained under clause 12 of the Charter, the suit would not lie. Rundle v. Secretary of State (1) was relied on as to this point. Further it was argued on the authority of James, L. J., in Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India (2), that the Secretary of State is not, in any sense, a person; he is a mere name under which the Government here is to be sued, and cannot, in any sense, be said to dwell or carry on business within the local limits. For the plaintiff it was argued that the observations of Wells, J., in Rundle's case relied on by the defendant were in truth obiter dicta; that the suit was substantially a suit for land outside the jurisdiction, and must have failed on that ground, and that the observations in question, constituting the greater part of the judgment, do not profess to be more than the opinion of the learned Judge, offered for the guidance of the profession. It was also pointed out that the view expressed in that case has never been followed in any other, although many cases have been since decided in which that view, if acted on, would have been decisive. I think there can be no doubt that, upon the decisions in this Court, that suit was substantially a suit for land within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent: see the case of the Delhi & London Bank v. Wodrie (3). Strictly speaking, no doubt, the relief claimed in such cases is relief in personam by which rights in respect of land are indirectly secured. But that distinction has not been recognised, and the substantial effect of the suit has been regarded as the test in applying the terms of cl. 12. That, indeed, appears to have been to some extent the view of Wells, J., in Rundle's case. See his observations at p. 40.

[264] There is much force in the argument that the part of the judgment in Rundle's case which construes the words of cl. 12, was not intended to be more than obiter dictum; to be regarded, of course, with the great respect due to the authority of the learned Judge who decided the case, but not necessary for the decision of it.

I own that it seems to me very difficult, if the Secretary of State be, in this country, a legal person in any sense, to hold that he does not carry on business in Calcutta. He enters into contracts, as for instance, in the conduct of the opium business of the Government, instituting suits in respect of breaches of such contracts, and appears as a judgment-creditor in this Court and in the Insolvent Court. The State Railways are held and their affairs conducted in his name, and some of them have their chief places of business here.

But it appears to me that Rundle's case, taking it as founded on the proposition that the Secretary of State does not carry on business within the jurisdiction, does not conclude the plaintiff in this suit.

This suit arises out of a contract between the plaintiff and the Government of India, which contract as plaintiff alleges, has been broken. Section 416 of the Code enacts that suits by or against the Government shall be instituted by or against (as the case may be) the Secretary of State for India in Council. I think in the absence of such a provision this suit would lie against the Government of India, in Calcutta, the capital and chief seat of that Government. I agree with (if I may say so) and follow the view laid down by Sir Colley Scotland, C. J., in Subbaraya Mudali v. The Government (1) upon this point. A contrary opinion is, or perhaps is expressed by Wells, J., in Rundle's case at p. 46; but I confess myself, if that be so, unable to follow it; it is, moreover, as pointed out in argument by defendant's counsel, founded upon an inaccurate quotation of the words of cl. 12, which are there cited as "carry on business and personally work for gain," "and" being used in place of the disjunction "or" —a very material difference. In any case, the question discussed by Wells, J., at that place was whether the Secretary of State did "carry on business" within the jurisdiction by reason of the business of Government being there carried on. It is not exactly the same question as that decided by Sir C. Scotland whose view I should, in any case, however, follow upon this point.

[265] If it be the law that the Government (or now the Secretary of State) can only be sued in the High Courts, if all or, with leave granted, part of the cause of action arose within the local limits, then the following cases were gone into and decided without jurisdiction—Ross Johnson v. Secretary of State (2), dismissed, no doubt, on the merits, but entertained without jurisdiction if Rundle's case is conclusive. The P. and O. S. N. Company v. Secretary of State (3), decided by PEACOCK, C.J., JACKSON, J. and WELLS, J.—In that case, as was admitted in argument in the present, the cause of action arose outside the local limits. That no doubt was a case from the Small Cause Court. Brito v. Secretary of State (4) before the present Chief Justice Sargent, in which case the cause of action arose outside Bombay. Hari Bhanji v. Secretary of State (5), in which case the cause of action arose outside the jurisdiction, and Rundle's case was cited. These are only the reported cases. I know nothing of those cases, if there have been any, which have not been reported. Certainly, so far as my own experience can guide me, I should say that the view of Sir Colley Scotland is that which has generally been received; nor should it be disregarded that the presumption is in favour of jurisdiction in the case of a superior Court such as this, and if there be any ambiguity in the terms of the Charter, I think the construction of them should be in favour of the jurisdiction of this High Court.

Further, it is to be observed, as admitted by the learned Advocate-General in the course of his argument, that, if the proposition for which he contended be well founded in this case, and cases like it, the plaintiff would be absolutely without remedy. In the High Court sitting in the Capital of India, a Court intentionally and deliberately, invested with as high a dignity as the Crown could confer upon it, a party is without remedy against the Crown. Can that be a construction which can be reasonably adopted? Must not a construction be put upon the Charter which would avoid a conclusion so monstrous?

The Advocate-General argued that a party was not to be pitied if he was left only to the moderation, to the discretion of the Government, or that portion of the Administration with which he happened to deal. It may be so. It has not been hitherto the principle on which the administration of justice has been organized in this country.

No part of that system was originally organized with greater care than that part which provided that breaches of contract or wrongs committed by the officers of Government or by Government itself, should have a complete remedy in Courts whose absolute independence was secured by law.

I hold, therefore, that so far as the question of jurisdiction goes, that Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

[On the question of limitation the case was dismissed. On appeal the finding of the lower Court as to limitation was upheld, the question of jurisdiction not being taken.]

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) contended that in the case of Biprodas Dey v. Secretary of State there was this circumstance that, unless the case had been tried in the High Court, the plaintiff would have been without a remedy, all the goods having been supplied out of British India; that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was given by s. 13 of the Charter of 1774 and extended by 21 Geo. III., c. 70, s. 17; that the word "inhabitants" as used in that section must be taken to have been split into two classes of persons; 1st, actual inhabitants, those who actually dwelt in Calcutta; and 2nd, constructive inhabitants, those who held places of business, or had gomastahs dwelling in Calcutta. See Morton's Reports, 385-386.

[267] That by s. 12 of Letters Patent of 1865 ordinary jurisdiction was given to the High Court, and thereby the jurisdiction of the High Court on the Original Side was put on a different footing; that the question in this case was whether the 12th clause of the Charter applied to the Government, that clause referring to such persons "as carry on business, dwell or personally work for gain: " that the case of Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India in Council (25) held that the Secretary of State is not such a person; that 21 & 22 Vic., c. 106, an Act for the better Government of India, transferred the Government of India to the Queen, and all officers of Government here are in the position of Vice-Regents, the Government of India not being a governing power but a governing agent; that as to this see ss. 6, 39, 41, 64; 65.

That the words "personally work for gain" covered the case of a person working through an agent; that under s. 65 of 21 & 22 Vic., c. 106, the Secretary of State could be sued as a corporation in England, and that the only jurisdiction against the Secretary of State here, in cases of the present kind, would be, when the cause of action arose wholly or in part within the jurisdiction, that the Government could not be the real person sued, for they were only the servants of the Queen.

That the decision in Rundle v. Secretary of State (1), although said to be "obiter" on the question of jurisdiction, was not so; that that case had been followed by Hearsay v. Secretary of State (2); and Subbaraya Mudali v. The Government (3). That the instances brought forward by the plaintiff of the trading operations of the Secretary of State were not really instances of trading, but were matters of revenue. That the dual character of Government, viz., as Government and traders, passed away when the E. I. Co. ceased to exist; that the railways, telegraph, and postal arrangements were carried on by Government not for profit, but for the purpose of keeping up communications; that the case of Judah v. Secretary of State (4) showed that the proceeds of the sale of opium were part of the revenues of the country; that the case of the P. and O. Co. v. Secretary of State (5), [268] proceeded upon words in s. 65 of 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106; and that the law applicable here was that laid down in Cherry v. Thompson (6).

On the point of limitation—that there was no evidence of any special contract; that the mere fact of putting in recharge bills could not extend the period of limitation; that the letters made no sufficient acknowledgment of the debts—they merely admitted a limited liability of certain items which were admittedly due, and allowed the plaintiff to send in his bills. Counsel also referred to and distinguished the cases of Chasemore v. Turner (7), Prance v. Sympson (8), Inghis v. Haigh (9), Edmonds v. Goater (10), as showing that these referred to acknowledgments of debts, whereas the letters in this case did not.

Mr. Pugh, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Mitter, J. (Trevelyan, J., concurring).—The plaintiff in this case was appointed at Cawnpore in the North-Western Provinces, in the month of October 1879, as a purchasing agent and gomastah of the Commissariat Department of the Government of India to purchase stores, miscellaneous articles, &c., required for the troops assembled for the Second Cabul Expedition on a salary of Rs. 100 per month. His employment, which was in the Punjab Province, lasted till the month of October 1880.

His case is that the Commissariat Department, from time to time, made advances to him, but that, as a rule, he had to advance money out of his own funds to carry out his duties as such purchasing agent and gomastah.

He sues the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover the sum of Rs. 2,52,034-14-5, or such other sum as may be found due to him on taking of an account of the sums paid to him, and of the sums spent by him in the course of his employment.

The suit was instituted on the 19th of April 1884, on the Original Side of this Court, without previous leave being obtained under the provisions of s. 12 of the Letters Patent. It is [269] stated in the plaint that the cause of action accrued in the month of January, 1884, when the authorities in charge of the Commissariat Department, after a protracted correspondence between the plaintiff and his attorney on the one hand and the said department on the other, finally refused to pay the amount claimed by him.

The plaintiff states further that it was understood that his employment was to be subject to the rules of the said department, regarding the investigation and passing of the bills, and accounts to be submitted by him from time to time; that according to the said rules it was his duty to submit his bills and accounts, first, to his immediate superior, the executive Commissariat officer, who would forward the same with his opinion to the Examiner of Commissariat Accounts; that the said Examiner of Commissariat Accounts, after necessary investigation, would pass the bills for such amounts as to him might seem proper; that the retrenchments made by the latter officer would be subject to appeal to the Comptroller of Military Accounts, and to further appeal to the Government of India; and that the balance, if any, in his favour would not become due until the final adjustment of his bills and accounts thus arrived at.

Various pleas have been taken in the defence, but it was agreed on both sides that two preliminary issues should be decided first, and that if they were decided in favour of the plaintiff, the question of the examination and adjustment of accounts should be referred to an officer of this Court.

These issues are: (1) whether or not this Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit; and (2) whether or not it is barred by limitation.

The Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court, regarding suits for recovery of money, is thus defined in s. 12 of the Letters Patent: "That the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, shall be empowered to receive, try and determine suits of very description, &c., &c., &c., &c., (1) if the cause of action have arisen either wholly, or in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part, within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the said [270] High Court; (2) or if the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit shall dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within such limits."

In this case it is admitted in the plaint that the cause of action did not arise wholly within the said local limits. Notwithstanding this admission it was contended in the course of the argument that the cause of action did arise wholly within the said limits, because the money claimed in the suit was payable in Calcutta. Supposing that it was payable in Calcutta, still the cause of action would not arise wholly there. But it was urged on behalf of the plaintiff that a cause of action arises wholly in a place where the breach of contract, upon which a particular suit is brought, takes place. In support of this contention the case of Muhammed Abdul Kadar v. The East India Railway Company (1) has been cited; but the view taken in this case is in conflict with the whole series of cases involving this point decided by this Court see Greeshunder Bonnerjee v. Collins (2); Indian Carrying Company v. McCarthy (3). There is not a single case decided by this Court in which the view taken by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court.—Muhammed Abdul Kadar v. The East India Railway Company (1)—was adopted. It has been uniformly held here that the words "the whole cause of action" in s. 12 of the Letters

Patent mean all things necessary to give a right of action, and that in a suit for breach of contract it must be established that the contract, as well as the breach thereof, have taken place within the local jurisdiction of the Court. When the law has thus been settled in this Court by a current of decisions, we would not be justified in disturbing it. But in this case, as I shall show, in dealing with the question of limitation, there is no foundation for the contention that the breach of the contract took place in Calcutta.

Therefore, under the first head of jurisdiction laid down in s. 12 of the Letters Patent, the present suit is not cognizable by this Court.

[271] Neither is it cognizable under the second head of jurisdiction. In discussing this question it is material to consider the nature of the suit and the position and the connection of the defendant with reference to the claim involved in it.

It is enacted in s. 65 of the Act for the better government of India, 21 & 22 Vic., c. 106, that "the Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue and be sued as well in India as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate, and all persons and bodies politic shall and may have and take the same suits, remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable, against the Secretary of State in Council of India as they could have done against the said Company, and the property and effects hereby vested in Her Majesty for the purposes of the Government of India, or acquired for the said purposes, shall be subject and liable to the same judgments and executions as they would, while vested in the said Company, have been liable in respect of debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred by the said Company." This section does not constitute the "Secretary of State in Council" a body corporate, but it simply lays down that that officer and department are to be sued as a body corporate, the object of the suit being to obtain satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, if it should be decreed, out of the Indian Exchequer. A suit of this kind is not really against any person or any real body corporate. But it is allowed to be brought against the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate. In other words as a suit cannot be brought without a defendant, a nominal defendant is allowed to be put upon the record to enable the plaintiff to obtain the remedy secured to him by this section. I am supported in this view by the following observations of Lord Justice James in Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1). "When you look," says his Lordship, "at the Act 21 & 22 Vic., c. 106, which put an end to the East India Company, all the property and assets of the East India Company were not transferred to any body corporate which were successors to the East India Company, but were vested in the Crown in trust for the Government of India; and [272] the words 'the Secretary of State for India in Council,' which are mere words providing that that officer and department could be capable of suing and being sued, are nothing more in my judgment than words indicating the mode by which the Government of India is to sue and be sued; that is to say, the mode in which the Indian Exchequer might itself institute proceedings, and might be made the subject of proceedings, for the purpose of determining the rights between any of Her Majesty's subjects and that Government. But the Government of India is not, it appears to me, capable of being a trustee; nor is the Secretary of State for India in Council (the name by which the Government can be sued) a person capable of being a trustee any more than the Attorney-General in this country would be, or any other person who sues in certain cases for or on behalf of the Crown." The words "the Secretary of State for India in Council," as observed by his Lordship, indicate the mode by which the Indian Exchequer is to be sued. Further on his Lordship says, referring to the words "the Secretary of State for India in Council":

(1) L. R. 15 Ch Div. 8.

"There is no such body known except as a name, as I said before, for suing and being sued on behalf of the Indian Exchequer."

This being the nature of the suit contemplated by s. 65 of the Act for the better Government of India, and the defendant on the record being a mere name used for the purpose of prosecuting the suit, the words by which the second head of jurisdiction has been defined in s. 12 of the Letters Patent are in my opinion inapplicable to it. The same view was taken by Wells, J., in Rundle v. The Secretary of State in Council (1). He says: "The words 'carry on business and personally work for gain' do not refer to an institution like the Government of India." He further held, that the carrying on of the business of the Government cannot be considered to be carrying on of business within the meaning of the 12th section of the Letters Patent. It is somewhat difficult, nor is it necessary in this case, to define exactly what may be deemed as "business" within the meaning of s. 12 of the Letters Patent; but it is [273] clear to me that the business of governing the country is not business within the meaning of s. 12 of the Letters Patent. It may be useful here to cite the case of Nobin Chunder v. Buroda Kant Shah (2); and of the Anonymous case (3) in which it was held that zamindari business is not business of the kind contemplated in s. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the cases Sangster v. Kay (4), and Buckley v. Hann (5) in which "it was held that clerks in Government offices cannot be said by reason of their being so to carry on business within the jurisdiction of the County Courts in which these offices are situate." That the word "business" in s. 12 of the Letters Patent was used in a restricted sense is also indicated by the words "personally work for gain" to be found in the same section. The latter words would be unnecessary if the word "business" had been intended to be used in an unrestricted sense.

In Subbaraya Mudal i v. The Government (6), Scotland, C. J., says: "The words carrying on business can, we think, reasonably be applied to the Government as a deliberative body. Being of that opinion he held that a suit brought against the Government which was located within the limits of Madras was properly brought on the Original Side of the Madras High Court. It seems to me that quite apart from the question whether the business of governing the country is business within the meaning of s. 12 of the Letters Patent, it was overlooked in that case that under s. 65 of 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106, the suit should have been considered as brought against the Secretary of State for India in Council. If this fact had been present to the mind of the learned Chief Justice of Madras he would have come to the conclusion that the suit was not cognizable by the High Court; because in another part of his judgment he held that, by s. 12 of the Letters Patent, "a personal attendance to business was intended." This could not have been predicated of the Secretary of State in Council.

(1) 1 Hyde 37.  (2) 19 W. R. 341.  (3) 23 W. R. 223.
(4) 5 Ex. 386.  (5) 5 Ex. 43.  (6) 1 M. II. C. 286.
It has been said that supposing the business of governing the country is not business within the meaning of s. 12 of the Letters Patent, still the Government in this country carries on various trades, such as the trades in opium and salt, and the principal places of business of these trades are located in Calcutta. But these trades are not carried on by the defendant in this case. As already observed, the words carrying on of a business or trade are inapplicable to this case. These trades, if they can be properly called trades, are carried on in one sense by the Government officers in charge of them, but they are so carried on for the benefit of the Indian Exchequer. For these reasons I am of opinion that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit.

On the second issue I am also of opinion that the plaintiff's suit fails. It seems to me that the present suit is based upon an implied contract on the part of the Commissariat Department to pay whatever money has been advanced by the plaintiff for the purchase of stores, miscellaneous articles, &c., in the course of his employment as a gomastah and purchasing agent of that department. It is stated in the written statement that it was understood at the time when the plaintiff was appointed a gomastah and purchasing agent in the Commissariat Department, that he was to be kept supplied with sufficient funds to effect the purchases of the articles that might be required to purchase for the use of the troops. The case for the plaintiff is, that by the rules of the department, subject to which his appointment was made, he was required to advance funds for these purchases from time to time, and that the money so advanced by him would not become due until his bills and accounts had been finally adjusted in the mode described in the plaint.

Beyond the fact that there are certain rules observed in the Commissariat Department for investigating and finally passing the accounts of a gomastah, the plaintiff has not adduced any evidence in support of the case set up by him. It is not necessary to ascertain with any degree of precision what these rules are; because it seems to me that their existence has no bearing upon the question whether it was intended, as alleged by the plaintiff that a purchasing gomastah should be required to advance money when necessary from his own funds to make the purchases which he would be required to make. Upon this point the plaintiff has adduced no evidence at all. In ordinary cases, when an agent is engaged on a small monthly pay without any further remuneration, to make purchases on behalf of his principal, in the absence of any express contract to the contrary, it would be reasonable to hold that it is understood that the principal should always keep the agent supplied with funds to make the required purchases. But in this case we have these additional facts. From the correspondence and bills filed as exhibits, it appears that the plaintiff was not entitled to charge interest as a matter of right upon the advances, if any, made by him. No such interest has been charged in these bills, and in some of these letters the plaintiff intimated to the Commissariat officers that, if his accounts were not settled speedily, he would claim interest. It is further clear upon the materials placed on the record that, when the plaintiff was appointed, it was well known to him that the funds that would be required for the purchases to be effected by him as Commissariat gomastah and purchasing agent, would be considerably large. Under these circumstances I think it may be reasonably concluded that the understanding was that the plaintiff was to be always kept supplied with funds to effect the purchases that he would be directed to make.
Having regard to this understanding it seems to me that, if on any occasion the plaintiff happened to have advanced money out of his own pocket to make any of these purchases, he was entitled to demand immediate payment of it. An agreement under the circumstances set forth above would be implied on the part of the Commissariat Department to repay immediately the money advanced by the plaintiff. If the money be not paid immediately there would be a breach of the contract, which would entitle the plaintiff to maintain an action for the recovery of the money advanced. In this state of things, in an ordinary case, art. 61 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act would be applicable. But it is doubtful whether the money in this case could be said to have been paid for the defendant who, as already observed, is a mere name. But if art. 61 is not applicable, then the suit would fall under art. 115, which is a sweeping Article providing for all cases of breach of contract [276] not specially provided for in the Act. The suit was brought in 1884, that is, more than three years after the termination of the plaintiff's agency, and therefore more than three years after the last supply made by him as a gomastah and purchasing agent. It is, therefore, barred under art. 115. Even if we hold that the breach took place when the money was demanded, and not paid, still the suit would be barred.

In the course of the argument, several letters were referred to as containing acknowledgments of liability on the part of the Government. But I have carefully examined these documents, I do not find any acknowledgment of liability contained in them which would bring the case within s. 19 of the Limitation Act. Nor is it shown that the present suit is saved from the bar of limitation by the second para. of s. 20. There is not a single instance in which a part payment within three years has been made of an admitted debt.

The result is that the plaintiff's suit will be dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Beverley.

MAHOMED ABID ALI KUMAR KADAR (Plaintiff) v. LUDDEN SAHIBA, MINOR, THROUGH HER GUARDIAN SRIMATI AMIR BAHU (Defendant).* [16th June, 1886.]

In a suit brought by a Mahomedan of the Shiah sect against his wife, belonging to the same persuasion, for a declaration that the relationship of husband and wife had terminated, and that he was not liable to pay maintenance to her which he had been directed to do by an order passed under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the allegation that the [277] marriage was of a

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1843 of 1885, against the decree of C. B. Garrett, Esq., Judge of 24-Parganas, dated the 21st of July 1885, reversing the decree of Baboo Krishna Chunder Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 8th of September 1884.
mula form, and that he, on the 22nd February 1882, had made hiba-i-muddat (gift of the term) of whatever period there then might remain unexpired, the wife pleaded inter alia that her husband was not competent to dissolve the marriage tie within the contracted period without her consent, and that, if under the Mahomedan law the consent was unnecessary, the Court was bound, in administering justice, equity and good conscience, to modify the strict law in this respect.

Held that, although the ordinary law of divorce does not exist in respect of marriages by the mula form, they can nevertheless be terminated by the husband giving away the unexpired portion of the term for which the marriage was contracted, and the consent or acceptance on the part of the wife is not necessary for the dissolution of the marriage.

Held further that, although the Court could not grant an injunction restraining the Magistrate from enforcing the order for maintenance, the plaintiff was entitled to ask the Magistrate to abstain from giving further effect to his order after the Civil Court had found that the relationship of husband and wife had ceased to exist.

The parties to this suit were nearly connected with the ex-King of Oudh, the plaintiff being his second son and the defendant the niece of one of his wives. They both of them belonged to the Shiah community, and contracted a mula marriage under the Shiah law towards the end of 1879. Not long after (the exact date was in dispute, and was not material to the decision of this appeal), they separated, and, in consequence, the defendant, early in 1882, applied to the Magistrate to obtain an order for maintenance under the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application was refused on the ground that, as a mula wife, she had no right to maintenance. A Division Bench of the High Court acting as a Court of Revision set aside this order, and directed the Magistrate to determine whether the defendant was still the wife of the plaintiff—In the matter of the Petition of Ludden Sahiba (1). On the 22nd of May, 1882, the Magistrate directed the plaintiff to pay maintenance to the defendant as his wife. The plaintiff now sued to have it declared that the relationship of husband and wife had terminated, the defendant being no longer his wife; and further that she was not entitled, under any circumstances, to maintenance. It is unnecessary to refer to the other prayers set out in the plaint, because [278] they were not pressed on behalf of the appellant at the hearing of the appeal.

The plaintiff’s case was that he married the defendant in the mula form, that is to say, he contracted a temporary marriage with her, for the period of one month and a half, on a dower of Rs. 25; that after the lapse of one month, being dissatisfied with her, he gave away the unexpired period and thereupon dissolved the marriage; that subsequently, on the 22nd of February 1882, while the proceedings already mentioned were pending before the Magistrate, he again, as a matter of precaution, formally gave away the unexpired portion of the period for which the mula marriage had been contracted, in the Court of the presiding Magistrate, and that even if, notwithstanding this giving away of the term, it should be held that the defendant was still his wife, she was, under the Mahomedan law obtaining amongst the Shiah community, not entitled to maintenance as a mula wife.

The defendant replied that she was married to the plaintiff by the mula form for fifty years, and for a dower of Rs. 250, and that the plaintiff further agreed to pay her sufficient for her maintenance and support.

and to provide her with a separate house for her residence. She denied any knowledge of the plaintiff having given away the unexpired period for which the muta marriage had been contracted, and she contended that, under the Shiah law, the plaintiff was not competent to dissolve the marriage in the manner alleged without her consent. She, therefore, asserted that she was still the lawfully married wife of the plaintiff.

The Subordinate Judge found that the period for which the marriage was contracted was not one month and a half as stated by the plaintiff, so that the marriage had not come to an end by the expiration of that term. But he found that whatever that term might have been, the plaintiff gave away the unexpired period in the presence of the Magistrate. He next found that the defendant’s consent was not material to the giving away of the unexpired period by the plaintiff, but that this depended entirely on the option of the plaintiff. He accordingly concluded that the marriage had been dissolved, and that the [279] Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in directing that the plaintiff should pay maintenance to the defendant as his lawfully married wife.

The District Judge on appeal concurred with the Subordinate Judge in disbelieving the statement of the plaintiff in respect of the term for which the marriage was contracted, but he thought it unnecessary to find the exact time agreed on, although he expressed his disbelief also of the defendant’s statement in this respect. He also agreed with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff had dissolved the marriage by, as he termed it, "adjudging all right to the use of the person" of the defendant, but he said that "the plaintiff cannot, so long as the defendant chooses to adhere to him, strike off the vinculum matrimonii unless the wife chooses to join him by accepting and profiting by the freedom he offers her." "He can," the District Judge proceeded, "free her from the obligation to yield him conjugal rights: he was never under the obligation to maintain or house her, but still he cannot shake himself free from the vinculum matrimonii. She is still his wife until the term expires, or she herself snaps the fetter by emancipating herself from his power by ceasing to adhere to the term," that is to say, so long as she lived a chaste life. In this view, the District Judge set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit.

Mr. Evans, Mr. P. L. Roy and Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf, for the appellant.

Mr. Amir Ali, Mr. Abul Hossen and Moulvi Serajul Islam, for the respondent.

Mr. Evans (for the appellant).—The question whether the defendant is still a muta wife of the plaintiff depends on the question of whether the hiba-i-muddat or "giving up the term" requires acceptance on the part of the wife. There are authorities to show that the acceptance on the part of the wife is not necessary under the Imamia law. The Shakh-i-Looma at p. 479, says as follows: "And if the husband makes a gift of the term to the woman before coition then he is liable to pay half of the dower in the same manner as the half of the dower is due in the case of talak (divorce) before coition in a permanent marriage. And if the hiba (gift) [280] is made after coition for the entire period or for a part of the period, then certainly no part of the dower shall be reduced (sakit), because dower becomes payable after coition. And it is clear that this hiba is sakit, or giving up in the way of maf or forgiving. Therefore the hiba-i-muddat (giving up the term) does not depend on acceptance; and if she causes interruption during any period of the term voluntarily before or after coition, he will deduct out of the dower in proportion to what she has caused interruption, as the dower spreads over the whole of the term.'

The author of Jawaharul Kalam in the book on Nikah takes hiba (gift) in the sense of iskat or ibru (release), and holds that in hiba-i-muddat (gift of the term) there is no necessity for acceptance (kabool) on the part of the wife.

The authority of the Sharaya-ul-Islam also supports this view. The passage in Baillie's Imamia Law at p. 41—"so that if he were to make the woman a gift of the term (that is, waive his right to her altogether) before coition he would (still) be liable for half the dower, and if coition should have taken place, she is entitled to the whole dower, on condition of her keeping the term (or adhering to him till its completion), but if it is not completed he is entitled to deduct a proportionate part of the dower"—is not an accurate translation of the passage from the Sharaya-ul-Islam. The words within the parenthesis do not form part of the original, but are Mr. Baillie's explanation. The expression "that if it is not completed" in the above passage would be that if she causes interruption during a portion of the term. It is, therefore, clear that Mr. Baillie is not justified in drawing an inference that a muta woman can adhere to her husband till the completion of the term.

The Sharh-i-Looma at p. 480, says: "And it (muta marriage) does not admit of talak, but, on the other hand, the woman becomes buyan or separated by reason of expiry of the term, or by reason of the husband making a gift of the term." And at p. 481 it says: "And the iddut of the woman after coition when the period has expired or made a gift of his two courses." If the view taken by the lower Appellate Court were correct, that, notwithstanding the gift of the term, the woman would continue to be the man's wife, the observance of the iddut could not be necessary on the part of the woman. It is absurd to suppose that a man who contracted a muta marriage with a woman for a certain period could not release her from her obligation. (See the Tagore Law Lectures for 1874, p. 380, and Baillie's Imamia Law, p. 203).

Moulvie Mahomed Yusooof followed on the same side.

Mr. Amir Ali (for the respondent).—The case set up by the plaintiff as to the period of the muta being found to be false, the suit ought to be dismissed without entering into the legal question whether under the Imamia law the husband can 'give up' the term without the consent of the wife. But if the Court is disposed to enter into the question, I submit that such power, which is as much against public policy as against the sense of justice and humanity, is not given under the Imamia law. There is no talak or divorce in a muta marriage, but Mr. Evans wants to introduce talak in this form of marriage by a process of inferential reasoning. It is contended that, according to the author of the Sharaya-ul-Islama a debtor can be discharged from his liability without his consent, and therefore similarly a muta wife can be released from her obligation to live with her husband and can be put away without her consent. This is an unreasonable contention, and even if there were any warrant for it under the Imamia law, it ought not to have operation given to it. If the contention of the other side is correct, it would make no difference between talak and the power claimed by the plaintiff. The power of talak is given by the Mahomedan law only in the case of a permanent marriage. The policy of the Imamia law, with regard to muta marriages, is distinct. A wife married by the permanent form takes larger rights subject to her being talaked or divorced; in a muta marriage both parties enter into the contract by mutual consent, the wife takes limited rights and there is no power of talak. To give the power to one party and not to the other would be disastrous to public morality and would contravene the principles of the law.

The Sharh-i-Looma is no authority. It is a commentary on the Sharaya-ul-Islam by an unknown author. Against the view held by the author of the Sharaya-ul-Islam there are the dicta of the Sheikh-ul-Mashaekh Allamah Sheikh Abu Jafer [282] Tusi (the author of the Mabsoot) and Ibn-i-Zuhra, both of whom hold that an ibra (release) is of no effect without the debtor’s consent. (See the Tagore Law Lectures for 1884, pp. 102, 601). The author of the Mabsoot thus lays down the principle: "When anything is due to one from another person, and he makes a gift of it to the other, that will be an ibra or discharge by the use of the word hiba. The question remains whether or not the consent or acceptance of the person discharged is a condition in order to make the ibra take effect. A body (of jurists) have made his consent a condition to the validity of the ibra and (hold) that (ibra) will not be valid until the person discharged has consented (to it), and so long as he has not consented or accepted it, the huqq (right) will remain intact. And this view is, in my opinion, correct." The author of the Ghunia, a work of great authority among the Shihas, takes a similar view upon this point.

There can be no question, looking to these dicta, that at the least there is considerable conflict of opinion among the Shiah jurists on the question whether the consent of the debtor is necessary or not to a discharge by his creditor. The author of the Sharh-i-Looma (and that is the only authority for this doctrine) bases his view upon the analogy of a muta wife to a debtor. The passages referred to from the Tahir-ul-Akhām taken piecemeal from Baboo Shama Churn Sircar’s footnotes do not support the proposition; they only show that a gift may be made of the term, but it does not appear what the author’s view is as to the consent of the wife. With this conflict of views admittedly existing on the subject, with the authority of the greatest of Shiah jurists on my side, a Court administering justice on the broad foundations of equity and humanity should not dissolve the tie, and give such a tremendous power for evil to Shiah Mahomedans. In the case of Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (1), the Privy Council declared that if any provision of the Mahomedan law was against public morality or public conscience, the Courts would not be justified in enforcing or giving effect to it. Here there is no provision of the Mahomedan law, but mere inferential reasoning; and I submit that important rights should not be taken away by [283] inferences or analogies. In view of the decision in the case of In the matter of Luddun Sahiba (2) this case should be referred to a Full Bench.

Mr. Evans in reply.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (PRINSEP and BEVERLEY, JJ.) after stating the facts as above, proceeded as follows:

It becomes necessary, therefore, in dealing with this appeal, to determine the exact effect of a muta marriage under the Shiah law, and whether it can be dissolved in the manner stated by the plaintiff, and found by both the Courts. The word muta signifies “enjoyment,” and as applied to a particular form of marriage indicates a marriage of a temporary character, "the extent of the period being left entirely to the parties who may prolong or shorten it to a year, a month, or a day; only some limit must be distinctly specified, so as to guard the period from any extension or diminution." (Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, Part II, on the Imamia Code, page 42). In the Tagore Law Lectures, 1874, by Shama Charan Sircar, on the same subject, at page 373, s. 517, the law is expressed in the same terms, the Tahir-ul-Ahkam being quoted as an authority.

There is apparently no limit to the number of wives married in this form. The Mahomedan law limits the number of permanently married wives to four, but it is stated on the authority of the Imam Jafer Sadik that the number of muta wives is not restricted to the usual number of four or even to seventy (see Baillie, 345). The eight rules of the contract of a temporary marriage are set out in Baillie, pages 42-44, and by Shama Charan at pages 379-381 to the same effect. From these, as well as from the fact that "there is no maintenance for a wife married in the muta form nor is a habitation to be assigned to her"—Tahir-ul-Ahkam (Shama Charan, page 377),—it is clear that the result of a muta marriage is to place the person of the wife, without any restriction in any sense of the term, at the disposal of the husband for the term agreed upon, the sole consideration being the dower stipulated between the parties. Her children are entitled to inherit, but unless there is some special contract with this object, the husband and the wife [284] cannot inherit inter se. No doubt rule 6 declares that, under this form of marriage, the ordinary divorce cannot be effected, inasmuch as the marriage is dissolved on the expiration of the period agreed upon; but it is not difficult to ascertain the reason for this. Unless there be some special agreement for the protection of the wife, she is no burden on the husband; she is under an obligation to be at his will and pleasure, and he is not in return bound to contribute to her maintenance or even to provide her with a place of habitation, and if a reference be made to the circumstances under which this form of marriage was created by Mahomet himself, it was intended to legalize sexual intercourse for any time agreed on by the parties concerned. It was probably for this reason thought unnecessary to extend to it even the easy form of divorce prescribed for dissolution of a permanent marriage. A dissolution of a muta marriage by efflux of time is, however, subject to this limitation. It is stated on the authority of the Tahir-ul-Ahkam (see Shama Charan, page 380, note) that, although "there is no divorce in the muta or temporary marriage, still separation (bain) would take place upon the term being given away to the wife, or upon the expiration thereof." So also, the Sharaya-ul-Islam declares that, "if the husband were to make the woman a gift of the term before coition, he would be liable for half the dower, and if coition should have taken place, she is entitled to the whole dower on condition of her keeping the term, and if she has prevented him, he is entitled to deduct a proportionate part of the dower." Mr. Baillie's translation of this passage, page 41, is not altogether accurate, and has been in some respects corrected. The passage is also reproduced in Shama Charan, page 381, note. In other words, so far as we understand the authorities, the conditions of a muta marriage are these: A dower and a period for co-habitation are mutually agreed upon; the dower being fixed, the woman is at her husband's disposal for the term agreed on. If the marriage is not consummated, the woman is nevertheless entitled to half the dower, as it were by way of damages; but if the marriage is consummated, she is entitled to the full dower, whether the parties continue to cohabit for the stipulated period or not, [285] provided that, if cohabitation ceases through any fault on the part of the woman, the husband is entitled to make a proportionate deduction from the amount of the dower. But the husband, having paid or agreed to pay the dower, is not bound to cohabit with the wife for the stipulated term or for any longer term than he thinks fit. He may release the woman from her part of the contract at any time, though his liability for the dower will remain. On these authorities it has been held by the lower Courts, and rightly held, that, although the ordinary law of divorce does not exist in respect of marriages by the muta form, and they are dissolved ipso facto by the expiry of the term for which they may have been contracted, still there is another way of terminating the marriage by the giving away of the unexpired portion of the term for which the marriage was contracted.

It has, however, been found by the District Judge, and this has been much pressed upon us by Mr. Amir Ali, who appeared for the defendant-respondent, the lady, that the act of the husband in giving away the unexpired term does not operate as a dissolution of the marriage except with the consent of the woman. We can find no valid authority for this contention. The Mahomedan law amongst Shias regards a muta wife as under an obligation to her husband to be at all times prepared to place her person at his disposal whenever required during the period for which the marriage may have been contracted; and without entering into particulars of a very disgusting nature, it is only necessary to state that even in this respect she is not regarded as having an equal status with a permanently married wife. In the matter of the obligation, the Mahomedan law regards persons in that position as debtors, and we have been referred, in the consideration of the question now before us, to the law in respect of debts and their cancellation. Baillie (page 208) states: "The donation of a debt, or what rests on the obligation of another, is not valid to any other than the debtor or person by whom it is due, according to the most approved doctrine, by reason of the condition already mentioned, that it requires possession to complete it, whereas, if made to the debtor himself, it is quite valid and operates as a release of [286] the debt—a release not requiring acceptance, according to the most approved opinion." Shama Charan (page 26) on the authority of the Fatawa Alamgiri, Vol. IV, pp. 535, 536, declares that "the gift of a debt to the debtor is a release, and it is lawful both by analogy and on a liberal construction of law"; and further, on the authority of the Hedayah and Kifayah, that "the gift of a debt, or release of it to the debtor, is complete without his acceptance, though it is reversed by his rejection." As opposed to this, Mr. Amir Ali has referred us to two passages from the Mabsoot and Jami-ul-Fiquah which seem to require the consent of a debtor to the cancellation of a debt. The Mabsoot no doubt is a work of considerable authority, but it is apparently little known in India, and having regard to this fact, we are not prepared on this contradiction to doubt the correctness of the Sharaya-ul-Islam as a binding authority amongst Shiahs in India. The passages quoted are isolated passages, and without reference to the context, which has not been laid before us, we should not be disposed to act upon them under any circumstances; but having regard to the fact that they are directly opposed to the authorities invariably accepted among Shias in India, and the fact that the Mabsoot is so little known and recognized that only one copy of this work has been obtained, and that with great difficulty, for the purposes of this appeal, it is not improbable that the parties to this suit were not cognizant of the existence of the Mabsoot and of the Jami-ul-Fiqah, or at all events that they were not aware of the passages quoted so as to make them operate in regard to any transaction between them in preference to the usually accepted authorities.

Mr. Amir Ali further contends that, even if we were to hold that under the Mahomedan law the consent of the woman is unnecessary, we are bound under the rules of justice, equity, and good conscience which we are required to administer, to modify the strict law in this respect, and as an authority for this he refers us to the remarks of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (1).

The case before us is one to which the observations of their [287] Lordships cannot properly apply. If we were entitled to consider whether in this or in other customs prevalent in this country the particular law of a section of the community was "in plain conflict with the requirements of a more advanced or civilised society," as now pressed on us by Mr. Amir Ali, we might in many cases find it difficult to recognize customs regarding which we are by law required to administer local law (see Act VI of 1871, s. 24) as being consonant with what in a European country, where life is passed under entirely different conditions, is considered to be in accordance with the requirements of our society. The illustration given by their Lordships of the Privy Council seems to indicate that the exceptional case contemplated was one of inhumanity, amounting to barbarity and they did not contemplate the extensions of any of the requirements of more advanced western society.

In the case before us we should not therefore be justified in relaxing the Mahomedan law. The rules of that law are clearly defined in respect to muta marriages, and if parties, nevertheless, think proper to contract themselves or to allow their minor relatives to be contracted by this form of marriage, we think that they are not entitled to any special relief not contemplated by that law to avoid the effect of the dissolution of that marriage by the lawful act of the husband. So far, therefore, we agree with the lower Courts in finding that the marriage was dissolved by the husband in giving up the unexpired period agreed upon in the contract of marriage. But we do not agree with the District Judge that the consent of the woman was necessary to complete the termination of that marriage.

An objection has been raised on behalf of the defendant-respondent that, inasmuch as the Courts have found against the plaintiff in respect of the statement made by him regarding the amount of the dower and the period for which the muta marriage was contracted, the plaintiff's case should be dismissed. In respect of the amount of the dower, we would observe that it was not what is known in the Mahomedan law as "prompt," and that, therefore, any dispute, regarding the amount of that dower or the payment of it in the present case, would not affect the question connected with the dissolution of the marriage. It would be [288] open to the woman, after such dissolution, to recover any amount of the dower, which might remain unpaid from the husband in the same manner as any other debt due from him. Next in respect to the term agreed upon and given up. No doubt, both the Courts have found, and, this being a finding of fact, we cannot question it on second appeal, that the term of one month and a half stated by the plaintiff was not what was agreed upon between the parties, and they have not thought it necessary to determine what that term was. But they have found that whatever that term may have been, the unexpired portion of it was given up by the husband. Whether he gave this up, as he states in his plaint, within a very short time after the marriage was contracted, has not been found, probably because what subsequently occurred rendered this immaterial. It seems that more than two years after the marriage was contracted, and while the proceedings for maintenance instituted by the wife were pending before the Magistrate, that is to say, long after the expiry of the period of one month and a half which the plaintiff still contends was the period agreed upon, the plaintiff as a matter of precaution (so he states) again in a public and unmistakeable manner gave up to the lady whatever might be the unexpired period of the marriage. We understand from this, that, without admitting that his own statement of the term agreed upon was incorrect, he intended to give and did actually give to the defendant whatever under any circumstances might be the period still remaining of the term agreed upon, and thus intimated in an unmistakeable manner to his wife his determination to dissolve the marriage, so far as lay in his power, by having recourse to this form of proceeding. We cannot but regard this as a complete surrender of whatever period might still be unexpired, and therefore sufficient to complete the dissolution of the marriage and the discharge of the woman from any obligation depending thereon. So far, therefore, in the case before us, we think that the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that the defendant ceased to be his muta wife on the 20th of February 1882.

We were at one time in doubt whether, having regard to the decision of the Division Bench in the case of In the matter of Luddun Sahiba (1) in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction in respect to the proceedings for maintenance instituted by the defendant, we are not bound to refer this case to a Full Bench in consequence of a different opinion entertained by us. We think, however, that this is unnecessary, inasmuch as we learn from the judgment in that case that "no authority" was shown to the learned Judges "in support of the contention that the effect of giving up the rest of the period is to put an end to the relationship of husband and wife." It has been already stated that there is authority for this contention, and we, therefore, in view of that authority, do not feel embarrassed by the judgment of the other Division Bench of this Court. If that authority had been laid before the learned Judges, it is not improbable that they would have taken the view that has been already expressed as our opinion. We may refer in support of the view taken by us to the authority of the Sharaya-ul-Islam and Tahir-ul-Akham as reproduced by Mr. Baillie and Baboo Shama Charan Sircar in the passages quoted, as well as to the Sharah-i-Looma, a work of undoubted authority which is still more clear on this point. A copy of this work has been put in evidence, but although it has been quoted by the learned counsel for the appellant, we have not thought it necessary to refer to it except in corroboration of the better known authorities of the Sharaya-ul-Islam and Tahir-ul-Akham.

It is only necessary in passing to observe that the allegation of the defendant in her written statement that there was a special contract with the plaintiff in regard to her position and maintenance has not been raised before us in the argument addressed by the learned counsel, and was apparently abandoned in the lower Courts.

Having found that the relationship of husband and wife no longer exists between the parties, it remains for us to consider the effect of our finding on the proceedings before the Magistrate. The plaintiff asks for an injunction to restrain the Magistrate from enforcing the order for maintenance. We are of opinion that we cannot pass such an order. The plaintiff will be at liberty to satisfy the Magistrate that, by an order of this Court [290] in its civil jurisdiction, it has been declared that no relationship exists between him and the defendant, and he can ask the Magistrate on the authority of the cases of Abdur Rohoman v. Sakhina (1), and Abdul Ali Ismailji v. Hussenbi (2), to abstain from giving any further effect to his order for maintenance. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will accordingly to set aside, and the plaintiff will receive his costs in this Court and in the lower Courts.

PRIVY COUNCIL.
PRESENT:
Lord Hobhouse, Sir B. Peacock, and Sir R. Couch.
[On petition from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh].

INDER KUMARI (Defendant) v. JAIPAL KUMARI (Plaintiff).
[18th November, 1886.]

Appeal to Privy Council—Security for performance of order to be made by Her Majesty in Council—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 608—Refusal of order staying execution where decree was not yet appealed to the Privy Council, but leave to appeal from interlocutory orders in execution granted—Intimation to Court below.

A party to a suit in an Appellate Court, who had obtained leave to appeal from its decree to Her Majesty in Council, petitioned for the order of the latter staying execution of interlocutory orders made in execution of such decree, and directing payment by the petitioner to the opposite party of large sums without security taken for their repayment in the event of the decree being reversed. This accompanied a petition for special leave to appeal against those orders. The latter was granted, but it not being competent to the Judicial Committee to make any order as to the stay of execution, an intimation was made by it to the Court below that it appeared to be the reasonable course that the opposite party should not, pending the appeal, be put into possession of the large sums in dispute. That intimation being made, the petitioner might apply to the Court below for the due security of all money paid into the treasury in obedience to the decree. Sidhee Nazur Ali Khan v. Oojoodhyaram Khan (3) and Zeraitool Batool v. Hosseinee Begum (4) referred to.

Petition for special leave to appeal from interlocutory orders ((22nd June 1886) made in execution of a decree (27th March 1886) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree [291] (25th August 1886) of the District Judge of Faizabad, and also for an order that, pending the hearing of the appeal, execution of the said orders should be stayed.

(1) 5 C. 558.  (2) 7 B. 180.  (3) 10 M. 1. A. 322.  (4) 10 M. 1. A. 196.
The proceedings out of which the present petition arose related to the will of the late Maharaja Digbijai Singh, talukdar of Balrampur, who died on the 27th May, 1882, leaving two widows, of whom the present petitioner, Maharani Inder Kumari, was the senior and the Maharani Jaipal Kumari, the plaintiff in the suit, was the junior.

On the 7th November, 1883, the senior widow, under a power which she believed herself to possess under the Maharaja’s will, adopted a son to him. On the 3rd December in the same year, the junior widow commenced the present suit against the senior widow and the adopted boy, disputing the validity of the adoption, claiming to share the estate equally with the senior widow for her life, and claiming also mesne profits.

The District Judge of Faizabad held the adoption by the senior widow to be valid, in which opinion he was supported by the Judicial Commissioner on the appeal which followed. The District Judge also held that the senior widow was entitled to the rents and profits of the estate exclusively, and that the junior widow was only entitled to an annuity of Rs. 25,000 a year.

The Judicial Commissioner, when the suit was before him, sent it back for some further inquiries; and pending those inquiries, the junior widow petitioned that, as she was altogether without means, a receiver should be appointed under s. 503 of Act XIV of 1882. According to the present petition this was refused, but at the suggestion of the Court the senior widow paid Rs. 45,000 to the plaintiff to be accounted for on the decision of the suit. On the appeal coming before the Judicial Commissioner for judgment, he held that, though the adoption was good and valid, both the widows were, on the true construction of the will, equally entitled as Hindu widows.

The decree was that “the decree awarding to the plaintiff Rs. 25,000 per annum be set aside. The senior Maharani will retain the management of the estates. From their net profits she will be entitled to deduct year by year (a) the amount [292] at which the pay-bills of the house, establishment, charities, etc., stood during the last year of the Maharaja’s life, this amount to be ascertained by enquiry in execution, (b) also such amount as after enquiry in execution may be found suitable for the maintenance and education of the adopted minor. After these deductions are made, the plaintiff will recover from the senior Maharani, defendant, a half share of the balance of the net profits of the estates; she will recover immediately whatever may be found to be due from the date of the Maharaja’s death to the date of this decree; and thereafter she will be entitled to recover year by year, until such time as the Government may see fit to comply with the wishes of the Maharaja expressed in the will”—(that was an expression of a wish that the Court of Wards would undertake the management of the estate during the minority of any son that should be adopted)—“a half share of the balance of the net profits of the estate, ascertained as above, and the costs of this appeal, amounting to Rs. 1,31,440.”

Leave to appeal from this decree was granted to the senior widow, and upon the same date (22nd June 1886) an order was made upon her petition applying for stay of execution under s. 608 of Act XIV of 1882, or, in the alternative, for security to be given for the due performance of any order that might be made by Her Majesty in Council. This order neither stayed execution nor provided for the security, but after directing payment of costs amounting to Rs. 63,000, to which the petitioner made no objection, it contained the following: “And further that execution of and up to a sum of five lakhs of rupees out of the total mesne profits decreed to Maharani Jaipal Kumari be also forthwith had unconditionally, and that execution of the rest of the decree be stayed until the decree-holder lodge good and sufficient security, for the remaining balance of the moneys decreed to her."

Besides the costs, the petitioner had paid into Court Rs. 2,85,000, and now asked leave to appeal against this order, as she objected to the sum going into the hands of the junior widow without adequate security for its repayment. It was stated at the Bar that the whole amount had since been paid into Court. The petitioner asked for an order staying execution and also for special leave to appeal against the above orders of 22nd June, 1886.

[293] Sir Horace Davey, Q. C., with whom were Mr. R. V. Doyle and Mr. C. W. Arathoon.—The order of the 22nd June, 1886, ordering payment of the five lakhs unconditionally, does not follow but varies the decree, which directs an account. But, granting that the Judicial Commissioner had a discretionary power thus to order execution in part, that discretion should have been judicially exercised—s. 609, Act XIV of 1882. Nor was there any evidence before the Court as to what was the real value of the estate and the actual receipts of rents and profits, while, in fact, this large sum exceeds what, in almost any event, the junior widow would be entitled to. The matter which requires redress is that, if in the end the judgment of this Committee should be that the junior widow is not entitled, as the District Judge had held, to more than the annuity, or, at all events, to a less amount than has been decreed by the Appellate Court, she would have to repay money, having however represented herself to be without means of her own, and without due security having been taken for the repayment. Besides the questions already raised under the will in regard to its construction, and the bearing of Act I of 1869 (the Oudh Estates Act) upon it, there might possibly arise another, which also might have reference to the risk incurred in this sum of five lakhs being unsecured. There might arise the question whether, in consequence of the adoption, the widow would not be liable to account to the adopted son through his guardian. It might be that, after the adoption, a different state of things arose; the senior widow should, therefore, be protected. The object of s. 609 had been misapprehended. That object was to maintain, if it was expedient to do, the status quo between the parties, pending the appeal to Her Majesty in Council. There has been a mistake as to the principle on which the discretion vested in the Judge should be exercised, even if there has not been, as her petition alleged, an excess of his power as given by the Code of Procedure. The former ground, not the latter, is however, the one on which the petition should rest. The order, as being an order for execution in anticipation, and operating to the prejudice of the petitioner, should not be enforced.

[Lord Hobhouse asked if the Committee was competent to [294] advise Her Majesty to order stay of execution, there being no appeal yet preferred. He drew attention to Sidhee Nazur Ali Khan v. Oojoodhyaram Khan (1) and Zeraitool Batool v. Hosseine Begum (2)] (a).

(1) 10 M. I. A. 322. (2) 10 M. J. A. 196.

(a) In the Nawab's case the doubt was whether, where an order had been made by an Appellate Court below, and such order had not been appealed to the Queen in Council, the Judicial Committee had any authority to interfere, although an appeal was pending before them from a previous order of the Appellate Court made in the same suit, remanding the suit to the first Court,
Sir H. Davey, Q.C.—Instead of an order staying execution the petitioner might have leave to appeal from the order of 22nd June, 1886, with only an expression of this Committee's opinion that the money should be retained in Court. That seems to have been the course taken in the cases referred to. At present money is to be handed over in anticipation of accounts, which should not be done.

Mr. J. Graham, Q.C., with whom were Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. Theodore Thomas, for the junior widow:—The present case is distinguishable from the cases referred to, for there is no information as to what took place when the Judicial Commissioner made the order of the 22nd June. This is, in fact, an ex parte application on incomplete grounds. As to the sum being large, the litigation involves a great estate. It cannot be assumed that the Judicial Commissioner acted on mere conjecture; and the defect is that this Committee has not before it materials for forming an opinion, besides the difficulty of there being no decree before it in appeal. The conclusion is that the order of 22nd June should not be interfered with, for nothing had been shown that, in imposing conditions which the Judicial Commissioner had power to impose, he wrongly exercised his discretion.

Sir H. Davey, Q.C., in replying, said that it would be enough if the Committee gave leave to appeal from the order of the 22nd June, the appeal to come on with the principal appeal, at the same time intimating its opinion that the balance of the five lakhs ought to remain in Court. The petitioner could then apply to the Court below, which, no doubt, would be guided by an intimation of that kind.

ORDER.

Lord Hobhouse.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the interlocutory orders which the petition complains of are such that their Lordships ought to advise Her Majesty to grant leave to appeal from them. It is not competent to their Lordships to make any order as to the stay of execution, but they think it right to say that to them it appears to be the reasonable course that the plaintiff should not, pending the appeal, be put into possession of the large sums in dispute; and probably it is reasonable that she should not receive more than the annuity of Rs. 25,000, which was decreed to her by the first Court; and with that intimation of advice they leave the appellant at liberty to apply to the proper Court in India for the due security of all money paid into the Treasury in obedience to the decree of the Judicial Commissioner.

Special leave granted: stay of execution refused. Intimation to Court below.

Solicitors for the petitioner: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co.

In the other case, within six months after decree, and prior to the admission of the appeal therefrom to England, the S. D. A., upon an ex parte application, without notice, issued an execution order putting the decree-holder into possession, and omitted to call for security as provided by s. 4, Reg. XVI of 1797. The S. D. A. rejected an application to put this right as beyond their powers. The Judicial Committee made an order intimating that it was competent to the S. D. A., to require security to be given, notwithstanding execution of the decree had issued—

THAKUR HARIHAR BAKSH (Plaintiff) v. THAKUR UMAN PARSHAD (Defendant). [10th and 19th December, 1886.]

Custom, Evidence as to—Wajib-ul-arz—Concurrent findings of Courts below—Construction of a razinama disposing of estate with words “naslan bad naslan.”

A custom of inheritance was alleged to prevail in an Oudh claim that, if the branch of a family became extinct, the other branches of it should take the estate amongst them in equal shares without regard to their degrees in kinship to the deceased. This custom was found not proved by the Original and Appellate Courts upon evidence of instances of succession in kindred families and of rights recorded in certain wajib-ul-arz.

If there had been any principle of evidence not properly applied, or documentary evidence had been referred to on which it could be shown that the Courts below had been led into error, the case might have been re-examined on this appeal, but in the absence of such ground this could not be done.

In cases decided on the construction of documents, in which the expressions mokurari, istemrari, istemrari mokurari, have been considered upon the question whether an absolute interest has been conferred by such documents or not, it has been taken for certain that if the words “naslan bad naslan” had been added, an absolute interest would have been clearly conferred. Accordingly, in construing a razinama between parties dividing family estate, and expressly declaring that the shares should descend “naslan bad naslan,” held, that the insertion of these words was conclusive in itself; the expressed object of this razinama pointing to the same construction, viz. that the estate taken under it was absolute.

Appeal from a decree, 4th April 1883, of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (3rd September 1881) of the District Judge of Sitapur.

The appellant, who was plaintiff in the suit, obtained in 1883 special leave to prefer this appeal, on the ground that a substantial question of law was involved in the decision of his suit, which was brought for the possession as proprietor, by right of inheritance, of a taluk named Sarora in Sitapur in Oudh. His suit had been held to be barred under the provisions of s. 13 of Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 6 of Act XII of 1879, by reason of a prior adjudication on the 7th June [297] 1867. The questions now raised related to proof of an alleged custom of inheritance, which gave the plaintiff a title, and also to the construction of a razinama. At the hearing of the suit in the Court of first instance, evidence was given of the custom which was said to prevail in the clan to which the parties belonged, named Panwar Rajputs; and their pedigree was admitted to be as follows:—

Basti Singh, died 1839.

Baldeo Baksh, died 1841

Balwant Singh, died Oct., 1858.

The resp. Uman Parshad.

Jung Bahadoor.

Bissessur Baksh,

died 17th November, 1865.

left surviving his widow, Futteh Konwar, who died October, 1879, and a daughter, by another wife, who died in March, 1879.

Sita Baksh, who renounced worldly matters in 1861.

Ganga Baksh,
died 12th March 1867.

The appellant Harihar Baksh,
In 1839, on the death of Basti Singh, who was the kabuliyatadar of taluk Sarora in the time of the Nawabs of Oudh, his son Baldeo succeeded him. The latter died in 1841, and was succeeded by his son Balwant, who died in 1858. The third and only other son of Basti Singh was Uman Parshad, the present respondent, between whom and Bissessur Singh, son of Baldeo, and Ganga Baksh (son of Balwant abovementioned and father of Harihar Baksh, the present appellant) disputes commenced as to their respective rights in Sarora.

In 1839, at the summary settlement of Oudh, the Deputy Commissioner of Faizabad ordered, and this was confirmed by the superior revenue authorities, that Ganga Baksh, the son of Balwant, should receive the settlement of the taluk, subject to a liability to pay to Bissessur and to Uman Parshad what they had received when Balwant was in possession before annexation.

In 1861 a sanad, dated 11th October, 1860, was delivered to Ganga Baksh, whereby the Chief Commissioner, under the authority of the Governor-General in Council, conferred on him the talukdari of Sarora, and his name was entered in the list, afterwards scheduled to Act I of 1809 (The Oudh Estates’ Act). Disputes, however, continued, chiefly as to the maintenance to [298] which his uncle and cousin were entitled, and proceedings in the Settlement Court at the regular settlement ensued.

In 1864 all parties came to the agreement in the rajinama, dated 14th December 1864, which gave rise to the question of construction in this suit. It was as follows:—

"We are Ganga Baksh, talukdar, and Uman Parshad and Bissessur Baksh, parties to the suit respecting claim to taluka Sarora.

"Whereas for several years there has been going on among us a dispute about the proprietary right respecting taluka Sarora, and whereas now, at the time of the regular settlement, we have agreed that after coming to an amicable settlement we should set the whole dispute at rest, so that whatever ill-feelings exist between relations the descendants of a common grandfather may be removed, therefore by mutual consent it is decided that the whole estate be divided as follows, the division to hold good for ever and to descend from generation to generation, viz.:—

"Ganga Baksh, half of the estate.

"Bissessur Baksh, quarter do.

"Uman Parshad, quarter do.

"And the entire estate including Pachchimgaon having been divided into four parts, four lists were drawn up; we Bissessur Baksh and Uman Parshad took up one each by consent of each other, and I, Ganga Baksh, took up the remaining two. There remains no longer any dispute about the division of the estate. We, Bissessur Baksh and Uman Parshad, shall pay to Ganga Baksh the present Government revenue, until the assessment of the regular settlement jama and I, Ganga Baksh, shall add on to it my half share of the jama and continue to pay it to Government. After the regular settlement the jama assessed on each village, whether it be more or less than the present amount, shall be paid by the party in possession in the manner abovementioned; but the above proportion of payment shall be maintained in respect to the villages held in common, i.e., we, Bissessur Baksh and Uman Parshad, shall pay half, and I, Ganga Baksh, the other half, and as there is a little difference in the quantity of land it will be adjusted [299] in the villages held in common, viz., Kathwa, Ghazipur and Himmat Nagar. In addition to the above we Uman Parshad and Bissessur Baksh, shall pay to Ganga Baksh, talukdar, along with the instalment Rs. 10 per cent. on account of talukdari right on the present Government revenue, or on such amount as may hereafter be assessed from time to time. Therefore this agreement is executed as a deed of compromise (razinama) that it may witness, dated 4th May, 1864."

In accordance with this agreement Uman Parshad and Bissessur were put into possession of villages allotted to them as forming their shares, and were recognized and recorded by the revenue authorities as under-tenure holders.

In 1865 Bissessur died without male issue. He left a widow and a daughter by another wife, deceased. His share, which he had held under the razinama of 1864, was immediately claimed by Ganga Baksh; and the Oudh regular settlement being in progress, which under Act XVI of 1865 (the Oudh Revenue Courts' Act) gave exclusive jurisdiction to the Revenue Courts, the litigation proceeded in those Courts.

On 1st February, 1866, Ganga Baksh, by a petition to the revenue authorities, claimed to recover one-fourth of the whole Sarora estate, which had been in the possession of Bissessur Baksh as against Uman Parshad, who alleged himself to be sole heir to Bissessur. The widow of Bissessur, Futtah Konwar, however, claimed to succeed for her widow’s estate. On these contested claims, after the Assistant Settlement Officer, Settlement Officer, and the Commissioner of the division had made decrees in due order, the Financial Commissioner, upon the construction of the razinama of 4th December, 1864, decided as follows:—

"On the part of Ganga Baksh it is urged that, as the words "naslan badnaslan" are entered in the ikrarnama, it ought to be held that the talukdar’s relinquishments of rights enjoyed under the sanad can benefit only heirs of the body of Bissessur Baksh and not collaterals. The Financial Commissioner cannot admit this plea; it is plain that by executing the ikrarnama and compounding for an allowance of ten per cent. the talukdar relinquished all special rights, and the common law of succession must take effect. The Financial Commissioner holds that the [300] order of the lower Courts, giving the widow a life-interest in her husband’s estate without power of transfer, is correct.

"There is, however, a probability that the widow may be tempted to allow the property to be wasted, and it is necessary to make a declaratory order as to the parties with whom the reversionary rights lie."

Upon this judgment the following decree was made:—

"The decree of the Commissioner’s Court is affirmed, and it is declared that, after the death of Bissessur Baksh’s widow, his estate will be inherited by Uman Parshad and Ganga Baksh in such shares as may be legally due to them. No appeal to Her Majesty in Council was preferred, and Futtah Konwar remained in possession of her husband’s share till her death on the 5th October 1879."

This was the proceeding which gave occasion for the question, whether or not it had been judicially decided, between parties representing the same interests as the parties to the present suit, that the estate taken under the ikrarnama of 1864 by Bissessur Baksh was an absolute interest or only one for his life.

Ganga Baksh died on the 12th March 1867. The widow of Bissessur lived for twelve years after. On her death the attempt was made on behalf of Harihar Baksh, then a minor, to bring back the share allotted in 1864 to Bissessur to the line of Ganga Baksh. At dakhil kharij proceedings ensuing upon the death of Bissessur's widow, right of possession was claimed on behalf of the minor, resulting in a direction by the Deputy Commissioner of Faizabad, under s. 65 of Act XVII of 1876 (The Oudh Land Revenue Act), that Thakur Uman Parshad should be put into possession of the disputed share, pending any order that might be made by a Civil Court. This was followed by the present suit, brought on the 23rd October 1880, by Thakurani Mohun Konwar as mother and guardian of Harihar, upon whom it was claimed the whole interest that had belonged to Bissessur had now devolved. It was alleged that the whole interest of Bissessur on his death "reverted" to the plaintiff Harihar as sole heir of Ganga Baksh, according to law and also according to the custom of the Panwar Rajputs. In the alternative it was claimed that, if under the razinama of 4th May, 1864, it should be held that Bissessur had taken an absolute interest, then the plaintiff, by the same custom, was entitled to share Bissessur's estate with the defendant, and should take one-half of that share.

The defendant Uman Parshad, maintaining that no such custom existed, and that he by law was entitled to Bissessur's estate, disputing the construction put upon the razinama by the plaintiff, relied also on the decree of the Financial Commissioner made in 1867 as affording a bar to this suit for the reason above explained.

This defence of res judicata was held good by the District Judge of Sitapur, who dismissed the suit with costs on this ground. He also found as a fact that the custom alleged by the plaintiff was not proved. On both these points the judgment of the District Judge was upheld by the Judicial Commissioner, who quoted from the proceedings above referred to to show that the question whether Uman Parshad had a better title to the estate of Bissessur Baksh than Ganga Baksh was directly and substantially in issue between Ganga Baksh and Uman Parshad in the former suit; that Ganga Parshad then urged that the grant should revert to the talukdar on failure of heirs of the body of Bissessur Baksh; and that the point was decided against him in the Court of the Financial Commissioner, "which was a Court of competent jurisdiction. He added: "In this suit the plaintiff claims on the ground that Bissessur Baksh having died without issue, the object for which the said grant or allotment was made has been attained, and the proprietary title in the said property reverts to the plaintiff. This is precisely the point which was directly and substantially in issue in the former suit in the Court of the Financial Commissioner between the defendant Uman Parshad and Ganga Baksh, the father of the plaintiff. The point was finally decided by the Financial Commissioner, and the District Judge has rightly decided that s. 13, Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 6, Act XII of 1879, was a bar to the rehearing of the claim."

Taking the above as the ground of his decision, the Financial Commissioner held it unnecessary for him to consider the effect of the agreement of 1864; and his judgment then went to the [302] question whether the custom alleged to prevail among the Panwar Rajputs had been proved.

He continued thus:

"As we cannot go behind the Financial Commissioner's decree of the 17th June 1867, it is unnecessary to consider whether the District Judge's construction of the agreement of 4th May 1864 is or is not correct.
There remains the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to half the property of the late Bissessur Baksh. The plaint is not very clear as regards custom. In para. 11 it is said that on the death of Bissessur Baksh without issue the proprietary right in the whole property according to law and also to a usage prevailing among the Panwar Rajputs reverted to the plaintiff as sole heir of the said Ganga Baksh, deceased. In the next paragraph it is said that, if Hindu law be held to be against him, the plaintiff claims to be entitled to one-half share in the said villages and lands by virtue of a custom prevailing among Panwar and other Rajput tribes, to the effect that on the death of the last representative of one branch of the family, so that such branch becomes extinct, the surviving branches of the said family, without regard to the nearness or degree of relationship, are entitled to the property left by the last representative of the extinct branch in equal shares.

The plaintiff thus claims the whole of the estate according to a usage prevailing among the Panwar Rajputs, and half the estate by virtue of a custom prevailing among Panwar and other Rajput tribes. The evidence produced was to support the alleged custom by which surviving members divide the property of a deceased relation without regard to the nearness or degree of relationship. The Counsel for the appellant has not contended that any custom has been proved by which the appellant as son of the deceased's first cousin would inherit the whole of the estate in preference to the uncle of the deceased. But the contention is that the uncle and the grandson of another uncle should inherit equally. Several instances were referred to by the plaintiff's witnesses. There were some discrepancies in the depositions of the different witnesses, but on the whole the evidence shows that in the instances referred to the property has gone to relations standing in different degrees of relationship to the late owner. The one principle common to all these cases is that each branch of the family obtained a share of the property of the person who died without issue without reference to the degree of relationship. Thus, on the death of Aparbal Singh without issue his property went to the descendants of his great uncle Dhan Singh. Dhan Singh had three sons, namely, Sheo Baksh, Chain Singh, and Madari Singh. On the death of Aparbal Singh there were alive one son of Sheo Baksh, two grandsons of Chain Singh and two grandsons of Madari Singh. The property was divided into three shares, one going to the son of Sheo Baksh, another to the grandsons of Chain Singh and a third to the descendants of Madari Singh. So when Dina Singh died half his property went to the son of his uncle, Narain Singh, and half to the grandparents and great-grandsons of his uncle Dhulip Singh. This principle was followed by the Assistant Settlement Officer on the first August, 1866, when he directed that on the death of the widow of Bissessur Baksh the property should pass in equal shares to Ganga Baksh and Uman Parshad or their heirs. But the decree of the Financial Commissioner left the question open. The same principle was followed by the Deputy Commissioner on the 31st August, 1869, in the case of certain Panwar Thakurs, Gyar Prashad v. Dhaukal Singh, and that decision was affirmed by the Financial Commissioner on the 20th November, 1869. If the principle above referred to were to be followed in this case, the property of the late Bissessur Baksh would be divided between Uman Parshad, son of Basti Singh, and the descendants of Balwant Singh, son of Basti Singh. On the other hand no mention is made of this custom in the Settlement Records. No case has been deposed to in which the first cousin, or first cousin once removed, of a deceased person has shared with the uncle of the deceased person. And the defendant’s witnesses have deposed to cases in which the custom was not followed. On the death of Gauri the whole property went to Hindu Singh, the brother, although the sons of a second brother, Mehrban Singh, were alive. On the death of Raghu Singh the property [304] went to the families of three cousins, but the family of Ram Parshad, a fourth cousin, got nothing. On the death of Kushal his brothers succeeded, excluding his nephew, the son of a deceased brother. Other examples might be mentioned, but these are sufficient to show that there are exceptions to the custom relied on by the plaintiff-appellant; and seeing also that the custom was not recorded in the settlement papers, I am of opinion that it cannot be held to be so certain and invariable that the Court would be justified in following it in preference to the ordinary law of succession. I must, therefore, confirm the decision of the District Judge that the plaintiff-appellant has failed to prove the custom on which he relies. I can see my way to no other decision, and the result of this protracted litigation is that the property of Basti Singh will be divided equally between the families of his sons Balwant Singh and Uman Parshad, the plaintiff-appellant, as representative of the elder son, being the talukdar, and Uman Parshad, the younger son, holding half the estate as under-proprietor, a result not altogether unsatisfactory.”

The appeal to the Judicial Commissioner was accordingly dismissed.

On the present appeal,—

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant, argued that the Courts below had erred in holding that, under s. 13 of Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 6 of Act XII of 1879, the suit was barred. The first Court had also wrongly construed the razinama of 4th May 1864, and instead of omitting, as it had omitted, to consider the effect of this document, on the ground of res judicata, the Judicial Commissioner should have taken it up, and, on the question of construction, decided that the first Court had been in error. It was also contended for the appellant that sufficient evidence had been given of the alleged custom.

In regard to the construction of the razinama, the petitions and orders in the Settlement Department, and the nature of the dispute between the brothers, all tended to show that the intention of the parties, in executing the document of 4th May 1864, was to secure maintenance for Bissessur Baksh and Uman Parshad. The contention was that the villages were not allotted for an absolute estate to be held therein. True it was that the term [305] naslan bad naslan might indicate estates of inheritance, but by analogy to what had been held in regard to words so definite as mokurari istemrari and istemrari mokurari, the construction of a document, in which the term naslan bad naslan was used, should depend on the actual transaction without a conclusive effect being attributed to these words themselves. See Bilasmoni Dasi v. Raja Sheopershad Singh (1), where the decisions on this subject were collected, not that any one of them referred to the use of the words naslan bad naslan now in question, but the same opinion was fairly applicable to them.

The descent of the family property in the line of Ganga Baksh would accord with the custom of the clan as to which the evidence was reviewed. The plaintiff, according to the custom, was, at all events, entitled to come in along with the respondent as an heir to one-half of Bissessur’s estate. The above points would require decision if, as it was contended, his suit was not barred by the decision given in 1867. In giving his decision the Financial Commissioner had expressed his opinion that the estate was such that it included descent to collaterals, but that question was not necessarily put in issue in order to arrive at the decision of the matter before the Financial Commissioner; and res judicata could only be constituted by the decision of a material issue between the parties raising an identical question. Reference was made to Lord Herschell’s judgment in Concha v. Concha (1) and to Krishna Behary Roy v. Brojeswari Chaodhrani (2).

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.—Their Lordships do not think it necessary to call upon Counsel for the respondent.

This case has been put before their Lordships by Mr. Branson with great fulness, and they consider that he has argued it with great lucidity and force, and said everything that is possible in [306] favour of his client; but it is put before them in so clear and perspicuous a manner that they are able to deal with it on the opening.

There are two questions. The first is how the agreement, the razinama or compromise, of the 4th May 1864, is to be construed; and if it is to be construed as giving an absolute interest to Bissessur Baksh, then the second question is, in what shares the inheritance is to be taken by his heirs?

To take the last question first, the plaintiff alleges that, by a certain custom prevalent among the Panwar Rajputs, if a branch of a family has become extinct, the other branches take the estate in equal shares, which means in equal shares as between those branches without regard to their being more or less remote in kinship to the deceased. That question was tried in the Courts below, and both Courts, the District Judge and the Judicial Commissioner, have come to the same conclusion upon it, adverse to the plaintiff. Two lines of evidence appear to have been pursued—one consisting of instances of successions in kindred families, and the other of records of rights in wajib-ul-araiz. Upon the first line of evidence the Judicial Commissioner, who seems to have examined the cases with care, has come to the conclusion that, balancing case against case there is no certain invariable custom proved on this point. He also states, and the District Judge states, that the wajib-ul-araiz do not support the custom. In their Lordships’ judgment the wajib-ul-araiz to which they have been referred seem to go further. The document appearing in p. 126 of the record is a specimen, and it states that brothers or nephews of the deceased are to succeed, regard being had to the nearness of kinship. That is a statement contrary to the statement in the plaint and to the custom which the plaintiff alleges. Therefore their lordships have not considered it proper to go through the mass of oral evidence given in this case, because if the Courts below concur in their conclusion upon such a matter as a family custom, their Lordships are very reluctant to disturb the judgment of those Courts. If there had been any principle of evidence not properly applied, if there had been written documents referred to on which the appellant could show that the Courts below had been led into [307] error, their Lordships might re-examine the case; but in the absence of any such ground they decline to do so.

Then the question comes back to the construction of the razinama, and that again is divided into two branches. The Courts below have found that the razinama ought to be construed to give an absolute interest, because it has been decided that it should be so construed—in fact that the matter is res judicata. Upon that point it is unnecessary for their Lordships to pronounce any opinion; but they wish it to be understood that they do not express any agreement with the Court below on this point, and it must be taken that, not having heard the argument on the other side, their minds are completely open upon it.

They rest their opinion upon the terms of the razinama itself. After providing that the estate shall be divided into the fractions specified in it, the conclusion of the razinama is that the division shall hold good for ever, and to descend from generation to generation—naslan bad naslan. Their Lordships have not been furnished with any authority, in fact Mr. Branson has fairly said he can find no authority, in which a gift with the words naslan bad naslan attached has been held to confer anything less than the absolute ownership. On the contrary, in the various cases in which the expressions mokurari istemrari, istemrari mokurari, have been weighed and examined with a view to see whether an absolute interest was conferred or not, it seems to have been taken for certain that, if only the words naslan bad naslan had been added, there would have been an end to the argument, because an absolute interest would have been clearly conferred. Their Lordships think that the insertion of those words in the razinama would be conclusive in itself; but, looking at the expressed objects of the razinama, they would come to the same conclusion even if words of a less peremptory character had been used. It was for the purpose of settling a dispute which had been going on for several years about the proprietary right to the taluk Sarora, and it was agreed that the whole dispute should be set at rest. The dispute was not as to maintenance, it was not as to a temporary interest, but it was as to the proprietary right. That is the dispute to be set at rest; and when their Lordships find that such a dispute is set at rest by a [308] division of the estate to hold good for ever, and that not a word is introduced which of its own force imports less than an absolute ownership, they find it impossible to doubt that the true intention of the parties was to give to all alike the same amount of interest in the shares conceded to them, viz., that absolute ownership which each was claiming for himself in the whole or part of the property.

On those grounds their Lordships agree with the decision of the Courts below, though not for the same reasons, and the result is that the appeal will be dismissed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with that opinion, and the appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal from a decree (10th March, 1881) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (5th August, 1880) of the District Judge of Faizabad.

The appellant was the widow of the original plaintiff, Malik Hidayat Hussain, who died while these proceedings were pending, and who was talukdar of an estate, named Samanpur, in the Faizabad District. The respondents were bankers of Faizabad, to whom [309] the deceased talukdar had in his lifetime executed a mortgage. The question now raised was whether the mortgage deed should be rectified under s. 31 of Act I of 1877, the Specific Relief Act.

On the 16th July, 1874, the Land Mortgage Bank of India obtained a decree for Rs. 2,59,714, with interest at 10 per cent., from the 1st June, 1874, and further interest at 12 per cent. on such portions of the interest as might be six months in arrear against Malik Hidayat Hussain. This decree was, on the 18th May, 1876, assigned to the respondents, who themselves had obtained three decrees against the same defendant for amounts aggregating Rs. 29,826. Under these decrees execution was issued against Malik Hidayat Hussain, who to prevent a sale of his property executed a mortgage, dated 15th October, 1878, which led to the question now raised.

The following was the material part of the mortgage-deed:

"Whereas the aforesaid taluka has, at present been advertised for sale by an order of the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Faizabad District, the date of the sale being fixed for the 28th of October, 1878, in execution of the decrees of Babu Lachman Persad, Bisheshar Pershad and Narotam Das, Raisan and Mahajans of Benares, Mohalla Nandan Sah, the decrees being dated the 16th of July, 1874, 14th of August, 1876, and 27th of November, 1876, aggregating Rs. 4,04,576-12: and whereas I have lately borrowed Rs. 32,700 from the aforesaid Mahajans in order to repay the debt of Ram Kishen and Lalti Pershad, Mahajans—the total sum of both the aforesaid items amounts to Rs. 4,37,276-12—1, the declarant, while in good health and in a sound state of mind, with a view to save my estate from serious loss—that is, to save it from being sold off at the auction sale in execution of decree—have mortgaged my ilakas detailed hereinafter, with my proprietary right...

.............And the term of the mortgage is fixed to be for the period beginning from 1286 F. to 1299 F."

The mortgagees were to have possession.

The plaint, which was filed on the 11th December, 1879, alleged the above facts, and that the real amount of those four decrees and of the debt to Ram Kishen should have been stated in the deed as [310] amounting to Rs. 3,78,588 and not Rs. 4,37,276: the difference, amounting to Rs. 58,688, had been inserted by "mistake and fraud," as had been discovered on the 25th January 1879.

To the plaint was appended an account, by which it appeared that there was due upon the aforesaid four decrees to the end of May 1878, for principal and interest the sum of Rs. 3,79,888-2-7

From which there was deducted as paid ...

Leaving a balance of ...

To which there being added the debt to Ram Kishen ...

The total was ... Rs. 3,78,580-2-7 which the mortgagor alleged was all that the mortgage should have been for.

The respondents on the 20th February, 1880, filed their written statement, in which they maintained that there was neither fraud nor mistake in fixing the principal amount mentioned in the mortgage at Rs. 4,37,276-12-0: that this amount had been arrived at by calculating the interest on the debt to the Land Mortgage Bank at 12 per cent. instead of at 10 per cent., which increased interest was the consideration to the respondents for entering into the arrangement, and by adding an item of costs which the mortgagor had agreed to pay: that the mortgagor had wrongly taken credit in his account for a sum of Rs. 5,000 and that the sum of Rs. 34,000 deducted above ought to be reduced to Rs. 32,173-7-9, and that the mortgagor had brought the interest account down only to the end of May, in place of bringing it down to the 15th October 1885, the date of the deed, which was the arrangement, and had made a mistake in calculating interest.

The first and main issue was whether the mortgagor was bound by the mortgage-deed of 15th October 1878, stating the mortgage-debt to be Rs. 4,37,274-12.

The District Judge found that there was no doubt that the plaintiff, or his agents, had had full opportunity to examine the accounts, and that it had not been shown the defendants [311] had misrepresented anything, or concealed any material fact. He accordingly found against the mortgagor on the above issue, and dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner affirmed this judgment.

On this appeal,—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents.

For the appellant it was argued that a case had been made out for the rectification of the mortgage-deed on the ground that the appellant had acted under a mistake of fact: the respondents being aware of this had concealed it, taking undue advantage of the appellant. The judgments in Barret v. Hartley (1); Kelly v. Soluri (2) were referred to.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir B. Peacock.—The question in this case is whether there are sufficient grounds made out by the plaintiff for reforming or altering the deed of mortgage which was executed on the 15th October, 1878. The plaintiff in his plaint declares: "That on the 15th October, 1878, at Faizabad, the present plaintiff, having been deceived by the defendants, executed, according to the accounts furnished by the defendants, and without examining them, an instrument for Rs. 4,37,376-12 in lieu of the aforesaid decrees, and of the debt due to Ram Kishen Mahajun." Then he says that, looking to the actual accounts between the parties,

"Rs. 58,688 ought to be deducted from the mortgage money entered in the aforesaid instrument," and so on; and then that the cause of action accrued on the 25th June, 1879, when he found out the mistake.

The Judge in giving judgment at the trial says: "The plaintiff admits that, previous to the execution of the mortgage-deed, an account was produced before him, and that Uma Persad, his Dewan, stated that a certain sum was due. Mir Ghazafur Husain, a well-known talukdar and a man of ability, had also been requested by the plaintiff to examine the account, and the plaintiff has deposed that he relied on him.
A draft of the deed was prepared only after the accounts had been produced; and the plaintiff [312] says, moreover, that it was discussed for some fifteen days, and altered." In another part of his judgment he says: "The defendants have not produced clear proof that plaintiff entered into a special agreement about interest, nor that he authorized them to include other debts in the mortgage-deed, or to appropriate payments on account of decrees to the liquidation of other claims, but it is only reasonable to assume that, when the defendants were entering into such a heavy transaction with the plaintiff, they would make a general settlement of their claims, and not leave small, or comparatively small, debts outstanding." It appears to their Lordships that, putting a correct construction upon the deed, and taking the evidence which was adduced, and the findings of the learned Judge, there is no reason to suppose that there was any fraud or deceit on the part of the defendants, or that there was any mutual mistake of the parties as to the amount which was stated as the sum for which the security was to be given.

Under these circumstances, their Lordships are of opinion that the decision of the Judge who tried the case in the first instance, and the decree of the Judicial Commissioner, who affirmed that decision, are correct, and they will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment below be affirmed, and that the appeal be dismissed, the appeal paying the costs of the appeal.

HOSSAIN BUX v. MUTOOKDHAREE LALL AND OTHERS (Opposite Parties)* [10th February, 1887.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VII of 1885), ss. 93, 143—Manager, Application for—Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 2.

An application under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, is not a suit between a landlord and tenant within the meaning of s. 143, and no appeal lies from an order rejecting such an application.

[313] On the 11th August, 1886, one Hossain Bux, who held a mokurari tenure in a portion of an estate, applied in the Court of the District Judge of Gya for an order, under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, for the appointment of a common manager to the estate. This application was opposed by certain persons, who, although admitting that they collected their rents separately from the petitioner, denied his right to have a manager appointed.

The District Judge, holding that the petitioner was not a co-owner with the objectors opposing the application, refused to appoint a manager, intimating that the petitioner should sue the ryots for his share of the rent, making the objectors parties to the suit.

The petitioner appealed against the order.

Baboo Saligram Singh, for the respondents, took a preliminary objection that no appeal lay; the application not being a suit between a landlord and tenant within the meaning of s. 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; contending that under that section the Civil Procedure Code regulated appeals, no rules having as yet been framed under the Act, and that under the Civil Procedure Code there was no provision for an appeal from such an order.

Mr. M. L. Sandel, for the appellant, contended that the order amounted to a decree within the meaning of s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C. J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.) was delivered by PETHERAM, C. J.—It appears, on an examination of the Code, that the order in question is not a suit within the meaning of s. 143 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, as the operation of that section is confined to suits between landlord and tenant. This is not a proceeding between landlord and tenant, but a proceeding initiated by some third person who does not fill either of these positions. Under these circumstances, and it not being shown to us that unless it comes within the meaning of s. 143, this order would be appealable at all, we must hold that the order is not appealable, and therefore we must dismiss the appeal for that reason.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

[19th February, 1887.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182—False information to the Police—Charge made against no specific person—Specific charge.

Section 182 of the Penal Code must be read as an entire section, and when so read, it applies to those cases in which the Police are induced, upon information supplied to them, to do or omit to do something which might affect some third person and which they would not have done had they known the truth of the matter laid before them.

On the 14th December, 1886, one Golam Ahmed Kazi informed the Police that, whilst proceeding along a certain road at night, he was attacked and robbed of a shawl; he, however, made no mention of any particular person being implicated in the attack. On this information the Police inquired into the matter, and searched the house of the mistress of Golam Ahmed Kazi, but from her evidence taken by the Police on the inquiry, it transpired that the shawl in question had been given to her by Golam Ahmed Kazi some time previously, but had been lent to him by her for a short time, and that on the night of the 14th December he had worn the shawl and had at her request returned it to her. Golam Ahmed Kazi was thereupon accused by the Inspector of Police of having given false information to the effect that he had been robbed of the shawl.

The Joint Magistrate of Scaldah, before whom the case was heard, charged the accused under s. 182 of the Penal Code, and convicting him of an offence thereunder sentenced him to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner petitioned the Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs to send for the record and to take steps to have the conviction set aside. The Sessions Judge, however, refused to interfere, and with reference to the case of Reg. v. Saraji [315] Mohun (1) cited in the notes to Mr. O'Kinealy's Penal Code, p. 122, referred to by the pleader making the application, mentioned that the case was a very old one and was not cited with approval by Mr. O'Kinealy.

The prisoner thereupon moved the High Court under the revisional sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, and obtained a rule calling on the Crown to show cause why the order of the Joint Magistrate should not be set aside.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

Baboo Kishori Lal Sircar, for the prisoner, contended that s. 182 did not apply, as no specific person was mentioned in the charge to the Police citing the Bombay case above referred to.

* Criminal Revision No. 28 of 1887, against the order passed by C. B. Garrett, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated 20th of January 1887, confirming the order passed by Baboo Gopendra Krishna, Officiating Joint-Magistrate of Scaldah, dated the 11th of January 1887.

(1) Unreported.
ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—We think that this rule must be made absolute to set aside the conviction.

The facts of the case are that a person went on one occasion and informed the Police that he had been robbed in the street of a shawl, but in the statement which he made to the Police he did not indicate any particular person or describe any person in such a way as by any possibility could be supposed to implicate any one as the person who committed the robbery. All he said was that he was robbed by a person whom he did not see, so that in the statement that he made he did not say anything to cast suspicion on any one in particular. Under these circumstances, there was no offence within the meaning of s. 182 of the Penal Code. That section provides that if any person gives any information to a public servant with the intention of inducing him to put his powers in force to the injury or annoyance of any person, or to do or omit anything which such public servant would not have done or omitted to do if the true state of facts respecting which such information was given had been known to him, shall be punished in a certain way there specified.

As it seems to us, that section must be read as a whole, and, taken as a whole, we think it applies to those cases in which the Police are induced, upon the information supplied to them to do or omit to do something which might affect some third person, and which they would not have done if they had known the true state of things.

Upon the information which was given to these Police constables, all that they could be justified in doing was to examine the informant as to what had happened to him, and then make such inquiries as the result of that examination might render desirable, but they would have no right to interfere with any one or search any one’s house, because there were no circumstances brought to their knowledge by the information which this man gave, which entitled them to suppose that any particular individual was guilty of any offence. Under the circumstances, the most that the statement of the accused amounts to is, that it was untrue and was made for the purpose of hoaxing the Police. No doubt that is a very wrong thing for any man to do. In the first place it is wrong to tell lies, and in the second place it is extremely wrong to take up the time of Government servants by putting them to useless inquiries under circumstances of this kind; but I do not think myself that such conduct comes within the meaning of this section, or amounts to anything more than a hoax, for which no punishment is provided by the Code. Under these circumstances, we cannot make a crime when it is not made one by the Code, or provide a punishment for it.

The rule will therefore be made absolute to set aside the conviction; the prisoner will be discharged.

Rule absolute.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

FANINDRO DEB RAIKUT (Judgment-debtor) v. RANI JUGUDISHWARI DABI (Decree-holder).* [22nd December, 1886.]

Execution of decree—Decree against executors for debts incurred while acting under a will afterwards found invalid. Effect of—The heir's liability under the decree—The remedy of the decree-holder.

Certain executors, acting under an order of the Court, borrowed a sum of money from K.M. for the funeral expenses of J.D., the testator. K.M. [317] obtained a decree for the amount against the executors and the adopted son of J.D. Afterwards F.D. got a decree, whereby both the will and the adoption were set aside, and he was declared the legal heir of J.D. K.M. then sought to enforce his decree against F.D. by the sale of the property which now formed part of the estate of F.D., who objected to the proceedings.

Held, that as F.D. was not the legal representative of the judgment-debtors, the decree could not bind the estate in his hands; but, in order to make the estate liable for the debt, the proper course of the decree-holder was to bring a regular suit against F.D.

[J., 16 C. 603 (608).]

JOGENDRO DEB RAIKUT died on the 10th March 1878. He had made a will, appointed executors and left an adopted son. The executors took out probate, and gave a bond to Kali Mohun Rae for a sum of Rs. 5,000, which they had borrowed for the performance of the funeral ceremonies of Jogendro. Kali Mohun obtained a decree for the amount on the 29th July, 1881. In the meantime Fanindro Deb had brought a suit for the establishment of his right to the estate left by Jogendro, and to set aside the will and adoption. Fanindro fought up to the Privy Council and obtained a decree on the 14th February, 1885. On the 26th March the estate of the deceased Jogendro in Bycowntore was attached in execution of Kali Mohun's decree. Afterwards under the direction of the Subordinate Judge the name of Fanindro Deb was substituted in respect of the estate of Jogendro Deb, and a fresh application was made in execution for the sale of the property. Fanindro took objection, and his principal ground was that, insomuch as he was not a party to the suit, the decree was not enforceable against him, nor was the estate which had now passed to him liable under that decree. The Subordinate Judge, holding on the authority of Sudindra v. Budan (1) that the objector was not entitled to go behind the decree and re-open the whole case, granted the application.

Fanindro Deb appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Srinath Das and Baboo Bhagabati Charan Ghose, for the appellant.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Grish Chunder Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Mukunda Nath Roy, for the respondent.

[318] The Court (Prinsep and Agnew, JJ.) delivered the following judgment:—

JUDGMENT.

The matter before us relates to the execution of a decree obtained by Kali Mohun against the executors of the estate of Jogendro Deb, deceased.

* Appeal from Order No. 216 of 1886, against the order of G. J. B. T. Dalton, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Jalpaiguri, dated the 20th of May 1886.

(1) 9 M. So.
acting under an order of the Court, and also against the minor, stated to be his lawfully adopted son, represented by the widow of the deceased as guardian ad litem. The decree was for money borrowed by the executors to celebrate the funeral ceremonies of the deceased Jogendro, and was made on the 29th July 1881. In 1878 a suit was brought by Fanindro the appellant before us, to establish his right to succeed to the estate of Jogendro, and to set aside the adoption of the minor as well as the will in his favour. On the 11th of November 1879, Fanindro obtained a decree in the Court of first instance. An appeal against this order was pending before this Court while the suit by Kali Mohun was still under trial. That appeal was decided on the 24th June 1881, in favour of the adoption, reversing the judgment of the first Court which had been obtained by Fanindro. At that time also, it may be observed, Kali Mohun's suit had not been decided. On the 27th of December 1881, Kali Mohun took out execution and attached certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. On the 22nd of February 1882, Jugudishwari, the widow of Jogendro and the guardian of the minor whose adoption had been disputed, purchased this decree, and on the 20th of March following was substituted in the place of the decree-holder as his assignee. No further proceedings were taken, and on the 5th of April the proceedings terminated. On the 6th of November 1884, Jugudishwari, the assignee of the decree-holder, applied for execution against Jogendro, who had attained majority. The appeal in the suit brought by Fanindro was heard by the Privy Council in the early part of December, and judgment was delivered on the 14th February 1885, setting aside the decree of this Court and restoring that of the first Court in favour of Fanindro (see L. R., 12 Ind. App., 72). Nevertheless the execution of Kali Mohun's decree proceeded, and, on the 26th of March, the estate of the deceased Jogendro in Bycuntpore was attached. On the 2nd April orders for its sale were passed, and on the 7th of May, Fanindro objected that execution could not be taken out against him, as he was not one of the judgment-debtors or a party to the suit. This objection was allowed on the 11th of June; and the Subordinate Judge expressed the opinion that "the proper course will be for decree-holder to apply to have the name of Fanindro Deb substituted for that of Jogendro Deb, on the ground that the estate of Jogendro Deb is liable." The proceedings in execution were renewed on the 16th July, and on the 25th September Fanindro again raised objections, which may be shortly described as those which are now presented before us in this appeal. The Subordinate Judge disallowed them on the 20th of May, 1886. It is first objected that Fanindro is not bound by any of the acts of the executors and others acting under the will and adoption made by Jogendro Deb, which at his suit have been declared invalid by their Lordships of the Privy Council. To this it is replied that, so long as the probate was operative, the acts of the executors within the authority conferred on them bound the estate especially in a matter connected with the performance of the religious ceremonies of the deceased under Hindu law, and further that in lending money to them for that purpose Kali Mohun could recover from the estate. For Fanindro it is stated that any ceremonies performed by a person unlawfully adopted are not valid, and therefore cannot be charged against the estate; and further that the funds in the hands of the executors were much more than sufficient for this purpose. Another objection raised is to the jurisdiction of the Court of the Sub-Judge of Rungpore to pass the decree now under execution, and of the Court of the Sub-Judge at Jalpaiguri to take proceedings in execution. This is an exceedingly complicated and difficult matter. The suit was instituted by Kali Mohun on 11th February, 1881, in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Rungpore, which it is not disputed, had jurisdiction. On 24th March following a notification was published by the Government of Bengal under s. 10 of the Bengal Civil Courts' Act of 1871, vesting the Deputy Commissioner of Jalpaiguri with powers of a Sub-Judge from the 1st April next, and further declaring that from that date the Sub-Judge of Rungpore shall cease to have jurisdiction in Jalpaiguri. We are next informed that on 6th April following the Registrar of the High Court under its order directed the Sub-Judge to continue to exercise jurisdiction until further orders. He consequently proceeded with the trial and finally made a decree. Execution was however taken out in the Court of the Sub-Judge at Jalpaiguri. No order for the transfer of the decree under s. 223 of the Code appears to have been made, and it would seem that the proceedings were taken under authority of the Government of Bengal of 1st April. It would certainly not be open to a judgment-debtor to question in execution the jurisdiction of the Court which had made the decree, but Fanindro, whom it is sought to bind by that decree, was no party to it. He holds the estate from which it is about to be realized; and he justly contends that he is entitled to an adjudication of all those objections before the decree can be realized from his estate. We are aware of no precedent under which an objection, such as have been raised before us, can be taken in the course of execution.

Mr. Evans contends that it is for Fanindro in another suit to have himself absolved from liability under the decree, and that as it stands it can be executed against the estate. The matter is of considerable difficulty, but after some hesitation we have come to the conclusion that Fanindro cannot be held liable to satisfy the same, and that, if the decree-holder wishes to make him liable for the debt incurred, he should bring a separate suit in which matters which cannot be tried in the form in which the proceedings are now before us may be regularly and finally determined. Fanindro cannot be regarded as the legal representative of those who incurred the debt, and if it be sought to bind him as now representing the estate which was then represented by the parties to the bond, he can be made liable only in a separate suit.

We accordingly set aside the order of the Sub-Judge and direct that execution be stayed.

Appellant will receive his costs.

Order set aside.
RAHIM BUX (Auction-purchaser) v. NUNDOO LAL GOSSAMI AND ANOTHER (Decree-holders) AND SITAL CHUNDER MUKERJI AND OTHERS
(Judgment-debtors).* [2nd February, 1887.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 174—Deposit, Nature of—Jurisdiction—Application under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The deposit under s. 174 of the Tenancy Act must be of such a nature as to be at once payable to the parties, and a Court has no power to set aside a sale under that section unless the judgment-debtor has complied strictly with its provisions.

SITAL CHUNDER MUKERJI, on behalf of himself and a minor along with other co-tenants, made an application to the Subordinate Judge under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to set aside a sale of their joint tenure, and under the special circumstances of the case, the Court accepted the deposit, although it was not made strictly within time. The deposit, however, was partly in cash and partly in a Government Promissory Note, by way of security for a balance of less than Rs. 600. The Court, notwithstanding the objection of the auction-purchaser, accepted the amount with the consent of the decree-holder, and upon the view that one of the parties was a minor, that the decree-holder was satisfied, and that the section ought to be leniently construed in favour of the judgment-debtors, held that there was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the section, and set aside the sale, allowing the auction-purchaser 5 per cent. on his purchase-money according to law.

On the motion of the auction-purchaser the High Court issued a rule under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Baboo Gurudas Banerjee (with him Baboo Omakali Mukerji), for the opposite party, showed cause.—In this case there has been a sufficient compliance with the law. There was a sufficient deposit within the meaning of the section. The decree-holder being a consenting party, the money must be taken to have been deposited. The language of the Act is not "amount recovered under the decree" but "money recoverable under the decree." There is no ground of relief under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge, in the exercise of his jurisdiction, has done substantial justice. Moreover, interference under s. 622 is discretionary with this Court. There is no question of jurisdiction here.

Baboo Troyluko Nath Mitter, for the petitioner, in support of the rule.—There was no legal deposit in this case. A Government Promissory Note is not a legal tender. The words of the section confer on the judgment-debtor a substantial right to the detriment of the purchaser; the section should not therefore be leniently construed in favour of the judgment-debtor. The consent of the decree-holder is inmaterial. There being no legal tender in this case, and consequently no deposit, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale.

* Civil Rule No. 1506 of 1886 against the order passed by Baboo A. C. Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 13th November, 1886.

The Court (Prinsep and Baoverley, JJ.) delivered the following judgment:

JUDGMENT.

This is a matter under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in which the Subordinate Judge has set aside the sale on receiving from the debtor what, in his opinion, represented the money due to the decree-holder, and the percentage allowed to the auction-purchaser. Three objections are raised before us: first, that the case does not come within the Bengal Tenancy Act; secondly, that the deposit was not made in time; and, thirdly, that from the nature of the deposit made, it was not a proper deposit such as would entitle the judgment-debtor to relief. It is unnecessary in the view that we take of the merits of the ease to consider the first point. The facts found by the Subordinate Judge seem sufficiently to show that the deposit, if it were a proper deposit, was made in proper time. We are, however, of opinion that the third objection is fatal. The judgment-debtor deposited a sum of money in cash and also a Government Promissory Note for Rs. 1,000, which, if negotiated, would probably be more than sufficient to cover the balance due. The auction-purchaser and the decree-holder both objected to this kind of deposit, and represented that there was no power to negotiate this Government Promissory Note. Two days later, [323] the debtor came to terms with the decree-holder, and on certain conditions connected with the probable difficulty to negotiate this Promissory Note, the decree-holder agreed to accept this Government Promissory Note, and the balance in cash paid in satisfaction of the amount due to him. The auction-purchaser, however, still objected, although the payment to him was apparently to be made in cash. We think that to claim the benefit of s. 174 the judgment-debtor is bound strictly to comply with its provisions, and that the deposit made should be of such a nature as to be at once payable to the parties. In the present ease it is quite possible that no objections may have arisen, but if a deposit otherwise than in the currency of the country were receivable, the finality which the law contemplates in such a transaction would be completely lost, and the time of the Court would be unnecessarily occupied in determining various points which the Legislature never contemplated in such a matter. Under such circumstances we think that the order of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and the sale confirmed. The petitioner will be entitled to his costs, which we assess at Rs. 50.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Droboimoyi Gupta and others (Defendants) v. C. T. Davis and others (Plaintiffs).* [24th January, 1887.]

Receiver, Power of—Suit to eject tenant claiming permanent tenure without leave of Court—Notice to quit—Limitation—Adverse possession—Tenant claiming to hold permanent tenure as against landlord—Landlord and tenant—Jungleburi tenure—Hindu widow, Power of, to grant jungleburi tenure in respect of chur land.

D was appointed receiver in a partition suit pending in the High Court by an order which, amongst other things, gave him power to let and set the immoveable property, or any part thereof as he should think fit, and to take and use all such lawful and equitable means and remedies for recovering, realizing and obtaining payment of the rents, issues and profits of the said immovable property, and of the outstanding debts and claims by action, suit, or otherwise as should be expedient. D, without special leave of the Court, served a notice to quit on certain tenants of the estate, who claimed to hold a permanent lease, and afterwards instituted a suit to eject them, also without special leave of the Court.

[324] Held, that the order appointing him did not give him power to serve such notice or to institute such suit without the special leave of the Court, and that as he was appointed under the provisions of s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure and not vested with the general powers referred to in that section, but only with the powers referred to in the order appointing him, and as a receiver is not otherwise authorized to institute such suits without special leave of the Court, the suit must be dismissed.

R, a Hindu widow, granted a jungleburi tenure to contain tenants in respect of a char belonging to her husband's estate. An amulnama was granted to the tenants signed by a karpardaz of R in respect of the tenure. R died in January 1861, and was succeeded by J and P, two daughters, the last of whom died on the 31st December 1889. On her death the grandsons succeeded to the estate. On R's death J and P got possession of all estate papers, and amongst them a dowil granted by the tenants in return for the amulnama. In 1865 proceedings were taken by the tenants to obtain kabulyats on the footing of those documents, which proceedings came to an end in 1868. In 1873 J and P instituted suits against the tenants alleging the amulnama and dowil to be forgeries, and seeking to enhance the rents payable to them, as well as to have it declared that R's acts did not bind them. In these suits it was found that J and P had all along been aware of the claim made by the tenants that they held a permanent tenure, and the suits were dismissed on the ground that it was too late for J and P, after the lapse of twelve years from R's death, to raise the question. In 1884 D, a receiver, instituted a suit in the names of the grandsons to eject the tenants on amongst other grounds that the grandsons' reversioners were not bound by R's acts, and that the jungleburi tenure was not binding on them; that the tenants were middlemen and had no right of occupancy; that at all events the plaintiffs were entitled to rent on the area of land then held by the defendants, as there had been large accretions to the amount covered by the amulnama and dowil. The defendants amongst other things pleaded limitation, res judicata and that R had the power to grant the jungleburi tenure so as to bind the reversioners.

Held, that being middlemen, the defendants had no right of occupancy, and that were the suit not dismissed for other grounds they were liable to have the rent assessed on the whole amount of lands held by them, which was in excess of that covered by the amulnama and dowil.

That the suit was not barred by res judicata as in the suits brought by J and P, the question of whether R's acts bound the reversioners was never decided.

That the suit was barred by limitation. Adverse possession began to run on R's death (as J and P who represented the estate were then well aware that the tenants claimed to hold the lands under a permanent lease, and though J and P received rent, the possession of the tenants was adverse to them), and more than twelve years elapsed before Act IX of 1871 came [325] into force, and therefore the defendants had then obtained a good title by adverse possession as against all the reversioners which could not be defeated by the provisions of the subsequent Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877.

Held, further, that the question whether a jungleburi tenure granted by a Hindu widow is binding on reversioners depends on the circumstances of the land.

Quere.—Whether such a tenure granted in respect of a char where no legal necessity on behalf of the widow is shown, could under any circumstances be binding on the reversioners.

The facts which gave rise to this suit were as follows: The property in suit originally belonged to one Raj Chunder Dass who died many years ago without leaving a son, but leaving a widow named Rashmoni, who succeeded to his estate and held it during her life. Rashmoni in her turn died in 1861, and the estate passed into the hands of her two daughters, Padmamoni and Jagadumba, who remained in possession jointly till the death of Padmamoni. After her death Jagadumba continued to hold the estate up to the date of her death, which took place on December 31st, 1880. The succession thereupon opened out to the grandchildren of Raj Chunder, who were all daughter's sons. Upon Jagadumba's death disputes arose between the grandchildren, and in the end a suit was instituted on the Original Side of the High Court for partition of the estate between them and other relief, and in that suit Davis was appointed receiver by an order dated the 11th August 1881. The portions of that order material to this case were as follows:—

"It is ordered that Charles Thomas Davis, Esq., be and he is hereby appointed the receiver without security of the immovable property (except such portion of the family dwelling house and such other property as yields no income) of the estate of Raj Chunder Dass, deceased, in the pleadings in this suit named, and of the rents, issues, and profits of the said immovable property of the said estate, with power to get in and collect all the outstanding debts and claims due to the said estate. And it is further ordered that the said receiver do take possession of the said property, moveable and immovable, of the said estate, and collect the rents, issues and profits of the said immovable property, and that the tenants and occupiers do attorn and pay their rents in arrears and growing rents to the said receiver, and that the said receiver be at liberty to let and set the said immovable property, or any part thereof as he shall think fit, and to take and use all such lawful and equitable means and remedies for recovering, realizing and obtaining payment of the said rents, issues and profits of the said immovable property and of the outstanding debts and claims by action, suit, or otherwise, as shall be expedient, and for that purpose to use the names of the plaintiffs and of the defendants."

In pursuance of the power given him to use the names of the plaintiffs and defendants, this suit was instituted by Davis in their names on the 19th August 1884 to recover possession of a certain chur called Chur Gobra from the defendants. The plaint alleged that, whilst Rashmoni was alive, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the predecessor of defendant No. 3, colluded with the karpardaz of Rashmoni and obtained an amulnama in respect of 1,600 bighas of land at a jumma of Rs. 1,000, but that there had been gradual accretions to the chur, and they were now holding about 2,937 bighas; that as Rashmoni only held a Hindu widow's interest in the estate, she had no power to make any settlement of the chur to ensure for a period exceeding her life, and that she had no valid or legal necessity for making the settlement in question, so as to bind the reversioners; that the defendants were not cultivating tenants and could not therefore acquire a right of occupancy; that after the death of Rashmoni, though Padmamoni and Jagadumba succeeded and received rents from the defendants, their interest was limited to the periods of their lives, and the reversioners were in no way bound by their acts; and that, though there was no necessity for so doing, a notice to quit had been served on the defendants on the 30th Assin 1290 (15th October 1883). The prayer of the plaint was for ejectment of the defendants and for khas possession with mesne profits, with an alternative prayer for enhancement of rent on the whole amount of land held by the defendants, or at all events to have rent assessed on the lands held by them in excess of the amount covered by the amulnama.

Various pleas were raised in the written statement of the defendants, and amongst them were the following, viz., that the suit was barred by limitation; that the notice was not served as alleged; that the suit was barred by res judicata in consequence of a decision of the High Court in suit brought by Padmamoni and Jagadumba against the defendants; that plaintiffs had ratified the settlement made by Rashmoni by receiving rents for a period subsequent to the death of Jagadumba; that Rashmoni was entitled to make the settlement of the land in the way she did, having regard to the nature of the land, and that the settlement was therefore binding on the reversioners.

The defendants alleged that the chur in question at the time of the amulnama was a jungle infested by wild beasts, and that in order to bring it under cultivation, the amulnama was granted on the 27th Kartie, 1260 (11th November 1853), the conditions being that no rent was to be paid for three years, for 1264 rent was to be paid at 4 annas a bigha, for 1265 at 6 annas, and for 1266 at 8 annas, and from and after 1266, the jumma was to be permanently fixed at 10 annas a bigha. On receipt of the amulnama the defendants alleged they had spent some Rs. 10,000, in exterminating the wild beasts and bringing the lands under cultivation, and that in the year 1265 Rashmoni received a dowl from them, the amulnama and the copy of the dowl being signed by her authorised naib as was customary in the pargannah. The defendants further claimed to have cultivated and held possession of the land for over 12 years, and to have been exercising a permanent jungleburi junkmai right, and they therefore contended that they were not liable to ejection.

The plea of res judicata was based on suits instituted by Padmamoni and Jagadumba, in which they sought to enhance the rent of the lands held by the defendants, alleging that the amulnama and dowl were forgeries, and even if genuine invalid as against them; and that Rashmoni had no power to grant a settlement to have effect for a longer period than her life. The suits terminated in a decree of the High Court on the 13th April, 1877, by which they were dismissed. The grounds upon which they were so dismissed are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court in the present case. Previous to these suits, proceedings had been taken in the Collector’s Court in 1865 by Jagadumba and Padmamoni against the defendants for kabulyats at enhanced rates of rent, and the defendants then contended that they held a permanent tenure under the amulnama and dowl, and were not liable to have the rent enhanced. It was also proved in the lower Court that Davis served a notice of enhancement on the defendants, dated the 25th Pous, 1288 (8th January, 1882). The lower Court held that the defendants [328] were trespassers and not entitled to notice, and also that they were equally not entitled to notice as they set up a permanent title—Baba v. Tishvenath Joshi (1); that the notice was served; that Rashmoni had no power to grant the settlement in favour of the defendants; that it was not proved that the reversioners had ratified Rashmoni’s acts, or acknowledged the defendants as tenants; that the suit was neither barred by limitation nor res judicata; and that the defendants being middlemen had not acquired a right of occupancy. The Court accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree for against that decree the defendants now appealed to the High Court, upon grounds which sufficiently appear in the arguments of counsel and the judgment of the High Court.

Appellate Court, Cal.

INDIAN DECISIONS, NEW SERIES

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Grija Sunkar Mozoonudar and Baboo Gurudas Banerji, for the appellants.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Srinath Das, Baboo Gopi Nath Mukerji, and Baboo Gunesh Chunder Chunder, for the respondents.

Mr. Woodroffe and Baboo Gurudas Banerji for appellants.—Assuming the defendants to be liable to ejectment at the suit of the plaintiffs, other than the receiver, they are nevertheless entitled to proper notice to quit before being sued in ejectment. At the lowest they are yearly tenants. Their tenancy, whatever it was, did not terminate immediately upon the deaths of either Rashmoni Dasi or her surviving daughter Jagaduma Dasi, unless it can be successfully contended that a Hindu heiress cannot create a tenancy from year to year—a proposition for which no authority can be found. No proper notice having been issued or served upon them, the defendants contend that this suit should, even on this ground alone, have been dismissed—Chaturi Singh v. Mukund Lall (1) Ram Khelawan Singh v. Mussamut Soondra (2).

The Bombay decision—Baba v. Vishvanath Joshi (3)—relied on by the lower Court as obviating the necessity of notice, is inapplicable to the facts of the present case, as there has been [329] here no repudiation of the landlords’s title, and proceeds moreover upon the erroneous assumption that the principle laid down in Vivian v. Moat (4) is applicable to this country. Kali Kishen Tagore v. Golam Ali (5) and Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golam Ali (6) are the most recent decisions of this Court on this point. The notice said to have been served upon the defendants purports to have been signed by Davis as receiver. It is not found that it was so signed, and there is no sufficient proof of service in the face of the defendant’s express testimony to the contrary. But even if the notice in question were in fact signed by Davis and served upon the defendants, it is nevertheless insufficient in law. Davis had as receiver no power to issue it without the special leave of the Court. The order appointing him, it is true, empowers him to take and use all such lawful and equitable means and remedies for recovering, realizing and obtaining payment of the rents, issues, and profits of the immoveable property and of the outstanding debts and claims by action, suit or otherwise, as shall be expedient. But these words do no more than utmost empower him to eject tenants from year to year admitted by himself. They cannot be construed so as to empower the receiver of his own motion to issue notices of ejectment to tenants who, as the defendants in this case, had for years been in occupation under a claim of permanent tenancy. A receiver does not represent the owner of the estate in his charge as an officer of Court, and should not therefore fail to obtain leave of the Court before proceeding to determine an existing tenancy, and without leave of the Court he can neither sue or be sued—Kerr on Receivers, pp. 148 et seq., Mansfield (Lord) v. Hamilton (7); Wynn v. Lord Newborough (8); Ward v. Swift (9); Wilkinson v. Gangadhar.

Sircar (1): and Miller v. Ram Ranjan Chakravarti (2). Here the receiver not [330] only had no authority to issue the notice said to have been served upon the defendants, but was, in suing them in ejectment, acting of his own motion without the leave of the Court, and, as would also appear, without even the authority of the owners of the estate, whose names were used in this most harassing and costly litigation.

This suit is moreover barred by limitation. Rashmoni died on the 19th February, more than 12 years before Act IX of 1871 came into operation, and consequently the Full Bench decision [Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose (3)] does not touch the present case, even if it be taken to be that which it does not profess to be—a decision on art. 141 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, and the defendants had by adverse possession against Rashmoni’s daughters, who though females, fully represented the estate; acquired a valid title by prescription to the land in suit before Act IX of 1871 came into force and the right of suit thus lost as well as the right of property thus gained were alike unaffected by either Act IX of 1871, or Act XV of 1877, with respect to which it is further to be observed that the former dealt with suits by reversioners on the death of a Hindu widow, whilst the latter dealt with suits by Hindus or Mahomedans entitled to the possession of immoveable property on the death of a Hindu or Mahomedan female—two entirely distinct matters. The Court below was in error in reading ‘‘Hindu widow’’ in the one Act as equivalent to ‘‘Hindu female’’ in the other, and in considering a person (against whom adverse possession for upwards of 12 years had been enjoyed,) to be a person entitled to possession within the meaning of the later Act. Limitation Acts are to be strictly construed as against the rightful owner.—Dayachand Nemchand v. Hemchand Dharanmehand (4); Umishankar Lakhmiram v. Chhotalal Vajeram (5); Balvantrao v. Purshotum Sidheshwar (6). It was found as a fact by the judgment of the High Court of the 13th April 1877, that Padmamoni and Jagadumba had all along been aware that the present defendants claimed to hold a permanent tenure under the dowel and amulnama, and this is binding on [331] the reversioners—Pertabnarain Singh v. Trilokinath Sing (7); Tekait Ram Chunder Singh v. Srimati Madho Kumari (8).

It is not alleged that the claim was first made in 1865, and it is clear that if a landlord knows that a claim is made by a tenant that he holds a permanent tenure, the landlord has twelve years within which to proceed to protect his interests—Ogara Kant Choudhree v. Mohesh Chunder Sikdar (9); Tekaitnee Goura Coomaree v. Mussamam Saroo Coomaree (10); Petambar Baboo v. Nilmong Singh Deo (11); Maudin Saiaba v. Nagapa (12); Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kolly Prosunno Mookerjee (13).

As in this case adverse possession began to run in 1861 on the death of Rashmoni, the twelve years was complete before 1873 when the Act of 1871 came into force, as under the Act of 1859 the reversioners had twelve years from the death of the ‘‘widow,’’ and the daughters were the reversioners, and fully represented the estate.

Next the suit is barred by res judicata, as the effect of the judgment of the High Court of the 13th April, 1877, was to hold that the dowel and amulnama were genuine documents, and binding on the reversioners. Padmamoni and Jagadumba, on the death of Rashmoni, fully represented the estate. They had an interest analogous to that of the widow, and the principle to be applied is to be found in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (1), and Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (2). The suits brought by Jagadumba and Padmamoni were dismissed, and as the plaintiff is bound to include in his plaint the whole of his claim and all his grounds of attack, and as these suits were dismissed, we must take it that the effect of the dismissal was that the Court decided that the tenure was a permanent one, and that the defendants could not be ejected or their rents enhanced.

The defendants also contend that Rashmoni was entitled to make the settlement, having regard to the nature of the land at [332] the time it was made. A Hindu widow, so long as she does not commit waste, is entitled to manage her estate in any way she pleases, and for effectuating such management to lease or settle the lands comprised therein, and such leases or settlement, whether temporary or permanent, will ensure beyond her own life, provided she acts in that behalf as a prudent owner and to the benefit of the estate. In ascertaining whether a settlement made by a Hindu widow is such as could be considered the act of a prudent owner, and for the benefit of the estate, one must look to the position of affairs at the time when such settlement is made, and not be guided by the light of subsequent events. Here the lands were lying waste, and were covered with jungle, and overrun with wild animals. Considerable expense was therefore necessary to be incurred, and that for several years, before such lands could be brought under cultivation, which the widow was under no obligation to incur, and for which she might never obtain a return, and under these circumstances this settlement was not only a fair and reasonable one, but also one actually resulting in great benefit. Evidence was tendered to show the condition of the chur and that the lease was of a nature similar to settlements made by neighbouring zamindars for similar lands, and therefore the act of a prudent owner; but that evidence was rejected, and before therefore it can be held that it was not an act which would be binding on the reversioners, that evidence would have to be taken. As to the power of a Hindu widow in this respect see Pertabnurain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (3); Sreemutty Puddo Monce Dossce v. Dwarka Nath Biswas (4); Hurry Mohun Rai v. Gonesh Chunder Doss (5); and Mayne’s Hindu law, s. 544.

It cannot be contended that a Hindu widow who fully represents the estate of her husband, and is seized of it as her own, though without power of alienation save for necessity or under the circumstances before mentioned, is in this respect in a worse position than a Shebait, who may grant a permanent lease of debutter property, of which he is merely manager, if the granting [333] of such lease be beneficial to the estate, and the lease be of such a nature as a prudent owner would grant—Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (1); Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (6).

Here Rashmoni had a large chur covered with jungle, uncultivated and yielding no profit whatever. Bringing it under cultivation was no part of her duty, nor was it an incident to the proper management of the estate to spend income which was her own in order to bring it under cultivation for the benefit of the reversioners. She adopted the course usually adopted by prudent owners, and granted a jungleburi tenure in order to have the chur brought under cultivation, and made a source of profit to the estate. You cannot require a Hindu widow to be more prudent than a full owner and set aside a jungleburi tenure, because it turns out at a subsequent period that the reversioners could obtain a higher rent than that fixed by the settlement.

The plaintiffs have also ratified Rashmoni’s acts. Jagadamba and Padmannoni received rents from the defendants, and Davis also received rents after he got possession—Gazee Syed Mahomed. Azmul v. Chundee Lall Pandey (1); Jogeshuri Choudhrain v. Mahomed Ebrahim (2).

Mr. Evans for respondents.—The argument for the appellant has shown that the effect of the anulnama and dowl has been to alienate the property, and that they do not amount to a lease, and therefore it cannot be said that it was the act of a prudent manager. Ranee Sonet Kowar v. Mirza Himmut Bahadoor (3). The evidence of neighbouring zemindars to prove that it is the custom to grant such jungleburi tenures is therefore irrelevant and unnecessary.

There can be no doubt that the granting of a permanent tenure amounts to an alienation. Lall Soonder Doss v. Hurry Kishen Doss (4), Maharanee Shibbessouree Debia v. Molhooranath Acharjo (5); Juggut Mohini Dossee v. Mussumat Shokheemoney Dossee (6); Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (7).

[334] The case of Hurry Mohun Rai v. Gonesh Chunder Doss (8) does not assist the contention of the other side, and it cannot be contended that in order to bring this chur under cultivation it was necessary to alienate it, for it was not virgin jungle but merely a recently formed chur covered with scrub and grasses, which in themselves were a source of revenue to the estate. It is also admitted by the defendants that some Rs. 10,000 only were spent in bringing it under cultivation, and even that amount, if actually spent, could have been provided by Rashmoni, as the estate of Raj Chunder was a very large one.

Upon the question of notice—no notice was necessary as defendants are trespassers, and even if it was necessary, it was served, and no objection was taken in the Court below that it was not proved to have been signed by Davis; and had such objection been taken, the fact was one which might easily have been proved. Nor is there any force in the objection that the receiver was not empowered by the order appointing him to give notice to quit. The words in the order “to let and set” and to “recover, realize and obtain payment of claims by suit” are ample to include such a power (Kerr on Receivers, pp. 148—151). A receiver can give notice to quit when the tenancy is merely a yearly one. Even if it be held that the notice was bad, and that we are not entitled to a decree for ejectment, we are still entitled to a declaratory decree that the defendants are not entitled to the permanent tenure claimed by them—Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golam Ally (9). This would leave us to bring a fresh suit to eject them upon serving a fresh notice next year.

The suit is not barred by res judicata—Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (7); Joygoobind Sahoy v. Mahtlab Koonwar (10); Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (11); Pertabnarain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (12).

The question was not decided by the judgment of the High Court in the previous cases as contended by Mr. Woodroffe, and if the Court finds that the question was not fully tried out and decided, there can be no bar on that account to this suit. Could 335 it be said that the judgment in Petambar Baboo v. Nilmong Singh Deo (1) could be pleaded as res judicata against a subsequent rajah?

As to limitation—a reversioner has 12 years from the time when his estate falls into possession within which to bring his suit—Srinath Kur v. Prossunno Kumar Ghose (2). In this case there was no hostile assertion of right till the year 1865, when Jagadumba and Padmamoni brought suits in the Collector’s Court for kabulyats at enhanced rates. The case of Tekait Ram Chunder Singh v. Srimoti Madho Kumari (3) is conclusive upon the question as to the period of time when limitation begins to run. The acts of the two daughters in no way affect the reversioners. When an alienation is made by a widow and ratified by a daughter, the whole principle of the law is opposed to the alienee taking any thing, for no one of several successive female holders has any more power than the other. Isri Dut Koer v. Mussumat Hansbutti Koerain (4). Therefore the defendants could derive no benefit by the acquiescence of Jagadumba or Padmamoni in the acts of Rashmoni, daughters not being protectors of the estate.

The case of Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kally Prosonno Mookerjee (5) throws no light on the subject, for in that case Mr. Justice Markby thought that the possession of the wife was adverse.

As to ratification by the plaintiff,—the judgment of the lower Court is right, and there is no evidence that the plaintiffs in any way ratified the acts of Rashmoni, but on the contrary evidence to show that they disputed them from the first.

Mr. Woodroffe, in reply.—Notice was necessary in the case. Ram Khelawun Singh v. Mussamut Soondra (6) lays down that persons holding over cannot be treated as trespassers without reasonable notice, and Chaturi Singh v. Mahund Lall (7) lays down the same proposition. Rashmoni, Jagadumba and Padmamoni [336] could create a tenancy from year to year, and no tenancy terminates on the death of the widow who creates it; but the tenant is certainly entitled to hold till the end of the year. Besides rent was received after the death of Jagadumba, and the tenancy, whatever it was, was admitted thereby [Cazee Syud Mahomed Azmul v. Chundee Lall Pandey (8), and the defendants could not therefore be treated as trespassers.

The setting up of permanent lease is not a repudiation of the landlord’s title [Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golam Ally (9)], and therefore notice was necessary, and as it was not given, the suit must fail.

Next Mr. Evans contends that at all events he is entitled to a declaratory decree, but he got no such decree in the lower Court, and he has not appealed, nor is he entitled to any such decree even if he had asked for it, which he did not. As to the point of limitation—immediately on Rashmoni’s death the daughters could have ousted the defendants, and they were well aware of the annulrama and dorol at that time. The whole current of decisions show that limitation commences to run from the time when the vendor is aware that there is an assertion of a claim to a permanent tenure—Maharajah Rajundur Krishwar Singh Bahadoor v. Sheopursen Misser (10); Maidin Saiba v. Nagapa (11);

Dinomoney Dabea v. Doorgapersad Mozoomdar (1) Ogra Kant Chowdhree v. Mohesh Chunder Sickdar (2); Ram Chunder Singh v. Madho Kumari (3). The possession of a tenant in this respect is not the possession of a landlord, and when a tenant pays rent but claims that he holds a permanent tenure, he holds adversely to the landlord, who disputes the claim, and limitation runs—Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose (4), and therefore we had obtained a perfectly good title by adverse possession before the new Limitation Act of 1871 came into force.

[337] The judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and GHOSE, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Furreedpore in favour of the plaintiffs in a suit brought by Mr. C. T. Davis as receiver to the estate of the late Raj Chunder Dass in the names of himself and the proprietors of the estate against the appellants Permanund Sen and others to set aside a permanent settlement granted to them by Rashmoni Dasi, the widow of the said Raj Chunder Das, in respect of a chur named Gobra, which was an accretion to the mouzah of that name. Rashmoni granted the settlement of this chur in perpetuity to the defendants in the year 1260, the chur being then, as it is stated, mainly covered with jungle; the lessees were to hold it rent-free for the first three years, and subsequently at a progressive jumna until the year 1267, from which year they were to hold it in perpetuity at 10 annas per bigha. Rashmoni Dasi died in 1861, and after her death the estate was held during their lifetime by two of her daughters, Padnamoni and Jagadumba, the last of whom died in Pous 1287, that is, the 31st December, 1880. Upon the death of the last-named lady the sons of herself and sisters as reversioners came into possession of their grand-father's estate. A partition suit was brought for the division of the estate, and in the course of that suit Mr. C. T. Davis was appointed by the High Court as receiver. It is stated that a notice to quit was served upon the defendants, their lease not being valid as against the reversioners, and the present suit to eject the defendants was brought, because they refused to give up possession. There was an alternative prayer for enhancement of the rent of the defendants should they be found entitled to remain tenants.

Various pleas were raised in the written statement of the defendants, and twenty issues were laid down by the Subordinate Judge, in whose Court the plaint was filed. The suit was afterwards transferred to the file of the District Judge, who made a decree in the plaintiff's favour for the ejectment of the defendants and for mesne profits for three years, with costs of the suit.

