This probate has never been revoked. The present suit is brought for the administration of trusts which were established by Badamcoomary out of monies received by her under the provisions of the will of Nobocoomar. Mr. Bonnerjee for a defendant, an heir of Nobocoomar, suggests the issue I have mentioned, but Counsel for the plaintiff contends that unless and until the probate be revoked by the Court which granted it, the question of the factum of the will cannot be entered into.

This question depends upon the applicability of s. 41 of the Indian Evidence Act of 1872.

That section is as follows:—

“A final judgment, order or decree of a competent Court in the exercise of probate, matrimonial, admiralty or insolvency jurisdiction, which confers upon or takes away from any person a legal character, or which declares any person to be entitled to any such character, or to be entitled to any specific thing not as against any specified person, but absolutely, is relevant, when the existence of any such legal character or the title of any such person to any such thing is relevant. Such judgment, order or decree is conclusive proof—

“That any legal character which it confers accrued at the time when such judgment, order or decree came into operation,”

[875] “That any legal character, to which it declares any such person to be entitled, accrued to that person at the time when such judgment, order or decree declares it to have accrued to that person,”

“That any legal character which it takes away from any such person ceased at the time from which such judgment, order or decree declared that it had ceased or should cease,”

“And that anything, to which it declares any person to be so entitled, was the property of that person at the time from which such judgment, order or decree declares that it had been or should be his property.”

Mr. Bonnerjee contends that as the testator died before the Hindu Wills Act came into force, and as the executor of the will of a Hindu dying before that Act came into force was a mere manager having no title to the estate, the probate neither conferred a legal character nor declared the executor to be entitled to any legal character.

I have examined the cases which have been cited, but I am of opinion that s. 41 of the Evidence Act applies to this case. It is quite true that a Hindu executor was, at any rate until the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, only a manager, but as such manager he had certain powers over the estate and for many purposes he represented the testator. It may be that the probate did not confer upon the executor any legal character, but I think that the effect of probate is to declare the person to whom probate is granted to be entitled to the powers of an executor, whatever his powers as such may be. The words "legal character" is not anywhere defined, but I think that it is quite clear that it is intended to include the case of an executor. The fact that this section has been frequently applied to cases of persons dying after the Hindu Wills Act came into force shows this.

The only legal character which the Probate Court declares a person to be entitled to is that of executor. It confers the character of administrator. It does not declare it. So the section would be meaningless unless "legal character" included the office of an executor. I do not think that the circumstance that in the particular case the powers of the executor may be limited makes any difference in the construction of the section: [876] I must decline to allow Mr. Bonnerjee to raise the issue I have mentioned.

The other issues raised were as follows:—(Here followed the issues as set out above.)

It was agreed by counsel that the 5th issue should now be decided by me upon the materials before me. The 6th issue is an issue of law, and I must, therefore, decide that also. So far as material on the present questions, the facts of this case are as follows:—

Nobocoomar Mullick died on the 16th of March 1856, leaving him surviving his widow Badameeomary and four daughters. He left a will, of which he appointed his widow and his brother Shama Churn executrix and executor.

The only portions of the will which are material to the present question, are the 5th and 9th clauses.

In the beginning of the 5th clause the testator says: "My wife Sreemutty Badameoomary Dossee shall receive for her food and clothing, and for expenses of religious acts and the appointed voluntary religious observances, one lac of rupees."

The 9th clause of the will is as follows: "Should my executor Sreeman Shama Churn Mullick, my younger brother, have more than two sons within eight years from this date, in that case such son shall be made my adopted son; should such adopted son die within the said appointed period of eight years, in that case should there be other sons of my brother within the specified time of eight years, power is reserved for adopting up to the extent of a third time; should my brother have no more than two sons, or the adopted sons should die one after the other, in that case the share belonging to me of Company's paper and lands and houses and gardens and so forth, the whole real and personal estate will be received by my younger brother Sreeman Shama Churn Mullick—finis."

Shama Churn Mullick had not more than two sons within eight years from the date of the testator's death, so the residuary estate became his. The testator made no provision for the disposal of the rents and profits for the eight years during which the succession to the property remained in suspense, and therefore his widow as his heiress became entitled to them, but during [877] such eight years she did not receive these rents and profits. They seem to have accumulated in the hands of Shama Churn Mullick, her co-executor.
Disputes arose between Badamcoomary and Shama Churn Mullick regarding their respective rights to the eight years' income. In settlement of these disputes Shama Churn, on or about the 13th of August 1866, paid Badamcoomary a sum of Rs. 2,89,000.

On receipt of this money Badamcoomary gave Shama Churn a release in the form of a deed-poll, the terms of which are important. This deed, after reciting the will and death of Nobocoomar, and that as there was only one son born to Shama Churn Mullick, the direction to adopt had become inoperative, and the whole of the estate of Nobocoomar became vested absolutely in Shama Churn by virtue of the will of Nobocoomar recites as follows:

"And whereas the whole of my stridhan property, estate and effects of whatever nature and description the same did or doth consist has been fully and entirely separated, and is in my absolute and sole possession, custody and control, as I, the said Sreemutty Badamcoomary Dossee, do hereby admit and acknowledge. And whereas a question has arisen between myself and the said Shama Churn Mullick as to whether or not under the form of words used by the said Nobocoomar Mullick in his said will the whole of the estate, property and effects left by the said Nobocoomar Mullick, together with the accumulations thereon from the time of his death after payment of the specific legacies therein given and bequeathed, passed to and became vested in the said Shama Churn Mullick as a residuary legatee, or whether the corpus only of the said estate and effects of the said Nobocoomar Mullick at the time of his death after the lapse of time specified in the above recited clause of the said will passed to and became vested in the said Shama Churn Mullick, leaving the accumulations of the said estates from the said death down to the expiration of the said eight years next succeeding his death undisposed of to pass to the next heir or representatives of the said Nobocoomar Mullick as residuary estate of the said deceased; and I the said Sreemutty Badamcoomary Dossee as the sole widow, [878] heirs and legal personal representative of the said Nobocoomar Mullick, deceased, claim to have the accumulations of the said estate from the time of his death, the same as I contend and am advised being residuary estate undisposed of by the said will of the said Nobocoomar Mullick. And whereas the said Shama Churn Mullick has consented and agreed to concede the point in question and to give up to me as such heiress of the said deceased the accumulations of the said estate from the death of the said deceased for the period of eight years, the time within which the contingency of a son being born to the said Shama Churn Mullick to be adopted by me was limited and fixed. And whereas to avoid the expense, delay and trouble of taking an account of the said accumulations of the said estate, it has been by mutual consent agreed between me and the said Shama Churn Mullick that I should take and receive the sum of Rs. 2,89,000 in full payment, discharge and satisfaction of all claims I have or had on my said deceased husband's estate in respect of the said accumulations thereof; and I the said Badamcoomary Dossee have accordingly agreed of my own free will to accept and take that sum in full payment, discharge and satisfaction of all claims on the estate of my said deceased husband in respect of such accumulations, and in consideration thereof to waive all rights and claims I had or may have to an account of the estate of my said deceased husband in respect thereof. And whereas since the death of my said husband I have up to the present time continued to live and still am living and residing with the said Shama Churn Mullick and his family. And whereas domestic disagreements and dissensions have arisen between myself and the other female members of the family, and with a view to terminate and end the said family feuds and dissensions
I have consented and agreed to live separately and absolutely several and distinct from the said family of the said Shrama Churn Mullick, and with that view I have agreed to accept from the said Shrama Churn Mullick a sum of Rs. 24,000 in lieu and as for and by way of compensation, and in consideration of and for my absolutely releasing and relinquishing my right to live and reside in the family dwelling or other the house or houses of my said late husband and the said Shama Churn Mullick. [879]
And whereas I have also agreed that on payment to me of the said legacy of sum of Rs. 1,00,000, and the further sum of Rs. 62,480 being interest thereon from the 17th of March 1856 to 13th August 1866, and on payment to me of the said sum of Rs. 2,89,000 as and for and in full of all claims on my deceased husband’s estate in respect of such accumulations thereof as aforesaid, and on payment to me of the said sum of Rs. 24,000 as and for and by way of compensation for my relinquishing my right of residence in the said family houses as aforesaid, I would execute to the said Shama Churn Mullick such release of all claims, accounts, reckonings and demands whatsoever” : the payment of the monies is then recited.
The operative part after declaring the receipt of the monies states that in consideration therefore—

I, the said Sreemutty Badamcoomary Dossee, do hereby remise, release and for ever quit claim unto the said Shama Churn Mullick, both in his capacity of executor of the last will and testament of the said Nobocoomar Mullick deceased and as such co-trustee with myself under the said will of the said estate and effects of the said deceased, and also as such legatee taking, receiving, and possessing the whole of the estate, real and personal, of the said Noboeoomar Mullick deceased under his said recited will as aforesaid, and the heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, and assigns of the said Shama Churn Mullick and the estate and effects of the said Noboeoomar Mullick my said deceased husband, of and from all and all manner of action and actions, cause and causes of action and actions, suits, enquiries, investigations and proceedings whatsoever touching or concerning, or on account or in respect of or in any way relying to the premises or any question, matter or thing relating or appertaining thereto, and of and from all and all manner of actions, suits, debs, duties, legacies, estates, trusts, accounts, reckonings, sum and sums of money, and all other claims and demands whatsoever both legal and equitable which I, the said Sreemutty Badamcoomary Dossee, or my heirs, executors, administrators or representatives now have, or at any time or times heretofore ever had, or at any time or times hereafter may have, claim, challenge or demand against the said Shama Churn Mullick as such executor of the said last will and [880] testament of the said Nobocoomar Mullick as aforesaid, or as such legatee, taking the whole of his estate as aforesaid, or to, against, on, or, upon, arising out of, or in any way respecting the said estate of my said deceased husband, the said Nobocoomar Mullick deceased, and of, and from, all manner of other claims and demands whatsoever from the beginning of the world to the day of the date hereof. And these presents further witness that I the said Sreemutty Badamcoomary Dossee do hereby acknowledge, declare and testify that I have also actually had and received before the sealing and delivery of these presents of and from the said Shama Churn Mullick the further sum of Rs. 24,000 paid to me by the said Shama Churn Mullick as consideration and compensation for my relinquishing, giving up, and releasing, and in lieu of my right to live and reside the said family dwelling-house of my said deceased husband, or any other the said house or houses of his or his estate, and in consideration of the said last-mentioned sum so paid to me as aforesaid, I the said Sreemutty Badamcoomary Dossee have bargained, sold, assigne, surrendered, yielded up, and released and by these presents do bargain, sell, assign, surrender, yield up, and release unto the said Shama Churn Mullick, his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, and assigns all and every the estate and interest, right, title, claim, and demand whatsoever of me the said Sreemutty Badamcoomary Dossee to, for, in respect or on account of all and every or any my right or rights to a residence in the family dwelling-house and premises No. 66, Chitpore Road in Calcutta, and in all and every or any messages or messuage, houses or house, hereditaments and premises of my said deceased husband in any right, title, or capacity whatsoever.'

Out of a portion of the money, which she received on account of her legacy, Badamcoomary purchased a house No. 59, Chitpore Road, and out of the Rs. 2,89,000 she bought Government paper to the extent of Rs. 2,69,500, the interest of which she from time to time invested in the purchase of other Government paper. On the 12th of July 1886, this accumulated interest was represented by Government paper for Rs. 10,500.

On that day she endorsed over both the Government notes for the Rs. 2,69,500, and those for the Rs. 10,500, to Mr. Broughton, [881] one of the defendants in the present suit, and by a deed of the same date, of which she constituted him the trustee, she provided for the application of these funds.

This deed, which it may be convenient hereafter to describe as the deed of settlement, after reciting the way in which Badamcoomary had obtained the Government paper and her purchase of the house No. 59, Chitpore Road, recites that it had for several years been her desire to bring up some one of her grand-children or more remote issue as her own child, and so in a manner to preserve and maintain a separate family branch represented by herself as the origin and present head.

It also recites the intention of the settlor to bring up her grand-child, the present plaintiff, as her own child. This deed provided that Mr. Broughton or other trustees or trustee for the time being should stand possessed of the said Government Securities upon trust during the lifetime of the settlor to pay her the interest and dividends, and after her death as well principal as interest upon trust for the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns for his and their own absolute use and benefit." This deed declared that it was intended that the interest of the plaintiff in the Government Securities should vest in him upon the execution thereof, and it was thereby further provided that in case the plaintiff should die in the lifetime of the settlor without leaving male issue surviving him, or in case he should die without having attained his majority and without leaving male issue, and in the case he should within the lifetime of the settlor, or at any time after her death and before the expiration of a period of 24 years from the date of the deed, cease to reside permanently in, or to occupy as his family dwelling-house the house No. 59, Chitpore Road, then his interest in the Government Securities should cease.

The deed provided for the application of the interest of the Government Securities on the cessor of the plaintiff's interest.
There was also a provision that after the death of the settlor, and during the minority of any person for the time being entitled to the trust funds, the trustees should out of the interest pay to the natural or other guardian of such person during [882] his or her minority such monthly or other sums for the maintenance and necessary expenses of such person as the trustees should in their discretion deem fit. After purchasing No. 59, Chitpore Road, Badamcoomary invested the balance of her legacy and its interest in Government paper, which on the same 12th July 1886 she endorsed over to Mr. Broughton, to be held on the trust of another deed of the same date, which I shall call the deed of dedication. By this deed Badamcoomary conveyed to Mr. Broughton the house No. 59, Chitpore Road, and certain jewellery, household furniture and effects upon trust to permit her as shebait of the idols Sri Sri Issur Sreethurjee and Sri Sri Luckey Thakooranee during her lifetime, and after her death the shebait or shebaits for the time being of the said idols, to use and employ the house and other property respectively for the worship and service of the idols, and subject as to the house, land and premises and the household furniture and effects therein and thereon to such right of residence and use and occupation of the said shebaits and their families respectively as therein provided.

This deed also provided that Badamcoomary as the shebait of these Thakoors and other the shebaits for the time being should be entitled to reside in No. 59, Chitpore Road, with the members of her, his or their families, and that the Government Securities which were subject to the trusts of this deed should be held upon trust to set apart thereout Government Securities for the sum of Rs. 10,000 for the purpose of extending the premises and upon trust with or out of the interest or income of the residue of such Government Securities to discharge revenue, rent, rates, taxes and outgoings in respect of No. 59, Chitpore Road, and in the necessary repairs thereof, and to pay the residue to Badamcoomary as shebait of the said Thakoors during her life, and after her death to the shebait or shebaits for the time being of these Thakoors. This deed declared that Badamcoomary should during her lifetime be the shebait, and that from and after her death until the trust funds settled by the deed of settlement should under the trusts thereof be indefeasibly vested in some person, the person for the time being entitled under the deed of trust [883] to the funds settled thereby should be the shebait, and when the funds should become indefeasibly vested, the person in whom they should be so indefeasibly vested, and his or her heirs, should thenceforth be and continue such shebait or shebaits for ever.

This deed of dedication also contained a provision that, if the shebait for the time being should happen to be a minor, the payments directed to be made to him for the purposes of the trust should be made to his or her natural guardian. It was also provided that subject to the use thereof for the service of the Thakoors, the shebait and shebaits for the time being should be entitled to the use of the jewellery, &c.

Badamcoomary died on the 8th of September 1886. In consequence of two of the daughters of the settlor asserting rights to the property subject to these deeds, this suit has been brought. This suit seeks the administration of the trusts of the two deeds.

I have now to consider the 5th issue.

It is contended that the cases establish the following propositions: —
In the first place.—That a widow may use for her own purposes and may alienate the income of her husband’s estate which has accumulated in her hands. It is said that she is not confined to the current income;

Secondly.—That she should invest the income and make a distinction between those investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investments;

Thirdly.—That she should invest the savings in such a way as to show that she intended to increase the original estate by such investment, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; and Fourthly.—That she should invest the savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after purchases are an increment to the original estate.

The whole question is, I think, one of intention. If she has [884] once shown her intention to augment her husband’s estate she cannot alter, but if she evinced no such intention she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits. The fourth proposition is established by the recent case of Sheolochun Singh v. Saheb Singh (1).

The third proposition is laid down in the case of Ishri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (2). At page 337 of the report in the Indian Law Reports, their Lordships of the Privy Council, after pointing out that no distinction was then made between the original estate and the after-purchases, say: “These are circumstances which in their Lordships’ opinion clearly establish accretion to the original estate, and make the after-purchases inalienable by the widows for any purpose.”

For the first proposition there is, I think, ample authority. Soorjee-money Dossee v. Denobbundoo Mullick (3) decides the absolute right of the widow in her own right to the accumulations since the death of her husband, and in that case, as in the present, the income had not accumulated in the hands of the widow herself, but in the hands of the person from whom she was seeking to recover.

That case shows that her right to them is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump. Whether she receives them as they fall due, or whether she receives them after they have accumulated in the hands of others, her right is the same.

In Grose v. Amirtamayi Dasi (4) Mr. Justice Macpherson held that the accumulations followed the corpus, but as pointed out by the Privy Council in Ishri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Macpherson seems to be at variance with the case of Soorjee-Mony Dossee v. Denobbundoo Mullick. Much reliance was placed by Mr. Pugh on the case of Rabutty Dossee v. Shib Chunder Mullick (5), but on a careful consideration of that case I do not think it [885] has in reality any bearing on the present. There what the widow was receiving, or at any rate the greater part of it, represented the corpus of the husband’s estate. The result of the compromise was that a sum of money was allotted to her as compensation for her husband’s share. In the present case the money received by the widow was in respect of her right to the profits after her husband’s death. At page 25 of the report the learned Judge, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, shows that the present question was to some extent considered by the Board, but that they did not think it necessary to decide it.

In Ishri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (1) the Privy Council say:—

"It is impossible to read Mr. Justice Ainslie's forcible argument without feeling that it is difficult to specify the point of time at which the widow loses her control over the unexpended portion of her income from her husband's estate. If she may spend or give away the whole, may she not put some by? If she saves one year or month, may she not spend those savings the next year or month? If she may save and spend again, may she not place her savings so as to get some income from them, and so on through all the steps of the sorites."

About the first proposition there is, I think, no doubt. With regard to the second proposition, I think I must hold that if a Hindu widow invests the income of her husband's property in the purchase of other property as a permanent investment, she cannot afterwards alienate it. Judging from expressions which have been used by the Privy Council, I think it possible that if the matter were again considered the power of the widow over the property might be established; but I am bound by what the Privy Council say in Ishri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain.

After examining the authorities on this very question they there say: "This is the state of the authorities, and their Lordships, differing from the learned Judges below, think it must be taken as adverse to the claim made on behalf of the widow." The question has never been expressly decided either by the Privy Council or by a Full Bench of this Court, but as a Judge of an Original Court [886] I must act upon what has been held to be the state of the authorities.

The question here is really on the facts. Has there been an investment of a permanent nature such as to add to the corpus of the husband's estate, or rather, as in this case the residue of the estate went to Shama Churn Mullick, such as to render it available to the heirs of the husband. All the cases in which property bought by the widow out of the profits of her husband's estate has been held to belong to that estate are cases where immovable property has been bought. In no one of the cases that have been cited, except in the case of Bhagbutti Duce v. Chowdhry Bholanath Thakoor (2), where the expressions used have been held only to apply to the particular case (see I. L. R., 10 Calc., 387), has it been held that a widow cannot purchase jewellery or other moveable property for her own absolute use out of the profits of her husband's estate? Were she to advance to any person any portion of the profits by way of loan, does she by doing so make the money advanced by her a portion of her husband's estate? I think not. If it were so, having once lent any money, she would never lend it again. I do not know that there is any real difference between the case of lending money to a private individual on a promissory note and purchasing a Government promissory note.

The notes are purchased more as a convenient and safe mode of keeping the money than as an investment of a permanent nature. Putting the case in another way, does a widow by using them only alter her rights in it? Were she to accumulate it in her house or in a bank, she would retain her absolute right. I do not think that the fact that she lends it out at interest to Government alters her right. There might be a case where a widow in buying Government paper showed that she intended to augment her husband’s estate, but there is no evidence which can suggest this here. There is everything to the contrary here. There was no estate of her husband’s in her hands for her to augment.

(1) 10 C. 334.
(2) 2 I. A. 256 (260, 261).

I do not think that the law intends the husband’s estate to benefit by any investment which is not of a permanent [887] nature and I do not think that the widow here intended the money to remain permanently in Government paper.

I find as a fact that the widow by purchasing the Government paper did not intend to augment her husband’s estate, and that she kept it distinct from her husband’s estate. On the 5th issue, I find that Badamcoomary had power to dispose of the Government paper which she made over to Mr. Broughton on the trusts of the deed of settlement.

As to the 6th issue I think it clear beyond argument that she was entitled to the legacy of a lac of rupees, and not merely to the income of that legacy. The terms of the will are perfectly clear.

The other issues are issues, of fact, and will have to be tried. It remains to deal with the application for maintenance. I think there must be a reference to the Registrar to enquire and report what should be allowed for the maintenance of the plaintiff. Costs of this hearing and of the motion to be costs in the cause.

CRIMINAL MOTION.

Practice—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 435—Revision by the High Court; Revision where lower Court has concurrent jurisdiction with High Court.

The High Court will not entertain an application for revision in cases where the District Court or Magistrate has concurrent revisional jurisdiction with the High Court save on some special ground shown, unless a previous application shall have been made to the lower Court; but in cases in which concurrent jurisdiction is not possessed by the lower Courts, on such general rule exists.

[888] This was an application made, on 7th October 1887, during the vacation, to set aside, a conviction and sentence of the Deputy Magistrate of Giridhi, on the ground that he had heard and tried cross cases of rioting together, and had thereby prejudiced the applicants in their defence.

Before hearing the application, the Court (Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Ghose), on discovering that the applicant had not, before coming up to the High Court, applied to the Sessions Judge, and being divided in opinion as to whether the applicant was legally bound so first to apply to the Sessions Judge, directed that the application should be renewed, if necessary, before the Criminal Bench after the re-opening of the Court after the vacation.

On the 1st November 1887, the application was renewed before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Pigot, who, after hearing Mr. Bell on behalf of the applicant, and after consultation with the Chief Justice and the other Judges of the Court on the point, decided that they would hear the application, intimating that the practice of the Court should be understood to be, that in cases where the District Court or Magistrate has concurrent revisional jurisdiction with the High Court, an application in revision will not be entertained save on some special ground shown unless a previous application shall have been made to the lower Court; but that in cases in which concurrent jurisdiction is not possessed by the lower Court no such general rule exists.

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

MITCHELL REID AND Co. (Plaintiffs) v. BULDEO Doss KHETTRY (Defendant)* [13th June, 1887.]

Sale of goods by description—Purchaser's right to reject—Whether goods according to contract or not, how relevant—Delivery of part of the goods—Contract Act, s. 78—Suit for price of goods rejected.

B.K. agreed to buy from M.R. five bales of chrome orange twist, "or any part thereof that may be in a merchantable condition, ex 'City of Cambridge,' or other vessel or vessels, with specific marks and numbers, each bale containing 500 lbs. at so much per lb., to be paid for on or before delivery. B.K. took delivery of and paid for only one bale, but rejected the others. M.R. brought a suit for the price of the four bales rejected.

Held, that the property in the goods did not pass to the defendant by the terms of the contract, nor was the delivery that was taken by him of the one bale a delivery of "part of the goods" within the meaning of ss. 78 and 92 of the Contract Act; the suit, therefore, did not lie.

Held, also, that the question whether the defendant was entitled to refuse the goods, in other words whether the goods were according to the contract or not, was one that was unnecessary for the purposes of the present suit; but it would have been otherwise if the suit were one for damages on the ground of the defendant's refusal to accept the goods.

A purchaser's right to reject goods by reason of their not answering the description in the contract may be independent of the question whether the property in the goods has passed to him or not.

[2] MITCHELL REID & Co. entered into a contract with Buldeo Doss Khetry, by which the latter agreed to buy, or acknowledged to have purchased from the said Company, "the goods or any part thereof that may be in a merchantable condition hereunder particularly specified at the price stated below, viz., ex "City of Cambridge" or other vessel or vessels ___ horse tickets, each 500 lbs. at 0-9-9 per lb., 50 days G. delivery." It was further agreed between the parties that the goods should be paid for on or before delivery. Subsequently Buldeo Doss Khetry took delivery of only one bale and paid for it, but refused to take delivery of the remaining four bales. Mitchell Reid & Co., thereupon brought a suit in the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta to recover the price of the four bales refused. The defendant pleaded that the goods were not according to the description in the contract; but it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the goods in question being ascertained goods, the property in the goods had passed to the buyer, and no defence therefore could be raised to the suit. There was no evidence at the trial whether the goods were or were not according to the description in the contract. The Court, upon a comparison of ss. 112, 113 and 117 of the Contract Act with s. 78, was of opinion that the goods in question were ascertained goods sold with a warranty, and inasmuch as the seller had failed to prove that the goods were according to warranty, dismissed the suit, subject, however, to the reference of the following questions to the High Court:

(1) Is the defendant (the buyer) entitled to reject the goods under the circumstances stated?

(2) Is the defendant entitled to raise the defence raised by him in this suit?

Mr. Bonnerjee for the plaintiffs—The language of the contract passes the goods to the defendant. The property passed as soon as the contract was made. Moreover, there was a delivery of one bale—s. 78, para. 2 of the Contract Act. It was the duty of the defendant to ask for a sufficient examination of the goods; but he does not seem to have done so. The onus is upon the buyer to show [3] that the goods did not come up to the description. [Wilson, J.—Read s. 78 with s. 92 of the Contract Act.] Whether there has been delivery is a question of fact. The Legislature makes a distinction between ascertained and unascertained goods, that is, ascertained or unascertained at the date of the contract—Heyworth v. Hutchinson (1). The goods here are ascertained goods. There was a delivery of part of the goods, and the effect of the Judge's finding is that the property in the goods passed to the buyer, otherwise the Judge would not have referred to s. 78 of the Contract Act. The plaintiffs are entitled to the relief sued for.

Mr. Garth for the defendant.—There is no evidence on the part of the plaintiffs to show that the property in the goods passed; the suit therefore fails. Assume that the property in the goods passed, the goods have not been delivered, and therefore we are not bound to pay for them. There is nothing to show that the goods were delivered. [Wilson, J.—We must take it as found that the plaintiffs offered to deliver the bales.] The four bales were not identical with those mentioned in the contract [Wilson, J.—There is no evidence either way whether the goods were according to contract.] We had no opportunity to examine the goods, and the plaintiffs upon the contract were bound to show that the goods were in a merchantable condition.

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—The facts found in this case are these: That on the 9th June 1886, a contract was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant, by which the defendant agreed to buy, or in form acknowledged that he had bought, from the plaintiffs the goods described as follows, namely, "the goods or any part thereof that may be in a merchantable condition hereunder particularly specified, at the price stated below, viz., ex 'City of Cambridge' or other vessel or vessels," with certain marks and then the numbers "1191/93, 5 bales chrome orange twist No. 40, 5 lb. bundles horse tickets, each 500 lbs. at 0-9-0 per lb., 50 days G. delivery." Then there are certain conditions below, the most important [4] of which are these: The purchaser agreed to pay for the goods before or on delivery, deducting certain discount, or to grant promissory notes at the option of the sellers, and to take delivery within five days, which seems hardly consistent with what is stated above. There is a further clause expressly authorizing the sellers to resell in case of default. That document has been held to be, and I assume rightly, a document relating to the sale of five specified bales, described not only by their marks, but by the particular numbers on the bales; and that is the footing on which everybody apparently has always treated the case. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court speaks of the contract being one for ascertained goods. And when he comes to state the subsequent facts, he says: "Five bales had been previously sold, and the defendant took delivery of one bale and paid for it, but refused to take delivery of the remaining four bales." Those are the facts. The suit was brought by the sellers for the price of the four bales refused. The defendant sets up as his defence, to justify his having refused to take delivery of four bales, that the goods in the bales were not according to contract. Apparently the defect objected to was that they did not comply with the term of description "No. 40," and perhaps not in the description "5 lb. bundles." On that subject it is found that there is no evidence on either side; there is no evidence that the goods were according to the description, and none that they were not. Under those circumstances the learned Judge has dismissed the suit subject to a reference of the following questions:—

1. Is the defendant (the buyer) entitled to reject the goods under the circumstances stated?
2. Is the defendant entitled to raise the defence raised by him in this suit?

It will be convenient to answer the second of these questions first—whether the defendant in this suit is entitled to raise the defence that the goods are not according to the contract. It is said that he is not, because it is contended that the property in the four bales, as well as in the bale which had been delivered to him, had passed to the buyer. To us it seems clear that whether the property in the goods passed to him or not, he is entitled to reject the goods if they are not in accordance with the description in the contract, if that description forms, as it does here, an actual part of the conditions of the contract, and not something collateral to it. Even by the law of England the question of the right to reject does not necessarily always depend upon the question whether the property has passed or not. In this country it appears to us that the intention of the Legislature was to make the two things wholly independent of one another. It appears to us that, under the law in this country, a man is not bound, unless he has altered his position by some conduct of his own, to accept and to pay for goods which are not in accordance with the description of the goods he bargained for. If any statutory authority is necessary for that, we think the general principle laid down in s. 51 of the Contract Act applies to the case: "When a contract consists of reciprocal promises to be simultaneously performed, no promisor need perform his promise unless the promisee is ready and willing to perform his reciprocal promise. That is to say, applying that to this case, we do not think that a man is bound to take, or can be compelled to pay for, goods unless the seller of the goods is ready and willing to deliver to him goods in accordance with the bargain entered into, so that we have no hesitation in answering the second question in the affirmative.
The other question which the learned Judge asks us gives rise to more difficulty. The question is: "Is the defendant (the buyer) entitled to reject the goods under the circumstances stated? In order to make our answer to that question clear it is necessary to state in what sense we understand the question. We understand the question thus: "Is the plaintiff entitled to maintain this suit by reason of the defendant having rejected the goods under the circumstances stated?" If we did not understand it so we should not be able to answer the question.

With regard to this the first point discussed was, on whom the burden of proof properly lay in this case, whether upon the plaintiff to show that the bales which he tendered were according to contract, or upon the defendant to show that the bales which he rejected were so far not in accordance with contract as to justify him in rejecting them? We do not think it necessary [6] to answer that question in this case, and for this reason: It appears to us plain on the contract itself, and on the finding as to what has happened since, that the property in the four rejected bales has never passed to the defendant, the buyer. It is said for the plaintiff that the property did pass by reason of the operation of s. 78 of the Contract Act. That section says that, "where there is a contract for the sale of ascertained goods, the property in the goods sold passes to the buyer when the whole or part of the price, or when the earnest, is paid, or when the whole or part of the goods is delivered." It is argued here that, when the defendant took delivery of the one bale and paid for it, the effect was to pass the property in the other bales to him of which he did not take delivery.

In order to see the meaning of the words in s. 78 with regard to the delivery of part of the goods, it is necessary to go on to s. 92, which deals with the same subject and deals with it more in detail. It says: "A delivery of parts of goods, in progress of the delivery of the whole, has the same effect, for the purpose of passing the property in such goods, as a delivery of the whole; but a delivery of part of the goods, with an intention of severing it from the whole, does not operate as a delivery of the remainder." Two of the illustrations in that section may be usefully referred to. Illustration (b) is this: "A sells to B a stack of firewood, to be paid for by B on delivery. After the sale B applies for and obtains from A leave to take away some of the firewood. This has not the legal effect of delivery of the whole." Illustration (c) is this: "A sells 50 maunds of rice to B. The rice remains in A’s warehouse. After the sale B sells to C 10 maunds of the rice, and A at B’s desire sends the 10 maunds to C. This has not the legal effect of a delivery of the whole."

Now each of these cases, especially the illustration (b), is somewhat like the present case. But there are circumstances in this case which strengthen very much the inference that there has been no such part delivery as to pass the property in the whole goods. In the first place, when we turn to the contract itself, we find that it is for cash on delivery, and that the price is a separate and distinct price for each bale, because each bale is to contain a certain weight and the price is so much per pound. The only [7] possible construction is that each bale is to be paid for on or before the delivery of that bale; and in accordance with that the price was paid for the bale delivered.

There is another point in the contract. It is not an absolute contract for the purchase of 5 bales, but for the purchase "of the goods or any part thereof that may be in a merchantable condition." It seems to us that the purchaser must have an opportunity, in the case of each bale, before he can be required to take delivery of it, to ascertain whether that particular bale is in that condition, showing therefore that the transaction with regard to each bale must be a separate transaction. The result is that, in our judgment, the case does not fall within the words of s. 78, under which it has been sought to bring it; and that the property has never passed to the purchaser except in the one bale delivered and taken.

There being no evidence either way as to whether the bales were according to the contract or not, it is impossible to say on the evidence as it stands whether the case was one in which the buyer was justified by the terms of the contract in rejecting the four bales. If it were necessary to decide that question we should have to say on whom the burden lay, and to decide it against that party, whoever he might be. But we think it unnecessary to decide that, because, whether the bales were properly rejected or not, if, as we hold, the property has never passed to the defendant in the four bales of which he refused delivery, this suit cannot lie. This is a suit for the price of the four bales, whereas, if any suit could lie, it would be a suit for damages for refusing to accept the bales, the measure of damages being not the price, but the difference between the contract price and the market price.

Understanding, therefore, the question put by the learned Judge in the sense stated, namely, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain this suit by reason of the defendant having rejected the goods under the circumstances stated, we answer that question in the negative.

Watson & Company (Defendants) v. Sham Lal Mitter (Plaintiff). [30th June and 1st and 9th July, 1887.]

Guardian and Minor—Enhancement of rent. Effect of—Acts of mother and guardian how far binding on minor son—Kabuliyyat given by widow in possession to bind her son and successor to pay enhanced rent decreed against her—Admission not amounting to estoppel.

A putnidar obtained decrees for the enhancement of the rent of holdings in the possession of the widow of a deceased tenant, one decree being in respect of land formerly held by the latter, and the other in respect of a holding purchased by the widow on behalf of her minor son by the deceased, whilst the enhancement suits were pending. The widow also signed kabuliyyats relating to both tenancies, agreeing, as mother of the minor, to pay enhanced rent.

Held, that as the putnidar was entitled to sue for enhancement, and it was not to be presumed that the mother held adversely to her son; also as she had come to what she believed to be, and was, a proper arrangement, the son on his attaining full age and entering into possession of the tenancies was bound by the kabuliyyats.
The putidar was not precluded by the fact that he had, after the son had attained full age, sued the mother as tenant, stating that she, and not the son, was tenant.

Appeal from a decree (12th September 1884) of the High Court, in part affirming, and in part reversing, on the appeal and cross-appeal of the plaintiff and the defendants, a decree (12th May 1882) of the Subordinate Judge of Midnapore.

The object of the suit, out of which this appeal arose, was to establish the plaintiff's right to hold, at their original rents, two tenancies, one paying Rs. 65-13-9 and the other Rs. 113-13, in two villages, called respectively Kuilibadi and Gilabani, situate within the defendants' putti taluk, Pargunnah Bogri, in the Midnapore District, unaffected by a decree for enhancement in respect of the rent of each. These decrees had been obtained by the defendants during the plaintiff's minority against his mother, and the issues at the hearing were, in effect, whether [9] the plaintiff was bound by the decrees, or by kabuliyaats executed by his mother, agreeing to pay the enhanced rent.

It appeared that pottahs were granted by former zemindars of Pargunnah Bogri to former ryots of the tenancies in question at the above mentioned rents, and that the holdings had come by transfer to Gopinath Mitter and his sister, Pearimoni Dasi, who, although the names of the original jotedars were kept in the appellants' serishta, took receipts in their joint names for the rents paid by them. Gopinath died in 1858, leaving his wife Haimabati, then pregnant, who in 1859 bore a son to him. This son was Sham Lal Mitter, the present respondent. Haimabati had taken possession, and against her, on the 16th May 1859, a few days after Sham Lal Mitter was born, the present appellants commenced proceedings to enhance the rent payable by her; also against Pearimoni Dasi for the same purpose. While these suits were pending Pearimoni Dasi, on the 18th November 1860, executed a deed of sale to Haimabati as 'mother and guardian of Sham Lal Mitter, minor,' by which Peari Dasi, in consideration of Rs. 5,000, sold her moiety to her.

On the 26th January 1861, the Principal Sudder Amin held that these appellants, the plaintiffs in the enhancement suits, had a right to enhance, and on an enquiry by an Amin deputed for the purpose fixed the rent of the lands in Kuilibadi at Rs. 529-14-9, and of those in Gilabani at Rs. 675-13-2.

On the 3rd September 1865, Haimabati, describing herself as mother and guardian of Sham Lal Mitter, minor, executed two dowl settlements for the two holdings, with the rent fixed at the enhanced rate; and on the 28th January 1867, she, describing herself in like manner, executed kabuliyaats to these appellants. The respondent attained the age of 18 years on 10th May 1877, and on 16th July 1877, he deposited in Court the rent of Gilabani at the original rate, and obtained the issue of a notice by the Court calling on the appellants to accept that rent. This they declined to accept, alleging in their petition of the 19th January 1878, that there was no settlement in the name of the respondent, but that the name of Haimabati was registered in their serishta in respect of the enhanced rent.

[10] They, about the same time, instituted two rent suits against Haimabati to recover the rents of the holdings at the rate fixed in the kabuliys for the years 1284 and 1285 (April 1876 to January 1878), and having proceeded to execute their rent decrees against the holding under s. 59 of the Bengal Rent Act, VIII of 1859, the respondent, under s. 63 of the same Act, made (16th August 1880) two deposits of Rs. 1,632-6-5 and Rs. 1,570-9, respectively, in payment of the two decrees against his mother Haimabati, but claiming all the money in excess over the original rents. Other payments he also alleged, and made similar claims in respect of them. The Court, however, refused to recognize these claims, referring him to a regular suit to establish them; and thereupon he brought the present suit, praying for a declaration that the holdings in Kuliubadi and Gilabani were mokurari, and not liable to enhancement of rent; also a declaration that he was not bound by the decrees for enhancement obtained in 1861, nor by the kabuliys given by his mother to the putnidars in 1867. The plaint further asked that the defendants might be required to refund to him the sum of Rs. 7,800, the amount paid by him to save the estate from sale.

The Court of first instance held against the plaintiff as to the liability of the holdings to enhancement of rent; also that the plaintiff was not liable under the kabuliys, but that he was bound by the decree in respect of the tenancy taken over from Pearimoni, as his mother had purchased on his behalf.

Against the above, as dealt with in the decree, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The defendants appealed against that part of the decree by which the plaintiff was held not to be bound either by the decrees or by the kabuliys, to which his mother Haimabati was a party.

The High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.), observing that the suit was for a declaration of the plaintiff's right, his immediate cause of action being the rejection of his claim in the execution proceedings, confirmed the findings of the lower Court: first as to the liability to an enhancement of the rent of the tenancies; secondly, as to the plaintiff not being bound by any of the transactions to which his mother Haimabati was a party.

[11] But having come to that conclusion the High Court regarded it as impossible to say that the plaintiff was bound by the results of the litigation relating to the enhancement, he having been in existence before the litigation commenced, a fact within the knowledge of the putnidars, and they having omitted to make him a party to the suit, as they ought to have done. Nor could they hold that the plaintiff was bound, because he was virtually purchaser of Pearimoni's holding by the decree against her. They even doubted whether Pearimoni would have been bound by it. They held the plaintiff to be free from liability, either under the decrees of 1861, or the subsequent kabuliys of 1865 and 1867, and maintained that he was liable only to pay the original rents. The appeal of the defendants was, therefore, dismissed (under the circumstances without costs); and on the appeal of the plaintiff, the High Court declared that the plaintiff was not liable to pay anything more than the rents existing before 1861.

On this appeal,—

Sir H. Davey, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the appellants. Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondent.

For the appellants it was argued that, as to the tenancies, the decrees obtained by the appellants against the actual rent-payers enhanced the rents, and that Sham Lal Mitter was bound by the kabuliys given by Haimabati, his mother, who was, at the time when the decrees for enhancement were made, and at the date of the kabuliyats, acting as his natural guardian. Peeri Dasi, had she retained her interest until decree, would have been bound by it; and the plaintiff was also bound.

As regards Haimabati's position as guardian, reference was made to Regulation V of 1799, s. 2; Act XL of 1858 (relating to minors); Hooman Persaud Panday v. Munraj Koonweree (1); Ramechunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojonath Mozumdar (2).

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondent, argued that he was not bound by the decrees for (12) enhancement or by the kabuliyats. Except as guardian to her son, Haimabati on his birth became disentitled to the estate; and therefore no decrees obtained against her, and no agreements entered into by her, in her personal capacity, could bind the estate. In fact, she did not profess to act, and was not supposed to be acting as guardian to her son in any of the dealings relating to the estate, which took place between her and the appellants subsequently to her son's birth. In reference to the widow's agency and the power of an agent to bind either himself or his principal, but not both, reference was made to the judgment in Priestly v. Fernie (3); and in regard to powers of a guardian Waghela Raksanjee v. Shekh Masudin (4) was cited.

The appellants were estopped from asserting that Haimabati represented, or that they dealt with her as representing, Sham Lal Mitter, or that she was capable of binding him as being his agent. They had treated her as the tenant herself in the two rent suits of 1878.

Counsel for the appellants were not called upon to rely.

On a subsequent day (July 9th) their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

Sir R. Couch.—The plaintiff in this suit and respondent in the appeal is a tenant of two mouzahs, named Kuilibadi and Gilabani, under the defendants and appellants, who are putnidars of Pergunnah Bogri. The principal object of the suit was to obtain a declaration that the tenant is not bound by two decrees for enhancement of the rent of those mouzahs obtained in January 1861 against Srimati Haimabati and Srimati Peeri Dasi, and by kabuliyats given by Srimati Haimabati to the putnidars in January 1867. The plaintiff also asked for a declaration that the mouzahs were not liable to have the rent enhanced, and that the defendants might be required to refund to him the sum of Rs. 7,800-1-5 Gundahs, the amount paid by him to prevent the sale of the mouzahs in execution of decrees obtained by the defendants against Srimati Haimabati. It has [13] been found by both the lower Courts that the mouzahs were liable to an enhanced rent, and so that question is no longer in dispute.

The mouzahs were originally held by Jaggu Mundul Saonta and Soonder Mundul Saonta, and by a succession of transfers they came into the possession of Kasi Nath Ghose. He, on the 17th of September, 1850, sold one moiety of them to the plaintiff's father, Gopinath Mitter, and about the same time made a gift of the other moiety to his wife, Srimati Peeri Dasi. Gopinath died in October, 1858, leaving his widow Haimabati, who on the 10th of May, 1859, gave birth to the plaintiff. On the death of Gopinath, Haimabati appears to have entered into possession of his estate, and to have been recognized by the defendants as tenant. On the 16th of May, 1859, immediately after the birth of the plaintiff, the defendants caused notices of enhancement to be served upon Haimabati Dasi and Peari Dasi; and on the 17th June, 1859, they instituted two suits against them for enhancement of rent, one as to each mouzah. On the 18th of November, 1860, whilst the suits were pending, Peari Dasi sold her moiety to Haimabati, who is described in the deed of sale as "mother and guardian of Sham Lal Mitter, minor," and it is apparent, from the deed that the purchase was made on his behalf. No change, however, was made in the suits.

On the 26th of January, 1861, the defendants obtained a decree in each suit against Haimabati Dasi and Peari Dasi, declaring that they had the right of enhancement, but the rate of enhancement was to be determined after local investigation. This was made, and by an order dated the 25th of June, 1861, the rent of Kuilibad was fixed at Rs. 529-14-14 gunahs, and of Gilabani at Rs. 675-2-13-2 cowries. Soon after this, on the 26th of September, 1861, a compromise was made between the defendants and Haimabati for payment by instalments of what was due on account of Gilabani. In 1865 the defendants appear to have caused a re-survey to be made of the mouzahs, and Haimabati on the 3rd of September, 1865, executed two dowls of settlements of land and jumma, one of each mouzah. In these the rents fixed by the decrees are stated, and also a rent for other lands which had apparently come under [14] cultivation, or for which rent might be claimed. The additional rent was Rs. 270-3 for Gilabani and Rs. 114-8 for Kuilibad. These documents are both signed "Haimabati Dasi, mother of Sham Lal Mitter, minor." On the 28th of January 1867, Haimabati executed two kabuliyats, one for each mouzah, signed in the same way as the dowls in which the rent fixed by the decree for enhancement is stated, and also the additional rent named in the dowl, together with a small sum for other land, and she agreed to pay the rent by instalments, year by year. Probably there was some land which had become subject to pay rent since the dowls were executed.

The plaintiff attained his majority on the 10th of May 1877. On the 16th of July 1877, he deposited in Court Rs. 35-1-15 gunahs for rent of Gilabani, the defendants having refused to take it, and on the 19th January 1878 the defendants presented a petition in which they stated that the name of Sham Lal Mitter was not registered in their sherista, and he was not a tenant of Gilabani mouzah; that Haimabati Dasi held under them 3,579 bighas 17 cottahs 8 chittacks of land in Gilabani mouzah, on an annual rental of Rs. 948-13-13-2 cowries, and the name of Haimabati was registered in their sherista, and, therefore, they were not bound to take the money in deposit. About this time they appear to have brought suits against Haimabati for arrears of rent. They are numbered 2 and 3 of 1878, but the date of the filing of the plaints does not appear in the record of proceedings. The Judgment in each was given on the 2nd of December 1878, and it states that the defence of Haimabati was that she executed the kabuliyat upon which the suit was based, not in her personal capacity, but as guardian of her then minor son, Sham Lal Mitter, and, as he had become a major, the suit ought to be instituted against him, and not against her. An issue was settled on this allegation: and the Subordinate Judge adopting the translation of her signature which has been given, held that the words used in the kabuliyats did not themselves convey the meaning contended for by the defendant, viz., that Haimabati executed the instrument as

The defendants proceeded to execute the decrees and, the moulzahs having been attached, the plaintiff made a claim under s. 63 of Act VIII of 1869, which was rejected by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the claimant's name was not registered in the sherista of the defendants, the Judge saying that he "ought to bring a suit in the usual way to find out whether he was bound to pay the former rent, and whether the payment of the enhanced rent of the jote was binding on him." The 10th of January, 1881, was fixed for the sale, and on that day the plaintiff paid into Court the whole amount due under the decrees, whereupon it was ordered that the sale be stayed. The present suit was instituted on the 11th of February, 1881, the sum so paid being what is sought to be refunded. The substantial question in the suit is whether the plaintiff is bound by the decrees for enhancement obtained against Haimabati and Peari, or by the kabuliys. It was admitted by the learned counsel for the appellants that he is not bound by the decree as against Haimabati, but they contended that he is bound by it as against Peari, having purchased her moiety during the suit, and that it made him liable to pay the whole of the enhanced rent. Upon this question the lower Courts have differed. The learned counsel relied upon the kabuliys as being executed by the plaintiff's mother, who was his natural guardian, and upon the absence of any suggestion that the enhancement of rent was otherwise than proper. At the close of the argument for the appellants their Lordships intimated to Mr. Mayne, who appeared for the respondent, their wish that they should first hear his argument upon the effect of the kabuliys. Having done that they have come to a conclusion which makes it unnecessary to hear any further argument.

The addition to Haimabati's name of the words "mother of Sham Lal Mitter, minor," must, in their Lordships' opinion, be considered as meaning that she was contracting as the mother and guardian of her infant son. Undoubtedly, the statement of the appellants in their petition of the 19th of January, 1878, and their suing Haimabati after the plaintiff's coming of age for rent due partly before and partly after that time, are weighty evidence against their present contention, but the evidence [16] amounts only to admissions by them that Haimabati was the tenant, and no fact is proved which would make the admissions conclusive against them. The evidence of the dowls and kabuliys has to be considered, and their Lordships think that outweighs the admissions. It is to be observed that this evidence is treated rather lightly by both the lower Courts. The Subordinate Judge does not notice the addition to the signature, and says: "These kabuliys were executed by the plaintiff's mother not as his guardian, but for herself. They cannot, therefore, bind the plaintiff. It has been held in previous rent suits, based upon these kabuliys, that the plaintiff's mother granted them in her personal capacity and was liable for rent." The judgment of the High Court in the statement of facts merely says: "Subsequently, in 1865 and 1867, Haimabati, not professedly as guardian of the plaintiff, but in her own name, gave kabuliys to the putnidars."

It cannot be presumed that Haimabati claimed the estate adversely to her son, and the substance of the case is that the estate being under her management as his natural guardian, and the appellants being able to sue for an enhancement of the rent, she came to what appeared to be, and she was advised was, a proper arrangement with them. If there were.
any doubt as to the capacity in which she acted, it should be presumed that she did so in her lawful capacity. As the other questions in the appeal have not been argued on behalf of the respondents, their Lordships give no opinion on them. They will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decrees of both the lower Courts should be reversed, and a decree be made dismissing the suit, with costs in both those Courts. The respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

NILMONY DASSY for self and as guardian of Bishu Doshayi and another (minors) (Plaintiffs) v. Sonatun Doshayi and others (Defendants).*

Right of occupancy—Non-payment of rent—Relinquishment, Evidence of.

Mere non-payment of rent does not extinguish or amount to a relinquishment of the right of occupancy.

_Hem Chundra Chowdhari v. Chand Akund_ (1) explained.

NILMONY DASSY, on behalf of herself and as guardian of Bisshu Doshayi and another, brought a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council and Sonatun Doshayi and others for recovery of possession of a certain holding in a _khas_ mehal by establishment of the right of occupancy on the allegation that the plaintiffs had since the Bengal year 1290 (1883) been kept out of possession by the defendants Sonatun Doshayi and others who had obtained a lease from Government. The defendants raised the contention that the plaintiffs had prior to 1290 gone to live in another village and ceased to cultivate and pay rent for the lands in question, and were therefore not entitled to the relief prayed for on the authority of_ Muneeruddeen v. Mahomed Ali_ (2);_ Nuddear Chand Poddar v. Modhoo Soodun Poddar_ (3);_ Haro Dass v. Gobind Bhattacharjee_ (4);_ Ram Chung v. Gora Chand Chung_ (5);_ Gulam Ali Mundul v. Golap Soondery Dossee_ (6).

The Munsif found that the right of occupancy had been established, that as a matter of fact there had been a failure in [18] the payment of rent for three or four years; but there was nothing to show that the plaintiffs had either gone to live in another village or ceased to cultivate their holding as contended by the defendants, and therefore, as there was no relinquishment, he gave the plaintiffs a decree.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge, relying upon the authority of _Hem Chundra Chowdhari v. Chand Akund_ (1), held that the plaintiffs had no

The judgment of the Court (Norris and O'Kinealy, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The facts of this case appear to be these: One Gopal Dolai, the husband of the plaintiff No. 1 in this suit and the brother of the minor plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, had either in or previous to the year 1290 obtained an occupancy right in respect of certain paddy lands. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of these lands from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 upon the establishment of the plaintiffs' title; and the title they claimed was that of an occupancy ryot. It appears that no rent had been paid by the plaintiffs or Gopal, their predecessor, for this land for some four or five years previous to the year 1290; and it was admitted by the plaintiffs that neither they nor their predecessor Gopal had cultivated the lands since the year 1290. There was no distinct finding by the lower appellate Court as to when the plaintiffs or their predecessor had ceased to cultivate the lands. Upon the facts, as we have stated them, the Subordinate Judge, upon the authority of the case of Hem Chundra Chowdhari v. Chand Akund (1), decided that the plaintiffs had at the time of bringing their suit no subsisting right of occupancy in the lands, as they had neglected or omitted to pay rent for some years before the institution of this suit. If the case to which the Subordinate Judge has alluded decides, as a matter of law, that the mere non-payment of rent will be sufficient of itself to warrant the Court in finding that the occupancy right has been lost, we think that the decision goes too far. But, speaking for myself, I do not think that the judgment goes to that extent. The judgment must be read in the light of the facts of the case. But we think that the Subordinate Judge ought to find as a fact, whether at the time the suit was brought there was a subsisting right of occupancy, and for that purpose he ought to ascertain for what length of time the plaintiffs or their predecessor had ceased to cultivate the lands. As we have already pointed out, we think that the mere non-payment of rent taken by itself is not sufficient to warrant the Judge in coming to the conclusion, that there is no subsisting right of occupancy. But it may be that the fact that the plaintiffs had for so long a time ceased to cultivate the lands, coupled with the non-payment of rent, would be evidence upon which the Court might ultimately come to the conclusion that there had been a relinquishment of the right of occupancy. In the light of these remarks we remand the case to the lower appellate Court to find as a matter of fact whether at the time the suit was brought the plaintiffs had a subsisting right of occupancy.

We will keep the case on the file of this Court and direct the Subordinate Judge to return his finding within one week from the reopening of the Court after the ensuing vacation.

Costs will abide the result.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

UMAN PARSHAD (Plaintiff) v. GANDHARP SINGH (Defendant.)

[2nd, 5th and 6th July, 1887.]

Evidence—Validity of Transfer—Benami transaction—Wajib-ul-arz,

A transfer by registered deed, admitted to have been executed, but alleged to have been benami and merely colorable, was held, on the evidence, to have been valid and effective in the absence of evidence showing the contrary.

A settlement officer should not receive for entry in the Wajib-ul-arz of a village a mere expression of the views of a proprietor or enter it upon the records relating to the village, the Wajib-ul-arz being intended to be the official record of local customs.

APPEAL from a decree (10th November 1884), of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree (17th April 1883) of the District Judge of Sitapur.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was to obtain possession of four villages in the Sitapur district, claimed by the present appellant, who was plaintiff, under two sale deeds, dated 29th May 1863 and 9th February 1864. It was the common case of both parties that before the execution of these deeds by Gulab Kunwar, widow of Tuskaran Singh, she was entitled to the villages in full proprietary right, and she purported to convey the latter by the sale deeds in question to Bissesur Baksh, her son-in-law, the deeds being duly registered.

The plaintiff alleged that the effect of these deeds was to pass the title in the villages to Bissesur Baksh, who died childless on the 7th November 1865, and that he was succeeded by his widows, the survivor of whom died in October 1879, and that thereupon the plaintiff as the next heir of Bissesur Baksh, being his uncle, became entitled to succeed to the proprietary right.

The defendant contended that the sale deeds of 1863 and 1864 were benami transactions never acted upon, and not intended to pass the title, which remained in Gulab Kunwar till her death, which took place on the 7th December 1866; that on her death her daughter Fatteh Kunwar succeeded her; and that Fatteh conveyed these four villages in 1876, by a deed of gift, to her daughter Munnia, who died in her mother’s lifetime childless in March, 1879; and that thereupon the defendant, her husband, succeeded by right of inheritance, and had since, with the consent of Fatteh, been in possession.

The main questions on this appeal were whether these sale deeds were benami only, or operated to pass title; and whether there had been possession of the four villages by Gulab Kunwar continuously from the date of the transaction, there being no dispute as to the making of the instruments at their respective dates.
The District Judge held that the deeds were executed for good consideration and valid, and that therefore Bisseros Baksh was entitled, on the death of Fatteh, to obtain possession. He was of opinion that the defendant had failed to prove that the sale by Gulab in 1864 was not real, and had failed to prove Fatteh’s title as heir to the villages through her mother Gulab, they having been alienated by Gulab before her death; also that the villages were the subject of a gift from Fatteh to Munnia had not been proved.

The Judicial Commissioner on appeal was of the contrary opinion. He decided that Gulab did not, when she executed the deeds of 1863 and 1864, part with possession to Bisseros, but continued herself to hold the villages; and therefore, in his judgment, the suit was barred by limitation, not having been brought within twelve years from the dates of the deeds of sale. Another reason for deciding in favour of the defendant was, according to the Judicial Commissioner, that Bisseros’s widows could not have taken more than an interest each for her life, one of the grounds on which the Judicial Commissioner so held being the evidence afforded by certain wajib-ul-ars, or records of rights, appertaining to the villages in suit, put in evidence by the defendant. These were considered by the Judicial Commissioner as affording proof that a widow, such as Fatteh, had, by custom, power to alienate absolutely her husband’s estate, this showing, in the Judicial Commissioner’s opinion, [22] that Fatteh’s gift to her daughter Munnia was valid, his opinion on this point being opposed to that of the District Judge, the latter holding them to be valueless as evidence.

On this appeal,—
Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. D. Mayne appeared for the appellant.
Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. H. Cowell, for the defendant.

For the appellant it was argued that the defendant had failed to prove that the deed of 1863 and 1864 were merely colourable. They were followed by possession, and as to the estate supposed to be taken by the widow of Bissers, she took no more than the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow. No sufficient evidence, if any, had been given by the respondent of a custom in derogation of the ordinary law on this point, which law would invalidate the alienation by the widow except for proved necessity. The wajib-ul-ars should not, under the circumstances, and with regard to what the entry was, be regarded as affording any evidence of the custom alleged for widows to transfer without restriction.

For the respondent it was contended that upon the evidence the deeds in question were benami and inoperative. Mutation of names in favour of Fatteh had taken place and she had made a valid gift to her daughter.

The following authorities were referred to: Sreeman Chunder Day v. Gopal Chunder Chuckerbutty (1); Faez Buksh Chowdhry v. Fukeeroodeen Mohommed Ahussun Chowdhry (2); Kedhanath Mahatah v. Kadumbinee Dabea (3); Lakhraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh (4); Regulation VII of 1822; Act XVII of 1876 (the Oudh Land Revenue Act).

Counsel for the appellant were not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by

LORD HOBHOUSE:—In this case only one question was argued, and that was whether the two transfers executed by Gulab in the years 1863 and 1864 to Bissesur, the husband of her only daughter, [23] were real transfers, or benami. That question turned out to be a complicated one, and it was necessary to go into a good deal of evidence of a varied and rather voluminous nature. The plaintiff maintains that the substance of the transaction is the same as the form of it, and that the property, consisting of four villages, conveyed to him by deeds, duly attested registered immediately afterwards and subsequently proved and filed in a suit, was actually sold to him. As to the deeds there was no doubt. The only question is whether Bissesur, the grantee, was a benamidar.

It is familiar to all that the system of putting property benami is so extremely common in India that the mere fact of a deed being executed in proper form, and apparently effecting a valid transfer to another, is not as good evidence of a real transfer as it would be in other countries, and even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose. Still such a tranfer cannot be considered as nothing. The person who impugns its apparent character must show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction.

The first question here is, what are the probabilities of the case on consideration of the deeds themselves, and the position of the grantor? What motive had Gulab for putting the property into benami? She was not purchasing the property. It was vested in her in possession, and had been so for a considerable number of years. It is not suggested that she was in any difficulties, so that creditors might be baffled by the proceeding. On the contrary it appears that she was a woman of substance and position in her own country. The only suggestion is that, inasmuch as there was a suit between her and her brothers-in-law, represented by one Balbhadar, concerning these villages, she used this transaction in order to impede Balbhadar's proceedings. But whatever such a transfer might do to impede general creditors, it is difficult to see how it could impede Balbhadar, who was claiming the property by a title as directly available against a transferee from Gulab as against Gulab herself. Moreover the four villages were part of fifteen villages which were the subject of dispute between her and her brothers-in-law, and which, he had received on a partition between them. With regard to some of [24] the fifteen villages she was out of possession. With regard to these four she was in possession. She was in possession of more; it requires a minute examination to tell how many, but certainly of five, and no reason can be assigned why she should have selected four villages out of those which were in dispute, and which were in her possession, and have placed those four in the name of a benamidar. There is no antecedent probability that this is a benami transaction.

Then their Lordships ask what is the direct evidence on the point—oral evidence given by witnesses who profess to speak to it. There are two witnesses called for the defendant—Hira Singh and Sitaram—who say that the transaction was a sham one, and that Gulab remained in possession; apparently they mean to say during the rest of her life. But they give no details; they speak to no acts of possession; even as to the time of possession their language is quite vague and general; and they tell, both of them, the most extraordinary story with respect to these deeds, namely, that when Balbhadar, the person against whom it was suggested that these deeds were to be a defence, appeared upon the scene, Gulab immediately told Balbhadar that the deeds were all sham deeds. Their

The only other witness who gives direct evidence on the subject is in rather a curious position. He was the patwari of one or more of these villages—certainly of the village of Turni—and he was called in this suit. His name is Sheo Sahai. In this suit he stated first that the transaction was a sham one, and that Gulab remained in possession, and received the rents. But then a document was put into his hands, which was a deposition made by him in a mutation proceeding sixteen years before and within three or four years of the date of the transactions, and he was asked whether it was true, and he said it was true. He was rather indignant at the truth of it being impugned, and he said: “Do you think I would tell a falsehood? Of course it is true.” But that deposition shows that there was a sale by Gulab to Bissesur, and that Bissesur entered into possession and received the rents, and that when Fatteh, who was the common heir of the two, Gulab and Bissesur, applied for a mutation of [25] names, she applied for it on the footing of Sheo Sahai’s evidence and as the heir of Bissesur. Therefore the evidence of Sheo Sahai must be taken as some evidence to show possession on behalf of Bissesur. There is actually no evidence the other way, and so the balance of testimony on that point inclines in favour of the plaintiff.

Their Lordships will now return to another branch of the case. It is said that there is no mutation of names; that no witnesses have been called to prove the deeds; that no proof has been given of payment of the money; no proof of the receipt of the rents; and no proof of the payment of the revenue by Bissesur. It is quite true that all that negation of evidence appears in the case with regard to mutation of names, the matter is explained in this way. It is said that, owing to the dispute between Gulab and her brothers-in-law, the application for mutation was delayed; and their Lordships certainly find it to be the case that, when a decree had been given in favour of Gulab in August, 1866, and when such a time had elapsed as, in the opinion of the patwari Sheo Sahai had precluded an appeal, the application is made, namely towards the end of 1866 or the beginning of 1867. That may be the true explanation. But, however that may be, the absence of any mutation of names hardly tells much in favour of the defendant’s view, because, if this were a benami transaction entered into for the purpose of baffling somebody who was claiming the property, the mutation of names would be an important part of the proceeding; because without that mutation Gulab remained the ostensible owner in the Collector’s records, and the process of baffling her adversary would be a very imperfect one. Indeed it is common experience that in these benami transactions there is a mutation of names when it is intended to baffle creditors, and all the proceedings which would attend a real transfer are carefully gone through in order to throw a veil over the reality.

With regard to all the other points, it must be remembered that this is not the ordinary case of a benami dispute. In the ordinary case you have the benamidar or those claiming under him on the one side maintaining that the transaction is a real one; and you have the former owner and those claiming under him on the other [26] side maintaining that it is a sham and each party has in his own power such receipts, such evidence of payments, such connection with the agents concerned as should suffice to prove his own case if it is a true one. But the peculiarity of this case is that the title of benamidar, and the title of the original true owner, coalesced in the person of Fattah Kunwar within four years of the first transaction and within three years of the second; and it was she—and it is the defendant who is her representative—who have had in their hands the whole of the evidence necessary to prove whether the transaction was a sham or a real one. Therefore the absence of evidence certainly does not tell against the plaintiff, but it rather tells against the defendant, who might have produced both witnesses and documents which would throw light upon the case.

Under these circumstances great importance is to be attached to assertions of title made, either by Gulab or Fattah, from time to time, in legal proceedings. Let us follow them in chronological order. In the first place there was Balbhadar's suit, which was commenced in 1863, and in which a decree was made in 1866. The Judicial Commissioner has rested great weight upon the decree in that suit as against the plaintiff. What he says is "Seeing that Gulab Kunwar continued in possession long after the sale deeds, and sued on her own title in her own name, and got a decree for this property in her own name for herself and her heirs, I can hardly imagine a clearer case of adverse possession as against Bissesur Bakshi and his heirs." As to the possession, that has been dealt with; as to the suit, there is clearly an inaccurate statement by the Judicial Commissioner. The suit was instituted by Gulab for recovery of several villages which came to her under the partition, and of which, by a series of complicated proceedings, she had lost possession. She never sued for the five villages of which she was clearly in possession, and of which the four now in suit are part. The way in which those villages came in was on the plea of the defendant, who said that, so far from Gulab having the right to recover from him the villages for which she sued, he had the right to recover from her five villages of which she was in possession. How exactly that matter was dealt with in [27] Court before the Judge we do not know. It may have been that the parties agreed there should be a decree covering the whole matter in dispute, but those five villages were not regularly in suit at all. The decree does deal with them. It gives to Gulab the absolute proprietary right in them, and dismisses the defendant's claim—the counterclaim to recover from the plaintiff the five villages in her possession. Those words are relied upon as proving Gulab's possession. But it is obvious, independently of the fact that it was quite irregular to make a decree about these villages, that there was no question of possession as between Gulab and Bissesur in this suit. Such an issue never was raised or thought of. The only question of possession, if any, was as between Gulab and Balbhadar. Strictly and regularly there was no question whatever of possession, but if any were brought in, then it was only as between Gulab and Balbhadar and as between those two she was in possession. She was then recorded in the Collector's books, and it was quite sufficient for the determination of any question that could possibly be brought, even irregularly and by consent of the parties to that suit, to treat her as the party in possession. And in point of fact the decree uses the right language upon that point. It decrees to her a right against the defendant Balbhadar Singh, and against nobody else.

Then come the mutation proceedings on the 1st of January, 1867, in which the evidence of Sheo Sahai, which has been before observed upon, was given. In those proceedings Fattah Kunwar, who was the heir both of Gulab and of Bissesur, claims to be registered as the heir of Bissesur. Why should she have made that claim? Her interest was all the other way. If she were heir of Gulab, she had absolute dominion ever the property. If she were heir of Bissesur, she had only the widow's estate, and we shall see presently what importance she attached to that distinction. Moreover it was more simple to claim as the heir of Gulab. She was the recorded owner, and, as far as the Collector's records went, Fatteh had only to show that she was Gulab's only child, and the mutation would be made as a matter of course. But she does not do that. She introduces that which is entirely new matter into the Collector's records—the conveyance [28] to Bissesur, and then makes out her claim as heir of Bissesur. That seems to their Lordships strong evidence that, in the opinion of Fatteh Kunwar, or of her advisers at that time, her true title was as heir of Bissesur.

Next comes Ratan Singh's suit in 1868. Ratan Singh after the death of Gulab revived the old dispute between Gulab and her brothers-in-law, with only this difference, that, whereas in Gulab's lifetime they contended that she was entitled only to maintenance, now after her death they contended that she was only entitled to the widow's estate. That dispute was raised in 1868. Fatteh Kunwar appears and puts in a plea by her agent in which she again sets up her title through Bissesur. The judgment proceeds on that footing. The judgment is to the effect that the plaintiff's claim is declared "not to lie against defendant, who holds as her husband's heir the property acquired by him by purchase from Gulab, who was possessed of the legal power to settle." Of course that is no decision binding the present parties, but it shows as distinctly as anything can show the position which Fatteh Kunwar thought it right to assume in the year 1868.

All these things are rather emphasized by the wajib-ul-arz, which was made at Fatteh Kunwar's instance in 1869. Before dealing with the effect of it, their Lordships wish to make some observations upon the extraordinary and startling character of that document. A wajib-ul-arz has been considered to be an official record, of more or less weight according to circumstances, but still an official record, of the local customs of the district in which it is recorded. It has been received before this tribunal and elsewhere as important evidence. In the case cited of Lekraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh (1) it is stated that "these documents are entered on record in the office. They must be taken upon the evidence, which is general evidence, to have been regularly entered and kept there as authentic wajib-ul-arz papers." In that case effect was given to the wajib-ul-arz produced. In this case the Judicial Commissioner has treated the wajib-ul-arz in question as a document of weight, which must be taken as showing local customs until some proof to the [29] contrary is produced. But on looking at the evidence their Lordships find that this wajib-ul-arz was the concoction of Fatteh Kunwar herself, received by the settlement officer as an expression of her views which she had a right to enter upon the village records, because she was proprietor of the estate. But they are not entered as her views; they are entered as the official record of a custom. And supposing 50 years had gone by, and then a dispute arose about the family or the local custom, this would probably have been produced from the office as an entry made 50 years ago, under circumstances of no suspicion at all, and it would be taken that the Government officer had recorded it as the local custom. And now we find it deliberately stated (though there was an appeal from the entry of this wajib-ul-arz) by the Oudh Courts that the proprietor has the right to enter his own views upon the village records, and have them recorded as if they were the official records of the local customs. Well, that is an exceedingly startling thing, and their Lordships think that the attention of the local Government should be called to what has appeared in this case to have been done in one instance, and may be done in other instances. It does not only render those records useless—they are worse than useless—they are absolutely misleading, because they are evidence concocted by one party in his own interest. It is to be hoped that under the Act of 1876, which empowers the local Government to make rules under which these records shall be framed, such proceedings will not take place any more.

So much for the character of the document. Now for its effect. It is not now contended that, if Bissesur was entitled, the custom which the wajib-ul-arz asserts can prevail. In fact there is no evidence of it. Mr. Graham most properly abandoned that part of the case. But that does not get rid of the circumstance that in 1869 Fatteh Kunwar thought it to her interest to put this fictitious document on the village records, asserting her own power to alienate such estate as she had got from Bissesur. If she had taken everything as the heir of Gulab, there was no object in getting the entry made; but if she was the heir of Bissesur, then she had a strong object, because otherwise she could not make a complete alienation of the estate.

That, in their Lordships' opinion, strengthens the circumstance that up to that time she had always been asserting herself to be the heir of Bissesur, and leads them to conclude that she could not have asserted it for any other reason than because it was the truth.

Then comes the gift by Fatteh Kunwar to her daughter in 1876; and again we find that, though it is not very precise as to the nature of her title, she states that Munnia is a naural heir "after me and my husband." Now that exactly accords with the position which Munnia would have if the property came from Bissesur, and it does not accord with the position which Munnia would have if the property came from Gulab. Therefore it appears again that Fatteh Kunwar considered herself as taking the property from Bissesur, and as conveying it to Munnia under that right, which she alleged on the face of the wajib-ul-arz that she possessed, but which in fact she did not possess.

The only remaining proceeding is the declaratory suit by Uman Parshad in 1876. That raised the very question which has now to be decided in this suit. The suit was got rid of because it was declaratory only. But the parties had now come face to face. Uman Parshad, the very man, or representing the very family, against whom the benami transfer was said to be effected, comes and claims the property. Now clearly is the time when this benami title should be set up to embarrass the enemy. But it is not set up. Nothing is said about it except what may be gathered from a very obscure, and probably very imperfect, sentence taken down by the Judge as either the plea or the argument of Mr. Jackson, who was the Counsel for Fatteh Kunwar. It is difficult to gather any thing precise from it; but he seems to have suggested that Bissesur took as a benamidar, not for Gulab, but for his wife, Fatteh Kunwar—a totally different case from that which is made on the present occasion. That again is very strong evidence that Fatteh Kunwar, or her advisers, felt that they could not with truth and honesty declare that it was a sham transaction.

Kutuhul Singh and Others (Petitioners) v. Uma Singh and Others (Opposite Parties).* [9th August, 1887.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Joint hearing of the case of several claimants—Possession—Number of plots, Dispute as to—Practice.

A Magistrate, proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in a case in which one party (thirty-nine in number) claimed to be the tenants of 708 bighas of land belonging to one Tofuzul Hossein, and the members of the other party (seventeen in number) claimed to hold the same land in separate parcels as their mauraasi jote, tried the question of possession as between the two parties in one case, notwithstanding the protest of the mauraasi claimants to this mode of procedure, and decided that possession was with the party of thirty-nine, directing that they as a body should remain in possession until ousted by the order of a Civil Court.

[32] Held that the course pursued by the Magistrate at the hearing was prejudicial to the case of the mauraasi claimants; and that the form of his order was open to the objection that it would render it necessary for the party out of possession, to make all the persons declared to be in possession defendants in any civil suits brought to recover possession of the land.

[R., 6 C.W.N. 206.]

This case arose out of a claim made to the possession of 708 bighas of land, of which one Tofuzul Hossein was the zemindar, the party of Uma Singh, thirty-nine in number, claiming to be tenants under Tofuzul Hossein of the land in dispute, whilst the party of Kutuhul Singh, seventeen in number, claim to be interested in the land in dispute in various portions as their mauraasi jote. On this state of facts the Magistrate, on the 11th February 1887, proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directed the two parties to file their written statements, giving full particulars of the lands claimed by them. The members of the party of Kuthul Singh put in separate written statements with respect to the lands held by them separately, and objected to the Magistrate trying their cases together in one case. The Magistrate, however, overruled this objection, and passed an order, dated the 23rd June, 1887, to the effect that the party of Uma Singh were entitled to possession of the 708 bighas in dispute until evicted therefrom by due course of law.

The party of Kuthul Singh obtained a rule in the High Court calling upon the party of Uma Singh to show cause why the order of the 23rd June should not be set aside on amongst others, the following grounds, viz., (a) that the order did not specify the particular portions of land of which the several members of the party of Uma Singh were declared to be in possession, an omission which disenabled the separate members of the party of Kuthul Singh from instituting suits in the Civil Courts against the parties who had been declared to be in possession of the land; and (b) that the Magistrate should not have tried the several claims to possession of the numerous parties on each side jointly, passing one joint and indiscriminate order thereon.

Mr. M. Ghose, Mr. Abdul Hossein, and Mr. C. Gregory, in showing cause, cited the case of Azim Mollah v. Satoo Poramanick (1).

[33] Baboo Umbica Churn Bose in support of the rule.

The order of the Court (Pigot and Macpherson, JJ.) was as follows:—

ORDER.

This matter before us turns upon a rule granted on the 20th July, 1887, calling upon the party in whose favour an order under s. 145 was passed to show cause why the order of the Assistant Magistrate of the 23rd June, 1887, should not be set aside. The order was one made under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The dispute, upon the allegation of the existence of which the Magistrate took action arose, between classes of persons each of whom claimed to be possessed of land of which Tofuzul Hossein was the zemindar. The persons for whom Mr. M. Ghose and Mr. Gregory appear, to the number of 39 individuals, claim to be interested as tenants under that zemindar in the property with reference to which the order is made. The persons against whom the order has been made, and for whom Baboo Umbica Churn Bose appears, are Kuthul Singh and others, being seventeen in number, persons claiming to be interested in various portions of land with reference to which the order is passed as occupancy tenants holding lands in different quantities and under interests which appear to have been acquired at different times. Under these circumstances the Magistrate, by a notice dated the 11th February, served on the 19th February of this year, instituted proceedings under s. 145.

It is unnecessary now to see how it came to pass that those proceedings were initiated under that section. The matter having been gone into in detail, and, as we are informed, after minute examination on both sides of the title to the lands in question, the Magistrate came to a finding in these words: "I therefore order that the first party are entitled to possession of the 708 bighas of Gogi Kandali, mouzah Mokama, until evicted therefrom by due course of law, and I forbid all disturbance of such possession until such eviction." The petitioners Kutuhul Singh and others have obtained this rule, and they object in the first place that that order is bad, and that the investigation held which led up to it is bad on the ground that the several claims to possession of the numerous parties on each side were jointly, or at least indiscriminately, investigated, and have been jointly or indiscriminately [34] adjudicated upon. They raised that objection in the written statement filed by them in the proceedings so early as, I understand, the 15th April of this year, and they raised it, according to the translation of the Official Interpreter of this Court, in these words: "The case under s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, can by no means, jointly and individually, proceed unless it is shown what piece of land is claimed, by what tenants alleged by Tofuzul Hossein, proprietor. But no such fact exists on the record." We have been referred to the case of Azim Mollah v. Sutoo Poramanick (1) as showing that an order under s. 145 may well be made, although it does compendiously order that one set of persons are in possession as against another set of persons without attempting to specify which is entitled as against which to which portion of the land in question. The circumstances of that case appear to be sufficiently different from those of the present. Here the classes of persons claiming under the same zamindar assert, in respect of different parcels of land, different and independent rights, and the contest as in respect of each parcel of land claimed by Kutuhul Singh and any one of his party is plainly as between that person and any of the persons on the other side who claim that parcel of land. We think that, apart from any question of prejudice arising hereafter from the form of the order, the party of the persons who complain of the investigation being mixed up as if were are entitled to maintain that objection on the ground that the investigation into their case might well be, and probably was, prejudiced by that course being pursued. We think that they are also entitled to object to the form of the order on the ground stated by their learned pleader, that proceeding by civil suit would, in the face of an order in this form, render necessary the making as defendants of a multitude of persons who are by the terms of the order held to be in possession of the land in question. It is suggested that we should remit the case to the Magistrate for a finding which should cure that last defect, the defect of the order, by enabling him, or in truth directing him to make 39 separate orders under s. 145 declaring the 39 claimants entitled to possession of the several parcels claimed and, as we are told, set out in boundaries [35] by them in their written statement. Were it possible to do that it would not cure the objections to these proceedings on the other ground. But it appears that the Magistrate who heard the greater part of the case is no longer Magistrate in that district. We have no means of telling further whether, if he were there, he could do more than make the compendious order which is before us and which in effect is that these people (the party of Uma Singh) in a body are in possession of the entire land in dispute. But in any case it would be impossible now to cure the original defect of the proceedings that is pointed out in the paragraph of the written statement to which we have referred. Under these circumstances we think that the rule must be made absolute and the proceedings set aside.

PARTIES—Practice—Wife having an English domicile suing without her husband—Representatives of mortgagors—Priorities of mortgagees.

Case in which it was held that a wife having an English domicile is capable of suing without joining her husband as a co-plaintiff; and in which the representatives of certain mortgagors were held to be necessary parties to the suit (which was one to determine the rights of mortgagees inter se) on the following grounds: (a) that the rights of the mortgagees could not be determined without at the same time determining the liability of the mortgagor; (b) to avoid multiplicity of suits; (c) to give them an opportunity of being present at the taking of any account that might be ordered as between the mortgagees; and (d) to entitle the plaintiff or defendant to obtain costs out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property.

This was a suit brought by Alice Mabel Hughes, wife of R. J. Hughes, against the Delhi and London Bank (the plaintiff and defendant being respectively second and first mortgagees of the business and stock in trade, &c., of Stewart & Co.) asking for a declaration that she was entitled to priority over all advances made by the said Bank on the security of the premises mortgaged to her subsequent to the 15th March, 1882 (being the date of the notice to the defendant Bank of the plaintiff’s mortgage), and for an order directing payment to her of certain sums appropriated by the defendant Bank out of the sale proceeds of the business and for an account.

The mortgage executed by Stewart & Co., to the defendant Bank was dated the 3rd of August 1881, and expressed to assign all the stock in trade, fixtures, etc., belonging to the business of Stewart & Co., and also all the good will and custom book and other debts due and outstanding to the firm to secure the repayment of all sums of money which then were, or should from time to time thereafter become, due and owing from the said firm on their account current with the said Bank, with interest thereon at 10% per annum. At the time of the execution of this mortgage it had been arranged between the Bank and Stewart & Co., that all over-drafts and money to be secured by the mortgage of the 3rd of August 1881 should not exceed the principal sum of Rs. 60,000.

On the 7th March 1882, Stewart & Co., executed a mortgage to the plaintiff of the good will, stock in trade and custom of the firm, together with all outstanding debts, claims and demands accrued due and owing, and which should thereafter accrue due or owing to the firm, to secure the sum of Rs. 60,000 and interest at 10%. On the 15th March 1882, the plaintiff through her attorneys, Messrs. Barrow and Orr, gave notice to the Delhi Bank of her mortgage, pointing out in a letter covering this notice that it would be right that the Bank should not allow the balance against Stewart & Co., to exceed the Rs. 60,000 secured by their mortgage. At the date of the plaintiff’s mortgage the amount due on the Bank’s mortgage as shown by their accounts stood at Rs. 61,867-13-3 principal, and accrued interest from the 1st January, Rs. 1,307, making a total of Rs. 63,174-13-3, but on the day following Stewart & Co., paid in to the Bank

Rs. 40,000 out of the sum paid by the plaintiff; and on the 15th March 1882, the amount due to the Bank on their mortgage stood at Rs. 27,444-6-6, exclusive of interest from the 31st December 1881. Further advances were then made by the Bank to Stewart & Co.; and on the 30th June 1883 the balance due to the Bank stood at Rs. 64,523-9-11.

[37] On the 29th June, 1886 Stewart & Co. stopped payment, and on that day under an order of the Court their property vested in the Official Assignee. On the same day, but whether before or after the vesting order was made is uncertain, the defendant Bank took possession of the mortgaged premises comprised in the above indentures of mortgage, by reason of default having been made in payment of the principal and interest secured under their mortgage; and on the 1st July 1885, the plaintiff for the same reasons also took possession. On the 12th August 1885, in exercise of the power of sale under the above mortgages, the plaintiff and defendant put up for sale the mortgaged premises; and on the 14th August 1885 the same were purchased by Messrs. Bushby and Westropp for Rs. 96,500. On the 5th November 1885, the defendant represented to the plaintiff that a sum of Rs. 92,121-10-3 was due and owing to them under their mortgage; and on that day the assignment of Bushby and Westropp was duly executed by the plaintiff and the defendant, the purchase money being received by the defendant. Differences having arisen between the plaintiff and defendant as to the accounts presented by the Bank, the plaintiff, claiming to have priority as regards all sums advanced on the mortgaged premises after the 15th March 1882, and after admitting a realization by her of a sum of Rs. 26,271-5-10 from the outstandings of the firm, brought a suit against the Bank for the purposes above mentioned, claiming a balance of Rs. 45,395 as still remaining due to her from the defendant under her mortgage. The defendant (amongst other matters) pleaded that the plaintiff could not sue without her husband; that the representatives of the mortgagors were necessary parties to the suit; and that in the absence of the mortgagors’ representatives, beyond determining and declaring the principles upon which the priorities between the plaintiff and the defendant in respect of the several advances to the mortgagors were to be ascertained, no decree or order ought to be made in the suit; and that in particular in the absence of such parties no decree or order ought to be made for an account between the plaintiff and the defendant, or between the plaintiff and the representatives of the mortgagors, or the defendant and the representatives of the mortgagors.

[38] The case came on for settlement of issues, and certain issues were duly settled. For the purposes of this report it is only necessary to state the two following issues:

1. Is the plaintiff’s husband a necessary party to the suit?
2. Are the representatives of the mortgagors necessary parties to the suit?

Mr. Hill and Mr. Sale, for the plaintiff.
Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Stokoe, for the defendant.

Mr. Hill having admitted that the argument on the first issue might proceed on the basis of the plaintiff having an English domicile, referred to Stephen v. Stephen (1).

Mr. Bonnerjee on the first issue referred to s. 369 of the Civil Procedure Code, and to Allumuddy v. Braham (2) and Hippolite v. Stuart (3); and on the second issue s. 32 of the Civil Procedure Code; Calvert on parties, p. 188 (Ed. 1847); and to Fisher on mortgage, chapter X, para. 1427.

(1) 10 C. L. R. 536. (2) 4 C. 140. (3) 12 C. 522.

Mr. Hill in reply referred to s. 4, of the Succession Act. He also contended that the representatives of the mortgagors were not necessary parties, inasmuch as the mortgaged premises had been sold and the sale proceeds had been realised by the defendant and were now in the possession of the Bank; moreover, to prove the mortgagors' liabilities, it was not necessary they should be represented in the suit.

ORDER.

Trevelyan, J.—This case having come before me for settlement of issues, I have settled the issues, and have only now to decide two questions as to parties. The first is whether the representatives of the mortgagors are necessary parties to this suit; the second is whether the plaintiff's husband is a necessary party to this suit.

As to the first question, I think that the representatives of the mortgagors are necessary parties to the suit. The object of this suit is to determine the rights of the mortgagees inter se; but it seems to me that such rights cannot be determined without at the same time determining the liability of the mortgagors, a liability which unless the mortgagors be made parties to this suit, might have to be determined in other suits, a result which would entail an unnecessary multiplicity of actions. The mortgaged [39] property has been sold, and the proceeds are insufficient to pay off both mortgagees. Probably the mortgagors are not very much interested in the way in which these proceeds are distributed, but, as the accounts will have to be taken in this suit, I think they should have an opportunity of being present at the taking of such accounts, and moreover, should either of the parties seek to obtain their costs out of the fund, there is no doubt that they would not obtain such costs except by an order made in the presence of the mortgagors.

The representatives of the mortgagors must be made parties to this suit.

I do not think that the plaintiff's husband is a necessary party to this suit.

The plaintiff and her husband have both got an English domicile. It is contended that she is under disability and incapable of suing alone. This is a question of the capacity of a married woman. There is no doubt that in England she could bring a suit of this description, but as the statutes which have freed married women from disability have not been extended to this country, it is said that she cannot here sue alone.

The result, if this were the law, is a curious one. All married women domiciled here can sue without their husbands. English women can sue in England without joining their husbands, yet, when an English woman comes to India, it is said that she is thereby placed under disability.

I think that the answer to this question is clear. Section 4 of the Succession Act lays down, I think, the general law of this country with respect to the capacity of married persons other than those expressly excluded from the operation of the Act. Mrs. Hughes' capacity is governed either by the law of England, the place of her domicile, or by the law here, i.e., s. 4 of the Succession Act. Both laws permit her to sue without joining her husband, and therefore she can, I think, sue without him, I hold that Mr. Hughes is not a necessary party to this suit. The suit will come on in due course for final disposal.

[40] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Beverley.

HARENDRA NARAIN SINGH CHOWDHRY (Plaintiff) v. T. D. MORAN (Defendant).* [27th June, 1887.]

Act XL of 1858 s. 18—Certificated guardian, power of, to grant lease—Unauthorised transfer, Effect of.

A lease for a term of 12 years, but renewable at the pergunnah rate and transferable in its character, granted by a certificated guardian without the authority of the Court, is void ab initio, and will therefore, not avail the lessee, even for the period of five years for which such guardian is at liberty to grant the lease.

Held, accordingly, that in the case of ijmali property, whether such a lease was executed by the guardian conjointly with the co-sharers of the minor, or separately, the minor was entitled to eject the lessee as trespasser in respect of his own share without making his co-sharers parties to the suit.

Quaere, whether such a lease granted by a certificated guardian conjointly with the co-sharers of a minor and thus creating one and the same tenancy is not also void as against the co-sharers.

Held, also, that a transfer made by a person in the capacity of a certificated guardian before the actual issue of the certificate, but after the orders for its issue have been made in his favour, and after his recognition as a certificated guardian, is a transfer within s. 18 of Act XL of 1858.

HARENDRA NARAIN SINGH brought a suit to eject T. D. Moran from certain lands by setting aside a pottah. The plaintiff alleged that during his minority his certificated guardian, Kalinarain Singh Barua, fraudulently granted a lease in favour of the defendant in respect of 400 bighas of land in a zemindari of which he (the plaintiff) was an eight-anna co-sharer. It appeared that the land was taken for the purposes of a tea garden, and the pottah, which was ostensibly for a period of twelve years, ran as follows: "After the expiration of the term of twelve years you shall have to take a fresh settlement by getting an assessment made at the rate paid by the tenants of the pergunnah, or at an enhanced rate if there be any enhancement.  If within the term of the lease you transfer the tea garden, or God forbid, if you die, then your representatives, or the person [41] to whom the transfer will be made, will by registration of his name in the serishta of the zemindar acquire the right which you have." The defendant resisted the claim on the grounds, among others, (a) that the disputed land was the ijmali undivided land of the plaintiff and his co-sharers, and therefore the plaintiff could not sue alone; (b) that the late Kalinarain Singh Barua was not a certificated guardian under Act XL of 1858, but granted the lease as the natural guardian, and sole manager of the estate, of the plaintiff, and the latter had sustained no loss on account of the said lease.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, upon the authority of Alum Manjee v. Ashad Ali (1) and Chundee Chowdhury v. Macnaghten (2) the plaintiff’s suit was “barred by the fact that his co-sharers had not joined him in his suit for ejectment,” and proceeded to observe: “The plaintiff’s pleader wishes to argue that defendant’s occupancy was founded on pottahs granted him by the other two co-sharers, and also by the plaintiff’s quondam guardian, separately, which were, it is alleged, issued not only collusively and fraudulently, but moreover as regards the guardian’s pottah, without due power or authority, inasmuch as he never obtained the civil Court’s permission to issue such a pottah, which under s. 18 of Act XL of 1858 he was bound to obtain before taking such a step. Now my view of the matter is that, under the special circumstances of the present case, I am not at all bound to look behind the pottahs issued. They were issued, and under them the defendant has been allowed to remain in peaceful, undisturbed occupancy for more than 12 years past. It would be, in my opinion, ridiculous to attempt to call him a ‘trespasser’ at this stage of affairs, as the plaintiff’s pleader actually designates him.” Accordingly the Court of first instance dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee and Baboo Omakali Makerjee), for the appellant.

Mr. Evans (with him Mr. Chakravarti, Baboo Girijasanker Mozumdar and Baboo Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty), for the respondent.

[42] The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiff, who jointly with others holds a zemindari interest in certain lands cultivated as a tea garden, sues the defendant to set aside a pottah granted by Kalinarain Singh, his guardian under Act XL of 1858, while he was a minor, and for ejectment in respect of his eight-anna share. He states that his guardian, without authority obtained from the Court, granted to the defendant in Magh 1281 (January 1875) a lease for twelve years with a condition of renewal, his power to grant any lease under such circumstances being limited by s. 18 of the Act to granting a lease for the term of five years. He states further that he attained majority in Bhadro 1289 (September 1882), that is to say about 7½ years after the date of the lease, and he brings the present suit in August 1885 (Sraban 1292), after giving on the 23rd Joist 1290 (5th June 1883) notice to the defendant to relinquish possession of his share of the land within one month.

The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff, as one of several co-sharers in the zemindari, is not entitled to maintain this suit in the absence of his co-sharers. He has held that the defendant is not a trespasser under the circumstances, seeing that he entered into possession of the land under a pottah granted by the plaintiff’s guardian, and that pottahs were granted by the other co-sharers, and that he has held peaceful and undisturbed occupancy for more than twelve years.

In appeal it is contended that, as regards the plaintiff’s eight-anna share of this property, the defendant is a trespasser, inasmuch as the pottah which he sets up was granted under no legal authority and is therefore void, and that consequently the plaintiff is entitled to sue alone to recover joint possession of his share of the lands which have been leased to the defendant without his consent. It is admitted that since he attained majority the plaintiff has in no way recognised the defendant as his tenant and in lawful possession. It is also contended that, even if the lease granted by the certificated guardian of the plaintiff be held to be good for five years, it was a separate lease, and that therefore the plaintiff was competent to exercise, in respect to the defendant, all the rights of a landlord so as to eject him, if necessary, without consulting the other co-sharers in the zemindari.

In respect to the first objection we are of opinion that this lease granted by the certificated guardian without authority from the District Judge cannot, under s. 18 of Act XL of 1858, be regarded as a valid instrument, even for the period of five years for which a certificated guardian is competent to grant a lease. We must hold that, under the circumstances of this case, that instrument is in all respects invalid. The lease in question is a lease for 12 years in the first instance, but renewable on the expiration of that period, apparently in perpetuity, on an assessment at the pergunnah rate of rent. It is moreover a transferable lease, and it was specially granted for the purpose of making a tea garden. We are unable to hold therefore that it was ever the intention of the parties that it should operate as a lease for a term of years, or that it could by any possibility operate as such. On the contrary it was evidently intended that it should operate as a permanent transferable lease, and such a lease a certificated guardian has no authority to grant without the permission of the Court. Section 18 of the Act (XL of 1858) says distinctly: "But no such person shall have power to sell or mortgage any immoveable property, or to grant a lease thereof for any period exceeding five years, without an order of the civil Court previously obtained." It has been held in several cases cited (1) that a sale or mortgage made in contravention of this provision of the law is absolutely void. We have not been referred to any decision on this point in respect of a lease for a term exceeding five years, and it is possible that there may be circumstances under which a lease for more than five years, given by a certificated guardian without the sanction of the Court, might be held good and valid for the term of five years for which he was competent to grant it. In the present instance, however, the lease was not a lease for a term, but practically a permanent alienation of the landlord's estate subject to a rent [44] charge; and having regard to the stringent provisions of the statute, we are of opinion that it was a transfer of a character which the guardian was expressly forbidden to make without the previous sanction of the Court, and, that being so, that it is a nullity. It was made in direct contravention of the terms of the Act, and is therefore absolutely void. In support of this conclusion we may refer to the two cases of Roe d. Brune v. Prideaux (2) and Doe d. Biggs v. White (3) referred to in Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, p. 184 (12th Ed.), in which leases granted in excess of the power vested in the lessor were declared to be void ab initio, and not void only as to the excess. The lease in the present case was in the nature of a permanent alienation of the property, and we have little hesitation in saying there-fore that it was a transaction positively forbidden by the statute, and therefore void.

(2) 10 East 158.
(3) 2 D. and R. 716.

It has been argued by Mr. Chakravarti for the defendant-respondent that, Assam being a scheduled district, Act XL of 1858, was not in force in that province in February 1875, when the lease in question was exe-cuted. That objection is, in our opinion, untenable. Before the passing of Act VIII of 1874, Assam formed a portion of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, and the laws in force in that Presidency extended to Assam. Among these laws was Act XL of 1858. The province of Assam was separated from Bengal by Act VIII of 1874, and by Act XIV of 1874 it was declared to be what is described as a scheduled district. But as regards the laws then in force in Assam, they continued to be unaltered until, by a notification made under the provisions of s. 3 of Act XIV of 1874, a declaration was made (a) extending the Act itself to the province of Assam, under the provisions of s. 1, and (b) setting out what enactments were or were not actually in force in that province. There is nothing in the Act itself to show that any enactment previously in force in the sched-uled districts ceased to be in operation merely by virtue of the passing of that Act. The Act itself was not to come into operation in any of the scheduled districts until it had been extended by a notification made under s. 3; and from an examination of the Government Gazette, we [45] find that no such notification was made until 3rd November 1877, i.e., subsequent to the issue of the certificate in this case. This objection is therefore unsound. A further objection was raised by Mr. Chakravarti to the effect that, inasmuch as the certificate to Kalinarain Singh was not actually issued until after the execution of the lease, he was not at the time of granting that lease a certificated guardian under Act XL of 1858, and consequently was not restricted by the provisions of s. 18. But we think it is a sufficient answer to this argument to point out that the order for the issue of a certificate was made so far back as September 1868, and that from that date Kalinarain appears to have acted as a certi-ficated guardian and to have been recognized by the Court as such. So far as regards the question now before us, the evidence on the record goes to show that Kalinarain granted the lease in question by virtue of the authority vested in him by Act XL of 1858.

It would appear that the day after the lease in question was executed by Kalinarain Singh, the guardian of the plaintiff, a similar lease was exe-cuted in favour of the defendant by the three annas co-sharers, and some two years and a half later, a third lease was executed by the five annas co-sharer. All these leases were in the same terms, and they were to operate contemporaneously. They are what are known as jungleboori leases, that is to say, clearing leases, carrying no rent for the first three years and then fixing a rent at one and the same rate for such lands as on measurement might be found to have been occupied by the defendant for purposes of cultivation. They provide for the payment of rent to each co-sharer separately, and authorize each co-sharer to sue separately for his share of the rent without joining as parties the other co-sharers. They give the lessee a right of renewal at the expiration of the 12 years, and are declared to be heritable and transferable. It has been contended before us that under these circumstances the three leases must be con-sidered as creating one joint tenancy under all the co-sharers, and that being so, that one of the co-sharers alone is not entitled to sue to eject the defendant who had been let into tenancy by the joint action of all the co-sharers. It is [46] said that, the three leases being in identical terms and operating simultaneously, they must be taken to constitute one and the same tenancy. The reason why three separate documents were executed is, in this view, explained to be the facilitation of suing, if need be, for the co-sharers’ separate share of the rent.

A large number of authorities have been cited to us on this point as follows:—

Alum Manjee v. Ashad Ali (1); Hamilton v. Rughoo Nundun Singh (2); Hulodhur Sen v. Gooro Doss Roy (3); Chundee Chowdhry v. Macnaghten (4); Dinobundhoo Ghose v. Drobo Moyee Dossia (5); Doli Sati v. Ikram Ali (6); Rasha Prosad v. Esuf (7); Tulsi Panday v. Bachu Lal (8); Reasut Hossein v. Chorwar Singh (9); Kali Chandra Singh v. Rajkishore Bhuddro (10).

All these authorities go to establish this proposition generally that, although one of several co-sharers may sue to eject a trespasser so far as his interest in the land is concerned, he cannot alone eject a tenant who has been put upon the land by all the co-sharers and is still holding under them all.

The contention of the tenant-respondent in this case is that he was let into possession by the joint action of all the co-sharers, and that he cannot therefore be ejected at the suit of the plaintiff alone. We have, however, held that the lease granted on behalf of the plaintiff was a nullity, and the defendant cannot therefore derive any benefit from it. As regards the plaintiff’s share at least, he must be regarded as a trespasser. This is in accordance with the case of Hamilton v. Rughoo Nundun Singh (2). If again the three leases are to be construed as one and the same, it might be a question whether the defendant could claim to hold even as against the other co-sharers. We think, however, that, having regard to the fact that three separate documents were executed, and that they were executed on three different dates, that they stipulated for the separate [47] payment of each co-sharer’s share of the rent, and apparently gave to each co-sharer the right to measure and assess the rent in future independently of the others, the three leases must be held to constitute three separate tenancies, one of which might be avoided without affecting the others.

Holding, as we do, that the lease as regards the plaintiff appellant’s share was absolutely void, it is unnecessary to consider whether or not the notice alleged to have been served on the defendant was actually served, and whether it was a reasonable notice. In the view we take of the case no notice was necessary.

There are however other points in the case, for the determination of which it must be remanded to the lower Court. It is contended on the authority of Surut Chunder Chatterjee v. Ashiutosh Chatterjee (11) and Girraj Baksh v. Kazi Hamid Ali (12), that the appellant should only be allowed to recover possession upon certain terms as to reimbursing to the defendant the cost of laying out the tea garden, &c., no fraud or misconduct on the defendant’s part having been alleged or proved. This matter formed the subject of the sixth issue, which has not been tried.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) s. 188—Suit for Rent—Co-sharers, Suit by—Joint undivided estate—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622.

A District Judge, in deciding a rent suit, held that s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act prohibited the Court from entertaining the suit in the form [48] in which it had been framed, and therefore dismissed the suit. Held, on an application under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code to have the judgment of the District Judge set aside, that the District Judge had acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally, inasmuch as s. 188 had no application to the case, and that his decision must be set aside.

One Jugobundhu Pattuck, a proprietor of a one-third share in a certain joint undivided mehal, the rent of which said share was collected separately by him from his under-tenant, brought a suit on the 9th March 1886, against his under-tenant to recover arrears of rent which had fallen due both prior to and subsequently to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. The Munsif, on the 27th May 1886, decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff; but on appeal to the District Judge that officer reversed the Munsif’s decision, holding that s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act operated so as to put a stop to the former practice, whereby co-sharers were permitted to sue separately, in similar cases, for their rents; that there was no other section of that Act which preserved such a right of suit as regards rents which fell due before the 1st November 1885; and that s. 6 of Act I of 1868 did not operate in favour of suits instituted after that date. The plaintiff obtained a rule under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, calling upon the defendant to show ‘cause why the judgment of the District Judge should not be set aside.

* Civil Rule No. 486 of 1887, against the order of J. Crawford, Esq., District Judge of Nuddea, dated the 21st of December, 1886, reversing the order of Baboo Dwarka Nath Ghose, Munsif of Ranaghat, dated the 27th of May, 1886.

Mr. B. Chakravati, to show cause, contended that the High Court had no authority, under s. 622 of the Code, to interfere with the judgment, there being no failure in the exercise of jurisdiction, citing Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), and that the word "landlord" in s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be taken to include the whole body of landlords, and that in any suit for rent since the passing of the Act, the whole of the proprietors must be joined as plaintiffs.

Babu Ambica Churn Bose, in support of the rule, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

[49] The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) was delivered by Ghose, J.—This rule was issued under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, upon the defendant, the opposite party before us, to show cause why a judgment passed by the District Judge of Nuddea, holding that the suit of the plaintiff, who is one of several co-sharers in a joint undivided mehal, for the recovery of his share of the rent, cannot, by reason of s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, be maintained, should not be set aside.