The grounds argued before us in appeal on behalf of the defendants were, that Mr. Davis as receiver had no power either [338] to serve a notice to quit or to bring this suit to eject, and that there was no proof that the notice said to have been served was actually signed by Mr. Davis. The finding of the lower Court that the notice was actually served was impugned as not being supported by credible evidence. The finding by the Judge that it was unnecessary to serve any notice, he having held the defendants to be mere trespassers as against the plaintiffs, was impugned as contrary to law. The next contention was that the suit was barred as res judicata in consequence of the decision of the High Court in a suit brought by the daughters of Rashmoni, who were in possession of the estate, to set aside the settlement in question and to enhance the rent of the holding. The next objection was that the suit was barred by limitation. Next it was urged that the plaintiffs ratified the settlement made by Rashmoni by receiving rents from the defendants for the period subsequent to the death of the last surviving daughter. And, lastly, it was contended that, regard being had to the true condition of the land, Rashmoni was justified in granting the settlement, and that, at the very least, the defendants were entitled to retain possession as being tenants with right of occupancy.

Another question was raised by the plaintiffs respondents in the Court below, but which has not been dealt with by the Judge, viz., whether, supposing the dowel, which forms the basis of the defendant's title, to be valid as against the reversioners, the plaintiffs are still not entitled to assess rent upon all land held in excess of the area specified in that dowel. The area specified in the dowel is 1600 bighas. According to the plaintiffs' case the area of the chur in their possession is nearly 3,000 bighas, and according to the evidence of the defendant Permanund himself is 2,500 or 2,600 bighas.

These are the points which we have to decide in this case.

The first point, touching the authority of the receiver to issue a notice to quit and to bring this suit to eject, was not raised in the written statement, and was not the subject of any of the issues laid down in the lower Courts; but it appears from the order sheet that on the 17th of March 1885, before any witnesses were examined, the objection to Mr. Davis' action was urged before the lower Court upon the strength of a decision of this [339] Court in the case of Miller v. Ram Ranjan Chakravarti (1) in which it was held that the receiver could not sue or be sued without the consent of the Court, that is, of the High Court. The lower Court, however, upon the construction which it put upon the order appointing Mr. Davis as receiver, held that he was entitled to maintain the suit; and accordingly the objection was overruled.

The objection taken in the first issue in the lower Court was that the plaint had not been signed and verified by a competent person. It was verified and signed by Kali Churn Singh, a mukhtear of the receiver. If the receiver had, as held by the District Judge, authority to bring this suit, then the verification by his authorised mukhtear would probably be sufficient, otherwise of course it would have no effect. We may here observe that though the owners of the estate were joined with Mr. Davis as plaintiffs in the case, none of them took any part in it nor did they put in any appearance or authorise anybody to verify the plaint on their behalf. This would probably be immaterial if Mr. Davis, as receiver, had power and authority to bring the suit; for according to the rules of practice and the wording of the order of appointment, the receiver, in suits which he is authorised to bring, is permitted to use the names of the plaintiffs and defendants, and no action on their part appears to be necessary in such suits. The question therefore is whether, by the terms of the order of the High Court, dated the 11th August, 1881, appointing Mr. Davis as receiver, he was authorised either to issue a notice to quit, the tenants holding under a permanent lease, or to follow up that notice by an action for ejectment without further special permission from the Court. With reference to this point we may observe that, when the learned counsel for the appellants first opened it, we heard the counsel for the respondents before going further into the case; and we then decided to hear the appeal on all the points raised, upon the express understanding that before the close of the case an application should be made on behalf of all the plaintiffs-owners, adopting the action of the receiver, and agreeing to be bound by the result of the trial. But no such application has been made. Some days after the hearing [340] had terminated a petition was tendered signed by some of the owners-plaintiffs, but not by all. It is obvious that an action for ejectment cannot be maintained by some only of the owners of an undivided estate. We were therefore unable to take cognizance of that petition. And the question already stated must be decided. We have been referred to English cases as showing what a receiver may do of his own authority and what he may not do without the permission of the Court. The order of appointment, which is printed at pages 55 and 56 of the paper book, authorizes the receiver to take possession of the property, moveable and immovable, of the estate, and, amongst other things, authorizes him to let and set the said immovable property or any part thereof as he should think fit. Mr. Evans for the respondent referred us to Kerr on Receivers, and pointed out a passage at page 151, showing that a receiver appointed by the Court with general authority to let the lands from year to year has thereby also an implied authority to determine such tenancy by a regular notice to quit. He referred us to the cases mentioned in the footnote to page 151 as authority for this doctrine. Those cases, however, appear to us to refer only to tenancies of the nature there described, namely, tenancies from year to year, or other tenancies, the periods of which expire during the incumbency of the receiver. The words "to let and set" in Mr. Davis' appointment order cannot, we think, give him as receiver any implied authority to interfere with tenures which, upon the face of them, are permanent. We think that to authorize him to issue such notice special consent of the Court would be necessary. Mr. Davis must have been appointed receiver under the provisions of s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and no doubt the Court could have, had it seen fit, granted to him under that section all such powers as to bringing and defending suits, and for the realization, management, etc., of the property as the owner himself had, or such of those powers as the Court thought fit. And if the order of his appointment had been drawn up in the form prescribed in the fourth schedule to the Code, that is, in the Form No. 168 of that schedule, there would have been no difficulty in the receiver's way in the present suit, for the form in question gives a receiver full powers under the provisions of s. 503. But the order was not [341] drawn up in that form; it was drawn up in the old form which prevailed at the time of the Supreme Court, and which, as we are informed, has ever since been in use. Instead of having full powers under s. 503, the receiver has the limited powers expressly given by the order of appointment. And we find in that order no words upon which we could hold that he was authorised to serve upon the defendants a notice to quit the tenure which they obtained from Rashmoni.

Then it was contended by Mr. Evans for the respondents that the words of the order are sufficiently large to give the receiver power to bring this suit to eject, for the order authorizes the receiver to enforce claims by action, suit, or otherwise. He submitted that the word "claims" is sufficient to cover the present suit, the matter in dispute being a claim to a portion of the landed property. We are, however, unable to adopt this construction. The passage in which this word occurs is as follows: "And to take and use all such lawful and equitable means and remedies for recovering, realising and obtaining payment of the said rents, issues, and profits of the said immovable property, and of the outstanding debts and claims by action, suit, or otherwise." These are the objects for which he is authorised to bring suits; and a suit to eject tenants and to take possession of land is not a suit for obtaining payment of a claim. That being so, it appears to us clear that the proceedings of the receiver in this matter, both as to the notice to quit and as to the bringing of this suit for ejectment, were unauthorized and of no effect against the defendants. This finding would of itself be sufficient to dispose of the suit; but as this is a case appealable to Her Majesty in Council, we think it our duty to express our opinion upon the other points raised.

As to the notice not being proved to have been signed by Mr. Davis, we find it undoubtedly true that there is no proof of this fact upon the record. But no question of this kind was raised in the Court below, nor is it raised in the petition of appeal to this Court. We think that the defendants-appellants may be held to have tacitly admitted that the notice was signed by Mr. Davis, and if they had raised the question at the proper time, no doubt evidence would have been forthcoming to [342] establish the fact. We should not, therefore, be prepared to dismiss the suit on the ground that this signature was not proved. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that no notice to quit was necessary. We are of opinion that there can be no doubt in the circumstances of this case that the defendants were entitled to notice. They were acknowledged to be tenants by the receiver upon the notice he served upon them for enhancement of rent, and also by receipt of rent from them, although it was for a period antecedent to the death of Jagadumba; and we think that upon the authorities the matter is perfectly clear. We may refer to two cases—Chaturi Sing v. Makund Lal (1) and Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golam Ali (2), as also to the case of Ram Khelawun Sing v. Mussammumit Soondra (3). It cannot be said that at the time when the reversioners came into possession the defendants were trespassers.

Then as to the evidence of service of the notice to quit we think that it is not wholly satisfactory, for there are discrepancies in the statements of the two witnesses who were called to prove it, which discrepancies we think ought not to have existed. Still the Judge below, before whom the witnesses were examined, believed them substantially, and we should hesitate to come to an opposite finding upon the evidence which satisfied him. If the plaintiffs recognized the necessity for issuing a notice, or recognized the fact, as they probably would, that the defendants would certainly claim to be entitled to such notice if any suit were brought to eject them, it seems very unlikely that the plaintiffs should neglect to serve one. And we think, therefore, that the evidence in support of the service may be accepted as sufficient, even though somewhat unsatisfactory. Upon this point therefore we would confirm the finding of the lower Court.

As to the contention with regard to res judicata, we think that it cannot be sustained. It appears that after the death of Rashmoni, her daughters Padmamon and Jugadumba sued the defendants for enhanced rent in respect of the lands now in dispute. They alleged that the dowl, under which the defendants held, and the amulpnama were forgeries, and that even if [343] genuine they were not valid as against themselves, Rashmoni, their mother, having no power to grant such a settlement to enure beyond the period of her own life. Those cases were finally decided in this Court on the 13th April, 1877. The suits were then dismissed. The Court, having noticed the objections raised in appeal, to the effect that the documents, even if executed by Rashmoni, were unauthorised, and that if they could bind Rashmoni, they were not binding upon the reversioners, as she could not create a permanent lease, observed as follows:

"What would have been the effect of these objections had they been raised by the appellants immediately on or within a reasonable time after the death of Rashmoni we need not now consider. But we agree with the lower Appellate Court in holding that the objections cannot now be raised in these suits." The Courts then having observed that the documents in question had been found not to be forgeries, said: "It is too late after the lapse of more than twelve years since the death of Rashmoni, during all which years the appellants have been receiving rent from the defendants at the rates mentioned in this dowl kabulyat, to raise questions as to whether tenures created by her are binding on those who have taken the estate in reversion." No doubt Padmamoni and Jagadumba fully represented the estate of Raj Chunder Dass, and if it was really decided by the Court as against that estate, that the dowl kabulyat executed in favour of Rashmoni, and the tenure created by her were binding on the reversioners, we have no doubt that that matter would be res judicata in the present suit. But reading the judgment of the High Court printed at pages 100 and the following of the paper book, we find, as pointed out above, that the Court refused to consider the question at all, and therefore there was no adjudication of it. That being so, we think that we cannot say that the matter is really res judicata. We see no reason, therefore, why the plaintiffs may not raise the question in the present suit if it be not otherwise barred. This brings us to the question of limitation, and this we are compelled to hold is a bar to the present suit.

It appears to us that the title of the defendants had become [344] perfect by efflux of time before Act IX of 1871 came into effect in the place of Act XIV of 1859. Act IX of 1871 came into effect in April 1873, more than twelve years after the death of Rashmoni, which took place in January 1861. The possession of the defendants was of course not adverse to Rashmoni; and, if it be shown that her daughters, while in possession, had ratified the settlement in question, the defendants' possession could not have been adverse to them also. But we find in fact that the daughters, so far from ratifying their mother's settlement, did all they could to get rid of it. True it is that, as found by this Court in 1877, they received rent from the defendants at the rates mentioned in the dowl, but this was no ratification of the grant. On the contrary, they impugned the documents as forgeries, and denied that they were bound by them even if they were genuine.

Therefore adverse possession no doubt commenced during the lifetime of the daughters of Rashmoni. They fully represented the estate; and, if limitation barred them under Act XIV of 1859, it follows that it would bar the reversioners also—see the Full Bench decision in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (1). We find from the decision of the Court to which we have already referred that the daughters (who were the appellants) knew all along that the defendants had set up the claims which they attempted to defeat. This must, we think, refer to the time when the daughters came into possession upon Rashmoni's death; and it must be presumed that they then came into possession of all the records belonging to her zemindari; and that the documents relating to this settlement were there, was admitted by Jugadumba in a written statement, filed by her in the suit of 1865, which is printed at page 97 of the paper book; and the presumption follows that she and her sister had notice of the title claimed by the defendants. In this view of the matter it would appear that adverse possession commenced to run from the time of Rashmoni's death, from which more than twelve years had elapsed when Act IX of 1871 came into force, so that the defendants' title would be perfected by limitation under [345] the provisions of Act XIV of 1859. There can be no doubt that the law in this respect was altered by Act IX of 1871 and Act XV of 1877. But it is obvious that if the defendants had acquired a title by prescription under Act XIV of 1859, that title could not be defeated by either of the Acts subsequently passed.

In deciding a question of this kind the point to be looked to is, when did the plaintiffs or their predecessors first obtain knowledge of the title claimed adversely to them. There are many cases which afford authority for this, the latest of which is Ram Chunder Singh v. Madho Kumari (2). As to what constitutes an adverse claim and adverse possession as between a tenant and his landlord, we would refer to Maiden Saiba v. Nagapa (3); Tekautni Gowra Kumary v. The Bengal Coal Company (4); Ogra Kant Chowdhry v. Mohesh Chunder Sickdar (5); and to the case of Maharaja Rajendra Kishnu Sing Bahadur v. Sheopursun Misser (6) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council at page 449 observe as follows: "If this tenure be not interposed between the zemindar and the cultivators, the ordinary relation between him and them exists, but if it be interposed, the zemindar's general proprietary title to the collections is gone, and in lieu of it he is simply entitled to some jumma from the mesne proprietors. It is obvious then that the assertion of such a title is a serious prejudice to a zemindar, and may materially interfere with his successful management of his zemindari. Such an intermediate tenure cuts off the possession, that is, the zemindar's title to the rents and profits immediately derived from the cultivators."

"In this sense, the term 'possession' is used in this plaint. Now this injury, supposing the claim to the bhakee birt tenure to be groundless, is not the less a wrong requiring a remedy when it is put forward by one in possession under a title to an inferior right derived from the zemindar, as for instance by a farmer of a portion of the zemindari. If such a claim were preferred [346] by a person having such an interest, it would certainly be competent to the zemindar, if the claim amounted to a repudiation or worked a forfeiture of the existing interest, to sue for the restoration of possession, and the quieting of the claim also, because the limitation of his demand to that of possession would keep alive an adverse claim, and would also multiply suits."

(5) 4 C.L.R. 40.                      (6) 10 M.I.A. 438.
We think therefore that in this case there was adverse possession by the defendants since the death of Rashmoni, and that upon the ground of limitation also this suit must fail, so far as it seeks to recover khas possession of the lands in suit.

The appellants have contended that the reversioners ratified the settlement granted to them by accepting rent for a period subsequent to the death of the last surviving daughter of Rashmoni. We think that the judgment of the lower Court in overruling this plea is correct. We think that the evidence as to the receipt of such rent is inconclusive, and that it has been shown that there was no intention to ratify the settlement. This point, therefore, we should decide in favour of the plaintiffs.

Then as to the right of occupancy pleaded in this case by the defendants, we think that that plea cannot be maintained upon their own showing. Their possession is that of middlemen and not of tenants who can claim a right of occupancy. That was their own contention in the cases brought against them for enhancement of rent after notice, and we think that there is no foundation for their present plea. We have, therefore, no hesitation in overruling it.

Next, as to the power of Rashmoni, a Hindu widow, to make a settlement of this nature, it has been contended that it was a settlement necessary for the improvement of the estate, that without it the jungle lands would never have been brought into cultivation at all. The question depends, in our opinion, upon the circumstances of the land. It has been complained that the District Judge excluded evidence tendered to show what the condition of the chur was when the settlement was made, and what was the custom followed by Rashmoni and other landlords in the same part of the country in respect of similar lands. As to the former point, we think that the Judge was wrong to exclude any evidence tendered, and had our decision been otherwise on the points already mentioned, we should probably have found it necessary to send the case back for the reception of further evidence on this point. But upon the evidence as it stands we certainly should not be prepared to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the Judge, and hold that the settlement made by Rashmoni was really necessary for the improvement of the estate. The land appears to have been a chur thrown up in a large river as an accretion to an existing mouzah of the estate, and as such it is almost impossible to believe that ryots could not be found to bring it under cultivation upon less exceptional terms. Had the land been a portion of a tract of forest or other land difficult of access and difficult of cultivation without considerable outlay, there might have been some reasonable ground to urge in favour of this settlement; but so far as the evidence goes, we are disposed to hold that Rashmoni was under no necessity to grant a permanent lease at a very low rate of rent, bearing in mind that she was a wealthy zamindar and could have easily laid out the nine or ten thousand rupees said to have been expended by the defendants in bringing the property under cultivation.

Upon the whole, therefore, we are of opinion that the suit must fail both upon the ground that the receiver acted ultra vires in instituting it, and that so far as it seeks to recover khas possession it is barred by limitation so far as regards the area covered by the douel upon which the defendant’s title rest. If the suit had been maintainable by the receiver, we should be prepared to hold that the plaintiffs would be entitled to an

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Macpherson.

Limitation Act, 1877, art. 179 and art. 175—Application for execution of decree—Order on petition to pay by instalments—Civil Procedure Code, s. 210.

An application to execute a decree, dated 30th August 1880, was made on 25th May 1881. While the application was pending, the judgment-debtor presented a petition to be allowed to pay the debt by instalments, and the decree-holder consenting to this, the Court made the following order: "According to the application of both parties it is ordered that the case be struck off and the decree be returned." The details of the instalments mentioned in the petition were endorsed on the decree by one of the amlahs of the Court, but it did not appear when or by whose order this was done. In an application for execution in accordance with this arrangement made on 7th March 1885: Held, that the order was not one recognizing or sanctioning the arrangement within the meaning of s. 210 of the Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the Court at the time it made the order had no power to make any order for instalments, any application for that purpose being then barred by art. 175 of Act XV of 1887. The application for execution was, therefore, barred under art. 179 as not having been made within three years of 25th May 1881. Jhoti Sahu v. Bhuban Gir (1) dissented from.

In this case the decree-holder obtained a decree on the 30th August 1880. Application for execution was first made on 25th May 1881; and whilst the execution proceedings were pending, a petition was filed by the judgment-debtor, setting forth that he had already paid a certain amount of the decree, and praying that he might be allowed to pay the remainder by instalments as detailed in the petition. The decree-holder consented to this, and an order was made by the Munsif in the following terms: "According to the application of both parties it is ordered that the case be struck off and the decree be returned." The details of the instalments mentioned in the petition were endorsed on the decree by one of the amlahs of the Munsif, but when or [349] by whose order this was done did not appear. On 7th March 1885 application for execution was made for the amount due, the decree-holder basing his claim on the terms of compromise as set forth in this kistbandi. The judgment-debtor contended that the kistbandi had materially altered the terms of the decree, and that the application for execution was barred as not having been made within three years of the last application in May 1881.

*Appeal from Order No. 126 of 1886, against the order of Baboo Gunga Nund Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Manbhoom, dated the 31st of December 1885, reversing the order of Baboo Purna Chandra Mitter, Munsif of Burrabazar, dated the 30th of May 1885.

(1) 11 C. 143.
The Munsif held that the application was barred, the arrangement between the parties not having been recognized and sanctioned by the Court.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the order made on the petition to be allowed to pay by instalments was practically an order granting the prayer of the petition as to the payment, and, therefore, the Court had recognized the arrangement for payment.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty and Baboo Prannath Pandit, for the appellant.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for respondent.

The case of Jhoti Sahu v. Bhubun Gir (1) was referred to on behalf of the respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Norris and Macpherson, JJ.)

JUDGMENTS.

Macpherson, J.—I think the Munsif's decision is right and that of the Subordinate Judge wrong.

The decree is dated the 30th August 1880 and the first application to execute it was preferred on the 25th May 1881.

Three days afterwards the judgment-debtor petitioned to be allowed to pay the amount due under the decree by instalments extending over many years, the instalments being set out in the petition, which was made with the consent of the decree-holder. The Court passed this order: "According to the application of both parties it is ordered that the case be struck off and the decree be returned." The present application to execute was made on the 7th March 1885. The Munsif has held that it is out of time, more than three years having expired since the date of the last application. The Subordinate Judge considered that the Court recognized the arrangement proposed by the parties, and that under s. 210 of Act X of 1877, which corresponds with s. 210 of the present Code, the order above referred to must be taken to embody an order that the amount of the decree should be paid by instalments.

I am unable to adopt this view. The second clause of s. 210 empowers a Court, after the passing of a decree for the payment of money, to order, on the application of the judgment debtor and with the consent of the decree-holder, that the amount decreed be paid by instalments; and the last clause enacts that "save as provided in this section and s. 206, no decree shall be altered at the request of parties." If, therefore, a decree is silent as to the manner in which it is to be executed, and no subsequent alteration is to be made by order of the Court, the decree must be executed as it stands. It is clear that in this case there was no order either directing an alteration of the decree or that the amount should be paid by instalments, and the Court was not in a position to make any such order as, under art. 175 of sch. II of the Limitation Act the application should have been made within six months from the date of the decree. We cannot, therefore, give to the order of the Court the extended meaning which the Subordinate Judge gives, and the mere fact that an amalah of the Munsif has recorded on the back of the decree the instalments set out in the petition of the parties, does not help the appellant, as it is not shown when or under whose orders he did this.

(1) 11 C. 143.
A case—Jhoti Sahu v. Bhubun Gir (1)—has been cited, in which the Court held that, although there was no direct order, there was a substantial compliance with the provisions of s. 210. Whether this is so or not must depend on the facts of each case.

As more than three years have expired since the date of the last application, or since any written admission of the judgment-debtor of his liability, the decree cannot be executed. I would, therefore, reverse the order of the Sub-Judge and restore [351] that of the Munsif but I would under the circumstances allow no costs of this appeal.

Norris, J.—I agree with Macpherson, J., in allowing this appeal. I have pointed out to my learned colleague, Mr. Justice Mitter, that in the case of Jhoti Sahu v. Bhubun Gir (1) we overlooked the provisions of art. 175 of the Limitation Act, and I am authorized by him to say he concurs with me in thinking that our decision in that case was erroneous.

Mulla Adjim, In re (Petitioner). [14th March, 1887.]

Burmah Courts Act (XVII of 1875), s. 95—Certificate of administration—Act XL 1858, s. 28—Appeal under Act XL of 1858.

The appeal given by s. 28 of Act XL of 1858 is subject to the ordinary law of appeal laid down in the Burmah Courts Act.

No appeal, therefore, will lie from an order refusing an application for the issue of a certificate of administration under Act XL of 1858, it being impossible to place any specific money valuation on such an application.

This was an application made by one Mulla Adjim, in the Court of the Officiating Recorder of Rangoon, for the issue of a certificate of administration, under Act XL of 1858, to the estate of certain minors. The application, for reasons immaterial to the report, was dismissed.

The petitioner appealed to the High Court against this order of dismissal, the appeal being admitted by the Registrar subject to the question as to whether an appeal would lie at all being raised at the hearing.

Mr. Stokoe, for the appellant.—I contend that an appeal lies from the decision under s. 28 of Act XL of 1858, and that neither the Burmah Courts Act nor the Civil Procedure Code interfere with the power of appeal given under Act XL. The case of Golam Rahaman v. Fatima Bibi (2) is a decision under the Burmah Courts Act, and is therefore inapplicable.

[382] No one appeared for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Cunningham, J.) was delivered by.

Appeal from Order No. 440 of 1886, against the order of R. S. T. MacEwen, Esq., Officiating Recorder of Rangoon, dated the 25th of September 1886.

(2) 13 C. 232.
Cunningham, J.—The first point which arises in this appeal is the question whether we have any right to hear it. We think we have not. The powers of appeal from the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon are of a special character, and are defined in s. 49 of Act XVII of 1875, which lays down certain money limits within which, and within which alone, an appeal lies to the High Court here. Then s. 28 of Act XL of 1858 provides that all orders passed under the Act shall be open to appeal under the rules in force for appeals in miscellaneous cases from the orders of such Courts. We might have felt some doubt as to the effect of these two provisions but for the provisions of s. 95 of the Burmah Courts Act, which expressly refers to Act XL of 1858, and in effect embodies it as one of the enactments of the Act itself.

We think, therefore, that it is perfectly clear that the appeal given in Act XL of 1858 is subject to the ordinary law of appeal as laid down in the Burmah Courts Act; and consequently, as in this case there is no specific money value which enables us to say that an appeal does lie to this Court, we must, following former rulings of this Court on the point, hold that no appeal lies. The present appeal must therefore be dismissed.

T. A. P. Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Conner Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Cunningham.

Decree payable by instalments—Instalment, Failure of, whole sum decreed to fall due—Right of decree-holder to waive his right to execute the whole decree—Waiver—Limitation Act, XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 75.

A proviso, in a decree made payable by instalments, by which the whole amount of the decree is to become due upon default in payment of any instalment, is a proviso ensuring for the benefit of the decree-holder [353] alone, and he is at liberty to take advantage of it or to waive it as he thinks fit.

One Ram Culpo Bhattacharji obtained a decree against one Ram Chunder Shome on the 9th October, 1879, for Rs. 623-8, the decree directing that the said sum should be paid by instalments falling due on the 18th November in the year 1879 and the 14th November in the years 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1883, and that on default in the payment of any one of such instalments being made, the whole of the decretal money should immediately fall due.

The whole of that first instalment was not paid on the due date, but it appeared that the total amount of such instalment was subsequently received by the decree-holder; subsequently at different dates all other instalments due up to the 14th November, 1881, were received, and also a portion of the instalment due on the 14th November, 1882.

*Appeal from Order No. 406 of 1886, against the order of S. H. C. Tayler, Esq., District Judge of Burdwan, dated the 14th of July 1886, reversing the order of Baboo Nundo Lall Dey, Munsif of Bood Bood, dated the 7th of April 1886.

On the 11th November, 1885, the decree-holder applied for execution of the balance remaining due under the decree; this application after notice had been served on the judgment-debtor was struck off. And on the 18th January, 1886, the decree-holder again applied for execution.

The judgment-debtor contended that, inasmuch as more than three years had expired from the 18th November, 1879 the date of the default made in payment of the first instalment, the application was barred by limitation.

The Munsif held, on the authority of Nilmadhub Chuckerbutty v. Ramsodoy Ghose (1) that, although execution for the full amount of the decree could have been taken out after failure of the payment of the first instalment, yet it was open to the decree-holder to waive his right to take out execution for the whole amount, and that, the application having been made within three years from the 11th November, 1885, execution was not barred.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge, who held that the decree-holder was not entitled to waive his right to take out execution for the whole decree after default made; that the words of the decree left him no option in the matter; that he was bound to apply for execution of the whole decree within three [354] years from the 18th November, 1879; and that therefore the application was barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act.

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the appellant contended that the decree-holder was at liberty to waive his right to execute the decree as a whole on the failure in the payment of an instalment, citing Nilmadhub Chuckerbutty v. Ramsodoy Ghose (1); that leases often contained covenants for re-entry on failure in payment, and that it was open to the lessor to waive his right to re-enter, and to sue for subsequent rent, and that the present case was analogous to such cases.

Baboo Srinath Das, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Cunningham, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—We think that this appeal must be allowed. The question is whether a particular decree is barred by limitation. The decree is a decree for the recovery of a certain sum of money by instalments, and it contains a proviso that, in the event of default in the payment of any of the instalments, the whole sum shall become due. It is found, as a fact, that default was made in the payment of one instalment, and therefore the creditor might, if he had thought fit, have issued execution for the whole amount due under the decree, and that at a period which is so long ago that, if he was obliged to do it, his remedy is now barred by limitation; and consequently the only question is whether, when default is made under such circumstances, the judgment-creditor is bound, at his peril, to put his decree into force for the whole amount, and whether, if he does not, the Statute runs against him.

A good deal has been said about the wording of the decree, but we do not think it very material that we should consider the precise wounding. The proviso by which the whole amount of the decree becomes due upon default in payment of any one instalment is a proviso which, look at it how you will, is put in for the benefit of the creditor, the decree-holder, and his benefit alone; and when a proviso is put into a contract or security [355] and in "security" I include "deecree," for the benefit of one individual party, he can waive it, if he thinks fit, and consequently the only question which arises in a case of this kind is the same question as that which arises under art. 75 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, namely, whether the decree-holder did, at the time when default was made, waive his right to the whole sum that was decreed to him or whether he did not.

On the findings in this case, and on the facts in this case, we do not think there can be any doubt that he did waive it, because what he says, and what is uncontested, is that, although there was a default in the payment of an instalment, the creditor accepted so much of it as was not paid at the time afterwards, and therefore it is obvious that he did waive it, because he did not, as he was not bound to, insist upon putting into force the decree for the whole amount; and insomuch as this proviso was for his benefit he might or might not take advantage of it as he pleased. Under these circumstances we think that this creditor did waive the right which he had under the decree to enforce it for the whole amount in the event of a default being made in the payment of any instalment, and having waived it, the decree still remained a decree for the recovery of the sum decreed by instalments, and therefore the Statute of Limitations did not run against him.

For these reasons we think that the Judge was wrong in holding that this decree was barred by limitation, and his judgment must be reversed with costs.

T. A. P. Appeal allowed.

QUEEN-EMPERESS v. CHANDU GOWALA AND ANOTHER.*

[21st March, 1887.]

Under s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Second Class Magistrate transmitted a case to the District Magistrate, being of opinion that a more [356] severe punishment was deserved than he was empowered to inflict. The District Magistrate returned the record to the Second Class Magistrate, directing him to commit the case to the Sessions Court. The committal directed was duly made. The High Court refused to interfere in the matter, holding that the proceedings of the Second Class Magistrate were not illegal, and that there was nothing done which took away the jurisdiction of the Second Class Magistrate to commit.

[R., 2 Weir 428; D., Rat. Unrep. Crl. Cas. 472.]

Two persons were accused before Baboo Chandra Bhushan Chakravarti, a Magistrate of the second class, of dishonestly receiving stolen property, and were found guilty; the Magistrate, there being a previous conviction against one of the accused for a like offence, considering that the case required a higher punishment than he, as Second Class Magistrate, was empowered to give, forwarded the two accused to the District Magistrate to be dealt with in accordance with s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The District Magistrate considered that the case was a bad one, and returned the record to the Second Class Magistrate, directing him to commit the case to the Sessions. The accused were, therefore, charged under s. 411 of the Penal Code, and were committed to the Sessions Court for trial.

The Sessions Judge, considering the order of the District Magistrate and the final order of commitment by the Second Class Magistrate to be illegal on the authority of the case of Queen-Empress v. Havia Tellapa (1), reported the matter to the High Court, recommending that the order of commitment should be quashed, and that the District Magistrate should be ordered to dispose of the case, committing it to the Sessions himself should he think that the case was one for the Sessions Court, and remarking that the prisoner, against whom the previous conviction had been charged, had since died in jail.

No one appeared before the High Court, and the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Norris, J.) passed the following.

ORDER.

We do not think that what happened took away the jurisdiction of the Second Class Magistrate to commit the case to the Sessions, and as his proceedings were not illegal we decline to interfere; the Sessions Judge must proceed to try and dispose of the case.

QUEEN-Empress v. Sricharan Bauri.* [19th March, 1887.]

Sentence—Penal Code, Act XLV of 1860, ss. 75, 179, 511—Attempt to commit an offence—Enhancement of sentence for previous conviction—Previous conviction.

A person who has been convicted of the offence of theft (an offence punishable under Chapter XVII of the Penal Code) does not, on being convicted of an attempt to commit the offence of theft, become liable to the enhanced punishment allowed by s. 75 of the Penal Code.

One Sricharan Bauri, who had on the 7th April, 1885, been convicted of an offence under s. 380 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to three months’ imprisonment, was, on the 4th February, 1887, convicted of an attempt to commit theft under ss. 379 and 511 of the Penal Code.

*Criminal Reference No. 43 of 1887, made by Col. W. L. Samuels, Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, dated the 28th of February, 1887.

(1) 10 B. 196.
The Deputy Magistrate, before whom the latter case was tried, in passing sentence on Sricharan, refused to take into consideration the former conviction, which had been duly proved against him, inasmuch as the offence for which he was last under trial was an attempt to commit an offence only, and as such did not fall within the meaning of s. 75 of the Penal Code.

The Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, with a view to the sentence being enhanced.

No one appeared for either side on the hearing of the reference.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Cunningham, J.) was as follows:

ORDER.

We must decline to interfere. The accused has been convicted of an attempt, and the conviction therefore does not fall strictly within the terms of s. 75 of the Indian Penal Code.

Bachu Mullah and others (Petitioners) v. Sia Ram Singh and others (Opposite Party).* [11th December, 1886.]

Irregularity in Criminal trial—Rioting, Counter—charges of—Cross cases taken—Procedure Code, Act X of 1882, s. 537—Irregularity prejudicing the accused—‘Failure of justice.’

A Magistrate, there being counter-charges of rioting and assault before him took up and tried one of such cases, and having heard the evidence for the prosecution called on the counter-case, and in this latter case examined as witnesses some of the accused in the first case, eventually convicting the accused in the first case: Held that such a procedure constituted a grave irregularity, but that, under the circumstances of the particular case, the irregularity was cured by s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

This was a rule obtained by Bachu Mullah and others calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpore, confirming the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Beegoo-serai, convicting Bachu and his party of rioting and sentencing them to six months' rigorous imprisonment each, with a fine of Rs. 25, and in default to a further sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment, should not be set aside. It appeared that originally there were cross charges of rioting and assault brought in the Deputy Magistrate’s Court, the one by Bachu Mullah and his party against Sia Ram Singh and his party, and the other by Sia Ram Singh and his party against Bachu Mullah and his party, and that the Deputy Magistrate first took up and heard the case of Bachu Mullah, and without passing any order thereon called on the cross case of Sia Ram Singh, and in that case called Bachu Mullah and his party as witnesses; the Magistrate eventually finding that the case against Bachu Mullah and his party had been proved, convicted them and sentenced them as above mentioned, dismissing the case against the party of Sia Ram Singh.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) was as follows:

ORDER.

We think that this rule must be discharged, at all events so far as the conviction is concerned.

The Magistrate has tried two cases in which there were practically counter-charges of riot and assault. He has tried, first of all, one party, and having taken the evidence for that party he has, without giving his decision in that enquiry, proceeded to take the evidence for the other party, and in this second enquiry he has called as witnesses some of those very persons whose conduct was enquired into in the first enquiry, and as to whose guilt or innocence he was suspending his judgment.

I think that is a course which is to be deprecated to the last degree. I think it a very great pity that Magistrates should ever adopt it. There is no doubt, to my mind, that it constitutes a very great irregularity, and the reason why it is so very objectionable is that you call a man as a witness whose conduct has been enquired into, but the decision in whose case has not been pronounced, and you hear his statement of the case given before the very person who is to decide upon his guilt or innocence; and by doing that you introduce an element into the question whether or not he will tell the truth, which ought not to be there because he has a personal interest in the enquiry; his liberty or life may be at stake on what will be the verdict in his own case, and it is not in human nature to suppose that he would, under such circumstances, give his evidence in the impartial way that it ought to be given in a Court of Justice. Therefore it seems to me that it is not only an irregularity but an irregularity of a grave kind, and in this matter I am speaking not only for myself but I believe for my brother Beverley also, and therefore I hope that in similar enquiries in future Judges and Magistrates will discontinue this irregular and highly objectionable practice. What they can do in a case of this kind is, they can try and decide it, and having decided it they can convict or acquit the accused, whose interest in the enquiry will then have come to an end, and they can then be called into the witness box and [360] examined in the other case, and they will then be in a position to give their evidence without having any personal interest in the evidence which they are being called upon to give.

For these reasons we think this irregularity is very objectionable, and I hope that it will be discontinued, but as to whether it is such an irregularity as to lead us to set aside the conviction and order a new trial is another matter. Section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that enquiries are not to be set aside for irregularity unless the Court comes to the conclusion that there has been a "failure of justice," and therefore before the proceedings can be set aside it must be shown that, by reason of the irregularity, the true facts have not come out or that there is danger that they will not come out. But that is not the case here. As I said before, the reason why this irregularity is objectionable is that persons have a very strong inducement to give evidence with a colouring in their own favour. In this case they have given their evidence, and the persons who practically object are the persons whose evidence was actually given. It cannot be said that they were prejudiced by giving evidence too strongly in their own favour. The other accused were not concerned one way or the other, and therefore we think that there is no prejudice shown to the disadvantage of any of the accused. That being so, notwithstanding the fact that the procedure was irregular, we think that irregularity is cured by that section, and we cannot interfere with the conviction, and therefore on that ground we think that the rule must be discharged.

With reference to the sentence, however, we think that the sentence of imprisonment is sufficient without the additional fine, therefore we confirm the sentence, so far as the imprisonment is concerned, and remit the fine.

REID, MANAGER OF THE SUDDOWAH FACTORY (Petitioner) v. RICHARDSON, MANAGER OF THE RAJPORE FACTORY (Opposite Party.)*

[16th March, 1887.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Order passed under s. 146 on proceedings taken under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code—Power of Courts on revision—Evidence on revision.

Where a Magistrate has passed an order under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, whereas the proper order in the case should have been one under s. 146, the High Court on revision will make the order which the lower Court ought to have made.

Case in which the High Court on revision entered into the whole of the evidence in the case. Raja Baboo v. Muddun Mohun Lall (1) explained.

This case originally arose out of disputes concerning the boundaries between the lands held by the Suddowah and Rajpore Factories. After enquiry the police reported that proceedings under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code were necessary, a breach of the peace being imminent.

The Magistrate thereupon passed an order, after being satisfied that a breach of the peace was likely to occur, summoning the parties to appear before him, stating that the question arising was whether a portion of certain khorray land, north of the cultivated part of a certain dearn, was in possession of the Suddowah or the Rajpore Factory. After hearing the evidence on both sides he found that the Suddowah Factory had failed to prove possession of the land in dispute, and that the Rajpore Factory were in possession, and directed that they should be retained in possession until ousted by order of a competent Civil Court.

The Manager of the Suddowah Factory applied to the High Court and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the Manager of the Rajpore Factory to show cause why the order of the Magistrate above referred to should not be set aside.

[362] The grounds on which this rule was obtained and the arguments of Counsel thereon are not set out owing to the view taken by the Court at the hearing on a perusal and consideration of the entire evidence in the case, viz., that the evidence of possession was extremely unsatisfactory; that an important witness as to the fact of possession had not been examined, although his examination was applied for; and that therefore a proper trial of the issue of possession had not been held; and that the parties had, by proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, endeavoured to obtain a decision as to the boundaries between their respective estates.

Mr. Woodroffe and the Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. Bonnerjee), showed cause.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and Mr. Pugh in support of the rule.

ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Cunningham, J.) was delivered by Cunningham, J.—We have considered this case at great length, and, departing from the ordinary rule which the Court prescribes to itself in cases of revision, we have thought it desirable to go into the whole of the evidence in the case with the view of putting ourselves in full possession of all the facts appearing upon it, and we have also kept in mind the circumstance, which is constantly brought before us in these cases, that, as between the two parties to the present dispute, s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is being used for a purpose wholly alien to that for which it was originally intended, and one calculated to produce, in whosesoever favour it is made, very unexpected and unfair results—in fact, that a squabble about some grass is to be turned into an important judicial decision as to the boundary of two large estates. That is a state of things which we regard with great disapproval and which it is the object of this Court to discourage as far as possible, and as we see in this case that the decision, whichever way it went, is calculated to have this effect in a very high degree, we have felt it necessary to scrutinize, with great minuteness, the legal grounds upon which the decision rests and the adequacy of the evidence which supports the decision at which the Magistrate has arrived.

[363] Referring to a recent case, Raja Babu v. Muddun Mohun Lall (1), and to an observation made by the Chief Justice on that occasion, Mr. Bonnerjee has urged before us that we are not at liberty to decide anything except whether there was, or was not, any evidence to justify the finding of the Court below. We think it therefore desirable, before dealing with the present case, to point out the true meaning of that observation. The question before the Court then was, not such a question as we have before us now, but whether the fact of a large amount of attention having been directed by the Court below on the question of title ought to invalidate its decision. The observation made in that ruling with reference to what is the ordinary procedure of this Court in revision cases, as to findings of fact, does not, we consider, militate against the view that we have power in revision, if we think right, to consider the whole evidence.

We do not propose at present to consider in detail the whole of the evidence on which the conclusion of the Magistrate was based. With regard to the question of jurisdiction, we had, for a considerable time, some hesitation as to whether there were any grounds which would give the Magistrate jurisdiction to hold the enquiry. There was certainly, in the first instance, a complaint showing a likelihood of a dispute; upon that there was an order to the Police to hold an enquiry, and the report made to the Magistrate, in compliance with that order, though it did not certainly state very categorically the grounds which would show a likelihood of such a dispute as was necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction under s. 145, may, we think, on the whole, be taken as sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the Magistrate under that section.

We next come to consider the evidence as to possession. Now this evidence, though voluminous, is yet, to our minds, extremely unsatisfactory. Having given it the best consideration that we can, we cannot get over various circumstances which appeared in the course of the enquiry which make us feel extremely doubtful as to the justice of the conclusion at which the Magistrate has arrived, and especially with regard to the [364] omission to examine a most material witness. We cannot, on the proceedings, as they now stand, consider that it is in any degree satisfactory or that there has been, in any way, what we can consider proper trial of what we think was an important issue when we have the fact before us that the witness, whose evidence we think was likely to be of a very material character, was never brought before the Court, although the first party asked to have him brought.

In these cases the tribunal trying the case is not under the necessity which a Court trying a civil case, or ordinary criminal cases, is under of coming to a conclusion at all. The Legislature contemplates circumstances in which it may be desirable for such a tribunal as that of a Deputy Magistrate, presumably unacquainted with the conduct of civil proceedings and strictly a criminal tribunal, to say that the facts of the case do not enable him to come to a conclusion, and looking at the circumstances of this case and the conflicting nature of the evidence, and the various other circumstances which were before the Magistrate, we think that the wise and proper course for him to have adopted would have been to have accepted the liberty which the Code gave him of not coming to a conclusion as to the fact of possession, and to have passed an order under s. 146, and as we have the power, in revision, to make the order which the lower Court ought to have made, we alter the order of the Magistrate from an order under s. 145 to one, under s. 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and direct that the property, the subject of dispute, be kept under attachment by the Magistrate until a competent Civil Court shall have determined the rights of the parties thereto or the person entitled to the possession thereof.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

The Maharanii of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi and others.

[16th and 17th December, 1886 and 5th February, 1887.]

Sale for arrears of rent—Construction of Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, para. 2—Publication of copy or extract of such part of the notice of sale as may apply to the tenure of the defaulter.

Publication of the notice of sale of a tenure under Regulation VIII of 1819 is required to be in the manner prescribed in s. 8, cl. 2; and personal service on the defaulter is not sufficient. The objects of directing local publication of the notice, viz., to warn the under-lessees of the sale proceedings and also to advertise the sale to those whom it might bid, would be frustrated if it were sufficient to publish the notice at a distant katcheri or to serve it personally.

If there is a katcheri on the land of the defaulting putnidar, meaning the land which is to be sold for arrear of rent, the copy or extract of such part of the notice of sale as may apply to the tenure in question must be published at that katcheri, and if there is no such katcheri on the land held by the defaulter, the copy or extract must be published at the principal town or village on the land.

In the description of this in cl. 2, as “the notice required to be sent into the mofussil,” the word “mofussil” is opposed to the sadar katcheri of the zemindar, and refers to the subordinate estate, which is the subject of the sale proceedings.

Where a zemindar, selling the tenure of a defaulting putnidar under the Regulation, had caused to be struck up the requisite petition and notice at the Collector’s katcheri, and the notice at the zemindar’s katcheri, but not the copy or extract which is directed by the Regulation to be similarly published at the katcheri, nor had published it at any other place upon the land of the defaulter: Held that the zemindar had not observed a substantial part of the prescribed process, and that this was for the defaulting putnidar “a sufficient plea” within the meaning of the Regulation.

Appeal from a decree (6th April, 1883) of the High Court affirming a decree (31st December, 1881) of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly.

The present question was whether there had been before the sale of the respondent’s putni taluk for arrears of rent due to the zemindar, represented by the appellant, a sufficient publication [366] to satisfy the requirements of Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2 (1), of the notice of

(1) The second clause of s. 8 of Regulation VIII of 1819, relating to the mode in which zemindars are to be allowed to bring to sale tenures in which the right to sell for arrears is reserved by stipulation, enacts the following:

On the first day of Baisakh, that is, at the commencement of the following year from that of which the rent is due, the zemindar shall present a petition to the Collector containing a specification of any balances that may be due to him on account of the expired year from all or any talukdars or other holders of an interest of the nature described in the preceding clause of this section. The same shall then be stuck up in some conspicuous part of the katcheri with a notice that, if the amount claimed be not paid before the 1st of Jeth following, the tenures of the defaulters will on that day be sold by public sale in liquidation. Should, however, the 1st of Jeth fall on a Sunday, or a holiday, the next subsequent day not a holiday shall be selected instead. A similar notice shall be stuck up at the sadar katcheri of the zemindar himself, and a copy or extract of such part of the notice as may apply to the individual the intended sale, and whether the High Court had rightly decreed that the sale should be set aside on the ground that the publication of the notice had not been duly effected.

The tenure sold under the Regulation was mehal Amerpore in the Hooghly zillah, within the zemindari of his late Highness Affbachand Mahatab Bahadur, Maharaja of Burdwan, who, in his lifetime, had made a putni settlement of that mehal with Ishvarchandra Kur, now deceased, late husband of Krishna Kamini Dasi, the plaintiff in the suit, and with Srinarain Kur, also deceased, and now represented by his son Radhabul-lub Kur.

The sale, which was for default in payment of rent for the half-year ending 1287 B. S. (the end corresponding to 11th April 1881), the arrears amounting to Rs. 6,475-14-11, took [367] place on the 1st Jeth 1288 (13th May, 1881); and the putni was bought by Bijoy Krishna Mukerji, the highest bidder for Rs. 35,500.

The present suit was instituted on the 21st May, 1881, by the respondent Krishna Kamini Dasi against the zemindar, joining with him as defendants the purchaser and Radhabullah Kur, her co-sharer in the putni. It was to have the sale set aside as having taken place "without publication of the notice at the katcheri of mehal Amerpore or in some principal village of the said lot." And whether there had been a sufficient compliance with the Regulation was the principal question raised by the issues.

From the evidence it appeared that, as the defaulting putnidars of mehal Amerpore had other properties in the neighbourhood, they had a more frequently used katcheri, called "dihi katcheri," at Mahanad, distant eight or nine miles from the confines of Amerpore. Two darputni-dars, who were tenants of the largest sub-tenures that were in Amerpore, were always in the habit of paying rent at the "dihi katcheri" at Mahan-ad, while the katcheri within the Amerpore limits was only used for the purpose of receiving the rents of the smaller tenants, which, when received, were paid into the "dihi katcheri" at Mahanad.

The petition of the zemindar was duly "stuck up" in the Collector's katcheri, and a similar notice at the zemindar's own sadar katcheri. But no notice was taken to the mehal Amerpore, nor was any published on it. Instead of being taken there it was taken to the dihi katcheri at Mahanad, and at the latter it was personally received by Radhabullah Kur, one of the joint putnidars, and he directed Jodonath Bose, their joint servant, to sign the receipt for it, addressed to the Maharaja, the zem-indar, as follows:—

Receipt of notice.

"Lot Amerpore in zillah Hooghly included in zemindari pergunnah Burdwan, &c., talukdar Srinarain Kur.

"The arrears of rent of this lot for the second half of the year 1287
B.S., with road cess and public works cess not having been paid, application has been made before the Collector of zillah Hooghly for realisation of Rs. 6,475-14-11 pie, under the provisions [368] of Regulation

The case, shall be by him sent to be similarly published at the katcheri, or at the principal town or village, upon the land of the defaulter. The zemindar shall be exclusively answerable for the observance of the forms above prescribed, and the notice required to be sent into the mofussil shall be served by a single peon, who shall bring back the receipt of the defaulter, or his manager for the same, or in the event of inability to procure this the signatures of three substantial persons residing in the neighbourhood in attestation of the notice having been brought and published on the spot.
VIII of 1819, according to the directions contained in Act V of 1853 and the letter No. 57 of the Honourable the Board of Revenue, dated the 81st January 1874, and Act IX of 1880 of the Bengal Council, and the 1st of Jeth next has been fixed as the day before which the said arrears must be paid. Now the notice in the name of the talukdar of that lot having been legally served, has reached me in this mofussil place through the peon of your zemindari katcheri, in consequence of which I execute this receipt, having received this notice. The 11th Bysack 1288 B.S."

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, as there was a mal katcheri of the defaulters upon the mehal which was in arrear, and as Mahanad was not in lot Amerpore, nor a principal town or village on the land of the defaulter, therefore the receipt of notice by the latter at Mahanad was not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Regulation. The suit was therefore decreed and the sale ordered to be set aside.

The appeal to the High Court came before a Divisional Bench (GARTH, C. J., and MACPHERSON, J.), and the question whether the notice had been sufficiently published was referred to a Full Bench: the referring order and the judgment of the Full Bench, which consisted of GARTH, C. J., MITTER, J., McDONELL, J., PRINSEP, J., and TOTTENHAM, J., appear in the report of the hearing before the Full Bench (1). In accordance with the opinions of the Full Bench that the requirements of the Regulation had not been satisfied, and that the sale could not be maintained, the appeal was dismissed.

On this appeal,—

Sir H. Davey, Q. C., and Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C. (Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon with them), appeared for the appellant.

The respondents did not appear.

For the appellant it was argued that there had been a substantial compliance with the requirements of the Regulation. The notice was served personally on one of the defaulting putnidars, who was manager for both, and the servant of both had signed the receipt. Regard must be had to the position of the [369] party complainant. This was not any darputnidar or sub-tenure holder suffering indirectly from the insufficiency, if any, in the notice; but was one of the putnidars who had been effectually served with notice personally. It was submitted that this prevented the plaintiff from taking advantage of the failure to publish at the katcheri at Amerpore, which practically was less useful for the purposes of notice than Mahanad. The purposes of s. 8 had been answered by a mode of service, if not prescribed, quite effectual, and it could hardly be said that personal service of the notice was not, as far as the putnidar was concerned, effectual merely because another mode of publication was provided.

[LORD HOBHOUSE asked if the requirement could be satisfied without publication on the land. It was not a question of the sufficiency of proof but of the sufficiency of the thing proved.] It was argued that the publication was sufficient as it had been made. Reference was made to Lootfonissa v. Kowar Ram Chunder (2); Sona Beebee v. Lall Chand Chowdhery (3); Baikantnath Singh v. Maharaja Dhiraj Mahatab Chand (4); Mungazee Chuprassee v. JUDGMENT.

LORD HOBBHOUS.—The only questions on which it is necessary for their Lordships to express any opinion in this case are, first, what is the true construction of the Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, para. 2; and, secondly, whether the Maharani of Burdwan, who is the selling zemindar, has done what is necessary for a sale under that Regulation.

The material facts are not in dispute. The requisite petition and notice were stuck up at the Collector’s katcheri and the [370] requisite notice at the zemindar’s katcheri. The copy or extract which is next directed by the Regulation to be similarly published was not stuck up at the plaintiff’s katcheri at Amerpore or anywhere else in Amerpore, which is the putni taluk in question. Service of that notice was effected on Radhabullub, the plaintiff’s nephew and co-sharer in the taluk; at her katcheri in Mahanad, about nine miles from Amerpore. The plaintiff’s Mahanad katcheri is in the same house with that of Radhabullub. It has been strongly urged at the Bar that this service must be taken to be service on the plaintiff herself; but their Lordships do not think it necessary to decide this matter, which, for the purposes of the judgment, they will assume in favour of the zemindar. Would such a service relieve him from giving notice on the lands at Amerpore?

The directions of the Regulation are, that a copy or extract of the notice which is stuck up at the zemindar’s katcheri “shall be by him sent to be similarly published at the katcheri or at the principal town or village on the land of the defaulter.” It is argued that these terms do not require publication on the land of the defaulter but that they are satisfied by publication at his katcheri, wherever it may be. And it must be allowed that the grammar of that sentence, taken alone, admits of such a construction.

The High Court have decided four points: first, that, if there is a katcheri on the land of the defaulting putnidar, the notice must be published there; secondly, that by the land of the defaulter is meant that land which the zemindar is seeking to sell for default of rent; thirdly, that if there is no such katcheri, the notice must be published at the principal town or village on the land in question; and, fourthly, that it must be published in the manner required, and that service on the putnidar is not sufficient. In all four of these propositions their Lordships agree.

To hold otherwise might defeat some of the substantial objects of this Regulation. It appears from the preamble that one of the objects is to establish “such provisions as have appeared calculated to protect the under-lessee from any collusion of his superior with the zemindar, or other, for his ruin, as well [371] as to secure the just rights of the zemindar on the sale of any tenure.” And immediately afterwards occurs the statement that it has been deemed indispensable to fix the process by which the said tenures are to be brought to sale. The object of directing local publication of notices is to warn the under-lessees of the contemplated proceedings which may result in sweeping away their property, and also

(1) 1 C. 359 =25 W. R. 141.

(3) 10 I. A. 19 =9 C. 619.

245
to act as advertisements to persons who may bid at the sale. Both these objects might, and in many cases would, be frustrated if it were sufficient to publish notice at any katcheri which the putnidar may happen to possess, however distant it may be, or to serve it personally on the putnidar.

Moreover the notice in question is described as 'the notice required to be sent into the mofussil.' The word mofussil is doubtless opposed to the sadar katcheri of the zemindar. It may be used to signify the subordinate estate which is the subject of the proceedings, and in their Lordships' opinion it does point to that estate.

Then it is suggested that this suit is brought by the putnidar, and that an objection founded on the interests of the under-lessees is not available to her. But that suggestion proceeds on a misconception of the nature and force of the objection. Their Lordships have to construe the Regulation. They find a process prescribed by it, which its framers thought it indispensable to fix, for the observance of which they have declared the zemindar to be exclusively answerable, and which is calculated to protect all persons interested in the estate against injury by the working of a very swift and summary remedy given to the zemindar. The zemindar has neglected to observe a substantial portion of that process. There is therefore material irregularity in his procedure, and of that irregularity the putnidar is entitled to avail herself as a 'sufficient plea' within the meaning of the Regulation. Of course there may be cases in which one, who might otherwise be entitled to avail himself of an irregularity, has so conducted himself as to have waived or forfeited his right. But no such case is suggested here.

It remains to look at some decided cases which were cited as authority against the foregoing conclusions.

[372] In the case of Lootfonissa Begum v. Kowa Ram Chunder (1) the prescribed formalities had not been observed by the zemindar, and the sale by him was set aside. But in the course of their judgment the Sadar Dewanny Adawlut expressed an opinion that the katcheri of the defaulter may be any katcheri in which the collections of the tenure are made. Their Lordships, however, observe that the learned Judges do not cite the words of the Regulation correctly. They appear to mix up the sentence which relates to the mode of publication with the next one, which relates to the evidence of it,—two very distinct things. Moreover they rely on the presence of the comma placed after the word katcheri. Even if the punctuation were of the importance ascribed to it, it so happens that as the sentence is pointed the word 'katcheri' may be applied to the whole expression 'upon the land of the defaulter' just as easily as to the last three words only. But their Lordships think that it is an error to rely on punctuation in construing Acts of the Legislature. They find that the reasons given do not support the conclusion, from which they feel no difficulty in dissenting.

In the case of Mungasee Chuprasse v. Shibo (2) a Division Bench of the High Court decided, with much hesitation, that the Regulation was satisfied by publication at a katcheri of the defaulter, which, though not on the land to be sold, was on adjacent land and was the office at which all the business of the estate to be sold was carried on. If that decision were right it would not govern this case, in which there has been no publication in the mofussil at all. Independently of that difference

(2) 21 W. R. 369.
The decision appears to have been rested on the dictum of the Sadar Dewanny Adawlut in 1849, and on the reason given for that dictum. But for the reasons above given their Lordships prefer the conclusion that the katcheri meant is one on the land to be sold, and that if there is none, as was the fact in the case under consideration, the publication should be in the principal village on that land preferably to a katcheri on other land. If there should be no village at all an adjacent katcheri might be the proper place of publication, but no such case appears to have occurred.

[373] The only case cited which is directly in favour of the contention in this case is that of Gouree Lall v. Joodhisteer Hajrah (1), where it was decided that the Regulation was satisfied by service of notice at the house of the defaulter. But the authority of that decision is undermined by its being rested mainly on the case of Sona Beebee v. Lall Chand Chowdhry (2), and the recognition of that case by this Committee in Ram Sabuk Bose v. Monmohini Dossee (3). The same case has been again recognised by this Committee in Maharajah of Burdwan v. Tarasoondari Debia (4), but it is no authority for the proposition for which it is cited. It has been above pointed out that the formalities which the zamindar has to observe, and the evidence by which that observance has to be proved, are two totally distinct things. All that Sir B. Peacock decided was that, if the observance of the requisite formality was distinctly proved, it was not necessary to have the mode of proof which the Regulation directs. In the case of Maharajah of Burdwan v. Tarasoondari Debia (4), this Committee found that the question whether the requisite formality had been observed depended on conflicting evidence, but that the statutory mode of proof had clearly not been followed, and they held that the decision must go against the zamindar, whose business it was to follow the prescribed method. They did not differ from Sir Barnes Peacock, nor did they hold that the statutory proof was the only proof that could be given. Neither did Sir Barnes Peacock decide or intimate any opinion that one of the important formalities required as preliminary to a sale could be dispensed with. Mr. Justice Glover rests his decision wholly on that of Sir B. Peacock, and its recognition by this Committee. And their Lordships observe that Mr. Justice Romesh Chunder Mitter, who adds other reasoning, is a party to the judgment now appealed from, apparently without dissent.

The result is that their Lordships will humbly advise Her [374] Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed and the judgment of the High Court affirmed.

Appeal Dismissed.

SUPRAMANYAN SETTY v. HURRY FROO MUG.*
[24th February, 1887.]

Practice—Costs—Attorney’s lien—Lien—Attaching creditor—Fund in Court attached.

A sum of money had been paid into Court as admittedly due to the plaintiff in a certain suit; the plaintiff not having satisfied in full his attorney’s taxed bill of costs the attorney applied for payment out of the fund in Court. Previously to this application the fund had been attached by a third party. Held that the attorney was entitled to enforce his lien as against the attaching creditor for all costs incurred up to the date of attachment; that the attaching creditor was then entitled to be satisfied before the attorney could claim payment out of the balance in Court of any sum remaining due to him on account of his costs.

This was an application by Babu Nobin Chund Bural, attorney for the plaintiff in the above suit, on notice to the gomastah of the plaintiff, and to Messrs. Beeby and Rutter, attorneys for one Lubbah, for an order directing the payment out to him of a sum of Rs. 2,027-6 (being the balance due to him on account of taxed costs) from a sum of Rs. 2,291-10-6 standing to the credit of the above suit in the hands of the Accountant-General of the Court.

The taxed costs above referred to had been costs decreed in favour of the plaintiff in the above suit, which was one on an account stated, and in which the defendant had admitted a sum of Rs. 2,291-10-6 to be due to the plaintiff and had paid that amount into Court. The defendant in the above suit had made no payment on account of the sum decreed against him and, inasmuch as the plaintiff himself was living out of the jurisdiction in Madras, the plaintiff’s attorney (having only received a [375] part payment from the plaintiff on account of his costs) made the present application to obtain payment of the balance due to him.

The application was opposed by one Lubbah, who had on the 18th June, 1886, attached the sums standing to the credit of the above mentioned suit in execution of an allocatur for certain costs incurred by Lubbah in opposing a claim made in the suit of Setty v. Setty, suit No. 465 of 1885 (the plaintiff in that case being also the plaintiff in the above mentioned case) to certain goods, the property of Lubbah, which had been attached in suit No. 465 of 1885 by the plaintiff as being the goods of the defendant in that suit.

Mr. Stokoe, for Babu Nobin Chund Bural.
Mr. Bonnerjee, for the attaching creditor.

Mr. Stokoe.—The attorney has a lien on the fund in Court for his costs; he is entitled to actively enforce that lien to the extent of his costs of the particular suit under which the fund arises; (2) Daniell’s Chancery Practice (6th ed.), 1975 to 1986; see also Lloyd v. Mason (1); Hamer v. Giles (2); Nawab Nazim of-Bengal v. Heralall Seal (3).

Mr. Bonnerjee.—The attorney has no further lien after the fund has practically ceased to be the fund in question, i.e., after attachment. The money has not been acquired through the diligence of the attorney. I rely on Hough v. Edwards (4).

ORDER

TREVELYAN, J.—The question is whether the attorney has a lien in priority to the attaching creditor for costs incurred subsequent to the attachment.

It is admitted by Mr. Bonnerjee that the attorney is entitled to a lien for any costs incurred prior to the attachment. There is apparently no authority on the point. It seems to me to be wrong to decide that the attorney can on holding this fund subject to a lien for his costs subsequently incurred. It seems to me what is attached is the right of the judgment-debtor at [376] the time of the attachment, that is, the money subject to the lien for costs then incurred. Babu Nobin Chund Bural will be entitled to be paid the amount due to him for costs up to the 18th June 1886, the date of the attachment. Then Mr. Bonnerjee’s client will be entitled to any balance that may remain as far as his claim extends; any further balance, if any, to Babu Nobin Chund Bural in satisfaction of his claim for costs. Costs of both parties to be paid out of the fund in the first instance.

Attorney for the applicant: Baboo Nobin Chand Bural.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PAT DASI (Plaintiff) v. SHARUP CHAND MALA AND ANOTHER (Defendants).* [7th March, 1887.]

Decree, Evidence of satisfaction of—Adjustment of decree without certifying—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 258—Proof of payment of decree otherwise than by certificate—Fraudulent execution of decree after adjustment.

Where a decree has been satisfied out of Court, and the payment has not been recorded in accordance with s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is nevertheless open to the quondam judgment-debtor, when suing to have a sale made by the quondam decree-holder after satisfaction of the decree set aside, to prove the payment of the decratal money otherwise than by a certificate under that section.

[Disso, 21 C. 437 (447); 20 A. 254 (256)=18 A.W.N. 37; Commented on, 15 C. 557 (562); R., 13 A. 339 (342); 13 C.W.N. 710 (717)=1 Ind. Cas. 871=11 C.L.J. 254=37 C. 107 (110).]

This was a suit for confirmation of possession of certain property and for a declaration that an auction sale of the said property might be set aside as invalid.

It appeared that one Shib Prosad Pal had obtained a decree against the present plaintiff, Pat Dasi, for arrears of rent of a certain under-tenure, and that Pat Dasi had satisfied this decree [377] in full out of Court, the payment never having been duly certified to the Court in accordance with the provisions of s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code;

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1272 of 1886, against the decree of R. Towers, Esq., Judge of Midnapore, dated the 9th of April 1886, reversing the decree of Baboo Revati Churn Banerjee, Munisif of Contai, dated the 6th of May 1885.
that, notwithstanding the decree had been satisfied, Shib Prosad Pal took out execution and sold the under-tenure and other lands belonging to Pat Dasi in one lot, of which one Sharup Chand Mala became the purchaser. There was, however, no evidence to show that the auction-purchaser was aware that the decree had been satisfied.

Pat Dasi then brought this present suit against Sharup Chand Mala and Shib Prosad Pal for the purposes above mentioned.

The defendants both contended that the plaintiff not having taken objection to the sale in the execution proceedings was not entitled to ask to have the sale set aside by suit; and defendant Sharup Chand Mala further contended that, even if Shib Prosad Pal had granted a receipt in full satisfaction of the decree, the money was paid out of Court and had not afterwards been certified to the Court, and that therefore his position as auction-purchaser could not be affected, the decree remaining virtually unexecuted.

The Munsif held that the suit was one based on an allegation of fraud and would lie; that the procedure adopted by the decree-holder in executing his decree was irregular, the under-tenure not having been first put up for sale; and that on that account the sale ought to be set aside. He therefore reversed the sale and declared the plaintiff’s right to the land sued for, confirming him in possession thereof.

The auction-purchaser, Sharup Chand Mala, appealed to the District Judge, who considered that the finding of the Munsif as to irregularity in the sale was a finding on an objection which could be only taken in the execution proceedings, and that having regard to the case of Kristo Ram Roy v. Janokee Nath Roy (1), it was doubtful whether the fact of the under-tenure not having been first sold was an irregularity at all. He further held, citing the cases referred to under s. 312 of O’Kinealy’s Code, that a sale under a decree obtained by fraud could not be set aside when the auction-purchaser was not a party to the fraud, and [378] that the plaintiff’s remedy lay in a suit for damages. He therefore reversed the decree of the Munsif.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, for the appellant, contended that the decree of the Munsif was correct, citing Lalit Mohun Roy v. Binodai Dacone (2) as dissenting from Kristo Ram Roy v. Janokee Nath Roy (1). He further contended that the cases cited in the note to s. 312 in O’Kinealy’s Civil Procedure Code were no bar to the plaintiff’s suit, and that the District Judge in relying on those decisions as being a bar to the suit had acted wrongly.

Mr. Twidale, for the respondent, contended that the auction-purchaser was not a party to the fraud, and that, therefore, the sale to him ought not to be reversed; that s. 258 clearly laid down that no adjustment of a decree should be recognized by the Court unless certified to it, and that the certificate referred to in that section is the only evidence of any adjustment of the decree; that there is authority for holding that a sale in execution of a decree, which decree is subsequently set aside on appeal, stands good.
JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Cunningham, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—This is a suit which is brought by a person to have it declared that the auction sale of his property made in execution of a decree is invalid, and that his possession of it is valid as against the auction-purchaser.

The facts of the case are that the decree was obtained against this plaintiff by one of the defendants for a certain sum of money; that after it had been obtained the present plaintiff satisfied the decree by payment, but he did not have the payment certified under the provisions of s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and that, notwithstanding such payment, the execution-creditor went on and put up the property for sale, and it was purchased by the other defendants in this suit. Under [379] these circumstances the owner of the property, the person who paid the money and who now finds that his property has been sold behind his back, brings this suit for the purpose of having it declared that the sale is of no effect as against him; and the only question is whether he can prove that payment otherwise than by a certificate under s. 258.

It is contended, on behalf of the purchaser, that this section prescribes the only mode in which such payment could be proved for any purpose whatever, in any suit whatever, and before any Court whatever; in other words, that the section alters the law of evidence on that point, and renders this transaction not provable in the ordinary way but only by that certificate.

It is true that the words of the section are of a kind that they may be susceptible of that meaning, but it seems to us that if the legislature intended to make such a great change in the law as that would imply, they would have expressed it in words that would leave the matter free from all doubt, and inasmuch as the words of the section are ambiguous in this sense, that they are susceptible of the large meaning and also susceptible of the meaning that the payment shall be proved in other ways than that prescribed in the section, we think that it is the duty of the Court to give them this meaning and not the larger meaning, which would have such an effect, and which would be a kind of legislation which one would not expect to find in the third clause of a section relating to execution proceedings.

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that it was competent to the plaintiff to prove this payment in the way he has proved it, and having proved it to the satisfaction of both the lower Courts it follows that the decree in the former suit was satisfied and was inoperative against the owner of the property, and therefore the plaintiff is entitled to a decree confirming him in possession as against the purchaser and declaring that the sale under this satisfied decree is void and of no effect.

Under these circumstances we decree this appeal with costs as against the defendant No. 2.

KOILASH CHUNDER ROY AND ANOTHER (Decree-holder) v.
JODU NATH ROY AND OTHERS (Judgment-debtors).*

Bengal Tenancy Act, s. 148 (h)—Decree for arrears of rent, Assignment of—Execution of decree by Assignee.

The fact that an assignment of a decree for arrears of rent was made before the Tenancy Act will not protect from the provisions of s. 148 (h) an assignee who proceeds to execution afterwards; but execution cannot be refused where, before that Act came into operation, the assignment had been recognized by a Court of execution under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code.

[Cons., 1 C. L. J. 500.]

A DEGREE for arrears of rent was obtained by Joykali and Srish Chunder Sirkar Chowdhry. On the 18th June 1885 Koilash Chunder Roy obtained an order from the Civil Court in the proceedings in execution of that decree, recognizing him as assignee of the rights of Srish Chunder Sirkar Chowdhry, to a 4 anna share. In September 1885, Joykali applied to execute the entire decree. In consequence of an informality that application was returned for amendment, and finally it was not presented and granted by the Court until the 10th November. In the meantime the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation on the 1st November. On the 27th March Koilash petitioned to the Civil Court stating that he and Moti Lall had, in June 1884, purchased the rights of Joykali, and asked that their names might be substituted in her place so that they might be allowed to execute the decree. The Subordinate Judge disallowed the objections of the judgment-debtors, which were raised under s. 148 (h) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but the District Judge on appeal held that execution could not proceed in consequence of the assignments which had been made by the original decree-holders. He accordingly ordered the attachment of the property to be withdrawn and the sale to be stayed sine die. The decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

[381] Baboo Bhobani Churn Dutt, for the appellants.

Baboo Gurudas Banerjee and Baboo Girija Sunker Mazumdar, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Beverley, JJ.), after setting out the facts as above, proceeded as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Section 148 (h) declares that, “notwithstanding anything contained in s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an application for execution of a decree for arrears obtained by a landlord shall not be made by an assignee of the decree unless the landlord’s interest in the land has become, and is vested in him.” In this case it is admitted that the exception stated does not exist. We have, therefore, to consider, first, whether the assignment of the rights of Srish Chunder, which was admitted by the Court of execution under s. 232 before the Bengal Tenancy Act became law, entitles

*Appeal from Order, No. 373 of 1886, against the order of J. Crawfurd, Esq., District Judge of Nuddea, dated the 14th of August 1886, reversing the order of Baboo Nuffer Chunder Bhutto, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 7th of August 1886.

the assignee to proceed to execution in respect of the rights of the assignor; next, whether the assignment of the rights of Joykali, said to have been made before the operation of the Bengal Tenancy Act but not notified to, or recognised by, the Civil Courts until after the Act, entitles the assignee to the assistance of the Court in executing the decree; and, lastly, whether the application for execution made by Joykali can proceed.

Now, in respect of the rights of Srish Chunder, we are of opinion that, inasmuch as the Civil Court, by an order regularly passed under s. 232 before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, permitted Koilash Chunder to execute the decree as one of the decree-holders, the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply. The effect of this order, in our opinion, is to substitute Koilash Chunder as a decree-holder in the place of Srish Chunder, the original decree-holder, and after that order was made under s. 232 it is not for the Court executing the decree to consider any circumstances under which it was made. The application of s. 148 (h) is not retrospective so as to affect that order. It contains rather a prohibition to the Courts to abstain from granting any application for execution of a decree for arrears obtained by a landlord which may be made by an assignee unless under exceptional circumstances. But the mere fact that any assignments were made before the Bengal Tenancy Act [382] came into operation would not entitle the assignees to ask the Court of execution to recognize them now.

We are next of opinion that the application for execution now before us made by Joykali cannot proceed. We cannot find that that application was ever allowed under s. 231, and therefore we must take it that Joykali had no authority to execute the entire decree. As the matter is not before us we abstain from expressing any opinion whether Joykali and Koilash Chunder jointly or either of them separately, under permission given under s. 231, can execute the decree. The appeal is therefore dismissed. Each party to pay his own costs.

DOYA CHAND SHAHA (Defendant No. 1) v. ANUND CHUNDER SEN MOZUMDAR (Plaintiff).* [7th January, 1887.]

Onus of proof—Transferability of tenure—Resumption.

There is no presumption that any tenure held is not a transferable tenure, and a landlord who sues for khas possession on the ground that a tenure sold was not transferable must establish his case as an ordinary plaintiff.

[N.F., 15 C. 89 (92); R., 13 M. 60 (64); 25 C. 896 (907) (F.B.).]

ANANDA CHUNDER SEN brought a suit for khas possession of a plot of land which had been purchased in execution of a decree by Doya Chand Shaaha, the principal defendant. Ananda alleged that the other defendants had held the land as his tenants, and inasmuch as their interest in it was not of a transferable nature, Doya Chand as auction-purchaser of that interest was a mere trespasser, and thus liable to be evicted from the land. Doya Chand contended, among other things, that the holding was a mokurari one and transferable both by law and custom. Upon the question whether the predecessors in title of Doya Chand had a saleable interest in the disputed land, neither party gave any evidence, and the Munsif was of opinion that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff in the ordinary way, and the fact of the defendant's admission that the plaintiff was the landlord did not make any difference. On appeal the Subordinate Judge, differing from the Court of first instance, held that the defendant having set up a mokurari title, and admitted the title of the plaintiff as the landlord, the onus lay upon him, and remanded the case for trial on the merits.

An appeal was preferred from that order to the High Court.

Mr. Handley (with him Baboo Kashi Kant Sen), for the appellant.
Baboo Srinath Das and Baboo Mokund Nath Roy, for the respondent.
The Court (PRINSEP and BEVERLEY, JJ.) delivered the following judgment:

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff sues to recover khas possession of certain lands now in the occupation of defendant No. 1. He states that the other defendants were his tenants, and that defendant No. 1 has purchased in execution of a decree the rights of those tenants which were not transferable. The sole question on which the case was tried by both the lower Courts and which is now argued before us is on whom the onus, under such circumstances, would lie, whether it is for the defendant to prove that he acquired the right to hold the land inasmuch as the tenure was a transferable tenure, or whether the plaintiff is not bound to start his case by showing that the tenancy of defendants 2, 3 and 4 was not transferable, and that consequently he had a right to re-enter on their relinquishing the land in favour of defendant No. 1. In the course of the argument some cases have been cited from the Weekly Reporter, but it is impossible for us to apply the law laid down in those cases because in none of them are the facts stated. We are of opinion that the case of Dwarka Nath Misser v. Hurish Chunder (1) is not applicable. In that case it was admitted or found that the defendants had occupancy rights, and the learned Judges of this Court in their judgment proceeding on the Full Bench case, Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (2) held that it was for the defendant to prove that such right was transferable. There is nothing in that case (384) to establish the proposition now contended for, that it is for the tenant or the person who claims to be the tenant to establish his rights to retain the lands in any suit brought against him by the zamindar or whenever the zamindar may think proper to call upon him to show his title. In our opinion the plaintiff is bound to start his case. There is no presumption that any tenure held is not a transferable tenure. We therefore affirm the judgment of the first Court and set aside that of the lower appellate Court, the suit being dismissed with cost throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Beverley.

DWARKA MOHUN DAS (Judgment-debtor) v. LUCKHIMONI DASI (Decree-holder).* [10th February, 1887.]

Attachment—Execution of decree—Partnership debt, Attachment of.

An uncertain sum which may or may not be payable by one member to another of a partnership, not shown to have been wound up, cannot be attached or sold in execution of a decree.

LUCKHIMONI DASI in execution of her decree attached and advertised for sale the debts which she represented were due to Dwarka Mohun Das, the judgment-debtor, from his co-partner upon a partnership account.
Dwarka Mohun objected that the debt being unascertained was not attachable; but the Subordinate Judge disallowed the objection. On appeal the District Court agreed with the Sub-Judge, and held that the case did not fall either under cl. (e) or cl. (k) of s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Dwarka Mohun appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Lal Mohun Das, for the appellant.

Baboo Harendra Nath Mukerjee, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BEVERLEY, J.J.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The debtors apparently are partners in some firm. The [385] decree-holder seeks to attach and sell the interest of one of these debtors, which, in his application for execution of the decree, he terms to be a debt due to that judgment-debtor from the other judgment-debtor. The amount is uncertain. It is not even shown that the business of the firm has been wound up, nor is there any certainty that such a debt exists. We cannot therefore agree with the lower Courts that such an interest can be attached and sold in execution of the decree. The case of Syud Tuffuzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoonath Pershad (1) seems to us to be exactly in point. The order of the lower Court is therefore set aside. The debtor-appellant will receive his costs in all Courts.

Gopi Mohun Shaha obtained on the 21st July 1882 an ex parte decree for arrears of rent for a sum less than Rs. 500. Application for execution was made on the 19th May 1885. On the 20th June Chandra Prodhah, the judgment-debtor, applied [386] to set aside the decree, and the execution case was accordingly struck off. After repeated adjournments the application for a re-hearing was rejected on the 21st November, and on the 3rd February 1886, Gopi Mohun Shaha renewed his application for execution. Chandra Prodhah objected that, inasmuch as more than three years had elapsed from the date of the decree, execution was barred. The Munsif was of opinion that the execution could proceed, and held inter alia that the application of the 3rd February was an application to revive the proceedings commenced on the 19th May 1885, and that the order of the 20th June striking off the execution case was in the nature of an injunction pending the decision in another case—*Basant Lal v. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the order for execution.

Chandra Prodhah appealed to the High Court.

The Court (Prinsep and Beverley, JJ.) delivered the following judgment:—

JUDGMENT.

The decree now under execution for arrears of rent was passed on the 21st July 1882, for a sum less than Rs. 500. Execution was taken out on the 19th May 1885, and notice under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure issued before the decree was actually put into execution. On the 20th of June the judgment-debtor objected to execution and applied to have the ex parte decree set aside. On the same day the application for execution was struck off. suit was dismissed. On the 3rd of February 1886, application was made to execute this decree. It is now objected under s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, that execution is barred inasmuch as more than three years have elapsed since the date of the original decree. If the application of the 3rd February 1886 be regarded as a fresh application to execute, no doubt it is barred; [387] but we are inclined to take the view expressed in Kalyanbhai Dipchand v. Ghanshamlal Jadunathji (1), and to hold that this application is a continuation of the previous application of the 19th May, 1885. Execution of the decree was suspended on the action of the judgment-debtor, and, although the law does not permit us to deduct the period during which it was so suspended in calculating the period allowed by the law of limitation, we think that we may properly take the application of the 3rd February, 1886, as an application to the Court of execution to withdraw the order passed on the 20th June, 1885, which suspended the execution in consequence of the objection of the judgment-debtor.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs (2).

SHELOCHUN SINGH (Defendant) v. SAHEB SINGH (Plaintiff).

[10th February, 1887.]

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Inheritance to property purchased by Hindu widow out of the income of her estate,

When a widow, not spending the income of her widow’s estate in the property which belonged to her husband when living, has invested such savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate.

The authority upon this matter is found in Isridut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (3), where a widow having made no distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the latter were held inalienable by her for any purpose not justifying alienation of the former.

[Rel. on, 7 Ind. Cas. 27; R., 14 C. 861; 16 C. 574; 25 M. 351 (356); 11 O.C. 310 (315); 16 C.W.N. 834 (856)=15 Ind. Cas. 691 (692).]

[388] APPEAL from a decree (14th September, 1888) of the High Court, in part affirming, and in part reversing, a decree (31st December, 1881) of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad.

The question raised by this appeal was whether a gift by a Hindu widow, although ineffectual to confer a title, after her death, in properties which had belonged to her husband, might effectually transfer property

(1) 5 B. 29.
(2) This case was followed in Chandra Kant Bannerjee v. Surji Kanto Rai Chowdhury, under the Tenancy Act; appeal from Order 419 of 1886 decided by Prinsep and Beverley, J.J., on the 4th February, 1887.
(3) 10 C. 324=10 I. A. 150.
which, after his death, she and a co-widow, left by the same husband, had purchased out of the savings of the income of the joint estate held by them as widows.

The property, whence the income was derived, belonged to the estate of Sheodyal Singh, who died without issue in 1826, leaving two widows, Pranpiairi Koer and Rekaba Koer. The widows remained in joint possession of his estate till the death of Pranpiairi Koer in 1871, Rekaba continuing in sole possession, for her widow’s estate, till the 19th October, 1875, when by deed of gift she gave to the defendant-appellant the entire moveable and immovable properties which had belonged to her husband, together with those purchased by her, and her co-widow Pranpiairi, out of their savings.

The purport of the deed of gift, or atanama executed by Rekaba on the 19th October, 1875, was that she and Pranpiairi, desiring to carry out their husband’s wishes as to the establishment of “more thakurbaris” and “shivalas,” with other religious objects, and in accordance with the advice of members of their husband’s family, had placed Sheolochun Singh as sole manager of the estates; also that Rekaba, the surviving widow, being now sixty years of age, desired to make, and by that deed, did make, “for the preservation of the riasut, and the name of her husband, for the seba puja of Sri Thakur, and for her husband’s sraddh,” a gift of the entire immovable and moveable properties, household furniture and other valuables left by Sheodyal Singh, together with what had been acquired by the widows, to Sheolochun Singh from generation to generation.

Saheb Singh, son of Jit Singh, claiming as gotraja sapinda of the late Sheodyal Singh, and one of his three nearest kinsmen, objected to mutation of names in the Collectorate records in regard to the interests in land which had belonged to Sheodyal; [389] and on the death of Rekaba on 2nd February, 1880, Saheb Singh brought the present suit against Sheolochun Singh, claiming a declaration that the deed of gift of 19th October, 1875, was void, as having been executed by a widow without authority, also claiming a one-third share of the property, with partition against the two other near relations of the late Sheodyal Singh, both of whom he joined as defendants, and claiming mesne profits.

Among the defences limitation was alleged, also the competence of the gift, it having been virtually for the spiritual benefit of a deceased husband. But the defence material to this report was the allegation that the widows had during their lives acquired certain of the mouzahs, specified in the schedule annexed to the plaint, with their own money, and that Rekaba was competent to alienate the property so acquired.

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge on the question of limitation, and his findings of fact, were in favour of the plaintiff; but he gave no decision on the last point, as he was of opinion that, whether the mouzahs in question were purchased out of income or out of the widow’s savings, Rekaba was entitled to make the transfer, which she had made, of all but the land which had been in the possession of Sheodyal; also, as to the moveable property, he was under the impression that Rekaba had, in her lifetime, complete power to dispose of it. Accordingly he made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for so much of his claim as comprised the one-third of the land that had belonged to Sheodyal, dismissing the claim as to all that had been purchased by the widows and as to the moveable property.
On the defendant's appeal from this decree so much of it as related to the properties purchased after the death of Sheodyal to the moveables' and to mesne profits, was objected to by the plaintiff under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The High Court (Mitter and Wilkinson, JJ.) dismissed the appeal and allowed the objections. They concurred with the lower Court that the suit was not barred by limitation, and as to certain findings of fact. But finding that all the properties purchased after Sheodyal's death had been acquired out of the income of property which had been his, they held that, if the [390] after-purchased property had been treated as an increment to the estate of the deceased husband by his widows, the latter had no power to alienate it except on the ground of necessity. On this point they referred to Isridut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (1), and found that the after-purchases had been so dealt with by the widows. They allowed mesne profits to the plaintiff, and also, referring to the judgment in Bhugwandeen Doobey v. Maina Baee (2), corrected the Subordinate Judge's impression as to the power of the widow over moveables. The plaintiff accordingly obtained a decree for one-third share of the land, including the after-purchases, and of the moveables, also for mesne profits.

The judgment of the High Court was as follows:

"As regards the objections taken by the plaintiff-respondent to the decree of the lower Court, it seems to us that there is no reason why he should not get a decree for mesne profits from the date of the death of Rekaba Koer to the date of delivery of possession. We accordingly direct that in that respect the decree of the lower Court be modified, and it be declared that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the said mesne profits, and that the amount thereof will be determined in execution of the decree.

"As regards the moveable property the lower Court has disallowed the claim on the ground that, according to Mitakshara law, a Hindu widow is entitled to alienate it; but in this respect he has fallen into an error.

"It was decided by the Judicial Committee in the case of Bhugwandeen Doobey v. Maina Baee (2), that a Hindu widow under the Mitakshara law has no power to alienate the estate inherited from her husband to the prejudice of his heirs, whether such estate consists of moveable or immovable property. Therefore the decision of the lower Court on this point also will be set aside. The learned pleader, who appeared for the appellant, admits that there is no question as to the value of the moveable property claimed in the plaint. We accordingly declare that the plaintiff will be entitled to recover Rs. 1,128-5-4 pie [391] as the value of the one-third share of the moveable property of Sheodyal Singh.

"Then there remains the question whether Mussamut Rekaba Koer under the Hindu law was competent to alienate the properties purchased after the death of Sheodyal. With reference to this matter the parties joined issue upon a question of fact, viz., whether or not these properties were acquired after the death of Sheodyal out of the proceeds of his property. But it was admitted by the learned pleader for the appellant that upon the evidence there is no doubt that the properties in question were acquired out of the proceeds of Sheodyal's estate. That being so, the question between the parties is reduced to one of law, viz., whether these properties, which were acquired by the widows of Sheodyal out of the proceeds of his immovable property, could be alienated by the said widows without any such necessity as would justify the alienation by a Hindu widow under the Hindu law.

(1) 10 C. 324=10 I. A. 150.
(2) 11 M. I. A. 487.

"A very recent decision of the Judicial Committee upon this point has lately come out to this country. It was passed on the appeal of Isridut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (1), and the judgment was delivered on the 11th July, last. The effect of this decision is shortly this: if it be proved that a particular property acquired out of the income of the husband’s estate has been added as an accretion to that estate, a Hindu widow has no power to alienate it unless there be any necessity which justifies the alienation; but, if the acquisition be of such a character that it may be reasonably held to be a portion of the income of the husband’s estate still held in suspense in the hands of the widow, she has full disposing power over it as she has over any other income of that estate. This being the principle settled by the latest decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, we see no difficulty in determining the question raised before us. Upon the evidence before us there is not the slightest doubt that the properties in question were dealt with by the widows as accretions to their husband’s estate. They were treated in the deed of gift precisely in the same way as the admitted properties of Sheodyal were treated. Acting, therefore, upon the [392] principle laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case cited above, we are of opinion that the plaintiff’s claim in respect of these properties also should be allowed."

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant, argued that, on the principles declared in Isridut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (1), the widow’s gift of the property acquired by herself, and her co-widow, out of their savings, should have been supported. The mouzahs which the widows purchased after the death of their husband were recorded separately from the rest of the property forming the estate which had been Sheodyal’s. The separate ownership of these mouzahs having been at one time in the widows, they had not extinguished it by devoting the property to a purpose which was their own.

Mr. T. H. Couch, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment, after Mr. Branson had been heard, was given by Sir R. Couch.—The suit, which is the subject of this appeal, was brought by the respondent, who claimed as one of the heirs of Sheodyal, who died in 1827, to recover from the appellant a third share of the property which had been left by Sheodyal at his death, and to which his two widows Pranpiari and Rekaba became entitled, and also a third of the properties which had been purchased by the widows with, as he alleged, the income of the property which they inherited. Pranpiari and Rekaba, in the first place, held the properties jointly, and Pranpiari died in 1870, leaving Rekaba surviving her and in possession of the whole of the estate. It appears that on the 19th October, 1875, Rekaba executed a deed of atanama, by which she professed to give to the appellant, who was the defendant in the suit, the whole of the property, not only that which came to the widows from Sheodyal, but the properties which had been purchased by them; and it was also alleged that the defendant had been adopted by the widows with the permission of Sheodyal as his son.

(1) 10 C. 324=10 I. A. 150.

Various issues were settled. The defence set up various matters, including the law of limitation, the adoption of the defendant and the deed of atanama. All the issues were found in favour of the plaintiff, the respondent, except that with respect to the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover a share of the properties which had been purchased by the widows. The lower Court found that the widows were entitled to alienate that property, and consequently that he was not entitled to it. The High Court, when the case came before it upon appeal, upon this question said that upon the evidence before them there was not the slightest doubt that the properties in question, namely, the purchased properties, were dealt with by the widows as accretions to their husband's estate, and that they were treated in the deed of gift precisely in the same way as the admitted properties of Sheodyal were treated.

Their Lordships have been referred to Mr. Branson to the different parts of the evidence which he considered bore upon the question whether the properties were purchased by the widows out of the income of the descended property and whether their intention was to keep those properties distinct. Certainly the evidence is not such as would show that the High Court in coming to the conclusion they did were not quite justified by it.

The authority upon this matter is the case of Isridut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerin (1). At the conclusion of the judgment their Lordships state the matter which has to be looked at in deciding whether the property acquired or purchased by the widows is to descend to the husband's estate or is to be treated as a separate estate. They say: "Neither with respect to this object," namely, to change the succession, "nor apparently in any other way have the widows made any distinction between the original estate and the after purchases." Where a widow comes into possession of the property of the husband, and receives the income, and does not spend it, but invests it in the purchase of other property, their Lordships think that, prima facie, it is the intention of the widow to keep the estate of the husband as an entire estate and that the property purchased would, prima facie, be intended to [394] be accretions to that estate. There may be, no doubt, circumstances which would show that the widow had no such intention, that she intended to appropriate the savings in another way. There are circumstances here which would indicate that it was the intention of the widows to keep the estate entire, and that they did not intend that the husband's estate and the subsequently-purchased properties should go in a different line of succession, because their act, in what they did with regard to the defendant, was to make a gift to him of the whole of the property, and professing to do it so as to, what seems to be called, carry out the intentions of Sheodyal and found a thakurbari, with which the estate would be connected. The transaction appears to indicate that their intention was not to create separate estates, one to go in one way, and another in another, but to keep the whole as one entire property; and applying what is said in the case of Isridut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerin (1) to the present case, there do not appear to be circumstances which would show that there was any other intention than that the purchased property should be accretions to the inherited property. The High Court has found that, and their Lordships see no ground for saying that the Court has not come to a proper conclusion from the evidence.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decision of the High Court and to dismiss the appeal, and the appellants will pay the costs.

_IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHANDI SINGH AND OTHERS._

QUEEN-EMpress v. CHANDI SINGH AND OTHERS.*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 234, 537—Separate charges for distinct offences.

Five persons were charged with having committed the offence of rioting on the 5th December; four out of those persons, and one F., were charged with having committed the offence of criminal trespass on the 9th December. These two cases were taken up and tried together in one trial, and were decided by one judgment.

_Held_ that the trial was illegal, and the defect was not cured by s. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

On the 10th and 11th December two cases were sent up to the Magistrate by the Dalsing Serai Police. In the first of these Chandi Singh, Ferangi Singh, Batoram Singh, Bachu Singh and Bhagwan Singh were charged under s. 147 of the Penal Code with having committed, on the 5th December, the offence of rioting on a piece of land belonging to the Mow Factory. In the second case Ferangi Singh, Batoram Singh, Bachu Singh and Bhagwan Singh were charged under s. 447 of the Penal Code with committing, on the 9th December, criminal trespass on the same piece of land. These two cases were tried together in one trial by the District Magistrate of Durbhanga, and passing one judgment in the two cases he convicted and sentenced the accused named in the first mentioned case, each to two years' rigorous imprisonment, and further sentenced the accused in the secondly mentioned case to undergo a further imprisonment of three months for the offence committed under s. 447 of the Penal Code. The prisoners appealed to the Sessions Judge, who summarily rejected their appeal under s. 421, stating that the trial had been rightly held under s. 284 of the Criminal Procedure Code. ORDER

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—We think that this rule must be made absolute and made absolute on the legal ground alone. With reference to the merits of the case they have not been gone into, and therefore this Court is not in a position to form any judgment whatever, but the ground upon which we base our judgment is that these two charges have been tried in one trial, and that is an illegal proceeding under s. 233 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The charges were, first of all, a charge against five men of having committed a riot on the 5th December, 1886, and against four out of the five men of having committed criminal trespass on the 9th December, 1886. These two charges were tried together in one trial and were decided by one judgment.

In our opinion this proceeding was illegal within the terms of s. 233, and does not, as the Judge supposes, come within the terms of s. 234. The only matter which is common to both charges is that the dispute in each case arises out of the same land, but the charges are absolutely distinct, and the persons charged are not the same body of men. It is quite true that there were some of the persons common to both charges, but the second charge did not include all the persons charged under the first charge.

Under these circumstances we think that the trial was illegal, it having been a trial which is prohibited by the terms of the law as contained in s. 233, and we do not think that s. 537, which cures errors, omissions, or irregularities, is intended to cure, or does cure, an absolute illegality. For these reasons we set aside the trial and the conviction, and direct that the prisoners be discharged from custody.

[397] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Nobodip Chunder Shaha (Plaintiff) v. Ram Krishna Roy Chowdhry and Another (Defendants).* [13th April, 1887.]

Instalment bond—Default in one instalment the whole amount to fall due—Waiver—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 75.

The mere fact that a creditor has done nothing to enforce a condition in an instrument, under which the whole debt became due on failure in the payment of one instalment, is no evidence of waiver within the meaning of art. 75 of the Limitation Act.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2070 of 1886, against the decree of H. Peterson, Esq., Judge of Dinagepore, dated the 2nd of August, 1886, affirming the decree of Baboo Juggobundhoo·Gangooly, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 22nd of March, 1886.

[Rs. 5 M.L.J. 241 (243); 20 B. 109 (113); 368 C. 394=9 C.L.J. 226=13 C.W.N. 1004= 1 Ind. Cas. 49; D., 24 C. 281 (283).]

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,500 on a kistibundi (instalment bond) executed by the defendant in favour of one Modhu Sudun Chowdhry on the 9th January, 1882, Modhu Sundun Chowdhry having sold his rights under the kistibundi to the plaintiff on the 5th December, 1882.

Under this kistibundi the defendant had stipulated to pay the sum of Rs. 2,350 with interest in 23 fixed instalments, the first of such instalments falling due in Joisto 1289 (from 14th May to 14th June, 1882) and the last in Aughran 1294 (from 14th November to 14th December, 1887); and had further stipulated that, on default of any instalment, the whole amount recoverable under the kistibundi should then become due.

The first instalment was duly paid within the time fixed; the second of such instalments due in Bhadro 1289 (from 16th August to 15th September, 1882) was accepted by the plaintiff’s vendor after the due date in Assin 1289 (from 16th September to 17th October, 1882); the third instalment due in Aughran 1289 (from 16th November to 14th December, 1882), was not paid; and the plaintiff on the 11th February, 1886, sued the defendant (Modhu Sudun Chowdhry being made a pro forma defendant) to recover the instalments due from Falgun 1289-(12th February to 13th March, 1883) to Aughran 1292 (15th November to 14th [398] December, 1885), not including in his claim the remainder of the instalments falling due from 1292 to 1294 (1885—1887); and stating that the third instalment was not included in his claim inasmuch as that instalment was, at the time of suit, barred by limitation.

The chief defendant (who alone appeared in the suit) contended that the plaintiff not having claimed the total amount due under the kistibundi the suit was bad, and pleaded limitation.

The Subordinate Judge found the facts to be as above stated; and held that the plaintiff’s cause of action arose on the 15th December, 1882 on failure of the payment due in Aughran 1289, and that he should have sued to recover the whole of the amount due under the kistibundi within three years from that date, and that, not having done so, the suit was barred under art. 75 of sch. II of the Limitation Act.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge on the ground that the terms of the kistibundi made it optional, and not obligatory, on the creditor to sue for the whole amount, and that the suit fell under art. 74, art. 75 only contemplating cases where the whole amount is not only forfeited by a single default but where also, the entire amount is sued for. The District Judge dismissed the appeal, affording the judgment of the lower Court.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitller for the appellant contended that art. 75 did not apply, and that it was optional on the part of the plaintiff on default of any instalment either to sue for such instalment or for the total amount due under the kistibundi, and that what was done by the plaintiff amounted to a waiver of his right to sue for the whole amount.

Baboo Guru Das Banerjee for the respondent contended that the suit was barred, and that there had been no waiver, citing Cheni Bash Shaha v. Kadum Mundul (1), Sethu v. Nayana (2) and Mumford v. Peal (3).

(1) 5 C. 97. (2) 7 M. 577. (3) 2 A. 857.
JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—This is an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants upon a bond executed by the defendants [399] in his favour to secure payment of a sum of money by instalments; and the bond contains a proviso, the effect of which is that, in the event of any of the instalments being unpaid, the whole amount shall become due at once......

The instalments have been unpaid for some time, and, as a matter of fact, the time the last payment was made was so long ago that, if the whole amount became due at that time, the cause of action would become barred; and upon that state of things the question that arises is, whether the mere fact that the creditor has done nothing but simply allowed the matter to sleep, without enforcing his remedy against the debtor, is any evidence of waiver within the meaning of art. 75 of the Limitation Act.

We do not think it necessary to say what opinion we might have formed on this matter if it had not been already decided by judicial authority, because it has been so decided and is concluded by that authority. The decisions which have been reported, viz., Cheni Bash Shaha v. Kodum Mundul (1), Sethu v. Nayana (2) and Mumford v. Peal (3), are clear authorities to show that, in the opinion of the Courts in this country, such a condition of things would be no evidence of waiver. The law on this subject must, therefore, in my opinion, be treated as having become settled. The Court below has held in this case that the last default was made so long ago that the time that has elapsed since then would be enough to bar the remedy. That Court has accordingly followed the authority of these cases, and has decided that the remedy is barred in this case; and, as I said before, without expressing any opinion which we might have entertained upon this point if it had been new matter, we think that, as it had been considered settled law in this country for so long a time, it is not desirable that this matter should be referred to the Full Bench and further questions raised upon it.

Therefore, following the decisions referred to in this case, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

R. J. F. Stevens, as the "authorized manager" of the Rajahs of Chanchra, instituted a suit for arrears of rent. It was objected on the part of the defendant that the suit was bad, inasmuch as it was brought by a person who had no interest in the matter. The Munsif held that not only had the suit been brought by the right plaintiff, but that upon the petition of the Rajahs the Court had struck off the name of the agent (Stevens) from the record. On appeal the Subordinate Judge agreed with the Court of first instance, adding that whatever defect there might have been in the original plaint was cured at a later stage when the name of the agent was struck off.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the appellant.

Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O'Kineally, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

It appears that this suit which was one for rent was originally brought in the name of Mr. Stevens as the authorized manager of Rajah Ganoda Kant Roy Bahadur and others. At a later stage in the suit an amendment was made by striking out Mr. Stevens and substituting his employers as plaintiffs in the case. We must presume that to have been done on sufficient materials under the express provisions of s. 27 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which section, if a suit is brought in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, the name of the right person may be substituted, provided the conditions of the section are complied with. It is said, however, that the change was made at such a time that, if the suit had been then brought for the first time in the names of the proper persons, it would have been barred by limitation, and the suggestion is that therefore this suit is barred. The answer to that is that this suit is the original suit and was brought in time; the change of parties as plaintiffs does not affect the question of limitation. There is a difference between substituting a new person as plaintiff under s. 27 and the addition of a new person as a defendant to a suit. Section 32 expressly says, speaking of defendants, that the proceedings as against them shall, for the purposes of the Limitation Act, be deemed to have begun only on the service of summons, that is the summons servable on the added defendants. There is no such provision as regards persons who are made plaintiffs under s. 27. This point therefore fails.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Res Judicata—Estoppel—Auction-purchaser—"Representative"—Mortgage—Adoption—Hindu Law, Mitakshara—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts 118, 140, 141.

A purchaser at an execution sale is not as such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act.

A, a Hindu, governed by the Mitakshara School of Law, died on the 12th May, 1867, leaving him surviving a widow B and a brother R, who was admittedly the next reversioner. In July, 1867, B purported to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September, 1867, obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of Rs. 9,000, and to secure its repayment executed a mortgage of seven mouzahs in favour of M as guardian of D. The money was advanced and mortgage executed at the instigation of R and with his consent, and upon his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A, and it was admitted that the money was specifically advanced for, as well as applied towards, the payment of decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August, 1880, M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party defendant as being the purchaser of the mortgagee's interest in one of the mouzahs included in his mortgage. On the 26th June, 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzahs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree M was opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had on the 8th November, 1880, purchased five out of the seven mouzahs at a sale in execution of certain decrees against R. On the 29th February, 1884, L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th August, 1884, M brought this suit against L, S, R, and D, and the decree-holders in the suits against R, for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S.

It was found as a fact that adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity; and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahs. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage money from the five mouzahs in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S as the representative of R was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus having been a party to M's first suit the question as to the liability of the mouzahs to satisfy the mortgage lien was res judicata as against him. It was also contended that the five mouzahs should not be saddled with the whole of the mortgage-debt, but that the mouzah in the hands of M should bear its proportionate part thereof.

Held, that as S was merely a party to M's original suit as purchaser of one mouzah, and as he, subsequently to the institution of that suit, acquired R's interest in the five mouzahs, and as R was not a party to that suit nor was his interest represented in any way, the decree was in no way binding against R, and therefore S was not barred by res judicata from setting up the interest of R in the five mouzahs so acquired by him.

Held, further, that though R was estopped by his conduct from disputing the validity of the adoption, or of M's rights as mortgagee, S being an auction-purchaser was not bound by R's acts, and was not estopped from disputing the adoption, as he derived his title by operation of law adversely to R, and was thus in a different position from a person claiming under a voluntary alienation.

*Appeal from Original Decree No. 413 of 1885, against the decree of Baboo Koilas Chunder Mookerjee, Rai Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 11th of April 1885.
Held, also, that though B purported to execute the mortgage as guardian for D, though D was not the adopted son of A, the substance of the transaction and not the form had to be looked at, and as B had full power to alienate for legal necessity, the mortgage was still binding on the estate of A; and, further, that even if there had been no legal necessity, [403] having regard to the fact that it was made with the consent of R, the next reversioner, it equally created a valid charge upon the property, but that the mouzah in the hands of M must bear its share of the mortgage debt, and that the decree of the lower Court was wrong in declaring that the five mouzahs in suit were to bear the whole amount of the debt.

It was further contended that D had acquired an absolute title by more than twelve years' adverse possession from the date of his adoption in 1867 before the purchase by S in 1880.

Held, that as B died within twelve years of the alleged adoption although under art. 118, sch. II, Act XIV of 1877, (which came into force before the adoption could become perfected by efflux of time), a suit for a declaration that an adoption was invalid should be brought within six years from the date when the adoption becomes known to the plaintiff, still having regard to the provisions of arts. 140 and 141 the next reversioner was not thereby prevented from suing to obtain possession within twelve years from the date of the widow's death or when the estate fell into possession, and therefore S was not barred by limitation from disputing D's title.

Quaere.—Whether the ruling in The Collector of Madura v. Moothoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (1) applies to cases governed by the Mitakshara Law in Northern India, and whether an adoption made by a widow after the death of the husband without his express consent, but with the consent of his near kindred, is valid, or whether the recognition of the adopted son by the next reversioner would likewise render the adoption valid.

This was a suit for a declaration that certain properties in the hands of the defendants were liable to sale in satisfaction of a mortgage decree obtained by the plaintiff on the 26th June 1882 against one Dalpati Singh, who was also made a defendant in this suit.

The facts of the case were as follows: One Dyal Singh had three sons, Ripubhunjun Singh, Gumanbunjun Singh and Aribhunjun Singh, of whom both Gumanbunjun Singh and Aribhunjun Singh died on or about the 12th May, 1867, of cholera within an interval of a day. The plaintiff alleged that previous to his death Aribhunjun Singh gave permission to his wife Dulhin Bishnath Koer to adopt Dulpati Singh, the third son of his brother Gumanbunjun Singh, and that he was thereafter accordingly duly adopted on the 6th July, 1867, or about two months after Aribhunjun's death, with the consent of his agnates, including the elder brother Ripubhunjun Singh. Aribhunjun Singh was a minor of the age of about fifteen or sixteen at the time of his death.

[404] On the 13th July, 1867, Dulhin Bishnath Koer applied for a certificate to be granted to her in respect of Dulpati Singh’s property under Act XI of 1858, and a certificate of guardianship was granted to her on the 9th September, 1867. At the time of Aribhunjun’s death he was heavily indebted, and both before and after his death numerous decrees were obtained against him and his estate. On or about the 15th November, 1872, Bishnath Koer applied for assistance from the plaintiff

(1) 12 M. I. A. 397.
to pay off some of these decrees, and obtained a loan of Rs. 9,000 from the plaintiff James Mylne for that purpose, and to secure repayment, executed, with the sanction of the District Judge, the mortgage in respect of which the suit was brought in her capacity of guardian of Dulpati Singh. The money so obtained by her was used in paying off some of the decrees obtained against Aribhunjun’s estate. Bishnath Koer died on 4th February, 1878, or within twelve years of the date of the alleged adoption. On the 14th August, 1880, the plaintiff instituted a suit on his mortgage bond against Dulpati Singh (Baijnath Sahai defendant No. 2 in the present suit) and Lala Chunli Lal and Manick Chand, alleged benamidars of Baijnath Sahai. In that suit Baijnath Sahai was joined as defendant on the allegation that he was the actual purchaser of the share of Dulpati Singh in mehal Teknia, one of the mehals included in the plaintiff’s mortgage bond.

On the 26th June, 1882, the plaintiff obtained a decree in that suit declaring him entitled to recover the amount claimed by sale of the mortgaged properties. After having obtained that decree the plaintiff proceeded to execute it by attaching all the properties included in his mortgage with the exception of two, namely, the said mehal Teknia and a mehal named Simeria, which had been already purchased by himself. Thereupon a claim was preferred by Lala Parbhu Lal, as the plaintiff alleged on behalf of Baijnath Sahai, based on the ground that he had purchased the properties sought to be sold at the instance of the plaintiff in execution of two decrees held by Sawaruth Panday and others, and Rujju Lal against Ripubhunjun Singh on the 8th November, 1880, and was in possession of the same.
On the 29th February, 1884, the claim was allowed, and accordingly on the 11th August, 1884, the plaintiff brought the present suit, making Lala Parbhu Lal, Baijnath Sahai, [405] Dulpati Singh, Ripubhunjun Singh, Sawaruth Panday, Dhumaruth Panday, Mokund Panday and Rujju Lal defendants.

The plaintiff alleged that his decree of the 26th June, 1882, upon his mortgage was binding upon Dulpati Singh as well as upon the estate of Aribhunjun Singh, and that Ripubhunjun Singh having himself put forward and represented Dulpati Singh as the duly adopted son of Aribhunjun, and having induced the plaintiff to advance the Rs. 9,000 upon such representations, was equally bound by the decree, and that being so the Panday defendants and Rujju Lal were also bound by the mortgage and decree and were not entitled to defeat his claim. He further alleged that Baijnath Sahai was the real purchaser of the right, title and interest of Ripubhunjun Singh and that Lala Parbhu Lal was merely his benami-dar, and that he had actually carried on the claim proceedings in the latter’s name.

The decrees, in execution of which the properties had been sold at the instance of the Panday defendants and Rujju Lal, were dated the 7th December, 1863, and 13th February, 1879, and had been obtained upon bonds dated the 18th November, 1862, and 17th July, 1875, respectively, and the plaintiff alleged that the bonds and decrees obtained on them were collusive and fraudulent, and that the Panday defendants and Rujju Lal were also mere benamidars of Baijnath Sahai.

The plaintiff further stated in his plaint that in the claim case the defendant Lala Parbhu Lal had alleged that Dulpati Singh was not the duly adopted son of Aribhunjun Singh; that Bishnath Koer succeeded to her husband’s estate; and that on her death Ripubhunjun Singh succeeded as reversionary heir, and that in consequence the properties in suit could not be sold as belonging to Dulpati; but the plaintiff denied such allegations and contended that the estate of Aribhunjun Singh had all along been in the possession of Dulpati Singh; and that neither Bishnath Koer nor Ripubhunjun had ever succeeded thereto or been in possession thereof; and that even if Dulpati Singh was not the duly adopted son he had acquired a good title by twelve years’ adverse possession as against both Bishnath Koer and Ripubhunjun Singh, and that the latter and his representatives were therefore precluded from setting up any title thereto, and that they were further [406] estopped by the conduct of Ripubhunjun Singh from questioning the title of Dulpati Singh.

The plaintiff further contended that, even if Dulpati Singh was not the adopted son of Aribhunjun Singh, the widow Bishnath Koer was fully competent as representative of her husband’s estate to mortgage it for legal necessity, and that the mortgage to him was not only made for legal necessity but was also made with the full acquiescence and at the instance of Ripubhunjun Singh, the then next reversionary heir, and was therefore binding on him and all claiming through him.

Bajnath Sahai in his written statement denied that the other defendants, who were alleged to be his benamidars, were so, and that he had purchased any of the properties benami in the name of Parbhu Lal; and he contended that he had nothing to do with the suit. Lala Parbhu Lal denied that he was benamidar for Bajnath Sahai, and disputed the validity of the adoption, and also denied that the estate of Aribhunjun was heavily indebted or bound by the plaintiff’s mortgage. He contended that Dulpati alone was liable, and his properties alone subject to the mortgage. He further contended that he was in no way bound by Ripubhunjun’s acts and that Dulpati’s possession could not be held to be adverse under the circumstances: and that as Bishnath Koer only died on the 4th February, 1878, the right of the reversionary heirs of Aribhunjun to his estate could not be held to be barred as twelve years had not elapsed from that date. He also denied that there was any legal necessity for the loan. He further contended that, as the plaintiff had himself purchased mouzah Simeria, one of the mouzahs the subject of his mortgage, he could not enforce his whole lien against the other properties but must bring in that mouzah to bear its proportionate part of the burden.

The Panday defendants and Rujju Lal also disputed the adoption, and denied that they were benamidars of Bajnath Sahai, or that their bonds or decrees were collusive or fraudulent.

Ripubhunjun Singh died pending the suit, and before any witnesses had been examined.

The lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree, declaring the five mouzahs in suit liable for the mortgage debt, and providing that any balance there might remain due to the plaintiff after [407] those five mouzahs were sold should be saddled upon Simeria and Teknia. It also gave the plaintiff his costs against Parbhu Lal and Bajnath Sahai and made the other defendants pay their own costs. The grounds upon which the lower Court granted this decree are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Against this decree Parbhu Lal and Bajnath Sahai appealed to the High Court, and the plaintiff preferred a cross appeal against the finding of the lower Court that Dulpati Singh was not the duly adopted son of Aribhunjun Singh, and contended that at all events the lower Court was in error in holding that Ripubhunjun Singh and those claiming through him were not estopped by his acts from disputing the validity of the adoption.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ghose, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent in this appeal, to have it declared that certain properties mortgaged to him by a deed executed by Mussamut Dulhin Bishnath Koer on behalf of Dulpati Singh, her adopted son, during his minority are really owned by the latter as adopted son of the late Aribhunjun Singh who was the husband of Bishnath Koer; and are liable to be sold in execution of the plaintiff’s decree obtained upon the said mortgage bond on the 26th of June, 1882.

The properties in question having been attached in execution of that decree were released by the Court on the 29th February, 1884, in accordance with a claim put forward by the defendant No. 2, appellant before us, who had purchased the same at auction in November, 1880, in execution of decrees held by other persons against Ripubhunjung Singh. The sale certificates are dated the 20th of January, 1881. This suit was brought [409] in August 1884 within one year after the decision of the claim case.

Ripubhunjun Singh was the brother of Aribhunjun; and in the absence of any son of the latter would admittedly have been the sole reversionary heir upon the death of the widow, Mussamut Bishnath Koer, which took place in 1878.

That the properties in suit did belong to the separate share of Aribhunjun is not now disputed, and the difficulty of the case as now before us lies in the questions raised as to the validity of the adoption of Dulpati Singh; and as to the right of the defendants-appellants to impugn it at the present day, he having been since 1868, and still being, de facto owner, as adopted son of Aribhunjun Singh, of the estate left by him. The appellants are two of the defendants, viz., Parbhu Lal, the person who succeeded in the claim case, and one Baijnath Sahai, who was made a defendant on the allegation that Parbhu Lal was his benamidar, and that even the decree-holders, in execution of whose decrees the sales to Parbhu Lal had taken place, were also his benamidars. He appeals, apparently, because the lower Court, holding that Parbhu Lal was his benamidar, made him jointly liable for the plaintiff's costs, the suit being decreed in favour of the latter. Ripubhunjun Singh was made a defendant, but he died during the pendency of the suit and before any witnesses had been examined.

Baijnath Sahai was one of the defendants in the plaintiff's respondent's previous suit on the mortgage bond; being so made because he had purchased the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzahs mortgaged to plaintiff—not, however, one of those embraced by the present suit.

In consequence of this circumstance the plaintiff contended that the subject of the present suit was res judicata as against both Baijnath Sahai and his alleged benamidar Parbhu Lal; and the lower Court was of opinion that they were in fact bound by the decree of June 26th, 1882, which affirmed the mortgage lien against all the mouzahs. The other findings of the lower Court which have been impugned in this appeal or in the cross objections to the judgment taken by the plaintiff-respondent were as follows:

[410] It found against the plaintiff on the issue as to the validity of the adoption of Dulpati Singh, and against him it found that the defendants Parbhu Lal or Baijnath Sahai, as auction-purchaser of the rights and interest of Ripubhunjun, were not estopped by the conduct of the latter from denying the validity of the adoption.

On the other hand the Court found in favour of the plaintiff that, though Dulpati was not validly adopted, yet he had acquired a good title to the property by more than 12 years' adverse possession before the purchase of the properties in suit by the defendant Parbhu Lal. It found also in plaintiff's favour that the loan for which the mortgage was executed was made for the purpose of liquidating debts for which Aribhunjun's estate was liable, such debts being of a legitimate character; and that the mortgage was made by Bishnath Koer with the consent of Ripubhunjun, the reversioner, in the absence of a validly adopted son: and held that there was thus a valid charge created in plaintiff's favour against Aribhunjun's estate, whether Dulpati Singh had been legally adopted, or whether, in the absence of such adoption, the deed be regarded as that of the widow herself, made with the consent of the reversioner, and thus operating as a valid transfer of the property. Upon these considerations the lower Court decreed the plaintiff’s suit.

The mortgage bond, it is to be observed, covered seven mouzahs, of which five only are the subject of this suit. For, of the other two, the one named Simeria has already been purchased by the plaintiff in execution of another decree, and the one named Teknia, so far as Dulpati Singh was concerned, has been purchased long ago by defendant Baijnath Sahai.

The present decree of the lower Court makes the other five mouzahs wholly liable for the mortgage debt, and provides that any balance left outstanding after their sale shall be saddled upon Simeria and Teknia by apportionment; and the appellants object to this form of decree even if the mortgage be held to be valid.

We now proceed to deal with the various points necessary for the decision of the appeal.

During the hearing, after the learned counsel for the appellants [¶11] had concluded his opening address, we intimated our concurrence with the lower Court in the finding that the defendant Parbhul Lal was the benamidar of Baijnath Sahai; and the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge commend themselves generally to our judgment. We do not commit ourselves to all that he wrote upon this subject; but we may state shortly that the evidence satisfies us that Parbhul Lal was himself a man of no means, and that the money used for the purchase was Baijnath Sahai’s and the very fact that the two have joined in this appeal goes to confirm our impression that Parbhul Lal has no interest in the matter apart from Baijnath.

We are, however, unable to concur with the lower Court in the opinion that the decree in the mortgage suit, dated 20th June, 1882, is a res judicata as against Parbhul Lal and Baijnath Sahai, as to the liability to sale of the five mouzahs now in suit. It is true that Baijnath was a defendant in that suit; but he was so made only as representing the mouzah Teknia. In that suit he had nothing to do with the five mouzahs, which are the subject of the present one. The mortgage suit was instituted in July, 1880, but the title to these mouzahs, sold as Ripubhunjun’s to Parbhul Lal, did not vest in him until the 20th of January, 1881, the date of the sale certificates. Ripubhunjun was not made a party to that suit as he ought to have been, and his interest was in no way represented, nor did the plaintiff choose to bring in Parbhul Lal as defendant in the suit, although the sale to that person was made subject to the plaintiff’s mortgage. The decree, therefore, could not bind Ripubhunjun, nor could it bind Parbhul Lal or Baijnath.

We have next to consider the plea of estoppel against the defendant-appellant, founded on the conduct of Ripubhunjun Singh. It is said that he by his representations that Dulpati Singh was the adopted son of Aribhunjun, and that there were pressing debts due by the estate of Aribhunjun, induced the plaintiff to advance to Mussamut Bishnath Koer the money which formed the consideration for the bond executed by her as guardian of Dulpati Singh. That this was so we can have no doubt upon the evidence of the plaintiff, and of other witnesses. It is expressly stated also by Ripubhunjun himself in his [¶12] deposition made in Parbhul Lal’s claim case on the 27th of February, 1884, he being dead when this suit was tried, a copy of that deposition was put in, and is exhibit No. 65 for the plaintiff. The learned counsel for the applicants contended, upon authorities which he laid before us, that, inasmuch as it was clear upon the plaintiff’s own showing that in making the loan he had not acted exclusively upon the representations of Ripubhunjun Singh, there would be no estoppel even against him; and that even if Ripubhunjun would be estopped from denying the adoption, yet the purchaser at an execution sale of the right and interests of Ripubhunjun would not be estopped. He showed that an execution-creditor would not be estopped, and submitted that a purchaser was in no worse position. The learned counsel relied upon the English cases of Freeman v. Cooke (1) and Richards v. Johnston (2), and cited as an authority Bigelow's Law of Estoppel, and he referred to the Indian case of Baboo Banee Pershad v. Mooneshee Syud Abdul Hye (3), and to a case relied on by the other side also, namely, Poreshnath Mookerjee v. Anathnath Deb (4), and Anathnath Deb v. Bishtu Chunder Roy (5).

On the other side Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhury for the respondent treated the last-named case as in his favour, as it held that a mortgagor purchasing the mortgaged property in execution of his own decree was estopped by the same considerations which would have estopped his mortgagee from denying a particular state of things as to the property mortgaged. He also referred us to an unreported judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in S.A. No. 572 of 1884, in which the learned Judges held, in a similar case in which Ripubhunjun Singh was concerned, that not only he but his creditor would be estopped by his conduct from denying the adoption of Dulpati Singh. That case was the converse of the present one; for the plaintiffs were judgment-creditors of Ripubhunjun, and sought to make liable for his debts property which had been sold in execution of a decree against the minor Dulpati Singh and purchased by the defendants. The learned Judges in that case said that, in the absence of fraud [413] and collusion between Ripubhunjun and Mussamut Bishnath Koer, there could be no doubt that the plaintiff in that suit was in no better position than Ripubhunjun would have been if he had sought to recover the property, and they proceeded to hold that Ripubhunjun, by his silent acquiescence and conduct in recognizing Dulpati as adopted son, would have been debarred from suing to recover the property. We find ourselves quite unable to accept this dictum in regard to estoppel, so far as the defendant, the auction-purchaser, is concerned. For estoppel is purely a personal bar operating against the person whose conduct constitutes it, and against his privies and representatives. That it will not operate as against a simple money-creditor as such is established by the case of Richards v. Johnston (2), cited by the learned counsel for the appellants. The case of a mortgagee would seem to be different, for he derives his title directly from the debtor, and will be bound by the previous conduct of the debtor in respect of the property mortgaged—See Poreshnath Mookerjee v. Anathnath Deb (4). But what we have to decide in the present case is, whether, assuming that Ripubhunjun was estopped from denying the validity of Dulpati's adoption, the purchaser of his right and interest at a sale in execution of a decree is similarly estopped by the conduct of Ripubhunjun. The simple question is whether the execution-purchaser is the representative of Ripubhunjun within the meaning of s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act.

It seems to us that he is not so merely in his capacity as purchaser in execution. The case last cited—Poreshnath Mookerjee v. Anathnath Deb (4)—shows that, if he had also been mortgagee of the property from

(4) 9 I.A. 147.  (5) 4 C. 783.
Ripubhunjun, he might be held to be his representative under s. 115; but we are aware of no authority for holding that the simple fact of purchase at an execution sale will make him the representative for the purpose of that section of the judgment-debtor. On the contrary the execution-purchaser derives his title by operation of law adversely to judgment-debtor. See Dimendronath Saunyal v. Ramcoomar Ghose (1); see also Mussumat Imrit Koer v. Lalla Debee Pershad Singh (2).

[414] We may refer also to the case of Srimati Ananda Mayi Dasi v. Dharandra Chundra Mookerjee (3), in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say, at page 127: "The title of a judgment-creditor, or a purchaser under a judgment decree, cannot be put on the same footing as the title of a mortgagee, or of a person claiming under a voluntary alienation from the mortgagor. They are of opinion that the possession of a purchaser under such circumstances is really not the possession of a person holding in privity with the mortgagor."

Upon these considerations then we hold in favour of the appellants that they are not the representatives of Ripubhunjun in such a sense as to be estopped by any conduct of his from disputing the validity of the adoption of Dulpati Singh.

It appears to us that the plaintiff must stand or fall by the mortgage bond upon which his decree of the 26th June, 1882, was based. He can succeed only if that bond created a valid charge upon the properties mortgaged. If the adoption of Dulpati Singh was good in law, then there can be no question, but that the mortgage bond executed by his adoptive mother, who was his duly appointed guardian under Act XL of 1858, and had obtained the sanction of the District Judge to her executing the bond, created a valid charge. But if the adoption was bad in law, it would still have to be considered whether the bond may still be a valid one by reason of Dulpati Singh's title to the property having since become perfected as against Ripubhunjun by lapse of time and adverse possession, or by reason that, in the absence of a valid adoption, Mussammt Bishnath Koer, the widow, fully represented the estate of Arribhunjun for the legal necessities of which she executed the bond in question with the assent of the reversioner. And we are disposed to think that it is really upon this last-named ground that we ought to uphold the judgment of the lower Court in favour of the plaintiff. As regards the adoption, the lower Court has disbelieved the evidence adduced in support of the proposition that Arribhunjun before his death received the child Dulpati, and made him over to his wife, desiring her to adopt him. The evidence on this matter has been disbelieved on each occasion [415] when the fact has been attempted to be proved, and it is impossible to avoid seeing how suspicious it is, especially in the absence of evidence from particular members of the family, who, had the fact been true, would have been the first to come forward to prove it on a previous occasion when the question was raised in 1877, but who did not do so, and who were dead when this suit was tried in 1885. We refer especially to the widow Bishnath Koer and Ripubhunjun himself, and there is at least some a priori improbability in the story that the boy Arribhunjun seized with cholera while returning to his home after his marriage ceremony, and dying the following day, should have been able to turn his thoughts to the subject of adopting a son, and should have gone through the forms of receiving the child and placing it in the lap of his young wife.

(1) 8 I.A. 65. (2) 18 W.R. 200. (3) 8 B.L.R. 122.
We are certainly not prepared to reverse the finding of the lower Court on this point.

But it is contended that under the Mitakshara law the consent of the husband is not necessary, under all circumstances, if the adoption takes place after his death, as was the case in the present instance. It is urged that, after a man's death without issue, the consent of his near kindred is sufficient to authorize an adoption by his widow; and that their consent will operate as his own, since it was incumbent upon him as a religious duty to have a son, and it must be presumed that he accorded his sanction to his widow to adopt a son if she had none of her own. The authority for this contention is in a passage of the Viramitrodoya, p. 115, of Baboo Golab Chunder Sircar's translation. This, no doubt, is an authority recognized in the Benaras School; and the doctrine has received judicial sanction in respect of adoptions in the Dravida country in Southern India—See The Collector of Madura v. Moothoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (1). But we are not aware that this doctrine has been recognized judicially as efficacious in Northern India, though Sir Thomas Strange seems to have thought that it was applicable wherever the Benares School of law prevailed. As far as we are aware the doctrine has not been hitherto sanctioned by usage in the part of the country to which the present [416] case belongs; and there is the authority of the Dattaka Mimansa (sec. I, paras. 15, 16, and the following paras.) which is opposed to it. And moreover it was negatived in the case decided by the late Sudder Dewany Adawlut, in Raja Shumshere Mull v. Ranee Dilraj Konwar (2), though in that case the Viramitrodoya was quoted by the pundits. We should, therefore, hesitate to decide that this adoption was good in law without any express consent of Aribhunjun. We prefer, however, not to decide the question at all in the present case; as also another cognate question, which was raised by Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhury, whether the recognition of the adoption by Ripubhunjun, the then reversioner, would render the adoption valid, because we think this appeal may be satisfactorily disposed of on another ground.

The lower Court was of opinion that Dulpati Singh had acquired an absolute title by more than 12 years' possession, from the date of his alleged adoption in 1867, before the purchase of the defendant Baijnath in 1880 of the rights of Ripubhunjun in the property; and that on this ground the defendants could not resist the claim of the plaintiff to have the property sold as Dulpati's.

We are not prepared to accept this view of the matter, for, unless Dulpati Singh's title had become perfected by limitation before Bislmath Koer's death, the reversioner Ripubhunjun would, under the present law of limitation, Act XV of 1877, art. 141, be entitled to 12 years within which to bring his suit for recovery of possession of the estate. The adoption in this case took place in 1867, and the widow died in 1878, i.e., within 12 years from the adoption. No doubt the sale to the defendant took place in 1880, or more than 12 years after the adoption; but it is obvious that this circumstance would not affect or alter the rights of the parties. It was, however, contended for the plaintiff that the adoption having been allowed to remain unquestioned for more than 12 years, it would not be competent to Ripubhunjun to set it aside, and that he could not recover the estate from the hands of Dulpati Singh without setting aside the adoption; and in [417] support of this view the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jagadamba Chowdhrahi v. Dakhina Mohun (1) was relied upon. Now, it is to be observed, that this decision was passed with reference to the provisions of the Limitation Act IX of 1871, which in art. 129 provided that suits to set aside an adoption should be brought within 12 years from the date of adoption. The adoption as already noticed took place in 1867, and before the title under the adoption could become perfect by efflux of time under the Act of 1871, the law of 1877 (Act XV) was passed, which in art. 118 provides that suits, for obtaining a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, should be brought within six years from the date when the adoption becomes known to the plaintiff. Taking this article along with arts. 140 and 141, it appears to us that, when a person claiming to be the next reversionary heir, and being aware of an adoption having taken place seeks to obtain a bare declaratory relief in the lifetime of the widow, he is bound to bring his suit within six years from the time of his knowledge; but that this would not prevent the reversioner from suing to obtain possession of the estate, when it falls into possession, or when the widow dies, if the suit is commenced within twelve years from that time. In such a suit, the party claiming under the adoption might set it up in answer to the plaintiff’s case, and when set up, the validity or otherwise of the adoption would be investigated and the case accordingly determined. We observe that the title of the defendant, as representing the interest of the reversioner, accrued within two years of the time when the succession opened out, and he is the party now in possession of the property. It is the plaintiff who seeks to apply the law of limitation against him. And we are in no way prepared to hold that in a case like this the law of limitation can be successfully pleaded.

Nevertheless, we are of opinion, as already stated, that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed in this suit upon the ground that it being assumed that the adoption of Dulpati Singh was invalid, the widow Bishnath Koer was competent for legal [418] necessity to mortgage the estate of Aribhunjun. We concur with the lower Court in finding that there was at the time of the mortgage such pressing necessity as justified her in raising money on mortgage for the benefit of the estate. And we find that the deed was executed by Bishnath Koer in her own name though she represented herself to be the mother and guardian of Dulpati Singh, her adopted son. Her deed would be binding on him if he really held the position ascribed to him; and if he did not, we think her deed must equally, under the circumstances, be held to have bound the estate and the reversioner. She executed the deed ostensibly as holding the de facto title of manager only; but that deed will not be the less binding if she really possessed at that time the de jure title to the property. This doctrine seems to us to be clearly expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the oft-quoted case of Hunooman Pershad Pandey v. Mussumut Babooce Munraj Koonwaree (2).

In that case the mortgage-deed had been executed by the widow describing herself as proprietor. It was held that, though she was in fact only manager on behalf of her son, yet the mortgage was binding upon the latter, being one that in her capacity of manager she might properly have executed for the benefit of his estate. It seems to us that in this case there is still stronger reason for holding that, whereas the widow’s

(2) 6 M.I.A. 393.
title was even better than that set out in the mortgage-deed, to mortgagee is not to be defeated for that reason.

But, apart from this view of the matter, it seems to us that the transaction ought to be supported upon another ground. The estate being, according to the defendant's case, in the widow Bishnath Koer, she could have, even if there was no legal necessity, alienated it, with the consent of the then reversionary heir, to anybody she pleased. And in the event of this being done, the alienation would be binding upon the reversioner, whoever he might be, when the succession opened out [see the case of Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (1) decided by Full Bench of this Court]. Now it appears perfectly clear upon the evidence that Ripubhunjun Singh, who was then the sole reversionary [419] heir, not only induced the plaintiff to lend the money but brought about the transaction, and took an active part in the execution of the mortgage-deed; and there can be, therefore, no doubt that the transaction was entered into by the widow with the consent of Ripubhunjun Singh.
True it is, as already noticed, that the deed purported to be on behalf of the minor Dulpati Singh, but what we have to look to is not the form but the substance of the transaction. It appears to us that, considering the transaction from a proper point of view, it created a valid charge upon the property, and the result is that the defendant, the purchaser of the right, title and interest of Ripubhunjun Singh, who, failing the adoption, became the heir upon the death of the widow, would only take the property subject to the said charge.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to the decree he has obtained declaring his right to follow the properties in suit for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. But we are of opinion that the decree was wrong, in so far as it ordered that the whole debt should, in the first instance, be saddled on the five mouzahs in suit, and that they should be sold for the recovery of the whole amount; other properties included in the mortgage deed, and one of which is now in the possession of the plaintiff himself, being relieved for the present of their share of the burden.

Mouzah Simeria Ojha with Putti Simeria Ojha is now the property of the plaintiff, and mouzah Teknia had become the property of the defendant Baijnath Sahai subject to the mortgage, before the plaintiff brought his first suit on the mortgage bond. We think that the defendant-appellant is entitled to demand that the portion of the mortgage property which is now the plaintiff's should bear its fair proportion of the debt. And we observe that in the plaint there was no prayer for any such decree as the lower Court has made, as to the order in which the mortgage property is to be sold in satisfaction of the debt.
We must therefore cancel this portion of the decree, and we remit the case to the lower Court that it may take an account of the value of the various properties mortgaged, and apportion the proper share of the debt to each of the mouzahs covered by the [420] mortgage, and declare the plaintiff entitled to charge the remaining mouzahs mortgaged with their proportionate share of the debt; and to make a final decree accordingly.

With this slight modification we affirm the judgment of the lower Court with costs of this appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice O’Kinealy.

KAHA MAHOMED ASGHUR (Defendant) v. MANILA KHANUM alias BAKKA KHANUM (Plaintiff).* [21st March, 1887.]

A suit was brought by a Mahomedan wife for dower alleged to be due to her under a kabinnamah executed by her husband at the time of the marriage. She alleged the amount of dower to be Rs. 10,000, of which Rs. 5,000 was prompt and Rs. 5,000 deferred, and she claimed to be entitled to the whole on the ground that she had lawfully divorced her husband in pursuance of power reserved to her in that behalf by the kabinnamah. At the hearing she failed to prove the kabinnamah, but the Court gave her a decree, holding that there was evidence to show that a dower of Rs. 10,000 was usually payable in the plaintiff’s family, and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the whole amount must be considered prompt but as the plaintiff only claimed Rs. 5,000 as prompt, the decree was limited to that amount.

Held, that the Court was wrong in decreeing the case upon an oral contract not alleged in the plaint nor admitted by the defendant, the suit being based upon a written agreement, which the plaintiff failed to prove.

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover her dower to the amount of Rs. 10,000 settled, as alleged in the plaint, by a kabinnamah executed by her husband, the defendant, on the occasion of her marriage. Rs. 5,000, it was alleged, was prompt dower and the other Rs. 5,000 deferred dower.

The plaintiff alleged that the kabinnamah reserved to her power to divorce her husband, and she alleged that she exercised that power and gave him notice to pay up the whole amount of the dower. As to the prompt dower she alleged that her [421] cause of action arose in the year 1288 (1881-82), the date of the first notice to pay the prompt dower, and as to the deferred dower, from the time of the talak, the 29th Bysack 1290 (11th May, 1883).

The kabinnamah was not produced. The plaintiff alleged in her plaint that it was in the custody of her father; and a summons was served upon him to produce it. He stated that he had no recollection of its ever having been executed, and said that all papers pertaining to his family had been made over to his son, whom he had appointed mutawali of his whole estate. The son was cited as a witness. He stated that he knew nothing about this kabinnamah, and that probably none had been executed.

The plaintiff herself being examined on commission stated that she had only once seen this document some five or six years after her marriage, her marriage having taken place when she was twelve or thirteen years old, and she being now past forty. She only knew of the contents by hearsay, and had only seen the document in a folded-up state in her father’s possession.

Two witnesses were cited by her who deposed to the execution of the kabinnamah and as to the sum fixed for dower.

*Appeal from Original Decree, No. 135 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Beni Madhub Mitter, Rai Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 22nd March 1886.
The lower Court admitted this secondary evidence of the contents of the document, but when it came to deliver judgment it found that the evidence did not prove the execution of any such document at all, and it found that there was no trustworthy evidence as to the plaintiff's alleged right to divorce her husband. But the lower Court was of opinion, upon the evidence of the two witnesses who attempted to prove the document and its contents, that the amount of dower was Rs. 10,000, which evidence the Court considered was supported by the admissions of the defendant and by the evidence of the witnesses called by him, which tended to show that the custom of the plaintiff's family was that a dower of Rs. 10,000 should be fixed on the occasion of daughters marrying; and the Court held that the defendant had contracted to pay that sum.

The lower Court then went on to determine how much of the dower was prompt and how much deferred; and referring to the authorities cited before it—Macnaghten's Principle of Mahomedan Law, p. 217; Mirza Bedar Bukht Mohummed Ali Bahadur v. Mirza Khurrum Bukht Yahya Ali Khan Bahadur (1); Mussamat Bebee Jameela v. Mussamat Mullicka (2); Bailie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, pp. 91-92; Hedaya, p. 87; Tagore Law Lectures, 1873, pp. 352, 359, 360—came to the conclusion that, in the absence of any definite evidence upon the point, the whole dower should be held to be prompt; but inasmuch as the plaintiff had claimed to have only Rs. 5,000 prompt dower, and she was not entitled to claim any deferred dower by reason of the divorce of her husband, which she was not competent to effect, it made a decree for Rs. 5,000 only as prompt dower due to her.

Against that decree the defendant now appealed.

Munshi Mahomed Yusooft and Munshi Serajul Islam, for the appellant.

Baboo Durga Mohun Das and Baboo Lal Mohun Das, for the respondent.

The case of Sheikh Akbar v. Sheik Khan (3) was referred to at the hearing of the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and O'Kinealy, JJ.), after stating the facts, proceeded as follows:—

It is clear to us upon the facts of the case that the plaintiff would be entitled to receive some dower, and probably not less than Rs. 5,000, if she had framed her suit in such a way that the Court could give it to her; but we find ourselves, to our regret, unable to sustain the decree of the lower Court. The suit was brought upon a written contract and upon nothing else. That written contract was not produced, and in the opinion of the lower Court the evidence admitted was not sufficient to establish its execution, and as to that finding we see no reason to differ from the Court below. In the first place it is very difficult to say whether the plaintiff made out any case for the admission of secondary evidence. We are not convinced that there ever was any valid written document in existence, and we are [423] certainly not convinced that, if there was, it was in the possession of her father or her brother the Nawab Ashanoollah. That being so we think that the lower Court was not right in decreeing the suit upon the basis of the oral contract not

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), ss. 15, 30 and 55—District Court, Powers of—Compensation, its principle and measure—Lands severed from a factory.

The Land Acquisition Act provides for two classes of reference to the Judge, one to assess compensation under s. 15 and the other to apportion compensation under s. 38. The power of the District Court limited to the determination of these questions and questions of title incidental thereto. There is no power in the Judge or the High Court in appeal to decide on any such reference a question arising under s. 55.

[424] Land taken under the Act is taken discharged of all easements, and the loss of easements must be taken into account in assessing compensation for injurious affection.

[F., 16 M. 321 (323); R., 17 M. 371 (372).]

This appeal arose out of the acquisition of certain plots of land for the purposes of the Behar and Assam State Railway under Act X of 1870. The lands were situated in the village of Manihari, pergunnah Kakjoul, in the district of Purnea, and appertained to an indigo factory, of which Edward Taylor and Amelia Jane Taylor were the joint proprietors. After the usual preliminary proceedings and service of notices under s. 9, the Deputy Collector was unable to come to an arrangement with the proprietors, and referred the matter to the Judge under s. 15 of the Act. The proprietors, thereupon, preferred their claim, raising various objections to the findings of the Deputy Collector, and in answer thereto a written statement was filed on behalf of Government. The points mainly urged by the claimants were: (1) that the premises in question being an indigo factory it was not open to the Government to take up only a portion of them, but the Government was bound to take up and make compensation for the whole; (2) that additional compensation was due for damages caused by destruction and removal from the land of clumps of harota bamboos, forming a bamboo top or preserve; (3) that compensation was also due as damages for the severance of the land acquired from the other lands. On behalf of Government it was, among other things, pleaded: (1) that s. 55 did not apply to the case and the Government was not bound to take up the whole premises; (2) that the compensation for the bamboos allowed by the Deputy Collector was unreasonably high; (3) that there had been no such severance as was alleged by the claimants, nor had there been loss or damage in consequence of any severance.

Upon the first question the decision of the Judge was to this effect:

"I have to consider whether, under the provisions of s. 55, the Government is bound to take over the entire Manibari concern. One assessor gives his opinion on the point in favour of the plaintiff, the other against him. The matter would be easy of determination were the interpretation to be put on the words "house, manufactory or other building" that allowed by conventional usage; but it is argued for the plaintiff that [425] "manufactory" is a comprehensive word, and includes various adjuncts and accessories of the factory. In the present instance these, it is contended, would be the plot A with its bamboos, plot E as part of the lower compound, the drain which occasionally fills the tank in the upper compound, and the private road which communicates between the two compounds. In support of this contention the English rulings to be found at page 75 of Mr. Beverley's book (The Land Acquisition Act with Introduction and Notes) are relied upon. It appears to me that, so far as it is possible to form an opinion from these notes, the majority of the cases cited can be shown to differ completely from the present case, and only in two are the circumstances faintly analogous. To take the first case: the garden and orchard attached to a mansion are such adjuncts that, if taken away, they cannot be replaced—the essence of such adjuncts is that they are situated where they are; they make a part of the mansion. The test laid down in Ferguson v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Co. (1) is in reference to houses, and could not possibly be applicable to an indigo concern. The sale in the present case has passed several outlying jotes and kamats: it would be preposterous to contend that, if a portion of one of these had been taken up for a public purpose, the Government would be bound to buy the concern. In the case of Marson v. London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. (2) the publicans appear to have been totally shut in. Nothing of the kind happens here. In the case of Furniss v. Midland Railway Co. (3) that which regularly supplied a reservoir, the water of which was one of the motive powers used in working the factory, had been completely obstructed. To cut off the water-supply was to stop partially the working of the factory. Here the drain is used only to fill a tank, the water of which is not used in the manufacture of indigo, and besides which there exist two other sources for the supply of water for general purposes, viz., a well and a jhora, vide Mr. Reily's deposition. Furthermore the drain is only used on rare occasions when there is a flood, and if there is a high flood the drain is superfluous, the flood water entering the tank through a culvert. It did so enter in the past year, the railway embankment notwithstanding.

Mr. Reily, under whose control this factory was for twelve or thirteen years, says that twice he had the drain cleared of obstructions at the request of the villagers. Mr. Baxter, the railway engineer, says the tank can be replenished otherwise than through the drain. There is a total absence of evidence on the main point, viz., whether the drain is at all essential to the existence of a proper supply of water in the tank. Admittedly it is used only on the rarest occasions, but there is nothing to show that even on these rare occasions, the tank could not be filled by other means in actual existence at the present time. The case then of Furniss is clearly distinguishable from this case. [426] There remain the two cases of Salter v. Metropolitan District Railway (1) and of The Governors of S. Thomas' Hospital v. Charing Cross Railway Co. (2). With reference to these it is to be noted, firstly, that they relate to land connected with houses; and, secondly, that those houses were situated in a city; it may fairly then be inferred that land "within the same ambit or circuit," and land "which can be fairly considered part of the house as a residence," were lands within an enclosure, not merely within a ring-fence. The very existence of an enclosure was the strongest evidence that all within that enclosure formed one tenement; and furthermore, from the simple position of the land, it might be asserted without fear of contradiction that every bit of land within that enclosure was absolutely necessary and essential to the full enjoyment of the premises connected with that land, otherwise the land would not have remained unbuilt on. In neither of Mr. Taylor's compounds is there any thing approaching to an enclosure. The two cases then which do, in a remote degree, bear an analogy to the case under trial relate to houses situated in an exceptionally advantageous position, and therefore cannot be held to govern a case like the present one. The general principle which appears to be enunciated in the above rulings, and which would give a reasonably wide meaning to the words "house, manufactory or other building," is that, in order to be included in the term "house," the land taken up should, whilst forming an integral portion of the premises, be essential and necessary to the full enjoyment of the property. It might well be that, to the full enjoyment of a residence in a town or in crowded suburbs, a piece of land, the bare land, is essential. In the case, however, of a "manufactory" the land must be put to some use distinctly connected with the manufactory. The use must be something inseparable from the particular land acquired. It is not sufficient that what the land produces is a material employed in the process of manufacturing. It is not necessary to the working of plaintiff's factory that he should have the particular bamboos grown on plot A; he has to separate them from that land and take them elsewhere before he can use them. With possibly additional expense and inconvenience (facts to be considered under cl. 3 of s. 24) he can get bamboos severed from other lands and brought to him. The possession of plot A, then, obviously is not necessary to the working of the factory. In plot E indigo grows. The same remarks apply to it, though it is not even hinted that the loss of the quantity of indigo grown on it is likely in any way to affect the factory. Further it is said that, after depositing the indigo plaint, carts and bullocks used to stand and rest on plot E. It is not, however, shown that other parts of the compound could not be and were not used for that purpose, nor is it even shown that the loss of this particular plot of land, so far as regards its use as a resting place for carts, is such as to affect, except very slightly and in an indirect manner, the working of the factory. I think it would [427] be straining the

(2) 30 L. J. Ch. 395. law to an unwarrantable length to hold that an entire indigo concern is to be purchased by Government on behalf of the community, because a small plot of land taken up was occasionally used as one of possibly many resting places for the carts and bullocks employed in the carriage of indigo. The law no doubt should be construed liberally in favour of a person situated as is the plaintiff, but between liberality of construction and an unreasonable straining of the law there is a wide difference. I am inclined to think that the provisions of cls. 2 and 3 of s. 24 are intended to cover every damage short of that resulting from a total or a partial stoppage of the working of a manufactory. The acquisition by Government of plots A and E, and the carrying of the private road over instead of under the embankment, certainly do not materially affect the working of the plaintiff’s factory. I find, therefore, that s. 55 does not apply to this case.”

With regard to the second and third questions the Judge allowed the claimants Rs. 1,400 as the price of bamboos, and gave Rs. 180 as compensation for the severance of the land according to the provisions of s.
24, cl. 2 of the Act.

The claimants appealed to the High Court, and the Collector of Purnea, on behalf of Government, filed a memorandum of objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. R. E. Twidale), for the appellants.
The Advocate-General (with him the Senior Government Pledger and Baboo Ram Charan Mitter), for the respondent.

The High Court (Wilson and O’Kinealy, J.J.) delivered the following judgment: —

JUDGMENT.

This appeal arises out of an assessment of compensation made under Act X of 1870, the Land Acquisition Act, by the District Judge of Purnea.

It appears that, before the year 1884, the claimant Mr. Taylor was lessee of an indigo factory at Manihari. On the 15th February in that year, he or his wife purchased the property from those under whom he had previously held the leasehold, and thus became the owner of the property.
The Government found it necessary for the purposes of a railway to acquire a portion of the land held by him as part of, or in connection with, the factory. We are here concerned with three plots, which are shown on the map and marked A, B and E. On the 4th March, [428] 1884, the proper officer published the general notification required under s. 9, paragraph 1 of the Act. On the 20th March, acting under the powers given to them by s. 17 of the Act, the officers of Government took possession of these lands. At various dates between the month of October 1884 and January 1885, the personal notices, as we may call them, required by s.
9 were served upon the parties interested. After that the Deputy Collector appointed for this work proceeded, in the manner required by s. 11 and the following sections of the Act to make the necessary equiries into the value of the lands taken for the purposes of compensation.

On the 23rd June three references under s. 15 of the Act, because there were three plots, were made to the District Judge for the purpose of assessing compensation. On the 24th August the claimants put in their claim in writing. It is enough to say with regard to that claim that it raised three points or classes of points. First, it alleged that the lands, which it was proposed to take, or some of them, formed part of the factory, within the meaning of s. 55 of the Act, and that, therefore, inasmuch as Mr. Taylor objected to a part being taken, the Government was not at liberty to take less than the whole. The second point or group of points raised was with regard to the amount of compensation property payable for the lands actually taken supposing the contention under s. 55 was not to prevail. And the third class of points raised was as to the amount of compensation properly payable for the injury done to, or, to use the language of the Act, for "injurious affection" of, the remaining property not taken. On the 12th January 1886, a written statement on behalf of the Government was put in. It is enough to say as to it that practically it took issue with the claimant's claim upon all the various matters.

The case came on for hearing, and on the 16th January 1886, the two assessors delivered their opinions, in which they differed very widely on all the points. The learned Judge delivered his judgment on the 1st February following. In that judgment he has dealt with each of the questions or classes of question to which we have referred.

With regard to the first question he has held that s. 55 does not apply to the case. As to that it appears to us that the decision cannot stand, because in our judgment neither the Collector nor the Judge under the reference to him, nor we on appeal from those proceedings, have power to decide any such question. It must be borne in mind that this Act confers a special and limited jurisdiction upon various classes of people to decide certain questions, and they have only power to decide those questions with which the Act enables them to deal. We need not trouble ourselves with the sections dealing with the powers of the Collector. We have to do with those sections which affect the powers of the Judge. The Act provides for two classes of reference to the Judge, and the Judge can decide only those things which arise out of those references. The first class of reference is to award compensation under s. 15; the second class of reference is for the apportionment of compensation under s. 58; and an appeal to this Court from those decisions is given in certain limited cases. The result is that the Court has power under proper references to decide what compensation shall be awarded, and to whom it shall be paid. And it must be taken now on the decisions that for those purposes the Judge has power to decide questions of title; that can no longer be disputed since the decision of the Privy Council in Raja Nilmoni Singh Deo Bahadur v. Rambandhu Rai (1). But none of those sections, to which we have referred, give any power to decide the question which arises under s. 55, whether the Government has a right to take what it proposes to take at all. There is no express power in any section given to decide that question, and it does not arise by any reasonable inference under a reference to award compensation or a reference to apportion compensation. It is not necessary for us to say how that question can properly be raised; it may be, and very likely is, that the only way is by a suit brought for the purpose, as was certainly done in Kharsheedji Nasarwanji Cama v. The Secretary of State in Council (2) under the earlier Act. That part, therefore, of the Judge's decision is not reversed, because we have no power, as we have already said, to express any opinion, but it is set aside as being in excess of his jurisdiction.

Next comes the question of compensation for the lands taken. [430] The mode in which the lands have been valued for this purpose is this. The land has been valued as if it were bare land; and the crops upon it have been valued separately. So far as the valuation of land is concerned, regarded in that light, we see no reason to differ from the view which the learned Judge has taken. As to the crops other than the bamboos there is no serious contention, as Mr. Advocate-General assents that Rs. 310 should be allowed. We think that a slight error has been committed with regard to the land on which the bamboos stood. The learned Judge has valued the bamboos, that is to say, the bamboo stems then on the land, at Rs. 1,400. We think that what he ought to have done was to value them, not as so many bamboo stems there, but as growing bamboos, which would produce cuttable bamboos in future, as they have done in the past. Taking (what we think is the fair result of the evidence) the production of bamboos at 500 per annum, and taking the price, which has been assessed by the learned Judge, Rs. 20 per hundred, and taking the number of years purchase which he has taken, namely, 20 years, we arrive at Rs. 2,000. To that extent the compensation should be increased.

But it is obvious that the really important question in the case is the proper measure of compensation for injurious affection of the property which has been left in Mr. Taylor's hands. To appreciate that we must see what the position of the property was. It consisted of an upper factory situated on high land at a considerable distance from the river, and of a lower factory close to the river. The land between these two parts belonged to other persons, but there was a roadway connecting these two parts of the factory. That roadway was in a part of its length a public road, as for the rest it is clear on the evidence that it was a private road belonging to the factory.

The next thing which it is necessary to notice is that there was a water-channel running from the river through the lower factory, and through the intervening land into the upper factory and into a tank there. And in portions of the year that channel had the effect of filling the tank in the upper factory from the river. The third thing which it is necessary to notice is this, that on the evidence of all parties it is absolutely essential to the working of the lower factory that the foul water which runs to waste after the manufacture of indigo should have some means of escape other than into the river, because all the witnesses agree that if discharged into the river it would, in an important part of the year, have the effect of deteriorating the manufacture of the indigo, for which water is taken from the river. Before the railway was made, there was such an escape in a north-easterly direction from the lower factory. There is one other thing which it is necessary to notice, that indigo is manufactured at the lower factory and then carried to the upper factory, where it is stored and kept. These are the principal matters for which compensation is demandable on the ground of injurious affection. There is one other very important matter, which will be considered later on.

It appears to us that in the Court below there has been some misapprehension as to the legal position of the parties in this case. It is clear under the express terms of the Act that, whether land is taken in a summary way under s. 17, or in the more deliberate method contemplated in the earlier sections, whatever land the Government takes under the Act, it takes it as its absolute property free from all incumbrances. Therefore, when the Government took the plot E, they so took it; and it is plain that the right to the water channel to fill the tank in the upper factory, the right of drawing away the foul water from the lower factory on to other people's lands to the north-east, through the land now taken by the railway, and the right of way, were all incumbrances within the meaning of the Act. The result is that the moment the Government took possession of the lands these incumbrances as a matter of right instantly ceased to exist. That was the position of the parties in point of law. It appears to us that those who acted for the Government fully understood that that was so, because the letters of the engineers repeatedly told Mr. Taylor that he had no right at all. And this appears more strongly from what passed when Mr. Taylor memorialised the Government of Bengal with regard to the matter. He enumerated all these particular things among others as causing special inconvenience, and he asked that his case might be specially dealt with. The answer to that was one which embodied [432] a prefectly correct view of the law. Colonel Trevor, in his letter, discussed the points which Mr. Taylor had raised, and gave his reasons for thinking that the injury was not so great as it seemed to Mr. Taylor. At the close of his letter, paragraph 9, the legal position is defined clearly and correctly. It says: "After full consideration of all that you have urged, and of what is stated in the engineer's report, His Honour has come to the conclusion that there is no ground for his interference with the ordinary course of law. Section 24 of the Land Acquisition Act provides for compensation being paid for all damage to property of the kind you complain of." After that, no doubt, the engineers appear to have been desirous of mitigating these evils as far as they could; and Mr. Taylor seems to have been willing to accept if he could any effective substitute for those rights. Accordingly it was at one time proposed that there should be a culvert under the railway to carry the water into the upper factory. It was also proposed that there should be a passage under the railway for the escape of foul water. It was at one time proposed (and this was partially carried out) that there should be a subway for the private road. But the engineers, presumably on engineering grounds, thought that these arrangements could not be safely continued or carried out, and accordingly they closed the culverts and they closed the subway. The result is that not only is there no legal right to any of these things, but as a matter of fact there is no longer a water-channel, and as a matter of fact there is no longer any means of carrying off the foul water in the way in which it was formerly carried. As to the road there is no way on the level of the old road. We do not know what roadway has been made; but we know that at the time when Mr. Baxter, the engineer, gave his evidence, he intended that there should be a roadway or passage over the railway. If that roadway continues Mr. Taylor has no right to it; all that he can do is to use it, so far as the railway authorities find it convenient to allow him to do so, consistently with the proper working of the railway. That is how the matter stands as to the roadway. Now let us see what Mr. Taylor has got with regard to the carrying off of the foul water. He has not got anything as of right. All that appears on the evidence is that on one [433] occasion, when Mr. Taylor found himself in a position of extreme difficulty from the accumulation of foul water in the lower factory, the engineer cut a channel by which he was allowed to drain off that water into an open pit situated somewhere near the line. So far as the evidence goes this was done on one occasion; Mr. Taylor certainly cannot claim it as of right, and there is nothing on the evidence to enable us to say whether, as a matter of fact, he has been or is allowed to continue this practice of drainage.

Now all we have to see with regard to these matters is on what principle compensation for damages ought to be assessed. Mr. Taylor asserted that the practical result would be that his factory was no longer capable of being profitably worked; and one of the assessors was clearly of that opinion. With regard to one of these matters, namely, the means of escape for foul water, the Judge was of opinion that, unless there was a right to means of draining off the foul water, it would prove fatal to the working of the factory. The evidence shows that that would be so; and inasmuch as we hold that Mr. Taylor has not now any such right, we think this circumstance practically fatal to the successful working of the factory hereafter. The objection as to the loss of roadway is nearly as fatal, because it is clear on the evidence that during the busy season there was a great deal of traffic on this road. It has been shown that about 300 carts have to pass from the lower factory to the upper factory in the day. It must make a great difference in the working of the factory if, instead of having his own road on the level by which to send his carts when he pleases, the proprietor can only take them over a railway, and only when the railway authorities find it consistent with their duty to allow him to do so. And applying one’s common sense to the matter it is clear that it must greatly diminish the value of the factory. The loss of the water-channel for filling the tank appears to us of comparatively minor importance, because from Mr. Reily’s evidence it appears that the upper factory cannot be worked by itself.

The result appears to us to be that the lower factory cannot, after the railway has been made, be profitably worked; and Mr. Reily’s evidence makes it clear that the upper factory without the lower factory cannot be worked. All these considerations taken together seem to us to show what amount of mischief has been done to the factory, and that this factory, which was formerly a factory capable of being worked at a profit, has now become incapable of being so worked.

And the matter becomes more serious when we look at another great danger to which the lower factory has been exposed by the railway embankment. It stands very close to the river Kosi. We have it in evidence that, at the period when the river is fullest, the water of the Ganges dams back the water of the Kosi, and either leaves it stagnant or actually causes it to flow back. The result of course is that there was always a liability to damages to the factory buildings, and we only require to look at the map to see that this liability has been greatly increased by the railway embankment. It has been carried along behind this factory and partly over it, so that the flood water from the overflow of the river which used to flow off the factory on the lower land behind cannot do so now. The result of thus damming up the flood water must be to increase the depth and the duration of every flood on the factory as is evident from looking at the physical character of the place. But further we have specific evidence of what has happened. The evidence shows that, during the period when the factory was under Mr. Reily, there was a flood in 1871 and another in 1879. After the railway embankment was made there was another flood in 1884. We have it on the evidence of Mr. Baxter that the flood of 1879 was the highest flood ever known, and the flood of 1884 a foot lower. Whereas, if we look at the evidence of what happened at the factory, we find that the flood of 1884 rose among the factory buildings two or three feet at least higher than the flood of 1879. The result is that the lower factory is now far more liable to danger from flood than before.

There is one other trifling matter of compensation which it is necessary to notice. Compensation has been given in respect of the upper factory for the increase of expenditure in future years upon bamboos by reason of their having to be fetched from a distance instead of from an adjoining bamboo clump. [435] Rs. 500 has been allowed for that. Taking the view we take of the principle on which compensation should be assessed, to allow this sum would be giving compensation twice over.

The result is that the case must go back to the District Judge to try two issues, first, what was the value of the lands and buildings, excluding of course the lands taken by Government, before the railway was made and when they were capable of being profitably used for factory purposes; and, secondly, what is the value of the same lands and buildings now, taking them as lands and buildings which cannot be profitably used for the purposes of a factory. The District Judge is asked to return his findings within two months from the time when the record reaches his Court.

We think that 15 per cent. should be allowed on the value of the lands plus the crops, including the bamboos.

The defendants claimed portions of the land under different titles and pleaded misjoinder. The Court upon the amin’s report gave A the option to amend the plaint by withdrawing the suit against any particular sets of the defendants. A elected to go to trial on the suit as brought:

_Held_, that under the circumstances it was necessary for the Court to adjudicate on the question of misjoinder.

_Held_, also, that the plaintiff was not entitled to join in one suit all the persons, on the ground that they obstructed his possession, unless he was able to show that those persons acted in concert or under some common title.

_Held_, further, that having regard to the provisions of ss. 31 and 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, the proper order of the Court should have been to reject the plaint, and not dismiss the suit on the ground of misjoinder.

[436] This was a suit for the possession of a tract of chur land appertaining to certain taluks which the plaintiffs had purchased at a revenue sale. A large number of persons was joined as defendants, who set up various titles and objected to the suit on the ground, among others, of multifariousness. The Court deputed the Amin for the purpose of a local investigation; and from the report of that officer it appeared what portion of the land was in possession of which set of defendants. The Subordinate Judge being satisfied that the defendants had made a bona fide defence in setting up separate titles with respect to separate plots asked the plaintiffs to choose against which set of defendants and which land they would proceed; but the plaintiffs insisted upon proceeding with the suit as framed. The Subordinate Judge found that the defendants had not, as alleged in the plaint, combined and made a common cause in preventing the plaintiffs from taking possession, and upon the authorities of Baboo Mottee Lal v. Ranee (1), Tara Prosunno Sircar v. Roomarce Debee (2) Haranund Mozoomdar v. Prosunno Chunder Biswas (3), dismissed the suit holding that, inasmuch as there were groups of defendants who showed different titles and would have to give different evidence, they could not all be joined in one suit. On appeal the District Judge, differing from the Court of first instance, remanded the case for trial on the merits—Sheik Kh Omar Ali v. Sheikh Weylayet Ali (4); Janokinath Mookerjee v. Ramrunjun Chuckerbutty (5); Haranund Mozoomdar v. Prosunno Chunder Biswas (3). An appeal was preferred from this decision (in which was included another suit between the same parties in a similar matter) to the High Court. The two cases were heard together.

Babu Ram Chand (10).

The following was the judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Beverley, JJ.):—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiffs in these two suits are purchasers at a sale held for arrears of Government revenue, and they sue for possession of a tract of chur land which they say belongs to their estate and from mouzah Kusundia. They also state that this land was measured and depicted in the Government Revenue Survey as portion of that estate; that afterwards it diluviated and has now re-formed on the same site. The plaintiffs further state that, on attempting to take possession of this land, they have been resisted by the defendants, and they accordingly bring this suit against a large number of persons, numbering 67, who, they say, have acted in concert and collusively. An objection was taken in the written statement of the defendants that the lands were obscurely described in the plaint, that the suit has been wrongly brought against several persons who claim to hold portions of this land under different titles, and the defendants also disputed the correctness of the survey maps on which the plaintiffs relied.

In the first Court, the only issue tried was that of multifariousness, and in order to ascertain the exact position of the parties, an Amin was directed to ascertain and show on a map the lands claimed by the plaintiffs and those portions which were claimed by the different sets of defendants separately from one another. The Subordinate Judge before trying the case gave the plaintiffs an opportunity of amending their plaint by withdrawing the suit as against any particular sets of defendants. But the plaintiffs persisted in the trial of the suit as it was brought, and preferred to abide by the consequences. [438] The Subordinate Judge first of all found on the evidence that the defendants did not combine and make common cause, in preventing the plaintiffs from taking possession. He also found that when the plaintiffs went to take possession and asked for kabuliyyats from the tenants they were told that the tenants held the lands under different sets of defendants, that is to say, that they had no community of interest. He accordingly held that the suits were bad for multifariousness and dismissed them. In appeal, the District Judge considered that no inconvenience would be caused to defendants by the suits being tried in the form in which they were brought. He further remarked that the plaintiffs "had no means of ascertaining the quantity and boundaries of the land held by each separate defendant which they would have been required to specify if they brought separate suits." The District Judge accordingly remanded the cases for trial on the merits.

It is exceedingly undesirable that any suit should fail on account of any technical objection such as is now before us. But at the same time, when such an objection is raised, as in the present suits at the first hearing and at the earliest opportunity, and when serious inconvenience and expense is likely to be caused to defendants by suits such as have been found by the first Court to have been brought, it is impossible for the Courts not to adjudicate upon the objection and to relieve the defendants from the inconvenience and expense to which they must be subjected. No apportionment of costs in the decree which may be passed, if such a suit be tried out, can put the defendants in the position which they were entitled to hold in a suit properly brought. They are therefore entitled to require the Courts to relieve them from the certain inconvenience and expense to which the irregularity, if found to exist, must subject them. The plaintiffs' (respondents') pleader has attempted to support the manner in which the suits have been brought. He contends that the only issue for trial between the parties was the correctness of the survey proceedings under which this land was marked off as forming a portion of the estate purchased by the plaintiffs. We think that this is not a correct representation of the main issues in the suit, and that on the face of the plaint [439] many other issues must necessarily arise. It is clear from the findings before us that all the defendants had no community of interest in the present suit. It does not appear when they entered upon the lands claimed by the plaintiffs, but it is complained that, when the plaintiffs sought to enter upon the lands, they were opposed by the defendants, who were already in occupation of them. The fact that the plaintiffs' title was acquired by auction sale, and that they were unable to obtain possession of the lands which they maintain they purchased, does not give them the right to join in one suit all the persons who obstruct their possession, unless they can show that those persons acted in concert or under some common title. The first Court distinctly finds against the plaintiffs on the evidence on this point. The second Court did not consider it necessary to determine it because, in the opinion of the District Judge, the plaintiffs' case in any view was properly framed. After considering the authorities upon which the District Judge relies, and numerous other cases which have been cited by the learned counsel for the appellants, none of which are opposed to the contrary view, we cannot concur in the opinion arrived at by the District Judge. A separate suit should have been brought against each separate set of defendants who held parcels of land against the title set up by the plaintiffs by reason of an adverse title. The plaintiffs-respondents' pleader asks us to remand the case in order that his clients may have a finding from the lower Appellate Court whether the suits were rightly brought against the defendants on the ground that they acted in concert and in collusion in obstructing their possession. The lower Appellate Court has expressed no opinion on this point; but after hearing the evidence on the record read by the learned counsel for the appellants, we think that there is no evidence in support of this allegation. It is, therefore, altogether unnecessary to remand the case for this purpose, or to put the parties to the expense of further proceedings, which can have only one result. We may observe that, with regard to ss. 31 and 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, we think that the proper order on the findings of the first Court would have been not to dismiss the suits but to order that the plaintiffs be rejected as being bad in form, such as [440] would not entitle the plaintiffs to claim the suits to be tried. The result is that the orders of the lower Courts must be set aside. The plaintiffs will be rejected and the plaintiffs will pay the costs throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

Bholanath Bandyopadhyya (Plaintiff) v. Umachurn Bandyopadhyya (Defendant) and Umachurn Bandyopadhyya (Defendant) v. Bholanath Bandyopadhyya (Plaintiff).*

The plaintiff was the auction-purchaser at a sale under Act XI of 1859 by the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs for arrears of revenue of an estate in the Sunderbunds on which the defendant was the holder of a mokurari mawrari jungleburi tenure, under which he was to clear away the jungle and then to cultivate the land with paddy. The estate was one borne on the register of revenue-paying estates in the Collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs, and therefore within that Collectorate with regard to the provisions of Beng. Act VII of 1868, s. 10. The district of the 24-Pergunnahs is a permanently-settled district, but the portion of it forming the Sunderbunds was declared by Reg. III of 1828, s. 13, not to be included in the permanent settlement. The Sunderbunds tract was moreover under Reg. IX of 1816 formed into a separate jurisdiction for settlement purposes under an officer styled the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds, who is subject to the direct control of the Board of Revenue, and independent of the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs. In a suit after notice to quit to eject the defendant, and obtain possession of the land, or to have the defendant's tenure annulled: Held that, whether the term "district" was used with reference to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts or the Revenue Collector,

*Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 826 and 902 of 1885, against the decrees of J. G. Charles, Esq., Judge of 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 26th of January and 17th of February, 1885, affirming the decrees of Baboo Bulforam Mullick, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 10th of September 1883.
the plaintiff was the purchaser of an estate in a "permanently-settled" district within the meaning of s. 37 of Act XI of 1859, and not in a district "not permanently-settled" within s. 52 of that Act; and he was [441] therefore entitled to eject the defendant. The position of the estate within the district of the 24-Pergunnahs was not affected by the appointment of the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds as an officer specially invested with the powers of the Collector within a certain portion of that district. Held also that the defendants' tenure was not protected as being one of "lands wherein plantations have been made" within the meaning of s. 52 of Act XI of 1859.

Held, further, that though there was no permanent settlement of the lands sold to the plaintiff, they fell within the definition of an "estate" as given in Beng. Act VII of 1868.

The plaintiff as the purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue held under Act XI of 1859 by the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs on 20th June, 1881, of an estate in the Sunderbunds recorded in the Collectorate as No. 2368, brought this suit after serving a notice to quit to eject the defendant, a tenure-holder on the estate, and to obtain possession of the land held by him or to have his tenure annulled. The plaintiff claimed the rights of a purchaser under s. 37 of Act XI of 1859 to eject the defendant, or in the alternative, under s. 52, to annul his tenure. The defendant denied the plaintiff's right either to eject him and obtain possession or to annul his tenure, claiming to be protected under s. 52 of Act XI of 1859 by reason of his tenure being a "plantation" within the meaning of that section.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the rights of a purchaser under s. 37, and could not therefore eject the defendant, but that the defendant's tenure was not protected under s. 52: he made a decree therefore for annulment of the defendant's tenure.

The defendant appealed, and the plaintiff filed cross objections to the effect that he was entitled, whether the case fell under s. 37 or s. 52 of Act XI of 1859, to eject the defendant.

On appeal as to these points the Judge gave the following judgment:—

It seems to be admitted that the plaintiff purchased Sunderbunds estate No. 2368 at an auction sale held by the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs on the 20th of June, 1881, under Act XI of 1859.

The rights of auction-purchasers at such sales in the lower provinces of Bengal are regulated by ss. 37 and 52 of that Act, and one of the chief grounds for contention in the present suit is which of these sections is applicable to the case.

[442] Section 37, Act XI of 1859, explains the rights of purchasers of entire estates in the "permanently-settled" districts of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, while s. 52 of that Act provides for purchasers of estates in a district "not permanently settled." The distinction drawn by the Act itself is thus most clearly defined between permanently-settled and non-permanently-settled districts. The Subordinate Judge, observing that the word "district" is nowhere defined in the Act, has held, with reference to the marginal references to these two sections, that the word "district" is equivalent to the word "estate." In my opinion this finding of the lower Court is quite indefensible, not only with regard to the common acceptance of the word "district," but especially with regard to the definition of the word "estate," in Beng. Act VIII of 1868, as that definition is declared to be also applicable to Act XI of 1859. The use of the word "estate" in the two sections under review may be more intelligible than the use of the word "district," and might even put an end to all difficulties; but it is contrary to all the canons of construction that the obvious meaning of words contained in the body of a Statute should be entirely altered in order to bring the context into harmony with a mere marginal reference.

The question then arises, what is the correct definition of the word "district" in Act XI of 1859. From a comparison of the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure, Beng. Act IX of 1880, and other Acts passed by the Indian Legislatures, it appears to be clear that "district" for civil, criminal and revenue purposes respectively are equivalent to the jurisdictions of the Chief Local Civil, Criminal and Revenue authorities.

Under ordinary circumstances, in regulation districts the Collector, and in non-regulation districts the Commissioner, is the local administrative head in the revenue matters, so that generally speaking the local jurisdiction of a Collector in the regulation districts of Bengal is a district for revenue purposes. This definition of the word "district" is in accordance with the definition of the word "jurisdiction" in Beng. Act VII of 1868, s. 1, which is also applicable to Act XI of 1859. Under ordinary circumstances the whole jurisdiction of a Collector in Lower Bengal is subject to permanent settlement, but the four districts of the 24-Pergunnahs, Nuddea, Jessore, and Backergunge, include portions of a jungle tract denominated the Sunderbunds, which tract is declared by s. 13, Reg. III of 1828, not to be included in any way in the arrangements of the permanent settlement. The district of the 24-Pergunnahs, as above defined, is therefore what may be called a composite district, consisting partly of a permanently-settled tract of country and partly of a temporarily settled tract. Moreover, this Sunderbunds tract was under Reg. IX of 1816 separated from the four revenue districts, within which it is still included for civil, criminal and fiscal purposes, and formed into a separate jurisdiction for settlement purposes under an officer styled the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds, who is subject to the direct control of the Board of Revenue, and is independent of the Collectors of the parent districts.

[443] Under these peculiar circumstances, and in the absence of any definition of a "permanently-settled district," I hold that these words are applicable to that portion of the Jurisdiction of the Collector of 24-Pergunnahs, where the permanent settlement has been introduced, while the words "district not permanently settled" is applicable to that portion of the commonly called district of the 24-Pergunnahs which falls within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds.

In accordance with this finding, I hold that s. 52, and not s. 37, Act XI of 1859, is applicable to the tenure in suit, which is admittedly contained within an estate situated in the Sunderbunds.

The second contention of the plaintiff's pleader is that the defendant is liable to ejectment even under s. 52 of the Revenue Sale Act. With regard to this contention I concur with the Subordinate Judge in the opinion that, while s. 52, Act XI of 1859, entitles auction-purchasers of estates in a district not permanently settled to avoid and annul all tenures which may have originated with the defaulter or his predecessors, it does not enable such purchasers forthwith to eject under tenants, and this seems to be an important distinction between ss. 37 and 52 of the Revenue Sale Act.

The second contention raised in connection with the defendant's appeal is also, in my opinion, quite untenable. The defendant's pleader urges that the word "plantation" includes the plantation of paddy, which is the chief crop on the defendant's tenure of 1,000 bighas; but it seems to me to be quite clear, not only with reference to the ordinary signification of the word, but from the context of ss. 37 and 52, Act XI of 1859, that the word "plantation" used in these sections applies only to the planting of timber trees and not to the planting of paddy or other crops of a temporary nature.

The appeal was consequently dismissed and both parties appealed to the High Court.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Trevelyan, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff as an auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue of what is known as a Sunderbunds estate sues to eject defendant as holding without any valid title.

Defendant states that he obtained a mourasi mokurari jungleburi lease from plaintiff’s predecessor, which plaintiff cannot avoid.

[444] The first objection raised is that, inasmuch as there has been no permanent settlement of the lands sold to plaintiff, it cannot be regarded as an estate. The definition of the word "estate" is given in Beng. Act VII of 1868, and that Act declares that this shall be applied to the Revenue Sale Law of 1859. The property purchased by plaintiff clearly falls within that definition.

The next objection raised by defendant is that the plaintiff is a purchaser within the terms of s. 52, Act XI of 1859, and that he (the defendant) is accordingly protected because he holds under a lease "of lands whereon plantations have been made." We have no doubt that no plantations have, in the proper interpretation of that word, been made by defendant, for it is admitted that the land was obtained for the cultivation of paddy after clearing away the jungle. We are unable to hold that such cultivation can be regarded as making a plantation.

The main point for decision in this case is whether the plaintiff is a purchaser within the terms of s. 37 or of s. 52 of the Revenue Sale Law, that is to say, whether he is the purchaser of an "estate in the permanently-settled districts of Bengal, Behar and Orissa," or of an "estate in a district not permanently-settled." If the plaintiff is a purchaser of the former description, he might be entitled to eject the defendant; whereas in the other contingency he would be entitled only to a decree annulling the defendant’s tenure, and to demand rent at a higher rate under certain specified conditions.

There is no special definition of the term "district" applicable to the Revenue Sale Law. The District Judge has held that "the local jurisdiction of a Collector in the regulation districts of Bengal is a district for revenue purposes;" but although the land in suit falls within the district of the 24-Pergunnahs, a permanently-settled district "for civil, criminal, and fiscal purposes," the District Judge holds that the jurisdiction of the Collector, and therefore the district itself, "for revenue purposes," does not include the Sunderbunds and the lands in suit, because it was under Reg. IX of 1816 "formed into a separate jurisdiction for settlement purposes under an officer styled the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds, who is subject to the direct control of the Board of Revenue and is independent of the Collector." He [445] consequently holds that the plaintiff is a purchaser of an estate in a district not permanently settled, that is, under s. 52, because it falls within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds, within which no permanent settlement of the revenue has been made.

It is immaterial for us to determine whether the term "district" is used with reference to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts or the Revenue Collector, and whether it is merely the English equivalent of the term "zillah" used in the older Regulations, because, in our opinion, the plaintiff's estate falls within the district of the 24-Pergunnahs with reference to both of these jurisdictions. We observe that the validity of the sale under which plaintiff's title has been acquired has never been questioned, and that this sale was held by the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs and not by the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds. We accordingly take it that it was within the jurisdiction of the Collector to hold this sale. It is not disputed that the estate is borne on the general register of revenue-paying estates in the Collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs, so that it is clear that the estate must be deemed to be within that Collectorate in regard to the provisions of s.10, Beng. Act VII of 1868. Under such circumstances the position of the estate within the district of the 24-Pergunnahs seems clear, and we think that this has not been affected by Reg. IX of 1816, and the appointment of an officer, the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds, specially invested with the power of the Collector within a certain portion of that district. The Regulation does not provide that the Sunderbunds tracts should form a separate district, but it declares that it "has appeared advisable" to the Government "to appoint an officer for the performance of certain duties connected with the public resources in the tract of country ordinarily called the Sunderbunds." Consequently, even if the term "district" be interpreted to mean the jurisdiction of the Collector, it would in the present case put the land in suit within the jurisdiction of the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs; and if the term "district" be regarded as the jurisdiction of the Civil Court—that of the District Judge—there is even less doubt on this point.

It is not disputed that the district of the 24-Pergunnahs is a [446] permanently-settled district, and this has been found by both the lower Courts, and it is also admitted that the estate in suit like all lands within the Sunderbunds is only temporarily settled. But the fact that a portion of a district is not permanently-settled would not affect the general character of the district itself. We think therefore that the plaintiff is within the terms of s. 37 of the purchaser of an entire estate in the permanently-settled district of the 24-Pergunnahs, and that, unless defendant can bring himself under one of the exceptions to that section, he must be ejected. We have already held that he does not come within the fourth exception, as he does not hold a lease of lands whereon plantations have been made. That is the only exception pleaded by the defendant, and as he has failed to establish that ground, plaintiff's suit must be decreed with costs in all the Courts, the orders of the lower Court being set aside.

Appeal No. 826 allowed.
Appeal No. 992 dismissed.
DHARMODAS DAS v. NISTARINI DASI (Plaintiff).*

Hindu law—Gift—Delivery of Possession—Transfer of Property Act, s. 123—Immoveable and moveable Property.

Assuming that delivery of possession was essential under the Hindu law to complete a gift of immoveable property, that law has been abrogated by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. The first para. of that section means that a gift of immoveable property can be effected by the execution of a registered instrument only, nothing more being necessary.

Semble.—The same is the case under that section with regard to moveable property, provided that a registered deed (and not the alternative mode of delivery) be adopted as the mode of transfer.

This was a suit for possession of certain land claimed under a deed of gift executed in favour of the plaintiff by her father on the 26th Pous 1289 (9th January, 1883). The father died shortly afterwards, viz., on the 4th Magh 1289 (20th January, [447] 1884). The deed was proved to have been executed, and there was no question that the gift was accepted, but it was not shown that possession of the property was delivered to the plaintiff during the lifetime of her father.

The suit was decreed by the Munsif. On appeal it was contended (among other grounds) that, as possession did not accompany the deed of gift, it was invalid under the Hindu law. As to this the Judge said:—

"With regard to this ground of appeal the appellant’s pleader relies on the case of Dugai Dabeo v. Motira Nath Chattopadhyaya (1). This authority, however, seems to conflict with the case of Moheshur Buksh Singh v. Gunoon Koonwar (2), and in any case seems to me to be set aside by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is applicable to Hindus. I accordingly hold that delivery of possession is no longer, if it ever was, necessary to make valid a gift of immoveable property among Hindus."

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Anund Gopal Palit, for the appellant.

Baboo Boiddo Nath Dutt, for the respondent.

The arguments sufficiently appear in the judgment of the Court (Mitter and Beverley, JJ.) which, after shortly stating the facts as above, proceeded as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Upon this state of things it is contended before us that delivery of possession not having been effected at all, the gift, according to Hindu law, is not valid. The District Judge, who has held that the gift is valid,

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1575 of 1886, against the decree of J.G. Charles, Esq., Judge of 24 Pergannas, dated the 30th April 1886, affirming the decree of Baboo Atul Chunder Ghose, Munsif of Alipore, dated the 15th January 1885.

(1) 9 C. 854.

(2) 6 W.R. 245.
has relied upon s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act in support of his conclusion.

It is contended before us that s. 123 does not at all abrogate that part of the Hindu law which requires that possession must be delivered in order to complete a gift, and in support of this contention s. 129 of the Transfer of Property Act is referred to. That section says: "Nothing in this chapter relates to gifts of moveable property made in contemplation of death, or shall be deemed to affect any rule of Mahomedan law, or, save as provided by s. 123, any rule of Hindu or Buddhist law." Now [488] this section no doubt leaves intact the Hindu law except so far as it is touched by the provisions of s. 123 referred to above. We think that the District Judge is right in the construction which he has put upon s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. We may, however, state here that it is by no means clear under the Hindu law that, to make a gift of immovable property valid and complete, delivery of possession is essentially necessary. What is laid down in the Hindu law is this, that to constitute a valid gift there must be acceptance by the donee, and one of the modes of acceptance in gifts of immoveable property is delivery of possession on the part of the donor and receipt of possession by the donee. Without going into the question of Hindu law, and assuming that law to be in favour of the appellant, viz., that delivery of possession is essential under the Hindu law to complete a gift, we think that that law has been abrogated by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section says: "For the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. For the purpose of making a gift of moveable property, the transfer may be effected either by a registered instrument signed as aforesaid or by delivery."

Now in the case of moveable property the Hindu law was clear. According to Hindu law no gift of moveable property is valid unless the property given away is actually delivered by the donor to the donee. Section 123 is clear in this respect, that it has done away with the provision of the Hindu law requiring delivery of possession as regards moveable property. The second para. of s. 123 says that the transfer by gift of moveable property may be effected either by a registered instrument signed by the donor or by delivery. It cannot be reasonably contended that this para. of s. 123 still requires delivery of possession, although the gift may have been effected by the execution of a registered instrument. If that were so, the law would stand thus: "For the purpose of making a gift of moveable property the transfer may be effected, either by a registered document signed by the donor and by delivery of possession, or by delivery of possession." It would be unreasonable to hold that that is the law as regards [449] moveable property, for, if by delivery of possession alone a gift of moveable property becomes effective, the Legislature would not direct that it becomes effective by delivery of possession and something more. Therefore, as regards moveable property, it is clear that the gift of such property can be effected simply by a registered instrument. That being the meaning of the second para. of s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, it seems to us that the word "must," in the first para. of the section, means that the gift of immovable property can be effected by the execution of a registered instrument only. The word "must" is used in the first para and the word "may" in the second para. "May" is used in the second para. because there are two effective modes of effecting a gift of moveable property, and in the first para. "must" is used because there is only one mode of effecting a gift of immoveable property. We, therefore, think that there is an express provision in s. 123 that a gift of immoveable property can be effected by the execution of a registered instrument, and that is the only mode of effecting it.

The view taken by the District Judge appears to us therefore to be correct, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Beni Madhab Mitter (Plaintiff) v. Khatir Mondul (Defendant).* [7th March, 1887.]

Registration Act, s. 60—Certificate of Registration—Document registered by officer having no jurisdiction—Admissibility of Evidence.

The Court can go behind a certificate of Registration, and where it finds that a document was registered by an officer who had no jurisdiction to register it, will refuse to receive it in evidence on the ground that it is not duly registered. Ram Coomar Sen v. Khoda Nevas (1) distinguished.

The following was the judgment appealed from, in which the facts are stated sufficiently for this report.

"This was a suit for recovery of rents based on a kabuliat. The defendant denied the execution of the kabuliat, and also stated that the kabuliat, not being registered in the proper office, was not admissible in evidence.

[450] "The lower Court dismissed the suit, holding that the document was not registered in the proper office. The plaintiff appeals.

"The only point to be considered in this appeal is, whether the registration of the document was legal so as to make it admissible in evidence. The document was registered in the Sub-Registrar's office at Chuadanga, and it would be admissible in evidence if the Sub-Registrar was competent to register it. It is an admitted fact that the lands covered by the kabuliat are situate within the limits of Thana Moheshpur which is beyond the limits of the sub-district of Chuadanga, and consequently the Sub-Registrar of Chuadanga was not competent to register the document. The document not being registered in the proper office is not admissible in evidence. The plaintiff attempted to prove that some of the plots, though appertaining to the hamlet called Balihuda in Thana Moheshpur were, in fact, situate within the local limits of Thana Jibunnuggur in Chuadanga, in order to give jurisdiction to the Chuadanga Sub-Registrar, but he failed to prove that fact. The document was not legally registered, and the Munsif was right in his decision. The appeal will be dismissed with costs."

The defendant appealed.

*Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 1365 and 1366 of 1886, against the decrees of Baboo Parbati Kumar Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 2nd April, 1886, affirming the decrees of Baboo Gopal Chunder Benerji, Munsif of Bongram, dated the 16th December 1885.

(1) 7 C.L.R. 223.
Baboo Bhobani Churn Dutt, for the appellant contended that no defect in the registration of a registered document could affect its admissibility in evidence, the fact that it was registered in an office which had no jurisdiction over the land affected by that document does not nullify the effect of the registration, so as to make it inadmissible in evidence, and the lower Courts should consequently have accepted the certificate of the Sub-Registrar of Chuadanga as legally sufficient to prove that the kabuliat was duly registered in accordance with law. The cases of Sheosunker Sahoy v. Hurdey Narain Sahu (1), Ram Coomar Sen v. Khoda Newaz (2), and Makhun Lall Pandey v. Koondun Lall (3) were referred to.

Baboo Mohit Chunder Bose, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Mitter and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

We think that the judgments of the lower Courts in this case are correct. Under s. 60 the certificate is admissible in evidence to prove that the document was duly registered by the particular officer whose signature it bears, but it has been shown that that officer had no jurisdiction to register it. That being so the document was not duly registered within the provisions of [451] the Registration Act. A decision was referred to in the course of the argument, Ram Coomar Sen v. Khoda Newaz (2), but we find that that decision is entirely based upon a Privy Council judgment Mulkun Lall Pandey v. Koondun Lall (3), and the Privy Council decision does not support the contention put forward in this case. There the document which was in question was registered by an officer who had jurisdiction to register it, but in this case the document has been registered by an officer who had no jurisdiction to register it. That being so, the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee upon which the decision proceeds are not applicable to this case. We dismiss these appeals with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Bali Nath Pershad Narain Singh and another (Defendants), Appellants v. Moheswari Pershad Narain Singh and another (Plaintiffs) Respondents.* [8th March, 1887.]

Mortgage—Foreclosure—Regulation XVII of 1866, s. 8—Provision as to the year of grace—Extension of time by mutual agreement—Transfer of Property Act, s. 2, cl. (c).

The year of grace allowed by s. 8, Regulation XVII of 1866, is a matter of procedure, which it was open to the parties to extend by mutual agreement without prejudice to the proceedings already had under the section, and upon the expiration of such extended period the mortgagee acquired an immediate right to have a decree declaring the property to be his absolutely.

The right so acquired by the mortgagee while the Regulation was in force is a right which falls within the meaning of cl. (c), s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act.

*Appeal from Original Decree No. 491 of 1885, against the decree of Moulvie Mahomed Nurul Hossein, Khan Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 20th of June 1885.

Proceedings under s. 8 had come to a close by the expiration of the stipulated period of extension while the Regulation was still in force, and the mortgagee brought his suit for possession, in pursuance thereof after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to a decree such as he would have had if the Regulation had been still in force.

Ranjit Narain Singh by a deed of baibilwaja, or conditional sale, dated the 31st January 1879, conveyed his shares in certain mouzahs to Moheshwari Pershad Narain Singh and another for a consideration of Rs. 5,000. The debt was stipulated to be repaid in the month of August following. After the expiration of the term the mortgagees took proceedings under s. 8, Regulation XVII of 1806, and notice of foreclosure was issued on the 20th January 1880. As the year of grace was drawing to a close, Ranjit Narain obtained an extension of time through the Court with the consent of the mortgagees. Ranjit Narain being still unable to pay the debt, the mortgagees, by a petition of the 8th September, 1881, made with the consent and under the signature of Ranjit Narain, granted the last extension of time till the 15th Aughran 1289 F.S. (21st November 1881). On the expiration of this period the debt still remained unpaid, but further steps appear to have been taken until the 19th July 1884, when Moheswari Narain Pershad and another brought a suit for possession, and "to enforce the foreclosure" against the heirs of Ranjit Narain who were then in possession of the mortgaged property. The Court of first instance found the facts in favour of the plaintiffs and gave them a decree.

On appeal to the High Court it was contended (1) that the decree of the lower Court should have been according to s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act; (2) that even if the case came within Regulation XVII of 1806 there had not been sufficient compliance with its provisions.

The Advocate-General (with him Mr. O' Kinealy, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, and Munshi Mohamed Yusuf), for the appellants.

Mr. C. Gregory, for the respondents.

The Court (Wilson and Beverley, JJ.) delivered the following judgment:

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit brought upon a mortgage made in the old form by conditional sale. The time for paying the mortgage money expired, and the notice prescribed by s. 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806 was issued and served. The consequence was that the mortgagor's interest in the property became liable to be barred, and the mortgagees' title was in process of becoming absolute if the money was not paid within the year of grace prescribed by the Statute. Before the year of grace had expired, the period for payment was enlarged by agreement between the parties, and several further extensions of time took place. Ultimately the final extension expired while the Regulation was in full force, and before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. This suit was then brought by the mortgagee claiming to have his title declared to have accrued to him absolutely by reason of default in payment within the time to which the period of grace had been extended, and asking for a decree such as he would have had if the Regulation had been still in force. The lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree accordingly, and against that decree the present appeal has been brought.

Two objections have been urged before us. First, it has been said that the title which the mortgagee acquires under the Regulation is a statutory title, and that in order to perfect that title every thing must be carried out in strict accordance with the Regulation; and, therefore, it is said, because there was an extension of time beyond the statutory year of grace, if the mortgagee intended to rely on such a title as he could acquire under the Regulation, he was bound to begin de novo with a new notice under the Regulation. It appears to us that that is not so. The character of the arrangement for the extension of time appears from the petitions printed at pp. 52, 54 and 55 of the Paper Book. These are petitions which show that the extended period had been conceded by the mortgagee; that the extensions were accepted by the mortgagor and they close with words to this effect: "In the event of your petitioner not paying the consideration money with interest and costs" (by such and such a date) "the equity of redemption, in respect to the property sold, shall be barred in favour of the purchasers." In other words they are petitions which show that the extension of time was obtained by the mortgagor on the express terms that the bar to his title in case of non-payment should be as effectual as if the time had not been extended. That is a matter of procedure as to which the parties were at liberty to make such agreement as they thought fit. It appears to us analogous to the case of a man whose property is liable to be sold under an attachment, and who obtains a postponement of the sale on the terms that no fresh sale proclamation shall be necessary, a very common form of agreement and one to which the Courts have often given effect. It appears to us, therefore, that the objection based upon the extension of time is not a sound one. The subject has been considered in some of the decided cases. In Brijoh Mohun Suttoputty v. Radha Mohun Dey (1), a similar question came before Sir Richard Couch, C.J. and Glover, J., and they held that the right of the mortgagee was not affected by his having given time; but, as pointed out by the Advocate-General, that case is not expressly in point because it would seem that in that case, before the extended time was given, the year of grace had expired, which is not the case here. Then there are two cases in which the point has arisen, but in which it was the mortgagor who was compelled to rely upon the extended time. There is one case Dabee Rawoot v. Heeramun Mohatooon (2) decided by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. and Loch, J., in which they held that the period of time having been enlarged by consent, the mortgagor was safe in paying his money into Court within the enlarged time. A similar decision was passed in Zalem Roy v. Deb Shahec (3) decided by Bayley and Kemp, J.J. These cases tend to show that it is within the power of the parties to bargain as they choose in the way of enlargement of time in cases under the Regulation, and that such extension of time is not fatal to the whole proceeding.

The next question is one of more general importance. It was contended that in this case the suit, having been brought after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, was governed by that Act, and that the form of the decree to be given in the case ought to be the form of foreclosure decree prescribed by that Act, in ss. 86 and 87. Several cases were referred to in support of that contention. The first of these in point of date is Ganga Sahai v. Kishen Sahai (4). In that case the mortgage was of the kind governed by Regulation XVII of 1806, and it was executed while that Regulation was in force. Subsequently to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, a suit of the nature prescribed by that Act was brought without any [455] previous proceedings having been taken under the Regulation, and the question before the Full Bench of the Allahabad Court was whether such a suit would lie. The majority of the Judges held that the suit lay; that the proceedings prescribed in the Regulation were matter of procedure, and not within the saving clause of the repealing section in the Transfer of Property Act, not falling within the words, "right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any such right or liability." The next case was one in this Court, Pergash Koer v. Mahabir Pershad Narain Singh (1). There the mortgage was again a mortgage governed by the Regulation, and executed while the Regulation was in force. Proceedings taken under the Regulation would have resulted, if these proceedings had been good as against all parties, in the acquisition of a complete title by the mortgagee. The suit was then brought after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. It was found, however, on the trial of the case, that as against the defendant who was sued in the case, the proceedings purporting to be under the Regulation were invalid because he had not been made a party, and, accordingly, the first Court dismissed the suit. The question before the appellate Court was whether in that state of things the plaintiff was not nevertheless entitled to a decree in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. There, as in the Allahabad case, the Judges of this Court were dealing with a case in which no valid and effectual proceedings had taken place as between the parties to the suit under the Regulation; and it was held that the procedure under the Transfer of Property Act ought to be applied, and a decree in accordance with that Act granted, subject to this, that a year of grace was given to redeem instead of the different period contemplated by the Transfer of Property Act. The third case is a decision of a Full Bench of this Court, Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rakhal Chunder Bose (2). There again the mortgage was made under the Regulation. No proceedings had been taken under the Regulation, but after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act a suit was brought. The question which the Full Bench had to consider was, whether such a suit [456] would lie, that is to say, whether in the case of a mortgage, governed at the time of its making by the Regulation, the mortgagee may sue in the manner provided by the Transfer of Property Act; or whether, notwithstanding the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, which repealed the Regulation, the mortgagee was, by virtue of the saving clause, compelled to proceed under the Regulation as if the Transfer of Property Act had not been passed. The Court held that he was not, the matter being one of procedure.

All these cases differ materially from the present for this reason. In the present case, before the Transfer of Property Act was passed, proceedings had been taken under the Regulation. They were valid and effectual proceedings, and they had arrived at a close; that is to say, the period of grace had expired. Now, when that period of grace expired, the Regulation being still in force, what were the rights of the parties? The mortgagee acquired an immediate right to have a decree declaring the property to be his absolutely. It did not become his absolutely without a decree, but his right to such a decree immediately accrued. On the other hand the mortgagor, the moment the period of grace expired, ceased to have any right of redemption. These rights and liabilities appear to us to differ essentially from the matters, which, in the other cases, were held to be mere matters of procedure. It is impossible to say, in our judgment that anything can be described as a "right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any such right or liability," if these words do not apply to an actually existing right to an immediate decree declaring the property to be absolutely the property of the mortgagee, and, on the other hand, the entire loss of any right to redeem the property.

We think, therefore, that the second ground of appeal fails as well as the first, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ATUL KRISTO ROSE v. LYON & CO. * [17th March, 1887.]

Limitation (Act XV of 1877), s. 13, Construction of—Goods paid for before delivery—Short delivery—Failure of consideration.

Money paid as the price of goods to be delivered hereafter is money received for the use of the seller, and it is only upon failure of consideration that the money so paid becomes money received for the use of the buyer.

When goods which have already been paid for are afterwards found to be short delivered, the failure of consideration takes place on the date of delivery, and limitation in respect of a suit to recover back the sum overpaid will be reckoned from that date.

The words "absent from British India" in s. 13 of the Limitation Act should be construed broadly, and not limited in their application only to such persons as have been present there, or would ordinarily be present, or may be expected to return.

Semble.—A defendant is within s. 13, notwithstanding his having carried on a trade or had a shop or a house of business under an agent in British India. Harrington v. Gonesh Roy (1) commented upon.

J. Lyon and A. P. Lyon carried on business under the style of Jeremiah Lyon & Co., at 4, Lombard Court, Gracechurch Street, London. H. J. Joakim was their general agent in Calcutta, that is to say, he would receive orders in the form of indents from constituents in Calcutta, forward them to the Company in London, who would ship the goods, which would eventually come to Joakim's godowns. On the 2nd May, 1882, Atul Kristo Bose gave a certain order to Joakim in writing. Among other things to be sent out by the Company were "one roll of vulcanised India-rubber sheets and core packing." The first of these items was to be repeated after a month. The first shipment came under invoice in the Merkara. Atul Kristo paid the draft drawn against the goods, but on opening the cases found 2 cwt. of core packing had been short shipped. Joakim wrote on the 28th November, 1882, and informed the Company of the deficiency; subsequently a second [458] shipment came under invoice in the Teheran. This invoice purposed, among other things, to send a case of vulcanised

India rubber sheets, being the item which was ordered to be shipped a second time. On the 15th November 1882, Atul Kristo paid the draft drawn against this shipment to the amount of Rs. 543-0-7. Of this amount Rs. 539-1-0 was the value of the India-rubber, the balance being for other things sent. On the 22nd November 1882, the case, purporting to contain India-rubber sheets, was opened, and found not to contain India-rubber sheets at all, but the balance of the core packing which ought to have come by the first shipment. As this had already been paid for on the previous draft, it followed that the Rs. 539-1-0, paid as portion of the draft on the 15th November, had been overpaid. Atul Kristo then brought a suit in the Small Cause Court of Calcutta against Jeremiah Lyon & Co., on the 20th November 1885, to recover from them the sum of Rs. 539-1-0 as money had and received by the Company to the use of the said Atul Kristo, and a further amount by way of damages and interest. The defendants, among other things, pleaded limitation. The Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, in referring the matter for the consideration of the High Court, observed:

 "The real difficulties in this suit present themselves on the plea of limitation. This plea has taken various forms: Firstly, it is said that the suit being really for money had and received is barred. The money was so received on the 15th November 1882, and having regard to art. 62 of the Indian Limitation Act, the suit is no doubt barred.  Against this it is contended that the date on which the goods were found not to be shipped must be the date on which the cause of action commenced. It would not, however, be proper to ignore the clear words of the Act which specify the period from which limitation begins to run. But it may be remarked that most suits for money had and received arise out of some circumstances collateral to the actual receipts of the money. In reply to the contention of limitation on the part of the defendants, it is urged that s. 13 of the Limitation Act comes into play, and certain arguments have been derived from the fact that reported decisions in England have laid down that time may be excluded if a defendant is "beyond the seas." These words are used in s. 19 of 4 Anne, c. 16. In [459] my opinion it is not necessary to consider the construction of such words, those of s. 13 of the Indian Limitation Act being different. They are, "the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded." Now absence implies some previous presence, and, having regard to the general purport of the Act, some presence after the time that limitation began to run. There has not as yet been any decision in India which definitely deals with the question. It has been found that the defendants have not been in British India since the period of limitation began to run; and that is the state of facts with which we have to deal, it being also worthy of remark that there is nothing to show whether Joakim's position was such that a summons could have been served on him. The Legislature in providing a law of limitation can never have intended that it should have been so framed as to give no limitation in favour of a defendant who had never been in British India, and yet it might be so contended. There is no hardship to the plaintiff here. He might have brought his suit in November, 1882, just as he brought it now in 1885. There is, on the other hand, some reason in saying that if a person in British India leaves the same with a cause of action hanging over his head he does so at his own risk. The position is very different where one contracting party knows well that the other contracting party is out of British India at the time his right to sue accrues. I am of opinion, therefore, that s. 13 of the Limitation Act does not come into force in this case. I have not referred to any of the cases cited, because none of them really touch this question, two being cases in which the defendant had been in British India after limitation commenced to run and the other was one in which the defendant had an agent who could be sued in British India. * * * Having regard to the views above expressed I would dismiss the suit as barred by limitation."

The two material questions referred to the High Court were: (a) Does the period of limitation run on the 15th November or on the 22nd November, 1882? (b) Is the suit barred by limitation under s. 13 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877?

The plaintiff did not appear by counsel.

Mr. Garth, for the defendant.

OPINION.

The facts founded by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court are not, we think, sufficient to enable us to say from what date the period of limitation should be reckoned. What is found is that, on the 15th November 1882, the plaintiff paid the price of a consignment of goods which he had ordered from the defendants, and that on the 22nd November the case, purporting to contain the goods ordered, was opened and certain of the goods found to be missing. And we are asked whether limitation in respect of a suit to recover back the sum overpaid is to be reckoned from the 15th or the 22nd November. We can only say, assuming, as is probably correct, that art. 62 applies to such a case, not necessarily from either. The money paid by the plaintiff was not, at the time he parted with it, received by the defendants for his use but for their own. It was when the consideration failed that, by operation of law, the money became money received to his use, and that, we think, is the date from which in such a case limitation runs. The consideration failed when the short delivery took place; and as the date of delivery is not found the material date is wanting, and we cannot answer the first question.

The second question is one of considerable importance. The facts bearing upon it are thus found:—

"Mr. H. J. Joakim was general agent for the defendants in Calcutta that is to say, he would receive orders in the form of indents from constituents in Calcutta, forward them to the defendants, who would ship the goods, which would eventually come to "Mr. Joakim's godowns. The defendants J. Lyon and A. P. Lyon carry on business under the style of Jeremiah Lyon & Co., at 4, Lombard Court, Gracechurch Street, London. Both defendants had at times visited Calcutta and were known to Joakim, but neither had been in Calcutta since the 2nd May 1882, the date the order was given. They did not carry on business here personally, their visits being only temporary with a view to look after their own interests. In consequence of the defendants not being in Calcutta leave was, before suit was instituted, obtained by the plaintiff to sue in this Court." The cause of [461] action arose either wholly or in part in Calcutta. The question we are asked is: "Is the suit barred by limitation under s. 13 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877?"

Section 13 says: "In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded." This section occurs in Part III of the Act, which deals with the computation of the period of limitation, and the language of the section corresponds to its position. It has to do not with the persons for or against whom limitation shall run but with the calculation of the time. In the present case the question is whether, between the accruing of the cause of action and the filing of the suit, the defendants were absent from British India. They were certainly not present in British India, and therefore it would seem they must have been absent, for apparently there can be nothing intermediate between presence and absence. But it has been contended that the word "absence" should be understood as applicable only to such persons as have been present, or would ordinarily be present, or may be expected to return. Thus the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court thinks that "absence implies some previous presence, and having regard to the general purport of the Act some presence after the time that limitation began to run." In argument before us various other restrictions upon the meaning of the word "absence" were suggested; that it should be held applicable only to persons who ordinarily reside in India; or, again, to persons who are temporarily absent and intend to return.

But the section in question is not intended to define the persons for or against whom limitation shall run but to direct the mode of computing time. And if we were to attempt to restrict the meaning of "absent" in such ways as are contended for, there is probably no limit to the number of suggestions that might be made and, as far as we can see, no reason for accepting one suggestion in preference to another. It may be worth noticing that the case, to which alone the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court would limit the operation of the section, is the precise case to which it was once held that it did not apply—Narronji Bhimji v. Magniram Chandaji (1); though that case may be considered as overruled; Beake v. Davis (2); Hanmantram Sahdhurain Pety v. Bowles (3).

The decisions upon corresponding sections in English Acts strongly support the broader construction. The Statute 21 Jas. I, c. 16, s. 7, dealing with the case of plaintiffs, and 4 and 5 Anne, c. 3, s. 19 (revised Statutes), provided that, if the one or the other was "beyond the seas" when the cause of action accrued, an action might be brought within the limited period after the "return from beyond seas" of the one or the other as the case might be. The word "return" used in those Acts afforded at least as strong ground for some restriction upon the operation of the sections as anything in the Act now before us. But it was never held that that word imported a previous presence and departure. For this it is enough to refer to the decision of the Privy Council in Ruckmaboye v. Lulloboyje Mattichund (4).

That was an appeal from the Supreme Court of Bombay and was decided on demurrer, so that the facts as alleged in pleading must be taken to be correct. The plaint described the plaintiff as "of Malwa," and alleged a conversion of her goods by the defendant in Bombay. The defendant pleaded limitation, relying on the Statute of James. To this there was a replication that, at the time when the cause of action accrued and till within six years before suit, she was residing in Malwa, outside the territories subject to the East India Company, and outside the jurisdiction of the Court. The Privy Council having first held that the Statute of James did apply to a suit in the Supreme Court, and that Malwa was within the meaning of the technical phrase "beyond seas,"

(1) 6 B. 103. (2) 4 A. 530. (3) 8 B. 561. (4) 5 M. I. A. 234.
went on to decide that the replication was good. They thus applied the saving clause to a person resident in a foreign State, who was in foreign territory when and for years after the cause of action accrued. Another case was cited during the argument to which we think it right to refer, that of Harrington v. Gonesh Roy (1). In that case limitation was pleaded, and in reply the plaintiff relied on s. 13 of the [463] Limitation Act, on the ground that the defendant had been in England ever since the cause of action accrued. Tottenham and Norris, J.J., who heard the case, held that s. 13 did not apply, on the ground, if we understand the decision aright, that "it seems, however, that Mr. Harrington (the defendant) is represented in this country by Mr. Crowdy, who, in the first instance, was made a defendant in the case as manager and mukhtear of the Bhagwampore Factory." That case does not bear directly upon the present, for the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court finds that "there is nothing to show whether Joakim's position was such that a summons could have been served upon him." But the case does bear upon the method of construction to be applied to the section. And we think that, if the question there dealt with should arise again, that decision may have to be reconsidered. The case was not argued for the respondent. Attention does not seem to have been drawn to the fact that the words in the corresponding section of Act IX of 1871 (as in earlier Acts)—"unless service of a summons to appear and answer in the suit can, during such absence, be made under the Code of Civil Procedure"—have been omitted in the present section; and the judgment of the Privy Council, in the case already cited, does not appear to have been referred to. In that case, to the replication of absence from British India, there was a rejoinder to the effect that, throughout the period in question, the plaintiff had carried on trade in Bombay, having a shop or house of business there under a munim or gumastha. Their Lordships held that rejoinder to be no answer, and it is not easy to see why the reasons given for so holding, at page 260 of the report, should not apply to the case of a defendant under the present Act.

It was pointed out in argument that, according to the construction which we place upon the Act, a man who was in England when a cause of action against him accrued, and has remained there ever since, may be liable after an indefinite time to be sued in a Calcutta Court. And it was contended that this was something absurd, something that the Legislature could not have intended, and that we ought to adopt some construction which would avoid it. The answer given by the Privy Council to a somewhat [464] similar objection in the case already cited is sufficient. The words of the section are express, and the case is within them. Moreover there is no more hardship than in the converse case of a man resident in Calcutta, who there incurs a liability to another person resident in Calcutta, who remain in Calcutta long enough for any suit against him to be barred by the law prevailing in Calcutta as well as ordinarily in England, who then goes to England and finds himself liable to be sued there any time within six years. And this is exactly what happened under the Statute of Anne in Williams v. Jones (2).

We answer the second question in the negative. The remaining questions it is unnecessary to answer.

LUTCHMIPUT SINGH v. LAND MORTGAGE BANK, INDIA 14 Cal. 465

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Ghose.

LUTCHMIPUT SINGH BAHDUR, AND ON HIS DEATH HIS SON
CHUTTERPUT SINGH DOOGUR (Plaintiff) v. THE LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED (Defendant).* [18th March, 1887.]

Mortgage—Liens—Covenants that mortgagee be entitled to enter—Entry, Right of—Mortgage deed in English form.

B executed a mortgage deed in the English form in favour of the L Bank containing amongst other covenants one providing that, upon default, the mortggages would be entitled to enter into possession of the mortgaged properties.
B died leaving a widow, a daughter and a sister S his heirs. According to Mahomedan law S was entitled to a six annas share of the mortgaged pro-properties. On the 9th of May 1872, after the mortgage money became due, the L Bank brought a suit, and on the 13th of July, 1872, obtained a decree by consent. The existence or right of S to a share in the properties was not known in the Bank, and she was not made a party to that suit. That Bank, in execution of their decree, caused the mortgage properties to be sold, and themselves purchased some of them. The sale proceeds did not satisfy the entire claim.
On the 1st of December 1875, S sold her share of six annas in the properties to R. In a suit by R against the purchaser [465] of two of the mortgaged pro-properties at the aforesaid sale it was held that the share of S in the estate of B did not pass to the purchasers, though the Bank purported to have brought the whole sixteen annas in the properties to sale. R then brought this suit for the recovery of possession of the six annas share of the properties purchased at the sale by the Bank themselves, and which were now in their possession.

_Held_ that the share of S not having been sold the lien imposed upon it by the mortgage deed remained intact and continued in the hands of the Bank.

_Held_, also, that, under the covenant in the mortgage deed above referred to, the Bank were entitled to remain in possession as mortgagees until the proportion of the debt, which might legitimately be imposed upon the six annas share of the properties in their hands, was paid.

The facts out of which this appeal arose were shortly as follows:—
One Moonshi Buzloor Rohim executed a deed of mortgage in the English form in favour of the Land Mortgage Bank of India, on the 27th August, 1870, for the consideration of Rs. 3,10,000. By this deed he conveyed to the Bank 37 properties situate partly within the town of Calcutta and partly outside Calcutta, subject, however, to the usual proviso for redemption. The due date for the repayment of the loan was the 22nd February, 1871; and it was covenanted among other things that, upon default, the Bank would be entitled to sell the properties comprised in the mortgage deed for satisfaction of their claim; and also to enter into possession of the said properties, and to hold and enjoy the same, and receive the rents and profits thereof.

Buzloor Rohim died on the 24th July, 1871, leaving behind him three heirs, _viz._, Fatamatunnessa Khatoon, his widow, Shurufunnessa, his dughter, and Sadurunnessa, his sister.

On the 9th May, 1872, the Land Mortgage Bank of India brought a suit against Shurufunnessa, the daughter of Buzloor Rohim, and two other parties, who were wholly unconnected with the estate of Buzloor Rohim, to enforce their mortgage and to recover the money lent by them. The Krishna Chunder Chatterjee, First Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the persons against whom the said suit was brought were those whom the Land Mortgage Bank considered at the time to be the heirs of Buzloor Rohim. Sadurrunnessa, the sister of Buzloor Rohim, who had at that time gone away to Medina, was not made a defendant. But so far as Fatamatunnessa, the widow, was concerned, her interest was fully represented by the daughter Shurufunnessa, who had before the suit obtained a conveyance of that lady's share, so that all the heirs, with the exception of Sadurrunnessa, were represented in the suit. In that suit a consent decree was obtained by the Land Mortgage Bank on the 13th July 1872, and in execution of that decree the Bank caused to be sold the properties comprised in the mortgage deed, and at the sales some of the properties were purchased by the Bank, and others by third parties, and the purchasers duly took possession of the properties purchased by them respectively. The sales which were thus held did not, however, satisfy the entire claim of the Bank, and a considerable amount of money remained due to them. Subsequently to these sales Sadurrunnessa returned from Medina, and on the 1st December 1875, sold her share, which was six annas under the law of inheritance, to the present plaintiff Roy Lutchmiput Singh Bahadur, who thereupon brought a suit against the purchaser of two of these properties on the Original Side of the High Court; and the question raised in that suit was whether the whole sixteen annas or only a ten-annas share of the properties passed under the sales in execution of the decree obtained by the Land Mortgage Bank on the 13th July 1872. A Full Bench of the High Court in May 1878 held that the decree obtained by the Bank and the execution founded upon it did not affect the share of Sadurrunnessa in the estate left by Buzloor Rahim; and that, consequently, her six annas share of the properties in question did not pass under the sale to the then defendants, and that the plaintiff Lutchmiput Singh was entitled to recover the same [see Assamathemnessa Bibe v. Roy Lutchmiput Singh (1)].

The result of the above case led to a suit being instituted by the Land Mortgage Bank on the 3rd August 1882, against Lutchmiput Singh and some other parties, who were his donees, as also against certain other persons who had, as already mentioned, purchased some of the properties comprised in the mortgage deed in execution of the decree obtained by the Bank, for the purpose of enforcing their mortgage security, for the balance of the money due to them, and asked that it might be declared that they had a good and subsisting charge by virtue of the mortgage deed of the 22nd August 1870, against the six annas share of the properties belonging to Sadurrunnessa; and, in the event of the money still due to them not being paid within the time to be fixed by the Court, that the said six annas share of the properties might be sold and the proceeds applied towards the payment of the principal, interest and costs still due to them.

This was followed by the present suit, which was instituted on the 21st July, 1888, by Lutchmiput Singh against the Land Mortgage Bank to recover possession of a six annas share of ten of the properties, that being the share of Sadurrunnessa, which among others, had ostensibly been sold in execution of the said decree of the Land Mortgage Bank, and purchased by the Bank themselves, and which were then in their possession. The plaint proceeded upon the ground that the decree obtained by the Land Mortgage Bank, and the sales held under it, did not affect the share and interest of Sadurrunnessa; that the whole of the debt, if there was any left due to the Bank, had long been satisfied and realised; that the Bank were unlawfully in possession of the said six annas share of the properties, and it was therefore prayed that a decree for possession be given to the plaintiff for the said six annas share of the properties in question; and that an account be taken from the defendants of the rents and profits which had been received by them in respect of the properties in question from the time of Buzloor Rohim's death to the date of suit; and, after deducting the necessary and proper expenses, a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiff for the balance of the money.

The Bank in answer to this suit referred to the suit which they had brought against Lutchmiput Singh and other parties, and they justified their conduct with reference to the proceedings in the suit which terminated in the decree of the 13th July, 1872, and to the sales that were held in execution thereof, and they contended that, even supposing that the plaintiff was entitled to any relief, he was not entitled to recover any share of the properties subject to the mortgage in favour of the defendants without satisfying the balance due on the said mortgage. Both [468] these suits were tried together by the Subordinate Judge. In the suit, in which the Land Mortgage Bank were the plaintiffs, the Subordinate Judge held, among other matters, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief sought for; that upon an account being taken between the parties a sum of Rs. 1,63,332-2-1 was still due to the plaintiffs; that upon the principle of estoppel, the Bank was not entitled to charge any portion of those properties which had been sold at their instance and purchased by third parties, but that as regards the other properties, namely, the properties that were in the possession of the Bank and of Lutchmiput Singh and his donees, a six annas share thereof was liable to be sold for the satisfaction of the said amount of money, and that the properties in the possession of the Bank should be first sold, and the proceeds, as also the net profits received by them from those properties, should be applied towards the liquidation of the money still due to them, and that the balance, if any, of the debt should be realized by the sale of the properties in the possession of Lutchmiput Singh and his donees.

In the present suit the Subordinate Judge held that, according to the terms of the mortgage-deed executed by Buzloor Rohim, the Bank was entitled to hold the six annas share of the properties in their possession until the full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt; and that it being found that a sum of Rs. 1,63,232-2-1 was still due to the Bank upon the mortgage, the plaintiff Lutchmiput Singh would be entitled on payment of that sum to obtain possession of a six annas share of the properties claimed, or in other words that the plaintiff would be entitled to redeem his share of the properties in question upon the payment of the said sum of money.

Appeals were preferred to this Court by Lutchmiput Singh against the decrees passed in both these suits. The appeal in the suit, in which the Land Mortgage Bank were the plaintiffs, was taken up by a Division Bench of the Court consisting of Prinsep and Trevelyan, JJ., and decided on the 21st April, 1886. Those learned Judges held, following the principle laid down by the House of Lords in the case of Kendall v. Hamilton (1), that, [469] having brought a suit, and obtained a decree in July 1872, against some of the debtors and brought the whole of the properties to sale, the Bank had no fresh remedies under the mortgage against

(1) L. R. 4 App. Ca. 504.
Sadurrunnessa and the share held by her, and that therefore the suit of the Bank was not maintainable. And the result was that the decree of the lower Court made in that suit was reversed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed.

The judgment of the High Court in that case (1) will be found in a

Note.—Roy Lutchchiput Singh Bahadur v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India, Limited.

The earlier stages of the litigation, of which this suit is the outcome, are set out in the case of Assamathamnessa Bibee v. Roy Lutchchiput Singh (2), which came before a Full Bench of this Court.

There is no dispute about the facts of this case. The real questions raised in this appeal are questions of law.

So far as they are material the facts are as follows:—

On the 22nd of August, 1870, one Buzloor Rohim mortgaged to the plaintiff Bank 36 parcels of property in Calcutta, and in the 24-Pergunnahs (all of which are set out in the schedule to the plaint) for Rs. 3,10,000 with interest at 10 per cent. per annum.

Buzloor Rohim died on the 3rd of July, 1871. His heirs, according to Mahomedan law, were his widow Fatamatunnessa Khatoon, his daughter Shurufunnessa, and his sister Sadurrunnessa.

On the 17th of May, 1872, the plaintiff Bank, who were, as they say, ignorant of the existence of the defendant Sadurrunnessa, brought a suit on the mortgage against the persons whom they considered to be the heirs of Buzloor Rohim, namely, against Shurufunnessa (who, in addition to her own share, had by purchase obtained Fatamatunnessa's share) and against Mahomed Ahya, Mahomed Moosa and Mahomed Zakaria, who, if Sadurrunnessa had died, would, together with Shurufunnessa and Fatamatunnessa, have been heirs of Buzloor Rohim.

On the 13th of July, 1872, a consent decree was made in that suit.

This decree, after having recited that a rasinama had been filed, ordered “that the case be decreed in terms of the said rasinama in this way; that there be a decree for the whole amount of the claim set out in the plaint with interest and costs, and that the defendants and all their mortgaged properties be liable for the amount of the decree with interest, and the amount of the decree is to carry interest at 1 per cent. from the date of the institution of the suit, i.e., from the 9th of May, 1872, which will be [478] payable every six-months. One year's time will be given to the defendants within which they are to seek for purchasers of those properties and give notice to the Bank. Then the Bank is to take out execution of the decree and attach the properties, and cause them to be sold by the Court.”

There can be no doubt that in this suit the Bank were seeking to realize the mortgage money from Buzloor Rohim's interest in the property mortgaged, i.e., as is the usual expression in this country, from the whole sixteen annas of the property. The decree recites that the suit is for the recovery of the amount due on the mortgage, for the sale and foreclosure of the property mortgaged to the plaintiffs, and the decree contemplates the sale of the whole of the property mortgaged. All the persons who, as far as the Bank could ascertain, were the heirs of Buzloor Rohim were made parties to the suit.

Default having been made in payment of the mortgage money in accordance with the decree, the Bank attached and sold all the properties mortgaged, some of which the Bank themselves purchased.

Apart from a consideration of the terms of the decree, we have no doubt that these sales purported to pass the whole interest of Buzloor Rohim in the properties, and that the purchasers believed they were purchasing the whole sixteen annas of the property, and paid the purchase money in respect of the whole of such sixteen annas. The conditions of sale describe the property to be sold as follows:—“The right which the late Buzloor Rohim had in the properties given in the schedule below and which Mahomed Ahya, Shurufunnessa, Moosa, and Mahomed Jafer have as representatives of the said Buzloor Rohim shall be sold.”

The bidding paper describes the property to be sold as follows:—

“The right of the late Moonshi Buzloor Rohim, at present held by Mahomed Ahya, Shurufunnessa, Moonshi Mahomed Jafer, and Moonshi Afzul Rohim, as his representatives, shall only be sold”; and the Nazir's return of the sale recites the order given to him which was this: "You are hereby directed that you do sell the properties mentioned in the notification on the fixed day after making mention of the right which the deceased Buzloor Rohim had therein, and which is at present enjoyed as representatives of the said Buzloor Rohim by the judgment-debtors Mahomed Ahya, Shurufunnessa, Mahomed Jafer, and Mahomed Moosa."

The other appeal, namely, that in the suit brought by Lutchmiput Singh against the Bank, now came on for hearing.

These sales realized a sum of Rs. 3,96,570-4-10, which was not sufficient to clear the mortgage. In 1875 Sadurrunnessa returned to Calcutta from Medina and asserted her right to a six annas share of Buzloor Rohim's property as his sister, but being apparently unprovided with funds for the purpose of carrying on the litigation, without which she could not maintain her rights, she, on the 1st of December, 1875, assigned her interest in the property of Buzloor Rohim to Roy Lutchmiput Singh Bahadur, who is a defendant in the present suit.

On the 26th of April, 1876, Lutchmiput Singh brought a suit against Ashruff Ali, the purchaser of two of the properties at the sale in execution of the mortgage, asking to have it declared that he (Lutchmiput) was entitled to a six annas share of the property purchased by Ashruff Ali. Lutchmiput succeeded in the first Court and also on appeal after there had been a reference to a Full Bench [see Assamtheemnessa Bibee v. Roy Lutchmiput Singh (1)] The Bank mortgagee was no party to that suit. In consequence of the decision in that suit the Bank bring this suit to enforce their mortgage against Sadurrunnessa's six annas share of the property. The contention of the Bank is contained in the 17th paragraph of the plaint which runs as follows:—"The plaintiff Bank submit that, inasmuch as it has been decided that the six annas or 6/16 share of the defendant Sadurrunnessa, in the properties specified in the first column of schedule A hereto annexed, was not affected by the said consent decree of the 13th July, 1872, and did not pass by or under the sales in execution thereof, the said six annas or 6/16th share in all the said properties remains, and still is, liable in the hands of the holders of the same respectively as security for the repayment to the plaintiff Bank of the balance still due to them under the said instrument of mortgage, dated the 22nd August, 1870." There were 35 properties mortgaged. They are set out in the schedule to the plaint. The Bank have made as defendants in this suit—(a) Sadurrunnessa, (b) Rai Lutchmiput Singh Bahadur, (c) the purchasers and present possessors of some of the mortgaged properties, namely, those numbered 1, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 16, 17, 19, 21, 23, 25, 32, 33, 36. In the schedule annexed to the plaint Lutchmiput and his son Chutterput, who is a defendant, are in possession of the properties numbered 2, 4, 12, 20, 22, in the schedule annexed to the plaint.

The Bank themselves purchased the properties numbered 15, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, in the schedule. No. 28 is in the possession of defendant [472] No. 20, who obtained it as a gift from Lutchmiput. Nos. 3 and 18 are in possession of Lutchmiput and of other persons who are made parties to this suit. This case first came before Mr. C. B. Garrett, the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, who then decided that this suit was not barred by the decree of the 10th of July 1872. Two other issues, namely, (a) is the suit barred by limitation, and (b) is the suit defective by reason of the heirs of Moonshi Buzloor Rohim not having been made parties to it, were raised before Mr. Garrett, but were not pressed.

The other questions in the case were determined by the First Subordinate Judge. He very properly declined to allow the questions decided by Mr. Garrett to be reopened. He then decided that the mortgage bond was a genuine document. This is not disputed before us. He then proceeded to discuss the question of esoppel which was raised by some defendants who had purchased some of the properties from the Bank and also by the defendants who had purchased at the sale in execution of the Bank's decree. The claim against the purchasers from the Bank was not pressed. The Subordinate Judge held that the Bank was esotted from denying the title of the person who has purchased under the decree of 1872. In the result the lower Court has found that the six annas share which Sadurrunnessa had in the properties numbers, 2, 3, 12, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 15, 27, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, and 36 is liable to be sold to satisfy the balance of the mortgage-debt (if any) remaining due to the plaintiff.

Lutchmiput, his son Chutterput, and Lutchmiput's donee, defendant No. 20, have appealed from this decision.

Mr. Woodroffe for the respondent has contended that under Mahomedan law each heir became separately liable for the debt to the extent of his separate share, and for this proposition he has relied upon the Full Bench case already mentioned, but we do not think that this question in reality arises in this case.

(1) 4 C. 142.
Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty, for the appellant.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe and Baboo Busant Coomar Bose, for the respondents.

[471] Baboo Rash Behari Ghose for the appellant.—In the suit brought by the Bank against the present appellant to enforce their mortgage security, it has been held by a Divisional Bench of this Court that the Bank, having exhausted their remedy, are not entitled to bring a fresh suit. The sales of the mortgaged properties in execution of their decree, dated the 13th of [472] July 1872, have extinguished their lien—Kendall v. Hamilton (1); King v. Hoare (2); Brinsmead v. Harrison (3); Nultoo Lall Chowdry v. Showkee Lall (4); Hemendro Coomar Mullick v. Rajendro Lall Moonshoo (5); Guru Sami Chetti v. Samurit Chinnu Manar Chetti (6); Chockalinga Mudali v. Subbaraya [473] Mudali (7); In re European Central Railway Company Ex parte Oriental Financial Corporation (8). The Bank having lost their rights cannot now fall back upon the mortgage-deed. The lien has been merged in the decree. The properties in dispute must now be held free from the lien.

Mr. Woodroffe for the respondents.—The decision of the Division Bench of this Court referred to by the other side is [474] not correct. Even if it be held to be correct it does not affect the Bank in this appeal. The Bank do not want to make any one liable. They merely say that the property in their hands is not released from the debt. The decision

The Bank have sold the whole of the mortgaged property and have obtained a price for the whole of it. The effect of their so doing is to release the property from their claim, and they cannot again seek to realize the mortgage money from any part of it. As we have pointed out they sought to sell the whole interest, which was of Buzloor Rohim. As the purchasers [473] purported to purchase that interest it must be taken that the Bank has received the purchase money in respect of such interest. Besides Mr. Reily, the manager of the plaintiff Bank, says this: "While making the purchase the purchasers understood to have purchased entire sixteen annas of the properties. I intended to sell in execution of the decree the whole of the right, title and interest of Buzloor Rohim, but can't say whether our solicitors intended. I intended to sell this right of Buzloor Rohim as the same had passed to his representatives. My belief was that the entire properties would be sold." It seems to us that, from this view of the case, this suit is not maintainable. Even if this were not so there is another objection which we think disposes of the case.

Mr. Woodroffe's contention is that by Mahomedan law a mortgagee can bring as many suits as there are co-sharers. Without deciding whether this is or is not the law we think that at the most it would justify separate suits for separate portions of the debt, and that a mortgagee cannot even under Mahomedan law bring a suit for the whole of his claim against each of the co-sharers. In this suit he has obtained a decree for the whole amount against all the co-sharers but one. When the decree was passed the mortgage-debt disappeared, and in its place the mortgagee acquired the decree, retaining however his lien on the land. On the sale in execution of the decree the whole of the mortgagee's rights, whatever they were, passed to the purchasers, and his lien vanished. There is no real distinction between the principle in this case and the principle laid down by the House of Lords in Kendall v. Hamilton (1).

Furthermore the purchasers obtained possession under the sales to them, and the fact that Sadurrunnessa has returned from Medina and ousted some of them from a portion of the property purchased by them does not give to the mortgagee fresh remedies under his mortgage.

Besides there are other difficulties in the way of giving the plaintiff a decree. All the purchasers are not before the Court, and before any relief could be given it would be necessary to cancel all the sales in execution of the decree of 1872. We think that this suit must be dismissed with costs of both Courts as against the defendants who have appealed. [This case is referred to in 22 A. 307.]

in Emam Muntazuddin Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Dass (1) lays down that a fresh suit will lie against a mortgagor or his assignee, whose name had been omitted in the first suit. Kendall v. Hamilton (2) and the other cases of a like nature cited by the other side deal with the question of the joint debt and joint liability. They do not apply to this case. The original mortgagor was a Mahomedan, and under Mahomedan law the debt is a several debt, each heir being responsible to the extent of his own share; Muttijjan v. Ahmed Ali (3)—and as such it is recoverable by a separate suit. It has always been held that if, in the execution of a mortgage decree against the father of a Mitakshara family, the sons get their respective shares released, the mortgagee may bring a suit against the sons to bind their respective shares—Sitanath Koer v. Land Mortgage Bank of India (4) and Nobin Chandra Roy v. Magantra Dassya (5). The covenant in the mortgage-deed that the mortgagee can enter into possession on default of payment is a valid covenant, and the Bank having got into possession are entitled to retain it till the debt is paid off. There is no doubt that in England such a covenant is perfectly good. This mortgage-deed is in the English form, and the mortgaged properties were partly situate in Calcutta. It has been held in Khelat Chunder Ghose v. Tara Churn Koondoo (6), which decision was confirmed by the Privy Council on appeal—[see Brojanath Koondoo Choudhry v. Khelat Chunder Ghose (7)] that such a covenant in a mortgage-deed is valid. Petamber Narayan Dass v. Vanmali Shamji (8) supports the same view.

The contention that the lien has been merged in the decree is not correct. It has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Jonmenjoy Mullick v. Dassmoney Dassee (9) that the decree in [415] a mortgage suit does not extinguish the lien. See also the cases of Syed Nadir Hosin v. Baboo Pearoo Thovildarinee (10); Ram Kant Roy v. Raj Kishore Deb (11); Chett Narain Singh v. Gunga Pershad (12) Shaik Abdulla Saiba v. Haji Abdulla (13) and Jatha Naik v. Venkatapta (14).

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose in reply.—The right of a mortgagee under a covenant to enter into possession must be enforced by a Civil Court. The mortgagee cannot take the law into his own hands.

It has been held in several cases that a fresh suit will lie at the instance of a mortgagee against third parties, but in those cases the third parties were not originally liable. Section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code allows a mortgagee to bring a suit against a successful claimant, but here there is no successful claimant.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ghose, JJ.), after stating the facts set out above, continued as follows:—

It was strongly urged upon us by the learned Vakil, who appeared for Lutchmiput Singh, the appellant before us, that the suit of the Land Mortgage Bank having been dismissed, we should hold that the plaintiff Lutchmiput Singh was entitled to an unconditional decree in this suit, and it was contended that the Land Mortgage Bank having already exhausted their cause of action in the suit brought by them in 1872, no fresh suit would lie to enforce the mortgage lien against any portion of the properties belonging to Sadurrunnessa in accordance with the principle laid down in the case of Kendall v. Hamilton (1); and that, therefore, the share of Sadurrunnessa must now be taken to be free of the mortgage lien, and that as a result of this, no portion of the debt still due to the Bank could properly be charged against the said share.

It was further contended that the lien which existed upon Sadurrunnessa's share vanished when the properties were sold; that the decree of 1872 caused a merger and extinguished the original obligation; and that, lastly, reckoning from the date upon which the money under the mortgage deed fell due, twelve years had elapsed, and therefore the lien could not be enforced against the properties in question.

It appears to us, upon a careful consideration of the matters involved in this appeal, that notwithstanding the result of the other suit decided by the other Division Bench of this Court, it does not follow that the plaintiff in this suit is entitled to a decree for possession of Sadurrunnessa's share of the properties free of the mortgage lien. The result of that suit is, as we understand it, that the Bank having once brought a suit upon the mortgaged bond, obtained a decree, and sold the properties comprised in it, they are not entitled to maintain a fresh suit upon the same cause of action. But the Bank are the defendants in the present suit; they ask for no relief. The plaintiff is now in the place of one of the representatives of the mortgagor, and what he asks for is that he should be entitled to recover his share of the properties free of the lien imposed upon it by the mortgage-deed. It is one thing to hold that a creditor or a mortgagor is not entitled to enforce his remedy by a suit in Court, but it may be quite a different thing when the question is whether the debtor or the mortgagor is entitled to a specific relief as against the creditor or the mortgagor.

The contention on behalf of the Bank is that, notwithstanding the suit of 1872, and the sales which took place in execution of the decree, the lien which existed upon the six annas share of the properties in question has not been extinguished. If this contention be correct the result would be, were we to give effect to the argument of the appellant's vakil, that, although the whole of the money due under the mortgage-deed has not been satisfied, and although there is still a subsisting lien upon the said six annas share, the plaintiff in this case, standing in the shoes of a representative of the mortgagor, is entitled to a decree for the properties freed from that lien.

The main question, as it appears to us, upon which the case hinges is whether or no the lien which existed upon the share of the properties which devolved upon Sadurrunnessa has now been extinguished, so that the plaintiff, as the owner of the said six annas share, is entitled to recover the same discharged of the said lien.

[477] By the deed of mortgage executed on the 27th August, 1870, a lien was created upon the whole of the properties comprised in the said mortgage. Upon the death of Buzloor Rohim, as already mentioned, a six annas share of the properties devolved upon Sadurrunnessa. The suit that was brought for the enforcement of the mortgage was one in which Sadurrunnessa was not represented, and the decree that was passed in that suit was, as held by a Full Bench of this Court, one which did not affect the share of Sadurrunnessa. The debt contracted by Buzloor Rohim by reason of this decree passed into a judgment-debt, but the lien that was created by the mortgage continued as an incident of the debt. The effect of the decree was not to create any right against the properties mortgaged. The lien or the security, notwithstanding the judgment, would continue, as before, as an incident of the debt itself, and it would continue to exist in the hands of the Bank for the purpose of the satisfaction of the debt. It could not possibly be extinguished by reason of the decree.

[See the Full Bench decisions in the cases of Syud Emam Montazuddin Mahomed v. Raj Coomar Dass (1), Jonmenjoy Mullick v. Dassmoney Dassee (2), and Syud Nadir Hossein v. Pearoo Thovildarinee (3).] Now, if the lien is not extinguished by reason of the debt having been turned into a judgment debt, can it be said that, by reason of the proceedings in the sale or sales which took place in execution of their decree, the said lien came to an end so far as the six annas share of Sadurrumnessa was concerned? No doubt, if the whole sixteen annas share of the properties in question had been validly sold, the benefit of the lien which existed in the hands of the Bank would be transferred to the purchasers, and in that way the lien would be extinguished. It is indeed true that the Bank purported to sell the whole sixteen annas share of the properties. But whatever they might have purported to have sold, the fact is, as was held by the Full Bench in Assamathemnessa v. Roy Lutchimput Singh (4), that the whole sixteen annas did not pass under the sale. All that was really sold was the ten annas share, and a six annas share remained, notwithstanding the sales, with Sadurrumnessa. The six annas share, therefore, not having [478] been sold, the result must be, as we understand it, that the lien imposed upon it by the original deed of mortgage remained intact and continued in the hands of the Bank, and nothing has since happened which has the effect of removing or extinguishing the lien. We are not called upon in this case to determine the respective rights and remedies of the Bank and those parties who have, in execution of the decree obtained by the Bank, purchased some of the properties. The question in this case is one entirely between the plaintiff, as one of the representatives of the mortgagors entitled to his six annas share, and the Land Mortgage Bank, the mortgagees. What we have to determine is whether the plaintiff's six annas share has now been freed from the mortgage lien; and we are of opinion that it is not. Nor do we think it necessary to determine whether, as contended by the learned counsel for the Bank, a suit would lie at the instance of the Land Mortgage Bank to enforce their mortgage lien against the six annas share belonging to Sadurrumnessa. A Division Bench of this Court has, no doubt, held that it does not lie. But, whether that decision is correct or not, the question yet remains whether the effect of that judgment is to free the six annas share from the mortgage lien so as to entitle the plaintiff in this suit to an unconditional decree for the recovery of the six annas share of the properties now in the possession of the Bank. If the reasoning that we have adopted above be correct, then it follows that, notwithstanding the result of the other suit, the lien yet subsists upon the six annas share of Sadurrumnessa. The Land Mortgage Bank may not be in a position, by reason of the previous suit of 1872, to enforce that lien by another suit, but it does not necessarily follow from this that the lien imposed upon it has been discharged or extinguished. We then find, as already mentioned, that the deed of mortgage provided that, in case of default, the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into possession of the mortgage premises. The possession which the Land Mortgage Bank obtained in this case was, no doubt,

(1) 23 W.R. 187. (2) 7 C. 714. (3) 19 W.R. 254. (4) 4 C. 142.
a possession under the sale which took place in execution of their own decree. But that sale was no sale so far as regards the six annas share of the properties in question, and therefore it may be taken that the Bank in one sense unlawfully [479] entered into possession; and it is possible that Sadurrunmessa might have recovered a decree for possession under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, if she had brought a suit within six months from the date of such unlawful possession, notwithstanding the above covenant in the mortgage deed. But no such suit was brought; and this being a suit where all questions of right between the two parties must be tried, we are bound to see whether the said covenant can now be relied upon by the Bank. It seems to us that the Bank are entitled to insist upon their right to be in possession as mortgagees until the proportion of the debt which may legitimately be imposed upon the said six annas share of the properties is paid, and the lien thus discharged.

It was pressed upon us by the learned Vakil for the appellant that such a power, as was reserved under the mortgage deed, was unknown in the mofussil, and he relied upon the decision in the case of Bhuwani Churn Mitter v. Joykishen Mitter (1).

The question before us was not identically the same that was considered in that case. There the mortgage deed gave a power of sale of the mortgaged properties in case of default in the repayment of the money. The mortgagee sold under the power without the intervention of the Court; and the purchaser brought a suit against the mortgagee to obtain possession under the sale made to him. The Court refused to recognise the validity of such power, and it was of opinion that such a power was opposed to the principles of the Regulations in regard to the transfer of immoveable properties and particularly in satisfaction of mortgage debts.

This view of the law was not, however, adopted by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Sonatun Bysak v. Kunjo Behari Bysak. The case is unreported, but will be found in the Tagore Law Lectures for 1876, Appendix 1. And in a more recent case before another Division Bench of this Court—Bhanoomutty Chowdrain v. Premchand Neogee (2)—the Judges said they felt considerable difficulty in deciding the question; but disposed of the case upon another ground. The same question came before the Bombay High Court for consideration on two different occasions; and they seem to have held that such a power [480] of sale, when reserved in the mortgage deed, could lawfully be exercised—Keshavrav Krishna Joshi v. Bhavanjibin Babjain (3) and Petamber Narayan Dass v. Vanmali Shamji (4). Upon the authorities as they stand at present, the question does not seem to be a settled one. The question, however, that we have to determine is somewhat different. It is whether, when a power of entry into possession in the case of default is reserved in a mortgage deed, the mortgagee can insist upon such a power. The question seems to have come up before a Division Bench of this Court for consideration in the case of Khelat Chunder Ghose v. Tara Churn Koondoo (5). The immediate question then before the Court was one of limitation—whether the suit, which was one for the recovery of possession of the mortgaged properties, after foreclosure, was barred by limitation, it not having been brought within twelve years from the date of default, in which event the mortgagee was, under the terms of the mortgage deed, entitled to enter into possession. Sir Barnes Peacock, in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed as follows: "In this case there was a stipulation that, until default should be made in the payment of the mortgage money (which was Rs. 22,000 and interest), the mortgagee should not be at liberty to turn the mortgagor out of possession; but that, if default should be made on the 4th April 1848, the mortgagee was to be entitled to possession, and then he would be entitled to the usufruct of the estate. He would receive the usufruct subject to the first mortgagor's right to redeem the estate if he came in and paid the mortgage money and interest before the mortgagee should foreclose the estate; but he would be entitled to possession, and to receive the usufruct of the estate, the mortgagor being entitled to redeem and the mortgagee being entitled to foreclose." And later on he adds: "It is clear that, as soon as the default was made, the mortgagee might have sued the mortgagor and Guru Churn Sen, and recovered possession of the estate in dispute (assuming that it was included in the mortgage); and I am of opinion that, from that date, the statute of limitation began [481] to run as against the mortgagee in respect of a suit for possession." The case then went upon appeal to the Privy Council (Brojonath Koondoo Chowdhry v. Khelat Chunder Ghose) (1). Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee accepted the view of the question taken by Sir Barnes Peacock in respect of limitation, and observed as follows: "The right under the mortgage deed was to obtain possession of the land, and the cause of action accrued when default was made." And later on, after advertizing to the question raised upon the judgment of this Court whether the bar of limitation applied even to the case of the original mortgagor himself if he continued in possession and paid interest to the mortgagee, and then remarking that the said question did not arise in the case, observed as follows: "But it is impossible to hold that the defendant, the purchaser, was holding or supposed that he was holding by the permission of the mortgagee; and when both things occur—possession by such a holder for more than twelve years, and the right of entry under the mortgage deed more than twelve years old—it is impossible to say that such a possession is not protected by the law of limitation."

It seems to us, upon the observation of Sir Barnes Peacock and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee just referred to, that, when an express right of entry is covenanted for, the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into possession, although it might be that such right of entry ought to be enforced through the intervention of the Court. The mortgagee when he enters into possession would be in possession as mortgagee, subject to the right of redemption in the mortgagor; and there is, as far as we are aware, nothing in the law of this country to prohibit such a covenant being enforced. And if we are entitled to look into the intention of the parties at the time when the covenant was entered into, there can be no doubt, considering that the mortgage deed was drawn up in the English form, was executed in the town of Calcutta, where portions of the mortgage properties were situate, and the mortgagees were an English Banking Firm, and the deed was drawn up by an European attorney, that it was the intention of the parties that the contract should be governed by the English rule of law which obtains in such matters, [482] under which law such a covenant as we have to deal with in the present case is a perfectly valid one—see Bhola Nath Coondoo v. Unoda Pershad Roy (1); Petamber Narayen Dass v. Vanmali Shamji (2).

We further observe that in the case of Jatha Naik v. Venktapa (3) where the mortgagee entered into possession under a sale in execution of a decree made upon the mortgage, but which decree and sale were held not to be binding as against the plaintiff, who was the heir of the original mortgagor, a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court was of opinion that the defendant, the purchaser at the sale, was at least a mortgagee in possession, and that the plaintiff could not be permitted to recover the property without redeeming the mortgage.

Upon these considerations, therefore, we hold that the defendants, the Land Mortgage Bank, as mortgagees, are now entitled, notwithstanding the decree and sale, to insist upon the covenant of entry into possession stipulated in the mortgage deeds. They might have enforced such a covenant by suit in Court. But it does not follow that because such a suit was not brought, and the Bank entered into possession under a sale which has now fallen through, the plaintiff, the mortgagor, is entitled to obtain an unconditional decree for possession without redeeming the properties.

The observations already made, we think, dispose of all the grounds raised before us by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff-appellant, with the exception, perhaps, of only one, that is, limitation. But it is obvious that the right of the Land Mortgage Bank cannot in any sense be said to be extinguished by efflux of time, although twelve years have run out from the date of default, if they are rightfully now in possession as mortgagees under the covenant. They do not seek to enforce their lien as against any portion of the properties; they have no necessity to do so. It is the plaintiff, the mortgagor, who seeks to destroy the lien upon the ground that it has come to an end.

That being our view of the questions raised in the appeal, it follows that the plaintiff is not entitled to have in this [483] case an unconditional decree as prayed for in the plaint, and that he can only have a decree if he pays the amount of money legitimately chargeable upon the six annas share of the properties now in the hands of the Land Mortgage Bank. And this brings us to the question, what is the amount which the plaintiff is bound to pay before he can redeem the said six annas share. We have already noticed what the decree of the lower Court was in the suit brought by the Land Mortgage Bank, which, among other matters, was that the sum of Rs. 1,63,232-2-1 plus other sums of money, which the Court held justly payable by the defendants in that suit, should be realised by a sale in the first instance of the six annas share of the properties which were in the possession of the Bank, and if the proceeds of such sale be insufficient, then by the sale of the six annas share of the properties in the hands of Roy Lutchmiput Singh and his donees. In this case the decree that was pronounced by the Subordinate Judge was but the result of accounts taken in the other suit, but it runs thus: “That the plaintiff do, on payment of Rs. 1,63,232-2-1 due to the defendant, or on payment of that money in any other way than the sale of the mortgaged property in suit, recover possession of a six annas share of the properties mentioned in the schedule and in possession of the defendant, and it is further ordered that each party do pay his own costs.”

(1) 1 Boul. 97. (2) 2 B. 1. (3) 5 B. 14.
It is obvious that this decree as drawn up cannot be affirmed, for the sum of Rs. 1,63,232-2-1 was chargeable not only upon the six annas share now in the hands of the Land Mortgage Bank but also upon the like share of the properties in the hands of Lutchimput Singh and his donees. In the view taken of the matter by the Subordinate Judge himself, this sum of money should have been rateably distributed amongst all the several properties in the possession of both the parties, and it should have been provided that, upon payment of that portion of it, which legitimately falls upon and is chargeable against the nine properties (one out of the ten properties in suit being not identified or traced) now in the hands of the defendants, and in respect of which the present suit is brought, the plaintiff be entitled to recover possession. The enquiry which the lower [484] Court will have to make will, therefore, be as to the respective values of the several properties now in the hands of the Bank and of the plaintiff and his donees with a view to the apportionment of the money now due to the Bank, and the Court will direct that, upon payment of the sum thus found due as chargeable against the six annas share of the properties in the possession of the Bank, the plaintiff should be entitled to redeem.

We therefore remit the case to the Court below with the direction that the Court do complete the necessary enquiries and make the final decree in the cause.

Under the circumstances, each party will bear his own costs in both this Court and the lower Court.

[15th April, 1887.]

Execution of decree—Possession under decree—Reversal of decree—Restitution of property after reversal of decree—Mesne profits—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 244.

A Court, reversing a decree under which possession of property has been taken, has power to order restitution of the property taken possession of, and with it any mesne profits which may have accrued during such possession.

[F. 11 M. 261 (262); 21 C. 989 (997); 3 C.L.J. 181. (182); 15 C.E.J. 187=14 Ind. Cas. 486; 35 B. 255=13 Bom. L.R. 259=10 Ind Cas. 818; Rel. upon, 2 C.L.J. 537 (539)=9 C.W.N. 381; Expl. 6 C.W.N. 710 (712); R., 22 C. 501; 28; A. 665= A.W.N. (1906) 171=3 A.L.J. 556 (559).]

In the Court of first instance the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession, which decree was on appeal reversed. In the interval between these decrees the plaintiff took possession of the land in suit; the defendant after obtaining his decree in the Appellate Court applied in the execution proceedings for restitution of the property and for wasilat for the period during which the plaintiff had been in possession.

*Appeal from Order No. 37 of 1887, against the order of F. Rees, Esq., Judge of Tipperah, dated the 20th of September 1886, affirming the order of Baboo Dwarka Nath Bhattacharji, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 1st of July 1886.
The plaintiff (judgment-debtor) contended that, there being in the decree no order for wasilat, the decree-holder could not apply in execution, but should bring a fresh suit for any wasilat there may have become due.

The Subordinate Judge overruled this contention, deciding on the authority of the cases of Lati Kooer v. Sobadra Kooer (1) and Rachapa v. Amingowda (2) that the decree-holder was entitled to have the lands in suit restored to him and mesne profits refunded.

On appeal to the District Judge the judgment of the lower Court was affirmed.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Akhai Coomar Banerji, for the appellant contended that a fresh suit must be brought for mesne profits, citing Ram Roop Singh v. Sheo Golam Singh (3); Ram Ghulam v. Dwarka Rai (4).

JUDGMENT.

Judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J. (Ghose, J. concurring).—I think that this appeal must be dismissed.

The question which arises here is whether a Court, which has given a wrong decree, which has been afterwards reversed, for the possession of land, has power to order the restitution of the thing which had been improperly taken under its decree with the mesne profits which have been derived from that thing whilst it was in the possession of the party who was not entitled to it.

A decision of the Allahabad Court in which I took part has been cited, in which it was held that the section of the Code does not prevent the person who has been wrongfully deprived of his property by this proceeding from bringing an action to recover the profits during the time he has been wrongfully kept out of possession; and speaking for myself I still adhere to the opinion which I then expressed that such an action may be maintained; but, if such an action can be maintained, it by no means follows that the Court which has given possession under the wrong decree, [486] which has afterwards been cancelled, cannot order restitution of the property which has been wrongfully taken and any mesne profits which may have been derived from it in the meantime.

Speaking for myself, I do not think that this restitution is a proceeding which comes within the meaning of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but I think it is an inherent right in the Court itself to prevent its proceedings being made any cause of injustice or oppression to any one, and therefore it seems to me that that inherent right does exist, and that the Court has a power under that inherent right to order restitution of the thing which has been improperly taken, and as a part of that power it must have the right and the power to order restitution of everything which has been improperly taken. If they have that power, they have the power not only to order restitution of the property itself, but restitution of any proceeds which have been improperly taken during the time that it was in the possession of the person who was not entitled to it. These proceeds which have been received are the mesne profits of the property; and, therefore, it seems to me, it being admitted that there is a power in the Courts to order restitution of the property, it must follow that they have the power to order restitution of the mesne profits, and therefore the order of the Court below, directing the restitution of the property and the return of the mesne profits, was perfectly correct. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

(1) 3 C. 729. (2) 5 B. 283. (3) 25 W.R. 327. (4) 7 A. 170.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

Present:

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

Krishna Kishori Chaodhrani and another (Defendants) v.
Kishori Lal Roy (Plaintiff).

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 56 and 74—Secondary evidence of contents of document.

Secondary evidence of the contents of a document cannot be admitted without the non-production of the original being first accounted for in [487] such manner as to bring it within one or other of the cases provided for in s. 65 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872 (1).

An anumatiapatra is not a public document within the meaning of s. 74, nor, if it were, would its being on the record constitute a copy certified as required by s. 76.

[R., 31 C. 155; D., 4 Ind. Cas. 400.]

Appeal from a decree (16th April, 1884) of the High Court, reversing a decree (20th June, 1881) of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye.

The suit out of which this appeal arose related to the estate of Anand Sunder Mozumdar, deceased, on 11th February, 1876.

Chandramoni, wife of Goluck Nath Roy, who died in 1840, survived her husband 28 years. She had two daughters, one of whom, Ujalmoni, was alleged by the plaintiff to have adopted him in 1851 under power from her husband, then deceased. The other daughter was married to Sham-Sunder Mozumdar, and was the mother of Anand Sunder Mazumdar, deceased, who was, in his lifetime, married to Krishna Kishori, the defendant.

The plaintiff sued (5th March, 1880) as adopted son of Ujalmoni to obtain possession, with mesne profits, of one moiety of all the estates, which on Goluck Nath's death had come to his sonless widow Chandra-moni, to which moiety he, the plaintiff, claimed to have become entitled on the death of Chandramoni on 4th April, 1868, at which time Anand Sunder had taken wrongful possession.

The questions now raised related to the genuineness and effect of an alleged anumatiapatra, said to have been executed by Goluck Nath on 17th Magh 1246 (January, 1840), containing a power to Chandramoni to adopt.
As to this the High Court (McDonnell and Field, JJ.) reversing the decision of the first Court, thus stated their opinion:

"The conclusions, therefore, at which we arrive may briefly be summed up as follows: We think that there was undoubtedly an anumatipatra executed by Goluck Nath Roy; but we are of opinion that the

(1) See Bhubaneswari Debi v. Harisaran Surma Moitra, 6 C. 721.
non-production of this original document has not been sufficiently accounted for so as to render secondary evidence of its contents admissible. We are of opinion that the [488] copy produced to prove the original has not been shown to be a true copy, and we think that grave suspicion must attach to its genuineness. It must be borne in mind that Sham Sunder is shown to have had a large share in the effectual management of the property during Chandramoni’s lifetime, and the testamentary provisions in the copy of the anumatipatra now set up are calculated exclusively to benefit his son. Even if we assume the copy to have been rightly admitted and to be good evidence of the original, we think, for reasons already given, that Anand Sunder Mozumdar can take no interest under this anumatipatra either by descent or by purchase.

"The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed, and that the plaintiff must have a decree for a moiety of the property left by Goluck Nath Roy."

For the appellant Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne contended that the Court of first instance had rightly found that the original anumatipatra had been accounted for so as to let in secondary evidence of its contents.

Counsel having also been heard on the whole case, Mr. J. D. Mayne (with whom was Mr. J. Rigby, Q.C.) was not called upon.

Sir B. Peacock delivered their Lordships’ judgment:—

JUDGMENT.

The question upon which this case must be determined is whether there was proof of the document alleged to have been executed by Goluck Nath Roy in the year 1840.

The plaintiff claims to be entitled to half of the estate which belonged to Goluck Nath. Goluck Nath died, leaving only a widow and two daughters. The plaintiff is the only son of one of those daughters, and would be, if there were no will disentitling him to the property, entitled to the half share which he seeks to recover in the action. But the defendant in the action sets up that, in a power to adopt which Goluck Nath executed in the year 1840, he devised, in the event of no adoption being made, the half share, which would otherwise go to the plaintiff, to the other daughter and her son. After giving his widow power to adopt, he says: "God forbid if, without any son being begotten of my loins, I should die, and you also should suddenly die without having made"—the literal translation is "having delayed to make"—"an adoption, then my younger daughter [489] Roopmunjari, and her son, that is my grandson by my daughter’s side, shall become entitled to, and shall exclusively possess, all my above-mentioned zemindaries," &c. The question is, has it been proved that those words are contained in a document executed by Goluck Nath.

It is said that the original document was filed in the Collector’s office when the widow, after the death of Goluck Nath, applied for mutation of names. It was unnecessary for the Collector, in deciding whether the name was to be changed from that of the deceased husband to that of the widow, to enquire into any subject except whether the widow was entitled to have her name substituted for that of her deceased husband. It was no part of his duty to inquire who, on the death of the widow, would be the reversionary heirs; and it is to be remarked that when she put in her petition to the Collector for the mutation of names, although she said that her husband had given her power to adopt, she did not go on to say that in that document he had devised over the estate to the second daughter and her son in the event of her not adopting. The Collector, also, in adjudicating that the widow’s name was to be substituted for that of her husband, does not allude to that portion of the document. He merely declared that it has been shown to him; that the widow represents her husband; and that her name should be entered in the Collectorate in place of that of her husband.

It is stated that Goluck Nath, after he had executed the document, notified to the Judge that he had given his widow power to adopt. Those proceedings are before the Court; but there is nothing in them to show that, when he spoke of having given his widow power to adopt, he ever mentioned the fact of his having devised over the estate to his second daughter and her son in the event of the widow’s not adopting.