Both the Munsif and the District Judge have, as we understand, held that, as a matter of fact, the plaintiff has, for some years back, been in the separate receipt and enjoyment of his share of the rent; but notwith standing that finding the Judge holds, as I have just said, that the suit which is for recovery of the plaintiff’s share of the rent, does not lie by reason of s. 188 of the Tenancy Act.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the learned counsel for the opposite party, upon the ground that, in the circumstances of this case, this Court has no authority, under s. 622 of the Procedure Code, to interfere with the judgment of the District Judge.

That section runs thus: "The High Court may call for the record of any case in which no appeal lies to the High Court, if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and may pass such order in the case as the High Court thinks fit."

The District Judge had certainly jurisdiction to decide this case in appeal; but it is quite apparent that, while exercising that jurisdiction, he exercised it illegally, and with material irregularity, if the view we take of the law on the subject be correct; for what he has done is this: he holds that the suit does not lie at all; and he holds this because he considers a certain law applicable to the case, and which law, he thinks, prohibits such [50] an action being entertained. This appears to me to be a clear illegality on the part of the Judge, in the exercise of the jurisdiction, which, under the law, he was authorized to exercise; and, in this view of the matter, this case seems to me clearly distinguishable from the case of Amir Hassain Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), which was referred to by the learned counsel. The main question in that case was, whether the suit was barred by res judicata; and some other questions as to the right of the plaintiff, in connection with a mortgage transaction, were also raised. The District Judge in appeal held that the questions raised in the case should be decided for the plaintiff, and accordingly a decree was passed in his favour. Thereupon the Judicial Commissioner was moved under s. 622 of the Procedure Code; and he took a view of the matter contrary to that which had been taken by the District Judge, and dismissed the suit. What the Judicial Committee held in that case was that the District Judge had jurisdiction to decide the question before him one way or the other, and if he made a mistake in deciding it that was not a matter which could be rectified by an application under s. 622. But it appears to me that the matter is different, where a Judge, in dealing with a case, erroneously holds that a particular statute, or section of it, is applicable to the case, and that by reason of that statute or section the suit does not at all lie. In that case it would seem that, in the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in him by law, the Judge acts illegally and with material irregularity within the meaning of s. 622. I think, therefore, that in this instance the preliminary objection ought not to prevail, and that we are bound to decide the case on its merits.

As to the merits, it appears to me that we ought to follow the ruling that was laid down in two cases—one, that of Prem Chand Nuskur v. Mokshoda Debi (1), and the other, mentioned in the note to that case, viz., Umesh Chunder Roy v. Nasir Mullick (2).

Section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act runs thus: "Where two or more persons are joint landlords, any thing which the landlord is, under this Act, required or authorized to do, must be done either by both or all those persons acting together or by an agent authorized to act on behalf of both or all of them."

The learned counsel contends, and I think rightly, that the word "the landlord" must be taken to mean the whole body of landlords. But then the question that arises upon the section is, whether there is anything in the Act that lays down that the whole body of landlords is required or authorized to bring a suit for rent; in other words, is there anything in this Act, to indicate that the whole body of landlords must join in bringing a suit for rent? We think that there is nothing in the Act to that effect.

According to the law which was in force before this Act came into operation, and according to the rulings of this Court under that law, if a co-sharer in a joint undivided mtotal had been in previous years in the separate receipt and enjoyment of his share of the rent, it was competent to him to bring a suit for rent in respect of his own share. Is there anything in this Act to indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature to alter that law, and to lay it down that the whole body of shareholders must, if any rent be due to any one of them, bring a joint suit for the recovery of the same? It appears to me that there is nothing in the Act to indicate that this was ever the intention of the Legislature.

For these reasons we think that the District Judge was in error in his application of s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to the facts of this case, and therefore this rule must be made absolute with costs.

HANUMAN KAMUT (Plaintiff) v. HANUMAN MANDUR AND others (Defendants).* [14th June, 1887.]

Limitation Act, 1877, art. 62—Suit to recover purchase money—Failure of consideration—Cause of action, Accrual of.

Purchase money paid for a consideration which has wholly failed is money received for the use of the buyer, and a suit to recover back the money is thus governed by art. 62 of the second Schedule to the Limitation Act.

[52] A purchased a share of joint property from a member of a Mitakshara family, but his suit to recover possession of it was dismissed on the ground that the sale having been made without the consent of the other coparceners was void under the law. A then brought a suit to recover back the purchase money by reason of failure of consideration.

Held, that the failure of consideration, although it did not become apparent until the former suit was brought and failed, was a failure from the beginning, and time ran from the date when the purchase-money was paid.

DOWLUT MANDUR, the father of a Mitakshara family, sold to Hanuman Kamut 2 annas 10 gundalhs out of 8 annas of mouzah, Jaihutsu-bailu, in pargannah Nisankpore Kodu, under a registered kobala, dated the 1st August 1879, on receipt of the full consideration of Rs. 3,600. Hanuman, being unable to obtain possession of the property, brought a suit for its recovery on the 27th February 1884. Upon the objection of the sons and grandsons of Dowlut Mandur, the suit, which ultimately came up to the High Court, was dismissed on the authority of Sadabart Prasad Sahu v. Foolbash Koer (1). Hanuman then brought a suit against the heirs of Dowlut for the recovery of the purchase-money, Rs. 3,600, with interest. After a consideration of shib Krishna Dahi v. Abdool Sobhan Choudhry (2), Lalji Mal v. Hulasi (3), and Jibanti Nath Khan v. Shib Nath Chuckerbatty (4), the Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred by s. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Hanuman Kamut appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. C. Gregory and Babu Abinash Chunder Banerjee) for the apppellant.

Mr. Doss (with him Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy), for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—The case in which this appeal has been brought arises in this way: The present plaintiff brought, or purported to buy, certain property from a person who was a father in a Mitakshara family. The plaintiff afterwards brought a suit, based upon that purchase and the title thence arising, to recover possession of the property. His claim was resisted and his suit [53] was dismissed, on the ground that one member of a Mitakshara family cannot, under the law as administered in this province.

alienate by voluntary sale even his own share of the family property. He has now brought this suit against the heirs of the person from whom he purchased, and in it he seeks to recover back the purchase-money. The suit has been dismissed on the ground that it is barred by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as it is said that under that section this claim might have been, and ought to have been, inserted as an alternative claim in the former suit. What the section says is that the plaintiff shall include in his suit the whole of the claim which he is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, and if he omits to do this he shall not be competent to bring another suit in respect of the portion omitted. It appears to me clear that the present claim is in respect of a totally different cause of action from that raised in the former suit. The former suit was based upon an alleged title to the land, and was a suit to recover possession of the land of the strength of that title. The present suit is based upon the fact that there was no title, and upon the fact that, for the consideration money paid by the plaintiff, he got nothing in return as it now turns out. So far, therefore, as concerns the ground upon which this suit has been dismissed, I cannot agree with the lower Court.

But I think that the suit must nevertheless be dismissed on another ground, viz., that it is barred by limitation. It appears to me clear that the case is governed by art. 62 of the 2nd Schedule to the Limitation Act, which deals with the case of money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use. This was money received to the plaintiff's use by reason of the fact that the consideration for which he paid it wholly failed. And I cannot resist the conclusion that the failure of consideration was a failure from the beginning; that the money was, from the first, money paid without consideration, although no doubt the failure of consideration was not manifest at the time, and only became apparent when the former suit was brought and failed. I think that the suit is barred by limitation. I confess I come to this conclusion with regret, because I think this is a case of hardship.

ROGHU NATH SHAHA (Plaintiff) v. PORESH NATH PUNDARI

Act XXVII of 1860, s. 2—Suit by representative of deceased creditor—Special defence when not put in issue, effect of—Want of Certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, Plea of.

The want of a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 is not of itself necessarily a bar to a suit by the representative of a deceased creditor, and such a special defence, unless insisted upon and put in issue in the Court of first instance, should not be entertained in appeal.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2297 of 1886, against the decree of F. J. G. Campbell, Esq., Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 10th of August 1886, reversing the decree of Baboo Wupendro Nath Ghose, Munsif of Maldah, dated the 18th of May 1885.
Semble.—The Word "debtor" in s. 2 of Act XXVII of 1860 does not include the purchaser of a mortgaged property, who is in no sense a debtor; nor does that section contemplate a case of a decree other than a personal decree.

[F., 26 C. 839=4 C.W.N. 558; Appl., 19 C. 336 (339); Appr., 22 C. 143 (149); R., 12 C.W.N. 145 (149)=7 C.L.J. 658.]

Roghu Nath Sha ha brought a suit upon a mortgage kistbundi (instalment), bond on the following allegations: that the late Sukul Pandari, the father of some of the defendants, had executed the bond on the 9th Aughran 1279 (1872) in favour of the late Kristo Shaha, the plaintiff's father, for the sum of Rs. 365-1-15, promising to repay the amount by monthly instalments at a stipulated rate of interest within five years; that the late Sukul Pandari had paid only Rs. 50 on the 15th Bysack 1280, and there was due on the bond on the date of the plaint, 18th Magh 1291 (1884), the sum of Rs. 1,073-2; but as the value of the mortgaged property was not likely to cover the full amount of the debt, the plaintiff relinquished the surplus, and prayed for a decree for the sum of Rs. 625 with costs from the said property. A portion of the property, it would seem, had been sold by the heirs of the mortgagor, to several persons, who were also made defendants in the suit. Two written statements were filed, one by the part purchasers of the mortgaged property and the other by some of the representatives of Sukul Pandari. The latter among other [55] things stated that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, the suit could not proceed. The purchasers did not take that plea, nor did any of the defendants call into question the plaintiff's heirship. Several issues were framed by the Munisiff; but there was none in respect of the want of a certificate. That Court decided in favour of the plaintiff on the merits and gave a decree in the terms of the prayer. On appeal the District Judge was of opinion that the want of a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 was fatal to the plaintiff, and without more dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kissori Lal Goswami, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O’Kinealy, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—The circumstances out of which this suit arose are these: One Sukul Pandari executed a mortgage on the 9th Aughran 1279 in favour of Kristo Shaha, by which he charged certain property with money, and undertook to pay that money by instalments, the bond being what is described a kistbundi bond. The plaint sets out this, and shows that Kristo Shaha is now dead, and that the plaintiff is his heir which is not disputed. It shows that the mortgagor Sukul Pandari is also dead, and that certain instalments of the bond are due. The plaintiff made defendants, first three persons, sons and heirs of Sukul Pandari the mortgagor, and, secondly, other persons who have become purchasers of the property from the heirs of Sukul Pandari. The plaint then went on to pray in paragraph 4 "for a decree awarding payment of the above Rs. 625 with costs from the property entered in the kistbundi bond and specified below. The cause of action has accrued regularly from the 1st of Pous 1279.

Both groups of defendants, or some of them, entered appearance. The first three defendants, in their written statement, amongst other things, said in the second paragraph: "As the plaintiff has not obtained a certificate according to Act XXVII of 1860, he has no right by which to bring this action, and the suit cannot proceed." The other defendants raised no such point.

[56] The case came on for hearing before the Munsif, and issues were settled. They were four in number; one was as to limitation, the second was whether the amount of the bond had been paid, the third was whether the mortgagor alone or any other person had title to the mortgaged properties, and the fourth was whether the purchaser defendants purchased with notice of the mortgage, and, if not, whether their properties were liable. No issue was raised as to any point connected with a certificate under Act XXVII, yet, if any defence based upon the want of a certificate were to be set up, an issue or issues should have been fixed in order to ascertain the facts necessary to determine whether there was any such defence. Assuming such a defence to be good, there is no finding as to when the plaintiff's father died; there is no finding whether the instalments now in question or any of them fell due in the lifetime of the plaintiff's father; therefore there is no finding whether the debt now in question if there be any debt in question, was a debt payable to the deceased or a debt which has fallen due since his death. And no issue was raised to determine any such question; and therefore the plaintiff had no warning that he had to call, nor any opportunity of calling, evidence upon the question. Accordingly, in the first Court, no further notice was taken of the matter. The presumption is that nobody intended to rely upon it. But when the case came before the District Judge on appeal, the point was apparently taken. His judgment is very short; he says: "The first objection taken on appeal, also taken below, but not noticed there, that plaintiff, being the representative of a deceased creditor, not having taken out a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, cannot sue, is fatal to the suit." I have pointed out that there are no facts found which could enable the Court to say that the objection arises at all. In a case of this kind, with regard to a very special defence, as to which no issue had been raised, and no evidence given, and which apparently was never passed in the first Court, I do not think the lower appellate Court ought to have entertained the question. In the absence of the materials necessary to enable the Judge to adjudicate upon it, I think he ought to have left the matter as it was left by the lower Court.

[57] I would add this, that it was the duty of the Judge, before giving effect to an objection of this kind, to consider the last words of s. 2 of the Act. That section says: "No debtor of any deceased person shall be compelled in any Court to pay his debt to any person claiming to be entitled to the effects of any deceased person, or any part thereof, except on the production of a certificate * * * unless the Court shall be of opinion that payment of the debt is withheld from fraudulent or vexatious motives and not from any reasonable doubt as to the party entitled." Before giving effect to the objection the Judge ought to have considered those last words of the section, and made up his mind as to how far they applied to the present case. That is sufficient to dispose of the appeal. It follows that the decree of the lower appellate Court must be set aside and the case must go back to him in order that he may hear the appeal on the merits.
I think it right to say one thing more. We have been referred to the case of Janaki Ballav Sen v. Hafiz Mahomed Ali Khan (1) as an authority for the proposition that the section in question applies so as to preclude a suit, not for a personal decree, but to enforce a mortgage against the mortgaged property. The case in question differs from this case in one respect. It was, as this is, a suit against the mortgagor and also against purchasers from him; but in that case the plaintiff asked not only for a decree against the mortgaged property in the hands of the purchasers, but also for a personal decree against the mortgagor for the mortgage money, and that decree was given by the lower Court. But in this Court the only persons appealing were the purchasers, who were affected only by so much of the decree as enforced the mortgage charge against the mortgaged property. The Court in that case reversed the decree and dismissed the suit for want of a certificate. That is said to be, and apparently is, an authority for the proposition that, under the section in question, a suit will not lie without a certificate by the representative of a deceased person to enforce a mortgage against the mortgaged property. If it be an authority for that proposition, I must say that I am not prepared to follow it. But for that decision I should [58] have thought it clear that the section does not apply to such a suit. The words of the section are that "no debtor of any deceased person shall be compelled in any Court to pay his debt to any person" without a certificate. It seems to me that this is limited to suits against a "debtor" and can have no application to a suit against a purchaser of a mortgaged property, who is in no sense a debtor. Secondly, it seems to me that the words are limited to cases in which a Court is asked to "compel" a debtor "to pay," that is to say, to make a personal decree against the debtor. To me it seems to have no application to a suit such as the present. If it were necessary to decide this question, I should not be prepared to follow the decision cited, and it would probably have been proper to refer the question to a Full Bench.

The case will go back to the lower appellate Court to be dealt with on the merits. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 94—Suit to set aside deed—Fraud.

In a suit instituted in 1884 by a husband and wife to have a deed granting land, which was executed by the husband in 1872, set aside on the ground that it had been obtained from the latter by fraud and undue influence, the facts relied upon were known to the co-plaintiff husband from the date of the deed. Although in another suit a sale by the husband, effected in 1879, was set aside in 1882, on the ground of his having been unduly influenced, he was not at the time of the previous transaction, nor for some years after it mentally incompetent or unable to allow that knowledge to operate on his mind. Held that, therefore, the suit, falling within s. 91 of schedule II of Act XV of 1877, was not maintainable by either of the plaintiffs.

[69] The appellant and her late husband Raja Bijai Bahadur Singh, who died pending these proceedings, brought this suit on the 18th February 1884, to obtain cancellation of a deed of sale, dated 29th July 1872, on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud and undue influence. By that deed the Raja had conveyed forty-six villages with fifty-six hamlets in the R.Bareli district to the defendant in this suit. The plaintiffs sought to have their property restored to them with mesne profits and costs upon their paying to the defendant so much of the consideration money as might be found to be justly due. The wife was joined with the husband in the suit, as she alleged that he had, on the 1st November 1879, made a gift to her of his estate. After the institution of the suit, and before the judgment of the first Court, Raja Bijai died, on 17th June 1884, and his widow continued the proceedings. Prior to this suit, another one had been instituted, by both the Raja and his wife, in 1890, to set aside a deed of sale executed by the husband in 1879. That suit, which alleged that the husband was of weak mind, was decided in their favour, ending with the judgment of the Judicial Committee, June 24th, 1884. (See Ajit Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh) (1). The plaint alleged that the wife had not, until the proceedings in the Oudh Courts relating to the later deeds, viz., on the 25th August 1882, come to the knowledge of frauds stated to have been practised by the defendant in 1872.

The respondent denied any fraud and undue influence. The consideration paid was the proper value of the estate. He also relied upon limitation under arts. 91, 95 and 114 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877.

The issues fixed raised both the preliminary question and the substantial merits.

It appeared that Raja Bijai succeeded his father in the talukdari in 1854, and about the year 1865 an enquiry as to his capacity to manage his taluk instituted by the Deputy Commissioner, on behalf of the Court of Wards, resulted in his being found, on the 6th November 1871, to be capable of managing his affairs, and the estate was restored to him after a period of [60] direct management by the District Officer to recover arrears of revenue.

The District Judge as to limitation held that the 91st article of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877, which prescribes in the case of a suit "to cancel or set aside an instrument not otherwise provided for" a period of three years from the time "when the facts entitling the plaintiffs to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him" did not apply, and that the 95th article, which in the case of a suit to "set aside a decree obtained by fraud, or for other relief on the ground of fraud," prescribes a like period "running from the time the fraud becomes known to the party wronged," though more applicable, did not, however, bar the suit, as Raja Bijai, by reason of his defective intellect, was "entirely out of the question," and his wife's "assertion that she became aware of the fraud after May 1881," saved her from the bar of limitation.

On the issues relating to the merits, the Judge held in effect that at the time of the execution of the deed in question Raja Bijai was "not actually of unsound mind, but of extremely weak intellect, totally incapable of studying his own interests," and that this respondent was aware of those defects. That though Raja Bijai was at that time "heavily involved," the only creditor who was pressing him was this respondent, who had at that time sued out execution of a decree for Rs. 6,400, and that there was therefore "no immediate necessity to sell such a large portion of his estate," and that with an ordinary amount of intelligence he might easily have raised a loan on mortgage sufficient to have paid this amount. As to the sufficiency of the consideration money (Rs. 1,25,000), the Judge threw on this respondent the burthen of proving that he paid full value, and finding that the real value was somewhat higher, decided that the respondent had obtained the execution of the deed by fraud and undue influence.

The Judge, accordingly, ordered that the deed of sale in question should be set aside as an absolute conveyance, and that on Janki Kunwar paying into Court within six months the sum of Rs. 1,25,000, the properties in suit should [61] be reconveyed to her, and in default of her so doing, her suit should be dismissed, and he declared her right to receive mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit to that of obtaining possession, and otherwise allowed no interest or mesne profits on either side.

On appeal, the Judicial Commissioner on the merits held that the Judge had fallen into error in supposing that there was no pressure on Raja Bijai's estate except this respondent's execution. There were large outstanding arrears of Government revenue at the time when the sale was made. The affairs of the Raja were so embarrassed that it might have been to his advantage, failing the assistance of the Revenue authorities, which, it was plain, did fail him, to part with a portion of his estate, and secure the rest. The Judicial Commissioner found no proof of undue influence or fraud; and on the question whether evidence of fraud was afforded by the purchase money being unconscionably small, taken in connection with the low business capacity of the Raja, the Court found no such evidence. Reversing the decree of the District Judge, the Court dismissed the suit.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. D. Mayne, Mr. C. W. Arathoon and Mr. M. A. Jalil, appeared for the appellant.

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that the Courts in India should have decreed restoration of the property in suit with mesne profits, on the widow's paying so much of the consideration money stated in the deed of 1872, executed by the late Raja, as represented what had been properly taken on his behalf, with interest thereon. The Judicial Commissioner had rightly disposed of the question of limitation—see Uma Shankar v. Kalka Prasad (1), but had not correctly disposed of the question of undue influence said to have been exercised over the Raja, who was incompetent to manage his affairs.

For the respondent it was argued that the suit should have been held barred by limitation under art. 91 of sch. II of Act XI of 1877. Also, that there was no evidence to show that, at the time of the transaction in 1872, the Raja, was too weak-minded to contract, or was subjected to undue influence.

JUDGMENT.

Sir R. Couch.—The appellant in this appeal is the widow of Raja Bijai Bahadur Singh, one of the talukdars of Oudh, who died on the 17th of June 1884. The question in the suit relates to the validity of a deed of sale executed by him on the 29th July 1872. By that deed he professed, on account of the exigency of payment of debts to bankers and decree-holders, and of revenue, to sell to the respondent, Raja Ajit Singh, 46 villages with 56 hamlets in consideration of Rs. 1,25,000. Before this transaction took place, proceedings in lunacy, under the law for that purpose in India, had been taken against him, which originated in a letter of the Deputy Commissioner of the 7th of January 1871. An inquiry was made into the state of his mind, which ended in an order being made on the 6th of November 1871, by which he was found not to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, and upon that he was put into the management of his affairs.

Now it is important to observe that this was not long before the making of the deed of sale, being in November 1871, and the deed of sale being dated on the 29th of July 1872. So that, although he was, and has been, found in some subsequent suits to be a man of weak intellect, he was at that time considered by the proper authorities, who had made inquiries, to be capable of managing his affairs, and therefore he must be taken to have been capable of entering into contracts, and of knowing the nature of the contracts which he entered into. In 1878 he executed a deed of mortgage to the respondent, Ajit Singh, and in 1879 he also executed a deed of sale to the same person. In 1880 two suits were brought—one by Ajit Singh against Bijai and the appellant to recover the principal and interest due upon the mortgage, and the other by Bijai and the appellant to set aside the deed of sale on the ground of fraud, undue influence, and want of consideration. It should be mentioned that shortly before those suits were brought, Bijai had made a deed of gift, dated the 1st of November 1879, to his wife, the present appellant, and it is a matter of remark that she relies upon that deed, and has relied upon it all through the proceedings, at the same time setting up that her husband [63] was a man incapable of entering into the other transaction, and of executing the deed of sale of the 29th July 1872. These suits went through a considerable course of litigation, and were finally determined in favour of Bijai and the appellant on the 24th of June 1884, by the judgment of this Committee.

The only material date to be noticed in regard to the different proceedings is that of the first judgment, which was given by the District Judge on the 31st May 1881, and the final decision was that the deeds should have effect only as securities for such sums advanced or paid by Ajit Singh as should be proved to have been paid to and received by Bijai Singh personally, or as Wahaj-ud-deen the manager of the estate would have been justified in borrowing in the course of a prudent management of it. That was in 1884.

The present suit was brought on the 16th of February 1884, by Rani Janki Kunwar and Bijai, who had not then died, against Ajit Singh, and the plaint stated that the defendant Ajit Singh knew that Bijai was a person afflicted with mental and bodily infirmities, and had procured him to execute the deed of the 29th July 1872, at a considerably low price, namely Rs. 1,25,000, and sought to have that deed set aside on the ground of his being incompetent to execute it, and that it had been obtained by fraud. The plaint also contains this allegation, which is important: "That plaintiff No. 1"—that is the wife—"then"—That is after the decision of the District Judge, dated the 31st of May 1881, and that of the Judicial Commissioner, dated 17th of January 1882—"commenced to inquire about other matters relating to her husband’s property, and on the 25th of August 1882, she came to know of the real facts of fraud, flattery, undue influence, and other matters relating to the deed of sale of the 29th July 1872"—the object of that statement being evidently to show that the suit was not barred by the law of limitation.

Now, the Act XV of 1877, art. 91, provides that a suit to set aside an instrument not otherwise provided for, and this is such a suit, must be brought within three years from the time when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him.

It is necessary then to see whether the suit has been brought within that period. The suit was brought by Bijai in conjunction [64] with Janki Kunwar, and the facts which are mainly relied upon are these. It is not alleged that the state of his mind was such that it alone would have been a ground for setting aside the deed of sale, and that he was so incapable of entering into any contract that it must be set aside. The case of the appellant is that the value of the property was such that, having regard to the amount that was given for it (Rs. 1,25,000), it was an unconscionable bargain on the part of Ajit Singh, affording evidence that the transaction was a fraudulent one on his part, and was brought about by the exercise of undue influence by him, and that in fact he procured Bijai Singh to be surrounded by persons in his, Ajit Singh’s, interest, and acting for him, and Bijai was not in a condition to have and had not the advice which he ought to have had.

Now these were facts which must have been known long before the date which the plaint gives as the date of the fraud having come to her knowledge. It is not alleged that any new matter was then discovered. The state of things which existed when the deed of sale was given continued up to the time when the other suits were finally decided. The suit to set this deed of sale aside was originally brought by Bijai himself as well as his wife. They do not seem to have thought that the deed of gift could be solely relied upon. Bijai brings the suit himself and therefore, when considering whether it is barred by the law of limitation, their Lordships have to see what was the state of Bijai’s knowledge, because if all the facts were known to Bijai, and he was a man not incapable of having that knowledge and of allowing it to operate on his mind, the case would come within what is stated in this article. Much more than three years would have elapsed after the facts which are said to constitute the fraud were known to him, and so the period of three years had expired before the suit was brought. That would be sufficient to decide the suit.

Both the lower Courts seem to have treated this question in a manner which cannot be regarded as satisfactory. The District Judge, having stated the previous proceedings, says: "Under these circumstances I think it but just that she" that is, the present appellant—"should be allowed to count her limitation from the 31st of May 1881, the date on which the District Judge decided her husband had been defrauded in the cases then before him." [65] He takes no notice of the fact that Bijai was also a party to the suit, and that his knowledge was a material matter to be regarded, and he fixes, apparently in a somewhat arbitrary manner, on the 31st of May 1881, the date of the decision of the District Judge in the former suits, as that from which the period of limitation would run. That ground cannot be supported. The District Judge has not directed his mind to the real question, which is when the circumstances that are said to constitute the fraud became known to Bijai. Then the Judicial Commissioner deals with the case in a different way. He says the suit is essentially a suit for the possession of immoveable property, and as such falls within the 12 years' limitation. Now he is clearly wrong there. It was not a suit for the possession of immoveable property in the sense to which this limitation of 12 years is applicable. The immoveable property could not have been recovered until the deed of sale had been set aside, and it was necessary to bring a suit to set aside the deed upon payment of what had been advanced, namely, the Rs. 1,25,000. Therefore there has been on the part of the lower Courts a misapprehension of the law of limitation in this case. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the suit falls within art. 91 of the Act XV of 1877, and is therefore barred.

Upon the other question, which is the main question in the suit, whether upon the facts which have been proved, there was a case entitling the appellant to have the deed of sale set aside, their Lordships have not had any matter laid before them which would lead them to the conclusion that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner that the deed ought not to be set aside should not be allowed to stand. They see no ground for thinking that on that matter he came to a wrong conclusion.

The result, therefore, is that their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal, and to affirm the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner. The appellant will pay the costs of this appeal.

GIRISH CHUNDER MAITI (Defendant) v. ANUNDOMOYI DEBI AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs). [15th July, 1887.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 132—Construction of will—Charge on immovable property.

A will devising immovable property stated that the father of the devisee had lent a sum of money to the testator, and directed the devisee to repay the debt with interest. This was construed to be a charge on immovables, and it was held that a suit, brought by the auction-purchaser of the creditor's claim, to recover the above-mentioned debt, was within art. 132 of the second Schedule of Act XV of 1877; and having been brought within twelve years from the date when the debt was so charged was barred by time.

The question raised by this appeal was what was the period of limitation applicable under Act XV of 1877, the Indian Limitation Act, to the recovery of a debt due by a deceased testator, who in his will had directed a relation, to whom he devised all his property, moveable and immovable, to pay this debt—a question dependent on whether the will validly charged the debt on the immovable property, or created a valid trust for its payment, or did neither.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was filed on the 5th May 1879, by Anundomoyi Debi against Goluck Chunder, guardian, manager, and father of Girish Chunder Maiti, to recover Rs. 15,000 lent by Goluck Chunder to Shib Pershad Giri in 1867. In 1872 Shib Pershad Giri died, having left all his property to Girish Chunder, and having directed him by the same will to pay the above-mentioned debt. The plaint stated these circumstances, and that another person, Jogendro, as execution-creditor of Goluck Chunder, had obtained satisfaction of part of a claim against the latter to the extent of Rs. 10,200, and that Jogendro had, at the execution sale, [67] purchased all that was unpaid of Goluck Chunder's claim against Girish Chunder. The plaint then stated the death of Jogendro, and the representative character of his widow, Anundomoyi Debi, the plaintiff, as residuary legatee and executrix of the will of her deceased husband. She prayed by her plaint payment of her claim out of the estate of Girish Chunder, that claim being the money stated above to have been lent by Goluck Chunder, and interest thereon, with the deduction of Rs. 10,200, which had been already paid.

The defendant Girish Chunder, among other defences, set up limitation.

The arguments in the Court of first instance related only to the question of limitation. The Court decreed in favour of the defendant, dismissing the suit with costs. The grounds of this decision were that art. 57 of the second Schedule of Act XV of 1877 being applicable, inasmuch as no lien was created by the will in the plaintiff's favour by the will of

(1) 7 C. 772.
Shib Pershad Giri, art. 182 was therefore inapplicable; and the suit was barred by lapse of time.

On appeal, this decision was reversed by the High Court, (Cunningham, Prinsep and Wilson, JJ.). The judgment of the last-named Judge, with which the other Judges agreed, was to the following effect, and it is reported at p. 774 of I. L. R. 7 Cal., when the cases cited in argument and referred to by the Court, are given. The opinion of the Court was that the charge in the will of 1872 differed from a general charge of a debt by a testator upon his property. For here, particular property was given upon trust to pay a particular debt, the result being that a trust arose. That was a trust within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act; and, although the cases showed that a general charge of debts, upon a testator's property, did not add to the legal liabilities of executors, yet here, for the above reason, the case was different. The suit was accordingly remanded to the first Court for trial on the merits.

On this appeal,—

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the appellant.
Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondents.

[68] For the appellant it was argued that the will of Shib Pershad Giri neither varied the legal liabilities of the parties so as to charge the loan of Rs. 15,000 therein mentioned upon the property therein devised, nor invested the appellant with any trust as regards that property for the purpose of repaying the loan.

Counsel for the respondents was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Sir R. Couns.—The only question which has been decided in this suit is whether it is barred by the law of limitation. The Subordinate Judge, before whom the case came in the first instance, was of opinion that the claim was a claim for money lent, and by art. 57 of Act XV of 1877 a term of three years only was given for bringing the suit, and that time had expired before the suit was brought.

When the case came before the High Court the learned Judges there were of opinion that s. 10 of that Act applied on the ground that there was a valid trust for the payment of the money which was claimed in the suit. That section says: "Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives, or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property shall be barred by any length of time." It does not clearly appear whether the learned Judges intended to deal with the other question, that it was a charge, and so came within the 132nd article of the second schedule of the Act, in which case a period of 12 years is given for bringing the suit. They appear to have rested their judgment upon its being a trust for the payment of the money.

Their Lordships consider that the case may be disposed of upon the question whether the money is charged upon immovable property; and in order to see whether that is so or not, they have to look at the terms of the will. The will was made by Shib Pershad, and purports to be addressed to the present appellant, who was the defendant in the suit. It states that the father of the appellant, Goluck Chunder, had supplied the maker of it, Shib Pershad, with money to sue for the recovery [69] of property of which he had been dispossessed by his cousin, Jai Narain Giri, and that a suit had been carried on in the different Courts which had been successful, and that a decree had been obtained for the recovery of the property; and after stating that fact, and also that Goluck Chunder had shown great kindness to Shib Pershad, it contains these words: "Therefore you being my nephew (sister’s son), and competent to give the pind (funeral cake) to my ancestors, I give you under this will the whole of my moveable and immoveable properties specified in the decrees I have obtained in the original suit, No. 17 of the District Court, and the appeals Nos. 167 and 168 of the High Court, under these conditions, viz., that you will perform, and cause to be performed antim-kria (cremation) and rites and ceremonies in the proper manner at a reasonable cost, and that you will cause the said kria to be performed. The loan of Rs. 15,000 which I took from your father, the aforesaid Maiti, and by means of which I carried on the cases aforesaid from the Zillah Court up to the Sudder Court, in which I have been successful, you will repay with interest from the properties specified in the decrees, and so set me free from liability for that debt.” Now if by that will a charge was created upon the property which had been recovered, and which was specified in the decrees, the case clearly came within the 132nd article; and their Lordships think there can be no doubt that there was such a charge. It is a charge upon specific property, namely, the property specified in the decrees. On that ground their Lordships are of opinion that the decision of the High Court ought to be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, and they will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty accordingly. The appellant will pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

DAULAT RAM (Plaintiff) v. MEHR CHAND AND OTHERS (Defendants) [19th July, 1887.]

Hindu law, Joint family—Mitakshara Law—Sale of joint-family property in execution of decree, as he result of a mortgage by managing member—Liability of shares of members of family not parties to the decree.

Although some of the members of a joint family had not been made parties to a suit upon a mortgage effected by the managing members, the entire family estate was bound by the act of the latter, and passed at the sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage.

Whether the shares of all were bound depended on the authority of those who executed the mortgage. This authority they had to raise money to pay a debt owed by the family as joint members of an ancestral trading firm.

The managing members of a joint trading family, having purported to mortgage the family estate, to pay a debt due by the firm, were sued upon it by the mortgagee, who afterwards purchased the property at the execution sale. In a suit brought by the latter against the other members of the family to obtain a declaration that he had purchased the entire family estate, the defendants, without showing that the mortgage did not validly bind the family estate, contended that, not having been made parties to the suit, they were not affected by the decree, and their shares had not passed at the sale in execution.

_Held_, that as the defence was substantially on the latter ground only, though there was every opportunity given to the defendant to raise the former ground also, the suit need not be remanded; and that the whole estate had passed to the purchaser. _Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhnun Mohun_ (1) referred to and Appeal from a decree (4th April 1888) of the Chief Court of the Punjab, affirming a decree (28th March 1881) of the Commissioner of the Delhi Division, which affirmed a decree (22nd July 1880) of the Judicial Assistant Commissioner of Delhi, dismissing the suit with costs.

The suit out of which this appeal arose related to a mortgage executed by two members of a joint family of Jains, their law on this point agreeing with that of the Mitakshara. The family carried on an ancestral business as a firm trading in Delhi [71] managed by the two members.
The mortgagee, having obtained a decree against the latter on the mortgage, issued execution, and attached and brought to sale the mortgaged property, becoming himself the purchaser of it.

The question now raised was whether the shares of the members of the family other than those who were parties to the decree, or those only of the parties to the decree, had passed to the purchaser.

The mortgage was of nine shops and six houses in Delhi, for Rs. 20,000, executed in favour of the plaintiff by Rattan Chand and Jiwan Mul on 11th January, 1871. The deed described the property as solely belonging to the abovenamed, but stated that the money was borrowed in order to pay the debts of their firm, _viz._, Nanak Chand, Sarup Chand. Of this firm the other members, _viz._, Mehr Chand and Hazuri Mul, sons of Sarup Chand and Sumer Chand, son of Kastur Chand, were minors in 1871, and were not mentioned in the mortgage-deed.

In July, 1878, the mortgagee sued Jiwan Mul and Lal Chand, son of Rattan Chand who had died, and obtained a decree (11th November 1878), making the mortgaged property primarily liable, with power, if necessary, to recover from the other property of Jiwan Mul, and from the estate of Rattan Chand, deceased. In execution of that decree he brought the mortgaged property to sale, and himself purchased it for Rs. 44,100. On his applying for possession the present defendants, Mehr Chand, Hazuri Mul and Sumer Chand objected, and (23rd July 1879) succeeded in establishing their title to three-eighths of the property.

(1) _13 C. 21=13 I. A. 1._ (2) _5 C. 845._
The mortgagee threupon brought the present suit (11th June, 1880) for a declaration that the shares of the defendants in the family property had been validly mortgaged to him, and had passed under the execution sale; also claiming possession. Amongst other defences it was contended that, as the defendants were not parties to the decree, it did not affect their interests. Issues were fixed as to what the purchase had covered, and as to whether the defendants, having recited in a subsequent mortgage effected in 1878, to another mortgagee, that their property was already mortgaged to the present plaintiffs, were estopped [72] in this way or otherwise from denying it to have been so mortgaged.

The Judicial Assistant Commissioner, Delhi, who heard the suit in the first instance, found that there was nothing on the face of the record of the previous suit showing that the present defendants were liable; and held that the plaintiff could not, by his purchase at the execution sale, have acquired more than the rights of the actual mortgagors and judgment-debtors. On the authority of Loki Mahto v. Aghoree Ajail Lal (1) and Deendyal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (2), he held that the plaintiff was bound by the proceedings in the suit of 1878, and could not go behind the decision in that case. The evidence that the plaintiff desired to offer, implicating the defendants' shares, he held to be inadmissible, and dismissed the suit.

On an appeal by the plaintiff to the Commissioner, the suit was remanded to give the plaintiff the opportunity of proving that the defendants were estopped from objecting to their being made liable, as it was alleged that the plaintiff was induced, by information obtained from the defendants and their agents, to buy the property.

The Commissioner, in the end, found that there was no evidence of anything to constitute an estoppel against the defendants, pointing out that the plaintiff himself had not come forward to state that he had been misled by any conduct on their part. He agreed with the Court of first instance that the plaintiff could not be allowed to go behind the record of the previous case to ascertain whether the defendants had been sued in their representative capacity, and dismissed the appeal.

A second appeal was preferred to the Chief Court, mainly on the ground that the defendants were bound by the acts of Rattan Chand and Jiwan Mul as managing members of a joint trading family; that they derived benefit from the mortgage; and that the rights of the defendants in the property passed at the auction sale to the plaintiff.

The Chief Court (Barkley and Burney, JJ.), taking the facts to be that the mortgagors were the managers of an ancestral [73] business belonging to a family of which the defendants, who were minors when the mortgage was effected, were members, and that the mortgage was necessarily entered into in order to pay the debts of that business, held that there had been a valid mortgage of the entire property, including the rights of the defendants, though the deed erroneously stated the parties to the mortgage to be the sole owners. They held that the property sold was the mortgaged property, and not merely the right of the judgment-debtors therein. The Judges then held the question to be whether the suit of July, 1878, was so framed as to entitle the plaintiff to a decree which would bind the interests of all the members of the family, and whether the defendants were so bound.

In conclusion, on the ground that the defendants were not parties to the decree, or represented in the proceedings in which it was passed, the appeal was dismissed, affirming the dismissal of the suit.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. Graham Q. C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant, contended that the Chief Court ought to have held that the appellant had, by his purchase at the execution sale, acquired a title to the whole property mortgaged, including the shares of the respondents. The appellant had alleged, and was prepared to prove the facts of the case, which were sufficient to show that the two managing members had executed a mortgage under circumstances legally empowering them to make a valid and binding mortgage of the interests of the entire family. This allegation had not in effect been contradicted. The defence had been put on the ground that the defendants were not personally parties to the mortgage, or to the suit thereupon, or to the decree. It was, in effect, the defence that, for the above reasons, the sale was ineffective to pass the defendants' interests in the family property. For the appellant, however, the case was that the defendants being made parties to any of the above was not essential. The managing members had authority to bind their interests. They had exercised this authority by mortgaging the family property to raise money for the purpose of paying a debt due by the joint-family.

Reference was made to Hunoonmanpershad Panday v. Munraj Koon waree (16); Bhaishankar Narberam v. Harivallabh (17); Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (18); Pettachi Chettiar v. Ram Sahai Lal (22); Suraj Bans Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (5).

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondents, contended that only the interest of the parties to the decree were affected by the execution sale. The defendants were neither directly, nor indirectly, parties to the mortgage-deed; and they had not been made parties to the suit, having on their part no right to redeem. The decree-holder having himself become the

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Chief Court of the Punjab in a suit brought by Daulat Ram against Mehr Chand and others. In order to have it declared that under a purchase, which he had made under an execution, he acquired not only a 10-annas share, but also the other 6-annas share which the defendants dispute, and also to recover possession of that six-annas share. In his plaint he says: "That on the 11th January, 1871, Jiwan Mulland Rattan Chand mortgaged the property to plaintiff for Rs. 20,000, under the necessity of paying a debt due to the firm known as Nanak Chand, Sarup Chand, of which defendants are also the proprietors." There seems to be a mistake in stating that the debt was due to the firm instead of a debt by the firm. He then [76] states "that on the 11th November 1878 plaintiff brought a suit by virtue of the mortgage deed and obtained a decree against Jiwan Mul and Lal Chand, son of Rattan Chand: that in execution of the aforesaid decree, plaintiff purchased the said property for Rs. 44,100 at an auction sale; but when he wanted to take possession, defendants, who were minors at the time of the mortgage, set up an objection, and on the 23rd July 1879 prevented plaintiff from taking possession of six out of 16 annas of the property, the value of which is Rs. 16,537-8." Then the plaintiff prayed for a declaration to the effect "that the share of the property regarding which the defendants set up the objection was held in mortgage by plainttiff in a lawful manner; and that the plaintiff purchased the same in execution of the decree."

Now the circumstances of the case are these: by a mortgage executed by Ratan Chand and Jiwan Mul the property in question, with some other property, was mortgaged to the plaintiff. In their mortgage the two mortgagors, who were members of a joint family, including the present defendants, stated that they held ancestral possession of the property, that it was purchased and built by them, and that they owned it to the exclusion of every one else. Then, having stated that the old title deeds were destroyed during the Mutiny, they proceeded. "In these days we have pledged and given in mortgage this property with all its rights, internal and external, to Seth Daulat Ram, son of Lala Nanu Ram"—that is the plaintiff—"proprietor of the firm known as Daulat Ram and Sri Ram, bankers." Then they say in consideration of Rs. 20,000 Queen's coin "under the necessity of paying a debt due to"—it is there also said "due to," but it should be "due by"—"the firm known as Nanak Chand, Sarup Chand, the proprietors of which are the two of us (promisors), mortgagors (viz., Ratan Chand, son of Nanak Chand, and Jiwan Mul, son of Sarup Chand) and also Mehr Chand," and the other defendants. Then they say
"we have given up possession of the mortgaged property in question, and given it into the possession of the mortgagee after the execution of a sepa-

is that we will pay the interest month by month, and the principal sum in a period of three years."

[77] It appears to their Lordships that, although the mortgagors stated that they were the sole proprietors, the statement that they were in ancestral possession showed that they intended to mortgage the whole of what they held as ancestral property, and that the mortgage passed the whole 16 annas of the property which they professed to mortgage, and they mortgaged it, stating that they did so for the purpose of paying the debt due from their firm. The defendants stated that they were not members of that firm, and they relied upon that fact. They did not state that no debt was due from the firm, but merely that they were not members of it. If they had intended to say that the mortgage being executed by the managers of the joint family was executed by them for their own private purposes, and not for such as would benefit the whole joint family, they ought to have said so, and they would have said so. But instead of saying there was no necessity for the mortgage, they say it was a mortgage for a debt of a firm which they were not members.

Then there was a second mortgage afterwards executed, to which the defendants were parties, which is to be found at page 9 of the record, in which it was stated that, "whereas the whole of our property, consisting of shops and houses situated in the city of Delhi, being ancestral property belonging to our common ancestor Nanak Chand, is already mortgaged to Lala Daulat Ram and Sri Ram, bankers of Delhi." To some extent that might be evidence against the defendants, that the first mortgage was binding upon them, and that it included the whole 16-annas, but their Lordships do not think it necessary to place any great reliance upon it.

Now the mortgage having been executed and the debt not being paid, the mortgagee brought an action, not against the whole joint family, but against the two members of the joint family who were managers of it, and who had executed the mortgage. The plaint in that suit is not set out in the record before their Lordships, but it has been brought before them during the course of the argument, it having been sent up under the seal of the Court in another appeal, and consequently their Lordships cannot hesitate to accept it as being a correct copy of the plaint in the suit which was instituted by the mortgagee [78] against the two mortgagors under that mortgage. In that plaint the mortgagee claims not only to recover against the mortgagors the amount of the mortgage debt and interest, but asks that he may have execution and be satisfied out of the mortgaged property. He obtained a decree in that suit, and issued an execution and applied for an attachment of the property. Unfortunately the application for execution of the decree, like the decree itself, is not before their Lordships in this record, but they have it in a manner similar to that in which they have the plaint, and from that application it appears that the mortgagee asked to execute his judgment, not by seizing the right, title, and interest of the two mortgagors under the execution, but that he might be satisfied by seizing and selling that portion of the mortgaged property which was the subject of the suit, and if anything further remained due, that he might levy it upon the separate property of the two defendants. That application was granted, and their Lordships find by the certificate of sale that the whole property was sold. It should be stated that the plaintiff in this suit was not only the mortgagee of the property and the plaintiff in the suit upon the mortgage, but the himself purchased, as he had a right to do, the property under the execution. The certificate of sale says: "It is hereby certified that on the 27th March 1879, by means of a sale by public auction, Lala Daulat Ram, proprietor of the firm of Daulat Ram and Sri Ram, was declared to be the purchaser of six houses and nine shops immediately adjoining one another, situated in the Sukhanand Lane, and the Jozri Bazar, the property of the judgment-debtors, for the sum of Rs. 44,100, in execution of a decree in this case, and that the said auction sale was formally sanctioned by the Court." It was contended on the part of the defendants, that, although the plaintiff purchased the property under execution, he was not entitled to the 6-annas share that belonged to the defendants, inasmuch as they had not been made parties to the suit upon the mortgage deed, and the learned Judges in the Courts below seem to have acted upon the principle that, inasmuch as that suit was brought against the two mortgagors alone, and not against the defendants, all that could be sold, and all that was sold, in execution of the decree, [79] was the right, title, and interest of the two mortgagors, namely, their shares in the property, excluding the 6-annas share which belonged to the defendants.

It appears to their Lordships that the decree cannot stand. The Senior Judge of the Chief Court, Mr. Barkley, says: "For the purposes of this appeal it may be assumed, though there is no finding on this point by the Courts below, that the mortgagors were the managers of an ancestral business belonging to a family of which the defendants, who were minors when the mortgage was effected, were members, and that the mortgage was necessarily entered into, in order to pay the debts of that business. If this were so, the mortgage would be a valid mortgage of the entire property, including the rights of the defendants, though it was erroneously stated that the mortgagors were the sole owners, and had no co-sharers. It may also be assumed that the property brought to sale was the mortgaged property, and not merely the rights of the judgment-debtors therein." Their Lordships think that the learned Judge was correct in making those assumptions. It appears from the record that the plaintiff proposed to prove those facts, but the defendants rested their defence upon the ground that they had not been made parties to the suit, and consequently that their share in the property had not been sold, and could not be sold under the execution. The plaintiff's counsel stated: "We propose to call evidence to prove (1) that the defendants were a joint Hindu family with Jiwan Mul and Lal Chund.—those were the two mortgagors—" and that the two last-named were the managers of this firm of mortgagors. The transactions were carried out in the name of 'Nanak Chund, Sarup Chand.' "—the name of the banking firm. Then "(2) the rents of this property were credited in the books of this firm; the expenses of this family were debited in their books; (3) the money we advanced on the mortgage was expended in paying debts, &c., of the joint Hindu family; (4) this family had dealings with Kesri Chand Balmokand when we brought our suit on the mortgage; the defendants joined with the managers Jiwan Mul and Lal Chand, and mortgaged the equity of redemption of the whole property to Kesri Chand Balmokand, [80] reciting in that deed that the property was already in mortgage to us." That is the second mortgage to which allusion has already been made, and upon which their Lordships have not placed much reliance. Then "(5) after we attached the property Jiwan Mul, in virtue of a certificate under s. 305, tried to sell the whole property per Ganga Pershad, auctioneer. The property was twice put up for auction after being advertised, and the defendants took no steps to make any objections. These sales fell through. (6) Subsequently at the sale in execution of decree, Kesri Chand Balmokand bid for us up to Rs. 44,000, and we eventually purchased for Rs. 44,000." That is the plaintiff's purchase at that sale. Then in another part of the record it appears that they also proposed to prove that, after the sale had taken place, the defendants received a portion of the purchase money which was more than sufficient to pay off the mortgage, but the defendants objected, and refused to allow the plaintiff to go into evidence of those facts. Again, Jiwan Mul in his, evidence stated that the business was managed by Rattan and himself; that it was an ancestral business; that there had been no partition; and that the debt for which the mortgage was executed was due from the business in which the defendants had a beneficial interest.

Under those circumstances their Lordships think that the learned Judge of the Chief Court was perfectly justified in making the assumptions which he did make, but that he was in error in deciding as he did the question upon the point upon which the defendants have made their stand, namely, that as they had not been made parties to the action, their shares in the property had not been sold.

It appears from the cases that have been cited that notwithstanding the defendants were not made parties to the suit, still as the suit was brought on the mortgage to recover the mortgaged property, and the plaintiff in the suit obtained a decree, and executed that decree by seizing the mortgaged property, the question would be whether the mortgage included the interest of all parties, or only the right, title, and interest of the two parties who were made defendants. In the case cited from volume 5 of the Indian Law Reports, Mr. Justice Pontifex in giving his [81] decision says, at page 832:i (1) "It has been decided that if the managing member of a family, the other members of which are at the time minors, having authority (the touchstone of which is necessity) mortgaged the whole 16-annas of the ancestral property, then, in a suit by the mortgagee, the sale under the decree would pass the whole 16-annas of the mortgaged property, although the mortgagor alone was made defendant; and the reason for such decision probably is that the 16-annas having been validly mortgaged to the mortgagee, and his remedy being foreclosure or sale, the decree of the Court would affect what was in the parties before it, namely, the mortgagee's right, validly acquired, to have the whole 16-annas sold."

The present case was first heard before the Assistant Judicial Commissioner, who held the same opinion as that at which the Chief Court arrived. Then it was appealed to the Commissioner, and he came to the same conclusion; but at the time of these decisions the Courts certainly had not before them a recent decision which is reported in the 13th volume of the Indian Law Reports, page 1—Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2). There, their Lordships, after very full consideration of the whole case, said: "Their Lordships do not think that the authority of Deendyal's case bound the Court to hold that nothing but Girdhari's co-partnership interest passed by the sale. If his debt was of a nature to support a sale of the entirety, he might legally have sold it without suit, or the creditor might legally procure a sale of it by suit. All the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own. Assuming they have such a right it will avail them nothing unless they can prove that the debt was not such as to justify the sale."

When the plaintiff applied to be let into possession under the certificate of sale, the defendants objected. He thereupon brought this suit, and the defendants had the opportunity of trying whether the mortgage was a valid mortgage which bound the ancestral property. The plaintiff proposed to prove all the facts that were necessary to make the mortgage valid and binding upon them. The defendants had the opportunity of trying that question, but they did not wish to try it. They made their stand upon the ground that they had not been made parties to the suit, and that the two mortgagors alone had been sued. But that ground falls from under them. Then, when they stood upon that ground, and objected to have the evidence gone into at the proper time for going into it, can they now ask their Lordships to remit the case? Their Lordships at first had some little doubt as to whether the case ought not to be remanded; but considering the evidence of Jiwan Mull, and that the plaintiff offered to go into the whole evidence, and to prove that a portion of the purchase money was made over and received by the defendants and that the defendants refused to meet the case upon that ground, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the case ought not to be remanded, and that the decision of the Chief Court must be reversed, as also the decree of the first Court and that of the Commissioner.

It is, therefore, necessary that the decree be made which the Chief Court ought to have made, and their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the decrees of all the Courts below be reversed, and that it be decreed that the plaintiff is entitled to the six-anna share for which he sues, and that he is entitled to recover possession thereof, and further that the respondents do pay the costs in all the lower Courts. The respondents must pay the costs of this appeal.

Original Civil.

Before Mr. Justice Macpherson.

Will—Legacy to person appointed executor—Rebuttal of presumption—Parol evidence—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 128—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2.

The language of s. 128 of the Succession Act is peremptory and leaves no room for a presumption, and it is not left to the Court to decide whether the legacy is given to the person in his character as executor or not. The rule as to the admissibility of parol evidence to rebut the presumption, which may possibly upon the decisions obtain in England, has no force in this country where such evidence is inadmissible.

* Original Civil Suit No. 158 of 1887.
The plaintiff sought in this suit to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 5,000, being a legacy left to him by one Monmothonath Dey, under the following circumstances:—

Monmothonath Dey died on the 3rd December, 1881, without issue, leaving a widow Lukhemoni Dassi, aged about 22 years, and having duly made and published his will in the Bengalee language and character. The will, which began by giving his wife authority to adopt with the consent of the two executors thereby appointed, went on as follows: "I appoint my wife Sreemutty Lukhemoni Dassi and my friend Sreejoot Baboo Prosono Coomar Ghose" (the plaintiff) "executor and executrix and executor of the whole of the moveable and immoveable properties standing in my own name or in benami left by me." It then continued with a number of directions with reference to the disposal of the testator's property immaterial for the purpose of this suit, and towards the end contained the following clause: "The executor and executrix appointed by me by this will shall in all matters act under the advice and counsel of my nearest relative and well-wisher Sreejoot Baboo Preonath Bose, the son of my father's sister. Should there be no mutual agreement between the said executor and executrix in carrying on the work in terms of this will, then the Administrator-General of Bengal shall be the executor in their place. My friend, the said [84] Prosono Coomar Ghose, whom I appoint executor, shall get five thousand rupees from my estate."

The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that after the death of the testator he, as executor, caused the cremation and shrudh ceremonies of the testator to be performed, and thereafter endeavoured to get the widow to join him in taking out probate of the will; that he was all along ready, willing and anxious to administer the estate, but that he anticipated that if he alone took out probate difficulties would be caused, as disagreements had already taken place between him and the widow, and he anticipated that in administering the estate himself he would be harassed in every way by the widow, who had no business experience whatsoever and was under the control of her own relations. He also alleged that the widow was desirous of acting alone, but that he considered, if she was allowed to do so, it would be equally detrimental to the interests of the estate. A lengthy correspondence took place between the plaintiff and the widow and their respective attorneys, the nature of which, as proved in the case, is sufficiently stated in the judgment of Mr. Justice Macpherson.

As neither the plaintiff nor the widow could agree upon a course of action, the Administrator-General, at the instance of the plaintiff took out probate of the will on the 16th August, 1883, his application for such grant, which was made on the 23rd day of May 1882, being opposed by the widow. After the Administrator-General had received possession of the estate, the plaintiff demanded payment of his legacy, but the Administrator-General, having regard to the provisions of s. 128 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, and s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, did not consider himself justified in paying it, and refused payment. The plaintiff therefore brought this suit, after serving notice of action on the defendant, for a declaration that he was entitled to the legacy, for payment of the same out of the estate, and if necessary for administration of the estate.

The defendant did not deny the main facts of the case, and submitted to the Court as to whether the legacy was payable under the circumstances. The following issues were settled:—

[85] 1. Did the testator intend to give the legacy apart from the appointment of the legatee as executor?
2. Is the plaintiff under the terms of the will entitled to the legacy, even if he has not taken out probate or manifested an intention to act?

3. Is the plaintiff under the circumstances mentioned in the plaint entitled to the legacy?

The suit came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Macpherson on the 25th July, 1887.

Mr. Bonnerjec and Mr. O'Kinealy, for the plaintiff.

Mr. Pugh, Mr. Sale and Mr. Garth, for the defendant.

Evidence was given by the plaintiff to show that he was in the employment of the testator and looked after his affairs without remuneration, and whilst he was under examination by Mr. O'Kinealy evidence was tendered to show that the legacy was given to him for past services, and not to him as executor, the nature of the evidence being conversations between him and the testator shortly before the death of the latter.

Mr. Sale for the defendant objected to such evidence being received.

Mr. O'Kinealy for the plaintiff contended that the evidence was admissible, and cited Tussaud v. Tussaud (1), In re Appleton, Barber v. Tebbit (2), and Harrison v. Rowley (3), as supporting his contention.

Mr. Sale.—No parol evidence can be received, the question being one arising on the construction of the will itself and not one of a legal presumption. The Courts in England have held that there is a so-called presumption with regard to a person who is named in a will as executor and also as legatee that the legacy is given for services as executor; but it is not a legal presumption, but merely a construction put on the will. The evidence admissible is only that regarding the circumstances connected with the will. Tussaud v. Tussaud (1) was a question of election—a legal presumption and not a question of the construction of the will. Harrison v. Rowley (3) was a case [86] similar to the present, and there the question was treated as one of construction and not of presumption. (See also Taylor on Evidence, p. 1045.) In re Appleton Barber v. Tebbit (2) expressly leaves the question open.

In addition the words of s. 128 of the Succession Act are peremptory: "He shall not take the legacy unless he proves the will or otherwise manifest an intention to act as executor."

Mr. O'Kinealy (in reply):—This is a question of presumption and not of construction merely, and the evidence is admissible upon the authorities. If the words of the section are to be taken as peremptory, it would have the effect of depriving a person of a legacy whom the testator had named as executor, although the testator might expressly declare by his will that, whether the person acted or not as executor, he was to take the legacy.

MACPHERSON, J.—I will admit the evidence, but reserve the question whether it is admissible and relevant or not.

The evidence was then proceeded with, and the nature of the facts deposed to and proved will be found sufficiently stated in the judgment of the Court for the purpose of this report.

Mr. Pugh, on behalf of the defendant, contended that s. 128 of the Succession Act applied to the case, and that upon the facts proved the plaintiff was not entitled to take the legacy. He also contended that upon the construction of the will itself the testator never intended that the plaintiff should take the legacy unless he acted as executor.

(1) L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 363. (2) L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 893. (3) 4 Ves. 212.
The judgment of the Court (Macpherson, J.) was delivered on the 12th August, and was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Monmothonath Dey died in December 1881, leaving a will of which he appointed his wife Lakhemoni Dassi and the plaintiff Prosono Coomar Ghose, executrix and executor.

The will after the appointment of the executors provides for a legacy to the plaintiff in the following terms: “My friend Prosono Coomar Ghose, whom I appoint executor, shall get Rs. 5,000 from my estate.” The plaintiff has not proved the will, and the question is whether, having regard to the provisions of s. 128 of the Succession Act, which is made applicable to the wills of Hindus by the Hindu Wills Act, he can take the legacy.

Section 128 enacts that, “if a legacy bequeathed to a person who is named an executor of the will, he shall not take the legacy unless he proves the will, or otherwise manifests an intention to act as executor.” It is contended that the will itself shows that the legacy was not given to the plaintiff in his character as executor, and that it was the testator’s intention that he should take the legacy, whether he acted or not. It is also contended that the plaintiff, though he has not taken out probate, has sufficiently manifested an intention to act.

The section in question follows the English rule that, if a legacy is given to an executor, he must accept the office or manifest an intention of acting; but the rule is there based upon a presumption that a legacy to a person appointed executor is given to him in that character, and this presumption can be rebutted by “something in the nature of the legacy or other circumstances arising on the will.” Whether it can be rebutted by parol evidence is more questionable. In In re Appleton, Barber v. Tebbit (1), Lord Justice Cotton considered that parol evidence was admissible, but the question was not decided, and Lord Justice Fry declined to express an opinion without further time for consideration. I admitted parol evidence in the present case subject to the objection which was taken and without deciding as to its admissibility.

I am of opinion that the evidence is not admissible in this country, and for this reason, that s. 128 leaves no room for a presumption. The language is peremptory; it is not left to the Court to decide whether the legacy was given to the person named in his character as executor. It is assumed that it was so given and the prohibition follows.

As the plaintiff has not proved the will, the question arises whether he has manifested an intention to act as executor. The proving of the will, when a person is in a position to prove it, is of course the best manifestation of his intention, and, if he failed to prove it, the Court would require a very strong reason for the omission before finding that the intention existed.

The will is a peculiar one. It seems to have been clearly the intention of the testator that the two executors should act together, if they could do so, or not at all.

It gives permission to his wife to adopt a son, and he then directs that if she fails to adopt, the executors (she being one of them) are to compel her to do so. The executors are to act on all matters under the advice of Preonath Bose, and then comes this clause: “Should there be no mutual agreement between the said executor and executrix in carrying on the work in terms of this will, then the Administrator-General of Bengal shall be the executor in their place."

It seems to me that this last provision applies equally to disagreement before or after probate. It could not have been the intention of the testator that, if the executors disagreed so as to render a proper administration of his estate impossible, they were to go through the form of obtaining probate, and then incur the expense of getting this probate cancelled, so that the Administrator-General might be put in their place.

As a matter of fact, they did disagree. The plaintiff was at first willing to join Lukhemoni Dassi in taking out probate, and wrote to this effect through his attorney, but got no answer. In a subsequent letter he alludes to the disagreement, and suggests that the best course under the circumstances would be for the Administrator-General to take out probate. To this Lukhemoni objects, and intimates her intention of applying for probate on her own account. The plaintiff did not approve of this, and again, on the 1st of April 1882, asks if she is willing to join him in an application, intimating that if she did not he would proceed to prove the will. To this Lukhemoni's attorney replies on the 14th April that, if the plaintiff "will not agree to my client alone taking out probate, he had better apply for probate to be granted to himself, and my client will take such steps as she may be advised; she is not willing to join your client in the application for probate."

Having regard to the terms of the will, I think the plaintiff has manifested an intention to act sufficient to entitle him to the legacy. I have no doubt that he was always ready and [89] willing to act, and it is proved that after the testator's death he made arrangements for the cremation and shradh, or borrowed or advanced the money which was necessary for those purposes. The action of Lukhemoni prevented him from carrying out his intention, and such action on the part of one or other of the executors was contemplated and provided for by the testator; provided for in this way, that they were to be relieved altogether from the responsibility of acting as his executors. I think the plaintiff was quite justified in not attempting to take out probate alone, and that it was not desirable in the interests of the estate or consistent with the intention of the testator that he should make the attempt. It might be open to argument that the plaintiff was not appointed an executor within the meaning of s. 128, his appointment being contingent on certain conditions, failing which the Administrator-General was to act; but on the other grounds stated I think he is entitled to the legacy.

There will be a decree declaring him entitled to the legacy and directing the Administrator-General to pay the same with interest and costs out of the assets of the estate. If he does not admit assets within one week from date there will be the usual administration decree.

The costs of the Administrator-General as between attorney and client to come out of the estate.

Onus of proof—Transferability of tenures.

In a suit brought to recover possession of certain lands forming part of the Putni estate of the plaintiffs and constituting the ryoti holding of one Mongola Akund, which lands were sold in execution of a money decree against Mongola Akund, and purchased by the defendant, the defendant set up that the tenancy held by Mongola Akund was of a permanent and transferable nature. Held, that the onus of proving the transferability of this tenancy was upon the defendant. Doya Chand Shahu v. Anand Chander Sen (1) not followed.

The question raised in this appeal was one of onus of proof arising under the following circumstances. The lands, the subject-matter of this suit, formed part of a putni belonging to the plaintiffs, and constituted the ryoti holding of one Mongola Akund. In execution of a money decree against the said Mongola Akund, the lands were sold, and purchased by the defendant Durga Govind Sirkar, who, in due course, took possession through the Court. The plaintiffs thereupon brought this suit to recover khas possession, upon the ground that the holding of Mongola Akund was a non-transferable one, and that, therefore, Durga Govind Sirkar acquired no title under his purchase; that in fact he was a trespasser and was liable to be evicted. The defendant, Durga Govind's case was that the holding of Mongola Akund was of a permanent and transferable character, and that, therefore, he acquired a valid title by his purchase.

The Court of first instance held that the onus of proof lay on the defendant, Durga Govind Sirkar, and being of opinion that the latter had given no evidence to prove that the holding was transferable, decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs. On appeal by Durga Govind, the District Judge held that the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs, and accordingly remanded the case to the Court of first instance for re-trial. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court against this order of remand.

*Appeal from Order No 84 of 1887 against the order of F. J. G. Campbell, Esq., Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 17th of December, 1886, reversing an order of Baboo Mohendra Nath Mitter, Munsif of Natore, dated the 25th of March, 1886.

The judgment of the Court (Mitter, Offg. C. J., and Ghose, J.) was, omitting the facts as above set out, as follows:—

The question arises, upon the respective allegations made by the plaintiffs and the defendants, whether the plaintiffs are bound to prove, before they can succeed, that the holding is of a non-transferable character, or whether they are entitled to recover, if the defendant Durga Govind fails to prove that the holding is transferable.

It seems to us, upon the admitted facts of the case, that the onus lies upon the defendant, and that he cannot succeed in his defence unless it be proved that he has a title to hold the land as a tenant under the plaintiffs, or in other words that the holding is of a transferable character.

The land in suit is admittedly a part of the plaintiffs' putni; and as such, they are prima facie entitled to the possession of it, and it is for the person who questions their right to possession, by setting up a subordinate tenure, to establish his title. The defendant, Durga Govind, in the present case, sets up as against the plaintiffs a permanent and transferable tenure, and if he proves it, and not otherwise, he would be entitled to be in possession. One test which may well be applied in a case like this is, who would win if no evidence were given on either side, and it seems to us that, upon the facts admitted, the plaintiffs must win if the defendant does not prove the case set up by him.

The question appears to us to be concluded by the authority of the Privy Council in the case of Perhlad Sein v. Doorgapershad Tewaree (1); as also by Suhodwa v. Smith (2); Ram Monee Mohurir v. Aleemooddeen (3); Rajkishen Mookerjee v. Peare Mohun Mookerjee (4); Beharee Sahoo v. Puryag Maktoon (5); Hyes v. Moneeooddeen Ahung (6); and Batai Ahir v. Bhuggobutty Koer (7).

[92] The learned vakeel for the respondent, in the course of his argument, relied very strongly upon a ruling by a Division Bench of this Court, viz., Doya Chand Shaha v. Anund Chunder Sen (8). That case is no doubt in his favour, but it seems to us that we are bound to follow the principle of law laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case referred to above. There the plaintiff, as zamindar of Rammuggur, sued the defendant to evict him from two mouzahs forming part of his zamindari, on the allegation that they had been made over to the defendant's father in lieu of allowance for rendering service; that the service tenure had been determined by the dismissal of the grantee from service; and that the mokurari set up by defendant was untrue. The defendant claimed to hold it as a mokurari granted to his father. The Courts in India found that the plaintiff had failed to prove the precise case set up by him, and that there was no proof of any lease other than the mokurari pottah, and then upon the evidence held that the mokurari was genuine. The Judicial Committee on appeal were also of opinion that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff was weak and defective, but notwithstanding this finding, they did not agree in the decision of the High Court. They observed: "But even if it be admitted that the appellant had failed to establish the particular case alleged by him, it does not follow that the Courts below were right in leaping to the conclusion that the respondents had established their right to hold the lands under their mokurari tenure. It is possible that the reward to Muddun Mohun Tewarree may have been an assignment of the rent of the villages to him for his life or other life interest. The appellant is the zamindar; as such he has a prima facie title to the gross collections from all the mouzahs within his zamindari. It lay upon the respondents to defeat that right by proving the grant of an intermediate tenure. In their Lordships' opinion there is, in the record before them, no satisfactory proof of the deed relied upon, or of any right or interest in these villages beyond at most the lifetime of Muddun Mohun Tewarree."

No doubt what was set up by the defendant in that case was the grant of an intermediate tenure, but this circumstance does not make any difference in the principle which their Lordships laid down, and which we are bound to apply in this case.

And applying that principle, it seems to us that, unless the defendant can prove the tenure set up by him, viz., a permanent and transferable tenure, the plaintiff, the admitted landlord, is entitled to enter into possession. And this view has been almost uniformly taken by this Court, as would appear from an examination of the cases quoted above.

The learned vakeel for the respondent also relied upon the remarks of the Judicial Committee in the case of Sumbhoo Lall v. The Collector of Surat (1), the said remarks being in p. 39. But it will be observed on examination that they are based entirely upon the facts as found by the Judicial Committee on pp. 88 and 39.

Upon all these considerations we are of opinion that the onus of proof in this case is upon the defendant.

The Court of first instance, as already mentioned, held, as we understand its judgment, that the defendant had failed to prove that the tenure was of a permanent and transferable character, he having given no evidence in support of his allegation. There is no finding by the Appellate Court upon this part of the case, and we accordingly called upon the vakeel for the respondent to state what evidence there was supporting the case for the defendant, and he frankly admitted that, beyond the fact that upon a former occasion the property had been sold in execution of a decree, there was no evidence showing that the tenure was transferable. The landlord was no party to this sale, and there is nothing to show that he accepted the purchaser as his tenant. That being so, it seems to be perfectly clear that the defendant has not given any evidence to establish that he has acquired a title by his purchase.

The next question that arises is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover khas possession. It is said that the tenant Mongola Akund has not abandoned the holding, but that he is in occupation under a sub-lease granted by Durga Govind Sirkar, the purchaser. We do not propose to decide any question that may hereafter arise as between Mongola Akund and the plaintiffs, he being no party to this suit.

It is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that the defendant Durga Gobind has no right to retain possession of the land in suit, and to resist the claim for possession on the part of the plaintiff. This view is supported by the Full Bench decision in the case of Narendra Narayan Roy v. Ishán Chandra Sen (2).

The result is that the order of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed, and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with all costs.

Lis pendens—Auction purchaser bound by lis pendens.

K brought a suit against P to recover possession of certain land. Whilst that suit was pending in the Court of first instance, the right, title, and interest of P in the land were sold in execution of a decree against him at the instance of a judgment-creditor and purchased by G. Subsequent to G's purchase K's suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance; but K appealed, and the Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court below and gave judgment in K's favour. G, who was not made a party to the appeal, thereupon instituted a suit against K to eject him and obtain possession of the land.

Held that the doctrine of lis pendens applied, and that G was not entitled to maintain the suit.

Held, further, that it made no difference to the application of the doctrine that the decree of the Court of first instance was in favour of G's predecessor in title, for that decree was open to appeal, and the decree in the suit was that passed by the Appellate Court, the proceedings in the Appeal Court being merely a continuation of those in the suit; and as G's purchase was made whilst that suit was pending, G was still bound by the decree of the Appellate Court.

The principal defendant, Guru Churn Kurmokar, instituted a suit in the year 1882 against Pran Gour Mozumdar, defendant No. 3 in the present suit, for the purpose of recovering possession of the lands, the subject of the present suit, alleging that they were lakhiraj, and that he had got them by purchase. Whilst that suit was pending in the Court of first instance, the right, title and interest of Pran Gour Mozumdar in the lands were put up to sale at the instance of one Moharani Sarut Sunduri Debi, who held a decree against him, and on the 20th June, 1882, purchased by the present plaintiff in the name of Srinath Dutt, one of his servants. On the 13th December, 1882, Guru Churn Kurmokar's suit was dismissed, but he appealed, and on the 26th September, 1883, the decree of the lower Court was reversed and the suit decreed. The present plaintiff was not made a party to that suit in the Court of first instance, or whilst it was pending on appeal, and in the present suit it was found as a fact that Pran Gour Mozumdar did not appear on the appeal which was heard and decreed ex parte. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff on the 10th August, 1885, to obtain possession of the lands and for mesne profits, and he alleged that the decree obtained by the defendant in his suit against Pran Gour Mozumdar was fraudulent, and, being obtained ex parte in a suit to which he had not been made a party, was not binding on him.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 648 of 1887 against the decree of Babu Promotho Nath Banerjee, Rai Bahadur, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 11th of January 1887, reversing the decree of Babu Lall Gopal Sen, Munsiff of Attiah dated the 4th of May 1886.

The principal defendant, Guru Churn Kurmokar, appeared and filed a written statement, pleading amongst other things that the suit was barred under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that, as the plaintiff had admitted purchased the right, title and interest of Pran Gour whilst his suit was pending, he was bound by the decree in his suit. The defendant further denied all knowledge of the plaintiff’s auction-purchase. The other matters pleaded in the written statement are immaterial for the purpose of this report.

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree, holding that he was not bound by the proceedings in Guru Churn’s suit, but the lower appellate Court reversed that decree, holding that the doctrine of lis pendens applied, and relied upon the following authorizes [96] in support of its decision: Umanoyi Burmanee v. Tarini Prasad Ghose (1); Manual Fruval v. Sangapalli Latchmidevamma (2); Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub Holdar (3); Jharoo v. Raj Chunder Doss (4).

The plaintiff accordingly now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboos Rash Behari Ghose, Durgamohan Das and Mohiney Mohun Chuckerbutty, for the appellant.

The nature of the contentions urged on behalf of the appellant at the hearing of the appeal appears sufficiently in the judgment of the High Court (Norriss and Ghose, JJ.), which was delivered by—

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are shortly as follow: The present defendant brought a suit in the year 1882 against one Pran Gour for the recovery of possession of certain lands. Pending the suit in the Court of first instance, the right, title and interest of Pran Gour were sold in execution of a decree passed against him, and were purchased by the present plaintiff on the 26th of June 1882. Subsequently to this, that is, on the 13th December 1882, the abovementioned suit against Pran Gour was dismissed by the Court of first instance. The present defendant thereupon appealed. The purchaser at the execution sale, namely, the present plaintiff, was not made a party to the appeal; but there is no evidence to show that the defendant knew of the plaintiff’s purchase. On the 26th of September 1883 the appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court of first instance, and gave judgment in favour of the present defendant. The present suit is by the plaintiff, as auction-purchaser of the right, title and interest of Pran Gour, against the defendant for ejectment: and the question that was raised in the Courts below was whether the doctrine of lis pendens was applicable to this case. The lower appellate Court has held that it is applicable, and has accordingly dismissed the suit. For the appellant it has been contended [97] by Dr. Rashbehari Ghose that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to this case: first, because the sale at which the present plaintiff purchased was a sale by a Court in execution of a decree, and not a voluntary sale by the judgment-debtor; and, second, because the decree of the Court of first instance, passed in the previous suit on the 13th of December 1882, was to all intents and purposes a final decree in the said suit until it was reversed on appeal; and as the plaintiff was not made a party to the appeal preferred by the defendant against that decree, it ought to be taken that the decree now relied upon by the defendant, viz., the decree of the appellate Court, is not binding on the plaintiff.

As to the first branch of this argument it appears to us that, so far as the decisions of this Court are concerned, it has almost invariably been held that the doctrine of \textit{lis pendens} does apply even to the case of an auction-purchaser; and we do not see any reason to differ from those decisions. The learned vakal for the appellant has, however, very strongly relied upon the decision of the Privy Council in the case of \textit{Anundo Moyee dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee} (1); and he has contended that the observations made by the Judicial Committee in their decision indicate that in a case like the present the doctrine of \textit{lis pendens} cannot, and ought not, to apply. It will, however, be observed, upon a consideration of that case, that the facts upon which the observations relied upon by Dr. Rashbehari Ghose were made were wholly different from the facts of the case which we have now to deal with; and it seems to me that their Lordships of the Privy Council were in no way called upon to express, nor did they express, any opinion whatever on that occasion upon the question with which we are now concerned. On turning to the report of the case as is given in Moore's Indian Appeals, it would appear that a decree for sale was passed by the Supreme Court at Calcutta upon a mortgage deed by which certain properties in the mofussil were mortgaged; that in execution of this decree the said properties were sold, and the plaintiff became the purchaser. While the suit in which the said decree was passed was pending, in execution of another decree against the mortgagor, which was a money decree, his right, title and interest in those properties were sold and were purchased by the defendant; and the question that came up before the Judicial Committee was a question that was raised between these two purchasers. It was contended before the Judicial Committee that the sale to the plaintiffs was a sale in a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage, and that the suit for foreclosure having been instituted prior to the sale at which the defendant made his purchase, the latter was bound by the decree for foreclosure in exactly the same manner as if he were a party to the foreclosure suit. With reference to this contention, their Lordships of the Privy Council say: "There is no foundation whatever for the claim so put, that the case to which they have been referred.—\textit{The Bishop of Winchester v. Paine} (2)—has really no relation to any case of this kind. That case merely determines this—that where there is a suit for foreclosure, and the mortgagor, a defendant to that suit makes a voluntary alienation, pending the suit, of any part of his interest in the equity of redemption, a purchaser will not be allowed afterwards to institute a new suit for a new foreclosure, the ground being that, if that were permitted, proceedings in a foreclosure suit would be endless, because every day a fresh alienation might be made in some parts of the proceedings. But that was simply a foreclosure suit and the subsequent mortgagee would be barred from instituting any new suit in the Court of Chancery for the purpose of enforcing the equity of redemption. But no suit of foreclosure ever proceeded actively, or ever was made to work actively, against a party who was not before the Court. That case simply decides that subsequent mortgagees of an equity of redemption are bound by a foreclosure suit. This, however, was not a foreclosure decree. It was a decree for sale, and a decree for sale made in the Supreme Court at Calcutta had no effect whatever in \textit{rem}, as it had no effect whatever over the property in the mofussil. The decree for sale was merely a decree in substance that the parties to the suit should concur in conveying and selling the property to a purchaser, and no such decree for sale could have [99] any operation whatever upon the title of persons in the mofussil who were no parties to the suit. Therefore it appears to their Lordships that the view of the case presented to them based upon the case of The Bishop of Winchester v. Paine, has really no application to the subject-matter of this suit.''

(2) '1 Ves. 194.
\end{footnotesize}

Reading these observations by the light of the facts of the case, it appears to me that they have really no application whatever to the question we are now called upon to determine, that question being whether the doctrine of lis pendens applies to the present plaintiff, who, according to the contention of the present defendant, made his purchase during the pendency of the suit, in the course of which the decree, awarding possession of the lands to the defendant, was eventually made. The view that we now take, namely, that the doctrine of lis pendens does apply, has been taken, as I have already said, in several cases in this Court, that is, in the cases of Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub Holdar (1); Jharoo v. Raj Chunder Dass (2); and a recent case, namely Kally Dass Mookerjee v. Sheik Harshad (3) decided on the 7th December 1886, by the present Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Beverley. We think we ought to follow these rulings, and hold that the doctrine of lis pendens does apply to an auction-purchaser such as the plaintiff is.

As to the second branch of the argument pressed before us, we had at first some doubts, but after hearing the respondent's vakeel we think we ought to hold that the appellant must fail. The decree passed in the suit was the final decree pronounced on the 20th of September 1885. The proceedings in the appellate Court were but a continuation of the proceedings in the suit, and although for a time there was a decree in favour of the present plaintiff's predecessor in title, yet that was a decree which was open to appeal, and the decree having been appealed against, we ought to take it that the decree of the appellate Court was the decree in the suit, and the sale at which the plaintiff purchased having taken place pending the suit in which that [100] decree was pronounced, we think that the doctrine of lis pendens does apply to the case.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

DINABUNDHU SURMA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. BODIA KOCH (Defendant).* [17th August, 1887.]

Right of occupancy in Assam—Pykes, their rights and privileges.

The plaintiff who held land in Assam under a settlement from Government sued to eject the defendant from certain lands within his holding. It was proved that the defendant was a descendant from one of the pykes who held lands under the Assam Rajahs; that the Assam Rajahs granted the pyke to a certain lakherajdar; that the pyke held the lands in suit as before under the lakherajdar; that the lakheraj was subsequently resumed by Government; and that the defendant had his house and gardens on the land for a long time, and had paid rent for many years at Government rates.

The rights of such tenants explained and discussed.

This was a suit to eject the defendant from certain lands which he held under the plaintiffs who were the holders of the settlement under Government.

The defendant, amongst other things, pleaded that he had acquired a right of occupancy, having long held possession of the land in suit, and that he was therefore not liable to be ejected.

The first Court considered that, as there was no law or custom in force in Assam, or special contract, by virtue of which the under-tenant could acquire a right of occupancy, there was no reason why the plaintiffs were not entitled to obtain khas possession. It found on the evidence that the defendant was formerly the tenant of the Borooahs of Chand Kaithi, whose maliki rights had been acquired by the Government, but that upon that taking place, any rights the defendant might have had became [101] extinct, and thus the plaintiffs were not bound to recognize him. That Court accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree for khas possession.

The defendant appealed, and the lower appellate Court reversed the decree of the first Court upon grounds which sufficiently appear in the judgment of the High Court, and dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiffs now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Jusoda Nundan Poramanick, for the appellants.

No one appeared for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ghose, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case, the plaintiff, as the settlement holder from Government, sued to eject the defendant from certain lands held by him as tenant. The plaintiff's allegation was that the defendant was but a chookaneet tenant, liable to be ejected at his pleasure; while the case for the defendant was that the land was held by his family from generation to generation as pyker lands, and that he had a permanent right of occupancy and was not liable to be ejected.

It was not proved that the defendant was a tenant of the description alleged by the plaintiff; and in fact the lower appellate Court holds this to be the case.

The facts that have been found in the case by Mr. L. Johnson, the Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, are (1) that the defendant is a descendant from one of the pykes who held lands under the Assam Rajahs; (2) that the Assam Rajahs granted the pyke to a certain lakherajdar; (3) that the pyke held the land in suit as before under the lakherajdar; (4) that the lakheraj was subsequently resumed by Government; (5) that the defendant has his house and gardens upon the land for a long time and has paid for many years at "Government revenue rates." The Judge is further of opinion that, although upon resumption of the lakheraj, the defendant lost all the rights he may have had under the lakherajdar, he did not lose the rights he held under the Assam Rajahs.
[102] The Judge then says that Act X of 1859 does not apply to Assam, and therefore the right of occupancy as conferred upon ryots by s. 9 of the Act cannot be claimed; and he holds that there is no statute law of landlord and tenant in Assam; still having regard to the laws in force in other parts of India, and regard being also had to the facts of the case, the defendant is not liable to be summarily ejected.

We do not agree with the Judge in thinking that the case should be determined by the laws in force in other parts of India; and it appears to us that he should have confined himself to such laws as might be found to obtain in Assam.

It is not necessary in this case to discuss whether Act X of 1859, or the occupancy sections of that Act, are applicable to Assam; for we think that the case may well be decided upon the facts as found by the Judge and upon the common law of the country.

What may be the common law of the country is to be found in the "Selections from the records of the Bengal Government" No. XI, published by authority in 1853. And it appears from the report of Major Jenkins, Commissioner of Revenue, Assam, dated the 13th November 1849, that under the ancient Government of the country, the pykes system prevailed in Assam; that the pykes had lands assigned to them in lieu of service; that latterly, they had "generally to serve for one-third of the year, or such as were not field-labourers, had to give so much cloth or gold or other article which they were employed to produce;" that besides the lands granted in lieu of service, the pykes "were allowed to hold the village barri lands, without limitation as to extent and free from all direct imposts," and that these lands descended from father to son, divisible amongst the children according to the custom of the country; that they could give the lands away by "gift, or will, or by mortgage, but all the pykes throughout the country paid a capitation tax in lieu of, or as equivalent to a rent for these lands;" that when personal service was not required from a pyke, he paid certain rent; that in consequence of the exemption of slaves from taxation, and "the plague of poll-tax" and personal service, many pykes were content to call themselves slaves, and concealed themselves amongst the families of slaves [103] who could protect them; and this resulted in extensive cancelment of pykes; and that Mr. Scott who held the office of Commissioner under the English Government instituted enquiry, and the result was that a very large number of persons were restored to the rank of pykes. The report further states "that the ryots are now considered to have full proprietary rights in all their lands of all descriptions, and the pykes are no longer liable to arbitrary interference of any Revenue Officer, and no ryot could be dispossessed of any portion of his land except by the regular process of the Civil Court. They can, of course, sell any portion of their lands, for, though the Government withheld from yielding to them a proprietary right in the pyke land, yet the ryot can dispose of his right of occupancy; the Government have foregone their right to interfere, and no other authority has any power."

Major Jenkins then says that he considers that "the estates in Assam, of all descriptions and sizes, are more or less freehold, and held subject to the only one condition of paying the Government tax on the land, and all the occupants are with little exception free-holders." Referring to the tenants of lakherajdars, he says that they are, "to all intents, free-holders also, for they were transferred by the Government of the country with their lands, and all that the Government surrendered was the right to the services of the pykes. The lands they occupy are as much their own as if they were held under Government, and they are not restrained from throwing up these lands and leaving the lakherajdars whenever they choose, but the abandoned lands would belong to the lakherajdars, or, if sold to other ryots, these would have to pay rent to the lakherajdars.

We think that we may well accept the above report of Major Jenkins as giving what the customary law of the country was under the old Government; and what has been understood since the English conquest to be the law and the rights and privileges of the pykes.

The plaintiff in the present case, as above mentioned, is but a settlement-holder from Government. The written lease, as we understand it, does not confer upon him any permanent right; and yet he seeks to eject arbitrarily a person who has, as declared [104] by the Chief Revenue Officer of the district in 1840, a substantial interest in the land he occupies.

It is found by the Judge that the defendant is a descendant of an old pyke who held the lands under the Assam Rajahs; that the pyke was granted by the Rajah to a lakherajdar, but that neither this circumstance nor the subsequent resumption by Government of the lakheraj interfered with or disturbed his right; that he held on as before as pyke, and that since the resumption he has been paying a certain rent.

Applying the common law of the country as described above, to the facts found, we are of opinion that the defendant is not liable to be turned out at the will and pleasure of the plaintiff, and that this suit should therefore fail.

The appeal will be dismissed without costs, no one appearing for the respondent.

MODHUSUDDUN KOER AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. RAKHAL CHUNDER ROY AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).* [31st October, 1887.]

*Munsif, Jurisdiction of—Bengal Civil Courts’ Act (VI of 1871), s. 20—Value of the subject-matter in dispute—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 283—Attached property, Suit to establish right to—Value of suit.

A Munsif has jurisdiction to try a suit brought under s. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code to test the question whether a property which has been attached in execution is liable to pay the claim of the creditor, the value of the property being over one thousand rupees, but the amount of the debt being less than that sum.

In such suits the amount which is to settle the jurisdiction of the Court is the amount which is in dispute, and which the creditor would recover if successful, viz., the amount due to him, and not the value of the property attached, unless the two amounts happen to be identical.

*Appeal from Order No. 238 of 1887, against the order of R. H. Anderson, Esq., Judge of Burdwan, dated the 13th of May 1887, reversing the order of Baboo Aditya Chunder Chuckerbutty, Munsif of Katwa, dated the 21st of December 1886.

(1) 2 A. 698.  (2) 2 A. 799.  (3) 4 M. 339.  (4) 4 B. 515.
In this case Satish Chunder Roy and Rakhal Chunder Roy, having obtained a decree against one Radhabullabh Koer for the sum of Rs. 400, attached certain immovable property in execution of this decree. Modhusuddun Koer, a son of the judgment-debtor, put in a claim to the property attached, asserting that he had purchased it form his father; this claim was allowed, and the property released from attachment.

The decree-holders thereupon brought a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Cutwa against the judgment-debtors for a declaration that the property attached did not belong to the son but to the father, and that the conveyance to the son was a collusive one in fraud of the decree-holders.

The judgment-debtors contended that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to hear the case, inasmuch as the value of the property in suit was more than Rs. 1,000. The Munsif held that the actual value of the suit being Rs. 1,483 he had no jurisdiction to try the case, and returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court.

The decree-holders appealed against this order on the ground that the meaning of the words "value of the subject-matter in dispute," in s. 20 of Act VI of 1871, referred, in the case before the Court, to the amount of the decree sought to be executed, and not to the market value of the property itself.

The District Judge held that the amount which settled the jurisdiction of the Munsif was the amount of the debt, and not the value of the property attached; and remanded the case to the Munsif for trial.

The judgment-debtors appealed.

Baboo Jogendra Nath Bose, for the appellants, contended that the Munsif had no jurisdiction in suits involving a question of title to land of a value higher than Rs. 1,000, that the plaint in the suit showed that the suit was of that nature, for it prayed that the property referred to might be [106] declared to belong to the father and for a declaration that the property might be held liable to be sold in execution of the decree; that the principle of the case of Ahmed Mirza Saheb v. Thomas (1) was applicable, and cited Mufi Jalaluddeen Mahomed v. Shohorullah (2).

Babu Trailokhya Nath Mitter, for the respondents, contended that they did not claim possession of the property attached, but only an interest therein to the amount of the decree; and cited Janki Das v. Badri Nath (3); Gulzari Lal v. Jadaun Rai (4); Krishnana Charitar v. Srinivasa Ayyangar (5); Dayachand Nemchand v. Hemchand Dharamchand (6); and Durga Prasad v. Rachila Kuar (7).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—We think that this appeal must be dismissed.

The question which is raised before us is whether the Munsif has jurisdiction to try the suit which is brought to test the question, whether a property which has been attached in execution is liable to pay the claim of the creditor, the value of the property being over one thousand rupees, but the amount of the debt being less than one thousand rupees.

The question has never been actually before this Court so far as appears from the books, but it has been before the Courts of Bombay, Madras, and Allahabad, and these Courts have decided that the amount which is to settle the jurisdiction is the amount of the debt and not the value of the property. We think that, even if we had any doubt upon the point, it would be right to follow those decisions as they all appear to be uniform; but beyond that, and speaking for myself, I agree entirely with those decisions. The amount which is to settle the jurisdiction of the Court is the amount which is in dispute, and the amount which is in dispute is the amount which the execution-creditor will recover if he is successful, and the only amount which he would recover, if he is successful, would be the amount of his debt and [107] not the value of the property attached, unless the two amounts happen to be identical.

For these reasons we think that the decisions in Madras, Bombay and Allahabad are correct, and they must be followed.

Some cases have been cited which were decided by this Court, but those cases are not in point. The only question decided in those cases is, whether in a suit of this kind, where only declaratory relief is sought for, a fixed Court fee or an ad valorem fee is to be paid; but they do not deal with the amount of the ad valorem fee if such a fee is payable; therefore those decisions have no bearing on this case, and need not be further noticed. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

SATGURI (Defendant) v. MUJIDAN (Plaintiff).*

Second Appeal—Rent suit—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 102—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—General Clauses Act (II of 1868) s. 6.

The word “proceedings” in s. 6 of Act I of 1868, as applied to a suit, means the suit as an entirety, that is, down to the final decree.

A second appeal, therefore, to the High Court, on a question of the amount due as rent, will not lie when the suit was instituted previous to the passing of Act VIII of 1885, although the judgment in the suit was delivered, and the first appeal therefrom heard, subsequently to the passing of that Act.

Hurrosundari Debi v. Bhojohari Das Manji (1) approved.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 233 of 1887, against the decree of F. Peterson, Esq., Judge of Purneah, dated the 2nd of November 1886, reversing the decree of Baboo Lal Singh, Rai Bahadoor, Munsif of Kissengunge, dated the 17th of March 1886.

(1) 13 C. 86.
This was a suit brought by a landlord against his tenant on the 15th October, 1885, for arrears of rent. The only question raised in the suit was whether the annual jumna payable by the defendant was Rs. 15 as claimed by the plaintiff, or Rs. 11 as alleged by the defendant.

On the 17th March, 1886, the Munsif decided the case in favour of the plaintiff on the jumna alleged to be payable by the defendant.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who, after remand- ing the case to the Munsif for a further examination of some of the witnesses already examined, gave his final decision on the 2nd November 1886, reversing the decision of the Munsif, giving the plaintiff a decree at the annual jumna claimed by him.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Babu Jogendra Nath Bose, for the appellant, contended that the Judge had been in error in remanding the case, and that he had also overlooked important documentary evidence.

Babu Taruck Nath Palit, for the respondent, contended that under s. 102 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 no appeal would lie, s. 6 of the General Clauses Act preventing Act VIII of 1885, which repealed Bengal Act VIII of 1869, from applying.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by PETHERAM, C.J.—We think that no appeal lies in this case, and that the question is really concluded by the authority of the case of Hurrosundari Debi v. Bhojohari Das Manji (1).

The suit is a rent suit which was brought by the landlord against his tenant to recover a sum of rent. During the time that such suits were governed by Bengal Act VIII of 1869, no second appeal lay to this Court by reason of there being a question involved in the suit as to the amount of the rent. After the suit was commenced, and before the decree, Act VIII of 1885 was passed. That act, amongst other things, repeals Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and provides that in cases of this kind, where this peculiar kind of dispute arises, an appeal shall lie. It may be that at first sight it would look as if that was intended to relate to all suits that were then pending; but when one comes to look at s. 6 of the General Clauses Act of 1868, it will be seen that it provides that the repeal of any Statute, Act, or Regulation shall not affect any proceedings commenced before the repealing Act shall have come into operation. The word "proceedings" there, as applied to a suit [109] means, I think, the suit as an entirety, that is to say, down to the final decree, and, inasmuch as the other ground of appeal can only be let in by the repeal of s. 102 of the older Act, this appeal is, we think, prohibited by the effect of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, which says that the proceedings shall not be affected by the repeal of the Statute. As I said before, I think that the matter is concluded by the decision of Hurrosundari Debi v. Bhojohari Das Manji (1), and that it is not necessary for us to say anything more than that with that decision we entirely agree. Under the circumstances we dismiss the appeal with costs on the ground that no appeal lies.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF AHMED MAHOMED, MAHOMED JACKARIAH & Co. v. AHMED MAHOMED.*
[13th October, 1887.]

Inspection of Documents in Criminal Case—Discovery—Power of Court to order inspection—Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 94-99—Search Warrant, Form and validity of.

A and T, the latter of whom was the book-keeper in the firm of J. M. & Co., were charged, on the complaint of that firm, with cheating by having dishonestly induced them to deliver to A certain sums of money between 1882 and 1887, and with having abetted each other in the commission of the said offence. The offence charged was carried out by T omitting to make entries in the account books of sums due by A to the firm, and by making false entries therein of payments by A. Whilst the charge was pending the Presidency Magistrate, before whom the charge had been made, granted a search warrant in the following terms: "To Inspector M.—Whereas A and another have been charged before me with the commission or suspected commission of the offence of cheating, and it has been made to appear to me that the production of khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential to the inquiry now being made, or about to be made, into the said offence, or suspected offence, this is to authorize and require you to search for the said property in the house of A, No. 13, Pollock Street, and if found to produce the same forthwith before this Court." [110] In execution of this warrant certain books and papers found in the house of A were seized and taken possession of by the police, and of those books and papers the Magistrate, on the application of the prosecution, made an order for inspection. On a rule granted by the High Court to show cause why the order for inspection should not be set aside, it was contended that the search warrant had been granted without proper judicial inquiry and upon insufficient materials; that it was bad on the face of it, as it did not "specify clearly," as directed in Form VIII, sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code, whose khatta books were to be produced; and that there was nothing in the criminal law to enable a Court to make an order for inspection of documents by the prosecution in a criminal case Held per Norris, J., that assuming the contention as to the search warrant arose on the rule as granted, the warrant must be looked at as a whole, and so looked at it sufficiently clearly showed that it was the khatta books of A which were referred to as being essential to the inquiry, and the objects of the directed search; nor was there anything to show that the warrant was issued otherwise than regularly and in due course.

Per Norris, J.—Though the Courts in England have constantly refused to compel discovery in criminal cases, on the ground that no man should be compelled to produce evidence to criminate himself, the Legislature in this country has authorised the production, and under certain circumstances the compulsory production, of an accused person's documents in Court. When once an accused person's documents are in the possession of the Court by virtue of the due execution of a search warrant issued under the provisions of s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there is no distinction between such documents and those of any description found upon his person at the time of his arrest, or on his premises at the time of or subsequent to, his arrest, and it was never doubted that the latter may be used in evidence against him. If, as laid down in the case of Dillon v. O'Brien (1), the right to seize and detain property of any description in the possession of a person lawfully arrested for treason, felony, or misdemeanour, rests "upon the interest which the State has in a person justly or reasonably believed to be guilty of a crime being brought to justice, and in a prosecution once commenced being determined in due course of law," a right to inspect such property must exist as well as a right to seize and detain it, and the proper persons to inspect it are those conducting the prosecution. It would, moreover, be unreasonable that the police or those conducting the prosecution should not have an opportunity of inspecting and examining documents, &c., found on a prisoner when arrested, or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, before tendering them in evidence.

Per Ghose, J.—The contention as to the validity of the search warrant did not arise on the rule as granted, but semble, that the search warrant was bad in law, no summons under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code [111] having been, in the first instance, issued for the production of the documents, and there being no evidence to show that they would not be produced on summons only; that although the warrant was not specific, still, inasmuch as no objection was raised to the form of the warrant before the Magistrate, and the accused had not been prejudiced by reason of the specification of the documents being somewhat indistinct, and it was clear what was really meant, the objection as to the form of the warrant should be disallowed.

Per Ghose, J.—There is no doubt that by the criminal law of this country, as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Codes since 1861, an accused person may be compelled to furnish evidence, the production of which might have the effect of criminating him. The Magistrate has to determine, at the time when he makes an order under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, or issues a search warrant under s. 96, whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry; but when they are brought into Court the inspection should not rest with the Magistrate who does not prosecute and has no interest one way or the other in the result of the prosecution. It is reasonable that those who conduct the prosecution should have such inspection, for the production of such documents is for the purpose of using them in evidence, and this could not be done unless the prosecution had an opportunity of inspecting them. In the case of a search or seizure by the Police under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecutor would necessarily have an opportunity of looking at the documents and articles seized, and there is no reason why he should not have the same opportunity or privilege where, under the order of the Court, any particular document or other thing is seized under a search warrant, and brought up to the Court. Bearing in mind the purpose for which any document or thing is seized and brought before the Court, it seems that the Legislature, while providing for the seizure and production in Court of documents, &c., intended by implication that the prosecution should, under the order of the Court, have the power to inspect them, and determine whether they should go in as evidence.

Held, per Curiam.—For the reasons above given—that the Magistrate had power to allow the inspection, but such inspection must be limited to the books named in the search warrant.

The petitioner and one Topun Ramchore were charged on the complaint of Jackariah Mahomed & Co., under ss. 418, 420, and 109 of the Penal Code, with having cheated the complainants by having dishonestly induced them to deliver to the petitioner certain sums of money on various specified occasions between 1882 and 1887 in Calcutta, and with having abetted each other in the commission of the said offence. The accused Topun Ramchore was the book-keeper in the complainants' firm, [112] and the cheating was carried on, in accordance with an agreement to that effect between the two accused persons by his omitting to make entries of sums due by the petitioner, and by making false entries of payments by him in the books of the complainants' firm.

The charges were made before the Presidency Magistrate for the Northern Division of Calcutta, and warrants issued, and on an application made on behalf of the complainants, the Magistrate, on 20th August, issued a search warrant for the premises No. 13, Pollock Street, the place of business of the petitioner, to search for and produce the khatto books of the petitioner's business for the years 1882 to 1887 inclusive, as being essential to the enquiry into the above charges; and in execution of this warrant certain books and papers found in the house of the petitioner were seized and taken possession of by the police. Various applications to set aside the search warrant were refused by the Magistrate, who eventually made an order on 23rd August for the inspection by the prosecution of the books found by the police at the petitioner's place of business, such inspection to take place in the Court House in the presence of the petitioner and an officer of the Court.

The petitioner, after applying to the Magistrate to set aside the order for inspection, applied, on petition, to the High Court, and a rule was issued calling on the prosecutors to show cause why the order granting inspection should not be set aside, and an order made that, pending the hearing of the rule, there should be no inspection by the prosecutors of the books and papers of the accused.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), Mr. Garth and Mr. Adkin appeared to show cause.

Mr. Hill, Mr. Palit, and Babu Kally Nath Mitter, in support of the rule.

The facts of the case and the arguments are fully stated in the judgment.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.).

JUDGMENTS.

Norris, J.—On the 20th August, Hadjee Jackariah Mahomed & Co., through Mr. Hume, their attorney, applied to the Presidency Magistrate of the Northern Division of Calcutta for warrants for the arrest of Ahmed Mahomed and Topun Ramchore on charges of cheating and abetment thereof.