The original document is not produced, but the parties have endeavoured to give secondary evidence of it, and in order to secondary evidence they endeavoured to show that the document was burnt in a fire. The learned Judge of the first Court, in dealing with this subject, does not go so minutely into the question as the High Court have done. He says: “The [490] anumatipatra will relied upon by the defendants is dated ” so and so, “ but the original deed was burnt up by setting fire in the cutcha cutchery bungalow of the deceased Chandramoni, and its loss was satisfactorily accounted for by the depositions of the defendant’s witnesses.” That is all he says upon the subject. The High Court in dealing with that question go more minutely into it. They say: “We have considered the evidence as to the loss of this document and it by no means satisfies us. When the copy was filed in 1868 this account was not given of the loss of the original, and we think that, if this were a true account, the fact of the loss by burning would have been stated at that time. At page 15 of the Paper Book, in Appeal No. 260, there is a judgment in a suit, No. 31 of 1870, which contains a statement as to the loss of the document and this was relied upon to show that a different account was given on this occasion. We think we cannot accept the recital of facts in the judgment as evidence of a different account having been given on a previous occasion; but we are of opinion that we may properly make the observation that the account of the loss by burning, now given, was not given in 1860.” But further there is a very important remark which may be made in addition to that of the High Court. In the record to which they refer it is said:—“The plaintiff has failed to produce the original will or anumatipatra; he has only produced a copy of an anumatipatra of 17th Magh 1246, as executed by Goluck Nath Roy, in favour of Chandramoni, and the plaintiff’s witnesses Nos. 2 and 3 have stated that the plaintiff searched for, but could not find, the original anumatipatra.” Now, if he knew that it was burnt, how could he produce witnesses to say that he had searched for it? He not only does not give the same account, but he gives an entirely different account. He says now that it was burnt. He said in a proceeding subsequent to the alleged date of the burning that he searched for the document but he has not been able to find it.

The High Court then go on: “Upon the evidence we think that the account now given is not entitled to credit, and we feel bound to say that the defendant has not proved the loss [491] of the original so as to entitle him to give secondary evidence of its contents.”

Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court came to a correct conclusion upon that point, and that being so, the loss or destruction of the document not having been proved, secondary evidence was not admissible under cl. (e) s. 65, of the Indian Evidence Act. There are

The judgment of the witnesses actually should have been re-examined by any witness with the original document, which was said to have been at one time in the Collector's office. See s. 76.

Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that there was no sufficient evidence of the loss or destruction of the original, and no sufficient secondary evidence, within the meaning of the Evidence Act.

Even if parol evidence were admissible as secondary evidence, their Lordships cannot rely upon such evidence as was given in 1881 with reference to the contents of a document which had [492] been executed forty years previously. The only witness who was an attesting witness says that he recollects a document being executed, but he cannot say whether it contained the words which amount to a devise over to the daughter and her son. There is no evidence on the part of the attesting witness that the document did contain a devise, and there is only the evidence of witnesses who can hardly be supposed to have known at the time, or even if they did know at the time, to have recollected the contents of a document by which it is contended that the estate of this gentleman was alienated from him by the will of his grandfather.

Then, again, it was stated that, at the time of the making of the will, the second daughter's son was born, and that the child was in the lap of the mother when her father gave the power to his widow to adopt, and also devised his estate to the daughter and her son in case the widow should not adopt. From the contents of the document it appears that the testator was not speaking of a son to be born, but of a son who was then actually in existence. From the evidence which was given it appears to be clear that at the time Goluck Nath executed this document, giving his widow power to adopt the child, Anand Sunder was not in existence. The High Court have very carefully gone into the evidence upon that subject, and they have shown conclusively that the child was not in existence at the time when the document is alleged to have been executed.

Looking, then, to all the evidence in the case, their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court, who gave very carefully considered judgment and weighed the evidence with great care, came to a right conclusion upon the evidence, that the will was not executed by Goluck Nath, and consequently that the plaintiff is entitled to recover his half share, and that the judgment of the High Court ought to be affirmed.
Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly recommended Her Majesty to affirm the Judgment of the High Court, and the appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

PIRTHI PAL AND UMAN PARSHAD (Plaintiffs) v. JOWAHIR SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants). [8th, 9th and 10th December, 1886 and 19th February, 1887.]

TWO APPEALS AND A CROSS APPEAL CONSOLIDATED.

Hindu law. Joint family—Rights of members of a joint Hindu family in a talukdari estate—The Oudh Estate Act (1 of 1869)—Partition and account against the talukdar—The Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868), s. 83, cl. 15, and s. 106—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. 11, arts. 127 and 120.

A member of a joint Hindu family cannot sue for a share of the profits of the joint family estate, as he has no definite share until partition. He may sue for a partition of such estate unless by a family usage or special law it is impartible, and then is entitled to an account.

A talukdari estate, though entered in the name of one member of a joint family in the lists prepared in conformity with Oudh Estates Act, 1 of 1869, may be subject to a trust, implied from the acts and declarations of the talukdar, for the joint family as a joint estate. Hardeo Baksh v. Jowahir Singh (1).

In that suit, commenced in 1805 by a member of a joint family for the declaration of his rights, partition not being claimed, the order of Her Majesty in Council (1879) directed that the talukdar should cause and allow the villages forming the talukdari estate and the proceeds thereof to be managed and applied according to the trust declared in favor of the members of the family.

The plaintiff in that suit afterwards obtained entry of his name as a co-sharer in the villages in the register kept under Act XVII of 1876, s. 56; and then brought the first of the present suits for his share upon partition, both in that estate as it stood in 1805, and also with the addition of villages since acquired out of profits, claiming an account against the talukdar. The latter alleged, among other defences, that the talukdari estate was impartible, and brought a cross suit to establish this, and also that it was held by him according to the rule of primogeniture, the right of other members of the family being only to the profits.

 Held, that, in regard to the order of Her Majesty above-mentioned, which was applicable to an estate held subject to the law of the Mitakshara, the talukdari estate could not be declared to be impartible; also that a declaration in the Judicial Commissioner's decree that a member of the family entitled to a share upon partition should hold it as an under-proprietor under the talukdar, could not be allowed to stand.

[494] Held, also, (a) that the first suit, as one for partition and an account, was not barred by limitation under Act XV of 1877, s. 120, and must be decreed; (b) that the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act, XIX of 1868, s. 8, cl. 15, and s. 106, precluding proceedings in the Civil Court, might be applicable to the proceeds of the villages forming the original estate, the claimant having been recorded in the revenue records as a shareholder therein, but could not be applied to the rest of the joint estate; and (c) that the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the mesne profits were not applicable to a suit for partition or for an account of the proceeds of family estate in which a plaintiff has no specific interest until decree.

The first of these appeals was from a decree (12th September 1882) of the Judicial Commissioner, affirming a decree (3rd January 1882) of the District Judge of Sitapur. The second appeal and the cross appeal were from a decree (16th July 1883) of the Judicial Commissioner in another suit, amending a decree (15th February 1883) of the same Judge.

The suit (1880) and cross suit (1881) out of which these appeals arose originated in proceedings taken to execute an order (11th March 1879) of Her Majesty in Council in Thakur Hardo Baksh and another v. Thakur Jowahir Singh (1), instituted in 1865. Hardo Baksh, who with his cousin Parbat Singh brought the first of the present suits, died in January 1884, leaving two sons, now the appellants. The parties were thus related:

NEWAZ SINGH.

| Hardeo Baksh | Jowahir Singh. | Parbat Singh and | | Pirthi Pal Singh | | Guneshi Singh. |
| and Uman Parsad. | | |

The suit of 1865 was to obtain a declaration of the plaintiffs' rights as members of a joint family, under the Mitakshara, in the family estate. then consisting of 113 villages, in the Sitapur district, forming the taluk of Basa Dih and in the possession of Jowahir Singh, with whom the summary settlement was made in 1859 and who received a sanad, the taluk being afterwards entered in the lists prepared in conformity with the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869.

[495] It was held in the judgment that, as Jowahir Singh might although his name was so entered, have nevertheless rendered himself a trustee of the beneficial interest belonging to others in the taluk (on which point reference was made to Thakurain Sookraj Koonwar v. The Government (2); and to Shunkar Sahai v. Haja Kashi Pershad (3), the question was whether the talukdar had agreed or had become in any way bound to hold the villages forming the talukdari estate, or the rents and profits thereof, in trust for the plaintiff and Parbat Singh.

An issue on this point having been sent to the Commissioner of Sitapur, and returned by him (9th June, 1877), the final judgment of the Judicial Committee—see Hardeo Baksh v. Jowahir Singh (1)—dealt with the case as it stood at the commencement of the suit in 1865. Their Lordships were of opinion that it was to be presumed from the acts and transactions of the defendant that there was a declaration of trust on his part in favour of the joint family; and that all the villages in suit, viz., 78 villages, included in the summary settlement, with 20 villages,

(1) 3 C. 522=4 I.A. 178. (2) 14 M.I.A. 112. (3) 4 I.A. 198.
Afterwards settled for as. 12, were granted by sanad to Jowahir Singh for services in the Mutiny; also 15 villages, acquired out of the rents and profits of the estate (after the summary settlement but before the institution of the suit), formed the joint family estate, and were held by the talukdar in trust for the family and subject to the rules of the Mitakshara. It was pointed out in the judgment that the plaint did not allege that the plaintiffs had been dispossessed of their rights, but that the defendant Jowahir Singh intended to dispossess them and to put a stop to their receipt of the profits, asking no other relief than that after enquiry proper orders might be passed, and not praying for separate possession or partition.

The conclusion of that judgment was as follows:—

"Upon the whole, then, their Lordships are of opinion that it is to be presumed from the acts and transactions of the defendant that there was a declaration of trust by him in favour of the joint family, and that up to the time of the quarrel in 1865 all the villages in suit were held by the defendant in trust for the family, as a joint family estate, governed by the rules of [496] the Mitakshara; and they rejoice to find that a loyal subject of the Crown, who rendered good-service to the Government in the time of the rebellion, has not been deprived of all his property by the Act of Confiscation and through the want of knowledge or the absence of remembrance on the part of the officers of Government of the moral claim which he had upon the Government for the restoration of his property.

"The plaint does not allege that the plaintiffs have been dispossessed of their rights, but merely that the defendant intends to dispossess them and to put a stop to the profits enjoyed by them, and they simply pray that, after enquiry, proper orders may be passed that they be not deprived of their right.

"Their Lordships must deal with the case as it stood at the time of the commencement of the suit.

"At that time there does not appear to have been any complete separation or division of the family, and the plaintiffs do not pray for a partition of the estate. Hardeo Baksh was not entitled to any definite portion of the estate, but merely to the rights of a member of a joint Hindu family. Their Lordships cannot, therefore, do more than humbly advise Her Majesty, which they will do, to allow the appeal and reverse the judgments and decrees of both the lower Courts, and to declare that the defendant holds the villages in suit in trust for the joint family, and as a joint family estate, governed by the rules of the Mitakshara, and to order and decree that the defendant do cause and allow the said villages, and the proceeds thereof to be managed, used, dealt with and applied accordingly; and that he do pay the costs of the plaintiff Hardeo Baksh in both the lower Courts out of the estate.

"Further, their Lordships do order that the costs of the plaintiff, Hardeo Baksh, in this appeal be paid by the respondent out of the estate.

"A question has been raised on the argument of this appeal whether, by reason of an arrangement alleged to have been entered into by Hardeo Baksh and Parbat Singh, pending the suit, the latter is entitled to the benefit of this appeal or the former to recover Parbat Singh's share as well as his own.

"It was also suggested that Parbat Singh had, after the [497] arrangement with Hardeo Baksh, entered into an arrangement with the defendant.
"Their Lordships have nothing to do with any agreement or arrangement which may have been made by any of the parties subsequently to the commencement of the suit, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree to be made in this appeal be declared to be made without prejudice to any question that may arise in respect of any agreement or arrangement (if any) which may have been made or entered into by or between any of the parties to the suit subsequent to the commencement thereof."

In execution of the order (22nd March, 1879) which followed upon the above judgment, Hardeo Baksh obtained an order from the Sitapur Courts, maintained on appeal to the Judicial Commissioner (11th September, 1879), that proclamation be made, by beat of drum, in each of the 113 villages forming the subject of the suit, that these are the estate of a joint undivided Hindu family, in which Thakur Hardeo Baksh has a member's rights; and which is held by Thakur Jowahir Singh in trust for the joint family; and that Thakur Jowahir Singh be enjoined, in the words of the decree, that he do cause and allow the said villages, and the proceeds thereof, to be managed and dealt with and applied accordingly, failing which he will be liable to be proceeded against under s. 260 of Act X of 1877.

Upon an application (2nd June, 1880) made by Hardeo Baksh under the Oudh Land Revenue Act, XVII of 1876, ss. 57 and 58, for the entry of his name as a co-sharer in the Collectorate register kept in pursuance of s. 56 of that Act, an order to that effect was made in reference to the villages as set forth in their Lordships' judgment. Afterwards, in further proceedings in execution against the estate in possession of Jowahir Singh, the Judicial Commissioner, while maintaining the order of June, 1880, stated his opinion as follows in regard to an account of the profits pending suit; "It is quite true, as urged by decree-holder's counsel, that a managing member of a joint Hindu family is bound to render an account of his management to his co-shares; but the first question for me to determine is whether, under the decree of the Privy Council and the order above [498] referred to, the decree-holder can enforce his rights to share from the commencement of this litigation to date of decision, in execution of his decree, or must bring a separate suit; and, under all the circumstances, it seems to me clear that he must proceed by suit."

This led to the first of the present suits, commenced 14th December 1880, in which Hardeo Baksh claimed—

(a) To recover one-third share of Parbat Singh and Gunshe Singh in the 113 villages, the subject of the former suit, on the basis of an agreement of the 23rd of March 1870, and that it be declared that the withdrawal petition of the 5th of February 1874 was invalid and of no effect.

(b) To recover two-thirds of all property (other than the said 113 villages) acquired from the profits of the joint estate in the hands of Jowahir Singh.

(c) To be placed in separate possession by partition of such shares.

(d) That, to the extent of the above-mentioned shares, the defendant be ordered to render accounts of the "mesne profits" during his management, and also from 28th August 1865 up to the present date and to the date of partition in future; and to pay all the money that may be found due, after deduction of all proper charges and costs of purchasing estates, etc., with the exception of so much profits of the third share of the 113 villages for which plaintiff's name had been entered in the Revenue.
Records, and for which he could seek his remedy in the Rent Court since 1288 F.

The agreements referred to in the plaint were the following: Whilst the suit of 1865 was pending, an agreement, dated 23rd March 1870, was executed between Hardeo Baksh, Parbat Singh, and Guneshi Singh described as co-sharers in Basa Dih; and, referring to the suit, they agreed that, if any one of them withheld payment of money for the expenses of the suit in proportion to his share, he should be held to have parted with his share to the other or others. Again, on the 5th February 1874 Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh filed a petition, termed a baz dawá or withdrawal of claim, expressing their satisfaction with what had been awarded to them by way of maintenance by the Talukdars' Committee of the British Indian Association upon a reference to arbitration. The Courts in India having held these agreements to be of no effect, and no question having been raised as to them on the present appeal, they are not material to this report.

Jowahir Singh having answered, alleging, among other things, that the estate was impartible, issues were fixed, raising questions, of which, for the purposes of this report, the following only are those that require mention, viz., whether the suit was barred by limitation; whether the family had ceased to be joint on the occurrence of the litigation of 1865; whether a share could be claimed in the profits and the additions to the estate since that date; and whether the claim to an account was cognisable in a Civil Court and, if so, back to what date.

Meantime, Jowahir Singh, having previously sued to have the order of the 2nd June, 1880, which gave dakhíl kharij to Hardeo Baksh, set aside (a suit which ended in being declared non-cognisable by the Civil Courts) brought the second or cross suit on 4th August, 1881. By this Jowahir Singh sought to establish that the order of Her Majesty of 22nd March, 1879, did not declare Hardeo Baksh to be entitled to any definite portion of the family estate, but merely to the rights of a member of a joint Hindu family, entitled, therefore, to share in the profits only, as distinguished from the estate itself, and to an account of his share in them, but not to a partition of the estate, it being impartible.

The first of these two suits was dismissed (3rd January, 1882) by the District Judge, who held that the suit was not barred by limitation, but, on other grounds, could not be maintained. Although Hardeo Baksh was entitled to a share in the rents and profits as he had been declared to be, he was not entitled to partition of the talukdári estate, nor, in regard to the provisions of Act XIX of 1868, could he claim an account of the rents and profits of the villages in the Civil Court, the jurisdiction in such cases being confined to the Revenue Courts. The District Judge also held that the plaintiff had not, by the agreement referred to in the plaint, acquired the rights of Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh.

[500] An appeal against this decision was dismissed by the Judicial Commissioner (12th September 1882), who was of opinion that the claim for the share of the profits and for the share of the property purchased with the profits, was barred by time. Without its coming under art. 127 of the sch. II of Act XV of 1877, there was enough to bring it within art. 120:

In the second suit the District Judge's decree (15th February 1883) was that Hardeo Baksh was only entitled to one-third of the profits of the villages, as they stood at the time of the suit of 1865. In effect this was in favour of Jowahir Singh. As to the impartibility of the estate, which the Judge held established, he expressed his opinion that his judgment on this point in the other suit had not been overruled by the Judicial Commissioner, who had disposed of the case on another point.

On appeal, the Judicial Commissioner sought to reconcile the impartibility of the talukdari estate with the declaration of their Lordships in 1879, which in his opinion had only declared the rights of Hardeo Baksh as a member of the family in a manner consistent with his not having the right to divide the estate itself, though he had a right to share the profits. In modification of the decree of the District Judge, he ordered that Hardeo Baksh should have one-third of the estate separately apportioned to him, but that this should be held by him as an under-proprietor, paying the Government revenue, with the addition of 10 per cent. to the talukdar.

Hardeo Baksh having died in 1884, his sons, the abovenamed appellants, appealed from the decrees in the first and second suits, and Jowahir Singh filed his cross appeal in the second. The appeals were consolidated by an order of 5th June 1886.

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, appeared for the appellants.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. Theodore Thomas, for the respondents.

For the appellants it was argued that the decisions of the Courts below, though differing on the point of limitation, as to which the opinion of the District Judge was correct, were both wrong in dismissing the first suit. This should have been considered [501] as a sequel to the suit of 1865, it having been rightly held in the execution proceedings of 1818 that to obtain an account of the rents and profits, pending the suit of 1865, this suit was necessary, as it also was to obtain the share of Hardeo Baksh in the villages purchased out of the profits. The Judicial Commissioner had erred in applying the law of limitation to the first suit; and both the Courts below were wrong in concluding that the Revenue Courts alone had jurisdiction to deal with the claim for the rents and profits of the villages other than those as to which Hardeo Baksh had obtained entry of his name on 4th June, 1880. To all, except the latter, Act XIX of 1868, ss. 83 and 106, were inapplicable. The decree in the first suit should, therefore, be reversed.

The decrees of the Courts below in the second suit, which in effect declared the impartibility of the estate, were also erroneous. They were in contravention of the decision of their Lordships in 1879, which regarded the estate as subject to the law of the Mitakshara. The Judicial Commissioner, in ordering that the one-third share decreed should be held by the heirs of Hardeo Baksh as under-proprietors paying their quota of revenue to the talukdar, with the addition of ten per cent., had make a decree which could not be supported.

For the respondent Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. Theodore Thomas contended that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in the first suit was correct on the point of limitation. The claim of Hardeo Baksh to have a separate allotment of his share as a member of the family, not put forward when the suit was commenced in 1865, in the end had resolved itself into a mere claim for partition. This had not been made in due time. Again, without reference to limitation as a suit for the partition of the estate, the claim had been rightly dismissed, whatever might be the right to share in the rent and profits. And lastly, as to the latter, the provisions of Act XIX of 1868 were applicable to deprive the Civil Courts of jurisdiction. The collection of rent, for such at most was the right of Hardeo Baksh, could be made only according to the law which gave jurisdiction to the Revenue, and not to the Civil Courts.

[502] In the second suit the talukdari estate had rightly been held to be impartible, there being nothing in the nature of such an estate inconsistent with its being held by a joint family; and consequently there was no contravention of the order of 23rd March 1879.

Mr. J. P. Leith, Q. C., replied.

On a subsequent day, 19th February 1887, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:

JUDGMENT.

SIR R. COUCH:—The parties to the suits, which are the subject of these consolidated appeals, are members of a Hindu family in Oudh, being the sons and grandson of three brothers, Hewanjal Singh, Bhavani Singh, and Fateh Singh. One of them, Hardeo Baksh, died pending the appeal to Her Majesty in Council and the appellants are his sons and representatives. Prior to the annexation of the kingdom of Oudh the family was joint, the respondent Jowahir Singh being the head of it and the manager of the family property. The lands which belonged to the family were confiscated to the British Government by Lord Canning's Proclamation of March 1858, and on the 28th of April 1858 a summary settlement of them was made with Jowahir Singh. He was consequently included in the list of talukdars in accordance with the Government letter of the 10th of October 1859, and a sanad was granted to him. After the passing of Act 1 of 1869 he was also registered in List No. 1 under s. 8 of that Act, and in List No. 5. On the 28th of August 1865, Hardeo Baksh and Parbat Singh brought a suit in the Settlement Court which then had jurisdiction in the matter, against Jowahir Singh by a petition of plaint, in which they stated that since the death of their fathers, they had been, according to the old order of things, living together, their expenses being paid out of the profits of the estate, the plaintiffs continuing in possession of the taluka, and the kabuliat standing in the name of the defendant; that he intended to dispossess them and keep them out of their permanent right to the profits; and they prayed that after inquiry proper orders be passed so that they be not deprived of their rights. In a written statement, dated the 6th of October 1865, they stated that they had been compelled by an order [503] of the Criminal Court, dated the 15th of September 1865, to give up possession, but that previously to that time they had held continuous possession. The defendant in his written statement alleged that he had held possession of the land without any co-sharer, and that a summary settlement had been made with and a sanad granted to him alone. The Courts in Oudh decided in favour of Jowahir Singh, and Hardeo Baksh appealed to Her Majesty in Council. It is unnecessary to refer to the judgments of the Oudh Courts, as the rights of the parties were determined by the final order of Her Majesty in the appeal. The case was twice before this Committee, and is reported in L. R. 4 I. A., 178 and 6 I. A., 161.

On the first occasion their Lordships, after referring to two previous cases—Thakurain Sookraj Koowar v. The Government (1); Sunkar Sahai v. Rajah Kashi Pershad not then reported but since reported, L. R. 4 I. A., 198—say:

"Their Lordships are of opinion that, up to the time of Lord Canning's Proclamation, the whole of the villages mentioned in the summary settlement were the joint family property of the petitioner and Parbat Singh and the defendant, and that they were either ancestral or purchased with the proceeds of ancestral estate. The defendant himself, more than a year after the date of the summary settlement, stated in his deposition on oath made in another case, on the 8th of July, 1859, that the custom prevailing in his family was that if his cousins, meaning the plaintiff and Parbat Singh, who were his partners, should claim, they would get their shares divided. He said: "They at present live with me, and receive food and clothing." It does not appear clearly from the latter words whether the estate was held as joint family property or whether the defendant merely made an allowance to the plaintiff."

(1) 14 M. I. A. 112.

Their Lordships then, after saying that the lower Courts appeared to have decided the case merely upon the ground that the defendant was proteted by the sanad, advised Her Majesty that the Commissioner should be directed to try, or to refer to the Settlement Officer for trial, the issue whether the respondent had in any and what manner agreed or became bound to hold the villages comprised in the summary settlement and sanad, or the rents and profits thereof, in trust for the appellant and Parbat Singh, or either of them. Her Majesty's Order in Council was made accordingly.

[504] On the 13th of December 1877 the Commissioner found that "there is no proof of any fresh act or agreement on the part of the respondent by which he became bound to hold the villages alluded to in the issue set in trust for the appellant and Parbat Singh, but that they were an undivided Hindu family up to 1865 and that the joint interest extended to the whole estate then in possession, ancestral and acquired."

The appeal came before this Committee again in January 1879, and judgment was delivered on the 1st of March. It is sufficient to quote the following passages from it. Having stated the finding of the Commissioner and that it was fully warranted by the evidence, it says:—

"Their Lordships are of opinion that the facts so found, coupled with the statement of the defendant in his application for a summary settlement, to the effect that Hardeo Baksh was his partner, and with his deposition of the 8th of July 1859, in which he stated that the custom prevailing in his family was that if his cousins, meaning the plaintiff and Parbat Singh, who were his partners, should claim, they would get their shares divided, afford sufficient grounds to justify their Lordships in presuming that, up to the time of the quarrel in 1865, it was the intention of the defendant that the villages included in the summary settlement and sanad should be held by him in trust for the joint family, and as a joint family estate, subject to the law of the Mitakshara."

Their Lordships then state the reasons for their opinion, that the Act I of 1869 did not operate so as to change the relative conditions of the parties, and to put an end to the trust upon which the defendant had previously held the estate, and conclude by saying:—

"The plaint does not allege that the plaintiffs have been dispossessed of their rights, but merely that the defendant intends to dispossess them and to put a stop to the profits enjoyed by them, and they simply pray that they be not deprived of their right.

"Their Lordships must deal in the case as it stood at the commencement of the suit. At that time there does not appear to have been any complete separation or division of the family, and the plaintiffs do not pray for a partition of the estate. Hardeo Baksh was not entitled to any definite portion of the estate, but merely to the rights of a member of a joint Hindu family. Their Lordships cannot therefore do more than humbly advise Her Majesty, which they will do, to allow the appeal, and to reverse the judgments and decrees of both the lower Courts, and to declare that the defendant holds the villages in suit for the joint family, and as a joint family estate governed by the rules of the Mitaksara [505] and to order and decree that the defendant do cause and allow the said villages, and the proceeds thereof, to be managed and dealt with and applied accordingly. . . . Their Lordships have nothing to do with any agreement or arrangement which may have been made by any of the parties subsequently to the commencement of the suit, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree to be made in this appeal be declared to be made without prejudice to any question that may arise in respect of any agreement or arrangement, if any, which may have been made or entered into by or between any of the parties to the suit, subsequent to the commencement thereof."

Any member of a joint Hindu family may sue for a partition of the family estate, unless there is a family usage or a special law which makes it impartible. Jowahir Singh had himself said in 1859 that the estate was impartible, and this is one of the grounds upon which it is said that up to the time of the quarrel in 1865 it was his intention that the villages included in the summary settlement and sanad should be held by him in trust for the joint family, and as a joint family estate. Their Lordships notice that the plaintiffs did not pray for a partition of the estate, and therefore say they cannot do more than advise Her Majesty to declare that the villages were held in trust for the joint family, and as a joint family estate. The order which followed this was applicable to a joint family property. There does not appear to be any reason for thinking that it was considered that the estate was impartible, and was to be held as such in trust for the family.

The order of Her Majesty in Council is dated the 22nd of March 1879. In or about May, 1879, Hardeo Baksh applied to the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur for execution of it. The Deputy Commissioner made an order, from which there was an appeal to the District Judge, and from him to the Judicial Commissioner, who, on the 11th of November, 1879, ordered proclamation to be made by beat of drum in each of the 113 villages forming the subject of the suit of what had been declared by the order in Council. On the 2nd of June, 1880, Hardeo Baksh applied, under Act XVII of 1876, the Oudh Land Revenue Act, ss. 57 and 58, to have his name entered as a co-sharer in the taluka in the register which the Deputy Commissioner of each district is by the 56th section of the Act [506] directed to keep. And on the 4th of June 1880 the Deputy Commissioner ordered that—

"The name of Thakur Hardeo Baksh will therefore be entered in the register of co-sharers (the extent of his interest being one-third) in the joint family estate, consisting of the villages mentioned in the judgment of the Privy Council.

"Thakur Jowahir Singh will remain manager and lumbardar.

"This order refers to the following villages:—

"1. Villages comprised in the Summary Settlement ...... 78
"2. Villages granted in reward for services during the Mutiny (afterwards demarcated as 12) ...... 20
"3. Villages acquired from the profits of the estate after Summary Settlement ...... 15

"Afterwards demarcated as ...... 105

"Thakur Jowahir Singh will pay applicant’s costs."
This order was affirmed on appeal on the 13th of July 1880, but the Judicial Commissioner, on an appeal from another order relating to the execution, held that, in execution of the order in Council, Hardeo Baksh could not obtain an account from Jowahir Singh of the rents and profits of the taluk from the commencement of the litigation, but for that purpose must proceed by suit. This was on the 2nd of August 1880, and on the 14th of December 1880, Hardeo Baksh instituted the first of the suits which are the subject of these appeals.

The plaint, after stating the facts, and that on the 30th of May 1879, the defendant refused to determine the amount of wasilat (amount collected), and to adjust accounts of the profits which had accrued during the pendency of the suit, and with which considerable additions had been made to the family estate, and to fix the exact extent of the share to which the plaintiff was entitled, prayed that a baz dawa (petition of withdrawal of suit), dated 5th February 1874, executed by Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh in Jowahir Singh’s favour, was invalid and of no effect as against a previous agreement of 23rd March 1870, executed in the plaintiff’s favour, and that the plaintiff was entitled, as against Jowahir Singh, to recover Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh’s share in addition to his own; that the plaintiff [507] should be put in separate possession by partition to the extent of the aforesaid shares of the 113 villages, and all the property which had been acquired by Jowahir Singh, with the profits of the joint estate and the joint property not included in the former suit, a list of which was attached to the plaint. It also prayed that, to the extent of the above-mentioned shares, the defendant should be ordered to render accounts of the profits during his management, and to pay all the money that might be found due after deducting all proper charges and costs of purchasing estates, with the exception of so much profits of the third share of the 113 villages for which the plaintiff’s name had been entered in the Revenue Records, and for which he could seek his remedy from the Rent Court, since 1288 F., the time when his name was entered. The lists attached to the plaint contained the names of 144 villages, in addition to the 113, also a number of debts due to the estate on mortgages, a large number of bond debts, and moveable property of various kinds of considerable value.

Jowahir Singh in his written statement said that, by the baz dawa of the 5th of February, 1874, and by way of family compromise, Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh relinquished all rights and claim to a share in the taluka in his favour, and declared themselves satisfied with and accepted from him certain property as and by way of maintenance which had been awarded to them on the 11th of July, 1869, under an arbitration of the British Indian Association; that the claim to property in his possession at the date of institution of the suit in 1865 was barred by the law of limitation as well as by s. 43 of Act X of 1877; that the plaintiff was not entitled to any accounts from 1865 or any other date, and was in the position of an ordinary sharer suing a co-sharer who would have his remedy in the Rent Courts and in respect of three years' profits only; that the plaintiff was not entitled to the partition prayed for; and that he, Jowahir Singh, held the taluka as an integral impartible estate according to the rule of primogeniture without any trust in respect of such talukdari rights and status, though, as ruled by Her Majesty in Council, subject to a trust in respect of a portion of the profits in favour of the plaintiff. The plaint was then amended by making Parbat and Guneshi Singh defendants, and praying that [508] if the plaintiff was held to be not entitled to their full share, it might be decreed that as a joint property it was divisible in equal shares between him and Jowahir Singh.

The District Judge in his judgment, dated the 3rd January 1882, held that the suit was not barred by the law of limitation. This, in their Lordships’ opinion, was right. The plaintiff had in 1879 been declared by the order in Council entitled to share in the 113 villages and the proceeds thereof as a joint family estate. It was preposterous to allege, as the written statement did, that his claim to that was barred by the law of limitation. It clearly was not. It was equally preposterous to allege that he had his remedy in the Rent Court for the profits of the estate received by Jowahir Singh whilst the suit of 1865 was pending, and that he could only recover three years’ profits. The provision in the Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868) supposed to be applicable is cl. 15 of the 83rd section, which gives exclusive jurisdiction to the Courts of Revenue in Oudh over suits by a “sharer against a lumberdar or co-sharer for a share of the profits of an estate or any part thereof, or for the rendering and settlement of accounts in respect of such profits.” And by the 106th section, suits for the recovery of a share of profits are to be instituted within three years from the date on which the share of profits claimed shall have become due. A member of a joint Hindu family cannot sue for a share of profits, as he has no definite share until partition. These provisions might apply to the profits of the 113 villages after Hardeo Baksh had been entered in the register as a co-sharer under the order of the 4th of June 1880, but they are applicable only to co-sharers, and it seems only where the co-sharers and lumberdars are entered in the register, and therefore they could not apply to the 144 villages, and certainly not to the moveable property of the family. Moreover, this defence is inconsistent with the defence that the taluka is inapartible, for by the entry in the register Hardeo Baksh was made a co-sharer to the extent of one-third. That entry still remains, and Hardeo Baksh may fairly contend that there has been a partition of the 113 villages. This is the reason for his excepting from his prayer for an account the profits of those villages since the entry in the register.

[509] The District Judge, in considering the question of the partibility of the estate, took this view of the entry in the register, and said the Revenue authorities had acted upon an interpretation which they had placed upon the order in Council. He then proceeded to dispute that interpretation, and quoting only the passage in the judgment of this Committee, “and the plaintiffs do not pray for partition of the estate. Hardeo Baksh was not entitled to any definite portion of the estate, but merely to the right of a member of a joint “Hindu family,” he says: “The plaintiff could not, therefore, upon the strength of the Privy Council’s decision, claim a partition of the estate to the extent of his share in the profits, for the Privy Council has distinctly recorded that the plaintiff is not entitled to any definite portion of the estate.” This seems to their Lordships a rather strange misapprehension, for until partition no member of a joint Hindu family is entitled to a definite portion of the family estate, and if that be a reason for his not being able to claim a partition of the estate, a partition could never be claimed. Independently of the construction which the District Judge thus put upon the judgment of this Committee, he pronounced his own opinion that under the Act I of 1869, or the sanad, the estate was not partible. The District Judge then proceeded, erroneously in their Lordships’ opinion, to treat the claim for an account of the proceeds of the family estate as a claim for mesne profits, and quoted the provisions of the

Code of Procedure as to mesne profits. These provisions are intended for and are applicable to suits for land or other property in which the plaintiff has a specific interest, and not to the suit which was instituted in 1865, or to a suit for a partition where he has no specific interest until decree.
He then said that, as there was no doubt the principal parties in the case stand in the position of co-sharer and lumberdar respectively, the claim to any share in the profits of the estate must be preferred in the Revenue Court. So far as regards the 113 villages after the entry of the names this might be true, but the Rent Court had no jurisdiction to take an account of the family property, consisting of the proceeds of those villages and of other property, and to make a partition of the whole. The most it could do would be to make a partition of the 144 villages, or any others that might have been purchased [510] and become family property. Finally, after deciding that the agreement of the 23rd March 1870 did not give Hardeo Baksh a title to Parbat Singh’s share, he dismissed the suit with costs.

Hardeo Baksh appealed to the Judicial Commissioner, who, on the 12th of September 1882, gave his judgment. He agreed with the District Judge that Hardeo Baksh had not acquired a right to the shares of Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh, and he held that Hardeo Baksh, having had his name entered in the revenue registers as a co-sharer, showed that he had ceased to be a member of the joint Hindu family, and that his claim to an account for a share of the profits and for a share of the property purchased with the profits was barred by the law of limitation because he had failed to sue to enforce his right to share or for partition in 1865. It is difficult to see how it could be thought that he failed to sue to enforce his right. In their petition, to the Settlement Court in 1866, by which the suit was begun, he and Parbat Singh prayed that, after enquiry, proper orders might be passed so that they should not be deprived of their rights, and the order in Council declared that Jowahir Singh held the 113 villages as a joint family estate, and that they and their proceeds should be applied accordingly. After that there could be no application in the present suit of the law of limitation to those proceeds.

The Judicial Commissioner then held that Hardeo Baksh was not entitled to any benefit from the resignation by Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh, because he had ceased to be a member of the joint family. The baz dawa was executed on the 5th of February 1874, and their Lordships are unable to understand what ground there was for saying that Hardeo Baksh had then ceased to be a member of the joint family as regards the estate, though in other respects there might have been a separation.
Finally the Judicial Commissioner held that it was not necessary to go into the question of the partibility of the estate, and dismissed the appeal.

Their Lordships have indicated their opinion that the conclusions of the lower Courts in the first suit, except that of the District Judge on the question of limitation, are erroneous, and it [511] is now necessary to refer to the second suit. This was brought by Jowahir Singh against Hardeo Baksh on the 4th of August, 1881, and the plaint prayed for a declaration of the share the defendant was entitled to in the villages named in the schedules, which were said by the District Judge to be identical with the property in suit in 1865, and that it might be further declared that the plaintiff was entitled to hold the property mentioned in the schedules as an integral impartible and indivisible estate or taluka, subject to the beneficial interest of the defendant in respect of the profits thereof to the extent of his share as declared by the Court. The district Judge adhered to the opinion he had declared in the first suit, that the estate was impartible, and said that Hardeo Baksh was only entitled to one-third of the profits of the property. The Judicial Commissioner, on an appeal to him, had to decide the question of impartibility, in the first suit, he had left undecided. In his judgment on the 16th of July, 1883, he decided that Hardeo Baksh should "be declared entitled to have one-third of the estate separately apportioned to him, the one-third share so allotted to him to be held by him as a sub-proprietor, and subject to the payment of the Government revenue, plus 10 per cent."

The decree which was passed upon this judgment cannot be allowed to stand. It does not give to Hardeo Baksh the right which by Her Majesty's order in Council he was declared entitled to. The villages and the proceeds thereof were by that order declared to be a joint family estate, governed by the rules of the Mitakshara, and one member of the family could not rightly be made a sub-proprietor to another member of his share of the family property. Also the contention of Jowahir Singh in this and in the first suit, that he held the taluka as an integral impartible estate to himself and his heirs according to the rule of primogeniture, subject to a trust in respect of the profits, is inconsistent with the estate being governed by the rules of the Mitakshara. The direction that he should cause and allow the villages and the proceeds thereof to be managed and dealt with and applied "accordingly," that is, as a joint family estate, shows that the declaration that he held the villages in trust for the joint family was not intended to give him an impartible [512] estate. He did hold them in trust for the joint family, but as a joint family estate they were subject to partition, and as a trustee he is bound to allow the partition to be made. Notwithstanding Hardeo Baksh's clear right to a share of the profits of the villages, Jowahir Singh has pertinaciously refused to give any account of what he has been receiving since 1865, and their Lordships regret to see he has succeeded up to this time in not doing so. The suit for partition and an account stands dismissed by both the lower Courts, and Hardeo Baksh has only been declared in the second suit to be a sub-proprietor of a one-third share, against which declaration he appealed to Her Majesty in Council. It is unnecessary to consider whether he became entitled, as he claimed, to part of the shares of Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh, because, in their Lordships' opinion, he was concluded from claiming more than a one-third share in the family property, by obtaining the order for the entry of his name as a co-sharer of one-third in the 113 villages, which order was affirmed on appeal, and is treated in the plaint in the first suit as a subsisting order. The second suit was unnecessary, as the questions raised in it might have been decided upon the issues framed in the first suit. Their Lordships think that the second suit should be finally disposed of by reversing the decrees of both the lower Courts, and ordering the suit to be dismissed with costs in those Courts and that the cross appeal should be dismissed with costs. The first suit should be remanded to inquire what the joint property of the family consists of, including therein the villages held by Parbat Singh and Guneshi Singh, and for that purpose to take the usual accounts, and when that has been done to allot to Hardeo Baksh a third part thereof, and to order that he recover the third part of the moveable property, with the costs of the suit, up to the making of but not including the costs of the inquiry, from Jowahir Singh; and to order that the costs of the inquiry, and taking the accounts, and of the partition, be paid out of the estates, and also to order that Hardeo Baksh be at liberty to apply under s. 57, Act XVII of 1876, the Oudh Land Revenue Act, to have his name entered as a co-sharer with Jowahir Singh in the immoveable property, to the extent of one third. The Judicial Commissioner may remand the suit to the [514] District Judge to do what is above directed, and their Lordships, under the circumstances, are of opinion that if any application should be made under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure for the appointment of a manager or receiver of the estate during the inquiry and taking the accounts, and until the partition, it would be a proper case for granting it. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decrees of the lower Courts, and to make a decree remanding the suit to the effect and containing the directions before stated. The costs of these appeals and of the cross appeal are to be paid by Jowahir Singh.

Appeals allowed.

Cross appeal dismissed.

HARADHAN MAITI (Appellant) v. QUEEN-EMpress (Respondent).*

[4th June, 1887.]

Forgery—Intention—Penal Code, s. 466.

Where a document is made for the purpose of being used to deceive a Court of Justice it is made with the intention of being used for that purpose.

A person, therefore, who at the request of another sent to trap him, fabricates a document purporting to be a notice under the seal and signature of a Deputy Collector, he being informed that the notice was required by such other person for the purpose of being used in a pending suit (there being, however, in reality no such suit in existence), is guilty of forgery, it not being necessary that the intention of fraudulently using the document should exist in the mind of any other person than the person fabricating the document.

One Haradhan Maiti was charged and tried before a Court of Sessions, sitting with Assessors, under s. 466 of the Penal [514] Code with having committed forgery of a document purporting to have been made by a public servant in his official capacity, and under ss. 109 and 466 of the Penal Code with having abetted by conspiracy the offence of forgery.

The facts were that, in accordance with a preconcerted plan, a sub-inspector of police sent a constable in disguise, named Maslauddeen, to the house of Haradhan, instructing him to persuade Haradhan

* Full Bench on Criminal Appeal No. 192 of 1887, against the order passed by F. Cowley, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Midnapore, dated the 23rd or March, 1887.
who was alleged to be a professional forger) to forge a certain notice purporting to issue from the office of a Deputy Collector; and that, in obedience to these instructions, Maslauddeen, taking with him an original notice addressed to one Mannu, issuing from the office of a Deputy Collector, went to the house of Haradhan, and after telling him that he required the notice for the purpose of a suit then pending between himself and a ryot (there being in reality no such suit in existence), and that he wished it to run in his name and not, as in the original in the name of Mannu, arranged that the forged notice should be prepared and ready for delivery on the next day, and that Rs. 25 should be paid for the work. On the next day payment was made in rupees, some of which had been previously marked, and the sum paid was made over by Haradhan to his father. After this payment had been made, and before the original and forged notices were made over by Haradhan to Maslauddeen, a sub-inspector and his constable, at a signal arranged and given by Maslauddeen, appeared on the scene and arrested Haradhan, finding both the original and forged notice on his person and the marked rupees on the person of his father; and on a search being made in the house of Haradhan, papers, on which rough copies of the original notice appeared, were found. At the trial the prisoner produced no evidence. The Judge, concurring with the assessors, found Haradhan guilty of an offence under s. 466 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner appealed to the High Court. The case came on before Sir Comer Petheram, C.J., and Mr. Justice Ghose, who found the facts to be as stated above, but, doubting whether [515] the prisoner could be convicted of forgery on those facts, referred the question to a Full Bench.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) for the Crown.—The receipt of money by the accused to imitate a document bearing a Munsif's seal and signature, and the fact that he made the document in order that it might be used to obtain a decree for the person who had paid him to make it, show that the document was a false one within the definition of s. 464 of the Penal Code, and that the making of such a document was forgery within the meaning of s. 463, inasmuch as it was made with the intent that fraud might be committed. The offence is made up of the act of making the document and the fraudulent intent. The fact that the person who paid the accused to make the document had no intention of using it fraudulently does not affect the accused; his intention was undoubtedly fraudulent, and it is only his intention that the law refers to. I submit that the law does not require that it shall be possible that a fraud can be committed where the intention is clear. In Roy v. Tylley (1), where drugs were sold to a woman in order that she might procure abortion, it was held that; although the woman was not in the condition necessary and had no intention to use the drugs, but had only been employed by the police to trap the accused, the accused, having sold the drugs with the intent they should be so used, was guilty—R. v. Nash (2), Maule, J., says that it is not necessary to show an intent to defraud any particular person; and in R. v. Holden (3) and R. v. Marcus (4) there was no person who could have been defrauded.

No one appeared for the prisoner.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J. Wilson, J., Tottenham, J., Norris, J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—This case of Haradhan Maiti is a case in which Mr. Justice Ghose and myself had doubts as to the legality of the conviction, because we felt that a question might arise whether, upon the facts which were found, the offence of forgery had been committed. I do not think we had any doubt that the facts [516] were correctly found by the assessors and the Judge, and that the conclusion of facts at which they arrived was correct; the only doubt we felt was whether those facts amounted to a crime.

The facts of the case are that in some town a person resided who was suspected of being a professional forger, and upon suspicion the Sheristadar of the Judge's Court and the police set a trap to catch him, and the trap which they set for him was that they took him a notice which had been used in some suit and asked him to prepare a notice like it, that is, to make an exact imitation of it in that form, only changing one or two names, and they told him that their object in having the imitation of the notice made was that it should be used in the proceedings in a certain case for the purpose of deceiving the Court; so that they employed him to forge, or rather to make, a document for the purpose, as he understood them, of its being used to deceive the Court.

It is perfectly clear that, if the persons who employed the prisoner to make this imitation had been persons who were parties to a real suit and they had gone to him to prepare this document in order that they might be able to deceive the Court in that suit, and he had made the document for the purpose of its being so used, he would have been guilty of forgery. But the doubt we had was whether a person could be guilty of forging a document when the document was never intended to be used at all and represented absolutely nothing; in other words, whether the person who was the agent of the other for the purpose of making the document could have a wicked intention when the person who employed him, the principal, had no such intention. Feeling that doubt we decided that the case had better be argued before five Judges, in order that the matter might be considered and laid at rest once for all, and upon a consideration of the question we have all come to the conclusion that the facts are sufficient to sustain a conviction and we rely upon the case of Reg v. Hillman (1). In that case the offence with which the prisoner was charged was that of supplying a noxious drug to enable a woman to procure abortion. The facts proved were that he had supplied a drug, [517] the effect of which, if it had been taken by a woman, with child, would have been to cause abortion; but that the drug was purchased by a person whose object in purchasing it was to entrap the prisoner, and there being in fact no woman with child to whom it was intended to give the drug for the purpose of procuring abortion. In that case the same question arose, namely, whether the offence of supplying a drug to obtain abortion was committed when there was, in effect, no intention to obtain abortion. In that case the judgment of the Court was given by Sir William Erle, who was then Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and than whom no greater authority ever sat on the English Bench, and what he says is: "The question asked of us is whether the intention of any other person than the defendant is necessary to the commission of the offence made punishable under this Statute (24 and 25 Vic., c. 100, s. 59). We are all of opinion that that question should be answered in the negative. The Statute is directed against the supplying of any substance with the intention that it shall be employed in procuring abortion. The prisoner, in this case, supplied the substance, and intended that it should be employed to procure abortion. He knew of his own intention that it should be so employed, and is, therefore, within the words of the Statute, as we construed them. He is also, in our opinion, within the mischief of the Statute, and ought to be convicted."

(1) 1 Leigh & Cav. C. C. 343.

It seems to us that that case is absolutely on all fours with the present because Sir William Erle there says, in effect, that where the drug was supplied for the purpose of its being used to procure abortion that is equivalent to supplying it with the intention to procure abortion. In the case before us this particular document was made for the purpose of being used to deceive the Court, and, being made for that purpose, we may, for the same reason as that on which it was held that an offence had been committed in the other case, say that it was made with the intention of being used for that purpose, and therefore we think that the offence was committed and that the prisoner comes within the mischief of the Statute; and as we feel no doubt that the facts found were correctly found by the Judge and the assessors, we confirm the conviction and dismiss the appeal.

[518] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

KALLY DOSS SEAL (Plaintiff) v. NOBIN CHUNDER DOSS (Defendant).* [7th March, 1887.]

Sale by Registrar—Title to property purchased at Registrar's Sale—Doubtful title, Enforcement of—Endowment—Rent charge.

The Court will not enforce a doubtful title on a purchaser where (a) there is a reasonable probability of litigation resulting; or (b) where the title depends on the construction and legal operation of some ill-expressed and inartificial instrument, and the Court holds the conclusion it arrives at to be open to reasonable doubt in some other Court.

Case in which the title sought to be enforced did not fall within these rules.

This was an application on notice made by one Kally Doss Seal, the plaintiff in the suit of Kally Doss Seal v. Nobin Chunder Doss to vary or discharge a certain report of the Registrar, dated the 29th November 1886, made in pursuance of an order made in the above-mentioned suit.

The reference on which the said report was founded was one to enquire and report whether a good title could be made to certain property purchased by one Kristo Mohun Sen.

The evidence taken before the Registrar disclosed that certain properties, being No. 19, Baboram Seal’s Lane, and No. 10, Carras Doss’s Gully (the latter being now No. 5, Muddun Dutt’s Lane), were formerly purchased by one Jogul Kishore Doss, the ancestor of Ram Chunder Doss and Nobin Chunder Doss, that these properties were alleged to have been dedicated by him to the sole purpose of the worship of a certain idol; the

* Original Civil Suit No. 512 of 1884.
only documentary evidence of this dedication produced previous to 1858 was an extract from the Collector's register, showing that on the 22nd May 1802 a pottah was granted to the idol, and that the alleged dedicator was the shebait; that after the death of Jogul Kishore Doss his sons Ram Chunder Doss and Nobin Chunder Doss agreed to partition the said properties, and that for this purpose, they entered into a deed of partition, dated the 11th March 1858, under [519] which, as the dedicated witnessed, Ram Chunder Doss, his family and descendants, took No. 19, Baboram Seal's Lane " to live and reside in for ever as permanent tenants to the ancestral idol, paying for the same the rent at the due rate of Company's Rs. 5 per month;" and Nobin Chunder, his family and descendants, took No. 10, Carra Doss' Lane (No. 5, Muddun Dutt's Lane) " to reside in for ever as perpetual tenants of the said ancestral idol, paying for the same the rent of Rs. 5 per month;" that the deed further witnessed that the two brothers should take turns in performing the worship of the said idol, the idol being removed from one brother's house, to the other in rotation; and that in the event of the party or representatives of the party whose turn it should be to perform the said worship not performing it, it should be optional to the other party to perform the same at the expense of the defaulter. The evidence further disclosed that the worship of the idol was still continued and the Rs. 5 a month paid; that the grandfather of defendant performed the sheva; that the Collector had refused to grant a pottah with regard to the property to Nobin Chunder Doss.

Subsequently Nobin Chunder Doss mortgaged the house No. 5, Muddun Dutt's Lane to Kally Doss Seal, Nobin Chunder alleging in his evidence that he had informed Kally Doss Seal that the property was debutter; this, however, was denied by Kally Doss Seal.

Kally Doss eventually brought a suit on the mortgage, and the house
No. 5, Muddun Dutt's Lane, was sold by the Registrar and purchased by one Kristo Mohun Sen. Kristo Mohun then employed an attorney of the High Court to investigate the title to the house, and on such investigation it was discovered that there were no title deeds to the house, save and except the mortgage and the deed of partition of 1858. The purchaser on, as he said, discovering from this deed that the property purported to be debutter property, refused to carry out his purchase, and the matter was by an order of Court referred as above-mentioned to the Registrar to report on the title.

On the 29th November, 1886, the Registrar reported that after considering the evidence adduced before him in the presence of the attorneys for the purchaser and for the plaintiff, the defendant not appearing, he found that a good title could not be made.

[520] Kally Doss Seal thereupon took exception to this report, submitting that the report ought not to be accepted or acted on, the Registrar being wrong in directing upon the evidence adduced before him that a good title could not be made.

At the hearing of the application to vary the report—
Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. O'Kinealy, for the plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—There is no proof of any actual dedication which distinguishes the case from Nollit Mohun Doss v. Khettar Mohun Doss (1).
Consent of the parties might put an end to the endowment. See Konwur Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (2).

(1) Unreported. (2) 4 I.A. 52 (58).
As to what is or is not sufficient to constitute an endowment, see Brojo Soonduree Debia v. Ranee Luchmee Koonwarce (1); Ram Pershad Doss Adhikarse v. Srechuruc Doss Adhikarse (2).

There could have been no partition if the dediction was good. As to the question that it was the duty of the Court to find out whether the objection taken was good or bad, I refer to Hamilton v. Buckmaster (3); Alexander v. Mills (4); and an unreported case, Suit No. 567 of 1874, Radhanath Mookerjee v. Taraknath Mookerjee, decided by Pheur, J., on 12th March 1875; and submit that the other side can at most show that there was a charge on the property of Rs. 5 per month, but to whom that charge was payable is not clear.

Mr. Kennedy, for the purchaser.—The title is so doubtful, if not actually bad, that the Court ought not to enforce it on a purchaser—Blosse v. Clannmorris (5).

Unless the title is a reasonable one the Court ought not to enforce it; the Collector’s receipts show that the original grant was made as if there had been a dediction; it is impossible to obtain the deed of dedication which took place some time in 1802: [Trevelyan, J.—Suppose the property had been purchased in the name of the idol, the Collector would have given a pottah in his name.] The presumption must be that the title is in agreement with the documents produced; the recitals in the deed of 1858 are [521] evidence against the mortgagee. We have the persons having full power to deal with the property, dealing with it as debutter; we have the creation of a rent payable out of the property. [Trevelyan, J.—Can the descendants of either of those persons be sued for the rent?]

There is a sufficient covenant for the payment of rent during the entire terms; and even if there were a difficulty in law equity would give assistance. The word “paying” has been held sufficient to create a rent charge. See Cupit v. Jackson (6). Coke, 47a, shows the words necessary to create a rent charge. [Trevelyan, J.—The question I have to consider is whether there is a rent charge, and whether the family cannot do away with the endowment.] There is no allegation that the endowment was put an end to by the family. With regard to the case of Brojo Soonduree Debia v. Ranee Luchmee Koonwarce (1), there the property was dealt with from the commencement as the Maharajah’s own property; and in Ram Pershad Doss Adhikarse v. Srechuruc Doss Adhikarse (2), the plaintiff failed to prove his case. In Konur Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (7), the Court found that there was no evidence of endowment.

In the case of Rajender Dutt v. Sham Chund Mitter (8), there was a similar deed to ours; see also Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (9). As to the old rule of forcing a title on a purchaser, see Rogers v. Waterhouse (10); Simmons v. Hezeltine (11); Pyrke v. Waddingham (12).

Mr. Bonnerjee, in reply.

ORDER.

Trevelyan, J.—In this case I have to consider whether a good title can be made to a certain house which has been sold in pursuance of a mortgage decree.

(11) 5 C. B. N. S. 554 (571). (12) 10 Hare 1.
The matter was in accordance with the rules of the Court referred in the first instance to the Registrar, who has reported that a good title cannot be made out to the property.

Counsel on both sides have cited cases to me as to what sort of title the Court can force on an unwilling purchaser.

[522] The result of recent cases on this subject is laid down with precision in the last edition of Fry on Specific Performance, p. 388. On examining the title I will refer afterwards to what is there laid down.

The abstract of title started with the mortgage, which recited that the mortgagor was possessed of, or otherwise well and sufficiently entitled to, the house and premises.

On investigation the purchaser discovered a deed of the 11th of March 1858, made between the mortgagor and his brother Ram Chunder Doss and referring to this and other properties. This deed recites that one Jogul Kishore Doss, who was the paternal grandfather of these brothers, purchased in his lifetime (in the name of and appropriated for the sole purpose of the worship of a deity called “Muddun Molunjee” established by him) two houses, one of which is the house in question.

The first question I have to decide is whether there was any endowment prior to the deed of 1858; the second question is whether the deed of 1858 created an endowment; and the third question is whether, if on the materials before me I come to the conclusion that there has been no endowment, there are circumstances in the title such as to prevent me foregoing this title upon an unwilling purchaser. I think the case of Alexander v. Mills (1) shows that I must come to a conclusion on the first two questions. There Lord Justice James says:—“As a general and almost universal rule the Court is bound as much between vendor and purchaser as in every other case to ascertain and determine, as it best may, what the law is, and to take that to be the law which it has so ascertained and determined.”

As to the first question I have come to the conclusion that there is no evidence from which I can be satisfied that there was an endowment prior to the deed of 1858. Much reliance is placed upon an extract from the Collector’s register, showing that on the 22nd of May 1802 a pottah was granted to the idol; that Jogul Kishore, the alleged dedicator, was described as shebait of the idol; and that in 1853 Ram Chunder and Nobin Chunder, the parties to the deed of 1858 and grandsons of Jogul Kishore, [523] were described as shebait. There is no evidence of the terms of the alleged dedication, and except the recital in the deed of 1858 which is in vague terms, there is nothing to show that the profits of the houses were appropriated to the use of the idol. The fact that the house was purchased in the name of the idol, and that the purchaser was described in the Collector’s books as the shebait, proves nothing. I cannot be satisfied that there was an endowment until I know what the terms of the endowment were. In the case of Brojo Sondhuree Debia v. Ramee Luchhee Koonwar (2) there was a conveyance to the idol and the shebait, but there was no evidence of the objects of the alleged endowment.

It is true that it is difficult to prove the terms of an old endowment, but there is no definite evidence as to what took place before 1858, from which I could infer the terms of the endowment. There is no doubt that the deed of 1858 is inconsistent with the alleged anterior endowment, and that since 1858 the parties have acted on the deed of that year.

I think I must hold that prior to the deed of 1858 there was no endowment. In this conclusion I agree with the Registrar. Does the deed of 1858 create an endowment? The first paragraph of the deed recites the partition of the moveable property of the two brothers. The second and third paras. are as follows: "That the said Ram Chunder Doss, his family and descendants, shall alone occupy and live and reside in the said house and premises No. 19, Babarom Seal's Lane in Mullungah aforesaid, and shall continue to do so for ever as permanent tenants to the said ancestral idol called 'Muddun Mohunjee,' paying for the same as hereinafter mentioned the rent at the rate of Company's Rupees Five per month, commencing from the first day of the present month of Magh in the Bengalee year One thousand two hundred and sixty-four, and the ground-rent and house-tax, including the expenses for the repairs of the said last-mentioned house and premises, shall be paid and borne by him the said Ram Chunder Doss and his descendants."

That the said Nobin Chunder Doss, his family and descendants, shall in like manner occupy and live and reside in the house [524] and premises No. 10, Carra Doss's Lane in Mullungah aforesaid, and shall continue to do so for ever as perpetual tenants of the said ancestral deity called 'Muddun Mohunjee,' paying for the same as hereinafter mentioned the rent at the rate of Company's Rs. 5 per month, commencing from the said first day of the present month of Magh One thousand two hundred and sixty-four, and the ground-rent and house-tax, including the expenses for the repairs of the said last-mentioned house and premises, shall be paid and borne by the said Nobin Chunder Doss and his descendants."

These are the two houses said to be endowed.

The 4th paragraph recites the payment of Rs. 1,000 for the purpose of adding buildings to the house No. 10, Carra Doss's Lane, that sum being the difference in value between the two houses.

The 5th and 6th paragraphs are as follows: "That the said Ram Chunder Doss and Nobin Chunder Doss respectively, and each of their heirs and representatives, will and shall perform the said worship of their said ancestral deity called 'Muddun Mohunjee,' each doing so turn by turn for the space of one year, the said Ram Chunder Doss doing so first, commencing from the first day of the present month of Magh One thousand two hundred and sixty-four, and the said Nobin Chunder Doss doing so in the following year, and the said Ram Chunder Doss doing so the next following year, the said Nobin Chunder Doss the then next following year and so on year by year, and for the purpose of such worship the party or the heirs and representatives of the party, whose turn it shall be to perform the same, shall be at liberty to take and keep with him and them the said idol, together with all jewels and other furniture belonging to the said idol to his usual place of abode as aforesaid during the year of his own turn, and in the event of the party, or the representatives of the party whose year or turn it shall be for him to perform the said worship, not performing the same, it shall be optional to the other party or his representatives to perform the same during that year at the expense of the defaulter."

"That each of them, the said Ram Chunder Doss and Nobin Chunder Doss respectively, and their and each of their heirs [525] and representatives, shall, during his and their own turn of worship, apply himself and themselves towards the charges and expenses of such worship as aforesaid, the said monthly rents of the above-mentioned two several houses and premises payable by each of them and his heirs and representatives as aforesaid, together with the additional sum of Company's Rupees Five per mensem to be paid during his and their own turn of worship out of his and their own pocket, and in case any surplus shall remain in the hands of the said parties of the first and second parts, or their heirs or representatives after defraying charges and expenses attendant on the daily worship of the said idol, or for the periodical religious ceremonies thereof throughout the year during his and their turn of worship, the same shall be applied towards the making of some property or other of the said idol."

There then come mutual releases.

I think this deed does not create an endowment or a charge of any kind. It is only an attempt to tie up the property for the benefit of the heirs of the brothers. The Rs. 5 a month is called rent, but this is merely a name. It is not a rent charge. The deed itself (para. 5) provides the remedy in case of non-payment of this so-called rent. The ordinary remedies for the recovery of a rent charge are therefore excluded.

The house is not given to the idol. There is no valid gift of the house to any one. The Rs. 5 a month is not payable by the occupier of the house. It is only payable by the mortgagor and his descendants.

The cases of Rajendar Dutt v. Sham Chund Miller (1), and Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (2), relied upon by Mr. Kennedy are distinguishable from the present case. In the former of those cases there was an express gift to the idol, and in the latter there was an express charge in favour of the idol.

The next question is whether, having come to the above conclusions, I must still refuse to force the title on the purchaser.

At page 388 of the last edition of Fry on Specific Performance, the cases in which a Court would consider a title [526] doubtful are summarized. The only two which can have any application here are numbers 1 and 4. These are:—

(1) That there is a reasonable decent probability of litigation; and

(4) Where the title depends on the construction and legal operation of some ill-expressed and inartificial instrument, and the Court holds the conclusion it arrives at to be open to reasonable doubt in some other Court.

I do not see that there is any reasonable probability of litigation. No one seems to have disputed the mortgage or to have asserted any claim on behalf of the idol. I do not think that any Court could have a reasonable doubt as to the construction of this document. There is in it no trace of a gift or charge in favour of the idol.

In the result I must hold the title to be a good one. As the state of the title has only been disclosed by the enquiry, the purchaser must have his costs up to and including the Registrar's report.

These will be paid by the plaintiff and added to his claim. The purchaser must pay the plaintiff's costs of the exceptions and of the hearing before me. The rest of the plaintiff's costs must be added to his claim.

Application dismissed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PROPOSED SUIT OF COLLETT AND ANOTHER v. ARMSTRONG. [2nd June, 1887.]

Leave to sue—Small Cause Court (Presidency Towns) Act (XV of 1882), s. 18—Discretion, Exercise of—Refusal of leave to sue—Jurisdiction—Defendant residing outside jurisdiction.

A tradesman in business in Calcutta sued his debtor, a resident at Lucknow, to recover a sum of Rs. 23 for goods sold in Calcutta and forwarded by the East Indian Railway Company for delivery at Lucknow.

The plaintiff applied under s. 18 of Act XV of 1882 for leave to sue the defendant in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes. The Court refused to grant such leave, apparently on the ground that the defendant was living [527] at a long distance from Calcutta and that the suit was one for a small amount.

It was held that, in refusing to grant such leave, the Judge of the Small Cause Court had not exercised the discretion vested in him under s. 18, and that the case was one in which the leave applied for should have been granted.

[R., 18 C. 144 (146).]

In this case the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was directed to send up the records of a certain proposed suit, in which leave to sue under s. 18 of the Small Cause Court Act had been refused.

On the 6th May, 1887, an application was made on behalf of Messrs. Collett and Bridge, partners in the firm of Kellner & Co., for leave to sue one C. M. Armstrong, a Sub-Deputy Opium Agent residing at Lucknow, for goods sold and delivered, amounting in value to Rs. 23-7. The goods were ordered by Armstrong in Calcutta by a letter addressed to Messrs. Kellner & Co. in Calcutta, and the same were forwarded at his request by rail to Lucknow. The application, as usual, set out the fact that the defendant was then residing at Lucknow, that the plaintiffs were in Calcutta, and that it would be difficult and expensive for the plaintiffs to procure the attendance of their witnesses in the Court, within the jurisdiction of which the defendant was then residing. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court refused the application without recording his reasons in writing, but orally made the following statement: "That, since the case of Wallis v. Taylor (1), and having regard to the great caution enjoined on this Court by the High Court in the case of granting leave (not refusing it), I have thought it proper not to give leave to sue defendants long distances off for comparatively small sums of money."

The plaintiff thereupon moved the High Court and obtained an order that the records be sent for.

Mr. Woodroffe, in support of the rule, contended that the Judge of the Small Cause Court had in reality exercised no discretion at all, or, if he had, he had exercised it wrongly; that the points that he had considered were those of distance and the smallness of the amount in suit, both of which were considerations foreign to the Small Cause Court Act; that he had misconstrued the case of [528] Wallis v. Taylor (1) in considering that he was to take great caution in granting leave to sue, but not so in refusing leave; that in s. 18 of the Act the words "and leave of the Court has for reasons to be recorded in writing" ought to be construed as a statement whether or no the cause of action arose either wholly or in part within the jurisdiction; that it was never intended to give the Court power to refuse leave, if the cause of action has arisen either wholly or in part within the jurisdiction; that the words "giving jurisdiction" in the Charter were similar, omitting the words "for reasons to be recorded by him in writing." [TREVELYAN, J.—Is there any doubt that the High Court has discretionary powers in granting leave under the Charter?]—The only cases on the subject are Radha Bibee v. Mucksoodun Doss (1) and Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub (2); that, if there was a discretion, it was clear that it had not been exercised; and when discretion has not been exercised at all, that this Court would have power under s. 622 to supervise the order refusing leave—see Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (3) as to the revisional powers of the High Court; that under the Specific Relief Act it was discretionary to grant relief, and that discretion had under s. 22 of that Act to be exercised on legal principles; that as to the kind of discretion which ought to be used, the case of Kalikissen Tagore v. Golam Ali (4) was an example; that as a further example of the meaning of the word "discretion" as applied to a question whether an appeal lay as to costs—see Jones v. Curling (5), in which case Cooper v. Whittingham (6) is cited, which lays down that in such cases, where there is no omission or neglect, the Court has no discretion in disallowing costs; that, therefore, if a Judge finds that the cause of action has arisen either wholly or in part within the jurisdiction, he is bound to grant leave to sue, unless there are other reasons to the contrary, and, if so, such reasons must be recorded; that under the old Small Cause Court Act of 1864 a suitor had a right to have his case tried if the cause of action arose [629] within the jurisdiction; that, although the wording of the present Act was slightly different and somewhat against me if read according to the punctuation placed in the section, yet there is no good reason for supposing that the Legislature intended to deprive suitors of a right they had under the old Act; that, however, the case of Burdwan, Maharani of v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (7) lays down that Courts are not to rely on punctuation in construing Statutes. [TREVELYAN, J.—Where a Judge refuses on account of the smallness of amount you could file your suit in the High Court, but that could never have been intended, as the Small Cause Court was established for the purpose of the recovery of small debts; that, I think, shows that the amount in suit has nothing to do with the question; what do you consider is the meaning of the word "cognizable" in s. 18?] Mr. Woodroffe contended that it meant any suit other than a suit mentioned in s. 19, and that the word had been discussed in Wallis v. Taylor (8) although with reference to another Act, and further submitted that the form in which the order passed under the rule should run would be to direct that the order refusing leave be rescinded and for the Court to pass an order admitting the suit.

No one appeared on the other side.

ORDER.

TREVELYAN, J.—In this case I am asked to exercise the power given to this Court by s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code and to set aside an order made by Mr. Millett, the Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court, refusing to permit the plaintiffs to institute this suit in the Calcutta Small Cause Court.

The suit which the plaintiffs sought to institute was for the purpose of recovering the sum of Rs. 23-7, the price of goods sold and delivered to the defendant in Calcutta. The defendant is residing at Lucknow. The goods were sold to the defendant in Calcutta, and were delivered to the East Indian Railway in Calcutta for transport to the defendant.

The 18th section of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act of 1882 provides that, subject to certain exceptions (which do not apply to this case), "the Small Cause Court shall have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature, when the amount [530] or value of the subject-matter does not exceed two thousand rupees; and the cause of action has arisen, either wholly or in part, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, and the leave of the Court has, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, been given before the institution of this suit."

Mr. Woodroffe, who appears for the plaintiffs, contends that this section gives no discretion to the Judge of the Small Cause Court, but I do not agree with this contention. The provision in this Act is similar to the provision in s. 12 of the High Court Charter, and the word "leave" in that section of the Charter has always been construed as giving a discretion to the Court. It is true that in very rare instances has the High Court, when leave to sue has been applied for, refused such leave; but although I know of no instances in my own experience, I believe that occasionally leave has been refused, and it has always been assumed that the High Court has this discretion. In the case of Wallis v. Taylor (1) Mr. Justice Pigot refers to the Small Cause Court having a discretion under s. 18. This case is, I think, an authority on this point.

The question here is, has Mr. Millett exercised his discretion or has he not? In consequence of statements made by Mr. Adkin in the affidavit, which formed the grounds of this application, Mr. Millett has very properly sent up an explanation of what occurred. In that explanation he does not say expressly why in this particular case he refused leave to sue, but he denies the suggestion that he always refuses leave in cases under Rs. 100, and furthermore says that what he told Mr. Adkin was that, "since the case of Wallis v. Taylor (1), and having regard to the great caution enjoined on the Small Cause Court by the High Court in the case of granting leave (not of refusing it) he had thought it proper not to give leave to sue defendants long distances off for comparatively small sums of money." As I understand it, Mr. Millett applied to this case a rule which he seems to have framed from Wallis v. Taylor, viz., that leave should not be given to sue defendants long distances off for [531] comparatively small sums of money. It appears that Mr. Millett has not acted upon the rule suggested by Mr. Adkin, namely, never to give leave in cases under Rs. 100; but Mr. Millett himself shows that he has made a rule never to give leave to sue defendants long distances off for small sums of money.

I do not think that there is anything in the judgment in the case of Wallis v. Taylor to justify Mr. Millett in framing such a rule. All that Mr. Justice Pigot said was: "We think it desirable to add that the discretion of the Small Cause Courts in giving leave to sue under s. 18 of Act XV of 1882 is one that ought to be only very cautiously exercised in cases such as the one before us." These expressions suggest no such rule.

(1) 13 C. 37.
as that which Mr. Millett has framed for himself. All that Mr. Justice Pigot seems to have meant by those observations is to repeat what was said by Mr. Justice Wilson in his judgment in the same case, where he says: "I wish to add that, in my judgment, when an application is made for leave to sue a military officer or other person compelled by his duty to be in a distant place, the discretion entrusted to the Court ought to be exercised with great care and discrimination." (1). In the case of Wallis v. Taylor the defendant was an officer doing duty with his regiment at Quetta. I was one of the Judges who sat with Mr. Justice Pigot in the trial of that case, and I certainly understood his judgment to be simply repeating the warning which was given by Mr. Justice Wilson. If Mr. Millett had had the opportunity of seeing Mr. Justice Wilson's judgment he would probably have taken a different view of Mr. Justice Pigot's observations.

I think that where, in a case of this kind, discretion is given to a Court, it is necessary that the Court should look into the circumstances of each case and should not frame for itself any rules. If a hard rule is to be made, it is for the Legislature to make it and not for the Court. The fact that the Legislature has not made any rule shows that no general rule is to be made. The Court should look into each case by itself, take the circumstances of such case into consideration, and see that the section is not made a means of oppression.

The inappropriateness of the rule which Mr. Millett seems to have framed for himself is, I think, apparent. One of the objects of the existence of the Small Cause Court is to collect small debts for Calcutta tradesmen; yet according to Mr. Millett's rule the smallness of the debt is a reason for excluding the jurisdiction where the defendant lives afar off. Apart from the inconvenience which a tradesman must undergo in having to follow his debtor to a distant place, the costs which he must necessarily incur in doing so, and which are irrecoverable even in case of success, will frequently far exceed the amount of the debt. Thus there would be a denial of justice even in cases where the whole cause of action arose in Calcutta, and the defendant was, at the time he purchased the goods, residing in Calcutta.

I should have thought—I do not put it as a proposition of law, but as a principle of fairness and as a circumstance to be taken inot consideration by a Judge in exercising his discretion—that where goods are ordered of a Calcutta tradesman it is more reasonable that he should be allowed the use of a Calcutta tribunal than that he should be sent at great expense and inconvenience in pursuit of his debtor. Comparatively speaking the inconvenience to the debtor is small, and though there may be some inconvenience to a few alleged debtors who dispute the claims against them, this inconvenience is of trifling importance when compared with the evil of closing the doors of the Small Cause Court to Calcutta tradesman.

Before the passing of the present Act a tradesman who sought to recover a debt under Rs. 500, and whose debtor did not reside in Calcutta, could not proceed in the Small Cause Court, but, if the cause of action or a part thereof arose in Calcutta, he might sue in the High Court. Between the passing of the Act of 1864 and the passing of the present Act,

(1) The case of Wallis v. Taylor originally came before Garth, C.J., and Wilson, J, who disagreed and no final opinion was given, the case being then referred to a Bench of three Judges by whom the case was eventually decided. The above quotation is from the recorded opinion of Wilson, J, when the case came before himself and the late Chief Justice.—Ed.
if the cause of action were in Calcutta, a creditor for over Rs. 500 and less than Rs. 1,000 could sue in the Small Cause Court; thus the [533] creditor for the lesser debt was compelled to come to the higher and more expensive tribunal (compare s. 28 of Act IX of 1850 and s. 2 of Act XXVI of 1804). For, amongst other purposes, that of remediying this hardship the new Act was passed; yet Mr. Millett's rule entirely negatives this remedial effect of the new Act.

I do not think that in this case Mr. Millett has exercised any discretion at all. He has simply applied to this case the rule that I have referred to, and has not considered the circumstances of this case.

I must set aside his order refusing leave to sue.

Under the circumstances I think it better that I should also, under the powers given to me by s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, give leave to sue in the Small Cause Court. I accordingly give such leave.

KHJAJAH ASSENOOLLAJOO v. SOLOMON AND ANOTHER.*

[9th May, 1887.]

Security for Costs—Poverty—Speculative Suit.

The mere fact that a plaintiff is a poor man, and has parted with a portion of his interest in the subject-matter of the suit for the purpose of obtaining funds to carry on the suit, is no sufficient ground to ask that security for the costs of the suit may be required of him; it is otherwise where he is not the real litigant, but a mere puppet in the hands of others.

[R. 1882-1896, Vol. 11, 279 (280); 18 C.W.N. 11 (121)=20 Ind. Cas.
703 (704),]

This was an application on notice made on behalf, of Bibee Solomon for an order that the plaintiff be directed to give security for the payment of all costs incurred and to be incurred in the suit of Khajah Assenoollaajoo v. Bibee Solomon, and that all proceedings should be stayed until such security be given.

The affidavit supporting the application alleged (a) that the plaintiff was a permanent resident of Cashmere, and was merely a temporary resident in Calcutta for the purpose of bringing this suit; (b) that the plaintiff did not carry on any business in British India nor was he possessed of any property, moveable or immoveable, in British India; (c) that the suit was a speculative one carried on for the benefit, amongst others, of Rohim Bux, Aga Hossein Ally, Aga Ekram Ally and Gobind [534] Chunder Doss; that the plaintiff had in 1882 assigned over to Abdoor Rohim a moiety; of all his claim in the said suit and of all property that he might recover under the decree in the said suit in consideration of being advanced funds for the purpose of carrying on the said suit; that on the failure in business of the said Abdoor Rohim the plaintiff had on 11th December 1883 entered into a fresh agreement of a similar nature with Aga Hossein Ally, Aga Ekram Ally and Gobind Chunder Doss, and that monies had been advanced to the plaintiff under this agreement; that the plaintiff had on the 21st of April 1884 executed a mortgage in favour of the persons last mentioned in pursuance of the agreement of the 11th December 1883; that at the present time there were several decrees out against the plaintiff remaining unsatisfied.

In reply the plaintiff alleged that he had been a permanent resident in Calcutta since 1880, and was still residing there; that he carried on business in shawls in Calcutta, and was possessed of certain household furniture and stock-in-trade in his residence at Calcutta in addition to certain property, moveable and immoveable, to which he was entitled under a decree of the 27th August 1883. He admitted the agreement with Abdoor Rahim, and that he had received from him Rs. 1,700 but alleged that he had repaid to him Rs. 1,000 out of such sum; further admitting the second agreement of the 11th December 1883, and the mortgage of 21st April 1884, and a further assignment of a 1-anna share to one Petumber Chowdhuri, but alleged that he still has a 7-anna interest in the estate, the subject of the suit, and denied that the suit was a speculative one.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. O'Kinealy in support of the application, cited Ram Coomar Koonoodoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1) as showing that when a plaintiff sues for another person, security should be taken.

ORDER.

[535] TREVELYAN, J.—In this application the defendant seeks to compel the plaintiff to give security for the costs of this suit.

The first ground is that he does not reside in British India.

Although he is a native of Cashmere, he seems to have been for some time resident in British India, and it does not appear that he has been out of British India for a long time. This ground, I think, clearly fails.

The other ground is that he has disposed of a portion of his interest in the suit, that he is a pauper, and that the suit is a speculative one brought at the instance of and for the benefit of others.

There are a good many matters alleged which go to the merits of the suit, and to which I need not refer in dealing with this application.

In the 43rd paragraph of his affidavit Mahomed Ghouse states that in the year 1882 the plaintiff entered into an agreement with one Abdoor Rohim and others for the purpose of obtaining from them advances from time to time in order to carry on a suit referred to in that affidavit, and to meet his personal expenses during the pendency of the said suit and as remuneration for such advances he assigned over to Abdoor Rohim and others a moiety of all his claims in such suit, and of all property that he might recover under the decree in that suit. The plaintiff admits this agreement, and states that he owes Rs. 700 under it.

It is then alleged that on the 11th of December, 1883, the plaintiff entered into a fresh agreement of a similar nature with Aga Hossein Ali, Aga Ekram Ali, and Gobind Chunder Das, and that on the 21st of April, 1884, a mortgage was executed in favour of those persons.

The plaintiff admits this agreement and mortgage, but points out that he has still got a seven-anna interest in the estate, the subject-matter of this suit.

(1) 2 C. 233.  (2) 7 M. P.C. 344.  (3) 8 Scott. 557.
The 46th paragraph of Mahomed Gouse's affidavit contains an allegation which is denied and is unsupported. I do not think I can act upon it.

The 47th paragraph states that the plaintiff's landlord had to institute against him three suits, for small sums of rent.

The plaintiff states that he has satisfied these decrees, but he does not state when he satisfied them. As he satisfied another suit for rent, which is referred to in the 48th paragraph of Mahomed Gouse's affidavit, after notice of this application had been given, in all probability he satisfied the three decrees also after notice had been given.

It appears from the affidavit of Mahomed Gouse that the defendant has been unable to realize from the plaintiff the costs of an interlocutory application which he was directed to pay.

There is no doubt, I think, that the plaintiff is a poor man, probably without any means at all, and that he is being assisted by others in obtaining funds for the purpose of carrying on this litigation, and that he has parted with a portion of his interest. I do not think that the case goes further than this. Mr. Bonnerjee for the defendant relied on some observations made by the learned Judge who delivered the judgment of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Ram Coomar Koondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee. There Sir Montague Smith says (I. L. R., 2 Calc., 259):

"It is the ordinary practice, if the plaintiff is suing for another, to require security for costs, and to stay proceedings until it is given. The new plaintiffs were fully aware, during the pendency of the former suit, of the arrangement between the McQueens and the defendant, but instead of applying for security for costs, they petitioned the Court to make him a co-plaintiff under s. 73 of Act VIII." And later on in the judgment he says:—"It has been a misfortune to the plaintiffs that security was not obtained for the costs in the course of the former suit."

These observations were not necessary for the purpose of the decision, but I take it that there can be no doubt, apart from that decision, that this Court has power to require security for costs, if it finds that the plaintiff is not the real litigant, but that he is only a puppet in the hands of others. Sir Montague Smith did not, as I understand him, intend to apply to this country any principle in this matter different from that adopted by the Courts in England. As I understand the English decisions the Courts do not require security, because the plaintiff is a pauper or because he is a mere trustee, but they do require security when they find that he is not the real litigant. As Sir Montague Smith puts it, if the plaintiff is suing for another, security is required.

The real question is whether the plaintiff is suing for himself or for another. In this case the plaintiff has a substantial interest in the suit, and, as far as I can see, the suit has been instituted by him on his own behalf. I must on the affidavits find this as a fact, and I must hold that this suit is really the plaintiff's suit, and that his name is not used by others for their own purposes. He is, I think, suing for himself and not for any one else.

The application must be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

JAGADAMBA DEVI (Plaintiff) v. PROTAP GHOSE and OTHERS (Defendants).* [21st May, 1887.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), s. 149—Suit by third party claiming rent paid into Court in rent suit, Nature of—Title Suit—Institution Stamp.

A suit by a third person under cl. (3) of s. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not a title suit and need not be stamped as such.

Per Tottenham, J.—Such suit is in the nature of a suit for an injunction under the Specific Relief Act or else a declaratory suit.

[Expl., 17 C. 829 (831); R., 11 C.W.N. 389 (382).]

This case was referred by the District Judge of Birbhum under the provisions of s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code for the decision of the High Court.

The facts were as follows: In a suit for rent by one Rash Bihari Mitra against Protap Ghose, and Bishum Laha before the Munsiff of Dubrajapore the defendants alleging that the rent claimed, namely Rs. 2-11-0, was due to one Jagadamba Devi, paid it into Court under the first clause of s. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885).

Notice under the second clause of that section having been served on Jagadamba Devi she filed a suit within three months [538] against all the parties to the rent suit, in which she claimed the amount deposited and a further amount of As. 8, which she alleged to have fallen due subsequent to the period covered by the rent suit.

The Munsiff, considering that the "suit" referred to in the third para. of s. 147 of the Act was a "title suit," ordered Jagadamba Devi's plaint to be returned in order that it might be so amended as to render it a plaint in a title suit, and the court-fee increased accordingly.

Jagadamba Devi did not comply with that order, but filed a petition contesting the Munsiff's view of the law. The Munsiff then directed that, in accordance with his previous order, the plaint should be returned to the petitioner in order that it might be filed within four days, with a stamp calculated on the valuation of the suit regarded as a "title suit." This order was dated 12th January, 1887.

Instead, however, of complying with such order, Jagadamba Devi filed an appeal against it. The District Judge in referring the case stated that, in so far as the court-fee was concerned, he did not think that any right of appeal existed as there was no "order of rejection," but that, so far as the order was to be regarded as an order returning the plaint for amendment an appeal would lie to him under cl. (b) of s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code and in his letter of reference he stated his reason for referring the case as follows:—

"In order to decide it I must determine of what nature the suit contemplated by s. 149 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, is, whether, e.g., it is (a) a suit to declare the plaintiff's right to receive the particular sum deposited, or (b) a suit to declare the plaintiff's title as landlord as against the plaintiff in the rent suit in respect of the lands comprising the holding, the rent of which was sued for therein.

*Civil Reference No. 5 A of 1887, made by J. Whitmore, Esq., Judge of Birbhoom, dated the 31st of March, 1887.
"There is, I believe, no express authority on the subject, but I should be disposed to think that, as the question to be tried is one of title, the consequential relief should be calculated rather on the value of the land than upon a year or two's rent.

"But the point is new, not free from doubt, and likely to recur very frequently. I would, therefore, solicit the opinion of the Honourable Court on the following question: 'Of what nature is the suit contemplated' by s. 149 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, and how should it be valued?"

"I should add that, although exception might perhaps be taken to Jagadamba Devi's plaint on the ground of misjoinder, I have refrained from considering the point, as it is not directly before me."

Baboo Hari Mohun Chuckrabati appeared on behalf of Jagadamba Devi.

No one appeared for the defendants.

The opinions of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) were as follows:

OPINIONS.

TOTTENHAM, J.— The suit in question under s. 149 (3) Bengal Tenancy Act, is not a title suit, and need not be stamped as such. It is in the nature of a suit for an injunction under the Specific Relief Act, or else of a declaratory suit.

NORRIS, J.— I agree that the suit in question is not a title suit. I do not think it is necessary to express any opinion as to what sort of suit it is.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Fekoo Mhato v. The Empress. [21st April, 1887.]

It is not necessary that the English memorandum referred to in para. 3 of s. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be made in respect of confessions recorded under s. 164, as the manner in which such a confession is to be recorded under the provisions of that section is fully set out in the first two paras. of s. 364.

A confession of an accused person was recorded before a Deputy Magistrate by one of his clerks, under the provisions of s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code while the case was under investigation by the police. No English memorandum of the nature referred to in s. 364 was made by the Deputy Magistrate. A further confession was recorded by the Magistrate under the provisions of s. 364 while the case was being heard before him. Both confessions were recorded in narrative form and the questions and answers were not taken down. At the trial before the Sessions Judge both confessions were put in evidence and no evidence was given under the provisions of s. 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that the accused duly made the statements recorded. The accused was convicted mainly on the strength of the confessions.

Criminal Reference No. 8 of 1887, made by, and Appeal No. 163 of 1887 against the order passed by J. Whitmore, Esq., Sessions Judge of Birbhum, dated the 17th of March, 1887.

Held, upon the authority of the decision in Titu Maya v. The Queen (1), that as the accused was not prejudiced by the questions and answers not being recorded, it was unnecessary for the Judge to take evidence under s. 533, and that the conviction based on the confessions must be upheld.

[F., 9 C.L.J. 55-3 Ind. Cas. 625; R., 21 B. 495 (500); U.B.R. (1897-1901) 47 (50) (Cr.); 4 Bom. L.R. 785.]

In this case the accused was charged with the murder of his sister and her child. The evidence against him consisted mainly of two confessions made by him—the first on the 22nd of November before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and the second on the 15th December before the Magistrate during the enquiry into the case. The first confession was recorded in Kaithi by a clerk in the presence of the Deputy Magistrate, in the form of a narrative and without the questions being recorded, and moreover no memorandum in English was written or signed by the Magistrate and appended to it as required by s. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The second confession was recorded in the narrative form, but had the requisite memorandum. The other evidence and facts of the case are not material for the purpose of this report, the sole question being as to whether the two confessions were rightly admitted in evidence by the Sessions Judge. The accused was convicted and sentenced to death in respect of the murder of his sister, and to transportation for life for the murder of her child, and consequently the Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court under the provisions of s. 374 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused also appealed.

The grounds upon which it was suggested that the two confessions were not admissible in evidence are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

[541] No one appeared for the appellant.

Mr. Kilby, for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ghose, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This case has been referred to this Court by the Sessions Judge of Birbhum under s. 374 of the Criminal Procedure Code for confirmation of the sentence of death passed by him on the prisoner. The prisoner has also appealed against the conviction and sentence. He has been convicted of two murders—that of his sister named Basseja, and of her child. The sentence of death has been passed in respect of the murder of Basseja, and in respect of the other murder the prisoner has been sentenced to transportation for life. He appeals against both convictions.

The case depends, we may say, mainly upon the confessions put in evidence in the Sessions Court. There were two confessions made by the prisoner before the Magistrate. The first was apparently under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code while the case was still under investigation by the police. This confession was made on the 22nd of November last. The other confession was made in prisoner’s examination before the Magistrate during the inquiry after the case had been sent up by the police. This examination was under s. 364. The examination and the confession under s. 164 have the defect that the questions put to the prisoner were not recorded. The answers were given in narrative form. As regards the examination under s. 364

(1) 8 C. 618 (note).
there is no other defect. In that case the Magistrate made a memorandum in English at the time the examination was recorded, and the proper certificate was signed by him. As regards the confession recorded under s. 164 we find that there was no English memorandum made by the Magistrate, but the certificate required by that section was duly recorded. Both the confessions were admitted in evidence in the Sessions Court, and the conviction is based mainly upon them. Now s. 533 provides that "if any Court before which a confession or other statement of an accused person recorded under s. 164 or s. 364 is tendered in evidence finds that the provisions of such section have not been fully complied with by the Magistrate [542] recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded." We have had some little doubt as to whether the confession recorded under s. 164 was admissible without the evidence referred to under s. 533, because there was no English memorandum made at the time that it was recorded. But upon examination of the section we think that it was not necessary that any such English memorandum should be made in respect of that confession. Section 164 provides that such confession shall be recorded and signed in the manner provided by s. 364. Section 364 sets out the manner in which examinations of accused persons should be recorded. It appears to us that the manner in which such examinations should be recorded is fully set out in the first two paragraphs of that section. The provision for an English memorandum is contained in the 3rd paragraph. That paragraph provides that the Magistrate or Judge shall be bound "to make a memorandum thereof in the language of the Court or in English, if he is sufficiently acquainted with the latter language; and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Judge with his own hand, and shall be annexed to the record." This shows that the memorandum is not itself the record of the examination. What is tendered in evidence is the examination or confession recorded in the manner provided by the first two paragraphs of s. 364. The confession of the 22nd November was recorded in the manner prescribed excepting, as we have said, that the questions, put were not committed to writing. But that this omission is not fatal where the accused is not prejudiced by it is shown by a Full Bench decision in Titu Maya v. The Queen, reported in a note to the case of In the matter of the petition of Munshi Sheikh (1). The case itself was decided by a Division Bench of this Court, but the note to it contains the Full Bench decision referred to by us. That being so, we do not think that it was necessary for the Judge in the present case to take evidence under s. 533 in respect of either the confession under s. 164 or the examination under s. 364. And that these confessions were substantially true we think there is no [543] reasonable cause to doubt. The interval between the two was more than three weeks, during which time the prisoner was in custody. But on the 25th December when examined during the inquiry he fully confirmed the statement made by him on the previous 22nd November, and stated that it was all true. The circumstances under which the murder was discovered and suspicion fell upon the prisoner are set out in the judgment of the Sessions Court, and were such that we think it highly probable that the prisoner, a simple peasant, would suppose it to be useless to deny his guilt and would make a full confession. There seems to us no reason to discredit the other evidence in the case, which evidence shows that the prisoner followed up his confession by pointing out the precise scene of the murder, and by pointing out and giving up various articles which had been in the possession of the deceased, and some of which the prisoner had concealed after her death.

In the Sessions Court the prisoner retracted his confession, and told two stories in connection with it. One was that the confession recorded was not made by him at all, and the other that it was extorted from him by torture, the torture alleged being branding with a hot iron on the arm. Neither of these stories we think can be believed. The first story that he did not make the confession is absolutely negatived by the Magistrate's certificate. As to the other story it is simply incredible that the police sending in a prisoner to have his confession recorded should have branded him with a hot iron in such a manner that the fresh marks would be conspicuous. Besides that this story of the torture was never told by the prisoner till he was on his trial in the Sessions Court. We find therefore no reason to doubt the truth in the main of the confessions made by the prisoner upon which his conviction is chiefly based. In addition to the confession there is evidence to show that the prisoner was the last person with whom the deceased was seen alive, and upon his trial in the Sessions Court when examined he admitted what he had at one time denied, that the deceased came to his house, and that he had seen her out of the village, the motive of her removal being [544] the threat on the part of his caste fellows to excommunicate him if he allowed her to continue in his house.

Finding no reason for differing from the Sessions Judge, we must confirm the sentence of death, and dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed and conviction upheld.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

HORENDRAC HemDRA GUPTA Roy AND OTHERS, MINORS, BY THEIR MOTHER AND NEXT FRIEND BUSUNTO KAMARI GUPTA (Plaintiffs) v. AUNOARDI MUNDAL AND ANOTHER (Defendants).*

[4th April, 1887.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 127—Suit for possession by purchaser from sharer in joint family.

Article 127 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 does not apply to a suit where the plaintiff is a stranger who has purchased a share in joint family property from one of the members thereof.

[Rel. upon, 18 C. 642 (646).]

This was a suit to recover possession of a share in a taluk after establishing the right of the plaintiffs thereto. The share in question was alleged to have been purchased by the plaintiff's father from one Chikani by a deed of sale, dated the 1st Cheyt 1280 (13th March, 1874), and to have formed portion of the property of Chikani's husband Baru, and to have been inherited by her on his death. The principle defendant, Aunoardi Mundul, the son of Baru, and step-son of Chikani, contested the suit, claiming the property to be his and in his possession; and impugning the deed of sale as a fraudulent document. He further contended that the suit was barred by limitation.

The plaint was filed on the 23rd January 1885, and in the deed of sale there was an admission that Chikani, the vendor, was not then in possession. The first Court found as a fact and this was not questioned in the lower Appellate Court, that Baru, from whom Chikani was alleged to have inherited, died not later than 1277 B. S., and both the lower Courts found that the plaintiffs [545] had failed to prove that either Chikani had been in possession within 12 years of the date of suit or that they or their father had, at any time, since the date of the deed of sale, acquired possession.

Both Courts, therefore, agreed in dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation, and the first Court went further and found that the deed of sale was not a genuine document and dismissed the suit on the merits.

The plaintiffs preferred this second appeal to the High Court, and it was contended on their behalf that art. 127 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to the case, as the defendant Aunoardi Mundul and Chikani formed members of a joint family, and that consequently the suit was not barred by limitation.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the appellants.
Baboo Mokund Nath Roy, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, J.J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We are of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. The only point urged before us is that the lower Courts are in error in holding that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation, and the learned pleader for the appellants relies upon art. 127 of sch. II of the Limitation Act in support of his contention. We find, however, that in the case of Ram Lakhi v. Durga Charan Sen (1) it has been decided that that article will not apply to a case like the present, where a stranger has purchased the share of a member of a joint family, so that even supposing that the presumption which applies to a Hindu joint family would be applicable to the present case in which the parties are Mahomedans, we think that the contention relied upon by the pleader for the appellants must fail.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Foreign decree—Execution in British India of decrees of Courts of Native States—Evidence—Certified copies of foreign judicial records—Cooch Behar. Execution in British India of decree passed by Courts of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 434—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 86.

A decree of the Court of the Civil Judge of Cooch Behar was sent for execution to the Court of the District Judge of Rungpore. The copy of the record was signed by the Sheristadar instead of by the Judge himself. Upon receipt of the decree by the Subordinate Judge, a notice, under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code, was served on the judgment-debtor, calling on him to show cause why the decree should not be executed, and an order was forthwith issued for the attachment of his property. The judgment-debtor appeared and objected that the copy of the record was not properly certified, and, therefore, that the whole of the execution proceedings were bad. The Subordinate Judge ordered that the record be sent back to the Cooch Behar Court through the District Judge, in order that a certificate might be given in proper form, and directed that the other points raised should be decided after the return of the papers. On appeal it was urged that the order of the Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction, but the District Judge rejected the appeal. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Held, that the Subordinate Judge acted properly in sending the record back to the Cooch Behar Court to be properly certified, and also that he should have set aside the execution proceedings as being altogether void, but as that, formed no portion of the grounds of appeal urged in the lower Appellate Court, the appeal should be dismissed.

Per Norris, J.—Quere.—Whether the notification published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 8th April 1879, signed by the then Deputy Commissioner of Cooch Behar, and stating the mode in which copies of judicial records of the Courts of Cooch Behar are certified as correct copies, and which notification was published after a notification had been published by the Governor-General of India in Council under the provisions of s. 434 of the Civil Procedure Code to the effect that the decrees of the Civil and Revenue Courts of Cooch Behar may be executed in British India as if they had been made [547] by the Courts of British India, was a compliance with the provision of s. 86 of the Indian Evidence Act at a time when there was a representative of the Government of India resident in Cooch Behar.

Per Norris, J.—The notification of the 8th of April, 1879, is now of no use as there is no representative of Her Majesty or the Government of India residing in Cooch Behar, and consequently certified copies of judicial records of that State cannot now be received in evidence in the Courts of British India under the provisions of s. 86 of the Evidence Act.

This was an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Rungpore, refusing to set aside an order of the Subordinate Judge, relating to the execution of a decree passed by the Civil Judge of Cooch Behar which had been sent to the Rungpore Court for execution.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of Mr. Justice Norris.

Baboo Ishwar Chunder Chuckerbutty, for the appellant.

Baboo Kuloda Kinkur Roy, for the respondent.

*Appeal from Order No. 224 of 1886, against the order of J. Whitmore, Esq., Judge of Rungpore, dated the 5th of April 1886, affirming the order of Baboo Dwarka Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 2nd of April 1886.
The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

Norris, J.—The facts of this case appear to be as follows:

The decree-holder, respondent, obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor, appellant, in one of the Courts of the Maharajah of Cooch Behar on the 12th of September, 1874. Subsequently the decree-holder applied that the decree might be sent for execution to the District Court of Rungpore. This application was granted, and a copy of the judicial record of the suit was sent to the Rungpore Court, and reached there on the 6th of February, 1886.

It is now admitted in argument at the Bar that the copy of the judicial record in the suit was defective, inasmuch as it did not “purport to be certified in the manner certified by the representative of the Government of India resident in Cooch Behar to be the manner commonly in use in that country for the certification of the copies of judicial records.” The decree was made in the Court of the Civil Judge of Cooch Behar, and the copy of the record should have been signed by the Judge, his official designation being added below his signature [548] and the seal of the Court affixed; instead of this it was signed by the Sheristadar.

On the 8th February 1886, a notice, under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was issued, calling upon the judgment-debtor to show cause on the 20th of February why the decree should not be executed, and on the same day, before he had had any opportunity of appearing to show cause, an order was issued for the attachment of his property. On the 20th of February he appeared and raised several objections to the execution of the decree. The only one of these objections which it is necessary to notice is the following. “The decree contains order for realization of the money from the mortgaged property only, and it contains no order for realization of the money in any other manner, hence the decree-holder is not competent to sell by auction any other property of your petitioner than the mortgaged one covered by the decree.”

On the 1st of March to which day the case had been adjourned, the judgment-debtor appeared and raised further objections. In the first place he said that the copy record was not properly certified, and therefore the whole of the execution proceedings which had been taken against him were invalid, and in the second place he said that the plaintiff had no right to have his property attached on the 8th of February until he had had an opportunity on the 20th of February of appearing and showing cause why the decree against him should not be executed. The case was then postponed to the 2nd of April, on which day it came on before the Subordinate Judge. In the course of his judgment the Subordinate Judge says. “The judgment debtor takes several objections against the execution. His first point is that the decree is incapable of execution, because the Governor-General in Council has not by notification made the declaration specified in s. 434 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plea fails, because such a declaration was made by the Governor-General in Council (High Court Circular Order Book of 1881, page 269). Then it is contended that the certificate of the copy of judicial records of the Cooch Behar Court being a true copy is not in correct form. I am bound to say that the objection, though technical, has weight, and as it is a question of form [549] which may again come up before the Court, it would be better that the attention of the Cooch Behar authorities be drawn to it. The Government of India, in pursuance of the provisions of s. 86 of the Indian Evidence Act and s. 434 of the Code of Civil Procedure, have prescribed that a copy of the judicial record being prepared, and the words 'true copy' written at the top of the Copy, it shall be signed by the presiding officer (or in the case of the Deputy Commissioner's Court, by the Head Clerk and Sheristadar), of the Court in which the original document is recorded, his official designation being added below his signature, and the seal of the Court affixed. The decree in the present case was made by the Court of the Civil Judge of Cooch Behar and not by the Deputy Commissioner. The certificate is signed not by the presiding officer of the Court but by a gentleman who, from the official designation, appears to be the Sheristadar. Hence this Court cannot consider the copy of the decree to be a true copy, and it must be sent back to the Civil Judge of Cooch Behar through the District Judge, in order that a certificate in proper form may be given. The other points will be decided after the papers come back."

I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge acted quite properly in sending the record back to Cooch Behar to be properly certified, and I am also of opinion that he ought to have set aside the execution proceedings as being altogether void. Against the order of the Subordinate Judge the judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge, and at the hearing of the appeal, whatever he may have urged in his grounds of appeal, he only took one point, viz., that the Subordinate Judge had no power to send the record back for correction. He does not appear to have argued before the District Judge that the execution proceedings were void ab initio, and ought to have been set aside, nor did he complain of the Subordinate Judge for not deciding upon the abovementioned ground of objection of the 20th February. The District Judge dismissed the appeal. His judgment is as follows: "I do not see how a Court, which receives from another Court a legal proceeding in which there is an inadvertent mistake (which is purely one of form) upon the part of the latter Court, and sends it back with the suggestion that the error should be corrected, [550] acts without jurisdiction. The appeal is rejected." Now it is plain that the only point urged before the District Judge was that the Subordinate Judge had acted without jurisdiction in sending the record back to Cooch Behar. That judgment, which was delivered on the 5th April 1886, appears to be perfectly right, although I do not agree with the District Judge when he says that the error upon the record was "one purely of form." It is against the order of the 5th of April 1886, and only against that order, that this appeal is brought, and I am, therefore, constrained to say that the appeal fails.

But there is still a matter of very considerable importance which remains to be noticed. Section 434 of the Civil Procedure Code says: "The Governor-General in Council may, from time to time, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that the decrees of any Civil or Revenue Courts situate in the territories of any Native Prince or State in alliance with Her Majesty and not established by the authority of the Governor-General in Council, may be executed in British India as if they had been made by the Courts of British India." In pursuance of the powers thus conferred upon the Governor-General in Council the following notification was published in the Gazette of India on 7th March 1879: "Under s. 434 of the Civil Procedure Code the Governor-General in Council is pleased to declare that the decrees of the Civil and Revenue Courts of Cooch Behar may be executed in British India as if they had been made by the Courts of British India.” There was thus a legislative power given to Courts in India to execute the decrees of the Civil and Revenue Courts of Cooch Behar. Then came the question what machinery was to be employed for the purpose of executing these decrees, and what things were necessary to be proved before a Court in British India could execute those decrees. It was clearly necessary to prove the genuineness of the decree which came to the Court in British India from the Court of Cooch Behar. Upon that point it was necessary to refer to the provisions of s. 86 of the Evidence Act, which says: “The Court may presume that any document purporting to be a certified copy of any judicial record of any country not forming part of Her Majesty’s dominions is genuine [551] and accurate if the document purports to be certified in any manner which is certified by any representative of Her Majesty or of the Government of India resident in such country to be the manner commonly in use in that country for the certification of copies of judicial records.” Before the notification of 7th March 1879, appeared in the Gazette of India, the attention of the Legislature had been drawn to the difficulty which might be experienced if under s. 86 of the Evidence Act a certificate was to be required in each case of the manner in which documents are certified in Cooch Behar, and in order to get over this difficulty the then Deputy Commissioner of Cooch Behar, being the then “representative of the Government of India resident in such country,” was directed to notify to the Government of Bengal “the mode in which copies of judicial records of the Cooch Behar Courts are certified as correct copies.” On 8th April 1879, the following notification was published in the Calcutta Gazette:

“With reference to the above notification (i.e., the notification of 7th March, 1879) of the Government of India in the Foreign Department, the following certificate of the mode in which copies of judicial records are certified in the State of Cooch Behar is published for general information. I hereby certify that the mode in which copies of judicial records of the Courts of Cooch Behar are certified as correct copies is as follows: A copy of the judicial record being made, the words ‘true copy,’ are written at the top of the copy and it is signed by the presiding officer (or, in the case of the Deputy Commissioner’s Court, by the Head Clerk and Sheristadar) of the Court in which the original document is recorded, his official designation being added below his signature and the seal of the Court affixed thus—

(True copy.)

G. J. DALTON,
Deputy Commissioner.

I express no opinion as to whether such a certificate so published [552] was a compliance with the provisions of s. 86 of the Evidence Act, when there was a representative of the Government of India resident in Cooch Behar. It is clearly of no use now the Maharajah of Cooch Behar has come of age, and there is no representative of Her Majesty or the Government of India residing in Cooch Behar, and I do not see how certified copies of judicial records of that State can now be received in evidence in the Courts of British India under the provisions of s. 86 of the Evidence Act, and until some steps are taken by the Legislature.
there will be great difficulty in executing any decrees of the Courts of Cooch Behar in the Courts of British India.

BEVERLEY, J.—I concur with my learned colleague in holding that this appeal must be dismissed. The points pressed upon us are, first, that by the terms of the decree the decree-holder was restricted to execute the decree against the mortgaged property alone; and, secondly, that the attachment was bad, because it was made before the judgment-debtor had had an opportunity of showing cause why the decree should not be executed. The first point was decided by an order of the Subordinate Judge, dated 15th of May 1886, and no appeal was preferred against that order. It is contended now that we can take that order into consideration in the present appeal, which is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of the 5th of April. That is clearly not so, because no appeal lies to this Court direct from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge. The second point appears never to have been pressed in either of the lower Courts, and in the order of the 15th May the Subordinate Judge distinctly says that no other point has been pressed. For these reasons we consider that at this stage we cannot interfere, however much we may regret the irregularity that has occurred.

[553] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Beverley.

JOGESSUR DAS AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. AISANI KOYBURTO AND ANOTHER (Defendants).* [22nd April, 1887.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 20, 21—Suits pending at time Act came into force—Suit for ejectment—Acquisition of right of occupancy.

Section 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to suits pending at the time the Act came into force, viz., 1st November, 1885, which had not then resulted in a decree. In a suit instituted on 8th October 1885, to eject the defendants after notice to quit, it was held that, although the defendant had held the land from which it was sought to eject him for less than 12 years, and therefore would not, if the Bengal Rent Act VIII of 1869 had been applicable, have acquired a right of occupancy, yet the effect of ss. 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was to give him a right of occupancy, and therefore he could not be ejected. [F., 15 C. 376 (F.B.).]

The litigation out of which this appeal arose was commenced by the plaintiffs who were the holders of a divided share of a certain village bringing two suits against the defendants, the tenants of separate portions of the plaintiffs’ estate to eject them after giving them notice to quit. The defence (among others not now material) was that the defendants had acquired a right of occupancy in the land, and therefore were not liable to ejectment. The suits were heard together by consent. As to the defendant in one of the suits, Ramdyal, both the lower Courts found on the facts that he had held the land for more than twelve years; that he had acquired a right of occupancy in the land held by him, and, therefore,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2127 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Nil Madhab Bandyopadhyya, Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 22nd of July 1886, affirming the decree of Baboo Monmooth Nath Mukerjee, Munsif of Gouripore, dated the 22nd of March 1886.
in any case that suit must be dismissed. As regards the defendants in the other suit it was found that two plots of the land had been held by them for less than twelve years, but that they had been holding as tenants other lands on the plaintiff's share of the estate for more than twelve years. As to these defendants, therefore, the question arose whether sub-s. 2 of s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied to them, so as to give them a right of occupancy in their entire holdings. That Act came into [554] force on the 1st November 1885, the suits having been instituted on the 8th October 1885. Both the lower Courts held that the sub-section 2 of s. 21 governed the cases as being cases pending when the Act came into force. The suits were therefore dismissed, and that decision was confirmed on appeal.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.
Moulvi Serajul Islam, for the appellants.
Baboo Kuloda Kinkur Roy, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (MITTER and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This appeal relates to a part of the subject-matter of the original suit which was brought by the appellant as landlord to recover possession of certain plots of land which are in the possession of the defendant, as tenant under the plaintiff, on the ground that the tenancy has terminated by a notice to quit served upon the defendant, the tenant, some time after the 2nd of March 1883. As regards the plots involved in this appeal the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that they have been in the possession of the defendant for less than 12 years, and that he is a "settled raiyat" within the meaning of those words in s. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The suit was brought on the 6th October 1885, that is to say, before the new Tenancy Act came into operation. The lower Appellate Court has held that, under s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendant-respondent before us has acquired a right of occupancy. This suit was a pending suit when the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force. The written statement of the defendant was filed after the 1st November 1885, i.e., after the Act came into operation, and also the notice of the suit was served upon him after that date. It is clear that if s. 21 does not apply to this suit the lower Appellate Court is in error in holding that, as regards the plots involved in this appeal, the defendant has acquired a right of occupancy, because under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 the defendant was not entitled to rely upon his right of occupancy unless he had established that he had been in possession of the land in dispute in this appeal for 12 years. The lower Appellate Court thinks that s. 21 has a retrospective effect and applies to [555] all suits pending on the day on which the Act came into operation.

We think that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is correct. We decide the question raised before us with reference to the express language of s. 21. It is true that on general principles an Act affecting the rights of parties would not apply to a suit commenced before the Act came into operation; but in this instance we find that the Legislature intended that s. 21 should apply to suits pending on the date on which the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force. The decision of this question therefore turns upon the language of sub-section 2 of s. 21 of the Tenancy Act. The sub-section is to the following effect: "Every person who, being a settled raiyat of a village within the meaning of the last foregoing section, held land as a raiyat in that village at any time between the 2nd day of March 1883, and the commencement of this Act, shall be deemed to have acquired a right of occupancy in that land under the law then in force.’’ It is clear from this part of the sub-section that the Legislature provided that a settled raiyat as defined in the Act should be deemed to have acquired a right of occupancy in the land occupied by him as a raiyat in the village of which he is a settled raiyat between the 2nd of March 1883, and the commencement of the Act, that is to say, the 1st November 1885, not under the new Act but under the Act then in force, that is to say, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. It is clear, therefore, that this part of the section was intended to modify the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 as regards the class of suits specified therein during the period mentioned above. Then follow words which, in our opinion, indicate that the provisions already referred to were to apply to all suits instituted before the Act came into operation, and which had not resulted in a decree. These words are: ‘‘but nothing in this sub-section shall affect any decree or order passed by a Court before the commencement of this Act.’’ That is to say, that the retrospective operation provided in the first part of the sub-section should have this exception only, viz., that where a decree or order has been passed by a Court before the commencement of this Act relating to the rights of parties, such decree or order should [556] not be affected by the provisions regarding the retrospective operation of the section. It follows, therefore, that if a suit commenced before the Act came into operation has not resulted in a decree, it would be governed by the provisions of the section. Therefore, although on general principles a change in the law affecting the rights of parties does not ordinarily govern pending suits, yet, in this particular instance, the Legislature having made a provision to the contrary, we are bound to carry out the law.

The decision of the lower Court is therefore correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs (1).

Appeal dismissed.

FULL BENCH REFERENCE.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF GIRIAR NARAIN TUSSUUDUQ HOSSAIN AND OTHERS v. GIRIAR NARAIN AND OTHERS.*

[23rd May, 1887.]

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 32, Constructions of—Outsider practising as mukhtear, his liability to punishment—Mukhtears, their functions—Civil Procedure Code, s. 37.

Act XVIII of 1879 is an amending as well as a consolidating Act, and one of the respects in which it amended the old law was the conferring upon the High Court power “to make rules declaring what shall be deemed to be the functions, powers and duties of the mukhtears practising in the Subordinate Courts.”

* Full Bench Reference in Rule No. 69 of 1886, on the hearing of a petition from or order passed by I. M. Kirkwood, Esq., District Judge of Patna, dated 6th of October 1885.

(1) This case was followed in Parbutty Churn Dass v. Komoruddin. Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2148 of 1886, decided by the same Judges (Mitter and Beverley, J.J.) on 25th April 1887.

When a person other than a duly certificated and enrolled mukhtar constantly, and as a means of livelihood, performs any of the functions or powers which the rule framed by the High Court in accordance with the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act says are the functions and powers of a mukhtar, he practices as a mukhtar, and is liable to a penalty under s. 32 of the Act.

The words "any person" in s. 32 embrace pure outsiders as well as duly qualified and enrolled mukhtears who have failed to take out their certificates.

[557] G.N., though not a certificated mukhtar, was in the habit of appointing and instructing pleaders in the Civil Courts on account of certain persons who paid him a regular monthly salary for so doing. In a proceeding against him under the Legal Practitioners Act, G.N., made this statement: "I receive a letter from the mofussil from a person and act for him, sending the vakalatnama with his letter. I receive monthly wages from each of the persons who employ me. Each of the employers I have mentioned belongs to a distinct family and lives in a separate village."

Held that G.N. was neither a private servant nor a recognised agent of any of his employers within the meaning of s. 37 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was liable to a penalty under s. 32 of the Legal Practitioners Act for having practised as a mukhtar.

Held also that, having regard to the Court in which G.N., practised, the words in s. 32 "to a fine not exceeding ten times the amount of the stamp required by this Act for a certificate authorising him so to practise in such Court," were equivalent to the words "to a fine not exceeding Rs. 250."

[R., 26 A. 359 (381).]

On the 2nd of October, 1885, certain certificated mukhtears of Patna presented a petition to the District Judge complaining that certain persons, Girhar Narain, Bansilal, and a number of other persons, were practising as mukhtears in the Civil Courts contrary to the provisions of Act XVIII of 1879, and the rule and direction of the High Court, contained in the Calcutta Gazette, Part I. page 152, February 15th, 1882, describing the functions, powers and duties of mukhtears. Upon that petition notices were issued against the parties complained against to show cause why they should not be punished under s. 32 of Act XVIII of 1879. The Judge confined his enquiries to the case of Girhar Narain and Bansilal as sample cases. In his answer to the Court, Girhar Narain made the following statement: "My masters are Tundon Singh of Gya, Babu Fatteh Bahadur of Gya, Suni Lal of Kachna in Patna, Chamari Singh of Panka, Mussummat Wajihun of the city, Mussummat Inderjit Koer of Subulpur, Babu Sadir Narain Singh of Bazonna, Babu Ram Sarun Singh of Rajbag, Babu Gajadhur Pershad of Barbonna, Babu Mahto of Jaipur, Gunpat Mahto of Kundar, and I cannot remember the others, but there are several, perhaps some ten in number. I receive a letter form the mofussil from a person and act for him, sending the vakalatnama with his letter. I receive monthly wages from each of the persons who employ me. Each of the employers I have mentioned belongs to a distinct family and lives in a separate village. I sometimes get paid by the year and sometimes by the month. I cannot remember the names of the other ten or so who employ me in the Civil Courts."

Bansilal also made a similar statement. It was admitted by his pleaders that Girhar Narain was in the habit of appointing pleaders and instructing them in the Civil Courts on account of his several masters. The Judge held that, although neither of the men was a qualified mukhtar, they were in the habit of practising and earning the greater part of their livelihood as mukhtears, and their duties far exceeded those of a private servant. He accordingly inflicted a fine of Rs. 5 as a nominal punishment on each of the persons under the provisions of s. 32 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Girhar Narain and Bansilal thereupon applied to the High Court (Mitter and Agnew, JJ.), and obtained separate rules on the certificated mukhtears to show cause why the orders of the Judge should not be set aside. Bansilal having died in the meantime, Girhar Narain's matter alone came up for argument before Mitter and Macpherson, JJ., who referred the case to a Full Bench with the following observation:

"Having regard to the general importance of the question raised in the rule we refer it to a Full Bench. The question for decision is whether upon the facts admitted by the petitioner he is liable to be punished under the provisions of s. 32 of the Legal Practitioners Act."

At the hearing before the Full Bench,—

Baboo Saligram Singh, in support of the rule:—The District Judge had no jurisdiction. Such a case as this does not come under the Legal Practitioners Act. Section 32 affects only such persons as are eligible to practise as mukhtears. The words "authorizing him to so practise in such Court or office" in s. 32 support the position. Even if the petitioner's case came under the Legal Practitioners Act, the man has done nothing which is rendered punishable by the Act. The High Court rule simply enumerates the functions of a mukhtear. It nowhere said that by performing any of those functions a man [559] will be considered to be practising as a mukhtear. There is no definition of "practising as a mukhtear." The petitioner is a private servant, and a private servant or a recognized agent is not within the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Act contemplates none but legal practitioners as such—See the decision of Mitter, J., in Kali Kumar Roy v. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty (1) also Gujraj Singh, In re (2) In re Kali Churn Chand (3); In re Puzzle Ali (4).

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. O'Kinealy) opposed the rule.—The petitioner is not a certificated mukhtear. He acts as a mukhtear and shows he is no private servant. The old cases do not apply here. Those cases were under the old Act (XX of 1865), which did not confer on the High Court the power to make rules as has now been conferred by s. 11 of the present Act. For the Statutory definition of "practising as a mukhtear" one must now refer to s. 11 and the rule framed by the High Court under it. Under s. 13 a pleader becomes guilty of unprofessional conduct by receiving instruction from such a man as the petitioner. It cannot, therefore, be said that a man in the position of the petitioner may lawfully give such instructions as he has been found to have done. Section 32 of the Act is not confined to men who are eligible to practise as mukhtears. Any one who does any of the acts provided by s. 11 of the Act is within s. 32—See the marginal note. On the value of a marginal note see Attorney General v. The Great Eastern Railway Company (5); Venour v. Sellon (6), Claydon v. Green (7) does not apply here. Kali Kumar Roy v. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty (1), discussed.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

Norris, J., (Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson & Tottenham, JJ., concurring).—On 2nd October, 1885, certain certificated mukhtears presented a petition to the District Judge of Patna, complaining that many unauthorised persons were, contrary to law, acting in Court as certificated mukhtears. The District Judge caused the persons complained against to be served with notice [560] to show cause why they should not be punished under s. 32, Act XVIII of 1879. On the 6th October 1885, Girhar Narain, one of the persons complained against, appeared by pleaders to show cause. The District Judge first heard what Girhar Narain’s pleaders had to say on his behalf, and then, apparently without any objection on his part, put some questions to him.

The statement of the pleaders and the examination of Girhar Narain are thus recorded by the District Judge. "It is admitted by his pleaders that Girhar Narain, a certificated revenue agent, appoints pleaders and that he instructs them in the Civil Courts; but they say that he only does so on account of certain persons who are his masters, and who pay him a regular monthly salary for so doing." In answer to the Court Girhar Narain states: "My masters are Tundon Singh of Gya, Babu Fattech Bahadur of Gya, Suni Lal of Kachna in Patna, Chumari Singh of Panka, Mussummat Wajibun of the city, Mussummat Inderjit Koer of Subulpur, Babu Sadir Narain Singh of Bazonna, Babu Ram Sarun Singh of Rajabag, Babu Gajadhir Pershad of Barhonna, Babu Collector Mahto of Jaipur, Gumpat Mahto of Kundar, and I cannot remember the others, but there are several, perhaps some ten in number. I receive a letter from the mofussil from a person and act for him, he sending the vakalatnama with his letter. I receive monthly wages from each of the persons who employ me. Each of the employers I have mentioned belongs to a distinct family and lives in a separate village. I sometimes get paid by the year and sometimes by the month. Collector Mahto pays me Rs. 10 a year; he pays me that every Assin, and has done so every year for 12 years. The business I have referred to, and the names I have given as those of my employers, refer only to those who employ me in Civil Courts. I cannot remember the names of the other ten or so who employ me in the Civil Courts, but they pay me a yearly retainer. Mussummat Gujibun gives me, for what I do for her in connection with the Civil Courts, Rs. 25 per mensem. She pays me more than any one else. Tundon Singh gives me Rs. 80 a year." Upon this admission and statement the District Judge passed judgment as follows:—

"I am of opinion that the action admitted by Girhar Narain [561] far exceeds action as a private servant. In India pleaders and mukhtears seldom get cases out of the circle of their own recognised clients; they each have clients who habitually employ them. That is precisely the nature of the employment admitted by Girhar Narain, but he says he receives remuneration by the month or year instead of for the act. He may do this in some cases, but I doubt his doing so in all; if he does, his memory is marvellously short in not being able to mention their names, and I do not think the method of remuneration makes any real difference. When a man is so little of a private servant that he admittedly acts for at least twenty different families in different parts of this and other districts, he seems to me to be practising generally and professionally, earning a greater part of his livelihood thus as a mukhtear. This is a sample case, and I inflict the nominal fine of Rs. 5 under s. 32 of Act XVIII of 1879, my object being not so much to punish what has already been done as to prevent similar conduct for the future."

On the 5th January, 1886, Girhar Narain moved before Mitter and Agnew, JJ., for a rule calling upon the certificated mukhtears to show cause why the order of the District Judge should not be set aside on the following grounds, viz.: First, that it was made without jurisdiction; second, that ss. 10 and 32 of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, did not apply to the case; third, that the District Judge ought, upon the materials before him, to have held that the nature of the petitioner's work was not in contravention of any law or of any rule of the High Court, and as such he was guilty of no offence against the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act; fourth, that the District Judge had misunderstood and misconceived the law in determining the case. The learned Judges granted a rule, which, on 8th December 1886, came on for hearing before Mitter and Macpherson, J.J., who made the following order, viz.: "Having regard to the general importance of the question raised in this rule we refer it to a Full Bench; the question for decision which we refer is whether, upon the facts admitted by the petitioner, he is liable to be punished under the provisions of s. 32 of the Legal Practitioners Act."

[562] The case was argued before us on the 15th April, when Baboo Saligram Singh was heard in support of the rule, and Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. O'Kinealy appeared to show cause. At the conclusion of the arguments we took time to consider our judgment. The first argument urged by the learned vakeel for the petitioner was that, assuming that Girhar Narain had practised as a mukhtear without being duly authorized so to do, yet he was not liable to punishment under the provisions of s. 32 of Act XVIII of 1879, as that Act applied only to mukhteers who had passed the required examination, received a certificate and had practised, after neglecting to renew the certificate, or during suspension, or after dismissal. In support of his first argument the learned vakeel referred to the preamble of the Act, and pointed out that it was an Act "to consolidate and amend the law relating to Legal Practitioners," to the definition of "Legal Practitioners" as given in s. 3 of the Act; to the power conferred upon the High Court by s. 6 "to make rules as to the qualifications, admission and certificates of proper persons to be mukhteers;" to the provisions of s. 7 as to the granting and renewing of certificates; and to the provisions of ss. 10 and 11 and from the language used in these sections, he argued that the Act was not applicable to a person in the position of his client, but only to "Legal Practitioners" as defined by the Act. The learned vakeel also laid much stress on the words of s. 32. That section enacts "that any person who practises in any Court in contravention of s. 10 shall be liable, by the order of such Court, to a fine not exceeding ten times the amount of the stamp required by this Act for a certificate authorizing him to practise in such Court." The words "the amount of the stamp required by this Act for a certificate authorizing him so to practise," it was urged, pointed clearly to the case of a person who had passed the necessary examination for a mukhtear and was practising without a certificate, and not to an entirely unauthorized person such as the petitioner.

In the case of Kali Kumar Roy v. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty (1) which was a case under Act XX of 1865, which is repealed by Act XVIII of 1879, it seems to have occurred to Mitter J., [563] that s. 13 of Act XX of 1865, which corresponds to s. 32 of Act XVIII of 1879, "applied only to such persons as were qualified and enrolled as mukhteers, but who had practised as mukhteers without obtaining their certificates." This view does not seem to have been shared by White, J., for he makes no reference to it in his judgment; and Garth C. J., says: "The language of s. 13 does certainly seem to afford some ground for this view:

(1) 6 C. 585.
and yet it would seem an absurdity that a man who is duly qualified and enrolled as a mukhtear, and who has only neglected to take out his certificate, should be subject to penalties and disabled under that section from suing for his fees, whilst a man who is neither qualified nor enrolled as a mukhtear, nor certificated, should be enabled to recover his fees, and be subject to no penalties; it is difficult to conceive that this could have been the intention of the Legislature." Whatever may be the proper construction to be put upon s. 13 of Act XX of 1865, upon which I express no opinion, I feel no difficulty in holding that the construction sought to be put on s. 32 of Act XVIII of 1879 is not the true one. Section 32 in distinct terms imposes a penalty on "any person" who practises in any Court in contravention of the provisions of s. 10, "which enacts that no person shall practise as a mukhtear in any Court not established by Royal Charter, unless he holds a certificate issued under s. 7 and has been enrolled in such Court, or in some Court to which it is subordinate." I am altogether unable to give the words "any person" in s. 32 the narrow construction sought to be placed upon them. They seem to me to embrace pure outsiders like the petitioner, as well as duly qualified and enrolled mukhteas who have failed to take out their certificates. The words in s. 32 "to a fine not exceeding ten times the amount of the stamp required by this Act for a certificate authorising him to practise in such Court" are, I think, equivalent (in this particular case, having regard to the Court in which the petitioner practised) to the words "to a fine not exceeding Rs. 250." It is to be observed that, where the Legislature wishes to deal with the duly qualified and enrolled mukhteas, it does so in precise terms—see ss. 33 and 34 and cl. (e) of s. 36. The second argument of the learned vakeel was that the petitioner had not practised [564] as a mukhtear. In support of the argument reliance was placed on the case of In re Gujraj Singh (1) decided by L. S. Jackson, J., on In re Kali Churn Chand (2); on In re Puzzle Ali (3); and on the before-mentioned case of Kali Kumar Roy v. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty (4). All these cases were cases under the old Act of 1865, which conferred no power on the High Court "to make rules declaring what shall be deemed to be the functions, powers and duties of mukhteas,"—such powers were first given by s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1879. In the case of In re Gujraj Singh, L. S. Jackson, J., says: "The Court has had frequent difficulties in answering enquiries as to what the Legislature appeared to contemplate as the functions or privileges of mukhteas under the Pleaders and Mukhteas Act," and then goes on to decide that "there is nothing in the provisions of that Act which restrains any person from coming into the presence of the Judge and supplying information to the vakeels." In In re Kali Churn Chand (2) Kemp and Glover, J.J., held that the mere writing out of a petition for a party who himself presented it in Court was not an "acting" as a mukhtear within the meaning of s. 11 of Act XX of 1865. In In re Puzzle Ali (3) Phear and Ainsley, J.J., held that "acting as a mukhtear" within the meaning of s. 5 of Act XX of 1865 meant "the doing something as the agent of the principal party which shall be recognized or taken notice of by the Court as the act of that principal, such, for instance, as filing a document." In Kali Kumar Roy v. Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty (4) White, J., speaking for himself and Mitter, J., said: "The question then resolves itself into this, whether the looking after a regular appeal and the giving instructions to pleaders in connection with it are practising as a mukhtear within the meaning of the section. There is no definition in the Act of what the Legislature meant by practising as a mukhtear, but I think the meaning may be gathered from s. 11 of the Act, which enacts that 'mukhtears duly admitted and enrolled may be subject to the conditions of their certificates as to the class of Courts in which they are authorised to practise, appear and act' (in the [565] report the word 'plead' is evidently by mistake used for 'act') in any Civil Court, and may appear, plead and act in any Criminal Court within the same limits. It may fairly be concluded from this that by practising as a mukhtear in a Court, the Legislature meant, in the case of a Civil Court, appearing or acting in that Court, in the case of a Criminal Court, appearing, pleading or acting in that Court. Did the plaintiff then appear or act in Court? I think not. These words have a well-defined and well-known meaning. To appear for a client in Court is to be present and to represent him in various stages of the litigation at which it is necessary that the client should be present in Court by himself or some representative. To act for a client in Court is to take on his behalf in the Court, or in the offices of the Court, the necessary steps that must be taken in the course of the litigation in order that his case may be properly laid before the Court. What the plaintiff is found to have done in the present case was not appearing or acting for the defendant in the sense in which, I think, the words must be understood, nor involved any such appearance or acting."

The Act of 1879 is, as was pointed out by Prinsep, J., in the course of the argument, an "amending" as well as a "consolidating" Act: and one of the respects in which it amended the old law was the conferring upon the High Court power "to make rules declaring what shall be deemed to be the functions, powers and duties of the mukhtears practising in the Subordinate Courts," thus obviating the difficulty which had been felt by the learned Judges in the cases above cited. The High Court has accordingly framed a rule prescribing the functions, powers and duties of mukhtears practising in the Subordinate Courts, and I am clearly of opinion that, if any person other than a duly certificated and enrolled mukhtear constantly, and as a means of livelihood, performs any of the functions or powers which the rule says are the functions or powers of a mukhtear, he practises as a mukhtear and is liable to a penalty under s. 32. One of the functions or powers of a mukhtear practising in the Subordinate Courts is that of "appointing and instructing pleaders." This the petitioner admits he does, and that not for [566] one person only, but for twenty; he has therefore practised as a mukhtear.

It was also argued that the petitioner was the private servant or recognized agent of his various employers, and therefore outside the provisions of the Act. No doubt under s. 13 a pleader may take instructions from the private servant of a party or the recognized agent of such party within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, but there is no provision authorizing a mukhtear to take such instructions, and if there were, I do not think the petitioner is the private servant of any of his employers or the recognized agent of any of them within the meaning of s. 37 of the Civil Procedure Code.

I would answer the question referred to us in the affirmative. The result will be that the rule will be discharged with costs.

SUKAROO KOBIRAJ v. THE EMPRESS

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Ghose.

SUKAROO KOBIRAJ (Appellant) v. THE EMPRESS (Respondent).*

[30th April, 1887.]

A kobiraj operated on a man for internal piles by cutting them out with an ordinary knife. The man died from hemorrhage. The kobiraj was charged under s. 304A of the Penal Code, with causing death by doing a rash and negligent act.

It was contended that, inasmuch as the prisoner had performed similar operations on previous occasions, it was not a rash act within the meaning of that section, and that at all events he was entitled to the benefit of s. 88 of the Penal Code, as he did the act in good faith, without any intention to cause death, and for the benefit of the patient who had accepted the risk.

Held, that, as the prisoner was admittedly uneducated in matters of surgery, and having regard to the meaning of "good faith" as defined in s. 52 of the Penal Code, he was not entitled to the benefit of s. 88.

[567] Held, further, that s. 88 did not apply to the case, as it was not shown by the accused, on whom the burden of proving that fact lay, that the deceased knew the risk he was running in consenting to the operation, and he could not therefore be said to have accepted the risk.

Held, also, that under the circumstances the conviction under s. 304A, was a proper one.

[R., Rat. Unrep. Cr. Cases. 603.]

In this case the prisoner was charged with an offence under s. 304A, of the Penal Code. There was no dispute about the facts. The prisoner was a kobiraj and he operated on one Manai, a peasant, for internal piles. The operation consisted in cutting out the piles with a common clasp knife after pulling them down with an iron hook. The result of the operation was that Manai, who was an old and feeble man, bled to death. The Civil Surgeon was called and examined and stated that the operation was a most dangerous one. In his defence the prisoner called four witnesses, two of whom stated that he had cured them of piles and two of other diseases by the use of the knife. The District Judge disagreeing with the assessors convicted the accused and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

The prisoner appealed.

Baboo Ishar Chunder Chuckerbutty, for the appellant.

Mr. Kilby, for the Crown.

The grounds upon which it was sought to show that the conviction should be set aside are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ghose, JJ.) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The appellant is a kobiraj who has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Rungpore of an offence under s. 304 A, of the Penal Code, and has been sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one year. He caused the death of a patient by performing what is shown to be a very dangerous operation, namely, the cutting out of internal piles. He was unable to stop the consequent bleeding, and the patient died the following day. This has been held by the Sessions Judge to be a rash act within the meaning of s. 304 A.

Baboo Ishar Chunder Chuckerbutty for the appellant contended before us that it was not a rash act within the meaning of [568] that section, inasmuch as the prisoner was a kobiraj and had previously performed surgical operations in one or two cases of the same nature and in other cases of a different character; and that it has not been shown that he ever before caused the death of a patient. The vakeel also contended that if, notwithstanding these considerations, the Court should still be of opinion that the act was a rash one within the meaning of s. 304 A, the prisoner would nevertheless be entitled to the benefit of s. 88 of the Penal Code, because he did the act in good faith, without any intention to cause death, and for the benefit of the patient who had accepted the risk.

We are of opinion that the prisoner is not entitled to the benefit of s. 88. It is quite true that he had no intention to cause the death of the patient. Nobody accuses him of such intention. It is also true that he acted, as he thought, for the benefit of the patient. But it is very doubtful whether he can be said to have acted in good faith, regard being had to the definition of good faith in s. 52 of the Penal Code, namely, nothing is said to be done in good faith which is done without due care and attention. The prisoner is admittedly uneducated in matters of surgery. He has had no regular education in matters of medicine.

It has been contended on his behalf that he had no idea that the operation he undertook to perform, and did perform, would be attended with danger to the patient. But it was proved by expert medical evidence adduced by the prosecution that the operation which he performed was one so imminently dangerous that educated surgeons scarcely ever attempt it. They treat the complaint of internal piles, in a totally different way. It seems almost impossible therefore to say that the prisoner, in experimenting in the way he did without any knowledge of the subject, was acting in good faith within the meaning of the definition already referred to. But apart from that, we think that s. 88 will not apply to the case, because it is not shown that the patient did indeed accept the risk which turned out to be fatal to him. A patient can hardly be said to accept a risk of which he is not aware. We think it was for the defence pleading the exception to show that the patient in the present case did accept the [569] risk, and that consequently he was aware of it. But no attempt was made to show that the patient did know what risk he was undertaking. The evidence is only to the extent that he consented to the operation with great unwillingness, and that the only information communicated to him by the prisoner on the subject was that if he submitted to the operation he would be cured. Upon that understanding he did submit; and died. It seems, therefore, quite impossible to say that he accepted the risk of the prisoner's act.

The question then remains whether the prisoner is guilty under s. 304 A. There is no doubt that by his act he caused the death of the deceased. In England he would have been indicted for manslaughter. In this country the provisions of s. 304 A seem to apply to cases where there is no intention to cause death, and no knowledge that the act done in all probabilities would cause death. It was pleaded for the prisoner that, inasmuch as he had successfully performed similar operations on other persons, he could have no knowledge that he was likely to cause death in this case.

We are willing to accept this view of the matter; but, as I have already observed, the prisoner’s ignorance only made his act the more rash. We think it is impossible to acquit him of the offence of which he has been convicted. We have no wish by this decision to deter kobirajes from legitimately exercising their profession. In many cases, no doubt, they do very successfully treat certain disorders; but we think it very important that the public, especially the poorer part of the public, who mostly have to rely upon such practitioners as kobirajes, should be protected from ignorant experiments in surgery.

We think, therefore, that the conviction must be affirmed. But we do not think it necessary for the ends of justice to sustain the severe sentence passed upon the prisoner. Similar acts by really professional men have been visited in this country with much less punishment. We think that, as this is the first case from the Mofussil with which we have had to deal, it would be sufficient to inflict the penalty of a fine instead of imprisonment.

The sentence of one year’s rigorous imprisonment will, therefore, be set aside, and a fine of a hundred rupees imposed upon the prisoner. In default of payment he must suffer three months’ rigorous imprisonment.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Beverley.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF HUKUM CHAND ASWAL (Decree-holder), HUKUM CHAND ASWAL v. GYANENDER CHUNDER LAHIRI, MINOR, BY HIS GUARDIAN ABHOY CHUNDER BAGCHI (Judgment-debtor)* [16th March, 1887.]

Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 58—Execution of decree—Suit for rent not brought under Bengal Act VIII of 1869—Decree of Court of foreign State—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 434.

The law of limitation applicable to the execution of a decree of the Civil Court of Cooch Behar, for rent for a sum under Rs. 500 in a suit not brought under the Rent Act, is by s. 434 of the Civil Procedure Code, which gives the Courts in British India power to execute decrees passed by the Courts of a foreign State, s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869. That section is not confined to suits brought under that Act.

In this case the plaintiff obtained a decree for rent in the Civil Court of Cooch Behar on 23rd May, 1881. The decree was for rent and costs and amounted to Rs. 492-8-9. After execution had been applied for in Cooch Behar and partly obtained, the decree was transferred to the Rungpore district, and sent to the Munsiff of Gaibandha for execution after more than three years from the date of the decree. The Munsiff in August 1885 held, on an objection made to the decree on that ground, that it was barred by limitation under s. 58 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, inasmuch as it was a decree for rent for less than Rs. 500, and more than three years had elapsed since the date of the decree.

* Application for Review in Miscellaneous Appeal, No. 442 of 1885, against the judgment of Mitter, J., and Grant, J., of this Court, dated the 1st of April 1886.
On appeal the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Rungpore affirmed the decision of the Munsiff and dismissed the appeal.

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court on the ground that the Courts had erred in holding the execution of the [571] decree to be barred. The High Court (Mitter and Grant, JJ.) dismissed the appeal, on the ground that there was no jurisdiction in the matter of the execution, and that the application for execution should have been dismissed on the ground that the Courts in British India have no power to execute a decree passed by the Court of a foreign State like Cooch Behar (1).

An application for review of this decision was made by the decree-holder, on the ground that s. 454 of the Civil Procedure Code gave the Courts in British India power to execute it, and that, the suit not having been brought under the Rent Act, s. 58 of that Act was not applicable.

Baboo Durga Mohan Dass, for the petitioners.
Baboo Girja Sunker Mazumdar, contra.

The Judgment of the Court (Mitter and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is an application to execute a decree under a certificate granted by a Civil Court in Cooch Behar with reference to a decree for arrears of rent. Section 434 of the Procedure Code is the section which gives the Courts in British India authority to execute such decrees. That section says: "The Governor-General in Council may, from time to time, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare that the decrees of any Courts situate in the territories of any Native Prince or State in alliance with Her Majesty, and not established by the authority of the Governor-General in Council, may be executed in British India as if they had been made by the Courts of British India." Therefore the decree must be executed as if it had been made by a Court in British India. The law of limitation which would be applicable to such execution proceedings would be the law which would be applicable to the decree if it had been passed in a Court in British India. The decree having been passed in a suit for arrears of rent, and the amount being under Rs. 500, we think that the lower Court was right in holding that the law of limitation applicable in this case is the law contained in s. 58 of the Rent Act. That section says: "No process of execution [572] of any description whatsoever shall be issued on a judgment in any suit for any of the causes of action mentioned in ss. 27, 28, 29 or 30 of this Act, after the lapse of three years from the date of such judgment." It was contended before us that s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1860, only applies to suits instituted under Act VIII of 1869. The language of the section does not support this contention. The section says it shall apply to any "judgment in any suit for any of the causes of action mentioned in ss. 27, 28, 29 and 30 of the Act." That is not tantamount to saying that the suit itself must be under Act VIII of 1869. If it is a suit on any of the causes of action mentioned in the sections of the Act enumerated, it would come within the purview of s. 58; and there is no doubt that the present suit comes within the causes of action enumerated in the section. The judgment of the lower Court is therefore correct.

We dismiss this appeal with costs and assess the hearing fee at Rs. 32.

SIBBUNATH PANDE AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. GOLAP SINGH AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs). [11th and 26th February, 1887.]

Sale in execution of decree—Judgment debtor's share in joint ancestral estate—Mitakshara Law—Execution of decree by sale of such share—Rights of co-sharers not being parties to the decree or execution proceedings—Sale certificate.

The question was whether the whole estate belonging to a joint family, living under the Mitakshara, including the shares of sons or the share of their father alone, passed to the purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree against the father alone upon a mortgage by him of his right.

Held that, as the mortgage and decree, as well as the sale certificate, expressed only the father's right, the prima facie conclusion was that the purchaser took only the father's share, a conclusion which other circumstances—the omission on the part of the creditor to make the sons parties and the price paid—not only did not counteract but supported.

[573] The enquiry in recent cases regarding liability of the estate of co-sharers in respect of transfers made by, or execution against, the head of the family has been this, viz., what, if there was a conveyance, the parties contracted about, or what, if there was only a sale in execution, the purchaser had reason to think he was buying. Each case must depend on its own circumstances—Upooroo Tewary v. Lalla Bandjee Suhay (1) distinguished.

Appeal, by special leave from a decree (27th June, 1883) of a Divisional Bench of the High Court reversing a decree (5th December, 1881) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore.

The object of this suit was to establish the plaintiffs' claim to have their share in ancestral estate excluded from the effect of a sale made in execution of a decree against their father alone for a debt due by him. And the question now raised was whether the entire estate of the family—a one anna four pie share of mouzah Kindwar, in pergunnah and district Bhagulpore—passed to the purchaser at the sale, the principal defendant in this suit, or only the share of the father. The latter share would on partition be only two krants of the whole sixteen annas of the village.

Their grandfather's bisua was four annas, or one-fourth of mouzah Kindwar. He had three sons, one of them being Luchmun Singh, the father of the plaintiffs. Inheriting one-third the latter took, as a family, a one anna four pie share of the village, each being entitled on partition (the sons being four in number) to one-sixth, including the father and mother. The plaint claimed restoration of five-sixths with mesne profits and a declaration of the sons' right to hamat land held by them in proportion to their share in the village.

(1) 6 C. 749.
The defendants' answer relied upon the sale, and the possession that they had obtained under the order for delivery of possession, which gave them, as they contended, rightly, the whole one anna four pie share.

At the hearing before the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore it appeared that, on the 12th September, 1865, Luchmun Singh, having borrowed money of Biehuknath Pande executed to him a money bond of that date, mortgaging also his right and interest in mouzah Kindwar; whereupon afterwards the decree (6th August 1869) now in execution was made by consent. Execution proceedings resulted in the now disputed sale on 7th September 1871, at which the right, title and interest of Luchmun Singh in mouzah Kindwar were purchased by Biehuknath Pande, one of the defendants.

The Subordinate Judge held that the entire estate of the family passed by the sale. His reason mainly was that the father bound the sons when he incurred a debt that was in no way attributable to his misconduct. There being no immorality in the nature of the debt the decree might have been against the whole family; and the family property having been sold on this account the sons had no power to interfere with the auction sale. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal a Divisional Bench of the High Court (Prinsep and O'Kinealy, JJ.) gave judgment as follows:

"It appears to us from the facts of this case that it does not come within any of the judgments of this Court which have been quoted in the course of argument, and that it is a case purely within the judgment delivered by the Privy Council in the case of Dindyal (1). From the terms of the bond (which is a simple money bond) it is clear that the obligation was simply on the part of the father.

"The obligee sued to recover money due on this bond, and the father put in a petition confessing judgment, in which, after admitting the debt, he states: 'I have mortgaged my right and interest in mouzah Kindwar,' the words in the vernacular being 'Hakiyat O milkiyat apna.' We think from the terms of this petition that it was clearly understood by the father that he was dealing with only his own property in the estate. That this was the interpretation accepted by the decree-holder appears from the terms of the decree, which states that the debtor, after confessing judgment, has mortgaged his right and interest in mouzah Kindwar, and that a decree is accordingly passed. 'The terms of the sale certificate granted to the decree-holder, purchaser, are to the same effect. In the specification of property the words are: 'The right and interest of the judgment-debtor [575] 4 annas' (that is to say, the estate held by him and his sons) "out of 16 annas mouzah Kindwar.' And the terms of the body of the sale certificate declare that the right and interest which the judgment-debtor had in that property was purchased at auction for Rs. 625 by the decree-holder in the case, and that it is hereby notified that whatever right, title and interest the judgment-debtor had in that property was extinguished from that date. We cannot agree with the argument that under such circumstances the judgment-debtor, father, should be regarded as being proceeded against by the obligee as representing the family estate.

"Under such circumstances we think, as we have already laid down in another case, that, under the terms of the judgment in the case of Dindyal, as the creditor has chosen to proceed against the father alone and to sell only the father's whole estate, he has by his own act given up whatever rights he might have had against the entire family property.

"The order of the lower Court will accordingly be set aside and a decree given to the plaintiffs declaring that they are entitled to a partition of the family estate and to obtain their respective shares under the Mitakshara Law, the defendant No. 1 being entitled to retain only the share of Luchmun Singh, the father.

"The appellants will receive their costs here and also in the lower Court."

The defendants' appeal against the above decree was specially admitted by an order of Her Majesty in Council of 30th December, 1884.

For the appellants Mr. R. V. Doyne argued that the Subordinate Judge had rightly held that the entire interest of the family in mouzah Kindwar, the one anna two pie share, had passed by the sale in execution. What was sold was the interest that was liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the father in respect of a debt incurred by him, not for any immoral purpose. What was sold was the entire interest of the family for another reason, viz., that the eldest son, being of full age, was himself a party to the taking of the loan by Luchmun Singh; and he, as well as other sons on their attaining full age, assented to the mortgage on which the decree [576] was based, as the evidence referred to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge showed. _Dindyal v. Jugdip Narain_ (1), relied upon in the judgment of the High Court, was distinguishable, as in that case the creditor had done nothing to show an intention on his part to regard any one as liable, save the father alone. The principles on which this decision should be placed were those explained in _Girdhari Lal v. Gantoo Lal_ (2) and _Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh_ (3).

Reference was also made to the _Collector of Monghyr v. Hurdai Narain Shahai_ (4) and _Nanomi Babuasin v. Muddun Mohun_ (5).

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD HOBBHOUSE:—This is one of the numerous cases relating to the amount of interest acquired by the purchaser at an execution sale where the sale relates to a joint family estate subject to the Mitakshara Law, and the father of the family alone has been party to the proceedings. Like several of its predecessors it has been heard _ex parte._

Luchmun Singh is father of the joint family. He has a wife and four sons. The family property consists of a share of mouzah Kindwar, amounting to 1 anna 4 pie in extent. Other shares of the mouzah were, when the transactions now in question took place, vested in other branches of the family who had become divided from Luchmun. The share of Luchmun's father was 4 annas. The appellants, who were defendants in the suit, claim the whole 1 anna 4 pie. The respondents, the wife and sons, who were plaintiffs, claim five-sixths of it as the shares which would come to them on partition.

On the 17th September 1865, Luchmun took a loan of Rs. 219 from Bhichuk, one of the appellants, and executed a bond for payment in a month's time with interest at 24 per cent., or after the month, with interest at 48 per cent. In July 1869, the [577] bond-holder sued Luchmun, and an agreement was made that Luchmun should pay Rs. 590-4, with interest at 24 per cent., in a given month, and by way of security should mortgage "his right and interest in mouza Kindwar." This agreement is embodied in a decree of the Munsiff of Bhagulpore, dated the 7th August, 1869. The same decree goes on to direct that in the event of non-payment the mortgaged proerty shall be sold by auction for the realization of the decreetal money.

In the year 1874 a sale took place in execution proceedings under this decree.

The certificate of sale bears date the 21st December, 1874, and is as follows:—

"A petition being filed for execution of the decree of the Court of the Sudder Munsiff of Bhagulpore, dated 6th August, 1869, in Case No. 494 of 1869 v. Luchmun Singh of mouza Kindwar, pergunnah Bhagulpore, judgment-debtor, and for holding auction sale of the under-mentioned pro-PERTY, an istahar was issued according to the order of this Court, and the said property after being advertised was sold by auction on the 7th September, 1874; and accordingly the right and interest which the judgmentdebtor had in that property was purchased at auction for Rs. 625 by Bhichuknath Pande, inhabitant and proprietor of mouza Phoolwaria, decree-holder, who forthwith filed Court-fee stamps of Rs. 12-8 poundage fee and filed a receipt for the balance Rs. 612-8 out of his decreetal money.
Therefore this certificate is granted to Bhichuknath Pande, decree-holder, auction-purchaser of the said property; and it is hereby notified that whatever right, title and interest the said judgment-debtor had in the said property, being extinguished from the 7th September, 1874, the date of the sale, is transferred to Bhichuknath Pande, decree-holder, and that this certificate will be held a valid document with reference to the transfer of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor.

sudder jumma Rs. 380-8.

" Dated 21st December, 1874."

The purchaser was put into possession on the 12th January, 1875, and he appears to have remained in the possession and enjoyment of the whole 1 anna 4 pie until this suit was brought on the 18th April, 1881. There is no distinct evidence as to the value of the pro-PERTY, but in the plaint the value is stated for [578] Court purposes at Rs. 5,500, which the defendant does not dispute in his written statement, though he objects to the insufficiency of the Court-fee on the ground that the plaintiffs sue to recover some kamat land worth Rs. 2,292-2. Their Lordships conceive that the Rs. 625 paid must be much below the value of the entirety, if indeed it is not below that of the sixth share which Luchmun would take on partition.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. He held that the debt was not tainted with immorality and that two of the sons had consented to the mortgage. But his principal ground appears to have been that he was bound by the decision in Upooroop Tewary v. Lalla Bandhjee.
Suhay (1), to hold that a mortgage of the right and interest of Luchmun passed the entirety of the family property.

On appeal the High Court reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and gave the plaintiffs a decree declaring that they are entitled to a partition of the family estate and to obtain their respective shares under the Mitakshara Law, the defendant No. 1 being entitled to retain only the share of Lunchmun Singh, the father. They referred to the vernacular expressions used by Luchmun in his petition, on which the decree of the 7th August 1869 was founded, and which are rendered by the expression "right and interest;" and they thought that Luchmun clearly understood that he was dealing with only his own property in the estate. Further they relied on the fact that the sons were not made parties to the execution proceedings, and to the treatment of that fact in Dindyal's case (2).

Their Lordships cannot agree with the Subordinate Judge. Whatever part any of the sons may have taken in negotiating between Luchmun and Bichuk, there is no evidence whatever of their proposing to mortgage their own interests. The sons may have assented to what was done, but the question is, what was done? That must be answered by the documents.

Moreover, if Bichuk relied on assent by the sons, he should have taken care to make them parties to the execution proceedings. In Dindyal's case, where the expressions used by the [579] mortgagor were much more favourable to the conveyance of the entirety than they are here, the creditor's omission of the sons from the proceedings was made a material circumstance against him. And in Nanomi Babuasin's case, where the decision was in favour of the purchaser, the same circumstance was recognized as being material when the expressions by which the estate is conveyed to the purchaser are susceptible of application either to the entirety or to the father's coparcenary interest alone.

In the case of Upooroop Tewary (1) Mr. Justice Mitter thought that the words "my proprietary share" in a mouzah were calculated to describe the entirety of the family property in dispute; and he distinguished them from the expression "right, title and interest." In Hurdai Narain's case (3) there was no conveyance, but a sale on a money decree. The only description was "whatever rights and interests the said judgment-debtor had in the property " these were purchased by Hurdai Narain. The High Court held that nothing passed beyond the debtor's interest which gave him a right to partition, and which perhaps may for brevity be called his personal interest, and this Committee affirmed the decision. Each case must depend on its own circumstances. It appears to their Lordships that in all the cases, at least the recent cases, the enquiry has been what the parties contracted about, if there was a conveyance, or what the purchaser had reason to think he was buying if there was no conveyance but only a sale in execution of a money decree.

Their Lordships are sorry that they cannot follow the learned Judges of the High Court into their examination of the vernacular petition. But they find quite enough ground in the decree to express a clear agreement with them. They conceive that, when a man conveys his right and interest and nothing more, he does not prima facie intend to convey away also rights and interests presently vested in others, even though the law may give him the power to do so. Nor do they think that a purchaser who is bargaining for the entire family estate would be satisfied with a document purporting to convey only the right and interest of the father. It is true that the language of the certificate is influenced by that of the Procedure Code. But it is the instrument which confers title on the purchaser. Its language, like that of the certificate in Hurdai Narain’s case, is calculated to express only the personal interest of Luchmun. It exactly accords with the expressions used in the decree of August 1869, founded on Luchmun’s own vernacular expressions, which the High Court construe as pointing to his personal interest alone. The other circumstances of the case aid the prima facie conclusion instead of counteracting it, for the creditor took no steps to bind the other members of the family, and the Rs. 625 which he got for his purchase appears to be nearer the value of one-sixth than of the entirety.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the High Court should be affirmed and this appeal dismissed.

THOMSON v. THOMSON AND ANOTHER.*

[3rd May and 21st July, 1887.]

Costs of suit by husband against wife for divorce—Deposit of costs—Stay of Proceedings until costs paid—Poverty of husband.

In a suit brought for dissolution of a marriage solemnized in 1859 (the parties to such marriage being of Anglo-Indian domicile) the respondent, being possessed of no separate property of her own, applied to the Court for an order directing her husband to deposit in Court a sum sufficient to cover her probable costs of suit.

The Court made an order directing the Registrar to estimate and certify to the wife’s probable costs of suit, and directed the husband to pay the sum so certified into Court. The husband being a man of next to no means failed to pay into Court the sum certified by the Registrar. Held, on an application by the wife to stay proceedings until such costs were paid, that it would be unreasonable to stay proceedings on account of the husband being unable to pay into Court that which he did not possess; but that, inasmuch as the affidavits filed by the parties were contradictory as to the means of the husband, the matter should be referred (if the parties so desired it) for an enquiry by an officer of the Court into the question of means.

[581] This was an application by one Margaret Matilda Thomson (the respondent in a suit brought for dissolution of marriage) praying that Charles Thomson, the petitioner in the suit referred to, might be ordered to deposit in Court a sufficient sum to cover her probable costs of suit. The parties were of Anglo-Indian domicile, and had been married in India in the year 1859.

The applicant stated that she had entered appearance, but was entirely unable to provide funds to meet the costs and expenses of the suit. Charles Thomson, who appeared in person, stated that the respondent was openly living with the co-respondent and under his name, and that they had started a joint tea business trading under his wife's maiden name; that he was employed in the Port Commissioner's Office on a salary of Rs. 150 a month and was supporting himself and four children out of that sum; that he had no other monies or means to pay any costs of the suit which might be incurred by his wife.

Mr. Pugh appeared for the applicant, and contended that the wife was entitled to the order; that the statements made as to her means were vague, citing Young v. Young (an unreported case), in which, following Proby v. Proby (1), an order refusing an application for wife's costs was made by Mr. Justice Pigot on the 12th January, 1886, and distinguishing the case from the present as the marriage there was solemnised in England after the passing of the Married Woman's Property Act, citing also Ward v. Ward (2), Fowle v. Fowle (3), Proby v. Proby (1), and contending that the consideration arising in Walker v. Walker (4) would not arise at the present stage of the proceedings.

ORDER.

Trevelyan, J.—This is an application calling on the petitioner to show cause why he should not deposit the probable amount of costs to be incurred by the respondent in the suit brought against her by him. The parties were married before the Succession Act, and are of an Anglo-Indian domicile. I think I must follow the rule formerly in force in England and require him to deposit the necessary costs. To this rule there are two main exceptions: (a) cases such as Proby v. Proby (1), and [582] (b) where the wife has separate property sufficient for her support and for the costs of suit. The husband must, however, satisfy me that the wife has sufficient separate property for those purposes, but there is nothing in his affidavit to show what the means of the respondent are. I am not satisfied with Mr. Pugh's argument that the considerations arising in Walker v. Walker (4) do not arise at this stage; the husband there appears to have been a man of absolutely no means, but here the petitioner's affidavit does not show that he is a man of no means. I think I must make the ordinary order, and direct that it be referred to the Registrar to estimate and certify the probable amount of the costs of suit of the respondent up to and including the final hearing and decree and that the petitioner do pay the amount so to be certified to the credit of the suit. Costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

In accordance with this order the Registrar certified that the probable amount of such costs would amount to Rs. 1,732. The amount certified was not paid into Court, and the respondent, on the 21st July 1887, applied to the Court on notice for an order that the proceedings on the petition be suspended until the costs certified by the Registrar be first paid.

Mr. Pugh for the applicant cited Keane v. Keane (5).

The petitioner appeared in person, and read an affidavit, in which he swore that he was unable to find the sum required, he being in receipt of Rs. 150 per month only; that he believed that the application was made merely for the purpose of preventing the suit being brought to a hearing; that he had already borrowed money to support himself and his four children and for the marriage expenses of another of his daughters, who had been married at the beginning of 1887.

TREVELYAN, J.—This is an application by a wife, respondent in a suit for dissolution of marriage, to stay proceedings in the suit until the costs estimated by the Registrar to be the costs she will probably incur in the suit are paid. Mr. Pugh for the respondent contended that I am bound by Keane v. Keane (1) to make the order. I cannot find any case in which [583] an order of this kind has been made against a husband who is possessed of no means. It would be unreasonable to stay proceedings because a person of no means has not deposited what he has not got. The whole question is, has the petitioner the means wherewith to pay his wife's costs; he himself says in his affidavit he is not able to deposit all the money required; the wife on the other hand says that he is able to do so. The affidavits therefore do not dispose of the matter, so the only course left is to refer it to Mr. Fink to enquire what the petitioner is possessed of. Costs to be costs in the cause. If, however, the respondent should be advised to waive the enquiry, the application will be dismissed, and the costs thereof will be costs in the cause.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Fazal Rahaman and another (Plaintiffs) v. Imam Ali and another (Defendants).* [18th May, 1887.]

Sale for arrears of revenue—Act XI of 1859, s. 36—Certified purchaser, Suit against—Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 317.

A, the certified purchaser of a taluk at a sale held under the provisions of Act XI of 1859 for arrears of revenue, and who had obtained symbolical possession, had at the time of the sale agreed with B, the former owner of the taluk, to reconvey to him (B) after the sale had been completed.

In a suit B to compel specific performance of the contract, alleging that he had never quitted actual possession of the taluk, objection was taken that the suit was not maintainable under s. 36 of Act XI of 1859 and s. 317 of Act XIV of 1882: Held that the suit, not being one to [584] oust the certified purchaser from possession, was not barred by s. 36; and that neither was it barred by s. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code, that section applying only to sales in execution of decrees of Civil Courts held under the Procedure Code.

This was a suit for specific performance of a contract arising out of the following circumstances: In 1882 a certain taluk belonging to the plaintiffs was put up for sale for arrears of Government revenue under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, and was purchased by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendant No. 2 was their mukhtear; that at the time of the sale an agreement had been come to between them and the defendants that the property in question should be purchased in the name of the defendants, but with the money of the plaintiffs; and that after the completion of the purchase the property should be reconveyed to the plaintiffs.

Subsequently to the sale symbolic possession was given to the defendants; but the plaintiffs alleged that they nevertheless were in actual possession of the taluk "as heretofore," notwithstanding the sale and the delivery of symbolic possession to the defendants. In accordance with the agreement defendant No. 2 executed a reconveyance in favour of the plaintiffs, in which, however, the defendant No. 1 refused to join, denying the plaintiffs' right to the taluk. In this suit, brought for specific performance of the agreement, the plaintiffs prayed for—(1) specific performance; (2) for a declaration of their rights as owners of the taluk; and (3) for confirmation of possession. The defendant No. 1 relied on s. 317 of Act XIV of 1882 and s. 36 of Act XI of 1859 as a bar to the suit. The Munsif dismissed the suit on the defence raised; and on appeal the Subordinate Judge affirmed the Munsif's decision.

On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court—

Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf appeared for the appellants.

Mr. R. E. Twidale, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Ghouse, J.) was delivered by:

JUDGMENT.

Ghouse, J. (who after stating the facts continued as follows):—We think that s. 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to the present case. Upon an examination [585] of the Code it will be found that the preceding section, that is s. 316, refers to sales of immovable property held under the provisions of the Code, and it provides that after a sale has become absolute a certificate of sale is to be given to the purchaser; and then s. 317 provides that "no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims." It will be observed that ss. 316 and 317 find their place in the chapter on Execution of Decrees, Part G. of which is headed "Of Sale and Delivery of Property," that is to say, sales in execution of decrees of Civil Courts, and therefore it is obvious that s, 317 can have no application to any other kind of sale than sales in execution of decrees of Civil Courts held under the Procedure Code. That being so, it seems to us that we must decide this case with reference to the provisions of Act XI of 1859, under which the sale, with which we are concerned, took place.

Now s. 36 of that Act runs thus: "Any suit brought to oust a certified purchaser as aforesaid, on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of another person not the certified purchaser, or on behalf partly of himself and partly of another person, though by agreement the name of the certified purchaser was used, shall be dismissed with costs."

The question that arises upon this section is, whether or not the present suit is a suit to oust the certified purchaser. Now, looking at the plaint (and for the purpose of the question we have before us we must confine ourselves chiefly to the plaint), it is quite clear that this is not a suit to oust the certified purchaser; for what the plaintiffs allege is that they are in possession, and all that they seek by this suit is to have specific performance of the contract that was entered into between them and the defendants at the time when the sale took place. And it seems to us to be also equally clear that the result of a decree, if made in favour of the plaintiffs, would not be to oust the defendants; for the plaintiffs would not be entitled, in execution of the decree, to be put in possession of the property in question.

[586] That being so, it appears to us that the present suit is not barred by the provisions of s. 36 of Act XI of 1859, and, unless it be clearly shown to come within the scope of that section, we should not be justified in dismissing it on the ground taken by the lower Courts. For these reasons, we think that the decrees of the Courts below must be set aside, and the case remanded to the Court of first instance to be tried upon its merits. The costs will abide and follow the result.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

FAKIR CHAND AUDHIKARI AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. ANUNDA CHUNDER BHUTTACHARJI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).*

[17th May, 1887.]

Declaratory decree—"Further Relief"—Arrears of Rent—Specific Relief Act (Act I of 1877), s. 42—Second appeal—New point.

In a suit for a declaratory decree in respect of plaintiff's right to certain land where it appeared that rent was due to the plaintiff in respect of such land, if his case were a true one, and where such rent was not claimed: Held, that the "further relief" referred to in the proviso to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is further relief in relation to "the legal character or right as to any property which any person is entitled to, and whose title to such character or right any person denies or is interested in denying," and does not include a claim for arrears of rent.

On second appeal the appellant should not be allowed to raise an entirely new point if it is one for the right determination of which it is necessary to go into evidence which has not been produced in the lower Courts, or unless it is a pure point of law going to the question of the jurisdiction of the lower Courts, and capable of being determined without the consideration of any evidence other than that on the record, and even if it falls within the above exception it is purely discretionary with the Court whether to consider it or not.

The facts which gave rise to this appeal were as follows:—100 bighas 14 chittaks of debutter land belonged to one Gobindaram Audhikari as shebait, and on his death the same were inherited by his two sons Shafalram and Shagur Churn. [587] Shafalram died in 1240 without issue, and his share was inherited by his sister's son, Abhoy Churn Bhuttacharji, the father of the plaintiffs. The share of Shagur Churn who predeceased his brother was inherited by Kumari Debya,

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2078 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Kedar Nath Mojumdar, Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 18th of August 1886, affirming the decree of Baboo Chundi Churn Sen, Munsif of Midnapur, dated the 31st of July 1885.
the maternal grandmother of the defendants. Shafalram and Shagur Churn were separate in estate. Kumari Debya, who died in 1272, had two daughters, namely, Shuma Sundari and Durgamonji Debya, the latter of whom died childless. Shama Sundari died in 1280, leaving two sons, viz., Fakir Chand, defendant No. 1, and Romanath, the father of the other defendants.

The plaintiffs alleged that out of the 50 bighas 7 chittaks inherited by their father he took khas possession of 7 bighas 5 cottahs only and left the remaining 43 bighas 15 cottahs 7 chittaks in the possession and management of Kumari Debya, and that she used to pay him and them as his heirs Rs. 15 annually out of the net rental from the rubble tenure.

Of the 100 bighas 14 chittaks, 10 bighas 12 cottahs were lakhiraj, and the plaintiffs applied under Beng. Act VII of 1876 to have their names registered as maliks in respect of 5 bighas 6 cottahs.

This application was opposed by the defendants, who were in possession of the lands leased to Kumari Debya as well as the lands inherited by them, and was refused by the Collector on the 3rd September, 1883, and that officer's decision was confirmed on appeal on the 3rd December, 1883, and the defendants' names were registered in respect of the whole of the lakhiraj land.

The plaintiffs accordingly brought this suit praying for a decree declaring their maliki right to 42 bighas 15 cottahs 7 chittaks of land out of the moiety of the 100 bighas 14 chittaks, and directing the registration of their names in respect of the 5 bighas 6 cottahs of confirmed lakhiraj by setting aside the order passed in the registration of name case; and they included a prayer for whatever other relief the Court might think fit to grant.

The defendants pleaded amongst other matters that neither the plaintiffs nor their predecessor had ever been in possession of the disputed land, and that the suit was barred by limitation; that the suit was not, owing to its form, maintainable, and that Kumari Debya never executed any kabuliat as alleged by the plaintiffs, nor did she ever pay rent at the rate of Rs. 15 to the plaintiff.

The following issues were fixed:—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs or their predecessors had ever been in possession of the disputed land at any time within 12 years of the institution of the suit.

(2) Whether the plaintiffs' father had inherited the disputed land on the death of Shafalram and exercised any proprietary right in respect to it, or Shafalram bequeathed his property to defendants' grandmother, Kumari Debya, by way of verbal gift.

(3) Whether Kumari Debya, the predecessor of the defendants, executed any kabuliat to plaintiffs' father agreeing to pay Rs. 15 annually out of the profits of the disputed land.

(4) Whether the suit had been undervalued.

(5) Whether plaintiffs' suit was not maintainable.

The first Court found that the oral gift in favour of Kumari Debya by Shafalram set up by the defendants was not proved, and that the kabuliat set up by the plaintiffs alleged to have been executed by Kumari Debya in favour of Abhoy Churn was not a genuine document. It further found that the plaintiffs had been receiving Rs. 15 per annum from the defendants, as well as from their predecessor, in respect of the land claimed, and gave the plaintiffs a decree declaring their right to have their names registered as maliks of the disputed land.

The defendants appealed, and the plaintiffs preferred a cross appeal on the finding as to the genuineness of the kabuliats.

The lower appellate Court held the latter to be a genuine document and upheld the Munsi’s decision on the other points.

The appeal was consequently dismissed with costs.

The defendants now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. E. T. Roberts and Baboo Taruck Nath Sen, for the appellants.

Baboo Ambica Churn Bose and Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterji, for the respondents.

The grounds upon which it was sought to have the decree of the lower Courts set aside and the nature of the arguments [589] are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiffs in this case arc the maternal grandsons of one Gobindram Audhikari; their father was Abhoy Chunder Bhuttacharji, who married Tarani Debya, Gobindram’s daughter.

Gobindram had also two sons, viz., Shafalram, the elder, and Shagur Churn, the younger; these two brothers were separate.

Shagur Churn died first, leaving his widow Kumari Debya and two dughters, Shama Sundari and Durgamoni Debya. Durgamoni died childless, and Kumari Debya died in 1272. Shama Sundari died in 1280; she had two sons, viz., Fakir Chand, defendant No. 1, and Romanath, the father of defendants 2 to 7.

Shafalram died leaving no son, daughter or wife, and Abhoy Churn, the father of the plaintiffs, was his heir.

The common ancestor, Gobindram, was in possession of 100 bighas’ 14 chittaks of rent-free land in Shebaiti right. Of this 50 bighas 7 cotta-ths was the share of Shafalram and 50 bighas 7 cottaths the share of Shagur Churn. The two brothers collected the rents of their respective shares and performed the daily worship of the Thakur in turn.

Upon the death of Shafalram, Abhoy Churn, the father of plaintiffs, inherited Shafalram’s 50 bighas 7 cottaths, and living at a distance and finding it inconvenient to manage the collection of rents and the worship he granted a lease of 42 bighas 15 cottaths 7 chittaks to Kumari Debya at an annual rent of Rs. 15 and held only 7 bighas 5 cottaths in khas possession. The lease was dated 26th Byasack 1242.

Kumari Debya paid the rent due under the lease down to her death in 1272; Shama Sundari paid it from 1272 down to her death in 1280, and after her death her sons, Fakir Chand, defendant No. 1, and Roman-ath, father of defendants 2 to 7, paid it down to 1287.

Of the aforesaid 100 bighas 14 cottaths, 10 bighas 12 cottaths were confirmed lakhiraj, and the plaintiffs applied under Beng. Act VII of 1876 to have their names registered as maliks in respect of 5 bighas 6 cottaths. This application was opposed by the defendants (who were in possession of the 42 bighas [590] 15 cottaths 7 chittaks leased to Kumari and also of the 50 bighas 7 chittaks which had belonged to Shagur Churn), and was refused by the Deputy Collector on 3rd September 1883; and his decision was confirmed on appeal on 3rd December 1883; and the defendants’ names were registered in respect of the whole 10 bighas 12 cottaths confirmed lakhiraj. The plaintiffs then brought this suit asking for "a declaration of their maliki-right to 42 bighas 15 cottahs 7 chittaks of land out of a moiety of the 100 bighas 14 chittaks," and "further directing the registration of their names in respect of the 5 bighas 10 cottahs of confirmed lakhiraj (measuring 5 bighas 6 cottahs according to the new measurement) by setting aside the order passed in the registration of name case." Both the lower Courts have given a decree in favour of the plaintiffs.

On second appeal the learned counsel for the defendants-appellants has raised a point, which, as far as we can see, was not raised in argument in either of the lower Courts, and which is clearly not raised in their written statement. Now I do not go so far as to say that under no circumstances will a special appellant be allowed to raise an entirely new point on second appeal, but I do say that he should not be allowed to raise such new point if it is one for the right determination of which it is necessary to go into evidence which has not been produced in the lower Courts, or unless it is a pure point of law going to the question of the jurisdiction of the lower Courts and capable of being determined without the consideration of any evidence other than that on the record. Nor do I say that this Court is bound to consider such new point even if it falls within either of the above exceptions: it is a pure matter of discretion.

One manifest inconvenience arises from allowing entirely new points to be raised on second appeal—the absence of what the Court always values—the intelligent judgments of the Judges of the lower Courts.

The point raised by the learned counsel for the appellants was a pure point of law, going to the question of jurisdiction and capable of being determined without the consideration of any evidence other than that on the record.

[591] The point was that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaratory relief they sought by reason of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, that being the section under which their suit was brought. To determine this point it is necessary, I think, to look somewhat closely at the words of s. 42. The section says: "Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief. Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration when the plaintiff being able to seek further relief, than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so." Now, as regards the 42 bighas odd, it is argued that the plaintiffs in this case are not entitled to the declaratory decree they ask for, because there was a "further relief" which they could have sought in this suit, and which they have omitted to do. That "further relief" is said to be the arrears of rent due from the defendants under the settlement made with Kumari Debya. If this contention is true, if a claim for arrears of rent is "further relief" within the meaning of the proviso to s. 42, then it would follow that as regards the 42 bighas odd no declaratory decree could be made. But that would still leave undisposed of the question of the decree sought with regard to the 5 bighas 6 cottahs of confirmed lakhiraj land. We do not however think that a claim for arrears of rent is such "further relief" as is contemplated by the proviso to the section.

The "further relief" referred to in the proviso is, we think, "further relief" in relation to "the legal character or right as to any property which any person is entitled to, and whose title to such character or right any person denies or is interested in denying." The recovery of arrears of rent in this case would only determine that during the years in respect of which the arrears were recovered the relation of landlord and tenant had existed between the parties, that the rent was so much, and that it had not been paid. But even supposing that a claim for arrears of rent is "further relief" within the meaning of the proviso, it is clear that it is not "further relief" which could [592] have been sought in the suit. The provisions of s. 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876 prevent the recovery of such arrears until registration of names is complete.

This point alone is in our judgment sufficient for the determination of the case. It is not clear, upon the plaint and written statement and the judgments of the Courts below, whether, as a matter of fact, there were two separate applications to register—one in respect of the mal, and another in respect of the lakhiraj land. We are inclined to agree in the view presented to us by the learned counsel for the appellants that, as a matter of fact, there was but one application, and that was in respect of the lakhiraj land. But whether that is so or not, and whether it makes any difference in the plaintiff's position, it is not necessary to inquire, for the point was not taken in the Courts below, and we do not think we ought to allow it to be taken here. We are also of opinion that it may fairly be assumed that if the plaintiffs' title with regard to both the mal and lakhiraj land rested on the same basis, and if the defendants were interested in denying and did, as a matter of fact, deny the plaintiffs' right to have their names registered with respect to the lakhiraj land, they were certainly persons who were interested in denying the plaintiffs' legal character or right in respect of the mal land.

These being our views, we think that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

SUNDARI DASSEE (Defendant) v. MUDHOO CHUNDER SIRCAR (Plaintiff).* [7th June, 1887.]

Possession, Suit for—Adverse possession—Case made in plaint—Issues—Variance between title alleged and proved in suit for possession.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land, alleging that it was lakhiraj land, which he had purchased from a third party. The Court of first instance found that he had not proved the title he alleged, and although it had been contended at the hearing that a title by twelve [593] years' adverse possession had been proved, the Court held that it was not proved, and as it was not alleged in the plaint and no issue was raised as to it, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed and accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed, and one of his grounds of appeal was that he was entitled to succeed by virtue of the title of adverse possession proved. The lower appellate Court considered that the plaintiff had proved that he and his vendor had held adverse possession for a period of over twelve years and gave the plaintiff a decree on the strength of that title.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2284 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Raintendro Coomar Bose, Subordinate Judge of Beerbhoom, dated 13th of July, 1886, reversing the decree of Baboo Janoki Nath Dutt, Munsif of Bolepore, dated the 30th of September, 1885.
The defendant appealed to the High Court, and it was contended on his behalf that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed upon a title of adverse possession when it was not alleged in his plaint and no issue had been laid down in respect of it.

_Held_, that, as the suit was one for possession and the defendant had express notice in the lower appellate Court that the plaintiff relied on the title of adverse possession, and as he took no objection on the ground that he should be allowed an opportunity to call evidence to rebut it, and as he had consequently not been prejudiced by the course adopted by the lower appellate Court, the decree of that Court should be confirmed.

_Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb_ (1) and _Shiro Kumari Debi v. Gobind Show Tanii_ (2) distinguished. _Joytara Dassee v. Mahommed Mobaruek_ (3) discussed.

[Rel. on, 12 C.L.J. 439 (463)=15 C.W.N. 138=8 Ind. Cas. 41 (43); Cited, 3 C.L.J. 316; R., 6 C.L.J. 621 (635).]

In this case the plaintiff sued to establish his right to, and to recover possession of, 2 bighas of land on the allegation that it was the lakhiraj land of one Deno Bhundoo Poramanick, from whom he had purchased it in the month of Assin 1284 (September-October 1877) by a registered kobala, and that he had been in possession of it by letting it out to one Kali Das Das, the son of a previous tenant Madhub Chunder Das; but that he had been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant in Joisto 1291 (May-June, 1884), when he had gone to cultivate it on the tenants relinquishing it.

The defendant pleaded that the suit could not proceed without making the zamindar a party, and that it was barred by limitation; that the disputed land was not lakhiraj and did not belong to Deno Bhundoo Poramanick, and that the kobala set up by the plaintiff was collusive; that neither Madhub Chunder Das nor his son Kali Das Das had ever been in possession of the land, and that it was the mal land of the mehal which had been let out to him in 1288.

[594] The Munsif found that the zamindars were not necessary parties and that the plaintiff had proved that Kali Das Das and his father Madhub had been in possession of the land within twelve years of suit and had paid rent to the plaintiff, who was consequently in possession, and that the suit was therefore not barred by limitation. On the merits, however, he decided the case against the plaintiff. He held that the plaintiff had not adduced any evidence to show that the land was lakhiraj and belonged to his vendor Deno Bhundoo Poramanick, but merely proved that Deno Bhundood had sold it to him as lakhiraj. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that Deno Bhundood had acquired a title by twelve years’ adverse possession, but upon that the Munsif observed that this case was not set up in the plaint and that there was not sufficient evidence to support it.

The first Court, therefore, held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the land was the lakhiraj of Deno Bhundood, and that he had acquired a title to it by his purchase from him, and the suit was accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiff then appealed to the Subordinate Judge, and in his grounds of appeal amongst other matters contended that he was entitled to succeed on the ground of adverse possession for twelve years.

The Subordinate Judge found that it had been proved clearly that the plaintiff had purchased the land from Deno Bhundoo Poramanick with other lands for a consideration of Rs. 321, and that after the purchase in

(1) 24 W.R. 444  (2) 2 C. 418  (3) 8 C. 975
1877 he had been in possession by receipt of rent from Madhub's son, who had been the tenant on the land from the time when Deno purchased it, and that the plaintiff had so held possession down to Joisto 1291 (May-June 1884), when he was dispossessed by the defendant; that prior to 1877 Deno had been in enjoyment of the land by receipt of rent from the tenant for a period of five or seven years; and that therefore the possession of the plaintiff and his vendor prior to the ouster had extended to a period of over twelve years.

That Court therefore found that, as the defendant had not been able to show that he had a right to remain in possession of the land in suit and that it formed the mal land of the village, the fact that the plaintiff and his vendor had been in possession for twelve years before ouster entitled him to recover possession of the lands in suit, and it accordingly reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and give the plaintiff a decree for possession.

The defendant now appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee and Baboo Tarapodo Banerjee, for the appellant.

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee, for the respondent.

Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee (for appellant).—Plaintiff having failed to prove his lakhiraj title the Court below ought not to have decreed his suit upon a title by twelve years' adverse possession—Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb (1); Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti (2); Joytara Dassce v. Mahomed Mobaruck (3).

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee (for respondent).—The plaintiff in this case asks for possession as well as a declaration of his title. He alleged in his plaint that he had been in possession as lakhirajdar since 1877, and previously his predecessor in title was in possession. The first Court found his title proved. The plaintiff being in peaceful possession has been dispossessed by a person who has been found to be a trespasser, and he is therefore entitled to a decree—Mohabeer Pershad v. Mohabir Singh (4); Brojo Sunder Gossami v. Kollash Chunder Kur (5); Krishna-rav Yashvant v. Vasudev Apaji Ghotikar (6).

The Privy Council case of Wise v. Amercunnissa Khatoon (7) does not apply to the facts of the present case, as there the plaintiff relied upon bare possession, while the Government was prima facie entitled to the land in suit.

The cases of Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb (1) and Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti (2) are distinguishable, as in those cases the plaintiff merely sued for a declaratory decree, and the Courts were therefore justified in not allowing the plaintiff to change his case. In the case of Joytara Dassee v. [596] Mahomed Mobaruck (3) there was a bare allegation of possession, and besides that case was a regular appeal.

In the present case the defendant had sufficient notice in the Court below that the plaintiff also relied upon a title by adverse possession. A distinct ground to that effect was taken in the grounds of appeal, and the Court below decided the point against the defendant, so that it does not lie in the mouth of the defendant now to say he was taken unawares.

Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee in reply.

The High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) delivered the following judgments:

(1) 24 W.R. 444. (2) 2 C. 418. (3) 8 C. 975. (4) 9 C.L.R. 164. (5) 11 C.L.R. 133. (6) 8 B. 371. (7) 7 I.A. 73.
TOTTENHAM, J.—This was a suit to recover possession of land, of which the plaintiff alleged himself to have been dispossessed by the defendant. The title he set up in his plaint was that this was lakhiraj land which he had purchased from one Deno Bhuundoo Poramanick. The defendant denied the plaintiff’s title altogether.

The lower appellate Court found that, although the plaintiff’s lakhiraj title was not established, it was proved that he had purchased the land as lakhiraj from his alleged vendor; and the Subordinate Judge held that the possession of the plaintiff and of his vendor together extended to twelve years or more; and that that possession was adverse to the defendant. He was therefore of opinion that the plaintiff had established a title by adverse possession and was entitled to recover the land.

On second appeal Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee, for the defendant-appellant before us, raised the question whether the plaintiff was entitled to succeed upon a title of adverse possession when he had not set up that title in his plaint and when no issue had been laid down in respect of it in the first Court. The petition of second appeal does not specifically raise this question, but one of the grounds taken in that petition was that inasmuch as the plaintiff failed to prove the lakhiraj title set up by him, his suit ought to have been dismissed. We have allowed the appellant therefore to deduce from that ground of appeal the contention which Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee has urged. In support of his contention he has cited the cases of Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb (1), Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti (2) and Joytara Dasssee v. Mahomed Mobarak (3). Those cases support the view that the plaintiff cannot succeed upon a title which he has not set up; but there is a distinction between two of those cases and the present case. In those two cases the suit was for a declaration of title, and the Court there very properly held that, unless the plaintiff proved the title in respect of which he asked for a declaration, he could not obtain such declaration. The present case is not for a declaration of title, but for possession upon proof that the plaintiff is entitled to have the land. The cases which have been cited by Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the respondent support the view that the plaintiff may succeed in obtaining possession on proof of a good title, though that title be not specifically set up. The most that I should have been inclined to do in the present case would be to order a remand if I thought that the defendant-appellant had been prejudiced or taken by surprise in this matter. But I find that, having lost his case in the first Court by reason of his having failed to prove his lakhiraj title, and by reason of his not being, in the opinion of the Munsif, entitled to a decree on the ground of adverse possession for twelve years because no issue on that point had been raised, the plaintiff, on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, distinctly raised the question and so gave notice to the defendant that he intended to rely upon his title by adverse possession. Had the defendant considered himself prejudiced in this respect he could then have applied to the lower appellate Court for an opportunity to go into evidence on the point; but he did not do so, and the case was apparently argued out from that point of view and terminated in a decree in favour of the plaintiff. Then, as has been observed, no specific objection was taken in the petition of second appeal to the trial of this issue in the lower appellate Court. I think, therefore, it cannot be said that the defendant has really been prejudiced by the course adopted in the lower appellate Court. And being of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was entitled, upon finding facts which established the plaintiff's title, to give him a decree, I do not think that we ought to interfere in this Court.

(1) 24 W.R. 444. (2) 2 C. 418. (3) 8 C. 975.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Norris, J.—I should like to add just a word. This was an action of ejectment. The plaintiff based his title upon the allegation that the land which he sought to recover was his lakhiraj land. It is not quite clear, but I take it that he failed to prove that title. In the progress of the case, however, he proved a title which entitled him to a decree for ejectment.

It is urged that he ought not to be allowed to obtain a decree upon the strength of a title, which, though he has proved, he did not, as a matter of fact, set up in his plaint; and in support of that contention Dr. Guru Dass Banerjee has cited three cases. Two of those cases, as pointed out by my learned colleague, are clearly distinguishable from the present case. The cases of Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb (1) Shiro Kumari Debia v. Govind Shaw Tanti (2) were cases where the suit was for a declaratory decree. It is plain, it is common sense, that a man ought not to be allowed to obtain a declaratory decree except in respect of the very title which he asserts and upon which he goes to trial. The case of Joytara Dassee v. Mahomed Mobaruck (3) is no doubt at first sight an authority in Dr. Guru Dass Banerjee's favour. But I think, when one comes to examine it, it is really not at all antagonistic to the view which we are prepared to take in the present case. That was a case on appeal from an original decree in which the plaintiff had succeeded, and a decree had been given him in the first Court upon the strength of a title which he had not set up; and Mr. Justice Field, who delivered the judgment of the Court, says: "Cases must be tried and determined secundum allegata et probata, and it is contrary to this principle, and may be fraught with injustice, to decide a cause upon a point not raised in the pleadings nor embodied in an issue, and to which in consequence the attention of the parties was not directed at the trial [599] so as to enable them to produce all the evidence relevant thereto, which was available to them." In the present case the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in the first Court. He appealed, and in his grounds of appeal to the lower appellate Court he distinctly gave notice to the other side that he would rely upon a title which had been proved in the course of the trial, namely, a title by adverse possession. It was open then to the defendant either to say "I object to this point being taken because it was not raised in the pleadings" or, "if this point is gone into, I ought to have an opportunity of adducing evidence with regard to it." If that opportunity had been asked and denied I should unhesitatingly have been inclined to remand this case; but that opportunity was not sought by the defendant, and I cannot therefore bring myself to think that he has been at all damned or that his rights have been prejudicially interfered with, by the course adopted by the lower appellate Court.

Upon this ground I agree in dismissing the appeal with costs.

M. Pershad Narain Singh v. G. P. Narain Singh

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh (Defendant) v. Gungadhur Pershad Narain Singh (Plaintiff).* [10th May, 1887].

Mortgage—Foreclosure, Suit for—Conditional Sale—Regulation XVII of 1806—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 2, cl. (c) and ss. 86, 87—Procedure.

A suit was brought on the 24th January 1885, by a mortgagee upon a mortgage by conditional sale asking for a declaration that the mortgagor’s right to redeem had been extinguished and that he was entitled to possession of the mortgaged properties. The mortgage was dated the 6th April 1881, and the mortgage money was repayable on the 13th May 1881. On the 9th July 1881, the mortgagee caused a notice to be served on the mortgagor in compliance with the provisions of ss. 7 and 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806. The year of grace expired on the 10th July 1882. It was contended by the mortgagor that, as the Transfer of Property Act came into force on the 1st July 1882, the proceedings taken by the mortgagor should be regulated [600] by the procedure laid down in ss. 86 and 87 of that Act, and not by the procedure prescribed by Regulation XVII of 1806.

Held, that the procedure laid down by the Transfer of Property Act could not be applied to the case. Although the year of grace had not expired when that Act came into force, and the full and complete right of the mortgagee had not accrued, he had acquired the right to bring a suit under the provisions of Regulation XVII of 1806 at the expiration of the year of grace, and the mortgagor was under a liability to part with his property upon a suit being brought at the expiration of that year, and such right and liability came within the meaning of these terms as used in cl. (c), s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act.

This was a suit to obtain possession on foreclosure of certain shares in villages which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff by a deed of conditional sale, dated the 6th April 1881.

The plaintiff alleged that the amount secured by the mortgage, viz., Rs. 299, had not been repaid on the due date viz., the 17th May 1881, and that he had thereupon taken proceedings against the defendant in the Court of the District Judge under the provisions of s. 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806, and caused the requisite notice to be served on the defendant, the mortgagor, on the 9th July 1881. As the amount due had not been repaid within the year of grace, he contended that the deed of conditional sale had become absolute, and that the mortgagor’s right to redeem had been extinguished, and he, therefore, claimed to be entitled to possession of the mortgage properties.

The suit was instituted on the 24th January 1885, and in answer thereto the defendant pleaded amongst other things that, as the Transfer of Property Act came into force before the termination of the year of grace, and therefore during the pendency of the foreclosure proceedings, the suit was governed by that Act and the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief he sought. The other issues raised in the case were disposed of by both the lower Courts in favour of the plaintiff, and as no objection was taken to the findings of the lower Courts upon those issues at the hearing of the appeal before the High Court they are immaterial for the purpose of this report.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree N. 2005 of 1886, against the decree of H. W. Gordon Esq., Judge of Sarum, dated the 19th of July, 1886, affirming the decree of Moulvie Mahomed Nural Hossein, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 17th of August, 1885.
The decision of the lower appellate Court, upon the applicability of the Transfer of Property Act to the case was as follows: "The last objection taken is that, as the suit was instituted after [601] the Transfer of Property Act came into force, the foreclosure prescribed by s. 86 of that Act should be followed and defendant should be allowed six months to redeem. In support of this two rulings are relied on, one of the Allahabad High Court—Ganga Sahai v. Kishen Sahai (1)—and a recent ruling of the Calcutta High Court—Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rakhal Chunder Bose (2). This objection, I think, cannot prevail. In the two cases referred to no proceedings had been taken under the provisions of s. 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806, and the Hon'ble Judges of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts held that, as Regulation XVII of 1806 had been repealed by Act IV of 1882, and that as the procedure of that Regulation was not saved by s. 2, cl. (c) of Act IV of 1882, the procedure of this latter Act applied. The present case is not similar to them. The procedure prescribed by s. 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806 had been commenced (9th July 1881) before the Transfer of Property Act came into force (July 1st 1882), and therefore under s. 6 of the General Clauses Act of 1868 these proceedings are not affected by the repeal of the Regulation by the Transfer of Property Act. It can scarcely be contended that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the procedure of the repealed Regulation as well as of the new Act. Under the Regulation he has been allowed one year of grace to redeem; on his failure to redeem he was duly informed that the mortgage would be finally foreclosed. He cannot now ask for a further period of grace simply because the suit has been brought under a new Act prescribing a different mode of procedure."

Both the lower Courts having concurred in decreeing the plaintiff's suit, the defendant preferred this second appeal to the High Court, and the only point argued at the hearing was that referred to above.

Mr. C. Gregory, for the appellant.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Akhil Chunder Sen, for the respondent.

The nature of the arguments and the cases relied on by [602] Mr. Gregory on behalf of the appellant are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, on behalf of the respondent was not called on.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The defendant in this case borrowed Rs. 299 from the plaintiff, and as security for the repayment of the loan executed on the 6th April 1881 a deed of conditional sale covenancing to repay the mortgage debt on the 13th May 1881. The money was not repaid on that date, and a notice in compliance with the provisions of ss. 7 and 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806 was served upon the mortgagor by the mortgagee on the 9th of July 1881, so that the year of grace from the date of that notice would expire on the 10th of July 1882.

This suit was instituted on the 24th January 1885. The plaintiff asked for a declaration that the defendant's right to redeem the mortgaged premises should be foreclosed. Various defences were pleaded by the defendant, all of which have been disposed of adversely to him by the lower

(1) 6 A. 262.
(2) 12 C. 583.
 Courts. Mr. Gregory in special appeal has urged only one point before us, and that is a point of not inconsiderable importance. It was urged before the lower appellate Court, and was dealt with by the District Judge. The point is this, that, as the year of grace expired on the 10th of July 1882, and the Transfer of Property Act came into operation on the 1st July 1882, the proceedings taken by the plaintiff should be regulated by the procedure laid down in ss. 86 and 87 of the Transfer of Property Act, and not by the procedure prescribed by Regulation XVII of 1806. In support of this contention Mr. Gregory relied upon two cases which were cited and commented upon in the lower appellate Court, namely, a Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court in Ganga Sahai v. Kishen Sahai (1) and the recent Full Bench decision of this Court in Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rakhal Chunder Bose (2). He also relied upon the case of Baij Nath Pershad Narain Singh v. [603] Moheshwari Pershad Narain Singh (3), decided by Wilson and Beverley, JJ. Neither of these cases is exactly in point. In the Allahabad case the mortgage by conditional sale was dated 3rd July 1877, and the foreclosure suit was instituted under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. In the Calcutta Full Bench case the mortgage by conditional sale was dated 4th September 1876, and the foreclosure suit was instituted on 18th December 1883. In the case before Wilson and Beverley, JJ. not only had proceedings been taken under Regulation XVII of 1806, but the year of grace therein referred to had actually expired before the Transfer of Property Act came into force. Mr. Justice Wilson, in delivering the judgment of the Court says: "The next question is one of more general importance. It was contended that in this case the suit, having been brought after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, was governed by that Act, and that the form of the decree to be given in the case ought to be the form of a foreclosure decree prescribed by that Act in ss. 86 and 87. Several cases were referred to in support of that contention." Then the learned Judge goes on to mention the cases which were referred to. Two of them I have already named, and the third is Pergash Koer v. Mahabir Pershad Narain Singh (4). The learned Judge then proceeds to say: "All these cases differ materially from the present for this reason: In the present case, before the Transfer of Property Act passed, proceedings had been taken under the Regulation. They were valid and effectual proceedings, and they had arrived at a close, that is to say, the period of grace had expired. Now, when that period of grace expired, the Regulation being still in force, what were the rights of the parties? The mortgagee acquired an immediate right to have a decree declaring the property to be his absolutely. It did not become his absolutely without a decree, but his right to such a decree immediately accrued. On the other hand the mortgagor, the moment the period of grace expired, ceased to have any right of redemption. These rights and liabilities appear to us to differ essentially from the matters which in the other cases were held to be mere matters of procedure. It is impossible to say, in our judgment, that anything [604] can be described as a right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any such right or liability, if these words do not apply to an actually existing right to an immediate decree declaring the property to be absolutely the property of the mortgagee: and, on the other hand, the entire loss of any right to redeem the property." Upon the strength of that decision

(1) 6 A 262. (2) 12 C. 583. (3) 14 C. 451. (4) 11 C. 582.
Mr. Gregory argued that the saving clause in s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act would not avail to assist the plaintiff's case. That clause is clause (c), which says: "Any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any such right or liability." Mr. Gregory urged that the right of the plaintiff was not complete until the expiration of the year; that his right to a foreclosure decree was not complete until the expiration of the year of grace; and that therefore he had acquired no right nor had the debtor incurred any liability until the expiration of the year; and that the defendant was saved, as it were, by the fact that the Transfer of Property Act came into force ten days before the expiration of the year of grace.

We think that this contention ought not to prevail. It is true that the full and complete right of the mortgagor had not accrued; but we think it impossible to say that he had acquired no right, for at the time the Transfer of Property Act came into force he had acquired the right to bring a suit under the provisions of the Regulation of 1806 at the expiration of the year of grace, and the mortgagor was under a liability to part with his property upon a suit being brought at the expiration of that year.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

[605] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

AZIZUDDIN HOSSEIN AND OTHERS (Defendants) v.
RAMANUGRA ROY AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).*

[3rd June, 1887.]

Mesne profits—Decree for possession of immovable property—Reversal of decree on appeal—Suit for recovery of mesne profits from person who has taken possession under a decree which is subsequently reversed on appeal—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244.

A landlord sued his tenant for arrears of rent, and obtained a decree for a certain amount and a declaration that if the amount were not paid within fifteen days the tenant should be ejected under s. 52, Act VIII of 1869. The amount was not paid, and the landlord executed the decree and obtained possession. The tenant appealed and succeeded in getting the decree set aside, and the amount found due from him for arrears by the first Court was reduced, and a decree made directing that if the reduced amount were not paid within fifteen days he should be ejected. He paid the amount found due by the appellate Court within the fifteen days and recovered possession of his holding. He then brought a suit in the Munsif's Court to recover mesne profits from his landlord for the time he was in possession after the execution of the first Court's decree.

It was contended on second appeal that the suit would not lie as the matter might and should have been determined in the execution department under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that as the suit was instituted in the Munsif's Court, and the Munsif under the circumstances of the case was the officer who, in the first instance, would have had to determine the matter in the execution department, there was

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2272 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Grish Chhunder Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 16th of September, 1886, reversing the decree of Syed Imam Ali, Munsif of Tajpore, dated the 8th of September, 1885.
at most only an error of procedure and no exercise of jurisdiction by the Munsif, which he did not possess, and that upon the authority of the decision in Purmessuree Pershad Narain Singh v. Jankee Koer (1) this could not be made a ground of objection on appeal.

Held also that the point being one that was not raised in the pleadings or before either of the lower Courts, and being a point which went exclusively to the jurisdiction of the Court, it could not be raised on second appeal.

[607] This action was brought by the plaintiffs to recover mesne profits under the following circumstances: The present plaintiffs were the tenants of the defendants. The defendants in the year 1882 brought a suit against the plaintiffs for arrears of rent, and on the 24th April 1882 obtained a decree for the full amount of the claim. They had alleged in their plaint that the rent due from the now plaintiffs, then defendants, was Rs. 3-9 per bigha. Together with their decree for an amount of money they asked for and obtained a decree for ejectment under s. 52 of the Rent Act. The then defendants appealed against the decree, and on the 25th January 1883, the decree, which had been passed against them in April 1882, was modified. They were found liable to pay the arrears of rent, not at the rate of Rs. 3-9 per bigha, but at the rate of Rs. 3-5 per bigha, and a decree against them for the amount due at that rate was made by the lower Court, and an order for ejectment unless the amount so decreed was paid within fifteen days. The amount so decreed was, as a matter of fact, paid within the fifteen days mentioned by the lower appellate Court.

Pending the appeal, viz., on the 27th July 1882, the plaintiffs in the rent suit, the now defendants, took possession of the land under the decree of the first Court, which had made an order for ejectment unless the amount claimed was paid within fifteen days from the 24th April 1882, and the now defendants remained in possession of the land from the 27th of July 1882 to the 31st March 1883; and it was to recover mesne profits in respect of their occupation of the land for that period that this suit was brought. The amount claimed in the suit did not exceed Rs. 1,000, and the suit was therefore instituted in the Munsif's Court.

The defendants in the first paragraph of their written statement stated as follows: "That the plaintiffs have not the right to institute the present suit, and to retain possession of the khas land alleged by the plaintiffs, because a decree was passed by this Court on the 24th April 1882, of the Christian era in favour of your petitioners, giving effect to s. 52, Act VIII of 1869, and the payment of the decretal amount ordered within fifteen days from the date of the preparation of the decree. But the [607] plaintiffs did not cause to be deposited the decretal amount according to the decree passed by the Court or even the arrears according to their statement within fifteen days from the date of the preparation of the decree by the first Court." The other objections taken by the defendants are immaterial for the purposes of this report.

The Munsif dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the defendants were not trespassers or wrong-doers. The plaintiffs thereupon

(1) 19 W.R. 90.
(2) 2 C.L.R. 75.
(3) 7 A. 170.
appealed to the Subordinate Judge, contending that as they had been deprived of possession of their lands by the act of the defendants they were entitled to a remedy for the wrong done to them. For the defendants it was argued that, as the plaintiffs could have prevented the execution of the decree of the Court of first instance by depositing the amount decreed within the time prescribed by that Court, no blame was attached to the defendants for taking khas possession of their jotes in execution of their decree when the decree stood unaltered and unreversed.

The plaintiffs’ right to bring a regular suit for remedying the injury occasioned in execution of the decree which was so altered on appeal was not questioned before the lower appellate Court by the defendants, and the Subordinate Judge refrained from passing any opinion on that point and decided the case on its merits, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for a certain amount of the mesne profits claimed by them.

Against that decree the defendants now appealed to the High Court. Mr. M. L. Sandel, for the appellants.

Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee, for the respondents.

Mr. Sandel contended that this suit would not lie as the matter was one which should have been decided in the execution department in the previous suit, and in support of that contention cited and relied on the following authorities: Lati Kooer v. Sahodra Kooer (1); Partab Singh v. Beni Ram (2); Mothoora Pershad Singh v. Mohunt Shumboo Geer (3); Bibee Hamida v. Bibee Bhudhun (4); Bama Soonduree Dabee v. Tarinee Kant Lahoree (5); Duljeet Gorain v. Rewul Gorain (6).

Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee, for the respondents, contended that, as the Munsif would have been the proper officer to enquire into the matter under the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the execution department, there had been only an error in the form of the procedure, and he relied upon the case of Purmessuree Pershad Narain Singh v. Jankee Kooer (7) to show that this could not be made a ground of objection in appeal.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J., who, after stating the facts, continued as follows:

The point raised before us by Mr. Sandel in second appeal is that no suit such as this will lie, and in support of his contention he has referred to various decisions of this Court, which, if not completely in his favour, are at least very strongly in his favour. On the other hand, there is at least one case—Ram Ghulam v. Dwarka Rai (8)—a Full Bench case, to which the present Chief Justice of this Court, then the Chief Justice of Allahabad, was a party, which distinctly holds that such a suit as this will lie.

We were at first disposed to think that we ought to send this case to a Full Bench, because the balance of our judgment was rather to agree with the Allahabad case than with the cases decided by Division Benches of this Court; but after hearing the learned Vakil for the respondents we are satisfied that there is no necessity for our so referring this case; indeed, not only that there is no necessity, but that we ought not to do it.

It has been pointed out by Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee that, supposing Mr. Sandel's contention is right, there has been at most an error in the form of the procedure which has been adopted, and that there has been no exercise of jurisdiction by the Munsif which he did not possess, because, if this matter had [609] been, as Mr. Sandel contends it ought to have been, enquired into under the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the execution department, it would in the first instance have been enquired into by the Munsif. The Munsif is the person who tried this suit. If the parties had been dissatisfied with the decision of the Munsif the appeal would have been to the Subordinate Judge. It is the Subordinate Judge who has heard the appeal from the Munsif in this case, and he has set aside his decision. This view of the case is fortified by an authority referred to by the learned Vakil—Purmessuree Pershad Narain Singh v. Jankee Kooer (1); the head note to the cases: "Where a question such as is provided for by Act XXIII of 1861, is 11, instead of being determined by order of the Court executing the decree, was made the subject of a separate suit in that Court, it was held that, though the form of proceeding was wrong, there was not a want of jurisdiction which could be made a ground of objection in appeal." That was a decision of Couch, C.J., and Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., in a regular appeal. Further, in one of the cases which Mr. Sandel quoted, an authority which undoubtedly is in his favour, the learned Judge who gave the judgment of the Court holding that the suit would not lie also intimated that the Court would have been prepared to have considered the plaint as an application for the ascertainment of mesne profits in the execution department, so that upon principle and upon authority we think the contention of Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee is correct. We have further to observe that we do not think this point was raised in the pleadings. We have been referred to paragraph 1 of the defendants' written statement, but we think that that does not mean that this suit will not lie because the proper method of ascertaining what the plaintiffs are entitled to is by proceedings in the execution department under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think what the defendants meant to assert in the first paragraph of the written statement was that this suit would not lie at all, because the defendants had been put in possession of the land by a decree of a competent Court, which is a very different question from the question argued before us to-day. But, [610] whether that is so or not, we think that the point was not raised in either of the lower Courts; and, it being a point which goes exclusively to the jurisdiction of the Court, we do not think that we ought to allow it to be raised here.

For these reasons we think that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

INDIAN DECISIONS, NEW SERIES

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

TULSHI PERSHAD (Plaintiff) v. RAJA MISER AND OTHERS
(Defendants Nos. 1 to 4).* [7th June, 1887.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 561—Practice—Objections to decree by respondent—Time for filing objections—Date fixed for hearing appeal—Partition—Joint family property—Suit for possession by member of family admittedly not joint—Limitation.

Quaer.—Whether under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure objections to the decree by the respondent must necessarily be filed seven days before the date originally fixed for hearing the appeal, or whether it is not sufficient if they are filed seven days before the day on which the appeal is actually heard, and whether the decision of the Bombay High Court in Rangildas v. Bai Girja (1) to that effect is not correct, and the decisions of the Calcutta High Court to the contrary are not erroneous.

The plaintiff sued for possession of certain property, alleging that it had belonged to a joint family, of which he had been a member, and had been allotted to him on partition. The partition was not proved, and the suit was dismissed on the ground of limitation. On second appeal it was contended that if the partition was held not to be proved the family must be held to be joint, and as the possession of one member could not be adverse to another, the decree dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation was erroneous.

Held, that as the family was admittedly not joint the plaintiff was bound to remove the bar of limitation by showing some sort of possession by himself within twelve years before his suit could be entertained, and as he had not done so his suit was properly dismissed.

[611] In this suit the plaintiff prayed for a declaration of his right to certain property and to recover possession thereof under the following circumstances:

He stated that one Nund Ram had died possessed of houses and gardens, including those in suit, leaving three sons, and whose descendents are shown in the following genealogical tree:

```
Nund Ram.

 Nukchhaide Lal.

 Autar Ram. Anant Ram.

He alleged that there had been a partition of the joint property amongst the members of Nund Ram’s family, and that he had obtained one-third of a pucca house, Gobind Pershad and Situl Pershad getting the remaining two-thirds. As the equivalent of his share in the house Nukchhaide Lal got another house; that a garden was divided into four portions, he getting one share, and that he also got two houses, known as lots 5 and 6, for his share. He went on to state that the principal defendants in execution of a decree against Nukchhaïdi Lal had fraudulently caused to be attached and sold the said houses and garden, and that this became known to him when the purchaser came to take possession; that he thereupon intervened under s. 269, Act VIII of 1859, but his claim was disallowed. He therefore brought the present suit. The sale took place on the 13th September 1874, and the plaintiff’s claim was disallowed on the 14th September 1877. The present suit was instituted on the 10th June 1882. The plaintiff had previously instituted another suit for the same purpose, but had withdrawn it, liberty being given him to bring a fresh suit.

The principal defendants amongst other things pleaded that the claim to have the sale, which had taken place eight years ago, set aside, was barred by limitation, only one year being the period allowed; that the claim to set aside the order under s. 269, Act VIII of 1859, was likewise barred; that the plaintiff’s present statement was inconsistent with that in his previous suit; that the property in suit belonged exclusively to Nukchhaïdi [612] Lal; that the partition alleged by the plaintiff never took place, and that this had been decided in a previous suit against Mewa Lal, to which the plaintiff had been a party; and that the plaintiff had not had anything to do with the property in suit or with Nukchhaïdi Lal and the other members of the family for over twelve years.

The Munsif held that one year’s limitation applied and dismissed the suit on that ground. He found however that, though the plaintiff had not proved the partition set up by him, the property was joint, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a one-third share in all the joint property.

The plaintiff then appealed, and the Subordinate Judge remanded the case to be tried on its merits, holding that twelve years’ limitation applied to the suit, and that the Maharajah of Dumraon should be added as a party, as he had been a party-defendant in the plaintiff’s previous suit, having purchased the property in execution of another decree. Upon the remand the Court of first instance held that the suit was not barred by limitation; that the partition alleged by the plaintiff had not been proved; that the properties in suit were the ancestral properties of the plaintiff and Nukchhaïdi Lal; and that as the plaintiff only claimed one-fourth share he could only get that share allowed him. That Court accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree declaring his title to one-fourth of the properties in suit and for possession of that share.

The defendants then appealed, and the plaintiff filed cross objections to the decree under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was admitted that the objections were not filed seven days before the date fixed for hearing the appeal, but the plaintiff contended that he had not seven days left him after service of the notice on him by the appellants.

The lower appellate Court held that, as the law was peremptory on the subject, and the objections were not filed in time, it could not pay any attention to them, but nevertheless expressed its opinion on them, amongst other things holding that the partition, which the plaintiff objected should have been held to have been proved, was not satisfactorily established. Upon the main appeal the Court held it had not been proved that the plaintiff [613] had ever been in joint possession of the property in suit.
during the last twelve years, or that he had any interest therein, and accordingly dismissed the suit of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for the appellant.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Raghunandun Pershad, for the respondents.

The points taken and argued on the appeal are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, J J.), which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The first point taken in this appeal is that the lower Appellate Court wrongly declined to allow the plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, and who was the respondent in the Court below, to urge objections to the decree of the first Court under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that he had not fulfilled the condition of giving notice of such objections within the period allowed. Section 561 permits a respondent to take any objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal, provided he has filed a notice of such objection not less than seven days before the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal. The appeal in the lower Appellate Court was originally fixed to be heard on the 14th December. The notice of objection by the respondent was filed only on the 10th of December. It is shown by his pleader on second appeal that the notice of appeal in the lower Court was received by him on the 9th December, that is, five days before the date fixed for hearing. It seems unreasonable in such a case that the strict letter of the law as laid down in s. 561 should be observed if “the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal” means the date originally fixed and does not mean the date when the appeal really comes on for hearing. But the rulings of this Court admirably are to the effect that the first day is the one indicated by the section. The Bombay High Court has taken a different view in Rangildas v. Bai Girja (1). I should [614] consider myself bound by the decisions of this Court unless I was strongly of opinion that the Bombay decision was more correct and the circumstances of the case required a reference of the matter to a Full Bench. But, as pointed out by the Vakil for the respondent before us, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, it does not so much matter in this case that the Court did not formally admit the objections, because the Subordinate Judge states that the pleader for the respondent before him in his argument relied upon those objections; and the Court itself expressed an opinion upon the points raised. That opinion was unfavourable to the respondent in the lower Court. It is therefore unnecessary for us to say any more on this point.

The other objection taken to the lower Appellate Court’s decree is that the Subordinate Judge has gone wrong upon the question of limitation in finding that the plaintiff has not shown that he has been in possession in any way within twelve years before he brought this suit. The plaintiff in the first instance based his case upon an alleged partition of the property belonging to the family, which had originally been joint. The lower Appellate Court found that partition not proved. The appellant’s Vakil therefore contends that, if the partition was not proved, the family must be held to be joint and the possession of one member could not be adverse to another. The plaintiff therefore, the learned Vakil contends, must be held to have had possession through that other member. Here again, however, there appears to be a fallacy, as pointed out by Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry. The family is admittedly not a joint family now, and had not been joint for many years before the suit was brought. The plaintiff would still have to remove the bar of limitation before his suit could be entertained. He would have to show some sort of possession by himself, some enjoyment of the profits of the property. The Court below found that he did not do so; therefore his suit failed in both respects. The partition which he alleged was not made out, and he has not proved possession within twelve years before the institution of this suit.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

14 C. 615.

[615] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

In the matter of the petition of Mahomed Amir Khan.

LARDLI BEGUM v. MAHOMED AMIR KHAN.* [6th June, 1887.]

Guardian—Guardianship of female minor—Female minor. Right to custody of—Mahomedan law, Shia sect—Act IX of 1861—Act XL of 1858, s. 27.

A Mahomedan father of the Shia sect is entitled to the custody of a daughter above the age of 7 years as against the mother. The decision in Faseehun v. Kajo (1) has no application to a case where the father is seeking to get the custody of his daughter.

This was an application under Act IX of 1861 by a father for the custody of his children—a boy aged eleven and a girl aged seven, as against the mother. The personal law to which the parties were subject was admittedly that of the Shia sect of the Mahomedans. It was not alleged by the mother that the father had been guilty of gross immorality, but she sought to justify her refusal to give up the children by alleging his poverty and the fact that he had married as his second wife a person who, for reasons stated, was not looked upon with favour by the first wife. She further alleged that he had an interest in getting rid of the children in order to increase his share of the property which he would inherit if she (his first wife), predeceased him.

The lower Court relying on the authority of the decision in Raj Begum v. Reza Hossein (2) considered the father was entitled to the relief he asked. In that Court the relief relied on the decision in Mohomuddy Begum v. Ommutoonissa (3) as showing that the Court should go beyond the personal law of the parties and look to the question of fitness, but the lower Court distinguished that case and considered that none of the reasons alleged was sufficient to justify it in refusing to give the father the custody of his children. It accordingly made the order asked for.

The mother now appealed to the High Court.

[616] Mr. Amir Ali and Baboo Suligram Singh, for the appellant.

Munshi Syed Shamsul Huda, for the respondent.

*Appeal from Order No. 31 of 1887, against the order of J. F. Steven, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Gya, dated the 31st of December, 1886.

(1) 10 C. 15. (2) 2 W.R. 76. (3) 13 W.R. 454.
The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

It seems to us impossible to interfere in this case with the decision of the District Judge.

This application was under Act IX of 1861 by a Mahomedan father for the custody of his two children—a boy aged eleven and a girl aged seven. The application was opposed by the mother, who appears to be living separately from her husband; and apparently the two are not on good terms. It is admitted that the District Judge's order is in accordance with the received precepts of the Mahomedan law governing the Shia sect, to which both parties belong. Mr. Amir Ali, however, has asked us, upon the strength of a decision in Fuscehun v. Kajo (1), to look further than the personal law of the Mahomedans, and to hold, as was done in that case, that only a female should be appointed, to have charge of a female minor. He asks us to direct that the minor daughter in this case should be left in the custody of the mother, while the boy should be handed over to his father.

We think that the case of Fuscehun v. Kajo (1) is not applicable to the present case for this reason, that in that case the minors had no father alive. The learned Counsel contends that in that case the uncles were the applicants, and that they stood in the shoes of the father, yet nevertheless this Court refused to give them the guardianship of the female minors. We find, however, that the Statute on which the Court relied in that case, namely, Act XL of 1858, s. 27, is itself fatal to the contention raised as regards the present case, for it is clear on the terms of that section that where a father is alive no guardian of the person of any minor can be appointed. If the father be dead a guardian of the minor may be appointed, but if the minor is a female, only a female can be appointed as guardian. The fact that in this case the father is not only alive but is the person himself who claims the custody of the children takes the case out of the purview of the ruling in Fuscehun v. Kajo (1) cited by [617] the appellant's Counsel. We think that the father is entitled, as found by the Judge, to the custody of both the children, the girl having attained the age of seven. If she had been under seven her mother would have been entitled to her custody until she was seven.

The appeal is dismissed. We shall make no order as to costs.

II. T. H.

Appeal dismissed.
In 14 Chaitro by decree certain with property possession; last Hajee obtained connected with therefore District attached [F., 14]

Hajee obtained that District attached [F., 14]

IN 20 years as mutwali under two deeds, dated 18th Bhadro 1274, and 25th Chaitro 1275 respectively. The evidence taken in the claim case showed that since the execution of the wakfnama of the 25th Chaitro 1275 the property mentioned therein had been in the possession of Hamid Bakhut as mutwali, and that he had administered it in strict accordance with the directions of the settlor. But the District Judge in deciding the claim considered that he was bound to determine the question of the validity of the deed of endowment, and in determining this question found that the wakf of the 29th Chaitro 1275 had for its object nothing connected with the worship of God or religious observances, but was in reality a provision for the settlor and his family, containing a provision that on the extinction of the settlor’s family the property should be devoted to religious and charitable purposes, and held that the wakfnama was therefore invalid, and that so much of the property attached as was dealt with by that wakfnama was liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by Buktear Chand Mahto, but directed that the remainder of the attached properties held under the wakfnama of the 13th Bhadro 1274 should be released from attachment.

Hamid Bakhut, thereupon, applied to the High Court, and obtained a rule calling upon the decree-holder to show cause why the order of the District Judge should not be partially set aside.

Mr. Bonnerjee, with him Mr. Evans, Baboo Troilokianath Mitter and Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf, in showing cause contended that the Court had no power to interfere with the order unless the lower Court had acted without jurisdiction; that on a perusal of ss. 278, 279, and 280, it was clear that the Judge was at liberty, for the purposes of deciding the question of possession, to enter into the question of title; and that the property was liable to attachment, citing Ashutosh Dutt v. Durga Churan Chatterjee (1).

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), with him Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Amir Ali, and Munshi Serajal Islam, in support of the rule contended that the Judge had exceeded his jurisdiction in deciding the question of the validity of the Wakfnama—In re Khellat Chunder Ghose (2), such a question not being one which was open in an investigation under s. 278 of the Code; that the Judge should have confined himself to the question of possession only—Koylach Chunder Sen v. Koylach Chunder Chakrabarti (3); [619] and that the possession of the claimant was not that of a trustee within the meaning of s. 278.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by

Petheram, C. J.—This is a rule which has been obtained for the purpose of setting aside an order dismissing a claim to a certain property attached in execution of decree, and the rule has been obtained under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground that in his proceedings in this matter the Judge has acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

The facts of the case are, that the judgment-debtor in this case and the claimant are brothers, and that the property in question was the property of their father who, something like 20 years ago, executed a document by which he devoted his estate to certain charitable and other purposes, and made his eldest son, the claimant in this suit, the mutwali of this endowment, and laid down certain rules.

The judgment-creditor has, in these proceedings, attached the share of his debtor, which would have accrued to him, upon the death of his father, if this deed had not been executed and if the property had devolved from father to son, according to the ordinary course of succession under the Mahomedan law.

The Judge in his judgment in this case finds, as a matter of fact, that the claimant did take possession of the property at the time the deed was executed, and that he has been in possession of it ever since, administering it according to the terms of that deed. He then proceeds to discuss the question whether the deed itself is a valid or invalid document under the Mahomedan law; and he finds that the deed, in his opinion, is an invalid document. He says, at the end of his judgment: "I hold, therefore, that the wakfnama of the 25th Chaitra 1275 B. S. is invalid, and that the inherited share of the judgment-debtor in the property dealt with by that document is liable to sale in execution of the decree."

As I understand that, what the Judge means to say is, that the transaction of the 25th Chaitra 1275, which is the transaction which I have referred to before, was altogether inoperative; that it created no interest in the persons who professed [620] to take under it, and that the share of the deceased person devolved according to the devolution prescribed by Mahomedan law; and therefore he holds that the possession of the claimant is not a possession under that deed at all; but he does find in an earlier part of his judgment that this claimant is in possession of the entire property, and that the judgment debtor is not;

(1) 6 I. A. 1827; 5 C. 438. (2) 18 W. R. 403. (3) 10 C. 1057.
so that, for the purposes of s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he finds the first fact, which is necessary to let in the claimant in a case of this kind, namely, that the property is in possession of the claimant, and not in that of the judgment-debtor.

Having found so much the question then arises, whether he had jurisdiction to go further and ascertain whether the document of the 25th Chaitra 1275 was an invalid document, with a view to determine whether the possession of the claimant was that of a trustee for the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 280.

It seems to me that in doing that he has exceeded his jurisdiction, because what he had to do was to find, first of all whether the claimant was in possession, and, if he was, whether it was his own possession or that of the judgment-debtor. The Judge has assumed that, in every case in which he finds a claimant in possession, he has jurisdiction to go on further, and enquire into the nature of his title and the title of the judgment-debtor. I do not think he had jurisdiction to do that. It seems to me that the meaning of s. 280 was, that the question which was to be determined was to be a question of possession, and where the Legislature uses the words, "the possession of a trustee for the judgment-debtor," they mean cases in which the possession of a claimant as a trustee is of such a character as to be really the possession of the debtor, and not cases in which very intricate questions of law may arise as to whether valid trusts may result in particular instances.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the Judge had no jurisdiction in this case to go on, after he had disposed of the question of possession, and deal with the question of title, and therefore, I think this rule must be made absolute.

There is only one thing I would wish to add, and that is, that upon the judgment of the Judge himself he nowhere finds distinctly that the claimant here is a trustee for the judgment-debtor; he merely finds a state of facts from which we are asked to infer that he intended so to find. I do not think that we ought to draw that inference from those facts, and, therefore, we think that he was wrong in the conclusion to which he came, and that this rule must be made absolute with costs.

Rule absolute.

Moheshwar Pershad Narain Singh (Plaintiff) v. Sheobaran Maito (Defendant) and Moheshwar Pershad Narain Singh (Plaintiff) v. Dursun Raut and Others (Defendants).*

[25th May, 1887.]

Right of occupancy—Agreement restricting right of occupancy—The Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 178, Applicability of, to suits pending when Act came into force.

Section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) has no application to suits instituted before the date on which that Act came into force.

*Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 2138, 2139 and 2140 of 1886, against the decrees of Baboo Amrito Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 29th of July, 1886, affirming the decrees of Baboo Haripur Churn, Munisif of Chupra, dated the 15th of March, 1886.
So where a landlord sued to eject a tenant who had executed a solenamah agreeing to hold the land in suit for a specified period at a specified rent, and providing that the landlord was to be at liberty to enter on the lands at the expiry of the period, and the suit was instituted on the 6th October, 1885, and where it was found that at the date of the solenamah the tenant had acquired a right of occupancy with respect to some of the lands in suit: Held, that the tenant was not entitled to the benefits conferred by s. 178, cl. 1, sub-cl. (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but was liable to be ejected.

The suits which gave rise to these three appeals were instituted on the 6th October, 1885, and their object was to eject the defendants from certain lands in their possession.

It was alleged by the plaintiff that the defendants held their lands under the terms of a solenamah, dated the 21st September, 1878, from the year 1286 to the year 1290. The solenamah contained a stipulation that after the expiry of the term the landlord (the plaintiff in these suits) would be at liberty to enter upon the lands, and the ryots (the defendants) would not be allowed to cultivate the same without executing a new lease.

The solenamah was alleged to have been made with a view to compromising certain suits then pending for the recovery of arrears of rent. The term covered by the solenamah expired in 1290, and as the defendants held over a verbal notice to quit was served and these suits were instituted.

The defendant in appeal No. 2138 admitted the solenamah, but the other defendants denied it. All the defendants pleaded limitation, denied notice and its sufficiency, and claimed a right of occupancy. The Munisif held that the defendants had admittedly held over after the expiry of the term and paid rents to the landlord; that at the time of the solenamah the defendants had acquired a right of occupancy in portions of the lands covered by the solenamah; and that in consequence, under s. 178, cl. 1, sub-cl. (b) of Act VIII of 1885, the solenamah taking away that right was invalid. Upon these grounds he dismissed the suits without deciding as to whether the solenamah was genuine or not.

The lower appellate Court found that as regards the defendants in the appeals Nos. 2139 and 2140 the solenamah had not been proved and was not genuine, and that even supposing it was genuine, its effect was to take away an occupancy right in existence at the date of its execution, and therefore under s. 178, cl. 1, sub-cl. (b) of Act VIII of 1885, it had no application to the case, and that the suit for ejectment did not therefore lie so far as the portion of the lands in which the defendants had a right of occupancy at the date of the solenamah. As regards the remainder of the lands in suit the lower appellate Court held that the defendants were equally protected from ejectment under the provisions of s. 21 of Act VIII of 1885. This decree of the lower Court dismissing the suits was accordingly confirmed.

The plaintiff now appealed to the High Court.
Baboo Durga Dass Dutt, for the appellant.
Baboo Benode Behari Mookerjee, for the respondent in appeal No. 2138.
Mr. C. Gregory, for the respondents in appeals Nos. 2139 and 2140.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

These three appeals arise out of suits to eject the defendants upon the ground that the period of their holding had expired. The plaintiff's case was based upon an alleged solenamah or agreement entered into between the plaintiff on the one hand and several ryots on the other in previous suits. The previous suits were for arrears of rent, and a dispute arose as to the amount of the jumma. In those suits a petition was put in by the plaintiff on the one hand, and it is said that there was a corresponding petition on the other side, agreeing to a particular rate of rent and agreeing between the parties that the ryots should hold a certain specified area for a term of five years at a given jumma. The term having expired the plaintiff sued to eject. In the first case before us, namely, appeal from appellate decree No. 2138 of 1886, the defendant in the lower Court admitted that he executed this solenamah; and we think that as he did so it is now impossible for him to escape the effect of it. The lower Courts gave him the benefit of s. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that "nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of this Act shall take away an occupancy right in existence at the date of the contract." The Court considered that, as regards a certain portion of the land in question, these defendants had acquired occupancy rights before the alleged solenamah was executed. We think, however, that in this suit, which commenced before the new Tenancy Act came into force, the tenant cannot get the benefit of s. 178. We think that the point to be looked to was, what was the right of the tenant at the time that the suit was brought. At the time the suit was brought there was nothing to prevent his contracting himself out of his rights. That being so we think that in the appeal from appellate decree No. 2138 of 1886 the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. That appeal therefore will be allowed with costs in all the Courts.

But as regards the other two appeals, Nos. 2139 and 2140 of 1886, the defendants in the lower Courts repudiated the alleged solenamah and denied having been parties to it. And the Courts found as a fact that they were not parties.

For the appellant it was contended that the solenama had been confirmed by a decree. A copy of the judgment in the case in which the solenamah was filed has been put in, but no copy of the decree is produced. We think therefore that the lower appellate Court was justified in holding upon the evidence that the defendants in these two cases were not parties to the solenamah; and when it was found that they had rights of occupancy, certainly in respect of some portion of their holding, the Court below was right in dismissing the suit to eject them.

These two appeals are dismissed with costs.

BASARUT ALI and others (1st Party Defendants) v. ALTAF HOSAIN (Plaintiff).* [29th June, 1887.]

Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 27—Limitation—Suit for possession—Question of title.

Where the plaintiff alleged that he was the holder of a jote under the defendant by whom he had been forcibly dispossessed, and sued for a declaration of his title and for recovery of possession claiming a right of occupancy, and the defendant, while admitting that the plaintiff had for one or two years been a tenant of a small portion of the land in suit denied his title to the remainder, or that he had acquired a right of occupancy:

Held, that the suit was one to try a bona fide question of title, and that it was not barred by 1 year’s limitation under s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, but was maintainable within 12 years from the date of the cause of action. Srinath Bhattacharji v. Ram Ratan De (1) distinguished.

The plaintiff sued for possession of 10 bighas of land and for a declaration of his right thereto, alleging that it was his gorabundi ancestral jote. He alleged that he had been dispossessed by the principal defendants on the 6th Sawan 1291 F. [625] (13th July, 1884), and that they had no right thereto except that of receiving the fixed rent payable in respect thereof. He also claimed mesne profits for the time he had been out of possession.

The principal defendants pleaded that the dispossession had taken place in Assar 1289 (June 1882), and that the suit which was instituted on the 16th May, 1885, was barred by one year’s limitation. They further denied that the jote was ancestral, and stated that the plaintiff’s father and grandfather lived at a place called Chura, about four coss distant from the land in suit, and that the plaintiff himself only came to Baru which adjoined these lands. They further stated that the first defendant, Basarut Ali, took some 3 bighas 19 cottahs of land from the jote of the defendant No. 4, Tika Gope, and gave it to the plaintiff in 1286 (1878-79); that in 1288 (1880-81) the rates of these jotes were increased, and both the plaintiff and defendant No. 4 began to cultivate both the plots jointly till 1289, when they took possession; and that the plaintiff had acquired no right of occupancy in the lands in suit.

Tika Gope was made a defendant, as the plaintiff alleged that he had been put in possession by the other defendants of some of the lands.

The Munsif held that the suit was not one under s. 27 of the Rent Act, and that it was not barred by one year’s limitation, but that the period of 12 years was properly applicable. He further found that the plaintiff had acquired a right of occupancy, having proved possession for more than 12 years, and that the defendants, the ticcadars, were not entitled to dispossess him. He did not, however, decide the question as to whether the rent had been permanently fixed. He accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for possession and for mesne profits.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2399 of 1886, against the decree of W. Vernier, Esq., Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 24th of September 1886, affirming the decree of Baboo Bemola Churn Mozoomdar, Munsif of Jamai, dated the 25th of January 1886.

(1) 12 C. 606.
The defendants appealed. The lower appellate Court concurred in the finding of the Munsi as to the plaintiff’s having established his right of occupancy and his right to recover possession, but considered that a decision should have been come to upon the question as to whether or not the rate of rent was fixed in perpetuity. As, however, that was not made a ground of objection to the decree, that Court merely confirmed the decree of the Court below and dismissed the appeal.

[626] The principal defendants now preferred this second appeal to the High Court, and contended that the suit was barred by limitation.

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuff and Baboo Surender Nath Roy, for the appellants.

Munshi Shamsuld Huda, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The only point taken in this second appeal is that the plaintiff’s suit, which is one to recover land of which he had been dispossessed by the defendant, his landlord, is barred by limitation as not having been brought within one year from the date of dispossession.

According to the plaintiff’s case, as stated in the plaint, the suit was brought within one year from the date of dispossession. According to the defendant’s case, dispossession took place some two years before the suit was brought.

The Courts below, however, found it immaterial to decide which date of dispossession was correct, because they held that, as this was a suit to establish plaintiff’s title to recover possession of land, the limitation would be 12 years and not one year. This question was decided only by the first Court. The lower appellate Court was silent in respect of that issue. We must conclude that the point was abandoned because the defendant-appellant must have acquiesced in the judgment of the first Court that, the suit being one for title, one year’s limitation would not apply.

We are asked in this appeal to hold that one year’s limitation does apply to the case, and that the suit should be sent back for a clear finding as to the date when the cause of action accrued.

In support of this contention we have been referred to a decision of this Court in Srinath Bhattacharji v. Ram Ratan De (1), and to a recent decision by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Cunningham in second appeal No. 1215 of 1886. The reported case held that, although the plaintiff might ask for a declaration of title, [627] still one year’s limitation, under s. 27 of the Rent Act of 1869, would apply where the existence of the tenure is not disputed and the plaintiff’s original title, as tenant, had not been questioned, and where there is no question of title raised in the suit or raised before the suit, except whether on the one hand the plaintiff has been dispossessed by force, or, on the other hand, his tenure has come to an end by his having relinquished it. The Court held that the suit was not a suit to try title within the meaning of the rule referred to.

In the present case, however, we find that the defendant from the commencement denied that the plaintiff had any title whatever. Of the 10 bighas claimed, he only admitted that, during one year or for two years, the plaintiff had been a tenant in respect of something under 4 bighas. On the other hand, the plaintiff set up a gorabundti tenure, and prayed the Court to decide that question of title in his favour. We think, therefore, that this case differs from the case of Srinath Bhattachariji v. Ram Ratan De (1) and that there being a bona fide question of title, the suit was maintainable within 12 years from the date of the cause of action.

(1) 12 C. 506.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SHARUP CHAND MALA.

SHARUP CHAND MALA v. PAT DASSEE.* [10th June, 1887.]

A review of judgment may be granted (if it is necessary for the ends of justice that the judgment should be reviewed), where there is an error of law on the face of the judgment, or where the decision of the Court has proceeded upon a mistaken view of the law. Rewa Mahto v. Ram Kishen Singh (2) referred to.

In this case, without deciding whether there was or not any error in law, the application for review of judgment was refused on the ground that it did not appear there was any danger of its miscarriage of justice.

[628] This was a rule obtained by one Sharup Chand Mala, calling upon one Pat Dassee, the plaintiff in the case of Pat Dassee v. Sharup Chand Mala (3), to show cause why the judgment obtained by her in that case should not be reviewed.

The facts of the case will be found fully stated in I. L. R., 14 Calc. 376. The question there decided was, that a judgment-debtor who has paid off the amount of a decree standing against him, but has done so out of Court, not having certified the fact of such payment to the Court under the provisions of s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code, is at liberty (in a suit brought by him against the decree-holder for the purpose of setting aside a sale of properties fraudulently held in execution subsequently to payment of the decretal money) to prove the payment of the decretal money otherwise than by production of a certificate under s. 258.

The grounds on which the rule nisi were obtained were—

(1) That as the auction-purchaser was in no way implicated in the fraud practised by the decree-holder on the judgment-debtor, the sale ought not to have been set aside.

(2) That in accordance with the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Rewa Mahto v. Ram Kishen Singh (2), the sale should not have been set aside.

(3) That the question regarding s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure was never raised in the lower Courts.

(4) That the decision of the High Court was in conflict with the decisions of Jan Ali v. Jan Ali Chowdry (1), Chunder Kant Surmah Talookdar v. Bisissors Surmah Chuckerbuddy (2); Ram Ghulam v. Hazra Kuar (3). Mr. Woodrofe, Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, and Baboo Kasi Nath Kant Sen to show cause, supported the judgment, citing Kristo Ram Roy v. Janokee Nath Roy (4), Lalit Mohun Roy v. Binodai Dabee (5), remarking that in Rewa Mahtow v. Ram Kishen Singh (6) the remarks made by the Privy Council in the [629] last seven lines of the second paragraph on p. 25 of the report were obiter; and as to the grounds for review being bad referring to the cases cited in the Notes to s. 623 of Mr. O'Kinealy's edition of the Code heading "any other sufficient reasons."

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and Mr. R. E. Twidale in support of the rule contended that under the Code the decree was never satisfied, for before satisfaction could be entered up under s. 258 the fact of the decree having been paid off must be certified to the Court, and that not having been done, there was no satisfaction of the decree; that if execution had issued properly, on what ground could the sale be set aside? Clearly only for irregularity or fraud; that neither of these matters were alleged as against the purchaser; that the case of Rewa Mahtow v. Ram Kishen Singh (6) was not at the hearing of the appeal brought to the notice of the Court, that case being directly in conflict with the decision on appeal and directly governing the present case, it being there "held that a purchaser under a sale in execution is not bound to enquire whether the judgment-debtor has a cross judgment of a higher amount, such as would have rendered the order in execution incorrect. But that if the Court has jurisdiction, such purchaser is no more bound to enquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which execution issues. These are questions to be determined by the Court issuing execution." That Mr. Woodrofe had stated that the latter part of these remarks were obiter dicta, but that was not so, a general principle being laid down thereby. As to whether there was a good ground in law to ask for the review, an error on a point of law was a good ground.—Koh Pon v. Moung Tay (7), referring also to Chintamini Pal v. Pyari Mohan Mookerjee (8), Pentland v. Stokes (9), Reasut Hossein v. Hadjee, Abdollah (10).

ORDER.

The order of the Court (Mr. Justice Cunningham being absent from the Court at the time of the granting of the rule and at the hearing) was delivered by

[630] Petheram, C.J.—This is an application to admit to review a judgment passed in March last by my brother Cunningham and myself, and the ground for the application is that there is a manifest error in law on the face of the judgment, because it is absolutely in conflict with a judgment of the Privy Council delivered in the month of July of last year, and which appeared in the January number of the Law Reports of this year, and which consequently was in existence and known in this city when the case was argued and judgment given, but was not cited in the argument before us. Now I have not the slightest doubt that if there is an error in law on the face of a judgment, or if it is shown that the decision of the Court has proceeded upon a mistaken view of the

IN THE MATTER OF DEEFHOLTS (Claimant). DEEFHOLTS v. PETERS (Decree-holder) AND OTHERS (Opposite parties)*

[20th June, 1887.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 278—Claim to property directed to be sold under a mortgage decree—Attachment.

Proceedings by way of claim under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code are applicable only to cases of money decrees where property has been attached, and not to claims preferred to properties directed to be sold under mortgage decrees.

* Civil Rule No. 505 of 1887, against the order of Baboo Promotho Nath Bannerjee, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 23rd of March 1887.
In 14 D. theiggj N Rule C.W.N.

This was a claim preferred by one Mrs. Deefholts under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code to certain properties which had been mortgaged in 1884 by her uncle to Mrs. Sophia Peters who had obtained a decree on such mortgage under ss. 80-88 [632] of the Transfer of Property Act for the sale of the mortgaged properties.

The Subordinate Judge hearing the claim case held that s. 278 of the Code applied only to claims preferred to the property which had been attached in execution of a decree; that it was unnecessary to issue an attachment in order to enforce a decree for sale of mortgaged property, the order for sale in the decree being in itself a sufficient authority for the sale; and that moreover s. 254 of the Code clearly showed that attachment is only necessary in the case of money decrees; he therefore dismissed the claim.

The claimant moved the High Court, and obtained a rule calling upon the decree-holder to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside, and why he should not be directed to enthrone the claim on its merits.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Lal Mohun Dass, and Baboo Baikunt Nath Dass, in showing cause, contended that the order of the Subordinate Judge was correct, and cited Dayachand Nemchand v. Hemchand Dharamchand (1).

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Rat, in support of the rule.

The order of the Court (Petharam, C.J., and Ghose, J.) was as follows:—

ORDER.

We think that this rule must be discharged. The rule was obtained for the purpose of compelling the Subordinate Judge to enquire into a claim which had been made by a person claiming to be interested in a certain property which had been ordered to be sold under a mortgage decree: the mortgage being a mortgage of that very property, and the decree sought to be executed being a decree passed upon the mortgage bond, and directing the sale of the property.

We think that proceedings by way of claim are not applicable to a case of this kind. Proceedings by way of claim are applicable only in cases of money decrees where property of the judgment-debtor has been attached; that is, where some property of the judgment-debtor is attached for the purpose of [633] satisfying any general money claim. In that kind of claim it is clear that there should be some speedy remedy for the purposes of ascertaining whether the property claimed is the property of the judgment-debtor at all; but in a case like this where the property has been dealt with in a solemn way by the decree of the Court, and has been declared liable to sale under the mortgage, that remedy would not be applicable. In cases like this the remedy is not by claim under s. 278, but is either by regular suit to establish his right to the property, or by resistance to the purchaser, or the mortgagee, or other person who would be put in possession of the property.

The rule will, therefore, be discharged.

Rule discharged.

QUEEN-EMpress v. KARIM BUKSH. [10th June, 1887.]

Fals charge—Penal Code, s. 211.
A false charge before the Police is a false charge falling within the first portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code.
The latter portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code is confined to cases in which criminal proceedings have been instituted, and does not apply to false charges merely. Empress of India v. Pitam Rai (1) and Empress v. Parahu (2) followed.

[Overruled, 17 C. 571 (F.B.); Diss., 20 M. 79 (80)=1 Weir. 189; F., 7 C.W.N. 556 (557); Expl. & R., 32 C. 180 (184); R., 22 B. 596.]

The accused in this case, one Karim Buksh, a writer constable, had laid a charge of theft against a certain person before the Police. The Police reported the case to be false, whereupon the District Magistrate made over the case to a Deputy Magistrate for trial. On the day fixed for trial, Karim Buksh did not appear to prosecute, and the Deputy Magistrate therefore returned the record to the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate then [634] passed an order in the case declaring it to be false, and directed that Karim Buksh should be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code. The case against Karim Buksh was then taken up, and he was convicted of an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 58, or in default to two months' rigorous imprisonment.

The District Magistrate sent up the case to the High Court for revision, considering that the order of the Deputy Magistrate was wrong in law, inasmuch as the criminal proceedings instituted by Karim Buksh having been taken under s. 380 of the Penal Code, which carried a maximum sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment, the Deputy Magistrate had no alternative but to pass a sentence of imprisonment under the latter part of s. 211 of the Penal Code.

Baboo Makunda Nath Rai. for Karim Buksh contended that the sentence of fine was legal, the case falling under the first part of s. 211 of the Penal Code; that the first part of the section dealt with criminal proceedings as well as false charges, and a sentence of fine only would be perfectly legal, although such false charges related to offences punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards; that in the latter part of the section, criminal proceedings only are spoken of; that here the false charge having been made before a Police officer, no criminal proceeding was instituted in any Court; that therefore the Deputy Magistrate was quite competent to pass a sentence of fine only. See Empress of India v. Pitham Rai (1) and Empress v. Parahu (2).

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was as follows:—

ORDER.

Petheram, C.J.—In this case we think there is no reason for the interference of the Court. This case has been referred to us by the Magistrate in order that this Court may revise the sentence of fine which has been passed on the accused on a conviction of having made a false charge before the Police, because the charge which he made was a charge of an offence under s. 380 of the Indian Penal Code, the punishment for which may be seven years' rigorous imprisonment, and the Magistrate thinks that the sentence of fine was illegal, because by the latter portion of s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code, the punishment must be a punishment of imprisonment and there is no option to impose a fine only.

The facts of the case here are, that the accused made a charge before the Police which he did not afterwards press before the Magistrate, and the only offence which he has committed has been that of making a false charge before the Police, and not of instituting any criminal proceedings beyond that. The question which arises is, whether the offence which he has committed comes within the earlier or later portions of s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code.

The earlier portion of that section provides that "whoever, with intent to cause injury to any person, institutes or causes to be instituted any criminal proceeding against that person, or falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge against that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both;" this is the first part of the section. And then the section goes on to say: "And, if such criminal proceeding be instituted on a false charge of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards, the person instituting such criminal proceeding shall be punishable with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine." The class of offence which is included in the last half of this section is punishable with imprisonment without option of fine; and the question is, whether the offence of which the accused has been guilty is within the latter half of the section.

Now, the latter half of the section is confined to criminal proceedings instituted on false charges, and by the earlier part of the section the distinction is drawn between criminal proceedings instituted and false charges alone. We think that we must make the same distinction and must hold, as has been held in several cases in the Allahabad Court, though not in this Court, that the latter part of the section is confined to cases in which [636] criminal proceedings have been instituted, and that it does not apply to false charges merely.

But, as I said before, the accused in this case did not institute any criminal proceedings in the sense of his instituting any proceedings in any Court. What he did was to make a false charge before the Police, and that, it seems to us, is the kind of false charges which is dealt with in the first part of the section, and consequently that the Magistrate was entitled to inflict the punishment which is provided by that part of the section, and that he was not compelled or, indeed, empowered, to inflict the punishment fixed by the latter half of the section, and therefore it was competent to him to award a fine only, if in his discretion he thought fit.

For these reasons we think that the Deputy Magistrate committed no legal error in the course he took in this case, and there is no reason for the interference of the Court.

LAL MOHUN MUKERJEE AND GRISH CHUNDER MUKERJEE v. JOGENDRA CHUNDER ROY AND OTHERS; BONOMALI CHUNDER GHOSAL v. RAMKALI DUTT AND OTHERS.* [23rd May, 1887.]

Bengal Tenancy Act, s. 174—Act creating new rights, Effect of—Application for execution.

The provision of an Act which creates a new right cannot, in the absence of express legislation or direct implication, have a retrospective effect.

Held, accordingly, that a judgment-debtor's right under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to set aside a sale did not avail where the sale was held in pursuance of a decree; the execution whereof had been applied for before that Act came into operation.

[Overruled, 22 C. 767 (F.B.); Appl., 15 C. 383 (385) (F.B.); R., 16 C. 267 (272) (F.B.); 21 C. 940 (F.B.); 23 B. 450 (452); 90 i.d.R. 1904=88 P.L.R. 1904 (F.B.); 17 C.W.N. 619 (620)=15 Ind. Cas. 479 (480).]

These proceedings arose out of applications made by certain judgment-debtors under the provisions of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to set aside some sales of tenures held in execution of decrees for arrears of rent. In one of the cases (Rule No. 592) execution proceedings up to sale proclamation were held before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation; but the sale took place after that date. In the other case (Rule No. 1401) the decree was passed under Bengal Act VIII of 1869; but application for execution was not made until the Tenancy Act had come into operation. The Munsifs of Furridpur and Alipore, before whom the applications were respectively made, granted the application and set aside the sales in conformity with the provisions of s. 174 of the Act.

The opposite parties in each case applied for and obtained rules in the High Court. The rules were argued before Prinsep and Beverley, JJ., who made the following reference to a Full Bench:—

These rules arise out of proceedings taken under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in which sales of tenures held in execution of decrees for arrears of rent have been set aside at the instance of the judgment-debtor. In both cases the decree was made while Bengal Act VIII of 1869 was still in force, but the sale actually took place after the 1st November, 1885, on which date the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force. But there is this difference between the two cases. In the case of Rule 592 execution was applied for, and the sale proclamation was issued under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, whereas in Rule 1401 the application for execution was made after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force. The question is whether in either or both of these cases the provisions of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are applicable. As the question is an important one, and as we understand that the matter is before the Court in several other cases, we think that the point should be referred to a Full Bench for decision. On the one hand it is contended that proceedings in execution are proceedings in the suit, and that the sales must therefore be considered to be sales under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 and not under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the provisions of s. 174 will not apply to such sales. It is further urged that s. 174 is only one of several sections contained in Chapter XIV of the Bengal [638] Tenancy Act, many of which sections are expressly made applicable to sales under that chapter only. It is argued, therefore, that s. 174 will not apply in cases other than those in which the application and attachment have been made under ss. 162 and 163. On the other hand it is contended on the authority of the Full Bench decision in the case of Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rakhal Chunder Bose (1) that the Bengal Tenancy Act must be held to have retrospective effect in matters of procedure, so far that its provisions will be applicable to proceedings commenced before the Act came into force. In reply to this, it is argued that the section in question confers a new right on the judgment-debtor and takes away an already existing right from the auction-purchaser, and that, therefore, upon the authority of the very case cited, the Act ought not to be allowed to have retrospective effect. Section 6 of the General Clauses Act (I of 1868) is also relied on. Two other cases were referred to in the course of the argument. One of these is In the matter of the petition of Muto (2), in which it was held that an application under s. 315 of Act X of 1877 could be entertained in respect of sales held under the former Code (Act VIII of 1859), although no similar provision was contained in that Code. The other case referred to was that of Hurro Sundari Debi v. Bhojohari Dass Manji (3), in which it was held that where the repealing Act gave a right of appeal which did not exist under the Act repealed, no appeal would lie against a decree made before the passing of the repealing Act. The question, then, that we propose to refer to the Full Bench is this: Whether an application under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be entertained in respect of sales held in execution of decrees made before the passing of that Act—(a) when execution of the decree was applied for before the passing of the Act; (b) when execution of the decree was applied for after the passing of the Act.

* Full Bench Reference in Rule No. 592 of 1886 against the order of the Second Munsif of Bhanga, Furridpur, dated 20th February, 1886, and in Rule No. 1401 against the order of the Munsif of Alipore, 24-Pargunnahs, dated the 16th August 1886.

Before the Full Bench Rule No. 1401 was compromised.

Baboo Rasbehari Ghose opposed the Rule.—Section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to this case. If proceedings have already been commenced under the old Act and the rules in the new Act conflict with those in the old, the repealed Act shall regulate the proceedings; but where the change is a beneficial one and gives only an additional remedy, the procedure in the new law shall be adopted. Framji Bomanji v. Hormusji Burjorji (4), Ratan Chand Srichand v. Hanmantrav Shibaksh (5); Ranjit Singh v. Meherban Koer (6), have explained the terms "proceedings" and "procedure." Procedure affects rights. In the present case no vested right has been taken away or abridged. Even conceding the most liberal construction to Proceedings cannot be said to terminate with the sale. Confirmation of sale forms part of the previous proceedings—Hurro Sundari Debi v. Bhojokuri Dass Manji (4) Maxwell on Statutes 195.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson, Tottenham, and Norris, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that an application under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be entertained in respect of sales held in execution of decrees made before the date when that Act came into operation, the execution of the decree having been applied for before the aforesaid date. Section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act confers upon the judgment-debtors a new right which they did not possess under the old Act. Therefore the presumption is (in the absence of express legislation or direct implication to the contrary) that its operation is not intended to be retrospective. Its provisions cannot, therefore, be applied to proceedings commenced before the Act came into operation. The rule will be made absolute with costs.

Prinsep J.—As one of the Judges who referred this case, I think it necessary to state that it was referred as cognate to another case already referred,* in which the point raised was one of some difficulty and importance, so as to secure uniformity of practice. It is much to be regretted that the parties have since compromised that case and thus prevented the settlement of this matter.

the parties with the exception of R. S., by the terms of which, in consideration of the judgment-debtors (mortgagors) undertaking to do certain acts, S. S. promised to execute his decree against only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises. The judgment-debtors (mortgagors) having failed to carry out the compromise, S. S. applied for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises, but on the petition of R. S. setting out the terms of the compromise to which he was no party, the Subordinate Judge by an order of the 7th September 1885 held that under the agreement S. S. was entitled to sell only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises, which was accordingly directed to be sold. That order was not [641] appealed against, but subsequently in March 1886, S. S. made a fresh application for sale of the remainder of the premises, R. S. objecting.

Held, that the order of the 7th September was one which the Court was competent to make under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and by reason of that order not being appealed, it became final.

Seolojy Singh brought a suit against the members of a joint family, some of whom were minors, for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,767, principal and interest, due under a registered mortgage bond executed by the adult members of the family, by a sale of the mortgaged premises. Ramnarain Singh, a subsequent incumbrancer and the appellant's predecessor in title, was also made a defendant. The suit was decreed, and a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises directed to be made in default of the mortgagors redeeming within a certain time. After the decree, the Court, at the instance of the minor defendants, ordered a re-trial of the suit as against them, which terminated in an ex parte decree upon the terms of the former decree. Thereafter an application was made on behalf of the minors to set aside the ex parte decree, and during its pendency a compromise was effected between the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtors mortgagors, by the terms of which Seolojy Singh, the decree-holder, in consideration of the judgment-debtors, mortgagors, paying off a ticcadar who had an incumbrance on the whole of the mortgaged premises, and executing a registered agreement to pay him off, promised to execute his decree against only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises. The terms of the compromise were embodied in a petition and filed in Court, and thereupon the application against the ex parte decree was struck off. The judgment-debtor having failed to pay off the ticcadar, or execute the agreement, Seolojy Singh applied on the 24th June, 1885, for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises. Notice of this application was served upon the judgment-debtors, and also on Ramnarain Singh. On 6th August, 1885, Ramnarain put in a petition, setting up the compromise to which he was no party, and objecting that the sale should be limited to a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises. On the 7th September 1885, the Subordinate Judge passed an order to the effect that, upon the terms of the compromise, the decree-holder was entitled [642] to sell only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the premises, leaving the decree-holder to take such steps as he might be advised for getting the agreement, as stipulated between him and the judgment-debtors (mortgagors), executed. On the occasion of this order of 7th September 1885, the judgment-debtors, mortgagors, do not appear to have been present or represented; but on the 16th September they put in a petition, saying that they were unable to pay off the ticcadar, and that they had no objection to the sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises. On the 26th September 1885, the judgment-creditor again applied for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises, but his application was refused by the Subordinate Judge. On the 15th December, the 3 annas 12 dams were sold, and purchased by the decree-holder for
Rs. 700, which was insufficient to satisfy the amount of his decree. On 1st March 1886, Seolojy Singh applied for a sale of the remainder of the mortgaged premises; but upon the objection of the sons of Ramnarain Singh, deceased, the Subordinate Judge rejected the application on the ground that, as the decree-holder had neither preferred an appeal against the orders of the 7th and 26th September, nor filed "a petition of review" thereof, those orders had become final. The decree-holder, thereupon, appealed to the District Court, which did not regard the orders of the 7th and 26th September as re-judicata, and allowed the following observations:—

"I find that the judgment-debtors having entirely failed to carry out any portion of the terms of the compromise, the promise therein, on the part of the decree-holder to sell no more than 3 annas 12 dams, is in no way binding on the decree-holder. Therefore, even as regards the parties to the compromise, the compromise cannot stand in the way of the decree-holder in executing the decree as now prayed for. Much less can it stand in his way, when Ramnarain, who was not one of the owners of the property but only a subsequent inemnecrancer, of it, and was no party to the compromise, steps forward to bar the way of the decree-holder with that document."

Basudeo Narsai Singh and others, the heirs and representatives of Ramnarain Singh deceased, appealed to the High Court. The Court (Petheram, C. J., and Norris, J.) referred the case to [643] a Full Bench with (after stating the facts as above) the following opinion:—

We are clearly of opinion that the orders of 7th and 26th September were altogether wrong, the compromise having failed, as the mortgagors had not carried out their portion of the agreement.

We refer to a Full Bench the question, whether the orders of 7th and 26th September, 1885, finally decided that only the 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises could be sold in execution of the decree as between the judgment-creditor and Ramnarain, so as to prevent the judgment-creditor from ever re-opening the question.

Before the Full Bench,—

Mr. Tividale, for the appellants, contended.—The order of the 7th September is conclusivae between the parties. The Court made that order in the exercise of its jurisdiction. That order was not appealed against, and whether right or wrong has become final—Mungul Pershad Dicit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1); Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Rup Kuari (2); Bani Ram v. Nanhu Mal (3).

Mr. C. Gregory (with him Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry) for the respondent.—The order cannot operate as res judicata—Hurrosoondary Dassee v. Jugobundho Dutt (4). The Court had no jurisdiction to pass the order at the instance of the subsequent inemnecrancer, who was no party to the compromise. The cases cited in support of the appeal are thus distinguishable from the present case. The order is of no effect—Forester v. Secretary of State for India in Council (5).

The judgment of the Full Bench (Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson, Tottenham, and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The question whether the decree-holder was entitled to sell the whole 8 annas or a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises, was decided by an order, dated 7th September, 1885. The Court which made the order had full authority to make it under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By reason (644) of that order not being appealed from, it became final. The question disposed of by it is, therefore, no longer an open question between the decree-holder and the appellants before us. We, therefore, set aside the decision of the lower appellate Court so far as the appellants are concerned. We do not interfere with the decision of the lower appellate Court so far as the original judgment-debtors are concerned, as they have not appealed against it.

The appellants are entitled to recover the costs of this appeal and in the lower appellate Court from the respondents. We assess the costs of both hearings at Rs. 50.

Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry and others (Plaintiffs) v. Chunder Nath Pal and others (Defendants).* [23rd May, 1887.]

Possession, Suit for—Suit for possession by purchaser at sale in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 11, 318—Concurrent remedies—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 138, sch. II.

A purchaser at a sale in execution not having applied to the Court for possession under s. 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure, brought a regular suit to obtain possession of the property purchased: Held that, although a remedy might be open to the plaintiff under s. 318, still he was not precluded from bringing a regular suit, the remedies being concurrent.

The words “the date of the sale,” in the third column of art. 138, sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, signify the date of the actual sale, and not that of the confirmation of such sale.

On the 20th July 1883, the plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of certain lands and a house standing thereon, alleging that the house and land formerly belonged to one Chunder Nath Pal, and that they had purchased the same at two separate auction sales held in execution of decrees against [645] Chunder Nath Pal; the house being purchased at a sale held on the 18th July, 1871, and the sale confirmed on the 22nd August 1871; the land being purchased at a sale held on the 26th July, 1871; and that they had taken possession and retained possession of these properties for two years but had subsequently been dispossessed by the defendants.

The defendants contended that the plaintiffs, not having been put into possession through the Court under s. 318 of the Code, were, therefore, debarred from bringing a regular suit for possession; they denied that the plaintiffs had ever been in possession of the properties, and pleaded limitation as far as the claim to the house was concerned.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs had never been in possession of the property, and that the claim as regards the house was barred, twelve years having elapsed since the date of the sale of the 15th July 1871; and that as the plaintiffs had not applied to the Court for possession of the land under s. 318 of the Code, no suit would lie. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge, who affirmed the finding of the lower Court as to the plaintiffs never having obtained possession of the properties after the sale, and also on the point of limitation; holding on the question under s. 318 that the authorities showed "that in all cases in which an auction-purchaser had been allowed to bring a suit for possession, he has had to show that he has done his best in the execution department first, and that he had either obtained possession and been subsequently dispossessed, or that his efforts to obtain possession had been infructuous;" and finding that the plaintiffs had failed to show any such efforts, he dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, for the appellants, contended that the suit would lie without first having recourse to an application under s. 318, citing Iswar Pershad Gurgo v. Jai Narain Giri (1); Krishna Lall Duti v. Radha Krishna Surkhel (2) and Seru Mohun Bania v. Bhagobun Din Pandey (3), and contending that on the point of limitation, limitation ran from the date of confirmation of the sale.

Baboo Hari Mohun Chuckerbati and Baboo Srinath Banerjee, for the respondents, contended that the suit would not lie, citing Lolit Coomar Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbatty (4), and that limitation ran from the date of the actual sale—Kaloo Dass Neogee v. Hur Nath Roy Chowdhry (5); Bhyrub Chunder Bundopadhya v. Soudamini Dabee (6).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—This is a suit to recover possession of two parcels of property purchased by the plaintiff at auction sales some years ago. One of them was purchased at an auction sale on the 18th July, 1871, and the sale was confirmed on the 22nd August 1871. The second parcel was purchased on the 21st July, 1871, within twelve years of suit, which was instituted on the 20th July 1883. So that as to the first parcel, that is to say the house, the question arises whether the suit is barred by limitation, it being admitted that the auction sale took place more than twelve years before suit, although the sale was confirmed on a date which would bring it within twelve years. As to that a question arises as to the meaning of the word "sale" in art. 138 in the second schedule to the Limitation Act. That Article provides that in a suit by a purchaser of land at a sale in execution of a decree, for possession of the purchased land, when the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale, the limitation is twelve years from the date of sale. The only question is, whether the word "sale" means auction sale, or when the sale was confirmed. In ordinary language "sale" means auction sale, that is to say, the transaction which completes the contract, although the conveyance is not complete until a subsequent time when the sale is confirmed. That being the ordinary meaning of the word, it is necessary to look into the Limitation Act to see how the word is used. Apparently it is used for the first time in art. 12, where in a suit to set aside any of the sales [647] there mentioned, limitation runs from the date that the sale is confirmed or would, otherwise, have become final and conclusive, had no such suit been brought. So that, upon the face of the Schedule, we have a distinction between the sale and the confirmation of sale, that is to say, we have the contract to sell, that is the bidding at the auction which forms the contract, and the confirmation which does not take place until some time after.

Article 166 deals with this matter. On an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or on the ground that the decree-holder has purchased without the permission of the Court, we have it that the time from which limitation is to run is the date of the sale. It is clear that the date of the sale in this Article must mean the date of the auction sale, that is to say when the bidding took place, because a suit to set aside that sale might be brought before the sale is confirmed. So that the word "sale" there must mean the time of the auction sale. Then we have it that, in the Schedule to the Act, "sale" has a different meaning from "confirmation of the sale." Under art. 12, in a suit to set aside the sales therein mentioned, limitation begins to run from the confirmation of the sale, whereas in art. 138 the word "sale" only is used. Therefore we think the word "sale" must have the same meaning as in the other portions of the Schedule and which it has in common language, that is, the date of the auction sale.

The auction sale in this case took place on the 18th July, 1871. The suit was not brought until the 20th July, 1883; that is, more than twelve years after the sale, and therefore in our opinion the suit, as far as this part of the case is concerned, is barred by limitation, and the suit must be dismissed.

The other part of the case is to recover possession of the land on which this house stands. The suit was instituted within twelve years from the date of sale.

The only question which arises on this part of the case is that it is held by the lower appellate Court that this suit cannot be maintained until it is shown that the plaintiff has exhausted any remedy that he would have under s. 318 of the Civil Procedure Code, which gives the auction-purchaser a speedy remedy to [648] obtain possession of the land which he has purchased if it is in the possession of the judgment-debtor, and it may be taken to be admitted that there are cases which take different views of this matter. In our opinion that forms no answer to the action, because we think that, though there may be a remedy under s. 318 which the auction purchaser may put in force, still the ordinary remedies are open to him notwithstanding, and the remedies are concurrent.

We think that this is abundantly clear from s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which lays down that persons may have recourse to the Civil Courts for the trial of all suits of a civil nature, unless their cognizance is expressly taken away. This remedy has not been taken away by the Legislature, and therefore the other remedy is concurrent.
only. Article 138 of the Limitation Act refers to this very kind of case, so that it is clear that in the contemplation of the Legislature at that time this class of suits could be maintained. Therefore, so far as principle is concerned, this suit can be maintained, and proceedings not having been taken under s. 318, is no answer. In several cases the opposite view is indicated, but in no recent cases has it been laid down that the action cannot be maintained.

In the case of Soru Mohun Bania v. Bhagoban Din Pandey (1) McDonel and TOTTENHAM, JJ., decided that such a suit could be maintained. And in a case which has not been reported, but which has been referred to in a subsequent decision by TOTTENHAM and AGNEW, JJ.—Iswar Pershad Gurgo v. Jai Narain Giri (2)—WILSON and BEVERLEY, JJ., who decided that case, distinctly held that the suit was maintainable, and put no limitation to its being maintainable. In the case before TOTTENHAM and AGNEW, JJ., they say that they agree with WILSON and BEVERLEY, JJ., in their judgment in which they unreservedly said that the action is maintainable. They only qualify their opinion by saying that they would have referred the case to the Full Bench, had they not found that the Chief Justice in a similar judgment, to which he had been a party, did not intend to say that the action was not maintainable on any terms whatever, but that it was necessary that before a suit is brought other remedies should be exhausted—See Lolit Coomar Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty (3). WILSON and BEVERLEY, JJ., in their judgment, considered that that case was not in point as the purchaser had not perfected his title.

In this particular case the same remark applies, but, speaking for myself, I should like to say that in any decision which limits the jurisdiction of these Courts, unless the jurisdiction is expressly taken away, I do not agree; and that in my opinion whether the remedy under s. 318 has or has not been put in force, the plaintiff, who has purchased the property and has been refused possession of it, has a right to come to the Civil Court and obtain possession of that property. We have examined the cases bearing on this matter, and we find the balance in favour of that view. Therefore we do not refer this case to the Full Bench.

So far, therefore, as the action for the land is concerned, the suit can be maintained and this suit must be decreed, there being no other defence but this technical one.

The result is that the appeal will be dismissed as far as regards the house, and it will be decreed as far as the land is concerned.

Under the circumstances of this case, and in order to save the trouble of taxation, we think that each party should pay his own costs of this appeal.

This was a suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

The plaintiff alleged that he was in constructive possession of certain lands by receipt of rent from tenants, and that he had been dispossessed therefrom against his consent by the defendant, who had realized rent from some of such tenants and had prevented others from paying rents to him.

The defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable under s. 9, and raised various questions of title, relying upon certain facts justifying his collection of rent from the tenants.

The Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not maintainable under the Specific Relief Act, stating that the plaintiff did not seek to recover tangible possession of the lands in dispute, but merely sought to get rents from the tenants in occupation of the land; that the point for decision was really one involving a question of priority of the plaintiff's or the defendant's right to receive rents, and that such a question could not be determined in a suit brought under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

The plaintiff moved the High Court, and obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why the decision of the Munsif should not be set aside.

Baboo Chandra Kant Sen to show cause.

Baboo Ishwar Chunder Chackravati, in support of the rule, cited In re Sutherland (1) as showing that a person is not in actual possession where the rents are paid by the actual occupier, not to him, but to an intermediate holder, and that in accordance with that decision he was out of possession, and could sue under the Specific Relief Act.

ORDER

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by *Civil Rule No. 717 of 1887, against the order of Baboo Jogendra Nath Mukerjee, Munsif of Gaibandha, dated the 19th of April, 1887.

(1) 9 B. L. R. 229.
GHOSE, J.—The facts of this case, so far as they are necessary to be mentioned for the purposes of the rule before us, are these: There is a certain property which is occupied by a number of ryots. The plaintiff alleges that he was in constructive possession of this property by receipt of rent from the ryots, but that, on a certain day, the defendant induced them to discontinue paying their rent to the plaintiff and to pay it instead to him, the defendant. The plaintiff, thereupon, brought the present action under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act for the purpose of recovering possession of the said property from the defendant.

The Munsif has held that this suit does not fall within the scope of s. 9 of that Act, and has accordingly dismissed it. That section runs thus: "If any person is dispossessed without his consent of immovable property otherwise than in due course of law, he or any person claiming through him may, by suit instituted within six months from the date of the dispossession, recover possession thereof, notwithstanding any other title that may be set up in such suit."

The learned vakil for the petitioner contends that his client was the party in possession of this property, and that the only mode in which that possession could, in the circumstances, be enjoyed was by receipt of rent, and that, when the ryots discontinued paying him rent and paid the same to the defendant, he was practically dispossessed within the meaning of s. 9, and that he was, therefore, entitled to maintain the present suit; and he relied upon certain remarks made by Sir Richard Couch in the case of In re Sutherland (1).

What Sir Richard Couch was called upon to determine in that case was as to the meaning of the word "possession" in s. 318 of Act XXV of 1861, and he held that if a person was in possession of a property through his servant, or if he was in possession through ryots paying rent to him directly, that would be a possession within the meaning of that section; and, if a dispute with regard to such possession arose before the Criminal Court, that Court would have jurisdiction to take cognisance of it.

But the question that we have to consider in the present case is a wholly different one. What we have to determine is whether the plaintiff has been dispossessed, without his consent, of the property in dispute within the meaning of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. According to the plaintiff's own case the actual possession of the property was with the ryots, and the only way in which possession was enjoyed by him was by receipt of rent from those ryots. Now, if he was in the receipt and enjoyment of the rents from the ryots, the mere discontinuance of the payment of that rent would not constitute a disposssession without his consent within the meaning of the Specific Relief Act, for he might very well bring a civil action against the ryots for the recovery of the rent; and the mere fact of the defendant having persuaded the ryots to pay to him the rent, said to be due to the plaintiff, would be no answer to the claim. Therefore it appears to us that the plaintiff was not dispossessed against his consent so as to entitle him to maintain the action.

It appears to us that the real object of the Legislature in engrafting this section into the Specific Relief Act was to provide a speedy remedy for that class of cases where a person in physical possession of property is forcibly dispossessed from it against his will and consent. It is not the plaintiff's case that the ryots have been dispossessed; his case is that the ryots are still in occupation of the property. If they had been dispossessed they might have maintained a suit for recovery of possession; and in certain circumstances he might himself bring such a suit. But they are in possession and, as I said before, the mere non-payment of the rent by them cannot be taken to be a dispossesssion of the plaintiff without his consent.

Reference was made to ss. 2 and 4 of Act IV of 1840 and s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859. We have considered those enactments; and we observe that the language of s. 4, Act IV of 1840, is very different from that of s. 15, XIV of 1859, and of s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, so far as the particular point before us is concerned. It seems to us that, notwithstanding what might have been laid down in s. 4 of Act IV of 1840, the Legislature, when it promulgated the Specific Relief Act, did not intend to provide that, where a person was not in actual possession of property, but only in constructive possession of it by receipt of rent from ryots, and those ryots [653] continued in occupation of that property, a suit by the landlord might be brought under the Specific Relief Act for recovery of possession by reason of discontinuance by the ryots to pay him rent.

For these reasons we think that this rule must be discharged with costs.

CRIMINAL MOTION.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Ghose.

In the matter of the petition of Iswar Chunder Guho and others.* [30th June, 1887.]

False evidence—Affidavit affirmed before a Deputy Magistrate—Prosecution on facts stated in an affidavit affirmed before a Deputy Magistrate—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 193, 199—Declaration by law receivable as evidence—Sanction to prosecute, Order for, quashed.

A Deputy Magistrate has no power to administer an oath to a person making a declaration in the shape of an affidavit; and such person cannot, on the facts stated in such declaration, be prosecuted for committing an offence either under s. 193 or s. 199 of the Penal Code.

This was a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Mymensingh to show cause why an order passed by him sanctioning a prosecution under s. 199 of the Penal Code should not be quashed.

The sanction referred to was given under the following circumstances:

One Dherai Duffadar, a cattle dealer, had preferred a complaint against Sarat Chunder Boonick and Gazi Shaik, charging them with wrongful restraint in having prevented his cattle from being taken to a certain mela. Baboo Shama Chunder Dass, a Deputy Magistrate of Jamalpur, referred the complaint to the police for investigation, and the police subsequently.

* Criminal Motion No. 163 of 1887, against the order passed by E. G. Glazier, Esq., District Magistrate of Mymensingh, dated the 27th of April, 1887.
sent up the two accused with a report that the charge was true. On the [654] application of Gazi Shaik the Magistrate of the District made an order transferring the case to the Court of Baboo Akhoy Coomar Bose, Deputy Magistrate of Mymensingh, but the order not having for some reason or another reached Baboo Shama Chunder Dass, the case was heard by him. Before, however, the case was actually entered into, one Iswar Chunder Guho, at the request of Sarat Chunder Bhoomick, drafted a petition praying Baboo Shama Chunder Dass not to proceed with the case, inasmuch as he was practically the prosecutor in the case, and an order for transfer had already been made, but that that order not having being received, the petitioner was desirous of renewing his application for such transfer.

This petition was presented by Sarat Chunder Bhoomick together with an affidavit affirmed before the Deputy Magistrate, which contained an allegation that the police had started the case with the assistance, and under the direction, of the Deputy Magistrate himself, and that the charge was false. The case was, however, proceeded with, and the accused acquitted.

Baboo Shama Chunder Dass subsequently to this applied to Mr.
Glazier, the District Magistrate, for sanction to prosecute Sarat Chunder Bhoomick and Ishwar Chunder Guho for giving false-evidence in a stage of a judicial proceeding, the alleged false evidence being the statement contained in the affidavit of Sarat Chunder Bhoomick charging the Deputy Magistrate with having inspired the prosecution in that case. Mr. Glazier thereupon sanctioned the prosecution of those persons, and made over the case to Moulvie Mahomed, a Deputy Magistrate of Mymensingh, for trial.

The accused applied for and obtained the rule abovementioned, calling on Mr. Glazier, the District Magistrate of Mymensingh, to show cause why the order directing proceedings to be taken against them should not be quashed.

Mr. Monomohun Ghose for the accused contended that Sarat Chunder Bhoomick had committed no offence, the Deputy Magistrate having no authority to receive an affidavit in the course of a criminal trial, nor any authority under the Criminal Procedure Code to administer an oath to a person making a declaration to an affidavit, and the accused could not, [655] therefore, be prosecuted under s. 199 of the Penal Code; that Iswar Chunder Guho had merely drafted the petition; and that the proceedings held by Baboo Shama Chunder Dass were coram non judice, they being held at a time when the order for transfer was in force.

No one appeared to show cause.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was as follows:—

ORDER.

This rule was obtained to set aside certain pending proceedings taken against two persons for perjury. They have been ordered to be prosecuted, but no commitment has taken place, and the question is whether there is any evidence of their having committed perjury. What is alleged is that they have made an affidavit under the sanction of an oath or affirmation before the Deputy Magistrate who was enquiring into the case of one of them for the purpose of intimating to him that he intended to apply under s. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to have the case removed for trial to some other Court.
Upon that statement of the case the question arose whether he had power to administer an oath to a person for the purpose of swearing an affidavit so as to make it binding upon him under s. 199 of the Indian Penal Code.

We have searched the Code and have enquired about this matter, but we can find no power in a Deputy Magistrate to administer an oath to a person making a declaration in the shape of an affidavit.

Under these circumstances we do not see how this case can come under s. 199 of the Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as this was not a declaration which any public servant was bound or authorised by law to receive as evidence of the facts stated in it.

Under these circumstances we think that upon the admitted facts of this case these persons are not alleged to have made any affirmation or taken any oath within the meaning of the Penal Code, and therefore they are not liable to prosecution for perjury under s. 199 or s. 193. The proceedings pending before the Deputy Magistrate against Iswar Chunder Guho and Sarat Chunder Bhoomick will, therefore, be quashed.

[656] CRIMINAL MOTION.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Beverley.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF UMESH CHUNDER KAR AND ANOTHER.* [9th July, 1887.]

Public nuisance—Penal Code, Act XLV of 1860, ss. 268, 283, 290—Obstruction on tidal navigable river.

Persons placing a bamboo stockade across a tidal navigable river for the purpose of fishing, although leaving in such stockade a narrow opening for the passage of boats, which passage was, however, kept closed except on the actual passage of a boat, were charged at the instance of a sub-divisional officer with causing an obstruction under s. 283 of the Penal Code.

Held, that, although it was doubtful whether s. 283 applied to the case, they had committed an offence under s. 268 of the Penal Code, and were punishable under s. 290 of that Code.

[Dis, 20 C. 665 (669); D., 10 A.L.J. 362 (363)=13 Cr. L.J. 830=17 Ind. Cas. 571.]

The accused were charged at the instance of a sub-divisional officer under s. 283 of the Penal Code with causing obstruction to the public by raising a bamboo stockade for the purpose of fishing across the whole breadth of the Bharu, a tidal navigable river, close to the ferry at Mirzapur. It was proved at the trial before the Deputy Magistrate that the stockade reached across the river from one bank to the other; that an opening four or five cubits wide near the northern bank of the river was made for the passage of boats, but this passage was kept closed by bamboos, it being opened only when necessary to allow boats to pass through, and that only at convenience of the people using the stockade; that a light was placed on the stockade at night; that the stockade had never been used in former years; and that, although the passage was large enough for dinghies to pass freely, yet a larger cargo boat could only do so with great difficulty, and several manjhis were called, who proved that their boats had been prevented from passing freely over all parts of the river at the point. The Deputy Magistrate on the above facts held that the public were entitled to the use of the entire breadth of the river, and that the [657] accused had by placing this stockade across the river caused an obstruction, and thereby committed an offence under s. 283 of the Penal Code; he therefore sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each, or in default to undergo imprisonment for fifteen days.

The prisoners moved before a Bench of the High Court consisting of Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J., and obtained a rule calling upon the Crown to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside on the ground that there was no evidence of injury to any particular individual, and no complaint by any one of any such injury, and that therefore no offence, under s. 283 of the Penal Code, had been committed, inasmuch as that section contemplated an injury to some particular person.

The rule came on for hearing before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Mr. O. C. Mullick and Baboo Jashoda Nundun Paramanick in support of the rule cited Empress v. Ram Singh (1) and The Queen v. Khader Moidin (2) as showing that it must be proved that obstruction was caused to some particular individual before a conviction could be had under s. 283.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) to show cause contended that, whether or no s. 283 applied, the case fell under ss. 268 and 290 of the Penal Code.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Beverley, J.) was as follows:

ORDER.

This rule has been obtained for the purpose of setting aside a conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioners for committing a public nuisance by obstructing a navigable river. Now the facts which are absolutely undisputed are that there is a navigable river somewhere in Bengal across which the defendants in this case have set up a bamboo dam of some kind for the purpose of catching fish. That bamboo dam seems to extend all the way across the river, but there is a place which is opened at times, and through which boats can then proceed. This place is also kept lighted and guarded by men for the purpose [658] of seeing that no accidents happen. The first question, and in fact the only question, is whether this is a public nuisance under s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code. I do not think there can be the slightest doubt about it myself, because this being a navigable river, the public have a right to navigate over the whole place, and any one who interferes with the free navigation of it, without any right to do so, commits a public nuisance. It is admitted that this obstruction extends over the whole width of the river with the exception of a small outlet, through which boats can pass by using considerable precaution. Under these circumstances I do not feel any doubt that this is a public nuisance. Then the only other question is whether this is an offence which can be punished by fine under the Indian Penal Code. When this rule was applied for it was moved and granted upon the ground that there was no evidence of injury to any particular individual and no complaint by any one of any such injury, and that for that reason the petitioners were not liable to be punished under s. 283, which contemplates an injury to some particular person; but on looking further to s. 290 that section provides for cases in which there is no special punishment provided for a public nuisance, and it is clear that when a person is guilty of a public nuisance of any kind he may be punished under s. 290. Under these circumstances I do not think that there is the slightest doubt that this was a public nuisance under s. 268 of the Code, and as I said before, although I had some doubt whether it was punishable under s. 283, I have no doubt that it is punishable under s. 290 of the Indian Penal Code, and the fine of Rs. 25, which has been imposed in this case, is not too heavy.

(1) 11 C. L. R. 462. (2) 4 M. 235.

We think therefore that this rule must be discharged.

[659] CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Ghose.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF FAZEL ALI CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS.

FAZEL ALI CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS v. ABDUL MOZID CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS.* [18th July, 1887.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 93—Manager—Co-sharers—Practice in making applications under s. 93 of Act VIII of 1885 where the co-sharers hold various and complicated shares in the property—Notice.

Where a property consisted of 243 estates or tenures, sixty of which were entered under separate numbers in the Land Register of the Collector, other portions of the property being taluks, dependent tenures, and ryoti holdings, and a single application is made by twelve of the co-sharers in such property (many of whom held shares in several of the tenures and estates) calling upon the remaining four sharers in the property to show cause why a common manager should not be appointed under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Court should, before granting the application, call upon the applicants to state whether all of them are entitled in common to the various estates and tenures and, if not so entitled, should call upon them to divide themselves into as many groups as there are properties held by them in common; and in the latter case each group of shareholders should put in separate applications, on which separate Court-fees should be levied. The notice in the case of tenures should be as provided by s. 93 of the Act, and should be of the same character and to the same effect as in the case of estates.

This was an application made jointly by twelve of the co-sharers of a certain property under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, calling upon the four remaining sharers in the property to show cause why a common manager should not be appointed to certain property consisting of 243 estates or taluks, of which about 60 bore separate numbers on the Collector's Land Register, whilst other portions of the property were taluks and dependent tenures, howlals and ryoti holdings, and did not therefore appear in the Collector's Register at all. The petitioners were holders of different proportions of the entire property; for example, petitioner No. 11 had a 1 anna 13½ gundas share in ten of such estates; petitioner No. 12 had a 2 annas 13½ gundas share in estate No. 214, and also a 2 annas 9 gundas share in estate No. 215; petitioner No. 1 had a 17 gundas 3 karas share in estate No. 58 of such properties, and a 2 annas 13 karas share in two others; and the four persons called upon to show cause likewise held various shares in many of the estates. The grounds on which the application was made were that there existed disputes which were likely to lead to normal injuries to private rights in the collection of rents and the letting out of these lands.

*Civil Reference No. 8A of 1887 made by J. Posford, Esq., Judge of Backergunge, dated the 29th of April, 1887.

The opposite party made no objection to the appointment of a manager.

The District Judge being of opinion that it was inexpedient to deal with all these properties by one single order, seeing that the interests of the different parties were so various and complicated, considered that a separate application should be made with regard to each separate estate, and, further considering that great difficulty would arise in determining the question on whom, and in what manner, notice ought to be served with regard to the inferior tenures and holdings which did not appear in the Collector’s Register, referred the following questions to the High Court before dealing finally with the application, viz:—

(1) Whether the application then before him should be considered as one miscellaneous case, and be dealt with as one application, or whether there should be as many applications as there were estates or tenures.

(2) Whether the usual Court-fee should be levied on each application (if more than one application should be thought necessary), or whether a separate Court-fee should be levied in respect of every estate or tenure.

(3) When a petition under s. 93 of the Act relates to properties or tenures that do not appear in the Collector’s Register, what is the proper notice to be given to the co-shares?

Neither party was represented at the hearing of the reference.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.) was as follows:—

OPINION.

[661] We think that the questions submitted by the Judge should be answered as follows:—

(1) There need not be as many applications as there are estates or tenures mentioned in the application. But in the circumstances as disclosed in the reference it would be necessary for the Judge to call upon the applicants to state whether all of them are entitled in common to the various estates and tenures mentioned in the application; and if not to divide themselves into as many groups as there may be properties held by them in common. In this latter case it would be necessary that each group of shareholders should put in separate applications.

(2) If such separate applications have to be put in and not otherwise, separate Court-fees should be levied upon each application.

(3) The notice in the case of tenures will be as provided by s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; it will be of the same character and to the same effect as in the case of estates.
MASEYK (Judgment-debtor) v. STEEL & CO. AND ANOTHER (Decree-holders), (Auction-Purchasers).* [11th July, 1887.]

Execution of decree—Mortgage decree for sale of properties in different districts and jurisdictions—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 19, 223 (c), Sch. IV, Form 128—Jurisdiction.

A decree obtained in a suit, brought under the provisions of s. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshaye on a mortgage of certain properties situated in the districts and jurisdictions of Rajshaye and Nyadumka, directed that the properties mentioned in the mortgage should be sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the mortgage debt. The properties were sold by the Court of Rajshaye. Held that the authority given by s. 19 of the Code included an authority to make the order for the sale of the properties, and that the Rajshaye Court was within its jurisdiction in directing and carrying out the sale.

[F. 15 C. 667 (671); 91 P. R. 1898; Commented upon. 19 C. 13 (16); R., 39 C. 10; (109)=14 C.L.J. 228 (231)=16 C.W.N. 402 (404)=11 Ind. Cas. 417 (418)]

This was an application to set aside the sales of 37 properties, each bearing a towzi number in the Collectorate of Nyadumka, held in execution of a mortgage decree obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshaye.

The properties in question were situated as follows:—Mehal No. 120, called Gobindpore Palasgachi, was divided into six mouzahs, four of which were in Nyadumka and two in the district of Maldah, which is in the division of Rajshaye; mehal No. 116 was divided into two mouzahs, of which mouzah, Oodna and Nimgachi were situated in Nyadumka, some arable lands appertaining to mouzah Oodna being, however, situated in the district of Maldah, the mal cutchery of the mehal being at Nyadumka; mehal Dahoolotoolah, No. 128, situated partly in Nyadumka and partly in Maldah, the inhabited portion of the mouzahs forming this mehal being in Maldah, but the greater portion of the mouzahs being in Nyadumka, the collections being made by the Naib in charge of mehal Gobindpore, mehals Nos. 142 and 143, Araji Sokhepore and Mustangar Sokhepore, were situated in Nyadumka, and thirty-two jagirs entered in the towzi of the Collectorate of Nyadumka, three of which, Nos. 197, 217, and 271, were in the district of Nyadumka, the remaining twenty-nine being in Maldah.

* Appeal from Order No. 79 of 1887, against the order of Baboo Aghore Nath Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rajshaye, dated the 3rd of February, 1887.
These jagirs were formerly granted to soldiers retiring from the service as rewards, but many years having elapsed since the date of these grants, it was at the present time impossible to give the boundaries of these jagirs, added to which the land had since been diluviated and re-formed.

[663] The suit in which the decree for sale was obtained had been brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshaye under the provisions of s. 19 of the Civil Procedure Code. In pursuance of such decree the properties above set out were sold by the Rajshaye Court. The judgment-debtor applied to set the sales aside on the ground, amongst others, that the notification of sale with regard to Gobindpore Palasgachi, mehal No. 120, had been posted on the cutchery of Palasgachi only; that the notification of sale with respect to Dahoolotoolah had not been posted on any portion of the inhabited part of the village, but was posted in the mal on the Maldah side of the river Ganges; that the notification with respect to mehals Nos. 142, 143, 116, had not been posted on conspicuous parts of the mehals; that the notification with regard to the jagirs had been posted haphazard without first ascertaining the boundaries of each jagir; and that on account of these irregularities an inadequate price had been obtained at the sales, and that some of the sales had been held without jurisdiction.

The Subordinate Judge of Rajshaye held the Rajshaye Court had jurisdiction to sell mehals Nos. 120, 116 and 128, parts of which were situate within and parts without the jurisdiction, and the twenty-nine jagirs, which were situate in the Maldah district, but that it had not jurisdiction to sell mehals Nos. 142 and 143 and the three jagirs numbered Nos. 197, 217 and 271, which were all situated entirely outside the jurisdiction, and that for that reason the sales of mehals Nos. 142 and 143 and the jagirs Nos. 197, 217 and 271 should be set aside; and further that the sales of Oodua, Nimgachi, Dahoolotoolah and Mustangur Sokhe-pore should be set aside on the ground that there had been material irregularity, in publishing the sales, in consequence of which the properties had been sold at an inadequate price; and that the sales of Gobindpore Palasgachi and of the twenty-nine jagirs should hold good.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee and Baboo Benode Behary Mookerjee) for the appellant.—The Rajshaye Court had no power to execute its decrees outside its own territorial limits, but when it became necessary to [664] execute the decree outside the limits, the decree should have been sent to the district within the limits of which the property to be sold was situated. Mehal No. 120 being situate in Nyadumka, the Nyadumka Court alone could sell it—Unnooool Chunder Chowdhary v. Hurry Nath Koondoo (1), Ram Lall Moitra v. Bama Sundari Dabia (2) and Kally Prosonee Bose v. Dinonath Mulliek (3), distinguishing the case of Shurroop Chunder Gooho v. Amecrunissa Khatoon (4), and citing Gunga Narain Gupta v. Ananunda Moyee Burrooanee (5). The proclamation of sale must be posted in a conspicuous part of the property—Megh Lall Pooree v. Shib Pershad Madi (6), and with regard to the proclamation of sale for the twenty-nine jagirs it was not posted on the land itself.

Mr. Evans (with him Mr. Adkin and Baboo Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty) for the respondents.—The sales were advertised in the Exchange Gazette and the Calcutta English and Native newspapers, and private notices had been sent to all the neighbouring land-owners; the Palasgauchi cutchery was the largest of the properties. As a guide to the effect of s. 19 of the Code the corresponding clause, cl. 12 of the Letters Patent should be looked at; under that clause the High Court had jurisdiction in suits for land outside the jurisdiction. A sale of property under a mortgage decree is not a sale in execution, the usual practice being for the purchaser to bring a suit if he did not get possession. There is an exception to this rule cited in Belchambers' Rules and Orders, ss. 255, 256, viz., where the Registrar delivered to the purchaser an order to be taken personally to the Mofussil Court for transfer of the decree. From the practice on the Original Side of this Court under cl. 12 of the Charter in mortgage suits it is apparent that the High Court had power to sell properties outside its jurisdiction. The Charter of 1862 directed the practice then in force to be continued, and these rules were subsequently regulated by the rules laid down in Act VIII of 1859. There can be no doubt that the Court could sell the security if it had power to entertain the suit. Subsequently Act X of 1877 was made applicable as a Statute to the High Court, Original Side. In Belchambers' Rules, pp. 188, 189, are to be found the rules in sales in execution, but such rules are inapplicable to mortgage sales. See case cited in Belchambers' "Dacca." The High Court has construed the rules as being applicable to sales in satisfaction of money decrees and not to mortgage decrees. The Transfer of Property Act provides that there must be decrees for foreclosure and sale. The Mofussil Court seems to have thought it was bound to attach in mortgage suits, but the Code and the case of Dayachand Nemchand v. Hemchand Dharamchand (1) show that this is not necessary. Sections 223 and 295 of the Code raised a question as to whether these sections applied to all decrees, but in 1879, s. 295, cl. (c) was added. It is only necessary here to decide whether the Courts have been right in holding these sections not to apply to sales under mortgage decrees. We are within the limits of the law if these sections are applicable to mortgage decrees. In s. 223 the word "may" is not imperative; the word is one of convenience or necessity and leaves the Court a discretion. The only way in which these sections can be treated consistently is by holding that s. 223 is permissive if they apply at all to Registrars' sales. In Shib Narain Singh v. Gobind Doss Bhukut (2) there was a right to attach and sell piecemeal. If sub-s. (c) of s. 223 is read as imperative it can only refer to cases in which the whole of the lots to be sold are out of the jurisdiction. There is no reason for saying the sales were irregular; the real question here is one of jurisdiction. There is no cross appeal, because we have no right to object when the sale is set aside (s. 588). The objection of non-jurisdiction is not an objection with regard to publishing the notice of sale as the price might be good, and yet the sale might be set aside, as a sale without jurisdiction is a nullity. I submit, therefore, that the sections in Chap. XIX of the Code do not apply to mortgage sales by the Registrar; that it is not possible to hold that the properties could not have been sold, as ss. 19 and 644 give the form to be used. From 128 of sch. IV is for mortgage decrees. Reading that [666] Form with s. 19, is it possible to say that the Court must send away the decree for execution? I contend the Mofussil Courts have the powers which are exercised here by the Court on the Original Side.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.)—

JUDGMENTS.

Petheram, C.J.—This is an application which arises out of a suit brought by Messrs. Steel and Co., against Mr. Maseyk for the purpose of realizing a sum of money secured by the mortgage of a number of properties. The properties consist of five mehals situate in the Nyadumka and Rajshaye districts and thirty-two pieces of land, known as jagirs.

The suit was brought in the Rajshaye Court under the provisions of s. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which gives jurisdiction to a Court to entertain a suit in respect of properties partly situated within its territorial limits and partly out of it, where the same relief is sought in respect of the whole of the properties, and a decree was obtained in the suit that a certain sum of money was due, and directing the sale of the properties.

In pursuance of that decree the properties were sold by the Rajshaye Court, in which the suit was brought.

Two of the mehals were situate entirely outside the Rajshaye district. The sales as regards them have been set aside for that reason, and no question arises upon this appeal with reference to them. The mehal which is known as No. 120 is registered in the Nyadumka Collectorate, and is situate partly within the Nyadumka Collectorate and partly within the Rajshaye Collectorate. As regards this mehal the sale has not been set aside, and a part of this appeal is directed against the order which confirms the sale of this mehal, and it proceeds upon the ground that the property is not wholly situate within the Rajshaye district. The rest of the order relates to that portion of the property which is known as the jagirs. As I said just now there are thirty-two jagirs. Of these three are found to be in Nyadumka, and with regard to these three the sale has been set aside, but twenty-nine are found to be situate in Rajshaye, and the sale of these has not been interfered with, but is now attacked on the ground that the proclamation has not been shown to be served [667] upon the land itself. I propose to deal with the question of these jagirs first. These jagirs appear to be pieces of land granted, many years ago, to soldiers retiring from the service as a reward for their military services. At that time, no doubt, each plot of land was properly marked out, and each recipient knew exactly what was the land assigned to him, but these soldiers have disappeared long ago, and probably they sold their holdings to somebody, and they have now found their way into the hands of Mr. Maseyk. In the course of time the boundaries of these jagirs were lost, and the only thing that is known is that they were situate in a certain district and formed part of the same plain. I may say here that the loss of the demarcations of these plots has become more complete by the fact that the land was diluviated, and they have re-formed by the action of the river, so that it is practically impossible to say what were the boundaries of each particular plot, but it is known that they all formed part of a particular tract of land, and it appears that the sale proclamation was stuck up on this land.

Under the circumstances we think that that is all that it was possible to do, and all that could reasonably be expected to be done.
The lower Court has found that there was no service upon the land for the reason that each plot was not capable of being distinguished one from another; but, as I have said, it was for this very reason that service on each plot could not be effected. But, apart from this consideration, the Court below has found that the jagirs have not been proved to have been sold for an inadequate price, and we see no reason to differ from that conclusion, and we, therefore, think that, so far as these properties were concerned, the sale was perfectly good, and the appeal in that respect must be dismissed.

Then comes the question as to the sale of mehal No. 120, which is situated partly within the Rajshaye district, and partly within the Nyadurka district, in the Collectorate of which district it is registered.

The suit was brought in the Rajshaye district, and the decree for the sale of the mortgaged property was obtained in the Rajshaye district, and the sale of this property was held by an officer of the Court of Rajshaye, acting under the instructions or the decree of the Court. It is attacked now upon the ground that the Court has no power to execute its decree outside its own territorial limits, but that, when it is necessary to execute a decree outside of its limits, it must be sent to the district within the limits of which the property is situated.

A good many cases have been cited on this point. I do not think it is necessary for me to consider these cases in detail, because I do not think they deal with the question raised in this case. In this particular case the decree, which is sought to be executed, is a mortgage decree, which finds that a certain sum of money is due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee and directs that the property included in the mortgage shall be sold and the proceeds applied in the payment of the mortgage-debt, and, if there is any residue, it shall be paid to the mortgagee. It is under the provisions of that decree, which is practically a decree for specific performance of the contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee, that this sale has been ordered and has been carried out, and it seems to me that the authority given by s. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure must include the authority to make an order of this kind, that the property shall be sold, and to direct the mode in which the sale shall take place. And this does nothing more, because it directs that the property shall be sold and the money received and handed over in the way directed to the mortgagor and mortgagee. The question as to the mode in which the purchaser is to get possession of the property purchased by him is a totally different matter, and it is not until the purchaser seeks to obtain possession of his purchase that this question could arise. The practice of the High Court here has been cited, and it seems to me that it makes the thing abundantly clear. It appears that, when a decree of this kind is pronounced by this Court and when a sale is ordered, the sale is carried out by the Registrar of the Court. He conducts the sale and receives the money, and it is then distributed by him or by the Court in due proportion to the parties entitled to it. But where the sale takes place in execution of a money decree under which property is attached and is sold to satisfy a money decree the procedure is totally different. In that case this Court could not execute its decree upon property outside the jurisdiction of this Court for the simple reason that in that case the property would be attached and sold by the Sheriff of Calcutta, but the Sheriff of Calcutta could not hold the sale in that case, because he could not go outside his jurisdiction for the purpose of selling the property which he had to sell.
It seems to me that this analogy makes this case absolutely clear. But in the mofussil they have neither a Registrar nor a Sheriff, and with the machinery the Courts have they have to do both duties. If it is a money decree the officer of the Court has to attach the property in accordance with the provisions of the law, and has to proceed to sell the property and to give possession of it in his capacity of officer of the Court, which corresponds with that of Sheriff of Calcutta, and in doing that his powers would be limited by the territorial jurisdiction of the Court of which he is an officer. But, when it comes to selling property which is ordered to be sold in pursuance of a contract between the parties, the Court may by its decree order that that contract shall be specifically performed, because the parties could not sell the property or lay down the mode in which it should be sold. The Court in its decree directs the mode and appoints the person who is to carry out the sale. If the sale was to take place here the person appointed would be the Registrar. In the mofussil, where there is no Registrar, the only convenient person is the Nazir, who takes action in the matter.

It seems to me then that the procedure in execution of money decrees, and the local limits of the Court, have no reference to sales of this kind. Consequently, in my opinion, the Rajshaye Court was perfectly within its jurisdiction when it directed that the sale of this property should be carried out in the way it was carried out.

Some of the cases cited by Mr. Woodroffe and examined by Mr. Evans uphold that view; and with reference to these cases it is only necessary for me to say that I entirely agree with them. In some of those cases it was held that, where a sale takes place under a money decree of property partly within the local jurisdiction of the Court, whose decree was being executed, and partly without its jurisdiction, the sale of the property without the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree was valid and binding in consequence of the provisions of ss. 19 and 223. As I said just now I do not think it is necessary that that point should be discussed, and I only wish to guard myself by saying that I am not prepared to accept that view of the law. If I thought it was necessary to decide that point in this case, I should have felt it my duty to refer that point to a Full Bench. That is all that it is necessary to say here.

As I said before I think the case of a sale of this kind under a mortgage decree is absolutely and entirely different from a sale under a money decree.

For these reasons I think that the appeal as to the sale of mehal No. 120 should also be dismissed.

GHOSE, J.—I concur generally in the judgment pronounced by the Chief Justice. It is undisputed that under s. 19 of the Civil Procedure Code the Rajshaye Court had full jurisdiction to take cognizance of the suit that was brought before it, and to pronounce a decree. Now the decree that was passed was a decree ordering the sale of the properties comprised in the mortgage-deed. It appears that some of the properties comprised in that deed were situate wholly beyond the local jurisdiction of the Rajshaye Court, and one of them, and that is one of the properties with which we are dealing, viz., mehal No. 120, was situate partly within the jurisdiction of the Rajshaye Court and partly within the jurisdiction of the Nyadumka Court; and the question raised before us by Mr. Woodroffe for the appellant is, whether or not the Rajshaye Court had authority to sell the said mehal No. 120 or, at any rate, that portion of it which is situate on the other bank of the river Pudma, that is to say on the Nyadumka side. Now it seems to me in the first place that, if the Court which made the decree, had jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the whole of the properties comprised in the mortgage-deed, it would also have jurisdiction to sell them in execution of that decree, unless it be shown that that authority has been taken away or curtailed by any of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. The only section relied upon in the Code is s. 223, [671] cl. (c) which runs thus: "A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution, under the provisions hereinafter contained. The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court if the decree directs the sale of immovable property situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it." Now it seems to me that, if the argument of Mr. Woodroffe were carried to its legitimate extent, the result would be that neither the Rajshaye Court nor the Nyadumka Court would have jurisdiction to sell this property. But it is contended by Mr. Woodroffe that, because mehal No. 120 was recorded in the Collectorate of Nyadumka, therefore the Nyadumka Court alone had jurisdiction to sell it, and in support of that contention he has cited a case of Kally Prosonno Bosc v. Dinonath Mullick (1), in which the judgment was delivered by Sir Richard Couch, late Chief Justice of this Court. Now, upon a careful consideration of that case, it will be found that the true question raised before the Court on that occasion was a very different one from the one we have now to consider. It would appear upon the facts as disclosed in the judgment in that case that the property that was sold was situate partly within the jurisdiction of the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs and partly within that of the Nuddea Court. The Court of the 24-Pergunnahs passed the decree upon a mortgage bond, by which the said property was hypothecated, and upon application made by the decree-holder sent the decree for execution to the Nuddea Court, within whose jurisdiction the other portion of the property was situate; and the question that was raised was whether the latter Court acted beyond its jurisdiction in selling the property, and it was held that it had, in the circumstances mentioned in the judgment, authority to sell, one of the circumstances being that the property stood in the Revenue roll of the Collectorate of Nuddea. The suit was for the purpose of recovering, not the whole of the property sold but that portion of it which was situate beyond the limits of the Nuddea Court and within the limits of the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs; and it was held that the plaintiff could not succeed. [672] The question we have to determine in this case is a different one from that which was considered in that case, it being whether or no the Rajshaye Court, which made the decree in the suit, had authority to sell the property because a portion of it was situate beyond its local jurisdiction, and if it had any authority whether it could sell that portion of it which is situate in the other jurisdiction. Now, if we turn to s. 223, cl. (c), which is the only section in the Code that has been relied upon, we find that it is only in the case where it may be necessary for the Court which passed the decree to direct that the proceedings be sent to a different Court within the jurisdiction of which the property may be situated that it shall send the decree to that Court for execution, certifying the fact of non-satisfaction of the decree. In the present case, if the Court of Rajshaye had sent the decree to be executed in the Nyadumka Court, the same objection which is now raised for the appellant would arise as to the jurisdiction of the Nyadumka Court, and the only way in which that objection is sought to be met is by affirming that the mehal No. 120 being recorded in the Nyadumka Collectorate, the Nyadumka Court would have jurisdiction to hold the sale. I do not find anything in the Civil Procedure Code or any other law to warrant such a position. The jurisdiction of the Court is not given by the Collectorate in which the property is registered; and the point that we have to consider is not whether the Collectorate of Nyadumka had jurisdiction, but whether the Rajshaye Civil Court had jurisdiction to sell the property. If the Rajshaye Court had authority to make the decree, it would have also authority to sell the property, and this would seem to be pretty clear upon the wordings of Form No. 128 in the Fourth Schedule annexed to the Procedure Code; and the only question is whether this authority has been taken away by s. 223 of the Procedure Code. As I read that section it does not take away that power; it only provides that, when it may be necessary for the Court to send a decree for execution to another Court by reason of the property being situate beyond its local limits, it ought to do so. The question which arises upon this is, when the Legislature uses the words "sale of immoveable property" situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," whether it means the whole of the property or any portion of it. I hardly think that the latter construction is the right construction. I think it contemplates a case where the whole of the property, and not any portion of it, is situate beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree; or in other words cl. (c) (1) of s. 223 ought to be read as follows: "If the decree directs the sale of immoveable property situate wholly outside the local limits of the jurisdiction, &c., &c." This view was also at any rate practically adopted by a Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Shurroop Chander Gooho v. Ameerrunnissa Khatoon (1), and if it be the right view there could be no doubt as to what the procedure ought to be where an application is made to the Court which made the decree for the purpose of selling the properties comprised in the mortgage deed, some of which may be situate outside the limits of its jurisdiction, while others are partly within and partly out of its jurisdiction. As to the question raised whether the Rajshaye Court had authority to sell that portion of the property which is situate within the jurisdiction of the Nyadumka Court, I think that the observations already made answer it; and I may here add that, although there can be no legal objection to a property being sold by parts, still it seems to me that the Legislature in framing cl. (c) of s. 223 could not have intended to deprive the Court of its authority to sell that portion of it which may be situate beyond its local jurisdiction, for it is well known that, if a property is sold in parts, it would, in many instances, lessen its proper price, and if it be a revenue-paying estate, each of the purchasers would, until partition, continue liable for the whole of the revenue. I think upon these considerations we ought to hold that the Rajshaye Civil Court had ample jurisdiction to sell the property No. 120.

Two or three other minor points were raised by Mr. Woodroffe and Baboo Hem Chander Banerjee for the appellant, such as the sufficiency or otherwise of the service of the sale notifications as regards mehal No. 120 and the adequacy of the price fetched [674] for the jagir mehal; but they were disposed of in the course of the argument, and I do not think it necessary to notice them again here. It is sufficient to say that we agree with the lower Court in the view it took of these questions.

(1) 8 C. 703.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

NUndo Lal Addy (Plaintiff) v. Jodu Nath Haldar (Defendant).*  [29th June, 1887.]

Limitation—Mortgagee—Adverse possession.

A mortgagee of an entire undivided estate does not, by a subsequent purchase of a certain share therein from one not in actual possession at the time of conveyance, thereby change his character from a mortgagee to that of an owner, but his possession continues as a mortgagee.

B held an entire undivided estate under a mortgage (usufructuary) from C since 1273 (1866), and as such mortgagee in 1282 (1875) B purchased share therein from D who had not been in actual possession since the date of the mortgage. On the 20th January 1885 B brought a suit to recover possession of his purchased share.

Held, that the subsequent purchase did not change the character of B from that of a mortgagee to that of an owner, and that his suit was barred by 12 years' limitation.

The plaintiff obtained an usufructuary mortgage of 18½ bighas of land in 1273 (1866) from Krishna Mohun Ganguli. He entered into possession, and in 1282 (1875) he got a kobala of one-third share of the said land from Jugadamba Dabia, defendant No. 2, the widow of Ram Pershad, one of the two brothers of Krishna Mohun Ganguli. In 1284 (1887) the defendant No. 1 bought the equity of redemption of the whole of 18½ bighas from the sons of Krishna Mohun, and after suit redeemed the whole from the plaintiff. The High Court in the redemption suit declined to get into the question of the plaintiff's right, title, and interest to one-third of the share purchased by him. Hence he brought the present suit.

[675] The plaintiff alleged that Krishna Mohun Ganguli was not the malik of the 16 annas share of the property in dispute, and that the same was the ijmal property of the three uterine brothers, Krishna Mohun, Ram Pershad and Nobin Chunder Ganguli; and that the said Jugadamba Dabia became entitled to one-third of the entire estate after the death of her husband. He further alleged that Jugadamba Dabia was a member of a joint family with Krishna Mohun and his sons, and that thereby her possession continued in the land in dispute up to her conveyance to plaintiff in 1282 (1875).

The defendant No. 1 averred that the plaintiff's vendor became witness to the mortgage deed, dated the 12th Chaitro, 1273 (23rd March,

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1823 of 1886, against the decree of R. Towers, Esq., Judge of Midnapur, dated the 8th of July 1886, reversing the decree of Baboo Akhoy Coomar Sen, Rai Bahadur, Munsiff of Ghatal, dated the 30th of November 1885.
1866), and thereby she admitted that Krishna Mohun was the exclusive owner of the disputed property; that she was never in possession of the land in dispute, and the plaintiff's suit was barred by 12 years' limitation.

The Court of first instance held that Jugadamba Dabia was owner of one-third of the disputed property, and was in possession of it till she sold it to plaintiff in 1282 (1875) and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

The lower appellate Court reversed the decision of the Munsif, and held that at least from 1273 (1866), the date of the mortgagee to plaintiff, Jugadamba Dabia was not in possession of the property in dispute, and hence the plaintiff's claim was barred by 12 years' limitation.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose (with him Baboo Bhobani Churn Dutt) for the appellant.—The lower appellate Court was wrong in holding that the possession of the plaintiff from 1282 (1875) was adverse to himself. That possession in fact ceased only when the plaintiff had to give up the whole land after the redemption suit. The plaintiff as a mortgagee could not be treated as a trustee for the mortgagor. The nature of his possession after the purchase was changed, and thereafter he remained mortgagee as to two-thirds and owner as to one-third of the land in dispute.

Mr. W. M. Dass (with him Baboo Golab Chunder Sircar) for the respondent. The whole of the 16 annas was mortgaged in 1273 (1866) by Krishna Mohun as being his self-acquired property [676] and with the knowledge of Jugadamba Dabia, who was an attesting witness to the mortgage deed. The limitation as against Jugadamba Dabia must be taken to have run from the date on which the bond was executed. The subsequent purchase by the mortgagee would not save him from limitation continuing to run against him. The mortgagee was in possession of the property both before and after his purchase, and his possession was through and under Krishna Mohun. His possession of one-third of the share after the purchase could by no means be adverse to Krishna Mohun.

The case of Lall Dass v. Jamal Ali (1) was cited at the hearing of the appeal.

The Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) delivered the following judgment:

JUDGMENT.

The point for decision in this appeal is one of limitation, which has been decided by the lower appellate Court adversely to the plaintiff-appellant before us.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, in opening the appeal, complained that, in thus deciding, the District Judge had held that the plaintiff's possession of the property in dispute had been adverse to himself, that possession having ceased only a few days before the present suit was instituted.

This apparent anomaly is, however, explained by the fact that plaintiff's possession was held to be that of a mortgagee only, whereas in this suit he claims to establish his title as owner by purchase of an undivided one-third share of the mortgaged property. It was contended on his behalf that his possession, quoad that share, had been that of owner, and not that of mortgagee, from the date of the conveyance under which he claims, viz., the 29th Aughran 1282. It was alternatively contended that plaintiff's vendor should be held to have been in possession at that date, and that inasmuch as this suit was instituted within 12 years thereof it is not barred.

The question really depends upon whether the plaintiff's vendor, Jugadamba Dabia, was in possession actually or constructively at the time of the conveyance.

That she was in actual possession of the property is not pretended. All that is contended is that the possession of plaintiff's mortgagor was not adverse to her and that the mortgage did not prejudice her. The mortgagor was one Krishna Mohun Ganguli, and the mortgage (usufructuary) was executed in 1273, about 20 years before the institution of this suit. At that time Krishna Mohun's two brothers, who had formed a joint family with him, were dead; but their two widows, one of whom was plaintiff's vendor, Jugadamba, are said to have been still in commensality with him and to have had the rights of Hindu widows in their deceased husband's undivided shares in the joint family property. Be that as it may, it is certain that the mortgage deed in favour of the plaintiff dealt with the whole 16 annas of the property in question, and recited that it was the self-acquired property of Krishna Mohun; and the two widows signed the deed as attesting witnesses.

It appears, however, from the lower appellate Court's judgment that, subject to the plea of limitation, it was there admitted that Jugadamba was entitled to a one-third share.

After Krishna Mohun's death the plaintiff in 1275 obtained a simple mortgage of the same property from the heirs, who afterwards sold the equity of redemption to the defendant No. 1 in this suit. With this last mortgage Jugadamba and the other widow had nothing to do either as principals or witnesses. This one was paid off by the purchaser; and he subsequently in 1879 brought a suit against plaintiff for redemption of the mortgage of 1273. Plaintiff, having in the meantime obtained from Jugadamba a conveyance of her supposed one-third share, pleaded that purchase as a reason why he should not be required to give up the whole property upon the mortgage being paid off.

This Court in a second appeal held that he could not be heard in support of that plea, but must give up the whole mortgaged property and take what steps he chose to establish his proprietary right if any. Hence the present suit was brought.

As regards the plea of limitation we think that the plaintiff cannot defeat it merely by his possession as mortgagee down to the time immediately preceding the institution of the suit. He must show that he acquired possession as purchaser of the share before the title derived from his vendor had become [678] extinguished. Baboo Rash Behari Ghose contended that, upon his purchase, ipso facto, the character of the possession changed, and that he remained mortgagee as to two-thirds only and became owner as to one-third. But the redemption suit showed that he was still mortgagee of the whole, and he was compelled to give up the whole. It is not pretended that after his purchase he separately appropriated the profits of one-third of the property, and that the profits of two-thirds only were thence-forth devoted to the liquidation of the mortgage-debt. If, as pointed out by the learned Counsel for the respondent, his vendor was not in possession when she executed the conveyance, she did not by that act either get possession herself or impart it to him. All that he then acquired was the right to get into possession, which right he had to enforce before it became extinguished by lapse of time.

The lower appellate Court found that plaintiff's vendor had been out of possession at least from the year 1273, so that the plaintiff, purchasing her right in 1282, would have to bring his suit within three years more. He did not do so until after the lapse of about ten years. Upon the Judge's finding therefore it seems clear that he is barred. It was argued that the Judge was wrong in law in finding that Jugadamba was ousted from possession by the mortgage of 1273 inasmuch as she was a widow living in joint family with the mortgagor. In that state of circumstances it might, doubtless, be held that the granting of the mortgage by the kurta would not prejudice her rights. But it is found by the Judge that the mortgagor did not act as kurta, but that he distinctly set up his own exclusive right, one adverse to Jugadamba, and with her express knowledge of it and assent. No rent was reserved in the mortgage lease, so there was no actual possession enjoyed by the mortgagor after the date of the deed. We think that upon the evidence the lower appellate Court could legally hold that Jugadamba was dispossessed in 1273 and that she never had any possession afterwards. Her title may still have been alive in 1283, the time of plaintiff's purchase, but it had become extinguished several years before this suit was brought.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

[679] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice,
and Mr. Justice Ghose.

GOBIND CHANDRA MAZUMDAR (Judgment-debtor) v. Uma Charan
Sen and another (Decree-holders).* [21st July, 1887.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 311, 312—Sale in execution, Application to set aside—Limitation Act (XV of 1887), s. 18, and sch. II, art. 166—Fraud.

An application under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside a sale cannot be made after the expiry of thirty days from the date of such sale and after such sale has been confirmed, even though it be alleged that the sale was fraudulently kept from the knowledge of the applicant until after such confirmation.

Simile, that if before such sale had been confirmed an application had been made, although after thirty days from the date of the sale the Court would possibly have been justified in granting the application and extending the period of limitation if sufficient cause under s. 18 of the Limitation Act were made out.

[Diss. 17 C. 769 (F.B.).]

This was an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a sale in execution of an ex parte decree.

On the 22nd December, 1886, one Gobind Chundra Majumdar (judgment-debtor) applied under the provisions of s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside a sale held on the 21st September, 1886, which sale had already been confirmed on the 20th November, 1886. It was alleged by the applicant that the purchaser and the decree-holder had fraudulently kept him in ignorance of the sale until the 17th December, 1886, and that therefore he was entitled to make the application at any time within thirty days from the discovery of this fraud. The Munsif held that the application was barred under art. 166 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, and that s. 312 of the Civil Procedure Code did not admit of any such application after the sale had been confirmed. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee (with him Baboo Srinath Das, Baboo Rash Behari Ghose and Barboo Troylokhanath Mitter), for the appellant contended that, the sale having been fraudulently [680] concealed from his client until the 17th December, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 18 of the Limitation Act, and that therefore the application was not barred.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J. and Ghose, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This appeal arises out of an application made by the appellant before us on the 22nd of December, 1886, under the provisions of s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside a sale which had been held on the 21st of September 1886. This sale was confirmed on the 20th November, 1886, and the application that was made to the lower Court to set it aside has been refused upon the ground that it is barred by limitation under art. 166 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. It appears to us that the view taken of the matter by the lower Court is right. The sale in question having taken place on the 21st September 1886, it was open to the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court to set it aside upon the grounds mentioned in s. 311 within thirty days from the date of the sale, that being the period prescribed by art. 166 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. If such an application had been made within thirty days it would have been the bounden duty of the Court to entertain it, and to determine whether or no there were sufficient grounds within the meaning of s. 311 to set aside the sale. But no such application was made; and it became the duty of the Court to confirm, as it did confirm, the sale under s. 312 of the Procedure Code. The present application was not made until some time after, and therefore it would be barred under art. 166 of the Limitation Act already referred to. But then it is contended by Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee that, under s. 18 of the Limitation Act, his client is entitled as a matter of right to an extension of time, because the main ground of the application was, and is, that the decree under which the sale took place and all the proceedings taken in execution of that decree are fraudulent, and that his client is, therefore, entitled to thirty days from the time when he, for the first time, became aware of a fraud having been practised upon him. It appears to us that this contention cannot be maintained. Section 18 of the Limitation [681] Act, so far as it bears upon this case, could not be invoked in favour of the applicant after the sale had been confirmed. If, before the sale was confirmed, an application had been made, although after thirty days from the date of the sale, the Court would possibly be justified in granting the application and extending the period of limitation if sufficient cause under s. 18 of the Limitation Act were made out. But, as I have already said, the sale was confirmed under s. 312 on the 20th November, 1886, no application having been made to set it aside; and it, therefore, appears to us that no application could be entertained under s. 311 of the Code. If the sale was really a fraudulent sale it is open to the judgment-debtor to bring a suit to set it aside upon the ground of fraud; but we are not concerned with that matter on the present occasion. All that we have to consider is whether the application that was made to set aside the sale, under s. 311 is within time; and we are of opinion that it is not. We are informed that an application has been made by the decree-holder to set aside the decree itself upon the ground of fraud, and that the said application has been allowed, but that the order passed in that matter is now the subject of an appeal to a higher Court. If it be found that the decree has been fraudulently obtained, the decree-holder in the present case being the purchaser at the sale, there will be no difficulty in the way of the present applicant getting back his property; but, perhaps, it is not necessary in this case for us to express any opinion upon the subject.

The appeal will be dismissed. We make no order as to costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

RAM NARAIN DUT (Plaintiff) v. ANNOUDA PROSAD JOSHI and others (Defendants).* [10th June, 1887.]

Multifariousness—Misjoinder of causes of action—Misjoinder of parties.

The plaintiff, a talukdar, obtained a decree under s. 52 of the Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869) to eject his tenant for arrears of rent and to obtain possession of his tenure. In attempting to execute that decree he was opposed as regards certain plots, which he alleged were comprised in the tenure, by parties in possession, who instituted proceedings against him under s. 332 of the Civil Procedure Code. These proceedings resulted in their claim being decided in their favour. The plaintiff thereupon instituted one suit against his judgment-debtor and all parties who had opposed him in such proceedings, to obtain a declaration that all the several plots claimed against him belonged to the tenure in respect of which he had obtained a decree for khas possession, and he also prayed for khas possession of the various plots.

It was found that the titles relied upon by the defendants, and which had been set up by them in the proceedings under s. 332, were quite distinct one from another, and that there had been no collusion or combination amongst them to keep the plaintiff out of possession, but on the contrary that the defences were bona fide.

Held, that the suit was bad for misjoinder of causes of action and was properly dismissed.

In this case there were twelve defendants. The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that the first defendant, Lolit Mohun Goswami, held a jumma of Rs. 78-13-7½ gundas in mouza, Bhatiya of which he was the talukdar, and that on the 8th of September, 1881, he obtained a decree for arrears of rent and for ejectment against Lolit Mohun, and in execution got possession of some of the lands appertaining to the Jumma, but that the defendants other than Lolit Mohun had wrongfully in collusion with each other withheld possession of the remaining lands, some 35 plots, which were described in the Schedule to the plaint. The plaintiff stated that he brought this suit to establish his real title to the lands in question and to recover possession, and that his cause of action arose on the 8th September 1881, the date of his decree against Lolit Mohun.

Lolit Mohun did not appear to the suit, but the other defendants filed written statements, some of them pleading misjoinder of causes of action and limitation, and setting up their respective titles to the plots of which they respectively held possession.

It appeared from the proceedings in the suit that after the plaintiff obtained his decree on the 8th September, 1881, against Lolit Mohun, he obtained possession of some of the lands in the [683] jote, including some of those in the possession of some of the present defendants; that there-upon those defendants applied under s. 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and got their separate lands separately restored to them in July, 1882. As regards other lands, the subject of the suit, the plaintiff admitted that he had not included them in his list of lands filed in the execution department, and that no attempt had been made to take possession of them, and hence that he had not been resisted. These facts, however, were not stated in the plaint.

The Munsiff framed an issue as to whether the suit could proceed against all the defendants, and upon such issue he said: "There is no doubt a misjoinder of different causes of action. Each defendant claims separate plots of land by separate title deeds, and therefore a separate suit should have been brought against each defendant for possession of those plots from which he kept the plaintiff out of possession. As the law does not lay down that such a suit should be thrown out on account of such a defect I pass it over." He then proceeded to try the suit on its merits, and decreed it in part.

The defendants appealed.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff had no cause of action against those defendants against whom he had not attempted to execute his decree, and who had consequently offered no resistance, and as regards the others that his cause of action did not accrue on the 8th September, 1881, but on the dates upon which the defendants had respectively resisted him and got a decision in their favour in the proceedings under s. 392 of the Civil Procedure Code. He further found that the defendants disclosed their separate titles and claimed their separate plots in those proceedings, and that the plaintiff in order to get rid of the effect of their proceedings suppressed them altogether and charged the defendants with collusion and combining to keep him out of possession, to prove which there was not a particle of evidence, and that on the contrary the plaintiff’s own gomastah had proved that the defendants were in separate possession of separate plots of land and that there was nothing in common between them. He accordingly held that [684] the case was clearly within the purview of the Full Bench Ruling in Raja Ram Tewari v. Luchman Pershad (1), and relying upon that case and the cases of Motee Lall v. Ranee (2), and Maniruddin Ahmed v. Ram Chand (3), held that the suit must be dismissed on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action. In that Court the case of Janoki Nath Mookerjee v. Ramrunjan Chuckerbutty (4) was relied on on behalf of the plaintiff,

(1) B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 731=8 W. R. 15. (2) 8 W. R. 64.
(3) 2 B. L. R.; A. C. 341. (4) 4 C. 949.
but the Subordinate Judge in referring to it stated that there the facts were entirely different, and that it was an authority for holding that, when distinct causes of action were improperly joined against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly, the Court instead of dismissing the suit could proceed to separate them and try them separately. The Subordinate Judge also referred to the Full Bench case of Narsingh Das v. Mangal Dubey (1) as an authority in support of his decision, and also to the cases of Bhagwati Prasad Gir v. Bindeshri Gir (2) and Haranund Mozoomdar v. Prosunno Chunder Biswas (3).

He therefore held that the defendants had nothing in common with each other; that they had suffered injury by the improper joinder of several causes of action against them separately; and that consequently the plaintiff’s suit must fail.

He therefore set aside the decree of the Court below, and dismissed the plaintiff’s suit with costs.

The plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court upon grounds which are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee, for the appellant.

Baboo Guru Doss Bannerjee and Baboo Luggut Chunder Bannerjee, for the respondents.

The following cases were cited and relied on at the hearing of the appeal:—Raja Ram Tewari v. Luchman Pershad (4) Motec Lall v. Ram Chand (5); Maniruddin Ahmed v. Ram Chand (6); Narasingh Das v. Mangal Dubey (1); Loke Nath Surma v. [685] Keshab Ram Doss (7): Haranund Mozoomdar v. Prosunno Chunder Biswas (3).

The judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan reversing the decree of the Munsif in favour of the plaintiff, and dismissing the suit on account of misjoinder of several causes of action. For the appellant it is contended that the lower appellate Court was wrong in holding that the suit was liable to be dismissed for such misjoinder.

It was contended that there was no misjoinder, and it was contended that, if there was misjoinder, then, inasmuch as the first Court exercised its judicial discretion in not dismissing the suit upon that ground, the Subordinate Judge in appeal ought not to have interfered. It seems that the first Court was of opinion that there was misjoinder of different causes of action in the suit. The Munsiff was of opinion that a separate suit should have been brought against each defendant; but he says, as the law does not lay down that such a suit should be thrown out on account of such a defect, he passed it over.

It appears to us that the Munsiff was quite right in saying that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, and it appears to us that the lower appellate Court was quite right in saying that the suit must be dismissed.

The plaintiff had obtained a decree under s. 52 of the Rent Law of 1869 to eject his tenant for arrears of rent and to obtain possession of the tenure. In attempting to execute that decree he was opposed as regards certain plots of land which he alleged to be comprised in that tenure. As to some of the lands he got possession without opposition, but as to many plots he was opposed. Those who opposed him apparently instituted proceedings under s. 332 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and their claims were decided under that section in their favour.

The present suit was brought by the plaintiff to obtain a declaration that all the several plots claimed against him by the several defendants in these proceedings belonged to the tenure [686] in respect of which he had obtained a decree for khas possession, and prayed for khas possession of the various plots.

There appear to be some twelve different defendants named in the plaint. They filed separate defences and several pleaded misjoinders. They set up totally different titles, quite distinct one from another, in respect of the various plots of land, and equally distinct one from another. The plaintiff’s case as stated in the plaint made no mention of the proceedings under s. 332. It merely mentioned that the defendants in collusion had prevented him from getting possession under his decree under s. 52 of the Rent Act. He sought therefore to treat them as having combined to prevent his executing his decree.

The lower appellate Court, in coming to the conclusion that the case was bad for misjoinder, did go to a certain extent into the evidence, and we think that he could not have done otherwise.

It has been objected by the appellant’s pleader in this case that the lower appellate Court had no right to consider the evidence in the case, and then, upon that evidence, to hold that the suit was bad for misjoinder. We think, however, that the course adopted by the lower Courts was right.

If the allegation set forth in the plaint had been correct, then perhaps there would be no misjoinder; but, upon the contentions set out in the written statements, it is clear that the defendants did not admit any combination or joint action on their part in opposing the plaintiff. We think that the lower appellate Court, therefore, was right in looking to the evidence to see whether the allegations of the plaintiff were made out. He found that the allegation of collusion or combination was altogether unfounded. The several defences were found to be \textit{bona fide}, which they put forward in respect of various plots of land claimed by the plaintiff, and, inasmuch as the proceedings under s. 332 had given the plaintiff full notice of these claims, it would certainly have been competent to the plaintiff to sue them separately in respect of the lands separately claimed; and further it appears to us that the plaintiff had no right to sue the defendants jointly in respect of the separately claimed lands.

[687] The lower appellate Court has relied upon the Full Bench decision in \textit{Raja Ram Tewari v. Luchman Pershad} (1), and it is contended for the appellant that the principle laid down in that case was not applicable to the facts of the present case, inasmuch as the plaintiff in the present case had one object, \textit{viz.}, to establish title to the lands which he got possession of in execution of a decree under s. 52 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869; and the defendants who contest his claim had but one defence, which is common to them all, \textit{viz.}, to invalidate the plaintiff’s title. This we find upon perusal of the judgment is by no means the case. The plaintiff may have had one object, \textit{viz.}, to get possession of all the lands, but it is not correct to say that the defendants had joint defences common to all. We think, therefore, that the lower appellate Court was right in saying that the suit was bad for misjoinder. The Code of Civil Procedure, s. 31, provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of misjoinder of parties. This is not a case of misjoinder only of parties; it is a case of misjoinder of causes of action. There is no section of the Code which permits a person to sue various defendants together in respect of various causes of action. We think that in this case the plaintiff had a distinct cause of action against each of the defendants who set up his own title in respect of one or other of the different plots of land. That being so we dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

MADHO MISER (Plaintiff) v. SIDH BINAIR UPADHYA alias BENA
UPADHYA (Defendant).* [13th June, 1887.]

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 100—Charge on immoveable property—Mortgage—Construction of document—Limitation.

Under s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, for a document to create a charge on immoveable property, it must be a document that creates such charge immediately on its execution, and not operate only as a charge at some future time, such as in the event of non-payment of the money secured by it, the latter being the possibility of a charge ultimately arising on the land, and not “a charge” within the meaning of that section.

A lent B Rs. 99, and B executed a document on the 24th July 1881, whereby he agreed to repay the amount with interest in the month of Baisakh 1289 F.S.
(April 1882), and further agreed that, if he did not pay the money as stipulated, he should lose his right to certain land, and that A should take possession thereof, and that after A took possession of the land no interest should be paid by him (B), and that A should pay the rent of the landlord out of the profits of the land without any objection. A instituted a suit on the 3rd August 1883 to recover the Rs. 99.

Held, that the document did not amount to a mortgage, nor did it create a charge under s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that the suit was barred by limitation, three years being the period applicable.

[Dis. Appr., 21 M.L.J. 562=11 Ind. Cas. 629; R., 1 N.L.R. 76 (77); 2 A.L.J. 754 (757);
14 Ind. Cas. 29.]

In this suit the plaintiff sought to recover the sum of Rs. 259 under the following circumstances:—

He alleged that the defendant borrowed from him the sum of Rs. 99 on the 13th Srabun 1288 F. S. (24th July 1881), and duly executed and delivered to him a bond or document on that day, whereby he covenanted to repay the said sum with interest in the month of Baisakh 1289 F. S.
(April 1882), and that if he did not pay the money according to such stipulation, he should lose his right to 1 bigha 7 cottas of guzashta land, and that the plaintiff should take possession of the said land, and that no interest

Dinesh Chunder Roy, Subordinate Judge of Arrah, dated the 11th of August, 1886, January, 1886.

should be payable after the plaintiff had so taken possession. This docu-mment will be found set out at length in the judgment of the High Court.

The plaintiff further alleged that, as the defendant did not pay the money due, he took possession of the land covered by the document in 1290 F. S. (1882) and cultivated it himself; that subsequently on the 25th Assin 1290 F. S. (22nd October 1882), the defendant borrowed a further sum of Rs. 90-8 from him, and executed a similar document in his favour to the effect that if he failed to pay the amount due in Baisakh the plaintiff should take possession of, and have power to cultivate and appropriate, the produce of 1 bigha 10 cottas of land situate in Kumampur and 1 bigha in Kutha, in all 2 bighas 10 cottas. The plaintiff further stated that neither sum was repaid, and that in 1291 F. S. (1883), disputes arose [689] between them, and the defendant re-took possession of the land covered by the first bond or document; that their disputes were referred to arbitration, and a sum of Rs. 235, principal and interest, was found due to him from the defendant, but that the defendant put off executing the mortgages directed to be executed by the arbitrators in their award, and had not complied with the award.

He therefore on 3rd August 1885, brought this suit to recover the sum of Rs. 259, and prayed for an order directing that the holdings covered by the two documents should be sold.

The defendant denied that he ever borrowed any money from the plaintiff or that he ever executed either of the documents, and alleged that they were forgeries. He also denied that the plaintiff had ever had possession of the 1 bigha 7 cottas covered by the first document; and he contended that after the arbitration alleged by the plaintiff, which he also denied, the plaintiff should have sued to carry out the arbitrators' award, and not to recover the amount of the loans. He further contended that the suit as regards the first loan was barred by three years' limitation as the plaint was only filed on the 3rd August 1885.

The Munsif held that the plaintiff was never in possession of the 1 bigha 7 cottals under the document of the 24th July 1881, and that the plaintiff’s claim in respect of the money covered by that document was barred by limitation, three years being the period applicable. As regards the claim for Rs. 90-8 and interest, in respect of which the second document was alleged to have been executed on the 25th Assin; 1290 F. S.
(22nd October 1882), the Munsif held that the same was valid and that the document was genuine, and he accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 90-8 principal and Rs. 15 interest with costs upon that amount.

Both parties appealed against that decree to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the Munsif was right in holding that the claim for Rs. 99 and interest due on the first document was barred by limitation, and that there was no lien or charge created on the land by the document. As regards the second document he held that it was not genuine, and he accordingly set aside the decree of the Court below and dismissed the plaintiff’s suit altogether with costs.

[690] The plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court, and on his behalf it was only contended at the hearing that the Courts below were wrong in dismissing his suit so far as the claim under the first document was concerned on the ground that it was barred by limitation, as the document itself amounted to a mortgage, or at all events a charge, and that therefore a period of only three years should not have been held applicable.
Baboo Uma Kali Mookerjee, for the appellant.
Baboo Baidonath Dutt, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The only point which arises in this second appeal is whether or not art. 132, sch. II of the Limitation Act, is applicable to the facts of this case.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of Rs. 99 with interest.

Both Courts have held that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation, the document upon which he sued being dated the 24th of July 1881, and the suit not being brought until the 3rd of August 1885.

The document runs thus: "I, the declarant, Sidh Binaik Upadhyia alias Bena Upadhyia, inhabitant of Kurnampur, pergunnah Behya, zillah Tirhoot, do execute this deed. Whereas I have borrowed Rs. 99 from Madho Misser, inhabitant of Kurnampur, pergunnah aforesaid, I shall pay interest at the rate of one rupee six annas per cent. per mensem without any objection. I shall pay the entire principal with interest in the month of Baisakh 1289 F. S. without any objection. If I do not pay the money according to the stipulation, then I declare in writing that I shall lose my right to 1 bigha 7 cottas of guzazhta land situated in mouzah Kutha. If I do not pay money according to the promise then the aforesaid Misser shall take possession of the land. Since the Misser shall take possession of the land no interest of the money shall be paid by me, and he shall pay the rent of the landlord out of the profits of the land without any objection."

[691] It was first of all argued before us that this document amounted to a mortgage. We are clearly of opinion that it is not a mortgage within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act; and indeed this point was not seriously pressed.

The learned pleader for the appellant then contended that, if this document does not amount to a mortgage, it is a charge under s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. We are of opinion that it is not a charge. When the Legislature speaks of a charge under s. 100 it speaks of something which operates as a charge upon land immediately as it is executed. This document seems to us, not to create a charge at the time of its execution, but to operate only as a charge upon the land in question upon the non-payment of the principal money in 1289. All that it does is to create the possibility of a charge ultimately arising on the land. That is not a charge under s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act.

We think that the case has been rightly decided by the lower appellate Court, and accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

H. T. H.  Appeal dismissed.
In the matter of the petition of Jowalla Nath.

Jowalla Nath (Judgment-debtor) v. Pabatty Bibi and others (Decree-holders).* [20th June, 1887.]

Insolvent judgment-debtor—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1883), s. 351, ch. XX.

A Court cannot refuse the application of a judgment-debtor seeking to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of ch. XX of the Civil Procedure Code unless it finds affirmatively that the applicant has brought himself within cls. (a), (b), (c) or (d) of s. 351 of the Code; and the fact that his schedule assets exceed his liabilities does not disentitle him to such relief.

A judgment-debtor applied to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of chap. XX of the Code of Civil Procedure. The District Judge refused the application on the ground that the assets were admittedly in excess of the liabilities, and that he had made no effort for a period of two years to realise his property for the benefit of his creditors.

[692] Held, that the District Judge was bound to grant the application, as the applicant had not brought himself within cls. (a), (b), (c) or (d) of s. 351, in which cases alone he had a right to refuse the application.

This was an appeal by a judgment-debtor against an order by the District Judge of Patna refusing to declare him an insolvent under the provisions of chap. XX of the Civil Procedure Code.

The judgment-debtor had made a previous application in 1885 to be declared an insolvent, but on his application being opposed by some of his creditors it was withdrawn. His present application was made on the 26th January 1887, and the 28th March was fixed by the Court of first instance for the hearing under s. 350 of the Code. At the hearing on that date he was opposed by some of his creditors, and the lower Court dismissed his application. The material part of the judgment of the lower Court, which began by setting out a list of the petitioner’s debts and assets, and showing that the latter exceeded the former by about Rs. 1,000, was as follows:—

"On the application itself as it stands I think there is no case for insolvency. The assets are, even on the showing of the applicant, Rs. 1,000 in excess of the liabilities. Then it is urged that this is not all cash in hand, the judgment-debtor cannot realize it at once, and meanwhile it will be hard on him if he has to go to jail. To that I can only reply that, though there was an effort to be declared insolvent on his property being attached just two years ago, which was opposed by these same decree-holders, and was then withdrawn, it is not alleged that in the interim any effort has been made to realize the amount due and pay off the debts by sale of the property or by realization of bond and khatta debts. As the applicant has not availed himself of this long period of grace allowed by the creditors in order to take any steps towards liquidating their claims, I see no reason whatever to suppose that, if he is enlarged for another two years, he will take any steps in that direction.

"He says, ‘Oh, I am quite ready to hand over to my creditors all my claims and let them realize what they can out of them,’ but it has been his bounden duty himself all this time to realize [693] them on behalf of his creditors, and he has made no effort in that direction.

"I do not think the case is one in which the applicant should be treated as an insolvent.

"No doubt s. 356 provides for realization of an amount which in some cases exceeds the claims of the creditors; but I think the case of a man who has, during the two years that his creditors have let him alone, made no effort to effect realizations is not a man to whom any favour should be shown. It cannot be said that circumstances have been too much for him and that he is unfortunate; it can only be said that he has exhibited a culpable lethargy in taking no steps towards getting in his dues in order to satisfy the claims against him, and that the creditors are not acting harshly to him in now seeing, as a final effort, what a term in jail will effect towards making his duty manifest to him.

"I reject the application with costs."

The judgment-debtor now appealed to the High Court against that order.

Mr. Abdul Hossain and Baboo Saligram Singh, for the appellant.
Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Jogendra Chandra Ghose, for the respondents.

Mr. Abdul Hossain (for appellant).—The Judge was bound to declare the applicant an insolvent. He did nothing to bring himself within cls. (a) (b) (c) or (d) of s. 351 of the Civil Procedure Code. Salim Ali v. Minahan (1) supports my contention. The fact that assets are in excess of the liabilities does not disentitle the applicant from seeking the protection of the Court, and s. 356 of the Code expressly provides for such cases.

Mr. C. Gregory (for the respondents).—The application on the face of it shows that the petitioner is not an insolvent. The creditors allowed him two years' time, but he took no steps to realize the property which is mentioned in his schedule. He was guilty of laches, and has forfeited the right to be declared an insolvent, and does not deserve any indulgence being shown him.

[694] The judgment of the Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We are of opinion that this appeal must be allowed, and the order of the District Judge refusing to declare Jowalla Nath, the judgment-debtor, an insolvent must be set aside.

It appears that the judgment-debtor applied on the 26th of January last to be declared an insolvent; and the 28th of March was fixed for the hearing directed by s. 350 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That hearing took place, and the District Judge has refused the judgment-debtor's application on the ground that for two years he has taken no steps to realize the property set out in the schedule of assets and to make it available for the payment of the debt due by him to his creditors; and the Judge says he thinks that the applicant is not a man to whom any favour should be shown, and he points out that the amount of assets is Rs. 1,000 in excess of the liabilities.

Now the Judge was not asked to show any favour to the applicant at all. He was asked to proceed according to law, and he was bound so to proceed. He could not refuse to declare the applicant an insolvent unless he found affirmatively that the applicant had brought himself within what I may call the penal clauses of s. 351. The Judge has not found that. He was, therefore, bound to declare him an insolvent.

It is quite an error to suppose that a man is not entitled to be declared an insolvent because the sum total of his assets is larger than the sum total of his debts. It may well be, and is frequently the case, that a man's securities are locked up and are not available at the time he is called upon to pay his debts, but he is none the less entitled to be declared an insolvent, unless he is found guilty of dishonest conduct. The practice of leaving a man to the mercy of his creditors, who, with a view of extracing money from him, gets him locked up in jail after he has voluntarily placed the whole of his property at the disposal of his creditors, is, in my judgment, a practice which cannot be too strongly reprehended. A man is entitled to the benefit of these sections of the Code in the mofussil just as an insolvent in a Presidency town is entitled to the benefit of the Act for the relief of insolvent debtors. These sections do not relate to matters of [695] procedure. They are intended for the relief of insolvent debtors in the mofussil, and must be so applied.

The order of the lower Court must be set aside, and the District Judge directed to declare the petitioner an insolvent, and appoint a Receiver of the property disclosed in the Schedule.

We shall make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Before Mr. Justice Macpherson.

PROBODE CHUNDER MULLICK AND OTHERS v. M. DOWEY.*

[1st July; 1887.]

A suit was instituted against the master of a vessel for repairs done to his vessel and for hire of a dock in which the vessel had been. The master being about to leave the jurisdiction of the Court with his vessel, the plaintiffs under s. 477 of the Code of Civil Procedure, applied for an order that the defendant should give security for his appearance to answer any decree that might be passed against him, and a rule was issued calling on him to show cause why such security should not be furnished. The defendant showed cause, and alleged that the amount claimed for the repairs was excessive, that the repairs were badly done, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to dock hire, and that some of the repairs charged for had not been executed. He further counterclaimed for a large sum for demurrage owing to the detention of his vessel and damages caused to it by the wrongful act of the plaintiffs.

It was contended that, as the claim was on a contested account which on the face of it was stated, but unsettled, on the principle of the English authorities, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the order asked for. It was further contended that the suit was not a bona fide one, but brought merely to harass the defendant, and that for this reason security should not be ordered to be given.

It was not disputed that the defendant had no domicile in this country, and that he was shortly leaving in his vessel in the ordinary course of his business. The Court found the plaintiffs were undoubtedly entitled to recover some amount on account of repairs, and that the mere fact that the plaintiffs added

* Original Civil Suit No. 296 of 1887.
on to such claim one of a disputable character did not go to show that the suit was not a bona fide one.

_Held_, that there is no authority for saying that the principles applied in England to the granting of writs _ne exeat regno_ should be applied in this country; and that the Court can only look to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure; that when a person comes on business to this country in which he has no property or domicile, and enters into a contract with a person to do work in connection with that business and which must be done before he leaves the country, and it is known he intends to leave as soon as the work is completed.
there is an implied understanding, if the work was done on his credit, that it should be paid for before he leaves.

_Held_, also, that the case fell within the provisions of s. 477 of the Code, and that the defendant should furnish security for his appearance while the suit was pending within a week in terms of s. 479, such security to be for the amount of the claim.

This was an application under s. 471 of the Code of Civil Procedure that security should be taken for the appearance of the defendant to answer any decree that might be passed against him in the suit.

The plaintiffs were the owners of the Hooghly Dock and the defendant the master of a barque called "Roanoke," and the claim in the suit was for work done to the vessel in the nature of repairs and for dock hire.
The plaintiffs alleged that between the 23rd May and 11th June 1887, they at the request of the defendant executed certain works and repairs at rates and prices agreed on, the total value of which amounted to the sum of Rs. 5,796-14-3; and they stated that the works and repairs so executed were reasonably worth that amount; that for the purpose of executing such repairs the vessel was taken into their dock, and whilst she was there it became necessary to fill the dock to let another vessel called the "Star of Erin" in, and again to empty it; that the defendant had alleged that in the course of such operation his vessel had been strained and otherwise injured, but that such allegations were erroneous, but that for the purpose of surveys and otherwise they had at the request of the defendants executed certain other works of the value of Rupees 1,182-11-9, and they claimed to be entitled to recover that sum.

The plaintiffs further claimed the sum of Rs. 2,250 on account of dock hire at Rs. 250 a day for the use of the dock from the 12th to the 20th of June, the barque having been kept in the dock [697] for that period after reasonable notice had been given to the defendants to remove her.

They also claimed Rs. 256 survey fees rendered necessary owing to the allegations as to the injuries caused to the vessel by letting the "Star of Erin" into the dock, and a sum of Rs. 334-5-9 for repairs executed subsequent to the 16th of June at the request of the defendant.

The whole claim amounted to Rs. 9,728-9-9, for which the plaint was filed on the 25th June 1887, and on the same day a rule was obtained calling on the defendant to show cause within 24 hours after the service thereof on him why he should not furnish security to the extent of that sum for his appearance to answer any decree that might be passed in the suit.

The rule was granted on a petition of the plaintiffs and an affidavit of James Mori, the manager of the plaintiffs' dock, which set out fully the facts in connection with the plaintiffs' claim, and also stated that the defendant had no permanent residence in British India; that he had come to Calcutta in command of the "Roanoke" and was about to leave again in charge of her on a voyage to Natal; and that there was no certainty as to when he would return or if he would ever return to India. It was further alleged that the vessel was under a charter for Natal and had been on demurrage since the 14th, and had already loaded a portion of her cargo and could complete her loading and proceed to sea in a very short time.

The defendant disputed the claim of the plaintiffs and opposed the order asked for. He disputed the rates charged for the work and repairs, denied having agreed to them, and said that they were exorbitant and that the work charged for had been done in a very slovenly, unworkmanlike manner and was altogether unseaworthy; that it was grossly overcharged for, and even that charged for had not been completed, and some of the items had never been done at all, and some of the articles charged for never supplied. He further denied that he was indebted to the plaintiffs at all on the ground that, if a proper sum was charged for the work actually done, it would be found that his claim for demurrage exceeded that amount. He stated that he had at the time objected to the admission of the "Star of Erin" to the dock as his vessel was not in a fit state to be floated, and he [698] alleged that in consequence of the plaintiffs insisting on admitting that vessel and doing so they had caused considerable damage to the "Rosnoke" by straining her and breaking away some deck houses and portions of the rail. He claimed the sum of Rs. 2,750 as demurrage from the 12th to the 22nd June, alleging that owing to the "Star of Erin" being admitted to the dock his vessel could not be removed before the latter date, and that sum, together with surveyor's fees and the amount claimed by him for damages, towage, etc., brought up the amount he claimed from the plaintiffs to Rs. 3,556-7.

In his affidavit he stated that he never had, nor had he then, any intention whatever of removing the said vessel from the jurisdiction of the Court with the intention to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree which might be passed against him, and that the owners of the vessel were wealthy people in London and Rotterdam, and that any sum that might be required for the repairs or necessary expenses of the vessel could be obtained by him in three days.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. T. A. Apearl showed cause against the rule on behalf of the defendant.

Mr. Hill in support for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Pugh.—The case of Harrison v. Dickson (1) lays down the rules observed by the late Supreme Court in matters of this kind and the principle upon which the Court will exercise its discretion in making such an order as that asked for. In England there was the writ of ne exeat regno, and also the proceeding at common law by which a person was held to bail, but there must be a debt due and the amount must be ascertained (Seton on Decrees, Vol. I, Part II, p. 316, and the cases there cited). There is no doubt that the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse this application, and this is not a case, having regard to the nature of the claim and the case set up by the defendant, in which such discretion should be exercised. The defendant is not the proper person to be sued—Mackinnon, Mackenzie & Co. v. Lang, Moir & Co. (2). That the plaintiff could have sued the owners, [699] and that service on the captain as agent would have been sufficient is shown by the decision in Blackwell v. Jones (3).

The real question here is, should the discretion of the Court be exercised. The word used in the section is "may," and the plaintiffs will have to contend that it should be read as "must." The leading case on the subject is Julius v. Lord Bishop of Oxford (4), and "may" as used here should be read as being permissive only.

Mr. Appear on the same side.—The Court should not exercise its discretion in the case as the suit is clearly not a bona fide one, as shown by the claim for Rs. 2,250 for dock hire, the vessel being kept in dock by the plaintiffs letting the "Star of Erin" in behind her and preventing her getting out. In England the application would not be granted on a stated and unsettled account which is contested—Plack v. Holm (1). The Court can only grant this application if the defendant fail to show cause against it, and what constitutes good cause is hid down in Spence's Hotel Company v. Anderson (2).