In support of the application, Noor Mahomed, a member of the prosecutor's firm, was examined on solemn affirmation. His deposition was as follows:—

"I am a member of Hadjee Jackariah and Co. I have been a member of that firm since 1874. I know the first defendant Ahmed Mahomed. He is a boat owner. He has had business with us since 1879. He kept a floating account with us. The first defendant's ledger was kept by Topun Ramchore in my office. He used to make entries in the cash-book occasionally. When defendant No. 1 came to my office for money I used to ask defendant No. 2 to look at the ledger and say whether No. 1 had a credit balance. No. 2 always said he had credit balance. Day before yesterday No. 1 came to my office and asked for Rs. 800. We sent for his ledger. After examining it we found Rs. 800 on the debit side. No. 1 said "this is not correct; I have to get money from you." We got suspicious and examined his accounts from 1882 up to date. The result was that the first defendant had overdrawn upwards of a lac of rupees. On the 30th April 1887, the ledger, as written up by Topun the defendant No. 2, showed a balance of nearly Rs. 5,000 in favor of the first defendant, but this was not correct. The correct account showed nearly Rs. 8,000 against him. On the 13th of May 1887, we paid him (first defendant) Rs. 1,200. This is the entry for the Rs. 1,200. On the 10th May 1887, we paid him Rs. 800. On the 28th June last we paid him Rs. 3,000 in notes. These first and third payments were made in Topun's presence. I handed over the money to Topun, and he paid them to the first defendant. I made these payments on the belief that there was a balance in his favour. If I knew that there was no balance in his favour I would not have made any payment. Defendant No. 2 made a statement to Mr. Hume. This is it (produced and marked A).

Topun Ramchore's statement to Mr. Hume was made in answer to questions put by that gentleman. The statement, question and answer, is as follows:

[114] "Q.—I am going to ask you some questions; you can answer them or not as you like.
"A.—Whatever you ask I will give truthful answers to.
"Q.—Whose servant were you?
"A.—Hadjee Jackariah Mahomed & Co's, I was their writer.
"Q.—What books did you keep?
"A.—I kept the nund, the ledger, and sometimes the cash-book; the ledger for 1887 is all in my writing.
"Q.—Messrs. Hadjee Jackariah Mahomed & Co. have examined the ledger for five years past from which they have discovered that much cheating has been going on. Do you know anything about the cheating, and are you willing to tell me about it?
"A.—I am willing to tell you what I know about it, and the whole truth. I know everything about it.
"Q.—Very good, what you know tell me.
"A.—In 1882 Ahmed Mahomed said to me I will give you Rs. 20 in every Rs. 100 if you will make a goolmal in my account with the firm, so that I can get (zaida) more money. I agreed to this, and I commenced to make a goolmal.
"Q.—What sort of a goolmal?
"A.—If he took Rs. 2,000 from cash, I omitted to write it in ledger, and out of the Rs. 2,000 I will get Rs. 400 from Ahmed Mahomed at his house. I used also to do as follows (asia bhee kia). If he took Rs. 2,000 from the cash, I used to credit him with this sum in the ledger. In February 13th 1887, Ahmed Mahomed took from the cash in my presence from the hands of Noor Mahomed Rs. 1,500. This Rs. 1,500 I never entered in the khayton, but I did in the cash-book. On the 6th March 1887, he took Rs. 1,500. I entered this in the cash-book, but not in the ledger. I did this intentionally (sumuj ke chordia). On the 7th April 1887, he took from cash Rs. 2,000. This amount I credited him within the khayton. On the 24th April 1887, he took Rs. 4,000, and I wrote in the khayton Rs. 400. On the 10th January 1887, I credited in the khayton Rs. 1,500 in the name of Ahmed Mahomed, but I received from him that day only Rs. 500, which I credited in cash-book. On the 30th January 1887, I received from Ahmed Mahomed Rs. 900, but in the khayton I credited Rs. 1,900. On the 30th April I credited him [115] with Rs. 1,000, but on that day I received nothing from him. When Ahmed Mahomed used to come for money a man used to come with him. Ahmed Mahomed is blind for the last two years. He used to ask Noor Mahomed for money, and he, Noor Mahomed, used to ask me. "Ahmed Mahomed ke hisab kaisa hat;" and I used to say "Usko juma hai." I always used to say there was a credit, but it was not true. When I used to be asked about the account of Ahmed Mahomed by Noor Mahomed, I used always to tell him from the khayton. I have been falsifying the account of Ahmed Mahomed since 1882 till now (abhee tuk)," then says "'till 30th April, 1887.'
"Q.—According to your khatyon in what state is Ahmed Mahomed’s account for 1887 on 30th April 1887, that is, from January to 30th April 1887?

"A.—He has to receive a little more than Rs. 5,000, but this account is false. Hadjee Jackariah Mahomed & Co. in truth ought to receive from Ahmed Mahomed Rs. 8,500.

"Since 1882 up to 30th April 1887, I have falsified Ahmed Mahomed’s account to the extent of Rs. 70,000.

"At 2 p.m. to-day I went to Hadjee Jackariah Mahomed’s office and asked the servants for the books of 1886-1887; they said the books were upstairs. I said bring them down. They said saheb logue have gone out; the books (duftur bund hai). I asked where the sahebs were. By sahebs I mean my masters. I went upstairs and saw the books being looked at by one Tyub. He is a writer. I saw him looking at the account of Ahmed Mahomed. I then got suspicious (humara dil mai shuk paida hua) that whatever goomal was in the account would be discovered (khubber malum hoba). I went to Ahmed Mahomed at his house at Nibbotollah Gully. He was asleep. I asked his wife to wake him. She did so. I went and said to him: The saheb logue are looking at your account, on that account (yih subab se), you go to them and tell them you have taken all the money, and that whatever money you have got you will give them and ask them to forgive you. He then said to me, don’t take or mention my name (humara nam mut lo); you take it all upon yourself (tumara oopar sub lo) and say you did it all, and if afterwards they do [116] anything I will spend money to defend you (rupia khuruch karage tumko bhachane ke waste); you say the cash was with Noor Mahomed, and that if you made mistakes (hoool kya) Noor Mahomed knows it all. I then said I will not tell all these lies. If you don’t go, they will be angry, and will take out warrants against us and arrest us, and then your izzat (respect) will not remain. He then said you go; I am getting fever; go home and lie down and say you are not well (tubeeat accha nahi). I said I would not tell these lies; that I was going to the sahebs. I left Ahmed Mahomed, and as I was going to office I met with Hadjee Vydanath, one of my masters, in the street and told him everything, and he took me to you (Mr. Hume.) I have got Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 1,600 in notes, and Rs. 700 or 800 in jewellery left from this fraud, and if my masters will take this property, I will give it up. I have received in this fraud from Ahmed Mahomed about Rs. 9,000."

After hearing the application the Magistrate granted a summons against the defendant No. 1, Ahmed Mahomed, and a warrant against defendant No. 2, Topun Ramchore.

On the same day, after grant of process against the defendants Mr. Hume, upon the same materials upon which he had applied for warrants, applied "for a search warrant to search the premises No. 15, Pollock Street, Calcutta, the place of the business of the accused Ahmed Mahomed for the books of his business for the years 1882 to 1887 inclusive." This application was made in the presence of Ahmed Mahomed who happened to be in the Magistrate’s Court as a complainant in a case, and the Magistrate called his attention to the fact that such application was being made.

The Magistrate’s order upon this application was “issue search warrants.” The search warrant was in the following terms:—

"To Inspector Merriman—"
'Whereas Ahmed Mahomed and another has been charged before me of the commission, or suspected commission, of the offence of cheating, and it has been made to appear to me that the production of khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential to the inquiry now being made, or about to be made, into the said offence or suspected offence;

[117] 'This is to authorize and require you to search for the said property in the house of Ahmed Mahomed, No. 13, Pollock Street, and if found to produce the same forthwith before this Court; returning this warrant with an endorsement certifying what you have done under it immediately upon its execution.

'Given under my hand and seal of the Court, dated this 20th day of August 1887.

(Sd.) SYUD AMEER HOSSEIN,

Presidency Magistrate,
CALCUTTA, N. DIVISION.'

The search warrant was executed on the 21st August. What was done in pursuance of the search warrant appears by an endorsement thereon, which is as follows:

'Warrant executed in the presence of the following gentlemen by Inspectors Merriman and Hefferman on the 21st August 1887, viz.:— Mr. Upton, Attorney-at-law, Mr. Manuel, Attorney-at-law, Hadjee Yusuff Mahomed, Hadjee Abdoola Dagma, Hadjee Noor Mahomed, Hadjee Abdoola Zakariah Solyman, Mahomed Moosa and defendant Ahmed Mahomed.

'The following books and papers were found at No. 13, Pollock Street.

Room on ground floor.

1. Nine khattas, one marble paper cover book, and some loose papers.
2. On a wooden almirah, 11 khattas, four marble paper cover books.
3. Inside the same almirah, three khattas.
4. On a wooden tucktapose, one khatta.
5. On the wall, three files of papers.
6. One wooden box, locked, containing some khattas and papers. The box after being locked is taken over by the Police, and the key kept with Moosa, defendant’s son.
7. Inside a large wooden box, three small bundles of manuscript.
8. In an adjoining godown in a wooden box with brass clamps some loose papers.
9. In an inner godown, the door of which was locked, inside a roll of canvas, six khattas.

[118] 'At this stage Hadjee Osman arrived.
10. In a wooden chest on a table, one khatta and four press copy letter books.

Upstairs bed room.

11. In an almirah, glass panes, two envelopes containing manuscript.
12. On the top of a box, nine khattas and 1 torn khatta.
13. On the top of another almirah, four small khattas.
14. Three files of papers.
15. On an iron safe, eight English bound books.
"16. On the top of another almirah, one khattra and one bundle of papers.
"17. Inside a Bombay carved almirah, six small khattas. In the drawer thereof, two khattas, one bundle of papers. In another drawer thereof, one bundle of papers.
"18. In a wooden almirah a bundle of letters.
"19. One wooden box, locked, containing papers, the key with Hadjee Mahomed Yusuff.
"20. Inside the small iron safe opened by Hadjee Yusuff Mahomed, 3 G. C. notes of Rs. 100 each, Re/91 26300, 26199, 26198 not taken. One Bengali document on Re. 1 stamp paper which is kept inside wooden box No. 19.
"21. In a glass case adjoining, two small khattas and two letters.
"At this stage Babu Mohendro Nath Dutt, pleader for defendant, came in. In the adjoining room Hadjee Ahmed Ismail here comes with the keys of the two safes.
"The one in this room is opened; only jewellery found. In the large safe opened in the first room nothing found except some title-deeds, &c., not taken.
"22. In the office room, in a tiled shed outside the house, a large chest full of books.
"23. In the upper shed, over the coach-house, two khatta books, one file of old papers, one account book.
"All the above are contained in three wooden boxes and two gunny-bags which were sealed by defendant's people before taken away by the police."

On 22nd August, Mr. Pittar, an attorney, appeared before the Magistrate on behalf of Ahmed Mahomed and [119] applied that the warrant might be set aside, and that the prosecutors might not be allowed to inspect the books found by the Police on the premises No. 13, Pollock Street, on the previous day. Mr. Hume opposed the application, and it was refused.

On Mr. Hume's application the Magistrate ordered that the prosecutors should have inspection of the books on notice to the accused Ahmed Mahomed.

On the same day the following notice was served upon Ahmed Mahomed:

"Take notice that we, on behalf of the prosecutors abovenamed, propose to-morrow, Tuesday, the 23rd day of August instant, at 12 o'clock, at noon, with the permission of the Magistrate of the Northern Division of Calcutta, and in company with a member of prosecutor's firm, to inspect in the Court of the said Magistrate the several books and documents, now lying there and belonging to you. This notice is given you in order that you may, if so advised, attend at the said inspection either personally or by solicitor or some other representative."

On 23rd August, Mr. Wheeler, an attorney, appeared before the Magistrate on behalf of Ahmed Mahomed, and applied to have the search warrant set aside; the Magistrate refused the application. Mr. Wheeler then applied for a postponement of the inspection of the books for four days to allow him to get complete instructions; but the Magistrate declined to grant a longer postponement than 24 hours, and directed the inspection to take place at the Court House on the following day. On 24th August, Mr. Chatterjee, counsel for the accused, applied to the Magistrate to set aside the search warrant, which he refused to do, and directed that the inspection should take place in the Court House, in the presence of Ahmed Mahomed or his agent, and an officer of the Court. The inspection of the books thereupon commenced in the Magistrate's office, in the presence of a pleader on behalf of Ahmed Mahomed, of Mr. Hume, of Noor Mahomed, and of two officers of the Court.

During the progress of the inspection an account of Topun Ramchore with Ahmed Mahomed was discovered in the books [120] for the year 1882, showing payments of various sums of money by Ahmed Mahomed to Topun Ramchore amounting to Rs. 4,158; and certain entries in one of the khatta books were initialled by Mr. Hume, who brought the fact of the alleged discovery to the notice of Ahmed Mahomed's pleader, and requested him to go and see the book, which the pleader declined to do, saying, "what is the use of my going."

On the 25th August Mr. Bonnerjee applied to us for a rule calling upon the prosecutors to show cause why the order granting the search warrant and the order granting inspection of the books should not be set aside. We took time to consider whether we should grant a rule, and intimated that, in the meantime, the inspection should not be proceeded with.

On 29th August we granted a rule "to show cause why the Magistrate's order of 23rd August granting inspection of all books, papers, and documents found by the police at the premises of the accused Ahmed Mahomed and seized and brought away by them to his Court should not be set aside, and such other order made on the premises as to this Court may seem meet." The rule was argued before us on the 7th, 8th and 9th September; Mr. Hill and Mr. Palit appearing in support of it; the Advocate-General, Mr. Garth showing cause.

Mr. Hill's first argument was that the issue of a search warrant by a Magistrate is a judicial act; that before he can have "reason to believe" within the meaning of § 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he must be satisfied by judicial inquiry; and he urged that this warrant had been granted without a proper judicial inquiry and upon insufficient materials.

In support of the first branch of his argument, he cited a passage from 2 Hale's P. C., 15, and Queen v. Hossein Ali Chowdhry (1).

I agree with Mr. Hill that the issue of a search warrant is a judicial act, and that it ought only to be issued after judicial inquiry, and upon proper materials. But assuming the point taken by the learned counsel to be open to him upon argument of the rule as granted, upon which I entertain the gravest doubt, I can see nothing to lead me to the conclusion that this search [121] warrant has been issued without a judicial inquiry or upon improper materials.

Mr. Hill's second objection was that the warrant was bad on the face of it. Here again I must say that I have considerable doubt whether this point is open to argument upon this rule. But assuming that it is, I am of opinion that the warrant is good.

Mr. Hill argued that, by virtue of § 554 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the forms in Sch. V are to be taken as integral parts of the Act; that, therefore, the words "specify clearly" in Form VIII of Sch. V are an integral part of the Act, and that the recital in the warrant that the production of khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential to the inquiry now being made or about to be made," was not a clear specification. No doubt, it would have been better if the warrant had recited "that the production of the khatta books of the said Ahmed Mahomed for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential."

But I think that the warrant must be looked at as a whole.

It recites that a charge has been made against Ahmed Mahomed, that the production of khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential to the inquiry, and then it authorizes the officer to whom it is directed "to search for the said property in the house of Ahmed Mahomed," it would have been better if it had said "the said Ahmed Mahomed" "No. 13, Pollock Street." I think the warrant sufficiently clearly shows that it was the accused's khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 that had been made to appear to be essential to the inquiry, and that it was those khatta books which the officer to whom the warrant was directed was to search for. In support of his argument, Mr. Hill referred to Entick v. Carrington (1). The facts of this case are so familiar to every lawyer and every student of the constitutional history of England, that it would be affectation and waste of time to give even the briefest outline of them. The case decided, amongst other things, that general warrants were bad. The warrant in this case is not a general warrant, but as I have already pointed out, a warrant to search for and seize certain specified documents.

Mr. Hill's next argument was that there was no power under the Criminal Procedure Code to issue a search warrant for documents at all. Again calling in aid the provisions of s. 554 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and reiterating the argument that by virtue thereof Form VIII in Sch. V was an integral part of the Act, he contended that a document was not "a thing."

Now assuming that the forms in Sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code are by virtue of s. 554 of that Code to be taken as integral parts of the Act (a very large assumption I think), they clearly cannot over-ride and render nugatory the enabling sections.

Section 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code, so far as is material to this case, says: "Whenever any Court considers that the production of any document or other thing is necessary or desirable for the purpose of any investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceedings under this Code by or before such Court, such Court may issue a summons to the person in whose possession or power such document or thing is believed to be, requiring him to attend and produce it or to produce it at the time and place stated in the summons." Section 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code says, so far as is material to this argument: "When any Court has reason to believe that a person to whom a summons under s. 94 has been or might be addressed will not or would not produce the document or other thing as required by such summons, it may issue a search warrant, and the person to whom such warrant is directed may search or inspect in accordance therewith and the provisions hereinafter contained." The words of s. 94 are of the widest possible character. Any person in whose possession or power a document or other thing, which the Court considers necessary or desirable for the purposes of any investigation, inquiry or trial, is, may be summoned to produce it. The words of s. 96 are equally wide. Any person to whom a summons under s. 94 has been or might be addressed, and who, the Court has reason to believe, will not or would not produce the document or other thing, is liable to have his premises searched; searched for what? Surely for the document or other thing which the Court has reason to believe he will not or would not produce. [123] The whole object of s. 96 would be frustrated if we were to hold that, because Form VIII, Sch. V, says, "specify the thing clearly" and not "specify the document or other thing clearly," there was no authority to issue a search warrant for a document. I do not think it would serve any useful purpose to consider as Mr. Hill invited us to do, whether a search warrant for documents in the premises of an accused person could be lawfully issued in England. The judgment in the Court of Common Pleas as delivered by Lord Camden in Entick v. Carrington (1), is no doubt a great, almost an overwhelming, authority against the legality of such a proceeding; and it may be that the issue of a search warrant in the case of Reg. v. Colucci (2) was illegal; see the note of Mr. Graves, the learned author of Russell on Crimes, at p. 483 of Vol. III, 5th Edition.

The judgment of Lord Camden was based upon the fact "that there was no written law giving any Magistrate powers to issue a search warrant for papers." The absence of such statutory authority, which continues, as far as I know, up to the present time, is no doubt the reason for Mr. Graves' query. Amongst the many astonishing legislative enactments of this country, there is one authorizing under certain circumstances the issue of a search warrant for documents not only in the premises of an accused person, but also in the premises of any other person in the world, using the word "world" in a somewhat restricted sense.

I don't think I do Mr. Hill's able and exhaustive argument any serious injustice when I say that the points to which I have alluded were in the nature of preliminary skirmishes, attacks upon his enemies' outpost, preparatory to the real combat which was waged upon the right claimed by the prosecution to inspect the books.

Mr. Hill urged that any right on the part of the prosecution to inspect these books must depend upon the statutory law of the land. Section 5 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he pointed out, enacts that "all offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be inquired into and tried according to the provisions hereinafter [124] contained;" and if he said, the Criminal Procedure Code is silent, as the Advocate-General admitted it is as to any, right of inspection of documents seized under a search warrant, they cannot be inspected, at any rate not by the prosecution.

It was urged that the only object of ss. 94 and 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code was to procure the production of documents. It was pointed out that the heading of the chapter in which these sections find a place is "Of process to compel the production of documents and for the discovery of persons wrongfully confined;" that in Act X of 1875, which contains in ss. 86 and 87 provisions similar to those in ss. 94 and 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the chapter in which those sections are to be found is headed "Of securing attendance of witnesses and production of documents;" that in Act IV of 1877, which in ss. 144 and 145 also contains provisions similar to those of ss. 94 and 96 of the present Code, the chapter in which those sections occur is headed "Of evidence," and the subdivision of the chapter containing ss. 144 to 147 is headed "Of securing documentary evidence."

It was admitted by the Advocate-General, as contended for by Mr. Hill, the word "inspect" in cl. 3 of s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to locality or place, not to "document or other thing." A reference to s. 97 of the Criminal Procedure Code shows that this view is correct.

Mr. Hill then entered into an elaborate history of the law of discovery. He pointed out that at common law there was no right to discovery in civil cases; he traced the action of the Courts of Equity in aiding discovery in civil actions, and stated the main principles upon which those Courts acted in granting discovery to be three in number, viz., 1st, that the documents sought to be discovered should be specifically mentioned; 2nd, that discovery should only be granted as against the parties to a suit; 3rd, that it should only be granted in aid of civil rights; and he cited authorities to show that these were the principles upon which Courts of Equity had acted. These principles, he contended, found legislative sanction in the statute law of this country. The first principle was embodied in s. 163 of the Civil Procedure Code; the second in the provisions of Chap. X of the Civil [125] Procedure Code; and the third in s. 132 of the Evidence Act. Having traced the history of discovery in relation to civil actions, Mr. Hill pointed out that there were no provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code similar to those contained in Chap. X of the Civil Procedure Code, and this he said was because the common law with regard to discovery had never been modified by statute with reference to criminal cases; nor had the second of the three principles upon which Courts of Equity acted in aid of the common law ever been applied to criminal cases. There was, urged Mr. Hill, no right of discovery at all in criminal cases. In support of this proposition the following authorities were cited, viz., Bacon's Abridgment, Vol. 2, p. 286, title "Evidence"; 8 Russell on Crimes p. 433 (5th Ed.); Reg. v. Mead (1); Rex v. Purnell (2); Rex v. Cornelius (3); Roe d. Haldane v. Harvey (4); Rex v. Justices of Buckingham (5); and Rex v. Earl of Cadogan (6). I have examined all these authorities, and no doubt they establish very clearly the proposition that the English Courts, from an early date down to the year 1828, have constantly refused to compel discovery in criminal cases.

With great respect to the learned counsel, I must take leave to say that this argument, able and captivating as it was, is beside the mark. The Legislature in this country has authorized the production, and, under certain circumstances, the compulsory production, of an accused person's documents in Court. The question is, what are the rights of the prosecution with regard to them now they are in Court? Mr. Hill's answer to the question, which I put to him during the course of the argument, is this: They may, upon the chance that a certain entry in one of the books will support their case, call for the entry and examine it, and if they do this they must put it in, whether it tells for them or against them. If this is so the prosecution would be in a worse position than a plaintiff in a civil suit, for though a party calling for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce is bound, if the document is produced and inspected, to put it in if required to do so, yet as a matter [126] of practice notice to a party to produce documents is not given unless the party giving it has obtained a knowledge of their contents, either from answers to interrogatories or by inspection before trial, or from some private source.

When once an accused person's documents are in the possession of the Court by virtue of the due execution of a search warrant issued under the provisions of s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code, I can see no distinction between such documents and those of any description found upon his person at the time of his arrest or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest. I asked Mr. Hill in the course of the argument if he could point to any distinction and he admitted that he could not. Nor can I see any distinction between such documents and any other things found upon a prisoner when arrested, or upon his premises at the time of or after his arrest. That documents or other things found upon a prisoner at the time of his arrest, or upon his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, may be used in evidence against him if material to the issue, is too plain for argument. The books are full of reports of cases where this has been done; it is a matter of daily occurrence at every Criminal Assize, at every Quarter Sessions.

Now can it be argued with any show of reason that the police or the solicitor for the prosecution are not to have an opportunity of inspecting and examining documents or other things found upon a prisoner when arrested, or upon his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, before tendering them as evidence? A man is charged with burglary. The evidence shows that he was found in a counting-house where there was a safe, that the windows of the counting-house had been forced upon, and the safe unlocked. Upon the prisoner, when arrested, or at his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, are found house-breaking instruments and a bunch of keys; the prosecution allege that the window was forced open with one of the house-breaking instruments, and the safe opened with one of the keys; must they produce the frame of the window before the Court and the house-breaking instruments, call for the latter one by [127] one, and try each separately to see if it fits the lock of the safe? If this is the law it is consistently and persistently broken every day, and if it is the law one would expect to find some trace of an expression of opinion by some Judge that it is so; and we should expect to find that amongst the thousands of learned counsel who have defended prisoners an objection was taken, that the police had no right to ascertain before they came to Court, whether any of the house-breaking instruments fitted the window frame, or whether any one of the keys fitted the lock, or, in other words, that the police had no right to inspect the house-breaking instruments or the keys. I might multiply illustrations, but I will take a reported case. In Reg. v. Bernard (1), which was a trial under a special commission before Lord Campbell, C. J., Pollock, C. B., Erle and Crowder, J.J., a sergeant of police stated that after the prisoner was in custody he had searched a room at his residence and there found a letter from one Allsop which he had handed to the solicitor for the Treasury; the Attorney-General, Sir Fitz Roy Kelly, proposed to have the letter read, and this before any evidence had been given to connect Allsop with the prisoner. Now can it be conceived that the letter had not been read by the solicitor to the Treasury when he was preparing his briefs and by the Attorney-General before he proposed to have it read? How else could they have known whether or not it was relevant to the enquiry? The prisoner was defended by Mr. Edwin James Q. C., Mr. Simon, Mr. Hawkins (now Mr. Justice Hawkins), Mr. Sleigh, Mr. Brewer and Mr. Scobell; they objected to the admission of the letter, not upon the ground that the Court or the Treasury had no right to its custody, or to inspect it, but upon the ground that the charge against the prisoner being one of murder, the principle upon which, upon a charge of treason, documents found after the arrest have been held admissible did not apply. Admitting that the letter was shown to have been in the prisoner's possession, there was no evidence, beyond the receipt of the letter, which was a passive act, to connect him with the writer. The Court was unanimously of opinion that the letter was admissible "not on the ground that the writer of the letter was [128] a co-conspirator with the prisoner, but on the ground that it was found in the prisoner's possession, and that its contents were relevant to the present inquiry."

If I am right in holding that documents and other things seized upon the premises of an accused person by virtue of a search warrant issued under s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code stand upon precisely the same footing as documents and other things found in his possession upon a lawful arrest for an offence under the Indian Penal Code, which, as I have already pointed out, it is not denied by Mr. Hill, and which I think is the case, it seems to me to follow as a matter of course that there must be a right of inspection.

The question of the legality of the seizure of chattels, including documents in the possession of persons charged with an offence, was considered very lately in the case of Dillon v. O'Brien (1). The facts of that case were as follows: The plaintiff was engaged in carrying out the notorious "Plan of the campaign" (the modus operandi of which I need not describe), which was admitted to amount to a conspiracy at common law. Whilst so engaged he was arrested upon a warrant, and certain Bank notes, gold and silver coins, paper books, paper documents and writings then in his possession were seized. The plaintiff brought an action of trover in respect of the chattels seized; the defendant justified getting out the warrant for the arrest of the plaintiff, and justified the seizure of the chattels "for the purpose of producing the same as evidence on the prosecution of the plaintiff," averring that the same was and are material and necessary evidence in the said prosecution; the plaintiff demurred, and the demurrer was argued before Palles, C. B., Dowse, B., and Andrews, J. In delivering the judgment of the Court, Palles, C. B., says: "I, therefore, treat it as clear and beyond doubt that, at least in cases of treason and felony, constables (and probably also private persons) are entitled, upon a lawful arrest by them of one charged with treason or felony, to take and detain property found in his possession which will form material evidence in his prosecution for that crime; and I take the only real question upon this defence as being whether this right extends to cases of misdemeanour.

[129] "Although no case has been cited (nor have I myself found any) in which the right has (in reference to misdemeanours) been judicially decided to exist, or any text-book which draws the distinction here attempted to be taken, the circumstances of one case at least, viz., that so much relied on for the plaintiff [Entick v. Carrington (2).], were such that, if there was any trace of such a distinction, it could hardly fail to have been referred to either at the Bar or by the Bench. The absence, however, of express or direct authority entitles the defendants to have the matter determined on principle.

"For this purpose I must first ascertain the reason of the rule as applicable to felony. The characteristic by which felony is distinguished from misdemeanor is that at common law the goods of the felon were forfeited upon conviction. The only right, however, to these goods which the books mention as being in the Crown before conviction, by reason of the possible future conviction, is that of taking (and detaining them for a reasonable time) for the purpose of making an inventory. Such a right has nothing in common with that of taking for the purpose of evidence. Forfeiture in felony, therefore, cannot be the origin of the right. To what then is it to be referred? Its purpose and object, viz., to produce in evidence in a judicial proceeding, appears to me to show that it must be derived from the interest which the State has in a person guilty (or reasonably believed to be guilty) of a crime being brought to justice, and in a prosecution, once commenced, being determined in due course of law. On the existence of this interest in the state many of the most important principles of our jurisprudence depend. It is this which renders illegal an agreement to compromise a prosecution, whether for felony or, [with one possible exception Keir v. Leeman (1)], for misdemeanor. It is this, too, which prevents even a malicious prosecution against an innocent person constituting a cause of action if there be reasonable and probable cause for its institution. The paramount nature of this interest is well illustrated by the power which, for the purpose of enforcing it, the law gives to the [130] officer in whose custody a person charged with a crime lawfully is. There is no doubt that he may kill his prisoner in case of resistance if he cannot otherwise secure his custody; and this as well when the charge is misdemeanor as felony. But the interest of the State in the person charged being brought to trial in due course necessarily extends as well to the preservation of material evidence of his guilt or innocence as to his custody for the purpose of trial. His custody is of no value if the law is powerless to prevent the obstruction or destruction of this evidence, without which a trial would be no more than an empty form. But if there be a right to production or preservation of this evidence, I cannot see how it can be enforced otherwise than by capture.

"If material evidences of crime are in the possession of a third party, production can be enforced by the Crown by subpæna duces tecum. But no such writ can be effective in the case of the person charged.

"It appears to me to be clear that this must be the origin of the right in felony, and that, being derived from the common law, it ought, prima facie at least, to be deemed to exist in all cases in which that interest of the State exists, and cannot (at least without express authority) be so confined as to be inapplicable in cases of custodies of such value in the eyes of the law as to justify, for their preservation, the taking of life.

"Let me, however, assume for a moment that the rule does not extend to misdemeanours, and see whether the results which necessarily would follow from this distinction would be those reasonable ones which usually are found to spring from the application of rules having their origin in the common law. All attempts to commit felonies are, at common law, misdemeanours only, and therefore inflicting a mortal wound was, at common law, until the actual death of the victim, no more than a misdemeanor; and if we are to confine the rule in question to felonies, we must face this absurdity, that in cases of murder, by firing at, wounding, or poison, the right of the constable to take the instrument of the crime and the evidence of guilt would depend, not upon the commission of the act which results [131] in death, but upon the victim having actually ceased to breathe. All reason is against such an implication; and I can be no party to it unless coerced by authority.

"This brings me to the only case relied on by the plaintiff—Entick v. Carrington (1). The question there was as to the legality of a warrant, not only to seize and apprehend the plaintiff and bring him before a Secretary of State, but also to seize his books and papers. In that case there was no allegation of the plaintiff's guilt, nor that there was a reasonable and probable cause for believing him to be guilty, nor that a crime had, in fact, been committed by any one, nor that he had in his possession anything that was evidence of (or that there were reasonable grounds for believing might be evidence) of a crime committed by him or any one else. The nature of the question there is shown by the statement of Lord Camden (1), that, 'If this point should be determined in favour of the jurisdiction, the secret cabinets and bureaus of every subject in this kingdom will be thrown open to the search and inspection of a messenger whenever the Secretary of State shall think fit to charge, or even to suspect, a person to be the author, printer, or publisher of a seditious libel.' Lord Camden takes pains to show that the word 'papers' in the warrant could not, in point of law, be restrained to libellous papers only; and he adds: 'All the papers and books, without exception, if the warrant be executed according to its tenor, must be seized and carried away, for it is observable that nothing is left either to the discretion or to the humanity of the officer.' It was, of course, decided that that warrant was illegal; but the case as a decision is not in point here. The right here claimed is not to take all the plaintiff's papers, but those only which are evidence of his guilt; and the claim is based, not as in Entick v. Carrington (1) upon a warrant issued upon mere suspicion, but upon an allegation of actual guilt and a lawful apprehension of the guilty person. If (by the law as then understood) the right to seize evidences of guilt in the possession of the person charged was confined to cases of treason and felony, the judgment would have been rested on that simple ground; the care which was taken to show that the warrant embraced all papers [132] would have been thrown away, and the entire of the elaborate judgment of Lord Camden would have been unnecessary. For myself I am satisfied that, in pronouncing that judgment, Lord Camden had not before his mind cases of seizure of evidences of guilt upon lawful apprehension as distinguished from general warrants to seize all papers.'"

In this country there is no distinction between felony and misdemeanour. Now, if the right to seize and detain property of any description in the possession of a person lawfully arrested for treason, felony, or misdemeanour rests "upon the interest which the State has on a person guilty or reasonably believed to be guilty of a crime being brought to justice, and on a prosecution, once commenced being determined in the due course of law," how can such interest be protected unless there is a right to inspect as well as to seize and detain? The latter would be almost useless without the former. Mr. Hill admitted that, though there was no express legislative enactment authorizing him to do so, the Magistrate might inspect these books, but he said he could not delegate his authority.

Now the Magistrate is not conducting the prosecution: it is no part of his duty to suggest or dictate what evidence shall be put in.

I am fully conscious of the dangers to which Mr. Hill and Mr. Palit alluded as possibly resulting from this view of the law. I admit that, if the right of inspection claimed here exists, it exists equally with regard to the books of third parties. There is nothing except the discretion of the Magistrate, to prevent the seizure of the books of any merchant or banker in this city. There is nothing except the discretion of an officer in charge of a police-station to prevent the seizure of the books and plant of an indigo concern in the mofussil.

But as Maule, J., said in the well-known bigamy case, "that is no business of mine." All I have to do is to interpret the law of this country to the best of my ability.

If the dangers to which attention was called are real, and I think they are not only real but forcible, the Legislature must be invoked to remove them.

I am of opinion that the Magistrate had a right to allow inspection of these books, and that consequently this rule should be discharged; but the inspection must be limited to the books named in the search warrant.

Gnoss, J.—This rule arises out of an order made by the Presiding Magistrate of the Northern Division of Calcutta on the 23rd August last, granting inspection of all the books and papers found in the premises of one Ahmed Mahomed, and seized and brought up by the police under a search warrant issued by the said Magistrate on the 20th idem. The circumstances of the case are shortly as follow:—

On the 20th August last Mr. Hume, on behalf of the firm of Messrs. Jackariah & Co., laid an information before the Magistrate against two individuals, Ahmed Mahomed and Topun Ramchore, charging them with the offence of cheating in a large sum of money; and in support of the application that Mr. Hume made, one Noor Mahomed, a member of the aforesaid firm, was examined, and a statement made before Mr. Hume by Topun Ramchore on the previous day, i.e., on the 19th idem, was produced before the Magistrate. The evidence of Noor Mahomed was shortly to the effect that both the accused had cheated the Company in the sum of about a lac of rupees between the years 1882 to 1887; and the statement of Topun Ramchore was that he entered into a conspiracy with Ahmed Mahomed in defrauding the Company in the manner in which they did. The Magistrate, upon the materials that were laid before him, ordered a summons to issue against Ahmed Mahomed, and a warrant of arrest against the other accused, Topun Ramchore. Later on the same day, it would appear that an application for a search warrant was applied for on behalf of the prosecutor for the purpose of searching the premises of Ahmed Mahomed, No. 18, Pollock Street, for the books of his business from 1882 to 1887. The order that was passed upon this application was, that a search warrant do issue; and, in accordance with this order, a warrant was drawn up in the form prescribed by No. 8, sch. V of the Criminal Procedure Code. The warrant was as follows:—(Reads warrant; see 15 C. pp. 116, 117).

The police on the authority of this warrant went to the premises, No. 18, Pollock Street, and seized not only certain [134] khatta books found on the premises, but also various other papers as detailed in the return of the police: and in due course forwarded the same to the Court of the Magistrate. It also appears that, subsequent to the issue of the order of the 20th of August for a search warrant, several applications were made on behalf of Ahmed Mahomed for the purpose of withdrawing the said order, but they were refused; and on the 23rd of August the order, which is the subject-matter of this rule, was made by the Magistrate, viz., granting to the prosecutor inspection of the books and papers found in the house of the accused and brought up by the police.

The application that was made to us on behalf of Ahmed Mahomed questions the legality of the order granting a search warrant, as also that of the order granting inspection of the books, and papers, but the rule that was granted was, rightly or wrongly, confined to the order of inspection. This rule has now been heard before us, and discussed at considerable length, and with great ability, by the learned Counsel on either side.

Mr. Hill on behalf of Ahmed Mahomed, in the first place, contended that there were no materials whatever before the Magistrate, properly so called upon which he could grant under s. 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code the order for a search warrant. If the matter was open before us, speaking for myself, I should be inclined to hold that the said order of the Magistrate was bad in law, for it would appear that no summons under s. 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code was in the first instance issued upon Ahmed Mahomed for the production of any particular documents; and there was nothing to indicate upon the evidence of Noor Mahomed that there was any reason to believe that the said documents would not be produced upon summons being served. And as regards the statements made before Mr. Hume by Topun Ramchore, I need hardly say that they were no evidence whatever against Ahmed Mahomed; and besides, there was also nothing even upon those statements to justify the grant of a search warrant. Search warrants are judicial acts, and must be granted upon proper materials. But, as I have already said, the matter is not open before us, and the order itself having been executed, and the books and papers having been brought up before the Magistrate, the question does not now really arise.

The next point that was raised by Mr. Hill was that the warrant that was issued was bad, because it was not specific, but too wide and general in its character. As to this matter it seems to me that, although it would have been desirable, nay proper, for the Magistrate to specify the books of what particular business, and whose books were to be brought up, still there can be no doubt what the warrant really meant; and it does not appear that any such objection, as is now raised, was raised before the Magistrate. I think that the accused has not been prejudiced by reason of the specification of the documents required to be seized being somewhat indistinct; and on this ground, and also on the ground that upon the rule as granted the matter is not properly open before us, I agree with my learned colleague in disallowing the objection.

The next matter that was urged by Mr. Hill was that in granting an order for a search warrant, and also in granting inspection of all the documents brought up, the Magistrate has in effect compelled the defendant to make a discovery as against himself in aid of the criminal prosecution. He contended, quoting many authorities, that in England no man could be compelled to produce evidence so as to criminate himself, and that discovery was only granted in equity in aid of civil rights, and never in aid of a criminal prosecution; and he argued that the law in this country ought to be administered in the same way as in England.
There can, I think, be no doubt, upon the authorities which have been laid before us, that in England the law is as it has been contended for; but it seems that the law in this country is not the same. With a view to see how the law which we have to administer stands, it may be necessary shortly to refer to the history of the legislation on the subject, and in doing so, it is not necessary to refer back further than the year 1861. In that year an Act, No. XXV of 1861, was passed. Section 114 of that Act ran as follows:

"When a Magistrate shall consider that the production of any [136] thing is essential to the conduct of an inquiry into an offence known or suspected to have been committed, he may grant his warrant to search for such thing, and it shall be lawful for the officer charged with the execution of such warrant to search for such thing in any house or place within the jurisdiction of such Magistrate. In such case the Magistrate may specify in his warrant the house or place or part thereof to which only the search shall extend."

It will be observed that the Legislature used the expressions "anything" and "such thing;" the word "document" was not specifically mentioned.

This Act was amended in some respects by Act VIII of 1869, but so far as the particular matter now before us for consideration is concerned, the law remained the same as in 1861. The next Act upon the subject is Act X of 1872 by which the law regulating the procedure of the Courts of Criminal Judicature other than the High Courts in the Presidency town and the Courts of Police Magistrates was consolidated and amended, and the portions of this Act which ought here to be referred to are ss. 365 to 367 and Chapter XXVII.

Section 365 ran as follows: "Whenever an officer in charge of a police-station, or any Court, considers that the production of any document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of any investigation or judicial proceeding, such officer or Court may issue a summons to the party in whose keeping such document is believed to be, requiring him to attend and produce such document at the time and place stated in the summons."

Section 336: "If there appears reason to believe that the person to whom the summons is addressed will not produce it as directed in the summons, such officer or Court may issue a search warrant for the document in the first instance."

Section 367: "Any Court may, if it thinks fit, impound any document produced before it, or may, at the conclusion of the proceedings, order such document to be returned to the person who produced it." It is not necessary to refer in detail to the several sections in Chapter XXVII. It is sufficient to say that the law upon [137] the matter of that chapter, as it existed in 1869, was somewhat amplified.

On referring to ss. 365 to 367 it will, however, be observed that in 1872, for the first time, special provisions were made for the production of documents by a party either by summons or by search warrant; and this was perhaps thought necessary by reason of a decision of the High Court of Calcutta in Queen v. Hossein Ali Choudhry (1) as to the right construction to be put upon s. 114 of Act XXV of 1861, and as to the powers conferred thereby upon the Court and police officers in respect of searching for documents or any other thing. The party might be, as it is obvious, either the accused himself or a third party, and the Legislature in 1872 thought it right to lay it down in clear terms that any party might be compelled to produce documents for the purpose of any investigation or judicial proceeding.

It may be useful here to refer to some extent to the proceedings of the Legislative Council upon the Criminal Procedure Bill of 1872.

It would appear from the speech of Mr. Fitz James Stephen that was made on the occasion (vide pp. 393-394, Vol. XI of the Proceedings of the Legislative Council of India) that he did not quite agree with several of the provisions of the Bill; and as to the modifications upon the then existing system which had been made by the Select Committee, he referred, for the reasons thereof, to his colleagues and specially to the then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. The Lieutenant-Governor in his speech in pages 409 and 410 then, amongst other matters, said as follows:

"The criminal law was, as the honorable member had said, a law of overwhelming importance in this country; he meant not only the law for the administration of criminal justice but the executive administration as carried on through the Magistrates. The prevailing ideas on the subject of criminal law had been somewhat affected by the English law; and the departures from the rules of the English law which the Committee recommended were founded on this ground, [138] that many of the prominent parts of the English law were based on political considerations, the object of those familiar rules of criminal law being not to bring the criminal to justice, but to protect the people from a tyrannical Government, and the functions of juries of the people having been for many centuries principally directed to the protection of the interests of the people. Not only were those provisions now unnecessary in England, but they were especially out of place in a country where it was not pretended that the subject enjoyed that liberty which was the birthright of an Englishman, and it was not intended to introduce rules into the criminal law which were designed with the object of securing the liberties of the people. That being so, His Honour thought they might fairly get rid of some of the rules, the object of which was to secure for the people that jealous protection which the English law gave to the accused. It seemed to him that they were not bound to protect the criminal according to any Code of fair play, but that their object should be to get at the truth, and anything which would tend to elicit the truth was regarded by the Committee to be desirable for the interests of the accused if he was innocent, for those of the public if he was guilty. That being so, he would say that he had no sympathy whatever for some of those things which his honourable friend Mr. Stephen had called superstitions. For instance, His Honour did not see why they should not get a man to criminate himself if they could; why they should not do all which they could to get the truth from him; why they should not cross-question him, and adopt every other means, short of absolute torture to get at the truth. They had already done a good deal in the direction of clearing away English prejudices, and the Committee proposed to make further concessions to common sense in the present Bill, &c., &c., &c.

It is obvious, upon a consideration of the observations which I have just quoted, that the Legislature was quite sensible to the many important differences that existed between the English law and the law which existed in this country, and which was then being enacted.

[139] One of the matters of difference which must have, as I may assume, occurred to them was as to the compelling of an accused person furnishing or producing evidence as against himself; and according to the speech of the then Lieutenant-Governor, they thought that the same protection, which an accused in England was entitled to receive, need not be extended to an accused in this country; and that "they were not bound to protect the criminal according to any Code of fair play, but their object should be to get at the truth; and that they "did not see why they should not get a man to criminate himself if they could." And I further observe, with reference to the particular matter now before us, that the Select Committee in their supplementary report, dated the 12th March, 1872, evidently referring to ss. 365 to 367 of the Bill, said that they had made "the necessary provision for securing documentary evidence and for impounding such documents as the Court thinks fit." The words "securing documentary evidence," read by the light of the remarks of the then Lieutenant-Governor, are to my mind significant as showing the intention of the Legislature.

Whether the policy which influenced the action of the Legislature in 1872 was right or not, it is not for me to say. But it is clear that they intended that an accused person might be compelled to furnish evidence, the production of which might have the effect of criminating him.

The other Acts that may be referred to upon the same subject are Act X of 1875 (the High Courts Criminal Procedure Act), ss. 79-86; and Act IV of 1877 (the Presidency Magistrates Act), ss. 144-147; wherein the law was practically the same as in the Act of 1872.

We then come to the present Criminal Procedure Code, Act X of 1882, whereby the previous laws in the Mofussil and in the Presidency towns were consolidated and amended; and so far as the particular matter before us is concerned, the law will be found in ss. 94 to 99.

Section 94 runs as follows: "Whenever any Court, or in any place beyond the limits of the towns of Calcutta and Bombay, any officer in charge of a police-station, considers that the production of any document or other thing is necessary or desirable for the purposes of any investigation, inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under this Code by or before such Court or officer, such Court may issue a summons, or such officer a written order, to the person in whose possession or power such document or thing is believed to be, requiring him to attend and produce it, or to produce it at the time and place stated in the summons or order.

"Any person required under this section merely to produce a document or other thing shall be deemed to have complied with the requisition if he cause such document or thing to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same.

"Nothing" in this section shall be deemed to affect the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, ss. 123 and 124, or to apply to a letter post-card, telegram, or other document in the custody of the Postal or Telegraph authority."

Section 96 says: "Where any Court has reason to believe that a person to whom a summons or order under s. 94 or a requisition under s. 95, paragraph 1, has been or might be addressed will not or would not produce the document or other thing as required by such summons or requisition."—

"Or where such document or other thing is not known to the Court to be in the possession of any person—

"Or where the Court considers that the purposes of any inquiry, trial, or other proceeding under this Code will be served by a general search or inspection—
"It may issue a search warrant, and the person to whom such warrant is directed may search or inspect in accordance therewith and the provisions hereinafter contained.

"Nothing herein contained shall authorise any Magistrate, other than a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate, to grant a warrant to search for a document in the custody of the Postal or Telegraph authorities."

It will be observed that the law, so far as the immediate subject before us is concerned, is practically the same as it was [141] in 1872; and there can, I think, be no doubt that the Legislature intended, as I have already observed, that an accused person might be compelled to produce evidence against himself; and reading the above sections with Schedule V, No. VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code, the only safeguards, as far as I can see, which the Legislature provides are: 1st, that the documents called for, or in regard to which a search warrant is issued, must be distinctly specified; 2nd, that the documents are necessary for the purpose of the enquiry; and, 3rd, that while granting a search warrant, the Magistrate must exercise his judicial discretion, and that he should not make such an order unless the materials before him justify him in so doing.

The documents when seized are, as indicated in No. VIII of the Schedule, to be brought before the Court; and then arise the question, when they are so brought before the Court, whether the Magistrate may grant to the prosecutor the liberty to inspect them. According to a strict reading of the sections themselves, referred to above, there is no power given even to the Court to inspect them; but it would be simply idle to say that the Court would not have that power. Then, again, the production of such documents is, as the learned Advocate-General has justly argued, for the purpose of their being used as evidence in the cause; and one fails to see how it is possible that this should be done unless the prosecutor has an opportunity of inspecting them. It was contended by Mr. Hill that the Magistrate, and the Magistrate alone, has the power to inspect, and that he is bound to determine by examination made by himself, or through an interpreter, as to the bearing or relevancy of any particular document. But it is obvious that the Magistrate does not prosecute the case, and he has no interest, one way or the other, in the result of the prosecution; and he cannot be expected to know and decide for himself whether any particular document is to go in as evidence.

Whether the documents are necessary for the enquiry is a matter which must be determined by the Magistrate at the time when he makes an order under s. 94, or issues a search warrant under s. 96; and therefore it seems to me that, [142] when they are brought before the Court under an order duly made, the Magistrate would have the power to allow the prosecutor the inspection thereof. They stand, when they are brought to Court, precisely in the same position, as my learned brother has so forcibly pointed out, as documents or things found either upon the person of a prisoner at the time of his arrest, or at his houses upon a search made by the police, and afterwards forwarded to the Court. On referring to Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code, which deals with the power and duties of the police, it would appear that under s. 165 the police are authorised to search for any document or thing necessary for the investigation of a case; and then s. 170 provides, that if, upon an investigation under that chapter, there is sufficient evidence against an accused, he shall forward him to the Magistrate with any weapon or other articles which may be necessary to produce before him, and shall require the complainant, if any, and all persons acquainted with the circumstances of the case, to appear before the Magistrate, prosecute, and give evidence in the matter of the charge. When, therefore, upon search, a police officer finds any documents which he thinks necessary for the investigation of the case, he has to forward the same to the Court; and this he does evidently under s. 170; and he requires the complainant to appear before the Magistrate and prosecute the case. Now it is obvious that, in the very nature of things, the prosecutor would have an opportunity of looking at the documents thus seized; and it is difficult to conceive that, if in the case of a search and seizure by the police, the prosecutor necessarily inspects the documents or articles seized, the Legislature intended that he should not have the same opportunity or privilege when under the order of the Court any particular document or other thing is seized under a search warrant and brought up to the Court.

Mr. Hill, as also Mr. Palit, contended before us that the privilege claimed for the prosecution in this case is not enjoyed by a party to a suit in a civil case when his adversary or a witness in the cause produces a document in Court; that whereas in the case of a witness, he may object to the production of a document called for from him, and in the case of a party to a suit, if his adversary inspects the document, the latter is bound to put it in as evidence; but that in the case of a criminal trial or enquiry the prosecutor would, if the contention of the learned Advocate-General was right, be entitled to inspect a document without even being compelled to put it in as evidence. They also called attention to the fact that both the Criminal Procedure Bill and the Civil Procedure Bill passed through the Legislative Council about the same time, and that it was hard to believe that the Legislature could have meant to give to a prosecutor such extraordinary privileges which they denied to a party to a civil suit. It is indeed true that the power of inspection is not in distinct terms given in the Criminal Procedure Code to a prosecutor. In fact the Code is silent upon the matter, whereas the Civil Procedure Code clearly makes provision for such inspection under certain circumstances. If, however, the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner were carried to its legitimate extent, it must come to this, and indeed they did contend for that position, that a prosecutor in a criminal case can, under no circumstances, be permitted to inspect a document or thing produced by the police, unless it be at the trial after such document or thing is put in evidence. But even as to this, viz., as to its being put in evidence at the trial, the Code is silent; in fact it stops short with saying that the documents or things when seized by the police are to be brought up to Court. Then, again, who is to put the documents or things in evidence. That the Legislature intended that the Magistrate should conduct the case for the prosecution, and have the responsibility of determining by inspection as to whether any document is to go in as evidence is a proposition which seems to me almost impossible to accept. If this is a correct view, and if we bear in mind the true purpose for which any document or thing is seized and brought up to Court, one cannot help thinking that the Legislature, while providing for the seizure and production in Court of documents, intended by implication that the prosecutor should, under the orders of the Court, have the power, to inspect and determine whether they should go in as evidence.

It was further contended by Mr. Hill that all that the prosecutor in this case might have called for were the particular entries in the books of the accused, and when they were brought into Court they could be put in as evidence at the trial, and that then the prosecutor would have the liberty of inspecting them. But it seems to me that it would be simply impossible for a prosecutor in a case like this to give the precise dates of the entries in the books of the accused without inspection beforehand.

There is one other matter which I think it right to mention here. It is this, that the order of the Court was to search for and bring up the khatta books of the defendants' business from 1882 to 1887. The police evidently exceeded their authority and seized not only certain khatta books, but also various other papers. I think that those other papers are not properly before the Court; and it follows that no inspection can be had in respect to them. While, therefore, I agree with my learned colleague in holding that the order granting inspection in the circumstances of this case cannot be set aside, I think that the inspection should be confined to the documents covered by the warrant of the 21st August last.

Enhancement of rent; Suit for—Dismissal of enhancement suit—Rent suit at old rate for year for which rent had been sought at enhanced rate—Civil Procedure Code, s. 43.

The dismissal of a suit for rent at an enhanced rate is no bar to a subsequent suit for rent at the rate originally fixed.

On the 26th April, 1885, the plaintiffs sued the defendants for rent due to them for the year 1289 (1882) on 92 bighas of land at an annual jumma of Rs. 52-14. The defendants, amongst other matters, pleaded that in the year 1883 the plaintiffs had instituted against them a suit for the recovery of rent for the same lands for the year 1289 (1882) at an enhanced rate, and that such suit had been dismissed, and that the plaintiffs were not therefore entitled to sue them again for rent at the old rate for that same year.

The plaint in the enhancement suit contained only one prayer, viz., for assessment of the rent at the enhanced rate; and the suit was dismissed on the ground that notice of enhancement had not been proved to have been served. The lower Courts held on the authority of Kunnock Chunder Mookerjee v. Guru Dass Biswas (1) that the plaintiffs could not again sue for rent for the year 1289, the appellate Court adding that "the plaintiffs, not having chosen to put forward their claims for rent for 1289 at the original rate in the former suit, are barred from suing for that rent in the present suit."

[146] The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court on the ground that s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code did not preclude the second suit, and the Court (Norris and O'Kinéaly, J.J.) referred to a Full Bench the question whether the plaintiffs could recover rent at the old rate in the suit then before the Court?

The order of reference was as follows:

"This is a case in which the plaintiffs sued for the rent for the year 1289. We must take it upon the pleadings, the grounds of appeal and the findings in the lower Courts, that previous to that suit the plaintiffs brought a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground of notice, and that they failed in that suit, because service of notice was not proved. The question then is whether they can now recover the old rent in this action?

"In the case of Soorasoondery Dabee v. Golam Ally (1) this matter was discussed before their Lordships in the Privy Council, and they said: 'It was contended on the part of the appellants that, even if they were not entitled to enhance the rent, they were entitled to recover rent at the rate specified in the kabuliyat. Their Lordships are of opinion that a suit to enhance is very different from a suit to recover arrears of rent at the rate originally fixed, and that it is founded entirely upon different principles. In a suit for enhancement of rent, it would be no bar to plead that all arrears according to the original rate had been paid. No issue was raised, nor could an issue have been properly raised, in this suit as to whether the rent for 1272, at the rate specified in the kabuliyat, had been paid or satisfied, nor is there anything in the case to show whether it has been paid or not.'

"It would, therefore, appear to us that their Lordships in the Privy Council looked upon a suit for enhancement of rent after notice, and a suit for rent as originally fixed, as based upon two distinct causes of action.

"The decision in the case of Ghunshyam Singh v. Tara Proshad Coondoo (2) favours, if anything, the plaintiff's contention. On the other hand, the case of Kunnock Chunder Mookerjee v. Guru Dass Biswas (3) distinctly decides that a subsequent suit [147] will not lie. Looking at the decision of their Lordships in the Privy Council we have some doubt as to the correctness of this decision. We, therefore, refer the case to a Full Bench."

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf.—A suit for enhancement of rent and a suit for rent are founded and proceed on different principles—see Soorasoondery Dabee v. Golam Ally (1); and Khedaroonissa Bicee v. for in the plaint alone. In a suit for arrears of rent the cause of action arises on a breach of contract; whereas in an enhancement suit it arises from the notice and the defendant disregarding the notice. The real question is not whether the claim could have been included in the former case, but whether the cause of action is the same. Section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code should be read with ss. 45 and 50; although the plaintiff might have joined different causes of action, yet his not doing so does not show that he has split his cause of action. It is possible that a claim at an enhanced rate might alter the jurisdiction of the Court, namely, if the enhanced rate asked for was over Rs. 1,000, and the rent at the old rate Rs. 500; the suit in such case would then have to be brought in different Courts.

The observation made in Soorajooner Dabee v. Golam Ally (1) are repeated in Hurronath Roy v. Govind Chunder Dutt (2). The Privy Council in Rajah of Pittapur v. Venkata Mahipati Surya (3), in discussing s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859, say that that section does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action, but that it shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action.

(148) Baboo Taruck Nath Sen, for the respondents,—The Privy Council in Soorajooner Dabee v. Golam Ally (1) do not say that the suits were for different causes of action; but that they were suits of a different principle. The case of Kunnock Chunder Mookerjee v. Guru Dass Biswas (4) shows that suits for enhanced rent and suits for rent are claims arising in respect of the same subject-matter, and that a person cannot, after having unsuccessfully sued for rent at an enhanced rate, sue afterwards for the original rent for a previous year. I also refer to the cases of Bhubo Soonderee Chowdhrai v. Kasheenath Acharjee (5), and Ghunsyam Singh v. Tara Prosad Coondoo (6), which tend to show that the two claims are founded on the same cause of action. With regard to the words of s. 43 of the Code, see the remarks of the Privy Council in Buzloor Ruheem v. Shunsooniissa Begam (7).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench (consisting of Wilson, Tottenham, Pigot, O'Kinealy and Ghose, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—The point which comes before us in this reference is a very short one. It is stated that the suit is a suit for rent at the rate claimed, on the ground of its having been previously paid at that rate. It appears that, previously to this suit, the plaintiffs had brought a suit for enhancement of rent on the ground of notice, and failed in that suit, because service of notice was not proved. The question is, whether they can now recover the old rent in this suit. We have referred to an abstract of the plaint in the former suit, and we find that the precise nature of this suit was this. It was a suit claiming rent at an enhanced rate on the ground of an alleged notice of enhancement, justified, as it was said, by the circumstances of the case.

We have to say, whether the present suit is barred by reason of the provisions of s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That [139] section says: "Every suit shall include the whole claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action." And it is added: "If the plaintiff omit to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished." The only question therefore is, whether the claim in the present suit is founded upon the same cause of action as the claim in the former suit.

The relation of these two claims to one another was considered by the Privy Council in the case of Soorasoondery Dabee v. Golam Ally (1). The passage in which this matter is dealt with occurs at page 130: "It was contended on the part of the appellants that, even if they were not entitled to enhance the rent, they were entitled to recover the rent at the rate specified in the kabuliyat. Their Lordships are of opinion that a suit to enhance is very different from a suit to recover arrears of rent at the rate originally fixed, and that it is founded entirely on different principles. In a suit for enhancement, it would be no bar to plead that all the arrears according to the original rate had been paid," and so on.

It is true that in many cases since the date of that decision, it has been held that a suit may be so framed, that the Court may, as an alternative, give the plaintiff a decree for rent at the old rate, when he has failed to establish his right to rent at the enhanced rate. But that it is not because the two claims are founded upon the same cause of action, but because, under the provisions of the Procedure Code, different causes of action may be combined in the same suit. These are different causes of action, based upon two distinct obligations having distinct origins. This is how the matter was viewed in the case of Khedaroonissa Bibee v. Boodhee Bibee (2). That case was decided under the terms of the Procedure Code of 1859, but those terms were, for the present purpose, substantially identical with the language of the present Code, and Locu and Hosniotsé, JJ., held that the dismissal of a suit for rent at an enhanced rate was no bar to a subsequent suit for rent at the old rate. On the other hand, in the more recent case of Kunnock Chunder Mookeerjee v. [180] Guru Dass Biswas (3), Cunningham and Maclean, JJ., took a contrary view. We are unable to concur in the latter decision, and it appears to us that those learned Judges addressed their attention not precisely to the point arising on the section. The section speaks of claims arising out of the cause of action, whereas what the learned Judges say is—"it is true that the Privy Council have pointed out that a suit for enhancement and a suit for rent are different proceedings. None the less they are, in our opinion, remedies, and claims arising in respect of the same subject-matter." So it may, no doubt, be correctly said they are, but they are not in our judgment claims arising out of the same cause of action.

It has not been shown that any issue or question arises with regard to the rent for 1289, except the question of law on which we have expressed our opinion. The decrees of the lower Courts will, therefore, be set aside, so far as they relate to the rent of 1289, and the plaintiff will have a decree for the rent of that year with costs.

CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy.

Murari Mohun Roy (Plaintiff) v. Khetter Nath Mullick (Defendant).* [21st December, 1887.]

Stamp Act, Schedule I, cl. 5—Document—Agreement to pay.

A document was executed in these terms: "This document, a hand-note, is executed by me for the purpose of purchasing a ghor. I take from you Rs. 7. I will pay interest on the sum at half-anna per rupee per mensem. Having received the Rs. 7 in cash, this hand-note is executed." Held, that the document was not a promissory note, nor a bond; but was an agreement to pay, and as such was chargeable with duty under cl. 5, sch. I of the Stamp Act.

[151] Murari Mohun Roy brought a suit upon a note of hand against Khetter Nath Mullick for the recovery of Rs. 11-11. The note was executed by the defendant on the 16th Assar 1292 B. S. (29th June 1883), and bore a receipt stamp of one anna. The document ran as follows: "This document, hand note, is executed by me for the purpose of purchasing a ghor. I take from you Rs. 7. I will pay interest on the sum at half-anna per rupee per mensem. Having received the Rs. 7 in cash, this document is executed." There was no attesting witness to the document, and the defendant's name was written on a corner of the paper upon a receipt stamp for one anna. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the document was insufficiently stamped and therefore inadmissible in evidence. The Munsif held that the document was neither a bond as defined in the Stamp Act, nor a promissory note as defined in the Negotiable Instruments Act; but a mere receipt, and as such properly stamped, and gave a decree to the plaintiff contingent on the opinion of the High Court, to which he made the following reference: "For the purpose of the stamp law, what is this document, a bond, a promissory note or a receipt under the definition given in the Stamp Act."

This is a reference made by the Munsif of Culna under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He desires to know what is the proper construction to be placed on a document tendered in evidence in a case tried by him. That document runs as follows: "This document, hand-note, is executed by me for the purpose of purchasing a ghor. I take from you Rs. 7. I will pay interest on the sum at half-anna per rupee per mensem. Having received the Rs. 7 in cash, this hand-note is executed." Dated 16th Assar 1292 B.S."

The Munsif is of opinion that the document does not fall within the definition of a bond as given in the Stamp Act. In this opinion we concur. He also considers that it is not a promissory note, and we are of the same opinion. The document under reference is very similar to that set out in the case of Ferrier v. Ram Kulpa Ghose (1). There the note ran as [152] follows: "Received from Mem Saheb the sum of Co's Rs. 40, and I gave interest for one month, two rupees." It was held that this document was not a promissory note nor a bond, but merely an agreement to pay. We are, therefore, of opinion that the present document is an agreement to pay, and as such is chargeable with duty under clause 5 of the Schedule to the Stamp Act.

* Civil Reference No. 11 A of 1887, made by Baboo Krishna Nath Roy, Munsif of Culna, dated the 21st of May 1887.

(1) 23 W. R. 403.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Coorg.]

IN THE MATTER OF SOUTHAKAL KRISHNA RAO (Petitioner).

Legal Practitioner's Act (XVIII of 1879),—ss. 14 and 40—Irregularity in procedure in dismissing a mukhtar.

A charge of unprofessional conduct brought against a practitioner, holding a certificate under Act XVIII of 1879, having been found to be established by a Subordinate Court, which also considered that he, in consequence should be dismissed, and the same having been reported, in conformity with s. 14 of that Act, to the principal Court in the province, such dismissal was ordered. Held, that the practitioner could not be dismissed or suspended under that section, without his having been allowed, under s. 40, an opportunity of defending himself before that Court.

It is within the duties of Court, informed of the misconduct of one of the practitioners before it, to take steps to have the matter adjudicated upon Appeal from two orders (28th February 1883 and 28th July 1883) made by the Judicial Commissioner of Coorg.

The two orders against which this appeal was preferred were made by the Judicial Commissioner upon the report of the Assistant Commissioner. The first cancelled the certificate of the appellant, as a mukhtar, practising under Act XVIII of 1879, and directed that his name be struck off the roll of second grade pleaders. The second order confirmed the first.

The charge against Southakal Krishna Rao was stated by the Commissioner of Coorg (20th November 1882), as follows, viz., that he being engaged as a pleader by Ramasetty Nanjappah, [153] on the prosecution of an appeal to the Judicial Commissioner, fraudulently and improperly represented to him in a telegram that his appeal had been filed and fixed for hearing on a certain date, which he well knew or had reason to believe, was not the case; also that, until criminal proceedings were taken against him in the Court of the Magistrate of the district, he failed to account to the said Nanjappah for the money entrusted to him with the object of retaining an advocate for the said appeal; also, that he had falsely stated to the Magistrate that he had given Rs. 40 to a third person on that account.

These charges were, by order of the Commissioner, on the 14th December 1882, enquired into by the Assistant Commissioner, who received as evidence the record of a case instituted by Nanjappah, relating to the detention of the money abovementioned, in the Court of the District Magistrate, under s. 417 of the Indian Penal Code. These proceedings had resulted in the discharge of Southekal Krishna Rao, under s. 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Assistant Commissioner found the charges proved, and his findings were, on the 15th. February 1883, submitted to the Judicial Commissioner, who thereupon made the order of the 28th February 1883, the first of those now complained of. The Judicial Commissioner, however, afterwards, on 5th June 1883, directed the Commissioner to examine certain witnesses on behalf of Southekal Krishna Rao. This was done, and the depositions were forwarded by the Commissioner on the 6th July 1883, to the Judicial Commissioner, with the comment that whatever view might be taken concerning the alleged re-payment there was no denying the fact that Southekal Krishna Rao had kept his client for many months out of his money, and returned it only under stress of criminal proceedings, having by means of a false telegram made him believe that his appeal had been filed. The Judicial Commissioner on the 28th July following made the second of the orders now under appeal, confirming his previous order.

Special leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council having been obtained on 26th November 1886, Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that, with reference to s. 40 of Act XVIII of [154] 1879, the Judicial Commissioner had not the power to suspend or dismiss a practitioner under s. 14, without allowing him an opportunity of defending himself before him—an opportunity not shown by the proceedings to have been given. The proceedings before the Commissioner, taken under the order of 5th June 1883, did not remove the effect of this irregularity in the Judicial Commissioner’s procedure. He added that the misconduct charged was not, even if proved, sufficiently aggravated to require, or justify, a sentence so severe as that which the appellant was undergoing.

After Mr. Arathoon had been heard their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by—

JUDGMENT.

SIR J. HANNEN.—This is an appeal by one Krishna Rao against an order of the Acting Judicial Commissioner of Coorg, Mr. Plumer, by which he struck the name of the petitioner off the roll of second grade pleaders in the Courts of Coorg.

The facts out of which the appeal arises are as follows. One Nanjappah had instituted a suit in which he had been unsuccessful. He had appealed once, and he desired to appeal again. The present appellant, who was at that time a vakil, was going to Bangalore, and he was request-ed by Nanjappah to give instructions to a barrister of the name of Meenakshaya, at Bangalore, to take such steps as might be necessary for this appeal; and on the 27th or 29th of January 1880, Nanjappah remitted to the appellant a sum of Rs. 80 for stamps and court-fees. It appears that the appellant did, in accordance with the directions he had received from Nanjappah, hand over the papers relating to the case, and the Rs. 80, to Mr. Meenakshaya. Mr. Meenakshaya was at that time about to leave Bangalore for two or three days, and he took the papers with him. He appears to have left on the 1st of February. On the 2nd of February the appellant, either in consequence, as he says, of a telegram from Nanjappah, or of his own motion, went to the office of Meenakshaya and there saw one of his clerks. There is a question as to what information he received from that clerk with regard to the appeal. The appellant says that he was told in answer to his inquiry that the appeal might have been filed, by which their Lordships understand him to mean that as Mr. Meenakshaya [155] was away, the clerks did not know what had been in fact done, but that it might have been filed by him before he left. The clerk, however, gives a different account of the transaction, and says that all that he said was that the appeal might be filed when Mr. Meenakshaya returned. Whichever of those two statements is correct it does not justify, literally, the telegram which the appellant sent to Nanjappah, because he telegraphed to him: "Appeal filed Saturday; hearing not fixed." From his own point of view of the facts, it would appear that he assumed that the appeal had been filed, whereas, as he admits, all the information he received was that it might have been filed. That certainly is an inaccurate telegram. But the first question which underlies all these proceedings is whether or not it was a fraudulent statement by him that the appeal had been filed on Saturday. Now, as he had handed over the papers and the Rs. 80 to Mr. Meenakshaya, who had taken the papers out of town for the purpose of considering what should be done, it does not appear that there could have been any motive for the appellant's telegraphing falsely and fraudulently that the appeal had been filed, and it would appear more natural to come to the conclusion that there had been some misunderstanding on his part, or that he incautiously and improperly telegraphed as a fact that that had been done which the clerk had stated was probable. It has been suggested by the Commissioner, who has finally reported on the case, that he may have anticipated the events which did subsequently occur, namely, that Mr. Meenakshaya would return the money, and so he would have an opportunity of appropriating it, or some of it. That is taking a very hostile view of his conduct, and their Lordships are not prepared to say that the facts lead with any degree of certainty to so adverse a conclusion. But as a matter of fact the appellant did receive back from Mr. Meenakshaya the papers and Rs. 60, Mr. Meenakshaya retaining Rs. 20 as his fee for advising upon the case. The appellant did not, as he ought to have done, hand over that Rs. 60, or at any rate as much of it as he considered should be paid after deducting some reasonable sum for his own expenses. He did not in fact hand over any. In the following December, Mr. Hayes, a barrister, [156] was instructed by Nanjappah to write to the petitioner asking him to render an account of the money which he had received back from Meenakshaya. The petitioner wrote to Mr. Hayes saying that he was entitled to retain Rs. 20. He also said: "After my return to this place Nanjappah never asked for the money. If he had done so, I was ready to pay him Rs. 40, after deducting Rs. 20 which Mr. Meenakshaya had retained, and Rs. 20 for my travelling expenses. Such being the case, I was astonished to see your letter." He did not, however, remit the money to Nanjappah, but he alleges that on the following 28th of February 1881, he paid a sum of Rs. 30 to Mr. Hayes, which together with another sum of Rs. 10, which he had previously given him, made up a sum of Rs. 40, on account of this claim of Nanjappah: and by way of proving that, he produced a letter from Mr. Hayes which simply demands payment of Rs. 30, and upon which letter the appellant states that he made a memorandum of those two payments of Rs. 30 and Rs. 10, making up the Rs. 40 which he had expressed his willingness to pay in his letter to Mr. Hayes.

There is a dispute upon this, as upon almost every other fact of the case. Mr. Hayes denies that he received that money on account of Nanjappah; but it is quite certain that there were money transactions between Mr. Hayes and the appellant, and it is not impossible to believe that this sum of Rs. 40 was paid by the petitioner to Mr. Hayes on account of Nanjappah.

In that state of things Nanjappah instituted proceedings against the petitioner of a criminal nature. When those proceedings came on for hearing a compromise was arrived at by its being agreed that Nanjappah should receive the whole Rs. 80 back again. There is a question how that Rs. 80 was made up. The appellant says that half of it was paid by Mr. Hayes, the other half being furnished by him. Mr. Hayes, however, denies that he furnished anything, and represents that the whole of it was paid by the appellant under fear of the proceedings that had been taken against him. A compromise was effected by the receipt of the Rs. 80 by Nanjappah. But although the claim of Nanjappah was thus put an end to, proceedings were afterwards instituted—the proceedings which are now the subject of appeal [157] before this Board—against the appellant in his character of pleader and officer of the Court. Those proceedings took place before Colonel Hill, who is the Commissioner of Coorg. It does not appear very clearly what led to the institution of those proceedings, but it is unnecessary to inquire into their origin, as if it became known to an officer presiding in a Subordinate Court that one of the practitioners before that Court has been guilty of unprofessional conduct, it would be within the scope of his duties to take steps for the purpose of having that matter adjudicated upon. That would properly take place under the 14th section of the Legal Practitioners Act, No. XVIII of 1879, which provides that "if any such pleader practising in any Subordinate Court is charged in such Court or office with any such misconduct"—that is (referring back to the preceding section)—"in the discharge of his professional duty," then that certain steps shall be taken. The presiding officer is to send him a copy of the charge, and also a notice that on a day to be thereby appointed such charge will be taken into consideration. Ultimately it becomes the duty of such officer, if he finds the charge established, and considers that the pleader should be suspended or dismissed in consequence, to record his finding and the grounds thereof, and to report the same to the High Court, and the "High Court may acquit, suspend, or dismiss the pleader or mukhtar."

A report was made to Mr. Plumer, the Acting Judicial Commissioner, who in this respect represents the High Court. The Acting Judicial Commissioner has given the two orders which are the subject of appeal in this case. The first was on the 28th of February 1883, when he makes the order with this preface: "In the matter of the recommendation made by the Commissioner of Coorg for the removal of the name of Southekal Krishna Rao from the roll of second grade pleaders for his having defrauded one Ramasetty Nanjappah of Mercara." He goes on to say that the record of the case before him showed clearly that Krishna Rao received Rs. 80, and that he fraudulently omitted to repay it, and also that he made a false statement that he had paid his client a portion of the money

Up to that time it is to be observed that the petitioner had not been heard before Mr. Plumer. Petitioner remonstrated upon the order that had been made, and the result was another order of the 5th of June 1885, that is, that evidence shall be adduced by the appellant, and evidence was in fact taken before Colonel Hill. Their Lordships are of opinion that the petitioner had the opportunity of adducing such evidence as he might think fit, and that his complaint on that head is not well founded. But upon the evidence so obtained being remitted to the Judicial Commissioner, he makes this report of order: "I have gone very carefully again though all the papers connected with this case, and I have given them my best consideration. I regret that I am unable to modify the opinion expressed in my previous order or to alter the conclusion I arrived at." He therefore concludes "I confirm my former order striking petitioner off the rolls."

This order was made without the petitioner's having had the opportunity of being heard before the Acting Judicial Commissioner after the evidence had been taken, and in that respect their Lordships are of opinion that there has been a plain irregularity, because in whatever way the proceedings may be instituted, they are subject to the provision of the 40th section of the Act referred to, by which it is enacted that "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore continued, no pleader shall be suspended or dismissed under this Act unless he has been allowed an opportunity of defending himself before the authorities suspending or dismissing him." Now the only authority which could suspend or dismiss him was the High Court represented by the Acting Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Plumer, before whom he never has had an opportunity of defending himself. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that this order directing that he be struck off the rolls is in that respect irregular, and that it must be set aside, and the petitioner be restored to the roll.

It is unnecessary to give a definite opinion upon the merits of the case, but their Lordships consider that, if the charge had [159] been established in a regular way, the offence, as alleged against the petitioner, was not of a character which called for his entire removal from the profession, but that a suspension for less time than that which he has in fact undergone would have been sufficient to meet the merits of the case.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to set aside the order appealed from and to order that the petitioner be restored to the roll.

Appeal allowed.

Right of Suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 11—Hereditary right to an office—Declaratory decree—Jurisdiction—Emolument.

A suit for the establishment of a right to the hereditary title of musicians to a satra will lie under s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, notwithstanding that the right sought to be established is one which brings in no profit to those claiming it.

This was a suit brought for a declaration of the plaintiffs' hereditary title to the office of musicians in a satra in Zillah Kamrup.

The plaintiffs alleged that they held the office of musicians to the satra in succession to their ancestors, and that in March, 1884, at a time when they were giving the usual performance on the occasion of the Dolejatra, the defendants, claiming themselves a right to such office, by force put a stop to the performance.

The defendants, amongst other defences raised, objected that the suit was not one cognizable by a Civil Court; and that if the plaintiffs had a right to sue, they could not sue jointly.

[160] The Munsif held that, as the plaintiffs had been dispossessed in a body on the same grounds, they had but one cause of action, and could jointly sue, and that they had a right to sue under s. 11 of the Code.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who, without going into the first point decided by the Munsif, held that the word "office" in s. 11 of the Code did not include the performance of a religious ceremony to which no emoluments were attached, and that the suit would not therefore lie.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

v. Lakshmamma (1); Vasudeb Vithal Samant v. Ramchandra Gopal Samant (2).

The judgment of the Court (Mitter, O. C. J. and Beverley, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This suit was brought for the purpose of obtaining a declaratory decree confirming the plaintiffs' hereditary title to the office of musicians in a satra at a village called Sundaridia, within the jurisdiction of the Sub-division of Barpita in Kamrup. The defendants resisted the claim upon various grounds, and objected also that the suit could not be maintained in any Court.

The Munisif overruled the objection, holding that the Civil Court has jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature, and that [161] the present suit is of a civil nature. The Court of first instance decided in favour of the plaintiffs on the merits also, and decreed the claim.

On appeal by the defendants the District Judge, being of opinion that such an action as this would not lie under s. 11, decreed the appeal, and dismissed the suit. He says: It is not pretended that any emoluments attached to the position of musician. Defendants are entitled to their share (if any) of the proceeds of the temple property as bhakats, not as musicians. Does the word 'office' in the explanation to s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code include the performance of a religious ceremony, or part of a religious ceremony, to which no emoluments are attached, which carries with it no profit or loss, which is purely honorary? I think not. I think that in order to establish a claim to an office, it must be shown that the office is one of profit.' In that view of s. 11 the lower appellate Court held that an action like this would not lie, and accordingly dismissed the suit, without going into the other questions that arose upon the issues raised by the Court of first instance. We are unable to concur in the view taken by the lower appellate Court as to the meaning of the word "office" in s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge is of opinion that a charge or a trust to which no emoluments are attached is not an "office" within the meaning of s. 11. A charge or a trust of a shebait in a temple may not be one of profit; it may not bring to the person who is employed in the trust, or in the charge, any emoluments at all. On the other hand, it may subject him to expenditure out of his own pocket; still in a case like that, if a person undertakes a trust or a charge as a shebait, he, in our opinion, should be considered as employed in an "office," within the meaning of s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. Many cases were cited in the course of the argument in support of the view taken by the lower appellate Court, but none of them fully supports the view taken by the District Judge. They are to the effect that a suit for the vindication of an alleged dignity attached to an office, if the alleged dignity does not carry with it any pecuniary gain or profit, will not lie in a Civil Court. But this is not a suit for the vindication of any alleged dignity attached to any [162] office, but this is a suit for the establishment of the plaintiffs' right to a hereditary office. In our opinion it is not necessary, in a suit of this description, to establish that the charge or trust is one which ensures some profit to the person claiming it. If it be a charge or trust for the performance of particular duties in a temple or the like, it would, in our opinion, be an "office."

within the meaning of s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, whether any

We are, therefore, of opinion that the present suit will lie under that and remand the case to that Court to decide on the merits. Costs to NUND KUMAR SHAHA (Defendant) v. SHURNOMOYI (or SHURNOMOYI DASI) (Plaintiff).* [18th November, 1887.]

Stamp Act (I of 1870), Sch. I Art. 1—Stamp Duty—Evidence—Acknowledgment—Balance Sheet—Nikash.

A nikash, or balance sheet, made out and signed by a gomastah of a business showing a balance due by him to the owner of the business, is not an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of art.1, sch. I of the Stamp Act, and is admissible in evidence without being stamped.

Brojo Gobind Shaha v. Goluck Chunder Shaha (1) followed.

[Disc., 39 C. 789=16 C.W.N. 945=15 Ind. Cas. 279.]

In this suit the plaintiff alleged that the defendant employed the defendant as gomastah to carry on her shop, he being remunerated by a 10-anna share of the profits thereof, and the plaintiff being entitled to the remaining six annas of such profits. It further alleged that the defendant had misappropriated monies from the capital funds with which the shop was carried on, and that on an account being demanded from him, he prepared and signed a balance sheet or nikash showing a sum of money due from him.

[163] The suit was brought to recover the balance of this sum after crediting the defendant with certain amounts admitted to be due to him.

The defendant in his written statement denied the material allegations in the plaint, and specifically denied that he ever submitted an account as set out.

The evidence in the case was directed to the question whether or not the defendant prepared and signed the account. The plaintiff’s witnesses alleged he did so, whilst the defendant denied it. The document was not stamped.

The Munsif of Perozepore who originally tried the case disbelieved the plaintiff’s story and his witnesses, and dismissed the suit, but on appeal to the Judge of Backergunge this decision was reversed and the amount sued for decreed. The defendant now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

J. F. Bradbury, Esq., Judge of Backergunge, dated the 25th of February 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Bidhu Bhusan Chuckerbutty, Munsif of Perozepore, dated the 19th of April 1886.

Mr. Roberts, for the appellant.—Except the account alleged to have been rendered and signed by the defendant there is no evidence to support the plaintiff's claim. Either that document is an acknowledgment of a debt, and that is how it is put forward by the plaintiff, or it affords no foundation of proof on which a decree against the defendant could properly be made.

I submit that it must be treated as an acknowledgment of a debt within art. 1, sch. I of the Stamp Act (I of 1879), and as such it requires a one-anna stamp. Instruments requiring a one-anna stamp cannot under s. 31 be stamped after the drawing or execution thereof. This objection is fatal to the suit, which should be dismissed. The point was raised in the original Court.

Baboo Durga Mohun Dass, for the respondent was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J.—The only point raised in this appeal by the learned counsel for the appellant is that the document referred to in the judgments of the two lower Courts is an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of art. 1, sch. I of the Stamp Act, and being such a document it should have been stamped with a one-anna stamp; and that, requiring a one-anna stamp, under s. 31 of the Stamp Act, it was a document for which no penalty could be paid, and which could not be received in evidence.

We have looked at the document ourselves, and we think that it is not an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of art. 1, sch. I of the Stamp Act, and we are fortified in this opinion by a decision of Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy on a very similar point in the case of Brojo Gobind Shaha v. Goluck Chunder Shaha (1).

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A suit for arrears of fixed maintenance is a suit relating to maintenance within the meaning of that term as used in cl. 38 of sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887), and is therefore not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes,

[F., 10 A.L.J. 185 (186)=16 Ind. Cas. 13 (14); R., 16 B. 267 (268).]

This was a reference from the Small Cause Court of Jessore under the provisions of s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the facts of the case which gave rise to it were as follow:—

* Civil Reference No. 15-A of 1887, made by Babu Jugobundhoo Gangooly, Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Jessore, dated the 27th of August 1887.

(1) 9 C. 127.
The plaintiff instituted the suit after the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887) came into force to recover arrears of maintenance from the defendant. She alleged that her late husband, one Uma Charan Haldar, left his property by will to the defendant upon the condition that he paid to her maintenance at [165] the rate of Rs. 3 per month; that she had already been forced to institute suits for the recovery of that amount, and on the 28th April had obtained a decree from the Small Cause Court for the arrears of maintenance then due at that rate. In the present suit she claimed arrears for the period between Chaitra 1292 (March 1886) to Ashar 1294 (June 1887). The suit was undefended, and the Judge found that the plaintiff had obtained a decree for arrears of maintenance at the rate alleged on the 28th April 1886, and that the amount of the decree was realized by execution. He also found that the arrears claimed in the suit were due. He, however, considered that, under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try such a suit as the present, and he accordingly directed the plaint to be returned to be presented to the proper Court subject to the opinion of the High Court upon the question as to whether he had jurisdiction to try it.

In his judgment he expressed a doubt as to whether the words "a suit relating to maintenance" as used in cl. 38 of Sch. II of the Act in question covered suits to recover arrears of maintenance at fixed rates as well as suits to establish a right to maintenance. To illustrate his doubt he referred to s. 7, cls. 1 and 2 of the Court Fees Act (Act VII of 1870), which deals with two different classes of suits for maintenance for the purposes of that Act, the one being suits for arrears of maintenance and the other suits for maintenance; and he considered that it might well be urged that the words in cl. 38—"a suit relating to maintenance"—were equivalent to "a suit for maintenance" and did not therefore include a suit such as the present for arrears of maintenance at fixed rates, but merely were meant to apply to suits to establish a right to maintenance. He also referred to cls. 128 and 129 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1887), where the distinction between suits for arrears of maintenance and for a declaration of a right to maintenance is also observed; and to the decisions in the cases of Nobin Kalee Debea v. Bindoo Bhashinee Debea (1); Bhugwan Chunder Bose v. Bindoo Bashinee Dossee (2); Sidlingapa v. Sidava [166] kom Sidlingapa (3); and came to the conclusion that the words "suit relating to maintenance" as used in cl. 38 of sch. II of Act IX of 1887 must be taken to include a suit for arrears of maintenance as well as one to establish a right to maintenance.

He, however, referred the question as to whether he had jurisdiction to try the case to the High Court.

No one appeared on the reference. The opinion of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

OPINION.

We are of opinion that a "suit for arrears of fixed maintenance" is a "suit relating to maintenance" specified in cl. 38 of the second schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, IX of 1887, and is, therefore, a suit excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Ghose.

SIRDHAR ROY v. RAMESWAR SINGH.* [7th December, 1887.]

When under ss. 61 and 62 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a deposit of rent is made by tenant, and the Court grants him a receipt, the Zemindar has no right to come in and be heard in the matter, there being no machinery whatsoever provided by the Act for the Court to enter into a judicial enquiry in connection with the matter of the deposit. As far as the tenant is concerned, after such deposit is made and a receipt granted, the Court is functus officio, and is not authorized to return the money to the tenant upon an application made by the zemindar.

The words "the full amount of the money then due" in s. 61, and the words, "the amount of rent payable by the tenant" in s. 62, mean nothing more than the words "what he shall consider the full amount of rent due from him at the date of the tender to the zemindar" as used in Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and have no relation whatever to the amount of rent justly due or justly payable by the tenant.

This was a rule calling upon Rameswar Singh, a zemindar, to show cause why an order passed by the Munsif of Madhubani [167] on the 2nd February 1887, ordering a tenant of such zemindar to withdraw from the Court a sum of money already deposited and received by the Court as rent due to the zemindar under s. 62 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, should not be set aside as being passed without jurisdiction.

The facts were as follows:—

On the 19th November 1886, an application was presented to the Munsif by one Sirdhar Roy, a tenant of one Rameswar Singh, under s. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for permission to deposit a certain amount of rent, stating, among other matters, that he had tendered the money to the landlord's agent, but that the agent had refused to receive it and grant a receipt. The Munsif accepted this application and received the rent, and granted to the tenant a receipt under s. 62 of the Act, causing a notice of the receipt of the deposit to be served upon the zemindar. The zemindar, who apparently had been already aware of the deposit being made by the applicant, applied to the Court, stating that the tenant had deposited rent upon false and unfounded grounds, and that the deposit ought not to have been received, and praying that the order already passed by the Court permitting the deposit might be cancelled. The Munsif thereupon held a proceeding on the 2nd February 1887, and being of opinion that the dispute between the parties was as to the form of receipt which the tenant was entitled to receive from the zemindar, but that such a dispute could not be taken cognizance of by him, cancelled his previous order, and directed the tenant to take back the money deposited.

The tenant thereupon applied to the High Court, and obtained the rule above referred to.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Baboo Umakali Mookerji), to show cause, contended that the words "full amount of the money then due" in s. 61, and the words "an acquittance for the amount of the rent payable by the tenant" in s. 62, showed that it is only when there is no dispute as to the amount of rent due that the tenant is entitled to deposit the rent, and that it would be an injustice if the landlord were not entitled to come in and be heard in the matter; and further that the Munsif had power [168] to review his order allowing the deposit to be made—Reasut Hossein v. Hadjee Abdoolah (1).

Baboo Trailokhanath Mitter and Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty in support of the rule contended that there was no provision in the Act allowing the landlord to come in and be heard on the right to deposit.

The following judgment (omitting the facts as set out above) was delivered by Ghose, J. (Petheram, C. J., concurring):—

JUDGMENT.

Sections 61 to 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act lay down the procedure in regard to the deposit of rent by a tenant; and the question we have to determine in this case is whether, after the Court has received rent from a tenant and granted him a receipt, the zemindar is entitled to come in and ask to be heard upon the matter of the deposit, and to have the order of deposit cancelled.

Section 61 of the Act lays down the case in which a tenant may present to the Court an application for permission to deposit his rent, as also the particulars which the petition is to contain. Section 62 provides that, if it appears to the Court that the applicant is entitled to make the deposit, it shall receive the rent and grant a receipt. It would appear upon a consideration of these two sections that, if a verified application is made to the Court, and if it contains the grounds under which an application under s. 61 is authorized to be made, and if it also contains the particulars which must be mentioned, the Court is bound to receive the rent and give a receipt to the tenant. The Court is not authorized at this stage of the proceeding, or at any subsequent stage, to enter into a judicial enquiry as to whether sufficient grounds in law exist entitling the tenant to make the deposit. We then find that, under s. 63, the Court is to affix a notification in the Court-house on the receipt of the money; and if it is not paid away within the period of 15 days, a notice of the receipt of the said deposit is to be served upon the zemindar; and under s. 64 the zemindar may apply if he pleases to receive the amount deposited.

These are the only provisions which the Bengal Tenancy Act has laid down in regard to the deposit made by a tenant; and it [169] will be observed that there is no machinery whatsoever provided for the Court to enter into a judicial enquiry in connection with the matter of this deposit, nor is there any provision entitling the zemindar to come in, and to be heard, upon the subject. And it seems to us that, so far as the tenant is concerned, after the deposit is made and receipt granted, the Court is functus officio, and is not authorized to return the money to the tenant upon an application made by the zemindar.

It was strongly pressed upon us that, when in s. 61 the Legislature uses the words "the full amount of the money then due," and in s. 62 "the amount of the rent payable by the tenant," it intends that it is only in cases where there is no dispute as to the amount of rent of the holding that the tenant is entitled to deposit the rent, and the

(1) 2 C. 131=3 I. A. 221.
Court is authorized to receive such deposit; and that the receipt granted by the Court operating as an acquittance as against the landlord for the amount of the rent payable and deposited by the tenant, it would be an apparent injustice to the zemindar, if he was not entitled to come in, and to be heard, upon the matter. But it seems to us that this contention cannot be maintained. The words "the full amount of the money then due" as they occur in s. 61 do not, as we read them, mean anything more than the words "what he shall consider the full amount of rent due from him at the date of the tender to zemindar" as they occur in s. 46 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, which has now been repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. The provisions entitling a tenant to deposit his rent in Court were introduced for the first time in the year 1862 (Bengal Act VI of 1862), with a view to protect tenants from harassment by zemindars, and to save them from costs, interest, and damages being awarded against them in a suit by the zemindar for rent; and it appears to us that the words in s. 61 and s. 62 of the Bengal Tenancy Act referred to above have no relation whatsoever to the amount of rent justly due or justly payable, but only to such rent as the tenant at the time of the deposit considers to be the rent due and payable. It is entirely at the option of the zemindar either to receive the rent deposited or not just as he pleases. He may, if he objects to the amount of rent payable by the tenant for his holding, bring a suit under s. 158 of the Act to have that matter determined, or he may bring a suit for the recovery of the whole of the arrear of rent due to him up to the date of deposit within six months from the date of the service of notice upon him, disregarding altogether the deposit made by the tenant; and if in that suit it be proved that the tenant had, without reasonable or probable cause, neglected or refused to pay the amount of rent due to the zemindar, the Court might award him damages and costs in addition to the rent. But if, on the other hand, it appears that the suit of the zemindar was without reasonable or probable cause, the Court might award the tenant damages as against the landlord (see s. 63 and sch. III, Part I, art. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act).

Upon these considerations it seems to us clear that when a deposit is made by a tenant and the Court grants him a receipt the zemindar cannot in any way be prejudiced, and that the tenant makes such a deposit at his own risk.

A question was raised before us as to whether the Munsif was authorized to entertain an application for review of his previous order, and Mr. Woodroff relied strongly upon the case of Reasut Hossein v. Hadjee Abdoolah (1). But in the view that we take of this matter, the question is not one of review, but whether the Munsif, after the deposit was made and receipt granted, had jurisdiction to entertain the application by the zemindar. Regarding it, however, as a question of review, it seems to us that it is only where a party is affected and bound by the order reviewed against, and when he has a right to be heard in the matter, that he can apply for review, but not otherwise; and in this view the case of Reasut Hossein v. Hadjee Abdoolah has no application whatsoever.

For these reasons we think that this rule must be made absolute, and the order of the Munsif of the 2nd February 1887, set aside.

In execution of that decree C was arrested on the 28th January, and upon his being brought before the Court he expressed his intention of applying to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure, and he was thereupon released upon furnishing security under the provisions of s. 336 of the Code. S thereupon applied for execution of the decree against K.

Held, that K was released from his obligation under the bond executed by him when C filed his petition under s. 344 to be declared an insolvent.

This was a reference by the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Dacca under the provisions of s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the facts which gave rise to it were as follows:—

On the 16th January 1886, the plaintiff obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court against the defendant Christophoridi for Rs. 550-5-9, and in execution of that decree the defendant was arrested and brought before the Court on the 28th January. The defendant thereupon expressed his intention of applying to be declared an insolvent under the provisions of Chapter XX of the Civil Procedure Code, and upon his furnishing security that he would appear when called upon, and that he would so apply to be declared an insolvent, he was released from custody under the provisions of s. 336 of the Code.

[172] Mr. E. C. Kemp stood surety for the defendant, and a bond was taken from him in the vernacular, of which the following is a translation:—

"I, E. C. Kemp, at present residing at Faridabad Mill Barracks, Thanna Sudder, do hereby execute this bail bond. Mr. Christophoridi, judgment-debtor in the said case, has been brought under arrest, so I, duly standing as security on his behalf, do execute this bail bond that I shall produce him at any time whenever the Court will direct me to do so; that if I fail to produce him, then I shall pay the whole of the amount of this decree. On default I will have no objection to the amount being realized from my immovable and movable property or my person; so I do stand security for his applying to be declared insolvent."

K. CHANDRA SHAHA v. C. CHRISTOPHORID¥ 15 Cal. 173

On the 19th February 1886, the defendant filed his petition to be declared an insolvent before the District Judge under s. 344 of the Code, and on the 13th March 1886, a copy of the petition was forwarded by the District Judge at the request of the defendant to the Small Cause Court.

On the 14th May 1886, the petition of the defendant to be declared an insolvent was dismissed by the District Judge owing to his non-appearance.

On the 2nd December 1886, the plaintiffs (decrees-holders) applied for execution of their decree, and asked the Court to call upon the surety to produce the judgment-debtor, and on his failing to do so to order that the decree should be executed against him, and notice was thereupon issued to the surety to produce the judgment-debtor on the 7th March 1887. On that day the surety appeared, and contended that, inasmuch as the judgment-debtor had filed his petition of insolvency within the time prescribed by s. 336, he was no longer liable under the bond. The Court, however, refused to accept that contention, and thereupon the surety applied for and obtained six months' time within which to produce the judgment-debtor. On the 7th September 1887, the surety again appeared, and expressed his inability to produce the judgment-debtor, who had left Dacca, and again contended he was not liable.

[173] The Judge of the Small Cause Court, however, was of opinion that the surety was not released from his obligation under the bond simply on the judgment-debtor filing his petition to be declared an insolvent within one month, but that his liability continued so long as he was not discharged by the Court, or so long as the decree was capable of execution against the judgment-debtor, and that the security might be realized in the manner provided by s. 253 of the Code. As, however, he considered the question was not altogether free from doubt, he, at the request of the surety, referred the question to the High Court, and directed execution to be stayed pending its decision.

Mr. Bonnau and Mr. Linton appeared at the hearing of the reference for the surety, Mr. Kemp.

No one appeared on behalf of the judgment-creditors.

Mr. Bonnau contended that the surety, Mr. Kemp, was entitled to be discharged from his bond, inasmuch as the judgment-debtor had complied with the provisions of s. 336 of the Civil Procedure Code. [Norris, J.—Is there not a recent decision under this section?] The case of Lalji Sahoy v. Odoya Sunderi Mitra (1). But in that case the judgment-debtor instead of applying under s. 344 to be declared an insolvent applied to have the decree which had been obtained against him ex parte set aside. This application having been refused, and the application for execution of the decree having subsequently been struck off, the Court held that the surety's liability ceased when the proceedings taken in execution of the decree, wherein the security was furnished, came to an end.

In the present case, however, the judgment-debtor did apply under s. 344 of the Civil Procedure Code to be declared an insolvent within one month, the period prescribed by s. 336; the surety, therefore, is entitled to his discharge. It is only in the event of the judgment-debtor failing so to apply that the Court may under s. 336 of the Code either direct the security to be realized or commit the surety to jail in execution of the decree.

(1) 14 C. 757.
[174] The opinion of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.,) was as follows:—

OPINION.

We are of opinion that the surety, Mr. Kemp, was released from his obligation under the bond executed by him when the judgment-debtor filed his application under s. 344 to be declared an insolvent.

CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Small Cause Court, Mofussil—Jurisdiction of—Arrears of rent of homestead or bustoo land, Suit for—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887), sch. II, cls. 7 and 8.

A Mofussil Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for arrears of rent of homestead or bustoo land under the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887).

This was a suit instituted in the Court of Small Causes, Jessore, for the recovery of arrears of rent for the years 1291 to 1293 due in respect of a plot of homestead or bustoo land held by the defendant under the plaintiff. The suit was instituted after the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887) came into force, and the Judge of the Small Cause Court held that, having regard to the provisions of that Act, he had no jurisdiction to try the suit, and directed that the plaint be returned for presentation in the proper Court; but as the plaintiff requested him to refer the question to the High Court as to whether he had not jurisdiction, he made the present reference.

In his order of reference the Judge gave the following reasons for arriving at the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction:

"Now s. 6 of the old Act XI of 1865 enacted that 'suits for rent' where the claim does not exceed Rs. 500 were cognizable by the Small Cause Court. The words 'for rent' in that section did not include suits for rent which were cognizable by a Revenue Court under Act X of 1859 or suits for rent which were transferred from the Revenue Courts to the Civil Courts by Bengal Act VIII [175] of 1869 which repealed Act X of 1859, as will be apparent from the proviso to cl. 4 of the said section."

"By Bengal Act VIII of 1869 suits for rent with respect to agricultural or horticultural lands, putni lands, ijara lands, &c., were cognizable by the Civil Courts."

"Hence by s. 6 of Act XI of 1865 it was held that a Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to try only such suits 'for rent' which was claimed either for houses or for lands other than the lands specified above which came within the scope of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. It was therefore held that a suit for rent of land where the principal subject of the entire occupation is bustoo, the residue, if any, being merely subordinate, would lie in the Small Cause Court, but that it would not lie where the principal subject of the entire occupation is agricultural land and the buildings are mere accessories. See Chundessuree v. Gheenah Pandey (1); Gokhul Chand Chatterjee v. Massahroo Kandoo (2); Pearoo Bewah v. Nokoor Kurmokar (3); and Moti Chand v. Luchmun Bhoorja (4). It was also held that even a suit for use of land would lie in the Small Cause Court. Woomapersad Shaw v. Shumsher Sirdar Mehter (5); Brice v. Toogood (6); Bachoo Chowbey v. Ghoorlait (7). It is therefore clear from the above rulings that under Act XI of 1865 a Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit for arrears of rent of bustoo or homestead land.

"Section 15 of the said new Act declares that 'a Court of Small Causes shall not take cognizance of the suits specified in the second schedule as suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes,' and that, 'subject to the exceptions specified in that schedule and to the provisions of any enactment for the time being in force, all suits of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed Rs. 500 shall be cognizable by a Small Cause Court.' Now cl. 8 of the second schedule to that Act [176] has excepted suits for recovery of rent other than house-rent from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. It therefore seems to me that a suit for house-rent and not for land-rent is now cognizable by the Small Cause Court under the new Act. The word 'house-rent,' as far as I understand, means rent payable for houses and not payable for land occupied by houses. If the Legislature had meant house-rent to include rent for houses as well for lands occupied by houses, it would have distinctly enacted to that effect.

"It may be urged that the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court to try suits for rent of homestead lands has been conferred by the case law, and that hence by s. 2 of the new Act IX of 1887 a Small Cause Court has still jurisdiction to entertain such suits. But such case law has been considered at the time of the passing of the new Act. Section 2 of the Act has therefore nothing to do with it.

"I think, therefore, that the suits for rent of holdings held for dwelling purposes are no longer triable by the Small Cause Courts, but, by the regular Civil Courts under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1885 enacted in substitution for Ben. Act VIII of 1869.

"It may be said that the expression 'house-rent' in Act IX of 1887, cl. 8, sch. II, may mean rent for homesteads. Now, though s. 182 of the Tenancy Act does not settle the jurisdiction of a Court to try suits for rent of a ryot's homestead, I think that when that section is read with s. 144 of the Tenancy Act, suits for rent of ryots' homesteads may now be said to be cognizable by the regular civil Courts.

"Again, if cl. 4, s. 167 of the Tenancy Act be read along with cl. (c), s. 160 of that Act, it will appear that the purchaser of the homestead holding can enhance the rent of that holding under the provisions of the Tenancy Act. Further, cl. 7 of sch. II of Act IX of 1887 also gives jurisdiction to the ordinary Civil Courts to hear such suits. Now it would be an anomaly that a suit for enhancement of rent of homestead lands will lie in the ordinary civil Courts, whereas a suit for rent of homestead lands will not lie there. It is to avoid this anomaly, I think, that the Legislature has enacted in cl. 8 of sch. II of [177] Act IX of 1887 that suits for house-rent only, and not for land rent, will lie in the Small Cause Court.

I therefore think that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit."

No one appeared on the reference.

OPINION.

We are of opinion that a suit for the rent of homestead or bustoo land is not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes under the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act IX of 1887. Looking at ss. 7 and 8 of the second schedule to the Act, we think it was the intention of the Legislature to limit the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts with reference to claims for rent to cases in which the rent is claimed in respect of houses the property of the person seeking to recover the rent.

Kishori Mohun Sett (Decree-holder) v. Gul Mohamed Shaha (Judgment-debtor).* [2nd December, 1887.]

Execution of decree—Practice—Execution Proceedings—Power of District Judge to transfer execution proceedings to another Court—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 25, 647.

A District Judge has no power to transfer execution proceedings to a Subordinate Court.

This was an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Dinagepore reversing the order of the Munsif of that district, and holding that the latter officer had no jurisdiction to entertain certain execution proceedings.

[178] The suit was originally instituted in the Munsif’s Court, but was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge by whom the decree was passed. The judgment-creditor then applied for execution to the Subordinate Judge, and subsequently an order was made by the District Judge transferring the execution proceedings to the file of the Munsif. In the Court of the latter the judgment-debtor took the objection that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain these proceedings, but the Munsif held that, as the order for the transfer had been made by the District Judge, the objection could not be sustained, and he accordingly overruled it. The judgment-debtor thereupon appealed to the District Judge, who held that s. 647 of the Civil Procedure Code did not authorize the transfer of execution proceedings by a District Judge, as he considered that s. 25 of the Code mentioned suits only, and s. 228 provided the method for execution of decrees by other Courts.

The District Judge was referred to the case of Balaji Ranchoddas (1), but as he stated there were other decisions to a contrary effect, he declined to follow that ruling. He accordingly decreed the appeal and reversed the Munsif’s order.

The judgment-creditor now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Gopal Chunder Ghosal, for the appellant.
Baboo Josoda Nundun Poramanick, for the respondent.

The following cases were cited at the hearing of the appeal:—

In the matter of Balaji Ranchoddas (1); Gaya Parshad v. Bhup Singh (2); Mungul Pershad Dichtit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (3); Abdool Hye v. Macrae (4); Kedar Nath Mahata v. Bungshee Dhur Roy (5); Hamidoo-deen v. Bhadace Sahoo (6).

The judgment of the High Court (NORRIS and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case the plaintiff sought to recover a sum of money and brought his suit in the Munsif’s Court. By an order of the District Judge the suit was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. It was tried by that officer, and a decree [179] was made in favour of the plaintiff. The decree-holder subsequently applied for execution of his decree in the Subordinate Judge’s Court. By an order of the District Judge the execution proceedings were transferred to the file of the Munsif. The judgment-debtor objected to this order, but the Munsif decided against him, holding that the plea of jurisdiction could not stand. Upon appeal the District Judge held that the objection of the judgment-debtor on the question of jurisdiction was a good one. The District Judge’s attention was called to the case of Balaji Ranchoddas (1), which has been cited before us, and with reference to that case he observes that there are contradictory rulings.

We have to observe that this point has been raised several times in this Court, and it has been constantly held that there is no power to transfer execution proceedings, that the power is only to transfer a suit, and not to make a transfer of a suit after the suit has once been commenced.

Our attention has been called by the learned pleader for the appellant to a decision of the Allahabad High Court, which is certainly in his favour. If this were a point of law, having regard to the conflicting decisions, we should feel it our duty to refer it to a Full Bench; but it is a pure matter of practice, and no inconvenience, as far as we can see, will arise from our continuing to follow the course adopted by the decisions of this Court.

We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

B obtained an ex parte decree for arrears of rent against S under Act X of 1859, and in execution of that decree brought the tenure to sale. At the [189] sale the tenure was purchased by N. S then brought a suit against B and N to set aside the sale on the ground that the rent decree and all execution proceedings taken thereunder were fraudulent, and alleging that B was the actual purchaser in the name of N.

An objection was taken that the suit would not lie, and that the questions in the suit were such as could have been determined, and were determined, by the Court executing the decree.

Held, that neither s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, nor the corresponding s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, has any application to proceedings in execution of a decree under Act X of 1859, and that the suit, being one to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, was maintainable.

The plaintiff in this case sued to set aside a sale of a tenure, the sale having taken place in execution of a decree passed under Act X of 1859 for arrears of rent of the tenure. The decree was ex parte, and the plaintiff alleged that he was unaware of the suit, no summons having been served on him, and that in addition there had been irregularities in the execution proceedings which vitiated them. He did not ask to have the decree of the Revenue Court set aside, but he imputed fraud, to the principal defendant, who was the plaintiff in the rent suit. Subsequently to the institution of the suit the purchaser at the sale was added as a party defendant, the plaintiff alleging that he was a mere benamidar for the principal defendant. The defendants, amongst other objections, denied that there had been any fraud, and contended that the Munsif’s Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale, inasmuch as it had taken place in execution of a decree of the Revenue Court.

The Munsif held that he had jurisdiction to set aside the sale if there was fraud, and finding that there had been such fraud set aside the sale without in any way touching the decree, merely finding that there were irregularities in the execution proceedings.

On appeal the District Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif, and in his judgment gave the following reasons for so doing:—

"On appeal it is argued first of all that the Munsif had no power to set aside the sale, and the case of Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (1) is quoted. This, it seems to me, settles the matter. The Munsif has not touched the Revenue [181] Court’s decree, and the purchaser in execution holds under a certificate of sale, which sale took place while the decree was subsisting. The question of the irregularities in the sale is one for the Court executing the decree, which I observe did decide on the point of execution irregularity, and the execution proceedings of the Civil Procedure Code are applicable in Act X cases [Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee (1)]. I think, therefore, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit, and I reverse his decision and decree this appeal. I do not enter into the merits of the case, but decide it on the point of law."

The plaintiff accordingly now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Nilmadhub Bose, for the appellant.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.) was as follows:

The facts of this case are shortly these: The plaintiff held a certain tenure under Busirunnissa Bibi, the principal defendant in this suit. Busirunnissa recovered an ex parte decree for arrears of rent against the plaintiff under Act X of 1859, and, in execution of that decree, brought the tenure to sale, and at the sale, which took place on the 20th December 1884, the tenure was purchased by one Nil Mahomed, the second defendant.

The plaintiff has brought the present suit to set aside the above sale upon the ground that the rent decree, as also the proceedings taken by Busirunnissa in execution thereof, were all fraudulent, and that she herself purchased the property ostensibly in the name of Nil Mahomed.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that the plaintiff had no notice of the suit in which the decree was obtained, and that the sale in execution thereof was fraudulent; and it accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree.

On appeal, the learned Judge of the District Court has reversed the judgment of the Court of first instance, and dismissed [182] the suit, upon the ground that, in accordance with the law laid down by a Divisional Bench of this Court in Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (2), the suit does not lie, and that the question of irregularities in the sale is one for the Court executing the decree." He also holds that "the execution provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are applicable in Act X cases," and quotes the decision of the Privy Council in Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee (1) in support of his view.

The learned vakeel who appeared before us for the appellant questioned the correctness of the ruling in Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (2), and citing some other rulings, as bearing upon the question, contended that, the sale being impugned upon the ground of fraud and not bare irregularities, the suit was well maintainable.

In the view we take of the matter before us, it is not necessary to express any opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of the ruling in question, for it seems to us that it has no application to the circumstances of this case. The sale which was sought to be questioned in that case was one under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, where, in s. 34, it was provided that suits under that Act, and all proceedings therein, were to be regulated by the Civil Procedure Code. Now, one of the sections of the

(1) 9 C. 295=12 C.L.R. 361.
(2) 11 C. 376.
Civil Procedure Code which may be taken to apply to proceedings in execution of a decree under Act VIII of 1869 is s. 244; and the learned Judges who decided the above case held, as we understand their judgment, that the purchaser at the sale being the decree-holder, and the question raised being one relating to the execution of the decree, and between parties to the suit in which the decree was obtained, no separate suit would lie, by reason of the provisions of s. 244, to set aside the sale, notwithstanding that the sale was impugned upon the ground of fraud. Now the sale with which we are concerned took place under Act X of 1859, wherein, it will be observed, there was no such provision as in s. 34 of Act VIII of 1869. It follows, therefore, that s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, or the corresponding s. 11 in Act XXIII of 1861, can have no application [183] to the proceedings in execution of a decree under Act X of 1859. [See Hur Dyal Mundul v. Tirthanund Thakoor (1)].

The learned Judge however has relied upon a ruling of the Privy Council referred to above; but upon an examination of that case it will appear that all that the Judicial Committee held was that decrees under Act X of 1859 passed by Revenue Authorities could be transferred for execution to a Civil Court exercising jurisdiction in another district; and that a Rent Court established by Act X of 1859 was a Civil Court falling within s. 284 of Act VIII of 1859. We do not think that this ruling establishes the broad proposition which the Judge thinks it lays down, that "the execution provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are applicable in Act X cases."

There being, therefore, no provision in Act X of 1859 which makes s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to the execution proceedings taken under that Act, the only question for our determination is, whether a suit lies in the Civil Court for the purpose of setting aside the sale upon the ground of fraud. Upon this question we feel no hesitation in holding that it does lie. [See Nilmoney Bonick v. Poddoo Lochun Chuckerbutty (2); Umbica Churn Chuckerbutty v. Dwarka Nath Ghose (3); Nundo Lall Doss v. Delawur Ali (4); Hur Dyal Mundul v. Tirthanund Thakoor (1); Ishan Chunder Bandopadhya v. Indro Narain Ghossami (5); Ujolla Dasi v. Dhiraj Mahatab Chand (6)].

Nor do we think that the fact relied upon by the Judge in one portion of his judgment, that the Revenue Court decided against the plaintiff "on the point of execution irregularity," is a bar to a separate suit, when such suit is based not upon bare irregularity in the sale proceedings, but upon fraud in connection with the suit itself, and the sale which was brought about by the decree-holder in furtherence of that suit.

Upon all these considerations, we are of opinion that the judgment of the Court below must be reversed, and the case remanded to that Court for trial on the merits.

Costs to abide the result.

DEWANUTULLA (Plaintiff) v. KAZEM MOLLA AND OTHERS
(Defendants).* [17th November, 1887.]

Pre-emption—Perpetual Lease—Sale.

Where a co-proprietor does not part with his entire interest in land by an absolute sale, but merely grants a lease of it, even though it be a mourasi lease, the doctrine of pre-emption will not apply.

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to establish his right of pre-emption with respect to two plots of land alleged to have been sold by the defendant No. 1 to the defendant No. 2 on the strength of his being defendant No. 1’s sharik and neighbour. The defendants, amongst other defences immaterial for the purpose of this report, pleaded that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit by reason of the defendant No. 1 having merely granted a mourasi lease of the land in suit to the defendant No. 2.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff was clearly a sharik as regards one of the plots claimed, and a neighbour with regard to the other, but found no authority for holding that the giving of a mourasi lease entitled a sharik or neighbour to claim the right of pre-emption, and he dismissed the suit on the ground that there had been delay in making the talub-i-shad.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge held there was no such delay, but found that the property in respect of which the right was claimed was merely a tenant’s holding; that neither the pre-emptor nor the defendant had any proprietary interest in it; and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to the right claimed. He further held that as the lands in suit had not been sold out and out, but merely sublet in perpetuity, it could not be said that there had been an entire cessation of the right of the defendant No. 1 in the property, and that on this ground also the plaintiff was not entitled to exercise his right of pre-emption.

The plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Munshi Mahomed Yusooof and Munshi Shamsul Huda, for the appellant.

Baboo Kishori Lal Sircar, for the respondents.

Munshi Mahomed Yusooof.—The nature of the transaction must be determined according to Mahomedan law. A lease under that law must be limited as to time; it cannot be transferred, and it terminates at the death of either party. In this case the milkiat or ownership in the lands has been transferred and not merely the usufruct, hence the transaction under the Mahomedan law is a bai (sale) and not an ijara (lease). The word milkiat (ownership) must be understood as it is used in the Mahomedan law. If a lease in perpetuity is not a sale, it is equivalent to a sale, and the right of pre-emption applies to such cases. The decision in Gobind Dayal v. Inayatullah (1) supports this contention. The cases of Moorooly Ram v. Huree Ram (2), and Ram Golam Singh v. Nursing Sahoy (3), do not apply, as in those cases the parties were Hindus.

(2) 25 W.R. 43.

Baboo Kishori Lal Sircar, for the respondents, was not called upon.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption under the Mahomedan law. The plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 appear to be joint propriitors of a certain mokurarri or permanent tenure; and the defendant No. 1 has created a sub-lease in perpetuity of his share; and it is in respect of that sub-lease that the plaintiff now sues to enforce his right of pre-emption.

The suit has been thrown out by the lower appellate Court on two grounds: In the first place the Subordinate Judge holds that inasmuch as the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 were only the tenants and not the actual proprietors of the land, the doctrine of pre-emption will not apply; and, secondly, that, as the defendant [186] No. 1 did not sell his entire interest in the property out and out, but simply created a lease in perpetuity, the doctrine of pre-emption is not applicable.

We have heared Munshi Mahomed Yusoof at great length in regard to what he considers the proper principles of Mahomedan law on this subject; but we are of opinion, as regards the second objection which has been referred to, that the matter is practically concluded by two decisions of this Court—one in the case of Moorooly Ram v. Huree Ram (2), and the other in the case of Ram Golam Singh v. Nursing Sahoy (3).

The learned pleader contends that these decisions are not in accordance with the strict principles of Mahomedan law, and he has further pointed out that they were both passed in cases in which the parties were Hindus. We are of opinion, however, that, as decisions of this Court, they are binding upon us in this matter; and we observe that the objection as regards the parties being Hindus was specially noticed by Mr. Justice Kemp, who remarks in his judgment that for that reason "he is certainly not disposed to extend the right beyond the strict limits of the Mahomedan law, or beyond the decisions of this Court on that matter." It is clear, therefore, that that fact did not influence the decision of the Court in those cases. Those decisions establish this proposition, that where a co-proprietor does not part with his entire interest by an absolute sale, but merely creates a lease of it, the doctrine of pre-emption will not apply. That being so, we think that the present case is concluded by authority; and it is not necessary for us to go into the other point, namely, whether the parties, that is, the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1, not being actual proprietors, but merely lessees in perpetuity, had such a milkiat in the property as would entitle either of them to claim the right of pre-emption. On this point we express no opinion.

Civil Procedure Code, ss. 244 and 258—Judgment-debtor as part-purchaser of a decree, Suit by.

H. D. and R. D. owned a 6-anna share in certain decrees. The other decreeholders subsequently sold their 10-annas share to H. S. and S. M., two of the judgment-debtors. H. D. and R. D. then proceeded to execute the decrees, and in satisfaction thereof were allowed to receive, upon giving security under s. 231 of the Code, the full 16-anna share of the decretal amount from H. S. and S. M., notwithstanding the objection of the latter on the ground of their purchase. Thereupon, H. S. and S. M. brought a suit for declaration of their right of purchase and the recovery of a 10-anna share of money in the hands of H. D. and R. D.:

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief sought for.

Held, also, that the provisions of s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code did not affect the suit, which was brought not upon the allegation that the decrees were satisfied by the plaintiffs' purchase, but, on the contrary, was founded upon the proposition that the decrees were not so satisfied.

Abdul Rahiman v. Khoja Khaki Aruth (1) referred to.

Held, further, that the claim was not within the words "relating to the execution of the decree" in s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, insomuch as it did not raise any question in respect to the furtherance of, or hindrance to, or the manner of carrying out the execution of the decrees.

[R., 2 M.L.J. 14 (15); 14 C.L.J. 489=12 Ind. Cas. 745 (749).]

HARAGOBIND Das KOIBURTO and Ramdhone Das Koiburto together with three other persons, obtained certain decrees for arrears of rent against Holodhur Shaha, Monomohini, Bonomali Shaha and Brindabun Shaha. Haragobind and Ramdhone were owners of a 6-anna share of the decrees. Holodhur and Monomohini purchased the 10-anna share of the decrees from the other decree-holders in the name of one Rashoraj, whose application under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code to be entered on the record as assignee by purchase of the 10-anna share was refused on the ground that he was a benamidar of the judgment-debtors. [188] Haragobind and Ramdhone then took out execution of the entire amount of the decrees, and in satisfaction thereof were allowed to receive, upon giving security under s. 231 of the Code, the full decretal amount from Holodhur and Monomohini, notwithstanding the objection of the latter on the ground of their purchase. Holodhur and Monomohini as principal plaintiffs, along with others (whom it is unnecessary to mention for the purposes of this report), brought a suit for declaration of their right of purchase and the recovery of a 10-anna share of the money in the hands of Haragobind and Ramdhone, who were then the principal, and other decree-holders (the vendors of the 10-anna share) being merely pro forma, defendants. a decree. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code was fatal to the suit, and reversed the order of the Munsif.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court; s. 244 was held not to apply to the case, and the suit was remanded for trial on the merits. The Subordinate Judge, who tried the case on the remand, restored the Munsif’s order and decreed the suit. The defendants appealed to the High Court; but the order of the lower Court was upheld. An application for review of judgment was then made, it was granted, and a re-hearing took place. The grounds for review were: (a) That the suit was barred under s. 244; and (b) that the plaintiffs by their so-called purchase could not, under cl. (b) of s. 232 of the Code, acquire a higher position than that of judgment-debtors, who had satisfied the decrees passed against them and some others jointly, and therefore were not entitled to realize any portion of the decretal amount in execution of the decrees like any other ordinary assignee.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Pigot, JJ.) was delivered by [189] Pigot, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, delivered on the 27th April last year, confirming a decree of the Munsif by which the sum claimed by the plaintiffs against the defendants as due to them in respect of monies realized in proceedings in execution in four several suits, viz., 22 of 1870, 37 of 1876 and 21 of 1877 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, and 1761 of 1877 in the Court of the Munsif of Brahmanbaria, had been allowed. The case is part of a dispute in which, during eight or nine years, the parties have been wandering in a wilderness of litigation arising out of questions upon the construction and effect of the sections of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the execution of decrees, and a vast mass of questions have, in the course of the multifarious proceedings that have taken place, been debated and decided. We think it unnecessary to refer to any of the questions that have arisen in the suit or in these proceedings save the question which was argued before us upon the hearing of the review. The case came before this Court (Prinsep and Agnew, JJ.) in appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, which has just been mentioned, and which decision was arrived at after a remand in June 1885, ordered by this Court. The judgment of this Court upon the appeal after remand, which was delivered on the 22nd December 1886, dismissed the appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, and on an application for review of judgment a rule, made absolute on the 2nd July, was granted, and it was upon the hearing of that application for review that the only point really left in the case was argued before this Bench by Mr. Woodroffe on one side and Mr. Evans on the other.

The defendants who appealed became owners of a 6-anna share in the decrees in the four suits I have mentioned. The plaintiffs were judgment-debtors together with other persons in those four suits which were rent suits. Upon an application for execution made on behalf of the judgment-creditors a petition was made by the person Rashoraj, whose name appears as first plaintiff in the present suit, praying that his name should be recorded as assignee of the 10-anna share in the decrees under execution. That application (there were in form [190] several, as the four execution matters were concerned: but they may be treated as one, as in effect they were) was opposed and was rejected upon the ground that Rashoraj was the benamidar of judgment-debtors under the decrees, that is to say, plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5 in the present suit. Subsequently to this benami purchase, it appears that the defendants, the present appellants, purchased or attempted to purchase at an execution sale the 10-anna share in the decrees which had been, as we have said, already purchased in Rashoraj’s name, benmai for plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5 in this suit. It is unnecessary to do more than to refer to that attempted purchase, for it has been held, and no question now arises with respect to it, that that purchase is of no avail, and passed no right to the purchasers, the benami purchase in Rashoraj’s name having long preceded the issue of the attachment which led to the sale at which the defendants, the present appellants, purchased, if they did purchase, that share in the decrees. The defendants, appellants, applied for leave to execute the decrees, and they were required to give, and did give, security under s. 231 for the protection of the rights of other persons interested in the decrees. Of that fact there is no question. The decrees were executed against all the judgment-debtors, the plaintiffs in this suit, Nos. 4 and 5, unsuccessfully seeking to restrain the execution of those decrees against them set up their position as purchasers of a 10-anna share which they had been held really to be, although in Rashoraj’s name. That contention of theirs was rejected upon the ground that no certificate of satisfaction according to the terms of s. 258 had been made. The entire amount of the decrees claimed in execution was satisfied by the present plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5, and was received by the defendants, appellants, and this suit is brought by the plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5 to recover from the defendants, appellants, the amount of the execution money which represents the 10-anna share in the decrees of which the plaintiffs undoubtedly became purchasers in the name of Rashoraj.

The position of the claim in the present suit as between these parties is therefore simply this, that the plaintiffs have paid twice over in respect of the 10-anna share of the decrees against them. [191] They have satisfied the decrees, and they have done so after having previously, as it has been found, paid the sum of Rs. 550 for the purchase of the 10-anna share. That is the plaintiffs’ position. The position of the defendants, appellants, is that, having never been legally entitled to more than a 6-anna share of the decretal amount, they have recovered the entire amount, for it is unnecessary to dwell, as we have said, upon their first contention that they had become owners of a 10-anna share under the sale to which we have referred.

Against the right of the plaintiffs to bring this suit, it is argued that the suit will not lie by reason of the provisions of s. 258, that the purchase of the 10-annas share being in truth, pro tanto, a satisfaction of the decree and not being certified as such under that section, could not be recognized for any purpose by the Court. The case of Abdul Rahiman v. Khoja Khaki Aruth (1) was dwelt upon at length by the learned counsel for the appellants. That case decides that a suit will not lie to enforce an uncertified agreement of adjustment of a decree against a judgment-debtor, the consideration for which is, that it shall operate in satisfaction of the decree. The present is not such a suit. This suit is not brought upon the footing or upon the allegation that the decrees were satisfied by the purchase in Rashoraj's name. On the contrary, it is founded upon the proposition that the decrees were not so satisfied. The plaintiffs say that in virtue of that purchase they became owners of 10 annas of the decrees on their way to execution. In the judgment delivered by Farran, J., in the Bombay case referred to, a number of cases, decided before Act XII of 1879 was passed, are discussed, the most important of which is, perhaps, the Full Bench decision of this Court in Gunamani Dasi v. Prankishori Dasi (1). The result of those cases is thus stated at p. 28: "By a consensus of opinion of all the High Courts it was therefore held that where a judgment-creditor, without certifying, had received money or property in satisfaction of a decree from his judgment-debtor, and then executed his decree, he was liable to restore the money or property so recovered in the first instance." He then a little farther on, at page 30, says: "Such was the state [192] of the law when Act XII of 1879 was passed. Applying to this enactment the principles of construction which I have referred to, I think it would be straining its language, and would be imputing to the Legislature a desire to work injustice, if it were held that it deprived the Courts of their power to give relief to a judgment-debtor who, after having paid money out of Court to his decree-holder, is compelled by the latter to pay over again under execution process. If the Legislature had intended to override that consensus of decision to which I have referred, it would, I think, have used clearer and more apt terms. The payment itself would, in that case, have been declared to be void, incapable of proof, or possibly illegal. The decision in Poromanand Khasnabish v. Khepoo Paramanick (2) is in accordance with this view. That case follows the case of Sitaram v. Mahipal (3) and Ishen Chunder Bandopadhyya v. Indro Narain Gossami, (4) but is opposed to the ruling of this Court in Patankar v. Devji (5). The ruling in the latter case cannot, I think, be supported. What the Courts are forbidden to recognize is the payment of the decree, not the fact that a certain number of rupees passed from the hands of the judgment-debtor to those of the decree-holder."

It appears to us, therefore, that the decision of the Court of Bombay cited by the appellants does not, as to the effect of s. 258, make in their favour. "The case is not an authority for the proposition which might perhaps seem to be countenanced by the headnote as it stands, that a transaction intended to operate as a satisfaction of decree, but which fails to have that operation because not certified, is void for every purpose, as if it were tainted with illegality. It goes no farther than the proposition stated by the Chief Justice at p. 12 that "no Court can recognize an uncertified adjustment as operating in satisfaction of a decree for any judicial purpose whatever." This proposition is incompletely stated in the headnote of the case in which the words "as operating in satisfaction of a decree" are omitted. The claim on the part of the plaintiffs may then be regarded in a two-fold light. They claim as persons who are owners by purchase of 10-16ths of a thing which the defendants, who have no right to it beyond a 6-16th share, have obtained

They say that defendants obtained leave, giving security under s. 231 to recover the decreetal amounts, as s. 231 describes it, for the benefit of all persons jointly interested in the decree, the Court making such order as it deemed necessary for protecting the interests of the persons not joining in the application; and they say that not merely is there an equitable foundation for their claiming the money, but that there is an express obligation incumbent upon the defendants to pay the money recovered in execution to the different persons who shall appear to be owners of the decree with the defendants. That second consideration does not seem to have been before the lower Courts; it was discussed before us. But it is in truth as much an illustration of the nature of defendants’ obligation as a fact creating it; for, whether he gave security or not, he would equally, when allowed to issue execution, being only a part owner of the decreetal amount, hold the surplus, if it came into his hands, for such persons as were really entitled to it; no doubt so far as the security creates an obligation, plaintiff could not recover in respect of it in this suit, as it is not referred to in the plaint. We think there is no doubt of the defendant’s liability; and that s. 258 does not constitute any defence to the suit.

Then it is said that, although this is not a claim made in respect of an alleged satisfaction of a decree uncertified, it is “a question arising between the parties to the suit relating to the execution of the decree.” These words “relating to the execution of the decree” are no doubt very vague and sweeping words, but the question arising here is certainly not in respect to the furtherance of, or hindrance to, or the manner of carrying out, the execution of the decree, for the foundation of the plaintiffs’ claim is the execution of the decree. It is a right, an alleged right, arising partly in consequence of the decree having been executed by the defendants, appellants, and that is all. It is at least doubtful whether, even by giving the widest possible meaning to the words “relating to the execution of the decree,” we could include the present case within them, for the question between the parties arises in consequence of defendants having taken out of Court all the decreetal monies in place of 6-16ths of them, which they did after the decrees had been satisfied by payment. We must give the terms of the section a liberal construction in order to include a claim such as this within them supposing it possible, and why should we do so? In order to enable the defendants, appellants, to keep what certainly they had no right to? Or in order to punish the plaintiffs Nos. 4 and 5 for having omitted to cause the benami purchase to be entered as satisfaction of the decree? We see no reason why we should strain the section in order to accomplish either of these results. We think that under these circumstances, the former decree of this Court dismissing the appeal should be restored, and this appeal shall stand dismissed with costs, including the costs of the review.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Pigot.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. ABDUL HOSSEIN.* [29th August, 1887.]

Police Act (V of 1861), s. 29—Power to make rules under Act V of 1861—District Superintendent of Police, Power of—A rule or regulation and a lawful order distinguished.

There is no express power given by Act V of 1861 to any officer save the Inspector-General of Police to make rules: therefore the violation of a general rule alleged to have been made by a District Superintendent of Police to the effect that constables are to be within the lines at a particular time or at roll-call is not punishable under s. 29 of the Act.

Semble.—The violation of a special order made by a District Superintendent of Police requiring the presence of an officer or of certain officers within the Police lines and issued expressly to him or each of them would [195] come within s. 29 of the Act as being not "lawful order" but a "lawful order" made by a competent authority and relating to the duties of the officer or officers.

ABDUL HOSSEIN, a police constable, was sentenced by the District Magistrate of Dinagepore to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment for disobedience of orders under s. 29 of Act V of 1861. The order alleged to have been disobeyed was to the effect that "constables are to be within the lines at 9 P.M." The Sessions Judge was of opinion that there was no satisfactory evidence to show that to be absent from the lines after 9 o'clock was against rules, and further that, in order to render the prisoner punishable under s. 29 of the Act, it would be necessary to prove that the offence fell under s. 12 of the Act. The Sessions Judge, therefore referred the case to the High Court under s. 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code with the view that the conviction and sentence should be set aside.

Baboo Ram Charan Mitter appeared in support of the conviction.

No one appeared for the prisoner.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Pigot, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is a case reported under s. 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sessions Judge of Dinagepore, who has also under that section suspended the sentence and let the petitioner out on bail.

Petitioner, a police constable, was tried summarily by the District Magistrate of Dinagepore, convicted of the offence of disobedience of orders, and sentenced under s. 29 of the Police Act V of 1861, to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge is of opinion that the conviction by the Magistrate is bad in law.

The petitioner was sent up to the Magistrate for punishment by the District Superintendent with a memo. which is attached to the record and runs as follows: "246 W. C. Abdul Hossein is again reported for absence from roll-call on the night of the 4th May, and says he went to eat at his house and fell asleep. In D. O. 385 he was fined ten days' pay for this very offence, and has been warned not to leave his lines." "His disobedience [196] of orders is wilful and a defiance of my authority. I forward his case to the Magistrate for exemplary punishment under §. 29, Act V." The prisoner was charged with disobedience to orders.

The Magistrate's decision is: It is satisfactorily proved that the accused was absent from the lines after 9 o'clock on the night in question, which is against rules." The evidence as to rules is that of the line Sub-Inspector, who says that "the orders are that constables are to be within the lines at 9 p.m." The evidence against the accused was, first, a former punishment for absence from 9 o'clock roll-call; second, that of Debiram, that accused was absent from the 12 o'clock roll-call; third, Bital proved the absentee roll-call. "I call out the names. The havildar said such and such are not present, and I wrote his name down. Eighteen constables were absent. The havildar stood the file of men there. I was in a hut with a light;" fourth, Ramlall said: "Abdul Hossein was absent from roll-call on May 4th at midnight. I was helping the havildar to take the roll-call. Bital was calling over the names. He was sitting by a door with a lantern. Bital was with me when we looked for the men who did not answer. Bital marked down the absentees after they were called out and did not answer." That is the evidence for the prosecution. Some evidence was given for the accused which the Magistrate apparently did not believe. The Sessions Judge thinks, first, that there is no satisfactory evidence that the accused was as a fact out of the lines at 12 o'clock; second, that there is no evidence that to be absent from the lines after 9 o'clock is against rules, except the statement of the line Sub-Inspector set out above; third, that there is nothing to show by whom the rule, if it exists, was made; and fourth, he thinks that no rule the violation of which is punishable under s. 29 of the Police Act can be made, save by the Inspector-General under s. 12 of the Act.

We think the first three grounds for reversing the conviction are sufficient. If the rule be that the officers must be and remain within the lines after 9 p.m., there is no evidence that the accused violated it, for there is no proof that he was searched for and was, as a fact, absent from the lines. If there be a rule that the officers must attend roll-call at midnight, or at any other hour at which the roll is called, no evidence of the existence of [197] such a rule was given. It is to be observed that it was for absence from roll-call apparently that the accused was sent up; and it was to his not having attended roll-call that the evidence was directed. We think the Sessions Judge well advised in pointing out, as he does, the distinction between a judicial and a departmental punishment. Rigorous imprisonment is no light punishment, and the law or rule, for the violation of which it is imposed, as well as the fact of such violation, ought to be clearly proved in order to warrant the infliction of it. The law requires proof before depriving the subject of his liberty, and is not satisfied by probabilities alone. Probably, or perhaps, there was a rule known to the accused requiring him to be in the lines at 9 p.m., or perhaps at the time when the roll was called, on the occasion in question. Probably or possibly be disobeyed it. It may even be the case that, if there was such a rule, it was one made by a competent authority. But there is no proof of it, or that it was notified to accused, or that, if it was, he violated it. The only fact established in the case is that he did not answer to his name at 12 o'clock roll-call; and there is not a title of evidence to show that he was bound to do so. There is no evidence properly so called of any rule whatever.
The fourth point mentioned by the Sessions Judge is of importance. He holds that, had it been proved that a rule requiring presence in the lines, or at roll-call, had been made by the District Superintendent, a violation of that rule would not have been punishable under s. 20 of the Act. There is no express power given by the Act to any officer, save the Inspector-General of Police, to make rules; he can do so under s. 12, for, amongst other purposes, "preventing abuse or neglect of duty." Such rules must be made subject to the approval of the local Government. It was argued before us that the District Superintendent has power under s. 4 which gives him the administration of the Police throughout the district, which, it is to be observed, is under the general control of the Magistrate. It is not necessary to determine the question in this case; but the matter is of such consequence that we think it right to state the inclination of our opinion, which is that a general rule of the nature suggested, but not proved in the present case, made [198] by a District Superintendent, would not come under the Act, but that probably a special order requiring the presence of an officer or of certain officers within the Police lines, issued expressly to him or each of them, would come under s. 20 as being not a "rule and regulation," but a "lawful order" made by competent authority and relating to the duties of the officer, one of which is to be at hand when required for service. A rule made under the Act, officers are bound to know and to obey. An order to bind an officer must be given to him, and to make him punishable for not carrying it out, the fact of its having been given to him must be proved. Any instance of failure to enforce discipline in the Police is much to be regretted, only the more necessary is it that regulations or individual orders be so framed and so promulgated or issued that the violation of them can be legally punished under the Act. We set aside the conviction and sentence.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Pigot.

Zahrun and others (Defendants) v. Gowri Sunkar and another (Plaintiffs).* [20th August, 1887.]

Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Suit for partition—Revenue-paying estate—Proceedings under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, s. 31, Effect of.

The jurisdiction of the Civil Court in matters of partition of a revenue-paying estate is restricted only in questions affecting the right of Government to assess and collect in its own way the public revenue.

Held, accordingly, that pendency of partition proceedings before the Collector, under s. 31 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, was no bar to a suit for a declaration that under a partial partition effected between the co-sharers a portion of land had been separately allotted to the plaintiff.

*Appeal from Order No. 50 of 1887, from an order of Baboo Trailokya Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 8th of December 1886, reversing an order of Moulvi Abdul Bari, Munsif of Patna, dated the 9th of August 1886.
Gowri Sunkar, together with another was the owner of a 1 anna 17 dams 10 cowrie share out of an undivided 16 annas share of mouzah Sershawajan. A private partition, it would seem, had been effected between all the co-sharers, whereby 30 bighas of land had been taken out of the whole mouzah and partitioned among all the shareholders in proportion to their respective shares, the remainder being left joint as before. Of the 30 bighas, 3 bighas 10 cottahs fell to the share of Gowri Sunkar and his coparcener, who sold a 12-dam out of their own share of the mouzah to Munsif. Zahrun and others. Gowri Sunkar and his coparcener were then about to build a house on a portion of the 3 bighas odd; but were opposed by Zahrun and the other purchasers, and therefore brought a suit against them for the partition of the said land by declaration of their right to separate possession of the 3 bighas under the private partition. Zahrun objected to the suit on the ground among others that, inasmuch as the mouzah was a revenue-paying one and the butvara proceedings in respect to the whole 16 annas share were already pending before the Collector, the suit was not maintainable. It appeared from a judgment of the Special Deputy Collector that he had disallowed the allegation of private partition made by Gowri Sunkar, and was taking proceedings to allot the 16 annas rateably among the co-sharers. The Munsif, relying upon this judgment and upon a consideration of Chunder Nath Nundi v. Hur Narain Deb (1); Damoodar Misser v. Senabutty Misrain (2); Ajoodhya Pershad v. Collector of Durbhunghah (3); Badri Roy v. Bhugwat Narain Dobey (4); and The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Nundun Lall (5), upheld the objection raised on behalf of the defendants and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge remanded the suit, pointing out at the same time that necessary parties may be added. He was of opinion that the suit was not one for partition of a revenue-paying estate in which the question of protection of Government revenue was involved, and the Civil Court was therefore competent "to declare whether or not the particular 3 bighas odd had been in the possession of the parties [200] in accordance with a private arrangement made by the proprietors, as representing portion only of their respective interest in the parent estate."

Against that order of the Subordinate Judge the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Mahomed Yusuff, for the appellants.

Baboo Surendra Nath Roy, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Pinsep and Pigot, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiffs, as co-sharers in an estate, asked for a declaration that, under a private partition made between themselves and the other proprietors, 3 bighas 10 cottahs were allotted to them, and they also asked for a partition of the estate by giving them an area representing their share, 1 anna 5 dams 10 cowries. A short time before the institution of this suit an application for butvara was made to the Collector by the defendants, and about the date of the institution of this suit an order was passed by the Collector under s. 31, Bengal Act VIII of 1876, declaring the estate to be under partition. The matter for decision before the lower Courts as well as before us in second appeal is simply whether the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to entertain a suit of this description at the same time that a partition of the estate is pending before the Collector. The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is restricted only in questions affecting the right of Government to assess and collect in its own way the public revenue. We observe that in Act XIX of 1873, regarding partition of estates in the North-Western Provinces, the Legislature has declared it to be necessary to limit the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts, inasmuch as it has specially enacted s. 135 so as to exclude their jurisdiction, except as expressly provided, from interference with the proceedings of the Collector in such matters of partition. There is no similar provision, that we are aware of, in respect of the Civil Courts in Bengal. Section 265 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, which is generally a re-enactment of s. 225 of the Code of 1859, evidently contemplates the existence of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to try suits for partition of estates or for the separate possession of the share of an undivided estate paying revenue to Government, but at the same time it leaves it to the Collector only to give due effect to any order passed by a decree of a Civil Court. Upon these considerations, as well as from the terms of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, it seems to us that, although the Collector may, in some respects, be able to decide on matters in dispute between co-sharers regarding their respective rights, still the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts as the final Court for the settlement of such disputes is not ousted. The primary object of the law is to carry out as far as possible the partition of a joint estate on which the proprietors have agreed, but this is only subordinate to the protection of the interests of the Government revenue. The principal object in view is to carry out an equitable partition by which the interests of the Government may be secured by the apportionment of the revenue on each portion of the original estate. The effect of s. 29 of the Butvara Act, as we understand it, is that the rights of the parties as between themselves in respect to any portion of the Civil Court will not affect the joint liability of the sharers in respect to the payment of the entire revenue assessed on the estate until the Collector has taken proceedings in accordance with that Act. The only question is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to ask the Court for an order declaring their right to separate possession of 3 bighas 10 cottahs on the ground of a private partition by agreement amongst their co-sharers, and whether they are entitled to a share amounting to 1 anna 5 dams 10 cowries in any partition which may take place. We think that there are no valid grounds for the objection taken, and we accordingly affirm the judgment of the lower appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal from Original Civil.

In the matter of the application of Soobul Chunder Law.

[Cited. 27 C. 351 (354) = 4 C.W.N. 610; F., 29 C. 428 (F.B.); R., 16 B. 91 (108); 29 B. 405=7 Bom.L.R. 488 (492); 26 M. 673 (680); 20 M. 224 (226).]

One Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry having died intestate on the 5th November 1886, a suit for administration of his estate was instituted against his widow by one Soobul Chunder Law on the 21st December 1886; and in such suit on the 20th January 1887 the usual administration decree was made.

Previous to this decree, one Russick Lall, on the 4th June 1886, had instituted a suit, being suit No. 228 of 1886, against Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry, and had obtained against him a money decree on the 22nd July 1886. On the 18th December 1886, three days previous to the date of the institution of the administration suit by Soobul Chunder Law, Russick Lall applied for the attachment of certain properties belonging to the estate of Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry; and on the 8th and 12th January 1887, certain properties belonging to such estate were duly attached.

Subsequently to these events, one Matilinginy Dabee instituted a suit, being suit No. 124 of 1887, against Sorunginey Dassee, the widow, heiress and representative of Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry, which suit, had not, however, at the time of the application next mentioned, proceeded to a decree.

On these facts, Soobul Chunder applied in the administration suit, on notice, for an order staying all proceedings already taken by Russick Lall and Matilinginy Dabee against the estate of Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry, and directing them to come in, should they think fit so to do, and prove their claim in the administration suit.

Mr. Hyde, for the applicant, contended that he was entitled to the order asked for, inasmuch as in India an attaching creditor was entitled to no priority over other creditors until a sale at his instance had actually taken place, and therefore the Court was bound to stay him; for in staying other creditors, some of whom had obtained, and others of whom were in a position to obtain, decrees, and refusing to stay him, it would be working an injustice and would have the effect of allowing an attaching creditor to carry away the whole proceeds, whereas under s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure every creditor who had obtained a decree was enabled to share rateably with the attaching creditor. This provision appeared for the first time in the Code of 1877, and thus made a clear distinction between the principle to be observed in this country in distributing the assets of a judgment-debtor and that obtaining in England.

The Court in this country, therefore, in administering an intestate’s estate should do so in accordance with that principle, and not refuse to interfere and stay an attaching creditor merely because it might be the practice of the Court of Chancery in England to refuse such an application, as the law to be administered here in such matters is distinct from that in England. The only authority on the point is that of Fanendrabhusan Chatterjee v. Kedar Nath Dey (1) and in the notes of judgment of Mr.
Justice Pigot however in that case it would appear that his Lordship’s attention was not drawn to the alternation in [204] the law under s. 295 of the Code, and he seems to have been entirely guided by English authorities which have now no application in this country.

Mr. Bonnerjee contra.

TREVELYAN, J.—I have taken some time to consider this application, as I thought it might be necessary to decide a question of some importance with regard to the position of an attaching creditor. It has been assumed in some cases in the Court that a creditor who attaches after judgment obtains a priority over the Official Assignee, but I am not aware that it has ever been expressly decided in this Court that a creditor who has merely attached and has not obtained an order for sale acquires any such priority.

The Allahabad High Court has held that the Official Assignee’s title has priority over an attachment after judgment; and Mr. Justice Wilson has held that an attachment after judgment does not give a creditor any interest in the property attached, and therefore does not entitle him to redeem.

I need not, I think, here enter into this question. Assuming that an attachment after judgment does not create a charge on any interest in the property, and that it might be possible, under certain circumstances in an administration suit, to restrain a creditor who has attached after judgment, I do not think that I can interfere in this case. I must follow the principle laid down by Mr. Justice Pigot in the case of Fanendrabhusan Chatterjee
v. Kedar Nath Dey (1) and decline to interfere with the action of a diligent creditor who has followed up his decree by attachment.

Mr. Hyde has pointed out to me that the effect of the administration decree is to prevent creditors taking advantage of the provisions of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is not the only matter in which s. 295 is defective. It is not for me to fill up the gaps in a Statute. If the creditor having the conduct of this suit had been diligent, he would have applied for an injunction before the attachment had been made.

The application as against the plaintiff in suit No. 228 of 1886 must be dismissed with costs. The plaintiff in suit No. 124 [205] of 1887 must be restrained, and will have liberty to claim in the administration

(1) Suit No. 720 of 1881 (unreported).
suit, and may add the costs up to this date to her claim. Costs of the applicant in this application will be costs in the administration suit.

Against so much of the order as refused the injunction against Russick Lall Mitter, Soobul Chunder Law appealed.

Mr. Pugh, Mr. Hyde and Mr. Acworth, for the appellant.
Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. O'Kineally, for the respondent.

Mr. Pugh.—Up to 1849 the Courts in England used to restrain judgment-creditors, but in Vincent v. Godson (1) the injunction was refused. The ground of the decision in Marriage v. Skiggs (2) (decision of the year 1859), was that the assets had been actually realized. Where a creditor sues for administration it usually means the estate is insolvent. The reasons for granting such injunction after an administration decree is passed are given in Largen v. Bowen (3).

[Wilson, J.—Has the Court of Chancery interfered after execution issued?] No. The matter is different out here, because in England the process of execution effected a charge on the property from the teste of the writ, whereas here no charge is created; the question must be decided here under Civil Procedure Code. In Shib Kristo Shaha Chawdhry v. Miller (4) the question is one of legal priority and not of injunction. In the case decided by Mr. Justice Pigot, Fanendrabhusan Chatterjee v. Kedar Nath Dey (5) the decree in the administration suit was after the order of sale, and therefore that case does not apply. As to the effect of an attachment see Civil Procedure Code, s. 276, Russick Lall has only rights against the goods of the intestate; therefore the difficulty felt by the Court of Chancery does not arise. Section 270 of the old Code of 1859, and s. 295 of the present Code, differ. Under s. 270 there was a statutory priority, but not so under s. 295, but on the contrary any one applying for execution is entitled to share.

[206] Mr. Bonnerjee, for the respondent.—Section 276 of the Code avoids as against an attaching creditor any alienation of the attached property made during the continuance of the attachment; the attachment creates an interest in the creditor entitling him to be paid out of the property attached in priority to all other creditors,—see Anand Chandra Pal v. Panchilal Sarma (6).

[Wilson, J.—That was a case under Act VIII of 1859. In England as soon as the writ of fi-fa is out there is an actual interest created.] None of the cases in England are decided on that ground.

[Wilson, J.—But the whole course of legislation tends that way.] The position of a judgment-creditor who has taken out a fi-fa is no way better than the position of a judgment-creditor who has taken out execution under the Civil Procedure Code. The case of Giles v. Grover (7) was in effect followed in Ex-parte William, in re Davies (8), which is decided on the ground that by the act of seizure the creditor has obtained a security out of which his debt is to be paid, and I submit this is the same under the Code. In the case of Anandalal Das v. Radhamohan Shaw (9) it has been held by Markby, J., that an attachment is good against all the world under s. 240 of Act VIII of 1859 (s. 276 of Act XIV of 1882), but the other Judges held it only benefited the attaching-creditor and those claiming under him.

I. D. C. VII—46.
PETHERAM, C.J.—Seizure by the Sheriff creates an interest subject to encumbrances; 'down to the time of the Mercantile Amendment Act seizure only affected people who came in subsequently."

WILSON, J.—From the issue of the writ the goods were bound, the seizure by the Sheriff carries it a step further, as the Sheriff acquires a special title in the goods.] A creditor here who has attached is in the same position as a creditor under a fi-fa, that is to say, he has a security out of which lie should be paid. The latest case on the subject is Fowler v. Roberts (1); see the [207] remarks made in Daniel's Chancery Practice, p. 1944, as to this point. Under s. 213 of the Code administration under the Court stands on the same principle as the distribution of an insolvent's estate. It is, however, here sought that I should, because there is an administration decree, abandon my attachment, and should wait till the property is sold under the administration decree, but I submit there is no reason why I should begin de novo. The case of Ranken v. Harwood (2) shows that the judgment-creditor acquires a right to the goods attached by virtue of writ of fieri facias from the teste of the writ, and that an injunction should not be granted.

PETHERAM, C. J.—That case goes by reason that Kirk the execution creditor had dominion over the goods.] A creditor after attachment in this country has a right at any moment to ask the Court to sell the property. Reading ss. 213 and 295 together, when a person has obtained attachment, and it has been given effect to, it would be doing violence to the sections to say he must be a stranger to the property attached because of the administration decree. Mr. Justice Pigot's judgment—Panendrabhusan Chatterjee v. Kedar Nath Dey (3) is in point. In that case there were two points raised: (1) whether a judgment in a Mofussil Court, and in which attachment had been obtained, could be restrained by this Court; and (2) whether when a creditor had attached he could be restrained by this Court? The first point was decided by saying that this Court could restrain, and the second point by saying that the creditor was not to be restrained merely because there was an administration decree.

In Vincent v. Godson (4) the creditor had not attached. Mr. Belchambers in his Civil Courts Practice, p. 118, takes the law to be that it is not the rule to restrain a diligent creditor, who has recovered judgment before an administration decree from proceeding to execution, except under special circumstances.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

PETHERAM, C. J. (WILSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ. concurring).—This appeal arises out of an application to stay proceedings in the execution of a decree of this Court, made by the plaintiff [208] in the present suit, which is a suit to administer the estate of Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry, deceased, who was the person against whom the decree, which is now sought to be executed, was obtained, and whose property has been attached under it. The facts are as follows: On the 4th June 1886, the present respondent, Russick Lall Mitter, sued Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry, on the Original Side of this Court, to recover a sum of money, and on the 22nd July 1886 obtained a final decree against him. On the 5th November

(1) 2 Giff. 227. (2) 5 Hare. 215. (3) Suit No. 720 of 1881 (unreported). (4) 3 De G. & S. 717.
1886 Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicarry died, and on the 18th December 1886 the respondent applied to attach property under his decree. On the 21st December 1886 the plaint of Soobul Chunder Law, the present appellant, was filed, praying that accounts might be taken and the estate of Prosunno Coomar Surbadhicary administered by the Court.

On the 8th and 12th January 1887 certain properties belonging to the estate of the deceased were attached under a decree pursuant to the application of the respondent, dated 18th December 1886; and on the 20th January 1887 a decree in the administration suit was made in favour of the plaintiff, the present applicant, who, thereupon, on the 5th May 1887, moved the Court to restrain the respondent from selling the attached property. The motion was rejected by Mr. Justice Trevelyan, and the present appeal is against his order of rejection. The sections of the Code which are applicable to the questions are ss. 213, 276, and 295; and before considering the English cases which have been cited, it will be well to examine those sections to ascertain whether the English authorities have any bearing on the matter, or whether the law here is so different to the law in England that they have not.

Section 213 provides that, when the estate of a deceased person is being administered by the Court, the assets shall be divided among his creditors, as if he were living and his estate was being administered under the insolvent law; and s. 295 provides that, where property has been attached under a decree, and prior to its realization other decree-holders have applied for execution against the debtor, the assets shall be divided amongst them all, including, of course, the person on whose application the property was originally attached. Nothing equivalent to this section is contained in the English law, and the doctrine of the Courts of Equity, which corresponds to some extent to s. 213, is the doctrine that a decree for administration of the estate of a deceased is a decree in favour of all creditors; and, that as all of them are included in the same decree, it would be inequitable that one should be in a better position than another under that decree, and therefore the Court divides the assets among them. But in cases in which any creditor has obtained judgment before the decree in the administration suit, the English Courts do not interfere under the equitable doctrine, because, as it would seem, he has a judgment already, and so cannot have another under the administration decree. As I said before, the law in this country rests upon the sections of the Code so far as they are applicable, and not merely upon any doctrine of equity; and it is manifest that, according to the spirit of the Code, it was intended that all debts not actually paid should rank upon the estate, as in insolvency; and, in my opinion, the only questions are, whether the attachments of the 8th and 12th January had the effect of handing over the property attached to the creditor, so as to amount to payment; or whether they created any charge on the properties entitling the respondent to be paid out of them in priority to the other creditors of the deceased.

It is scarcely necessary to do more than state the first question, as s. 295 draws a sharp distinction between attachment and realization, and clearly shows that the legislature did not intend to treat the debt as paid until the money has found its way into the hands of the creditor. The other question is one of more difficulty, and depends on the construction which should be placed on s. 276. That section avoids, as against the attaching creditor, and alienation of the property made by the debtor during the continuance of the attachment.
It is contended on behalf of the respondent, that in addition to this the attachment creates an interest in the creditor, which enables him to be paid out of the property attached in priority to all other creditors; and in support of this contention we were pressed with the Full Bench case of Anand Chandra Pal v. Panchilal Sarma (1)

In that case certain property was attached at the suit of a decree-holder; afterwards the debtor was declared insolvent and a vesting order was made. The property was then sold under the attachment, and it was held that the sale was good, the attaching-creditor having by the attachment acquired some interest in the property which was not divested by the vesting order.

We are, however, of opinion that the case has no application under the present state of the law. Section 240 of the old Code was not in the same terms, and was not limited in the same way as s. 276 of the present Code, nor did that Code contain any such provision as that in s. 295. We think, therefore, that neither the English cases nor the cases decided under the old Code are applicable to the present case, and that we must deal with the matter as one which is not governed by any authority.

As I have before remarked, s. 276 defines certain transactions which are rendered void by the attachment; but that definition does not include the claims of other creditors, and we think that as they are not included in the definition, they are excluded by it, and that the attachment does not create, in favour of the attaching-creditor, any interest in, or charge upon, the property as against other creditors.

We come then to the conclusion that, according to the spirit of the law, as contained in the Indian Codes, which we are bound to administer, the assets of the deceased which have not been realized on behalf of a particular creditor are to be divided among the general body of the creditors; that there is nothing in the Codes themselves to prevent us from giving effect to the spirit of the law, as, in our opinion, the attachment creates no charge upon the property; and that, consequently, in the exercise of his discretion, the learned Judge ought to have restrained the execution of the decree in this case. Accordingly we decree this appeal, and direct that an injunction do issue in the terms of the motion; all costs to come out of the estate.

PEARISUNDARI DASSEE v. H. C. M. CHOWDHARY

[211] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

PEARISUNDARI DASSEE (Plaintiff) v. HARI CHARAN MOZUMDAR

CHOWDHARY (Defendant).* [5th December, 1887.]

Practice—Liberty to apply—Relief after judgment—Damages—Specific performance—Review—Alternative relief.

On the 27th April 1886, a plaintiff brought a suit praying for specific performance of a contract, or in the alternative for damages; and on the 24th November 1886, obtained therein a decree for specific performance with the usual liberty to apply. On the 6th December, 1886, the plaintiff discovered that it was out of the defendant’s power to specifically perform his contract; and he, thereupon, on the 13th April 1887, applied to the Court which had granted the decree for a rehearing of the suit on the question of damages, asking that, in lieu of the decree for specific performance, a decree for damages when assessed might be entered up. Held that he was entitled to ask for such relief.

One Hari Charan Mozumdar Chowdhry was a putnidar under the Nawab of Dacca, his zemindar, of an eight-anna share (out of a one-and-three-quarter-anna share) of Kismut Doajani Deher in the district of Mymensingh at an annual jumma of Rs. 212-8; and he on the 18th February 1886, agreed to grant to one Pearisundari Dassee a durputni settlement of such property in consideration of a salami of Rs. 18,800, of which Rs. 500 was to be paid as earnest money and the balance upon the execution of the durputni pottah and kabuliat on the 5th March 1886. On the same day Rs. 500 as earnest money was paid to Hari Charan. At the date of this transaction the property was under mortgage to the firm of Nilmaidhub Radhabenode Shaw, which mortgage Hari Charan proposed to pay off with the salami to be paid to him by Pearisundari Dassee. Pearisundari therefore requested Hari Charan to procure for him from the mortgagees the necessary documents to enable her to prepare the durputni pottah and kabuliat. Hari Charan however informed Pearisundari that he could not obtain the necessary papers unless a sum of Rs. 1,500 were paid to the mortgagees, and at the request of Hari Charan, Pearisundari on the 22nd Falgon [212] paid over the sum of Rs. 1,500 to the mortgagees, such payment being taken to be made in part payment of the sum of Rs. 18,800 payable as salami, and at the same time the time for the completion of the said durputni settlement was extended for 15 days from the 22nd Falgon. Shortly after the 18th February Pearisundari discovered that Hari Charan had already disposed of in durputni to his mortgagees two parcels of the land comprised in the said property; and it was thereupon, on the 10th March 1886, arranged between Pearisundari and Hari Charan that the latter should execute in favour of the former a conveyance of his putni interest in such two parcels of land. The necessary documents were duly prepared, but Hari Charan refused to execute the contract. Thereupon Pearisundari on the 27th April 1886 instituted a suit against Hari Charan for specific performance of the said contract and agreement, or in the alternative, should it be out of the power of Hari Charan to complete, for damages.

* Original Civil Appeal No. 32 of 1886, from a decision of Mr. Justice Macpherson, dated 13th June 1887.
This suit came on for hearing; and on the 24th November 1886 an ex parte decree, directing Hari Charan to execute a durputni pottah, and a conveyance of his putni interest in the two parcels in accordance with the agreements of the 18th February 1886 and 10th March 1886, was granted; this decree further gave the usual liberty to apply. Shortly after this decree was passed and on the 6th December 1886, Pearisundari for the first time discovered that the property referred to in the decree had on the 16th November 1886, under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819, at the instance of the zemindar, been sold for arrears of the putni rent, and that at such sale the property had been purchased by one Baki Khan at the price of Rs. 625.

Under these circumstances Pearisundari on the 13th June 1887 applied to the Court on motion for rehearing of the suit on the question of damages occasioned by the default of Hari Charan, asking that in lieu of the decree for specific performance a decree for damages when assessed might be entered up.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Barrow, for the petitioner.

Mr. Hill, for Hari Charan.

[213] Mr. Bonnerjee stated that the application was not made under the review sections, inasmuch as his client was not aggrieved with the decree, but under the liberty to apply given by the decree, and that under art. 178 of the Limitation Act the application was in time.

Mr. Hill contended that the liberty to apply was reserved for the purpose only of carrying out the provisions of the decree and not for new decree upon new facts, and stated that there was no provision made by the Code for such a re-hearing, and that the application was in reality one for a review.

Mr. Justice Macpherson held that the application could not be entertained under the liberty to apply, and was of opinion that the case was not one in which a review of judgment could be granted, further holding that liberty to apply had reference to matters in furtherance of the decree made, and did not admit of a new and different decree being made; and for these reasons dismissed the application, but without costs.

Pearisundari appealed.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Barrow, for the appellant.

Mr. Bonnerjee contended that the liberty to apply reserved by the decree of the 24th November 1886, covered the application; that the High Court had full powers under the powers inherited by it from the Supreme Court to re-hear the case; and cited, as showing the practice, Fry on Specific Performance, Chapter IV, ss. 1138 to 1145 (p. 500, 2nd ed.), and Henty v. Schroder (1).

No one appeared for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., Wilson and Tottenham, JJ..) was delivered by —We think the appellant is entitled to succeed on this appeal. The facts shortly are these: The intending purchaser of certain property, who had paid a portion of his purchase-money, obtained a decree for specific performance against the vendor; but after decree it became apparent that the vendor had made it impossible for the purchaser to carry out the decree.

[214] The question now is, has the appellant any remedy. He moved the lower Court to have the matter re-heard on the new state of things, and asked to be allowed to establish his right to recover back his purchase-money. The learned Judge in the Court below refused the application, holding that the case is not one in which a review of judgment can be allowed. To me it seems that this is not a matter of review. That is a remedy to be applied for by the person against whom a decree or order has been made. It appears to me that the mass of authority collected in the work of Lord Justice Fry on Specific Performance, in the cases set out and explained in Chapter IV, ss. 1188 to 1145, establish that a decree for specific performance being not in the fullest sense a final decree, but one in a suit which is still pending, if the person against whom the decree has been made refuses to carry out, or has rendered himself incapable of carrying out that decree, the person in whose favour the decree was made may bring the facts before the Court, and ask for that alternative relief to which the circumstances of the case appear to entitle him. That doctrine in my opinion applies here. I think the learned Judge was wrong in deciding as he did, and I therefore think this case must go back to him to be heard on the merits of the application. Costs to abide the result.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

RAM CHAND DUTT and others (Plaintiffs) v. WATSON & Co. AND another (Defendants).* [15th February, 1887.]

Co-shares—Ijmali property—Cultivation of indigo by one co-sharer without consent of others—Injunction as between co-sharers—Practice of the English Courts in granting injunction, Applicability of.

W, while in possession of an entire mouzah as ijara, had, under an arrangement with the proprietors, built factories and cultivated indigo by reclaiming a quantity of waste land. On the expiration of his lease, W, who still held a portion of the mouzah in ijara from a 2-Anna co-sharer [215] continued to cultivate indigo on the khas lands as before, and, disregarding the opposition of the 14-Anna co-sharers, claimed an exclusive title to do so. The 14-Anna co-sharers thereupon brought a suit against W for ijmali possession of the khas lands and prayed, among other things, for an injunction prohibiting the defendant from sowing indigo upon the ijmali, lands without the plaintiffs' consent, and also for a general injunction to prohibit the defendant from throwing any obstacles in the way of plaintiffs holding ijmali possession of the lands. The Court below granted an injunction prohibiting the defendant from growing indigo on the khas lands without the consent of the plaintiffs:

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction; but having regard to the circumstances under which the defendant cultivated the lands, it was necessary to vary the injunction granted by the Court below by making it an injunction restraining the defendant from excluding by any means the plaintiffs from their enjoyment of the ijmali possession of the lands.

[Reversed, 18 C. 10 (P.C.).]
Ram Chand Dutt and others held a 14-anna share of pergunnah Jhatibonee, known as the zamindari of pergunnah Sildah. Watson & Co. were in possession of a portion of the mouzah under an ijara from a 2-anna co-sharer. Prior to the 14th September 1883, Watson & Co. held the whole 16-anna share in ijara, and had, under an arrangement with the proprietors, built factories and cultivated indigo by reclaiming a quantity of waste land. On the expiration of that lease on the aforesaid date, Watson & Co., under a 2-anna ijara from Ranee Durga Kumari, a co-sharer of the mouzah, continued to cultivate indigo on the khas lands as before. On the 3rd Bhadro 1290 (1883) Ram Chand Dutt, on behalf of the 14-anna co-sharers, gave notice to Watson & Co. prohibiting them to cultivate indigo in pergunnah Sildah. The notice was disregarded, and when the servants of Ram Chand Dutt went and tried to sow some of the lands, they were excluded by force, Watson & Co. claiming to exclude them as a matter of right. Ram Chand Dutt and others thereupon brought a suit against Watson & Co. for ijmali possession, and prayed, among other things, for an injunction prohibiting the defendants from sowing indigo upon the ijmali lands without the plaintiffs' consent, and also for a general injunction to prohibit the defendants from throwing any obstacles in the way of plaintiffs holding ijmali possession of the lands. The defendants among other things, contended (a) that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a 14-anna share; (b) that they [216] (the defendants) having been in possession of the whole estate by virtue of their previous ijara, and having now acquired a right to a 2-anna share of the whole zamindari by virtue of an ijara granted by Ranee Durga Kumari, no order for an injunction could issue against them prohibiting them to sow indigo in the khas lands; (c) that the lands which were sown with indigo by the defendants during the current year had for a long time been sown with indigo by the defendants in khas, and no injury had been done to the plaintiffs by the defendants sowing indigo on those lands, nor had the character of the property been changed; such danga lands did not produce paddy crops, and no valuable crops except indigo grew on them; (d) that they (the defendants) had, for a considerable length of time, been carrying on indigo plantation by constructing four factories in the zamindari with the consent of all parties and with the plaintiffs' knowledge, by incurring a large amount of expenditure for the purpose, as well as by purchasing the necessary instruments and materials, &c., at a heavy cost; and they had sown indigo in the current year by spending a large sum of money, so that, if an injunction were issued against the defendants prohibiting them to sow indigo, they were likely to suffer a heavy amount of loss. After a consideration of the following authorities—Stalkart v. Gopal Panday (1), Lloyd v. Bibee Sagra (2), L. G. Crowdie v. Bhikdharee Singh (3), Nundan Lall v. Lloyd (4), cited on behalf of the plaintiffs; and 2 Kerr on Injunction, 2nd Edition, 79; Crowdy v. Inder Roy (5); Macdonald v. Shib Dyal Singh Paurey (6); Lala Biswambhar Lal v. Rajaram (7); Sri Chand v. Nim Chand Shahu (8); Sheopershad Singh v. Leela Singh (9); Tarinee Churn Bose v. Ramjee Pal (10), cited on behalf of the defendants, the Court of first instance (the District Judge) granted an injunction to the plaintiffs prohibiting the defendants from sowing indigo upon the ijmali lands without the plaintiffs' consent. "Having given the best attention I was capable of to the circumstances of the case, and the respective positions of the parties," observed the learned Judge, "I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are entitled to the remedy which they seek. The weight of legal precedents seems to be entirely in their favour, and, although I admit that the decision may involve some hardship upon the defendants, still, as was observed in Lloyd v. Bibeet Sobra (1), this is a misfortune inseparable from a tenure of this description. There are some equities in their favour. They have gone to expense in the erection of factories, &c., but it must be presumed that they have already enjoyed a considerable profit from the indigo which they were enabled to manufacture during the term of their lease and since It is a pity that the parties have not been able to come to an amicable arrangement among themselves; but, as they have not done so, their conflicting claims must be decided by legal tests; and, in my opinion, the plaintiffs have the law (and by this I do not mean law as contrasted with equity) in their favour." The Court gave the plaintiffs a partial decree with respect to the share claimed by them of the lands.

The plaintiffs and the defendants both appealed to the High Court:

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. Das, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhury, Baboo Nilt Madhub Sen, Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar and Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghosal), for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Evans (with him Baboo Ashutosh Dhur, Baboo Bhabani Churn Dutt and Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose), for the defendants.

The Court (Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ.) delivered the following judgment on the question of injunction:—

JUDGMENT.

Wilson, J.—  The next group of questions that arise are, what remedy the plaintiffs are entitled to in this case. In order to ascertain that, it is necessary to determine one question first. Has there happened anything which amounts to an actual ouster as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, their co-sharers? It appears to us that there has. It has been contended that mere cultivation by one co-tenant is not necessarily ouster. It [218] may very well be so. But the question is whether on the facts of this case there has been an ouster. The facts are that, prior to the termination of the year 1290, Messrs. Watson were in possession, under one title or another, of the whole 16 annas of Sildah. While so in possession, they received the rents of the ryoti lands, and they enjoyed the khas lands according to their character. It is clear on the evidence that there are three classes of khas lands in this pargannah: first, a large quantity of indigo lands which were used for indigo cultivation; secondly, a large quantity of lands which were mere waste; and thirdly, a large quantity of lands which were neither cultivated with indigo nor mere waste lands, which the tenants of the jote lands paid no rent for, but which they were allowed to cultivate with sarguja and other products. Presumably, therefore, this was not the very best class of lands. That is how the khas lands were enjoyed, while the 16 annas were in the possession of Messrs. Watson. When their title to 14 annas came to an end in 1290, what did they do? They went on precisely as they did before, cultivating with indigo the same lands as before, and leaving the other khas lands just as before. They clearly were in sole possession of the whole of the indigo lands. But not only were they so, they were in exclusive possession, in the sense that the plaintiffs were absolutely excluded from them. The plaintiffs' servants went and tried to sow some of the lands, and they were excluded by force; and not only were they excluded in fact, but the defendants claimed to exclude them as a matter of right, because they set up a title in themselves to do so. They set it up in the Court below, and they insisted upon it in the grounds of appeal. They set up the case that they, as 2 anna share-holders, were entitled to cultivate the indigo lands, and to say to their co-sharers, you are not to interfere with these lands; you may, if you like, enjoy other khas lands for your shares. It follows, therefore, that on the facts of this case, there was an absolute and complete ouster by Messrs. Watson of their co-sharers from the lands as found by the Court below. It cannot be denied that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for ijmali possession of the lands which have been ascertained in the Court below. It is clear also [219] that they are entitled to compensation for exclusion. No question has been raised before us on appeal as to the principle on which compensation has been assessed. Therefore the amount awarded must simply be increased to bring it into correspondence with the 14-annas interests, which we find the plaintiffs are entitled to, instead of the amount which the Court below has given to them.

But the real question as to the remedy is, whether or not the injunction which has been granted can be sustained, or, if that injunction cannot be sustained, whether any narrower injunction ought to be granted. Each side in argument before us took rather extreme grounds. It was contended on one side that one co-sharer has an absolute right, as a general rule of law, to say to his co-sharer, "you shall not cultivate that land in any way without my consent," and to enforce that right, at least in the absence of any special circumstances, by claiming an injunction in a Court of law. It was contended on the other side that an injunction between co-sharers is a thing which either ought never to be granted, or at any rate only under very unusual circumstances. We are not prepared, as at present advised, and it is not necessary, to agree with either of these propositions.

The proposition contended for by the plaintiffs has for its support the language of some learned Judges of this Court in delivering judgment upon cases before them. We think it right only to say this, that we think it may well be open to consideration in a future case whether the expressions used in some of those cases, if taken as unqualified propositions of law and without regard to the context, are wholly correct.

With regard to the extreme proposition on the other side, it is based upon the construction which the learned counsel placed upon English decisions. But, though, of course, the principles on which English Courts administer the remedy by injunction must be taken to be those which the Legislature meant to affirm in the Specific Relief Act, still the circumstances of this country are very different from those of England; and it would be a dangerous thing to assume that, because the Courts in England have very rarely found it necessary to grant an injunction as between co-sharers in order to prevent multiplicity of suits, [220] or upon any other grounds, Courts in this country may not properly be somewhat less rigid in doing so. The circumstances of the country are different; the positions of co-sharers and persons with partial interests in land are very different from those in England; and the interests of part owners may here require protection by injunction in classes of cases in which it is not necessary to grant it in England. There is a large number of cases which go to show that the remedy by injunction may in this country be given in cases between co-sharers, when the circumstances of the cases are such as to render it necessary in order to secure those objects which, according to the law, should be secured by injunction. Particularly, since the passing of the Specific Relief Act, an injunction may properly be granted, if, on a consideration of the facts of the case, the Court thinks that that remedy is necessary in order to prevent repetition of injury and multiplicity of suits.

In the present case we are to consider what injunction ought to be granted if any. The injunction asked for was two-fold: first, an injunction against growing indigo; and, secondly, an injunction against doing anything which should exclude the plaintiffs from their right to ijmali enjoyment of their shares in the lands. The injunction which has been granted corresponds with the first part of the prayer. It is not necessary in this case to decide whether there could in any case properly be an injunction, a simple and unqualified injunction, against the growing of indigo by one co-sharer of land. It is unnecessary to consider that question, because there are circumstances in this case which would lead us to say that at any rate any such injunction ought not to be granted in this case. There is the circumstance, first, that the defendants, Messrs. Watson, are owners of indigo factories as well as occupiers of these indigo lands, and those factories have been built under arrangements with the same persons from whom the parties to this suit all derive their title, and the interests which they have in mouzah Sildah have been expressly given them for the purposes of working their factories and growing indigo. Not only is that the case, but the lands now in question appear, on the evidence, to have been waste lands and brought under cultivation by Messrs. Watson as indigo [221] lands. They have not been used in any other way. Under those circumstances we think we ought not to issue an injunction restraining them absolutely from growing indigo upon these or upon any particular lands, provided Messrs. Watson can—and it is for them to find out how they can—grow indigo without excluding the plaintiffs from their equal rights as co-sharers. But we think that a narrower injunction under the circumstances of the case ought to be granted. This is a case in which there has been a continued wrong and a wrong which the defendants have attempted to justify. A continuance of that wrong and a multiplicity of suits seem to us not only highly probable, but almost certain, if we were simply to set aside the injunction. We think the proper course will be to vary the injunction so as to make it accord with that given in so many cases in this Court, by making it an injunction restraining the defendants from excluding by any means the plaintiffs from their enjoyment of ijmali possession of the lands in suit. The injunction will be in the form* given in Lloyd v. Bibee Sogra (1).

BRINDABUN CHUNDER MUNDUL, with a view to carry on a business for the manufacture of salt, obtained an ijara lease for a period of twenty years from Jogindra Nath Mullick and another of four salt bhowires or manufacturing tracts in certain mouzahs, and executed a registered kabuliat in favour of the lessors, under [222] the terms of which rent was calculated to be paid at ten pie per maund on the outturn of the year, to be ascertained from the accounts in the Collector's office. On the death of Brindabun Mundul the lease was kept on by his descendants and other members of the family, on whose behalf, and in the capacity of kurta, Brindabun had taken the lease. A sum of Rs. 2,653 odd having become due as arrears of rent for the years 1286 and 1287 B. S., the lessors brought a suit for the amount against Umesh Chunder Mundul and the other members of the Mundul family. Jogindra Nath Mullick having since died, his widow, Adaroni Dasi, was substituted in his place in the suit. It was contended by the defendants, among other things, that the rent for 1286 B. S. was barred by time under art. 110, sch. II of the Limitation Act. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree for the whole amount of the claim, his decision on the point of limitation being as follows: "The defendant's pleader urges that this is not a suit for compensation which, according to the ordinary acceptation of the term, means unliquidated damages, whereas the rents in this case consist of ascertained sums; but the definition given in s. 73 of the Contract Act would seem to include everything which a party may recover in consequence of the loss sustained by a breach of contract (vide illustration n). In this view a suit to recover money with interest due on a registered bond has been held to be governed by art. 116, sch. II of the Limitation Act (Nobocomor Mookhopadhyaya v. Siru Mullick (1); Hussain Ali Khan v. Hafiz Ali Khan (2). Then, again, the wording of art. 116 would seem to embrace all suits for the breach of a contract in writing registered, and it cannot be denied that a lease is a contract. If the contract had not been registered, art. 110 would undoubtedly have applied; but, it being registered, the period of limitation is enlarged by the force of the last words of art. 116 under the head—Time from which period begins to run. In fact, the case of Vythilinga Pillai v. Thetchanumurti Pillai (3) has set at rest whatever

JUDGMENTS.

O'Kinealy, J.—This is a suit for rent on a registered contract, and the point for our consideration is whether the limitation is three years under art. 110 of the second schedule attached to Act XV of 1877, or whether it falls under art. 116, compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered. In the former case the period of limitation would be three years; in the latter case, six years. It has been held in this Court that a suit for a sum certain, that is, a suit as it were on a promise to pay, falls within art. 116, and that view has been followed by the Bombay High Court, and in Madras it has been specifically determined that a suit for rent on a registered document falls within art. 116. Looking, therefore, at the rulings of the different Courts, it seems now difficult to come to any other conclusion than that arrived at by the Judge below. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Ghose, J.—I concur in dismissing this appeal. I desire only to say that I have considerable doubt as to whether a suit for recovery of arrears of rent on an agreement in writing registered is a suit for compensation for breach of a contract within the meaning of art. 116 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. If I were unfettered by authority I should have been inclined to hold that it does not, but that it falls within Art. 110. Having regard, however, to the various rulings of the different High Courts as to the construction to be put upon art. 116, and as to the class of cases falling under it, I do not think I should be justified in differing from the views expressed therein.

Under the rule of Mahomedan law, if a sharer in an estate alienates his interest to a co-sharer and a stranger, the purchasing sharer by joining an outsider in the purchase forfeits his right as a sharer, and another co-sharer has the right of pre-emption. Lalla Nowbut Lall v. Lalla Jevan Lall (1) distinguished.

[Raghubardyal was the owner of certain shares in the two villages of Dehiri and Sadikpur, in the district of Gya in Behar. Sewanund, a co-sharer, conveyed under one kobala or deed of sale, and at one entire consideration, the shares which he possessed in both the villages to Saligram and Ramlochun, one taking two-thirds and the other one-third. Saligram was previously the holder of a share in Dehiri, but not in Sadikpur; and Ramlochun had no share in either. On receipt of the letter informing him of the sale, Buni Lal, the father and guardian of Raghubardyal, lost no time in asserting his son’s right of pre-emption in respect of the shares in the presence of an assembly, and thus observed the talab nawasibat of the Mahomedan law. Buni Lal then communicated the circumstance to the purchasers, and offered to pay them the actual consideration amount for the shares. On the purchasers declining to accept the offer, Buni Lal entered upon the property, and further performed the ceremony of talbhsh-had. Raghubardyal then instituted a suit through his father and [225], guardian to enforce his right of pre-emption. The defendants, purchasers, raised various objections.

The Subordinate Judge decided that, inasmuch as upon the authorities of Fakir Rawot v. Emambaksh (3), Farman Khan v. Bharat Chandra Shah (4), Sheojuttun Roy v. Anwar Ali (5), Ram Dular Misser v. Jhumack Lal Misser (6), the Mahomedan law of pre-emption applied to the Hindus of Behar, the parties to the suit were governed by that law. The Court was also satisfied that the preliminary formalities prescribed by the Mahomedan law had been complied with, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff, or his guardian, had not offered to pay the full consideration for which the defendants had purchased the shares. On appeal, the District Judge disagreed with the lower Court in its finding of fact as to the actual amount of the purchase-money, and relying

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ.), so far as is material for the purpose of this report, was as follows:—

The state of facts with which we have to deal is this. The plaintiff owns shares in two villages, Sadikpur and Dehiri; and the third defendant, Sewanund, also held a share in each of the villages. Sewanund, by a kobala, dated the 3rd March 1888, conveyed his shares in both the villages to the first defendant Saligram, and the second defendant, Ramlochun. Of these two, Saligram was previously the holder of a share in Dehiri but not in Sadikpur. [226] Ramlochun had no share in either. The property is in Gya, where the parties reside, and they are Hindus. It is not disputed that the law of pre-emption, borrowed from the Mahomedans, is by custom in force among the Hindu inhabitants of Behar.

The plaintiff brought this suit to enforce against the defendants his alleged right of pre-emption, and he claimed, by virtue of that right, to have the shares in the two villages which Sewanund had sold to Saligram and Ramlochun conveyed to him on his paying the price for which they were sold. The District Judge has found what the actual consideration money was, and has given the plaintiff a decree for pre-emption on payment of that amount. The defendants in second appeal complain of that decree, and have raised several objections on points of law.

It was contended, first, that there was no right of pre-emption at all in the case. It has been settled by the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Lalla Nowbut Lall v. Lalla Jewan Lal (1), that where one sharer in an estate sells to another, a third has no right to come in and claim pre-emption as to the whole or any part of the share so sold. And it is there explained that the object of pre-emption is 'to prevent the inconvenience which may result to families and communities from the introduction of a disagreeable stranger as a coparcener or near neighbour.' The present case is very different. A claim to pre-emption of shares in two villages is resisted on the ground that in one of the two villages one of the two vendees had already a share. Such a case is neither within the terms of the Full Bench decision nor within the principle on which it was based. On the other hand, in a long series of cases, the Sudder Court and the High Court of the North-West Provinces have held that if a sharer in an estate alienates his interest to a co-sharer and a stranger, the purchasing sharer, by joining an outsider in the purchase, forfeits his rights as a sharer, and that another co-sharer has a right of pre-emption— Sheodoyal Ram v. Bhyroo Ram (3); Guneshee Lal v. Zarant Ali (4); Manna Singh v. Ramadhin Singh (2); Bhawani Prasad v. Damru (5); Harjas v. Kanhya (6). [227] It is true, as pointed out by the District Judge, that in those cases the right of pre-emption did not arise directly from the Mahomedan law governing Mahomedans, nor, as here, from the same law applied by custom to Hindus, but from a written document, the \textit{wajib-ul-ars}. But in none of the cases was the decision rested upon the special terms of the document. In all of them it turned upon the general nature of the right of pre-emption, which was understood to be pre-emption as known in the Mahomedan law. We have no hesitation in following this series of rulings; and it must be observed that in this case there is an additional complication, for not only was one of the purchasers no sharor in the village of Dehiri, but in Sadikpur both were strangers.

It was contended, secondly, that the defendant, Saligram, is at least entitled to hold such share as, under the purchase, was assigned to him in the village of Dehiri in which he had already a share. We cannot accede to this view. It is true that the kobala declares two-thirds of what was purchased to be for Saligram, and one-third for Ramlochun. But, nevertheless, there was only one transaction, one purchase at one entire consideration of the whole interest sold in both villages. We cannot split this transaction up into several, we cannot say that any particular part of the consideration was the price of two-thirds of the share sold in Dehiri as distinguished from the other one-third in that village, and the whole interest sold in Sadikpur. And this view is supported by the decision of the Allahabad Court in \textit{Manna Singh v. Ramadhin Singh} (1) already cited.

In a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent accrued due before the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation of 1886 came into force, which \textit{[228]} was instituted on the 7th of July 1886, where it appeared that the plaintiff’s name had been previously registered, but that the Chief Commissioner had issued no notification under s. 48 of the Regulation, directing that the registers then in existence should be deemed to be registers prepared under s. 59 of the Regulation, and that the plaintiff’s name had not been registered under the last mentioned section:

Held, that s. 59 applies to rents accruing due after the Regulation came into force and not to rents already due on the date on which it came into force, and that therefore the suit was maintainable.

In this case the plaintiffs sought to recover rent for the year 1291 at the rate previously paid by the defendant, and for the year 1292 at an enhanced rate, after notice of enhancement had been duly served on the defendant.

\textit{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1058 of 1887, against the decree of J. Kelleher, Esq., Judge of Sylhet, dated the 14th of March 1887, affirming the decree of Baboo Ashutosh Banerjee, Munsif of Moulvie Bazar, dated the 27th of December 1886.

The suit was instituted in the Munsif's Court on the 7th July 1886, and one of the objections taken to the suit was that, as the plaintiffs' names had not been registered under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (Regulation I of 1886) the suit was not maintainable.

The other issues raised in the case are immaterial for the purpose of this report. The Munsif found as a fact that the plaintiffs' names had been registered in the Collectorate before that Regulation came into force, and that such registration was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 59 of the Regulation. He accordingly held that the suit was maintainable, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for the rent of the year 1291, dismissing the suit on the merits as regards the rent for 1292.

The plaintiffs preferred an appeal against that portion of the decree which dismissed their suit for the rent of 1292, and the defendants filed a cross-appeal against the decree allowing the rent for the year 1291.

The District Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal, holding that the non-registration of the names was a bar to the suit, but did not interfere with the decree of the Court below, inasmuch as the defendants' cross-appeal was filed out of time, although he stated that had there been no such objection to the latter, he would have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit altogether.

The plaintiffs now preferred this second appeal to the High Court. Baboo Taruck Nath Palit, for the appellants.

[229] Baboo Taruck Nath Sen and Baboo Anundgopal Palit, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

Norris, J.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover rent from the defendant in respect of the year 1291 at the rate previously paid by the defendant, and for the year 1292 at an enhanced rate after notice.

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree. Against that decree the defendant appealed; and the lower Appellate Court has reversed the Munsif's decision, holding that the plaintiff's claim is barred by virtue of the provisions of s. 59 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation of 1886.

It is admitted that the plaintiff was duly registered under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1880, and the question is whether, being so registered, his right has been barred by s. 59 of the Assam Regulation of 1886 to which I have referred. Section 59 says: "No person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming it as proprietor, lessor, manager, or mortgagee in possession of any estate, unless the name of the claimant has been registered under this chapter." The Regulation came into force on the 1st of July 1886, and the suit was brought on the 7th of July 1886, and all the rent which is sought to be recovered in this suit accrued due before this Regulation came into force.

It is argued by the learned Vakeel for the appellant that s. 59 has no retrospective force, that it does not apply to bar claims for rent due previous to the regulation coming into force.

Section 48 directs the Deputy Commissioner to keep certain registers; and s. 49 says that, until registers are prepared for any tract under s. 48, the Chief Commissioner may direct that any registers kept by, or under the control of, the Deputy Commissioner at the commencement of this Regulation, shall be deemed to be registers prepared under that section. Section 50 makes it obligatory upon certain persons to apply within six months for registration. Section 51 enables persons already in possession to apply for registration. So that the only section dealing with persons already registered is s. 49, which, as I have pointed out, enables the Chief Commissioner to direct that any registers already in existence at the commencement of the Regulation shall be deemed to be registers under s. 48. No notification has been published by the Chief Commissioner of Assam under s. 49, directing that registers previously in existence shall be deemed to be registers prepared under s. 48. So that, unless we can see our way to holding that s. 59 does not apply to rent due before the Regulation of 1886 came into force, or else to holding that "registered under this chapter" in s. 59 means registration under this chapter where the chapter has made it compulsory—unless we can hold one of these two things, the plaintiffs' claim to this rent is hopelessly barred.

It is to be noted that there is no provision in this regulation similar to the provision in s. 20 of Bengal Act VII of 1876, which repealed, as far as Bengal was concerned, ss. 1 to 18 of Regulation VIII of 1800. If there had been such a provision, this matter would have been free from all doubt; but as matters stand one has to ask oneself the question, was it the intention of the Legislature to confiscate this rent? Did the Legislature intend that what was due and legally recoverable, as pointed out by my colleague, on the 30th of June 1886, should be hopelessly barred on the 1st of July 1886; and barred because the Legislature has taken no pains to introduce a saving clause equivalent to the provisions of s. 20 of Bengal Act VII of 1876, except so far as s. 49 enables the Chief Commissioner to do an act which would have a similar effect; or because the Chief Commissioner has not chosen to avail himself of the powers conferred upon him. We think that the proper construction to be put on s. 59 is to hold that it applies to rent becoming due subsequently to the Regulation coming into force.

That being our view of the section, we set aside the decree of the Lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to the Judge that he may investigate it on the merits.

The appellant before us must have his costs in both the appellate Courts, that is, the costs already incurred by him.

In certain rent suits, the amount claimed being under Rs. 100, the question was raised as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to the whole 16 annas of the rent or only to a 10 annas share thereof. Upon this point the first Court gave the plaintiff decrees for the full amount claimed, holding that the question was res judicata. Upon appeal the District Judge held that the question was not res judicata, and remanded the suits for trial on the merits. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Held, that having regard to the provisions of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act no appeal lay, as the question was not one relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, nor was it "a question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant," these words in the section meaning "the total amount of rent annually payable in respect of a holding and not the amount of rent which may be payable to any particular co-sharer in the property."

These were analogous suits for recovery of arrears of rent for the years 1289 to 1291, and for the first two quarters of 1292. The defendants contended that the claim for 1289 to 1291 was barred by limitation under s. 31 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, inasmuch as the suits were not brought within six months from the dates of the service of notices of the deposit of rent, and that the claim for 1292 was premature, and could not therefore be maintained, as no rent was due till the expiry of that year.

The suits were instituted on the 28th November, 1885, the amount claimed in each suit being under Rs. 100, and upon the merits the defendants alleged that the plaintiff was only entitled to a 10 annas' share of the rent and not the whole 16 annas claimed.

The Munsif decreed all the suits, holding that the question as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to the whole of the rent [232] claimed or only to a 10 annas' share thereof was res judicata, as the same question had been raised and decided in previous suits between the same parties.

The findings on the other issues raised in the case are immaterial for the purpose of this report.

Against that decree the defendants appealed, and upon all other questions, except that of the share of the rent to which the plaintiff was entitled, the District Judge confirmed the finding of the lower Court; but upon the latter point he considered that inasmuch as the decrees by which it was decided that the plaintiff was entitled to recover 16 annas of the rent from the defendants, and not merely 10 annas, had been set aside by the High Court, there was no longer any judgment in existence which operated to make the point res judicata between the parties, and he accordingly remanded the cases to the Munsif to record evidence and try that question.

Against that order of remand the plaintiff now appealed to the High Court, and at the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was taken—that, having regard to the provisions of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no appeal lay to the High Court from that order.

Dr. Troyluckho Nath Mitter, for the appellant.

Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, and Baboo Nogendro Nath Chatterjee, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

These are appeals against four orders of the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, remanding the cases to the Court of first instance to record evidence, and to decide, as a fact, whether the plaintiff is entitled to collect a 10 annas' or a 16 annas' share of the rent.
A preliminary objection has been taken that in these cases a second appeal is barred by the provisions of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the order in question having been made by the District Judge, and the amount claimed in the suit not exceeding Rs. 100.

It is contended that the order of remand has not strictly [233] decided any question at all. But it appears to us virtually it does decide a question. The first Court had held that the question whether the plaintiffs ought to recover 16 annas of the rent had been decided in their favour by a previous decision of the Subordinate Judge. The District Judge, however, has held that that decision was set aside by this Court, and that therefore the matter was not res judicata. But it appears to us that this question is not "a question relating to title to land, or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto;" nor is it "a question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant." We understand these words to mean the total amount of rent annually payable in respect of a jumma or holding, and not the amount of rent which may be payable to any particular co-sharer in the property. That being so, we are of opinion that there is no second appeal in these cases.

We accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 13—Custom—Admissibility in evidence of judgments not "inter partes."

In a suit for rent the amount of the land held by the defendant was questioned, and it was contended that the land must be measured with a hath of 21½ inches and not one of 18 inches, as claimed by the plaintiff zemindar. Certain decrees obtained by the zemindar against other tenants in the same pargunnah in suits in which 18 inches had been taken as the hath were tendered in evidence in support of the plaintiff's contention that the customary hath in the pargunnah was one of 18 inches.

Held, that such decrees were admissible in evidence under the provisions of s. 13 of the Evidence Act, as they furnished evidence of particular instances in which a custom was claimed.

[234] The suits which gave rise to these appeals were for recovery of rent on account of the year 1289 at enhanced rates. Originally ten issues were framed by the Munsif, who first proceeded to decide some five issues framed on objections in bar taken to the suits, and having found them in favour of the plaintiffs fixed the trial of the remaining issues on the merits for a subsequent day.

* Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 1151 and 1287 of 1887 against the decrees of Baboo Dwarka Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Rungpore, dated the 25th of March, 1887, modifying the decrees of Baboo Krishna Dhone Chowdhry, Munsif of Gaibandha, dated the 27th of May 1885.
One of the latter issues was the following: "What is the length of the cubit current in the pergunnah where the disputed land is situate, and what quantity of land is, according to that measurement, held by the defendants, and of what description?"

The plaintiffs alleged that 18 inches constituted the cubit or hath by which the measurement of the land should be made, while the defendants contended that the cubit prevalent in the pergunnah was equal to 21\(\frac{1}{2}\) inches.

Upon this question the Munsif held that the defendants had failed to prove their assertion, and that, therefore, 18 inches must be considered to make up the cubit, that being the standard used by the Government. At the hearing of the suits the proceedings in 21 rent suits instituted against other tenants in the same pergunnah in which the cubit was taken at 18 inches were put in evidence in support of the plaintiff's allegation, and the Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree, taking 18 inches as the length of the cubit for ascertaining the amount of the land.

The defendants thereupon appealed, and upon this point the Subordinate Judge disagreed with the finding of the Court below, and gave the plaintiffs a decree for rent of the number of bighas held by the defendants measured with a cubit of 21\(\frac{1}{2}\) inches.

The plaintiffs thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court and the appeal came on to be heard before a Bench consisting of Prinsep and Agnew, JJ., who delivered the following judgment, remanding the cases:

"The Subordinate Judge, in dealing with the question as to the length of the pergunnah hath, has stated that the plaintiff has not adduced any evidence on the point, though evidence of a satisfactory nature must be in his possession. As shown to us by Mr. Evans for the appellants, there were five witnesses who gave evidence on this point, and there is also the evidence of [235] 21 decrees which were passed against tenants, on the finding that the current hath was that now claimed by the plaintiff. These decrees would be evidence under s. 13 of the Evidence Act.

"It is next shown that the Subordinate Judge has incorrectly referred to the evidence of Ram Krishna; one of the plaintiff's witnesses, in that he describes this witness as stating that the hath of 18 inches came into vogue only during the last ten or twelve years, whereas the witness, in almost the next sentence of his deposition, has stated that that hath was also current before. We must, therefore, return these appeals to the lower appellate Court for trial with reference to this evidence. Costs to abide the result."

Upon the remand the Subordinate Judge stated that he had not taken the 21 decrees into his consideration, as he considered they were not admissible in evidence upon the authority of the Full Bench Ruling in Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall (1), but as the High Court had stated that they were admissible, he took them into consideration together with the evidence of the five witnesses referred to in the order of remand, and found, though not without some hesitation, that they turned the scale in the plaintiffs' favour, and that the pergunnah hath must be taken to be one of 18 inches long. He accordingly confirmed the Munsif's judgment upon this point.

The defendants now appealed against this judgment, and the decree based thereupon to the High Court.

The Advocate-General (The Hon. G. C. Paul), and Baboo Ishur Chunder Chuckerbatty, for the appellants.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Taruck Nath Palit, for the defendants.

The points raised on the appeal are sufficiently stated for the purpose of this report, in the judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.), which was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

These cases come before us on second appeal after having been once remanded by this Court with certain directions.

It appears that upon the first hearing the Subordinate Judge, reversing the decision of the Court of first instance, which had given the plaintiff a decree, refused to receive in evidence [236] 21 decrees which had been considered by the Munsif. He based his refusal to receive these decrees in evidence upon the authority of a Full Bench case, referred to by the Advocate-General [Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall (1)]. The Subordinate Judge has now, under the directions contained in the remand order, taken these decrees into consideration.

It is urged before us on second appeal, first, that in law the lower appellate Court had no right to take these decrees into consideration; and, secondly, that they really afford no proof in support of the point to prove which they were tendered and received.

With regard to the first point, we have to observe in the first place that we consider it extremely doubtful whether we can interfere with the remand order. In the second place, we think that these decrees were admissible in evidence under the provisions of s. 13 of the Evidence Act; and being admissible, that the Subordinate Judge was well warranted in coming to the conclusion that they afforded some evidence in corroboration of the plaintiff's case. The case made by the plaintiff was that the tenures held by the tenants, against whom the 21 suits were brought, were to be measured by a cubit of 18 inches; in other words, that the customary bigah of the pergunnah was a bigah of so many square yards. The contention in the written statements of the defendants who appeared was that they did not hold the quantity of land said to be in their possession, and the ground upon which they made this allegation was, as appears from the proceedings, that the landlord ought not to measure with a cubit of 18 inches, which would give a bigah of so many square yards, but that he ought to measure with a cubit of 21 odd inches, which would make a bigah of so many more square yards, that is to say, that if the customary measurement was applied to the land in respect of which the claim for rent was made by the plaintiff, it would be found that the amount due is not so much as is claimed.

It appears that in these 21 suits the tenants consented to use what the landlord claimed to be the customary [237] measurement, upon the understanding that, if it should afterwards be found that the customary measurement was as they claimed it to be, namely, with a cubit of 21 odd inches, the decrees should be drawn up in accordance with that finding. They failed to show that any such measurement was in existence; and we cannot but think that, under these circumstances,

The two grounds of appeal taken by the learned Advocate-General therefore fail.

The appeals must consequently be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

RASH BEHARI MUKERJEE AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. PITAMBORI CHOWDHIRANI and others (Defendants).* [5th January, 1888].

Bengal Act, IX of 1880, ss. 50-71—Cesses—Rent-free lands—Notice.

Plaintiffs sued to recover arrears of road and public works cesses on account of certain rent-free land, claiming double the amount under s. 58 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880). It was found that no notice of the valuation had been published as required by s. 52 of the Act, and it was held by the lower Court that the plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to recover double the amount under s. 58.

It was then contended that they were at any rate entitled to recover the amount of the cesses with interest under s. 62.

Held that the latter section did not give the holder of the estate or tenure a right to recover the cesses payable under s. 56 before publication of notice, and that the plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to a decree, and that their suit must be dismissed.

The plaintiffs sued to recover arrears of road and public works cesses for the years 1289—1291 on account of certain rent-free land known by the name of Sarisa Hat, and claimed to be entitled to recover double the amount of the cesses under s. 58 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880).

The defendants contended that as they did not receive any [238] benefit from the land for which the cesses were claimed, except the compensation known as sayer from the Government, they were not liable to pay the cesses, and they further alleged that no notices of the assessment or demand of the cesses had been served as required by law.

The Munsif held that there was nothing in the Act to exempt lands of the description in suit from the payment of cesses, and that the defendants were bound to pay the cesses, as the land had been assessed and the plaintiffs in whose zemindary it was situate had paid the cesses for the period in respect of which the claim in the suit was made; but inasmuch as he found that no notices had been served, he held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover double the amount of the cesses.

He accordingly gave them a decree under s. 62 of the Act for the cesses with interest at 12½ per cent. and the costs of the suit.

The defendants appealed, and the District Judge, confirming the finding of the Munsif as to the non-service of the notices, held that under s. 56 of the Act the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the cesses at all. He accordingly reversed the decree of the Court below and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, but without costs.

The plaintiffs then preferred this second appeal to the High Court. Baboo Ashutosh Mookerjee and Baboo Bipro Das Mookerjee, for the appellants.

Baboo Unnoda Pershad Banerjee, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Beverley, J.—We are of opinion that the decision of the lower appellate Court in this case is correct, and that this appeal must fail.

The plaintiffs sued the defendants for arrears of road and public works cesses alleged to be due on account of certain rent-free land, and they claimed to recover double the amount due under s. 58 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880). The first Court found that, inasmuch as notice of the valuation had not been published in accordance with s. 52, the provisions of s. 58 were [239] not applicable to the case; but that, although the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover double cesses under that section, they were entitled to recover the cesses with interest under s. 62 of the Act. On appeal by the defendants the District Judge has held that under s. 56 the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the cesses at all.

It is contended before us that the Judge is wrong, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the cesses under s. 62 of the Act. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the provisions of the Act on this subject.

Chapter IV of the Act (ss. 50—71) deals with the "valuation and assessment of lands held rent free and the payment and recovery of cess in respect thereof." After providing in what estates or tenures rent-free lands shall be included for the purposes of the Act, s. 51 proceeds to say that the holder of an estate or tenure in which rent-free lands are included shall be bound to include such lands in his return, and to pay the cesses thereon at half rates. Section 52 then provides that, on publication of the valuation-roll of such estate or tenure, a notice to the owners and holders of such lands with extracts from the valuation-roll shall be published in a prescribed form. Section 53 provides for objections to the valuation by the holders of rent-free lands. Sections 54 and 55 provide for the issue of notices in certain cases by the holder of the estate or tenure in which the rent-free lands are included. Then s. 56 says: "After publication of the extracts from the roll as provided in s. 52, and in cases in which publication of the notice mentioned in s. 54 is required, after publication of such notice, and not otherwise, every owner and holder of any rent-free land included in such extracts, and every person in receipt of the rents and profits or in possession and enjoyment of such land shall be bound to pay year by year to the holder of the estate or tenure, in the return of which such land has been included, the amount of the road cess and public works cess which may thereafter become due to such holder, calculated on the annual value of such land as entered in such extracts, or on any other annual value which may have been determined by the Collector under s. 53; at the full rate or rates which may have been fixed under [240] this Act for the levy of such cesses respectively in the district generally for the year." From this section, therefore, it is clear that it is only after publication of the notices required by ss. 52 and 54, and not otherwise, that the owner or holder of rent-free lands becomes liable to pay the cesses assessed thereon; and it is no more than consonant with reason that such owner or holder should not be called on to pay until he has had notice of the amount assessed upon his lands and an opportunity of objecting to that assessment.

Omitting s. 57 as immaterial to the present case, s. 58 goes on to lay down that, if an instalment of the cess is not paid by the holder of the rent-free lands within one month from the date on which it is due, the holder of the estate or tenure may recover double the amount due with interest and costs, provided always that he has paid to the Collector the cesses due from him under s. 51. Sections 59 and 60 relate to supplementary returns, and are not material in the present case. Then come two important sections, which prescribe in what cases the provisions of s. 58 relating to the levy of double cesses in case of default shall be applicable. Section 61 says that those provisions shall be applicable to every amount which, as provided in s. 56, may become payable after the fulfilment of the requirements of ss. 52—54.

Section 62, on the other hand, says that the provisions of s. 58 shall not be applicable to any amount that may have become payable (under Bengal Act X of 1871 or under this Act) before the fulfilment of the requirements of ss. 52—54. But the section goes on to say that such amount may be recovered with costs and interest, provided that the owner of the estate or tenure has paid the cesses due by him to the Collector.

Now it is contended before us that the latter clause of this section gives the holder of the estate or tenure a right to recover an instalment of cess payable under s. 56 even before publication of notice. But this is not so, and to hold that it is so would be to say that s. 62 contradicts s. 56. Section 56 distinctly says that cesses only become payable under that section after publication of the notices required by ss. 52 and 54; and s. 62 would contradict the provisions of that section if it said that such cesses could be realised before publication of the notices.

[241] To understand the latter part of s. 62 aright it must be remembered that under Bengal Act X of 1871 rent-free lands were made liable to pay the cess, though the elaborate provisions regarding the assessment of such lands contained in the present Act are not to be found in that Act. By s. 3 of the present Act all cesses imposed under the previous Acts are to be deemed to have been imposed under this Act. It is clear, therefore, that an instalment of cess might be due under the Act without being due under s. 56. It might be due under a former assessment, and before any proceedings were taken under Chap. IV of this Act. Such an instalment, s. 62 says, may be recovered in the ordinary way, but the special provisions of s. 58 (as to damages for default) will not apply to it. Or, again, we may suppose the case of a new assessment or re-valuation of the estate or tenure including the rent-free lands. Section 56 provides that the new rates shall not become due till after the due publication of the required notices; but under s. 62 (read with s. 56), the holder of the estate or tenure could recover the cess at the old rates.