Mr. Hill for the plaintiffs in support of the rule.—Masters of ships form an exception to the general rule as to the liability of agents for contracts entered into on behalf of the owners (Kay, Vol. 2, p. 1148). Spence's Hotel Company v. Anderson (2) does not show that the plaintiffs in this case are not entitled to the order they asked for. See also Agra & Masterman's Bank v. Minto (3). The learned counsel then proceeded to contend that the Court here was bound to follow the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and that the English cases had no application, when he was stopped by the Court. He then went into the facts of the case, and contended that the suit was a bona fide one, and referred to the cases cited at p. 561 of Broughton's Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877).

The Court took time to consider and subsequently delivered the following judgment:

JUDGMENT.

MACPHERSON, J.—This is an application under s. 477 of the [700] Civil Procedure Code to take security for the defendant's appearance to answer any decree that may be passed against him in the suit. The plaintiffs are the proprietors of the Hooghly Dock, and the defendant is the master of the "Roanoke," described as a barque of 400 tons. The claim amounting to Rs. 9,728 is principally for work done to the vessel while in the plaintiffs' dock, but it includes a charge of Rs. 2,250 for dock hire.

The defendant has no domicile in this country; he came to Calcutta in charge of the vessel, and there is no answer to the allegation that he intends to leave as soon as he possibly can, his vessel being under charter for Natal, and that there is no certainty as to whether he will ever return. There is clearly, therefore, reasonable probability that the plaintiffs will be obstructed or delayed in the execution of any decree that may be obtained. The defendant shows cause against the rule which issued, the contentions being that under the Contract Act he is not personally liable and that the suit is not a bona fide suit. The plaint sets out that the defendant, the master of the barque in question, entered into the contract for repairs, and that the repairs were done at his instance and under his instructions.

There is no denial of this allegation in the affidavits filed. The defendant does not say that he contracted as agent only; or that the name of his principal was disclosed, or that it was understood that the plaintiffs were to look to his principals and not to him for payment. The affidavit merely declares that the owners of the barque are gentlemen of wealth carrying on business in England and Rotterdam and well able to meet any decree that may be passed. There is not in the affidavits a single circumstance to indicate that the plaintiffs in entering into this contract were dealing with the defendant as an agent, and that they were looking not to him but to some one else for payment, and it is highly improbable that they would do

(1) 1 J. and W. 405. (2) 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 194. (3) 1 Ind. Jur. N. S. 265.
so as regards persons living out of the jurisdiction, whose names they had never heard, and of whose existence, so far as appears, they were ignorant. The mere fact that the defendant was the master of the barque (there is nothing to show that he is not also a part owner), and that the plaintiffs might have ascertained who the owners were, does not [701] rebut the presumption arising under s. 250 of the Contract Act, and I must, on the materials now before me, hold that this section applies and that the defendant is personally liable.

The remaining question is as to the suit being a bona fide one, for, if the defendant can show that the suit is not bona fide, that would be good cause.

It is admitted that the vessel was in the plaintiffs' dock, from the 21st May to the 22nd June, and that certain repairs were done.

The claim may be divided into two parts—as to work done up to the 10th June or under agreements entered into before that date, and work done subsequently, including charges for dock hire. The plaintiffs' claim for the former amounts to Rs. 5,706, and the accounts filed with the defendant's affidavits show that he objects to items aggregating Rs. 2,390 for work not done or overcharged.

The parties are at issue as to whether the work was done at rates agreed to beforehand or not, and I need only say as to this that the defendant's affidavits do not directly meet the plaintiffs' allegation on this point. If all the objected items were allowed there would still remain a balance in the plaintiffs' favour of Rs. 3,400. It is said no doubt that the work was bad and would not pass a survey, but this is a matter on which I cannot on the materials before me express an opinion, though I may observe that in the correspondence which passed before suit nothing was said of bad work.

The remaining part of the claim is of a more disputable character; the defendant not only denies his liability altogether, but counterclaims for a sum of Rs. 3,556 for demurrage and expenses on account of his vessel being improperly detained in the plaintiffs' dock.

The questions which will have to be determined are, therefore, whether the vessel remained in dock under circumstances which would entitle the plaintiffs to dock hire or the defendant to demurrage, and whether the work subsequently done was done by the plaintiffs in consequence of injuries arising from their own neglect. I am not going to express any opinion on the merits of these [702] questions. I have only to see whether, looking to the case as a whole, it is a bona fide case, or whether it is a case of a speculative character, and brought with a view to harass or annoy the defendant, or to take advantage of his position and induce him to come to terms which, perhaps, he otherwise would not do. The mere fact that the claim is disputed does not deprive it of the character of bona fides, and if the claim were confined to the Rs. 5,729, I should have made this order without hesitation, because it is beyond doubt that the claim to that extent is an honest claim and based on a substantial foundation. As I have said, even if all the items objected to were disallowed and struck out of the plaintiffs' claim, there would still remain a balance in the plaintiffs' favour, unless the defendant could establish the set-off relied on, or show that the work done was so bad as to be almost worthless. The fact that a person adds on to a claim of that description a claim of a disputable character does not, in my opinion, go to show that the whole claim is not brought in good faith and, in the plaintiffs' estimation, with some prospect of success. If they had any claim at all as regards the latter sums they were bound by law to include it in the present suit or to abandon it altogether. I cannot, therefore, say that the claim is not a bona fide one.

It has been urged also that the Court in dealing with this section should apply the principle applicable in England to suits of ne exeat regno. There is no authority for this, and it seems to me that the contention is not consistent with the words of the section. I think if a person comes on business to this country, in which he has no domicile or property, and enters into a contract with a person to do work in connection with that business, and which must be done before he leaves the country, and it is known that he intends to leave as soon as the work is completed, there is an implied understanding, assuming that the work was done on his credit, that it shall be settled or paid for before he leaves the country. It seems to me, therefore, that the case is one that falls under s. 477, and I must make an order that the defendant must furnish security for his appearance while the suit is [703] pending, and in terms of s. 479 security must be given within a week for the amount of the claim.

Application granted.

NECKRAM DOBEY v. THE BANK OF BENGAL.* [22nd June, 1887.]

Practice—Interrogatories—Refusal to answer—Particulars of damage—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 125, 127.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendant Bank improperly and without notice, and in violation of an agreement, sold some Government promissory notes, which had been deposited as security for certain loans, and claimed a specified sum as damages or in the alternative a decree for an account. The defendant Bank denied the alleged agreement, and asserted that the notes had been sold after due notice and on failure of the plaintiff to comply with the terms on which the loans were made.

Interrogatories were administered for the examination of the plaintiff, and amongst them one in the following terms:—

"State how your estimate of damages to the amount of Rs. 1,30,000 mentioned in the eighth paragraph of the plaint is arrived at?"

Upon the plaintiff declining to answer that interrogatory the defendant Bank applied on notice for an order under s. 127 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring him to answer it fully.

Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to answer it.

If, on the one hand, it was intended to elicit the principle on which the damages were estimated by the plaintiff, the defendant was not entitled to discovery on that point. If, on the other hand, it was sought to elicit an account of the transactions between the parties, it was unnecessary, as the transactions were within the knowledge of the defendant Bank; and if it were not, then the enquiry was premature, as the question whether there had been any wrongful act committed and whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages should be first determined.

*Original Civil Suit No. 40 of 1887.
In this suit the plaintiff, a dealer in Company’s paper, claimed Rs. 1,30,000 damages (or in the alternative a decree for an account) on certain loan transactions between himself and the defendant, the Bank of Bengal. As a part of his case the plaintiff set up a verbal arrangement between himself and an officer of the Bank, [704] that the Bank was to charge him 1 per cent. less interest than the usual rate, and that it was not to call for prompt or heavy margins, and he further alleged that the Bank had improperly and without reasonable notice sold certain Government paper deposited with it for the purpose of securing loans. The Bank denied the verbal arrangement and paid Rs. 826-7-4 into Court in full satisfaction of all claims the plaintiff might have against it.

Interrogatories were administered to the plaintiff with reference to the terms of the alleged arrangement, and the time, place, and circumstances under which it was made, and also with reference to an offer of 5 lacs alleged to have been made by the plaintiff. The fifth and last interrogatory was as follows: “Fifth: State how your estimate of damages to the amount of Rs. 1,30,000 mentioned in the eighth paragraph of the plaint is arrived at?”

The plaintiff answered all the others, but declined to answer this interrogatory on the following grounds: “I am advised that the matter enquired after is not sufficiently material at the present stage of this suit, that it is in effect calling upon me to set out accounts, and is therefore premature; and that it seeks for discovery of the evidence which I intend to produce in support of my claim.” The defendant Bank accordingly now applied on notice for an order under s. 127 of the Civil Procedure Code requiring the plaintiff to answer fully the fifth interrogatory.

Mr. Stokoe appeared in support of the application for the defendant Bank.

Mr. Sale, for the plaintiff.

Mr. Stokoe.—The plaintiff is bound to answer this interrogatory. The case is similar to that of Dobson v. Richardson (1), where a similar interrogatory was held good. There is no procedure in this Court to obtain particulars except by filing interrogatories, and none of the objections which can be taken under s. 125 apply to the present case. We say we are entitled to have particulars of damage.

Mr. Sale (contra):—There is no precedent for this application. The interrogatory is vague, and all the necessary particulars are to be found in the plaint and schedule annexed. It is not alleged that our plaint is insufficient, but if that is contended, then the [705] machinery of interrogatories should not be applied to amending a deficient plaint. If the defendant Bank is dissatisfied with the plaint it has its remedy. But the object of this application is to get at our evidence. Now the plaint shows that we have a sufficient case for damages. All the circumstances are set out, and at the hearing we shall show the fact of the agreement, the fact of the breach and the fact that we have been overcharged. The measure of our damages being a question of law the defendant Bank should not be allowed to extract from the plaint the principle upon which he has assessed his damages. It might as well ask at this stage what authorities we shall cite in support of that principle. Nor can we be required now to inform the defendant Bank as to how the plaintiff intends to shape his case at the hearing. Some of the cases

say that, where the question is one of amount, the defendant is entitled to ask for particulars, but that is only where contract or tort is admitted. In such a case information is given to enable the defendant to settle the suit where the parties are anxious to avoid a trial and the defendant is desirous of paying a sum of money into Court to satisfy plaintiff’s claim. [See Hare on Discovery, p. 256, 2nd.; Wright v. Goodlake (1); Jourdain v. Palmer (2); Horne v. Hough (3).] No such case has been made here, and the matter sought to be imparted is irrelevant as it refers only to our claim. Dobson v. Richardson (4) is distinguishable from the present case owing to the particular nature of the interrogatories in that case. In Lyon v. Tweddell (5) it was held that a defendant may not ask for an account of damages, if those damages are dependent upon an account, because such an application would be premature. This is a fishing application and ought to be refused.

Mr. Stokoe in reply.—No answer is made to our case; interrogatories in reduction of damages are clearly relevant. We ask on what principle have their damages been assessed, and we are entitled to be told. (See Sichel and Chance, on Interrogatories and Discovery, p. 45; Leech on Practice of Civil Courts, Ed. 1865, p. 425.)

[706] The following judgment was delivered by the Court:

JUDGMENT.

Macknern, J.—I think the plaintiff is not bound to answer this interrogatory.

The plaint alleges that the defendant improperly and without notice, and in violation of an agreement, sold some Government promissory notes which had been deposited as security for certain loans.

The defence is a denial of the alleged agreement and an assertion that the notes were sold after due notice and on failure of the plaintiff to comply with the terms on which the loans were made.

The parties are therefore at issue as to the plaintiff being in a position to recover any damages at all.

If the interrogatory is intended to elicit the principle on which the damages are estimated, the defendant is not entitled to discovery on the point. This is a matter relating exclusively to the plaintiff’s case, and, if the wrongful acts are established, as to the way in which he intends to shape it as regards the assessment of the damages; this the plaintiff is not bound to disclose beforehand. If the interrogatory is intended to elicit an account of the transactions between the parties, it is unnecessary, as the transactions are all within the knowledge of the defendant Bank, which sold the notes which were deposited with them. But, even if it did not, the enquiry is premature, as the question whether there has been any wrongful act committed and whether the plaintiff is entitled to any damages must be first determined. The principle deducible from the English cases cited seems to be that, where the question is simply as to the amount of damages to be awarded and the defendant wishes to satisfy the demand, he is entitled by means of interrogatories to elicit all the information which will enable him to do so. If there is a contest as to the right to damages it is not very clear whether interrogatories directed to the amount of such damages would be allowed. In the present case the points on which the claim is based are all known to the defendant Bank, and I think the defendant is not bound to furnish any other information than he has given. The application is refused with costs.

Application refused.

Attorney for plaintiff: Mr. H. H. Remfry.

QUEEN-EMpress V. SHAM LALL.* [22nd, June, 1887.]

offence on suspicion—Penal Code, Act XLV of 1860, s. 211—Police report—False charge, Prosecution for, without first enquiry into truth of original complaint.

A person having laid an information before the police, the police reported the case as false; the informant then appeared before a Magistrate, asking that his case might be investigated and his witnesses summoned. This application was refused, and the Magistrate after perusing the police report passed an order directing him to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code.

Held, that the application to the Magistrate was "a complaint" within the meaning of s. 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code into which the Magistrate was bound to have enquired.

A Magistrate may take cognizance under s. 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code of an offence brought to his notice by a police report which affords ground for a suspicion that an offence has been committed; but, as a matter of sound judicial discretion, a Magistrate should not so proceed and direct that the person suspected be tried until some person aggrieved has complained, or until he has before him a Police report on the subject based on an investigation directed to the offence to be tried, and in cases of alleged false charges until it is clear that the original charge has been either heard and dismissed or abandoned. And before the order to prosecute for the false charge is made the person who made the original charge should be offered an opportunity of supporting it or abandoning it.

Reference to the High Court by the Sessions Judge of Bhagulpur.

On the 15th March, 1887, one Sham Lall gave information to the police that Muni Lal and others had looted his crops. Sham Lall claimed in the land on which the crops stood under a registered pottah not produced. The police investigated the matter, and, after having examined six witnesses for the informant Sham Lall, and twelve witnesses on behalf of Muni [708] Lal and the others charged with him, came to the conclusion that the land had been sown and cultivated by Muni Lal, and that the case involved a question of title; they, therefore, returned the case in C. Form as "false owing to a question of title being involved."

* Reference made by C. A. Wilkins, Esq., the Sessions Judge of Bhagulpur, under
s. 438 of Act X of 1882, dated 10th May 1887.

This report was forwarded to the Magistrate on the 22nd March. On the 24th March the District Magistrate after perusing the report declared the charge false, and ordered a prosecution against Sham Lall for having brought a false complaint.

On the 24th or 25th March Sham Lall appeared before the District Magistrate, and asked to have his witnesses summoned and the case tried. This application was rejected on the 31st March; on the 1st April Sham Lall made another application to the same purport, but this application was, on the 5th April, also refused.

Sham Lall then moved the Sessions Judge for an order revoking "the sanction given by the Magistrate." The Sessions Judge declined to interfere, stating that he was unable to do so, as the Magistrate's order directing the prosecution was not a "sanction" within the terms of s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as the complaint declared to be false was made not in any Court, but before the police; and that neither was he able to direct that the complaint should be enquired into under s. 487 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as the complaint had not been "dismissed" under s. 203 of that Code, and the accused had not been "discharged." But, being of opinion that Sham Lall should not be prosecuted before he had, an opportunity of proving his complaint to be a true one, the Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court, recommending that the order of the District Magistrate, dated the 24th March, should be set aside and the original complaint heard.

The case came on for hearing before a Full Bench of the Court.

Mr. L. M. Ghose, for the accused:—The order of the 24th March in its inception was bad, (a) because the conclusion arrived at by the police, if embodied in their report, would, if true, point to an offence under ss. 182 and 499 of the Penal Code equally with one under s. 211; nor are offences under ss. 182 and 499, if judged by the punishment inflicted in respect [709] of them, of a less serious nature than an offence under s. 211. An offence, however, under s. 182, would be only cognizable "on the previous sanction and complaint of the public servant concerned, etc.," and an offence under s. 499 could only be taken cognizance of "upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by such offence." It could not, therefore, have been the intention of the Legislature to allow a Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence of making a false charge under s. 211 except upon the fulfilment of one or other of the conditions precedent to the authority of the Magistrate to take cognizance of offences under ss. 182 and 499; and (b) as Sham Lall had had no opportunity of establishing the proof of the original charge made by him, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct a prosecution against Sham Lall under s. 211 of the Penal Code without first affording him such an opportunity;—see Empress v. Karimdad (1), which case has been followed by Empress of India v. Radha Kishan (2), and also by Empress v. Jummi (3) and The Queen-Empress v. Ganga Ram (4). There is also the case of Ramasami v. Queen-Empress (5), where the case last above mentioned was distinguished; the case of Sheikh Erad v. Nusibunnissa Bibi (6) is also in my favour. There are one or two cases against me, viz., Nusibunnissa Bibi v. Sheikh Erad Ali (7); that case, however, turns on the point that a lower Court cannot interfere with a sanction granted, and there was there, moreover, a quasi-judicial enquiry into the original complaint. Another case is rather against me, viz., In re Bramanund Bhuttacharjee (1), but the exact point was not determined as there was no complaint before the Magistrate. In the case of Gyan Chunder Roy v. Protap Chunder Dass (2) Prinsep, J., makes a distinction between a sanction given under s. 470 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872, and the [710] institution of proceedings by a Court of its own motion, and says that a preliminary enquiry is only necessary when the Court takes upon itself to order a prosecution. That distinction is, however, erroneous, and the expression of opinion is obiter. The police report here was not one which the Magistrate could have taken cognizance of under s. 191 of the Procedure Code; under that section he could only take cognizance of an offence of which some one had complained either before him or the police, and not on his own motion. [Petheram, C. J.—Sub-section (c) of s. 19 is against you; he can take cognizance on suspicion.] The Magistrate does not profess to have acted under that sub-section. Under s. 157 the police can send up their report to the Magistrate, and under s. 167 the Magistrate may take cognizance of the matter. The police report does not terminate the proceedings, as they have to bring up the accused on bail or in custody and the offence of which the Magistrate may take cognizance under that section, is the offence under investigation by the police.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown:—According to the practice in force before the old Code of Criminal Procedure, it was considered that, in the case of heinous offences, the complainant should always inform, in the first instance, the police. After that Code the cases show that, where proceedings have been concluded before the police, the informant can complain to the Magistrate, and the Magistrate is bound to hear the complaint. The Madras High Court have held that, before a prosecution for perjury is commenced against the informant, his original case must have been determined.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Petheram, C.J., Wilson, Tottenham, Norris and Ghose, JJ.)—

JUDGMENTS.

Petheram, C.J., after stating the facts, continued:—Upon the above facts three questions arise:—

First.—Where the applications made by Sham Lall to the Magistrate on the 24th or 25th of March and the 1st of April "complaints" within the meaning of s. 191, Criminal Procedure Code, into which the Magistrate was bound to enquire?

Second.—Had the Magistrate, upon the report of the police, [711] dated 22nd March, 1887, jurisdiction to make the order of March 24th, 1887? and

Third.—If he had jurisdiction to make it, did he exercise a sound judicial discretion in doing so?

I am clearly of opinion that the first question must be answered in the affirmative.

Sham Lall, on the days in question, appeared before the Magistrate, stated that the offence had been committed, and requested that it might be investigated by calling and examining his witnesses. This, it seems to me, was the only complaint he could make, and, having made it, he was entitled, as a matter of common justice, to have it enquired into by the Magistrate, and that gentleman could not avoid the responsibility of making the enquiry himself merely by accepting the conclusion of the police on the subject.

The second question is more difficult; but after a careful consideration of the sections of the Code, and of the cases* on [712] the subject, I have come to the conclusion that it also must be answered in the affirmative.

The facts alleged, if they are true, might constitute an offence under s. 211, and a Magistrate may take cognisance of such an offence if it is properly brought before him; and it seems to me that, where a state of facts is brought to his notice by a police report, which affords ground for supposing that the offence has been committed, he has jurisdiction under ss. 191 and 192 to enquire into or try the charge himself, or to send it for enquiry or trial to one of his subordinates.

My answer then to the second question, is in the affirmative.

The third question must, in my opinion, be answered in the negative. As before explained, I think that, under the circumstances, the Magistrate would have the jurisdiction. But, as a matter of sound judicial discretion, I also think that in all cases in which there is a suspicion—for it can be called nothing but a suspicion—arising from circumstances which have come under the Magistrate’s notice on the perusal of the report of the investigation into another charge, that some offence, of which no one has complained, has been committed, the Magistrate ought not to take cognizance of such offence under s. 191, and direct that the persons suspected be tried, until some person aggrieved has complained, or until he has before him a police report on the subject, based on an investigation directed to the offence to be tried, and in cases of alleged false charges, until it is clear that the original charge has been either heard and dismissed or abandoned; and I should add that, in order to show conclusively that such a charge has been abandoned, I think that before the order to prosecute for the false charge is made, the person who made the original charge should be offered an opportunity of supporting it or abandoning it.

In the present case, in addition to these reasons which apply to all such cases, I think that the order of the Magistrate must be set aside, because the suspicion is not justified by the police report on which it is founded.

The Magistrate's order will accordingly be set aside.

Norris, J.—This case comes before us on a reference under[713] s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, from the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur.

The facts are as follows: On the 15th March, 1887, one Sham Lall gave information to the police that on the previous day, at about 4 A.M., three men, named Muni Lal, Ata Roy and Luchmun Roy, had stolen growing corn of the value of Rs. 100 from his field.

In his first complaint Sham Lall named four witnesses; when the police came to make enquiry into the alleged theft on the spot he stated that three of his witnesses had gone over to the side of the accused, and he named six fresh witnesses.

The police examined the one witness, out of the four first named, who had not gone over to the accused, and five out of the six subsequently named. One witness said: "On Monday, at 4 A.M., I went to the field and saw that the accused had been causing the crops of my master's field to be reaped through his labourers and coolies; upon this I went to Monghyr and gave information to my master; my master came and lodged the complaint." Another witness said: "On Tuesday I saw the accused reaping crops on the field of the complainant." The remaining witnesses deposed, from hearsay, "that in this year the complainant grew barley on the field in dispute and that the said field was the jote of Muni Lal, one of the accused." Muni Lal, in answer to the charge, said: "This field has continued in my jote since five or seven years; in this year I also made cultivation, and reaped and brought the rabi crops on Monday last; the complainant falsely alleges that in this year he made cultivation and grew crops, the reason being that I hold shikmi nukdi jote under Gokhal Kumhar, who is brother-in-law of Jhumuk Ram Kumhar, auction-purchaser, who held nukdi jote under the said Jhumuk Ram Kumhar; since two years the rent of this field has fallen due by me; Jhumuk Ram Kumhar, the zemindar, has on the part of the real jotedar, Gokhal Kumhar, caused a suit to be instituted against me for arrears of rent; owing to the annoyance caused by the said non-payment of rent Jhumuk Kumhar, the zemindar, has, by the advice of Gokhal Kumhar, the real jotedar, caused a pottah to be executed and registered in favour of Sham Lall Kumhar" (the complainant), 'his relation, [714] and a person of the same caste, in respect of jote land without my knowledge, and laid this plan to eject me from the field, and now caused this false complaint to be brought by the complainant against me for taking the crops grown by me; but in this year I cultivated and grew crops on my entire field as before and carried away the crops of the same."

Ata Roy "pleaded his absence of concern in this field and corroborated, according to Muni Lal's answer, that the field in suit was the jote of Muni Lal, accused." Luchmun Roy does not appear to have been examined. Twelve witnesses were examined by the police on the part of Muni Lal, one of them being one of the witnesses named by the complainant in his first complaint and who was alleged by him to have gone over to the accused. The statement of Muni Lal and the evidence of his witnesses satisfied the police "that the complainant had not cultivated the field, that the complaint was altogether false, that the plan had been laid on the part of Jhumuk Ram Kumhar, zemindar, for dispossessing the accused of his field and for taking away this year's crops of his field, that in reality the land was cultivated and sown with crops by Muni Lal, accused"; they, therefore, forwarded a report in Form C (false case), stating in column 7 under the heading "particulars of the enquiry with names of any persons accused or suspected but not arrested," "on enquiry the charge against Muni Lal, Ata Roy, and Luchmun Roy, accused, is not proved, for in this case the question of title is involved," and at the end of column 9, under the heading "course adopted by the police and reasons of failure," they said "the case is found false owing to question of title being involved; consequently no charge of bringing false complaint can be made. The report was sent to the Deputy Magistrate, who forwarded it to the District Magistrate, Mr. Mosley, who on 24th March made on order "that the complainant be prosecuted for bringing a false complaint, the occurrence being false." On the 24th or 25th of March, Sham Lall applied to the District Magistrate "to have his witnesses summoned and the case tried;" this application was rejected on 31st March. On the 1st April Sham Lall again applied to have his complaint tried; this application was rejected on 5th April; and on 7th April the charge [715] against Sham Lall of bringing a false charge was made over by the District Magistrate to a Deputy Magistrate for enquiry or trial.

Sham Lall then petitioned the Sessions Judge "to revoke the sanction given by the District Magistrate."

The Sessions Judge, as he correctly points out in his letter of reference, cannot interfere. The District Magistrate's order for the prosecution of Sham Lall is not a "sanction" within the meaning of s. 195, Code of Criminal Procedure, for the alleged offence of bringing a false charge was not "committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court," but before the police, and no sanction to prosecute was necessary; thus there is no "sanction given by an authority subordinate" to the Sessions Judge which he can revoke. Neither can the Sessions Judge, under s. 437, Code of Criminal Procedure, "himself make or direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make further enquiry into" Sham Lall's complaint against Muni Lal and the others, for it has not been dismissed under s. 203, Code of Criminal Procedure, nor have the accused persons been discharged.

Under these circumstances the Sessions Judge has referred the case to us with a recommendation that the District Magistrate's order of 24th March should be set aside, and that he be directed to hear Sham Lall's complaint.

I am of opinion that we ought to act in accordance with the Sessions Judge's recommendation. The District Magistrate in his letter of explanation to the Sessions Judge says: "There are contradictory rulings on this subject of prosecution under ss. 182 and 211 of the Indian Penal Code, but what runs through all that I have been able to consult is that, when a man has made a complaint before a Magistrate, he must have proper opportunities to prove his case before he can be prosecuted under the above sections; but there was no complaint of Sham Lall's before a Magistrate in this case, for a petition to be allowed to call his original witnesses, put in after a prosecution was instituted, was not a complaint."

[716] I think that the view taken by the District Magistrate of Sham Lall's application or petition is erroneous. I am clearly of opinion that it was a "complaint" within the meaning of s. 191, Code of Criminal Procedure. That section authorizes a Magistrate to "take cognizance of any offence upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence." This "complaint" may be by word of mouth or in writing; no prescribed form of words is necessary; all that is required is that facts, which prima facie constitute an offence, should be brought to the notice of the Magistrate by the complainant. It is clear that the question of the time when an application or petition is made to a Magistrate, cannot be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in arriving at a conclusion as to whether it is a "complaint" or not.

The precise form of Sham Lall's application or petition is not before us. The District Magistrate speaks of it as a "petition to be allowed to call his original witnesses." The Sessions Judge says Sham Lall "asked to have his witnesses summoned and the case tried." Even if the petition was, as the District Magistrate describes it, a bare application to be allowed to call the original witnesses, it must, of course, be read in connection with the police report which was before the Magistrate and which he says he had "carefully considered;" and so read, the petition could mean nothing less than a reiteration by Sham Lall of his charge to the police and a request that such charge should be enquired into. If, as the Sessions Judge says, Sham Lall "asked to have his witnesses summoned and the case tried," it is difficult to conceive of any element wanting to constitute "a complaint."

Sham Lall's petition being, in my opinion, a complaint, it was the duty of the Magistrate to proceed with it according to law; and it was none the less his duty so to proceed, because the charge in respect of which the complaint was made had been returned by the police as false.

I am, therefore, of opinion that Sham Lall's complaint should be enquired into and dealt with according to law.

In determining whether the District Magistrate's order for the prosecution of Sham Lall for an offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, should be set aside or not, two questions arise: First, had the Magistrate under the circumstances of the case and upon the materials before him jurisdiction to make the order? Second, if he had jurisdiction, has he exercised it with judicial discretion?

I am of opinion that the first question should be answered in the affirmative. Section 191 of the Code of Criminal Procedure authorises a Magistrate "to take cognizance of any offence (a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such an offence; (b) upon a police report of such fact; (c) upon information received from any person other than a police officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed."

It is clear that the Magistrate in this case had such materials before him that upon a consideration of them he might "suspect" the offence had been committed.

Mr. Ghose in arguing for the petitioner contended that, whereas the conclusions arrived at by the police and embodied in their report would, if true, point to the commission of an offence by Sham Lall under ss. 182 and 499, Indian Penal Code, equally with one under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, and that whereas offences under ss. 182 and 499, Indian Penal Code, were, if judged by the punishment which might be inflicted in respect of them, much less serious than an offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code; and that whereas an offence under s. 182, Indian Penal Code, could only be taken cognizance of "with the previous sanction or on the complaint of the public servant concerned, or of some public servant to whom he is subordinate"; and that whereas an offence under s. 499, Indian Penal Code, could only be taken cognizance of "upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by such offence," it could not have been the intention of the Legislature to allow a Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence of making a false charge under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, except upon the fulfilment of one or other of the conditions precedent to the authority of the Magistrate to take cognizance of offences under ss. 182 and 499, Indian Penal Code. I am unable to give effect to this argument.

The Legislature has deliberately under s. 195, cl. (b), Code of [718] Criminal Procedure, limited the protection of a preliminary sanction in respect of offences under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, to cases where "such offence is committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court." It is for the Legislature to decide whether the same protection should be given to persons charged under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, with making a false charge to the police, as is given to persons charged under that section, "when the offence is committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court," and to persons charged under ss. 182 and 499, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Ghose further contended that when, as in this case, the complaint has had no opportunity of establishing the truth of his original charge, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of an alleged offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, until the complainant has had such opportunity afforded him. I do not think this is so. I can find no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure thus clogging the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and the reported cases do not support the argument.

The case mainly relied upon by Mr. Ghose was Empress v. Karimdad (1), where Garth, C.J., in giving judgment, is reported to have said: "Whatever opinion may have been formed by the Magistrate upon the police report as to the truth of Karimdad's complaint, when he appeared with his witnesses and asked to be allowed to prove his case, we think that the Magistrate could not, without hearing him and his witnesses, and deciding upon the truth or falsehood of his charge, proceed to put him upon his trial under s. 211 of the Penal Code." If the learned Judge by "could not" meant "was not authorized by law," I am unable to agree with him. But if he meant, as I think a perusal of the concluding paragraph of his judgment shows that he did mean, "could not with due regard to judicial discretion," the case so far from being an authority in Mr. Ghose's favour is an authority against him.

I now proceed to consider whether in this particular case the Magistrate has exercised a judicial discretion in taking cognizance of the alleged offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, [719] and directing a prosecution therefor. I am of opinion that he has not and that his order must be set aside.

As already pointed out the District Magistrate admits "that, although there are contradictory rulings on the subject of prosecutions under ss. 182 and 211, Indian Penal Code, yet what runs through all he has been able to consult is that, when a man has made a complaint before a Magistrate, he must have proper opportunities of proving his case before he can be prosecuted under the above sections."

If for "can be prosecuted" we read "ought to be prosecuted," the District Magistrate's interpretation of the cases is quite right.

(1) 7 C. L. R. 497=6 C. 496.
As therefore I have already held that Sham Lall's application or petition of the 24th March was a "complaint" within the meaning of s. 191, Code of Criminal Procedure, it is clear that upon his own view of the authorities the Magistrate's order must be set aside.

It is manifest, too, that the District Magistrate has misapprehended the nature of the police report in this case. He says, in his letter of explanation to the Sessions Judge, "the real complaint was in the police report, where the police complained against Sham Lall and asked for a prosecution, and after carefully considering that complaint, and moreover studying the evidence by which it was supported, I made the case over for trial." Now the police report was not "a complaint of facts constituting an offence" within s. 191, Code of Criminal Procedure, and so far from its "asking for a prosecution," it distinctly stated, it may be on quite insufficient grounds, "that no charge of bringing a false complaint could be laid owing to a question of title being involved."

I am also of opinion that the conclusions of the police as embodied in their report were not of such a character as to reasonably warrant the Magistrate in "suspecting" that Sham Lall had committed an offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code.

It is not in accordance with the ordinary practice in criminal cases that Magistrates should take cognizance of non-cognizable offences except upon the complaint of the aggrieved persons, though there may be exceptional cases in which they may exercise [720] a judicial discretion in doing so. And there is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure to indicate that the Legislature intended charges under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, to stand on any different footing from charges of any other non-cognizable offence.

I am also of opinion that a Magistrate should not take cognizance of an alleged offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, until the alleged offender has had an opportunity of substantiating the original charge, and such original charge has been disposed of in due course of law.

There is no doubt that the decided cases show that a Magistrate may take cognizance of the offence of making a false charge when the original complaint has been abandoned, but he must do so on proper materials.

The necessary ingredients to constitute a false charge under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, are three. In the first place it must be made with intent to injure; in the second place it must be false; and in the third place it must be made without just or lawful ground; in other words it must be made maliciously.

Now it does not at all follow that because a person has charged another to the police with, say, theft, and has not applied to a Magistrate to take cognizance of the charge after the police have found it false, and in that sense has abandoned it, that he thereby admits that the charge was made with intent to injure, or that it was made maliciously. He may have made the charge, as in this case, upon the information of a third person, and during the progress of the police investigation he may have satisfied himself that his informant was mistaken, and the charge, therefore, in the sense of being untrue, false. Or again, having made the charge on his own responsibility, he may be satisfied after the police investigation, that it is a case of mistaken identity, or that the person whom he has charged took the article, said to have been stolen, under a bona fide claim of right.
Therefore it by no means follows from the failure of a person to apply to a Magistrate to take cognizance of a charge which has been found by the police to be false that there need be grounds for preferring a charge against him under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, of making a false charge.

[721] Wilson, J.—I concur in the judgments that have been delivered.

Tottenham, J.—I too concur generally in these judgments, but I am not quite satisfied that the Magistrate should be deterred from taking cognizance of offences against public justice except on the complaint of parties actually aggrieved by them.

Ghose, J.—I concur generally in the judgments that have been delivered by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Norris.

On the 10th June, 1887, one Kartick Chunder Das was charged under s. 411 of the Penal Code with receiving stolen goods. During the course of the trial the prosecution tendered as evidence against the accused a previous conviction, three years old, for attempting to commit the same offence. The evidence was tendered under s. 54 of the Evidence Act as tending to show guilty knowledge. The evidence was objected to, but the objection was overruled by the Magistrate and the evidence admitted. The prisoner was subsequently convicted of the offence charged subject to a reference to the High Court on the question whether the evidence of the previous conviction was properly admitted or not.

On the reference being called on for hearing the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Beverley, J.) considered the question to be one of great importance, and without giving any opinion on the question referred decided to call a Full Bench to hear the point argued. The case then came on before a Full Bench, [722] consisting of Petheram, C. J., Prinsep, J., Pigot, J., Ghose J., and Beverley, J.

Bombay case shows the difference between the two parts of s. 54. Reading ss. 2 and 5 of the Evidence Act together it appears as if evidence may be given in criminal proceedings of previous convictions of accused persons. Section 11 shows when facts not otherwise relevant become relevant. The definition of the word "evidence" is given in s. 3. A similar section to s. 54, viz., s. 19 of 34 and 35 Vic., c. 112, was in force in England before the Indian Evidence Act was passed, and that section applied to special cases. In the Calcutta case cited the Judges say evidence of bad character is relevant, but they do not say the Sessions Judge was in error in admitting the evidence, but they do say, so far as it was treated as evidence of bad character, the Judge was wrong. There is a case decided before the Evidence Act in which it was decided that a previous conviction was not admissible, viz., Queen v. Thakoordass Chootur (1).

[PETERAM, C. J.—Why did the Legislature pass s. 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code? If s. 54 has the meaning you ascribe to it the whole of any facts shut out by s. 310 might be brought in under s. 54 of the Evidence Act.] Section 310 of the Code and s. 54 of the Evidence Act must be read together.

[PETERAM, C. J.—The provisions of s. 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code are safeguards for the protection of prisoners, and as the Code was passed in 1882 it cannot be supposed that the Evidence Act passed in 1872 should override it.]

Taylor on Evidence, para. 345, p. 325, Ed. 1885, sums up the English law on the subject. Section 54 cannot be limited to any particular cases; it must be read broadly, leaving it to the judicial officers to take care that it is made use of in a proper manner. In charges under s. 413, Penal Code, a previous conviction would be admissible. You may, under s. 14 of the Evidence Act, give evidence that an accused had other stolen property in his possession. I submit, therefore, that evidence of a previous conviction may be given at the trial in all cases, whether such previous conviction is connected or not with the offence the accused is charged with.

Mr. Garth, for the accused.—The question is not one of English law but of Indian law. But even in England, before 34 and 35 Vic., c. 112, previous convictions could not be given in evidence except for the purpose of enhancing punishment, and since that Statute they can only be given in certain cases and for particular purposes.

It is clear that, prior to the passing of the Indian Evidence Act, the English law as it existed before 34 and 35 Vic., c. 112, prevailed in India. See Queen v. Thakoordass Chootur (1), Queen v. Gopal Thakoor (2) and Queen v. Phoolchand (3). If the construction of s. 54 of that Act contended for by the Crown is correct, the effect of it is to admit evidence of a previous conviction of any offence, even one of a wholly different character from that charged, and at any stage of the trial. This would have been a most radical change, going far beyond the existing law in England, and opposed to all the English authorities. Surely, if this had been intended, the change would have been mentioned in the speeches of Sir Fitz James Stephen upon the bill. But the section is never alluded to. Surely also the change would have been effected by more apt and precise words. It is submitted that s. 54 was, in reality, only intended to codify the existing law, not to alter it. Evidence of previous convictions is relevant, and was so before the passing of the Evidence Act, in criminal proceedings, but only for the purpose of enhancing punishment, and it was for this purpose only that the Legislature intended to make it relevant by this Act. This view is supported by the authority of Mr. Norton in his treatise on the Evidence Act—see Ed. 9, p. 231.

By s. 55 character includes reputation and disposition, and evidence can only be given of general reputation and disposition, and not of particular acts. It is submitted that evidence of a previous conviction could only be relevant (if at all) before conviction as a particular fact showing reputation or disposition. If so, by the express terms of the Act it is inadmissible.

The Legislature have also themselves put a construction on the section—see s. 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code. All the elaborate precautions there taken would be useless if the evidence was admissible under s. 54. It might if the argument for the Crown is correct, be first used as evidence during the trial, and after conviction be made the basis of a fresh charge against the accused for the purpose of enhancing punishment. This could never have been intended.

The construction contended for would work the grossest injustice. It is said that the Court has a discretion. But the words of the section are precise and allow of no discretion, and in any case the discretion would be a dangerous one to entrust to the subordinate tribunals of the country.

The opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by Pigot, J. (Petheram, C. J., Prinsep, Ghose, and Beverley, JJ., concurring):—The question referred to us by the Chief Presidency Magistrate is whether, upon the trial of a person charged with being in dishonest possession of stolen property, evidence can be given of a previous conviction of the accused for attempting to receive stolen property, knowing it to be stolen, under ss. 511 and 411 of the Indian Penal Code. There is not, in the law of this country, any such special provision as is made by 34 and 35 Vic., c. 112, s. 19, relating to the admission in evidence against a person charged with having received stolen goods knowing them to be stolen, of a previous conviction of such person, for any offence involving fraud or dishonesty. The question therefore involves the determination of the construction to be put on s. 54 of the Evidence Act.

Section 54 is one of a group of sections, 52 to 55 inclusive, placed in the Act, under the heading "character when relevant." Sections 53 and 54 relate to criminal proceedings only; 52 and 55 to Civil cases; the explanation to s. 55 relates to all four sections.

Sections 53 and 54 and this explanation are as follows:—

Section 53 says: "In criminal proceedings the fact that the person accused is of a good character is relevant."

Section 54 says: "In criminal proceedings the fact that the accused person has been previously convicted of any offence is relevant; but the fact that he has a bad character is irrelevant unless evidence has been given that he has a good character, in which case it becomes relevant."

"Explanation.—In ss. 52, 53, 54 and 55 the word 'character' includes both reputation and disposition; but evidence may be given only of general reputation and general disposition, and not of particular acts by which reputation or disposition were shown."

The Standing Counsel to Government contends that under s. 54 evidence may be given of a previous conviction of an accused person of any offence whatever, whether such previous offence be connected or not in any way whatever with the offence with which he is charged; that it may be given as direct evidence upon his trial and not merely in reply to evidence of good character offered on the part of the accused; and, of course, that it may be given, whether or not the accused be charged under s. 75 of the Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Garth for the accused contended that the Legislature cannot possibly have contemplated so serious a change in the law of evidence in criminal cases as this construction of the section would involve; that the section was not meant to alter but to codify the existing law, and that it cannot have been intended that evidence of a previous conviction should be given, save for the purposes of punishment under s. 75, Indian Penal Code; and he urged that under the explanation to s. 55 evidence can be given only of general reputation and general disposition, and not of particular acts by which reputation or disposition were shown.

The question appeared to be not merely of great importance, but of much difficulty. The words of the section are express. On the other hand we felt great difficulty in attributing to those words a meaning which might involve the admission as evidence against an accused, of proof of a conviction, the fact of which might, in many cases, have no possible bearing whatever upon the question whether he was guilty or innocent of the offence charged against him, and could, in such cases, have no effect save to produce against him a prejudice which, to use the words of an English Act to be referred to presently, would "not be consistent with a fair and impartial enquiry" as regards the subject-matter of the charge against the accused.

We doubted whether the Legislature could have omitted to advert to this danger; and we thought it our duty to consider whether some construction could not properly be given to the section such as would avoid it.

We were the more impressed with the force of this consideration because the Legislature has, in s. 310 of the Criminal Procedure Code, expressly guarded against the possibility of a jury's being prejudiced against a prisoner while on his trial upon one charge being made aware of his being charged under s. 75 with a previous conviction.

Section 310 is as follows:

"In the case of a trial by jury or with the aid of assessors, where the accused is charged with an offence committed after a previous conviction, for any offence, the procedure laid down in ss. 271, 286, 305, 306 and 309 shall be modified as follows:

(a) The part of the charge stating the previous conviction shall not be read out in Court, nor shall the accused be asked whether he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge unless and until he has either pleaded guilty to, or been convicted of, the subsequent offence.

(b) If he pleads guilty to, or is convicted of, the subsequent offence, he shall then be asked whether he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge.

(c) If he answers that he has been so previously convicted, the Judge may proceed to pass sentence on him accordingly; but, if he denies that he has been so previously convicted, or refuses to, or does not, answer such question, the jury or the Court and the assessors (as the case may be) shall then enquire concerning such previous conviction, and in such case (where the trial is by jury) it shall not be necessary to swear the jurors again.'"

That section, it is true, relates only to a very limited class of cases. Still it appears to recognise as to such cases, at least, the principle that a prisoner on his trial ought not to be prejudiced by a statement of a previous conviction suffered by him. That provision appears to be taken from English Statute Law, and originally appeared in 6 and 7 William IV, c. III, entitled "An Act to prevent the fact of a previous conviction being given in evidence to the jury on the case before them except when evidence to character is given."

The preamble is as follows: "Whereas by an Act passed in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of King George the 4th intituled An Act for further improving the Administration of Justice in Criminal cases, provision is made for the more exemplary punishment of offenders who shall commit any felony not punishable with death after a previous conviction for felony: And whereas since the passing of the said Act the practice has been on the trial of any person for any such subsequent felony to charge the jury to enquire at the same time concerning such previous conviction: And whereas doubts may be reasonably entertained whether such practice is consistent with a fair and impartial enquiry, as regards the matter of such subsequent felony, and it is expedient that such practice should from henceforth be discontinued." Then comes the enacting part of the Act, which provides that evidence of a previous conviction shall not be given until after the finding for a subsequent felony except where evidence of good character is given.

We felt, as we have said, that the indiscriminate admission against an accused person of any previous convictions against him would not merely operate in many cases so as to work what we should have called an unjust and unreasoning prejudice: but also that, by the construction contemplated for on behalf of the prosecution, a formidable novelty must be admitted [728] into the rules of evidence applied in criminal proceedings; for in a multitude of cases the section, by this construction, renders admissible, and declares by its statutory force to be relevant—facts which, in no possible sense, save the technical statutory sense in which the word is used in the act, could be relevant. It is not necessary to dwell on many of the innumerable examples which might be suggested. A previous conviction for bigamy would, under this construction, be relevant on a charge of theft, a previous conviction for cheating, on a charge of riot, and so on. Great therefore as the difficulty is of adopting any other construction of the words of the section, when taken by themselves, we might, perhaps, aided by the indication of the intention of the Legislature as disclosed in s. 310, have adopted the construction of the section laid down by a division Bench of this Court in Roshun Doosadh v. Empress (1).

But we thought it right from the proceedings of the Legislative Council at the time this measure was in preparation to obtain such light as they could throw on the intention and scope of the section in question. Such a course has been more than once taken by the Courts here in recent times: and in a case of such difficulty and importance as this appeared to be we felt bound to adopt it.

The Evidence Act is, as it was intended to be, a complete Code of the law of Evidence for British India. It received the assent of the Governor-General in Council on the 15th March 1872. It was the subject of two reports by Select Committees of that Council. In the first of these reports the subject now under consideration is dealt with. That report is published in the Gazette of India for June 24th, 1871, at pp. 235—242. It is signed by the then Legal Member of Council (now Mr. Justice Stephen) and by the other Members of the Committee, whose names follow:—Messrs. J. Strachey, F. S. Chapman, F. R. Cockerell, J. F. D. Inglis, and W. Robinson. It is a report by a Committee consisting of nearly one-half of the Members of the Legislative Council, and including the Legal Member in charge of the Bill, [729] accompanying the draft Bill as settled by them, stating at length the scope of the proposed measure, the intentions and the reasons by which they have been influenced in framing it, and so submitting both to the Council. A second report was made upon the measure in the following year by the Select Committee upon the Bill, consisting of the same gentlemen, together with Messrs. Stewart and Bullen-Smith. It does not touch on the subject-matter of this section at all.

The first report contains at p. 239 the following unexpected paragraph: "In reference to the conduct of the parties on previous occasions we embody in three sections the existing law of England as to evidence of character, with some modifications. We include under the word "character" both reputation and disposition, and we permit evidence to be given of previous conviction against a prisoner for the purpose of prejudicing him. We do not see why he should not be prejudiced by such evidence if it is true." That is the whole paragraph. There is nothing else in the report to qualify it. It is the only passage in the report which deals with the subject now under consideration.

In the drafts of the Bill laid before the Council with the first report, the section now numbered 54 was numbered 22. It stands in the Act in exactly the same terms as in the draft referred to in the paragraph above set out.

It is impossible that we should disregard the terms of this report, when construing, in the face of the difficulties which we have adverted to, this section of the Act. We are asked to reject the most natural meaning of the words as one leading to a result manifestly unjust. We cannot disregard the fact that the Committee deputed to frame, and to advise the Legislature upon, the proposed Code, framed this section and advised its adoption to secure the result so described; and that the Legislature being so advised passed the section so framed. We think we must treat it as plainly shown, that the danger which, as we were disposed to hold, the Legislature must be supposed to have intended to avoid, was in truth the object which the Legislature sought to attain. It is stated in language plain, forcible, and concise. The Legislature lets in the evidence [730] "for the purpose of prejudicing" the man upon his trial. It is, as is justly stated in the report, the law of England "with some modifications." The British Legislature passes an Act for the sole purpose of shielding an accused from prejudice. The Legislature in this country enacts a provision for the express purpose of prejudicing him.

Having thus ascertained that the peremptory language of the section was meant to have the full effect which the words do, no doubt, prima facie bear, we are relieved from the second difficulty which also oppressed us. It is in truth of the less consequence that the fact of a previous convictions may have no possible bearing and constitute no possible guide upon the question of the truth of the charge at trial, because it is not for that purpose that they are admitted in evidence, but for another wholly different, and for which relevancy in the ordinary sense is immaterial.

We are constrained to answer this reference by saying that previous convictions are in every case admissible. That must be the law so long as this section remains unaltered.

We own that, could we have come to any other conclusion, we should have done so; but it is our duty to carry out the intentions of the Legislature.

FULL BENCH.
Before Mr. Justice Mitter, Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Wilson, Mr. Justice Tottenham, and Mr. Justice Norris.

GIRWAR SINGH, and on his death, SRIKISHEN SINGH, and others (Plaintiffs) v. THAKUR NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [23rd May, 1887.]

Limitation Act, 1877, Arts, 132 and 147—Suit on a mortgage bond—English mortgage—"Mortgage" and "Charge"—Transfer of Property Act, ss. 58, 60, 67, 83, 86, 87—89, 92, 93, 100.

A suit on a mortgage bond to enforce payment by sale of premises hypothecated is governed by art. 132 of the Limitation Act. Brojo Lal Sing v. Gour Charan Sen (1) overruled; Shib Lal v. Ganga Prasad (2) dissented from.

[731] The clear distinction drawn for the first time between "mortgage" and "charge" in the Transfer of Property Act is not observed in the Limitation Act.

Article 147 of the Limitation Act relates to a special kind of mortgage known as English mortgage, and includes only that class of suits in which the remedy is either foreclosure or sale in the alternative.

BATESWAR NATH and others executed a bond on the 15th June, 1865, in favour of Girwar Singh for a sum of Rs. 2,695-9-2, hypothecating a 5 annas 4 pie share of mouzah Rampore Gobind. The time stipulated in the bond for the repayment of the money was five years from the date of execution, that is, the 15th June, 1870. The share was afterwards sold in execution of a certain decree and purchased at auction by Thakur Narain Singh and others. Thereupon, on the 15th June, 1885, Girwar Narain brought a suit on his bond for payment of the sum of Rs. 9,126-11-5, due as principal and interest, by sale of the premises hypothecated to him in mouzah Rampore Gobind. Thakur Narain and others, the defendants, raised inter alia the plea of limitation, and it was contended that, upon the authorities of Ramdin v. Kalka Prasad (3) and an unreported case, Sheo Churn Lal v. Ram Churn Singh (Appeal No. 279 of 1881) decided by Mitter and Norris, JJ., the suit came under art. 132 of the Limitation Act, and not having been brought within 12 years from the 15th June 1870 was barred. The plaintiffs' pleader relied upon Shib Lal v. Ganga Prasad (1) and claimed the benefit of art 147 of the Limitation Act.

The Subordinate Judge, dissenting from the last-named decision of the Allahabad High Court, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Saligram Singh, for the appellant.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Karuna Sindic Moorkerjoe, for the respondents.

The Court (Wilson and Porter, JJ.) referred the case to a Full Bench with the following opinion:

This is a suit upon a mortgage bond, the object being to obtain satisfaction of the money by sale of the lands hypothecated. The bond was dated the 15th June 1865; the money was payable within five years, which expired on 15th June 1870, and the suit was instituted on the 15th May 1885. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, and against that decision the plaintiff has appealed. Under the Limitation Act (IX of 1871), which was in force prior to the present Act (XV of 1877), it was well settled that a suit upon a mortgage bond, if it sought a personal decree, was governed in respect of limitation by the rules relating to bonds, or as the case might be, and if it sought a decree against the land, by art. 132 of the schedule, which fixed 12 years as the period of limitation for suits "for money charged upon immovable property." For this it is not necessary to do more than refer to the Privy Council decision, Ramdin v. Kalka Prasad (2). The Act of 1877 has slightly altered the language of art. 132 by speaking of suits "to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property" instead of "for money charged." And it has added a new art. 147, which says that, for a suit "by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale," the period of limitation shall be 60 years from the time "when the money secured by the mortgage becomes due." It is contended for the appellant that the present suit is governed by art. 147, and that he has 60 years from the 15th June 1870 within which to bring his suit; and there is authority in support of that contention. In Shib Lal v. Ganga Prasad (1) it was held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad Court that such a suit is governed by art. 147, and that 60 years is the period of limitation. The view of the learned Judges, if we rightly follow it, seems to be that a suit for sale by a mortgagee is governed by art. 147, art 132 applying to charges not amounting to mortgages. The same view of the law was taken by Prinsep and O'Kinealy, JJ., in Brojo Lal Singh v. Gour Charan Señ (3). On the other hand, in Lalubhai v. Narain (4), it was held by three Judges of the Bombay Court that s. 132 does apply to cases of mortgage, and applies also to suits for a personal decree. The latter of these propositions was distinctly dissented from by some at least of the Judges in the Allahabad Full Bench case just (733) referred to. In Darani Ammal v. Ratna Chetti (5) a Division Bench at Madras appears to have accepted both the propositions of the Bombay Court. In Aliba v. Nanu (6) another Bench at Madras refused to follow the Allahabad Full Bench, and held that art. 182 governed a suit upon a mortgage bond to recover the mortgage money by sale of mortgaged property. In an unreported case (Appeal No. 279 of 1881) on the 21st June 1882, Mitter and Norris, J.J., treated it as clear that such a case as the present is governed by art. 132, and the reasoning of the Privy Council in the case already referred to, Ramdin v. Kalka Prasad (1), though directed to the Act of 1871, seems equally applicable to the Act of 1877. We are not inclined to think that art. 147 has the wide operation attributed to it by the Allahabad Court. We are rather disposed to hold that it refers to the common form of suit upon an English mortgage in which the plaintiff is entitled to claim, and ordinarily does claim "foreclosure or sale" in the alternative. A mortgage in the English form was in 1877 the only mortgage upon which such a suit could be brought, and under s. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act it seems to be so still. In such Acts as the Limitation Act, forming a connected series, we think the presumption is strong against the intention to make a sudden and unexplained departure from the general line of policy running through the whole series; and that policy as to mortgages is to keep the right of suit within narrow limits of time. We think too that in such Acts mere changes of phrase not obviously involving changes of meaning ought not to be so treated as to alter the substance of the law. We are, therefore, inclined to think that, except so far, if at all, as s. 147 may have altered the law in the case of mortgages in the English form, the law of limitation applicable to suits to enforce mortgages remains the same as it was under the Act of 1871 and as it was explained by the Privy Council in the case above cited. We desire to refer to the Full Bench the question whether this suit is barred by limitation.

Before the Full Bench:

Baboo Saligram Singh, for the appellant.—The case falls under [734] art. 147. It is the case of a mortgage as defined in the Transfer of Property Act. It is a simple mortgage. Article 132 deals with charges. The provisions in parts of the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act were made in anticipation of the Transfer of Property Act—see the observation of Pigot, J., in Shurumoyee Dasi v. Srinath Das (2). At the time when the Limitation Act was under consideration the Bill relating to the Transfer of Property Act was before the Council. These articles should be construed by the light of ss. 38, 60, 67, 83, 86, 87, 88, 89, 92, 93, and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. Article 147 has effected a change in the old law; cases against me were decided in inadvertence of the change effected. The decisions of all the High Courts are substantially in my favour. The Punjab Court has held in the same way—Gujar Mull v. Naiichi Ram (3), Rivaz’s Limitation Act, 276.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, for the respondent:—It has been settled that the words used in art. 132 of the Limitation Act of 1871 include simple mortgages. There is no marked change in the corresponding article of the present Act. The effective words in both the articles, "money charged upon immovable property," are identical. Article 132 of the present Act must include a simple mortgage unless there is anything to the contrary in any other article. Is 147 that article? The word "mortgage" in 147 does not imply all kinds of mortgages; it is not used in a generic sense. It cannot be said, for instance, that usufructuary mortgage is implied by that word, art. 147 includes only a particular class of mortgages, namely, that defined in s. 58, cl. (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. Article 132 is the article that applies to this case. All the judgments against me proceed on the ground that the term "mortgage" in art. 147 is intended to include all sorts of mortgages.

(1) 7 A 502=12 I. A. 12. (2) 12 C. 614. (3) 19 P. R. 1885.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by

Mitter, J. (Prinsep, Wilson, Tottenham, and Norris, JJ., concurring):—The question referred to the Full Bench is substantially this: Whether the present suit falls under art. 182 or art. 147 of the present Limitation Act. Article 182 provides that, for a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property, the period of limitation should be 12 years from the time when the money sued for became due. Article 147 says that, for a suit by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale, the period of limitation shall be 60 years from the time when the money secured by the mortgage became due. The plaintiff in this suit seeks to recover money secured by simple mortgage of certain immovable property by the sale thereof. The mortgage was created by a bond, by which the debtor also personally covenanted to repay the money but within a stipulated time. It would be useful to see what were the periods of limitation prescribed for a suit of this description in the two previous Limitation Acts. It is not disputed that under both these Acts the period of limitation was 12 years—see Jonessur Das v. Mohabir Singh (1); Ramdin v. Kalka Prasad (2). In the Limitation Act of 1871 there was no article corresponding to art. 147 of the present Act; and the art. 132 of that Act with slight modification has been re-enacted in art. 132 of the present Act. Instead of the words "to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property" it contained the words "for money charged upon immovable property." The addition of the words "to enforce payment of money" indicates that the article would not apply to a suit for money charged upon immovable property when the payment of the money is not sought to be enforced upon the property hypothecated. The modification therefore does not at all affect the question before us. The class of suits now under consideration was therefore described in the Act of 1871 as a suit for money charged upon immovable property. The contention of the (plaintiff) appellant before us is that, although in art. 132 of the present Act the same expression, viz., "money charged upon immovable property," has been used, yet the Legislature intended to exclude this class of suits from it, and to include it under art. 147, which has been for the first time introduced into the Act. This contention is, in my opinion, not sound. It seems to me to be an unreasonable contention that, although the Legislature intended to exclude from art. 132 of the present Act this class of suits, yet, in describing the nature of the suits covered by it, they did not make any material alteration in the language which they had used for that purpose in art. 132 of the Limitation Act of 1871. If the Legislature intended to alter the law, they would have expressed their intention by altering the language of art. 132, and not by simply introducing a new article which again would not include the class of suits under consideration unless the word "or" in the expression "by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale" be read in the distributive sense. The contention of the appellant therefore amounts to this. The Legislature intended to modify the provisions of the law laid down in art. 132 of the Act of 1871. They have carried out their intention, not by making any change in

(1) 3 I. A. 1=1 C. 163.
(2) 7 A. 502=12 I. A. 12.
the corresponding article of the present Act, but by introducing into it a new article couched in language which, unless the word "or" be read in the distributive sense, would not indicate the change at all. It is hardly necessary to say that such a contention as this cannot be accepted as sound unless supported by the most convincing reasons. The contention also involves another equally unreasonable conclusion. Under the Acts of 1859 and 1871 the law of limitation governing suits by mortgagees under _kut-kobala_ or bill of conditional-sale was as follows: Where _a _kut-kobala_ gave to the mortgagee the right to recover possession on default of payment, the period of limitation for a suit based upon this stipulation was 12 years—see _Brojonath Koondoo Chowdhry v._
_Khelut Chunder Ghose_ (1); art. 185 of the Act of 1871. In Courts not established by Royal Charter in the Presidency of Bengal the period of limitation for a suit for possession of the mortgaged pro-

erty, upon the conditional-sale becoming absolute under the provisions of Regulation XVII of 1806, was 12 years from the date when the sale became absolute—_Chinaram Dobey v. Ram Monaruth Dobey_ (2); _Modun Mohun Chowdhry v. Ashad Ally Beparee_ (3). But in cases where the right of the mortgagee has been extinguished by the law of limitation the proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 did not give a fresh start—see _Mdun Mohun Chowdhry v. Ashad Ally Beparee_ (3). Now in the year 1877, when the present Act was [737] passed, foreclosure suits were not known in the Courts not established by Royal Charter in the Bengal Presidency. In the year 1877 therefore suits under _kut-kobalas_ or conditional bills-of-sale for possession of mortgaged property were not covered by art. 147. The period of limitation for such suits, which was 12 years under the Act of 1871, was consequently not altered under the new Act. The contention of the appellant therefore involves this unreasonable conclusion, that the Legislature kept up the shorter period of limitation, _viz.,_ 12 years for _kut-kobalas_, a higher class of mortgage, and extended the period of limitation from 12 to 60 years for an inferior kind of mortgage, namely, _hypothesication _of immoveable property in a bond. But, as already stated, if the word "or" be not read distributively, these unreasonable conclusions are avoided. The article would then include only that class of suits in which the mortgagee would be entitled to either of the remedies, _viz.,_ foreclosure or sale in the alternative, _i.e.,_ suits based upon what is usually called an "English mortgage." I have carefully considered the reasons given in support of the appellant's contention in the decisions cited before us, and with deference to the opinion of the learned Judges who decided them I am unable to concur in their conclusion.

The most important case in support of this contention is a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court, _Shib Lal v. Ganqa Prasad _ (4). The first ground upon which this decision proceeds is that, as under art. 147 the Legislature has allowed 60 years to a mortgagor to redeem a simple mortgage, it would be reasonable to suppose that they have allowed the same period to the mortgagee to bring a suit for sale. It seems to me that in the year 1877, when the new Act was passed, a suit for redemption by a mortgagor under a simple mortgage was wholly unnecessary, and therefore unknown. It cannot, therefore, be said that under art. 147 the period of limitation of 60 years was allowed to a suit for redemption by a mortgagor under a simple mortgage who did not stand in need of such remedy

(1) 14 M. I. A. 144=8 B. L. R. 104.

(2) 7 C. L. R. 580.

at all. Suits for redemption were necessary only when the possession of the mortgaged premises was to be recovered from the mortgagee, or when it was necessary to obtain a reconveyance of the mortgaged property, it having been previously conveyed to the mortgagee. Moreover, under the Acts of 1859 and 1871, the policy of the Legislature was to give to the mortgagor a period of limitation for redemption longer than that allowed to the mortgagee for enforcing his remedy. There is no valid reason suggested to show that there was any necessity for a departure from this policy.

The second reason assigned in the judgment is expressed as follows: "When art. 147 of the Limitation Act speaks of a suit by a mortgagee for sale, why should we go out of our way to hold that it does not cover a case in which the plaintiff in his relation towards the defendant legally and to all intents and purposes stands in the position of a mortgagee." I have already stated the grounds upon which it seems to me that the present suit does not fall under this Article. They are substantially two, viz., (a) there is no material alteration in the language of art. 132; (b) certain unreasonable consequences follow if we bring this class of cases within art. 147.

The third reason upon which the judgment of the Allahad Court proceeds is that, as the Bill, which subsequently became the "Transfer of Property Act," was pending before the Legislature in the year in which the present Limitation Act was passed, it would be reasonable to infer that the Legislature used the word "charge" in art. 132 in the same sense in which it is used in the "Transfer of Property Act." The learned Officiating Chief Justice who delivered the main judgment was further of opinion that probably the distinction which has been drawn in the "Transfer of Property Act" between a "charge" and a "mortgage" is nothing more than a crystallization of the principle enunciated in the many decisions of the Courts delivered upon the subject. It seems to me to be more probable that the Legislature in arts. 132 and 147 used these expressions in the sense in which they were then ordinarily used than in the sense in which they were used in a Bill which was then pending before them, and which Bill might or might not become law thereafter. The distinction between "mortgage" and "charge" was for the first time drawn by a clear line of demarcation in [739] the "Transfer of Property Act." For example, speaking of the class of mortgage now under our consideration, Sir Barnes Peacock, C.J., in delivering his judgment in the Full Bench decision in Surwar Hossein Khan v. Gholam Mahomed (1), characterised it as a "charge" upon immovable property. In Ramdin v. Kalka Prasad (2), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee assumed that the word "charge" included a simple mortgage. There are several cases under art. 132 of the Limitation Act, 1871, in which a simple mortgage has been described as a charge upon immovable property. I am of opinion that, instead of referring to a Bill as to which it was uncertain whether it would be passed into law or not, it would be quite legitimate to refer to the forms of plaint given in the Procedure Code of 1877, which was passed in the same Session of the Legislature. No. 109 of the fourth schedule of the Code is a form of a plaint in a suit for foreclosure or sale, and it would appear from the contents of that form that it would apply only to a suit brought upon what is called an English mortgage Mr. Justice Oldfield referred to this form in his judgment, but it seems to me that the form in question does not apply to a suit to be brought by a simple mortgagee for the sale of the mortgaged premises.

The last ground upon which the Allahabad Full Bench decision is based is that, as in the year 1877 suits by mortgagees for foreclosure or for sale were unknown to the Courts, it would not be unreasonable to refer to ss. 87 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act for their explanation. But a suit for foreclosure or sale was not altogether unknown in 1877. A suit of this description was not uncommon in Courts in this country which administered the English law of mortgage, that is, the Courts exercising the original jurisdiction in the Presidency towns. It was a defect in the Limitation Act of 1871 that there was no Article in express language applicable to a suit of this description. Consequently in a case of Ganpat Pandurang v. Adarji Dadabhai (1), it was contended that the period of limitation applicable to a suit of this description was six years under the sweeping clause of the Limitation Act. It seems to me that in [750] order to remedy this defect the art. 147 was for the first time introduced into the present Limitation Act. The other cases cited by the learned pleader for the appellant merely follow the Allahabad Full Bench decision. I am of opinion that the present suit is governed by art. 132 of the present Limitation Act, and is consequently barred. The result will be that the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

PRESENT:

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

ANANGAMANJARI CHOWDHRIANI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v.
TRIPURA SUNDARI CHOWDHRIANI AND OTHERS (Defendants).

[10th and 11th March, 1887.]

Title, Evidence of—Presumption arising from Possession—Issue as to identity of land re-formed on a site formerly submerged.

In a suit for the possession of a chur, formerly carried away and afterwards re-formed upon its former site, the issue was whether the land belonged to the plaintiffs or to the defendants. This issue was found in favour of the plaintiffs by the first Court; and the Appellate Court, finding that the plaintiffs had been in possession for more than 12 years, concluded that, at all events, they had a title by adverse possession. On an appeal, the High Court considered that the latter decision was not upon the issue raised, the plaintiff’s claim being founded on an original title to the site of the chur—a title denied by the defendant; and remanded the suit for judgment on this issue, whereupon the appellate Court maintained the judgment of the first Court in favour of the plaintiffs, finding on the evidence that the land belonged to the plaintiffs.

Upon a second appeal the High Court reversed the decree of the Appellate Court, and dismissed the suit, on the ground that there was an entire absence of evidence as to which party was entitled at the date to which the dispute related. Held, that this was erroneous. On a question of parcel or no parcel, when possession has been established for a period, there is not an entire absence of evidence of anterior ownership, because presumitur retro.

(1) 3 B. 312.
The parties to this appeal were at one time entitled, as joint owners, to villages Nalchongi and Nalchongi Silpatta in Rajshahye, which were partitioned between them in two lots: one consisting of a $1\frac{3}{4}$ annas share which fell to the plaintiffs, appellants; and the other lot, consisting of a $2\frac{1}{2}$ annas share, which went to the defendants, respondents.

The subject of the present suit was some chur land which had re-formed, after having been carried away by the river Ichamutti, on a site which was part of one or other of the above shares. The plaintiffs alleged that the chur had re-formed within the boundaries of the $1\frac{3}{4}$ annas share. The defendants alleged that it had re-formed within the $2\frac{1}{2}$.

The District Magistrate, when disputes arose about the year 1872, the chur having re-appeared many years before, proceeded under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1872 then in force; and by an order of 24th February, 1873, maintained the possession of the appellants. But the respondents, on the 30th April of the same year, obtained a judgment, under Act XIV of 1859, for possession, under which the appellants were dispossessed of the 15th Jeyt 1280, corresponding to 27th May, 1873.

The present suit (5th September, 1876) was instituted by the appellants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, and an issue raising the above question having been fixed, and a report made by an Amin, it was found that the chur was covered by the $1\frac{3}{4}$ annas share; and judgment was given, accordingly, for the plaintiffs.

This judgment the District Judge, on appeal, considered himself bound to accept (with only a slight variation as to a portion, which he found to belong to a third and different village), as it had not been shown to be erroneous, but he placed his decision of the case on a title by adverse possession accrued to the plaintiffs who had, as he found, been in possession for upwards of twelve years.

The High Court (Morris and Prinsep, JJ.) on an appeal against the above decision, observed that the plaintiffs had not claimed the land upon the latter title, but as forming part of their original estate, and as having been taken out of their possession in 1873. They pointed out that it was not the case made out [742] by the plaintiffs, but one found by the lower Appellate Court, that they had occupied the chur in suit for a sufficient time to confer title upon them, even supposing that, before its diluviation, the land was part of the $2\frac{1}{2}$ annas allotment, and not part of the $1\frac{3}{4}$. It was also, in their opinion, apparent that the Judge had no definite opinion, of his own, as to whether the chur originally belonged to one or the other. And what he, in effect, decided was, that whether it fell within either the one or the other, it had, as a re-formation upon its old site, been so long in the possession of the plaintiffs as to confer upon them a title by prescription. This, however, was not the issue raised between the parties, and the Judges felt bound to adhere to the principle laid down in Shiro Kumari Debi v. Gobind Shaw Tanti (1) that no title can be claimed by prescription unless it has been put in issue against an adversary. The Judges were also dissatisfied with the mode in which the

(1) 2 C. 418.
District Court had dealt with the evidence, remarking that "it was incumbent on the Appellate Court to form an independent judgment on the evidence, and not to give a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, unless they had, in its opinion, established their case."

The High Court, for these reasons, remanded the suit to the lower Appellate Court for judgment.

On this remand, the District Judge decided that the Subordinate Judge's finding was correct, the chur having been formed upon the land covered by the 13½ annas share.

There was again an appeal to the High Court on behalf of the principal defendants. A Division Bench (White and Macpherson, JJ.) reversed the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and dismissed the suit. After referring to the remand order, and its grounds, the High Court said that, although this had been correctly understood by the lower Appellate Court, it appeared in Mr. Peterson's judgment that there was not a particle of evidence offered to prove when the chur lands re-formed, nor where they re-formed, much less evidence which showed that they re-formed upon the site of the 13½ annas share which originally belonged to the respondents. "Such remarks," continued the judgment, "as the District Judge has made upon the evidence, are [743] limited to the proof which was given by the respondents of the long and continuous possession which they enjoyed previous to their ouster by the appellants.

"Such being the case, the decree of the lower Court cannot be sustained. It is not suggested that there is any evidence on the record showing when the re-formation took place, or that it was a re-formation on the 13½ annas share, nor does the remand order allow of further evidence being given. After reading the various judgments of the three Courts below, which have had possession of this case for so long a time, and hearing what the pleaders for the parties have to say, it becomes plain that there is no evidence in this case on the above points, and that when the remand order was made which tried the respondents' case up to the third issue, their suit was virtually decided against them.

"As there is no evidence in the case as to the date or site of the re-formation, and the Court below has no materials upon which it could come to a finding on the third issue, it would be useless to send this case down again to the lower Court, and we have no alternative but to reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs, which we do with costs in all Courts."

On this appeal,—

Mr. R. V. Doyle, and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants contended that the judgment of the High Court was erroneous. Upon a second appeal, the Courts below having concurred, the High Court had not to decide upon the weight of the evidence as to the site of the chur. That there was some evidence was apparent, whether weighty or not and whether sufficient or not. They referred to Shiro Kumary Debi v. Gobind Shaw Tanti (1).

Mr. T. H. Cowie, and Mr. J.H.A. Branson, for the respondents, argued that the judgment of the High Court was correct. The issue was as to the re-formation of the chur in question having taken place on a particular site, within a certain period. The fact of possession, inasmuch as the right to that possession had been all along disputed, was not relevant evidence upon the point raised, which was that the chur had been re-formed, in situ, under such circumstances (see Lopez v. Mudden Mohun [744] Thakoor (1) that the original owner had a right to have possession of that which remained his property, the right of property never having been lost.

(1) 2 C. 418.

Counsel for the appellants were not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LODGE WATSON:—In this case the parties are the respective owners of two divided shares of mouzahs Nalchongi and Silpatte. The plaintiffs are interested in the larger of those shares, extending to 13 annas 10 gundahs. The defendants are proprietors of the smaller share, extending to 2 annas 10 gundahs. The area of land which is in dispute in this action is situated on the bank and close to the alveus of the Ichamutti river. It is subject to the action of the stream; and it appears that from time to time the soil on the surface of the area has been washed away, and new soil has been subsequently deposited capable of cultivation. The exact date when the surface was last denuded does not appear; but it seems to be admitted on all hands that for many years past a new deposit has been growing up, and that in point of fact such deposit, since some time after the year 1850, has become culturable. In the end of 1872, or the beginning of 1873, disputes arose between the appellants and respondents as to the right to the disputed ground. The Magistrate intervened in February 1873, and, after inquiry, he adjudged that the plaintiffs were in possession, and had a right to retain possession of it. The defendants then instituted a possessory suit, and on the 18th of April 1873, they obtained a decree affirming their right to possess. That led to the institution of the present action, in which the plaintiffs, who were ousted under the decree of April 1873, claimed the property of the disputed area as having been all along in their possession as part of their 13 annas 10 gundahs share of the two mouzahs in question. The defendants resist the action on the ground that they had been in possession, and that the land in dispute was an integral part of their smaller share of these mouzahs—the 2 annas 10 gundahs share. Throughout these proceedings, at least since proof was closed, it is admitted on both sides that the area in dispute belongs to one or other of these two demarcated shares.

[745] Issues were adjusted by the Subordinate Judge. It is only necessary to deal with the third of them: because it is conceded now that, if the plaintiffs shall be held to have a right to the land, as part of their 13 annas 10 gundahs share, they are not barred by limitation from prosecuting the present suit. The third issue adjusted was in these terms: "Is the land in claim a re-formation on the site of the original diluvated land of the 13 annas 10 gundahs share of Kismat Nalchongi and Silpatte, held by the plaintiffs and pro forma defendants, or of the 2 annas 10 gundahs share held by the substantive defendants?" The Subordinate Judge, after an elaborate review of the evidence before him, came to the conclusion, which is embodied in this finding: "The allegation made by the plaintiffs that the land in claim is a re-formation on the site of the original land of Nalchongi and Silpatte covered by their 13 annas 10 gundahs share, and that they have from before been in possession of it is found true." In other words his finding amounts to an express affirmation of the first alternative branch of the third issue, which exhausts the issue.

Upon appeal by the defendants to the District Judge, he came to the conclusion that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge ought to be maintained. He concurs to a great extent in the view taken by the Judge of that evidence, but he differs from him in his estimate of that evidence in many respects. The conclusion which he came to upon the part of the case which we are now dealing with was this, that the plaintiffs "held, occupied, and enjoyed the lands in suit by the title above set forth as part and parcel of the lands appertaining to the 12½ annas demarcation for much more than 12 years before ousted by the defendants." That was not a simple affirmation of the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge had arrived. It pointed to a very different kind of case from that to try which issue No. 3 had been adjusted. It affirms a title, at least it is sufficient to affirm a title by adverse possession; which is a title in derogation of the defendant's right, even assuming it to be proved that at an earlier period the land in dispute formed part of the smaller share, and not of the 13 annas 10 gundahs share belonging to the plaintiffs. Accordingly when the case was carried by appeal before the High Court of Calcutta, the learned Judges [746] came to the conclusion that the decree of the District Judge ought to be set aside, and the case remanded for re-trial. The High Court were of opinion that the District Judge had not disposed of issue No. 3, that his finding No. 2 was not an answer to that issue, but the affirmation of a title which would prevail over the title which would have arisen to the defendants by the negation of the first branch of issue No. 3, and the affirmation of the second branch; and they were also of opinion, although their Lordships are not altogether disposed to concur with them in that respect, that the District Judge had not applied his judicial mind to the consideration of the somewhat intricate evidence before him.

On remand the case was heard and disposed of before the successor of the District Judge, who had first disposed of the case. He, in the main, agrees with the Subordinate Judge in his estimate of the evidence, and he affirms the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The conclusion which he came to on the evidence is very concisely expressed in these words: "On the whole then I come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge's decision is correct, and that the plaintiffs have proved that the lands claimed by them belong to their 19½ annas share of mouzahs Bil Nalchongi and Bil Silpatta."

Again the defendants appealed to the High Court, and the cause there was heard and determined before two fresh Judges, who came to the conclusion that the decree of the lower appellate Court ought to be reversed, and the suit dismissed, and accordingly they gave effect to that opinion in their judgment.

The grounds upon which the learned Judges of the High Court came to that conclusion are very distinctly expressed in their judgment. They are twofold; and, in the opinion of their Lordships, neither of these grounds is sufficient to sustain the judgment which was pronounced. They came, in the first place, to the conclusion that Mr. Peterson, who last disposed of the case, had fallen into the same error as his predecessor, and, instead of dealing with the identity of this disputed parcel with one or other of the two shares of the mouzahs in question, had disposed of the case on the footing that the plaintiffs had enjoyed prescriptive possession which vested them with a good [747] title as against the defendants.
The learned Judges say: "The judgment now before us contains a finding by the Court that, prior to the ouster by the appellants, the plaintiffs had a sufficiently long and continuous possession of the chur lands to confer upon them a title to it." Their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Judges erred in supposing that the judgment of Mr. Peterson contains any finding to that effect.

Then having come to the conclusion that Mr. Peterson had erred in the same way as his predecessor, and not dealt with the proper issue in the case, they proceed to consider whether they ought to remand the cause for the purpose of having that third issue tried. They came to the conclusion that it was unnecessary to do so for these reasons: "As there is no evidence in the case as to the date or site of the re-formation, and the Court below has no materials upon which it could come to a finding on the third issue, it would be useless to send this case down again to the lower Court." They came to a conclusion the very reverse of that at which their predecessors, who remanded the case, arrived; they were of opinion that there was evidence in the case bearing upon the subject-matter of the third issue, which ought to be disposed of by the Judge in the Court below. The High Court, on this last occasion, came to the opposite conclusion—that there was no evidence whatever which was fit for the consideration of the Judge, or had any bearing on that issue.

It must be borne in mind that the decree appealed from to the High Court on this occasion being a decree after remand, on a second or special appeal, the learned Judges had not, and accordingly they did not profess to have, jurisdiction to deal with it on its merits. But it was, in the opinion of their Lordships, within their jurisdiction to dismiss the case if they were satisfied that there was, as an English lawyer would express it, no evidence to go to the jury, because that would not raise a question of fact such as arises upon the issue itself, but a question of law for the consideration of the Judge.

Their Lordships are very clearly of opinion that the reasons assigned by the learned Judges cannot be sustained. They are of opinion, with the judges who made the remand, not [748] only that there was an issue proper to be tried, but that there was evidence in support of that issue, or bearing upon that issue which was proper to be considered and disposed of by the District Judge. The theory upon which the learned Judges who last disposed of the case proceeded, so far as one can gather from their observations, appears to have been this: that evidence of possession is not receivable as evidence of the identity of a piece of ground; that, in other words, as evidence of possession is not material or good evidence in a question of parcel or no parcel. Perhaps they do not go quite so far as that, but they certainly go the length of indicating their opinion that evidence of subsequent possession is not good evidence upon the question of parcel or no parcel at a previous date. To countenance that proposition would be to introduce an entirely new rule into the law, and their Lordships do not think that a judgment resting upon such a ground can be upheld. When the state of possession for a long period of years has been satisfactorily proved, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumitur retro. In the present case there is evidence tending to prove possession by the plaintiffs for a considerable period antecedent to February 1873. Whether it is sufficient to establish the plaintiffs' possession, and whether, if established, that possession is sufficient to warrant the inference of fact derived from it, are questions upon the merits of the case. The evidence has been disposed of by the Judge below as a Court of appeal, after careful consideration, and upon the merits his judgment was final in the High Court, which was sitting upon a second appeal, and is final and binding upon this Board.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise Her Majesty that the last judgment of the High Court ought to be reversed, the judgment of Mr. Peterson, the District Judge, affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs in the High Court. The respondents must pay to the appellants the costs of this appeal.

[749] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Bunwari Lal Chowdhry and others (Defendants) v. Burnomoyi Dasi (Plaintiff).* [19th May, 1887.]

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870)—Apportionment of compensation between zemindar and putnidar, Principle of.

The apportionment between zemindar and putnidar of the amount awarded as compensation for land taken by Government under the Land Acquisition Act will depend partly on the sum paid as bonus for the putni, and the relation that it bears to the probable value of the property, and partly on the amount of rent payable to the zemindar, and also the actual proceeds from the cultivating tenants or under-tenants.

This case arose under the Land Acquisition Act. The Government took up 2 bighas 23 cottahs of land for the purposes of a railway in the sub-division of Goalund in Furreedpore. The Collector awarded Rs. 64-3-3 pie as compensation, and, there being a dispute between the zemindar and the putnidars as to the apportionment of the amount awarded, referred the matter to the District Judge under s. 38 of the Land Acquisition Act. The zemindar claimed half the amount; but the putnidars claimed the whole of the compensation on the ground, among others that there was no condition in the putni pottah that they should get an abatement in the jumma from the proprietor (zemindar) in the event of any land being taken by the Government. The District Judge, upon the general principle laid down in Godador Das v. Dhunput Singh (1), ordered and decreed that the compensation should be divided equally between the zemindar and the putnidars.

The putnidars appealed to the High Court, and it was contended on their behalf inter alia (a) that they were entitled to the whole of the compensation unless the zemindar offered to grant a proportionate abatement of the putni rent; (b) that Godadhari Das v. Dhunput Singh (1) did not apply to the case.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 216 of 1886 against the decree of H. Gillon, Esq., Judge of Furreedpore, dated the 16th of July 1886.

(1) 7 C. 585.
The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The dispute in this case is between the zemindar and the putnidar for a sum of money due to the two parties as representing their rights to land taken under the Land Acquisition Act for public purposes. No ryots have appeared to make any claim. The District Judge, on the authority of the case of Godadhar Das v. Dhunput Singh (1), has held that the compensation should be divided equally between the zemindar and the putnidar, and that no reason for departing from this rule has been shown in the present case. The putnidar appeals, and contends that, insomuch as he has received no abatement of the amount of rent payable by him to the zemindar, he is entitled to the full amount awarded. The amount in this case is only Rs. 64-3-3 pie, but it is said that this is only a test suit and has been brought up to this Court to determine the principle on which other and similar cases should be decided. We accept the authority quoted by the District Judge and also the authority of the case of Raikishory Dasi v. Neelcant Dey (2), decided by the late Chief Justice Sir Richard Couch and Mr. Justice McDonell. It seems to us that no general principle can be laid down applicable to every case as between zemindar and putnidar. In the present case we must take it that the putnidar is the person to whom the ryots directly paid their rents. The apportionment between the zemindar and putnidar will depend partly on the sum paid as bonus for the putni, and the relation that it bore to the probable value of the property, and partly on the amount of rent payable to the zemindar, and also the actual proceeds from the cultivating tenants or under-tenants. It may occasionally happen that the zemindar receives an extremely high bonus and is content with charging the property with the receipt of a very low rate of rent, or it may be that the bonus is almost nominal and the rent is excessively high, and the zemindar depends not on the bonus and the interest of the amount so paid and invested in some other way, but on the amount paid periodically as rent, and consequently as between parties standing in these relations it is necessary to consider all these matters before any conclusion can be arrived at as to their rights to any particular compensation. We therefore think that the case should be returned to the District Judge in order that the parties may be given an opportunity of adducing evidence on these points so that the Court may deliver a proper decision having regard to all these circumstances. We make no order as to costs.

Koilash Chunder Dey brought a suit against his zamindar Obhoya

Charan Bhooia and another for the recovery of his jote land, alleging wrongful dispossession of his occupancy tenure. The defendant admitted the jote, but added that, as the tenant did not pay any rent for a period of five years, he had taken possession of the land. A similar case was brought by Gopinath Dey against the same zamindar. The Munsif, on the authority of Hem Chandra Chowdhari v. Chand Akund (1), dismissed the suits. On appeal the Subordinate Judge distinguished the case of Hem Chandra Chowdhari and reversed the Munsif’s judgment.

[752] Obhoya Charan Bhooia appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Trailuckyanath Mitter, for the appellant.

Baboo Joy Gobind Shome, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In these two cases the tenant claiming rights of occupancy sue, within one year from the date of dispossession, to recover possession from their landlords and others to whom their landlords have let the land.

It has been found by the lower Court that the tenant in one case has not paid rent for three years previous to the date of dispossession, while the tenant in the other case has not paid rent for upwards of five years.

It is therefore contended before us that the tenants are not entitled, as tenants having right of occupancy, to recover possession of the lands, because such rights continued only so long as they paid the rent payable for the lands, and that, inasmuch as they have ceased to pay such rent, their rights have gone. As an authority for this contention, four cases have been cited. It seems to us, however, that none of these cases goes so far as the argument of the learned pleader for the appellant. The cases, generally speaking, go to this extent, that, where there has been an abandonment of the tenure of a ryot having a right of occupancy by cessation in the payment of rent or otherwise, he cannot object to a re-occupation by the landlord as an ejection. In the first case quoted, viz., that of Hemnath Dutt v. Ashgar Sindar (1), it was held that, where the lands had been washed away by the action of water, and the ryot had ceased to assert any right thereto by payment of rent, he could not, when the lands re-appeared, claim to be regarded as a tenant still holding the rights that he previously had. In the next case, Golam Ali Mundul v. Golappe Sundary Dasi (2), the tenant did not pay the rent to the landlord for about five years. The learned Judges held that he was not entitled to sue to recover possession, apparently because he had abandoned the tenure and had ceased to pay rent therefor simultaneously. [753] They say that “distinct abandonment and cessation to pay rent disentitle the tenant from enforcing the rights which he may formerly have enjoyed.” In the case of Manirullah v. Ramzan Ali (3) the suit was dismissed because the tenant had abandoned his holding by allowing another person to occupy the lands and also to transfer his rights to a third party. It was accordingly held that this constituted an abandonment of the tenure on his part. In Hem Chandra Chowdhari v. Chand Akund (4) the suit was dismissed, because the plaintiff (tenant) had failed to prove his title as an occupant ryot. It was pointed out by the learned Judges that, inasmuch as the suit had been brought more than one year after the date of dispossession, he could claim to be restored only on proof of his title, and it was held on the facts that he had abandoned his holding by ceasing to occupy the lands, not only by nonpayment of rent, but by being absent in jail during that period. These cases therefore are, in our opinion, distinguishable from the case now under consideration. The argument of the learned pleader for the appellant would, if conceded, enable a landlord, to whom arrears of rent were due, to re-occupy the lands for which this rent was payable, and so to eject the tenant without any recourse to the Courts. This would altogether nullify the effect of s. 22, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, which declares that no ryot having a right of occupancy shall be ejected otherwise than in execution of a decree or order under the provisions of the Act. If a tenant has abandoned the lands occupied by him, the landlord can of course re-enter, but that is not the case before us. It has been found that the plaintiff’s tenants have held these lands as before up to a very short time of bringing these suits, when they were turned out by their landlord. The mere non-payment of rent under such circumstances would not amount to any forfeiture of the tenure, or in itself constitute any presumption of abandonment of any of their rights. It is rather for the landlord, if he seeks to eject occupancy tenants on such grounds, to sue them for the rents due and to obtain a decree in terms of s. 52. The appeals are accordingly dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

GANGA PROSAD CHOWDHRY (Plaintiff) v. UMBICA CHURN COONDOO and others (Defendants).* [17th June, 1887.]

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

Minor, Suit against—Misdescription in title of the plaint and in decree, Effect of.

In a suit brought against a minor widow as the heir of her deceased husband, she was described in the cause title of the plaint as "the deceased debtor Ramnath Acharjee's heir and minor widow Benodini Dabea's mother and guardian Anundomoyee Dassee." The plaintiff obtained no order for the appointment of a guardian ad litem. He, however, obtained a decree, and the minor defendant was described therein in the same manner. Held, that the minor was neither a party to the original suit nor to the decree, and that no property of the minor passed upon a sale in execution of such decree. Suresh Chunder Wun Chowdhry v. Jugul Chunder Deb (1) distinguished.

[Defendants].

This suit was brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of certain property purchased by him in execution of a decree obtained by himself the sale having taken place in 1879. He alleged that he was put in possession by the Court in 1881, and was shortly after dispossessed by the defendant. In 1878 he had sued upon a mortgage bond executed by one Ramnath Acharjee then deceased. Ramnath had left a minor widow named Benodini Dabea. That suit was brought against Anundomoyee, described as the mother and guardian of Benodini Dabea, the minor widow of the late Ramnath Acharjee, the precise description in the cause title being as follows: "The deceased debtor Ramnath Acharjee's heir and minor widow Benodini Dabea's mother and guardian Anundomoyee Dassee, caste Acharjee, profession cultivation, inhabitant of Deoli alias Jolurpur, Division Munglektote, Chowkee Cutwa, Zillah Burdwan, defendant." The decree was obtained against the same person described in the same manner, and the sale certificate set out the parties to the decree in the same terms. The plaintiff's case was that by the sale the property of the widow Benodini, [755] as heiress of her late husband, who was the original debtor, passed to him, that is, not only the interest of Benodini as widow, but the mortgaged property itself was sold for the debt of the deceased husband.

The defendants alleged that the decree under which the sale was held was fraudulently obtained. They denied that Ramnath had executed the bond, and also that Benodini Dabea, the minor widow, was represented in the suit at all, not having been properly made a party.

The Munsif held that Ramnath had executed the bond, and the decree obtained by the plaintiff on the said bond was not invalid. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's suit for khas possession of the property purchased by him at the sale in execution of the decree.

The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit upon the ground that the minor widow of Ramnath was no party to the original suit, and that, therefore, the sale held in execution of the decree did not pass the property that vested in her as the widow of Ramnath.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.), after stating the facts, proceeded as follows:—

[756] Baboo Ashotosh Dhur for the appellant before us admits the informality of the plaint in that suit. He admits that technically the widow was no party to it, but asks us to hold that substantially she was a party and was bound by the decree, and that consequently the sale held in execution of that decree did pass the property to the plaintiff. He appears to rely to some extent on the hardship of the case in the event of the lower Appellate Court’s decree being affirmed, because the mortgage debt was found to be true so far back as 1878, and it is now too late for the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit against the proper party.

We are unable to take any notice of the alleged hardship. The only question we have to decide is whether the lower Appellate Court was wrong in law. It appears upon the facts found that it is impossible to say that the Subordinate Judge committed any error. He found not only that the plaint as framed did not make the widow a defendant, but also that the mother Anundomoyee was not shown to have been ever appointed a guardian ad litem on behalf of the minor widow, or to have had permission to defend the suit on her behalf. Various cases were cited by Baboo Ashotosh Dhur in support of his contention. He referred us to Alim Buksh Fakir v. Jhalo Bibi (1); Newaj v. Muksud Ali (2); Guru Churn Chuckerbutty v. Kali Kissen Tagore (3); Hurdey Narain Sahu v. Rooder Perkash Misser (4); Durga Churn Shahi v. Nilmoney Dass (5); and lastly Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry v. Jugut Chunder (6). Most of these cases appear to us to be not in point. They do not deal with the special case before us. Guru Churn Chuckerbutty v. Kali Kissen Tagore (3) is again against the appellant’s contention. It was there held that a decree in a suit where minors were defendants, and were not specifically named as defendants, would not bind the minors. The Full Bench decision cited by the appellant’s pleader does to some extent seem to support the appellant’s case, but there too the case is different. One of the defendants there was described as “Nitro Bashini Chowdhroni, guardian on behalf of her minor son, [757] Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry.” It appears that the lower Court in that case required the plaintiff to put in an affidavit to the effect that Nitro Bashini really was the mother and guardian of the minor Suresh Chunder, and after that the suit was registered and summons issued. It was held in that case “that, having regard to the orders of the Court and the allegations made in the plaint and written statement, the suit was substantially brought against the minor, and the error of description in the plaint being one of mere form, could not, without proof of prejudice, invalidate a decree against him in the suit." In the present case there were no such orders of the Court. The plaintiff of his own mere motion brought the suit against Anundomoyee, describing her as the mother and guardian of the late Ramnath Acharjee. Upon the findings come to by the lower Appellate Court we are compelled to hold that the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the present suit, upon the ground that the minor widow was not affected by the previous decree, was correct.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

LALJI SAHOY (one of the sureties) v. ODoya Sunderi Mitra and others (Decree-holders) and another (Judgment-debtor).*

[12th July, 1887.]

The liability of a surety under s. 336 of the Civil Procedure Code ceases when the proceeding taken in execution of a decree wherein the security was furnished comes to an end.

D, a judgment-debtor, was committed to jail on the 8th of August 1884, and he applied under s. 336 of the Civil Procedure Code to be released. On the 16th of November 1884, B and C stood security for him under the provisions of s. 336 of the Civil Procedure Code, that he would appear when called on, and that he would within one month apply under s. 344 to be declared an insolvent, and D was thereupon released. Instead of applying under s. 344 to be declared an insolvent he applied to have the decree, which [758] had been obtained ex parte, set aside. This application was disallowed, and the decree-holder was directed to take further steps. On the 21st of February 1885 the application for execution of the decree was struck off. The decree-holder on the 20th of July made a fresh application to execute the decree against the sureties, unless they should produce the judgment-debtor in Court.

Held, that the power reserved to the Court, under s. 336 of the Civil Procedure Code, to realize the security in execution of the decree, could not be exercised when the execution proceeding wherein the security was furnished was no longer in existence.

[F., 21 Ind. Cas. 612 (613); R., 12 C.L.J. 419 (422)=7 Ind. Cas. 917; D., 19 B. 694 (696).]

The appellant in this case became surety, in the Court of the Munsif of Gya, under s. 336 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for Jugdeep Narain, a judgment-debtor, under the following circumstances:

Jugdeep Narain was committed to jail on the 8th of August 1884, and he applied under s. 336 of the Code to be released on furnishing security. One Imdad Hoseins tendered security, but the Nazir reported that the property tendered was not of the value represented by the proposed surety. The Munsif directed that further security for Rs. 100 should be furnished; and on the 12th of November 1884 the present appellant tendered this further security. This having been approved, the two sureties on the 16th November jointly executed a security bond for Rs. 526-5-2, being the amount of the judgment debt. The debtor was thereupon released.

Instead, however, of applying under Chap. XX of the Code to be declared an insolvent, he applied to have the decree, which was ex parte, set aside. This application was disallowed early in 1885, and the Munsif directed that the decree-holder should take further steps. On the 21st of February 1885, no further steps having been taken, the Munsif dismissed the application for execution under which the debtor had been arrested and imprisoned. Nothing more was done until the 20th of July, when the decree-holder made a fresh application to execute the decree against the sureties, unless they should produce the judgment-debtor in Court.

The Munsif allowed the decree to be executed against the sureties to the extent for which they jointly and severally had made themselves liable.

[759] The lower Appellate Court confirmed the order of the Munsif, directing the decree to be executed against the sureties.

Lalji Sahoy (one of the sureties) preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Nil Kant Sakai, for the appellant.

Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose (with him Baboo Atul Krisho Ghose), for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The appellant in this case became surety in the Court of the Munsif of Gya, under s. 336 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for a judgment-debtor who had been arrested in execution of a decree, and who expressed his intention under that section to apply under Chapter XX of the Code to be declared an insolvent.

The debtor was released on the security of the present appellant, and of another person who joined in executing the security bond. But he made no application to be declared an insolvent, and the appellant failed to produce him, when called upon to do so, some six months after the transaction.

The present appeal is against the order of the Munsif, made with reference to the last clause of s. 336 and to s. 253, and confirmed by the District Judge in appeal, directing that the decree be executed against the sureties. One only of them appealed against this order. He relies upon the following facts as justifying his appeal: (After stating the facts as above the judgment proceeded).

The contentions urged on behalf of the appellant were that, so far as he was concerned, the security bond created a liability for no more than Rs. 100; that the obligation had been sufficiently discharged by the appearance of the judgment-debtor in support of his application to set aside the ex parte decree; that the decree could not be executed against a surety who had assumed that character after the decree had been passed; and that the dismissal of the decree-holder’s case on the 21st of February 1885, had the effect of discharging the security taken in pursuance of that application.

[760] None of these contentions except the last appear to us to possess any force. The security bond on the face of it clearly binds both the sureties, jointly and severally, to make good the whole amount therein recited; and the terms of this bond cannot be modified by any precedent negotiation or petition. Again, it cannot seriously be urged that the obligation to produce the debtor when called upon is discharged by the voluntary appearance of the latter, not in obedience to such call or for the purpose of satisfying the decree, but for the purpose of trying to get rid of that decree, and followed as it was by the debtor’s disappearance on the failure of this attempt. And it is noteworthy that the production of the debtor does not terminate the liability of a surety under s. 336, for if the former fails to apply to be declared an insolvent, it is in the discretion of the Court either to realize the security or commit the debtor to jail in execution of the decree. The contention that a decree cannot be executed against a surety who becomes one after the passing of the decree is negatived by the express provisions of the Code; for the last clause of s. 336 enacts that in the case of a surety such security may be realized in manner provided by s. 253. And the manner therein provided is as follows: “The decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable in the same manner as a decree may be executed against a defendant, provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety.”

These objections, therefore, do not avail the appellant, and we have no doubt that upon the judgment-debtor’s failure to apply within one month of his release to be declared an insolvent, the sureties became liable for the amount recited in their bond to be realized from them in execution of the decree. But we are not prepared to hold that the liability continued to exist after the decree-holder’s application for execution had been dismissed. It seems to us that the security bond has reference only to the proceeding actually before the Court; and that the power reserved to the Court under s. 336 to realize the security in execution of the decree cannot be exercised when the execution proceeding, having been dismissed, is no longer in existence. The dismissal of the application would undoubtedly result in the discharge of the debtor if in custody, and in the release of any property attached under the decree; and we cannot see that the property of a surety is more stringently bound than that of the debtor himself, unless it be expressly so provided in the bond. We think, therefore, that the dismissal of the decree-holder’s application on the 21st of February 1885, operated as a discharge of the surety.

The Munsif speaks of this proceeding as if it had merely temporarily “struck off” the execution proceeding, keeping it in statu quo and by no means disposing of it; but the order in the order sheet is a distinct dismissal of the case, and it necessitated an entirely fresh application for execution. That fresh application could not, we think, for the reasons above stated, be enforced against the surety in the previous case.

We, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, and so far as the appellant is concerned we reverse the order of the Munsif with costs in all the Courts.

H. T. H. Appeal allowed.
DIGAMBUR MISER AND OTHERS (Defendants, Nos. 1 & 2) v. RAM LAL ROY (Plaintiff).* [2nd July, 1887.]

Mohomedan law—Pre-emption—Conditional sale—Right of pre-emption among coparceners—Private partition of puttidari estate—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 10, 120.

A and B had certain proprietary rights in an 8 annas putti of a certain mehala. C and D had no rights in that putti, but D had a small share in the remaining 8 annas putti. A private partition between the puttis having taken place, C and D's brother lent to B two sums of Rs. 200 and Rs. 190 by deeds of bai-bil-wuafa, dated the 12th and 21st June 1876. C and D subsequently instituted foreclosure proceedings, and on the 5th May 1884, were put into possession of B's share in the first mentioned putti in execution of a decree which they had obtained. On the 18th April 1885, A sued C and D to enforce his right of pre-emption.

[762] Held, that though the coparcenary could not be said to have ceased to exist, or those who were co-parceners be said to have become strangers to one another, yet, there being a finding that the puttis were separate, it was not necessary in order to establish A's preferential right that a partition by metes and bounds should be shown to have taken place; but that a private partition, if full and final between the parties, would have the same effect as the most formal partition on the right of pre-emption, and that A's claim must, therefore, succeed.

Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation, it being governed by either art. 10, sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), which gave the plaintiff a year from the 5th May 1884, the date on which the mortgagee obtained possession, or by art. 120, under which his right to sue accrued upon the expiry of the six months' grace allowed to the mortgagor after the decree for foreclosure, and there would be six years allowed from that time.

The plaintiff in this case alleged that there was a certain mehala called Keotolia, consisting of four mouzahs, in an 8 annas putti, of which he held a 15-krant share; that the defendant No. 3 had a 6-pie share on the same 8 annas putti; that the 8 annas putti was held jointly by all the co-sharers therein, the zerait lands only having been privately partitioned, and being held separately by each co-sharer; that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had no interest in the 8 annas putti in which he and defendant No. 3 were co-sharers; that defendant No. 2 had a small share in the other 8 annas putti; that the two puttis had been separated for a long time; that on 25th Bysack 1291, corresponding to the 5th May 1884, he first learned that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had got possession of the 6-pie share of defendant No. 3 in the 8 annas putti in which he, plaintiff, and defendant No. 3 were co-sharers; that this possession had been obtained through the Court in execution of a decree which defendant No. 1 and one Ram Pergash Roy, the brother of defendant No. 2, had obtained against defendant No. 3 in a suit brought by them against him on two deeds of bai-bil-wuafa, one for Rs. 199 dated 12th June 1876, and one for Rs. 200 dated 21st June 1876, executed by him in their favour; that he, plaintiff, was a co-sharer in the property sold, and had a right of pre-emption in respect thereof; that as against him

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2382 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Amrito Lall Chatterji, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 20th of August, 1886, reversing the decree of Moulvic Muzharul Anwar, Munsif of Sewan, dated the 25th of January 1886.
the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had no right to purchase the property sold; that immediately on learning the facts he performed the preliminary ceremonies of talub-i-mawasibut and talab-i-istishhad, and subsequently tendered the amount of the two deeds of bai-bil-wufa to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who declined to accept it.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alleged that the whole 16 annas of mehal Keotolia were held ijmali; that the defendant No. 2 was a co-sharer in the mehal, and, therefore, the plaintiff had no right of pre-emption as against him; that plaintiff knew all about the deeds of bai-bil-wufa and the proceedings had thereupon, and that he had wrongly stated the date of his cause of action; that his claim was barred by limitation; and that he had not performed the necessary preliminary ceremonies.

The first Court framed the following issues:

1st.—Whether the village is still ijmali or divided? Has defendant No. 2 any share in it? Can a pre-emption suit lie against him?

2nd.—When does plaintiff's cause of action arise? Is the suit barred by limitation?

3rd.—Has the plaintiff properly observed the ceremonies of talub-i-mawasibut and istishhad?

4th.—Can the plaintiff afford to purchase the share?

The Munsif held that the case was governed by art. 10, sch. 11 of the Limitation Act; he found as a fact that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were put into possession of the disputed property on 25th Bysack 1291=5th May 1884; and as the suit was commenced on 18th April 1885, he held that it was not barred. On the third issue he found against the plaintiff and, therefore, dismissed his suit. The first and fourth issues were not tried. The plaintiff appealed. On the hearing of the appeal the question of limitation was not pressed, but the Subordinate Judge held that he must consider it. He held that the Munsif was in error in applying art. 10 of sch. 11 of the Limitation Act, that art. 120 applied, and that the suit was not barred. The Subordinate Judge then considered the two following questions namely:

1st.—Whether the preliminary ceremonies were duly performed by the plaintiff? and 2nd.—Whether he has a right of pre-emption against defendants Nos. 1 and 2?

Upon the first question he came to the conclusion "that the preliminary ceremonies were duly performed by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was not aware of the sale before he was informed of it in Bysack 1291." Upon the second question he found "that the share of the defendant No. 2 is in a separate putti from that within which the disputed share and the plaintiff's share are included, and that the two puttis are separate." He, therefore, reversed the Munsif's decision and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

Against that decree the defendants now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. Amir Ali, Mr. Caspersz, and Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerji, for the appellants.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, for the respondent.

Mr. Caspersz.—We have priority of purchase, and, this being a case of a competitive pre-emption," there is no preferential title among co- pareeners. The fact that our share is in a different putti does not make us strangers. "Shaffa" is "but a feeble right, being the dispossessing of another of his property merely in order to prevent apprehended inconveniences" (Hamilton’s Hedaya, Vol. III, pp. 566-8), and may be defeated by various legal devices. We submit the true test is whether the inconvenience to which we are subjected by being deprived of our right of property which we have acquired after delay and expense, and which is a fair compensation for the money we lent eight years before, is not far greater than the pre-emptor’s supposed hardship. This is not the case of a stranger being introduced, because we are already a co-parcener. We submit that limitation runs from the date of the conditional sale, of which the plaintiff must be taken to have been aware. Article 120 of sch. 11 will then apply, which gives six years. The pre-emptor’s cause of action arose when the sale took place and not when it became absolute. This being a case among Hindus, we submit the plaintiff’s right should be strictly construed by the light of "justice, equity, and good conscience," and not so as to strengthen an antiquated and unreasonable custom. We are, at least, entitled to interest on the sums advanced. The following authorities were referred to—Farzand Ali v. [765] Alimullah (1); Lalla Nowbut Lall v. Lalla Jewan Lall (2); Kudratulla v. Mahini Mohan Shaha (3); Tara Kunwar v. Mangri Meea (4); Macnaghten’s Principles, p. 49; Macpherson on Mortgages, pp. 15-20; Nath Prasad v. Ram Paltan Ram (5); Lachman Prosad v. Bahadur Singh (6).

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, for the respondent.—Gopal Sahai v. Ojoodheapershad (7) is identical with the present case. The fact of the appellants’ share being in a different putti removes their only defence.

Mr. Caspersz in reply.—The partition should be by metes and bounds in order to make us strangers. For purposes of revenue there has been no partition at all. We are still a member of the co-parcenary, and the general rule will therefore apply.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJs.) after stating the facts set out above, proceeded as follows:—

On second appeal the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 urged that the parties to the suit being all Hindus the Court below ought to have held that the present suit to enforce the right of pre-emption is not maintainable. As to this it is sufficient to say that the point was not raised in either of the lower Courts, and is not such an one as we can allow to be raised now for the first time.

Another point urged by the Counsel for the appellants was that, as there had been no actual partition of the disputed properties by metes and bounds, the lower appellate Court ought not to have held that there was such a separation as to entitle the plaintiff to maintain the suit. In support of this contention two cases were relied upon, viz., Farzand Ali v. Alimullah (1); and Lalla Nowbut Khan v. Lalla Jewan Lall (2). In the first case the facts were these: The plaintiff brought his suit for a declaration of right to, and to obtain possession of, a certain share in a puttidari estate; he had purchased the share at a sale held in execution of a decree; he was a co-sharer in the estate but not in the putti in which the share in suit was situated. The defendant, who was a co-sharer in that putti, had claimed to take the share sold [766] under the provisions of s. 14, Act XXIII of 1861 (which gave a co-sharer in a puttidari estate, paying revenue to Government as defined in Act II of 1841, not being the judgment-debtor, a right of pre-emption, and enable him to come in after the property had been knocked down to a stranger and claim it at the price he bid, provided he made the claim on the day of the sale and fulfilled the conditions of the sale). The officer conducting the sale had allowed the defendant’s claim, and the Court executing the decree had confirmed the sale in his favour. The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was a “stranger” within the meaning of the section, and that defendant was, therefore, entitled to take the share, and dismissed the suit. The lower appellate Court reversed this decision, and holding that plaintiff was not a “stranger” gave him a decree. On second appeal the High Court held that plaintiff was not a “stranger.” Oldfield, J., says: “The plaintiff is himself a member of the co-parcenary, being a sharer in another putti of the estate. The right of pre-emption can only be asserted against a stranger, i.e., one who is not a sharer or member of the coparcenary. A sharer in one of the puttis in a puttidari estate cannot be said to be a stranger, with reference to the co-sharers in another putti, and the section gives no preferential rights of pre-emption among themselves between co-sharers in the same putti and sharers in other puttis, who come under the denomination of members of the coparcenary.” This case does not afford us much assistance, for there was no finding, as in this case, “that the two puttis are separate.” The second case cited does not carry the matter further; it simply held “that by the Mahomedan law one coparcener has no right of pre-emption against another coparcener.” The question we have to decide is whether before a coparcenary can be said to have ceased to exist, and those who were coparceners have become “strangers” to one another, something more than a private partition, viz., partition by metes and bounds, is necessary.

We are of opinion that no partition by metes and bounds is necessary. Lord Westbury, in the case of Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (1), says: “When the members of an undivided [767] family agree among themselves with regard to particular property, that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership, in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share, which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severity, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided.” And at page 92 his Lordship says: “Then, if there be a conversion of the joint tenancy of an undivided family into a tenancy in common of the members of that undivided family, the undivided family becomes a divided family with reference to the property that is the subject of that agreement, and that is a separation in interest and in right, although not immediately followed by a de facto actual division of the subject-matter. This may; at any time, be claimed by virtue of the separate right.”

In Gopal Saha v. Ojoodheapershad (2) it was held that a private partition, though not sanctioned by official authority, if full and final, as among the parties to it, will have the same effect as the most formal partition on the right of pre-emption. We think these two cases establish the view we hold.

The next point raised by counsel for the appellants was that plaintiff’s claim was barred by limitation. It was urged that the District Judge was

(1) 11 M. I. A. 75.
(2) 2 W. R. 47.
right in holding on the authority of Nath Parsad v. Ram Paltan Ram (1) that art. 120 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, and not article 10, governed the case; but it was argued that the District Judge had erred in fixing the time from which the period of limitation allowed by art. 120 began to run; it was contended that it began to run from the date of the conditional sale, and in support of this view the case of Lachman Prasad v. Bahadur Singh (2) was relied upon.

We are of opinion that the suit is not barred, and that it is immaterial whether art. 10 or art. 120 be applied to it, for the deeds of conditional sale of 1876 did not operate to transfer the property from the owner to the mortgagee. The [768] latter did not become owner of the property until after he had obtained a decree for foreclosure, and until the right of redemption in the vendor had been extinguished. On the 5th of May 1884, the mortgagee obtained possession, and under art. 10 the plaintiff would have a year from that date to bring his suit. We do not see why art. 10 should not govern it, for the sale became absolute by the foreclosure proceedings, and possession was subsequently obtained.

On the other hand, if art. 120 applies, we think that plaintiff’s right to sue accrued upon the expiry of the six months’ grace allowed to the mortgagee after the decree for foreclosure, and there would be six years allowed from that time.

Thus we come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed in his suit, and that the appeal fails on each point.

It was also contended that, at any rate, the defendants are entitled to interest upon Rs. 399, the amount covered by two deeds of bai-bil-wufa. We think that that contention must prevail, and it was admitted by Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the respondent to be a good one.

The decree of the lower appellate Court, therefore, will be modified to the extent of directing interest to be paid upon the Rs. 399, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of foreclosure till possession.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

DHAPI (Defendant) v. RAM PERSHAD, MINOR, REPRESENTED BY HIS UNCLE AND GUARDIAN AD LITEM DUNGUR MULL (Plaintiff).*

[2nd July 1887.]

Practice—Production of Documents—Discovery—Revision of interlocutory order when appeal lies from final decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 131—136 and 602.

If a notice under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code be not answered as provided by s. 132, the party seeking the inspection of documents may apply for an order under s. 133, and his application must be supported by an affidavit. The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order under s. 136 unless the provisions of s. 134 are strictly complied with.

*Civil Rule No. 794 of 1887, made against the order of Baboo Upendro Chunder Mullick, Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, dated the 13th of May 1887.

(2) 2 A. 884.
[769] There is nothing in s. 622 of the Code which prevents the High Court from setting aside an interlocutory order if made without jurisdiction.

The word “case” in that section is wide enough to include such an order, and the words “records of any case” include so much of the proceedings in any suit as relate to an interlocutory order. Omrao Mirza v. Jones (1); Harsaran Singh v. Muhammad Raza (2); Chattan Singh v. Lekhraj Singh (3); Farid Ahmad v. Dulari Bibi (4), dissented from.

The facts of the case were as follows: One Mool Chand Ram died many years ago, leaving two sons, Mohun Ram and Lutchmun Dass. The two brothers remained joint for some time after their father’s death, but subsequently separated. Lutchmun Dass married three wives successively; by his first wife, Mussamut Bindoo, he had a son, Chundi Pershad, born 2nd Assin 1905 Sumbut (15th September 1848); by his second wife, Mussamut Junga, he had a son, Dungur Mull, born 29th Magh 1918 Sumbut (14th February 1862); by his third wife, Mussamut Dhiapi, he had no male issue, only a daughter. Mohun Ram died in Aughran 1927 Sumbut (November 1870), without issue, male or female, but having adopted his nephew (brother’s son) Dungur Mull, who, on Mohun Ram’s death, entered into the possession of his property. Lutchmun Dass died in Assin 1927 Sumbut (September 1870), and on his death his son Chundi Pershad entered into possession of his property. Chundi Pershad married Mussamut Parbati and died 9th Pous 1934 Sumbut (28th December 1877). Before his death, viz., on 17th August 1877, he made a will, whereof he appointed his wife Mussamut Parbati and his stepmother Mussamut Dhiapi executrices; and by this will he gave Mussamut Parbati authority to adopt a son. On 2nd Aughran 1935 Sumbut (12th November 1878), a son Ram Pershad was born to Dungur Mull, and this boy was adopted by Mussamut Parbati on 16th Aughran 1935 (25th November 1878). Mussamut Parbati died on 22nd Magh 1298 Fusi (11th February 1886), and after her death Chundi Pershad’s property came into the hands of Mussamut Dhiapi, who subsequently denied Ram Pershad’s adoption. Dungur Mull on 28th January 1887, executed a deed of disclaimer of any interest he might have in the property of [770] Chundi-Pershad in favour of Ram Pershad. Ram Pershad claiming to be entitled to Chundi Pershad’s property, either as the adopted son of Mussamut Parbati or under the deed of disclaimer, brought a suit on 1st February 1887 against Mussamut Dhiapi to obtain possession of Chundi Pershad’s estate, which he valued at Rs. 3,36,795. He did not ask for an account. The suit purported to be brought by “Baboo Ram Pershad, minor, adopted son of Baboo Chundi Pershad Marwari, deceased, under the guardianship of Baboo Dungur Mull, the uncle and next friend of the minor.” No certificate under Act XL of 1858 was produced at the time of filing the plaint, nor was any order recorded at that time permitting Dungur Mull to file the plaint on behalf of Ram Pershad. On 8th February the following order was made by the Subordinate Judge: “Through the oversight and carelessness of the Amla my order for granting this plaintiff, upon his application supported by affidavit” (leave?) “to sue as a next friend of the minor, he being the natural father of the minor, and uncle on the other side, was not recorded. on the day; but as the law on the subject is not very clear, I think it may be recorded now, subject to a further discussion during the trial." The 4th March was fixed for the appearance of the defendant and for settlement of issues. On the 5th February the plaintiff, under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code, gave notice through the Court to the defendant to produce for inspection certain account books for the Sumbut years 1933 to 1943 (1876—1887). The notice was served on 10th February.
On 7th February defendant applied for a transfer of the suit to the file of the District Judge of Bhagulpore, who, on that day, directed a notice to issue calling on the plaintiffs to show cause on 25th February why the suit should not be transferred, and stayed all proceedings in the meantime. Defendant’s application for transfer was refused on 3rd March.
On 4th March the settlement of issues was postponed to 21st April. On 8th March plaintiff applied under s. 133 for an order for inspection of the books, on the ground that the defendant, having been served on 10th February with notice under s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code had omitted to give notice under s. 132 of the Civil Procedure Code. That application was directed to be heard [771] on 15th March. On 16th March the defendant put in a petition, alleging that the books were required for the preparation of the written statement, and asking that she might be permitted not to produce them for inspection until the day fixed for the settlement of issues. On 16th March an order was made on the defendant’s application, granting her ten days further time to put in the documents.

On 25th March the defendant put in a petition in which she claimed under s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code to withhold inspection of the books until the plaintiff established his adoption, or his right, under the deed of relinquishment. On the same day the plaintiff put in a petition alleging that the defendant had not produced the books for inspection, and asking that the procedure, under s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code, should be followed, and the suit decided ex parte. Defendant’s written statement was filed on 25th April. She denied that Ram Pershad was adopted by Mussamut Parbati; she contended that, if as a matter of fact he was adopted, the adoption was invalid; she denied Dungur Mull’s title; she claimed to be entitled to Chundi Pershad’s property under his will and she contended that the suit could not proceed until a certificate had been granted under Act XL of 1858.

On 6th May issues were settled, eleven in number. The first was "whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain this suit without a certificate under Act XL of 1858;" the second was "whether Dungur Mull acquired any right to the estate of Chundi Pershad, and whether plaintiff is entitled to any such right by virtue of assignment, as alleged in the plaint, by Dungur Mull;" the fifth was "whether Mussamut Parbati adopted plaintiff as an adopted son of Chundi Pershad according to the provisions of the Hindu law in force in this part of the country? Has it been a valid adoption?" No order was made on the petitions of 25th March until 13th May, when the following order was made:—

"As regards the question of inspection of certain documents, under
s. 131 of the Civil Procedure Code, it appears that the plaintiff applied for and obtained an order under the said section of the law quoted on the 5th February 1887, and the defendant did not [772] comply with the provisions of s. 132 of the Civil Procedure Code, within the fixed time, viz., ten days or even on or before the 13th March last. On the 16th March the defendant, without complying with the request of the plaintiff, simply applied for an adjournment of the hearing without sufficient legal excuse; her right, therefore, under s. 135 of the Civil Procedure Code was lost. It has been argued by the plaintiff’s pleader that the books of accounts the inspection whereof has been applied for by him, would afford materials for the purpose of proving the adoption, and also the last issue raised in the case. I think defendant has failed to make out a good and sufficient cause or excuse for non-compliance with the plaintiff’s request. These books of accounts are not title-deeds or such documents as that their production would expose and injure the defendant, hence it cannot be held that she has good ground for withholding their production, or appointing a place convenient to her, for the purpose of inspection.

"I accordingly reject the defendant’s application of objection, and she must abide by the consequences of the law. At the suggestion of the plaintiff’s pleader I grant defendant ten days time more to comply with the plaintiff’s request of inspection."

On the 21st May Mr. Woodroffe obtained this rule calling upon Baboo Ram Pershad to show cause why the last-mentioned order of the Sub-Judge of Monghyr should not be set aside under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The rule now came on to be heard on the 17th June 1887.

Mr. Evans (Mr. Ameer Ali and Baboo Bolye Chand Dutt with him) showed cause:—The Sub-Judge had jurisdiction to pass the order, and the order was properly made—Savill v. Browne (1); Sanders v. Jones (2); Attorney-General v. Gaskill (3). The plaintiff is entitled to inspect the khatas which are in the possession of the defendant.

The order of the 13th May 1887 is an interlocutory order, and there is an appeal from the final decree with which the High Court cannot interfere under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code—[773] Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (4); Sheo Bux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen (5); Badami Koer v. Dina Rai (6); Omrao Mirza v. Jones (7); Harsaran Singh v. Muhammad Raza (8); Chatter Singh v. Lekhraj Singh (9); Farid Ahmad v. Dulari Bibi (10).

The Advocate-General Mr. G. C. Paul (with him Mr. Woodroffe and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy) in support of the rule.—The plaintiff is not entitled to inspect the documents unless he proves the adoption, and that he is a reversioner. The Sub-Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the order under s. 136. All applications under s. 134 for inspection of documents must specify the documents, and the Court under s. 135 is bound to decide whether the party applying for inspection is entitled to do so. There is no affidavit to show that the account-books contain items of expenses of adoption.—Attorney-General v. Thompson (11); Rowcliffe v. Leigh (12).

Section 622 of the Code does not take away the power of the High Court to set aside an interlocutory order if made without jurisdiction.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.)

JUDGMENTS.

NORRIS, J. (after setting out the facts as above) proceeded:— should not be set aside. The rule was argued on 17th ultimo, Mr. Evans showing cause and Mr. Advocate-General supporting it.

Any difficulty that exists in disposing of this rule arises from the fact that neither the Subordinate Judge nor the plenaders of the respective parties seem to have understood the procedure regarding inspection.

Chapter X of the Civil Procedure Code contains the provisions \[774\] with regard to "discovery, and the admission, inspection, production, impounding and return of documents."

Section 121 of the Civil Procedure Code authorizes a plaintiff, at any time by leave of the Court, to deliver through the Court interrogatories in writing for the examination of the defendant, and authorizes a defendant, at any time after his written statement has been tendered, received, and placed on the record, to deliver through the Court interrogatories in writing for the examination of the plaintiff. Section 122 prescribes the method of service of interrogatories. Section 125 authorizes any party interrogated "to refuse to answer any interrogatory on the ground that it is irrelevant, or is not put bona fide for the purposes of the suit, or that the matter enquired after is not sufficiently material at that stage of the suit or on any other like ground." Under s. 127, "if any person interrogated omits or refuses to answer or answers insufficiently any interrogatory, the party interrogating may apply to the Court for an order requiring him to answer or to answer further, as the case may be." The penalty upon a plaintiff for not obeying an order served upon him "to answer or to answer further, as the case may be," is that he is liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution and to be prosecuted for an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code; the penalty upon a defendant for not obeying an order, served upon him "to answer or to answer further, as the case may be," is that he is liable to have his defence struck out and to be placed in the same position as if he had not appeared and answered, and to be prosecuted for an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code. An order of the Court is necessary before the plaintiff's suit can be dismissed, or the defendant's defence struck out.

Up to this point the chapter has dealt with the first branch of discovery, that by interrogatories. It then proceeds to deal with discovery as it affects documents.

The question of discovery as it affects documents obviously embraces two heads: first, discovery simply, that is to say, the power of compelling your opponent to disclose what documents he has in his possession; secondly, the power of compelling their production. The subject of discovery simply \[775\] is dealt with by s. 129, which says that "the Court may, at any time during the pendency therein of any suit, order any party to the suit to declare by affidavit all the documents which are or have been in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in the suit, and any party to the suit may at any time before the first hearing apply to the Court for a like order." If the party served with the order objects to produce any of the documents disclosed in his affidavit, he must specify them, together with the grounds of his objection. The penalties for non-compliance with an order under s. 129 are the same as those provided by s. 186 for non-compliance with an order under s. 127 to answer interrogatories.

Section 180, which says that "the Court may at any time during the pendency therein of any suit order the production by any party thereto of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in such suit as the Court thinks right; and the Court..."
may deal with such documents when produced in such manner as appears just,' deals as well with the power of compelling your opponent to disclose what documents he has in his possession, as with the power of compelling their production. The penalty for non-compliance with an order under s. 130 is the same as that provided by s. 136 for non-compliance with an order under s. 127 or s. 129. The Chapter then proceeds to deal with the voluntary inspection of documents. Section 131 enacts "that any party to a suit may at any time before or at the hearing thereof give notice through the Court to any other party to produce any specified document for the inspection of the party giving such notice, or of his pleader, and to permit such party or pleader to take copies thereof."

Section 132 provides that "the party to whom such notice is given shall, within ten days from the receipt thereof, deliver through the Court to the party giving the same a notice stating a time, within three days from such delivery, at which the documents, or such of them as he does not object to produce, may be inspected at his pleader's office, or some other convenient place, and stating which, if any, of the documents he objects to produce, and on what grounds." The notice to be given through the [776] Court under s. 131 should require the party from whom inspection is sought to deliver the notice under s. 132 within ten days from the receipt of the notice, and under s. 131 the time cannot be curtailed. The penalty for not delivering through the Court the notice required by s. 132 is that the party not so giving it shall not afterwards "be at liberty to put in any such document in evidence unless he satisfies the Court that such document relates only to his own title, or that he had some other and sufficient cause."

The chapter next proceeds to deal with inspection by order of the Court.

Section 133 enacts that, "if any party served with notice under s. 131 omits to give notice under s. 132 of the time of inspection, or objects to give inspection, or names an inconvenient place for inspection, the party desiring it may apply to the Court for an order of inspection."

Section 134 provides that, "except in the case of documents referred to in the plaint, written statement or affidavit of the party against whom the application is made or disclosed in his affidavit of documents, such application shall be founded upon an affidavit showing (a) of what documents inspection is sought, (b) that the party, applying is entitled to inspect them, and (c) that they are in the possession or power of the party against whom the application is made." Section 135 provides that, "if the party from whom discovery of any kind or inspection is sought objects to the same or any part thereof, and if the Court is satisfied that the right to such discovery or inspection depends on the determination of any issue or question in dispute in the suit, or that for any other reason it is desirable that any such issue or question should be determined before deciding upon the right to the discovery or inspection, the Court may order that the issue or question be determined first and reserve the question as to the discovery or inspection." That the provisions of this section were not intended to come into operation until after an application has been made under s. 133 is plain from a consideration of the fact that s. 136 enacts the same penalties for non-compliance with an order under s. 133 as for non-compliance with orders under ss. 127, 129 and 130, and no order could be made [777] under s. 133 until the questions raised under s. 135 had been determined. If this view of the Chapter be correct, it follows that almost all the proceedings in this case are irregular.
In the first place the plaintiff’s application of the 8th March was premature, for the notice under s. 131 was served on the defendant on 10th February, three days after all proceedings in the suit were stayed. The application for transfer was refused on 3rd March, and it was not till then that the ten days’ time within which to deliver the notice under s. 132 began to run against the defendant. The application was also bad, for it was not supported by an affidavit as required by s. 134.

In the second place the defendant’s application of 16th March was unnecessary. If she did not want to produce the books for inspection, all she had to do was to refrain from delivering the notice under s. 132 and wait for the plaintiff to apply for an order under s. 133, supported by an affidavit under s. 134.

In the third place the defendant’s application of 25th March was premature, for there had been no proper application for an order under s. 133.

In the fourth place the plaintiff’s application of 25th March was irregular, for no order for inspection had been made on the defendant under s. 133.

In the fifth place the order of the Judge of 13th May, purporting to be made under s. 136, is bad, being made without jurisdiction.

The present position of the parties is this: If the defendant does not wish to give inspection of the books she need not do so at present, and the only penalty she will be subject to is that she will not be allowed, at the trial, to put in the books on her own behalf unless she satisfies the Court that they relate only to her own title, or that she had some other and sufficient cause for not complying with the notice served upon her on 10th February. If the plaintiff still wants to have inspection of the books he may apply for an order for inspection under s. 133 founded upon an affidavit under s. 134. The defendant may then claim the benefit of the provisions of s. 135. If she does, the Subordinate Judge will then have “to satisfy himself whether right to such discovery or inspection as the plaintiff seeks depends upon the determination of any issue or question in dispute in the suit, or that for any other reason it is desirable that any such issue or question should be determined before deciding upon the right to inspection;” if he is so satisfied, he ought to order the issue or issues, question or questions, to be determined first and reserve the question as to inspection. In this view of the case it is unnecessary and undesirable to discuss the cases cited to us bearing upon the question of plaintiff’s right to inspection under the circumstances of this case.

Only one more point remains to be considered. Mr. Evans contended that, as the order of 13th May was an interlocutory order, and there was an appeal from the final decree, we could not interfere under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. In support of the contention the learned Counsel referred to the cases cited at page 573 of the second edition of Mr. Justice O’ Kinealy’s Code of Civil Procedure in the learned author’s notes to s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code; to Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), Sew Bux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen (2), and Badami Kuar v. Dinu Rai (3). In the case of Omrao Mirza v. Jones (4), one of the cases cited by O’Kinealy, J., the facts were these. The plaintiff brought a suit, alleging divers breaches of trust, asking for an account and for the appointment of a new trustee. The value of the trust property was five

The suit was instituted on a 10-rupee Court-fee stamp as being the proper stamp under art. 17, sch. II of the Court Fees Act. The Court in which the suit was instituted was of opinion that the Court-fee ought to have been calculated on the full value of the trust property, and made an order that the deficiency, Rs. 2,990, should be made good within a certain time. Before the time expired the plaintiff applied for a rule to show cause why the order should not be set aside. In showing cause against the rule it was argued that, if the plaintiff had waited until the expiration of the time allowed for making good the deficiency, the Court of first instance must have proceeded to deal with the case under s. 54 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the order rejecting the plaint which would have been made in due course under that section, on the ground that the relief was not properly valued, would have been an appealable order; and this being so, it was further contended that the applicant ought not to be allowed to come in under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, when he could by law have an appeal in the case upon the very point he sought to raise under the rule. McDonell and Field, JJ., yielded to this argument; and holding that the case was not, with reference to the language of s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code "a case in which no appeal lies to the High Court," and that the matter under dispute ought to be determined on appeal, discharged the rule.

In Harsaran Singh v. Muhammad Raza (1), another of the cases cited by O'Kinealy, J., the plaintiff applied by his pleader to a District Judge for leave to appeal as a pauper against a decree of a Subordinate Judge; the District Judge refused the application on the ground that it ought to have been made personally and not by a pleader. The plaintiff applied to the High Court to revise the District Judge's order under s. 662 of the Civil Procedure Code. Straight, J., in giving the judgment of the Court said: "We are clearly of opinion that this application was inadmissible and cannot be entertained. Section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code does not, in our judgment, apply to a proceeding of so purely an interlocutory character as that mentioned in s. 592."

In Chattar Singh v. Lekhraj Singh (2), another of the cases cited by O'Kinealy, J., the facts were these: "There had been a reference to arbitration under the provisions contained in Ch. XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code; the arbitrator had made his award in favour of the defendant; the award was set aside upon the application of the plaintiff on the ground of the arbitrator's misconduct. The defendant impugned the propriety of the decision of the Court of first instance that the arbitrator had been guilty of misconduct," and applied to the High Court to revise the order under s. 662 of the Civil Procedure Code. Oldfield, J., in giving judgment, said at [780] page 294: "We are of opinion that we have no power of revision under s. 622. The contention that the proceeding for arbitration is a decided case in which no appeal lies within the meaning of the section, and therefore open to revision under s. 622, is not tenable. The proceeding is of an interlocutory character only, made in the course of a suit; it is part of a case which is still undecided, and in which an appeal lies from the final decree. It was not the intention to allow of revision of interlocutory proceedings, in the course of a suit, which do not determine it. The order, which is the subject of this application, will be open to revision by appeal from the final decree in the suit, and even if s. 622 allowed of it, it would be highly inexpedient for us to interfere at this stage of the case."

(1) 4 A. 91. (2) 5 A. 293.

In Farid Ahmad v. Dulari Bibi (1), the last of the cases cited by O Kinealy, J., a District Judge had transferred to his own file a suit pending in the Court of an Additional Subordinate Judge without notice to the defendants and when the trial of the suit was nearly completed. The defendants moved the High Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code to revise the order of transfer. The application was refused, the Court holding that the order of transfer was not one which they could revise under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, as it was an order made in a suit, and there was an appeal in the case from the final decree.

These cases no doubt decide in so many words that s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to interlocutory orders when there is an appeal from the final decree. I confess that, after a careful consideration of the judgments, I am unable to concur in the interpretation placed on s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. I think that the word "case" in s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code is wide enough to include an interlocutory order, and that the words "record of any case" include so much of the proceedings in any suit as relate to the interlocutory order. It is easy to imagine cases where irremediable injury may be done to a party by an interlocutory order made without jurisdiction, and unless the words of the section are clear beyond all doubt to the contrary, I cannot believe that the Legislature intended such injury to remain without a remedy.

[781] The other cases cited by Mr. Evans do not, as far I can see, throw any light upon the subject. I am of opinion that the rule should be made absolute with costs.

TOTTENHAM, J.—Under the circumstances I concur in making this rule absolute but I think that, even if we entertained doubt as to the power of this Court to interfere under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, it would be our duty to express such an opinion upon the manifest irregularities set out in Mr. Justice Norris's judgment as would induce the Court below of its own accord to desist from enforcing the order against which the rule has been obtained.

The rule will be made absolute with costs.

H. T. H. Rule made absolute.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Norris.

NOBIN CHUNDER BANNERJEE (Plaintiff) v. ROMESH CHUNDER GHOSE AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [31st March, 1887.]

Hindu Law, Contract—Interest recoverable at any one time, Amount of—Damrupat, Rule of—Act XXVIII of 1855—High Court, Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The rule of Hindu law, known in Bombay as the rule of Damrupat, that no greater arrear of interest can be recovered at any one time than what will amount to the principal sum, is neither a mere moral precept nor limited in its application to other than stipulated interest, and as a part of the Hindu law of contract is, in the absence of any legislative enactment to the contrary, the law as between Hindus in the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

Act XXVIII of 1855 deals exclusively with the rate of interest which may be allowed, and there is nothing in that Act inconsistent with the rule of Damdupat.

Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand (1) distinguished.

[N.R., 21 C. 840 (843); 23 C. 896 (906); 1 C.I. 182 (187).]

Nobin Chunder Bannerjee as purchaser under a deed of sale, dated the 2nd day of July, 1883, brought a suit for possession of an undivided third part or share of a house and premises, [782] numbered 57, Baugbazar Street, in the town of Calcutta, and for redemption of the other undivided two-thirds thereof. The plaintiff alleged that the principal defendants were, like their predecessor, in wrongful possession of the house, and, although the plaintiff had, since the date of his purchase, been ready and willing to redeem the mortgage, the defendants had refused to give up possession. The plaintiff deposited in Court the sum of Rs. 600 as the amount which he believed would be enough to satisfy the mortgage debt. * Hurro Moni Bewa and another, the principal defendants, whilst admitting that their predecessor in title had originally held the house under two mortgages, one an equitable mortgage for Rs. 100, and the other an ordinary mortgage for Rs. 200 with interest at 18 per cent. per annum, disputed, the title of the plaintiff’s vendor, stating that whatever interest was left in the mortgagors had all been abandoned in favour of the defendants’ predecessor, who had been in peaceful possession of the house and treated it in all respects as his own for a period of 16 years.

The cause came on for final disposal before Cunningham, J., who gave the plaintiff a decree and directed the Registrar to take the following accounts: (a) an account of what was due to the defendants for principal on the equitable and legal mortgages, mentioned in the plaint, and for interest only on the said legal mortgage at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum up to the date of tender by the plaintiff of the sum of Rs. 600 in Court; (b) an account of the rents and profits of the house and premises numbered 57, Baugbazar Street, since the date of the plaintiff’s purchase. The Registrar was further directed to deduct from the first head the amount found to be due under the second. That officer accordingly took the accounts as directed, and, in conformity with the rule of Damdupat, allowed only Rs. 200 out of Rs. 528-12, which was found to be actually due as interest on the mortgage sum. Exception was taken to his finding, and the case came upon further directions before Trevelyan, J., who, although of opinion that the Hindu law of Damdupat was the law in Calcutta as between Hindus [Ram Connoy Audicarry v. Johur Lall Dutt (2)], allowed, in view of the wording of the [783] decree of Cunningham, J., the full amount of interest actually found due on the legal mortgage. “The question in the case,” observed the learned Judge, “is whether by applying that law I shall not be varying the decree of the 23rd February 1885; I must give to that decree every possible effect, and must give some meaning to every portion of it. * * * * The decree provides for the contingency of the amount to be found due for principal and interest exceeding the sum of Rs. 600. If the law of Damdupat applied the amount could not by any process of calculation exceed the sum of Rs. 500. I must therefore take it that, for some reason or other, the learned Judge (Cunningham, J.) has excluded from this case the operation of the law of Damdupat and has held that the interest recoverable is not limited by that law."

(1) 5 B. H. C. R. A. C. 196. (2) 5 C. 867.

Against this decree of Trevelyan, J., the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. Mullick) for the appellant.—The construction placed upon the decree of the 23rd February is not correct. The Registrar was not precluded by the terms of that decree from giving effect to the rule of Damdupat.

Mr. O’Kinealy for the respondents.—The Registrar was bound to take the accounts according to the strict terms of the decree. The decree excludes the rule of Damdupat. Had that rule been in contemplation the form in which the accounts were directed to be taken would have been different from what it is now. The law of Damdupat does not apply to this case. This is a case of mortgage where the mortgagee had to account for the rents and profits. It was broadly laid down in Narayan bin Babaji v. Gangaram bin Krishnaji (1) that the rule of Damdupat did not apply to mortgage transactions. In this case the mortgagees were in possession, and under the authority of Nathubhai v. Mulchand (2) the rule is excluded. [Wilson, J.—The substance of that decision is that the rule does not apply to usufructuary mortgages.] Gunpat Pandurang v. Adarji Dadabhai (3) limits the rule to a case of mortgage where no accounts of rents and profits have to be taken. Where a party has contracted to pay a certain interest [784] he is bound to pay that interest, and even if morally wrong the Court is bound to allow the stipulated amount of interest under the Hindu law. The authorities with respect to the rule are limited to one case in this Court—Ram Connoy Audicarry v. Johur Lall Dutt (4). There is no such law in the Mofussil—Het Narain Singh v. Ram Dein Singh (5). The Statute 21, Geo. III., c. 70, has been repealed, so far as it relates to Hindu contracts, by the Indian Contract Act—Madhub Chunder Poranick v. Raj Coomar Dass (6). It is in Mia Khan v. Bibi Bibijan (7) that approval is for the first time given in Bengal to the rule of Damdupat. In Ram Lall Mookerjee v. Haran Chandra Dhar (8) Peacock, C.J., held that the restriction imposed by Hindu law on the rate of interest had not been abolished by Act XXVIII of 1855. In Mia Khan v. Bibi Bibijan, Phear, J., dissented from that decision. Damdupat is a rule of moral and not one of legal obligation under the Hindu law. There is nothing in Hindu Law to prevent a party from contracting himself out of the rule. According to Katyayana stipulated interest must always be paid. It is clear from the ancient authorities that so long as the interest is received at stated periods the creditor may take any amount. The restriction as to interest is one of moral, not legal, efficacy. The text of Vrihaspati is explicit upon the point. Manu allows an exorbitant rate of interest in certain cases, for instance when the borrower happens to be a sea-goer. Compare kalika, kharita and kayika forms of interest. There is very small difference between kayika and kalika, which deal with interest laid down by the law. These differ entirely from kharita or stipulated interest. (Colebrooke’s Digest, Book I, c. 1, s. 1, para 2; Book I, c. 2, s. 1, paras. 2 and 30; Book I, c. 2, s. 37, para. 35.) If the interest allowed by law is allowed to run on, it is stopped when it becomes equal to the principal; but stipulated interest is always recoverable. [Mr. Bonnerjee:—I do not wish to interrupt;

but all this applies to the rate of interest.] There is no doubt that the law of Damdupat is a part of the Hindu law of usury. [785] If there is any law here which cuts down the law of usury it cuts down the law of Damdupat with it—that law is Act XXVIII of 1855. Damdupat is not a rule of limitation different from the law of limitation as a part of the law of usury. It would be a strange thing in the case of promissory notes if Damdupat was the law.

Mr. Mullick in reply.—Ram Lall Mookerjee v. Haran Chundra Dhar (1) lays down how far the Hindu law governs the Hindus of Calcutta—Mia Khan v. Bibi Bibijan (2); Deen Dyal Paramanick v. Koylash Chunder Pal Chowdhry (3). The rule of Damdupat is clearly a rule of Hindu law—Dhondo Jagannath v. Narain Ramchandra (4); Khushal Chand Lall Chand v. Ibrahim Fakir (5). The true reason of the rule is that it prohibits the accumulation of interest. You may take almost any amount as interest if you take it by degrees; but you cannot recover at any one time more interest than what is equal to the principal. The scheme upon which the subject is treated in the Digest is this: Chapter I deals with loans, Chapter II with interest, and its sub-divisions deal with (a) interest in general, (b) special forms of interest, (c) interest specially authorised, (d) limits of interest, (e) debts bearing no interest. There runs through the various texts the doctrine that the interest recoverable at any one time must not exceed the principal. The text of Vachaspati Misra explains the meaning of “stipulated interest,” and is quoted with approval in Dhondo Jagannath v. Narain Ramchandra (6). In the Digest the article devoted to limits of interest is thus described: “The principal can in general only be doubled, &c.,” and the subject of “rate of interest” is treated as entirely distinct from that of the “limit of interest.”

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep, Wilson and Norris, JJ.) was delivered by.