In the present case, it is not contended that any cess has become payable otherwise than in pursuance of the provisions of s. 56 of Bengal Act IX of 1880; and we think the Judge is right in holding that, the required notices not having been published, no cess has become payable under that section.

The Judge remarks that the case is a hard one for the zamindar, as it is not his duty either to serve the notices or to preserve the evidence of the service; but the Judge has apparently overlooked the provisions of s. 54, which requires notices to be published by the holder of the estate as well as by the collector in cases like the present.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ASHANULLA (Objector) v. THE COLLECTOR OF DACCA (1st Party) and RAJENDRA NARAIN ROY, BAHADUR, AND OTHERS (Claimants).* [5th January, 1888.]

Limitation Act, 1877, s. 5, and sch. II, art. 156—Appeal—Review, Exclusion of time taken up with—Practice.

The mere presentation of an application for review, where it is not shown that the grounds therefor are reasonable and proper is not a sufficient reason for admitting an appeal after the period of limitation prescribed for such appeal has passed.

This was an appeal filed on the 1st December 1886 against the decree of the District Judge of Dacca in an apportionment case under the Land Acquisition Act X of 1870, dated the 26th June 1886.

The land, the subject of the apportionment case, belonged to a shikmi tenure formerly held by one J.P. Wise, and was registered in the Collector’s office under Act XI of 1859.

The pargunnah was purchased by Nawab Ashanulla Khan at an auction sale held for arrears of rent; and the purchaser claimed to be entitled to the whole of the compensation awarded by the Collector. The other claimants, the talukdars, objected to the purchaser receiving any of the compensation money on the ground that he had not taken any steps to avoid their under-tenures. The District Judge held that the objection was a good one, and directed the compensation money to be divided amongst the talukdars, and passed a decree to that effect on the 26th June, 1887.

On the 7th September, 1886, the Nawab presented a petition for review of the judgment of the District Judge; this application was on the 17th November 1886 refused.

It appeared from a perusal of the grounds on which this review was sought for that the matters relied on were in reality grounds for an appeal, and not of review.

[243] On the 1st December 1886, the Nawab filed his appeal against the decision of the District Judge, dated the 26th June 1886, the appeal being admitted subject to any objection that might be taken at the hearing as to the appeal being out of time.

At the hearing Baboo Doorga Mohun Doss, for the respondents, objected that the appeal was out of time.

Baboo Kuloda Kinker Roy for the appellant contended that the time taken up by his application for review should be excluded in calculating the period of limitation.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by:

Petheram, C. J.—We think that this preliminary objection must prevail. The objection is that the appeal has been filed too late. The decree was dated the 26th June 1886, and the appeal was filed on the 1st December of that year. The limitation provided for filing such appeals is 90 days, subject to the proviso in s. 5 of the Limitation Act. That proviso is: "Any appeal or application for a review of judgment may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor when the appellant or applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal or making the application within such period."

The ground upon which the appellant seeks to satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting his appeal within the prescribed time is that he says that on the 7th September 1886, he presented an application for review, that the application was not refused until the 17th November following, and that his time having been taken up by that application the time for appealing was thereby extended.

If we were shown that there were any good grounds for the review, or that the application was, under the circumstances, a reasonable and proper one, although it was eventually refused, we might think that the fact that he was prosecuting the review was a reason why we should be satisfied that there was sufficient ground for his not presenting the appeal within the time limited. But in this particular case we are not shown, in the first instance, that there were any grounds for a review, for when we come to examine the grounds of the application for review we find that they are all grounds of appeal, and none of them a ground for review; and, therefore, if we were to hold that the presentation of an application of this kind was a sufficient ground for not presenting the appeal within time, we should have to hold that the presentation of every application for review, whether it were groundless or unreasonable, or whether there was anything in it or not, in itself extended the time for preferring the appeal. In our opinion it is impossible to hold anything of the kind. We think that where it is not shown that there were reasonable grounds for making the application for review, the mere presentation of it is not a reasonable or sufficient ground for not presenting the appeal within time, and therefore this preliminary objection must be given effect to and this appeal dismissed with costs.

T. A. P.

Appeal dismissed.
IN THE MATTER OF ACT XV OF 1859, &c.

IN THE MATTER OF D. H. R. MOSES. [20th January, 1888.]

A licensee under a patent cannot, as between himself and the patentee, challenge the soundness of the patent during the continuance of his license.

Case in which the petitioner on the record in a proceeding under s. 24 of Act XV of 1859 was found to have had no real interest in the matter apart from that of the licensee; and in which the petition, having been taken to be in reality that of the licensee, was dismissed accordingly.

This was a rule, obtained on the 26th May 1887, on the application of one David Hay Ralph Moses, calling upon Walter Thomson and James Mylne to show cause why the Court should not declare that they had not acquired any exclusive privilege in respect of an alleged invention or new application for simple and cheap machinery for expressing sugarcane juice described in a certain specification dated 26th June, 1874, and amended specification of the 18th March 1882; and why any pretended or asserted exclusive privilege acquired by them should not be revoked on the grounds—(a) that the alleged invention was not a new invention within the meaning of the Patent Act of 1859; (b) that the said Walter Thomson and James Mylne were not the true inventors; (c) that their petition and declaration of the 6th January 1874, and subsequent petition and declaration of 4th November 1881, relating to the said alleged invention and the original and amended specifications and declarations, contained wilful and fraudulent misstatements.

The petition on which the above rule was obtained purported to have been made, and was verified on information and belief (although the name of no informant was therein set out), by "David Hay Ralph Moses of Benares, temporarily residing at No. 6, Humayon Place, in the town of Calcutta."

In showing cause against the rule James Mylne filed, on the 27th October, 1887, an affidavit, in which he alleged that the application was not the bona fide application of the said David Hay Ralph Moses, but was in truth and in fact the application of one Neil Fox, who was, and had been for some years, a licensee under himself and Thomson for the manufacture, and sale, and hiring out of mills made according to the exclusive privilege belonging to himself and Thomson; and that the said Neil Fox had in 1885 or 1886 complained that his profits as such licensee had been curtailed by persons infringing such exclusive privilege, and against whom he (Fox) had claimed protection by the patentees; and that on their refusal to protect him the said Neil Fox had applied to the patentees for compensation for the loss of profit he had sustained, and had threatened to attack such exclusive privilege unless he was protected as aforesaid; and that the said patentees had declined to do anything. The deponent (Mylne) further alleged that the application was made in fulfilment of the threat last referred to; and that Messrs. Watkins & Co., the attorneys on the record for the petitioner, were the attorneys instructed by the said Neil Fox, and were in fact instructed by him.
Subsequently to the hearing of the argument of counsel on this rule Mr. Moses was orally examined, and stated in chief that he was a coolie contractor, having his place of business at Benares; that his interest in the matter was that he since 1886 was desirous of introducing into the market a sugar mill made by one [246] Rogers, but which was kept out of the market by reason of the patent obtained by Thomson and Mylne; that he had not seen Roger's mill, but it had been explained to him by the said Neil Fox; that the petition was made on information furnished to him by his attorneys; that Fox was the original mover in the matter and had introduced him to the attorneys; that he (Moses) had paid Rs. 1,000 to Fox as costs, there being an arrangement that after the legal proceedings were over Fox and himself and Rogers should square accounts, equally dividing the costs among them.

On cross-examination he stated that he had known Fox six or seven years; that Fox had told him about Roger's mill; that he first heard of legal proceedings being taken in April 1887; that Fox had told him that he was working up the case, but had said that he had been advised that he was debarred from moving the Court under the Patent Act; that he (Moses) then volunteered; having an interest in the matter, to make the present application; that he had asked for an indemnity for costs, but that he had not obtained one; that he had not seen Messrs. Watkins & Co. since May 1887 with regard to the present application, nor had he communicated with them on the subject.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Pugh, Mr. Phillips and Mr. Evans, in support of the rule.

Mr. Hill, Mr. Allen and Mr. Stokoe to show cause.

Mr. Woodroffe.—There are three preliminary objections to the hearing of this application, viz., (a) that the question of novelty is res judicata; (b) that the application is barred under the provisions of art. 178 of the Limitation Act; and (c) that the real applicant is a licensee.

[The case having been decided on the third objection alone, the arguments on the first and second objections are not reported.]

The right which is given to a subject to make such an application as the present must be reasonably construed; the application is not made by Moses, but is in reality that of Fox. There is no reply made to Mylne's allegation on this point. Fox is a licensee, and a licensee cannot dispute a patent—Clark v. Adie (1).

[247] Forrest v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry. Co. (2) shows that the proceeding cannot be taken in the name of Moses.

Mr. Hill, contra.—Moses had an interest; he had the same interest as every other member of the public. [Petheram, C.J.—He has no interest capable of being valued.] The Act does not say that that is necessary. Besides this, he had a special interest, inasmuch as there were other sugar machines which he wished to push forward, but which were prevented from being used by reason of the present patent.

In an action for royalties contracted to be paid under a license the licensee cannot dispute the patent having had the benefit of the consideration; but there is no authority to the effect that he cannot take proceedings to set aside the patent altogether as a fraud on the public. There are two wholly independent relations existing between the patentee and the licensee—one created by the contract between himself and the patentee, and the other created by the patentee obtaining the patent. The existence of the former relation does not affect the right of the licensee to put an end to the latter, nor will he by so doing get rid of his liability to pay royalties under the license. Moreover the licensee may put an end to the relation created by his contract with the patentee, and he has done so in this case—Neilson v. Fothergill (1) and Lawes v. Purser (2). As regards Moses’ right to apply the case of Forrest v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Ry. Co. (3) has no application. That was in reality a suit by a hostile Steam Boat Co., and the man who did bring the suit had imposed upon the Court; there is nothing of that kind here.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—This is a proceeding under s. 24 of Act XV of 1859 for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that no exclusive privilege to manufacture sugarcane mills according to a specification has been obtained under a patent dated 10th February 1874. The rule for the purpose of this application was obtained in the month of May last, and was returnable within twelve days from date of issue, but from that time the matter has, for various reasons, stood over until the present time.

The patent in respect of which this enquiry comes before us is, as I said just now, dated the 10th February 1874, and consequently it will expire on the 10th February 1888, that is to say, in about three weeks from this date, so that, in case there is no application for the renewal of this patent, the specification under enquiry will come to an end in three weeks, and the whole of this enquiry and the whole of the time and money which has been spent upon it will have been useless, unless the consequences of the enquiry were for some reason one which would not be affected by the expiration of the patent.

The matter coming before us in that way, three preliminary objections are taken by Mr. Woodroffe to our going into the enquiry, for the purposes of the Act, to ascertain whether this is a valid patent by reason of want of novelty, or whether the specification itself is so by reason of the provisions of the Act not having been complied with.

The preliminary objections which Mr. Woodroffe has taken are—first, that the matter is res judicata in the sense that there has been before this another application of the same kind in respect of this very patent which was decided in favour of the patentee, and that there has been a second trial in which this matter was in issue, and was also decided in favour of the patentee. The second objection is that the person who appears upon this record as the petitioner is not the petitioner at all, and that his name has only been used for the purposes of the petition, which has been presented in the interests of and really by a gentleman of the name of Neil Fox, who is the person actually interested in the matter, and that the petition is really his petition, and that Mr. Neil Fox is not in a position to institute these proceedings and to carry them through, because he is the licensee of the patentees here. He holds a license from them under which he manufactures the very machines in question, and, therefore, so far as the petition is concerned, he is estopped from denying the validity of the patent. The third and last objection which was taken by Mr. Woodroffe is that this proceeding is barred by limitation, such an application as this being within the 178th [249] article of the second schedule of the Limitation Act and the time beginning to run from the date when the patent was granted.

We do not think it necessary to say anything whatever with reference to the first and third of these objections. They are objections on which a great deal might be said on either side, but we do not think it necessary to express any opinion as to the law with reference to them or as to the validity of those objections with reference to this case, because, in our opinion, the second objection taken by Mr. Woodroffe, coupled with the evidence which we have had before us, as to the nature of the interests of the various parties to this application, is fatal to the further maintenance of this application.

Mr. Woodroffe undertakes, in the first instance, to show that this application is really an application by Mr. Neil Fox, and that that being so he is precluded, by his position as licensee of the invention, from challenging the soundness of the patent, and, in support of that view, he cites the case of Clark v. Adie (1). That was a case in which Mr. Clark was attempting to challenge the patent which had been obtained by Mr. Adie and Mr. Clark was in the same position which, Mr. Woodroffe alleges, Mr. Neil Fox occupies in this case; in other words, he had agreed with the patentee to manufacture machines which were the subject of the patent under a license from him, and to pay a royalty for all such machines; the consideration for the royalty being that the patentee agreed with the licensee that he would take no proceedings for the infringement of the patent; and in that case the Lord Chancellor uses these words: "The appellant is a licensee who has taken a license to work a patent granted to the respondent Mr. Adie, a patent which is dated the 30th October 1866, and which subsequently became subject to a disclaimer and memorandum of alteration by Mr. Adie of 10th August 1870. Therefore as between the appellant, the licensee, and the respondent Mr. Adie, the patentee (whatever strangers might have to say as to the validity of this patent) the question of validity must be taken as that which the appellant is unable to dispute. So far as he is concerned, he must stand here, admitting the novelty of the invention, admitting its utility, and [280] admitting the sufficiency of the specification." These words of Lord Cairns are perfectly general as to the position of a licensee. He there states the law to be, that a person who occupies that position and has undertaken to manufacture machines as being the subject of an invention which has been patented, and so to make a profit out of the patent, must be taken as having admitted the validity of the patent, and as being a person who cannot, as between himself and the patentee, dispute the validity or novelty of the invention or any other circumstances which go to make a valid patent.

Therefore it seems to us that this case establishes the position, and that is what we should have expected it to do, because it does not seem there could be any doubt what the law would be, that a person who occupies that position and makes a profit out of the patent cannot afterwards, as between himself and the patentee, say that this thing is invalid as against the world. So that, taking the law from that case, it follows that if Mr. Woodroffe succeeds in showing that this is a proceeding instituted by Mr. Neil Fox, and for his benefit, and if he establishes that Mr. Fox is a license of this patent under the patentees, who are the respondents in this rule, he is precluded from questioning it, and that therefore this rule must be discharged on that ground.

Several cases have been cited by Mr. Hill on the other side, but what those cases deal with is the question of the rights and powers of a licensee after the license has expired, or when it has been repudiated, or when it has terminated in any way; and what they have decided is this that, although a man may hold the position of a licensee at one time, if that license has expired by effluxion of time, or has come to an end for any reason, he is at liberty to challenge the patent. But in this case we do not think that these authorities have any application, and for this reason, that both Mr. Myne and Mr. Neil Fox himself, in the affidavits filed in this case, swear that at the time when these proceedings were instituted he, Mr. Neil Fox, held a license to work this patent. Therefore we have his own statement and the statement of one of the patentees that this license was existing at that time, and as he only could have terminated it, and has not done so, it is clear that when this proceeding was instituted Mr. Neil Fox did hold the position of licensee, and if it appear that this proceeding is his it must fail for that reason.

The person who appears as the petitioner is a Mr. Moses, and it was apparent from the record itself, and also from the affidavits and from the admissions made to us by the counsel for the petitioner, that it was doubtful whether Mr. Moses had any real interest in the matter, and whether it was not Mr. Neil Fox who was, as a matter, of fact, really interested in it. Fortunately Mr. Moses has been called, and he has told us his own story, and having heard his story I am bound to say that he has on the whole stated it with candour. It does not seem to me that he has concealed any of the real facts and circumstances from us; and having heard him, and believing his story, I have not the slightest doubt that this application is really an application for and on behalf of Mr. Neil Fox, and that Mr. Moses has nothing to do with it, except in the matter of costs. The story which Mr. Moses tells us is a straightforward one. He says: "I am a coolie contractor. It was my intention to extend my business, and having heard from Mr. Neil Fox that there was a possibility of sugarcane mills coming into the market which would be successful as a rival to the sugarcane mills of Messrs. Thomson and Myne, I told him that I should like to add sugarcane mills to the rest of my business." Some months afterwards Mr. Moses heard that Mr. Fox had taken these proceedings, that he had retained solicitors, that he had got together information, and that the matter was proceeding; but he also heard that it was not convenient that the proceedings should go on in the name of Mr. Neil Fox, because he was the licensee, and thereupon Mr. Moses says that he at once volunteered that his own name should be used. Now, I said just now, I thought Mr. Moses was candid in giving his account of the circumstances, but I do not think that remark is quite applicable to this statement of his, because it is doubtful whether Mr. Moses at once volunteered that his name should be used. Having regard to the nature of the interest he was to have in the patent, and having regard to the fact that he had never seen Mr. Roger's sugarcane mill, it does not seem likely that he would have volunteered the use of his name. It seems more likely that the suggestion that his name should be used came from some one else. However, in the result, he did allow his name to be used as the petitioner. He also said that he was to find a portion of the expenses, and he did contribute Rs. 1,000 to the expenses by a cheque on the Delhi and London Bank. However that may be, the fact still remains that Mr. Neil Fox was the person who was really interested in the matter, who had instituted these proceedings in pursuance of a threat which he had made some time before, and he was the person who took the most active part altogether; and even supposing that Mr. Moses and Mr. Rogers had some interest in this matter, and were under some agreement with Mr. Fox by which the profits, if there were any, were to be shared between them all, still the fact that they associated Mr. Fox with them in this matter is in itself sufficient to make it impossible that this proceeding could succeed, because as to a third of the interest in this venture it belongs to a person whose mouth is shut and who cannot challenge this patent. Under these circumstances we must deal with this application as if Mr. Fox’s name appeared as the petitioner, at all events jointly with Mr. Moses, and if we do so, it will be clearly our duty, within the doctrine of the case of Clark v. Adie, to say that this petition could not be maintained, because one of the petitioners and the most active of them being a licensee his mouth was closed in such a way that he was not in a position to dispute the validity of the patent. Under these circumstances, as I said before, I think we must hold, at all events, that—Mr. Neil Fox, who was interested in this matter as a joint petitioner with the person whose name appears on the record as the petitioner, being a licensee and as such is estopped from challenging the validity of the patent—this rule must be discharged with costs on scale No. 2.

One other word as to the advisability of our taking the course we have done. I have to say that we do this, because, whatever the merits may be, and whether this is the best patent or whether this invention has any novelty, and whether this is a patent which might have been got rid of years ago, all these matters stand where they were, and no harm is done. This patent will come to an end in three weeks’ time, and the patent [253] tees have put it on record that they have no intention of making an application to renew it. This rule, therefore, as I said before, will be discharged with costs.

APPLICATION OF SARODAPERSAUD SOOR. [13th February, 1888.]

Management of estate by the Court—Summary enforcement of contract made by the Court—Isarah lease—Lessee, Application by, though no party to the suit—Application by a person not a party to a suit.

A Court has complete power to enforce summarily a contract made by it when managing or administering an estate, whatever that contract may be.

* Suit No. 402 of 1884.

I. D. C.VII—48
INDIAN DECISIONS, NEW SERIES

[Vol.

Feb. 13.

15 C. 253.

Such power of enforcing subsisting contracts made by it is not affected by the fact that the Court has ceased to manage the estate before such contract is carried out by reason of the dismissal of the suit under an order in which the Court had derived its power of management.

Case in which the Court passed summarily such an order on the application of a lessee not a party to the suit in which the order completing the agreement for lease had been passed, and at a time when such suit was no longer in existence.

[D., 36 C. 52 (56)=128 C.W.N. 1023=1 Ind. Cas. 470.] Summons before a Judge in chambers, dated 9th January, 1888, issued at the instance of one Sarodapersaud Soor, requiring one Ranee Doorgasoondery Dossee to show cause why a certain izarrah granted to him for a term of five years in terms of an offer made by him and accepted by the Receiver of the Court should not be forthwith completed, and the draft thereof submitted to the Registrar for approval in terms of a certain order dated 16th September, 1886; and why certain Government Securities for Rs. 20,000 deposited by him with the said Receiver as part security for the performance of the covenants contained in the said izarrah should not be retained by the said Receiver pending the settlement of the said izarrah and the execution thereof by the said Ranee Doorgasoonderay Dossee, or in the alternative why the said Government Securities should not be made over by the said Receiver to the Bank of Bengal for safe custody pending the completion of the said izarrah, and why the said Government Securities should not thereafter remain in the custody of the said Receiver or of the said Bank, as the case may be, during the term of the said izarrah, to be dealt with only subject to the order of the Court.

The facts were as follows: The suit in which this summons was obtained was brought by the plaintiff to establish his right to a share in the property of the late Bejoy Keshav Roy, and in it the Receiver of the Court was appointed Receiver of the property, the subject-matter of the suit. On the 15th August, 1885, a decree in such suit was passed in favour of the plaintiff.

On the 16th September, 1886, an order was made in the suit which amongst other matters directed that the Receiver should be at liberty to accept an offer made by Sarodapersaud Soor for an izarrah lease of all the properties appertaining to the estate of the late Bejoy Keshav Roy (other than the family dwelling-house and Baitakhana) for a term of five years from the date of Pooneah in the month of Assur 1293 to the date of Pooneah in the month of Assur 1298 at an annual rental of Rs. 75,000; the order further directing that all necessary parties as the Registrar should direct should join in the said lease, and that the Registrar should approve of the said lease and execute the same in the name of the plaintiff and the infant defendant, and in the name of the defendant Doorgasoonderay Dossee, the widow of Bejoy Keshav Roy, in the event of her refusing to execute the same. This offer was accepted by all the parties to the suit.

On the 18th September, 1886, Sarodapersaud deposited with the Receiver Government Securities to the amount of Rs. 20,000 as security for the due performance of the covenants of the said izarrah, and paid to the Receiver Rs. 20,000 on account of the said izarrah rent for the current Bengali year; whereupon the Receiver granted to him anulnamahs addressed to the tenant of the property authorizing the collection of rents by the said Sarodapersaud. Sarodapersaud entered into possession under his lease, and paid rent to the Receiver.

On the 27th April, 1887, the appellate Court reversing the decree of the 15th August, 1885, dismissed the suit and directed [255] the discharge of the Receiver on the passing of his accounts, the result of this decree of the appellate Court being that the defendant Doorgasondery Dossee was declared entitled to the property of her late husband.

On the 28th December, 1887, the Receiver made over the estate to Doorgasondery Dossee and gave notice to the tenants of the estate of his having done so, referring them in all matters relating to the estate to the defendant Doorgasondery Dossee.

Up to this last date the izarrah lease had not been completed, notwithstanding numerous applications made by Sarodapersaud for that purpose.

On the above facts the summons of the 9th January, 1888, set out above, was issued at the instance of Sarodapersaud.

The correspondence set out in the affidavits used on the hearing disclosed that the delay occurring in the completion of the lease was not caused through the default of Sarodapersaud, nor by the wilful default of any of the parties to the suit.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. Bonnerjee) to show cause.—The proper remedy is by suit for specific performance; if a suit for such a purpose had been brought the facts would show laches. A lessee cannot apply by motion in a suit in which he was no party. Moreover, the suit having abated, although thereby the right of the parties is not altered, yet their remedy is gone, and therefore there could be no application in the suit. The Civil Procedure Code alone regulates the practice on the original side of the Court.

Mr. Hill, contra.—The rules of the High Court with regard to applications by summons, such as the present, are to be found in Belchambers' Rules and Orders, pp. 201, 202, and such rules merely embody the English practice. The proper mode of enforcing the right to the lease is by motion—see Daniell's Ch. Pr. 1066, 1108: and the application may be entitled either in the action or the matter—see Daniell's Ch. Pr., p. 966 and Daniell's Forms, No. 865: the title is merely set out for convenience of reference to the record. A purchaser seeking relief against a vendor would proceed in this way, and would not, for instance, [256] be permitted to bring an action for any document of title, the possession of which he was claiming—Stubbs v. Surgon (1); Sugden's Vend. and Purch., 107. Again a purchaser under a decree not a party to the suit may be restrained, upon motion, from committing waste—Casamajor v. Strode (2), and a lessee is in the same position as a purchaser. It is wholly immaterial that the party applying is not a party to the suit. As regards laches debarring me from my right, see Fry on Specific Performance, pp. 477, 478. I submit the order of the 16th September, 1886, is a decreetal order, and is not affected by the dismissal of the suit.

ORDER.

Trevelyan, J.—This suit was brought in 1884 for the purpose of establishing the plaintiff's right to a share of the property left by the late Rajah Bejoy Keshav Roy.

At an early date in the suit the Court Receiver was appointed Receiver of the property, the subject-matter of the suit.

(1) 4 Beav. 90.
(2) 1 Sim. & St. 381.
On the 15th August, 1885, a decree was made in favour of the plaintiff.

On the 16th September, 1886, this Court made an order, the effect of which has been much discussed at the hearing of the present application. That order provided that the Receiver should be at liberty to accept the offer made by Baboo Sarodapersaud Soor for a lease to him of all the properties appertaining to the said estate with certain exceptions for a term of five years from the date of Pooneah in the month of Assur 1293 at the annual rental of Rs. 75,000. It was further ordered by the same order that all necessary parties as the Registrar of this Court should directly do join in the lease, and it was further ordered that the Registrar do approve of the lease and execute the same for and in the name of the plaintiff and the infant defendant, and cause the same to be registered; and it was further ordered that the Registrar do also execute the lease for and in the name of the defendant Ranee Doorgasoondey Dossee in the event of her not executing the same on the same being duly tendered to her for that purpose.

[Sarodapersaud's offer was accepted by the Receiver and acted upon by both parties. On the 18th September, 1886, Sarodapersaud Soor deposited with the Receiver Government Securities of the nominal value of Rs. 20,000 as security for his due performance of the covenants of the izarah, and on the same date paid the Receiver the sum of Rs. 20,000 on account of the izarah rent for the then current Bengali year 1293, and the Receiver thereupon granted to him amulnamah, the effect of which was to put him in possession of the property. Although the proposed lessee obtained possession and the Receiver obtained rent from him no lease has yet been executed.

I am satisfied from the correspondence that the delay has not been caused by any default on the part of Sarodapersaud Soor. On the other hand I do not think that there has been any wilful default on the part of any of the parties to the suit.

On the 27th April, 1887, a decree was made by the Appeal Court dismissing the suit. The result of such decree is that the defendant Ranee Doorgasoondey is declared entitled to the property of her late husband.

This summons was taken out on the 9th of January, 1888, by Sarodapersaud Soor; it requires the defendant Doorgasoondey Dossee to show cause why the izarah should not be completed, and the draft submitted to the Registrar for approval, and also why the Government Securities for Rs. 20,000 deposited with the Receiver as part security for the performance of the covenants of the izarah should not be retained by the Receiver pending the settlement of the izarah and the execution thereof by the Ranee, or in the alternative why they should not be made over to the Bank of Bengal for safe custody pending the completion of the izarah, and to show cause why such securities should not thereafter remain in the custody of the Receiver or of the Bank, as the case might be, during the term of the izarah to be dealt with only subject to the order of this Court.

With respect to the execution of the izarah there are three questions for me to determine:—

1. Will the Court entertain an application by a proposed lessee with whom a contract for a lease has been made for the execution of a lease, or is it necessary that in order to enforce his right he should bring a suit for specific performance?

2. Supposing such application to be possible when a suit is pending does the dismissal of the suit prevent such an application?
3. Are the circumstances of this case such as to justify the Court in refusing an order for the execution of the lease?

I do not think there can be any real doubt as to the determination of the first question.

The Court in managing property pending suit, and in managing property which is being administered by the Court, has occasionally to sanction leases, and to require the execution of such leases. Summary orders are made in England for the execution of leases not only by the parties to the suit, but also by the lessee, and I find that in a case cited at p. 1066 of Daniell’s Chancery Practice—Carne v. Branecker (1)—an enquiry was directed as to the damages which a lessee who had repudiated his contract should pay. On reference to the report of that case I find that the lessee happened to be a party to the suit, but this circumstance I do not think makes any difference. In that case the Master of the Rolls declined to order specific performance, but damages afforded apparently a complete remedy against the lessee. The contract for a lease is made with the Court, and as pointed out by Lord Justice Giffard in the case I have mentioned, the approval by the Judge of the offer constitutes the contract. I think that a Court has complete power to enforce summarily a contract made by it when managing or administering an estate, whatever that contract may be.

With regard to the second question, it must be remembered that the contract was completed and acted upon before the suit was dismissed, and in the ordinary course the lease would also have been signed before that event happened.

It is admitted that the rights of the lessee are not affected by the dismissal of the suit, but it is contended that his remedy is altered. I do not assent to this contention. The lease is wholly independent of the result of the suit. I do not think that the fact that the Court has ceased to manage the property takes from it the power of enforcing the performance of subsisting contracts made by it. The dismissal of this suit only determines the rights of the parties inter se, and I do not think that the dismissal of the suit would any more than any other form of decree affect the remedies of the lessee.

With regard to the third question I do not think that there are any circumstances in this case which would justify me in refusing an order for the execution of a lease. In terms of this summons I make such order.

As to the security deposited by the lessee, he so deposited it with the Court, and relying on the safety which would be ensured by its being kept by the Receiver. I do not think it would be right to require the lessee to leave the money with the Rance, who has a limited interest only.

The securities deposited by the lessee with the Receiver will be paid into Court to the credit of an account to be entitled "Andool Raj Lease Security Account." The interest can be, from time to time, paid out to the lessee, but the principal cannot be paid out except on notice to the lessee and to the Rance, or in case of her death the person or persons then entitled to the property subject to the izarah. The Rance must pay the costs of this application. I certify for counsel.

CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Sir W. Comer Pethram, Kt. Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Macpherson.

RAM PITAM SHAH (Plaintiff) v. SHOBUL CHUNDER MULLICK AND OTHERS (Defendants), AND OTHER SUITS.* [8th February, 1888.]

Notice of action—Bengal Act IX of 1871, s. 27—Tolls paid in excess of powers given—Suit for refund of money.

In certain suits brought against a Toll Collector for the refund of money alleged to have been exacted by him improperly as toll under Bengal Act IX of 1871, the defendant pleaded that no notice of suit in accordance [260] with s. 27 of that Act had been given: Held, that such notice not having been given the suits should be dismissed.

Waterhouse v. Keen (1) followed.

These were suits brought by certain dealers in coke against the members of the firm of Messrs. Mullick and Co., for the refund of certain tolls alleged to have been exacted in excess of the powers given by Bengal Act IX of 1871, and the notifications made thereunder, on carts laden with coke on their way from the station premises belonging to the East Indian Railway Company in Howrah to Calcutta, and on empty carts on the return journey from Calcutta to Howrah station.

Messrs. Mullick & Co. were the holders of a lease granted by the Port Commissioners, running from March 1885, to April 1886, giving them the right to levy tolls for the user of the Howrah bridge in accordance with the provisions of Bengal Act IX of 1871.

On the 28th December, 1874, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, in accordance with powers granted to him by s. 3 of Bengal Act IX of 1871 for that purpose, by notification in the Gazette, exempted from the payment of the tolls authorized by Bengal Act IX of 1871, until further orders, all passengers and goods conveyed on the East Indian Railway at Howrah, and all carriages and persons using the Howrah bridge for the purpose of going to or returning from the station of the East Indian Railway at Howrah.

And subsequently by a further order directed that from the 1st January, 1875, until further orders, the following fees should be levied on goods and passengers conveyed on the railway of the East Indian Railway into and from the station of Howrah, viz.:—

<td>On every 100 maunds of goods</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>On every passenger</td>
</tr>

which fees when collected were, it appeared, paid over to the Port Commissioners.

By a further order of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal dated the 24th October, 1877, the terminal fee of Re. 1 per 100 maunds on coal was abolished as and from the 1st November, [261] 1877; and therefore from that date coal laden carts coming from the Howrah station and using the bridge were liable to pay the tolls leviable under Bengal Act IX of 1871.

*Reference No. 4A. of 1887, by Baboo Krishna Mohun Mookerjee, Officiating Judge of the Sealdah Court of Small Causes, dated the 19th May, 1887.

(1) 4 B. & C. 200.
On the 28th July, 1885, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, under powers conferred upon him by s. 3 of Bengal Act IX of 1871, exempted from payment of tolls, leviable under the tariff of Bengal Act IX of 1871, until further orders, all passengers and goods conveyed on the East Indian Railway, and also all carriages and persons using the bridge for the purpose of going to or returning from the station at Howrah, such exemption, however, not applying to the case of any carriage which, nor to that of any person who, using the bridge for the purpose of going to the station, did not directly and without deviation return therefrom; all such carriages and persons being liable to pay the same tolls as were levied from carriages and persons not using the bridge for the purposes aforesaid. This notification cancelled the notification of the 28th December, 1874.

Having regard to these orders and notifications the following proviso was inserted in the lease granted by the Port Commissioners to Messrs. Mullick & Co.: "Nothing hereinbefore contained shall be construed as authorizing or empowering the said lessees to levy any tolls, fees or charges on any carriages or persons using the said bridge for the purpose of going to or returning from the station of the East Indian Railway Co., at Howrah, or the premises of the said Company situated at Sulkheah, or on any other persons or carriages exempted under the provisions of Bengal Act IX of 1871 from such tolls, fees or charges."

The dealers bringing these suits had duly paid the terminal fee of one rupee per hundred maunds on all coke brought by rail to Howrah, but notwithstanding Messrs. Mullick & Co. had demanded and levied a toll on the bullocks and carts (exclusive of the load) belonging to the plaintiffs when crossing the bridge from Howrah station to Calcutta, and also on their bullocks and carts when returning empty from Calcutta to the depot of these dealers in the station premises at Howrah; that it had been the custom to make this charge, it appeared, on carts carrying goods other than coke, coal alone being excepted.

Whereupon the plaintiffs brought these suits, which were heard [262] together, for the purpose above mentioned, but without having given notice of suit as directed by s. 27 of the Howrah Bridge Act.

Messrs. Mullick and Co., the defendants, amongst other matters (which are unnecessary for the purposes of this report), pleaded that the suits would not lie, inasmuch as no notice of suit, in accordance with s. 27 of Bengal Act IX of 1871, had been served upon them.

The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah, before whom the suits were tried, on the facts and construction of the lease and notifications found in favour of the plaintiffs, and held that as the defendants had acted beyond the scope of their authority in exacting these tolls they were not entitled to notice before suit; but in giving the plaintiffs a decree made the same subject to the opinion of the High Court on, amongst others, the following point: Whether under the circumstances of the case the defendants were entitled to notice under s. 27 of Bengal Act IX of 1871.

Mr. O'Kinealcy, for the plaintiffs.—The defendants in exacting the tolls were not acting under the Howrah Bridge Act, but under their lease; they are not therefore entitled to notice. But assuming that they were acting under the Act, they are still not entitled to notice, as the suits are in assumpsit for return of the money paid—Uphelby v. McLean (1) which is a case on all fours with the present cases. The case of Waterhouse v. Keen (1), which will be relied upon by the other side, was not treated as one for money had and received, but as one for a wrong done for which damages were given. The present suits do not come within the class of suits in which notice is necessary—see Shahebzadee Shakhunshah v. Ferguson (2).

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), for the defendants.—The tolls were exacted under the Act; and whether under protest or distress notice is necessary—Waterhouse v. Keen (1); Midland Railway Company v. Withington Local Board (3).

OPINION.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Macpherson, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—These are actions brought by various carriers or coke merchants for the purpose of recovering tolls, which [263] have been levied from them for passing over the bridge, in excess of the powers created by the Act and the notification of the Lieutenant-Governor. The facts of these cases are as follows: At the Howrah station large quantities of goods come in which have to be brought into Calcutta by vehicles which pass over the bridge, in respect of which tolls are levied. When that bridge was constructed provision was made by the Legislature for the levying of tolls, and for the issuing of notifications by the Lieutenant-Governor with reference to those tolls; and one of the provisions was, that certain charges might be made for railway-borne goods coming to Howrah which were to be paid by the Railway Company, and when paid that was to be sufficient, and the goods were to be brought into Calcutta across the bridge without the payment of any extra toll.

Now the cases in respect of which the question arises are cases which come within that provision, so that if they come within the terms of the statute and the terms of the notification the owners of the goods or the persons dealing with them are entitled to bring them into Calcutta without extra toll, and are also entitled to the use of the bridge for the purpose of vehicles which are engaged in carrying the goods to Calcutta if those vehicles come within the statute and the notification. An objection is taken by the Advocate-General in answer to these actions that under s. 27 of Act IX of 1871 no suit of this kind can be maintained against the present defendants, who are the lessees of the Port Commissioners, unless they have had notice given to them within the meaning of the section. The section is in these words: "No suit or other proceeding shall be commenced or prosecuted against any person for anything done or professing or purporting to be done in pursuance of this Act without giving to such person a month's previous notice of the intended proceeding, and of the cause thereof, nor after tender of sufficient amends, nor after the expiration of three months from the accrual of the cause of suit or other proceeding.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that this section does not apply to the case, because it is said that the mere levying of toll is not anything done within the meaning of this section which must mean some wrong committed in pursuance of [264] the powers of the Act for which damages are payable. The learned Advocate-General, on the other hand, contends that these tolls are leviable under the powers of the Act, and whether they are paid under protest, or after levying of distress, or whether they are paid without distress, that Act applies and they are entitled to notice; and he cites in support of that view a case of Waterhouse v. Keen (1), and also the case of Midland Railway Co. v. Withington Local Board (2). The case of Waterhouse v. Keen (1) is directly in point. The facts of that case are almost identical with those of the present case, and as that case is law at the present day I think it is a binding authority upon us; and in the case of the Midland Railway Co. v. Withington Local Board, which was a case in the Court of Appeal, and was decided by the present Master of the Rolls sitting with Lindley, L.J., and Fry, L.J., though the facts of that case are not absolutely identical with the facts of this case, or with the facts of the case of Waterhouse v. Keen, the learned Judges in that case expressly affirm the latter decision. That being so, and the facts of the earlier case being, as I said, almost identical with those of the present case, we are of opinion that that decision is binding upon us, and consequently we hold in accordance with that decision that the defendants were entitled to notice of action; and it being admitted that notice of action was not given, we think that these suits must for that reason be dismissed.

Bikumber Singh (Plaintiff) v. Becharam Sircar (Defendant).

Bikumber Singh (Plaintiff) v. Goti Kristo Das (Defendant).* [27th January, 1888.]

Right of Suit—Slander—Privilege of witness—Slander uttered by witness whilst under examination in a judicial proceeding.

A witness in a Court of Justice is absolutely privileged as to anything [265] he may say as a witness having reference to the enquiry on which he is called as a witness.

The plaintiff sued to recover damages for slander, the statement complained of being alleged in the plaint to have been made by the defendant while being examined as a witness during the hearing of a case before a Magistrate. It was found that the statement was made in answer to questions put to the defendant as a witness and allowed by the Court as relevant to the case. The plaintiff alleged that the statement was made maliciously, that the defendant bore him a grudge, and that it was to give vent to that grudge and to injure his reputation that the statement was made.

Held, that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, and that the suit had been properly dismissed.

These two appeals arose out of two suits brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for slander under the following circumstances. A

*Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 702 and 703 of 1887, against the decrees of G. E. Porter, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 12th of January 1887, affirming the decrees of A. charge of extortion was brought by one Modhu Adhekar against a Sub-Inspector of Police named Poresh Nath Sen, and during the investigation of such charge before the Magistrate of Manbhoom the accused called and examined Becharam Sirer, the defendant in appeal No. 702, who was also a Sub-Inspector of Police, and Goti Kristo Das, defendant in appeal No. 703, who was a Head Constable. They were examined on oath, and in the course of giving their evidence they made certain statements reflecting on the character of the plaintiff, who was the Tekait of Jeypore. Becharam Sirer stated that "of all the persons living within the police jurisdiction the Tekait's character is the worst," and Goti Kristo Das stated that "the Tekait received stolen property and committed murder."

The plaintiff alleged in his plaints that these statements were made in the Police Court of zillah Manbhoom on the 14th September 1885, with a view to vent some grudge which the defendants bore against him and to injure his reputation, and that they were made maliciously and in open Court in the presence of many persons, and that in consequence thereof his reputation had suffered and his feelings been hurt. He accordingly claimed damages from the defendants.

The latter in their written statements pleaded that as they had been cited as witnesses in the Police Court, and bound to appear as such and give true evidence, which they did, they were not liable to be sued by the plaintiff on account of such statements. [266] They denied that they bore the plaintiff any grudge or that the statements complained of had been made maliciously, and on the contrary pleaded that, as they had come to know from various police reports and proceedings in Court that the plaintiff was a man of bad character, they stated so in the witness-box.

At the hearing of the suits before the Deputy Commissioner it was contended that witnesses giving evidence in a judicial proceeding are protected from suits for damages in respect of any statements then made by them, even if such statements are false and malicious.

The issues fixed for trial will be found in the judgment of the High Court.

The Deputy Commissioner held that the suit was not maintainable upon the authority of the Privy Council ruling in Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneram Chowdry (1); and dismissed them with costs.

Upon appeal the Judicial Commissioner delivered the following judgment, confirming the decree of the lower Court:

"I think there can be no doubt, on the authority of the Privy Council ruling referred to by the lower Court, that this suit cannot be maintained. It is urged on appeal that the libel complained of was irrelevant, and the Court is referred to Collett on Torts, pages 53 and 54; but not only was this point never raised in the Court below, but, as a matter of fact, it appears to me that the questions apparently put to the defendant and the answers made by him were quite relevant to the case under enquiry. The facts were this: A complaint of extortion, etc., was made by one Modhu Adhekar against a Sub-Inspector of Police named Poresh Nath Sen. The accused cited as his witnesses Becharam Sirer, another Sub-Inspector of Police, and Goti Kristo Das, a Head Constable. They were examined on oath, and made certain statements reflecting on the character of the plaintiff, who is the Tekait of Jeypore. These statements were undoubtedly made in answer to questions put to the witnesses by the accused or his pleader, and allowed by the Court as relevant to the case. The statements are general ones, and I am clearly of opinion that the defendants in their character of witnesses are protected."

[267] The plaintiff now preferred these second appeals to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J.—These are appeals from the decisions of Mr. Porter, the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur.

The plaintiff brought two separate suits against the two defendants to recover damages for slander. His cause of action he alleged to be this, that the defendants being summoned as witnesses on behalf of a Police Sub-Inspector, who was being prosecuted for extortion, used, in the course of giving their evidence, one of them, that is, the defendant in No. 702, the words: "Of all the persons living within the police jurisdiction of this district the Tekait's (meaning the plaintiff's) character is the worst," and the other, the defendant in No. 703, the words: "The Tekait received stolen property and committed murder." The plaintiff alleged that these statements were made in the Police Court of zillah Manbhoom on the 14th September 1885. He alleged that they were made maliciously; that the defendants bore the plaintiff a grudge; and it was to give vent to that grudge and to injure the plaintiff's reputation that the words in question were uttered.

The written statements alleged that the defendants were cited as witnesses in the Police Court, and were bound to appear there as such witnesses, and to give true evidence, which they did. They also denied that the words were used maliciously. They denied the existence of any enmity between the plaintiff and defendants; and they also denied that the plaintiff had sustained any damages by reason of the words being used.

The Deputy Commissioner, before whom the case came on for trial in the first instance, framed the following issues: "First, whether or not the suit can proceed without previous notice? Second, whether or not the defendant as a witness giving [268] evidence in a judicial proceeding is absolutely protected from a suit for the damages? Third, whether plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of false statements maliciously made by defendant, and is entitled to recover damages; if so, to what amount? Or whether the defendant, having made the said statements bona fide, and being bound to make them as a witness, is not liable to a suit for damages, and is entitled to his costs?"

The Judicial Commissioner in the course of his judgment says "These statements (that is to say, the statements made by the defendants) were undoubtedly made in answer to questions put to the witnesses by the accused or his pleader, and allowed by the Court as relevant to the case."

It has been objected on second appeal that there is absolutely no evidence on the record to warrant this conclusion arrived at by the Judicial Commissioner.
It appears to us that the plaint as framed discloses no cause of action. The case Seaman v. Netherclift (1) lays down that "a witness in a Court of Justice is absolutely privileged as to anything he may say as a witness having reference to the enquiry on which he is called as a witness." And we think that the allegation in the plaint that the alleged slanders were uttered by the defendants in giving their evidence in the Police Court shows that the words in question were made use of by the defendants as witnesses in a Court of Justice with reference to the enquiry on which they were called as witnesses. That being so, the plaint discloses no cause of action.

Secondly, we are of opinion that the proceedings show that the parties went to trial upon the basis of the assumption that the alleged slanderous statements were made in the witness box, and were made by the defendants in giving their evidence in the course of judicial enquiry to which they were properly summoned. And we think that there can be no doubt that the Judicial Commissioner must have had before him, if not actual evidence at any rate admissions of the parties at the time the appeals were argued in this Court which would justify him in the observations he has made with regard to the circumstances under which the alleged slanders were uttered.

[269] For these reasons we are of opinion that there is no ground for interfering with the judgment of the lower appellate Court in either of these cases. We accordingly dismiss the appeals with costs.

In the exercise of its powers under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the High Court will form and act upon its own view of what the evidence in its judgment proves; but, in doing so, the opinion of the Sessions Judge, no less than the verdict of the jury, is entitled to its proper weight.

Itwari Saho was placed on his trial in June 1887, before the Court of Sessions at Patna, charged with having in April 1885, sold as genuine to Lalla Sahu a forged Government Currency Note No. 26150 for Rs. 50. Some three months after the alleged date of sale, it was discovered in the Bank of Bengal at Lucknow that the note was a forgery. On enquiry, the note was traced by means of the endorsements upon it to a merchant [270] of Rajapore in the district of Banda, to whom it had been sent by Lalla Sahu in payment of a current account for cotton bought. It was alleged that the note, when it passed into the hands of Lalla Sahu, bore the following endorsements: (1) Note sold by Saniehar Saho Teli to Lakha Saho; (2) note sold by Lakha Saho to Damri Saho and Saniehar Saho; (3) note sold by Damri Ram Saniehar Ram, Suri of Bardari, to Lall Ram. The first two were said to form one entry, but none of the entries bore any date. On further investigation it was found that there was an entry in Lalla Saho's book under the heading "account with Nowratan Das Dwarika Prosad, of Rajapore, Sambut 1941," to the following effect: "Rs. 140, Second day of the first part of Bysakh, Rs. 50 note purchased from Damri, Saniehar, Itwari, Suri of Badari, one note No. 26150, small number 39 Rs. 90, nine notes." Itwari was then searched for but not found, and not until March 1887 was arrested by the chowkidar of Luckhiserai at Kugra, eight miles from that place. Itwari Saho, it was discovered, had two brothers, Damri and Saniehar. By these, jointly with him, a business in the name of Damri Ram Saniehar Ram was carried on in Behar, in Bardari Bazaar, where they had a place of business, and also in Luckhiserai. Itwari was the only one of the three who could write, and was in the habit of writing for the firm in the business carried on by them. He was chiefly in Luckhiserai where the principal place of business was; but he travelled about from place to place in the transaction of business. At the trial the prisoner was defended by two vakeels. He called no witnesses. He simply denied the sale, and said he had been separate from his brothers for three years. Upon the conclusion of the evidence and argument, the Sessions Judge explained the case to the jury, a body of five, who, after retiring for half an hour, returned, and in answer to questions put by the Judge, the foreman stated, (1) they were unanimous that the note was forged; (2) three found it not proved that the prisoner sold the note, not proved that the second endorsement on the note was written by him, two found that he did sell the note and wrote the endorsement; (3) three found it not proved that he absconded, two found it proved that he did; (4) four found that the first endorsement was written by the same hand as the [271] second, one found the contrary. The two who found the prisoner did sell the note had come to no finding whether he did so knowing it to be forged, and the jury was then desired to retire—the two, who found prisoner had sold the note, to find whether he did so knowing it to be forged, and as to all the jury for a finding whether the sale to Damri Saniehar stated in the first endorsement took place. In answer, the foreman said: "Only one, myself, finds it proved that accused when he sold the note knew it to be forged." They all found that the sales stated in the first endorsement never took place. The findings amounted to an acquittal by the majority, and the Sessions Judge disagreeing with the verdict submitted the case to the High Court under s. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mr. C. Gregory, for Itwari Saho.

Baboo Ram Churn Mitter, for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Pigot, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This case comes before us under the provisions of s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code. The charge against the prisoner was that on April 1st, 1885, he, at Naga Serai, Behar, dishonestly sold as genuine a forged valuable security which purported to be a currency note for Rs. 50 issued on behalf of the Government of India, which he knew or had reason to believe to be a forged document, and thereby committed an offence against ss. 467-471, Indian Penal Code. The prisoner was committed for trial on March 31st, 1887. He was tried at the Patna Sessions on the 16th, 17th and 18th June 1887. There was no question seriously raised as to the fact that the note, which the prisoner was charged with having dishonestly sold, was a forgery. The jury unanimously found that it was, and the appearance of the exhibit leaves no doubt of this. The questions raised in the case were: (1) whether the prisoner sold the note as alleged; and (2) whether he did so knowing, or having reason to believe, it to be forged. The findings of the jury, to which we shall presently refer in detail, amount, in effect, to an acquittal by a majority.

The prisoner has two brothers, Damri and Sanichar. By them, jointly with him, a business in the name of Damri Ram, Sanichar [272] Ram was carried on in Behar in Bardari Bazaar where they had a place of business, and also in Luckhiserai. The prisoner was the only one of the three who could write. It is in evidence that he habitually wrote for the firm in the business carried on by them. He frequented Behar, where he was well known. He was chiefly in Luckhiserai, where their principal place of business was, and he travelled about from place to place in the transaction of business. Lakhapskad or Lallaprosad, the principal witness for the prosecution, is a cotton-seller in Behar. He deposes to having purchased the forged note from the prisoner. He says he has known the prisoner for 10 or 15 years. He had never before this occasion purchased notes from him, but had done so from his brother Damri Ram. He says prisoner came to his house, which is about a mile from his (Lakha’s) shop and near to the prisoner’s house, in Behar, and offered him the note for sale; that he agreed to buy it, and asked prisoner to endorse it, but as he had no ink in his house, he took him to the house of Bandu (witness No. 4); that Bandu had no pen and ink, whereupon they went to Tita Ram’s (witness No. 5), and that the prisoner endorsed the note at that place in the presence of Tita Ram, Monohar Dass and Dipu Halwai (witnesses Nos. 6 and 7). He says he then paid prisoner the Rs. 50, took the note, and went to his shop, meeting on the way, while prisoner was still with him, Uzir Makouri (witness No. 8), who he says, was told then of the purchase, and who in his evidence says that he then saw the note, and the endorsements on it, in the street. Lakhapskad says he never saw prisoner after this. The endorsement (Exhibit X) said to have been made by prisoner on this occasion is as follows: “They are ‘note’ sold by Damri, Ram, Sanichar Ram, Tari of Bardari, to Lall Ram.” There is no date to it. The witness says that at the time of the sale there was already on the note the endorsement (Exhibit W), which is written on it, and which is as follows: “Note sold by Sanichar Saho Teli to Lakha Saho, note sold by Lakha Saho, to Damri Saho and Sanichar Saho.” This is all one entry (as the translator calls it), and there is no date to it. As to this endorsement, the jury, upon the evidence, have unanimously found that the note was never in Lakha Saho’s possession, and that Sanichar Teli never sold it. There can be no doubt that W is a forgery.

[273] Witnesses Nos. 5 and 8 corroborate Lalla as to W’s having been already on the note when the sale took place, and also as to the fact of X having been written by prisoner, and, as to the latter, No. 7 does the same. But No. 5, Tita Ram, in his evidence mistook W for X, and identified W as the endorsement written by prisoner, and the evidence of all the witnesses, Nos. 4 to 7, who depose to having witnessed the sale, and of No. 8, who saw the note in the street, is open to damaging comment, as showing a recollection, strangely minute and precise, of circumstances which occurred long ago, and which there was no reason for their committing to memory.

The witness Lakhaprosad says that, on the purchase of the note, he at once despatched it in a registered cover to his servant, Tara Ram, to Rajapore in zilla Banda, with other notes of Rs. 10 each, amounting in all to Rs. 140. Tara Ram stays at Rajapore at the place of business of one Nowrattan with whom Lakha has dealings. Lakhaprosad says that at the time he despatched the notes he made an entry (Exhibit H in the case) in his book. It is as follows: On a page headed "account with Nowrattan Das, Dwarikaprosad of Rajapore, Sambat 1941 Rs. 140, second day of the first part of Baisakh, Rs. 50 note purchased from Damri, Sanichar, Itvari Suris of Bardari, one note No. 26,150 small number 39, Rs. 90, nine notes. He says the object of that entry was to show what notes he despatched to that firm in payment of any purchases. The note bears an endorsement (Exhibit Y in the case) "Lall Pershad by the pen of Tara Ram." There is no date to it. The endorsement is in Tara Ram's handwriting. It is followed by an endorsement in these words: "Signed by Nowrattan Ram, Dwarikaprosad by the pen of Ramnarain Gomastha," no date. There is no proof as to the handwriting of this entry. With reference to the date of Exhibit H, second day of the first part of Baisakh, Lakhaprosad says this would be 1942. The entry comes after entries for Chait 1941. That would be 1885. A number of entries of purchase of notes follow this entry. The first is 11th Baisakh. All, save one, record the number of the notes purchased as H does.

The note was found to be forged, and in July 1885 the police [274] visited Lakhaprosad's shop in Behar. He showed them Exhibit X in his book, went with them to the thannah, was there shown the note, and said he had sent it to Rajapore: that he had bought of Damri Sanichar and Itvari (the prisoner), and that Itvari was the person who actually sold it. Search was then made for Itvari, but he was not found until March last, when he was arrested by the chowkidar of Luckhisera, at Kugra, eight miles from that place.

The evidence as to the fact of the sale by the prisoner is that of the witnesses we have above referred to, Lakhaprosad, and witnesses Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8, who corroborate him; Nos. 5, 6 and 7 depose to having seen prisoner endorse the note No. 8, Uzir Saho, who met Lakha and prisoner in the street, says he then saw the endorsement. He says, too, that he knows prisoner's writing well, and that X is in his handwriting. There was contradictory evidence as to whether W was in prisoner's hand or not.

As to guilty knowledge, the fact, if proved, that W, the forged endorsement, to prisoner's firm, was on the note when he sold it, would be conclusive if unexplained. A part of the case for the prosecution was that prisoner had absconded when it became known in Behar that the note had been found to be forged. This was about three or four months after the sale by him is said to have taken place. His absconding under these circumstances, and keeping or being out of the way until arrested one and three-quarter year afterwards, would strengthen, if unexplained, the presumption of guilty knowledge. The prisoner was defended by two vakheels.

He called no witnesses. He simply denied the sale and said he had been separate from his brothers for three years.

The case was, we think, explained to the jury in satisfactory manner by the Sessions Judge. The jury, after retiring for half an hour, returned, and in answer to questions put by the Court, the foreman stated: They were unanimous the note was forged. Three found it not proved that prisoner sold the note; not proved that X was written by him. Two found that he did sell the note and wrote X when he sold it. Three found it not proved that he absconded; two found it proved that he did. Four found [275] that W was written by the same hand as X; one found the contrary. The two who found prisoner did sell the note had come to no finding whether he did so knowing it to be forged. They were then desired to retire; the two, who found prisoner had sold the note, to find whether he did so, knowing it to be forged; and as to all the jury, for a finding whether the sale to Damri Sanichar stated in W took place. In answer the foreman said: 'Only one, myself, finds it proved that accused when he sold the note knew it to be forged.' They all found that the sales stated in W never took place. These findings amount to an acquittal by a majority. With this the Judge wholly disagrees, and submits the case under s. 307.

It is argued for the accused that the verdict cannot be set aside unless it can be shown to be perverse and manifestly wrong, and that as there are certainly infirmities in the evidence for the prosecution in the present case, the jury cannot be said to have been perverse in rejecting the whole case made against the prisoner. The Empress v. Dhunum Kaze (1), Queen-Empress v. Mania Dayal (2), and Solomon v. Bitton (3), were cited by the pleader for the accused. The vakel for the prosecution relied on Empress v. Mukhun Kumar (4) amongst others. The Empress v. Dhunum Kaze (1) and Queen-Empress v. Mania Dayal (2) were cases in which the Court did not disagree with the verdict. In each case, the Court, on the whole, approved of the verdict. They are not authorities for the position that the Court, although disagreeing with the verdict, will not set it aside unless it appears to be perverse. In Reg v. Bajirav Bajirav (5) West, J., says, referring to s. 263 of the former Code of Criminal Procedure: "The whole case is opened up.  The functions of both Judge and jury are cast upon the Court and this differentiates our position very widely from that of the Courts in England." That very learned Judge adds: "Notwithstanding this difference however we still desire to be guided, as far as may be, by the analogies of the English law. It is a well-recognized principle that the Courts in England will [276] not set aside the verdict of a jury unless it be perverse or patently wrong, or may have been induced by the error of the Judge. We adhere generally to this principle, notwithstanding our large discretionary powers." We think that the argument founded on these words may be pressed too far. No doubt, the manner in which English Courts deal with the verdict of a jury in civil cases, as for instance Belcher v. Prittie (6), must always to some extent assist the Courts in this country in the exercise of the duty imposed upon them by law of considering under s. 307, in criminal cases, the verdict of a jury here: a body similar in some respects to the jury in England and intended, so far as can be, to discharge similar functions. But we think the degree of influence to be given to this consideration must depend in some measure upon the closeness of the analogy which may exist between the nature and functions of the English and of the Indian tribunals. Apart from the circumstance that the English law on this subject relates to civil, and the Indian to criminal cases, exclusively, the analogy is not always a close analogy. The unanimous verdict of a jury of twelve is in respect of weight a different thing from the decision by a majority or even from the unanimous decision of a body of five or seven or nine. The Indian Courts are expressly made Courts of Appeal on facts; the functions of the English Court in this branch of the law go no higher, in cases where verdicts are set aside, than the ordering of a new trial. The present Lord Chancellor says in the last case decided in the House of Lords on this subject—Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Wright (1): “If a Court not a Court of Appeal in which the facts are open for original judgment, but a Court which is not a Court to review facts at all, can grant a new trial whenever it thinks that reasonable men ought to have found another verdict, it seems to me that they must form and act upon their own view of what the evidence in their judgment proves.” We refer to the passage, because it marks in vigorous language, in the early portion of it, the distinction between the two classes of tribunals to which the English and the Indian Courts do, in this matter respectively, belong; and perhaps in the latter indicates that Courts which have to decide [277] on facts can hardly abstain from examining all the evidence and forming their own view of it. The case in which these observations were made seems rather to modify the terms of the old English rule as stated in Reg v. Khanderao Bajirao (2). The word “perverse” is no longer approved. Lord Fitz Gerald in The Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Wright (1) says: “If my recollection does not mislead me, we have departed in this house in several instances from the old rule which introduced the element of ‘perversity,’ and have substituted for it that the verdict should not be disturbed unless it appeared to be not only unsatisfactory but unreasonable and unjust. The question, thus, for your Lordships’ consideration is whether the evidence so preponderates against the verdict as to show that it was unreasonable and unjust.” Lord Herschell, L. C. says: “The verdict ought not to be disturbed unless it was one which a jury viewing the whole of the evidence reasonably could not properly find.” A rule which should apply by analogy to the consideration of cases under s. 307, the principle laid down by the Lords, would seem somewhat less peremptory and confined than one framed upon the terms of the older cases. But we own that we should find it difficult, apart from any authority in this Court, to hold (at any rate as to s. 307) that any rule founded upon an analogy should be adopted in restriction of the exercise of the discretion of the Courts. There is an essential difference between the functions of the Courts in the two cases. The English Court has no power of finding on facts in any case. That is a power expressly given to, or rather imposed upon, the Indian. A complete analogy between the two will arise, if the latter refuses to exercise that power. In Reg v. Khanderao Bajirao (2) it is to be observed that the language of the Court is very carefully guarded, more so than that which has been (at least in the head-notes of cases) subsequently used,—“we desire to be guided, as far as may be, by the analogies of English law,” “we adhere generally to this principle;” and later on “it is our duty to satisfy ourselves that the verdict is proper or at least sustainable.”

CRIMINAL REFERENCE,

15 C. 269.
In Mukhun Kumar (1) four cases are referred to by Markby, J., [278] in his judgment—The Queen v. Ram Churn Ghose (2); The Queen v. Sham Bagdi (3); The Queen v. Haroo Manjhee (4); The Queen v. Wuzir Mundul (5). There was one not referred to by him—The Queen v. Nobin Chunder Banerjee (6). In the first and fifth of these cases, the verdict of the jury was set aside. In the second and third, in which there does not appear from the short reports to have been argument in Court, the verdict was sustained. In the fourth, Wuzir Mundul’s case the Court expressly agreed with the jury and sustained the verdict. In these cases the learned Judges expressed substantially the same view, which, to use the words of the last case, Wuzir Mundul’s, is that “the verdict of a jury should not be interfered with, except where there is a gross and unmistakeable miscarriage of justice.” Markby, J., while agreeing generally with the opinions expressed by the learned Judges in these cases, points out that “we cannot lay down any fixed rules for the exercise of the discretion” of the Court. Chief Justice Garth in his judgment dissented from the view taken in Wuzir Mundul’s case. He states his opinion as follows: “In the consideration of this case two questions have suggested themselves to my learned brothers and myself, which appeared to be of very general importance. First, how far this Court is justified, in a case referred under s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in convicting a prisoner contrary to the express and unexplained finding of a jury; and, secondly, whether this Court has power under that section to order a new trial. With regard to the first of these questions, it appears to me that by that section the Legislature intended to vest in the High Court a very large discretion; and that it would be improper for us, if not impossible, to lay down any fixed rule by which that discretion should be controlled. The verdict of a jury, who are the legally constituted judges of facts, and have the advantage of seeing the case tried and of hearing the witnesses examined, ought always, in my opinion, to command its proper weight; and the more unanimous their verdict may be, and the less likely to have been induced or influenced by pre- [279] judge or error, the more entitled it should be to our respect and consideration. But there may be many occasions where, as it seems to me, little or no weight should be attached to their verdict; as, for instance, where, out of a jury of five, three are of one way of thinking and two of another, and the presiding Judge agrees with the minority; or where it is manifest, from the conduct of the jury or otherwise, that their minds have been influenced by a prejudice which has prevented them from forming a correct judgment. In the exercise, therefore, of my own discretion in cases coming before us under this section, I should not go so far as to hold with Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Morris in Wuzir Mundul’s case (5) ‘that the verdict of a jury should not be interfered with, except where there is a gross and unmistakeable miscarriage of justice.’ Nor, on the other hand, should I consider myself justified in deciding any case according to my own views of the evidence, without giving to the verdict of the jury its proper weight. Each case in my view of the section should depend on its own circumstances.” We agree in thinking that this passage states, as closely as it would be safe to do, the sort of weight which should be given to the verdict of a jury in a case referred under s. 307; and would but add to what is said by the Chief Justice

this further consideration that, having regard to the terms of the section, the opinion of the Judge, who has had, as well as the jury, an opportunity of observing the witnesses, and has also had an opportunity of watching the whole course of the trial, must have due weight given to it.

In Mukhun Kumar’s case the Court set aside an acquittal, convicted of murder, and sentenced the accused to be hanged. It was in every way a decision which must be supposed to have been present to the mind of the Legislature when the new Code of Criminal Procedure was passed. There is no indication, however, in that Code of any intention that the discretion of the Court should be limited in the manner approved of in some of the older cases, and disapproved of in Mukhun Kumar’s case; and we think that the Legislature must have intended that the powers conferred by s. 307 should be fully—as they must, no doubt, be [280] cautiously—exercised. We have referred to a large number of unreported cases under s. 263 of the Code of 1872, subsequent to 1878 and under s. 307 of the present Code of 1882, the latest being in February of this year before Petheram, C. J., and Cunningham, J., with the result that the Judges have not expressed themselves so as to limit the exercise of the discretion of the Court in each case coming before it.

We have given in this case full weight to the verdict, and to the opinion of the Judge and the reasons given by him for it; and we now state our opinion. Upon the cardinal point in the case, namely, the sale by prisoner, the Judge and two jurors hold it proved. The three other jurors say it is not proved. We think the latter are wrong. We have considered the evidence with care, and we think their view can only be justified by attributing an excessive weight to those unfavourable comments to which, to a certain extent, the evidence for the prosecution is open. Tita Ram’s evidence, no doubt, is discredited. The evidence of Monohur and of Wazir, as well as that of Tita Ram, is suspiciously minute. But in this country it is not always safe wholly to discard evidence, a part of which may be open to suspicion. It may be that the details given by the witnesses for the prosecution of the circumstances of the sale are suggested to them by one who remembers the transaction better than they can do. But it is not unlikely, if the sale did take place, that they should have some sort of recollection of it. The “goolmal” about the note occurred not very long—about three or four months—after the alleged sale, and caused much stir in Behar. We cannot see any good reason for wholly rejecting these witnesses, though we should not rely on their evidence alone. But without it, we think, the case against the prisoner is supported by strong evidence. The names of Damri and Sanichar were certainly on the note when it was sent by Lalla to Rajapore, in the district of Banda. There can be only one conjecture, and it would be only a conjecture, suggested as a reason for doubting this part of the case, namely, that Lalla himself is guilty. But this, apart from any other, is negatived by his acts at the time. He puts the note in circulation in his own name, through his servants in Rajapore. He records the number of the note in his book. We [281] have examined the entry H closely; we have heard it criticised in argument. We see no reason to doubt its genuineness. When the note is found to be forged Lalla at once admits that he sold it. He says at once he got it from prisoner. Either Itwari’s name is fraudulently inserted in H by Lalla, to support this story, or H strongly corroborates him. Now if Itwari’s name was so inserted, it can only have been by writing the whole page over again. An examination of the page, and of the position of Itwari’s name in it, where it is partly in one line and partly in another, and where the entries all fit in exactly, shows this. What time was there for Lalla to do this? Supposing he had time and opportunity to do it, why should he do it? Why not name Damri and Sanichar? If Lalla’s story is false, he must, unless he is in league with the police so as to have had an opportunity given him of concocting H, have heard of the notes being forged before the police went to his house, have prepared H for the purpose of charging Itwari, have had his story ready then, and have then, or since, secured the complicity of the other witnesses in a nefarious conspiracy. Why should he? There is no reason suggested for his naming Itwari untruthly. Assuming it to be a matter of absolute indifference to him, whether or not he commits forgery, perjury and subornation of perjury, why should he take all this trouble? Again the note, after having passed through several hands, was stopped by the Bank at Lucknow. It is not suggested that Lalla had any dealings or communication with Lucknow, and therefore it is very unlikely that he heard more of this note after he despatched it until it was put into the hands of the police.

In expressing dissent from a conclusion upon facts come to by other minds, we are indisposed, when we can avoid it, to use epithets as a mode of signifying that dissent. We should not say that the three jurors are either perverse, or manifestly wrong, or unreasonable. But we do say, that we think the evidence so much preponderates against their opinion, that we disagree with the verdict. We think it proved that Itwari sold the notes. We also agree with the two jurors who found that he had absconded. The evidence, we think, proves this. We cannot account for the negative finding on this point of the other three [282] save on the supposition that they supposed that to establish this it was necessary that proof should be given that he had been actually seen in the act of absconding, which is not the case. His absconding, under the circumstances, is itself strong evidence of guilty knowledge. But W. is conclusive. It is immaterial whether he wrote it or not. It seems probable that he did, though he should not find against the opinion of the jurors on this point. But he sells a note purporting by an endorsement on it to have been sold to his firm, and it is proved that it was not sold to his firm by the persons named in the endorsement. The conclusion is irresistible. Upon the evidence, we find that he sold the note knowing or having reason to believe it to be forged. We convict him, therefore, under ss. 467 and 471, Indian Penal Code. As to the sentence, the offence is a very serious one, and is calculated to do almost incalculable injury to the public. For the protection of the mass of the trading community whose whole business would become disorganised by such a crime as this unless severely repressed, we think it necessary to impose a very severe sentence, and we sentence Itwari to rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

OKHOYMONEY DASEE (Plaintiff) v. NILMONEY MULLICK (Defendant).* [2nd December, 1887.]

Will—Construction—Gift over on failure of prior devise.

A testator made the following disposition by his will: "I appoint my brother N sole executor of my estate and effects after my decease, who shall pay all my debts and collect all outstandings. My wife is supposed to be in the family way. Should she bring forth a male, in that case he will be the sole heir of my property and effects on his attaining proper age. If, on the other hand she is delivered of a female child, all the expenses of her marriage or maintenance till that period should be defrayed from my estate. I also wish that she should receive a legacy of a Government 4% promissory note for Rs. 2,000 on her attaining proper age. In case my son dies before attaining proper age, all my estate and property should be taken possession of by my brother. My wife is to receive a Government 4% promissory note for Rs. 1,000 as a legacy, and is to be maintained from my estate if she continues to live in our family dwelling house under my brother's protection."

The child with which the widow was en ci ente turned out to be a daughter: Held, that the clause in italics was one purporting to give the property, and not only the management of it, to N, the power of management having already been given him in appointing him executor; that the provisions for maintenance of the widow, and for the marriage expenses of the daughter, tended to show (putting aside the legacies) that the widow and daughter were not to take the larger estate which they would have successively taken as heiresses. and that the wife of the testator not having borne to him a son, and the apparent intention of the testator having been to give the estate to N, if the son did not take, or if the estate to the son failed by reason of his not attaining proper age, the gift over to N. on the principle laid down in Jones v. Westcomb, (1), took effect on failure of the gift to the son, even though such failure was not in the precise manner expressed in the terms of the gift.

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Trevelyan, dated the 11th July, 1887.

This was a suit brought on the 14th December, 1885, by one Okhoymoney Dasee, the widow of Hurrynarain Mullick, against Nilmoney Mullick, a brother of her late husband and sole executor of his will, to set aside the will of her late husband, or in the alternative to have it declared that, notwithstanding the will, she was, in consequence of a failure in the provisions thereof, entitled to the property referred to therein as heiress.

Hurrynarain died on the 25th December 1860, having made a will in the English language, which was as follows: "I, Hurrynarain Mullick, of Colootollah, in the town of Calcutta, in sound mind make this my last will and testament, and appoint my brother Nilmoney Mullick the sole executor of my estate and effects after my decease (which God forbid) who shall pay all my legal debts and collect all my outstandings. That my wife is supposed to be in the family way; should she bring forth a male issue in that case he will be the sole heir of my property and effects on his attaining proper age. If, on the other hand, she is delivered of a female child, all the expenses of her marriage and maintenance till that period should be defrayed from my estate. I also wish that she shall receive a legacy of a Government four per cent. promissory note for Company's rupees two thousand on her attaining proper age. In case my son dies before attaining proper age, all my estate and property should be taken possession of by my brother Nilmoney Mullick.

"My wife is to receive a Government four per cent. promissory note for Company's rupees one thousand as legacy, and she is to be maintained from my estate if she continues to live in our family dwelling-house under my brother's protection. Company's rupees two hundred is to be given to the District Charitable Society of Calcutta."

Hurrynarain at his death left him surviving the defendant, his eldest and only surviving brother, and the plaintiff, who was then of the age of fifteen, and who was then enciente, his sole widow, and she in due course, after the death of the said Hurrynarain, gave birth to a daughter named Soudaminee, who in March 1872 was married to one Manick Lall Dhur, to whom she bore a son Vasudev, on the 1st November 1884.

On the death of Hurrynarain the defendant took out probate, of the said will, and took possession of all the property, moveable and immoveable, of which Hurrynarain had died possessed.

On the 14th December 1885, the plaintiff brought this suit against Nilmoney for the purposes above mentioned, alleging certain matters, other than those mentioned above, for the purpose of showing that limitation did not run against her, but which facts it is unnecessary to set out for the purpose of this report, which is one on the construction of the will of Hurrynarain.

The defendant claimed to be entitled under the will to the property left by Hurrynarain, but contended that whether or no the will gave the property to him, yet in any case the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation.

Mr. Justice Trevelyan, before whom the case came on for hearing, after stating that the two points for decision were, (1) what was the true construction of the will of Hurrynarain, and (2) was the plaintiff's claim barred by limitation, was of opinion on [285] the first point that the will should be treated rather as a Bengali will than as an English one; that the class of cases headed by Jones v. Westcomb (1) did not have any real application to the case, the real question in determining the construction of the will being what was the intention of the testator. That it was clear that, unless the heirress was distinctly disinherited by the will, and her heritage clearly given to some one else, she must succeed on the issue as to what was the construction of the will.

That the clause "in case my son dies before attaining proper age all my estate and property should be taken possession of by my brother Nilmoney Mullick," did not show any intention by the testator to give his brother any beneficial interest in the property, Bengali wills making usually a clear distinction between possession and ownership; a right of ownership being denoted by the word malik, or in the case of a will, like the present, by its English equivalent owner or proprietor, and the gift made more evident by some such expression as "no one shall raise any objection;" that, on the other hand, where mere possession of an executor or manager was intended to be conferred, an expression such as dakhilikar, or its English equivalent possession, was used; but that the word possession, as used in the present will, meant the possession of an executor or manager, and that there being no beneficial gift to Nilmoney Mullick, there was an intestacy as to the residue of the property, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed as heiress. But, on the second point, viz., that of limitation, the learned Judge held that the plaintiff's suit was barred except so far as the legacy of Rs. 1,000 was concerned, under s. 123 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, and therefore dismissed her suit.

The plaintiff appealed on the point of limitation, and the defendant preferred a cross appeal on the ground that an erroneous construction had been put upon the will, the devise over being good.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) Mr. Pugh, and Mr. Bonnerjee, for the appellant.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Stokoe, for the respondent and cross-appellant.

[286] Such of the arguments of Counsel on either side as did not refer to the question of construction of the will have been omitted, the decision of the appellate Court turning only on the point of construction.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and Mr. Pugh opened on the question of limitation.

Mr. Woodroffe for the cross-appellant and respondent.—The Court below, whilst holding rightly on limitation, has erred on the construction of the will in not holding that the estate vested in the defendant under the will. The testator did not mean his son to take unless he attained majority, nor did he mean that any daughter that should be born should take the property. The defendant was in possession as executor from the moment of the testator’s death; the words "taken possession of" indicate that the possession which was to be taken by the defendant in a certain event was of a different character from that under which he was holding before; the wife's legacy clause stands apart from the other portions of the will; there is nothing to sever the maintenance from the legacy if she continued to live in the family dwelling-house. As to the meaning of the words "in case my son dies before attaining proper age," see Tudor’s, L. C. on Real Property, 769; Jones v. Westcomb (1), which lays down that a devise is good even if the contingency on which the devise is to take effect does not happen; see also Warren v. Rudall (2). There cannot be a devise over after a devise to a non-entity; the testator cannot have proposed that if there was no son that the son non-existent should attain 21. Section 116 of the Succession Act illustrates a case of the same class as Jones v. Westcomb (1), and that section has been incorporated into the Hindu Wills Act. See also Hall v. Warren (3); Azelyn v. Ward (4); Mackninon v. Sewell (5). I submit the clause in the present will should be read "in the event of my wife not having a son at all, or not attaining full age, to my brother."

[287] Mr. Pugh.—The English authorities are no guide, save so far as laying down the principle that you are to see what are the intentions of the testator. I submit (1), unless there are clear works disinheriting the heir, he cannot be disinherited; (2), that there is no gift in the words

"taken possession of;" (3), that there was no intention on part of testator to disinherit his widow and daughter; and (4), that there is no beneficial gift to Nilmoney, possession being treated as distinct from ownership.

There cannot be in Hindu law a contingent gift of this kind with no intervening estate; a gift of the fee, not to come into operation until ten years after the death of the testator, is void, inasmuch as there is an intermediate estate, and the heir would have come in, and he cannot be turned out again. An estate cannot be left without an owner even for a time—see Kumara Asima Krishna Deb v. Kumara Kumara Krishna Deb (1). The right of succession under Hindu law is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property. Mayne, paras. 422, 515. [Wilson, J.—The question is not whether there is an intention to disinherit the heir, but whether there is an apparent intention to give to some one else.] In the case of Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankwarbai (2), the words of the will were stronger than the words here, and it was held that the heir was not disinherited. Section 116 of the Succession Act is not intended to interfere with the Tagore case, that section included cases of lapse, which are not included in the English cases on which the section is supposed to be founded. A second gift never takes effect unless the first gift has become indefeasible—see Theobald on Wills (3rd Ed.), 446.

[Petheram, C. J.—The case of Doc d. Hunt v. Moore (3) seems to be in point.] In Montriou’s Hindu Law, p. 129, there is a form of a will given in which the testator wished to cut out his daughter and daughter’s son.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Wilson J., (Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J., concurring)—This was a suit brought by one Okheyomoney Dasee, the [288] widow of a person named Hurrynaram Mullick, who died on the 25th December 1860, having previously made his will. She claims to be entitled to her husband’s property as his heir, and asks in the first place, practically, that the will be set aside. Then in the alternative she prays, notwithstanding the will, to have it declared that there has been a failure in the provisions of the will, and, consequently, an intestacy under which she is entitled.

The defendant is a brother of the deceased, and claims to be entitled under the provisions of the will of the deceased to the property left by him. A second defence was raised, viz., that whether the will did or did not give the property to the defendant, the plaintiff’s suit is barred by limitation.

The learned Judge who heard the case came to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the terms of the will, the plaintiff as his heiress-at-law was really entitled to his property, the property not passing to the defendant under the will; but he held, on the other hand, that the plaintiff’s suit was barred by limitation, and accordingly dismissed the suit. Before us the argument has gone on both of these questions, and I propose to deal with the principal question—the question which goes to the merits of the case, viz., under the will and in the events that have happened, who really did become entitled to this property? The terms of the will, so far as they are material, are these: "I appoint my brother Nilmoney

Mullick my sole executor of my estate and effects after my decease, who shall pay all my legal debts and collect all outstandings;" and then it goes on: "My wife is supposed to be in the family way. Should she bring forth a male issue, in that case he will be my sole heir of my property and effects on his attaining proper age. If, on the other hand, she is delivered of a female child, all the expenses of her marriage and maintenance till that period should be defrayed from my estate. I also wish that she shall receive a legacy of a Government four per cent. promissory note for Company's rupees two thousand on her attaining proper age." Then comes the important clause: "In case my son dies before attaining proper age, all my estate and property should be taken possession of by my brother Nilmoney Mullick." He then goes on: "My wife is to receive a Government four per cent. [289] promissory note for Company's rupees one thousand as legacy, and she is to be maintained from my estate if she continues to live in our family dwelling-house under my brother's protection." He also gives Rs. 200 to the District Charitable Society, and there the will ends. The precise portion of the will which we have now to construe is that in which he says, in case the son dies before attaining majority all his estate should be taken possession of by his brother Nilmoney Mullick. But that clause cannot be construed unless it be read in connection with the other clauses of the will.

The first question with reference to that clause is: Is it a clause purporting to give any property to Nilmoney at all, or, is it, as the learned Judge in the Court below has held, only a clause relating to management. I think it is a clause purporting to give the property, and I think so principally for these reasons. By appointing Nilmoney as executor of the will, and directing satisfaction of certain charges out of the property, I think, whatever may be the legal position of an executor according to the ordinary rules of Hindu law, he meant to give the executor such powers of management as were necessary for discharging those duties which he has imposed upon him by the will. Amongst those duties is the duty of providing for the maintenance of the widow, and the maintenance and marriage expenses of the daughter. And that maintenance was to be provided by Nilmoney, and by nobody else, as appears clearly from the condition as to the widow residing under his protection in the family dwelling-house. Thus by appointing Nilmoney as executor of this will he had, as it seems to me, already given him all the power of control that was necessary for the purposes of the will. To me it appears that if you read the latter clause which is said to be one of mere management, as a clause of mere management, you practically give no effect to that portion of the will, because, as I said before, all the powers necessary for carrying out the trusts of the will had been given already, and no powers of mere management not necessary for the purposes of the will could be given as against an heir-at-law who claims not under the will but adversely. The result would be to reduce the provision to a dead letter, and we ought not to construe the clauses of a will in such [290] a way as to bring about that result, if we can construe them in such a way as to make them operative. There are other clauses of the will tending to show that the words in question are a gift of property. In the first place, I do not agree with the learned Judge who heard the case in thinking that the specific legacies and bequests given to the widow and daughter afford no indication that the property has passed away from them. I think the provision for the maintenance of the widow and marriage expenses of the daughter tend to show, putting aside the legacies, that they were not to take the larger estate which they would take successively as heiresses, and which would of course include everything that was given them. The clause, again, which says that the widow is to be maintained if she continues to live in the family dwelling house, and under the protection of the brother, seems to me very strong to show that the brother was to be her protector by reason of his possessing the property. I think, therefore, that the clause is a clause purporting to convey the property and not to give the mere management of it.

The next question, then, is, has that clause taken effect in the events which have happened? In order to see that we have to read that clause with the prior clause purporting to give an estate to the son who the testator hoped might be born. I think it is important that in this country we should certainly not be more strict in construing wills than are the Courts in England. On the contrary, I think it is our duty, and it has been so laid down repeatedly by the Privy Council, to endeavour in the case of every will to find out what the real intention of the testator was which he intended to express in his will, and to look to that rather than to the precise language he has used. Here is a man about to die leaving his wife pregnant; he is unable to tell whether the child which is in the mother’s womb is a boy or a girl, and he has a brother. He, therefore, makes a will giving the property to the child in certain terms, and then gives a gift over to the brother. If we can give effect to the apparent general intention of the testator to give his estate to the child, if the child should be a boy, and to the brother if a boy did not take, or if the estate to the boy failed, we are bound to do so in accordance with the principle repeatedly laid down and acted upon in the Courts in England in construing wills, and especially in the well known case of Jones v. Westcomb (1), and other cases which may all be found collected in Williams on Executors, Part III, Book III, Chapter 2, s. 6. Consequently, I think, we are bound to hold that the gift over to the brother takes effect on failure of the first gift, in whatever mode that failure takes place, even if it be not in the precise manner expressed in the terms of the gift. The precise mode contemplated in the terms of the gift was the son’s dying before reaching his 21st year: I think we should give effect to the gift over when the first gift fails by the male child never existing.

Then what were the gifts to the child and to the brother? Speaking for myself, applying the principles on which, I think, wills should be construed, and reading the two gifts together, I should feel little hesitation in saying that, if the event had turned out as the testator hoped, the effect of the will would have been to give a vested estate to the child from the testator’s death, with a gift over to the brother on that estate failing for any cause. If this be so, it seems to me to follow that the first intended estate failed at the time of the testator’s death. There was an uncertainty about the fact, because it could not then be known what was the sex of the child in the mother’s womb, but the child was a girl and not a boy; and therefore the estate, which it was intended to give to the possible boy, failed, and failed then. The consequence was that the second gift in favour of Nilmoney took effect then. But supposing this not to be the true construction of the will, and supposing the testator ought to be considered to have contemplated giving a vested estate to the child on his birth, still I think the result would be the same, for I think the gift over to Nilmoney operated so as to pass to him everything that did not pass under the first gift. In any view of the case, therefore, it appears to me that this is a clause purporting to give the property to Nilmoney; that in the events which have happened that gift has taken effect, and did so on the death of the testator, although the fact could not be ascertained until the birth of the child.

[292] As regards that part of the case which relates to the question of limitation, on which the Judge in the Court below decided the case, I desire to guard against saying anything which could seem like dissent from the view which the Judge has expressed. In the view that we have taken of the principal question it is unnecessary to deal with that question. I think that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Sorolal Dossee (Plaintiff) v. Bhoobun Mohun Neogy and Others (Defendants).

Unnopoornah Dossee (Plaintiff) v. Bhoobun Mohun Neogy and Others (Defendants).* [23rd January, 1888.]

Hindu law. Partition—Bengal School of Law—Partition by sons—Mother’s share on partition—Succession to share given to a mother on partition.

Under the Bengal School of Law the share which a mother takes on partition among her sons is not taken from her husband’s estate either by inheritance or by way of survivorship in continuation of any pre-existing interest, but is taken from her sons in lieu of, or by way of provision for, that maintenance for which they and their estates are already bound; and on her death that share goes back to her sons from whom she received it.

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Trevelyan, dated 2nd April 1887.

On the 10th September 1868, one Rajendran Chunder Neogy, a Hindu, governed by the Bengal School of Law, died intestate, leaving him surviving three sons—Ram Chunder, Bhoobun Mohun and Hurry Doss, and also a widow named Rakhal Money Dossee and his mother Goluck Money Dossee.

On the 19th September Ram Chunder died intestate, leaving him surviving Unnopoornath Dossee, his sole widow and heiress.

In 1868 Unnopoornah brought a suit against Bhoobun Mohun, Goluck Money, Hurry Doss and Rakhal Money Dossee for [293]

* Original Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1887, against the decision of Mr. Justice Trevelyan, dated 2nd April 1887.
partition of the estate of Rajender Chunder Neoghy, and obtained therein a decree on the 18th March 1869, under which a one-fourth share was allotted to her, and another one-fourth share to each of her brothers-in-law, and the remaining fourth share to Rakhal Money. Rakhal Money died on the 18th February 1884. Subsequently to her death, disputes having arisen between Hurry Doss and Bhoobun Mohun as to the source from which certain properties in the possession of Rakhal Money at her death had been derived, Hurry Doss brought a suit against Bhoobun Mohun for the purpose of ascertaining his right in the properties belonging to the estate of Rakhal Money; and at or about the same time Unnopoornah brought a suit against Bhoobun Mohun and Hurry Doss for a declaration that she was entitled to a one-third share of the properties allotted to Rakhal Money under the partition decree of the 18th March, 1869.

On the 14th June 1886, Hurry Doss died, and before these suits came on for hearing Sorolah Dossee, the sole widow and heiress of Hurry Doss, was put upon the record in his place.

These two suits were by an order of Court amalgamated and heard together, and on the 2nd April, 1887, the following judgment was delivered therein by Mr. Justice Trevelyan:

In these cases the only matter which it is necessary for me to consider involves a question of Hindu law which, except in a case before Mr. Justice Pigot, to which I shall hereafter refer, does not seem to have ever been determined. The question is, what on her death becomes of the property allotted to a Hindu mother on a partition between two of her sons and the widow of a third son.

Rajender Chunder Neoghy died intestate on the 10th September 1868, leaving three sons—Ram Chunder, Bhoobun Mohun and Hurry Doss, and a widow Rakhal Money. On the 19th of the same month Ram Chunder died, leaving a widow Unnopoornah. Unnopoornah brought a suit for partition against her two brothers-in-law and her mother-in-law, and on such partition a one-fourth share was allotted to her, another one-fourth to each of her brothers-in-law, and the remaining one-fourth to her mother-in-law. Rakhal Money died on the 18th February 1884, leaving [294] her two sons surviving her. One of these, Hurry Mohun, has since died. The question here is whether the one-fourth share which was allotted to her on partition is to be divided between her surviving son Bhoobun Mohun and the widow of Hurry Doss, or between Bhoobun Mohun the widow of Hurry Doss and Unnopoornah. There is no Hindu text expressly in point. It was for some time a question whether the share which a Hindu mother took on partition between her sons was her stridhun, or whether she had a life, or rather a limited, interest therein. It is now established law that she has not in such property any greater estate than that of a Hindu widow, a Hindu daughter, or a Hindu mother who succeeds to her son’s property; it is also clear that it is not stridhun.

The question which I have here to determine was raised in a case of Suttya Suttya Ghosaul v. Suttyanund Ghosaul, before Mr. Justice Pigot; and although it was unnecessary to decide the question, Mr. Justice Pigot expressed an opinion that on the mother’s death her share would revert to the then heirs of her husband. That learned Judge in expressing this opinion did not give any reasons for his opinion, and such opinion was not necessary for the purpose of deciding the particular application. With every possible respect for that learned Judge’s opinion, I feel myself unable to follow it in the present case.
In the last edition of his Vyavastha Darpana, Sharna Churn Sirer says this at paragraph 598: "This share which is given to a mother on the partition as above is given to her in lieu of maintenance, and means allowing also for the performance of religious acts; and it reverts after her death to those heirs of her husband out of whose portion that share was allotted to her;" and Jagannatha says: "She cannot alienate the above or apply it to a purpose other than that for which it is given her by them who were bound to maintain her from her husband's estate, and who will receive it back after her death when it is no longer required to be so set apart." This shows, I think, that the share reverts to the persons out of whose shares it was allotted. On the death of Rajender Chunder Neogy the whole of his estate vested in his sons, and on the death of Ram Chunder his undivided one-third share vested in Unnopoornah. I do not 295 find any authority for saying that on a partition a portion of the shares of the sons is divested. The sons have to maintain their mother out of the property which they derive from their father, and on partition they have to give her a share as a security and provision for her maintenance. When the necessity for maintenance ceases, i.e., when she dies, the property must, it seems to me, go back to the persons who were bound to maintain her, and who in pursuance of that obligation made over the property to her. In the absence of any clear authority in the Hindu law I do not see how I could hold that the effect of partition would be that Unnopoornah would lose all right in the property. I think she gets the same share as she would have got if her mother-in-law had died before the partition. The share allotted on partition is merely a security for the maintenance to which the mother-in-law was entitled out of the estate. I must hold that Unnopoornah is entitled to a one-third share of the property which was allotted to her mother-in-law. The other questions were disposed of by me at the hearing.

Sorolah Dossee appealed.

Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Evans, for the appellant.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Chatterjee, for the respondent.

Mr. Woodroffe—The question before the Court is to whom does the share allotted to a mother on partition descend—whether to the heirs of her husband, from whom such share was taken, or to such heirs of her husband as are living at the time of her death. To answer this question it should be considered how it is that the mother's right to a share on partition accrues; the answer would go some way towards solving the point in this case. I say there is by virtue of the marriage of the wife a seizin by her in her husband's property; she has an interest existing prior to partition. The husband is one with the wife—Dayatattva, p. 40, Ch. VI. The wife on the death of her husband does not lose her rights, because the right asserts itself not by reason of the widow being mother of sons, but as widow of her husband; and therefore when the widow dies the heirs are to be sought for as though the husband had died without 296 male issue. In the case of Lakhsman Ramchandra Joshi v. Satya-bhambrai (1) it is held that a widow before partition has an equity to a provision which the Court will enforce to guard her against attempted fraud; this view is also taken in Bilaso v. Dina Nath (2). The Dayabhaga, Chapter IX, s. 1, para. 26, lays down that there is no proof of the position that the wife's right in her husband's property, accruing to her from her marriage, ceases on his demise.

A widow has a sufficient interest in her husband's estate to come in and object to probate being granted to a particular person—Brinda Chowdhrain v. Radhica Chowdhrain (1). The passage from Shama Churn cited by the lower Court is not to be found in Jagannatha, but the words used by Jagannatha, have an entirely different meaning—see Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. III, p. 23. Jagannatha says: "She may not part with her right except for necessity." Now how could she do so if there was a vested remainder in the heirs of the propositus? At page 391 of West and Buhler (2nd Ed.) the authors discuss the nature of the mother's estate in the portion allotted to her on partition of her husband's estate. If the partition had been by the father, the share taken by the wife would go back to the heirs of the father. As to whether the share given to the mother should or should not be considered to be stridhun, see West and Buhler (2nd Ed.), p. 356. In Bengal it has been decided that it is not stridhun, but in Allahabad it is otherwise—see Bhugwandeen Doobey v. Myna Bace (2). Originally sons could not participate in their father's estate so long as the mother was alive, but as an inducement to her to permit them to so participate, a share was allotted to the mother. The texts which bear upon this subject will be found in Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. II (Mad. Ed.), 247. It has been stated, no doubt, that the share which is given to a woman on partition by sons after her husband's death reverts on her death to the heirs of her husband out of whose portion the share was taken—see Kedar Nath Coondoo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dassi (3), but such statement [297] was obiter and the point was not alluded to by counsel, as it did not bear upon the questions in the case. The case of Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Judoonath Tewaree (4) shows that a mother is entitled on partition to a share either by way of maintenance or as a portion of the inheritance. Mayne in paras. 218, 214 suggests that the origin of this is not to be traced to the necessity of providing for after-born children, but rather that the widow has an interest in the property. The case of Nobin Chunder Chuckerbatty v. Gurupersad Dass (5) gives a reason why on the death of a female the heirs of the male propositus living at her death should be sought for to discover the proper succession. In the unreported case of Suttya Suttye Ghosaul v. Suttyanund Ghosaul, suits Nos. 568 and 699 of 1887, decided by Pigot, J., the very question now before the Court arose; there was there a partition directed between a daughter and sons, and Pigot, J., said that he would have held (if it had been necessary to base his judgment on that point) that the share of the mother went on her death to the heirs of her husband living at the time of her death.

In Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. III, p. 22, in the note to text 87, the question is put, "whether the share of the wife be equal with that of a son, or with that of another wife, are wives entitled to the use only of the share which they receive, or have they independent power over it?" The answer is: "Although sons had no previous ownership in their father's estate, yet as they have independent power after partition, since the father's property is divested, so wives also have independent power, for a text declares that property is common to the husband and wife (text 415), and she therefore has ownership even prior to the partition." Again on p. 25: "As for what is argued that when the husband's property is divested the property of the wife, originating therein, is also annulled, there are no grounds for this induction, for there is no ordinance to that effect like the text 415, which serves to prove the right of the wife to be co-existent with the husband’s.” Again in Macnaghten’s Consid. Hindu Law, p 73, it is said “a mother who takes upon partition and the widow who succeeds to her husband’s property stand on the same footing with regard to their [298] interests in the estate.” I submit therefore that the share allotted to a mother on partition goes on her death to the heirs of her husband alive at her death.

Mr. Evans on the same side.

In the case of Kedar Nath Coondoo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dassi, (1) Counsel’s attention was not turned to the point now before the Court, and the judgment does not thoroughly go into the matter; but on p. 341 a general explanatory statement on the point is made. That statement is no obstacle to a free consideration of the point; the matter was obiter. The result of Trevelyan, J.’s judgment is that a widow takes no more than a life interest and that there is a vested reversion in the sons. It was known a long time ago that a widow was entitled to a share on partition, and many of the authors of the Mitakshara School thought that she took a full estate which on her death went to her heirs; but in Bengal the weight of authority showed that it went to the heirs of her husband. The case of Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Judoonath Tewaree (2), although a Mitakshara case, is a guide as the grounds on which the share is allotted are the same as those mentioned in the Dayabhaga. I cannot attach any legal meaning to the words in Trevelyan, J.’s judgment, “that Rakhal Money took her share as security for her maintenance;” there is no security, as she could alienate it for necessity.

The case of Bhugwandeen Doobey v. Myna Bace (3) deals incidentally with a mother’s share on partition, and Colebrooke, Vol. III, p. 31 (original edition), in the note to text 89, shows that a mother may alienate her share on partition for necessity.

In Bhugbutty Daee v. Chowdry Bholanath Thakoor (4), it was held that a widow had a vested estate, and not only an estate of a Hindu widow, and that case shows the difference between such estates; the Court points out that the widow’s right to income is absolute. The case of Moniram Kolita v. Kerry Kolitany (5), points out the undesirability of a widow ceasing to be a full owner on committing adultery, and points out the great evil of [299] allowing the theory that a widow’s estate is divested by want of chastity.

In West and Buhler, p. 67 (note) (Ed. 1884), it is pointed out that by partition wholly new rights come into existence, the continuity of succession being entirely broken up. At page 297 of the same edition a general discussion of the nature of a widow’s estate and the rights she takes in property in any way acquired by her is to be found; on page 237 it is said that rights of property are to be determined by birth and marriage. At p. 781 (note) reference is made to the succession of the share given to a mother on partition. On p. 319 (note) it is said that the closest resemblance to the estate of a Hindu widow is to be found in that of the widow under the old Teutonic law in the property enjoyed by her as dower. The Court is, however, now asked to create a new estate, or to deny that a widow has any propriety right at all.

Mr. Bonnerjee for the respondent.—The argument of the other side that the two brothers are entitled to the mother’s share, because by marriage husband and wife are one—the wife on death of her husband not losing her right, such right asserting itself not by reason of the widow being mother of sons, but as widow of husband, and that therefore when widow dies the heirs are to be sought for as though the husband had died without male issue—is fallacious; that idea gained ground from para. 45, chapter IX, Menu, but such unity of the husband and wife is only regarding religious and domestic matters. Property is secular and not religious—see Mitakshara, Ch. I, s. 1; Stokes Hindu Law Books, p. 367, paras. 8 and 9. Now how does property descend when a person dies leaving a widow and one son by her? In such case, if the argument of the other side is correct, part of the property would be in the widow; but the texts show this is not so—Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 1, para. 26; Stokes. Hindu Law Books, p. 309, para. 26. Succession devolves on the widow by failure of sons and other male descendants—Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 1, para. 31; also para. 33. The doubt expressed by Sir Barnes Peacock in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Gurupersad Doss (1) is explained by Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., [300] in Guru Gobind Shaha Mondal v. Anand Lal Ghose Mazumdar (2)—a case which shows a widow is utterly excluded by sons who deal with the property. The case of Bhagabati Dasi v. Kanailal Mitter (3) shows that a son takes an absolute estate from his father, and that the widow is only entitled to maintenance. That case goes to the length that if the heir sells, a bona fide purchaser would be unaffected by anything short of a specific charge (p. 229); so that until a widow’s maintenance is fixed or being fixed, there is no lien having the character of a proprietary right in the widow’s claim to maintenance. The Dayabhaga in Chapter I, paras. 38 and 44, says: “There are two periods of partition—one when the father’s property ceases, the other by his choice—while his right of property endures.” Here the partition was after the father’s death, i.e., after his property had ceased. Such a partition is dealt with in Dayabhaga, Ch. III, s. 1. There is nothing in the Dayabhaga which compels a father to give anything to his wife who has issue. Here the mother took her share on partition from her sons as maintenance, and such share should go back to the sons on her death. With regard to the origin of the share given to a mother by her sons on their partition, see Colebrooke’s Digest, Vol. III, p. 488, para. 415. As to text relating to partition after death of a father, see Dayabhaga, Ch. III, ss. 1, 5, 16. If the mother has separate property she has only half a share, which indicates that it is not the property of the husband, but property of the sons which is partitioned.

Bearing in mind that an equal share is given to a mother on partition by sons, because “she is most venerable,” it will be possible to understand what Mitter, J., means in Sheo Dyal Tawarre v. Judoonoth Tawarre (4) when he says “the mother and grandmother can never be recognized as owner of a share until division is actually made, they having no pre-existing right in the estate except a right of maintenance.”

With regard to the rights of a step-mother under Bengal law, a sonless wife, if there is no partition in the father’s lifetime, is not entitled to a share on step-sons’ partition, but to maintenance; [301] but if partition is in the father’s lifetime she takes a share—see Damoodur

Misser v. Senabutty Misrain (1). There is an unreported case, decided by Mr. Justice Wilson, referred to in Kristo Bhabiney Dossee v. Ashutosh Bosu Mullick (2), but it does not seem to have been followed by Trevelyan, J. The case of Cally Churn Mullick v. Janova Dossee (3) follows the Supreme Court cases although not approving of them; also the cases of Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Judoonath Tewaree (4) and Bilaso v. Dina Nath (5) show that the widow is only entitled to a share as maintenance but they do not determine what is to happen to the property after the mother's death. For rules of succession, which are all governed by express texts of law, see Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 2, paras 1, 23; Ch. XI, s. 4, paras. 1, 2; Ch. XI, s. 5.

The other side say the property goes to the heirs of the husband alive at the death of the mother, but why should they add “alive at the death of the mother.” There is no text or case to that effect; besides, the heirs of the husband must be his heirs alive at the time of his death. The mother taking a share does not take it as stridhan, for if she took it as stridhan it would go to her stridhan heirs. The Dayabhaga does not lay down any rule for succession to a mother’s property. But that her property does go back to the sons I submit is clear; if not, Shama Churn’s statement will have to be got rid of, and also the case of Kedar Nath Coondoo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dasi (6). Shama Churn says “the mother’s share is given to her for maintenance, and reverts after her death to the heirs of her husband from whom she took it.” I submit the lower Court is not wrong in relying on this passage. Jagannatha is to that effect. Now on partition where there are two branches of a family (two mothers) a step-mother in Bengal does not participate with step-sons—see Cally Churn Mullick v. Janova Dossee (3). Assuming this decision to be good law, let us see if Shama Churn is correct, for if the argument of the other side is correct it is impossible to say why the mother’s share should depend on the number of her own sons only.

[302] A vested reversion is not unknown to the Hindu law—see Jai Bansi Kunwar v. Chattar Dhari Singh (7). As regards the case of Kedar Nath Coondoo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dassi (6), even if the remarks be obiter, the opinion of a learned Judge on a difficult point of law on which there are no authorities should be considered; it however was necessary for the Court in that case to state what the general law on the subject was, and therefore I say the remarks are not obiter. As to a grandmother’s share on partition, see Puddummookhee Dossee v. Rayee Monee Doseee (8); Rayee Monee Doseee v. Puddummookhee Dossee (9). I submit that when a man dies leaving a son, his entire estate descends to that son as his heir, and if more sons than one, to all the sons equally. If the sons partition and the mother is alive the mother takes a share in lieu of maintenance. It is by the action of the sons that the mother has a proprietary right to the share given her, but only so far as to give her maintenance out of it; and when she dies it goes back to those persons from whom the shares were taken.

I. D. C. VII—50.
The facts out of which the controversy in this case arises are these—Rajender Chunder Neogy died intestate on the 10th September, 1868, leaving three sons, Ram Chunder, Bhoobun Mohun and Hurry Doss, and a widow Rakhal Money, the mother of the three sons. Ram Chunder died immediately after his father, leaving a widow Unnopoornah as his heir. Unnopoornah sued for partition, and the property which had been that of Rajender Chunder was divided into four parts, of which one was allotted to Unnopoornah, one each to Bhoobun Mohun and Hurry Doss, and one to their mother Rakhal Money. Rakhal Money died on the 18th February, 1884, leaving her two sons Bhoobun Mohun and Hurry Doss and her daughter-in-law Unnopoornah surviving. Hurry Doss had since died leaving his widow Sorolah his heiress. Two suits were thereupon brought, the details of which it is not necessary to examine, and were heard together before Trevelyan, J. The question [303] for decision is shortly stated by the learned Judge to be "whether the one-fourth share which was allotted to Rakhal Money on partition is to be divided between her surviving son Bhoobun and the widow of Hurry Doss or between Bhoobun, the widow of Hurry Doss, and Unnopoornah."

The learned Judge decided that Unnopoornah was entitled to an equal share with the other two claimants; he held that when on a partition between sons a share is allotted to their mother "when she dies the property must go back to the persons who were bound to maintain her, and who, in pursuance of that obligation, make over the property to her." Against that decision Sorolah, the widow of Hurry Doss, has appealed. The only other case with which we are acquainted in which the same precise question arose is an unreported case heard before Pigot, J., in which that learned Judge, though he did not base the decision of the matter before him on that ground, expressed a decided opinion, after argument, to the effect that on the death of the mother her share goes to the persons who at the time of her death are the heirs of her husband. We have to say on this appeal which is the correct view.

The contention on the part of the appellants may be summarized thus. A wife by marriage takes an interest in her husband’s estate, and that interest does not cease for all purposes upon his death, even if he leave sons. Although partition be made by the sons after the father’s death, it is still the father’s estate that is partitioned. The share allotted to the mother is not a new estate created by the partition, but the partition defines and gives effect to the right which has all along been in her. She takes it by inheritance, and accordingly, like all property inherited by a widow as such, it goes on her death to those who are then the heirs of her husband.

The contention on the other side was, that a wife during her husband’s life is ordinarily entitled only to be maintained by him; that after his death her right as against her sons is no greater; that the share which is allotted to her on a partition between her sons is allotted in lieu or in satisfaction of the general claim to maintenance which she has previously had; and that on her death that share reverts to those who [304] were liable for her maintenance, and out of whose estate the share was taken.

In order to estimate the correctness of either of these views it is necessary, I think, to enquire briefly what is the nature of the interest that a wife takes in her husband’s estate during his life, and as against his sons after his death; what is the nature of the estate that the sons take by inheritance from their father; and how these two interests are to be reconciled with, or are controlled by, one another.

It is specially important to bear in mind while examining these questions that we have to do with the Bengal law, not the Hindu law of any other schools. As to the nature of the right of a widow, when her husband has left sons, the various schools differ, or may differ widely. Thus, according to the Bengal school, a widow can claim a share on partition if her sons divide the patrimony amongst themselves. In Southern India this seems not to be so. In Bengal the right to a share is given only to a mother as against her own sons, a childless widow has no such right against her step-sons. It is by no means clear that this is so under all the schools. In Bengal it is settled that the share allotted to a mother does not become absolutely hers, so as to pass to her stridhnun heirs. The Privy Council in Bhugwandeen Doobey v. Myna Baece (1) point out that under the Benares law this is an open question. And turning to the other aspect of the matter, the interest taken by the sons as heirs, the principle governing inheritance is not wholly the same under the Bengal school and the other schools; the rules of inheritance are not always the same; and it may well be doubted whether the conceptions embodied in the ordinary terminology of the subject are the same in the different schools. There is reason for saying that the very word Daya, or Inheritance, has been used by some authors in a sense not co-extensive with that which it bears under the Bengal law.

The title of the wife is based ultimately upon two propositions; that a wife takes by her marriage an interest in her husband's estate and that on a partition of the ancestral estate between sons their mother takes a share equal to a [305] son's share. The text often referred to and cited by Jagannatha (s. 415, 1 Col. Dig. p. 541, Madras Edition) says: "Wealth is common to the married pair." Jimita Vahana (Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 1, para. 26) speaks of "the wife's right in her husband's property accruing to her from her marriage." The Daya Tattwa, Ch. VI (I cite from the English Edition of Golap Chundra Sarkar, Calcutta, 1874), says: Section 7.—"Also in discussing wife's right her right is declared to extend during his lifetime to every property, belonging to her husband; also in the Shradha Veveka it is declared that property lies between husband and wife, i.e., belongs to two masters, namely, husband and wife." Section 10.—"Therefore, as the prohibition, namely, 'there is no partition between husband and wife,' implies the existence of previous property, consequently the common right of both over the same property is indicated." Section 11.—"Otherwise, in the absence of the common right of both, partition itself would be unreasonable; consequently there would not have been the prohibitory proposition." Section 12—"This is also the meaning of the unity (of husband and wife) declared by Laghu Harita, 'because she attains to unity (with her husband) through clarified butter, sacred texts, offerings and religious observances.' All the Bengal authorities accept the rule embodied in the text of Vrihaspati cited in the Dayabhaga, Ch. III, s. 2, para. 29: "When partition is made by brethren of the whole blood, after the demise of the father, an equal share must be given to the mother, for the text expresses, 'the mother should be an equal sharer.'" But again, if there be any tenet of the Bengal law laid down clearly and without hesitation, it is, that sons, grandsons or great grandsons in the male line take the whole

Estate of their ancestor, take it on his death, and take it by inheritance in the strictest sense of the term.

We have thus three propositions which, whatever their meaning may be, all rest upon unquestionable authority—that a wife takes by marriage an interest in her husband's property; that sons take by inheritance the whole of their father's estate; that upon a partition between sons of their father's estate their mother takes a share equal to a son's share. It seems to me desirable to inquire how the first and second of these propositions are related, [306] to one another, for on this depends the principles by which we should be guided in applying the third proposition, and the conclusions which we should draw from it.

I propose first to examine shortly the nature and characteristics of a wife's interest in her husband's estate on the one hand, and of a son's interest in his deceased father's estate on the other, looked at from a purely practical point of view, discarding as far as may be all controversial matter, and postponing all questions of principle or theory.

If we look at the matter thus it will appear that a wife's interest in her husband's estate is of a very indeterminate character; she may take everything, or she may take very little, according as events turn out. As long as her husband lives she is ordinarily entitled merely to be maintained by him, and cannot claim any share of his estate or any voice in its management. He has full power of alienation while he lives; and, subject to any question of her maintenance, full power of disposition by will. Should he, however, during his life elect to partition his estate between himself and his sons, it would seem that a wife should be allowed a share equal to a son's if she be without male issue, but not otherwise. When her husband dies she may survive him, and there may be no sons, grandsons or great-grandsons in the male line, and then she takes the whole estate as heir. She may survive and have no sons, but there may be sons by another wife, in which case she is entitled, and will ever remain entitled, to maintenance, and no more. She may survive and have, one son, in which case her right is, and as long as at least as her son lives must always remain the same, a right to maintenance. She may survive and have several sons, and in this case, as long as her sons continue in the normal condition of a joint family, she is entitled to maintenance only; but if her sons partition among themselves she takes a share; and the same thing results if her grandsons partition. Thus, whatever the principle applicable to the matter may be, the wife's interest in her husband's estate resolves itself in fact into a right to maintenance, except in the absence of lineal male heirs, in which case she takes the inheritance, and in two cases—one occurring in her husband's lifetime, the other after his death—in which she takes a share.

[307] The wife's right to maintenance after her husband's death is, in one sense, undoubtedly a charge upon the estate, and she may sue to enforce it and have it secured. But it is not a charge in the fullest sense of the term, because it does not in every case necessarily bind any part of the property in the hands of a purchaser. If there be two groups of sons by different mothers, and those groups separate each from the other, the maintenance of a widow is a charge on her own sons' property, not on her stepsons. If her sons do partition it has long been the settled law in Bengal that her share is taken out of their shares, not out of her step-sons. And she has in no case a right herself to initiate a partition.

The nature of her right in the share when allotted was long a subject of controversy. Writers of high authority maintained that it vested in her absolutely and passed after her death to her heirs as stridhm. It is now settled in Bengal that this is not so, but that on her death it goes back in some sense to her husband’s family. It is settled, also, that the mother has, at any rate, no greater right of alienation over a share so allotted than over property inherited from her husband. There is some authority at least for supposing that she has no less power.

It thus appears that a mother’s interest in a share allotted to her is at least very closely analogous to, if not identical with, that which she takes in property inherited from her husband, while many of the other incidents connected with her right point in a different direction.

Looking from the same point of view at a son’s rights in the estate which he inherits from his father, there can be no doubt that for all ordinary purposes the son is absolute owner of his father’s estate, and can do what he pleases with it.

I propose next to enquire on what principle Bengal lawyers have dealt with the two seemingly conflicting propositions, that a wife takes an interest in her husband’s estate by marriage, and that his male heirs in the male line take his whole inheritance, and the inferences that they have thence drawn, or constrained us to draw, as to the nature of a mother’s interest in a share allotted to her. The question is dealt with by Jimuta Vahana in Ch. XI, s. 1. The chapter relates to “the succession to the estate of [308] one who leaves no male issue,” and the section to “the widow’s right of succession.” In maintaining that right he has begun by citing in s. 2 the text of Vrihaspati that “a wife is declared by the wise to be half the body of her husband equally sharing the fruit of pure and impure acts.” Of him whose wife is not deceased the body survives. How then should another take his property while his body is alive? Let the wife of a deceased man who left no male issue take his share, notwithstanding kinsmen—a father, a mother, or uterine brother—be present. In the course of the discussion he cites, § 15, certain texts in favour of the brother’s claim, and rejects them. In § 19 he states a view put forward by supporters of those texts—“some reconcile the contradiction by saying that the preferable right of the brother supposes him either to be not separated or to be re-united, and the widow’s right of succession is relative to the estate of one who was separated from his co-heirs, and not re-united to them.” He examines and refutes various arguments put forward in support of that view. Particularly he says in § 25: “But it is said this inference is deduced from reasoning. Thus, in the instance of re-union (or in that of a subsisting co-parcenary), the same goods which appertain to one brother belong to another likewise. In such case, when the right of one ceases by his demise, those goods belong exclusively to the survivor, since his ownership is not divested. They do not belong to the widow, for her right ceases on the demise of her husband; in like manner as his property devolves not on her, if sons or other (male descendants) be left.” In § 26, Jimuta Vahana gives his answer to this: “That argument is futile. It is not true that in the instance of re-union and of a subsisting co-parcenary what belongs to one appertains also to the other parceller. But the property is referred severally to unascertained portions of the aggregate. Both parcellers have not a proprietary right to the whole, for there is no proof to establish their ownership of the whole, as has been said before (when defining the term partition of heritage). Nor is there any proof of the position that the wife’s right in her husband’s property accruing to her from her marriage ceases on his demise. But the cessation of the widows’ right of property, if there be male issue, appears [309] only from the law ordaining the succession of male issue.” Shortly stated, the view expressed in this passage seems to me to be this: that neither son nor brother takes by survivorship so as on this ground to exclude the widow, but that each takes when he does take by inheritance; and that the reason why the widow takes after the son, but before the brother, is because the existence of the son puts an end to her right derived from marriage, but that the existence of a brother does not do so. It is thus an essential part of the argument that upon the death of a husband, leaving male issue, his wife’s interest in his property acquired by marriage ceases, and the issue take the whole, while, if the husband die without male issue, the wife’s interest does not cease. And the author thus negatives the view that the share which she takes on a partition between her sons comes to her either by inheritance from her husband, or in continuation of any interest previously vested in her.

The difficulty of reconciling an interest taken by a wife by reason of marriage with the exclusive inheritance of her son has been felt by other minds later than Jimuta Vahana, and his mode of reconciling them has not always been considered satisfactory. The remarks of Peacock C.J., in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (1) illustrate this. But, satisfactory or not, the doctrines of the Dayabhaga are the law which we have to administer; Guru Gobind Shaha Mandal v. Anand Lal Ghose Mazumudar (2).

The right of a mother to take a share upon a partition between her sons and the incidents of that right are much considered by Jagannatha. The discussion is to be found mainly in Book V, Chapter II, ss. 83 to 89. In the course of that discussion most of the points which I have already mentioned as settled points under the Bengal law may be found stated. Upon other points opinions are cited from authors of that and other schools; but it is not always easy to collect what the view of the learned author himself is. The part of the discussion most directly relevant to the present case occurs in the notes to s. 87, in the paragraph beginning with the words “whether the share be equal, etc.” (2 Col. Dig., p. 250, Madras Edition, 1874). The precise question there [310] under discussion is, whether the share allotted to a wife or mother on partition becomes hers absolutely with free power of alienation, and passes to her own heirs, or whether it is subject to the restraint upon alienation usually incident to property taken by women by inheritance from males, and reverts to the estate of the husband or father. This question has since been answered in Bengal in the latter sense, at any rate in the case of an allotment to a mother. In the course of the discussion opinions are cited from many authors bearing more or less closely upon the question now before us. But those authors belong to various schools, and their views are very conflicting. At the close of the discussion Jagannatha says (p. 252): “Such is the answer given by some lawyers to the question proposed.” He then cites a passage from Bhavadeva, and adds: “Although the mother survived, the son has property in the paternal estate after the demise of his father, of whom the principal right was predicated; and the mother’s right, which is subordinate, neither resists nor is resisted by any other. Accordingly though the first wife has property in her husband’s estate, another, subsequently married, has also property in the same estate.”

In a later part of the Digest, Book V, Chapter VIII, s. 414 (p. 511, Madras Edition, 1874), Jagannatha recurs to the subject; and, speaking clearly with reference to the passage from the Dayabhaga already cited, he says: "According to the opinion of Jimuta Vahana, since the wife has an interest in the wealth of her husband during his life, and since there is nothing to annul her property after his decease, how can her husband's brother and the rest in any instance have claim to the estate? To this it is answered no, for it is established that her property is actually lost by the lapse of her husband's right. Accordingly the property of the wife is divested even when the effects are given away by her lord. Those who affirm that the allotment of a share to the mother, when partition is made among sons, is founded on her ownership of the father's estate, because she was his wife, accordingly contend that a share of the distributed wealth must be allotted to a wife of the father, whether she has or has not a son, and whether partition be made before or after the death of the father." Whatever uncertainty there may be about the earlier passages of the Digest, this passage seems to me to assert that a wife's interest in her husband's estate is actually lost by the lapse of her husband's right which, having regard to the words of Jimuta Vahana on which Jagannatha bases his reasoning, seem to mean by the death of the husband leaving inalienable heirs in the male line. And he confirms this by showing that the contrary view—the view "that the allotment of a share to the mother, when partition is made among sons, is founded on her ownership of the father's estate, because she was his wife"—would lead to conclusions which the Bengal school of lawyers has always rejected.

Some more recent Bengal authorities remain to be considered. The case of Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Judoonath Tewaree (1) and the other appeals disposed of with it arose out of proceedings taken by means of several suits for the partition of an estate. Among the sharers were an uncle and nephew, and one Golaba, the mother of one and grandmother of the other, claimed a share. By the decree it was awarded to her; but no actual allotment had been made and no separate enjoyment had, when Golaba died before the appeal came on for hearing. A person alleging herself to be devisee of Golaba came forward to claim her share. The case was one governed by the Benares school of law, and she relied, I suppose, upon the contention which the Privy Council showed to be open in 11 Moore's I.A. at p. 514. Loch and D. N. Mitter, JJ., held that the bare decree gave Golaba no title, and therefore the question as to the devolution of any share of hers did not arise. In delivering judgment D. N. Mitter, J., said: "It is quite clear that the share which ought to have been allowed to Golaba was merged in the general estate, conceding, for the sake of argument, that she was entitled to any share under the Hindu law as it is administered in the Benares school. The text of the Mitakshara that has been referred to merely says: 'Of heirs dividing after the death of the father let the mother also take a share,' or in other words, the mother or grandmother as the case might be, is entitled to a share, when sons or grandsons divided the family estate between themselves. But the mother or the grandmother can never be recognised as [312] the owner of such a share until the division has been actually made. She has no pre-existing vested right in the estate except a right of maintenance. She may acquire property by partition, for partition is one of the modes of acquiring property under the Hindu law. But partition in her case is the sole cause of her right to the property. It follows therefore that the effect cannot precede the cause." The Court seems to me here to lay down, and to lay down not by way of dictum, or mere expression of opinion, but as the ground of decision, that when a mother takes a share on partition her title arises from the partition alone, and that she had no pre-existing vested right except a right of maintenance. And if this be so under the Benares law, it seems to be more clear that it must be so under that of Bengal, because the Bengal law is more positive in restricting the mother's right than the Benares law.

In the last edition of Shama Churn Sircar's Vyavastha Darpana, s. 598, the learned author says: "The share which is given to a mother on the partition as above is given to her in lieu of maintenance, and means allowing also for the performance of religious acts, and it reverts after death to those heirs of her husband out of whose portion that share was allotted to her." The writer goes on to cite a passage as from Jagannatha; but there is some mistake here, for there is no such passage in the Digest, and the opinion expressed must therefore be taken simply as that of Shama Churn Sircar.

In the late case of Kedar Nath Coondo Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dassi (1) the actual point for decision was whether a widow, after a partition between her own son and sons of another wife of her husband, could claim to have her maintenance charged on the estate of her step-sons, and it was held by the Chief Justice and Ghose, J., that she could not. In the judgment which was delivered by Ghose, J., it is said at page 341: "When the Hindu law prescribes a share being allotted to a woman after her husband's death, upon a partition among her sons, it is a share which is given to her simply in lieu of maintenance, and not because she is a co-parcener in the estate, or that she has any pre-existing rights, and the share which is thus given to her. reverts [313] upon her death to those heirs of her husband out of whose portion the said share was taken." And in support of this are cited the passages just mentioned from Shama Churn Sircar, a case in Strange's Hindu Law and the case already mentioned of Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Judioonath Tewaree.

We were referred in argument to West and Buller's Hindu Law of Inheritance, 3rd edition, pp. 67, 237, 297, 303 and the following pages, 781, 819, where an immense number of conflicting opinions gathered from writers of all schools of Hindu law are brought together bearing upon the mother's right to a share in a partition between sons, and the subject is discussed in many aspects. But I do not find any expression of opinion by the learned authors which assists us in ascertaining the Bengal law upon the question now before us.

Much stress was also laid upon the case of Lakshman Ramchandra Joshi v. Satyabhamabai (2). The question in that case was as to the extent to which, and the persons against whom, a mother has an actual charge for her maintenance upon the ancestral estate of her sons, where no partition has taken place between them. So far the case does not directly bear upon the point before us. But West, J., in his judgment examines the whole subject of a widow's right in connection with her husband's estate very fully, and he examines it under the Bengal system of law as well as the others. The passage most directly bearing upon the matter before us is at page 507. Speaking of the mother's right to an allotment, on a partition between sons or their representatives, he says: "This is to be referred to the wife’s right in her husband’s property acquired by her marriage. As to this there is no proof, the Dayabhaga says Chapter IX, s. 1, para. 26 ‘that it ceases on her husband’s death. But the cessation of the widow’s right of property, if there be male issue, appears only from the law ordaining the succession of male issue.’ Jimuta Vahana in this way makes out that, while the widow’s right to her husband’s whole share or whole estate subsists in spite of the survival of other undivided co-parceners; it is extinguished by the superior right of a son, grandson, or great grandson, through the operation of the special texts in their [314] favour. In Bengal, then, it seems that the widow has a complete proprietorship, subject to restriction on waste, as against other co-parceners; no proprietorship at all as against sons. Yet in Bengal, as in the provinces governed by the Mitakshara, ‘when partition is made by brothers of the whole blood after the demise of the father, an equal share must be given to the mother.’ The mother’s ownership, which has, according to this view, been extinguished, revives again on a partition amongst her sons. Their ownership in the meantime is complete.” Great weight is due to any opinion of that learned Judge on a question of Hindu law; the opinion, however, here expressed did not form the ground of decision, but is upon a point collateral. I should not have ventured to comment upon the language used in thus stating a proposition the substantial correctness of which is not open to doubt, but that the precise words have been relied upon in argument. As those words have been relied upon, I must say that I think it is more in accordance with the text of the Dayabhaga in the passage cited, and with the current of the Bengal authorities to say, not that on partition an old right revives, but that on partition a new right arises.

(2) 2 B. 494.

The case of Bilaso v. Dina Nath (1) was also relied upon. The question in that case was whether, under Mitakshara law, a mother’s right to claim a share on partition was good, not only against her sons, but against a purchaser at an execution sale of the undivided interest of one of the sons. That question was answered in the affirmative. It is unnecessary to enquire whether the same rule would prevail in Bengal; some of the reasoning on which the decision was based would not, I think, be applicable in a case governed by Bengal law.

The conclusion which I draw from the Bengal authorities is that a wife’s interest in her husband’s estate given to her by marriage ceases upon the death of her husband leaving lineal heirs in the male line; that such heirs take the whole estate; and that the share which a mother takes on a partition among her sons she does not take from her husband, either by inheritance, or by way of survivorship in continuation of any pre-existing interest; but that she takes it from her sons in lieu of, [315] or by way of provision for, that maintenance for which they and their estates are already bound. I think it follows as a necessary inference that, on her death, that share does not descend as if she had inherited it from her husband, but goes back to her sons from whom she received it. And this is the conclusion drawn by Shama Churm Sircar and by Ghose, J., in the passages already cited.

It is true that throughout the controversy which once prevailed in Bengal, and which still, perhaps, exists in some other schools of law, as to whether a mother takes her share absolutely or only for life, we constantly find the question asked in this way,—whether her share goes on her death to her heirs or the heirs of her husband. Such expressions in such a context do not, I think, afford us any assistance; it would have been irrelevant to the matter in hand to enquire what heirs of the husband take. And I have therefore not thought it necessary to examine those various opinions in detail. The heirs of the husband might be, as the appellant contends, those who would have been his heirs if he had died when his widow died. They might be all those who at his death were in fact his heirs. They might be all those among the latter group who by inheritance, followed and defined by partition, took the particular property in question, and out of whose shares the mother’s allotment was taken. The two latter groups would, in the present case, be identical. But, as will be shown later on, it might be otherwise if there were sons by different mothers. The last of these three views, I think, is the true one on principle and on authority.

If we were to accept the view contended for by the appellants, and hold that when a mother dies the share, allotted to her on a partition between her sons, goes to the heirs of her husband to be ascertained at her death, we should be led, of necessity, to come consequences which it is difficult to accept. We must, in the first place, either say that, on the death of a father, his sons do not inherit his whole estate, a doctrine which seems to me wholly repugnant to the Hindu law current in Bengal; or else we must say that the same property can descend by inheritance twice from the same man to male heirs. Secondly, we must say that two different groups of male persons may be the heirs of the same man.

[316] Incongruities, it was contended, also follow from the opposite view. It was said that the view involves the idea of a life estate in the mother with a vested reversion in her sons or their representatives, and that such a combination of interests, arising by operation of law, is not elsewhere known to the Hindu law. This may be so, but such a combination is certainly admissible when it arises by act of the parties, and this was freely admitted; and I am disposed to think that the apparent difficulty arises mainly from the application of the language of English law to the affairs of persons living under Hindu law.

A second incongruity pointed out as arising from the same view, is, to my mind, of somewhat greater weight. In the treatises with which we are familiar, property vested in Hindu women is regarded as of two kinds; property inherited from a male person, which descends to those who are his heirs at the date of the death of the female inheritor; and stridhun, which descends to her own heirs. The share allotted to a mother on a partition among her sons is confessedly her property; yet on the view in question it neither is stridhun, nor descends as property inherited from a male. I think this an argument not without force. Perhaps the answer may be that woman’s property is ordinarily treated of under head of inheritance, and therefore a kind of property, which on her death is not a subject of inheritance, might naturally not be discussed. It may be observed in this connection that the rule which I think the true one, though not a rule of inheritance, follows the analogy of the law of inheritance, for it makes a mother’s share revert on her death to the last male owners.

If we are at liberty to consider this matter from the point of view of convenience, there can, I think, be no doubt which rule is the more convenient. In the present case there has been only one group of sons, and the question is merely whether the mother’s share is to go back to all her sons or their representatives, or only to her surviving sons. But there may well be two groups of sons by two mothers. And the rule contended for by the appellant would, on the death of either mother, who had obtained a share on a partition amongst her sons, take her portion [317] which had been carved out of her own son's share alone, and divide it rateably between sons and step-sons.

I think the view taken by the learned Judge who heard the case is correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Ramjanee Bibee and others (Plaintiffs) v. Amoo Beparee (Defendant).* [9th January, 1888.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sch. III, art 3—Limitation—Suit by occupancy ryot to recover possession from Trespasser, Limitation for.

Art. 3, sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885) relates to suits brought by an occupancy ryot against his landlord and not to a suit brought against a third party who is a trespasser.

This suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of certain lands on the allegation that the defendant had dispossessed them in Bysack 1291 (April—May, 1884). The land in suit, was alleged to have been the jote of one Sahoo Peadah, the husband of Ramjanee Bibee, the principal plaintiff, and to have been inherited by her on his death and sold by her to plaintiff No. 3. The defence was that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation; that the land never formed the jote of Sahoo or the plaintiff Ramjance; that the plaintiff never paid rent for the land and had no title to it, but that it was the jote of one Nazir, and the defendant had purchased it at an auction sale in execution of a decree against Nazir, and had since been in possession of it under a settlement with the talukdar.

[318] The suit was instituted on the 7th January 1886, and the Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree.

The Subordinate Judge, however, reversed that decree and dismissed the suit with costs. He found that there could be no doubt that the land was the jote of Sahoo, but that Sahoo had died more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, and that it had not been proved that the plaintiffs had been in possession within twelve years. He further found that, although it was not proved that the land had been the jote of Nazir, still that no rent had been paid for the land by the plaintiffs since 1280, and that it must therefore be taken that they had abandoned the land; and as the defendant held under a settlement with the talukdar he was entitled to retain possession.

Against that decree the plaintiffs preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Munshi Shumsul Huda, for the appellants.

Baboo Hurry Mohun Chuckerbutty, for the respondent.

At the hearing of the appeal an objection was taken that the suit was barred by the special limitation of two years provided by art. 3, sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885).

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

We are of opinion that upon the facts found by him the Subordinate Judge was justified in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit.

The suit was brought to recover possession of certain lands in which the plaintiffs alleged they had acquired a right of occupancy. The lower appellate Court has found that, although the plaintiffs had title to the land, still they have not actually cultivated it for twelve years, and have not paid rent for it since 1280, that is, for about eleven years. From these facts the Subordinate Judge drew the inference that the land had actually been abandoned by the plaintiffs, and that the landlord was justified in letting it again to another tenant. We are not prepared to say that this decision is erroneous.

An objection has been taken that this suit was barred under the special provisions contained in art. 3, sch. III of the [319] Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides a limitation of two years for a suit to recover possession of land by an occupancy ryot. We are of opinion that that article relates only to a suit brought by an occupancy ryot against his landlord, and not to a suit by a tenant against third parties who are trespassers.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 1,173 due on a bond. It was found as a fact that after the due date of the bond an arrangement was come to between the plaintiff and the defendant by which the plaintiff agreed to accept, in satisfaction of what was due to him at the time of the arrangement, Rs. 400 in cash and a fresh bond for Rs. 701, payable by instalments; and it was further found that the plaintiff never intended to or agreed to accept the naked promise of the defendant to pay the Rs. 400 and to give the bond for Rs. 701. The defendant did not pay the Rs. 400 or give the bond, but pleaded that there had been a novation of the original contract by reason of the subsequent agreement, and that the suit being based on the original contract could not be maintained, and he relied on the provisions of ss. 62 and 63 of the Contract Act in support of his contention.

_Held_ that neither section had any bearing on the case, and that upon the breach by the defendant of the terms which he had made, and upon the non-performances by him of the satisfaction which he had promised to give, the parties were relegated to their rights and liabilities under the original contract, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he claimed.

_Held_, further, that s. 62 of the Contract Act is merely a legislative expression of the common law, and the provisions thereof do not apply to a case where there has been a breach of the original contract before the subsequent agreement is come to.

On the 20th Falgoon 1288 (3rd March 1882) the defendant executed a bond in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 801 and a second bond, which was unregistered, for the sum of Rs. 75, the conditions of both bonds being that the defendant was to repay the principal amounts with interest thereon at the rate of Re. 1-8 per cent. per mensem in the month of Magh 1289 (January-February 1883), and that in default of his paying the amounts on the last-mentioned date he was to pay interest on the amounts then due, being the principal and interest, at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum until realization.

The money was not repaid in the month of Magh 1289 (January-February 1883), and it was the case of both the plaintiff and the defendant that an arrangement was then come to between them, that the amount then due was to be taken at Rs. 1,100 but the other terms of the arrangement were in dispute between the parties. The plaintiff alleged that it was agreed between him and the defendant that on the latter giving him Rs. 400 in cash and executing a kistibundi for Rs. 700 he would accept the same in satisfaction of all sums due to him on the bonds, but that, although the defendant did execute and cause to be registered a kistibundi for the amount arranged, he never delivered it to him nor paid him the sum of Rs. 400. He accordingly brought the present suit to recover the sum of Rs. 1,473, being Rs. 801 the amount of the original registered bond, together with Rs. 144, being the interest up to Magh 1289, and Rs. 528 being the amount of interest due on the two last mentioned sums at the rate mentioned in the bond up to the month of Joisto 1292 (May-June, 1885), the suit being instituted on the 10th June 1885.

The defendant's case was that the settlement by which his liability was fixed at Rs. 1,100 took place in Falgoon 1291 (February-March 1885) that the conditions were that he was to pay Rs. 400 in cash then and the remaining Rs. 700 in Bysack then next (April-May 1885), and in the event of his being then unable to repay the Rs. 700 he was to execute a kistibundi for the amount; that he had paid the Rs. 400 in Falgoon, and caused the payment to be endorsed on the back of the original bond; and that, being unable to pay the Rs. 700 within the prescribed time, he had executed the kistibundi, and caused it to be registered, but on the plaintiff not returning the original bond he had not delivered the kistibundi.

The plaintiff's case was that the original bond had been destroyed by worms, and he filed an attested copy with his plaint.
The Subordinate Judge disbelieved the defendant's version of the settlement, and found in favour of the plaintiff, and that the Rs. 400 had not been paid as alleged by the defendant.

The defendant in his written statement contended that the suit could not be maintained, inasmuch as there had been a novation of the original contract under s. 62 of the Contract Act, and that the plaintiff was therefore restricted to his right to sue for the amount due under the kistibundi, and this contention was relied on at the hearing of the suit, when it was further argued that it was not necessary for the new contract to be completed before it could be substituted for the original contract.

Upon this question the Subordinate Judge held on the facts that there had been no new contract completed, as the Rs. 400 had not been paid and the kistibundi never delivered, and that until the new contract was completed it could not be said that the former contract had been terminated. He accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for the full amount claimed.

On appeal the Additional District Judge modified that decree. Upon the facts he came to the same conclusion as the Court below, but differed with the Subordinate Judge upon the question of law.

Upon the latter question the judgment of the Additional District Judge was as follows:

"The legal point is more difficult. It turns upon the construction of s. 62 of the Contract Act. The Subordinate Judge considers that the words 'agree to substitute' used there have not their ordinary meaning, and that it cannot be said that the old contract was terminated until defendant had paid the Rs. 400 and delivered the kistibundi. But I do not think this [322] view is correct. It seems to me that the words 'agree to substitute' must be taken in their ordinary sense. There is a case quoted in Sutherland's edition of the Contract Act [Rajah Kallipersad Singh v. Grant (1)] which supports my view. There is no doubt in this case the parties did agree to substitute a new contract for the old one. Plaintiff in his third paragraph says expressly that at the intercession of certain respectable fellow-countrymen he agreed to accept Rs. 400 in cash and a kistibundi for the remainder. Defendant says the same thing, and so do the witnesses.

"The old contract need not therefore be performed, and defendant is only bound to pay Rs. 400 in cash and Rs. 700 by installments. The fact that he has broken this new contract does not entitle plaintiff to fall back on the old one."

He accordingly found that as the installments were not due under the kistibundi when suit was brought the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for the Rs. 400, and accordingly gave him a decree for that amount.

Against that decree the plaintiff preferred the present appeal to the High Court, and the defendant preferred a cross-appeal against the finding as to the non-payment of the Rs. 400.

Baboo Lal Mohun Dass (for Dr. Troyluckho Nath Mitter), for the appellant.

Baboo Nil Madhuk Bose, for the respondent.

Baboo Lal Mohun Dass, for appellant—According to English law, if a creditor, after a debt has become due, accepts a smaller sum in satisfaction of the whole debt, the debtor is not thereby discharged, and the creditor has the right of suing the debtor again for the residue. This doctrine has been recently affirmed by the House of Lords in Foakes v. Beer (1) upholding the authority of Pinnel's Case (2) and that of Cumber v. Wane (3). In this case there was no actual satisfaction by payment of any smaller sum, and therefore a fortiori [323] plaintiff is entitled to recover his original debt. The Court below is not right in applying s. 62 of the Indian Contract Act to this case. The new contract cannot extinguish the old one unless the new contract be based upon a new consideration. Illustrations (a), (b) and (c) to s. 62 clearly show this.

The doctrine of consideration is as much a part of the law of contract in this country as it is in England. Under s. 25 of the Indian Contract Act an agreement made without consideration is, except in certain specified cases, wholly void. Even according to English law the new contract cannot effect a valid novation unless it is founded upon a new consideration—Lynn v. Bruce (4).

It follows as a corollary from the doctrine of consideration that where before breach of a contract exoneration is purchased for a less amount than that contracted to be paid, the debtor is wholly discharged, because wherever the creditor receives his debt before it is due there is always an appreciable advantage to him which forms the consideration for the discharge. Therefore, as the new agreement in this case was admittedly neither founded upon a new consideration nor entered into before breach, s. 62 does not apply.

Section 63 of the Indian Contract Act closely approaches the facts of the present case, but that section also does not apply for two reasons: firstly, because it says that the promisee may accept instead of the original promise any satisfaction which he thinks fit; it does not say that the promisee may accept any promise of satisfaction by the debtor. Under that section the debtor is discharged only where there is both accord and satisfaction. Illustrations (b), (c) and (d) to s. 63 point to that conclusion. According to English law executory accord is insufficient. Illustration (b) to s. 63 no doubt expresses the doctrine contrary to that laid down in Foakes v. Beer (1), but there is nothing either in the section itself or in the illustrations to indicate that a mere naked promise of satisfaction would supersede the original debt. [Norris, J.—But Hall v. Flockton (5) lays down that where promise and not performance is intended to be received in satisfaction it is a good satisfaction.] There the promise [324] was founded upon a new consideration. If it be said that under s. 63 a mere promise, if accepted in satisfaction, is a good discharge, then, so far, s. 63 overlaps s. 62, and therefore such a promise is not valid without a new consideration. Secondly: Assuming that under s. 63 a naked promise of satisfaction, if accepted, supersedes the original debt, the Judge below finds that it was the intention of the parties when the new agreement was made that the sum of Rs. 400 should be paid down in cash and an installment bond executed in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 701. As the defendant failed to fulfil his part of the contract by not paying down the sum of Rs. 400 the parties must be relegated to their former rights, and the plaintiff has therefore the right to recover his original debt.

The law on the subject is laid down in ss. 62 and 63 of the Indian Contract Act. Section 62 enacts in a compendious form what the Legislature intended should be the law as to novation of contracts in this country. The section is advisedly worded in such a manner as to make a mere agreement between the parties to a subsisting contract to substitute another for it, and not the new contract itself, sufficient to effect a novation and the extinction of the old contract. Whether there was such an agreement in any case is always a question of fact—Rajah Kallipersahd Singh v. Grant (1).

The provisions of s. 63 are contrary to the well-known rule of English law, and seem to have been introduced to prevent the application of the English law to any of the cases that are expressly provided for by the section.

The question therefore of want of consideration is entirely out of place.

What is "satisfaction" in any case coming under the section is a question of fact. It always depends on the nature of the arrangement. A mere undertaking to perform an act may be accepted as "satisfaction," just as well as an executed promise.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The facts of this case appear to be these: The suit was brought [325] by the plaintiff to recover a sum of Rs. 1,473. How that sum is arrived at is stated at the top of page 3 of the paper-book.

It appears that in Falgoon 1288 the defendant executed a bond for Rs. 801 in favour of the plaintiff. The money was to be repaid in Magh 1289. From the date of the bond up to the date fixed for repayment of the money interest was to be paid at eighteen per cent. per annum. If the money was not paid on the date it was covenant-ed to repay it, namely, Magh 1289, then interest upon the original sum and upon the interest up to Magh 1289 was to run at the rate of twenty-four per cent. per annum. The money was not repaid on the date fixed for its repayment, namely, Magh 1289. The defendant not being able to pay went to the plaintiff, and said in effect this to him: "I am not able to pay you what is due to you under the bond; but I will pay you in cash Rs. 400, and I will execute a fresh kistibundi bond in your favour for Rs. 701." The plaintiff accepted these terms, but the defendant failed to carry them out. He did not pay the plaintiff the Rs. 400, nor did he, as he ought to have done, tender the kistibundi bond for Rs. 701 to the plaintiff. The plaintiff therefore has brought this action upon the basis of the old bond, and seeks to recover the amount which I have already mentioned, namely, Rs. 1,473.

The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for the whole amount claimed by him.

The Additional District Judge on appeal has modified that decree, and has allowed the plaintiff's claim only to the extent of Rs. 400. The ground upon which the Additional District Judge has proceeded is this: He says in effect, "I find that the provisions of s. 62 of the Contract Act apply. I find that the parties to the first contract agreed to substitute a new contract for it, and therefore the original contract need not be performed; and though the defendant has not carried out his part of the new contract, the plaintiff is not relegated to his rights under the old contract."
We are of opinion that the Judge has erred in applying the provisions of s. 62 of the Contract Act to this case at all. S. 62 is but a legislative expression of the common law; and its [326] provisions do not apply after there has been a breach of the original contract. The parties may make a new contract in substitution of the old one, or may rescind or alter the old contract, and if they do so while the original contract is subsisting and unbroken, the original contract need not be performed. As I pointed out in the course of the argument, the law on this matter is laid down in the well-known and universally accepted text-book, Bullen and Leake's Pleadings, 3rd edition, page 673. It is said there: "It is competent to the parties to a contract at any time before breach of it by a new contract to add to, subtract from, or vary the terms of it, or altogether to waive and rescind it. The substituted contract forms a good defence to an action on those terms of the previous contract which have been altered by it, and may be so pleaded without any performance or satisfaction which is required to constitute a good plea after breach." Then the form of the plea is given at page 675—"that after the alleged contract and before any breach thereof it was agreed by and between the plaintiff and the defendant that the said contract should be rescinded, and they then rescinded the same accordingly;" and there is a similar form in the case of a substituted agreement setting out the substituted agreement. Now is the case within s. 63? It is quite clear that s. 63 not only modifies, but is in direct antagonism to the law in England. It was laid down, as pointed out, in the case of Foakes v. Beer (1) that for the last pretty nearly three hundred years it has been the law in England that if A owes B five thousand rupees, and B consents to take two thousand rupees in payment of the debt, that is what is called in law nudum pactum, and that B after taking the two thousand rupees can subsequently bring his action for the unpaid three thousand rupees. The law in this country by virtue of s. 63 of the Contract Act is different; and it says: "Every promisee may dispense with or remit, wholly or in part, the performance of the promise made to him, or may extend the time for such performance, or may accept instead of it any satisfaction which he thinks fit." We think that the finding of the lower appellate Court in this case is that the plaintiff accepted in satisfaction of what was due to him at [327] the time the agreement was made Rs. 400 in cash and a fresh bond for Rs. 701. We think that is the finding. We do not think that the plaintiff ever intended to accept the naked promise to pay Rs. 400 and to give a bond for Rs. 701. The defendant has not given the satisfaction. He has not paid the money. He has not tendered the bond. The question is, what were the rights of the parties under these circumstances? It seems to us perfectly clear that the parties were relegated to their rights and liabilities under the original contract, and that the plaintiff, upon breach by the defendant of the terms which he had made, and upon the non-performance by him of the satisfaction which he had promised to give, was relegated to his rights under the old contract, and was entitled to bring the suit on the basis of the old bond, and to recover the money which he claimed.

The appeal must therefore be allowed, the decision of the Additional Judge set aside, and that of the Second Subordinate Judge restored, with costs in all the Courts.

INDIAN DECISIONS, NEW SERIES

CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

SANKARMANI DEBYA AND OTHERS (Petitioners) v. MATHURA DHUPINI (Opposite-party).* [20th January, 1888.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VII of 1885), s. 153—Revisional power of District Judge in rent suits.

The words "Judicial Officer as aforesaid" as used in the proviso to s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act have reference to the "Judicial Officer" spoken of in cl. (b) of that section and to such officer only, and a District Judge has no power to revise decrees or orders passed by a District Judge, Additional Judge or Subordinate Judge referred to in cl. (a) of the section.

This was a reference by the District Judge of Fureedpore under the provisions of ss. 617 and 647 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the question referred was whether a District Judge has power to revise decrees passed by a Subordinate Judge, from which under s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885) no appeal [328] lies, or in other words, whether the proviso contained in the last paragraph of that section has reference to the class of cases specified in cl. (a) of the section. The application which gave rise to the reference was for the revision of a rent decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Fureedpore, and the District Judge dismissed the application, contingent on the opinion of the High Court by an order in the following terms:—

"This is an application invoking the revisional powers of the Court under s. 153 of the Tenancy Act of 1885 with reference to a decree of the Subordinate Judge in a rent suit of the description specified in the aforesaid section. The question is whether the proviso to that section vesting the District Court with revisional powers has reference to both clss. (a) and (b) of the section or to cl. (b) alone.

"The expression 'a Judicial Officer as aforesaid' does not appear to be happy or explicit. I have compared this section with s. 102 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and also referred to the proceedings in the Legislative Council, and the conclusion I arrive at is that the proviso has reference to cl. (b) only, and that the words 'a Judicial Officer as aforesaid' denotes a Judicial Officer specially empowered by the local Government to exercise final jurisdiction in rent suits of the value of Rs. 50 and under. My reason is two-fold:—

"(1) If the proviso be held applicable to cl. (a) as well as to cl. (b), we are landed at the absurdity of finding the District Judge vested with power of revision over his own decisions and over those of an Additional Judge who may be of equal rank and standing with him.

"(2) It appears from paragraphs 114 and 115 of the Statement of Objects and Reasons (published in part V of the India Gazette of the 17th March 1883), which deal with s. 198 of the original Bill, corresponding to s. 153 of the Act, that the proviso was introduced only as a safeguard against the extension of final jurisdiction to the class of cases marked (b)."

"I cannot find any reference to this section in the Report of the Select Committee published in Part V of the India Gazette of the 5th...

*Civil Reference No. 18A of 1887, made by B. L. Gupta, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Fureedpore, dated the 18th of November 1887.
April 1884, in which year the section in question bore the number 188 in Chapter XIV.

[329] "I am therefore disposed to dismiss this application. Entertaining however a reasonable doubt in the matter, I shall, as desired by the applicant's pleader, make a reference to the High Court under ss. 617 and 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with s. 143 of the Tenancy Act.

"Contingent on the opinion of the High Court on the reference I dismiss the application, but make no order as to costs."

No one appeared on the reference.

The opinion of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, J.J.) was as follows:

OPINION.

We are of opinion that the "Judicial Officer as aforesaid" mentioned in the proviso to s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has reference to the "Judicial Officer" spoken of in cl. (b) of the section and to such an officer only. It follows that the District Judge possesses no revisional jurisdiction by virtue of that proviso in respect of the decrees and orders of a District Judge, Additional Judge or Subordinate Judge referred to in clause (a) of the section.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

Present:

Lord Fitzgerald, Lord Hobhouse, Sir B. Peacock and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

Attachment—Civil Procedure Code, s. 266—Property held by judgment-debtor in trust for a specific purpose—attempt to attach surplus after fulfilment of trust.

Neither the whole corpus, nor any specific portion of the corpus, of an estate in the hands of a trustee who is a judgment debtor is rendered liable to attachment in execution of the decree against him, because a surplus of income is in his hands for his own benefit after due performance of the trusts; nor does such corpus, or any part of it, come, for that reason, within the meaning of s. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which only authorizes the attachment of property over which the judgment-debtor has a disposing power, or exerciseable for his own benefit.

Where a trust had been created for specific purposes, viz., the performance of religious and other duties, and the trustee had duly appointed another trustee in his place, the latter being entitled to hold the trust estate: Held, that a decree having been made against the trustee personally, the corpus of the trust estate could not be sold to satisfy the claim of the judgment-creditor, nor could any specific portion of the corpus of the estate be taken out of the hands of the trustee on the ground that there was, or might be, a margin of profit coming to him personally after the performance of the trusts. Held, also, that in a suit in which all the parties interested were not before the Court, there could be no decision as to the extent of the trusts nor as to whether any surplus profits of the trust estates would, or would not, after the performance of the trusts, belong to the trustee personally.
Appeal from a decree (28th May 1888) of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, reversing a decree (19th February 1881) of the Subordinate Judge of Moorsheadabad.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by one Saiyad Nadir Hossein, the present respondent, in accordance with s. 283 of the Civil Procedure, to establish his right as trustee to certain zamindaries in pergunnahs Bansdowl and Paltapur, in the Moorsheadabad district, and to have set aside execution proceedings taken by Bishen Chand Basawat, the present appellant, against that property, including an order, made by a Court in execution, disallowing his claim to have it released from attachment.

The decree, in execution whereof the disputed attachment had been placed on the property, was against the estate of Mahomed Ali, deceased in 1868, who had been the predecessor of Saiyad Nadir Hossein, as trustee in possession of the property.

The plaintiff’s case was that the property was held by himself and had been before held by Mahomed Ali, in trust for religious purposes; and therefore, was not liable to be attached in satisfaction of a decree, against the last trustee personally. The defence was that the trusts, even if validly created, which was denied, only extended to part of the proceeds of the estate held by Mahomed Ali; and that there was a residue of the property in the hands of the trustee which, after the trusts had been satisfied out of the other part, was liable to be attached in execution proceedings taken against the estate of Mahomed Ali.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the property was held by Mahomed Ali for his own benefit, subject to certain [381] trusts of a religious nature; and that this beneficial ownership was liable to be attached in his hands, and in the hands of his successors, for his personal debts. This decision was reversed by the High Court, which held that, although there was a margin of profit, after satisfying the trusts, which might be properly applicable to the claims of the execution creditor, still the property itself could not be attached to satisfy the debts of a former trustee.

No facts were in dispute, and the questions for decision in this appeal were of law.

At the hearing before the Subordinate Judge it appeared that the proprietary right was, in the year 1859, in Khairunnissa Khanum, a Mahomedan lady, who died in that year, having executed on 13th April 1859 a wasiatnamah. By this document, after reciting that she had been accustomed to defray the taziadari, mujlis (meetings) and abdarkhana (water supply) expenses from the proceeds of the zamindaries in pergunnah Bansdowl, that she was anxious that these should be kept up in perpetuity, and that she had no confidence in her son Enayet Ali, and that it was necessary she should appoint a wasi (administrator) for the purpose of carrying out the important works of the taziadari, &c., she proceeded as follows:

"I therefore appoint in respect of the whole and entire of these zamindaries, gardens, buildings, and my whole property, my grandson, Mirza Mahomed Ali Beg who is intelligent, fit, faithful, honest, a shrewd man of business, to be trustee, and deliver and entrust to him my property on the following terms: "That the said trustee shall, after my death, in accordance with the customs prevailing among those professing the Mahomedan faith and religion, cause the performance of, and provide for, all rites for the invocation of blessings, interments, and sepulture, hajj (pilgrimages), tazaidari, muzlis, sepulchral expenses, &c., from the property above described, after paying the Government revenue to the Collectorate from the proceeds of the above pergunnah as per schedule below; and from whatever surplus shall remain he will draw as trustee's due a monthly sum of Rs. 40, and he will pay a monthly sum of Rs. 100, new coinage, to Mirza Enayet Ali Beg, my son, and of Rs. 60 to Mobaruckunnissa Khanum, my daughter, and pay for repairs of the buildings aforesaid. The rent of the gardens, &c., and the wages of servants and employees, gardener, &c., will be paid by the said trustee, and the said trustee will pay, and the zemindaries and property of me, declarant, will never be divided or partitioned by butwara between my heirs, and they will always remain in the hands and [332] under the control of the aforesaid trustee, and the management thereof will remain with the said trustee; none of the heirs have or shall have, contrary to the terms of the trust, any power to cause a partition of my property; and the management and provision for all things above specified will be done by the said trustee, and the taking of accounts and entering into investigations and superintending all matters connected with the pergunnah aforesaid will be the work of the aforesaid trustee. In all these transactions none of my heirs shall exercise the least power, and they shall have no power to call any one to account; none of my heirs shall have any power to call for or take accounts from the trustee aforesaid. The whole of the yearly profits of the above estate in the hands of the said trustee will be expended by the said trustee in the manner provided above, and the said trustee will himself, mindful of the omnipresence of (God), discharge and perform all the duties entrusted to him; and the dishonesty of the said trustee, when complained of by any of my heirs before any authority for the time being, will be disallowed and there will be no sort of dishonesty on the part of the said trustee."

"And for the purpose of keeping up and perpetuating all these things and the estate, that is to say, the taziadari, &c., of the said emambara and burial-grounds, and all other necessary and proper affairs according to the provisions and conditions of the aforesaid wasiatnamah, I appoint my sister's son, Nadir Hossein, for the purpose of carrying on the duties specified in the former wasiatnamah, under which I have appointed him trustee for three years in my place, knowing him to be honest and faithful. The said trustee will, according to the conditions specified in the wasiatnamah of the late Khairunnissa Khanum Saheba and of this wasiatnamah, take care of, maintain and keep the whole of the property, necessary for lighting, silver and gold articles of all sorts belonging to the emambara; and exercising all the powers which I had, he will collect the rents and proceeds from the gardens, and, levying month by month his rightful allowance as trustee, carry on all the duties; and for the conduct of all law suits which are now pending or may occur afterwards, he will appoint vakils and mukhtears and properly conduct them; and he will conduct all duties connected with the emambara and burial-grounds, which are necessary and customary, month by month and year by year; and, except the power to improve, he will have no power to diminish the charge, and he will always make all proper arrangements with all servants belonging to the zamindaries, &c., appointed from before and now, and for the 5½ annas share of pergunnah Paltarore in Zillah Maldah, acquired by purchase, and which is also belonging to the emambara, and make intelligently all accounts, settlements of accounts, inquiries and investigations, and settlements of jummas; and the said trustee will have all the powers which I had except that of granting putnis and ijaras for the appointment and dismissal of servants, and the conduct of all business, and he will act as he thinks best for the good and welfare of the emambara. [333] And he is my relative, friend and well-wisher, and besides the above Mussummat Bibi Pirun, Mussummat Bubri Khanum, Mussummat Bibi Supun Jan and Mussummat Imami Bibi and others are my motha wives (i.e., wives by a second grade marriage); and as long as they behave properly and remain under his protection and guidance, he, the said trustee, will provide for them. And after my death, he will cause my body to be clothed and buried; and will always cause the performance (reading) of the fatechas for the invocation of blessings, pilgrimages, readings of the Koran and the mujlis for the salvation of myself and of the late Khairunnissa Khanum; and if necessity should, in his opinion, arise, he is empowered to appoint another trustee. No one has the power to interfere. Should in future anybody prefer any sort of claim, it will be held false, and will be condemned as such before the hakims for the time being. For which reason I execute this wasiatnamah while of sound mind and in my full senses, in the present assembly, that it may come of use in proper time, and that it may remain as a document to future times."

Mahomed Ali having died on the 21st May 1868, those who had claims against his estate took proceedings against Nadir Hossein, disputing the effect of the second wasiatnamah. Again, in 1877, the present appellant attempted to enforce a decree against the estate of Mahomed Ali in the hands of Nadir Hossein. This failed, because the Court held that Nadir Hossein was not the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, and that assets of the latter could only be reached through legal process against his proper representatives. The present appellant having renewed his attempt in 1879 to attach the property left by Mahomed Ali, as being in the hands of the respondent partly for the benefit of Mahomed Ali's estate, the present suit resulted. The abovementioned judgment of the Subordinate Judge, stated more in detail, found that the first wasiatnamah was, in fact, executed by Khairunnissa, but not with knowledge of its nature. He held that it was not a deed converting the property into a religious endowment, but a will burthening the property, in the hands of the heirs, with certain charges for religious objects. As a will, he found that it was only valid to the extent of one-third of the property, being made without the consent of the heirs. He was of opinion that the second wasiat merely continued the trusts created by the former instrument, [334] and that as regards any beneficiary interest then possessed by Mahomed Ali, it was void as against his creditors, he being then insolvent. The result of these findings was that the large part of the estate was the private property of Mahomed Ali, during his life, and after his death was assets in the hands of his heir for the payment of his debts.
This judgment was not maintained by the High Court (Cunningham and Maclean, JJ.). The Judges were of opinion that it was not essential to decide whether the property became waqf or not, and whether Mahomed Ali had become mutawalli or not, inasmuch as the trust implied that the trustee, for the time being, was entitled to hold the property subject to the performance of the duties charged upon it. There might have been in Mahomed Ali’s time a margin of profit, and that margin might possibly have been attached in execution of a personal decree against the trustee.
But that was not the question in hand, which was, whether Mahomed Ali’s creditor was entitled to attach the property itself in the hands of the plaintiff. In regard to the appointment of the succeeding trustee by the document of 20th May 1868, the Judges held it fairly within the power. conferred by Khairunnissa’s wasiatnamah. Their judgment concluded thus: “We find, therefore, that Mahomed Ali was competent to execute the deed of 20th May 1868, that deed vested the trust property in the plaintiff subject to the declared trusts. This finding disposes of the first defendant’s case. If the trust deed be good, the plaintiff is entitled to hold the property subject to the charges of the trust, and to the claims of his creditors to any margin of profit, if there be one which can be shown to be his personal property. But the creditor of Mahomed Ali has, it appears to us, no right to attach the property in the hands of the present trustee in order to enforce a money decree against a former trustee which could never have been enforced, except against the margin of profit, which, after performance of the trusts, remained in his hands.”

On this appeal,

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the legal effect of the first wasiatnamah was to confer, so far as Khair-unnissa was entitled to confer it, the [335] whole property upon Mahomed Ali as his own estate, subject to the performance of the trusts for religious objects. The second wasiatnamah, on the other hand, did not vest any interest in the respondent, but merely gave him the right of managing the estate for the purpose of paying out of the income sums required in respect of the religious duties imposed; and this caused the residue of the estate, beyond what was required for religious purposes, to pass to the heirs of Mahomed Ali on his death. Moreover, the second wasiatnamah, even if a transfer was attempted by it, could not pass any beneficial interest in the property, inasmuch as Mahomed Ali was insolvent at the date of it; and it was, therefore, void as against his creditors.

For another reason there was a personal interest in that part of the property which was not required for the expenditure on the objects of the trusts. This was that there was no complete appropriation of the property to religious objects by either the wasiatnamah of 1859 or that of 1868, neither of them having constituted the property to be waqf or strictly endowed for religious objects. Property might be either absolutely devoted to religious purposes, which was one mode of endowment, or it might be burdened in the hands of an owner with a trust for religious objects, which was another mode of providing for their performance, and this latter plan had been adopted here. The appropriation in order to constitute waqf must divest the private owner of all property in it. A mutawalli was generally appointed. Here a wasi, or administrator, only was appointed. Waqf property might not be alienated; but where the whole of the profits of lands were not devoted to religious purposes, and were only heritable property burdened with a trust for such purposes, the profits might be alienated. In reference to this distinction were cited

In regard to the nature of the proof required, when a pardanashin is

In connection with the general proposition that under any system of law relating to religious trusts a surplus in the hands of the trustee, intended for his benefit, was available to satisfy decrees against him for his personal debts, was cited Aushotosh Dutt v. Doorgachurn Chatterjee (11) where a surplus belonged to a joint Hindu family, of the family property, charged with expenses of daily worship.

On a question whether the right, title, and interest of Nadir Hossein had been attached, or the estate itself, reference was made to ss. 274, 278 and 287 of Act X of 1877 and Act XIV of 1882. [Sir B. Peacock enquired what would have been the terms specifying the property to be sold if an application for sale had been filed]. The terms would have specified "all that remained after defraying the expenses of the trust." [Lord Hobhouse.—Would not that have involved proceedings in which all the parties interested must have been before the Court to ascertain the surplus and to have the trusts declared?] The argument was that, with, and subject to, certain definite trusts declared in the wasiatnamah, the property had vested in Mahomed Ali. The property, with these trusts annexed, could have been sold by him, and it therefore fell within
s. 266.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir B. Peacock.—In a suit filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff prayed that an order passed in certain execution cases might be reversed and set aside.

[337] The defendant, as the purchaser of a decree which had been made against Mahomed Ali, obtained an order in execution against the heirs, or persons alleged to be the heirs, of Mahomed Ali for the attachment of certain property which he alleged to be the assets of Mahomed Ali. The plaintiff objected to the attachment of the property, and the present suit was brought to set aside the order.

The facts of the case are these: A Mahomedan lady named Khairunnissa, who had an absolute interest in the property, executed a document called a will, or a deed, which is set out in the record. By that document she devised the property to her grandson, Mahomed Ali, upon trust for the performance of certain religious duties and ceremonies in accordance with the Mahomedan religion. A question was raised whether the trust so created amounted to what in Mahomedan law is called a

(1) 1 Sel. Rep. 17=6 I.D.(O.S.) 17. (2) 2 M.I.A. 390. (3) 8 W.R. 313.
waqf, or whether it was merely a trust for the performance of religious duties. The High Court held that it was at any rate a trust for the performance of religious duties, and that a trustee had been appointed for the performance of them by Khairunnissa, and that a subsequent trustee had been appointed by that trustee. It is unnecessary to specify the various religious duties for the performance of which this trust was created. Many of them, such as the tazia and others, were specified in a schedule to the deed, with the expenses set opposite, amounting altogether to Rs. 1,412. There was also a sum to be paid to her son Mirza Enayet Ali Beg, Rs. 100 per mensem, or yearly Rs. 1,200, and to her daughter Mobarakunnissa Khanum, Rs. 60 per mensem, or yearly Rs. 720. Those two legacies have lapsed by death. Then there is “trustee’s allowance of Mirza Mahomed Ali Beg at Rs. 40 per mensem, or yearly Rs. 480,” and then there are other items for wages. At the end of the document, after specifying the trusts, it was declared that “the whole of the yearly profits of the above estate in the hands of the said trustee will be expended by the said trustee in the manner provided above, and the said trustee will himself, mindful of the omnipresence (of God), discharge and perform all the duties entrusted to him.”

Khairunnissa died in the year 1850, leaving her son, Enayet Ali, who lived until the 5th of February, 1860, and her daughter, Mobarakunnissa, who died on the 23rd of April 1869. It was contended that this document being the will of Khairunnissa, she could not dispose of more than one-third of her interest in the estate, and that the other two-thirds went to her heirs-at-law, her heirs-at-law, at the time of her death in 1859, being Enayet Ali, her son, and Mobarakunnissa, her daughter. Their Lordships consider it unnecessary to decide whether the instrument was a will or a deed. Upon the death of Enayet Ali, Mahomed Ali, who had been appointed the trustee by Khairunnissa, was his heir-at-law. It appears that after the death of Khairunnissa, Enayet Ali made some claim, as heir, to his share of the property which he said his mother could not dispose of. Mahomed Ali, on the other hand, contended that the will of his grandmother was a valid one; that one of the whole of the property passed under that document to himself, and did not vest in his father; and that his grandmother had the right to dispose of the whole of the property. Mahomed Ali never claimed upon the death of Enayet to succeed to any portion of the property as having been undisposed of by his grandmother, but during the whole of his life treated the property of his grandmother as having been disposed of by her will for the purposes therein expressed. He could not therefore in his lifetime have claimed any portion of the estate as heir to his father Enayet. Mobarakunnissa, as already observed, died on the 23rd of April 1869, and neither she nor any of her heirs have ever claimed to be entitled to any portion of the property as not having been disposed of by Khairunnissa.

The defendant in the suit claimed under a purchase in execution of a decree against Mahomed Ali, dated in 1863, to have the whole of the property sold in execution of that decree against the heirs-at-law of Mahomed Ali, the trustee. The case came on to be heard before the Subordinate Judge, who was the Judge sitting in the Court of Execution, and after various proceedings and objections it was ordered that the property should be attached. It was objected that the judgment-creditor could not attach the whole property, and that he had not specified any particular portion of it. The Judge, speaking of the residuary interest of the deceased [339] Mahomed Ali Beg as the property liable to be attached, said: "As there is yet time to ascertain the nature of interest under s. 287 of the Civil Procedure Code previous to the issue of the writ of proclamation, I think the claimant's objection on the score of the attachment being void for want of specification of the debtor's interest is untenable." He therefore disallowed the objection, and so in effect maintained the order which had been made for the attachment of the entire corpus of the estate.

One of the learned counsel for the appellant very properly admitted that no specific portion of the corpus could be sold, but that the whole corpus of the estate was liable to be sold. The High Court held that the corpus of the estate was not liable to be sold, and they say: "Nor is it essential to decide whether the property became what is known technically as waqf, and whether Mahomed Ali became mutawali, because the Subordinate Judge finds, and we think rightly, that the deed created a trust for certain specific purposes. This implies that the trustee for the time being is entitled to hold the property subject to the performance of the duties charged upon it. There may have been in Mahomed Ali’s time a margin of profit, and that margin might possibly have been attached in execution of a personal decree against the trustee; but that is not the question now. The question is, whether Mahomed Ali’s creditor is entitled to attach the property itself in the hands of the plaintiff."

If the whole property is to be sold, it must be taken out of the hands of the trustee altogether and put into the hands of a purchaser. That purchaser might be a Christian, he might be a Hindu, or he might be of any other religion. It surely cannot be contended that property, divided by a Mahomedan lady to a Mahomedan trustee with the object of providing for certain Mahomedan religious duties, could be taken out of the hands of that trustee and sold to a person of any other religion, and that the purchaser should become the trustee for the purpose of performing or seeing to the performance of those religious duties. If property is to be sold and alienated from the trustee whom this lady appointed, or the trustee who was subsequently appointed by him to succeed him as trustee, the purchaser, of whatever religion he might be, would have to see to the [340] execution of the trusts. Is it possible that the law can be such that a Hindu might become the purchaser of the property for the purpose of seeing to the performance of certain religious duties under the Mahomedan Law? For example that a Hindu might be substituted for a Mahomedan trustee for the purpose of providing funds for the Mohurrum and taking care that it should be duly and properly performed, when it is well known what disputes and bitter feeling frequently exist between Hindus and Mahomedans at the time of the Mohurrum. The High Court says: "If there was a margin of profit, that margin of profit might possibly have been attached." Their Lordships cannot in this suit, in which all parties interested are not before it, decide as to the extent of the religious trusts, or whether any surplus profit after the performance of those trusts, would belong to Mahomed Ali or the trustee substituted by him. The corpus of the estate cannot be sold, nor can any specific portion of the corpus of the estate be taken out of the hands of the trustee because there may be a margin of profit coming to him after the performance of all the religious duties.

According to s. 269 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877, which was the Code in force at the time when these execution proceedings were going on, the following property is liable to attachment and sale.
in execution of a decree, namely, lands, houses, or other buildings, goods, money, bank notes, and so on. Then "shares in the capital or joint stock of any railway company or other public company or corporation; and, except as hereinafter mentioned all other saleable property, moveable or immovable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit, and whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor, or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf." If there was any surplus in the hands of the trustee for the benefit of the judgment-debtor, it would not entitle the judgment-creditor to attach and sell the whole or any specific portion of the corpus of the estate. He could only attach the property over which the judgment-debtor [341] had a disposing power, which he might exercise for his own benefit, "whether the same was held in the name of the judgment-debtor, or by another person in trust for him." Mahomed Ali, just before his death, executed a deed, which is to be found on the record, and he says: "I appoint my sister's son, Nadir Hossein"—who is the present plaintiff—"for the purpose of carrying out on the duties specified in the former wasiatnamah, under which I have appointed him trustee for three years in my place, knowing him to be honest and faithful. The said trustee will, according to the conditions specified in the wasiatnamah, of the late Khairunnissa Khanum Saheba, and of this wasiatnamah, take care of, maintain, and keep, the whole of the property, necessaries for lighting, silver and gold articles of all sorts belonging to the emambara"—and all the other religious duties. He is to be the trustee for carrying out the religious ceremonies which had been appointed by Khairunnissa under the wasiatnamah. It was contended that, if this was not a waqf, the trustee appointed by Khairunnissa had no power to appoint a new trustee. But even if Mahomed Ali could not appoint a trustee in his place, no one has ever objected to Syed Nadir Hossein as the trustee. If there had been any objection that he was illegally substituted as trustee, an application might have been made by any person interested in the performance of the trusts to have him removed, and a new trustee appointed by the Court under the Code of 1877. But Syed Nadir Hossein was in possession as trustee, and no person interested in the performance of the religious duties had ever objected. Even if there had been an objection, that would not have converted the corpus of the property held in trust into Mahomed Ali's own private property, liable to be attached for his private debts. By s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act No. X of 1877, it is enacted that:—"If upon the investigation the Court is satisfied that for the reasons stated"—that is upon the investigation of the claim of an objector—"in the claim or objection such property was not when attached in the possession of the judgment-debtor, or of some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that being in the possession of the judgment-debtor [342] at such time, it was so in his possession not on his own account, or his own property, but on account of or in trust for some other person, or partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall pass an order releasing the property wholly or to such an extent as it thinks fit, from attachment." Section 281 enacts "that if the Court is satisfied that the property was, at the time it was attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property, and not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupation of a tenant, or other person paying rent to him, the Court shall disallow the claim."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the order for the attachment of the corpus of the estate was erroneous, and that a proclamation could not have been lawfully issued for the sale of any portion of the property attached.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the High Court was right, and they will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss this appeal and to affirm that judgment. The cost of the appeal must be paid by the appellant.

Parmeswar Pertab Singh and Others (Defendants) v. Padmanand Singh and Others (Plaintiffs). [2nd December, 1887.]

Lease, Construction of—Construction of pottah as to duration—Use of the word "mokurari."

A ghatwali estate having been sold for arrears of revenue, the purchaser brought suits to set aside under-tenures, and in so doing sued a tenant who alleged himself to be a ghatwal. The latter compromised the suit, receiving a mokurari pottah not containing any words importing a hereditary interest.

Held, that the above circumstances were no ground for declining to give effect to the pottah as it stood, the word "mokurari" not importing inheritance.

[343] Appeal from a decree (19th May 1885) of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, affirming a decree (31st December 1883) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the respondents, who were zamindars of Kharagpur in the Bhagalpur district, to recover possession of a mouzah of which a mokurari lease had been made in 1853 to one Teknarain Singh. He died in 1881, and this suit was brought against his sons, who were in possession, and who alleged that the tenancy was hereditary.

The second Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, holding that, upon the terms of the pottah of 1853, it was one only for the life of Teknarain Singh, decreed the claim in favour of the plaintiffs.

On appeal a Divisional Bench of the High Court (Tottenham and Agnew, JJ.) gave judgment as follows:

"There are no words whatever in this pottah which would import any hereditary interest; and it has been held frequently that the word "mokurari" alone does not import anything more than fixed rent."

"It has been urged upon us on behalf of the appellant that we must look to the circumstances of the case, and not only to the document. The circumstances set up for the defence were, that the mouzah in question was formerly a ghatwali tenure. Therefore by its nature it was in fact a hereditary tenure, and the ghatwals or their descendants could not be ejected.

"The ghatwali estate was sold for arrears of Government revenue in 1838, and was purchased by the present plaintiffs' predecessor. The purchaser brought suits to set aside encumbrances, and amongst others, the ghatwals were sued. Teknarain appears to have been one of those tenants who were sued for the setting aside of his tenure. He pleaded that he was a ghatwal. The suit, however, was to set aside the sunnud on which his title was based, and there was no admission, nor was there any finding that Teknarain was a ghatwal at all. It appears that he compromised the suit, and permitted a decree against him on the condition of receiving the lease which is now in question.

"The learned Advocate-General has contended that if this compromise was brought about through ignorance, on the part of Teknarain, of his position under the law, it should not be held to bind him; and it is argued that, at any rate, the tenure having been held by him and his predecessors for a long series of years, it is not likely that he would, without consideration, consent to give up his position altogether and take a lease for his own life.

"We cannot, however, say that Teknarain was ignorant of his position under the law. He well knew what his position was, for he set up a ghatwali title in the very suit in which he entered into this compromise. It is quite possible that he felt that his case was a precarious one, and that it would be better than having a decree ousting him from this tenure, to enter into a compromise by which he could secure his tenancy for his own life.

"We think, therefore, that we must hold that the lower Court put a right construction upon this pottah, and that there are no circumstances which would warrant the Court to decline to give effect to that document as it stands.

"This being so, the suit was rightly decreed."

For the appellants, Mr. J. D. Mayne submitted that there was nothing in the terms of the lease inconsistent with a permanent tenure, and that the lease and compromise must be construed with reference to the asserted ghatwali tenure.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondents, was not called upon.

Sir B. Peacock delivered their Lordships' judgment to the effect that they concurred in the construction put upon the pottah by the High Court.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

JOYKRISHNA MUKHOPADHYA AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. SARFANNESSA AND OTHERS (Plaintiff's).* [1st February, 1888.]

Sale for arrears of rent—Regulation VIII of 1819, ss. 3, 5, 6, 14—Sale of putni tenure—Registered putnidars—Suit by unregistered putnidars.

An unregistered proprietor of a putni tenure is entitled to sue to set aside a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819.

Chunder Pershad Roy v. Shuvadra Kumari Shaheba (1) followed.

[Rec. 16 C.L.J. 301=17 Ind. Cas. 171 (172); 13 C.L.J. 102=15 C.W.N. 5=8 Ind. Cas. 766 (767).]

This was a suit brought to set aside the sale of a putni tenure held under Regulation VIII of 1819.

The plaintiffs stated that Sachitarah was the zamindari of defendant No. 1, and that within that zamindari three mouzahs had been let out in putni, the putni being recorded in the names of the plaintiffs' predecessors in the sherista of the defendant No. 1. They further stated that a 9-anna share of the putni mehal belonged to them and a 7-anna share to defendants Nos. 2 and 4, and that in accordance with a private partition a 16-anna share in two of the said mouzahs had been allotted to them, corresponding to their 9-anna share in three mouzahs, and a 16-anna share of the third mouzah had been allotted to the defendants Nos. 2 and 4, that zamindar, defendant No. 1, had instituted proceedings under Regulation VIII of 1819 for the realization of the half-yearly rent of 1291 in respect of the putni mehal, but that no notification of sale had been served in accordance with law; and that the property had been sold at an inadequate price, that the sale was brought about fraudulently by the defendants Nos. 2 and 4 in collusion with the zamindar, and that the property had been purchased at the sale by defendant No. 2 in the name of his son, defendant No. 3. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs asked that the sale might be set aside.

The defendants contended amongst other matters that the plaintiffs not being recorded as putnidars, the suit would not lie; and that the advertisement of sale had been duly published.

The Subordinate Judge held that there was no authority for the proposition that no one but a recorded putnidar could sue to set aside a sale under the Regulation, and on the authority of the case of Chunder Pershad Roy v. Shuvadra Kumari Shaheba (1) decided against the defendants on that point; and on the question of the service of notice held that the notice had not been served in accordance with the law, and therefore set aside the sale, declaring that the putnidars were entitled to revert to the position they held before the sale.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 3 appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, Baboo Ashutosh Mukerji and Baboo Pran Nath Pundit, for the appellants, contended amongst other matters.

*Appeal from Original Decree, No. 319 of 1886, against the decree of Baboo Sharoda Prosad Chatterjee, Rai Bahadoor, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 6th of September 1886.

(1) 12 C. 622.
that the plaintiffs not being registered putnidars were not competent to sue, referring to ss. 5, 6 and 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819 and citing the case of Gossain Mungul Doss v. Roy Dkunput Singh (1); and after submitting that the notice of sale had been served in substantial conformity with the requirements of the Regulation, took objection to the form of the decree which placed an unregistered assignee in possession.

Baboo Sri Nath Das, Baboo Gopal Chunder Ghosal and Baboo Boido Nath Dutt, for the respondents relied on the case of Chunder Pershad Roy v. Shuvadra Kumari Shaheba (2).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram C.J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by.

Petheram, C.J.—This is a suit to set aside the sale of a putni tenure under Regulation VIII of 1819 on various grounds. The only grounds upon which the suit has been decreed are: that the proclamation of sale was not served according to law, and that the property has been sold for an inadequate price; and this appeal comes before us against that decision, and upon the appeal two points are argued. First, it is argued that even if the Subordinate Judge is right in the conclusion of fact at which he has arrived that the advertisement of sale was not served, still this [347] suit cannot be maintained, because the plaintiff, although he is interested in the putni, is not and never has been registered in the serishta of the zemindar as the owner of the putni, and that without such registration the suit cannot under the provisions of the said Regulation be maintained.

The sections of the Regulation which are relied upon by the defendant in support of this contention are ss. 5 and 6, but before considering the provisions of those sections it is necessary to consider the provisions of s. 3 as well. By s. 3 of that Regulation putni tenures are declared valid, transferable and answerable for debt. It is not necessary for me to read the particular words of the section; all that it is necessary to say is that by that section these tenures are made transferable in perpetuity and are transferable by sale, gift or in any way which the putnidar thinks fit, so that by virtue of that section these tenures are made actual property in the land which the holder of them may dispose of as he chooses, the relation of landlord and tenant between the putnidar or his assignee and the zemindar remaining during the whole continuance of the tenure. Then come ss. 5 and 6, and the effect of the provisions of those sections amounts to this, that upon an alienation or transfer by the putnidar the zemindar may exact a fee, which represents his profit, being the portion of his interest in the property whenever a transfer of the tenure is made, the amount of which is regulated by the Regulation itself; and further than that, until that fee has been paid, the zemindar shall not be bound to register the transfer and further than that, until the transfer has been registered, he shall not be bound to recognise the transfer in any way—that is to say, until his demand has been satisfied and registration has been effected, the old tenant remains his tenant, and the relation of landlord and tenant has not been created between him and the assignee of the putnidar, whatever the arrangement may be between the putnidar and his assignee. This is the effect, so far as I can see, of these sections, that until the terms of the Regulation have been complied with, and until the fee has been paid and the registration effected, the relation of landlord and tenant continues to exist between the landlord and the old tenant, and no privity of contract and no relation [348] of landlord and tenant exits between the landlord and the assignee. But that is all; the Regulation does not say, and it would be very inequitable that it should say, that no interest whatever could be created in the tenure by the assignor, or that no person could obtain any interest whatever in the tenure, without the registration of the transfer. Any interest which could be created consistently with the remaining in existence of the original tenure can be created without the Regulation, and so far as I can see, is not prevented by the Regulation in any way; and therefore as it seems to me that if the assignee, the plaintiff in this case, can show that he has obtained an interest in the tenure, although it does not amount to an assignment so as to make him a tenant of the landlord and to release his assignor—that is to say, if there has been a sale or a professed sale which is regular and which destroys the tenure in which he is interested, but which fact could be contested by any one as no sale at all—it may be that it would be most inequitable to hold, unless we were driven to hold it by the words of the Regulation, that he is unable to say that this sale is no sale and that it is void as against everybody else.

In support of this view we are referred to the case of Gossain Mungul Doss v. Roy Dhunput Singh (1). This was a case which came before the late Chief Justice Sir Richard Garth and Mr. Justice Birch, and the decision is dated 25th February, 1876. The facts of that case do not appear from the report, and from the report it may well be that the Judges in that case supposed that the sale was being attacked, not because of any irregularity in the sale, but for some other reason. We are, however, referred to the record of the case which has been sought for in the office, and there it appears that, at all events, one of the points was that the sale in that case was irregular and could be attacked on that ground. How that may be I do not know, and whether the Judges had that fact before them, and whether the judgment proceeded on that fact, I cannot say; all that it is necessary for me to say is that, so far as anything appears on this judgment here, there is nothing to show upon what ground the sale was attacked, and therefore it seems to me that that case is distinguishable from the present.

[349] The next case which bears upon this point is the case of Chunder Pershad Roy v. Shuvadra Kumari Shaheba (2), which came before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Trevelyan and which was decided on the 8th of February, 1886. That case is distinctly in point, and there the learned Judges distinguished the case of Gossain Mungul Doss v. Roy Dhunput Singh in the same way as that in which I have distinguished it, and they came to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the fact that the Regulation prevents the relation of landlord and tenant from coming into existence, there is nothing to prevent any person who has an interest in the putni, which interest has been injured by the irregularity in the sale, from showing that this is so and obtaining relief. In our opinion this view, which is the view which has been taken by the learned Judges in that case, is in accordance with the Regulation, and consequently, following that case, we are of opinion, and we hold, that this objection cannot be maintained.

(1) 25 W.R. 152.
(2) 12 C. 622.
The only other remark which it is necessary for me to make on this part of the case is upon s. 14 of the Regulation, and as to that I need only say that that section would seem to indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature that a suit of this kind might be maintained by a person other than the registered proprietor of the putni; so that, looking at the context as well, it also shows that the view which we have taken, and the view which has been taken by Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Trevelyan, is the view which the Legislature intended should be taken, and therefore, as I said before, this objection cannot, in our opinion, be maintained.

The next question is the question upon the merits, and is whether the advertisement was served according to law. This is a pure question of fact. [As to this point the learned Chief Justice agreed with the finding of the Court below.]

An objection is made as to the form of the decree, and that objection is that the decree, in effect, puts an unregistered assignee in possession. That may or may not be the case, but what the parties are entitled to, after this sale is set aside, is that they are entitled to be reinstated in the same position [380] as they were in before; and if, as a matter of fact, the assignee was in possession as before, it may be that, so far as the landlord is concerned, his possession was only the possession of the assignor; but if he was in possession by some arrangement with the putnidar, I think he is entitled to have the sale set aside, and that the effect of setting aside the sale will be that the parties must be reinstated in their original position. If he was in possession before, he will be in possession again; but, until he is registered, he cannot be in possession as a tenant to the zamindar. His possession will be that of a putnidar, whether jointly with him or under some arrangement with him; but his rights are to be reinstated in the position he was in before this sale, which is now declared void, took place. In the result this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Rash Behari Bose (Plaintiff) v. Purna Chunder Mozumdar and others (Defendants).* [18th January, 1888.]

Sale for arrears of Revenue—Ejectment, Right of—Benamee lease obtained by defaulting proprietor from purchaser at revenue sale, Effect of an under-tenure—Act XI of 1859, ss. 37, 53.

A mehal belonging to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was brought to sale for arrears of Government revenue and purchased by defendant No. 6, from whom the plaintiff obtained a talukdari pottah of a portion of the land comprised in the mehal. The plaintiff thereupon sued to eject defendant No. 4, who was in possession of the land under the lease which was found to have been granted previous to the revenue sale. In the suit it was found that the plaintiff obtained the talukdari pottah as mere benamidar for defendant No. 1.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 949 of 1887 against the decree of Baboo Perbati Coomar Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 24th of January 1887, affirming the decree of Baboo Poorno Chunder Roy, Munif of Khulna, dated the 29th of March 1886.

I. D. C. VII—52.
Held, that the provisions of s. 53 of Act XI of 1859 applied to the case and that the plaintiff was not entitled to interfere with the tenancy of defendant No. 4 or eject him, and that the suit had been rightly dismissed.

In this suit there were six defendants—No. 1, Grish Chunder Mitra; No. 2, Syama Sundari Dasi; No. 3, Purna Chundra [351] Mozumdar; No. 4, Uma Charan Mozumdar; No. 5, Poresh Nath Sing; and No. 6, Satoo Lall Dutt.

The plaintiff sued to establish his title to and for possession of some 18 cottahs of land. He alleged that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were proprietors and in Khas possession of the disputed land; that on the 23rd March 1874, the mehal in which the land was situate was sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by one Prosunno Kumar Dutt in the name of one Mothura Nath Ghose who sold it to the defendant No. 6, and that defendant No. 6 had given him a talukdari pottah of the land in suit; that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold the disputed land to defendant No. 5 on the allegation that it was their lakhiraj, and that the defendant No. 3 claimed the disputed land in jummai right under them, and that defendant No. 4 was in actual possession as purchaser of the rights of defendant No. 3.

Defendant No. 4 alone appeared and contested the suit. He alleged that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar for defendant No. 1, and contended that the suit could not therefore proceed. He further set up his purchase from defendant No. 3, who, he alleged, had been in possession for more than twelve years and long before the sale on the 23rd March 1874, and he stated that he did not know whether the disputed land belonged to the taluk as alleged by the plaintiff or was lakhiraj, and that he had tried to pay rent to the plaintiff.

Amongst the issues framed was one as to whether the plaintiff was or was not a mere benamidar for defendant No. 1, and if he was whether the suit could be maintained.

The first Court found that the plaintiff was a mere banamidar for the defendant No. 1, and that he could not therefore succeed, as the defendant No. 1 was not entitled to eject a purchaser from one who was his tenant. Finding the other issues raised in the case also against the plaintiff, that Court dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiff thereupon appealed, but the lower appellate Court finding that the tenancy held by defendant No. 4 had been created before the date of the revenue sale, and that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar of defendant No. 1, held that the latter was not entitled to oust the defendant No. 4. The appeal was accordingly dismissed with costs.

[352] The plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Munshi Shumsul Huda (for Boboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty), for the appellant.

Baboo Boidyo Nath Dutt, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Beverley, J.—The facts of this case are somewhat complex.

The plaintiff sues to eject the defendant No. 4 from a certain jumma within a certain mehal. The defendant No. 4 purchased this jumma from the defendant No. 3, who had been holding it for some time as a tenant under the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the proprietors of the mehal. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 having defaulted, the mehal was brought to sale for arrears of revenue and purchased by one Prosunna Coomar Dutt, whose rights were transferred to the defendant No. 6, from whom the plaintiff has obtained a talukdari pottah; and it is on the strength of this pottah granted by the auction-purchaser that the plaintiff, under the provision of s. 37 of Act XI of 1859, sues to eject the defendant No. 4.

It has been found as a fact by both the lower Courts that the plaintiff is merely a benamidar for the defendant No. 1; that is to say, that the talukdari pottah under which he claims was granted by the auction-purchaser to one of the defaulting proprietors; and they have accordingly held that the present suit cannot be maintained; that is to say, that the defaulting proprietor cannot be allowed in equity to turn out of this jumma a tenant whom he himself left in.

It is contended on second appeal that this decision is erroneous; that s. 53 of Act XI of 1859 will not apply to this case, inasmuch as the plaintiff—that is to say, the defendant No. 1—has not acquired the whole of the auction-purchaser’s interest, but has only taken a lease of a portion of that interest.

It seems to us quite clear that the present case does fall within the principle of s. 53, which is that a defaulting proprietor shall not be allowed to take advantage of his own default in order to disturb subordinate interests in the land. The words of the section [353] material to this case are these: “Any recorded or unrecorded proprietor or co-partner who may purchase the estate of which he is proprietor or co-partner, or who by repurchase or otherwise may recover possession of the said estate, if it has been sold for arrears under this Act, shall by such purchase acquire the estate subject to all its incumbrances existing at the time of sale, and shall not acquire any rights in respect to under-tenants or roysits which were not possessed by the previous proprietor at the time of the sale of the said estate.” The words “or otherwise” are quite wide enough to include a case like the present, where the former proprietor has recovered possession of a portion of the property by virtue of a lease from the auction-purchaser.

For these reasons, therefore, without going into the other question raised in this appeal, we think it is quite clear that the plaintiff’s suit was properly dismissed.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

H. T. H.

Appeal dismissed.
only evidence adduced by the plaintiff was two survey maps of the years 1846-47 and 1865-66. The lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree for only a portion of the land claimed, such portion being included in both of the maps. The remainder of the land claimed was not included in the map of 1846-47.

_Held_, that a survey map is evidence of possession at a particular time, viz., the time at which the survey was made, and may be evidence of title, but as to whether it is sufficient evidence or not, is a question to be decided in each particular case.

_Held_, further, that as the two maps showed that the portion of the land decreed to the plaintiff was in his predecessor’s possession at the date of both surveys—that is to say, at two periods with an interval of nearly twenty years [354] between them—they might be sufficient evidence of title and the decree of the lower Court was correct.

This was a suit to obtain possession of 10 bighas 1 cottah and 12 dhurs of land which the plaintiff alleged belonged to Mouzah Chandpur, which he had purchased at a sale for arrears of Government revenue in March 1882. The plaintiff also claimed damages and mesne profits. The suit was instituted on the 2nd September 1884. The defendants claimed the land as belonging to Mouzah Salimabad, and denied that it was ever comprised in Mouzah Chandpur. They also pleaded limitation.

The Munsif, finding that the plaintiff had not adduced any evidence to prove his possession within twelve years, held that the suit was barred by limitation, and dismissed it without going into the merits.

On appeal the Subordinate Judges set aside the decision of the Munsif, and on the merits delivered the following judgment:

“On the question of title there is, it has been admitted, no evidence on either side excepting copies of two survey maps produced by the plaintiff, one being the survey map of 1846-47 and the other that of 1865-66. A local inquiry was held by the Civil Court Amin, and it was found that 2 bighas 1½ dhurs according to the first map, and 14 bighas 17 cottahs and 4¼ dhurs according to the second map, fell within Mouzah Chandpur. The survey map of 1846-47 was the general survey of all estates, while the survey of 1865-66 was the survey of those places only on which the river Ganges had made encroachments, and in this view the former is, for the purpose of ascertaining the limits of conterminous mehals, entitled to more weight and value. Taking the map of that survey as our guide, therefore, it appears that 2 bighas 1½ dhurs of the disputed land, as shown in the Civil Court Amin’s map, appertain to Mouzah Chandpur purchased by the plaintiff, and this has not been displaced by anything on the defendant’s side. Regarding the rest of the claim there is nothing to establish it, and it should be dismissed.”

He accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of the [355] 2 bighas 1½ dhurs of land only, dismissing the remaining portion of his claim.

Against that decree the plaintiff now appealed to the High Court on the ground that the lower Court should have relied on the map of 1865-66 and given him a decree for the full amount of land claimed, and the defendants preferred a cross-appeal contending that the Court was wrong in treating the survey map of 1846-47 as evidence of title without proof of possession, and that the suit should have been dismissed altogether.

(1) 5 C. 212.
Baboo Jodub Chunder Seal, for the appellant.
Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose and Baboo Nilkant Sahai, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit by a purchaser at a revenue sale to recover certain lands on the allegation that they were the re-formed lands of the estate which he had purchased. This allegation was denied by the defendants, and the parties went to trial on this issue.

The first Court erroneously threw out the suit on the ground of limitation without going into the merits. The lower appellate Court has overruled the plea of limitation, and on the merits has given the plaintiff a decree for so much of the land in dispute as is found to have been included within his estate at the time of the survey of 1846-1847. The Subordinate Judge says: "On the question of title there is, it has been admitted, no evidence on either side, excepting copies of two survey maps produced by the plaintiff, one being the survey map of 1846-47 and the other that of 1865-66. A local enquiry was held by the Civil Court Amin, and it was found that 2 bighas 144 dhurs according to the first map, and 14 bighas 17 cottahs 4½ dhurs according to the second map, fell within Mouzah Chandpur. The survey map of 1846-47 was the general survey of all estates, while the survey of 1865-66 was the survey of those places only on which the river Ganges had made encroachments, and in this view the former is, for the purpose of ascertaining the limits of conterminous melas, entitled to more weight and value."

[356] Both parties have appealed to this Court. The plaintiff has appealed on the ground that the lower appellate Court should have based its decree upon the later Dearah survey map; but in our opinion this is no ground for second appeal, and the plaintiff’s appeal must, therefore, be dismissed. The defendants respondents object to the decree on the ground that the lower appellate Court was wrong in law in relying upon the survey map as conclusive evidence of title. In support of this contention we have been referred to the case of Mohesh Chandar Sen v. Juggut Chunder Sen (1), in which case it was, no doubt, found that the thakbust map relied on was not in itself sufficient evidence of title. Upon a consideration of that case, however, and of the other cases cited there—The Collector of Rajshahye v. Doorga Soonduree Debia (2), Shusee Mookhee Dosssee v. Bissessource Debee (3), Oomut Fatima v. Bhujo Gopal Dass Mohunt (4), Ram Narain Doss v. Mohesh Chunder Banerjee (5)—we are not prepared to say that in no case can the evidence of survey maps be sufficient evidence of title. As is stated in those decisions, each case must be decided upon its own merits. A survey map is evidence of possession at a particular time, the time at which the survey was made; and although, as in the case cited, evidence of possession at one particular time might not be sufficient in itself to raise a presumption that the land belonged to the estate at the time of the permanent settlement, yet, coupled with other evidence of possession, it might suffice to raise that presumption. Now in the present case we gather that the land which has been decreed to the plaintiff is included within his estate both in the survey map of 1846-47 and in the Dearah survey map of 1865-66—that is to say, it has been found to have been in his predecessor's possession as appertaining to the estate he has purchased at two periods separated by an interval of twenty years. We are not prepared to say that this was not sufficient evidence from which the Subordinate Judge might fairly draw the inference that the title lay with the plaintiff.

[357] The cross-objection must, therefore, be dismissed. Each party will pay his own costs.

H. T. H. Appeal and cross-objection dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL

Before Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Beverley.

UMESH CHUNDER DAS (Plaintiff) v. CHUNCHUN OJHA, HEIR AND REPRESENTATIVE OF THE LATE JUGODUMBA DEBIA OJAIN (Defendant No. 1).* [17th November, 1887.]

Mortgage—Suit for foreclosure—Conditional Sale—Regulation XVII of 1866—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 2—General Clauses—Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6—"Proceedings."

In a suit for foreclosure under a deed of conditional sale, where the due date of the deed expired and notice of foreclosure was served while Regulation XVII of 1866 was in force, but before the expiration of the year of grace that Regulation had been repealed by the Transfer of Property Act, Held, following Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh v. Gungadhur Pershad Narain Singh (1), that, proceedings for foreclosure having been commenced under the Regulation, those proceedings were saved by s. 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act I of 1868.

The "proceedings" referred to in that section are not necessarily judicial proceedings only, but ministerial proceedings, as, in the present case, the service of notice of foreclosure.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was a suit in respect of a kut-kobala or deed of conditional sale executed in favour of the plaintiff on the 6th November 1876. The deed recited that if the money were not repaid within two years from that date the plaintiff would be at liberty to foreclose the mortgage.

Accordingly on the 22nd February 1882 the plaintiff served the mortgagor with notice of foreclosure under Regulation XVII of 1806, and the mortgage money not having been repaid within one year from that date, he brought this suit for a declaration of foreclosure and for possession of the property and mesne profits. As an alternative prayer the plaintiff asked that, if the Court were of opinion that the mortgage had not already been [358] foreclosed, it might order foreclosure in the manner prescribed by the Transfer of Property Act.

The defendant inter alia objected that the mortgage could not be foreclosed under the provisions of Regulation XVII of 1806, that Regulation having been repealed by the Transfer of Property Act. This objection was disallowed by the Court of first instance, but allowed by the lower appellate Court, and from the latter decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2184 of 1886, against the decree of H. Beveridge, Esq., Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 26th of July 1886, modifying the decree of Baboo Krishna Chunder Chatterji, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 1st of December 1885.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and Baboo Karuna Sindhoo Mookerjee, for the appellant.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, Baboo Troylokhya Nath Mitter, Baboo Akhil Chunder Sen and Baboo Golab Chunder Sircar, for the respondent.

The Court (Mitter and Beverley, JJ.) delivered the following judgments, in which the arguments sufficiently appear:

JUDGMENTS.

Beverley, J., after shortly stating the facts as above, continued: The only question before us in second appeal is whether the lower appellate Court was right in holding that the Regulation did not apply in this case, but that the mortgage must be foreclosed under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, which came into force on 1st July 1882.

The material facts as regard this question are these: The deed of conditional sale was executed and the due date expired while the Regulation was still in force. Notice of foreclosure, it is alleged, was also served while the Regulation was in force, but when the year of grace expired the Regulation had been repealed.

The Advocate-General for the appellant contends generally that the mortgagor's right to foreclosure under the provisions of the Regulation having accrued while the Regulation was still in force, that right is saved by s. 2, cl (c) of the Transfer of Property Act; and in this particular case he relies on a decision of this Court in Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh v. Gungadhar Pershad Narain Singh (1). Mr. Woodroffe, on the other hand, supports the decision of the lower appellate Court on the authority of the decision of the Full Bench of the [359] Allahabad Court in Gunga Sahai v. Kishen Sahai (2), and of the Full Bench of this Court in Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rakhal Chunder Bose (3), and of a Division Bench of this Court in Baijnath Pershad Narain Singh v. Moheswari Pershad Narain Singh (4); and the attempts to distinguish this case from that relied on by the Advocate-General on the ground that in the present case notice of foreclosure was served after the Transfer of Property Act had been passed, though before it came into force.

As regards the general question raised by the Advocate-General, it seems to me that, as a Division Bench of this Court, we are precluded from considering it by the decision of the Full Bench above referred to, in which it was held by a majority of the Judges (in conformity with the decision of the Allahabad Court) that where the mortgage was executed and the due date expired while the Regulation was in force, but no proceedings for foreclosure had been instituted under the Regulation at the time of its repeal, foreclosure could only be sued for under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The Full Bench, however, did not decide as to the procedure which should be followed in cases where proceedings had been instituted under the Regulation prior to its repeal. In the case of Baijnath Pershad Narain Singh (4) notice of foreclosure had been served and the year of grace had expired before the Regulation was repealed, and relying upon those facts the Court held that the mortgagee had thereby acquired an immediate right to have a decree declaring the property to be his absolutely. In Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh (1), as in the present case, the notice of foreclosure was served while the Regulation was still in force, but the Regulation had been repealed before the year of grace expired. Mr. Woodroffe accordingly argues...

that the full and complete right of the mortgagee to a decree for foreclosure and possession had not accrued, and that the ratio decidendi relied on in the case of Baijnath Pershad Narain Singh is wanting in the present case. But the Judges who decided the case of Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh were of opinion that the mortgagee had acquired a right to bring a suit [360] under the Regulation at the expiration of the year of grace, and they held that that right was saved by cl. (c) of s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act. Without going so far as this (which perhaps may seem to militate somewhat against the principle laid down by the Full Bench) it appears to me that it may fairly be said that, proceedings for foreclosure having been commenced under the Regulation, those proceedings were saved by s. 6 of the General Clauses Act. Mr. Woodroffe argues that the proceedings referred to in that section are judicial proceedings only, and that, the service of notice of foreclosure being merely a ministerial proceeding, that section cannot apply. But I see no sufficient reason for narrowing the plain meaning of the term in this manner. If the Regulation merely provides a mode of procedure for foreclosure, it seems to me to be only consonant with reason that when that procedure has been put in force it should be continued, and that what has been done should not be set aside in order that a new procedure under a totally different law should be substituted. For this reason, though not prepared to agree in its entirety with the reasoning of the Judges who decided the case of Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh, I am prepared to follow the decision in that case, and to hold that in the present case the mortgagee was entitled to foreclosure under the provisions of the Regulation.

I am of opinion therefore that the decree of the lower appellate Court must be reversed, and the case remanded to that Court for determination of the question whether the notice was duly served.

Mitter, J.—I concur. The Full Bench decisions in Gunga Sahai v. Kishen Sahai (1) and in Bhobo Sundari Debi v. Rekhal Chunder Bose (2) do not, as pointed out by my learned colleague, support the view of the law taken by the District Judge in this case. In those cases the mortgagee had not taken any steps to Foreclose the mortgage under Regulation XVII of 1806 when the Transfer of Property Act came into operation, and it was held that the mortgagee after the repeal of the aforesaid Regulation could not adopt the procedure laid down in it to effect a valid foreclosure. But here all the steps that are necessary to [361] be taken under the Regulation had been taken when it was in force. All that remained was to bring a suit for foreclosure which is not provided in the Regulation. That suit has now been brought, and the (plaintiff) appellant does not ask us to apply to it the procedure laid down in any repealed Regulation, but the procedure which is now in force. The Full Bench decisions therefore will not help us in deciding the question raised in this appeal. The case of Baijnath Pershad Narain Singh v. Moheswaru Pershad Narain Singh (3) is also inapplicable, because the plaintiff in that case had acquired the right of an absolute owner, and the relation between him and the defendant as mortgagor and mortgagor had ceased to exist when the Transfer of Property Act came into operation. In this case that relation still subsisted when that Act came into operation.

But the case of Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh v. Gungadhur Persad Narain Singh (4) is exactly in point. There, as in this case, the steps for the purpose of effecting foreclosure had all been taken under Regulation XVII of 1806 when it was in force, and the relation of mortgagee and mortgagor had not ceased to exist when the Transfer of Property Act came into operation.

It has been contended before us on behalf of the respondent that that case has not laid down the law correctly, but I am unable to accept this contention as valid, because it is (a) contrary to a well-settled principle of construction that in matters of substantive right a statute is not to be so read as to affect it unless it does so in express language or by necessary implication; it is (b) contrary to the provisions of s. 2, cl. (c) of the Transfer of Property Act itself; and it is (c) also contrary to s. 6 of the General Clauses Act No. I of 1868.

Under the law in force, before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation, the appellant mortgagee had the right of foreclosing the mortgage by causing a notice to be served through the principal Civil Court of the district upon the mortgagor, informing him that his right of redemption would be gone if the mortgage money be not paid in full within one year from the date of the service of the notice. This is a substantive right, and not an inchoate right i.e., a mere chance of being developed [362] into a substantive right as contended for on behalf of respondent. This right was vested in the plaintiff in the capacity of a mortgagee, and on the expiration of the year of grace he acquired a new right, i.e., that of an absolute owner. But the one right is as much a vested right as the other. There is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act which in express words or by necessary implication takes away this right.