Wilson, J.—The plaintiff in this case purchased the property to which the suit relates on the 2nd July 1883, the property being [786] then subject to two mortgages, one an equitable mortgage for Rs. 100 without interest, the other a legal mortgage for Rs. 200 with interest at 18 per cent. The plaintiff brought this suit to redeem the mortgages and recover possession of the property. He paid into Court Rs. 600 as sufficient to cover all that could be due upon the mortgages to the defendants or any of them. He alleged that the defendants or some of them had wrongfully obtained and held possession from a time long before his own purchase, and for this he claimed mesne profits.

The case was heard before Cunningham, J., who made his decree, dated the 23rd February 1885, by which he ordered certain accounts to be taken—(a) “an account of what is due to the defendants for principal on the equitable and legal mortgages . . . . and for interest only on the legal mortgage at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum up to the date of tender by the plaintiff of the sum of Rs. 600;” (b) “an account of the rents and profits of the house and premises” since the date of the plaintiff’s purchase. It was ordered that the amount found on taking the second account should be deducted from that found on the first; and provision was made, first, for the case of the sum found after such deduction not exceeding the

Rs. 600 paid in, and, secondly, for the case of its exceeding that sum. The other provisions in the decree were those that are usual in a decree for redemption.

The Registrar took the accounts as directed and made his report. The material passage in that report is this: "There is due to the defendants upon and by virtue of the equitable and legal mortgages the sums of Rs. 100 and 200 for principal and the sum of Rs. 528 for interest on the principal sum due on the said legal mortgage. Out of the sum of Rs. 528-12, I have allowed only Rs. 200, and have disallowed the rest under the rule of Damdupat." This finding of the Registrar was excepted to, and the case came upon further directions before Trevelyan, J. The learned Judge agreed with the Registrar in thinking that the rule of Damdupat, by which the amount of interest recoverable at one time cannot exceed the principal, was properly applicable to the case, but he thought he was precluded by the terms of the decree of Cunningham, J., from applying it. He, therefore, allowed the [787] exception, and varied the report accordingly. Against that decision the plaintiff has now appealed.

We are unable to agree with the view which the learned Judge has taken of the construction of the former decree. The governing passage in the decree is that in which the accounts to be taken are defined. The first account is of "what is due" for principal and interest upon the mortgages, and it would, we think, require very strong ground to justify us in extending those words so as to include anything not legally due. The fact that a subsequent passage contemplated a result of the account which the rule of Damdupat would render impossible is not, in our judgment, sufficient. The most that that can show is that the question of Damdupat was not present to the mind of the learned Judge who made the decree, not that he considered and excluded the rule.

But it was contended on behalf of the respondent that, on the merits and apart from any question arising upon the construction of the original decree, there is no rule applicable to this case limiting the interest recoverable to a sum equal to the principal. This involves two questions; first, whether the rule of Damdupat, whatever it be, does or does not apply in this Court to contracts between Hindus; secondly, if it does, whether it has the effect of limiting the amount of interest recoverable in this case.

It is well settled that in this province, outside the Presidency town no rule limiting the amount of interest to a sum equal to the principal prevails. This has been held in Deen Dyal Paramanick v. Koylash Chunder Pal Chowdhry (1); Surjiya Narain Singh v. Sirdhary Lall (2); Het Narain Singh v. Ram Dein Singh (3) and in other cases, and it is no doubt an anomaly that there should be one rule in Calcutta on such a point and another outside it. But a comparison of the history of the law of Contracts in the Presidency town with that in other parts shows, we think, that the difference does exist. The Statute 21, George III, c. 70, s. 17, required the Supreme Court of Fort William to determine "all [788] matters of contract and dealing between party and party in the case of Gentus by the laws and usages of Gentus." There was never any such legislative provision in force in the rest of the province. The result was that, as between Hindus, the Supreme Court was expressly bound to give effect to the Hindu law of contracts, and the Hindu law of contracts included the law of Damdupat. The High Court by its first charter was required

---

(1) 1 C. 92.
(2) 9 C. 825.
(3) 9 C. 871.
to administer the same law as the Supreme Court, and the second charter continues the same law as was in force under the first. It appears to follow of necessity that the law of Damdupat is in force in this Court between Hindus, unless there has been some legislative enactment inconsistent with it.

The only Act cited said to be inconsistent with it, and therefore to overrule it, is the Act for the repeal of the Usury Laws (XXVIII of 1855). But we think there is nothing in that Act (which deals exclusively with the rate of interest which may be allowed) inconsistent with the rule now in question. And the authorities are unanimous in favour of that view. To this effect are the decisions of Sausse, C.J., and Forbes and Newton, J.J., in Dhoneu Jagannath v. Narain Ramchandra (1); of Couch, C.J., and Newton, J., in Khusal Chand Lall Chand v. Ibrahim Fakir (2); of the learned Judges in Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand (3); of Couch, C.J., and Westropp, J., in Hakima Manji v. Maman Ayab Haji (4). The same law was laid down by Westropp, C.J., and Namabhai Haridas, J., in Pava Naqaji v. Govind Ramji (5), and re-affirmed by Westropp, C.J., and Melvill, J.; in Ram Chandra Mankeshwar v. Bhimrao Raviji (6), and by Westropp, C.J., and Green, J., in Ganpat Pandurang v. Adarji Dadabhai (7). In this Court the authorities lead to the same result. In Ram Lall Mookerjee v. Haran Chandra Dhar (8), Peacock, C.J., went even further, and held that Act XXVIII of 1855 did not effect the rules of the Hindu law relating directly to the rate of interest. The correctness of this view carried to its full extent was questioned by Phear, J., in [789] Mia Khan v. Bibi Bibijan (9), but that learned Judge fully approved of the Bombay decisions; and the same rule was followed in Ram Connoy Audicarry v. Johur Lall Dutt (10). The result is that, in our opinion, the rule in question does in this Court apply to contracts between Hindus.

The question remains whether the effect of the rule is to preclude the defendants from claiming the full amount of interest in this case. The statement of the rule in the first of the Bombay cases already referred to has generally been accepted as correct. "The rule of Hindu law is simply this, that no greater arrear of interest can be recovered at any one time than what will amount to the principal sum." But on behalf of the respondent it was argued that the nature of the doctrine has been totally misunderstood, the main contentions being, first, that the rule of Damdupat was only a moral precept and not a rule of law at all, and, secondly, that it applied only to interest prescribed by law in the absence of agreement and not to stipulated interest. The primary source of our knowledge on the subject is, of course, the text of Manu and the other original authorities. The texts are collected in Colebrooke's Digest, Book I, c. 2; and the works from which they are taken are now for the most part easily accessible to English readers. It was not contended that these texts taken by themselves suggest any restriction or qualification such as that proposed. But it was contended that the opinions of the commentators collected by Jagannatha and the views expressed by that learned writer himself throw an entirely different light upon the matter. The main question under consideration in the passages referred to is the rate of interest which might lawfully be charged, and whether there was any restriction in the case of stipulated interest; in connection with this the rule as to interest not exceeding the principal is also discussed. Mr. O’Kincaley showed very clearly that some at least of the commentators were disposed to restrict that rule or get rid of it altogether as a rule of law; but it is equally clear that they are far from being agreed as to the principle upon which, or the extent to which, it could be limited, some leaning to the view of a mere moral precept, others to confine it [790] to legal as distinguished from stipulated interest. And though Jagannatha does, if we rightly understand him, express his own opinion upon the main question under discussion whether there was any restriction of rate in the case of stipulated interest, we cannot find that he does so with regard to Damdupat. Harington (Analysis, Part I, s. 3, p. 181) says with reference to this discussion: “A considerable difference of construction has been given by the commentators upon the Hindu law of contracts to the texts which respect the limitation of interest and the invalidity or immorality only of usurious loans and engagements.” And Sir Thomas Strange (Hindu Law, Vol. I, p. 298) says: “Involved in apparent contradiction the subject is considered by Jagannatha to be intricate, nor has his Commentary always the effect of elucidating what is obscure or disentangling what is perplexed.” We agree with these remarks and cannot gather any distinct rule from this source. All the later authorities agree in understanding the rule of Damdupat as it has been laid down by the Bombay Court. Thus Sir Thomas Strange, in the place already referred to, so states it; and in the Appendix to Chapter XII he gives a case (p. 473, Edit. of 1830) to which are appended remarks by Colebrooke and Ellis, both of whom independently and without hesitation state the law to the same effect. Lastly, there is the long series of decisions in the Bombay High Court and this Court, from the whole of which we must dissent if we were to hold either that the rule of Damdupat is a mere moral precept or that it does not apply to stipulated interest. And that we are not prepared to do. The anomaly of the present state of the law, if it is to be removed, can only be removed by the Legislature.

One other agreement it is necessary to notice. It was contended, on the authority of Nathubhai Panachand v. Mulchand Hirachand (1), that the rule in question cannot equitably be applied in the case of a mortgagee in possession when the account is taken on both sides, the mortgagee being as such debited with the rents and profits. And it was said that this case fell within the rule there laid down. But the facts here are very different. The account of rents and profits was [791] not asked or ordered against the defendants as mortgagees in possession, but by way of mesne profits against wrong-doers; and accordingly they were limited to the time since the plaintiff’s purchase, which could not properly have been done if the account was on the other footing.

The result is that, in our opinion, the order of the learned Judge, so far as it allowed the plaintiff’s exception and varied the report of the Registrar, was wrong, and that the report should have been and should now be confirmed in its entirety.

RAMDOYAL (Plaintiff) v. JUNMENJOY COONDOO (Defendant).*

[1st April, 1887.]

A suit was brought for partnership accounts. Upon the objection of the defendant it was found that a necessary party defendant had been omitted, and such party was afterwards added as a defendant at a time when the suit as against him was barred:

_Held, that the whole suit was rightly dismissed._

[F., 7 C.L.J. 266 (267); 21 B. 154 (158); _Rel. on, 19 Ind. Cas. 963; Cited, 69 P.R. 1902; R., 25 C. 285 (288); 5 C.W.N. 304 (306); _D., 33 C. 613—3 C.L.J. 576 (582)=10 C.W.N. 551; 12 C.W.N 84=6 C.L.J. 558.]

RAMDOYAL brought a suit against Junmenjoy Coondoo on the 11th September, 1885, for the accounts of a partnership which had been dissolved on the 17th September 1882. The plaintiff alleged that he and the defendant had been carrying on business as gunny-bag merchants at Burra Bazaar in the town of Calcutta in co-partnership under the name and style of Junmenjoy Coondoo; that the defendant was a partner with capital and he (Ram Doyal) was the working or managing partner without capital, and in consideration of his service as such it was agreed that he should have a three annas share in the profits of the partnership business and get besides a certain khoraki or boarding allowance out of the said business. [792] Junmenjoy, while admitting in his written statement that a business of the kind described in the plaint had been carried on, denied partnership, and stated that under a written agreement (a translation of which was filed in Court) entered into between himself Ramdoyal and one Nittyanund Hazrah, since residing in the district of Burdwan, it was arranged that the plaintiff and Nittyanund should act as gomastahs, and in lieu of salary receive respectively a certain specified share of the profits. Upon this statement the defendant submitted that Nittyanund Hazrah was a necessary party, in whose absence the suit could not proceed. The case came on for disposal before Norris, J., on the 13th April 1886, when, on the application of the plaintiff’s advocate, Nittyanund Hazrah was added as a defendant. At the final hearing before Trevelyan, J., on the 22nd July 1887, it was contended on behalf of the original defendant (Junmenjoy) that, as under art. 106 of sch. II of the Limitation Act three years from the date of dissolution of partnership was the time within which the suit had to be brought, the suit was barred against Nittyanund, and inasmuch as Nittyanund was a necessary party, the suit was also barred against the other defendant. The Court relying upon the authority of _Ramsebuk v. Ram Lall Coondoo_ (1) dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed.

Mr. T. Apoor (with him Mr. Avetoom) for the appellant:—Ramdoyal was not a partner. The agreement entered into between the parties shows that he was a gomastah or servant—Contract Act, s. 242. There is nothing, under the circumstances, to prevent the suit from going on in the absence of Nittyanund.

Mr. R. Mittra, for the respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep, Wilson and Norris, JJ.) was delivered by

Wilson, J.—We think the view taken of this case by the learned Judge who heard it is correct. The plaint alleged a partnership entered into between the plaintiff and the original defendant, under which that defendant was to be the monied partner, the plaintiff was to be the managing partner, and the plaintiff was [793] to have a certain share in the profits; and the plaint went on to pray relief upon the footing of the partnership and in the manner usual in a partnership suit. The defendant denied the partnership, and said that the real relation between the parties was not that of partner and partner but of master and servant, that the plaintiff was a gomastah paid by a share of the profits, and that according to the long understood practice in this country (now embodied in the Contract Act) he was not a partner. The defendant also raised another objection: He said that there were three of them concerned in the matter, that the plaintiff was to have a share in the profits as remuneration for his service as gomastah, and another man, Nittyanund Hazrah, was to have a share also under the same agreement, the original defendant being proprietor of the business. The case came on for hearing, and the plaint applied to have that man, Nittyanund Hazrah, joined as a defendant in the suit, which was done. There was some discussion before us as to whether the plaint under the circumstances was bound by his suit as a partnership suit. It would certainly be an unusual thing to allow a plaintiff, who has alleged one state of facts, as against the defendant who has denied that case and alleged another state of facts, to turn round and ask to be allowed to carry on the suit and claim relief on the ground that the defendant's statement of facts was true and his own false. But supposing that the plaint in this suit could be allowed to do that and to maintain this suit on the footing that he was a gomastah entitled to remuneration for his services by receiving a portion of the profits, still it is clear that his suit, as originally framed, was defective. This is not a case of one contract between the original defendant and the plaint, as gomastah upon the terms of his receiving a share in the profits, and another contract with Nittyanund Hazrah, made separately, by which he was hired as a gomastah on the terms of his receiving a share of the profits. It is a case of three persons who in one document entered into an agreement, by which the business was to be carried on, the original defendant was to be the proprietor and the plaint and Nittyanund Hazrah were to be employed as gomastahs and by which, as between these three persons, it was agreed that the principal defendant as [794] proprietor was to have an 11\(\frac{3}{4}\) annas share, the plaint a 3-anna share, and Nittyanund Hazrah a 1\(\frac{3}{4}\) anna share. That being the state of things, the suit, as originally framed, was clearly defective, because, when there are three persons who, under one and the same agreement amongst themselves, are entitled to share in the proceeds of a fund which they hope will be brought into existence, it is obvious that all these three persons must be necessary parties to a suit, the object of which is to take an account necessary for the purpose of ascertaining the assets of the fund and dividing them. Then it appears that, by the time Nittyanund Hazrah was made a party to the suit, the suit, as against him, was barred.
Now it has been held more than once that, if a suit is brought by certain persons as plaintiffs, and they omit in the first instance to join with them as co-plaintiffs persons who are necessary parties, and these parties are afterwards added as plaintiffs at a time when for them the claim is time-barred, the whole suit must be dismissed. That was so held in the case of Ramsebuk v. Ham Lall Coondoo (1) and also Kali Das Keval Das v. Nattin Bhogran (2). And we can see no distinction in principle between the case of one who ought to have been originally a plaintiff and the case of one who ought to have been originally a defendant. We think therefore that the view taken by the learned Judge who heard the case is correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

ABDUL AZIZ KHAN (Plaintiff) v. AHMED ALI (Defendant)*

[15th April, 1887.]

Enhancement of rent, Suit for—Transferable tenure—Mutation of names—Tenant who has transferred his holding, Liability of.

The main object of a suit for enhancement is to have the contract between the landlord and tenant as regards the rate of rent re-adjusted.

In a suit for enhancement it was found that the defendant had, prior to institution, sold his holding, which by custom was transferable without the consent of the landlord to a third party. There had been no mutation of names, or payment of a nazur, or execution of a fresh lease; but the landlord had received rent from the third party and was fully aware of the transfer.

Held, that the connection of the defendant with the holding had come to an end, and the suit against him did not lie.

ABDUL AZIZ and others brought a suit against Ahmed Ali for recovery of rent in respect of a holding at an enhanced rate after service of notice. The Munsif, finding that the defendant had long before the institution of the suit sold the holding to one Abdul Karim, a third party, who had since paid the rent and was known by the plaintiff and his tahsilars to be the real tenant, held that Ahmed Ali was no longer liable for rent in respect of the holding, and dismissed the suit, but without costs, as the defendant had neglected to cause the transfer to be registered in the zemindar's serishla. On appeal the District Judge remanded the case under s. 566 of the Civil Procedure Code for the trial of this issue, namely, "whether by the custom of the locality where this land is situated, such holdings as defendant's, are transferable, and whether the landlord's consent is necessary to the validity of such transfers." The Munsif found that the ryoti holding, like that of the defendant, was transferable without the previous sanction of the zamindar; but the dakhilas were issued in the vendor’s name until mutation of names was effected in the landlord’s [796] serishta by payment of nazar and execution of a fresh lease. The lower appellate Court accepted the finding of the Munsif, and, being satisfied that the plaintiff had recognized “the transfer of the defendant’s ryoti to the purchaser,” dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the High Court, which was dismissed by McDonell, J. On appeal against that decision under s. 15 of the Letters Patent, Petheram, C.J., and Cunningham, J., referred to a Full Bench the following question: “Having regard to the facts found in this case, we refer the question to a Full Bench, whether in the case of a holding held under the custom found by the Munsif under the order of remand (by the District Judge), the vendor is released from liability for the rent before mutation of names has been effected, the nazar paid and a fresh lease executed, or before any or either of these things has been done.”

The case then came up before the Full Bench.

Baboo Rajendra Nath Bose, for the appellants.

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Mitter, Prinsep, Wilson, Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate after service of notice. The finding of the lower Courts is that the holding, in respect of which the enhanced rent is claimed had, before the institution of the present suit, been transferred by the defendant to a third party who is not a party to it, and that such transfer without the previous sanction of the plaintiff, the landlord, is valid.

The main object of a suit for enhancement is to have the contract between the landlord and tenant as regards the rate of rent re-adjusted. The law allows this re-adjustment in certain cases. In this case the plaintiff, as found by the lower Courts, was fully aware that the holding is now the property of a third party and not of the defendant. That being so, a suit for enhancement of rent will not lie against the defendant who has now no connection with the holding. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs of both hearings.

[797] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.
Before Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Norris.

BOLYE CHUNDER SEN (Defendant) v. LALMONI DASI
(Plaintiff).* [2nd May, 1887.]

Partition—Family dwelling-house—Partition wall—Open space of ground—Easement.

Upon partition of joint property in Calcutta by mutual conveyances, whether under the direction of a Court of law or otherwise, it is implied that the parties take their respective shares with easements of light and air as between themselves in accordance with the existing state of the premises.

* Original Civil Appeal No. 27 of 1886, against the decree of Mr. Justice Trevelyan, dated the 5th of April, 1886.
In a suit for the partition of a family dwelling-house, it was directed that the parties should take their respective shares by mutual conveyances with liberty to the plaintiff to raise a partition wall. The shares were allotted but no conveyances executed.

_Held_, that in equity the parties must be deemed to have taken as if under mutual conveyances, in so far as concerned easements of light and air.

[R., 26 C. 516 (521) = 3 C.W.N. 409.]

_Lalmoni Dasi_ brought a suit for the declaration of her right to the access and use of light and air through the openings, courtyards and verandahs on the east side of her house and premises No. 8/1, Gopikishen Pal’s Lane, in the town of Calcutta, and to have certain walls, which had been erected by Bolye Chunder Sen in his premises No. 8, Gopikishen Pal’s Lane, pulled down by reason of such walls blocking up the said openings, courtyards and verandahs. Various objections were raised by the defendant, Bolye Chunder Sen. It appeared on the trial that the premises Nos. 8/1 and 8 originally formed one family dwelling-house; that, upon a suit for partition by one Soshimukhi Dasi against Brojo Nath Pal, it was, among other things, ordered on the 14th March, 1871, that "the plaintiff and defendant do, at the request of either party and at the expense of the party requiring the same, execute mutual conveyances to each other of their respective shares, such conveyances to be settled by one of the Judges or the Registrar of this Court in case the parties differ about the same, and after the Commissioners shall have made such partition and returned the same;" and it was further ordered on the 19th of December, 1872, that "the plaintiff be at liberty to take exclusive [798] possession of such portions of the properties as have been allotted to her by the said Commissioners, and to raise partition walls." Lalmoni Dasi and Bolye Chunder Sen derived their title respectively from Brojo Nath Pal and Soshimukhi Dasi. The judgment of the Court of first instance (Trevelyan, J.) was materially as follows: "* * * As I said in the beginning of my judgment, the whole question turns upon the meaning of the order of the 19th day of December, 1872. There is, I think, no doubt that, apart from any special provision, the owners of a joint family dwelling house would, after partition, be entitled to so much light and air as would be necessary for the reasonable use and enjoyment of the premises allotted to them respectively. The question then is * * to what extent has the liberty given to Soshimukhi to erect a partition wall affected the plaintiff’s rights. It seems to me the liberty to erect a partition wall must be viewed differently in the case where the line of partition cuts a room in two, and where that line merely divides a courty-yard or open space. In the former case I think that a partition wall means a wall from floor to ceiling; a partition wall between two rooms means a wall which separates the one room from the other completely, and secures its privacy to each, thus making two rooms of the one room.
Where the line of partition divides a courtyard or open space, it is not, I think, so easy to determine what a partition wall means. On the best consideration I can give to it, I think that a partition wall, under these circumstances, means a wall not only high enough to demarcate the partitioned property, but high enough to secure either side from intrusion or annoyance. In fact such a wall as a man would build round his com-28
cuts the court-yards must be reduced to a height of six feet. The plaintiff must also be restrained from building the wall beyond six feet from the floor of that portion of the third story which was in existence at the time of the partition."

From this decision Bolye Chunder Sen appealed, and a memorandum of objections was put in on behalf of the plaintiff.

[799] Mr. Kennedy (with him Mr. Bonnerjee) for the appellant.—

There is no prescriptive right to light and air with regard to a family dwelling house; no such easement where property is joint. Here the partition took place under the direction of the Court. There can be no presumption as to a grant of easement. The case of a partition by act of parties is distinguishable. No conveyances were ever executed.

The following authorities were discussed: Wheeldon v. Burrows (1); Allen v. Taylor (2); Blanchard v. Bridges (3) Holland v. Worley (4); Scott v. Pope (5).

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. O'Kinealy), for the respondent, was not called upon.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep, Wilson and Norris, JJ.), so far as it is material to this report, was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Wilson, J.—In this case the plaintiff, as owner of the house No. 8/1, Gopikishen Pal's Lane, sued the defendant, the owner of adjoining premises, in respect of infringements, actual and threatened, of her alleged right to the free access of light and air, by the erection of a wall. The plaintiff claimed damages and an injunction. Of the written statement it is enough to say that, amongst other things, it denied the right of the plaintiff to the light and air claimed. The plaintiff's house and the defendant's were formerly one property, forming a family dwelling-house, No. 8, Gopikishen Pal's Lane. In 1871 the defendant's predecessor in title, who was entitled to a three-fourths share of the property, sued the plaintiff's predecessor in title, (he is also her husband), the owner of the other one fourth, in this Court for partition. On the 14th March 1871, a decree was made by which the shares were declared, partition was ordered, and a commission issued, with the other directions usual in partition decrees. The decree contains these words: "It is ordered that the plaintiff and defendant do, at the request of either party, and at the expense of the party requiring the same, execute mutual conveyances to each other of their respective shares, such conveyances to be settled by one of the Judges or the Registrar [800] of this Court in case the parties differ about the same. The Commissioners effected a partition and made their return. On the 19th December, 1872, an order was made by which the certificate of the Commissioners was confirmed, and it was "further ordered that the plaintiff be at liberty to take exclusive possession of such portions of the properties as have been allotted to her by the said Commissioners, and to raise partition walls." The parties took possession of their respective shares, and they and their successors in interest have so continued down to the date of the suit. No conveyances have been executed. The share allotted to the plaintiff's predecessor formed the western portion of the premises partitioned, and was covered with buildings. The share allotted to the defendant's predecessor, where it adjoined the other share, consisted partly of buildings in immediate contact with and forming one block with the buildings on the share of the plaintiff's predecessor, and partly of open courtyards. These old buildings have been pulled down; and the defendant was proceeding to erect a wall along the whole western edge of this land, the effect of which was, it has been found, to interfere materially with the access of light and air to the plaintiff's house. The case was heard before Trevelyan, J. The learned Judge refused to give the plaintiff any relief in respect of those portions of his premises, which were exposed by the demolition of the buildings on the defendant's land, in other words, he has left the defendant free to build on the old sites and to the old height; and so far there can, we think, be no doubt that he was right. With this exception he has enjoined the defendant from erecting anything to obstruct the plaintiff's light save by a wall of not more than six feet in height. Against this decree the defendant has appealed. No serious exception was taken to the details of the injunction ordered, if an injunction ought to issue at all, but two questions were raised: First, it was contended that, on the evidence in the case as it stands, the plaintiff had shown no title to the access of light and air as against the defendant; and, secondly, that the learned Judge had rejected evidence which ought to have been admitted. As to the first question it was contended that, although in the case of a sale or other transfer inter partes a [801] grant of the easement claimed by the plaintiff would be properly implied, no such right can be implied in the case of a partition by the Act of a Court of law. The question so suggested appears to us one of considerable difficulty; but it is not, we think, necessary to decide it in the present case. The defendant's predecessor in title entered upon the share allotted to her, on the strength of the original partition decree of the 14th March 1871, and the order of the 19th December, 1872. By the decree either party could insist upon mutual conveyances; she was, therefore, bound to execute a conveyance whenever required, and she could not in equity be allowed to deal with the land in such a way as would defeat any conveyance called for. And the present defendant who takes through her, and from the very nature of the case with full notice, is in no better position, so that, for the present purpose, the case is the same as if there had been conveyances. And the terms of the subsequent order very much strengthen the case. It expressly authorized the then plaintiff, the now defendant's predecessor, to "raise partition walls." That goes far to negative the right to raise any other obstruction; and we agree with the learned Judge in thinking that, when open spaces are spoken off, "partition walls" do not mean blocks of building, but such walls as are used for partitioning open spaces. The first objection to the decree therefore fails.

[The other contention as to the rejection of evidence was also decided against the appellant.]

MYLAPORE IYASAWMY VYAPOORY MOODLIAR (Plaintiff) v. YEO KAY AND OTHERS (Defendants). [14th June, 1887.]

Limitation Act, 1877, s. 19 and art. 140—Claim to share in immovable property under will—Acknowledgment of liability—Basis of decision of case.

The right to property left by will (assuming that the testator had power to dispose of it) falls into possession by Hindu law, immediately upon the death of the testator; and, therefore, a claim, making title to shares in immovable property under a will, is barred by time, unless brought within twelve years from the date of the testator's death under art. 140 of Act XV of 1877. sch. II.

Acknowledgment of liability, in order to be within the meaning of s. 19 of the same Act, must be an acknowledgment of liability to the person who is seeking to recover possession, or some person through whom he claims.

The determination in a cause must be founded upon a case, either to be found in the pleadings, or involved in, or consistent with, the case thereby made. Eshen Chunder v. Shama Churn Bhutto, (1), referred to.

Appeal from a decree (24th June 1884) of the Recorder of Rangoon.

The suit of which this appeal arose was brought by the present appellant against the respondents to obtain a declaration that the appellant in his own right, also as executor of the will of M. I. Moorooogasum Moodliar, deceased, and as administrator of the estate of M. I. Krishnasami Moodliar, deceased, was entitled to the possession of two-fifths of one half of five separate lots of land and buildings situate in Rangoon, formerly belonging to Moorooogasum.

The question now raised was whether the suit was not barred by the law of limitation, Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 140. Moorooogasum died at Madras on the 19th September 1864, having by his will, dated the same day, appointed his five brothers, who all survived him, his executors, and having bequeathed to them, equally, his residuary estate in these words: "I will and bequeath that all the rest, residue, and remainder of all my property, moveable and immovable, of which I may die possessed (all being my sole earning, and none having come to me from my father's estate) be divided equally between my five brothers, share and share alike."

The five brothers of the testator were respectively named Coomarasami, Ramasami, Krishnasami, Soobroy, and Vyapoory, the last named being the present appellant.

Soobroy on the 25th August 1865, and Ramasami on the 7th June 1866, obtained probate of the will from the High Court of Madras; and on the 21st October 1870, the Recorder of Rangoon [803] granted to Ramasami letters of administration with the will annexed. On the 4th January 1873, Ramasami died in Madras. In 1882 administration, with the will annexed, of the property and credits of Moorooogasum was granted by the Recorder of Rangoon to Vyapoory, the present appellant. None of the other brothers ever took out administration in Rangoon to the estate of Moorooogasum, and no distribution of the respective shares given to the brothers under the will was made. In fact, the whole of the five lots of land and buildings had been, along with other lands, in the year 1869, mortgaged by Ramasami to Mr. Cephas Bennet, a resident in Rangoon, in pursuance of a prior equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds, in favour of the latter, made by Ramasami. To this it was said that Moorooogasum had consented, he having been surety for the mortgage debt.

(1) 11 M. I. A. 7.

Bennet also in 1870 obtained a decree (19th December, 1870) against Ramasami for the mortgage debt, amounting to Rs. 35,288; and in execution brought to sale the right, title, and interest of Ramasami in the lots above mentioned, purchasing the same himself at the auction, having obtained leave to bid. Afterwards (2nd April 1874) Bennet, as the duly empowered agent of Soobroy and Coomarasami, sold and conveyed the half share in the same lots to Bee Moh Chan and Company, and others, who afterwards assigned to certain of the defendants in this suit.

Kristnasami died at Madras on 21st September 1882, Vyapoory (also called Mylapore) the plaintiff in this suit, obtaining administration of his estate. The plaint which was filed on 12th September, 1888, admitted that the shares of Ramasami, of Soobroy, and of Coomarasami, might have been validly transferred, but claimed the remaining two-fifths. The defence was the transfer above stated, with the assignments from the firms, which had purchased, to some of the defendants who had transferred part of the purchased lots to others of the defendants; all of whom, however, relied, on the law of limitation in Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 140.

Issues were settled, of which the principal raised the question of limitation, and of the validity of the defendants' title, either absolutely, or as purchasers for value, without notice. The [804] Recorder of Rangoon (Mr. W. F. Agnew) dismissed the suit, with costs, as barred under art. 140, sch. II, Act XV of 1877, stating his reasons as follows:

"It is not necessary for me to trace the steps by which the property sought to be recovered came into the hands of the defendants; the first question is whether the suit is not barred by limitation. For the defendants it is argued that the case is governed either by art. 140 or art. 144 of the second Schedule to the Limitation Act, and that, whichever may be held to apply, the suit is barred. Article 140 prescribes a period of twelve years for a suit by a devisee for possession of immovable property, to be computed from the time 'when his estate falls into possession.' That must begin from the time when the devisee became entitled to possession of the property, which would be not later than one year after the death of the testator. Article 144 prescribes a period of twelve years for a suit 'for possession of immovable property or any interest therein not hereby otherwise specially provided to be computed from the time 'when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff.' The possession of Mr. Bennet became adverse to the plaintiff at all events on the 24th of April 1871, when he obtained his certificate of purchase from this Court."
"The plaintiff has not shown any reason for his delay, and it is proved that he was in Rangoon from January 1870 to August 1872, and he must have been cognizant of the execution proceedings, for he says that he lived with his brothers, but whether he was cognizant or not is, in my opinion, immaterial, for I consider that his suit is barred under art. 140 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act.

Mr. Porter has argued that s. 10 of the Act applies, and that the plaintiff’s co-executors were trustees for him. The devise was to the testator’s five brothers, to be divided equally between them, share and share alike. These words created a tenancy in common between the brothers (Jarman, 4th edition, 257). I am not aware of any authority for holding that tenants in common are trustees for each other. The fact that the testator’s brothers were also appointed his [805] executors does not, in my opinion, make them trustees for a specific purpose within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act. The suit must therefore be dismissed with costs."

On this appeal Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. Laing, appeared for the appellant.

Mr. J. Rigby, Q.C., and Mr. A. Young, for the respondents.

For the appellant it was argued that the claim was not barred by limitation. Bennet’s possession from February, 1871, till April, 1874, was not adverse to any one except perhaps Ramasami, through whom no title could be made except in respect of his own share by those who relied on the transfer from Bennet. Ramasami may have had possession; but, if so, it was, as regards the four brothers, only as agent in respect of their interests as tenants in common, and as distinguished from his own one-fifth. Only the interests of the brothers who assented to the sale could pass to Bennet, who was aware of other persons having interests in the property, and, on behalf of such others, he became only agent, holding the property. Both the conveyances of 1874 were acknowledgments that Bennet’s only right, or title, was as agent of Soobroy, who could not dispose of the whole estate. Reference was made to Umran-nissa v. Mahammad Yar Khan (1).

Counsel for the respondent were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—The learned judge in this case has decided that the suit was barred by limitation under the 140th or the 144th article of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877. He stated that, in his opinion, it is barred by art. 140. Their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Judge was right in the conclusion that the suit was barred by art. 140 of that Act.

In order to ascertain whether the suit was so barred or not, we must look to what was the nature of the case which the plaintiff made.

By the Act of 1882, which was the Civil Procedure Code in force when the suit was commenced, the plaintiff must show [806] the grounds, &c., the cause of action, and when that cause of action accrued. In the case of Eshen Chunder v. Shama Churn Bhutto (2), Lord Westbury, who delivered the judgment, said: "This case is one of considerable importance, and their Lordships desire to take advantage of it for the purpose of pointing out the absolute necessity that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case, either to be found in the pleadings, or, involved in, or consistent with, the case thereby made."

(1) 3 A. 24.
(2) 11 M. I. A. 7.

Now what is the case made out by the pleadings, or what is involved in, or consistent with, the claim which is thereby made? The plaintiff alleges in the plaint that Moorooogasum died on the 19th September 1864, having made a will, the 6th paragraph of which was in the words following: "All the rest, residue, and remainder of all my property, moveable and immoveable, of which I may die possessed (all being my own sole earning, and none having come to me from my father's estate) be divided equally between my five brothers, share and share alike." The five brothers included Vyapoory, the present plaintiff, and Kristnasami, another brother, to whose interest in the estate Vyapoory, the plaintiff, claims to have succeeded; he therefore claims to have two of the five shares devised by Moorooogasum. He rests his title upon Moorooogasum's will, and claims that the will gave him a right to recover possession, and to have a declaration of his right to possession of two-fifths of the estate, and also to have a partition. He does not allege in distinct terms that Moorooogasum had an estate in this property, but it is to be implied from, or rather is involved in, the statement which he made in the plaint. At paragraph 16 of the plaint he says: "Coomarasami and Soobroy"—those are two of the other brothers—"had no right, power, or authority to sell more than their respective one-fifth shares in the land, set out in paragraph 7 of this plaint." But when he says that they had no right to sell more than their two shares, it implies that they had the right to sell those two. Then he says, in paragraph 18, "that there remains undivided the respective one-fifth shares or interests of Vyapoory"—that is the plaintiff [807] himself—and Kristnasami, deceased, in each of the several pieces or parcels of land set out in paragraph 7 of this plaint." He could not have been entitled, nor could his brother have been entitled, to one-fifth, unless the testator had the property to dispose of; and then, having made out, or professed to make out, a title under the will, he declares that he is entitled to possession of those two-fifths, and he asks to have it declared that he is entitled to them, and to have a partition of the estate.

Now when did his title arise, assuming that the testator had the estate, and had the power to devise it? It arose on the death of Moorooogasum on 19th of September, 1864. The Judge in his judgment puts it one year later, and says he must at least have had a title at the expiration of one year from the death of the testator. It appears to their Lordships that according to the Hindu law he became entitled to his one-fifth on the death of the testator.

The words of art. 140 are: "Suit by a remainder man, or a reversioner (other than a landlord), or devisee for possession of immoveable property"—which this is: he is claiming as a devisee of immoveable property. Then it says the suit is to be brought within 12 years from the time when his estate falls into possession. Now, from 1864, he was entitled to possession, but Mr. Bennet had the possession; and it is said now that Mr. Bennet had not an adverse possession, because he was holding as in the nature of a mortgagee, and that the testator was not absolutely entitled to the estate. There is nothing, however, in the plaint from which anything of that kind can be inferred. It is to be inferred that the case rests upon the title of the testator to devise the estate, and upon that title only.
The issues are: "(1) Does the plaintiff disclose a good or sufficient cause against the defendants, or any or either of them?" It does not strictly show a good cause of action, for there is no allegation that the testator was entitled; but whatever cause of action does show is a cause of action derived from the will of the testator and from the death of the testator, and the title accrued at that time. Then comes the [808] issue No. 2: "Is the plaintiff's claim, or any portion thereof, barred by limitation?" Now, if his title accrued in 1864, then it is clear that the judgment of the learned Judge was correct, and that the suit, which was not brought till the 12th September 1883, is barred.

Then it was contended that by virtue of s. 19 of the Limitation Act an admission had been made which gave a further period from which the right of bringing the action was to be dated. Section 19 is this: "If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing, signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed." But what liability does this mean? It must mean a liability to the person who is seeking to recover possession, or some person through whom he claims. Was there any admission made in this case by Mr. Bennet at any time, or by any of the defendants? The admission is said to have been made by Mr. Bennet in the conveyance which was executed in 1874. It is contended that in that conveyance Mr. Bennet admitted that he was liable in respect of the property. The only admission is that he was acting as agent for one of the executors in selling the estate. He was selling the estate for the purpose of getting paid out of the proceeds of the sale. He does not admit that he was liable to be turned out of possession, or that any one had a right of possession as against him, nor does he make any admission at all to the plaintiff or to any one though whom he claims. Under those circumstances the clause does not apply. No liability has been admitted to take the case out of the statute of limitations; and under those circumstances art. 140 must prevail, and the decision of the learned Judge was correct upon that point.

Under these circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise [809] Her Majesty to affirm the decision of the Court below, and to dismiss the appeal. The appellant must pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

[23rd May, 1887.]

Held (Mitter and Norris, JJ., dissenting).—There is no general rule of equity to the effect that whoever, having an interest in an estate, makes a payment in order to save the estate obtains a charge on the estate, and, therefore, in the absence of a statutory enactment, a co-sharer who has paid the whole revenue and thus saved the estate does not, by reason of such payment, acquire a charge on the share of his defaulting co-sharer.

MOZAFFER HOSAIN SHAHA, Hujjatulla Shaha and Kamaruddin Shaha were co-proprietors of Kismut Pargana Jahangirpur with [810] Madhusudan Chowdhry, Hara Chunder Chowdhry, Shibendra Chowdhry, and a number of others. The Chowdhrys having failed to pay into the Collectorate the Government revenue in respect of the said mahal on account of the kists or installments falling due on the 28th June and 6th October 1884, and 12th January 1885, Mozaffer Hosain, Hujjatulla, and Kamaruddin, in order to protect their own rights in the estate, deposited the same in certain proportions by separate chalans, and thereby saved the mahal from sale. On the 4th May 1885, the shares of Madhusudan, Hara Chunder, and Shibendra were sold by auction in satisfaction of a decree for money contributed towards the payment of previous installments, and purchased by KINU Ram Das. Mozaffer Hosain, Hujjatulla, and Kamaruddin thereupon brought a suit, each of them separately, against the three Chowdhrys, Madhusudan, Hara Chunder, and Shibendra, and KINU Ram, the auction-purchaser, for a declaration that the shares of the defendants (Chowdhrys) in the mahal were liable, as if under a mortgage lien, for the satisfaction of the amount contributed towards the Government revenue, and prayed that the debt might be realized by the sale of the said shares. Of the defendants, Kinu Ram Das alone entered appearance. The two issues of law raised in the case were: (1) Whether fractional contribution of Government revenue can create any charge on the shares for which revenue was paid? (2) Whether such charge, if created, is extinguished by Kinu Ram’s purchasing the shares in satisfaction of a prior charge of revenue; and whether Kinu Ram purchased such shares void of all encumbrances? On the first issue, it was argued on behalf of Kinu Ram that ‘the fractional payment made by each of the plaintiffs did not save the estate from sale, and in order to create a charge on the estate it must be shown that the payment saved and benefited the estate—Nobin Chunder Roy v. Rup Lal Das (1).’ It was further argued that, if the charge was declared at all, the Court should first pass a personal decree against the Chowdhry defendants, subject to the condition that, if the money decreed could not be levied from them personally, then it must be levied from their shares of the estate for which the revenue was contributed. [811] The Subordinate Judge, however, found that the fractional payment made by each of the plaintiffs went to save the estate as much as the aggregate amount, and was of opinion that Nobin Chunder Roy v. Rup Lal Das (1) rather supported the case of the plaintiffs and entitled them to look for the recovery of the contribution money from the estate, even if such estate had passed into the hands of a third party after payment of the contribution money. He also relied upon the provision of ss. 88, 89 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. It was argued on the second issue that, when the shares were once sold to Kinu Ram Das in satisfaction of a prior charge, that is, a charge created by payment of Government revenue which fell due prior to the disputed kists of the present case, they could not be re-sold on account of any subsequent charge that might have been created by the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge was substantially of opinion that ‘Government revenue is always a first or paramount charge on the property for which revenue is payable, whether it be paid for the first kist, second kist or third kist of revenue. * * * Revenue, whether for first, second or third kist, is always a first or paramount charge. * * * * It is an equitable principle the case-law has decided that, if by the payment of Government revenue the estate is saved and protected from sale, the person who is the owner of the estate, or who afterwards becomes the owner of the estate, and is benefited by the protection, cannot plead that the money paid to effect that protection ought not to be a charge on the things protected.’ The Subordinate Judge decreed the suits. On appeal, the decrees were affirmed by the District Judge.

Kinu Ram Das appealed to the High Court.

The Advocate-General (with him Baboo Jasoda Nand Pramanick), for the appellant.

Baboo Srinath Doss and Baboo Gurudas Banerjee, for the respondents.

The Court (Wilson and O’Kinealy, J.J.) referred the cases to a Full Bench with the following observations:

(1) 9 C. 377.
The question raised in these appeals may be shortly stated thus: [812] Where one of two co-sharers in a revenue-paying estate pays the whole revenue in order to save, and so does save the estate, is he entitled to a charge upon the share of his co-sharer to the extent of the latter's share of the revenue as against a purchaser. No such charge is given by any express statutory enactment. The question must, therefore, be decided on general principles of law. In Enayet Hossein v. Muddunmoonee Shahooon (1), Markby and Mitter, JJ., decided in favour of such a charge on general principles of equity. But that decision was based to a great extent upon a dictum of the Privy Council in Nogenderchunder Ghose v. Kamini Dasi (2), and it appears to us questionable whether that dictum was intended to apply to any case except that of payment by a mortgagee. In Nobin Chunder Roy v. Rup Lall Das (3), McDONELL and FIELD, JJ., expressly followed the earlier decision. And the same view seems to have been taken by Mitter and Maclean, JJ., in Ram Dut Singh v. Horakh Narain Singh (4). On the other hand, in Krish Mohinee Dasi v. Kaliproseno Ghose (5), Garth, C.J., and Pontifex, J., expressed great doubt as to the existence of any such charge as that—contended for; and intimated that, had it been necessary to decide the point in that case, they would have referred it to a Full Bench. We share the doubts expressed in the last-mentioned case. We do not see how the charge in question can be upheld, unless there be some general rule of equity by which an outlay properly incurred by one co-sharer upon the common property is charged in rateable proportion upon the share of his co-owner. English Courts of Equity do not seem to act upon such a rule—Ex parte Young (6); Kay v. Johnston (7). And except so far as the cases above referred to support it, we are not aware that such a doctrine has been established in India. We refer to a Full Bench the question stated at the beginning of this order of reference.

On the hearing before the Full Bench—

[813] The Advocate-General (with him Baboo Jasoda Nund Pramanick), for the appellant.—There is no principle of equity which gives the lien. A co-sharer upon payment of the whole revenue becomes entitled to contribution, which is a personal liability, and does not extend to a charge on the estate. On reference to s. 9, Act I of 1845, it appears that the Legislature did not declare any lien in a kindred case. In the corresponding section in the later Act, namely, Act XI of 1859, lien is for the first time declared by an additional clause in favour of a mortgagee who may have paid the revenue in order to protect the estate. The Legislature did not think there was a lien in any other case, or it would have so declared in express terms. The addition of the last clause in s. 9 clearly shows the intention of the Legislature to confine the principle to the case of the mortgagee alone, or why declare the law in part and leave out the rest. The principle of equity, relied upon in Enayet Hossein v. Muddunmoonee Shahooon (1), is founded upon a dictum of the Privy Council in Nogenderchunder Ghose v. Kamini Dasi (2). That was a different case, and the dictum of their Lordships has no application to a case like that of a co-sharer. The principle of equity contended for would be conducive to the greatest mischief if the if the co-sharer who paid the revenue came in after a future sale of the estate—Coote on Mortgage, 420. No lien belongs to a tenant in common against the share of the co-tenant. [MITTER, J.—This is a peculiar payment by which the estate is saved, and it has been held that even the theory of a previous request is not necessary to render the defaulting co-sharer liable.] The two things are very different—the mortgagees’ case and the co-sharers’ case. [MITTER, J.—Before the Act of 1845 there was no law as to contribution.] The principle of contribution is a recognized principle of equity. The doctrine of salvage has no application to a case like this. The following authorities were discussed: Gobind Persaud Pandit v. Soonduri Kunwar Debia (1); Fagan v. Sreekomtee Dassec (2); Nagenderchunder Ghose v. Kamini Dasi (3) Kristo Mohini Dasi v. Kali [814] Prosonno Ghose (4); Kay v. Johnston (5), Ex parte Young (6).

Baboo Srinath Dass (with him Baboo Guru Das Banerji), for the respondents:—Government revenue is the first charge on an estate. Whoever pays the Government revenue pays for the estate and not for any particular person, and thus acquires a lien on the estate. Section 9 of the Sale Act, it is true, speaks of a personal liability; but there is nothing to show that that is the whole remedy intended. For the principle upon which a co-sharer becomes entitled—see Rambux Chittango v. Madhusudan Pal (7). [WILSON, J.—Can you show any authority that any person interested in the estate, who has made any payment by which he has saved the estate, has a lien?]

Baboo Guru Das Banerji followed:—The doctrine upon which we rely is supported by reason and analogy as well as by authority. There is no binding authority to the contrary, nor any statute, and the decided cases are in favour of the doctrine. [WILSON, J.—Is there no hardship on the purchaser?] The purchaser ought to be bound even without notice. [WILSON, J.—He must go back for 12 years.] Yes, but there is no hardship; the principle protects the co-sharer on the one hand and does harm to no one. A bailee is allowed his lien; for his labour must be remunerated. Compare also other cases of lien: the partner’s lien, Coote on Mortgage, 615; Lindley on Partnership, 3rd Ed., 70. Consider the nature of the lien which a puisne encumbrancer has—Gokaldas v. Purnmal Das (8). The under-tenants’ lien is explained in s. 13, cl. 4, Reg. 8 of 1819. See, also Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 62. The same principle is maintained in the Bengal Tenancy Act—s. 171 of that Act. See Nogenderchunder Ghose v. Kamini Dasi (9); Doddington v. Hallet (10); Featherstone v. Mitchell (11); Hamilton v. Denny (12). [MITTER, J.—In re Leslie (13) is somewhat against you.] Ram [815] Dut Singh v. Horak Narain Sing (14); Nobin Chunder Roy v. Rup Lall Das (15). The authority of Enayet Hossein v. Muddunmoonee-Shahoon is not shaken by Kristo Mohini Dasi v. Kali prono Ghana (4). The latter case overlooks the fact that one co-sharer has an interest in the land of the other co-sharer.

The Advocate-General in reply.—When a puisne mortgagee pays off a prior mortgagee he must make a declaration that he wants to keep it up. The case of a co-tenant is different from that of a co-partner. As to lien, see also Moran v. Mittu Bibe (16).

The judgments of the Full Bench were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

MITTER, J.—After carefully considering the arguments addressed to us in this case, I retain the opinion which I expressed in Enayet Hossein alias Dhunnoo Mea v. Muddunmoonee Shahooon (1). In the majority of cases as observed in that decision, a contrary view would result in injustice. Generally a co-sharer defaults to pay his quota of Government revenue when he is in insolvent circumstances. In these cases a mere personal decree against the defaulting co-sharer would be useless. On the other hand, if the principle laid down in that case be adopted, I cannot conceive of any instance in which injustice is likely to be done to any party. In cases not governed by any particular legislative enactment, Courts in this country are directed by the Legislature to act according to justice, equity and good conscience. It seems to me that if in this case we give effect to a principle which prevents injustice in many cases and in no conceivable case operates unjustly, which has been acted upon for more than 12 years and which had been adopted by the Legislature in cognate subjects, we shall be strictly following the direction of the Legislature referred to above. In Enayet Hossein v. Muddunmoonee Shahooon (1), Mr. Justice Markby and myself to a great extent relied upon a dictum of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Kamini Dasi (2). It has been suggested that that dictum was intended to be applicable to payment of Government revenue by a mortgagee only. It is true that in that particular case the payment of revenue was made by a mortgagee, but it seems to me that the dictum was laid down in terms wide enough to include any person who is interested in making it. If it was intended to be applicable to payment of Government revenue by a mortgagee only, I imagine it was also intended not to give to the mortgagee in respect of this payment any right superior to that which he has under the mortgage. Thus if a second mortgagee makes the payment, he would not be entitled to priority over the first mortgagee in respect of such payment. But that that was not intended is clear from the express language of the dictum. It says: "Considering that the payment of the revenue by the mortgagee will prevent the taluk from being sold, their Lordships would, if that were the sole question for their consideration, find it difficult to come to any other conclusion than that the person who had such an interest in the taluk as entitled him to pay the revenue due of the Government and did actually pay it, was thereby entitled to a charge on the taluk as against all persons interested therein for the amount of the money so paid." According to this dictum, therefore, a person, who makes the payment under the circumstances mentioned there, is entitled to a charge for the money paid "as against all persons interested therein." It follows, therefore, that if a second mortgagee makes the payment, he would be entitled to a charge for the money paid by him as against the first mortgagee. This is exactly the principle upon which certain Irish cases, to which I shall refer hereafter, have been decided. Then, again, in describing the class of persons who would be entitled to a charge by payment of Government revenue, their Lordships used the expression: "That the person who had such an interest in the taluk as entitled him to pay the revenue, &c." This description is wide enough to include all persons interested in making the payment. The judgment of the Judicial Committee was delivered by Lord Romilly, then Master of the Rolls, and it has been said that his Lordship, in deciding cases in his own Court, has disapproved of the doctrine which it is contended has been laid down by the dictum in question. But no English case has been cited before us showing that he entertained a different opinion. It seems to me that in holding that a person who is interested in protecting the property by payment of Government revenue is entitled to a charge by making the payment "as against all persons interested therein," his Lordship has put it on the principle of a salvage lien. The Legislature in this country has also adopted this principle in the last two Bengal Tenancy Acts. It was for the first time recognized in Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 13, which enacts that money advanced by an under-tenant to protect the superior putni taluk from sale "shall be considered as a loan made to the proprietor of the tenure preserved from sale by such means (i.e. by payment), and the taluk so preserved shall be the security to the person or persons making the advance, who shall be considered to have a lien thereupon in the same manner as if the loan had been made upon mortgage." In the sale law of 1845, a personal remedy was given to persons who are not co-sharers, and who are interested to pay the revenue to protect their interest. In the sale law of 1859, the same provision was made with this addition, that in the case of a holder of a lien the amount paid by him "shall be added to the amount of the original lien." In the Rent. Act of 1860, s. 62 extends the provisions of s. 13 of Reg. VIII of 1819, cited above, to payments made by non-defaulting under-tenants to save the superior tenure from sale. The last enactment on this subject is contained in s. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, which provides that the amount paid in order to prevent the sale of a tenure or holding by a person having an interest in it, which interest would be voidable upon the sale thereof, "shall be deemed to be a debt bearing interest at 12 per centum per annum, and secured by a mortgage of the tenure or holding to him. It further provides that this "mortgage shall take priority of every other charge on the tenure or holding other than a charge for arrears of rent." It was contended before us that the sale laws of 1845 and 1859 giving only a personal remedy, the intention of the Legislature was that an owner of a fractional share of a zemindari should not be deemed to have acquired a charge upon the remaining share for saving the whole zemindari by the payment of Government revenue. Adopting this argument the Sudder Dewany Adawlut in Gobindpersaud Pundit v. Mussummat Soonduri Kunwar Debia (1), and the High Court in Faqun v. Sreemotee Dasi (2) decided against the existence of this lien. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Nogenderchunder Ghose v. Srimati Kamini Dasi. (3), cited above, was passed in appeal against this latter judgment of the High Court. Having regard to the dictum laid down by the Judicial Committee and extracted above, it is clear that their Lordships did not approve of this argument. They observe: "This section (i.e., the section in the sale law of 1845 bearing upon this subject) clearly authorizes the personal action, but it gives no remedy against the land which it leaves to the then existing law."

(2) 11 M.I.A. 258.

In passing I may remark that the two cases from the Sudder decisions of 1850 and 1852, referred to in the course of the argument, have no direct bearing upon the question under our consideration. This was the state of the case-law on the subject when Enayet Hossein v. Muddunmoonee Shahoon (1) was decided. The principle laid down in this decision was acted upon in Nobin Chunder Roy v. Rup Lal Dass (2), decided by McDonell and Field, JJ., in Ram Dutt Singh v. Horakh Narain Singh (3), decided by Maclean, J., and myself, in Mohesh Chunder Banerji v. Ram Prosunno Chowdhry (4), decided by Jackson and Tottenham, JJ., and in Deco Nundun Agha v. Deshputty Singh (5), decided by Jackson and White, J.J. At first sight the case of Mohesh Chunder Banerji v. Ram Prosunno Chowdhry (4) does not seem to touch the question under our consideration; but on a closer analysis of the judgment, it would appear that it not only affirms the principle in Enayet Hossein's case, but goes further, though in the same direction. The facts of that case are these. The plaintiffs, appellants, were the holders of a bond executed by defendants [819] Nos. 1 and 17, in which a putni taluk was hypothecated as a security for the loan. The taluk belonged to the defendants Nos. 1 to 40. On the 18th of May, 1875, i.e., on a date subsequent to the bond, the putnidars made default to pay rent to the zemindars. The taluk was advertised for sale under Reg. VIII of 1819. The plaintiffs, in order to protect their interests as mortgagees, paid the rent. In may, 1876, Messrs. Gisborne & Co., who were also made defendants, are alleged to have deposited a certain amount of money in order to save the taluk from being sold in execution of a decree in a suit brought by the zemindars against the putnidars. They were assignees of a dur-putni interest in the taluk. The plaintiffs sought to recover the sum advanced under the bond, as well as the sum advanced by them to protect the putni from sale. The lower Court decreed the claim covered by the bond against the defendants Nos. 1 to 4, 17, 18, 19 and 22, i.e., against persons who signed and made the bond, and those, who being co-parceners in the property mortgaged, by their presence and acquiescence were held to have taken part in the transaction. As to the rest of the claim, the lower Court held that the payments were voluntary, and that the plaintiffs acquired no charge upon the putni taluk in respect of them. In appeal to this Court by the plaintiffs it was contended on behalf of Messrs. Gisborne & Co., respondents, that the payment made by them being the last payment made for the purpose of saving the taluk, was entitled to priority on the principle applicable to bottomry bonds. This Court held that the decree regarding the claim covered by the bond was right; but the learned Judges were of opinion that the payments made by the plaintiffs to protect the sale of this land under the putni sale law were not voluntary payments, but consituted a good charge on this property, and it makes no difference for this purpose whether the suit upon the bond is followed by a decree as against all the defendants sued or against a part of them. They further directed an enquiry into the claim put forward by Messrs. Gisborne & Co. Now it seems to me that, in declaring the payments made to save the putni a charge upon the whole taluk and not only upon that portion which was found to [820] have been mortgaged, the learned Judges affirmed the principle laid down in Enayet Hossein's case, and in directing an enquiry into the claim of Messrs. Gisborne & Co., they went further in the same direction by indicating their inclination of opinion that the rights of the parties claiming such a charge should be regulated by the principle of salvage lien. Unless that was the inclination of their opinion, it would have been unnecessary to direct a further enquiry into the claim of Messrs. Gisborne & Co., because that claim consisted of payments made subsequent to those made by the plaintiffs. The learned Judges were evidently inclined to the opinion that the payment alleged to have been made by Messrs. Gisborne & Co., though made last in point of date, should be deemed to have priority over the earlier payments made by the plaintiffs. Referring to these cases, Sir Charles Sargent, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Birdwood, in Achut Ram Chundra Pal v. Hari Kanti (1), said (page 319): "We think the Calcutta decisions to which we have referred as recognizing a charge in those cases in which the assessment is paid by a part-owner to save the estate, are in accordance with equity, justice, and good conscience, and should be followed in this country." The only case in which a doubt has been expressed as to the existence of any such charge as that contented for is Kristo Mohinee Dasi v. Kaliprosano Ghose (2). But that case was decided upon other points which rendered it unnecessary to decide the question under our consideration. Mr. Justice Pontifex in delivering his judgment says: "Had it been necessary to deal with this question, we would certainly have referred it to a Full Bench, for we are not, as at present advised, at all satisfied as to the correctness of those decisions. They no doubt enunciate what at the first blush seems to be an attractive and catching equity, but it is difficult to see on what foundation such an equity could rest. Mr. Pugh has attempted to support the cases referred to, on the authority of certain Irish cases which are treated as insurance cases. It is sufficient with respect to those cases to say that there is a substantial difference between them and the present case. In all of those cases the person who claimed the lien was [821] previously interested in the estate which his payment went to save. But in the present case A had no interest in B's share of the share originally held by A and B, and it may be remarked that none of the Irish cases go the length of establishing a personal liability." If what is enunciated in those cases at the first blush seems to be an attractive and catching equity, then, unless it is shown that in some cases if it results in injustice, there would be no substantial ground for rejecting it after it has been acted upon in our Courts for several years. If it had been simply an attractive and catching equity, the Legislature in this country would not have adopted it in the recent Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. I shall show hereafter that three is no substantial difference between the Irish cases referred to above and the present case. In order to give rise to the equity it is not necessary that A should have an interest in B's share, but it would be sufficient, as held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Nogender Chunder Ghose's case, if A has such an interest in the taluk owned by him and B as would entitle A to pay the revenue due to the Government. The foundation for such an equity is, as I have already stated, that if it be not acted upon it would result in injustice in many cases, and its adoption does not operate unjustly in any conceivable case. This appears to me to be a sufficient foundation for it, especially when the Legislature in this country has approved of it and enunciated it in s. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. It would be only reasonable to suppose that if it were not well founded, it would not have been adopted by the Legislature in the analogous case of payment of rent.

In the reference order it is stated that English Courts of Equity do not seem to act upon such a rule as was laid down in Enayet Hossein's case, and in support of this proposition Ex parte Young (1), and Kay v. Johnston (2) have been referred to. In Ex parte Young the facts were these: Two of the part-owners of a ship became bankrupts and their share in the ship was sold by the assignee. Young for himself and other part-owners applied out of these sale-proceeds for a [822] liquidated amount due to them by the bankrupts, who were the managing owners, for freight and earnings after deducting expenses on an account being taken. This application was based upon the contention that the part-owners of a ship, though tenants in common, are entitled to consider it as a chattel used in the partnership and as liable to be dealt with as partnership effects. This contention was overruled. It seems to me that this decision does not touch the question under our consideration. In Kay v. Johnston (2), the plaintiff and the defendants were joint-owners and in joint-occupation of a house. The plaintiff advanced to the defendants some money which was spent in the house in decorations and improvements. It was decided that the plaintiff was not entitled to a lien on the share of the defendant, in respect of money which was originally his but was advanced to the defendant and laid out by him in the decorations and improvements of the house. This case is distinguishable from the present case. Here the plaintiff was not compelled to pay any money for the protection of his interest in the house. It was paid quite voluntarily to improve the house. Such voluntary payment could not reasonably be held to be a charge on the house. These are the only two cases referred to in the course of the argument in order to establish that English Courts of Equity have refused to act upon the principle laid down in Enayet Hossein's case. But it seems to me that they do not conflict with it. On the other hand, there are English and Irish cases which lend considerable support to the decision in Enayet Hossein's case. In Hibbert v. Coke (3) a tenant for life of real estates, under a Will spent money in finishing a mansion house which the testator had left unfinished. In a suit for administering the trusts of the Will, the Court directed an enquiry whether it was for the benefit of all parties interested that the mansion house should be finished, and said if it was found for the benefit of all parties interested that the mansion house should have been finished, and there was no personal estate applicable, the expense should be a charge upon the real estates. In Shearman v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Company (4), (823) it was held that the premiums paid by a mortgagor of a policy of insurance after he became bankrupt were in the nature of salvage money, and ought to be repaid with interest at Rs. 4 per cent. out of the money covered by the policy. In Kehoe v. Hales (5), an encumbrancer agreed to advance a sum of money to preserve the lands of K from eviction for non-payment of rent, and took a security by deed affecting the lands of K and other lands for the repayment of the money so to be advanced. She afterwards paid the rent and redeemed the lands of K. It was held that under the circumstances she was entitled, as against a person who was an encumbrancer on the lands at the time when they were redeemed.

to be paid the sum advanced in priority; and that as full effect could not be given to her security by deed she was remitted to her lien. In Featherstone v. Mitchell (1), the plaintiff, a decree-holder, while the property of the judgment-debtor was in the hands of a receiver for satisfaction of his decree, made advances for payment of the head-rent with the sanction of the Court and thereby saved the property. It was found for some reasons, which it is not material to state here, that he was not entitled as decree-holder to sell the property during the life-time of the debtor. It was held that as a salvager, though not as a decree-holder, he was entitled to sell the property and realize his salvage advances from the proceeds of the sale. In Locke v. Evans (2), a sub-tenant who had redeemed his landlord’s interest by advances for head-rent, filed a bill for the sale of that interest, and subsequently made further advances for the same purpose. It was held that these several advances constituted the first charge on the landlord’s interest in priority to incumbrances prior in date, and that the salvager was entitled to a sale for payment. In Hamilton v. Denny (3), a lease was granted to A and B as joint tenants. B’s moiety of the property had been settled by him. A payment of the renewal fines made by A was held to be a charge upon B’s settled share. In the matter of Tharp (4) Lord St. Leonards, referring to these [824] Irish cases, said: “In Ireland it is a very common equity to have as a prior charge to all other incumbrances what is called salvage money:—where a lease-hold estate, or an estate held for lives to which half a dozen people are entitled in succession, many of them being mortgagees according to certain priorities, the last man of all who is entitled after everybody being in possession redeems, I may say, the estate by paying the landlord, who otherwise would have recovered the estate and taken it from everybody; this payment is what is called salvage money. That is an established equity and a very proper equity. He that pays the salvage has a prior incumbrance to every other charge and interest, because, so far as any interest is left to anybody beyond a charge, it is acquired by that payment in the shape of redemption money.” Mr. Fisher, the author of a well-known treatise on the Law of Mortgage, says in his recent edition “that the lien is also allowed in respect of advances in the nature of salvage, namely, such as are made for the redemption of property for renewal fines or other payments made by way of salvage; and then whether he who pays the money fills the character of a trustee, joint tenant, tenant for life, or mortgagee or other creditor, and even though if he claimed to be a creditor his debt is disputed, he has a lien on the estate or interest of the person for whose benefit the payment was made in the property discharged,” paragraph 216. The learned author cites several cases in support of his opinion. He cites also a recent case, namely, Leslie v. French (5), which to a certain extent conflicts with his opinion. In this last mentioned case there is this peculiar feature, that the person who paid the money in the nature of salvage had a prospect of becoming the sole owner of the property saved by right of survivorship. Conceding, however, that this case is against the contention in favour of the existence of a lien, yet there is, as I have shown above, a strong array of authorities in support of it. On the whole I am of opinion that the question referred to us should be answered in the affirmative. I may notice, however, that there is another question which calls for decision in these cases, namely,

(1) 11 Ir. Eq. 35.  (2) 11 Ir. Eq. 52.  (3) 1 Ball and Beatty 190.  (4) 2 Sm. & Giff. 579.  (5) L. R. 23 Ch. Div. 564.
whether a bona fide purchaser for value without notice would be affected by a charge of this kind if it exists. I am inclined to [825] answer this question in the negative, but as it has not been referred to us, I do not think it necessary to say anything more upon it.

Norris, J.—I concur in the judgment just delivered by my brother Mitter. I express no opinion upon the question whether a bona fide purchaser for value without notice would be affected by a charge of this kind.

Wilson, J.—The question we are asked is, whether a part-owner of an estate who pays the whole Government revenue, thereby obtains a charge upon the share of his co-owner to the extent of the latter's share of the revenue. There is no statutory provision giving such a charge; if it exists, it must be by virtue of a broad principle of equity. It is clear, I think, that there can be no difference between the right of a part-owner and that of a tenure-holder, or other person having an interest in the estate; and it is clear, I think, that there can be no difference between one who pays Government revenue, and one who makes any other payment necessary to save the estate. And the contention before us has been in favour of the broad proposition that a payment of Government revenue, or any other payment necessary to save the estate, if made by one having an interest which would be sacrificed by the loss of the estate, gives a charge on the estate for the money paid. We have to say whether any such rule of equity is in force in this country.

In England it is, I think, now settled that no such general rule exists. A mortgagee, if he has to make payments necessary for the preservation of the mortgaged property, or even in some cases for its improvement, may add them to the amount covered by his security. There are some other special cases, such as that of trustees, in which a like lien may arise apart from contract. But even in the case of a mortgagee the right conceded by English law is a very different one from that now contended for: according to the English doctrine, as I understand it, the mortgagee of an undivided share of an estate who paid the whole revenue to save his lien might add the amount to his charge, thus increasing the extent of his lien on the share of his own mortgagor, whereas by the doctrine now contended for he also acquires a new lien upon the shares of the other part-owners; [826] and, except in the case of a mortgagee and the few other excepted cases, payments of the kind in question give rise to no charge. I do not think it necessary to examine the English authorities at large, for that has been done and the law explained by Fry, L.J., in In re Leslie (4), and by the Court of Appeal in Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co. (2). In the latter of these cases the doctrine of what has been called salvage lien, acted upon in some Irish cases, is I think authoritatively rejected.

In this country it has long been well settled that one part-owner, paying the whole Government revenue, may sue his co-owner for contribution, though the precise process of reasoning by which the conclusion should be arrived at was not always very satisfactorily stated. The matter was explained in the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court delivered by Peacock, C.J., Ram Buksh Chittangeo v. Modhusudan Pal Chowdhry, (3). But it was settled law in the Court of Sudder Dewany that the right of the part-owner in such a case was limited to a personal suit for contribution and carried no charge on the estate. In Andrew v. Harris (1), it was held that a part-owner of an estate could not recover from his co-owner arrears of Government revenue which accrued due before the latter acquired his share, whereas if the doctrine contended for were true, he could do so to the extent of the value of his share. In Sone Kolee Kunwar v. Sheik Ezhas Hossein (2) the same thing was again held. In Gobindpershad Pundit v. Soonduri Kunwar Debia (3), it was held that a tenure-holder who paid Government revenue had no preferential lien on the zemindari. In Manik Mulla Chowdhrai v. Parbuttee Chowdhrai (4), the same Court in explaining that the case before it fell under a different principle said: "We have always held that the decree for contribution which a proprietor in an ijmali estate obtains against his co-proprietors is a personal decree, in [827] the sense that it conveyed no lien on the estate binding against third parties, such as would have been derived from a decree under s. 13, Regulation VIII of 1819."

In 1867 the case of Nogendra Chunder Ghose v. Kamini Dasi (5) came before the Privy Council. The circumstances of the case were somewhat complicated, and it is unnecessary to examine them for the present purpose; it is enough to say that before the Judicial Committee it was argued that the appellant, the representative of a mortgagee, was entitled as against the respondent, the representative of the mortgagor, to a lien upon the mortgaged property for Government revenue paid to save the estate. What was actually decided was that, as the suit was framed, the question could not be raised in that suit. But at page 258 of the report we find it said: "Considering that the payment of the revenue by the mortgagee will prevent the taluk from being sold, their Lordships would, if that were the sole question for their consideration, find it difficult to come to any other conclusion than that the person who had such an interest in the taluk as entitled him to pay the revenue due to the Government, and did actually pay it, was thereby entitled to a charge on the taluk as against all persons interested therein for the amount of the money so paid." This dictum of the Privy Council has not the weight of a decision, but it is of course entitled to the most careful consideration. In applying it the first thing obviously is to ascertain the precise meaning of the observation. And upon the best consideration I have been able to give to the subject I do not think we should be justified in applying the dictum of their Lordships to any case except one similar to the case before them, which was the case of a mortgagee. I think so first, because of the context in which the words I have cited occur. The learned counsel, who argued the case for the appellant, according to the report, stated the question which he asked the Judicial Committee to answer in the affirmative as follows: "Whether the heir of the mortgagor paying arrears of Government revenue to save the estate from sale for arrears which the mortgagor's widow allowed it to fall into, is not entitled under Act No. I of 1845, s. 9, to a lien or charge on the [828] mortgaged estate." The dictum of their Lordships, which I have already cited, occurs on page 258 of the report. On the next page, and in almost the next sentence, it is said: "There were two courses open to her (the plaintiff); she might have instituted a suit to enforce the mortgage and to tack to the mortgage the amount of the revenue paid by her to save the estate, and to have the estate sold to pay that amount, or she might have proceeded under the ninth section of Act No. I of 1845." Thus an examination of the report of the case tends in my judgment to show that the observation of the Judicial Committee ought to be understood as applicable to a case such as the one before it, the case of the mortgagee. I am led to the same conclusion by another consideration. Two of the decisions of the Court of Sudder Dewany on the subject in question were cited before the Privy Council. And to my mind it seems improbable that their Lordships can have intended by a dictum, in a case argued only on one side, and without assigning any reasons, to overrule, or suggest the propriety of overruling, a current of decisions of the Court of Sudder Dewany, and introduce a rule of equity so broad as that in support of which their words have been cited.

Since that decision of the Privy Council this matter has on several occasions come before this Court. In Enayet Hossein v. Muddunmoonee Shahooon (1), one of the sharers of an estate sued the persons interested in the other shares and asked, amongst other things, to have it declared that Government revenue, which he had paid in respect of the defendants' shares and to save the estate, was a charge on these shares. Markby and Mitter, JJ., held that it was so charged. Those learned Judges based their decision mainly upon the dictum of the Judicial Committee which I have cited. I have already given my reasons for thinking that that dictum is not applicable to such a case. In Ram Dutt Singh v. Horakh Narain Singh (2), Mitter and Maclean, JJ., applied the same rule in a case in which the plaintiff, who held one mouzah of a revenue-paying estate under a ticca lease and by bai-bil-wafa, sued the owner of another mouzah of the same estate in [829] respect of revenue that he had paid. The decision carried the matter somewhat further than the former decision had done. But I have no hesitation in thinking that it did so rightly if the former decision was right, for I can see no distinction between the two cases. In Mohesh Chunder Bancerji v. Ram Prosuno Chowdhury (3), a similar charge was allowed, but that was the case of a mortgagee, and I cannot say positively from the report whether a lien was given on anything more than the subject-matter of the mortgage. In Kristo Mohini Dasi v. Kali Prosunno Ghose (4), Garth, C. J., and Pontifex, J. expressed strongly their dissent from the view taken by this Court on the matter in question, but it was not necessary in that case to arrive at any decision. In Nobin Chunder Roy v. Rup Lall Das (5), McDonell and Friel, JJ., followed the decision in Enayet Hossein v. Muddunmoonee Shahooon; the opinions of Garth, C. J., and Pontifex, J., in the case just mentioned, do not appear to have been referred to. In a very recent case in the Bombay High Court which has appeared since the argument of this case, Achut Ram Chunder Pai v. Hari Kamti (6), Sargent, C. J., and Birdwood, J., expressed their concurrence in the same view, but the point was not strictly necessary for the decision of the case, for on the facts the learned Judges held that no such rule as that in question found place.

Although there is no statutory enactment directly affecting the precise case now before us, which is that of a part-owner, there are some enactments which have, I think, a material bearing upon the existence of the general principle of equity contended for. In Regulation VIII of 1819, the Putni Regulation, s. 13, it is enacted that if a putni taluk is about to be sold for non-payment of the rent due to the zemindar, any of the talukdars of the second degree may pay the amount and stop the sale. And “if the person or persons making such a deposit in order to stay the sale of the superior tenure shall have already paid the whole of the rent due from himself or themselves, so that the amount lodged is an advance [830] from private funds, and not a disbursement on account of the said rent, such deposit shall be considered as a loan made to the proprietor of the tenure preserved from sale by such means, and the taluk so preserved shall be the security to the person or persons making the advance, who shall be considered to have a lien thereupon in the same manner as if the loan had been made upon mortgage; and he or they shall be entitled, on applying for the same, to obtain immediate possession of the tenure of the defaulter, in order to recover the amount so advanced from any profits belonging thereto.” Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 62, applied the provisions of the Regulation just cited to the case of a tenure about to be sold under that Act, and the payment of the rent by “any one interested in the protection of the under

The provisions of Act XI of 1859 have, I think, a much closer bearing upon the question before us. Section 9 of that Act says: “The Collector, or other officer as aforesaid, shall at any time before sunset of the latest day of payment determined according to s. 111 of this Act, receive as a deposit from any person, not being a proprietor of the estate or share of an estate in arrear, the amount of the arrear of revenue due, to be credited in payment of the arrear at sunset as aforesaid, unless before that time the arrear shall have have been paid by a defaulting proprietor of the estate. And in case the person so [831] depositing, whose money shall have been credited in the manner aforesaid, shall be a party in a suit pending before a Court of Justice for the possession of the estate or share from which the arrear is due or any part thereof, it shall be competent to the said Court to order the said party to be put into temporary possession of the said estate or share, or part thereof, subject to the rules in force for taking security in the cases of parties in civil suits. And if the person so depositing, whose money shall have been credited as aforesaid, shall prove before a competent Civil Court that the deposit was made in order to protect an interest of the said person, which would have been endangered or damaged by the sale, or which he believed in good faith would have been endangered or damaged by the sale, he shall be entitled to recover the amount of the deposit, with or without interest as the Court may determine, from the defaulting proprietor. And if the party so depositing, whose money shall have been credited as aforesaid, shall prove before such a Court that the deposit was necessary in order to protect any lien he had on the estate or share or part thereof, the amount so credited shall be added to the amount of the original lien." The corresponding s. 9 of Act 1 of 1845 was in similar terms, except that it did not contain the last clause about lien. It could not of course be contended that an enactment which purports expressly to confer a narrow and limited right, of necessity excludes a larger right, if the existence of the larger right is clearly established apart from the special enactment. But where the existence of a larger right is not clear but highly doubtful, I think the express creation of the narrower right tends strongly to negative the existence of the larger. In s. 9 the Legislature dealing with two classes of persons says that one of them shall have a personal right of suit, and that the other shall have a lien besides. I think the inference is that the Legislature intended the section to represent the law, and that seems to me to go far to negative the doctrine new contended for, by which both classes alike would have a lien. So too when in the same section it is said that if the holder of a lien pays the revenue, "the amount shall be added to the amount of the original lien." I think the inference is that [832] that is the lien which the Legislature intended him to have, a lien on the interest of his own mortgagor, not as now contended a general lien on all the interests in the estate. I have not overlooked the fact that the case of a part-owner is not dealt with in s. 9, nor, except in a particular instance, in s. 15, expressly dealt with at all. But the doctrine contended for is general.

The matter appears to me to stand thus: I think it is settled that according to the rules of equity in force in England, no such lien as that contended for exists. The same rule was consistently applied in the Court of Sudder Dewany. The recent cases in this country, in which a different view has been taken, have been based upon what seems to me a misapprehension of the meaning of the dictum of the Privy Council in the case referred to. And there are strong indications of an intention on the part of the Legislature inconsistent with such lien. We are not, under these circumstances, in my opinion, at liberty to treat the matter as if it were res integra, and, under the name of equity and good conscience, to adopt whatever rule we think most likely to work well. If we were, I should hesitate much before adopting such a rule as that pressed upon us. In the tangle of interests which an estate in this country presents—zemindari rights, tenures, and under-tenures without limit, every one of them commonly held in co-ownership and every share of every interest perhaps subject to mortgages—I cannot pretend to foresee what the consequences may be of broadly laying down such a doctrine as we are asked to do. I am disposed to think it a safer course to leave the Legislature to treat the matter as it may think fit, dealing, as heretofore, with each class of persons as occasion requires, and conferring such liens and subject to such restrictions as may be deemed desirable. I should answer the question referred to us in the negative.

Prinsep, J.—I concur with the judgment of Wilson, J.

Tottenham, J.—I now feel constrained to concur in the view expressed in Mr. Justice Wilson's Judgment. For, on the one hand, it is clear that the law of England does not recognize the lien which the plaintiff seeks to establish in this case; [833] and on the other hand, it was not recognized in this country until the principle was affirmed in Enayet.
Hossin’s case (1) and the decision in that case as well as those in which the principle has since been followed are based upon a dictum of the Judicial Committee in the ex parte appeal of Nogendra Chunder Ghose v. Kamini Das (2). I was myself a party to one of the judgments of this Court in which effect was given to that dictum—Mohesh Chunder Banerjee v. Ram Prosunno Chowdhry (3). But I am bound to say that the further consideration which I have now had to give to the question has satisfied me that I too readily accepted that dictum as implying more than I now think their Lordships can have intended. The case was that of a mortgagee, as was also that in which I was one of the Judges who affirmed the principle now in question. But I think now that it is at least extremely doubtful, for the reason stated by Mr. Justice Wilson, whether their Lordships intended to commit themselves in that case to the opinion that a co-owner of an estate, by the payment of the Government revenue which he is bound by law to pay, thereby acquires a lien upon the whole estate of his co-sharers for the amount paid, which he is by equity entitled to enforce against it after it has passed by sale to a stranger. The proposed equity is so attractive and has been so powerfully supported in Mr. Justice Mitter’s judgment, while it has also been approved by such authorities as the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad, that it is somewhat difficult to me to resist it; but nevertheless I cannot quite persuade myself of its soundness. I would, therefore, answer the question in the negative.

[834] CRIMINAL MOTION.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Pigot.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF BASUDEB SURA GOSAIN AND ANOTHER.

BASUDEB SURA GOSAIN V. NAZIRUDDIN.

[8th August, 1887.] Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 517—Order as to property as to which offence has been committed—Discharge of accused.

On the dismissal of a charge against certain persons of criminal misappropriation of an elephant, the Magistrate under s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code ordered the elephant to be given to the Executive Engineer of the district, holding that it was the property of Government: Held, that the dismissal of the charge being in fact a finding that no offence had been committed in respect of the elephant, the Magistrate’s order was illegal and must be set aside. In setting it aside the High Court held, however, following In re Annapurna Bai (4), that they had no power to order restitution of the elephant.

The petitioners were the Government lessees of certain Government meahals, and were charged under ss. 403 and 176 of the Penal Code, and s. 7 of Act VI of 1879, with the criminal misappropriation of an elephant. The Extra Assistant Commissioner of Tezapore, before whom they were brought, ordered their discharge, and made an order under s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code that the elephant should be made over to the Executive Engineer of the district, on the ground that it was the property of Government.

The petitioners now moved the High Court under s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code to set this order aside.

Baboo Ambica Churn Bose, for the petitioners.
Baboo Ram Churn Mitter, contra.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Pigot, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

Two persons were brought before the Extra Assistant Commissioner, a Magistrate of the first class at Tezapore, charged [835] with criminal misappropriation of an elephant. They were discharged. The Magistrate, however, under s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, ordered the elephant to be given to the Executive Engineer, Durrung, holding that it was the property of Government, and the elephant has consequently been made over to that officer by the police. -We are of opinion that the Magistrate was not competent to pass this order under s. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, because the elephant was not property produced before him regarding "which any offence had been committed or which had been used for the commission of any offence," the Magistrate having held that no offence was committed regarding this animal. We, therefore, set aside this order, although we are unable to give it any effect by ordering the restitution of the elephant. In this matter we follow the case of In re Annopurna Bai (1). The rule is made absolute without costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

- PUNCHANAN MULLICK (Plaintiff) v. SHIB CHUNDER MULLICK AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [15th July, 1887.]

Partition, Suit for—Partial partition—Jurisdiction of High Court, Original Side—Properties situate partly within and partly without jurisdiction.

On the Original Side of the High Court a suit for partition of joint estate, part of the property of which estate is situate within and part without the jurisdiction (there having been no leave granted under s. 12 of the Charter to sue concerning the portion outside the jurisdiction) is not liable to be dismissed on the ground that partial partition of a property cannot be granted, but may be decreed as far as the property within the jurisdiction is concerned.

Ruling of Jackson, J., in Ruttun Monee Dutt v. Brojo Mohun Dutt (2) explained.

[F., 22 B. 922 (927).] This was a suit by one Punchanan Mullick for partition of certain properties formerly belonging to his great uncle Gour Kissore Mullick.

It appeared that Gour Kissore died in 1831 possessed of, amongst other properties, a pucca godown in Burra Bazaar, Calcutta; an [836] upper-romed house in Banstollah Street, Calcutta; some garden land in Tiljullah in the suburbs of Calcutta; and a family dwelling, being No. 46, Banstollah Street, Burra Bazar, Calcutta; and that he by will left to his eight nephews (subject to a life-interest in the family dwelling-house, which had ceased long prior to the date of suit), a one equal ninth share in the above properties, leaving the remaining one-ninth share to two of his great-nephews, Prosonno Kumar Mullick and Mohun Loll Mullick, in equal shares as tenants in common.

The plaintiff asked for partition of the whole of the properties set out above; not having, however, obtained leave under cl. 12 of the Charter to sue in the High Court with respect to the properties situated out of the jurisdiction.

Some of the defendants raised the objection that, part of the property being outside the jurisdiction, and no leave having been obtained under s. 12 of the Charter, the suit was one for partial partition of the properties formerly belonging to Gour Kissore, and would not therefore lie.

The issues framed, which are necessary for the purposes of this report, were as follows:

(1) Whether the Court has jurisdiction, inasmuch as part of the property is outside the jurisdiction, and no leave has been obtained under s. 12 of the Charter?

(2) Whether the suit is maintainable, inasmuch as it is one for partial partition?

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Garth, for the plaintiff.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. K. M. Chatterjee, for one of the defendants.

Mr. Allen and Mr. Abdul Rahman, for others of the defendants.

Others of the defendants appeared in person.

Mr. Pugh:—The suit being one for partition of the whole property, leave should have been obtained under the Charter, so as to include so much of the property as was outside the jurisdiction. Partial partition is not allowable—Menu, Ch. IX, s. 46, and Jogendra Nath Mukerji v. Jugobundhu Mukerji (1). [TREVELYAN, J.—That is a mofussil case.] As regards that point there is no difference between the jurisdiction of the Original Side of the High [837] Court and that of the Mofussil owing to the terms of the Charter. The Courts have unanimously held that partial partition is not allowable. See Nanabhai Vallabdhias v. Nathabhai Haribhai (2); Narayan Babaji v. Nana Manohar (3); Ram Lochun Pattuck v. Rughoobur Dyal (4); Tribhak Dizit v. Narayan Dizit (5); Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (6); Parboti Churn Deb v. Pran Kristo Nundi (7); Ruttun Monee Dutt v. Brojo Mohun Dutt (8); Ramjoy Ghaso v. Ram Runjun Chuckerbutti (9); the only case to the contrary is Subba Rau v. Rama Rau (10); the case of Pudumami Dasi v. Jagadamba Dasi (11) correctly sets forth the proposition contended for, and that has not been altered by the Charter.

The plaintiffs were not called on.

So far as is necessary for the purposes of the report, the following is the judgment of the Court:

JUDGMENT.

TREVELYAN, J.—This is a suit for partition, but the real question is one of jurisdiction. Mr. Pugh contended on the first issue that I had no jurisdiction.

(3) 7 B. H. C. 177.

The suit is brought apparently for partition of all the immovable property formerly belonging to Gour Kissore, but the intention of the plaintiff is really to seek partition of the family dwelling house. It has been contended by the plaintiff that if a person sues for partition of a portion of a property held jointly between him and the defendant that suit must be dismissed. Authorities have been cited for this proposition, and there are some on the opposite side.

The key to this proposition, however, is to be found in the case of Rutton Monee Dutt v. Brojo Mohun Dutt (1), where the plaintiff brought a suit in reality to enable him to separate from the joint estate a small portion which he desired to occupy for his own convenience. This suit was dismissed as being not maintainable, but it was contended on his behalf that, if the claim was not allowable, still he might have a declaration as to the extent of [838] his share. Jackson, J., there says: "If the plaintiff sought a declaration like that, he ought to have framed his suit properly for that purpose; he is not entitled, regard being had to the mode in which he framed his suit and the valuation he put upon it, when the main object of the suit failed, to turn round and ask for that declaration." The reason for the dismissal being that in the mofussil there is an ad valorem fee for such suits, and if the relief given should be greater than that covered by the plaint, the Government would be a loser in fees.

There is no doubt of this proposition, that if a man sues for partition of joint property and the defendant alleges that there is other property, the plaintiff is bound to submit to partition of all the properties; and if he sued in the mofussil, he would either have to amend his plaint accordingly, and pay the extra stamp duty, or have his suit dismissed. But there is no ad valorem fee in this Court, and as I understand the law, in the absence of authority, if the defendant claims that there is other property to be partitioned, and it turns out that there is other property, that is no reason for the dismissal of the suit. It is a reason for including the other property in the suit if the Court has jurisdiction to deal with such property. Then it appears that one of the properties sought to be partitioned is outside the jurisdiction, and no leave has been granted under the Charter to sue in respect of that property, and it is said that for this reason I must dismiss the suit. The case of Padmamanji Dasi v. Jagadamba Dasi (2) decided by Phear, J., is, I think, an authority as to this point, but if it is not, I should have no difficulty in deciding the case. In Garrison v. Rodrigues (3), I held that where a person sues in ejectment for properties under the same title, one of such properties being outside the jurisdiction, I can deal with the property within the jurisdiction. There is no authority shown contrary to this view, and the principle is, I think, practically the same in this case. The suit is one for partition of land, and I can deal with so much of the land as is within the jurisdiction. I think, therefore, that I have jurisdiction to deal with this suit. The plaintiff submits to partition [839] of the property within the jurisdiction, and that is admittedly joint. There will be a decree for partition of those properties.

Suit partially decreed.

Attorneys for defendants: Messrs. Harris & Simmons.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

THE DELHI AND LONDON BANK, Ltd. (Plaintiffs) v. HEM LALL DUTT (Defendant).* [25th May, 1887.]

Easement—Light and air—South breeze—Limitation Acts; Act IX of 1871, s. 27; Act XV of 1877, s. 26—English Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 71—Limitation Act, Effect of on the pre-existing law as to nature and extent of the right to light or air.

The Indian Limitation Act, unlike the English Prescription Act, places light and air on the same footing; and the object of the Prescription Act and of the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act is not to enlarge the extent and operation of the easement, but to provide another and more convenient way of acquiring such easements—a mode independent of legal fiction and capable of easy proof in a Court of law; these Acts do not, therefore, alter in any way the pre-existing law as to the nature and extent of the right.

The only amount of light for a dwelling house which can be claimed by prescription or by length of time (whether prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871) without an actual grant, is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. Rule laid down in Bagram v. Khetranath Karmah (1) followed.

The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light. To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871, in a case (where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling houses by building on adjoining land, the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house; in other words, to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business.

There is no such right as a right to the uninterrupted flow of south breeze, as such.

The “45-degree rule” is not a positive rule of law, but is a circumstance which the Court may take into consideration, and is especially valuable when the proof of the obscuration is not definite or satisfactory.

[840] This was a suit brought by the Delhi and London Bank against one Hem Lall Dutt, seeking to prevent the erection of a new building on the south side of the premises of the Delhi Bank on a piece of land belonging to the defendant, on the allegation that the erection of such building would materially interfere with the access of light, air, and south breeze hitherto enjoyed by the occupants of the premises of the Bank.

The facts of the case were, that prior to 1836 the premises belonging to the plaintiffs, and a piece of land to the south belonging to the defendant, were both the property of a Mr. Fairlie; and on the 30th March 1836, M. Robert Castle Jenkins (who was a trustee for the sale of amongst other properties these two parcels of land) conveyed one of such parcels to Thomas Sandes and the other of such parcels to Rose Donnelly Mangles, who, on the same date, executed a deed of covenant to produce title deeds, which deed recited the recent purchases by himself and Sandes. On the 28th April 1866, Sandes conveyed the property purchased by him to the Delhi Bank, on which property stood the present house occupied by the Bank, which was one of three stories, the lower and part of the middle flat being used for the purposes of business, and the rest of the middle and the upper flat being used as a dwelling-house. On the 4th January 1837, Mangales conveyed to the grandfather of the defendant the parcel belonging to him (which stood to the south-west and south of the Delhi Bank), and the same was, after being held successively by the grandfather and father of the defendant, allotted to the defendant in 1877 on partition. The premises so allotted consisted of a three storied house, No. 3, Council House Street, together with a plot of land to the east thereof, or south of the premises of the Delhi Bank, on which stood, until shortly before suit, a one-storied building occupied as a shop, which was in height 19 feet from the level of the defendant's land, 87 feet in length from north to south, and 18 feet 6 inches in width from east to west, the northern wall of which abutted on the premises of the Delhi Bank at a distance of about 15 feet from the front of the ground floor verandah of the Delhi Bank. In 1877 the defendant commenced to build a wall along the northern [841] edge of his property against the boundary wall of the Delhi Bank, and at a distance of about 14 feet from the outer wall of the Bank's south verandah, and at a distance of about 22 feet 6 inches from the verandah entrance to the southernmost room on the ground floor of the Bank. The attorneys of the Bank at once complained, and the defendant asserted his right to so build, but eventually, at the instance of his tenant, the occupier of the National Bank, desisted from completing the wall. This wall which ran from east to west was about 28 feet 4 inches in length, and was left in an unfinished state and of different heights; it overtopped the old boundary wall belonging to the plaintiffs, which from the plaintiffs' side was about 31/2 feet in height, the land on the plaintiffs' side of the wall being about 3 feet higher than the ground on the defendant's side of the said wall by the following varying heights—from about 10 feet 3 inches from its east end by about 9 feet 9 inches, and the next 3 feet 3 inches by 8 feet 9 inches, for the next 2 feet 3 inches by 7 feet 11 inches, and from the next and remaining 13 feet 10 inches by 5 feet 10 inches. In the month of January, 1887, the defendant intimated to the plaintiffs that he intended to erect certain new buildings, 32 feet in height, on the open space of land to the south of the Bank's premises at a distance of 16 feet southward from the plaintiffs' boundary wall; and that he intended to raise his wall then left unfinished to a height of 12 3/4 feet above the boundary wall of the plaintiffs, and also to erect a wall joining the proposed new building with the National Bank, such wall to be 16 feet in height, and to extend from east and west along the entire southern face of the plaintiffs' premises at a distance of from 45 to 50 feet from the boundary wall; to this the plaintiffs objected, and a long correspondence took place between the parties, but the buildings and wall were commenced, and the plaintiffs thereupon brought this suit for the purposes above set out. At the time the plaint was admitted the plaintiffs asked for and obtained an ad interim injunction, and likewise obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from continuing the building during the pendency of the suit. This rule and injunction were, however, discharged. The issues raised at the hearing were as follows:—

[842] (1) Are the plaintiffs entitled to the use and access of light, free from obstruction, in the same manner as the same were enjoyed at the date of the conveyances of March 1836, in the plaint mentioned?
(2) How were such use and access of light had and enjoyed?
(3) Are the plaintiffs entitled to the use and access of air, free from obstruction, in the same manner as the same were enjoyed at the date of the conveyances of March 1836, mentioned in the plaint?
(4) How were such use and access of air had and enjoyed?
(5) What access of light (if any) to their premises have the plaintiffs acquired the right to by possession or prescription?
(6) What access of air (if any) to their premises have the plaintiffs acquired the right to by possession or prescription?
(7) Has there been any actionable obstruction to the plaintiffs' rights, if any?
(8) To what remedy (if any) are the plaintiffs entitled?
(9) To what damages (if any) is the defendant entitled in consequence of the ad interim injunction?

The evidence showed that the plaintiffs had acquired a right to access of light and air as an easement, and also had acquired rights by prescription; that the new building of the defendant in no way affected the amount of light or of air or south breeze coming to the top floor of the Delhi Bank's premises; that it in no way interfered with the light to the middle floor, but that it impeded the direct flow of south breeze to that floor, but did not interfere with the access of air thereto, and did not render that floor unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation; that there had been some trifling diminution of light to the lower floor, but that, after the complete erection of the new buildings, there would still be such an amount of light as could be reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the lower floor; that the south wind had been shut out from the lower floor, but that there was sufficient adit for light, there being ample space round the ground floor of the Bank; and that the lower floor had not been rendered unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business.

Mr. Evans, Mr. Stokoe, and Mr. O'Kinealy, for the plaintiffs.

[843] Mr. Stokoe.—As to the first issue: Where a common owner grants contemporaneously to two persons, each grantee has the right to all apparent easements existing at the date of the grant—Wheeldon v. Burrows (1). The principle is laid down by Lord Justice Thesiger; this case is not quite on all fours with ours. Our case is the same as Allen v. Taylor (2). The same rule is laid down in Rigby v. Bennett (3), and Russell v. Watts (4); as to the difference between an implied grant, and a grant reserved, see p. 584. We say the premises were conveyed on 31st March, 1836, by conveyances granted by Jenkins, ours being from Jenkins to Sandes our predecessor, and the other by Jenkins to Mangles, defendant's predecessor; in our deed there is an express grant of all easements and rights, and there was, at the same time, executed a deed of covenant to produce title deeds, which shows that the sales were contemporaneous, and that each purchaser was aware of the other's purchase. As regards the right to light, where the right to the access and use of light is acquired, the right is to the absolute quantity of light that comes through the aperture; this is subject to the rule that the Courts will not interfere unless the injury is material or substantial; the latter case shows that there is no difference in the right between town or country, nor has the way in which the house was used any bearing on the question; the Courts are more liberal now—Yates v. Jack (5). I am now on the subject of light, but I contend the same right exists as to air. If we had the south breeze at any time, we are entitled to it still. Lord Cranworth at p. 297 says: "We are entitled to our full quantity of light." In Dent v. Auction Mart Co. (1), he said there must be a substantial privation sufficient to render occupation of the house uncomfortable to give a right of action; this case also shows the meaning of the word "beneficially." The case of Martin v. Headon (2) follows the former cases. Kelk v. Pearson (3) shows that there must be a substantial interference with comfort, and detriment of the lettable value; I shall show that the comfort and value of the house has been affected.

[844] Dyers Company v. King (4) shows that getting light from other directions does not entitle the defendant to block up the south side, and emphasizes the principle that the actual right is to the specific volume of air which has existed previously. Theed v. Debenham (5) puts the principle of the right to a specific volume of light as being one which the Courts will only enforce in cases of substantial injury. See also National Plate Glass Insurance Co. v. Prudential Insurance Co. (6); Moore v. Hall (7) a common law case, recognizes the absolute right by directing nominal damages; the right is to the absolute quantity of light irrespective of the purpose for which it had been used. Bullen v.Dickenson (8) shows the amount of right to light; also see Scott v. Pape (9). As to the angle of 45° there is no rule on this matter; it is a question of fact as to whether there is an infringement. Beadel v. Perry (10) was the first case on the subject. City of London Brewery Co. v. Tennant (11) shows there is no absolute rule as to 45°. Hackett v. Baiss (12). Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Kino (13) shows that the question is not what degree of light is left, but whether the light has been interfered with, and Brett, L. J., at p. 223, says, the doctrine is contrary to all authorities; also in Parker v. First Avenue Hotel Co. (14), it is laid down that there is no conclusion of law as to the angle of 45°. The cases show that in such cases as the present the question is as to whether there has been a substantial infraction of light rendering the house less fit for business or less comfortable, and that the angle of 45° at which the light comes in has nothing to do with the question further than being an element for the Court to take into consideration whether the access of light is unduly interfered with.

As to air, the English Act 2 and 3 William IV, c. 71, differs from the Indian Limitation Act, as the latter expressly includes air. In Dent v. Auction Mart Co. (15) observations are made [845] with regard to the difference in the nature of the right to an easement of light and of air; see also City of London Brewery Co. v. Tennant (11). The case of Moore v. Lawson (16) shows that the right to air is got by enjoyment, and is on the same footing as light. The right is acquired by mere occupancy. Webb v. Bird (16) shows that you cannot acquire a right to access of air over an open piece of land for the purpose of a windmill, but the right to an undefined quantity of air over a tenement stands on a different footing from the right to air through a window. The considerations on which the Judges proceeded there do not apply to claims to light and air through certain definite windows and apertures. The case of Hall v. Lichfield Brewery Co. (1) shows that there is an undoubted right in law to light and air coming to a house through a window for the purpose of beneficially carrying on of business or for sake of health. See also Goddard on Easements, 3rd Ed., 38, 39; see also Bryant v. Lefever (2) where a claim to access of wind to a chimney could not be claimed as a natural right of property; but it seems it could be claimed as an easement. These cases show how the English law on the question of air stands, but here we are not in the same position in India; there is a right to access of air against an adjoining tenement when the right can be claimed by implied grant, but we are here in a stronger position, as the Legislature has recognized a right to access of both light and air by the Limitation Act, and under that Act the same principles apply to both light and air; the words the right to access of light “shall be absolute and indefeasible” are identical with the words in the English Statute, and the interpretation of those words shows what the right is, and the same interpretation is to be put on the right to air in India—Nandkishor Balgovan v. Bhagabhai Prawalabhdas (3). The case of Modhoosoodun Dey v. Bissonath Dey (4) is one to which the common law of England was supposed to apply, but I submit the same view would not be taken now-days. Mr. Justice Markby refers to the difference between the requirements [846] of India and England with regard to light and air, but the Legislature by the Easement Act have declared what their opinion is on the subject. The Act, although not in force in Bengal, may be used to show the meaning the Legislature put on the Limitation Act. They have adopted in the Easement Act the easement sections of the Limitation Act, and have embodied therein the rules of English law as laid down in the cases I have cited; and having accepted the law of England with regard to light they have also done so with regard to air. The right to air is the same as the right to light, but the extent is dependent on what it is proper to enjoy, and what it is proper and reasonable that the owner of the servient tenement should be bound to submit to. The case of Advocate-General of Bengal v. Surnomoye Dossee (5) points out that, although certain bodies of English law are recognized as governing British India, that law must be applied with due regard to the two countries, and the same principles apply to this case. The construction of the English Act in Yates v. Jack (6) should be applied to the Indian Limitation Act as regards air. Lord Cranworth says: “The right is indefeasible irrespective of the particular mode of enjoyment made use of.” The obstruction of light can be remedied, but not so the air.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Handley, for the defendant.

Mr. Hill.—The case as stated in the plaint suggests a difference in the nature of the extent of the right sought to be supported founded on the varied origin of these rights. I say that, although the origin may be different, the nature and extent is the same. [Trevilyan, J.—The objects and reasons of the Easement Act say that an obstruction with regard to right to air must amount to a nuisance (Gazette of India, 27th November 1880, p. 542). I think I may use the objects and reasons for the purpose of seeing what is the law at the time.]

“Prescription” is defined in Gale, p. 151. In Goddard’s book, p. 113 after showing five modes of acquiring easements, the author says it is .

question whether they are not all referable to grant. Mr. Justice Fry, in Dalton v. Angus (1), draws a distinction between positive and negative casements, but whether [847] the right lies in grant or in a restrictive covenant is immaterial as far as the extent of the right is concerned.
Dent v. Auction Mart Co. (2) imported the common law rule into equity, that is, that a man is entitled to so much light as is necessary. The history of the Prescription Act is given by Cockburn, C.J., in Angus v. Dalton (3). The English Prescription Act did not change in any way the nature of the easement, but only supplied a new means of proof; it only dealt with existing rights. The nature of the right to light is shown by Kelk
v. Pearson. (4); that case agrees that the Prescription Act has not altered the extent and nature of the right to air; the case is referred to and is not dissented from in Pape v. Scott (5), where Bowen, L.J., says "they are only entitled to so much as is necessary for the use and occupation."
Leech v. Shevder (6) shows that the right by prescription or grant does not alter the nature of the right. Mr. Stokoe has contended the cases show a change in the law as to the nature of the right; his contention is supported only by incorrect head-notes and inaccurate statements used by the Judges.
In Yates v. Jack, the head-note is not supported by the judgment.
Dent v. Auction Mart Co. (7) approves of Back v. Stacey, and shows what the extent of the right infringed is Martin v. Headon does not deal with the amount of light acquired, but only with the amount necessary to ground an action. In Dyers Co. v. King (8) the right is stated to be only what was necessary.
In Theed v. Debenham (9), Bacon, V. C., has defined the right as an absolute right of property; he only refers to such rights as the Courts will protect.
In National Plate Glass Insurance Co. v. Prudential Insurance Co.
(10), Fav, L. J., assents to the judgment of Lord Chelmsford.
Before the Act in India there was no right to air, except when the interference with it became a nuisance. When the right to [848] air was recognized by Statue, it was only intended to give that same right to air.
All the Act did was to recognize the same easement of air as had previously existed. In Moore v. Hall (11) the only question decided was, whether there was any interference with the light for any purpose for which it might be reasonably used. With regard to the argument that the law has been altered, I say that Kelk v. Pearson is not touched by Tapling v.
Jones (12). The judgment there shows that all that the Prescription Act did was to alter the presumption of proving the right. [Trevelyan, J.—
The English Act does not extend the right, nor, therefore, does the Indian Act. I shall start from Sir Barnes Peacock's case as far as air is concerned, as before 1871 there was no right to south breeze.
Luttrell's case (13) shows that the law laid down in Yates v. Jack is not new law; a change in the windows did not effect the right; the whole point is, has there been an abandonment? In Moore v. Rawson (14) the same position is taken up. The cases cited by Mr. Stokoe show that, in order to ascertain whether a right is abandoned, you must see whether the new light is different from the old one. The limits of Luttrell's case are defined in Newson v. Pender (1). In Scott v. Pape (2) the Judges were only comparing the new and old windows; they do not say the extent of the right is to all the light that comes, they were only dealing with the question as to whether the new windows had the whole light which passed through the old windows; the head-note is therefore wrong. In Greenwood v. Hornsey (3) the Judge merely quotes the head-note of Pape v. Scott, and misinterprets the decision; besides the only question in the case was abandonment—Chandler v. Thompson (4). The case of East India Co. v. Vincent (5) shows that the old law as to abandonment is the same as at present. Simper v. Foley (6) shows the right to light is retrospective; it therefore shows the Prescription Act does not alter the nature and extent of [849] the right. The Prescription Act does not use the words "as of right." Truscott v. Merchant Tailors Co. (7), and Frewen v. Philippa (8), show that the enjoyment need not be as of right. Flight v. Thomas (9), arguendo the user should have been accompanied by an assertion of right; under the Limitation Act the enjoyment must be "as of right."

The words "as of right" mean everything that one is entitled to. Now what is the right by way of easement? In Embery v. Owen (10) Parke, B., says the right to light is of exactly the same nature, and this was approved of in Orr Ewing v. Calquhoun (11). [Trevelyen, J.—The same remarks are made in Hall v. Lichfield Brewery Co. (12).] Mr. Stokoe has said the later cases show that the right acquired is absolute, and will not be interfered with unless substantial damage is done; that comes exactly to what I say, viz., that the right is not absolute; if it were it would be protected as in Ashby v. White.

As to the angle of 45° there is no such rule of law; each case must depend on its own circumstances. The 45° rule in London was a sufficient and fair basis to act on; the rule has only been adopted from the Statute, it does not follow that the same basis is suitable for India. The case of Clement v. Meloney, suit No. 271 of 1883, decided by Wilson, J., was a suit for obstruction of light to ground floor windows; the obstruction was 18 feet from the house, and the defendant was raising a wall 17 feet 9 inches at that distance from the house; it was found that the windows were ancient lights and the Court found that 45° of light was not obstructed, there being 60° left unobstructed. Mr. Justice Wilson says: "The 45° rule is not a rule of law, nor a presumption of fact until it is shown to be applicable;" and pointed out that the mere fact of shutting out the sky was nothing. In our case the 45° is clear. If I am right in saying the nature and extent of the right to light is not altered by the Prescription Act, then I am right in saying the nature and extent of the right to air is not altered either.

Mr. Stokoe in reply.—The head-note in Scott v. Pape is [850] correct; the same point has since been decided in Theed v. Debenham (13). Buller v. Dickenson (14) cannot be supported on any other view than that the dominant tenement's owner is entitled to the whole of the light from the servient tenement. It is true that in Scott v. Pape the question was whether there had been an abandonment, but to decide that question, the quantity of light previously enjoyed was considered. Greenwood v. Hornsey (1) stands without Scott v. Pape. Allen v. Taylor shows that where conveyances are contemporaneous existing easements pass to purchasers. Glover v. Coleman (2) shows it is true that the enjoyment must be one of 20 years ending from institution of suit.

The trees are not an obstruction within the meaning of the Act; it must be an obstruction by a person; the Act is a remedial one, and in terms is very different from English Statute. See Rajroop Koer v. Abul Hossein (3) as to this. The case of Bagram v. Kettranath Karformah (4) is consistent with a decision in our favour if on the facts our comfort is interfered with.

JUDGMENT.

Trelawyan, J.—In this suit the plaintiff Bank seeks to prevent the erection of a new building on the south side of their premises on a piece of land belonging to the defendant, and complains that the erection of such building will materially interfere with the access of light and air heretofore enjoyed by the occupants of the Bank premises.

The issues raised by counsel, and settled by me at the hearing, were as follows:—

(1) Are the plaintiffs entitled to the use and access of light free from obstruction in the same manner as the same were enjoyed at the date of the conveyances of March 1836, mentioned in the plaint?

(2) How were such use and access of light had and enjoyed?

(3) Are the plaintiffs entitled to the use and access of air free from obstruction in the same manner as the same were enjoyed at the date of the conveyances of March 1836, mentioned in the plaint?

(4) How were such use and access of air had and enjoyed?

(5) What access of light (if any) to their premises have the plaintiffs acquired the right to by possession or prescription?

(6) What access of air (if any) to their premises have the plaintiffs acquired the right to by possession or prescription?

(7) Has there been any actionable obstruction to the plaintiffs' rights if any?

(8) Two what remedy (if any) are the plaintiffs entitled?

(9) To what damages (if any) is the defendant entitled in consequence of the ad interim injunction?

It was agreed at the hearing that in case I should determine this suit in favour of the defendant, I should not try the 9th issue, but should refer the question of damages to an officer of the Court.

It appears that prior to March 1836, the premises now belonging to the plaintiffs, and the piece of land to the south, which now belongs to the defendant, were both the property of the same person, a Mr. Fairlie.

On the 30th of March 1836, Robert Castle Jenkins, who was a trustee for the sale of, amongst other property, these two parcels of land, conveyed the portion, now occupied by the Delhi Bank, to Mr. Thomas Sandes.

On the same day he conveyed to Mr. Ross Donnelly Mangles the other premises which are now owned by the defendant.

On the 28th of April 1866, Mr. Sandes conveyed to the Delhi Bank the premises now occupied by the Bank.

(3) 7 I. A. 240.  (4) 3 B. L. R. O. C. 41.
On the 30th of March 1836, Mr. Mangles executed a deed of covenant to produce title deeds. This deed recited the recent purchases by himself and Mr. Sandes.

In 1877 the defendant commenced to build a wall along the northen edge of his property adjoining the property of the Bank.

The attorneys of the Bank immediately wrote and complained of this wall. The defendant asserted his right to build, but, eventually at the instance of his own tenant, the National Bank, [852] he desisted from completing the wall. The wall was left in an unfinished state and of different heights. It ran from the north-west corner of a long godown which filled up the eastern side of the defendant's premises up to a distance of about 28 feet 4 inches.

This new wall overtopped the old boundary wall, which from the plaintiffs' side was about 3½ feet in height, by the following varying heights—from about 10 feet 3 inches from its east end and by about 9 feet 9 inches, and the next 3 feet 3 inches by 8 feet 9 inches, for the next 2 feet 2 inches by 7 feet 11 inches, and from the next and remaining 13 feet 10 inches by 5 feet 10 inches.

This wall undoubtedly must have lessened the value of the plaintiffs' premises, as it shut out the direct breath of the south breeze from the greater portion of the lower floor of the Bank's house. It also must have excluded some of the direct sunlight. This wall has played an important part in the hearing of this suit, but, in the view which I take of this case, I think that its importance has been exaggerated. Nothing more was done until the present year, when the defendant proposed to erect the buildings now in question. Some correspondence then took place, the new buildings were commenced, and the present suit resulted. In admitting the plaint Mr. Justice Macpherson issued a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why he should not be restrained from continuing the building during the pendency of the suit, and he also granted an ad interim injunction. For reasons which I gave at the time, I discharged the rule and the ad interim injunction. The building has been continued, and is now, as I understand it, approaching completion.

A great many cases have been cited to me by both sides. On a consideration of those cases I do not think that there is any doubt about the law in this case. Mr. Stokoe insists that the tendency of recent decisions is to show an expansion or development of the law in a direction favourable to the owner of the dominant tenement. I do not agree with this contention, as it appears to me on an examination of the cases that the right has not been in reality extended at all. Most, if not all, of the cases referred to are cases in which there has been an alteration in the dominant tenement, and [853] it was necessary to compare the opening in the old and the new buildings and the amount of light and air gaining access to each over the servient tenement. But even if there were in these cases observations tending to show that the law had altered in the way suggested, I think I am bound by the case of Bagram v. Khettranath Karformah (1), in which the law at the time (1869) was authoritatively laid down by a Division Bench of this Court hearing an appeal from the original side. This decision, it seems to me, concludes any question, as far as a Judge sitting on the original side of this Court is concerned, as to what was the law before the passing of the Limitation Act of 1871.

As to how the present Acts have altered the law, which existed before the passing of the Act of 1871, I will hereafter consider.

Apart from any question under the Limitation Act, and apart from an express grant, it seems to me that easements of light and air, however acquired, do not vary so far as their extent and operation are concerned.

There is no doubt that where a person grants a portion of his land, reserving a portion to himself, he grants with it all the easements and quasi-easements which had been formerly used over the part reserved by the part granted, and which were necessary thereto. There is also no doubt that where contemporaneously an owner, as was done here, grants two portions of his land to each of two persons, each having notice of the grant to the other, the easements and quasi-easements are also granted. For the first proposition the case of Wheeldon v. Barrows (1) is an authority, and for the second the case of Allen v. Taylor (2).

These cases do not show that the easements of light and air, which are impliedly granted under these circumstances, are in their extent any greater than easements acquired by prescription.

The case of Leech v. Schweder (3) is an authority for the contrary proposition, and holds that a person who acquires an easement by the disposition of the owner of two tenements only acquires it to the same extent as if he had acquired it by prescription.

Apart from any question as to the effect of the Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877, it is clear what the rights to light and air are. The right to air was before the passing of the first of those Acts as Mr. Justice Norman put it in Bagram v. Khettranath Karformah (4): "To give a right of action (in a case where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling-houses by building on adjoining land, the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house; in other words, to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business." There are numbers of authorities for this proposition both in England and in this country.

I think there can be no doubt that at any rate before the passing of Act IX of 1871, there was no right to the south, or any other, wind as such. In Bagram v. Khettranath Karformah, at page 47, Sir Barnes Peacock, the then Chief Justice, says: "I am of opinion that by the use of the south window uninterruptedly for upwards of 20 years, the plaintiff did not acquire a right to enjoy the south breeze without obstruction. Such a right may be acquired by express grant, but it cannot be acquired merely by prescription arising from user, whether the presumption is a presumption of prescription or not," and this alleged right to the south wind is also repudiated by Mr. Justice Peterson in the case of Barrow v. Archer (5).

The right to light is in Bagram's case at page 46 put by Sir Barnes Peacock as follows: "But the only amount of light for a dwelling-house which in my opinion can be claimed by prescription, or by length of enjoyment without an actual grant, is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house."

For this proposition there is an abundance of English authorities, and there is also the case of Modhoosoodun Dey v. Bissonauth Dey (6).

(3) L. R. 9 Ch. D. 472.  (4) 3 B. L. R. O. C. 45.
(5) 2 Hyde 125 (129).  (6) 15 B. L. R. 361.
Now as to the Limitation Acts. The first Act which has any bearing on this subject is Act IX of 1871. The preamble to that Act recites that it is expedient to provide rules for acquiring ownership by possession. The recital in the Act of 1877, the easement section (26) of which is identical with the easement section (27) of the Act of 1871, recites that it is expedient to provide rules for acquiring by possession the ownership of easements and other property.

Section 27 of Act IX of 1871 is as follows: "Where the access and use of light or air to and from any building has been peaceably enjoyed therewith, as an easement, and as of right, without interruption and for twenty years,.........the right to such access and use of light or air ..........shall be absolute and indefeasible." I agree with Mr. Stokoe that the Indian Act, unlike the English act, places light and air upon the same footing, and if the English cases show that the effect of these words (which are similar to the words in the English Prescription Act) is to enlarge the right of the dominant tenement as far as light is concerned, it follows that they also extend the right of air.

But I do not think that this is the real effect of the English cases. The object of the Prescription Act and of these provisions in the Limitation Act was not to enlarge the extent and operation of the easement, but to provide another and more convenient mode of acquiring such easements—a mode independent of any legal fiction and capable of easy proof in a Court of Law. In Kelk v. Pearson (1) Lord Justice James distinctly holds that the Prescription Act has in no degree whatever altered the pre-existing law as to the nature and extent of the right, and Lord Justice Mellish said that he entirely agreed with the opinion expressed by Lord Justice James that the Prescription Act 2 and 3, William IV, c. 71, has not altered the nature of the right to light and air.

I am not aware that this decision has ever been dissented from, and I do not think that there is anything in any subsequent case which in any way reduces the value of this decision. In the case of the City of London Brewery Co. v. Tennant (2) Lord Selborne expressly approved of this decision, and Lord Selborne's decision was approved of by Hall, V.C. in [856] Lady Stanley of Alderley v. The Earl of Shrewsbury (3). The case of Leech v. Schwerder, to which I have before referred, is also an authority for this same proposition. Mr. Stokoe has relied upon expressions seeming to show that the owner of the dominant tenement is entitled to the whole amount of light which, for the prescribed time, has passed to him over the servient tenement, but these expressions are most of them to be found in cases where the only question for decision simply necessitated a comparison between the light passing through an old aperture and that passing through a recently erected aperture. Besides, these expressions are, I think, to be taken with the qualification which, as it expresses the legal right, must be taken as being always understood, namely, that the owner was only entitled to so much of the light as is reasonably necessary for the comfortable habitation of the dominant tenement. All these expressions show that the owner of the dominant tenement is entitled to every portion of the light to which he has acquired a legal right, even though he may have altered the apertures through which the light comes to him.

I may here, before I go on to examine the evidence and to decide whether there has been any actionable obstruction, make some observations with reference to the wall of 1877. In the view which I take of the law and of the evidence, the existence of this wall is not material, but so far as the Bank has acquired an easement by lapse of time or by virtue of the Statute, this wall limits such right, as the Bank cannot have acquired a greater right to light and air than it has enjoyed since the building of that wall. The wall may also in one aspect of the case have affected the rights which the Bank obtained by implied grant, on the principle of the cases of Weldon v. Burrows and Allen v. Taylor.

The wall has been in existence for nine years, and I do not think that a Court would compel the defendant to pull it down or would restrain him from erecting a building which would not obstruct more light and air than was obstructed by the wall of 1877.

[857] Under the circumstances I think that the Bank may be taken to have acquiesced in the existence of that wall, and that even if the wall be taken to be a continuing injury, no specific relief would be granted in respect of it. [See Specific Relief Act of 1877, s. 56, cl. (b)].

Now as to the obstruction: There is no doubt whatever that the complaint that the new building injures the top floor of the Delhi Bank is purely fanciful, and that the injury (if any) is not such that the law can remedy.

The new building in no way affects the amount of light, or of air, or even of south breeze, which comes to the top floor of the Bank's premises. There may be a little glare, and as the air will pass over heated masonry when the wind is from the south, the breeze will be a little heated when it reaches the premises of the Bank, but this is not an injury which can be remedied by the law. So long as he does not interfere with any easement acquired by the Bank, the defendant is entitled to use his land in a lawful and proper way, and to erect a building thereon.

As to the middle floor there is also very little difficulty. There can be no doubt that there is no interference with the light of the middle floor. Mr. Osmond, the chief witness for the plaintiff Bank, says that he does not think that, as regards light, the higher portion of the new building would interfere with the plaintiffs' light. He is there speaking of the lower floor of the Bank. A fortiori, the higher portion of the new building would not affect the light of the middle floor. As the top of the lower portion of the new building is lower than the floor of the middle story of the Bank, it follows that the lower portion of the new building cannot affect the light of the middle storey of he Bank.

Now as to the air of the middle floor. There is no doubt that the south breeze cannot now find its way directly to the middle floor to the same extent as it did before the erection of the new buildings; but as I have pointed out before, the cases prevent me from giving effect to any asserted right to a south breeze as such. The higher part of the new building is some way off the middle floor, and there is no doubt that there is ample free room for an abundant supply of air to come to the middle floor of the Bank's premises. A glance at the models and plans put in this case [858] will immediately show that the new buildings do not interfere with the access of air to the middle floor in the sense that access of air is used in the cases. The access of wind is interfered with, it is true, but it is impossible for me to hold that the middle floor has been rendered unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business. The chief contest in this case has been with reference to the lower floor. I am assuming throughout in dealing with this case that the plaintiffs have acquired a right to access of light and air, whatever the extent of that right may be. There is no doubt, I think, that under the conveyance of 1836 they acquired this easement, and that they have also acquired rights by prescription. As to this there is evidence as to the time that the windows have existed, and there is no doubt that with the exception of Matthewson's godown there was no building on that portion of the defendant's land, which lies to the south of the Bank premises. They have, I find acquired rights of light and air, but not to the extent which they pretend. Has there been an actionable interference with the plaintiffs' right to light to the lower floor of the plaintiffs' premises? I think not.

There is no doubt here that 45° of sky are unobstructed. In Beadel v. Perry (1), which was, as far as I know, the first case in which what is known as the 45° rule was enunciated, the Vice-Chancellor, Sir John Stuart, says this: "It seems to me that where, opposite to ancient lights, a wall is built not higher than the distance between that wall and the ancient lights, there cannot, under ordinary circumstances, be such a material obstruction of the ancient lights as to make it necessary for this Court to interfere by way of injunction."

This is, it is true, not a positive rule of law, but it is a circumstance which the Court may take into consideration, and is especially valuable when the proof of the obscuration is not definite or satisfactory. Of course where lights are closed up by high buildings at the sides, this rule may not be applicable, but here there is no circumstance of that kind.

The plaintiffs' evidence on this head is of two descriptions: first, evidence that it is now necessary to light candles about half an hour earlier than before; and, secondly, evidence as to an experiment (859) which was conducted by Mr. Apjohn, Mr. Mills, and others. This experiment was not sufficiently carefully made to make it of much value. The persons who have given evidence with regard to it are those who remained inside. No one who actually saw what was being done with the tarpaulins while the experiment was in progress has been called. It is impossible to be certain that the tarpaulins were kept at the right height throughout the time that the experiment was being made.

The evidence as to the candles does not come to very much. Mr. Ward, who is the only witness who speaks to the actual use of candles, has had to use them on two cloudy evenings. He would probably have had to use candles on those evenings even if the new buildings had not been put up.

Some witnesses speak to the probable diminution of light, but their evidence is practically of no use to me in determining this question. There may have been some trifling diminution of light, but I do not think it amounts to a material diminution. I think that enough is still left for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the lower floor of the house.

On this question the observations of Lord Cranworth in the case of Clarke v. Clark (2), which was followed in the case of Robson v. Whittingham, at page 442 of the same volume, are of value. Yates v. Jack, at page 295 of the same volume, which was much relied upon by Mr. Stokoe, does not affect either of these decisions.

The evidence does not to my mind show any substantial diminution of the light, and I think that I can fairly apply the 45 degree principle to this case. To use the words of Sir Barnes Peacock in the case I have referred to, I am of opinion that the plaintiff Bank will have, even after the complete erection of the new buildings, such an amount of light as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the lower floor of the house.

Now as to the air on the lower floor. The doctors have differed a good deal as to this. They are equally divided, but I think that, on seeing what amount of open space there is in front of the [860] verandah of the Bank, it is not difficult to come to a conclusion on this question.

As I have pointed out before, I can give the plaintiff relief in this respect. I must find that the obstruction is such as to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business. There is a good deal of evidence to show that the south wind has been shut out from the lower floor. This question is one which Sir Barnes Peacock's decision prevents me from entering into. Mr. Justice Peterson in Barrow v. Archer (1) says: "The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light, and I am of opinion that where there is sufficient adit for light, it will be presumed there will be sufficient adit for air."

As I have found that there is sufficient adit for light, this decision would conclude the case; but apart from this, I think it clear that there is ample space round the ground floor of the Bank, and there being this space, I cannot find the lower floor of the Bank has been rendered unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business.

The plaintiffs' witnesses seem to ignore every mode of ventilation except the direct breeze. This, I think, is clearly wrong. There are other means of ventilation of which probably the principal one in this case is aspiration, as there will be a breeze over the new building and also up Fancy Lane. During the limited time in the year when the south breeze is blowing the lower floor may not be so pleasant a habitation as a room into which the south breeze is blowing directly, but this consideration is far removed from the present question.

Except that it has kept out the south breeze, I do not think that the new building has made any difference in the air. When the wind is not from the south I do not think the new building will make any difference at all in the atmosphere of the ground floor or will make it a less comfortable habitation.

The whole case for the plaintiffs is that they are entitled to the south breeze. Failing in this practically they fail in the rest of the case so far as the air is concerned.

There has been a good deal of evidence given on both sides with reference to the trees in the plot of land to the south of the Bank. [861] In the view which I take of the case, I need not consider that evidence.

My finding on the issues is as follows: On the first and second issues I find that the plaintiffs are entitled to so much of the use and access of light over the defendant's premises as is reasonably necessary for the comfortable habitation of their premises.

On the third and fourth issues I find that the plaintiffs are entitled to so much of the use and access of air over the defendant's premises as may be necessary to prevent those premises being rendered unfit for habitation or business.

On the fifth issue I find that the plaintiffs have acquired by prescription the access of the amount of light mentioned in my answer to the first and second issues.

(1) 2 Hyde 129.
On the sixth issue I find that the plaintiffs have acquired by prescription the access of the amount of air mentioned in my answer to the third and fourth issues.

On the seventh issue I find that there has been no actionable obstruction to the plaintiffs' rights, and accordingly I find in answer to the eight issue that the plaintiffs are entitled to no remedy.

The ninth issue will be referred to the Registrar. The suit must be dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

GRISH CHUNDER ROY (Plaintiff) v. BROUGHTON and OTHERS
(Defendants).* [12th August, 1887.]

Hindu Law. Widow.—Accumulations by Hindu widow.—Accumulations, period up to which they may be dealt with—Probate, Effect of—Legacy to Hindu widow—Executor, Power of, before Hindu Wills Act—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 41—Probate Act (V of 1881), ss. 2, 149.

The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others her right is the same.

The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but if she has evinced no such intention, she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits.

Where she invests her income making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investments, save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate.

Section 41 of the Evidence Act is applicable to probates granted prior to the passing of the Hindu Wills Act.

[R., 20 C. 433 (442) (P.C.); 11 O.C. 310 (314).]

On the 16th November 1856, one Nobocoomar Mullick died, leaving him surviving a widow Badauncoomary, four daughters, Surutcoomary, Soudaminey, Kadambinee and Surbonosa, and also a younger brother, Shama Churn. Nobocoomar by his will made the following amongst other dispositions: "My wife shall receive for her food and clothing and

* Original Civil Suit No. 64 of 1887.
for expenses, religious acts, and the appointed voluntary religious observances, one lac of rupees," and should my executor Shama Churn, my youngest brother, have more than two sons within eight years from this date, in that case such son shall be made my adopted son; should such adopted son die within the said appointed period of eight years, in that case should there be other sons of my brother within the specified time of eight years, power is reserved of adopting up to the extent of a third time; should my brother have no more than two sons, or the adopted sons should die one after the other, in that case the share belonging to me, of Company's paper and lands and houses and gardens and so forth, the whole real and personal estates will be received by my youngest brother Shama Churn."

[863] Probate of the will was granted by the Supreme Court to Badamecoomary and Shama Churn. At the expiry of the eight years from the death of the testator, no second son had been born to Shama Churn, and disputes having arisen between Badamecoomary and Shama Churn regarding the estate of Nobocoomar Mullick, Shama Churn claiming to be solely entitled to the said estate, and to the surplus income thereof which had accrued thereto, and had accumulated during the period of eight years, it was on the 14th August, 1866, agreed between Badamecoomary and Shama Churn that the latter should pay to the former the sum of Rs. 2,89,000 in lieu of all her claims to such accumulated income, which payment was duly made, and a release given therefor. On the same date a further sum of Rs. 24,000 was paid to Badamecoomary by Shama Churn in consideration of her giving up her right to reside in the family dwelling house. On the same date Shama Churn paid over to Badamecoomary the legacy of one lac of rupees and the interest accrued thereon, which amounted to Rs. 62,450, the recitals in the release being worded as follows:—

"And whereas I have consented and agreed to live separately from the family of the said Shama Churn Mullick, and with that view I have agreed to accept from the said Shama Churn a sum of Rs. 24,000 in lieu of and for and by way of compensation and consideration of and for my absolutely relinquishing my right to live in the said family dwelling house of my deceased husband: And whereas it has been agreed that I should take and receive the said sum of Rs. 2,89,000 in full payment, discharge and satisfaction of all claims I have or had on my said deceased husband's estate in respect of the said accumulations therefor, and I the said Badamecoomary have accordingly agreed of my own free will to accept and take that sum in full payment, discharge and satisfaction of all claims on the estate of my said deceased husband, and in consideration thereof to waive all rights and claims I had or may have to an account of the same." Out of the aforesaid sums of Rs. 1,00,000, Rs. 62,450, and Rs. 24,000, Badamecoomary purchased, for a sum of Rs. 35,000, a house No. 59, Chitpore Road, and established in the said house certain family idols.

[864] On the 12th July 1886, Badamecoomary endorsed and made over to Mr. L. P. D. Broughton the Government Paper representing the sums abovementioned, and created therewith two deeds of trust, one being a deed of trust of the Government Paper representing Rs. 2,89,000, and the other a deed of dedication of the house and premises, No. 59, Chitpore Road, and of the balance of the sums (after purchase of the house thereat at a price of Rs. 35,000) of Rs. 1,00,000, Rs. 62,450 and Rs. 24,000.
The deed of trust directed Mr. Broughton as trustee to hold the sum of Rs. 2,89,000 in trust, to pay the income thereof to Badamcoomary for life, and after her death to hold the principal and interest in trust for Grish Chunder Roy for his own absolute use aid benefit; it being thereunder recited that it was intended that the interest of the said Grish Chunder Roy in the said Government Securities should vest in him upon the execution of the deed. The deed further provided for payment of a proper sum to the guardian of Grish Chunder for his maintenance during his minority. The deed of dedication directed Mr. Broughton as trustee to hold the house and the Government Notes abovementioned in trust, to allow Badamcoomary during her life, as shebait of the idols, to reside in the house No. 59, Chitpore Road, and to set apart out of the said Government Promissory Notes a sum of Rs. 10,000 for the extension and repairs of the said house, and to pay the income of the residue to her as shebait for life, and after her death to the shebait for the time being; and that from and after her death until the trust funds of the deed of trust (abovementioned) should be indefeasibly vested in some person, the person for the time being entitled under the said deed of trust to the trust funds, should be the shebait of the idol.

Badamcoomary died on the 7th September 1886, and thereon the properties mentioned in the said deeds of trust and dedication became vested in Grish Chunder Roy.

Grish Chunder Roy, in accordance with certain provisions set out in the said two deeds, applied to the trustee, through his guardian, for such maintenance as would be in the discretion of the trustee fit and proper for his support, and also for the payment of a certain sum which had become necessary for the [865] repairs of the house No. 59, Chitpore Road, and for the necessary performance of ceremonies in honour of the idol.

Mr. Broughton having left India (having empowered Mr. Marsden to act for him, in, amongst other matters, the matter of these trusts), Mr. Marsden declined to make any payments to the guardian for the maintenance, education or establishment of Grish Chunder Roy, inasmuch as the daughters with sons of the late Nobocoomar were disputing Badamcoomary’s right to deal with the property of her late husband otherwise than in the manner in which such property could be dealt with by a Hindu widow, and had already given instructions for the filing of a plaint to set aside the deeds of trust made by Badamcoomary.

Grish Chunder, through his father, thereupon brought the present suit against Mr. Broughton to have it declared that he was entitled to the maintenance and establishment given him under the deeds of trust and dedication, and asking that a fit and proper sum might be paid to his guardian for that purpose.

Subsequently to the filing of this suit Surruteoomary and Soudaminey were added as parties defendants, and the plaint was amended by a statement that Surruteoomary had already brought a suit to set aside the deed of trust, which suit was then pending, and that both she and Surruteoomary had threatened to bring suits to set aside the deed of dedication; the relief prayed for was against the added defendants being that they should be restrained from interfering with the said Mr. Broughton in carrying out the trusts of the two indentures.

Soudaminey in her written statement denied the factum of the will of Nobocoomar, and both Surruteoomary and Soudaminey claimed to be entitled as the heiresses and legal representatives of Nobocoomar Mullick to the whole of his estate left by him at his death, and not disposed of by any valid testamentary disposition; they further impugned the validity of the bequest to Shama Churn Mullick; and submitted that Badamcoomary had only a Hindu widow's estate in the sums dealt with by her in the deeds of trust and dedication; and further contended that Badamcoomary was of unsound mind, and that undue influence had been exercised on her at the time of the execution of the two indentures.

[866] The defendant, Mr. Broughton, stated that he was willing to make the payments for maintenance, etc., should the Court be of opinion that under the circumstances of the case he could legally do so.

Previous to the hearing, an application was made on behalf of the plaintiff by motion for an order directing Mr. Broughton to allot maintenance to the plaintiff and a sum for the repairs of No. 59, Chitpore Road; this motion was ordered to stand over till the hearing of the settlement of issues, when both matters came on together.

Mr. Hill, Mr. Henderson and Mr. Barrow, for the plaintiff.
Mr. Pugh, Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. O'Kinealy, for Soudaminey.
Mr. Bonnerjee, Mr. Amir Ali and Mr. Roberts, for Surrutcoomary.
Mr. Stokoe and Mr. Pearson, for Mr. Broughton.

The issues settled were—
(1) Were the deeds of trust and dedication duly executed by Badamcoomary?
(2) If so, was she at the time capable of executing the said deeds or either of them?
(3) Did she understand the contents of the said deeds or either of them?
(4) Were the said deeds or either of them executed under the undue influence of Gopinath Roy, the guardian of the plaintiff?
(5) Had Badamcoomary any, and, if so, what power of disposition over the accumulations of her husband's estate during the first eight years after his death received by her from Shama Churn, and if she had no such power, who became entitled to such accumulations, and when?
(6) What, according to the true construction of the will of Nobocoomar Mullick, was the estate of Badamcoomary in the corpus, and what power of disposition had she over the legacy?
(7) Was the Rs. 24,000 paid to Badamcoomary out of the estate of Nobocoomar Mullick?

[867] Mr. Bonnerjee further wished to raise an issue as to whether or no Nobocoomar did not die intestate. This issue being objected to, the argument as to that objection was first heard.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—It is objected that I cannot raise the issue as to intestacy as probate has been granted, but the will was prior to the Hindu Wills Act, and probate was not necessary for such a will. I can contest such a will without going to the Ecclesiastical Court. See Bibi Muttra's case; Monteiro on Morton, 191. Before the Hindu Wills Act the Mofussil Courts had no jurisdiction to grant probate, and grant of probate did not confer on an executor any estate or character—see Treepoor-sondery Dossie v. Debendronath Tagore (1). As to the position and powers of an executor, see Sharo Bibi v. Baldeo Das (2); Jaykali Debi v. Shibnath Chatterjee (3); Nikrant Chatterjee v. Peuri Mohun Das (4). The Supreme Court granted probate of this will. Probate to a Hindu in common form is no evidence of the proof of the will—Gopalarain Mozoomdar v. Muddomutty Gupte (1); see also Thompson

v. Donaldson (2); Barraclough v. Greenhough (3); Hume v. Rundell (4).

Mr. Hill.—Besides the cases cited by the other side, there are two others which ought to be placed before the Court; the first case is against me, but I shall point out that s. 41 of the Evidence Act and other statutory enactments have done away with the effect of those cases.

The cases are Lalchand Ramdasji v. Guntibai (5), and Jaykali Debi
v. Shiknath Chatterjee (6), but the order of the Probate Court being a decision in rem is binding on all the world. See as to this Castrique v.
Imrie (7). In Brajanath Dey Silkar v. Anandamayi Dasi (8), the will was under the Hindu Wills Act, and Phear, J., held that the effect of ss. 187 and 242 of the Succession Act, which by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act were made applicable to wills of Hindus, was to make probate [888] evidence of the contents of the will as against all interested in the will.
Probate, if existing, is effectual. See Behary Lall Sandyal v. Juggo Mohun Gossain (9); Komoolochun Dutt v. Nitrutun Mundle (10); and Uma Nath Mukerjee v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (11), in which Markby, J.'s decision in Komoolochun Dutt's case was approved. Mohun Dass v. Lutcho-mun Dass (12) lays down that the proper way is to have probate revoked.
The will there was dated 1821.

The sovereign authority had not conferred on the Supreme Court a jurisdiction to issue probate, but the Court's jurisdiction was founded on consent of parties; but the Succession Act applies, and under s. 242 probate is conclusive against all the world, and the only way of getting rid of it is by a proceeding in the Court having jurisdiction. All this, however, was before the legislation of 1872 and 1881. The Hindu Wills Act provided for the application of the Act to all wills after September 1870.

Then the question is how far the Succession Act and the Act of 1881 affect the point.

The case of Barraclough v. Greenhough (3) was a case in the Common Law Courts. That case only shows that probate is good unless notice of dispute of the will is given within the statutory period. The case of Thompson v. Donaldson (2) really goes on this principle, that the Ecclesistical Court had power conferred upon it by Government to grant probate of wills of persons who were dead, and, therefore, where they granited it with regard to a person who was not proved to be dead, it was held that they had no jurisdiction. The Evidence Act by s. 41 makes a final order in exercise of probate jurisdiction conclusive proof that the character of executor accrued to the executor at the date of the order for probate. In the English Statute the words 'sufficient evidence' are used, which means evidence sufficient to go to the jury as proof in favour of the producer of probate—see Barraclough v. Greenhough (3). Section 41 takes us quite outside [869] such cases as Barraclough v. Greenhough. The Legislature intended probate whenever granted to be conclusive evidence for purposes of future litigation. This issue, therefore, does not arise.

As to the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, chapters 2 to 13 apply to Hindus dying before 1st April 1881; s. 2 vests property in the executor even when the will is 100 years old, and the testator died without the property having vested in his executor. There is nothing in the saving clause, s. 149, with respect to the sections I have mentioned, or of wills made 100 years ago.

But further, no issue regarding the factum of the will of Nobocoomar can be raised, as Shama Churn is not before the Court. This Court is now sitting as a Court of Equity, and where the Court is asked to decide on the factum of a will in the absence of necessary parties, it will refuse to do so in order to avoid multiplicity of suits. I say, therefore, that the course of legislation, by the Evidence and Probate Acts, has rendered probate conclusive in this Court.

[The argument on the other issues was then proceeded with.]

Mr. Hill.—As regards the widow's right to the accumulations for eight years, the payment of these accumulations was made ten years after the right accrued; therefore she could have sued only for one-tenth of the corpus, and only for a small proportion of interest. The rest would have come to her under the agreement with Shama Churn, and not as widow and heiress, and could not become the property of persons who claim as present representatives of Nobocoomar. As to her right to accumulations and the period within which a widow may make use of the accumulations, see Ainslie, J.'s judgment in Hansbutti Koerain v. Ishri Dutt Koer (1), which case has been approved by the Privy Council. The later cases tend to show that you cannot fix a time up to which the widow has a right to deal with the accumulations during her lifetime. A clear distinction does not seem to have been drawn in former cases, as to whether or not the widow had an intention to sever the accumulations from the corpus. No period can be fixed as to when she shall exercise that intention; lapse of time is only prima facie evidence, but [870] can be rebutted. As showing that if she shows a distinct intention to sever, the accumulations belong to the widow, I cite Gonda Koer v. Koer Oodey Sing (2).

I also refer to the judgment of Ainslie, J., in Hansbutti Koerain v. Ishri Dutt Koer (1) where he sets out his reasons for there being no fixed period for her right to dispose of the accumulated income, and the appeal of that case to the Privy Council—Ishri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (3); also as to there being circumstances which 'would show an intention to make use of accumulations—Sheolochun Singh v. Saheb Singh (4).

The present case is purely a question of intention. Upon the later cases the conclusion is that the intention need not be manifest at any fixed period, but that she may deal with the accumulations at any time during her lifetime. Here her intention is shown in the recitals of the deeds of trust and dedication; they most clearly indicate an intention to sever. Issue No. 7 is said to be by the other side a question of fact, but, if it is not, I submit a sum given in lieu of right to live in the family dwelling house is clearly a sum given to the widow absolutely.

Then, as to the legacy of a lac, the words of the will clearly give it to her absolutely.

Mr. Stokoe for Mr. Broughton.—With regard to the intention of the widow, I wish to point out that the recitals in the deed of release executed by the widow in favour of Shama Churn clearly show that Shama Churn retained no interest in the sums mentioned therein. I say the money was received under circumstances which render it impossible that the widow could have subsequently intended to use the money otherwise than as her own absolutely.

Mr. Pugh for Soudaminey.—At the time the deeds of trust and dedication were executed, the gift to Shama Churn was void; the recitals in the release show that the widow was claiming a part of the residuary estate of her husband; all she does by the deeds of trust is to change the succession; as to the release, it is therein recited that the whole of the estate vests in Shama Churn; it recites that the widow has separated her stridhan and the [871] receipt of the undisposed of savings. Now as to the accumulations, Mayne in para. 558 sets out the different classes of accumulations; if at the last the widow decides to treat them as the estate of her husband, she cannot afterwards turn round and dispose of them otherwise. I am not within the 3rd class referred to by Mayne. In the deed of trust she has invested the very Government paper she received from Shama Churn, she has therefore kept that property distinct; she had no other property of her husband’s, and she kept that to which she had separate from the rest of her own estate.

Moreover, accumulations can only be held in suspense or as stridhan. The case of Rabutty Dossee v. Sibchunder Mullick (1) has a close bearing on this case, inasmuch as that case turns on a deed of release as does also the present case. Accumulations are not the same as income—see Grose v. Amirtamayi Dasi (2). There is no authority for saying that a widow can deal with accumulations accruing before the estate came into her hands, and after her husband’s death. As to whom accumulations made by a widow during her lifetime belong, see Bhagbutti Dace v. Chowdry Bholanath Thakoor (3); also Rivett Carnac v. Jivibai (4). The case of Sheolochun Singh v. Saheb Singh (5) seems to support me; there the gift was of the husband’s estate together with estate purchased by the widow. Here the widow has not treated the accumulations made by her in any way differently from the accumulations handed over to her by Shama Churn. She did not intend to keep the estate entire, but really wished to change the succession. With regard to the case of Ishri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (6), the widow might have spent the income as it accrued; but the case has no application, except so far as the case deals with the point that “it is impossible to draw any sharp definition of the line which separates accretions from income held in suspense, as to which she has not determined whether or no she will spend it.” With reference to the power which a widow has over money that she has herself received and accumulated, see Puddo Monee [872] Dossee v. Dwarka Nath Biswas (7). The Case of Gonda Koer v. Koer Oodey Singh (8) deals with Soorjeemony Dossee v. Denobundoo Mallick (9), so I shall not refer to Soorjeemony’s case. As to the question of the validity of the deeds of trust, it was not contended that she could dispose of the accumulations by deed, but they say that the property vests in plaintiff under the two deeds. The two deeds are really testamentary; they were made the day after her will was made. [TREVELYAN, J.—The deeds are irrevocable. We shall have to see whether the disposition amounts to a will or not, for she cannot evade the law by a dodge.] If the widow had given over this property by will, it would not have been valid. Then supposing she gave the property over to a trustee by deed in trust for the plaintiff, would it not have been equally invalid?

Have the deeds any further efficiency by reason of the widow having vested the beneficial interest in a trustee during her life? I submit it is a transparent device and cannot stand.

Mr. Amir Ali for Surrutecomary.—I wish to point out that the widow took only a life interest in the legacy of one lac. Her case is that she has a duly adopted son. The gift of the one lac is only of the use of the money, and the widow cannot dispose of it as it was given for her maintenance. The mere fact that it is given in the shape of a legacy is nothing if the intention is that she should only take a life interest—Mahomed Shunsool Hooda v. Sheewukram (1).

Mr. Hill in reply.—The cases cited by Mr. Pugh do not touch the point raised by the Privy Council cases. As to the case of Grose v. Amirtamayi Dasi (2), the passage relied on in Macpherson, J.'s judgment is obiter; since that time we have had a new set of authorities, and the Privy Council have laid down that a widow is entitled to spend the entire income of the estate. Whatever it may be, Sir Lawrence Peel says, "accumulations and accretions are not the same." If Macpherson, J., meant by "accumulations," "accretions to income," his judgment cannot be supported. It was, moreover, unnecessary to deny the [873] widow's power to dispose of accumulations. Sir Barnes Peacock does not touch it, and the decree is affirmed except as to costs; the decree does not touch it, and there being an ambiguity whether he meant income accumulated in her hands as distinguished from something that has already accreted to her husband's estate, the authority does not help the defendants. The Privy Council do not say they cannot regard Gonda Koer's case as an authority at all, but merely on the questions raised on appeal. Soorjecomony's case is the only one which governs it, and it has not been broken into. In the case of Rabutty Dossee v. Shib Chunder Mullick (3), the corpus and accumulations were paid over together to the widow, and the Privy Council say the whole was given to her for her absolute use, that she could not take the corpus absolutely, yet as the whole was one transaction, she took as a Hindu widow; that case is distinguishable. In the case of Rivet Carnac v. Jiribai (4), the point was whether there was any severance by the widow; there the word "accumulations" is used in the sense of "to add" to her husband's estate. The case of Pannalal Seal v. Bamasundari Dasi (5) shows that accumulations wrongfully withheld from a widow are her separate property.

The later cases show that up to the time of her death a widow may evidence her intention to separate; the Bombay case shows that accumulations go after her death as her estate and not as her husband's.

But here the widow never had the corpus in her hands, and so never intended to accrete. On the contrary, Shama Churn kept her out of possession, and it is only after threats of suit that Shama Churn pays her the accumulations. Suppose she had sued for those accumulations for the ten years, the decree would have been for her to hold them absolutely. She cannot be said to have taken the accumulations as accretions and to have severed them, when the money was in the hand of Shama Churn. As to the deeds being in reality a testamentary disposition if the widow is in possession of the corpus and saves income, and does not manifest any intention to sever, it may be that she [874] would have no power to deal with it by will; but, as she never had the corpus, and clearly severed that which she did receive, she could deal with it even by will.

JUDGMENT.

TREVELYAN, J.—This case came before me for settlement of issues. Several issues, which I will afterwards mention, were raised, but before referring to them I must decide the question whether Mr. Bonnerjee is entitled to raise in this suit the following issue, proposed by him, namely, “Did Nobocoomar Mullick leave a will or did he die intestate?”

Nobocoomar Mullick died on the 16th of March 1856.

On the 29th of March 1856, the late Supreme Court in the exercise of its ecclesiastical jurisdiction granted to Shama Churn Mullick and Badamcoomary Dosssee, the widow of the deceased, probate of an alleged will of Nobocoomar Mullick, dated the 15th of March 1856.