The right accruing to a mortgagee under Regulation XVII of 1806 when the notice prescribed in it has been served on the mortgagor will not be affected by the Transfer of Property Act, as provided in cl. (e) of s. 2. It is a right conferred by the Regulation, but arises out of the relation of mortgagee and mortgagor constituted in this case before the Act came into operation. It is therefore expressly saved by the clause in question. Then, again, on the service of the notice of foreclosure in this case a certain liability on the part of the mortgagor arose out of that relation, viz., the liability of losing the right of redemption if the mortgage money in full be not paid within one year. That liability also remained unaffected by this clause.

The contention on behalf of the respondent, as already stated is also contrary to the provisions of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act. The service of notice upon the mortgagor in this case was an act done. It was a valid and effectual act at the time when it was done, because at that time the Regulation which prescribed its doing was in force. We are asked to undo the effect of that Act, and to hold that notwithstanding it was valid and effectual at the time when it was done, it should be treated as if it had not been done after the Transfer of Property Act came into operation, because the Regulation under which it was done has been repealed by that Act. That is precisely what s. 6 of the General Clauses Act says inter alia that we must not hold. It says that "the repeal of any Statute, Act or Regulation shall not affect anything done * * * * * * * before the repealing Act shall have come into operation." The case of Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh v. Gunja Pershad Narain Singh (1) must therefore, in my opinion, be followed.

[363] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Lalraddi Mullick (Decree-Holder) v. Kala Chand Bera (Judgment-Debtor)* [16th January, 1888.]

Limitation (Act XV of 1877), sch. II art. 179—Execution of decree—Step-in-aid of execution—Application to sell attached property subject to a mortgage.

A judgment-creditor applied on the 22nd May 1882, for execution of a decree, dated 7th November 1881, and certain property of the judgment-debtors was attached. Thereupon a claim was preferred by a mortgagee, and on the 10th August 1882, the judgment-creditor admitted the claim and applied that the property might be sold subject to the claimant’s mortgage, and the proceeds, if any, paid over to him in part satisfaction of his decree. On the 29th June 1885, another application was made for execution, and on the 20th November 1886, a third application was made. To the latter application objection was taken, and it was contended that the decree was barred by reason of more than three years having elapsed between the application of the 22nd May 1882, and that of the 20th June 1885.

Held, that the application of the 10th August 1882, by the judgment-creditor to allow the sale of attached property subject to the mortgage of the claimant was “a step-in-aid of execution of the decree” within the meaning of art. 179, sch. II, Act XV of 1877, and the execution of the decree was therefore not barred.

This appeal arose out of an application made on the 29th November 1886, to execute a decree dated the 7th November 1881. The judgment-debtor objected that the right to execute the decree was barred by limitation.

The grounds upon which the objection was made and the various proceedings had in execution of the decree before the 29th November 1886, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

The Munsif overruled the objection and allowed the execution to proceed, but on appeal by the judgment-debtor the Munsif’s order was set aside.

The judgment-creditor now appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jadub Chundra Seal, for the appellant.

[364] No one appeared for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

It is a matter of regret that in this case no one appears for the respondent. The point to be decided is of some little importance, and perhaps of some little difficulty. The facts are these: The decree-holder, the appellant before us, obtained a decree on the 7th of November, 1881. On the 22nd May 1882, he applied to execute that decree. A certain property of the judgment-debtor’s was attached and put up for sale. While the property was under attachment a claim was laid to it by a third party. That claim in due course came on for investigation before the Court, and on the 10th of August 1882, it was allowed. At the time the claim was allowed the judgment-creditor through his pleader admitted the validity

*Appeal from Order No. 272 of 1897 against the order of C. B. Garrett, Esq., Judge of 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 28th of April 1887, reversing the order of Baboo Janookee Nath Mookerjee, Munsif of Diamond Harbour, dated the 18th of February 1887. of the claim, and applied that the property under attachment might be sold subject to the mortgage, and that the proceeds realized, if any, ultra the mortgage debt, might be paid over to him in part satisfaction of his decree. That was on the 10th of August 1882. A small sum of money was realized from that sale, namely, Rs. 16. On the 20th June 1885, another application for execution was made. What was done on that application does not appear. Subsequently another application for execution was made on the 29th November 1886. Then it was urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the application was barred by reason of more than three years having elapsed between the application of the 22nd May 1882 and the application of the 20th June 1885.

The Munsif decided in favour of the judgment-creditor. The Dis-trick Judge has reversed that decision, and has upheld the objection of the judgment-debtor. The judgment of the lower appellate Court is a very short one, and is as follows: "I think this appeal must be allowed.

The decision in the Calcutta Law Reports, Volume XII, page 83, is directly against the decree-holder's contention. The execution is barred. I reverse the Munsif's decision with costs." It is to be noted that the name of the case mentioned by the Judge is not stated; and on looking at XII, Calcutta Law Reports, page 85, we [365] find there the end of a judgment of Her Majesty's Privy Council which has absolutely nothing whatever to do with the point now in dispute, What the case referred to by the District Judge is we are unable to say, (1).

We are of opinion that the application of the 10th August 1882, by the judgment-creditor to allow the sale of the mortgaged and attached property, subject to the mortgage of the third party, who was claimant, is, within the meaning of art. 179, sched. II of the Limitation Act, a "step in aid of execution of the decree," and therefore we think that the judgment of the lower appellate Court is erroneous. We accordingly set it aside, and restore the decision of the Munsif. The execution will be allowed to proceed.

The appellant, the judgment-creditor, must have his costs in this and the lower appellate Court.

Districts, and on or about the 15th May 1876, at his instance, it was sent with a certificate of non-satisfaction to the Court of a Munsif in the Regulation District of Chittagong for execution. After sundry unsuccessful attempts to execute the decree an application was made on the 17th September 1886, for its execution. The judgment-debtor objected that under s. 229 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) the Munsifs \[366\] Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree, as it could only act under that section, and the Code had never been extended to the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

_Held_, that, as at the time the decree was passed and sent to the Munsif for execution, Act VIII of 1859 was in force, and by s. 284 of that Act the judgment-creditor had a right to have his decree sent to any Civil Court for execution, he was entitled now to have it executed, as neither Acts X of 1877 or XIV of 1882 by express words or implication deprived him of that right.

_Held_, further, that the intention of the Legislature was, with regard to decrees obtained in Scheduled Districts after the Code of 1887 came into force, that such decrees should not be executed by Courts in British India unless and until, under the provisions of s. 5 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), the Government had issued the notification therein referred to applying to the Scheduled Districts such portion of the Code of Civil Procedure as they thought proper to apply.

_Quaere._—Whether a decree passed by a Court in a Scheduled District and sent for execution to a Court in a Regulation District after Act X of 1877 came into force can be executed by the latter Court in the absence of such a notification, extending the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to the Scheduled Districts.

[F., 34 C. 576=11 C.W.N. 622=6 C.L.J. 30.]

This appeal arose out of an application made to the Munsif of North Pattia in the district of Chittagong for execution of a decree passed on the 12th June 1874, by the Civil Court of the Chittagong Hill Tracts. On the 15th May 1876, an application was made to the latter Court for execution of the decree for sending the same with a certificate of non-satisfaction to the Court of the Munsif of North Pattia, and although it did not appear clearly on the record of the present appeal as to whether that certificate was in existence, as it was not now forthcoming, it was assumed for the purpose of the appeal that the certificate asked for had been duly transmitted. After the 15th May 1876, various applications were made for execution of the decree by the Court of the Munsif of North Pattia but nothing was realized. The present application was made on the 17th September 1886, and the judgment-debtor filed objections to its execution, and amongst them contended that the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction under s. 229 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 to execute the decree, inasmuch as it was passed by the Court of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, to which the Civil Procedure Code had no application, as that district \[367\] was one of the Scheduled Districts to which the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code had never been extended; and as the Court of the Munsif could only execute decrees sent to it under the provisions of s. 229, this decree could not be executed in that Court. The Munsif allowed this objection, and stayed the proceedings in execution. The judgment-creditor, therefore, appealed to the Judge, and that officer confirmed the decision of the Munsif in a judgment of which the following is the material portion:—

"After careful consideration of this matter I think that the Munsif is right in the view which he has taken. The Code of Civil Procedure, with the exception of ss. 1 and 3, does not extend to the Scheduled Districts as defined in Act XIV of 1874, of which the Hill Tracts of Chittagong are one. There is, therefore, no provision which authorizes a Civil Court in the Hill Tracts of Chittagong to send a decree which it has passed to a Court of this or any other Regulation District for execution."
The question is whether, when, in accordance with what hitherto appears to have been the practice, that Court sends such decree for execution to such Courts, the latter are precluded from executing the decree. I think they are so precluded, for s. 223 of the Civil Procedure Code says clearly that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution 'under the provisions hereinafter contained.' The use of the words 'under the provisions hereinafter contained' seems to me to make it necessary that the decree should have been sent for execution in accordance with the provisions of the Code, and not otherwise. Section 284 of the old Act VIII of 1859 was as follows: 'A decree of any Civil Court within any part of the British territories in India, or established by the authority of the Governor-General in Council in the territories of any foreign Province or State, which cannot be executed within the jurisdiction of the Court whose duty it is to execute the same, may be executed within the jurisdiction of any other such Court in the manner following.' The words 'within any part of the British territories in India' have been omitted in s. 229 of the present Code, and I think that this omission must have been intentional on the part of the Legislature. It may [368] be said that the view which I am inclined to take places the Civil Courts of the Scheduled Districts which are in British India in a worse position than the foreign Courts mentioned in s. 229 of the Civil Procedure Code. But it must be remembered that s. 5 of the Scheduled Districts Act authorizes the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, from time to time by notification in the Gazette of India, and also in the Local Gazette (if any), to extend to any of the Scheduled Districts, or to any part of any such districts, any enactment which is in force in any part of British India at the date of such extension. It is in the power, therefore, of the Local Government to provide a remedy for any inconvenience which may result from the inability of the Courts of this or any other district to execute the decree of the Civil Court of the Hill Tracts by extending the necessary sections to that district. I hold that under the present law the Courts of this district have no jurisdiction to execute decrees passed by the Civil Courts of the Hill Tracts of Chittagong, and dismiss this appeal with costs.'

Against that order the judgment-creditor now appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Akhil Chunder Sen, for the appellant.

Mr. R. E. Twidale, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from the decision of the Officiating Judge of Chittagong. That decision affirms the decision of the Munsif of North Pattia.

The facts of the case are these: The judgment-creditor, appellant, obtained a decree in the Court of the Chittagong Hill Tracts on the 12th of June 1874. On the 15th of May 1876, he made an application for execution of the decree, and asked for a certificate of non-satisfaction to be sent to the Court of the Munsif of North Pattia; and we take it that as a matter of fact on or about the 15th of May 1876, a certificate was in due course sent, and in due course reached the Court to which it was sent. After the receipt of the certificate in that Court various applications for execution have, from time to time, been made by the decree-holder, but nothing has been realized under the decree. The last application was made on the 17th of September 1886; and on that occasion, and, as far as we know, for the first time, the objection was taken by the judgment-debtor that under the provisions of s. 229 of the Code of Civil Procedure the decree was not capable of execution by the Court of the Munsif of North Pattia. The Munsif accepted the argument of the judgment-debtor's vakil; and the Officiating District Judge has upheld the decision of the Munsif.

We think that the conclusion at which the District Judge has arrived is erroneous, and must be set aside. At the time the judgment-creditor obtained this decree, the Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII of 1859, was in force; and s. 284 of that Act is as follows: "A decree of any Civil Court within any part of the British territories in India, or established by the authority of the Governor-General of India in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State which cannot be executed within the jurisdiction of the Court whose duty it is to execute the same, may be executed within the jurisdiction of any other such Court in the manner following;" and in the subsequent sections the sending of the decree to another Court and the proceedings thereupon to be taken are described. Those proceedings are to all intents and purposes similar to those under the Code of 1877, reproduced in the Code of 1882. The words "any Civil Court within any part of the British territories in India," occurring in s. 284 of Act VIII of 1859, are omitted from s. 229 of the present Code. It was argued in the lower Court, and it is also argued here, that the omission of these words in s. 229 operates to deprive the judgment-creditor of his right to have his decree which he had obtained when the Code of 1859 was in force executed in the Munsif's Court. It is to be noted that the Code of 1877 is, as the previous Code of 1859 was, a Code to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Jurisdiction. It deals with procedure, and almost entirely with procedure. The appellant in this case had a decree in 1874, and up to the 1st of October 1877, the day when the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 came into force, he had by virtue [370] of the provisions of the Code of 1859, a right to have his decree sent to any Civil Court under the provisions of s. 284 and have it executed. Now the question is, are there any distinct words in the Code of 1877 taking away from him the right which he already possessed? It is admitted that there are no such express words. Ought we then to hold that the right is taken away by implication? We do not think we ought. We think that the intention of the Legislature was, with regard to decrees obtained in Scheduled Districts after the Code of 1877 came into force, that those decrees should not be executed by Courts in British India unless and until, under the provisions of s. 5 of the Schedule Districts Act of 1874, the Government had issued the notification therein referred to applying to the Scheduled Districts such portion of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is, the Code of 1877, as they thought proper to apply. It appears that no such notification has been made; and what might have been the result of those proceedings if the application to send the decree for execution to the Munsif's Court had been made after the Code of 1887 came into force it is not necessary to determine, or to express any or the slightest opinion about. All that we need say is that we do not think that the right which the judgment-creditor had acquired at the time he applied for the certificate of non-satisfaction has been taken away, either by express words or by implication, by the Code of 1877. This appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs; and the Munsif must be directed to proceed with the execution case on the merits. He will take up the case de novo, and adjudicate upon all the other objections which were raised by the judgment-debtor.

P. MOHUN CHOWDHRY (Judgment-debtor) v. ROMESH CHUNDER NUNDY (Decree-holder).* [2nd February, 1888.]

Execution of decree—Representative of decree-holder—Attachment of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 232, 244, 273.

A person attaching a decree is a representative of the decree-holder within the meaning of that term as used in s. 244, cl. (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, and in every case is entitled to enforce execution of the decree which he has attached.

When the decree attached has been passed by the same Court as the decree in execution of which it has been attached, the Court has jurisdiction to execute the attached decree on the application of the attaching creditor.

This was an appeal against an order passed by the District Judge of Chittagong, reversing an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of that district in certain execution proceedings arising out of applications to execute certain decrees. One Uma Churn Chowdhry had obtained a decree for Rs. 2,868-13 against Peary Mohun Chowdhry, the appellant in this appeal. Peary Mohun Chowdhry, on the other hand, held a decree for the sum of Rs. 6,000, against Uma Churn, and in addition to that decree Romesh Chunder Nundy, the respondent, held another decree against Uma Churn. The facts of the case and the various orders passed in the execution proceedings culminating in the order of the Subordinate Judge passed on the 11th December 1886, which gave rise to this appeal will appear from the judgment of the District Judge, which was as follows:

"This is an appeal against the orders of the lower Court cancelling a previous order for the attachment of a decree for Rs. 2,868-13 obtained by one Uma Churn Chowdhry against the respondent (Peary Mohun Chowdhry) in this case in execution of a decree obtained by the appellant (Romesh Chunder Nundy) against Uma Churn Chowdhry. It appears that Uma Churn Chowdhry obtained a decree against Peary Mohun Chowdhry for Rs. 2,868-13, and that Peary Mohun Chowdhry obtained a [372] decree against Uma Churn Chowdhry for Rs. 6,000 odd. The Subordinate Judge in his judgment says as follows:

"On the 13th September 1886, Peary Mohun Chowdhry, after deducting the smaller amount due by him on the aforesaid first decree, applied for execution of the second decree for the balance under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, and on that very day the Court admitted that application and ordered execution for the larger sum. The effect of that order, it appears to me, is that the smaller decree was fully satisfied. Before these proceedings Uma Churn Chowdhry's property had been sold in execution of another decree, and payment order for the balance of the sale proceeds was given to Peary Mohun. One Romesh Chunder Nundy had a decree against the said Uma Churn Chowdhry. Romesh Chunder applied on the 13th September 1886, to attach the aforesaid smaller decree in which Uma Churn was the decree-holder. No order was passed on that application on that day, when Romesh's execution case was struck off. A fresh application was made for execution on the next day, and on the 18th idem an order was passed for attaching the smaller decree. The question is whether the smaller decree could be attached under the above circumstances. I think not, because when the Court on the 13th September 1886, ordered the execution of the larger decree for the balance after deducting the sum due under the smaller decree, it must be considered that the smaller decree was fully satisfied, and therefore it cannot be attached. I therefore cancel the former order of attachment, which was passed ex parte, and direct the money to be paid to Peary Mohun Chowdhry. Each party to pay his own costs of this application.' The Subordinate Judge then cancelled the order of attachment. This order for cancelling the order of attachment was passed upon an application by Romesh Chunder Nundy, the appellant in the present case, for execution of the decree held by Uma Churn Chowdhry against Peary Mohun Chowdhry, and attached by himself in execution of his decree against Uma Churn Chowdhry. The Subordinate Judge appears to be mistaken in the view which he has taken. Section 246 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down: "If cross-decrees between the same parties for the payment of money be produced to the Court, execution shall be taken out only by the party who holds a decree for the larger sum, and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered in the decree for the larger sum, as well as satisfaction on the decree for the smaller sum. Now there is nothing to show that on the 13th September 1886, when Peary Mohun Chowdhry made his application for execution of his decree after deducting the smaller sum due from himself, the two decrees were before the Court. It is doubtful therefore whether the Court under these circumstances had the power to enter satisfaction as directed in s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code.

*Appeal from Order No. 280 of 1887 against the order of F.H. Harding Esq. Judge of Chittagong, dated the 27th of May 1887, reversing the order of Baboo Rakul Chunder Bose, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 11th of December 1886.

"But, apart from this, the Subordinate Judge appears to have misread the order of the 13th September most strangely. That order set forth that, the decree-holder Peary Mohun Chowdhry having applied for execution of his decree after deducting the amount of the decree obtained against himself by his judgment-debtor, proper orders would be passed on the 18th September. On the 18th September the application for set-off was rejected on the ground that the smaller decree had been attached in execution of a decree in another case. The Subordinate Judge was wrong therefore in his opinion that the Court had on the 13th September 1886, ordered the execution of the larger decree for the balance after deducting the sum due under the smaller decree, and that consequently it must be considered that the latter decree was fully satisfied, and could not therefore be attached.

I have felt doubtful during the hearing of this case whether the appellant had a right to apply execution of the decree obtained by Uma Churn Chowdhry against Peary Mohun Chowdhry on the ground that it had been attached in execution of a decree obtained by himself against Uma Churn Chowdhry. For s. 273 of the Civil Procedure Code does not provide for the holder of the decree sought to be executed applying to a Court for execution of an attached decree except when the Court passing the decree sought to be executed is not the same as the Court passing the attached decree. The section is silent with reference to the right of the holder of the decree sought [375] to be executed to apply for execution of an attached decree passed by the same Court which passed the decree sought to be executed. It merely provides that in such a case attachment is to be made by an order of the Court directing the proceeds of the attached decree to be applied in execution of the decree sought to be executed. It does not say how the proceeds are to be realized, whether the holder of the decree sought to be executed has the same right to apply for execution of the attached decree as is given in the second part of the section which refers to decrees passed by different Courts, in the event of the decree-holder not taking out execution, or whether he should cause the attached decree to be sold. Under the circumstances I am doubtful whether the question between Ramesh Chunder Nundy, the present applicant, and Peary Mohun Chowdhry, with regard to the liability of Uma Churn's decree obtained against the latter to attachment in execution of a decree obtained by Romesh Chunder Nundy against Uma Churn Chowdhry, falls properly under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. If it does not, there is no appeal in the present case. As, however, this was not contended before me during the argument of the appeal, I am unable to decide this point against the appellant.

"As the Subordinate Judge was clearly wrong in the view which he took about the smaller decree having been satisfied, I decree this appeal with costs."

Against that judgment and the order passed therein Peary Mohun Chowdhry now appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale, for the appellant.
Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, J.J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

It is admitted that the sole question for our decision in this case is whether or not an appeal lay to the District Judge from the order of the first Subordinate Judge, dated 11th December, 1886. If there was no appeal from that order, the order of the District Judge, dated 27th May, 1887, was passed without jurisdiction, and although there would be no appeal against it to this Court, we have intimated that in this case we are prepared [375] to consider this appeal as an application under s. 622 of the Code to have that order set aside on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction.

The facts as found by the District Judge are these: U. and P. had cross-decrees, P's decree being for the larger amount. R. had also a decree against U., in execution of which he applied to attach U.'s decree against P. There is some question as to the date on which this application was granted, but the Judge finds it was prior to the 18th September, on which date an application by P. to execute his decree for the balance after setting off the smaller decree (under s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure) was rejected. On the matter coming again before the Court—in what manner it came before the Court does not clearly appear upon the proceedings—the Subordinate Judge cancelled his former order attaching U.'s decree in execution of R's decree, and directed that P.'s decree should be executed. R. thereupon appealed to the District Judge, and the question is whether an appeal lay against the Subordinate Judge's order. It is clear that no appeal would lie unless the order complained of can be regarded as an order made under s. 244 of the Code, that is, an order determining a "question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharged or satisfaction of the decree." Now the question related to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of U's decree against P., and the point for our consideration is whether R having been allowed to attach that decree can be treated as the representative of U, in the determination of that question—that is to say, whether a person who attaches a decree is a representative of the decree-holder. Reading s. 232 of the Code with s. 273, we are of opinion that he must be so regarded. Section 273 distinctly provides that in certain cases the attaching creditor may himself apply to execute the decree. The District Judge appears to think that this can only be done in cases which come within that distinct provision—that is, in cases where the decree which has been attached and the decree which is sought to be executed are the decrees of different Courts. But there would seem to be no sufficient reason for this restriction. The section rather seems to contemplate the right of the attaching creditor in every case to enforce execution of the decree which he has attached. Where both decrees are decrees of the same Court, the section assumes that that Court has jurisdiction to execute the attached decree—that is, its own decree—on the application of the attaching creditor. It is only where the decree attached is the decree of another Court that a special provision is necessary, and accordingly the section specially provides that in such a case the attaching creditor must make a formal application to the Court which made the decree to execute its own decree which he has attached. It would seem then that a creditor who attaches a decree is in much the same position as the transferee of a decree under s. 232, and we think that he must be regarded as a representative of the decree-holder under s. 244 (c). For these reasons we are of opinion that an appeal did lie to the District Judge, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 20, 21—General Clauses Act (I of 1868), s. 6—Retrospective enactment when applicable to pending suit—Pending suit—Landlord and tenant—Right of occupancy.

Section 21, sub-s. 2 of Act VIII of 1885 is expressly retrospective, and applies to suits pending at the date of the commencement of that Act. Jogessur Das v. Aisami Koyburto—(1) followed.

[F., 21 C. 940 (945) (F.B.); R., 16 C. 267 (272).]

This reference arose out of a suit brought on the 1st June, 1885, to eject the defendant from 10 cottahs of land situated in Kisanpali. The defendant put in his written statement on the [377] 13th July 1885, and the case came on for hearing on the 23rd January, 1886. The defence raised by the written statement was that no notice of ejectment had been served, and that the plaintiff had agreed to allow him (the defendant) to hold the land in suit as a portion of his hereditary tenure. It was admitted that the defendant held 4 bighas 10 cottahs of land situate in the same village as his hereditary tenure, and that he had held the 10 cottahs in dispute for ten years. The Munsif on the 23rd January, 1886, found that notice had been served and that the agreement had not been proved; but further found that the defendant under s. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was a “settled ryot” in 4 bighas 10 cottahs of the village, and held that under s. 21 of that Act he had therefore acquired a right of occupancy in the land in suit; he therefore dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge affirmed the decision of the Munsif. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court, the learned Judges (Tottenham and Norris, J.J.) referred to a Full Bench the question whether s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was applicable to any suit instituted before that Act came into force.

The following was the order of reference:

This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs to eject a tenant after notice to quit.

The question on which the appeal turns is whether or not the Court below was right in applying s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 to the case which was instituted several months before that Act came into operation. The plaint was filed in June, 1885, and the defence was put in July. The new Act came into operation on the 1st of November following.

The Courts below gave the defendant the benefit of sub-s. 2, s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and held that he had right of occupancy in the disputed land, because he had been in possession of it from before the 2nd March, 1883, and was a settled ryot of the village within the meaning of s. 20.

Having regard to the provisions of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act. to the Full Bench decision recently passed in the case of Lall Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (1), in which it was held that s. 174 of the new Act was not applicable [378] to decrees passed under the old rent law, and to the apparent unreasonableness of deciding a case upon the basis of an enactment not yet come into force when the pleadings were filed, we should have had no hesitation in at once holding that the lower Court was in error in giving effect in this case to the new Act.

But the respondent's pleader Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghosal, called our attention to a case decided by Mittra and Beverley, JJ.—Jogesur Das v. Aisani Koyburto (2), in which the very same question was decided in favour of the tenant. In that case all proceedings in the suit, except the filing of the plaint, seem to have taken place after the new Act came into force; but the decision was not based at all upon that consideration. The learned Judges held upon the construction of the section itself that it was applicable to all suits in which no decree had been passed at the time the new Act came into operation.

And a later case, Second Appeal No. 2440 of 1886, decided on the 23rd of May by Prinsep and Beverley, JJ., has since been brought to our notice, in which the same point appears to have been similarly decided by the dismissal of the plaintiff's appeal with costs, though the ratio decidendi is not specified.

In the face of these authorities we hesitate to give effect to our own opinion, which is not in accordance with that affirmed in those cases and entertained by the lower Courts in the present case.

If that opinion be correct, it follows that in a suit such as this tried on the 31st October 1885, without reference to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and in which the plaintiff was on that date entitled to succeed, if for any reason the delivery of judgment had to be postponed till next day, the decree would have to be in favour of the defendant on a ground which he had not and could not have pleaded at the trial.

With great respect to the opinion of the learned Judges, with whom we have the misfortune to differ, we must confess that we do not see in the retrospective operations of s. 21 anything that compels us to give it effect in a suit instituted and heard partly or wholly before the Act came into operation. In [379] any suit instituted under that Act the tenant would of course be entitled to the benefit in question, unless he was deprived by some previous decree in another suit. But we do not see how he can take advantage of any section creating a right in an Act not yet in force when the suit was brought and his defence was made.

We therefore have determined to refer the case to a Full Bench for the decision of this question, vis.:

Is s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) applicable to any suit which was instituted before that Act came into force?

Mr. Casperse and Baboo Dwarkanath Mukerji, for the appellants.

Mr. Casperse.—The general rules on this subject are to be found in Maxwell on Statutes (pp. 257-273) and Dwarris on Statutes (pp. 660-687). Before an Act can be read retrospectively so as to apply to pending suits it must be stated in express terms that the Act is to be so read. The case of Jogesur Das v. Aisani Koyburto (2) is distinguishable, as there the plaint was filed before the 1st November, but the defendant had no notice of suit till after that date. In this case issues were framed before the Act came into force, and no issue as to the applicability of the new Act was framed; it was not thought of until raised by the lower Court. There are many cases where a right of action grounded upon a previous contract has been entertained and enforced after the new Act has come into operation—Gilmore v. Shuter (1). Where such a right of action has been asserted and the Courts have become seised thereof, and issue has been joined between the parties before the Act came into force, then, a fortiori, it would require words of special force in the statute to defeat such a vested right. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature by general words or even necessary implication to take away a vested right from a person who has been put to expense and costs in instituting his suit, and visit the innocent pursuer of that right with costs—see Couch v. Jefferies (2). It is a general [380] rule that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away a right of action, its enactments, unless in express terms they apply to pending actions, do not affect them—In re Joseph Suche & Co. (3), per Jessel, M.R. The decision in that case was expressly rested upon general principles. I submit that the Legislature must here make use of special words. A statute should be so read that, if possible, no sentence, clause, or word shall be superfluous, void or insignificant.—The Queen v. The Bishop of Oxford (4). But the Court can know nothing of the intention of an Act, except from the words in which it is expressed applied to the facts as existing at the time—see Logan v. Courtown (5); also Fordyce v. Bridges (6). I say that the section was intended to apply to the case of a landlord shifting his ryot from a holding in which he had acquired settled rights in order to prevent his acquiring rights of occupancy in any other land which he might happen to hold in the same village. The landlord being aware that the new law when passed would give the tenant an advantage, the Legislature wished to prevent the tenant from contracting himself out of any such advantage which is to be acquired under the new law. That is the reasonable meaning of the section. There is nothing in s. 21 which puts it beyond doubt that the Legislature meant it to be retrospective so as to deprive a person of a right of action vested in him at the time of the passing of the Act, and unless obliged by express terms the Courts will not construe it so as to effect past transactions, retrospective laws being of questionable policy—see Philips v. Eyre (7), Jackson v. Wooley (8), The Midland Ry Co. v. Pye (9), Thistleton v. Frewer (10). The words "decree or order" were introduced as a saving clause, otherwise every kind of suit decided between landlord and tenant during the period in question might have been reopened. The matter does not, however, rest upon this section, because there is also a substantive law with reference to pending suits contained in s. 6 of Act I of 1868; and in order to abrogate this law some special [381] words would be necessary in the retrospective Act. The case of Lall Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (11) is decided on a different point, but the general principles there laid down apply here.

Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghosal for the respondent.—The question depends on the construction of the section. The words of sub-s. 2 clearly show that the Act applies to pending suits; the general principles contended for by the other side do not therefore apply—see In re Ratansi Kalianji (1).

In this case of Thakoorance Dossee v. Bisheshur Mookerjee (2), s. 6 of Act X of 1859 was held to be retrospective. I rely on Jogessur Das v. Aisani Koyburto (3).

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench:—

OPINIONS.

WILSON, J. (Pigot, O'Kinealy, and Ghose, JJ., concurring).—This is a suit brought by a landlord against his tenant to eject him from certain lands, in respect of which he alleged that he had given a notice to quit. The service of the notice has been found as a fact. But the defendant resists his landlord’s claim to eject him on the ground that he is entitled to a right of occupancy in the land in dispute. Under the law in force prior to the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, the defendant would not have had a right of occupancy.

The facts of the case are these: The defendant is a settled ryot, within the meaning of s. 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, of the village within which the lands in dispute are situated. The suit was filed in June, and the written statement in July, 1885. The Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation on the 1st November 1885. The case was decided by the Munsif in January, 1886. The defendant has been a tenant of the land in dispute from before the 2nd of March, 1883, down to the bringing of the suit. The question that arises is whether, by reason of s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendant is to be held to have a right of occupancy in the lands in dispute. The same question arose in Jogessur Das v. Aisani Koyburto (3), [382] and Mitter and Beverley, JJ., answered it in the affirmative. The learned Judges before whom this case came on second appeal were disposed to dissent from that view, and they accordingly referred the case to a Full Bench.

The words that we have to construe are those of s. 21, sub-s. 2, The sub-section is this: “Every person who, being a settled ryot of a village within the meaning of the last foregoing section, held land as a ryot in that village at any time between the 2nd day of March, 1883, and the commencement of this Act, shall be deemed to have acquired a right of occupancy in that land under the law then in force; but nothing in this sub-section shall affect any decree or order passed by a Court before the commencement of this Act.” I accept the proposition contended for by the learned Counsel for the appellant in his able argument, that an enactment affecting rights of property is not to be so construed as to give it retrospective effect, unless the intention that it shall have such effect clearly appears. But I think in the section under consideration such an intention is plainly expressed. The first part of the section deals with the case of lands held by a settled ryot at or after the date from which the Act speaks, that is to say, the date at which it came into operation, and it declares that such holding shall give a right of occupancy. Sub-s. 2 deals with the case of lands held by a settled ryot at an earlier period, namely, between the 2nd of March 1883, and the commencement of the Act and it says that such holding shall be deemed to have given a right of occupancy. The sub-section is therefore in express terms retrospective.

It was further contended that, admitting this to be so, effect should not be given to the sub-section in a case pending before the commencement of the Act, and the learned Judges who referred the case to us were disposed to adopt this view. I am quite alive to the inconveniences that arise when a suit has to be decided according to a law not in force when the suit was brought. But I think the language of the section is too clear to enable us to avoid the construction which entails those inconveniences. The retrospective enactment [383] is quite general in its terms. And the exception from its operation, expressly made by the last words of the section, in the case of decrees or orders passed before the commencement of the Act, seems to be to show that pending suits were not to be excepted.

I should answer the question referred to us in the affirmative, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

TOTTENHAM, J.—As I understand the rest of the Bench to be unanimous in the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Wilson, I too assent to it.

UZIR ALI (Auction-Purchaser) v. RAM KOMAL SHAHA AND OTHERS (Decree-holder and Judgment-Debtors).* [28th February, 1888.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 174—Application made for after passing of Act VIII of 1885, decree being previous to the Act—Bengal Act. VIII of 1869—Construction of statutes.

A sale in execution of a decree passed under Ben. Act VIII of 1869, execution having been applied for after Act VIII of 1885 had come into force, cannot be set aside under s. 174 of the latter Act.

[Overruled, 22 C. 767 (F.B.); 17 C.W.N. 619 (620)=15 Ind. Cas. 479 (480); Rel. on 18 C.W.N. 103 (105); R., 16 C. 257 (272) (F.B.); 21 C. 940 (F.B.); 23 B. 450 (452)]

On the 30th September, 1885, one Ram Komal Shaaha obtained a rent decree against Abdul Ali and Tufuzzul Ali, and on the 15th June, 1886, applied for execution of this decree. On the 7th September, 1886, the under-tenure was put up for sale, and was purchased by one Uzir Ali.

On the 8th September, 1886, the judgment-debtors applied under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to have the sale set aside: and on the 6th December, 1886, the Munsif passed an order setting aside the sale under s. 174, directing a refund of the purchase money.

The auction-purchaser thereupon applied to the High Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, and obtained a rule [384] calling upon the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors to show cause why the order of the 6th December 1886 should not be set aside on the ground that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to make that order, inasmuch as s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable to the case.

On the hearing of the rule the Court (Mitter, A. C. J. and Ghose, J.) passed an order referring to a Full Bench the question whether a sale in execution of a decree passed under Ben. Act VIII of 1869 could be set aside under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act when execution of the decree was applied for after the last-mentioned Act came into operation?

The following was the order of reference:—

"The question raised on this rule is whether the lower Court had any power under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to set aside the auction sale at which the petitioner was the purchaser.

"The rent-decree in execution of which the sale in question took place, was passed before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation. But the application for execution of the decree was made after the said Act came into operation. The lower Court upon the application of the judgment-debtor set aside the sale under the provisions of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The contention in this rule on behalf of the auction-purchaser is that, as the decree was made under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, the provisions of the present Tenancy Act will not govern the execution proceedings, although they were commenced after the new Act came into operation. Precisely the same question was referred to the Full Bench in Rule No. 1401 of 1886. But as it was compromised, the question was not decided by the Full Bench. This question is of great importance, and is likely to arise in numerous cases hereafter; and as its decision is not free from difficulty, we refer it again to the Full Bench. The question referred is—whether a sale in execution of a decree passed under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 can be set aside under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act when execution of the decree was applied for after the last-mentioned Act came into operation?"

Munshi Serajul Islam, to show cause contended that s. 174 of Act VIII of 1885 applied; but an application in execution should be governed, unless the Legislature has excepted it, by the law in force when it was made—Delhi Bank v. Orchard (1), Papa Sastrial v. Anuntarara Sastrial (2), and referred to Shivram Udaram v. Kondiba Muktaji (3) and Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadrappa Irssangapa (4):

Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen, in support of the rule contended that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain the application under s. 174, and that the decree being made under Ben. Act VIII of 1869 the provisions of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 would not govern the execution proceedings, even though they were commenced after the new Act was in force; that Mungul Pershad Dichtit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (5) showed that an application in execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree was made; that s. 174 was not a matter of procedure, and the presumption would be against giving it to retroactive force—In re Ratanji Kalianji (6).

Wilson, J.—I cannot distinguish this case in principle from the former Full Bench decision of Lal Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (1). Section 174 was there held to be not a matter of mere procedure, but to confer a substantive right. In the absence of any indication of intention that the provision is to operate retrospectively, it does not, I think, by the ordinary rules of construction, apply to the proceedings under a decree passed before the commencement of the Act. I should answer the question referred to us in the negative and set aside the order complained of.

[386] CRIMINAL MOTION.

_Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Tottenham._

_IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF PANATULLA; PANATULLA v. QUEEN-EMpress.* [21st December, 1887.]

Penal Code, s. 177—Furnishing false information for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence, Meaning of.

The information which, under the second branch of s. 177 of the Penal Code, a person is legally bound to give "for the purpose of preventing the commission of the offence" relates not to the commission of offences generally but to the commission of some particular offence.

_PANATULLA,_ a constable, was employed to make his rounds by night and call at the house of the notorious bad characters on his beat who were under police supervision, and to ascertain whether they were indoors or not. On one occasion, having made his rounds, he falsely stated to his superior officer as to some of these people that they had been inside their houses when as a matter of fact they had not. Upon these facts the Deputy Magistrate was of opinion that "the information which the accused was required to give and which he falsely furnished was information required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence, and therefore the offence made out fell under the second part of s. 177 of the Penal Code." He accordingly sentenced the accused to be rigorously imprisoned for six months.

On appeal the Sessions Judge declined to interfere. An application was therefore made to the High Court on behalf of the accused and a rule obtained.

_Baboo Josoda Nundan Paramanick,_ for the petitioner.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Tottenham, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Wilson, J.—The accused in this case was charged and convicted under s. 177 of the Penal Code. This section contains two branches.

---

Criminal Motion No. 356 of 1887 against the order passed by C. A. Kelly, Sessions Judge of Dinagepore, dated 4th of October 1887, affirming the order passed by H. Thompson, Deputy Magistrate of Dinagepore, dated the 9th September 1887.

(1) 14 C. 636.
The first branch of it runs thus: "Whoever, being [387] legally bound to furnish information on any subject to any public servant, as such, furnishes, as true, information on the subject which he knows or has reason to believe to be false, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both." This deals with the simple case of a person who, being bound to furnish true information to a public servant, furnishes false information to him, and, under this part of the section, the maximum punishment is six months' simple imprisonment with or without fine.

The second branch of the section is expressed thus: "Or if the information which he is legally bound to give respects the commission of an offence, or is required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence or in order to the apprehension of an offender, with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both."

The facts found against the accused were these: He was a constable, and was employed on what is described as round duties—that is to say, it was his duty to make his rounds by night and to call at the houses of the notorious bad characters on his beat who were under police supervision, and to ascertain whether they were indoors or not. And on one occasion, having made his rounds, he falsely stated as to some of these people that they had been inside their houses when as a matter of fact they had not. Now that was information which he was bound to furnish to a public servant, that is to say, to his superiors, and it is found that he wilfully made a false statement; therefore his offence comes under the first part of the section. But he has been convicted under the second part of it on the ground that the information was required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence. I think that must mean not for the purpose of preventing the commission of offences generally, or rendering the commission of them more difficult, but for the purpose of preventing the commission of some particular offence. That being so, the case does not come within the second part of that section. It follows therefore that the sentence which was passed was one which ought not to have been passed. The prisoner was sentenced to six month's rigorous imprisonment, [388] whereas the maximum punishment to which he could have been sentenced was six months' simple imprisonment. It appears that he has already undergone three months' rigorous imprisonment, which he ought not to have been subjected to, and therefore the justice of the case requires that the three months' rigorous imprisonment which he has undergone should be taken as equivalent to the term of simple imprisonment to which alone he could have been legally sentenced. He will, therefore, now be released from imprisonment, the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment which was passed upon him being reduced to one of simple imprisonment from the date of the conviction to the present date.

BHAGIRAM DOME (Complainant) v. ABAR DOME and another (Accused).* [24th January, 1888.]

Fish in a public river cannot be said to be property in the possession of the person who may have the fishery right, and infringement of that right is not theft under s. 378 of the Indian Penal Code.

The accused were charged with unlawfully taking fish along with some eleven others in a public river, the right of fishing in which had been let out by the Government to the complainant, and the lower Court, amongst other offences, convicted them of theft, criminal misappropriation, mischief, criminal trespass, and unlawful assembly.

Held that the conviction was wrong and that no offence had been committed.

This was a reference under s. 498 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagar, who considered that the accused had been wrongly convicted by the [389] Assistant Commissioner of offences under ss. 143, 447, 379, 426 and 506 of the Indian Penal Code for unlawfully taking fish from a public river, the right to the fishery of which had been leased by Government to the complainant.

Each of the accused was fined Rs. 10, or in default sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment, and in referring the case the Deputy Commissioner stated that he considered the conviction was based on an erroneous view of the law and that it should be set aside.

The facts of the case and the reasons given by the Assistant Commissioner for arriving at the conclusions he did are sufficiently stated in his judgment, which was as follows:

"The question of fact in this case is extremely simple. Accused and eleven others, thirteen in all, are said to have caught fish in complainant's julkar in the Bhagdai (Desoi) river. Accused in admitting the fact of fishing state that they were fishing in the Romari Pathar, two or three miles off, and not in the bed of the river. Complainant does not claim the julkar of the Romari Pathar. Complainant would have no motive to complain against persons who fished it the pathar, and the evidence leaves no room to doubt the truth of the complaint.

I find that accused and eleven others were fishing together without complainant's consent in the bed of the Bhagdai or Desoi river, Block I (from Naga Hills to Malo Pathar), the exclusive fishery right of which has been settled with complainant by Government for 1887-88; that each of the accused and the others of the thirteen men are proved to have actually caught fish and moved them from their nets into their boats, though there is no evidence that the fish so caught were actually removed from the river; that on complainant objecting and attempting to stop their fishing he was threatened by accused.

As to the question of law, it is urged that on the finding no offence has been committed. The pleaders urge—(a) that the fish are not complainant’s property within the meaning of the Penal Code; (b) that they were not in complainant’s possession within the meaning of s. 378 of the Penal Code; (c) that trespass on a fishery in a public river is not criminal trespass within the meaning of s. 441. They quote the following rulings:

[390] (A) The Queen v. Revu Potthadu (1), following a previous ruling—In these rulings it was held that fish in a creek or in an open irrigation tank are not in such “possession” as is contemplated in s. 378 of the Penal Code; consequently the taking of such fish does not constitute theft under s. 379.

(B) Empress v. Charu Nayiah (2). Held that the unlawful infringement of a right of exclusive fishery in a part of a public river is not an offence which can be brought within the definition of a criminal trespass, though under this ruling unlawful fishing in a tank or private river apparently would amount to criminal trespass.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF MADHAB HARI AND OTHERS.*

Baboo Doorga Das Dutt, for petitioners.
Mr. Kilby, for the Crown.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court which was delivered by—

JUDGMENT.

PETHERAM, C.J. (and of which the material portion was as follows):—In this case some sixty-eight persons have been convicted of stealing under these circumstances. It appears that in the neighbourhood where this transaction took place there is a large bheel. The land surrounding this bheel belongs to one person, and he has let the right of fishing in it to the complainant in this case for the sum of Rs. 500 a year, There is nothing to show that this bheel is anything in the nature of a tank in which fish are caught and stored in any sense, but it is a natural reservoir of water which has come there without human agency, and in which fish would naturally be.

That being the state of things, it appears that, on a particular day in the year, it is the practice of the inhabitants of the neighbouring towns and villages to go to this bheel and catch what fish they can, and for doing that these sixty eight persons have been convicted of stealing fish and punished in an extraordinary manner. A large number of them were whipped there and then, or at any rate a few hours after, and a large number of them have been sentenced to two months’ rigorous imprisonment.

Under these circumstances no crime has, in our opinion, been committed. It is perfectly clear that the offence of theft could not have been committed because the fish, said to have been stolen were not the subject of any one's property; they were wild fish in a natural lake, and until they were reduced to [391] possession by being caught no property could be acquired in them by any one so that there could be an offence of theft committed by another person; and it seems to us therefore that these persons did not commit any theft, and that, so far as the offence of which they have been convicted is concerned, it is quite clear that on that ground alone the conviction cannot be sustained.

* Criminal Motion No. 133 of 1887 against the order passed by Howling Luson, Assistant Magistrate of Meherpore, dated the 15th April, 1887.
the Jellinghee and Bhysakh rivers through kHALS and natural hollows. It was ruled—(a) that the fish in this bheel [392] being \textit{fere nature} are not "property;" (b) that they were not in the "possession" (as required by s. 378 of the Penal Code) of the holders of the julkar. This ruling is counteracted by the ruling in the Meherpore case, 1886 (1), referring to the same bheel [393] in which the Court held—(a) that

In addition to that, as Mr. Justice Ghose reminds me, it is clear that there was no dishonest intention to take the fish, because, whether such a custom could be legally established or not, on the Magistrate's own view of the case, these people went there relying on their supposed right to go there and catch fish. For both reasons, therefore, we are of opinion that the offence of theft was not committed by these men.

Then Mr. Kilby argues that, though the offence of theft may not have been committed, the offence of criminal trespass has, because he says that if these people had gone to the land of some one who had ordered them not to go there, they would have been guilty of criminal trespass.

The first remark that I have to make with reference to this argument of Mr. Kilby is that it is not clear that they were directed not to go on the land by any one entitled to prevent them from going there, for the person who directed them not to go on the land was not the zamindar nor the person who had a right to forbid them, but the person who had taken a lease to catch the fish. But for the purpose of what I am going to say I will assume that these people were rightly forbidden to go on the land, but a trespass under such circumstances is not a criminal offence for which the persons committing it could be criminally prosecuted and a criminal punishment imposed. Unless they went on the land for some of the purposes mentioned in s. 44 of the Indian Penal Code, their going there would not amount to criminal trespass, and the purpose mentioned in that section are "to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of the property." As I said just now, what these people went there for was to fish in this natural lake; they did not go there to intimidate any one, certainly not to intimidate the person who was in possession, the zamindar, because he had no interest in it, and takes no interest in these proceedings now, but they went to catch fish, and their intention must be limited to that, and therefore, in our opinin, the offence of criminal trespass was not committed, and thus it remains that the only offence of which they have been guilty is an offence against the civil law by walking on a man's land when he has forbidden them to do so. That is not a criminal offence by the English law, nor, so far as I know, is it a criminal offence in this country, and therefore, there being no criminal offence, whatever, the conviction must be set aside.

(1) 15 C. 392 N.

\textbf{Madhoo Mundle and others (Petitioners) v. Umesh Parni (Opposite Party)}:* [9th July, 1886.]

In this case the accused were charged under ss. 143 and 379 with being concerned together and with others in stealing fish from the complainant, one Umesh Parni. The offence was alleged to have been committed on the 1st Bysack and on a large bheel called the Chucka Khola Bheel, of which the complainant was the ijardar. It was alleged that it was a custom in that part of the country for the villagers to assemble together and fish in different bheels on the 1st Bysack without the owner's consent, and on this occasion the complainant a few days before the 1st Bysack put in a petition before the Assistant Magistrate asking for protection of his bheel and stating that he expected a great number of persons would collect there and steal his fish on the day in question. In answer to that petition the Assistant Magistrate deputed a police constable to watch the bheel.

On the day in question a number of persons did collect at the bheel to fish, and in consequence thereof the present case was instituted.

The Assistant Magistrate in his judgment stated that there had been a number of similar cases in some of which the defence had been set up that it was the custom the fish were "property;" (b) that they were in "possession;" (c) that the offence of theft would have been committed if they had actually been moved.

Some other rulings are cited as to fisheries in the sea or in tidal rivers which do not bear upon the case. The Bhagdai or Desoi is a river navigable for small boats for a part of the year.

The sum total of these rulings is: (a) [except the Meherpore case (1887)] it appears to be admitted that fish in a river or in an open tank or bheel are the property of the holder of the fishery; (b) but they are not in such "possession" that their taking constitutes theft (s. 379); (c) that trespass on a fishery in a public river is not criminal trespass, the river not being in the exclusive possession of the fishery-holder and the public having the right of entry on it.

These rulings are rulings of Divisional Benches. So far as I know the matter has never been fully argued or referred to a Full Bench.

It is contended for the prosecution that the facts constitute offences under the following sections of the Penal Code:

[394] Section 379 of the Penal Code—Theft—It is said that all the essentials of theft exist. I examine each essential in detail:

(a) "Moving in order to take."—This appears on the finding: each accused moved a fish from their net to their boat. From the newspaper reports of the Meherpore case of 1886 it appears that the High Court held for the villagers to fish in the various bheels on the 1st Byass, but he found that, though such had been the case, it had not been done with the consent of the zemindars, and in some instances compensation had afterwards been paid to the owners of the bheels, and there could, therefore, be no doubt that private rights had been invaded. In the present cases the Assistant Magistrate found that there was no question as to a number of persons having assembled and fished, and that the accused did not claim any right so to fish, but on the contrary that one of them pleaded guilty and that the others merely pleaded alibi. As regards the latter, he disbelieved the evidence adduced on their behalf, and, without considering the legal question subsequently raised in the High Court, convicted all the accused and sentenced them, some to fines, others to imprisonment, and the remainder to a whipping, and awarded Rs. 15 to the complainant as compensation under s. 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Against these sentences the accused applied to the High Court to set aside the convictions under its revisional power on the ground that no offence had been committed. That application was granted and the record sent for. Upon the case coming on to be heard Baboo Doonga Dass Dutt [393] appeared for the petitioners and Baboo Sharoda Prasunno Roy for the opposite party, who was the complainant before the Assistant Magistrate.

The judgment of the High Court (Mitter and Grant, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We think that there is no evidence in support of the conviction in this case under either of the sections under which the petitioners have been convicted, viz., s. 143 and 379. There is no evidence to establish that the petitioners acted in concert so as to have one object. No doubt the act complained of was that they were fishing, but there is nothing on the record from which it could be inferred that they were acting in concert with that one common object. Unless that is proved the conviction under s. 143 of the Indian Penal Code would be illegal. On the other hand the circumstances of the case would tend to show that they were acting quite independently. Similarly under s. 379 there is no evidence to show the removal of any fish by the petitioners from the bheel.

We therefore set aside the convictions under both these sections and direct that the fines, if realized, be refunded, and if any one of these petitioners be still in jail under these sentences we direct their immediate release. The order regarding compensation will also be set aside, and such compensation money if paid must be refunded.

Conviction quashed.

that the offence of theft would only be completed if the fish were actually removed from the bheel, but probably the newspaper reporter was mistaken. Under s. 378 of the Penal Code the offence of theft is completed when the property is moved.

(b) "Dishonestly."—Accused had no title to this fish; they knew the fishery to be leased to complainant. These were wrongful gain to themselves, loss to the lessee and loss to Government from tendency to diminish revenue.

(c) "Moveable property."—It seems admitted in the rulings above mentioned (except, so far as I can judge from newspapers, in the Meherpore case) that fish in a fishery is the property of the fishery-holder. The fishery-holder can recover in the Civil Court the value of the fish taken without his consent. By the customary law of the country property in river fisheries (other than tidal rivers) vests in Government and can be leased by Government to private persons, and, if so, the fish in the fishery are the property of the lessee. Theft of fish from a fishery in England would not be a larceny at common law, but neither would theft of trees, crops, fruit, &c., be larceny, though it is undoubtedly theft under the Penal Code. The Penal Code is based on English criminal law; but the laws relating to real property in this country follow the old land laws of the country which recognise fish in a fishery to be the property of the owner of the fishery. Hence the ferae naturae theory does not apply to fish in this country, though it does apply to wild birds and animals. Fishings of large and small rivers, bheels, &c., have been settled on this understanding from 1798 downwards.

(d) "Out of possession."—It is urged (a) that the fish in the fishery was in the possession of complainant, the lessee in possession of the fishery. This is negatived by the two Madras rulings and the Meherpore ruling of 1887, in which it was held that this kind of constructive possession is not possession within the [395] meaning of s. 378 of the Penal Code; (b) that complainant might at any time he thought proper have confined the fish within a limited sheet of water. It is the custom as the floods subside to put bamboo fencing across the bed of the river and other outlets so as to shut in the fish. When this is done the fish are in possession; but the question is whether complainant, having the right and the power to put up the fencing whenever he thinks proper, is not to be considered in possession of the fish, whether he actually fences them in or not. I doubt if this has ever been brought before the High Court. It is the general custom with small rivers and bheels. I am inclined to think that complainant, having the power to shut in the fish whenever he pleased in as small a space as he pleased, must be held to be in possession of the fish whether he actually shuts them in or not. In the present case the fencing had not been put up on the date of occurrence, as it does not pay to put it up till towards the end of the rains.

(e) "Without consent."—Consent was wanting on the finding. Moreover complainant objected at the time with the result of being threatened.

Section 403 of the Penal Code.—The only point that may be considered wanting to constitute theft is the possession. The fish being complainant’s property, even assuming they are not in his possession, an offence under s. 403 of the Penal Code has been committed. Accused dishonestly misappropriated the fish, knowing their action to be an infringement of the property rights of the holder of the fishery. If evidence of actual removal is wanting, the facts on the finding show an attempt;
ss. 403 and 511 of the Penal Code. At any rate they entered upon the fishery with the intention of criminally misappropriating the fish. The applicability of s. 403 of the Penal Code has apparently never been considered by the High Court.

Section 426 of the Penal Code.—Accused committed mischief by removing the fish supply of the fishery and thus diminishing the value of the fishery. The mere fact of accused taking a fish each would not affect the fishery much; but if every one acted on the same principle, the fishery would be injuriously affected and its value materially diminished. It may be a matter of [396] doubt whether a fishery is "property" under s. 425 of the Penal Code. In Empress v. Charu Nayai (1), it is laid down that the fishery of a public river is property within the meaning of s. 411 (but that the river being a public one was not in any one's exclusive possession, and a man's entry on a public river to infringe a fishery right is not criminal trespass, because he does not enter upon property in the possession of another). If a fishery is property under s. 441, I presume it is also property under s. 425.

Section 447 of the Penal Code.—The question is whether in the face of the above ruling a finding of criminal trespass can hold. In an exactly similar case—Proceedings, 15th Feb. 1870 (2)—it was held that the offence of criminal trespass had been committed. "Where in a ryotwari district the accused cultivated waste land which they had been ordered by the Collector not to cultivate, it was held that they were properly convicted of criminal trespass when they entered on it to commit an offence under s. 188." Waste land in a ryotwari tract is in no one's exclusive possession. It is in the possession of Government just as a river is in the possession of Government. The public have the right of entry on and right of way over waste land as long as it continues waste land just as they have the right of entry on a river for travelling or recreation, or bathing or drawing water. If it is criminal trespass to enter upon waste land to commit an offence, it seems to be equally criminal trespass to enter on a river to commit an offence. In the present case the entry is criminal trespass as it was made with intent to—(a) commit mischief, s. 426; (b) criminal misappropriation, s. 403; (c) theft, s. 379.

Section 143 of the Penal Code.—There is no evidence that accused and others had actually conspired to fish there, but when a number of persons do the same wrongful act in the same time, place and manner, a common intent must be presumed. In this case twelve persons were fishing near each other at the same time near complainant's julkar, to which they had no right without his consent, and on being told to stop refused to do so; some of them threatened complainant. It is a fair and reasonable presumption that they had a common intent, at least after they were told by complainant [397] to stop. The presumption is strengthened by the fact that Domes generally fish in numbers and not singly. Their common intent was to commit—(a) criminal trespass, s. 447 of the Penal Code; (b) mischief, s. 426; (c) theft, s. 379; (d) criminal misappropriation, s. 403.

Section 504, 506 of the Penal Code.—On being told by complainant to stop fishing accused threatened him "Marien Gosari halai tau baba," as much as to say: "We will beat you within an inch of your life"—an expression of intention which might be either insulting under s. 504, or criminally intimidating under s. 506 of the Penal Code, according to the character of the person addressed. In the present case it appears to have caused an alarm.

I think therefore accused are guilty of offences under ss. 143, 379, 426, 403, 447, 504 or 506 of the Penal Code. Section 403 of the Penal Code is not summarily triable, but the offences under ss. 143, 447 of the Penal Code, where the intent is to commit an offence under s. 403, are triable summarily.'

No one appeared on the reference.
The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a reference by the Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagar under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, questioning the legality of the conviction of Abar Dome and Bhagiram Dome by Mr. Melitus, Assistant Commissioner of Sibsagar, under ss. 143, 379, 426, 447 and 506 of the Indian Penal Code.

The two accused were charged before the Assistant Commissioner under ss. 143, 379 and 447; and apparently they were called upon to make their defence in respect only to offences said to have been committed under those sections. It appears, however, that the Assistant Commissioner, in the course of his judgment, finds them guilty not only of the offences of which they were charged, but of others as well.

The main charge was one of theft, said to have been committed in respect of fish in a public river, the julkar right in which had been leased to the complainant by Government; but there were, as mentioned above, charges in respect of other offences, viz., for being members of an unlawful assembly and for criminal trespass.

The Assistant Commissioner tried the case summarily, and after giving in his proceeding a short epitome of the evidence [398] taken by him, proceeded to give his judgment. In the first place, he notices the grounds upon which it was contended before him that no offence had been committed; and he then summarises the decisions of this Court and of the Madras High Court that were quoted before him as follows:

"The sum total of these rulings is—(a) (except the Meherpore case, 1887) it appears to be admitted that fish in a river or in an open tank or bheel are the property of the holder of the fishery; (b) but they are not in such possession that their taking constitutes theft (s. 379); (c) that trespass, on a fishery in a public river is not criminal trespass, the river not being in the exclusive possession of the fishery-holder and the public having the right of entry on it." He adds: "These rulings are rulings of Divisional Benches. So far as I know, the matter has never been fully argued or referred to a Full Bench."

Then the Assistant Commissioner says that it is contended before him for the prosecution that the facts proved in the case constitute offences under various sections of the Penal Code, and he gives those sections one after another and his argument for holding that the accused are guilty under those sections. The sections are 379 (theft), 403 (criminal misappropriation), 426, (mischief), 447 (criminal trespass), 504 or 506 (insult or criminal intimidation).

Now, the first observation which he has to make upon this judgment of the Assistant Commissioner is that, if the rulings referred to by him lay down the propositions indicated by him, it was his bounden duty to follow them so far as they were applicable to this case, and not to disregard them, as he evidently does, on the ground that they are rulings of Divisional Benches, and also on the ground that, so far as he knows, "the matter has never been fully argued." Where the Assistant Commissioner derives this knowledge from we are at a loss to conceive. But whether the matter was fully argued or not, the Assistant Commissioner was bound to follow those rulings as rulings of the highest Court in this Presidency until they were overruled by decisions of the Full Bench.

In the present case, the river from which the fish were taken is a public river. Whether or no it is navigable throughout [399] the year, we do not know. The Assistant Commissioner however says (for which there is no evidence on this record) that it is a "river navigable for small boats for a part of the year." Assuming that it is, as the Assistant Commissioner represents, we take it is a flowing river, and that fish enter it, and leave it, at their pleasure; and that the lessee of the fishery has no control whatever over them. The fish are not stored or bred there; they are not confined within an enclosed space, and are therefore free to go wherever they please. They are "ferae naturæ;" and as such nobody can be said to be in "possession" of them, and therefore no theft can be committed in respect to such fish. This is not only the common law in England, but it is a law which has been accepted both in Bengal and Madras for many years. (See Kashi Chunder Dass v. Hurkishore Dass (1), Bhusun Parui v. Denonath Banerjee (2), Khetter Nath Dutt v. Indro Jalia (3), Empress v. Charu Najiah (4), The Queen v. Raru Pothadu (5), Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours, Vol. II, p. 376).

The Assistant Commissioner, however, while discussing s. 379, says, broadly, but apparently without any authority, that the "ferae naturæ" theory, does not apply to fish in this country, though it applies to wild birds and animals;" and that "fishings of large and small rivers, bheels, &c., have settled on this understanding from 1793 downwards." No doubt fishery is a right which is recognized as property in this country; but the question is whether fish in a river can be said to be property in the "possession" of the person who may have the fishery right, and whether their infringement of that right is a criminal offence as defined in s. 378 of the Indian Penal Code. We are decidedly of opinion that it is not.

We observe that the Assistant Commissioner, while he felt himself pressed by the authority of the Meherpore case of 1887 and two Madras cases quoted before him, sought to get over them by saying that it is the custom as the floods subside to put bamboo fencing across the bed of the river and other outlets so as to shut in the fish, and that in the present case the fencing had [400] not been put upon the date of occurrence, as it does not pay to put it up till towards the end of the rains." We do not know in what sense the word "custom" is used; but taking it in the sense that it is in some cases the practice to put up fencing when the floods subside for the purpose of shutting up the fish, and supposing that while the fish are thus shut up they are in the "possession" of the owner of the julkar, that argument cannot possibly avail in this particular case, for the offence is said to have been committed in the month of September while the floods must have been high and when, as the Assistant Commissioner himself says, no fencing had been put up.

(2) 20 W.R. Cr. 15.
(3) 16 W.R. Cr. 78.
(4) 2 C. 354.
(5) 5 M. 390.
The next offence which the Assistant Commissioner holds that the accused are guilty of is one under s. 403 (criminal misappropriation). There was no charge under this section, and indeed there could not be any, because the accused were tried summarily. The Assistant Commissioner, however, proceeds to hold that an offence under that section has been committed, though he does not convict the accused under that section by reason of its being a summary trial; and he observes that "the applicability of s. 403 of the Penal Code has apparently never been considered by the High Court." The Assistant Commissioner may or may not be right in this; but if the point has never been considered, it is because no body ever thought of raising it before. Criminal misappropriation takes place when the possession has been innocently come by; but where, by a subsequent change of intention, or from the knowledge of some new fact with which the party was not previously acquainted, the retaining becomes wrongful and fraudulent (see Mayne, p. 335). In this particular case there cannot be any pretence for saying that subsequent to the act of taking the fish anything happened which constituted the retaining of the fish wrongful and fraudulent. The intention was one and the same throughout; and no new facts occurred which could possibly change the character of the seizure and retention of the fish.

The next section that the Assistant Commissioner discusses is s. 426 (mischief), and he holds that the act complained of diminished the "value of the fishery," and that fishery is property within the meaning of s. 425, and that therefore the accused are guilty under s. 426. The accused had not been charged with [401] an offence under s. 426, and we think that in respect also of this section the Assistant Commissioner is completely in error. If it was a flowing river, and on the date of occurrence the flood was high, as it must have been in September, and if no fencing had been put up to shut up the fish in any manner, and they were free to escape in any direction they pleased, we fail to see how the act of the accused could possibly diminish the value of the fishery, or cause any change in the property, supposing that fishery is property within the meaning of s. 425, as the Assistant Commissioner holds it to be.

The Assistant Commissioner then takes up s. 447 (criminal trespass), and holds in the face of the rulings of this Court that an offence under that section has been committed; and the only pretence for his doing so is a decision of the Madras High Court [Proceedings 15th February, 1870 (1)], which refers to the case of waste land belonging to Government, and devoted to the use of the village community, and where the accused cultivated the land, although he had been ordered by the Sub-Collector to refrain from cultivating it; and it was held that the Sub-Collector had legally the power to make the order, and therefore when the accused went upon the land he did so with the intent of committing an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code. In the first place that case has no application to this case; and in the second place, supposing it has any application, the Assistant Commissioner was bound to have guided himself by the rulings of this Court, and not by any rulings by the Madras High Court. We may here observe that throughout his judgment in this case, the Assistant Commissioner has displayed a clear and deliberate intention to ignore the decisions of this Court—a spirit which cannot but be deprecated in a Judicial Officer who is bound to follow the decisions of the superior Court.

(1) 5 M.H.C. Ap. XVII.
We are of opinion that, the river being a public one, it was not in the exclusive possession of the complainant, and that the entry of the accused upon that river was not with the intent of committing any of the offences mentioned by the Assistant Commissioner, viz., criminal mischief, criminal misappropriation or theft.

The next section that the Assistant Commissioner takes up is s. 143 (unlawful assembly). It is sufficient to say that there is no evidence upon the record of this case to indicate that the men who went to fish in the river were bound by any common object within the meaning of that section; and for aught that appears, although more than five persons were engaged in fishing at the same time, place and manner, they were engaged for their own respective purposes, and no common object can legitimately be presumed from their acts.

The last sections that the Assistant Commissioner takes up are 504 and 506 (insult and criminal intimidation). The accused were not charged with any offence under either of these sections, and so far as s. 504 was concerned, there is no evidence that the insult, if there was any, was offered with the intention or knowing it to be likely that the provocation given would cause the person insulted to break the peace; nor do we think there is sufficient evidence in this case as would bring the case within the offence of criminal intimidation as is defined in s. 503.

Having now discussed the various sections of the Indian Penal Code under which the Assistant Commissioner held the accused were guilty, we have merely to say that the conviction must be set aside, and the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

We cannot, however, close this judgment without once more saying that throughout this case the Assistant Commissioner has displayed a wanton disregard of the authority of the rulings of this Court, which cannot but be gravely censured.

Conviction quashed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Maya Ram Surma (Complainant) v. Nichala Katani and Others (Accused).* [24th January, 1888.]

Fishery—Fishing in tank connected with a running stream—Theft—Criminal trespass—Penal Code, ss. 379, 447.

Accused were charged with having taken fish from a tank belonging to the complainant and convicted of theft and criminal trespass under ss. 379 and 447 of the Penal Code. It was found that the tank in question was not enclosed on all sides, and was dependent on the overflow of a neighbouring channel which was connected with flowing streams for its supply of fish, that the fish were not reared and preserved in the tank, and that the occurrence complained of took place at a time when the floods were high, and the tank was connected with the streams, so that the fish could leave it at pleasure.

Held, that the fish were ferae and not in "the possession of," the complainant, and consequently no offence had been committed.

* Criminal Reference No. 280 of 1887 made by J. Knox-Wight, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagar, dated 5th October, 1887, against the order passed by P. G. Melitus, Esq., Assistant Commissioner of Jorehat, dated 12th September 1887.
Held, further, that had the fish been taken at a time when they were restrained of their natural liberty, and were liable to be taken at the pleasure of the owner of the tank, the conviction would have been upheld.

The Meherpore case of 1887 (1) distinguished.

In this case the accused were tried before the Assistant Commissioner of Sibsagur for an offence under s. 379 of the Penal Code in respect of fish which they were charged with having taken from a tank belonging to the complainant, and they were further charged under s. 447 with criminal trespass in respect of the tank. The Assistant Commissioner convicted the accused and sentenced them each to pay a fine of Rs. 5, or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment, but the Deputy Commissioner, considering that the evidence, even if believed, did not establish the offence of theft or criminal trespass having regard to the decision in the case of In the matter of the petition of Madhab Hari (1), and that the lower Court had based its decision on an erroneous view of the law, referred the case to the High Court.

The facts of the case and the grounds upon which the Assistant Commissioner based his judgment are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court.

No one appeared on the reference.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is a reference by the Deputy Commissioner of Sibsagur under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, questioning the legality of the conviction of one Nichala Katani and three others by Mr. Melitus, Assistant Commissioner of Sibsagur, under ss. 379 and 447 of the Indian Penal Code.

The accused in this case were charged with the offence of theft said to have been committed in respect of fish in a tank belonging to the complainant, and also with the offence of criminal trespass.

[404] The Assistant Commissioner in the first instance, i.e., on the 1st August last, dismissed the complaint under s. 203 of the Procedure Code with the following observations:

Complainant did not cultivate the fish; they entered the tank in flood time. Therefore according to a High Court ruling (in the Meherpore case (1)), they are fere naturæ and no man's property, and no offence (such as theft or trespass) has been committed. The circumstances of the tank and of the Chucka Khola Bheel (which I know) are identical, except that the Chucka Bheel is of larger area. This tank is a tank in the pather connected with the river by jans and hollows; so is the Chucka Khola Bheel. Complaint dismissed under s. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. If complainant wishes, I will refer this case to High Court for orders."

On the 12th of August the Assistant Commissioner took up the matter again, although the complainant did not apparently move him to refer the matter to higher Court; and in a proceeding which he recorded on that day, he repeated that the "circumstances of the Bheel in the Meherpore case and the tank of the complainant were identical so far as the dominion and control of the owner of the tank or bheel over the fish is concerned," the only differences being, as he said, that the Meherpore Bheel is of larger area, and is a natural bheel, whereas the tank in this case is "partially at least excavated;" and then he observed that "whatever law applies to the Chucka Khola Bheel applies also to this tank and to other private tanks and bheels, and to the numerous public bheels and rivers which are held under temporary fishery leases from Government." Having made this observation, the Assistant Commissioner said as follows: "The Meherpore case has not been, so far as I know, authoritatively reported, and I doubt if I was right in accepting mere newspaper reports and the statement of the law, which conflicts with previous rulings and practice, especially as it appears from the newspapers that the High Court held in 1886 (1) in the matter of the same Chucka Khola Bheel that the offence of theft under s. 379 would have been committed if the fish had actually been removed from the bheel. In the present complaint of Maya Ram Surma, it appears (405) that the fish had not merely been moved in order to the taking, but actually removed and taken away from the tank. The matter is one of such importance to Government and the public that I do not feel justified in allowing this complaint to remain struck off on my own authority. I request the favour of the definite instructions for future guidance. To D. C. for orders."

The above proceeding being laid before the Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Wight—the same officer who has made the present reference—he recorded the following order on the 22nd August:—

"In the present state of the record I am unable to refer the matter to the High Court. The High Court are not the legal advisers of Government, and they have invariably refused to act as such. They only deal with cases and pronounce judgment upon them when they are brought judicially under their notice. You have dismissed the case under s. 203; I think you are wrong. The ruling you refer to is that of a Division Bench, and there are rulings in the opposite sense. Please take up the case and enquire into it. If you acquit on the evidence, or if you convict, the matter would be dealt with and referred to higher authority if necessary. Having power to deal with cases dismissed under s. 203 myself, I am not justified in referring them."

Upon the matter going back to the Assistant Commissioner, that officer recorded certain evidence, and on the 8th September last found that the accused entered upon complainant's tank and unlawfully took therefrom some fish, and accordingly held them guilty under ss. 379 and 447 of the Penal Code.

In dealing with the case, the Assistant Commissioner makes the following observations: "The tank was excavated by complainant in the pathar (fields) on his own decennially-settled patta land. It gets its fish supply from the overflow of the pathar; it is connected with the Rararian stream, which is itself connected with the Dhale stream. Both these streams flow from the Naga Hills towards the Brahmaputra. When the inundation is high on the pathar the fish are at liberty to leave the tank unless complainant fences in the tanks or outlets; but when the floods subside the fish are shut in, and unable to leave the tank. On the date of this occurrence the inundation appears to have been high. Such cases have been always (406) dealt with under ss. 447, 379 of the Penal Code. The recent ruling in the Meherpore case, 1887 (2), has thrown some doubt on the applicability of these sections. In this ruling it appears to have been held—(a) that fish entering a bheel or tank in this manner are feræ naturæ, and not the property of the owner of the bheel, tank, &c.; (b) that they are not in the possession of such owner."

(1) 15 C. 392.

Having made the above observations, the Assistant Commissioner again points out, as he had done on the 1st of August, that the circumstances of the Meher Bheel and of this tank are identical except in this, that the area of the latter is much smaller, and it is an "excaued tank" and not a natural hollow, and adds "that if the complainant pleased he could at any time confine the fish in a very small space."

The Assistant Commissioner then observes that the "customary law of the country recognizes that the property in fish vests in the owner of a bheel or tank. If the fish are held to be in the possession of the owner, the offence of taking them amounts to theft under s. 379; if they are held not to be in possession within the meaning of s. 378, their taking amounts to an offence under s. 403 of the Penal Code (criminal misappropriation). The High Court have apparently never considered the applicability of this section. The entry upon the tank to commit either of these offences amounts to criminal trespass under s. 447.""\n
He then says that the High Court in the Meherpore case of 1886 (1) held "that the offence of theft would have been committed in the Chuka Khola Bheel if the fish had actually been moved," and that moreover it appears to him upon the principles laid down in the case of The Empress v. Charu Najiah (2) that it would be "criminal trespass to enter upon a private tank or river to unlawfully take fish," and he concludes by saying as follows: "Following these two rulings in preference to the Meherpore ruling, 1887 (3), I convict accused under ss. 447, 379 of the Penal Code."

Subsequently on the 12th September the accused persons presented a petition to the Assistant Commissioner, asking him to refer [407] the case to the High Court, and Mr. Melitus forwarded the application to the Deputy Commissioner.

The Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Wight, who had on the 22nd August held that the Assistant Commissioner was wrong to dismiss the complaint under s. 203, and had observed that the ruling in the Meherpore case was that of "a Division Bench, and that there were rulings in the opposite sense," now observes that "the evidence, even if believed, does not establish the offence of theft or criminal trespass if the recent ruling in the Meherpore case be correctly reported;" and "as the lower Court has based its decision on a wrong view of the law, the order should be reversed," and he concludes by saying that the point referred is "of the greatest importance to the public and to Government, and it is very necessary to have the correctness of the present order either affirmed or denied."

No doubt the question raised is of very great importance; but looking at the course this case has taken as noticed above, one cannot help observing that both the Assistant Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner assumed almost from the very beginning an attitude towards the decision of this Court in the Meherpore case of 1887 (3), which cannot but be disapproved.

If properly examined, it will be seen that the ruling in that case does not conflict with the decision of this Court in 1886, nor with that in the case of The Empress v. Charu Nayiah (1). The Assistant Commissioner has evidently not taken pains to examine the cases, and yet he says he follows these two latter rulings "in preference to the Meherpore ruling in 1887 (2)."

In the Meherpore case of 1886 (3) the questions that were raised and discussed before this Court in 1887 were not raised, and indeed it was wholly unnecessary to consider them. What this Court in 1886 held was simply this, that the conviction for theft could not be sustained, because the fish had not been moved away. It did not hold, as the Assistant Commissioner supposes, "that the offence of theft would have been committed if the fish had actually been moved." In the other case referred to, viz, The Empress v. Charu Nayiah (1), the only question before this Court [408] was whether the charge of criminal trespass could be maintained against a person who had entered upon a public river and fished in it, and the Court held that it could not be maintained, because the owner of the fishery was not in exclusive possession of the river, it being a public one. No question was then raised or discussed as to the circumstances under which a person would be guilty of criminal trespass if he entered upon a private tank or river.

Turning now to the case before us, it appears upon the facts found by the Assistant Commissioner that the tank is an artificial piece of water, and of comparatively small dimensions; it is not a natural reservoir of water, and there is no assertion of any customary right to fish in this tank, as was found to exist in the Meherpore case of 1887 by the Magistrate, and upon which finding this Court held that there could be no dishonest taking of the fish when the accused went to fish relying upon that custom; and in this view of the matter the facts of this case are clearly distinguishable from those in the Meherpore case, and we should have been quite prepared to affirm the conviction in this case had it appeared that the fish had been at the time of occurrence in the "possession" of the owner of the tank—that is to say, if they had been restrained of their natural liberty, and liable to be taken, according to the pleasure of the owner, or, in other words, if they had been practically in the power and dominion of the owner of the tank. (See Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours, Vol. II, p. 376). But upon the facts as found by the Assistant Magistrate, and which have been quoted above, it seems to be clear that they were not so. The tank was evidently not enclosed and shut up on all sides; the fish were not reared and preserved therein, but found their way there through the overflow of the neighbouring channel, which was connected with other flowing streams; and on the date of the occurrence the inundation was high, and the fish were at perfect liberty to leave the tank. This being the state of things, the fish were ferox naturae, and were not in the power and dominion of the owner of the tank; and the case would therefore fall within the principle laid down in The Queen v. Revu Pothadu (4) and Hex v. Carradice (5) [409] For these reasons we are of opinion that the conviction for the offence of theft cannot stand.

Nor can it stand for the other offence of which the Assistant Commissioner has found the accused guilty, viz, the offence of criminal trespass. If the fish were ferox naturae, and not in the power and dominion of the owner of the tank, there is nothing to show in this case that the accused entered upon the tank with the intent of committing any offence under the Penal Code or for the purpose of intimidating, annoying or insulting the owner of the tank. It was indeed an act of trespass on the part of the accused to enter upon the private property of the complainant, but it was not "criminal trespass" within the meaning of s. 447. The Assistant Commissioner has however specially referred to s. 403, and he maintains that the accused entered upon the tank for the purpose of committing the offence of criminal misappropriation, and that the applicability of this section was never considered by the High Court. It is not necessary here to state the reasons why we do not consider that there could be no offence under s. 403, for we have done so in our decision in another case—Bhagiram Dome v. Abar Dome (1)—tried by Mr. Melitus and referred to us by Mr. Wight.

We are therefore of opinion that the conviction in this case is bad in law and must be set aside. The fine if paid to be refunded.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

RAIKISHORI DASI AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. DEBENDRANATH SIRCAR AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs). [8th and 9th November and 22nd December, 1887.]

In the will of a Hindu, restrictions contrary to law made by the will upon valid dispositions, if they are separable from the latter, need not be held to invalidate them.

Three documents, of which the second and third were executed by a testator after intervals of some years, together formed his will, containing a bequest of estate to his sons.

This was valid by the High Court, although the testator in the later documents had endeavoured to impose restrictions upon the estate contrary to law, and therefore inoperative; the principal of them being, (a), prohibition of actual possession or alienation, by any son, of his share in the estate; and (b), direction that the whole estate should be managed in a common cutchery, with religious trusts, the sons to get only the remaining amount of profit according to their respective shares in perpetuity.

At the same time the Court held good a provision for defraying the marriage expenses of sons from joint funds, with the direction in the will that until the youngest son should attain majority none of the sons should have a right to partition; any son who should separate from the others, getting, up to the time of his attaining majority merely maintenance, and not the profits accruing upon his share.

A gift over was that on the death of a son surviving sons should take his share proportionately to their own, and that if any of the sons so taking should die leaving sons, such sons should receive their proportionate parts of the deceased son's share: the first part of this provision was held good, not being invalidated by the second, which, as constituting a gift to an indefinite class, would not take effect.

The judgment of the High Court to the above effect was upheld by the Judicial Committee.

(1) 15 C. 388.
Appeal from a decree (9th September 1884) of the High Court, reversing a decree (30th September 1882) of the Subordinate Judge of the Pabna district.

The appellant, Raikshohri Dasi, one of the defendants in the suit, the other being a purchaser of part of the estate to which she alleged title, was the widow of Gobindnath Sircar, who died on the 8th May 1875, having been, in his childhood, adopted by Bishwanath Sircar, the testator, whose will was the subject of construction.

After the adoption Bishwanath Sircar, having re-married, had a family of five sons, of whom three, along with the son of a fourth, were the respondents in this appeal. Bishwanath died on 10th December 1871, having during his life viz., on 21st January 1856, on 15th May 1862, and on 24th July 1870, executed the testamentary papers in question. The first, after naming the three sons, then the only sons born to the testator, and naming the adopted son, contained the following clause:

"On my death my adopted son Gobindnath Sircar shall get a share of three annas, Brojendranath Sircar a share of five annas, Krishnendranath Sircar a share of four annas, and Jagadindranath Sircar a share of four annas, of all these properties, and of the properties which I may acquire in future. Again, if I get a son then Gobindnath Sircar shall get a share of two annas ten gundas, Brojendranath Sircar a share of three annas fifteen gundas, Krishnendranath Sircar a share of three annas five gundas, Jagadindranath Sircar a share of three annas five gundas, and that son shall get a share of three annas five gundas. If besides one son I get more sons hereafter, then, with the exception of the dalan which I have demarcated and given in the share of Brojendranath, minor, as stated below, the adopted son, and son born i.e., all my sons shall be entitled in equal shares to all my properties, moveable and immovable, and no one will be able to raise any objection thereto. If there be no sons born then the division will be according to the above shares."

A second clause provided for the payment of the debts to be paid by the sons in proportion to the share taken by each. A third clause named executors and managers of the family estate during the minority of the sons. Fourth and fifth clauses contained directions as to the apportionment of the family dwelling house. A sixth clause dealt with the expenses of religious ceremonies, and a seventh reserved rights of alteration.

On the 15th May 1862, Bishwanath Sircar executed another document which referred to the above, stating "all affairs are to be managed according to that will and this," and providing that until the youngest son should attain majority the names of those who were of full age should not be registered, nor should they be able to interfere with the property. His adopted son, his naib Krishna Krishna Doss, and his companion Iswar Chunder Chaki, were appointed executors. In the second clause he added:

"I have fixed a common cutcherry for the management of all family affairs. All affairs shall be managed by the joint amlas and managers, i.e., of the sixteen annas, but the sons even on attaining majority and getting their names registered shall not be able to break down the common cutcherry; all the expenses for the performance of daily and periodical rites will be defrayed under the management of the amlas, and the sons shall get the remaining amount of profits in accordance with their respective shares from generation to generation. Besides this, they shall not be able to break down the common cutcherry and bring the same into their own possession. If any of the amlas of the sixteen annas be guilty in any way then the sons who may have attained majority and the managers shall [412] dismiss that amlas..............But they shall never be able to destroy the jumal character of the thing.

On the 24th July 1870 Bishwanath executed a third document, mentioning the two previous documents, as to which it observed that it was necessary to alter and amend their contents. It stated the birth of two other sons, the respondents Jogendranath and Digindranath, and said that there were at that time six sons living, "and according to the arrangements made in the former wills the shares of all will be equal. I accordingly provide by this will that each son shall take a two annas thirteen gunadas one kauri and one krant share in the estate."

A second clause included in such distribution properties purchased since the date of the last will. A third imposed restrictions on alienation, and directed that all sons should get the profits, "which will be left over and above that, according to the shares mentioned above, and they will not be able to be personally in possession." A fourth clause dealt with the expenditure for the daughters, and appointed their guardians.

An important part of the fifth clause was as follows.—
"My heirs shall enjoy the profits of my zemindari and other immovable properties according to the prescribed rules. If, God forbid, any of those sons, die without sons, then none of his heirs shall get his share, but my heirs, my remaining sons, or if they have sons, then those sons shall get it according to those shares. If any of these sons of mine becomes indebted, then that debt shall be realized from him, and these zemindaris, etc., of mine shall not either be sold by auction or be liable for his debt, because it is only for the purpose of carrying on their maintenance that I have fixed the share of the right of each of my sons, and besides this, they shall have no proprietary right or ownership whatever in those shares. As regards the rules which have been laid down for the sons who are to enjoy the profits of my properties, moveable and immovable, if any son do not get sons but only daughters, then the sons born of the wombs of those daughters shall not be able to be heirs to and claimants of my moveable and immovable properties on the ground of the same being the properties of their maternal grandfather."

In the sixth clause the testator enjoined that if any of his sons should not have any sons or daughters—
"Then his widow shall get for her life only a fair amount for her maintenance and the expenses for pious acts from the profits of her husband's share, but she shall not be entitled to the profits of the entire estate, or be competent to make sale or gift of anything on the ground that it was the property left by her husband."

[413] Jagadindranath died in 1874, and his widow in 1875. The adopted son, Gobindnath, died in 1875, leaving a widow Raikishori Dasi, the present appellant. While he lived he managed the family estate, and for three years after his death the family remained together.

The sons had their names registered as proprietors of the whole estate under Act VII of 1876 (Bengal Land Registration Act). In 1876 Raikishori Dasi left the family dwelling; and in what she was entitled to under the will she transferred a four-anna share to Syed Abdul Subhan Chowdhry.
The present suit was instituted by the four surviving sons of Bishwanath for a declaration that under the will, or wills, they were the owners of the property, and that Ruikishori Dasi had no right to any of it, or to any possession, and also that her conveyance of 1878 was void.

In defence, she alleged that the terms of the will were contrary to Hindu law, and that it was therefore inoperative and invalid; that this suit for a declaratory decree was not maintainable, plaintiff having no possession; that she had inherited her husband’s share, and had made the transfer to the said Abdul Subhan, who was co-defendant, and supported her statement.

Upon issues framed accordingly, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the will had not been acted upon, and that its provisions were contrary to Hindu law, the corpus of the property not having been given by the testator to his sons, and the female heirs having been excluded. Also, that the present suit for a declaratory decree was not maintainable. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

Pending an appeal to the High Court, Brojendranath died, and his son was substituted in his place.

A Divisional Bench (Tottenham and Field, JJ.) held, on the construction of the three testamentary instruments, that there was a good gift to the six sons of the testator’s property in equal shares, and that in the second and third the testator had endeavoured to impose restrictions upon the proprietary interest conferred by the first, which restrictions were opposed to law, and must be regarded as invalid and inoperative.

In regard to the first document they said:

[414] “Now, there can be no doubt that if the devolution of the testator’s property depended upon this instrument alone, it would be necessary to decide that all the sons took equal shares of the whole of the property, moveable and immoveable. We have, then, to consider how far these testamentary provisions have been altered, or modified, by the two subsequent wills.”

The judgment then sets forth the principal directions in the second document, and adds:

“"The second paragraph sets forth that a common cutcherry has been established for the management of all the affairs connected with the property, which are to be managed by the joint amulas and managers; but that the sons, even on attaining majority and getting their names registered, shall not be able to break down the common cutcherry." It is then directed that the expenses for the performance of the daily and periodical rites are to be defrayed under the management of the amula of the sixteen-anna or whole of the estate, and that the sons shall get the remaining amount of profit ‘according to their respective shares from generation to generation.’

The will then declares that, besides this, they shall not be able to break down the common cutcherry and bring the same into their own possession. In our opinion this is a restriction upon partition, the right to which according to the law administered in these provinces, must be regarded as an essential element of ownership. We think, therefore, that the restriction is void, and that the gift of the property in the shares specified in the will first cannot be affected thereby. The third clause provides for the defrayal of the expenses of the marriages of members of the family from joint funds, and directs that until the youngest son attains majority, none of the sons shall be able to separate, and if they do so, then any son who separates is to get merely maintenance and is not to be entitled to the profits accruing upon his share up to the time when he attains majority. This is, we think, a valid clause and can be enforced if occasion should arise. The remaining provisions of this will do not require notice.'

Coming to the third document, the judgment gives the principal clauses, which are not repeated here, as they have been stated in the preceding part of this report, and considers especially the fifth clause, which is above set forth, beginning with the words ‘My heirs shall enjoy the profits.’ The judgment proceeds thus:

‘Now what we have to consider is whether the above provisions, viz., that the sons shall get the shares of the profits, and shall not be able to be personally in possession, and shall not be able to make any gift or sale or any other kind of alienation, and the further declaration in the fifth paragraph, that it was only for the purpose of carrying on their maintenance that the testator had fixed the share of each of his sons, and besides this that they had no right or ownership whatever in those shares, so far altered or modified the disposition of the property contained in the first document of 21st January 1856 as to amount to a revocation of the absolute bequest contained in it. Upon the best consideration that we have been able to give to the arguments that have been addressed to us, we are of opinion that they do not. We think that the first provision as to the sons receiving the profits and not being able to get possession of their shares embodies a restriction which must be held to be invalid and inoperative. The true meaning of the original passage in the will is, that the sons shall not get possession of designated or specified shares, in other words, that there shall be no partition, and this is merely a repetition of the previous condition in the second will. Then the restriction upon alienation is also invalid, being opposed to the policy of the law. The passage in paragraph 5 taken with the context clearly has for its object the prevention of the property from being made liable for debts incurred by the sons, and this object is one which cannot be effectuated.

‘The conclusion then at which we arrive upon the construction of these three testamentary instruments is, that there was a good gift to the six sons of the testator’s property in equal shares; and that in the second and third wills, the testator has endeavoured to impose restrictions upon the proprietary interest conferred by the first will, which restrictions are opposed to law and must therefore be regarded as invalid and inoperative.

‘The next question with which we have to deal arises upon the construction of the fifth paragraph of the third will, which provides as follows:

‘If any of those sons die without sons, then none of his heirs shall get his share, but the rest of my sons and heirs, or if they have sons, then those sons shall get it according to those shares.’ We may observe that here also there is an error in the translation. ‘The rest of my sons and heirs’ is an erroneous rendering of the original. ‘The rest of my sons being heirs or who are heirs’ is the proper meaning. It has been contended by the learned counsel Mr. Evans that the gift over created by these words is bad, inasmuch as it is a gift to an indefinite class. In support of this contention we have been referred to the case of Soudamini Dasi v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (1), and we have been asked to apply the principle laid down in that case to the case which is now before us. We may observe that in the case of Rai Bishesh Chand v. Asmaida Koer (2) decided by the

(1) 2 C. 262.
(2) 6 A. 560=11 I.A. 164.
Privy Council in March 1884, the principle of English law which was adopted and made applicable to Hindus in the case of Soulamini Dasi was considered and observed upon by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The case of Rai Bishen Chand was no doubt a case not of a will but of [416] a deed inter vivos, intended to have immediate operation; and as regards the applicability of the principle to Hindu wills, their Lordships decided nothing definitely. They did, however, refer to illustration (b) to s. 102 of the Succession Act (X) of 1865 as importing into India an English rule of construction which usually defeats the intention of the testator; and it would appear that the adoption of the English rule of construction did not recommend itself to their Lordships on that occasion as a sound principle applicable to the wills of Hindus. If we had to decide whether this principle ought to be adopted in this country, we should perhaps think it necessary to refer the question to a Full Bench, having regard to the recent observations of the Privy Council in the case just referred to, and because we ourselves entertain some doubt as to whether this principle ought to be followed in construing the wills of Hindus. We think, however, that it is not necessary to decide this question on the present occasion. We have not here to deal with an intention to which in its entirety it is impossible to give effect, and in consequence of its being impossible to effectuate the whole intention, any attempt to give effect to a portion of it would practically amount to making a new will for the testator by substituting another and a different intention, the existence of which is not to be gathered from the will. We think that in the present case there are two intentions wholly separable, the second not depending upon the first, and that it is possible to give effect to the first intention without entering into the question whether the second intention is one to which the law can or cannot allow effect. The will provides that if one of the sons die without sons, none of his heirs shall get his share; but, first, that the rest of the testator's sons shall get that share, and, second, that if any of those other sons have died leaving sons, the sons so left shall receive the share, that is, their proportion of the share, or in other words, as we understand it, that the sons of the deceased sons shall for the purposes of the inheritance stand in the place of their fathers. Now assuming for argument's sake that the sons of the deceased son constitutes a class, some of whom may have been in existence at the time of the testator's death, while others may have been born subsequently, that this class therefore consists of some who may take and others who cannot take, and that the gift over to these sons of a son is in consequence invalid, we have to observe that this second case has not yet arisen. The case with which we have to deal is the case of one of the testator's sons dying and other sons surviving him. We may observe that as Jagadindranath died before Gobind's death and without male offspring, it is unnecessary to consider him in dealing with the question before us. Now it appears to us that the first intention, that is, the intention that if one of the testator's sons shall die, the other surviving sons shall receive his share, is an intention complete in itself, and one to which we can give effect, and that the validity of the gift over in this case is not affected by the further provision as to what is to be done if one of the sons predecease the son in respect of whose share the question arises, such son so predeceasing having left sons in respect of whose right the question of the validity of the second intention would have to be considered. This case has not arisen, and, it is therefore unnecessary for us to decide whether the gift would, in this case be void as a gift to an indefinite class. We are, therefore, of opinion that we ought to give effect to the clear intention of the testator as to the share of a son dying [417] going over to the other sons who survive him. We think, then, that according to the true construction of the will, upon the death of Gobindanath Sircar, the one-sixth share which he originally received under the provisions of the will, together with the share which he obtained upon the death of Jagadindranath Sircar, went over, under the provisions of paragraph 5 of the third will, to the four sons who are plaintiffs in this case, and that Raikishori Dasi, the widow, was not entitled to take anything by inheritance from her deceased husband Gobindnath Sircar.

"It has further been contended by the learned Counsel for the respondent that the provisions contained in paragraph 11 of the third will are wholly void, and that in respect of the moveable and other properties specified in this paragraph there is an intestacy, and that, in consequence, Raikishori Dasi is entitled to the share in such property which her husband would have received according to Hindu law. We are of opinion that there has been in this paragraph of the will an attempt to tie up the property in perpetuity, that this attempt must fail, and that no effect can be given to these provisions of the will. But we do not think that the result will be that there is an intestacy in respect of these portions of the property. We think, as we have already said, that there has been a good gift of the whole of the property in paragraph 1 of the first will, and that the attempt to tie up the property failing, the original gift must prevail.

"The suit has been brought for confirmation of possession, and an attempt was made to show that Raikishori was in possession of a portion of the property, and it was therefore said that as regards this portion the plaintiffs' suit could not succeed, because, being out of possession, they ought to have sued for possession and not merely for a declaratory decree. We have heard the evidence of this point, and we entertain no doubt that although Raikishori made certain attempts to obtain possession of a portion of the property, those attempts were not successful, and the real possession remained in the hands of the plaintiffs.

"The result will be that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and the plaintiffs will have a decree construing the will in accordance with this judgment. The defendant Raikishori Dasi will be declared to have no interest in the property left by the testator Bishwanath Sircar, and the conveyance of the 9th Falgoon 1285 will be declared void and must be cancelled. And it may be well to observe that this conveyance being so cancelled must not be returned to the party by whom it was [418] filed. The plaintiffs will have their costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellants, argued that the decree of the High Court must be reversed as erroneous. Upon the construction of the three documents he argued that the provisions of the second and third, directing what estates should be held by the sons, were inconsistent with, and in effect were a revocation of, the bequest conferring estates upon them in the first document. All the instruments must be read together, and the testator's whole intention regarded. This was expressed in the last which, as a will, was substituted for the first and second. If then this third will was, as he submitted it was, invalid on account of the attempt to create a perpetuity, and by reason of other provisions contrary to law, there was no operative bequest, and the result was an intestacy. The only estates bequeathed by the testator to his sons in the third will were invalidly bequeathed, for he coupled with the bequest invalid restrictions. The testator did not intend his sons to have the property without the restrictions imposed; and if the restrictions were removed, the testator’s intention could not be carried out. It was, therefore, necessary to hold the whole bequest invalid.

The provisions inserted by the testator in case any son should die without a son also were contrary to law. The whole scheme failing intestacy resulted; it not being permitted or possible, to spell out a meaning that was legal, by disregarding the provisions that were illegal—see remarks as to this in the judgment in the Tagore case (1). Reference was made to Sooknjoy Chunder Dass v. Monohurri Dasi (2); Leake v. Robinson (3); Pearkes v. Moseley (4); Bramamayi Dasi v. Jogeschandra Dutt (5); Rai Bishenchand v. Asmaida Koer (6).

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. G. W. Arathoon, for the respondents, argued that the judgment of the High Court was correct. There was in the first document, of which all the three constituted the will, an absolute gift of the corpus of the estate to the sons. This was capable of taking effect, and should be carried out. The illegal restrictions afterwards imposed from time to time as the testator in after years added them, with a view to keeping his estate together might be regarded as wholly inoperative. They should have no effect to invalidate the previous legal disposition. They referred to Soorjeemoney Dossec v. Deno-[419] bundo Mullick (7) With regard to the objection as to the gift over, they contended that it was good as to the sons in existence, and there was no reason why the latter part of the provision as to unborn sons should invalidate the former, when no difficulty had as yet arisen on account of the bequest including an indefinite class.

Reference was made to Sonatun Bysack v. Juggutoosunderee Dossec (8); Kumar Tarakeswar Roy v. Kumar Shoshi Shikareswar (9); Ramal Mookerjee v. The Secretary of State (10); Soudamini Dossec v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (11); Kherodmoney Dossec v. Doorgamoney Dossec (12); Bhoobinmohini Debia v. Hurris Chunder Choudhry (13); Bramamayi Dossec v. Jogeschandra Dutt (5); Callynath Nagh Choudhry v. Chundernath Nagh Choudhry (14); Ganendramohon Tagore v. Upendramohon Tagore (Tagore case) (1); Rai Bishen Chand v. Mussamut Asmaida Koer (6); Hori Dasi Debi v. The Secretary of State (15).

Mr. J. D. Mayne replied.

On a subsequent day (22nd December 1887) their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by

JUDGMENT.

[420] Sir B. Peacock.—The respondents in this appeal were the plaintiffs in the action. They were four of the sons of Bishwanath Sircar.
The first defendant, Raikishori Dasi, was the widow of the late Gobindnath Sircar, who was an adopted son of Bishwanath. The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled under the will of their father to succeed, upon the death of Gobindnath without male issue, to the share of the father's property, to which he had succeeded on his father's death. The widow contended that the will of the father was illegal and void, and, consequently that, upon the death of her husband, Gobindnath, she as his widow succeeded to his share of the property, and acting upon that view, she, by deed, dated the 9th of Falgoon 1285, transferred a portion of the property to the defendant No. 2 (Syed Abdul Sobhan Chowdhry). The plaintiffs by their plaint prayed that after putting upon the will of the late Bishwanath Sircar, the Court would be pleased to pass a decree declaring that defendant No. 1, that is to say, the widow of Gobindnath, had no right to the property stated in the schedule marked (ka), and to declare the plaintiffs' right to the said property in accordance with the said will. They also prayed that after declaration of the plaintiffs' right, the Court would be pleased to pass a decree declaring that defendant No. 1 had no right to take possession of, or to transfer, any property stated in the said will, and that the registered kobala executed by defendant No. 1, dated 9th Falgoon 1285, was void.

The will was contained in three documents, which together formed the last will of the father Bishwanath. The first of these documents was dated January 1856; the second, May 1862; and the third, August 1870. The Subordinate Judge held that the will was void, and, consequently, that the widow succeeded to her husband's share. The High Court upon appeal reversed that decision, and held that the plaintiffs were entitled to it.

The will contained many provisions which could not legally be carried into effect, and which appeared to create a perpetuity, and consequently to render the will invalid.

At the close of the arguments their Lordships reserved judgment in order that they might carefully consider all the provisions of the three documents read together. They have now done so, and although they cannot, after full consideration say that the case is free from doubt, they are not prepared to hold that the High Court came to an erroneous conclusion, or to advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgment.

Their Lordships observe that the High Court has declared the deed of conveyance to be void, and that it be cancelled and retained in Court. It is not because a man conveys property to which he is not entitled that the conveyance is absolutely void or ought to be cancelled or retained by the Court. It was unnecessary to do more after declaring the plaintiffs' right than to declare that defendant No. 1 had no right to take possession of, or to transfer, any part of the property mentioned in the will, and that the deed passed no right in any part of such property to the defendant No. 2.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree, so far as it declares that the defendant No. 1, Raikishori Dasi, had no right or interest in the property mentioned in the schedule "ka" attached to the plaint, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to the same, but that instead of declaring that the conveyance executed by Raikishori Dasi in favour of defendant No. 2, Syed Abdul Sobhan, is void, and that the said conveyance be cancelled and retained in Court, it be declared that the said conveyance transferred no interest in the property to the defendant No. 2, and that in all other respects the decree of the High Court be affirmed. This modification of the decree of the High Court does not affect the merits of the case as regards the parties to this appeal, and accordingly the appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

SHANKAR BAKSH (Plaintiff) v. DAYA SHANKAR and OTHERS (Defendants).

[9th, 10th, 19th, 22nd and 23rd November and 17th December, 1887.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 114—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 103—Identity of causes of action in two suits, notwithstanding difference of relief claimed.

To a suit, brought in 1883, for redemption of a mortgage made in 1853, of villages in Oudh, subsequently included in the mortgagee's talukdari estate and sanad, the defence was that the mortgagor, having brought a suit in 1864 to redeem, and not having appeared at the hearing, in person or by pleader, judgment was passed, the mortgagee having appeared to defend against the plaintiff under s. 114 of Act VIII of 1859.

Held, that, although the plaintiff, who had claimed in the prior suit the under-proprietary right in virtue of a sub-settlement, claimed in the present suit the superior proprietary right, the difference in the mode of relief claimed did not affect the identity of the cause of action, which was, in both cases, the refusal of the right to redeem; and that under s. 144 of the Act the judgment of 1864 was final.

APPEAL from a decree (3rd June 1885) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree (7th April 1884) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The questions raised by this appeal were: First, whether or not a judgment given by a Settlement Court on 12th July 1864, "on default," had been passed against the plaintiff by default, within the meaning of s. 114 of Act VIII of 1859, of the Civil Procedure Code, or the suit had been disposed of under s. 110 of the same Act; secondly, whether the cause of action, which was for the redemption of villages mortgaged by the plaintiff's ancestor to the defendant, was identical in both of two suits, the one suit having claimed possession of the mortgaged property in virtue of under-proprietary right upon sub-settlement, and the other suit having claimed possession of the same property in virtue of superior proprietary right.

The appellant, the plaintiff, talukdar of Pahu, claimed in the suit giving rise to this appeal, possession of villages Khanpur, Rajwara, and Sarai Mobarak, in the Unao district, by redemption of mortgage. The defendant, respondent, Daya Shankar, was also a talukdar, to whom the villages had been mortgaged in 1853 by the plaintiff's grandfather, Thakur Bhup Singh, for a term of three years, to secure an advance of Rs. 7,441 made to him. The villages were, after the annexation of Oudh in 1856, included in the defendant’s talukdari estate, and in his sanad obtained after the settlement.

On the 23rd June 1864 the original mortgagor Bhup Singh sued to redeem, and, as by that time the villages had been included in the schedule attached to Daya Shankar’s sanad, he refrained from claiming proprietary rights, but claimed possession as under-proprietor, holding sub-settlement in accordance with the provisions of the Government rules on the subject. He stated that Rs. 3,000 had been paid and that he was ready to pay the balance.

The suit having come before a Settlement Officer on 18th July 1868, and the plaintiff not then appearing in person or by pleader, the Court passed judgment “in default.” An application to the Court to issue a fresh summons, under s. 110 of Act VIII of 1859, was rejected (13th August 1868), as also was a petition (15th September 1868), presented more than thirty days after the 18th July, to set aside the order of that date. An appeal against this rejection was rejected by the Commissioner who recorded the following (16th May 1871): “The lower Court is correct. The order of 13th August ought to have been appealed. The appellant is now without redress, but this is of the less consequence since the principle has not heretofore been recognized of a talukdar suing another talukdar for the redemption of a village in the sanad of the latter.”

The present suit (6th September 1883) stated the mortgage, and the acquisition of an interest therein by defendants other than Daya Shankar (not material to this report), and that the plaintiff had, under the provisions of s. 83 of Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property) deposited the mortgage money in Court, and that on the 14th June 1883, which was the Khali Fasli of the month of Jeth, the defendant had refused to restore the property.

By his written statement the defendant alleged that the suit was barred by the proceedings of 1864, and the judgment of the Commissioner (16th May 1871). On issues raising [424] this question, the District Judge being of opinion that a decision on one grade of right, the practice of the settlement Courts having been to try each grade of right separately was no bar to a suit claiming another grade of right or to a decision thereupon, made a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

On appeal the Additional Judicial Commissioner held that the former suit brought in 1864 for the recovery of the mortgaged property was in all essentials the same as the present suit, that s. 6, Act I of 1869 did not confer a fresh cause of action on plaintiff, nor did it relieve him from the consequences of having permitted judgment to be given against him by default; and that it was difficult to see how the practice (alluded to by the District Judge) of the Settlement Court could have been followed in suits for redemption of mortgaged property in which a plaintiff would be bound to include in one suit whatever rights he might have mortgaged under the same deed. The Judicial Commissioner, therefore, held that the suit was barred under the provision of s. 114, Act VIII of 1859, and s. 103 of Act XIV of 1882. He reversed the decision of the District Judge, and gave the defendants the costs of both Courts.

On this appeal,—

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant, contended that the proceedings in 1864 did not bar the present suit. The order of 12th July 1864 was not made under s. 114 but under s. 110; nor, even if it had been made under s. 114, would it have barred the present suit. Nor until 1869, when Act I of 1869 (the Oudh Estates' Act), s. 6 came in aid, was it open to plaintiff to sue for the proprietary right. After the settlement of Oudh he was not in a position to claim that right from the mortgagee in whose sanad and in whose talukdari estate, were comprised the villages now claimed, until s. 6 of the above Act had authorised the claim. In 1864 the plaintiff was only in a position to claim that for which he had sued, viz., that a sub-settlement should be made with him as under proprietor (1). He referred to Acts XVI of 1865, XIII of 1866 and I of 1869 (1), and contended that the causes of action in 1864 and 1883 were not identical. He referred to Shampersad Roy Chowdhry v. Rampersad (2), where the rule of res judicata was held only to apply to a case in which the question to be determined in a suit was the same that had been already heard and decided; and not to a case where new circumstances had intervened and altered the nature and character of the question to be determined.

For the respondents, Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon argued that the order was made under s. 114, and fell within the provisions of that section, making it final. This ground of appeal had not been taken in the lower Court. The appellant had himself treated the order, in applications afterwards made, as having been passed under s. 114, and the Courts had dealt with it as an order under that section.

Sir B. Peacock referred to s. 6 of Act I of 1869, pointing out that the order of 1864 was made in a suit for the under-proprietary right. Whether that left open the claim now preferred was a point on which further argument might be heard.

Lord Fitzgerald said that their Lordships would hear one counsel on either side, on a subsequent day, on the question whether, at the time of the institution of the suit, the plaintiff had a right of redemption of mortgage not barred by the order of 12th July 1864, or by limitation.

On the 19th November, Mr. R. V. Doyne, with whom was Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant, and Mr. J. D. Mayne, with whom was Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondents, were heard on the above question.

Mr. R. V. Doyne contended that, by the effect of the confiscation of the rights of proprietors in 1858, the original rights of the mortgagor had been swept away, and the restoration which followed had left no right in the mortgagor to redeem; the talukdari settlement having been made with the mortgagee, and having, as well as the sanad afterwards obtained, comprised the villages in suit. Section 6, however, of Act I of 1869 provided for the redemption of mortgages. Before that Act there did not exist the cause of action of which the identity with that now in suit had been assumed. Therefore the plaintiff was not debarred from suing by the order of 1864, which did not, and could not, deal with the cause of action now presented; nor was the suit barred by limitation.

(1) Act I of 1869 (the Oudh Estates' Act), s. 6 enacted that nothing in ss. 3 and 4 of that Act (defining rights of talukdars), or in the orders of Government on the subject, or in any sanad, should be a bar to a suit for redemption where a mortgage, dated on or after 13th February 1844, fixed no term for redemption, or a term not expiring before 13th February 1856.

(2) 10 M. I. A. 203 (209).
The confiscated estates of the Oudh talukdars were restored to them unimpaired, save so far as the talukdar might have recognized any equitable charges in favour of others, and save so far as equities might have arisen against him out of his acts in obtaining the settlement and sanand. In this particular case there was no conduct on the part of the talukdar from which a trust, preserving the right to redeem, could be inferred. [Lord Hobhouse referred to the previous contract.] In support of the above proposition reference was made to Shunkersahai v. Raja Kashi perahad (1); Rani of Chittarre v. The Government of India (2); Nawab Malka Jahan Sahiba v. The Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow (3); Hurdeo Bakh v. Jawahir Singh (4); Brij Inder Bahadur v. Janki Koer (5); Romanund Koer v. Rughinath Koer (6); Jchan Kadr Bahadur v. Badshoo Bahoo Sahiba (7).

[Sir B. Peacock referred to Nelson v. Couch (8), as showing that, to constitute a good defence of res judicata, the former suit should have been one in which the plaintiff might have recovered to the same extent what he seeks to recover in the second.]

Mr. J. D. Moyne contended that the right of the mortgagor under the original contract, being to obtain a re-transfer upon payment of the mortgage money, did not fall within the proclamation of confiscation of 1858. He referred to its terms as printed at the [427] end of the report of Nawab Malka Jahan Sahiba v. The Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow (3).

Also to the cases above cited and to Gauri Shankar v. The Raja of Butrampor (9).

Also to the Oudh Government orders, relating to this subject, that had under the Indian Councils' Act, 1861, 24 and 25 Vic., c. 67, s. 25, obtained the force of law; and to the Acts abovementioned. The effect of a usufructuary mortgage was explained in Pattabhiraniyar v. Venkat tarow Nicken (10); and Thumbasawmy Medelly v. Mahomed Hossain Rowthen (11).

Regulation XVII of 1806 was also referred to. The Acts of 1865, 1866 and 1869 showed that the mortgages executed before annexation were not regarded as extinguished. At all events, the plaintiff could not have had his rights altered or his position improved by s. 6 of Act I of 1869. The effect now sought to be attributed to the Act would be to negative the result of a decree made some years before its passing. Such a retrospective effect could not be attributed to it. In connection with this he cited Gardner v. Lucas (12) in regard to the non-retrospective construction put upon an Act. He relied on s. 114 of Act VIII, corresponding to s. 106 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and urged that it was impossible that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, having been swept away in 1858, had been restored in 1869 in the manner alleged.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, replied.

JUDGMENT.

On a subsequent day their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—On the 6th of December 1853 Bhup Singh, the grandfather of the appellant, describing himself as zemindar and talukdar of Pahu and Golaria &c., by an agreement of that date, mortgaged

three villages in pargana Maurawan, in Oudh, to the respondent Daya Shankar for three years for Rs. 7,441-6, the mortgagee to have the profits and produce and being put in possession. And the mortgagor stipulated that he would repay the mortgage money in Khali Fasl, and redeem the mortgaged villages, and "unless he shall have paid the mortgage money in full to the said mortgagee, he shall not redeem the villages; at the time the mortgage money shall be paid up by the declarant (mortgagor) he shall have the mortgaged villages released in Khali Fasl."

On the 6th September 1883 the appellant brought a suit in the Court of the District Judge of Lucknow against the respondent to redeem the mortgage. Other persons were made defendants as having become entitled to a half share in the right of the mortgagee, but the case may be treated as if Daya Shankar had remained sole mortgagee. The plaint stated the mortgage; that the three years expired on the 6th December 1856, and although the villages were included in the talukdari sanad of Daya Shankar, yet, under the terms of the mortgage deed and s. 6, Act I of 1869, the plaintiff was entitled to redeem; that under s. 83, Act IV of 1882, the plaintiff had deposited the mortgage money in Court, but on the 14th of June 1883, the Khali Fasl, the defendants refused to allow him to redeem the property. The written statement of Daya Shankar stated that "on the 23rd of June 1864 Bhup Singh, plaintiff's ancestors, filed against the defendant a regular suit for redemption of his property, and continually absented himself; on the death of Bhup Singh, which took place about the end of 1875, the plaintiff succeeded him, and he also failed to prosecute the case, so much so that on 18th July 1868 the claim was dismissed for want of prosecution, under s. 114, Act VIII of 1859, in the presence of defendant and absence of plaintiff." It was further stated that on 7th August 1868 the plaintiff filed an application for re-hearing, which was rejected on the 15th August; that another application for re-hearing was filed on 15th September 1868, which was also rejected on 17th March 1871; that an appeal was then preferred in the Court of the Commissioner, which was also rejected.

The sections of Act VIII of 1859, which was then in force, applicable to the dismissal of a suit, are 110, 114, and 119. Section 110 provides for the dismissal where neither party [429] appears and when a suit is dismissed under it the plaintiff is at liberty to bring a fresh suit, unless precluded by the rules for the limitation of actions, or if within thirty days he satisfies the Court that there was a sufficient excuse for his non-appearance the Court may issue a fresh summons upon the plaint already filed. Section 114 provides for cases where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear, and then "the Court shall pass judgment against the plaintiff by default unless the defendant admits the claim," and it says that when judgment is passed against a plaintiff by default he shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action.

Bhup Singh had, as was alleged, brought a suit in the Settlement Court on the 23rd June 1864, and the order, as it is called, of the 18th July 1868 appears to have been made in consequence of the Financial Commissioner, on the 29th of May, 1868, calling the attention of the Settlement Officer to the provision in Act VIII of 1859, where the plaintiff does not attend to the process of the Court. The Settlement Officer appears upon that to have given notice to the parties, and the judgment says that "the 18th of June was fixed for the hearing, on which day plaintiff applied for a month's delay, it being the entering into engagements with tenants, and the defendant's agent agreeing to the delay, it was granted, and this day, the 18th of July, fixed for the hearing, but plaintiff is not present or represented by any accredited agent." At the foot of the judgment is the word "decreed" and the signature of the Settlement Officer. There is also in the proceedings a paper in a tabular form, signed by the Settlement Officer, which seems to be the record of the decree. In a column headed "Particulars of case" are the words "plaintiff's suit for redemption of entire village Khanpur by right of inheritance and possession up to 1270 F. dismissed on default." The words "dismissed on default" were strongly relied upon before their Lordships as showing that the suit was dismissed under s. 110, but in another column it is stated that the decree was in favour of the defendants.
The proceeding of the Settlement Court is recorded in such a loose way that no certain inference can be drawn from it as to the section under which the decree was made. The matter, however, did [430] not rest there. On the 7th of August 1868 the plaintiff applied that the suit might be reinstituted under s. 110. This application was rejected on the 13th August. On the 15th September 1868 the plaintiff made an application to set aside the order of the 18th July. The order upon this application was not made until the 17th March 1871. The cause of this delay does not appear. The application was refused by the Settlement Court because it was not made within 30 days after the 18th July. The plaintiff then appealed to the Commissioner of the Rae Bareli Division, who dismisse6 the appeal, saying that "the order of 13th August ought to have been appealed." The explanation of this will be found in s. 119. It has been seen that when an order is made under s. 110 there is no appeal; the plaintiff is at liberty to bring a fresh suit. But s. 119 provides that in all cases of judgment against a plaintiff by default (that is, cases under
s. 114) he may apply within 30 days from the date of the judgment for an order to set it aside, and that in all cases in which the Court shall pass an order under that section for setting aside a judgment the order shall be final, but in all appealable cases in which the Court shall reject the application an appeal shall lie from the order of rejection to the tribunal to which the final decision in the suit would be appealable. Thus the plaintiff, by appealing against the order of the 17th March 1871, treated the application of the 15th September 1868 as an application to set aside an order made under s. 114, and when the Commissioner said that the order of the 13th August ought to have been appealed he must have considered that the order of 18th July 1868 was made under that section. Indeed the objection that it was made under s. 110 does not seem to have been taken in the lower Courts. No issue was framed by the District Judge distinctly, if at all, raising it and here is no notice of it in his judgment.
The Appellate Court says the suit was dismissed under s. 114, and the whole of the judgment assumes that it was. Their Lordships are satisfied that the dismissal of the suit was under s. 114.

It is, therefore, necessary to decide whether the present suit is for the same cause of action as the former. The plaint in this suit has been stated. The suit in 1864 was begun by a petition to the Settlement Court, which then had the [431] jurisdiction. It stated the claim thus:
"Claim to order proprietary (sub-settlement) right by redemption of mortgage in respect of villages Khanpur, Rajwara, and Sari Mobarak, which were mortgaged to defendant on the fourth Rabiul Awa1 1270 H. in lieu of Rs. 7,441-6, with stipulation that whenever, after expiry of the period of three years, the mortgagor paid the mortgage money in full, he shall redeem the property. Accordingly he paid Rs. 3,000 but of the aforesaid amount on the 7th Ramzan 1273 H. He is ready to pay the balance Rs. 4,441-6, but the defendant does not act up to the terms of the mortgage deed.' The prayer was that the plaintiff might, on payment of Rs. 4,441-6 in cash, be put in possession of the mortgaged villages as under-proprietor, holding sub-settlement in accordance with the provision of the rules of the Government on the subject. The proceedings in the Settlement Court appear to have been in a different form from that now in use in the District Court viz., plaintiff and written statement, but no objection has been taken in the lower Courts that the suit in 1864 was not in proper form, or that it was then necessary to deposit the money. That has been made necessary by a subsequent Act. That in the former suit the plaintiff asked for sub-proprietary right, and in the latter for the superior proprietary right, does not make any difference as regards the cause of action. It is not as the District Judge thought part of the cause of action. It is the manner in which the redemption of the mortgage was to be given. Various questions have been raised, and very fully argued, before their Lordships in order to show that the cause of action in the two suits is not the same, and that the present suit is for a new cause of action. Their Lordships have fully considered those arguments, and they are unable to come to the conclusion that the causes of action are not the same, and that the judgment of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, who held that the suit was barred under the provisions of s. 114, is wrong. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm his judgment, and to dismiss the appeal. The appellant will pay the costs of it.

Appeal dismissed.

[432] CIVIL RULE.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Gobinda Ram Mondal (Petitioner) v. Bhola Nath Bhatta
(Opposite party).* [28th February, 1888.]

There is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) which prevents a second application for a review being made after a previous application for review has been made and rejected, and such an application can therefore be entertained. The word "final" in s. 629 of Act XIV of 1882 bears the same meaning, and ought to have the same construction put upon it, as was put upon the same word

* Civil Rule No. 5 of 1888 against the order passed by Baboo B. C. Chatterjee, Small Cause Court Judge of Midnapore, dated the 12th of September 1887, on the second application for review, confirming the order passed on the first application for review by Baboo G. C. Chowdhry, Small Cause Court Judge of Midnapore, dated 6th October 1885.
in s. 378 of Act VIII of 1859 by the Full Bench in Nasiruddin Khan v. Indranarayan Chowdhry (1).

The facts of the case were as follows:—

In August 1885 a suit was instituted by Bholanath Bhatta against Gobinda Ram Mondal for the recovery of Rs. 264 upon a money bond. The bond was alleged to be dated the 24th of March 1883. The defendant pleaded that the bond was a forgery. On the 8th of September 1885 the Small Cause Court Judge of Midnapore decreed the plaintiff's suit. On the 12th of September 1885 the defendant applied for a review of judgment. His application was rejected on the 6th of October 1885. Early in 1887 a notorious forger named Haradhan Maiti was arrested by the Police, and upon his premises being searched, it was alleged that the Police found there a fac-simile of the bond upon which the suit was brought with the defendant's signature and seal upon it, and also a petition purporting to bear his seal. Haradhan Maiti was convicted and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment on the 23rd of March 1887. On the 1st of April 1887, having obtained copies of certain papers which were produced at the Sessions Court upon the [433] trial of Haradhan Maiti, the defendant made a second application for a review of judgment. This application was also refused, and the judgment of the then Small Cause Court Judge was as follows: "This is an application for a second review of a decree passed by the late Judge. The first application was rejected by him. According to s. 629, paragraph last, of the Code, this application cannot be granted. If this be an application to review a second time the decree, it is res judicata. If it be an application to review an order passed on review, or on an application for a review, s. 629 bars the application. Ordered that this application be disallowed with costs." Upon this the defendant applied for and obtained a rule from the Chief justice and Mr. Justice Tottenham calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the order refusing the application should not be set aside, and why the Small Cause Court Judge should not be directed to entertain the second application for a review.

The rule was granted upon a petition of the defendant, verified by an affidavit, setting out the above facts, and alleging that the papers found in Haradhan Maiti's house were false and fabricated in precisely the same manner as he had always alleged, and still insisted that the bond in suit was fabricated. He further stated in his affidavit that he had examined the fac-simile of the bond and compared it with that sued upon, and that the handwriting in the body of both was the same, and he believed them to have been written by one and the same individual; that at the time of the trial of the suit and of his first application for review the existence of the fac-simile of the bond and the other papers referred to above was not within his knowledge, and that he could not have produced them at the trial or at the hearing of such application, and he charged that the judgment had been obtained against him by means of false and suborned testimony by which the Court was misled and deceived.

In his application to the High Court the defendant submitted that the Small Cause Court Judge was wrong in holding that a second review of judgment is barred by the rule of res judicata and that upon the facts submitted he was entitled as of right to have the judgment reviewed. He further contended that as the judgment had been obtained by fraud and by means of false and [435] suborned evidence, the plaintiff was not entitled to retain any benefit he had thereby obtained.

The rule now came on to be heard.

Baboo Uma Kali Mookerjee, for the petitioner.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, for the opposite party.

Baboo Uma Kali Mookerjee for the petitioner contended that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the principle of res judicata applied to the present case, and that s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code had nothing to do with the present application. He further contended that the word "final" in s. 629 of the Code meant that the order was not appealable. He relied on the Full Bench Ruling in Nasiruddin Khan v. Indronarayan Chowdhry (1), and referred to the last para. of s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code. He further contended that the last clause of s. 629 had nothing to do with the present case, as this was a second application for reviewing the decree.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose for the opposite party contended that it was never the intention of the Legislature that there should be more than one review, and that the last para of s. 629 covered the present case. He referred to s. 623, and argued that the words "a review," meant only one review. He also cited and relied on the case of Vencama Shetty v. Pamoo Shetty (2).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J., who after setting out the facts continued as follows:—

The rule has been argued before us to-day, Dr. Rash Behari Ghose showing cause against it, and Baboo Uma Kali Mookerjee appearing in support of it. In support of the rule reliance has been placed upon a Full Bench decision in the case of Nasiruddin Khan v. Indronarayan Chowdhry (1). That was a decision upon s. 378 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, the corresponding section to s. 629 of the present Code. In showing cause Dr. Rash Behari Ghose has urged that the reasons which led the Judges who were in a majority in the Full Bench case to put the interpretation they did upon the word "final" do not operate for giving the word the same meaning now, because [435] s. 629 of the present Code is drawn in an entirely different manner from s. 378 of the old Code, and has created a considerable alteration in the law. Dr. Rash Behari Ghose further urges that the last paragraph of s. 629 was really introduced to meet the point which has now arisen; he argues that the words "no application to review an order passed on review or on an application for a review shall be entertained" are tantamount to saying, "No second application for review shall be made." The learned Vakil's third argument is based upon the use of the article "a" before the words "review of judgment" in s. 629, which is the first section of the present Code which deals with reviews of judgments. Dr. Rash Behari Ghose says that "an" application for a review means only one application for review, not more than one; and he refers to the case of Vencama Shetty v. Pamoo Shetty (2).

We have considered these arguments and the cases cited, and are of opinion that the word "final" in s. 629 bears the same meaning, and ought to have the same construction put upon it, as the word "final" in s. 378 of the old Code. We are also of opinion that we must gather the intention of the Legislature from the words they have used. It is impossible to say what was passing in their minds. It seems to us that if they intended to prohibit a second application for review they would have, and could have, said so in precise words. They would have said, "No second application for a review shall be entertained." We do not think that the words "no application to review an order passed on review or on an application for a review shall be entertained" are wide enough to bar a person in the position of the present defendant from making a second application for a review.

It is to be noted further that this is a Procedure Code, and the widest possible construction should be put upon Codes of Procedure as distinguished from substantive law. It is also to be observed that this is not an application to review an order passed on review, or to review an order passed on an application for a review. The defendant's case is that the first application for a review was properly rejected. He does not ask to review [436] that order. He asks simply to make a second application to have the original judgment reviewed upon new materials.

Under these circumstances we think that the application is one which ought to be entertained.

The rule will be made absolute with costs.

H. T. II. Rule made absolute.

CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Sir W. Comer Patheram, Kt. Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

Khoshdebl Biswas (Plaintiff) v. Satar Mondol and others (Defendants).* [26th March, 1888.]

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 135—Actionable claim—Transfer of a claim for an amount less than its value—Recovery of full amount of debt.

Section 135 of the Transfer of Property Act does not protect a defendant from payment of the full amount payable under a claim transferred for a sum less than that recoverable under the claim, where the money is recovered by suit after a contest as to the liability of the defendant.

Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi (1) followed.

[Diss., 13 A. 102 (107); 13 M. 225 (F.B.); 5 C.P.L.R. 13; F., 18 C. 510 (513); 23 C. 713; Appr., 19 B. 290 (292); 21 C. 568 (F.B.)]

One Khoshdebl Biswas, on the 12th Srabon 1294, purchased for Rs. 100 from one Mothura Nath Dutt a Kistibundi under which a sum of Rs. 156 was due, and subsequently sued the executants of the kistibundi and the transferer for Rs. 156 due thereunder, plus a further sum for interest which had accrued due since his purchase and the cost of the transfer.

* Civil Reference No. 2A of 1888 made by Baboo Jugjobundhoo Gangooy, Judge of the Small Cause Court, Jessore, dated the 24th of January 1888.

(1) 13 C. 145.
The defendants amongst other matters contended that the plaintiff was not entitled, under s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act, to recover more than the Rs. 100 which was the consideration for the transfer.

The Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Jessore, on the authority of Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi (1), held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole amount sued for, but having regard to the decision of Jani Begum v. Jahangir Khan (2) [437] made his judgment contingent on the opinion of the High Court on the question whether, under s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiff could recover the whole amount due under the kistibundi.

No one appeared on the reference.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Tottenham, J.) was as follows:—

OPINION.

In this case we are of opinion that the plaintiff can recover the whole amount due on the bond, notwithstanding s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act. We agree with the decision of this Court in Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi (1), that the section does not apply where the money is recovered by suit after a contest as to the liability of the defendant. We think, however, that if the money paid by the plaintiff for the claim, with interest and expenses, were paid into Court immediately on the suit being brought, that would be a payment within the meaning of the section, and would release the defendant from further liability.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Roop Lall Dass and another (Decree-holders) v. Bekani Meah (Judgment-debtor).

Mohinee Mohun Roy and another (Decree-holders) v. Bekani Meah (Judgment-debtor).* [24th January, 1888.]

Appeal—Attachment—Objection to attachment by judgment-debtor on behalf of others—Order against decree-holder—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283.

Where a judgment-debtor claims property which is the subject-matter of attachment, either on his own account as his own property, under whatever right, or as the representative of third parties in which capacity he has been sued, the question between him and the attaching creditor is properly one between the parties to the suit under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But where the judgment-debtor raises the claim or objection on behalf of third parties who are not represented before the Court, [438] the order passed thereon must be regarded as an order under s. 280 of the Code, and the only mode in which that order can be contested is in a regular suit as provided by s. 283.

In execution of a decree against a judgment-debtor in his private capacity the judgment-creditor attached certain property. Thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that the property attached had been dedicated by him some time previous as wakf under a registered wakfnamah, and that he was only in possession as mutwali under the deed. The lower Court found that the document created a valid wakf and allowed the objection and released the property from attachment. The judgment-creditor appealed. At the hearing of the appeal it was contended that no appeal lay, inasmuch as the order was one under s. 280 of the Civil Procedure Code. On behalf of the judgment-creditor it was contended that the order was one under s. 244 and was thus appealable.

It was held, that the order was under s. 280 and that no appeal lay, the remedy of the judgment-creditor being by way of a regular suit as provided by s. 283.

[F., 12 Ind. Cas. 411; Appl., 12 A. 73 (78)=10 A.W.N. 13; R., 12 A. 313 (326) (F.B.); 19 B. 328 (330); 23 B. 237 (242); 23 M. 195 (F.B.); 6 C.W.N. 63 (65); 1 C.W.N. 73 (78); 1 O.C. 11 (12); 29 C. 298=14 C.L.J. 425=16 C.W.N. 26=12 Ind. Cas. 163; D., 16 C. 603 (607).]

These were two appeals from an order of the First Subordinate Judge of Dacca under the following circumstances. Certain properties alleged to belong to Haji Bekani Meah, the judgment-debtor, having been attached, he preferred an objection to the attachment, alleging that the properties which had formerly belonged to him had been made wakf under the 4th Aghran 1281 by a registered wakfnamah of that date, and that he was in possession of them merely as muwali under the wakfnamah, and had no saleable interest therein. In answer to that objection the decree-holders contended that the wakfnamah was invalid and merely a deed of family management, and had been executed by the judgment-debtor to defraud his creditors.

Two issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge, the first being on the question as to whether the wakfnamah had been executed by the judgment-debtor in order to defraud his creditors, and the second as to whether it constituted a valid wakf under the Mahomedan law.

The Subordinate Judge found, that at the time of the execution of the document, the judgment-debtor was only indebted in the sum of Rs. 1,400 or thereabout, and that he was possessed of properties other than those dedicated, which were more than sufficient to cover such debts, and that therefore, it could not be said that the document was executed with a view to defraud his creditors; and upon the second issue, he found that the wakfnamah was valid under the Mahomedan law.

He accordingly accorded the objection and released the properties from attachment.

Against that order the decree-holders preferred these appeals to the High Court, and at the hearing of the appeals a preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay from the order, inasmuch as it was made under s. 280 of the Code, and that the decree-holders’ only remedy was to institute a regular suit in accordance with the provision of s. 283.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Trollyckyo Nath Mitter and Baboo Lal Mohun Dass, for the appellants.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Okhul Chunder Sen, Baboo Kashi Kant Sen, and Mouvie Seraj-ul-Islam for the respondent.

Mr. Evans.—No appeal lies from the order which was passed under s. 280 of the Civil Procedure Code, the decree-holders’ remedy being by way of a regular suit—Shankar Dial v. Amir Haidar (1); Nath Mal Dass v. Tajammul Hussain (2). It cannot be said that the order was one passed under s. 244, as the judgment-debtor was sued in his private capacity and not as representing the beneficiaries under the wakfnamah, and therefore the decisions in the cases of Chowdry Wahed Ali v. Musammat Jumacee (3) and Ram Ghulam v. Hazaru Kuar (4), which will be relied on by the other side, do not support their contention, the question in this case not being one arising between the parties to the suit. Here it cannot be said that the judgment-debtor represented the beneficiaries, as their interest conflicted with his, and therefore s. 437 of the Code could not properly be applied to this case (see the decisions referred to by Mr. O'Kinéaly in his notes to that section).

Bahori Lal v. Gauri Sahai (1) and Nimba Harishet v. Sitaram Paraji (2) are also authorities in my favour, and [440] there is nothing in those cases which really goes against the direct decisions of the Allahabad High Court. Here the wakfnamah is a dedication for the benefit of the settlers' children with an ultimate trust for the poor, and therefore the Advocate-General would also be entitled to appear—Fatmabibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (3). This affords an additional reason for holding that the order must be taken to be one under s. 280, and that therefore under s. 288 no appeal lies.

Mr. Woodroffe (for the appellants). The whole of Mr. Evans' argument is based on the supposition that his client is a bare trustee, and that upon the true construction of the deed he is not entitled to any interest in the property; but under the deed he has a life interest and that is attachable. The order was one between the parties to the suit relating to the execution of the decree and was therefore an order under s. 244. Such an order amounts to a "deed" as defined in s. 3, and an appeal therefore lies under s. 540. Under these circumstances, no separate suit would lie. The "party" referred to in s. 283 can only refer to a third party who may have preferred a claim or objection of the nature indicated in ss. 278—282, which do not refer to any questions raised between the parties to the suit. Further, the word "conclusive" in s. 283 does not mean that no appeal will lie against the order. In s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, which was the corresponding section, the words used were "shall not be open to appeal," and that was held not to include a review—Cochrane v. Heera Lal Seal (4). Upon this point I rely on the decision in Manjunath Badrabhat v. Venkatesh Govinda Shanbhog (5) and Bagubai v. Kazi Sayad Nizumuddin (6). Upon the question as to whether an appeal lies, Mulmantri v. Ashjak Ahmad (7) is an authority in my favour. Besides, I contend that under s. 437 the judgment-debtor as trustee did represent the beneficiaries, and in addition the Court has always power under s. 26 to add any parties it thinks proper.

Mr. Woodroffe also referred to the following cases in support [441] of his argument: Nimaye Churn Puteetundee v. Jogendro Nath Banerjee (8); Ameeroonnissa Khatoon v. Meer Mahomed Mozuffar Hossein Chowdhry (9); Kuriyali v. Mayan (10); Rahiman Khan Samoiji Sahib v. Patcha Miyah (11); Arundadhi Ammyar v. Natesha Ayyar (12); Nimba Harishet v. Sitaram Paraji (2); Amrutalal Kalidas v. Shaik Hussein Mahomed Ebrahim (13) and Hamid Bakhut Mozumdar v. Baktear Chand Mahto (14); and contended that, even if no appeal lay, the Court had power to interfere under s. 622.

Mr. Evans in reply.—In Mulmantri v. Ashjak Ahmad (7) the judgment-debtors objected that the property attached was their own private property, so that case is clearly distinguishable from the present; and the remarks of the Chief Justice must be read as limited to the facts of the case before him. There was no question raised there as to what would have been the position of a trustee. In Nath Mal Dass v. Tajammul Hussain (1) the distinction was expressly drawn.

Mr. Evans was then stopped by the Court.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

These are appeals from an order of the First Subordinate Judge of Dacca under s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure, releasing from attachment certain property of the judgment-debtor on the ground that the property in question was wakf property, and that the judgment-debtor was merely in possession of it as a trustee.

A preliminary objection has been raised that no appeal lies from an order under s. 280 of the Code, and that the decree-holders' proper course, if dissatisfied with that order, was to institute a regular suit in accordance with the provisions of s. 283.

On the other hand it is contended for the decree-holder that this was an order between the parties to the suit relating to the [442] execution of the decree, and was therefore an order under s. 244 of the Code; that under the definition of "decree" in s. 3 of the Code the order in question was a "decree" from which an appeal lies under s. 540; and that under s. 244 no separate suit will lie.

For the respondent Mr. Evans argues that, this being a claim or objection set up by the judgment-debtor on behalf of third parties—that is to say, the beneficiaries under the wakfnamah—the order was an order properly made under s. 280 of the Code, and that by s. 283 that order is conclusive between the parties subject to the result of any suit that may be brought under the provisions of that section.

On the other hand, Mr. Woodroffe, for the decree-holder, appellant, contends that the "party" spoken of in s. 283 means a third party who may have preferred a claim or objection; that the provisions of ss. 278 to 283 do not refer to questions raised between the parties to the suit, which are questions to be decided under s. 244 of the Code; and that such decisions are appealable under s. 3. And further that, even assuming that s. 283 will apply to an order made against the judgment-debtor the word "conclusive" does not necessarily mean that no appeal will lie against such order.

It appears that this question has been before the Courts on several previous occasions, and we think that the various cases which have been cited before us indicate very clearly the proper principle upon which it should be decided. That principle appears to be this, that where the judgment-debtor claims the property which is the subject of the attachment, either on his own account as his own property, under whatever right, or as the representative of third parties in which representative capacity he has been sued, the question is properly one between the parties to the suit under s. 244. But where the judgment-debtor raises the claim or objection on behalf of third parties who are not represented before the Court, the order made must be regarded as an order under s. 280, and the only mode in which that order can be contested is in a regular suit as provided by s. 283.

We are of opinion that this view of the law is not inconsistent with the sections of the Code (278-283) which treat of [443] this matter. When a claim or objection is preferred to property which has been attached, the investigation which is to be made under those sections is an enquiry as to whether the property is liable to attachment. By s. 279 the claimant or objector is required to show that at the date of attachment he had some interest in, or was possessed of, the property. Then ss. 280 and 281 proceed to lay down the principles upon which the Court is to decide whether or not property is liable to attachment. Section 280 says that if upon such investigation the Court finds that the property (1) was not when attached (a) in the possession of the judgment-debtor, (b) or of some person in trust for him, (c) or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him; or that (2) being in the possession of the judgment-debtor it was in his possession (i) not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of and in trust for some other person; or (ii) partly on his own account, and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall pass an order releasing the property wholly, or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment.

If, on the other hand, the Court is satisfied that the property was at the date of the attachment (a) in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property, and not on account of any other person; or (b) in the possession of some other person in trust for the judgment-debtor; or (c) in the occupation of a tenant or other person paying rent to the judgment-debtor, s. 281 says that the Court shall disallow the claim.

Section 282 deals with the case of a claimant or objector who has a mortgage or other lien upon the property. And then s. 283 gives the "party" against whom an order may be made under the three previous sections a right of suit to establish his claim, but subject to such suit, declares that the order made under those sections shall be conclusive.

It is clear that the sections are wide enough to include, and in fact do contemplate, objections raised by the judgment-debtor as well as by third parties who may claim to be possessed of, or to have an interest in, the property. But we think that any objection raised by the judgment-debtor, in order to come within the purview of these sections, must be an objection in the interests of third parties—that is to say, an objection that he is merely holding possession of the property in trust for third parties who are not before the Court, and whose rights cannot therefore be properly and finally adjudicated upon in the execution proceedings. If the objection is raised by the judgment-debtor in his own behalf or in a representative capacity in which he has been sued, it is a question between the parties to the suit which may properly, and which the law says shall, be decided in the execution proceedings, and not by a separate suit. The object of this provision of the law is apparently to prevent needless litigation; and the test, as to whether the order made upon the objection falls within section 244 or not appears to depend on whether or not all the necessary parties are before the Court. If they are before the Court, there is no reason why the Court should not finally adjudicate upon the matter in issue. If they are not before the Court, the Court is to make a summary order for the purpose of the execution proceedings, leaving the parties free to contest the matter further, if necessary, in a regular suit to which all persons interested could be made parties.

We think that on examination all or nearly all of the decided cases will be found to be in accordance with this principle. The decision of the Privy Council in Chowdry Wahed Ali v. Mussamut Jamaee (1) established the proposition that where a decree was properly passed against a person in a representative capacity, that person was a party to the suit with respect to any question that might arise relating to the execution of the decree, and that any such question should be decided in the execution proceedings and not by separate suit. That decision was expressly followed in Ameeroonissa Khatoon v. Meer Mahomed Mozaffur Hossein Chowdhry (1); in Ram Ghulam v. Hazaru Kuar (2); in Nimba Harishet v. Sitaram Paraji (3); in Arundadhi Ammyar v. Natesha Ayyar (4); and in Kurji Ali v. Mayan (5). Similarly, in Rahim Khan Samoaji Sahib v. Patcha Miya (6), [455] it was held that the representatives of one of the defendants were parties to the suit, and any question raised by them relating to the execution of the decree should be heard and determined by the Court executing the decree and not by regular suit. It is true that a somewhat contrary view was taken in the case of Abdul Rahman v. Muhammad Yar (7); and in that of Awadh Kuari v. Raktu Tiwari (8); but those cases do not seem to have been fully argued, and the decisions are distinctly opposed to the proposition laid down by the Privy Council in Wahed Ali’s case.

In the case of Mulmantri v. Ashfaq Ahmad (9) the objection was preferred by the judgment-debtors who claimed the property in their own right, and not as the representatives of the obligor under the bond in which capacity they were sued. It was held, in accordance with the principle laid down in Wahed Ali’s case, that the question was one under s. 244 of the Code and that an appeal would lie.

On the other hand, it has been held in several cases in which the judgment-debtor claimed to hold the property in trust, or on behalf of third parties who were not before the Court, that the order made was final, and could only be contested in a regular suit. Some of these cases were almost on all fours with the present. In Nimaye Churn Puttetundee v. Jogendra Nath Banerjee (10), in Shankar Dial v. Amir Haidar (11), and in Nath Mal Das v. Tajamul Hussain (12), the objection was that the judgment-debtor was holding the property on account of an endowment. In Bahori Lal v. Gauri Sahai (13) the objection seems to have been made by a person who was no party to the suit; and it was held that the mere fact that her legal representative was also the representative of the judgment-debtor was not sufficient to bring the case within s. 244.

In the present case, the judgment-debtor claims to hold the property which is sought to be attached as a trustee for third parties, and, following the decisions already referred to, we are [446] of opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge that he was so holding the property was a decision under s. 280 and not under s. 244. That being so, we think that under s. 263 no appeal lies against that decision.

These appeals are accordingly dismissed with costs.

CIVIL RULE.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

KRISHNA MOHINI DOSSEE (Petitioner) v. KEDARNATH CHUCKERPUTTY AND ANOTHER (Opposite Parties).

[8th February, 1888.]

The discretion given to a Court under s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to allowing execution of decrees by assignees must be exercised reasonably. The mere fact of the existence of a cross claim against the assignor of a decree by his judgment-debtor is no reason for refusing issue of execution on the application of the assignee.

Section 622 of the Code is one of very limited operation; and where a lower Court has jurisdiction to decide a question of law or fact, the High Court has no power to interfere on revision with the decision on those questions.

On the 30th June 1883 one Amsal Barkhat obtained a money decree against Kedarnath Chuckertutty and Troylokunath Chuckerbutty in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore. The decree-holder on several occasions took out execution of this decree, and there remaining after such issue of execution a sum of Rs. 4,879 still due and owing under the said decree, the decree-holder assigned the unrealized portion thereof to one Krishna Mohini Dossee for valuable consideration by a registered conveyance dated the 29th June 1886.

[447] On the 23rd March 1887 the judgment-debtors obtained a cross-decree against Amsal Barkhat for possession of certain immovable property, and for mesne profits, the decree directing a future enquiry as to the amount of mesne profits actually due to the judgment-debtors. On the 30th March 1887 Kriso Mohini Dossee, at a time when the amount due as mesne profits was as yet unascertained, applied to the Court under s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure for execution of the decree assigned to her. The Subordinate Judge refused the application, leaving the application to establish her right, if any, by regular suit, holding that under s. 232 of the Code it was discretionary in the Court to allow an assignee to take out execution, and that the fact that the judgment-debtors were the holders of a cross-decree against the original decree-holder was a sufficient reason justifying him, when exercising such discretion, in refusing the application.

On the 8th June 1887 the assignee obtained a rule calling upon the original judgment-debtors to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside, and why execution should not be proceeded with.

At the hearing of this rule, Mr. O. C. Mullick and Baboo Navadip Chunder Roy appeared to show cause, and Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Troylokyanath Mitter, and Baboo Saroda Churn Mitra in support of the rule.

* Motion on Miscellaneous Case No. 113 of 1887 against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 29th June 1887.

(1) 4 C. 6.
Mr. O. C. Mullick, after submitting that the Judge had exercised his discretion rightly in refusing to allow execution, contended that the order made by the Judge was not capable of revision under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as in deciding the case he had exercised a jurisdiction vested in him by law; and submitted that the case fell within the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1) and within the cases of Tej Ram v. Harsukh (2); Magni Ram v. Jiwa Lal (3); Luckhykant Bose, In the matter of (4); and Rabbaba Khanum v. Noorjehan Begum (5).

Mr. Woodroffe contended that the High Court of Calcutta in Sew Bux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen (6) had decided that the [448] Privy Council had included in s. 622 questions relating to the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court, and that in this case the Subordinate Judge had decided wrongly in refusing, in the exercise of his discretion, to allow the assignee to execute this decree; and cited Jugobundhu Pattuck v. Jada Ghose (7).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—This rule comes before this Court for the purpose of our revising an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, refusing to allow the assignee of a decree to execute the decree in her own name. The facts of the case appear to be that the decree was obtained some time ago, and was partially executed; but a considerable amount of the decree still remained to be realized when the decree-holder assigned the decree for valuable consideration to the person who has now petitioned the Subordinate Judge for execution. Upon the hearing of that application, it appeared that the judgment-debtor had obtained against the decree-holder who had assigned to the petitioner a decree for the recovery of certain immovable property, and had also obtained an order that an enquiry should be made with the view of ascertaining what, if any, mesne profits were due from the decree-holder to the judgment-debtor, and upon that state of things the Subordinate Judge, acting under s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, refused, as we have said before, to allow the assignee to execute the decree, because he considered that it would be unfair and inequitable that he should do so by reason of the cross-claims existing between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor.

We think that he was wrong in the conclusion at which he arrived, and we think that under the circumstances the assignee ought to have been allowed to execute the decree in her own name.

The discretion given to Judges as to allowing execution of decrees by assignees is a discretion which must be exercised reasonably, and it is perfectly clear that, unless there is a reasonable cause for refusing the assignee to issue out execution in his own name, the Judge ought not to exercise his discretion in [449] that way and refuse to allow execution to proceed in the assignee's name; and we do not think that the mere existence of an order that an enquiry shall take place to ascertain whether anything is or is not due from the decree-holder to the judgment-debtor is any reason whatever for such refusal. We do not say any reasonable excuse, but we do not think it is any reason that ought to induce the Subordinate Judge to refuse to allow the decree to be executed in the name of the assignee; and consequently, we are of opinion that, both as a matter of discretion and as a matter of law, the Judge was wrong in the view that he took; and that he ought to have allowed execution to go in the name of the assignee.

But then comes a very different and more difficult question, and that is the question whether this order can be revised by the Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This is a section which has been a good deal enquired into.

In our opinion, it is a section of very limited operation. What the section says is that the High Court may revise a decision of the Court by which the case was decided if the Court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

Now, it seems to us, that the meaning of this section is that, whenever a Court has jurisdiction to decide a question whether it is a question of law or a question of fact, its decision on that question is not revisable by this Court.

Unless it is a matter in which there is an appeal, its decision on that matter is final, and that decision cannot be reviewed by this Court because it is wrong either on the question of law or on the question of fact. It is perfectly clear that in this case the question whether the Subordinate Judge was wrong in not allowing execution to issue in the name of the assignee was a question which he had jurisdiction to decide. It was a matter either of absolute discretion, in which case of course he might act as he thought fit, or it was a matter of discretion controlled by legal principles, in which case it comes to be a question of law, and the Subordinate Judge has decided that question of law, and has decided it in favour of the judgment-debtor. That being so, his decision cannot, in our opinion, be revised by the Court under s. 622 of the Code, notwithstanding the fact that, in our opinion, the conclusion he came to on the question of law is erroneous.

In this particular case we do not see that any injustice is likely to arise, because, so far as we can ascertain, there is no reason why this application by the assignee should not be repeated, and if the application is repeated, and is accompanied, as no doubt it will be, with a note or report of the views expressed by this Court, in all probability justice will be done in this matter and no hardship will be done in this case.

In our opinion the view which we have expressed of the meaning of s. 622 of the Code is in accordance with the view which has been taken of it by the Privy Council in the case of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1).

In the result the rule will be discharged with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy.

CHUNDER KISHORE DEY alias MUKHORI DEY (Defendant No. 1)
v. RAJ KISHORE MOZUMDAR and others (Plaintiffs).*
[2nd February, 1888.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 184, and sch. III, part I, art. 3—Occupancy Raiyat—Suit—Limitation.

The suit mentioned in s. 184 and sch. III, part I, art. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, means a suit by an occupancy raiyat as such, that is, an occupancy raiyat claiming a right of occupancy as against his landlord.

RAJ KISHORE MOZUMDAR, Krishna Kishore Mozumdar, and Bhobani Kishore Mozumdar, three brothers, brought this suit against Chunder Kishore Dey and three others in the Court of the Second Munsif of Hosenpore to recover possession of eight plots of land as tenants having a right of occupancy under certain proprietors, alleging that they had been dispossessed by the [461] defendants in Magh. 1289 (January 1883), and Bysack 1290 (April 1883).

The defendant Chunder Kishore Dey, who alone appeared, stated that plot No. 1 was potti land and plots Nos. 2 to 4 were khemar lands of the proprietors; that the former had been let to him and the other defendants in Kartick 1289 (October 1882), and that the latter were in the possession of the proprietors themselves. As to plots Nos. 5 to 8, he stated that they were his jote lands and had been in his possession for a very long time.

The plea of limitation was raised at the trial.

The Munsif found that, though the proprietors were not parties to the suit, they had virtually dispossessed the plaintiffs; and held that, as the suit had not been brought within two years from the date of dispossesssion, it was barred by limitation under sch. III, part I, art. 3 of Act VIII of 1885. He therefore dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that sch. III, part I, art. 3, Act VIII of 1885, did not govern the case, and that it was not barred by limitation. He also found that the plaintiffs had been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendants, and therefore decreed the appeal.

The defendant Chunder Kishore Dey appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the appellant.

Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbati, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O'Kinealy; JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We think that the view of the law taken by the lower Court is correct. Section 184 of the Bengal Tenancy Act says that the suits, appeals and applications specified in sch. III annexed to the Act shall be instituted and made within the times prescribed in that schedule; and then sch. III, art. 3, mentions suits "to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as an occupancy raiyat," and gives two years as the time of limitation. These words occurring in a Tenancy Act, [452] the object of which is stated to be to amend and consolidate certain enactments relating to the law of Landlord and Tenant, naturally mean a suit by an occupancy raiyat as such, that is, an occupancy raiyat claiming a right of occupancy as against his landlord.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1257 of 1887 against the decree of Baboo Hemango Chunder Bose Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 23rd of March 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Rojoni Kanth-Mukerjee, Munsif of Hosenpore, dated the 17th of November 1886.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy.

QUEEN-EMPERESS v. RAMDHANI PASSI.* [28th February, 1888.]

The Cantonments Act (III of 1880), s. 14—Bengal Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878), ss. 41, 11, 29, 32—Spirituous liquor—Tari—Cantonment Magistrate Powers of, to cancel license—Revenue authorities.

"Tari" or "toddy" is "spirituous liquor" within the meaning of s. 14 of Act III of 1880. The words "spirituous liquor," "wine" and "intoxicating drugs" in that section must be taken in their popular and ordinary meaning.

A Cantonment Magistrate in his judicial capacity has no authority to cancel a license. The power to cancel licenses belongs to the Revenue authorities.

This was a reference to the High Court by the Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs under the provisions of s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Ramdhani Passi, who held a license under the Bengal Excise Act of 1878 for the sale of fermented tari or toddy, on the 10th of November 1887 was convicted by the Cantonment Magistrate of Dum-Dum under s. 14 of Act III of 1880 of selling tari to a European soldier. The Magistrate sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50, and directed the cancellation of his license.

The terms of the reference were as follows:—

"The applicant in this case has been convicted of selling toddy to a European soldier under s. 14, Act III of 1880, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. It does not appear [453] from the papers whether the tari sold was fermented or unfermented, but the dealer appears to hold a license for the sale of fermented toddy, and it is reasonable to suppose that he sold the article in which he dealt, viz., fermented toddy.

"Act III of 1880 prohibits the sale of three articles to European soldiers, viz., spirituous liquor, intoxicating drugs and wine. Fermented toddy clearly is neither spirituous liquor nor an intoxicating drug. The question is whether it is "wine." Wine is an intoxicating liquor obtained by fermentation, and toddy answers this description; the applicant's pleader says that wine is an intoxicating liquor fermented from the juice of grapes; but if it be necessary to prove that the wine sold to a soldier was the fermented juice of the grape, it would scarcely ever, I suppose, be possible to obtain a conviction under the Act. Fermented toddy appears to be wine, as that liquor is strictly defined, and if so, the conviction would appear to be right. It is, however, certainly a matter of doubt, and I think I ought, as requested by the applicant, to lay the matter before the High Court for orders."

Baboo Obhoy Churn Bose, for the petitioner.—The conviction must be set aside. Section 14 of Act III of 1880 prohibits the sale of spirituous liquors, wines and intoxicating drugs to European soldiers, but not tari. The intention of the Legislature is not to forbid the sale of all excisable articles, but only two; namely, spirituous liquors and intoxicating drugs; because if such was its intention the words "fermented liquor," which includes tari, would have been used. Spirituous liquors, fermented liquors, and intoxicating drugs are excisable articles (s. 4 of Bengal Act VII of 1878). Tari is neither a spirituous liquor nor an intoxicating drug. It is not wine. Wine, though not defined either in the Bengal Excise Act, 1878, or in the Cantonments Act, 1880, is, no doubt, a fermented liquor, and, therefore, an excisable article; but it does not include tari. Therefore no offence under s. 14 of Act III of 1880 has been committed.

Even if an offence has been committed, the Magistrate has no power to cancel the license. The Collector is the proper person to grant licenses and to cancel them (ss. 11 and 29, Bengal Act VII of 1878).

Mr. Kilby, for the Crown.—Spirituous liquor is any liquor with [454] alcohol in it, and it is reasonable to say that tari is spirituous liquor within the meaning of s. 14 of Act III of 1880. According to the Bengal Excise Act, 1878, tari is fermented liquor, but that Act has not been incorporated in the Cantonments Act, 1880, which stands by itself. The words "spirituous liquor" must, therefore, be taken in their ordinary meaning and not in any technical sense.

As regards the cancellation of the license, the Magistrate as Magistrate has no power to cancel the license; but he is ex-officio a Superintendent of Excise, and as such has all the powers of a Collector of Excise (s. 32 of Bengal Act VII of 1878), and therefore he could cancel the license.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Two points have been raised before us in this reference. The conviction is a conviction under s. 14, Act III of 1880, for selling toddy, which it has been found was fermented toddy, to a European soldier within prohibited limits. The first point raised is this: it is said that fermented toddy does not come within the words of s. 14, which forbids the sale of any spirituous liquor wine or intoxicating drug to European soldiers. In many different Acts in this country words of a somewhat similar import to these have been used in a defined and limited sense, such as the words "spirituous liquors," "fermented liquors," "intoxicating liquors." In the Excise Act, for instance, they have been so used. But this is an Act which stands by itself; the Excise Act has nothing to do with it; and we have to read these words as any ordinary person acquainted with the English language and unacquainted with any technical use of such terms would understand them. I do not think there can be the least doubt that the words "spirituous liquor" in the popular sense of the word include an alcoholic liquor of the kind that was sold to the soldier by the petitioner in this case. The first point taken before us therefore fails.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy.

QUEEN-EMpress ON THE PROSECUTION OF PALAKDIHARI MAHTON AND OTHERS v. GAYITRI PROSUNNO GHOSAL.*

Bail—Illegal Practice—Police Officer—Court, Duty of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 344, 526, 526A.

The practice of leaving to the Police the decision as to the sufficiency of bail, when bail has been ordered by the Court, is contrary to law. The duty of deciding as to its sufficiency or otherwise is with the Court itself and not with the Police.

M, the complainant, on the 19th November 1887, made an application to the Deputy Magistrate, under s. 526A of the Criminal Procedure Code, for the postponement of his case against G to enable him to apply to the High Court under s. 526 for a transfer of the case from the file of the Deputy Magistrate to that of another officer. On the same date the Deputy Magistrate refused the application, and proceeded with the case, acquitting G.

[456] Held, having regard to the words "the Court shall exercise, &c." in s. 526A, the order of the Deputy Magistrate of the 19th November refusing to grant the application was illegal.

Conviction upheld.
Circular Orders (Criminal) of the High Court. The terms of the reference were as follows:

"On the 16th November 1887 one Palakdhari Mahtan and others complained to the District Magistrate that the Court Sub-Inspector Gayitri Prosunno Ghosal had attempted to obtain from them an illegal gratification in regard to bail tendered by them on behalf of Bidya Mahtan and others, then under trial for certain offences before the Deputy Magistrate of Chupra. The complaint was made over on the same date by the District Magistrate to Mr. Martin, Deputy Magistrate, for enquiry; and subsequently on the 18th idem the District Magistrate transferred it to the file of Baboo Ram Anugraha Narain Singh, Deputy Magistrate, for reasons recorded in the order sheet.

"On the 19th November the complainant Palakdhari petitioned the Deputy Magistrate under s. 526-A of the Criminal Procedure Code to adjourn the hearing of his case against the Court Sub-Inspector, to enable him to make an application to the High Court under s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code to transfer the case to the file of another Magistrate; and on the same date the Deputy Magistrate refused this application for reasons recorded thereon, and proceeded with the trial; and on the 21st November 1887 he acquitted the accused Gayitri Prosunno Ghosal.

"Subsequently Gayitri Prosunno Ghosal applied to the Deputy Magistrate under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for sanction to prosecute Palakdhari and one Malang Meah (a witness for Palakdhari) under ss. 211 and 193 of the Penal Code, and sanction was accordingly granted and a rule was also issued on certain other persons to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for abetment under ss. 211 and 109 of the Penal Code.

"It is now urged before me among other points that the Deputy Magistrate acted illegally in refusing to allow the complainant [457] a reasonable time to apply to the High Court under s. 526-A of the Criminal Procedure Code. I think this contention is valid. The language of s. 526-A is imperative; and I think, therefore, the Deputy Magistrate was bound to grant the complainant such a postponement as would afford him a reasonable time to make the application under s. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and this, too, without determining whether the application to him was or was not a bona fide one. As his order of the 19th November refusing the application is, in my opinion, illegal, all his subsequent proceedings in continuing to try the case, and his order of sanction under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which is based on his judgment in that case, are null and void; and I recommend that these proceedings be set aside, and that the Deputy Magistrate be directed to re-try the case from the point where his action was illegal, viz., his refusal to grant the complainant time under s. 526-A of the Criminal Procedure Code."

Baboo Ambica Churn Bose and Baboo Ashootosh Dey, for Palakdhari Mahtan.

Baboo Rajendra Nath Bose, for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

We agree with the Sessions Judge in thinking that in the proceedings in this case there has been such irregularity, and indeed illegality, that they must be set aside from a certain point. What appears is this: Two persons were ordered by the Deputy Magistrate to be discharged on bail, and enquiries took place before the Police Sub-Inspector with regard to the bail. There in the first instance, it is necessary to point out what seems to be an impropriety of practice. According to the statement of the Sub-Inspector, it would seem that, under the practice in vogue in that district, the decision as to the sufficiency of bail, when bail has been ordered by the Court, is left to the Police Sub-Inspector. That is clearly contrary to what is intended by the law. If the Court admits a man to bail, it is of course at liberty to call for a report from the Police as to the sufficiency of the bail, but the duty of deciding as to its sufficiency or otherwise is with the Court itself, and not with the Police. If [458] that irregularity had not been allowed to prevail, it seems very likely that the incidents which followed would never have happened. If such duties are irregularly entrusted to the Police, two dangers are likely to arise: first, a Police Officer may sometimes be unscrupulous enough to take advantage of the power entrusted to him, as is alleged in the present case, for the purpose of extortion. On the other hand, the same irregular practice may lead to another evil, only second to the first, namely, the bringing of false charges against Police Officers. If the Police were limited to their proper functions, both these dangers might be diminished, if not wholly avoided. The next thing that happened was that certain persons were tendered as bail, and were rejected by the Police Officer who enquired into the matter. On the 16th of November a complaint was made by two people to the District Magistrate to the effect that the Police Officer in question had endeavoured to extort from them a sum of Rs. 50 before he would accept certain persons as bail.............The order that was made by the District Magistrate is this; he referred it to Mr. Martin, a Deputy Magistrate, for enquiry..............That order was made on the 16th November, on the same day that the complaint was made. Then on the 18th of November there is another order by the District Magistrate, also written on the back of the complaint, viz., "Transferred to the file of Baboo R. A. N. Singh—vide order sheet.".............The case accordingly having been transferred to the file of the Second Deputy Magistrate, it was called on the 19th of November. On the 19th of November the complainants presented a petition asking for an adjournment sufficient to enable them to apply to this Court for a transfer of the case from that Magistrate to another. That petition was refused in these terms: "It was urged by the opposite party that the present charge has been got up by conspirators, and the complainant is merely a tool in the hands of others; that the consideration of this petition be deferred until after the cross-examination of the complainant. It is urged that the aiders of the complainant by obtaining postponement wish to have time to concoct evidence against the accused. Ordered: that the consideration of this petition be deferred until after examination of the complainant."

That was the order made on the 19th, and the complainant [459] was required there and then to go on with his case, and certain witnesses were examined.............Then another order was made, apparently on the same day, as follows: "Consideration resumed after examination of complainant. Without expressing any opinion on the merits of the case at this stage of the proceedings, I find facts have been elicited from the complainant's examination which would tend to show that he is a mere tool in the hands of others, and any postponement will be detrimental to the accused. Ordered: that the petition be refused." Accordingly, the complainant's witnesses having been examined on the 19th of November, the matter was adjourned to the 21st November. On the 21st of November the complainant put in a petition asking for some time to produce further evidence, and the order upon that application was this: "At the instance of the pleader for the defence the petitioner was asked what were the contents of this petition. The petitioner said in this petition he prays for five or six days' postponement to bring more witnesses, and that this petition also contains a statement that he petitioned the Magistrate-Collector for the examination of his witnesses, and that he wired the High Court for the trial of this case by that Hon'ble Court;' and it was ordered "that the Court does not think it necessary to go into the irrelevant matters alleged to have occurred four months before, which have no bearing on the present case. The prayer of the applicant for six days' postponement to examine fresh witnesses for prosecution is untenable, as he closed his case on 19th instant; and said that he had no other witnesses to examine. Application refused." On the same day, the 21st, two witnesses for the defence were examined, and then the accused person was acquitted. On the same day an order was made directing proceedings to be taken against the complainants for having made a false complaint. We agree with the Sessions Judge that on the grounds pointed out by him these proceedings are wholly illegal. Under s. 526-A, added by Act III of 1884 to the Criminal Procedure Code, we think the Sessions Judge is right in saying that the Public Prosecutor, or the complainant or the accused, has the right to notify to the Court before which a case [460] or appeal is pending, before the commencement of the hearing of the case, that he intends to make an application to this Court to transfer the case from one officer to another, and if he does so the words of the section are: "The Court shall exercise the powers of postponement or adjournment given by s. 344 in such a manner as will afford a reasonable time for the application being made and an order being obtained thereon, before the accused is called on for his defence, or, in the case of an appeal, before the hearing of the appeal." These words are obligatory; and the refusal to grant the application was illegal, and the whole of the proceedings that followed cannot be supported. The result is that, after hearing those who have appeared on behalf of all parties, the Crown, the complainant, and the accused, we have no hesitation in saying that the order recommended by the Sessions Judge should be made, viz., that the proceedings in this case from the 19th of November, when the application for postponement was made and refused, must be set aside. The whole trial must be begun over again from that point; and of course the order directing the prosecution of the complainants for making a false complaint is set aside also.

Order set aside.

Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), s. 42—Obstruction to alleged highway—Criminal Procedure Code, Act X of 1882, ss. 133, 137—Parties—Evidence Act, s. 42.

An owner of land has right to bring a suit under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act against any one of the public who formally claims to use such lands as a public road, and who thereby has endangered the title of the owner. To such a suit it is unnecessary to make the Secretary of State a party.

Such a suit is not barred by an order of a Criminal Court under s. 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Reference to a Full Bench made by Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Norris.

The facts in this case were that the plaintiff, who was a tenant of a piece of land under the defendant No. 3, had obtained permission from him to build a thatched house on this land; and that defendant No. 1, one Chuni Lal, alleging that the land formed part of a public highway, took proceedings, through his servant, defendant No. 2, before a Magistrate under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the plaintiff for obstruction to the alleged highway; that the Magistrate in such proceedings passed an order absolute, under s. 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing the removal of this obstruction; and that the plaintiff thereupon brought a suit against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 practically for the purpose of obtaining a declaration of his right to the land freed from any right of way. The defence to this suit and the decisions of the lower Courts are set out in the order of reference, which was as follows:—

"The plaint in this case alleged that the plaintiff had taken a lease of a small piece of land from the third party defendants, and with their consent had built thereon a thatched house which he used and occupied as a shop; that the first party defendant, through his servant, the second party defendant, had obtained an order from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the removal of the house within a month, on the ground that it was as unlawful obstruction to a public way.

"The relief sought was a declaration that the defendants had no right to have the house removed, and 'on declaration of the right, the plaintiff's possession over the land under claim may be confirmed, and the disputed house may be allowed to stand in its state.'

"Defendant No. 1 pleaded that plaintiff had no right to come into the Civil Court; that the suit ought not to be heard unless the public officials were made parties; that the public had a [462] right to the disputed land; and that the decision of the Criminal Court was final and conclusive.

* Full Bench on Special Appeal No. 2498 of 1886, against the decree of Babu Grish Chunder Chatterjee, Second Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated 9th August 1886, affirming the decree of Baboo Gokul Chand, Munsiff of Sitamarhi, dated 27th February 1886.

(1) 14 C. 60.
The Munsiff framed the following issues:

First.—Whether it is necessary to make the criminal authorities party or not?

Second.—Whether the plaintiff's claim is cognizable by the Civil Court or not?

Third.—Whether the plaintiff has continued in possession of the property in suit by lawful authority or not?

Fourth.—Whether the plaintiff is entitled to what he claims?

The Munsiff on the authority of Nilkantha Nalkapa v. The Magistrate of Solapur Taluqa (1) decided the first issue in favour of the plaintiff; and on the authority of Raj Koomar Singh v. Shahebzaada Roy (2), Balaram Chatrualal v. Magistrate of Taluqa Igatpuri (3), and Makan Lal Saha v. Makan Chora Saha (4) decided the second issue in favour of the plaintiff. The third issue he also decided in favour of the plaintiff, finding that the disputed land was not a public road; and gave him a decree in terms of the prayer of the plaint.

The defendant first party appealed and contended that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court, and that the Munsiff’s decision upon the merits was erroneous.

The Subordinate Judge found as a fact that the land in suit was the private property of the plaintiff as tenant of the malik.

Upon the question of jurisdiction the Subordinate Judge said: 'The Civil Court has no jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Magistrate, but irrespective of that order it can try the question whether the land which formed the subject of such order is private property and not a thoroughfare or public place—Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lall Roy (5). A bona fide question as to whether there ever was a public road in the place in question is raised in this case, and it is for the Civil Courts to decide that question—Askar Mea v. Sabdara (6). The decree of the Munsiff is substantially correct.'

On second appeal it was argued that the suit would not lie, and reliance was placed upon the cases of Rooke v. Pearce Lall Coal Co. (7) and Khodabuksh Mundl v. Monglai Mundl (8).

The question is one of considerable importance, and in view of the conflicting decisions of this Court, we refer the question to a Full Bench.

The questions which we refer to a Full Bench are:

First.—Will the plaintiff’s suit as at present framed lie?

Second.—If plaintiff’s suit as at present framed will lie, to what relief is he entitled?

Third.—Will the plaintiff’s suit lie if the Secretary of State for India be made a party defendant?

Fourth.—If the plaintiff’s suit will lie if the Secretary of State be made a party defendant, to what relief is the plaintiff entitled?'

At the hearing Baboo Durga Das Dutt appeared for the appellants.

The suit does not lie; the case of Baroda Pershad Moostafee v. Gora Chand Moostafee (9) gave a reason for such suit not lying. [Ghose, J. —Section 132 of the Criminal Procedure no doubt lays down that no suit will lie, but the section which deals with the order being made absolute contains no such restriction.] Under the old law no such suit would lie—Meechoo Chunder Sarcar v. Ravenshaw (1). [Wilson, J.—The last paragraph of that judgment was unnecessary for the purposes of that case.] Rooke v. Pearce Lall Coal Co. OPINION.

[464] The opinion of the Court (Wilson, Tottenham, Norries, Pigot and Ghose, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—We must take the facts before us to be that the plaintiff is the owner of a piece of land, that the substantial defendant alleges that that piece of land forms part of a public highway, that he took proceedings before the Magistrate under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the plaintiff for obstruction to the alleged highway, and that an order absolute was made by the Magistrate under s. 137 directing the removal of the obstruction. The present suit has been brought practically for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of the land free from any right of highway. The questions referred to us are these:

It seems convenient to examine this matter under two separate heads, and to consider first whether, upon general principles, the present suit, either in its existing form or with any modifications, can lie, and what relief, if any, can be given in it; and, secondly, to consider whether, if so, the suit is barred by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, or by the proceedings which have been taken under it.

With regard to the first of these questions, it may be useful to premise that by the common law of England there are three distinct classes of rights of way and other similar rights. First, there are private rights in the strict sense of the term vested in particular individuals or the owners of particular tenements, and such rights commonly have their origin in grant or prescription. Secondly, there are rights belonging to certain classes of persons, certain portions of the public, such as the freemen of a city, the tenants of a manor, or the inhabitants of a parish or village. Such rights commonly have their origin in custom. Thirdly, there are public rights in the full sense of the term which exist for the benefit of all the Queen’s subjects; and the source of these is ordinarily dedication.

It is unnecessary to enquire whether the mode of acquiring each of these classes of rights is necessarily the same in all cases in England and in India. But it is, I think, important to remember that these three classes of rights exist in the one [465] country as well as in the other. The first class, strictly private rights, we are all familiar with. The third class, public rights, are of frequent occurrence. The second class, of rights belonging to a portion of the public, are also to be found in India. They are expressly recognised by the Legislature in s. 42, Illustration A, and s. 54, Illustration P, of the Specific Relief Act. It is especially important that this class of rights should be clearly understood and borne in mind in a country like India, where interests of the most essential importance depend so largely upon custom. And I am not sure that the existence of this class of rights has not sometimes been overlooked. I think there is reason to suspect that, in some cases, ways and other claims of a like nature have been treated as public rights, when perhaps they might have been both more correctly and more conveniently regarded as village ways and village rights; more correctly, because I think there is reason to suppose that such village roads as distinguished from public roads are of very common occurrence: more conveniently, because, as I shall show later, there may be more easy civil remedies for treating questions of village roads than questions relating to public roads.

With regard to private roads strictly so called, the provisions of the law for asserting rights of way on the one hand, or resisting them on the other, in the Civil Courts are too well known to require detailed consideration here. With regard to rights vested in classes, it is unnecessary to enquire for the present purpose how the same civil remedies are available on the one side and on the other, as in the case of strictly private ways. But it is, I think, important to observe that there are some additional remedies certainly open. First, where such a right is claimed, it would seem that a member of the class entitled might, by taking the proper steps under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, obtain permission to sue, on behalf of himself and the other members of the class, any one who disturbed or sought to disturb the right of way. Upon the other hand, in s. 42, Illustration A of the Specific Relief Act, it seems to be distinctly pointed out that where such a right is claimed, a suit will lie by the owner of the soil for declaration negating the right, and I presume under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code [466] a suit might be so brought, with the permission of the Court, against one or more members of the class as representing the rest. Section 54, Illustration P of the Specific Relief Act, further shows that if the owner of the soil obtained a declaratory decree against several villagers negating a right of way, this would be good ground for restraining by injunction suits subsequently brought by the others. Again, a remedy is probably given for preventing the infringement of such a right of way under s. 133 and the following sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, no less than in the case of a public way in the full sense of the term.

When we turn to the case of public ways, in the full sense of the term (and the present case falls under that heading), it is not quite so easy to say what remedies are open in the interest of the public on the one side and on the other side of the owner of the land who denies the public right. Certain suggested classes of suits directly connected with proceedings such as those which in this case have taken place before the Magistrate may be very briefly dismissed, but I shall consider them one by one. In the first place, it is plain both on principle and authority that no suit will lie to set aside the Magistrate’s order. It is sufficient on this point to refer to the cases of Ujalamani Dasi v. Chandra Kumar Neogi (1) Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Moti Lall Roy (2) and Rooke v. Pearce Lall Coal Co. (3). Nor can the plaintiff sue the Magistrate personally, for the Magistrate has only acted in the discharge of his legal duty in a judicial character. For this may be cited Ujalamayi's case cited above and Meechoo Chunder Sircar v. Ravenshaw (1). Nor can the person who institutes proceedings be sued for damages, for he has only set the law in motion. For this, may be cited Chinta Monoe Bapoolee v. Digamber Mitter (2).

But putting all these forms of suit aside as out of the question, it remains to consider what remedies there are on one side and on the other for trying the question of the existence of a public right of way. In the Bombay Presidency no difficulty arises [467] because by s. 57 of the Bombay Act V of 1879 the soil of public roads is vested in the Secretary of State. Accordingly every question of highway becomes of necessity a question of conflicting titles to the soil, and can be treated as such. The case is probably much the same in Calcutta by reason of s. 189 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, 1876, which vests the soil of public streets in the Commissioners, and perhaps also in Mufussil Municipalities, under s. 30 of Bengal Act III of 1884. But there is no such law applicable to the Province of Bengal generally.

If any one obstructs a public highway he may be liable to a criminal charge of nuisance under s. 283 of the Penal Code, or of mischief under s. 451, if the circumstances be such as to sustain either of these charges. Any one who sustains special injury by reason of an obstruction to a highway may bring a suit, claiming damages, and any other appropriate relief. And further, under s. 133 and the following sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, summary proceedings may be taken by a Magistrate to prevent or remove any such obstruction injurious to the public.

On the other hand, if a man owns land and anybody trespasses upon it, claiming a right to use it as a public highway, there can be no doubt that a suit for damages will lie. Under special circumstances, and if the injury likely to result were of a grave nature, I presume an injunction might be granted to restrain the threatened invasion of a man's property under a claim of public highway. Neither of these remedies is available under the circumstances of the present case. But I can see no reason, on principle, why a suit for a declaration of right should not lie, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, on the part of an owner of land, against any one who has formally claimed to use the land as a public road, and thereby endangered the title of the owner. Such a suit could not have been maintained before the Specific Relief Act, because no consequential relief could have been claimed, and on this ground the decision proceeded in Madhub Chunder Gooho v. Kumula Kant Chuckerbutty (3). But the law upon this point has been altered by that Act. It is true that the declaration [468] given would be absolutely binding only on the defendant to the suit, but it may be that no one but the defendant raises any claim adverse to the plaintiff, and that a decision binding upon the defendant will be sufficient for the plaintiff's protection, and if so, I do not see why he should not have such a declaration. Moreover, though such a declaration would not be conclusive against a stranger, it would be admissible against a stranger under s. 42 of the Evidence Act; and if the suit were fairly and properly conducted, the decision would, I think, be practically conclusive in any subsequent proceeding. It should be remembered, too, that exactly the same inconvenience or defect would occur, either in this country or in England, if the suit were one complaining of an actual trespass, in which the defendant justified his act under a claim to use the place in question as a public road, and if his claim were rejected. If such a suit as this does not lie, there seems to be no provision in the law by which a man can establish his title to enjoy his own land freely, as against one who claims to use it as a highway, and that is a state of things which I think we should not accept as the law, unless we are constrained to do so.

The second branch of the enquiry is whether, assuming such a suit to lie on general principles, it is barred by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code or by the proceedings which have taken place under them. It has been decided by a Full Bench in Raj Koomar Singh v. Shahebzada Roy (1) that the existence of these provisions is not a bar to a suit brought for an obstruction on a highway by a person who has suffered special damage, and I think it clear that it can no more be a bar to a suit of the converse kind brought to negative the existence of a highway.

The question remains whether the proceedings that have taken place before the Magistrate are a bar to this suit; in other words, whether an order absolute by a Magistrate for the removal of an obstruction from a place held by him to be a highway is final and conclusive upon the question of highway or no highway. The decision of a Magistrate in a [469] summary proceeding is not, I think, ordinarily final and conclusive on a question of title, and does not exclude the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to enquire into the matter, unless the intention of the Legislature that it shall have such effect is shown. In the present case, no such intention is expressly declared, and such indications of intention as are to be found seem to me to point in the other direction. It is expressly said that a preliminary order under s. 133 is not to be called in question by a Civil Court, and that no suit shall lie (which means I apprehend no suit for damages) for anything done in good faith under s. 140 or s. 142. But nothing is said as to the order absolute which, if anything does so, affects the title.

The authorities upon this point appear to stand thus: Act XXI of 1841 differed much in its language from the sections we now have to construe, especially in that it gave an appeal from the Magistrate's order. Under that Act there was some conflict of decision as to whether the Magistrate's order precluded a civil suit to try the existence of a highway. In The Government v. Choonee Lall (2) it seems to have been thought that such a suit would not lie, and the same view was taken in Prankishen Surma v. Ramrooder Surma (3), and apparently in Kedarnath Mookerjee v. Parbutty Peishtar (4). On the other hand, in Anumohun Khan v. Roy Shambhoonath Chuckerbuttee (5), it was held that a civil suit lay to establish that a place was not a highway which the Magistrate had held to be one, and this was followed in Sham Doss v. Bhola Doss (6).

Under s. 308 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act XXV) of 1861, there was again some conflict of opinion. In Bhakas Ram Sahoo v. Chummun Ram (7) the question was treated as an open one, but it was said that if a suit lay the Government must be a party, a view also thrown out in the case cited from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, 1858.

In Azeesoolleh Gazeec v. Bunk Beharee Roy (8) and in Ram Shodoy Ghose v. Juttadharee Holear (9) [470] the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was expressly upheld. Some observations of Peacock, C.J., in Boroda Pershad Moostafee v. Gora Chand Moostafee (1) are rather against the jurisdiction and in Meechoo Chunder Sarcar v. Ravenshaw (2) Couch, C. J., expressed a decided opinion that a Magistrate’s decision bars a civil suit.

Under the Code now in force in Khodabuksh Mundul v. Monglap Mundul (3) Princsep and Beverley, J.J., decided that a civil suit is barred by the Magistrate’s order. On the other hand, in this Court, White and Field, J.J., in Motty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lall Roy (4), held that the Magistrate’s decision did not preclude a Civil Court from enquiring into the question of title. And in the Bombay High Court this view has been repeatedly accepted, both under the earlier and under the present Acts. It was taken by Melville and Kemball, J.J., in Lalji Ukheda v. Jowba Douba (5); by Westropp, C.J., and F. Melville, J., in Nilkanthapama Malkupa v. Magistrate of Sholapur (6); and by Melville and West, J.J., in Buliram Chatrulkatal v. Magistrate of Taluqa Igatpuri (7).

I should answer the first question referred to us in the affirmative. I should answer the second by saying that the declaratory decree given is correct. The third and fourth I should answer by saying that the Secretary of State could not properly be made a party. And I should dismiss the appeal without costs.

KALI PERSHAD and others (Plaintiffs) v. ANAND ROY and others (Defendants). [30th November, 5th and 7th December, 1887.]

Ghatwali tenure—Ghatwali tenure in Bhagulpore—Ghatwali’s right of alienation—Sale of ghatwali’s estate in execution of decree against him.

Ghatwali tenures are rendered by their origin and incidents distinct in some particulars from other inheritances, and to them the law of the Mitakshara, to its full extent, is not entirely applicable; yielding, in their case, to a custom, though only to the extent of the custom proved.

On a question whether the sale of a ghatwali tenure in the Kharagpore zamindari, in Bhagulpore, in execution of a decree against the ghatwali, had transferred the inheritance as against the ghatwali’s son; Held, in regard to a proved custom, that the ghatwali was not inalienable, but might be aliened by the ghatwali, or sold in execution of a decree against him, if such alienation was assented to by the zamindar, this power of alienation not being limited to the life-interest of the ghatwali for the time being but forming part of his right and title to the ghatwali.

[R. 34 C. 753=12 C.W.N. 193=5 C.I.J. 583.]

Appeal from a decree (21st April 1884) of the High Court (8) reversing a decree (13th February 1882) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore.

(3) 14 C. 60.  (4) 6 C. 291.
The question on this appeal was whether the sale of a ghatwali tenure in execution of a decree against the ghatwal operated to transfer to the purchaser the whole interest therein, or only the interest of the ghatwal, judgment-debtor, for life, as against his son.

In the suit out of which this appeal arose the plaintiffs claimed a ghatwali mehal, named Kharna in the zemindari of Kharagpore, zillah Bhagulpore, of which Raja Lilamand Singh was zemindar, consisting of twenty-two mouzahs.

The grounds of the claim were the right of Tekait Kali Pershad Singh, the first plaintiff, as the son of Tekait Meghraj Singh, formerly ghatwal of Kharna, to the ancestral estate. This was under the Mitakshara, by which it was alleged that the family was governed, coupled with, and modified by, a custom giving the ghatwali to the eldest son alone. Kali Pershad, as it was claimed by him and others making title through him, on his birth in 1833, acquired an interest jointly with his father, who was then in possession and who died in 1871.

Meghraj in 1858 borrowed money of Alam Roy, the father of the first defendant, who in execution of a decree for the debt caused to be attached and sold in execution, on 13th August 1868, Meghraj’s interest as ghatwal of Kharna. Kali Pershad alleged that he, by inheritance, had obtained a right to the permanently-assessed ghatwali of Kharna, which was an istemrri mokurari tenure, under a custom of impartibility and primogeniture; no more than his father’s life-interest having passed to the purchasers at the sale of 1868.

The defence, so far as is material to this report, was that Meghraj had the full proprietary right in Kharna, sufficient to enable him to sell, or transfer, the whole estate, and not merely a life-interest.

Aequiescence on the part of the son was also set up; and it was alleged that his interest, he being bound by his father’s debt, was sold at the execution sale. Also, that the mehal had been purchased subject to a zur-i-peshgi lease, forming a mortgage for Rs. 4,928, executed by Meghraj, and notified at the sale, which mortgage the defendants had paid off, and had thus gained a lien against the plaintiffs.

The issues now material raised questions as to what was the tenure and the custom of succession; also, whether the ghatwal holding possession had the sole right of transfer, and whether the son had any interest in the ghatwali during his father’s possession of it.

At the hearing before the Subordinate Judge, Hafiz Abdul Karim, Khan Bahadur, it appeared that mehal Kharna, with three other mehals—Patharkara, Kalsakra and Chundwara—were granted in 1780 by the then zemindar of Kharagpore to Ajit Singh, the ancestor of the plaintiff, to hold on the condition of his rendering service as a ghatwal. The original sanad was not forthcoming, but the nature of the ghatwali tenures of Kharagpore was stated in a judgment of the Judicial Committee in Lilamand Singh v. The Government (1), which related to mehal Dham-sain, situate in the same zemindari. In that case the Government sought to maintain the claim to resume the ghatwali tenure, on the ground that under the prevailing system of administering the country ghatwali services were no longer necessary. This claim of the Government was held untenable, the right of resumption no more existing in regard to ghatwali tenures than others, merely because the services formerly required were required no longer. The order of Her Majesty in Council was taken as governing the

In the case of other mehals affected by similar incidents, among which was included mehal Kharna.

Subsequently, the zamindar endeavoured to resume the ghatwali tenures. His suit in respect of mehal Kharna was dismissed, and no settlement was made between him and the ghatwal, who accordingly continued to hold under his ancient right. The decision in the dispute as to the respective rights of the zamindar and the ghatwal, was given in the suit relating to mehal Kakwara, Lilanand Singh v. Thakoor Muuoorunjum Singh (1), in which case it was decided that the ghatwali tenures were not granted as remuneration to hired servants, resumable upon the services not being required, but were granted, and were held upon grants at a fixed rent, subject to certain services to be rendered by the grantee; and that so long as the holders of these grants were able and willing to perform the services the tenures could not be determined, whether the services were actually required or not. The tenure in that case was held to be hereditary, a usage to that effect being coupled with the terms of the original grant. The decision in reference to mehal Kakwara was taken by the High Court as an example for the case of mehal Kharna in an appeal, decided on the 29th June 1865, viz., Meghraj Singh v. Lilanand Singh, which was not on the record of this appeal, (though its effect was stated by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment) and was not reported.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge related to two principal matters, one being the incidents of the tenure, and the other the rights of the parties therein. With regard to the incidents of the tenure, he held that the ghatwali tenure of mehal Kharna was an ancestral estate, held at a perpetually assessed jumma by the father of the plaintiff, joined to which was also the condition of the performance of service, and that so long as he was ready to serve, the zamindar had no power either to dispose of him or to enhance the rent, and that no alteration in this had occurred. He also held that the tenure was indivisible apparently as an incident of the tenure rather than as a custom in the family of the tenant; also that it was transferable subject to the approval of the zamindar, but that no such practice, or usage, as that the holder should have absolute power to alienate as an incident of his ghatwali tenure, had been proved.

In reference to the rights of the present parties in the tenure in question, the Subordinate Judge held—first, that it was not disputed that the family of Meghraj Singh was governed by the law of the Mitakshara; secondly, that, though the possession of the ghatwal for the time being was exclusive, he had no right, after the birth of a son, to alienate without the consent of that son; thirdly, that the debt was Meghraj's own, incurred by himself, and the suit, and decree therein, were against him alone; fourthly, as the result of the above, that only Meghraj's right and interest in the mehal for his own life had passed at the sale in question.

Having regard to these points, the Subordinate Judge held that the share of Meghraj, the judgment-debtor, being in the Judge's opinion only one-third of the ghatwali, was all that had passed to the purchaser; and that the appellants were entitled to recover the remaining two-thirds, subject to payment by them of two-thirds of the money advanced on the zur-i-peshgi lease.

With regard to mesne profits, the appellants were referred to another suit, as they had not claimed them in this.

(1) Sub. Vol. 1.A. 184-13 B.L.R. 124, in which the judgment of the High Court, reported 3 W. R. 84. was affirmed.
Both parties appealed from this decree, the defendants contending that the ghatwal had, as an incident of his tenure, full power of alienation, notwithstanding the existence of a son. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, in their memorandum, contended that, upon the finding of the Court below as to the facts, the whole estate should have been decreed to them with possession as from the date of the death of Meghraj, the father.

[476] The High Court (Tottenham and Norris, JJ.) in its judgment (1) did not dissent from any of the findings of the lower Court as regards the sale, or as regards the law and usages governing the plaintiffs' family. They disposed of the question whether the ghatwal tenure was in its nature alienable. They held that it was alienable if the zemindar consented to the alienation, and that this consent might be implied. The rules of descent declared by the Mitakshara were not applicable. The suit was by the High Court dismissed with costs. The judgment, having been reported at length, need not be here further stated.

On this appeal,—

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. H. Cowell, for the appellants, argued that the estate that was alienated was only the right, title, and interest of the then ghatwal in mehal Kharna. The zemindar's approval was an essential condition to a transfer of the ghatwali, and such a restriction limited the right of the ghatwal to alienate. In the appeal, relating to mehal Kakwara—Lilanaand Singh v. Thakoor Munoorunjun Singh (2)—the decision was that the ghatwali was not granted merely by way of wages to an hereditary servant, but to be held as upon a grant at a fixed rent, subject to certain services; and whether the latter were required or not, the tenure could not be brought to an end so long as the holder was able and willing to perform them. The tenure was held to be hereditary, a usage being coupled with terms of the original grant. The decision in reference to mehal Kakwara had been held by the High Court applicable to the case of Mehal Kharna in Meghraj Singh v. Raja Lilanand Singh (not reported) on the 29th June 1865. In Harlal Singh v. Jorawan Singh (3) a ghatwali in zilla Birbhum was held not divisible on the death of a ghatwal among his heirs, but to devolve upon the eldest son. Reference was made also on this point to Teetoo Koowurtee v. Survan Singh (4); and Sartuk Chunder Dey v. Bhagtu Barut Chunder Singh (5).

[476] As to the disallowance of resumption by the zemindar, reference was made to Kolodeep Narain Singh v. Mahadeo Singh (6); Lilanaand Singh v. Thakoor Munoorunjun Singh (2); and Nilmoni Singh v. Bakra Hath Singh (7). In regard to the general effect of the Mitakshara rule of inheritance, Chowdhiry Chintamun Singh v. Nowlukka Kunwari (8) and Raja Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni (9) were referred to.

It was not contended that the ghatwali tenure was inalienable because it was impartible, impartible estates not being inalienable merely on account of their impartibility—see Udaya Aditya Deb v. Jadub Lall Aditya Deb (10). But it was contended that, as the estate was impartible, the judgment-debtor's interest therein could not, under any circumstances have been represented by one-third or any other share; and as to Meghraj's interest, his proprietary right was that of a member of a joint family in the joint family estate, coupled with and controlled by the right, which was a customary one, of exclusive possession during his life. It was this right alone which passed at the sale.

It was further contended that only the right, title, and interest of Meghraj Singh in mehal Kharna were expressed by the sale certificate to have been sold, as well as by the execution proceeding to have been attached. Thus the right, title, and interest were limited to the right of possession during his life. Whether the Mitakshara law was referred to, or the nature of the tenure only was considered, the interest of the son was not transferred. On the death of the father the son succeeded, and held the tenure, subject to readiness on his part to perform the services now in fact no longer required. This immoveable tenure also was alienable only with the consent of the zemindar, even for the life-interest to which the right of the ghatwal extended. The zemindar had the right to resume it if the conditions of the tenure were broken, and his consent to an alienation, whether express or [477] implied, did not operate to extend the ghatwal's power to transfer; but, in effect, to limit it. Reference was made to Kustooora Koomarjee v. Benode Ram Sen (1), in which it was held that these tenures were not liable to attachment in execution of decree; and in regard to what passed upon sales of family estate in execution generally, Rannarain Singh v. Pertum Singh (2) and Simbhunath Pande v. Golab Singh (3) were cited.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondents was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment, on a subsequent day (7th December), was delivered by LORD FITZGERALD.—The appellant, Tekait Kali Pershad Singh, son of Tekait Meghraj Singh, deceased, instituted this suit on the 7th of April 1881 against Dhanraj Roy, son of Alam Roy, deceased, and several others, to recover possession of the ghatwali mehal Kharna, comprising 22 mouzahs out of the mehals Kharagpore, which he alleges to be his ancestral ghatwali right.

The plaint, inter alia, alleged that the family of the plaintiff was governed by the Mitakshara law, but subject to a family custom that the eldest son became the male without dividing with the other brothers, who are entitled to maintenance only, that the Tekait Meghraj was in possession, and that plaintiff No. 1, his eldest son, was born in Aughran 1241, and thereupon acquired a right with his father in the mehal; that Tekait Meghraj, without the consent of the plaintiff No. 1, who had then attained his majority, under the bond dated the 26th Chet 1265, borrowed the sum of Rs. 1,300 from Alam Roy, ancestor of the defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3; that the aforesaid Alam Roy, on the basis of that bond, obtained a money decree against Meghraj without making the plaintiff No. 1 a defendant, on the 18th July 1862; that on the sale in execution of that decree he got only the right and share of the said Tekait in the ghatwali mehal of mouzah Kharna sold by auction, and he purchased them himself at a reduced price, that is, for the sum of Rs. 3,525 on the 13th July 1868; that Tekait Meghraj died in the month of Bhadon 1278 Fusli (that is, August 1871); that the plaintiff, [478] agreeably to the usage of the family, governed by the Mitakshara-law, acquired the right of direct possession in respect of the whole of mehal Kharna aforesaid, since the death of the said Tckait. The defendants in their written stament, denying most of the allegations in the plaint, specially contended that the plaintiff had not any joint estate with his father, who was the sole proprietor; that the restrictions on the Mitakshara law did not affect the estate or the sale in question, and that the particular nature of the ghatwali tenure, which was based on actual service is contrary to the joint right of the sons according to the Mitakshara law. The defendants further relied on their title under the execution sale, and as to the allegation of the plaintiff that the property was sold for a trifling sum, they pointed out that it was sold subject to a zuri-i-peshgi lease, which is in effect a mortgage for Rs. 4,923, which the purchasers had to redeem; that incumbrance had been created by Meghraj.

(1) 4 W.R. Mis. 5. (2) 20 W.R. 189. (3) 14 I.A. 77=14 C. 572.

There were thirteen issues, but for the purposes of the present appeal it is only necessary to refer to one question, viz., What did the defendants purchase, and what right did they obtain in mehal Kharna as purchasers under the sale in execution of the decree?

The decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore was given on the 18th February 1882. It occupies 28 large and closely printed pages of the record. It exhibits great care and research, and is very full and very learned, but as it has been read at full length in the discussion at the bar, it is not necessary to observe upon its reasoning. The decision of the Subordinate Judge is: That the claim of the plaintiffs in respect of two-thirds' share of mehal Kharna be decreed; that the plaintiffs do get possession of the aforesaid two-thirds' share on payment of two-thirds of the amount covered by the previous mortgage, amounting to Rs. 3,282, and it is peculiar in this respect that it is inconsistent with the case of plaintiff and equally so with the defence. If the plaintiff was entitled to relief on the case he has made, it was by a decree for the possession of the whole of the mehal Kharna.

Both parties were dissatisfied, and both parties appealed to the High Court. The decision of the High Court was given on the appeal, of the defendants on the 21st of April 1884, and was that the plaintiffs' suit be dismissed with costs.

[479] The High Court justly criticises the inconsistencies of the cases of both parties on the pleadings, and the peculiarity of the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and adds: 'The tenure being undoubtly a ghatwali, the lower Court, we think, made a mistake in attempting to apply to the case the rules of the Mitakshara law.' Their Lordships read this observation as confined to the Mitakshara rule by which a son when born takes a share equally with his father. The High Court then proceeds: 'We concur with the counsel for the appellants in his contention that, in dealing with a ghatwali, the Court must have regard to the nature of the tenure itself, and to the rules of law laid down in regard to such tenures and not to any particular school of law, or to the customs of particular families. The incidents of a ghatwali tenure are the same, whether the ghatwali be a Hindu or a Mussulman, or a follower of any other system of religion; and the same ghatwali might be held successively by persons governed, as to other property by totally different rules of law. A ghatwali is created for a specific purpose, and has its own particular incidents.' The High Court, continuing its reasons, adds: 'The real and only material questions for us to decide are, first, whether the sale of this ghatwali in execution of a decree against the ghatwal was invalid and liable to be set aside by reason of the tenure being in its nature inalienable; and, second, if the alienation was bad, are the present plaintiffs entitled to recover the property? The second question also involves one of limitation." Their Lordships will deal with the first question alone.

The High Court, after considering the authorities which it deemed to be applicable, and pointing out the difference between the two classes of cases where the ghatwal is appointed by and holds direct under the Government and protected by Ordinances as in the Birbhum cases, and where he is appointed by and holds under the zemindar who retained in his hands the power of appointing and the power of dismissing the ghatwal in case of non-performance of his duties, goes on to say: "We think we must hold upon the authority of the cases, and upon the evidence of many such transfers having been effected [480] and unquestioned, as well as in consideration of the long silence of the present plaintiff No. 1, and the silence, too, of his father while he lived, that a Kharagpore ghatwal is transferable if the zemindar assents and accepts the transference; and in the present case we think the lower Court was justified in holding that the zemindar in making no objection within twelve years of the sale acquiesced in it, and that the transfer was therefore one which the Court ought to recognise. And looking to the fact that the purpose for which the Kharagpore ghatwalis were created no longer exists, we should greatly regret being compelled to come to the contrary conclusion. We accordingly decide the first question in favour of the defendants, appellants, and hold that the sale was not invalid by reason of the inalienability of the ghatwal tenure." The plaintiffs appeal against that decision.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the doctrines of the Mitakshara, which govern in some districts the Hindu law of inheritance, are not to their full extent applicable to a ghatwal tenure. By the general Hindu law of inheritance, where the Mitakshara does not prevail, the heirs are generally selected because of their capability to exercise certain religious rites for the benefit of the deceased. Where, however, the Mitakshara governs, each son immediately on his birth takes a share equal to his father in the ancestral immovable estate. Having regard to the origin and nature of ghatwali tenures and their purposes and incidents as established by decided cases, most of which have been referred to in the course of the argument it is admitted that such a tenure is in some particulars distinct from, and cannot be governed by, either the general objects of Hindu inheritance as above stated, or by the before-quoted rule of the Mitakshara.

It is admitted that ghatwali estate is impartible—that is to say, not subject to partition; that the eldest son succeeds to the whole to the exclusion of his brothers. These are propositions that seems to exclude the application of the Mitakshara rule that the sons on birth each take an equal estate with the father and are entitled to partition. The allegation, too, that the state is not in the whole or in part alienable, or, if alienable, is only so for the life of the alienor, must largely depend on local and family [481] custom, and such custom, if proved to exist, may supersede the general law, though in other respects the general law may govern the relations of parties outside that custom. Thus the rules of the Mitakshara yield to a well established custom, though only to the extent of that custom.

The question then which their Lordships have to consider and decide is whether the sale and transfer of a zemindari ghatwal in Kharagpore under a decree is invalid by reason of the tenure being in its nature inalienable?

The evidence establishes a number of instances in which there have been unquestioned transfers and sales applicable to mehals in Kharagpore, and some to portions of the same estate which the plaintiff describes as part of his ancestral, inalienable, ghatwali right. This custom of alienation has been proved in fact by oral and documentary evidence to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge and of the High Court, and their Lordships see no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion in that respect of the two Courts.

It seems to their Lordships that the true view to take is that such a tenure in Kharagpore is not inalienable, and may be transferred by the ghatwal or sold in execution of a decree against him if such transfer or sale is assented to by the zemindar.

The plaintiff was of full age at the time of the sale. He does not appear to have made any objection to the sale or transfer, or to have taken any action during the period of twelve years that intervened between the sale and the institution of this suit, or during the period of ten years that elapsed between the death of Meghraj in 1871 and the 12th April 1881, when the suit was instituted. The zemindar made no objection, expressed no disapproval, was not asked to interfere, and did not interfere. It may reasonably be inferred that the zemindar and the officers of his zemindari were brought constantly into intercourse with the purchasers during their possession of twelve years after the sale, and could not have been in ignorance of the sale.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the Subordinate Court was justified in assuming under the circumstances the acquiescence of the zemindar in the sale and transfer under the decree, and that conclusion in fact has been approved and adopted by the High [482] Court. Their Lordships do not deem it to be necessary to criticise the various decisions which have been brought so fully under their notice, and are of opinion that the High Court was correct in its conclusion that a Kharagpore ghatwali is transferable if the zemindar assents and accepts the transference.

There remains only to be noticed the argument that, though the ghatwal might alien, it could only be for the life of the alienor. It seems to their Lordships that there is no foundation for this argument. When once it is established that the ghatwal had the power of alienation, as before stated, that power forms an integral portion of his right and interest in the ghatwali, and there is no evidence whatever to limit it to an alienation for his own life and no longer. In this respect the present case so far differs from Dindyal's case (1), and some other decisions of this Board that followed, as to render them wholly inapplicable.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the High Court should be affirmed and this appeal dismissed, and will so humbly advise Her Majesty. The appellants must pay to the respondents the costs of this appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Pigot.

[25th April, 1888.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), s. 174—Judgment-debtor, Meaning of—

The words "judgment-debtor" as used in s. 174 of Act VIII of 1885 do not include a transferee or assignee from a judgment-debtor, but must be construed strictly as referring to a judgment-debtor alone.

[F., 16 C.L.J. 546=15 Ind. Cas. 561.]

[483] Appeal under the s. 15 of the Letters Patent. The facts were as follows:

One Rajendro Narain Roy obtained a money decree against the holder of a durputni tenure in a putni mehal, and in execution of this decree attached the tenure, and at the sale subsequently held in June 1887 purchased it in satisfaction of his decree. On the 13th August this sale was confirmed. The putnidar, Phudy Mondul, sued the durputnidar for arrears of rent, obtained a decree, and in execution of this decree attached the tenure, and on the 1st August 1887 purchased it himself. On the 26th August Rajendro Narain Roy first learnt of the sale of the tenure in satisfaction of the putnidar's decree, and thereupon applied under s. 174 of Act V of 1885 to be allowed to pay into Court the amount recoverable under the decree against the durputnidar, together with costs and interest thereon at 5 per cent. The Munsif held that no person other than a judgment-debtor could take advantage of that section; and that Rajendro Narain Roy, even if he were to be considered as a representative of the judgment-debtor, could not come in under the section. The District Judge on appeal upheld this view.

Rajendro Narain Roy then applied to the High Court under s. 622 of the Code, and obtained a rule calling upon Phudy Mondul to show cause why the orders of the Munsif and the District Judge should not be reversed, and the sale held on the 1st August 1887 set aside.

At the hearing of this rule before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley, Mr. Bell and Baboo Troylokya Nath Mitter appeared in support of the rule, and Mr. Twidale to show cause, and the following orders were delivered by the Court:

ORDERS.

Beverley, J. (after stating the facts).—It is contended before us by Mr. Bell on the part of the petitioner that the term "judgment-debtor" in s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act ought to be liberally construed so as to include a judgment-debtor's assignee or transferee. And the arguments that have been addressed to us are three. Mr. Bell first contends that if the word "judgment-debtor" is strictly construed the heir or successor of a judgment-debtor, in case the judgment-debtor died, would be debarred from the privilege conferred by this [484] section.

* Letters Patent Appeal No. 1 of 1888 against the judgment of Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley, two of the Judges of this Court, dated the 27th of January 1888, in Rule No. 1582 of 1887.
He further urges that under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure an assignee from the judgment-debtor might apply to have the sale set aside for irregularity; and by analogy he contends that the assignee is similarly entitled to have it set aside under the terms of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. And, again, he has drawn our attention to s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, cl. 3, under which "the judgment-debtor, or any person having in the tenure or holding any interest voidable on the sale, may pay money into Court under this section," and obtain the release of the tenure or holding from attachment.

As regards the first argument, it would appear that the heir of a judgment-debtor may take advantage of s. 174 by causing his name to be substituted on the record as the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. Nor do I think there is much force in the other arguments adduced. Section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that any person whose property has been sold may apply to have the sale set aside on the ground of material irregularity in the proceedings and consequent substantial injury. That is a different thing from an application to have the sale set aside where there has been no irregularity, and the Legislature may have had an object in conferring the privilege in the latter case to the judgment-debtor. Speaking for myself, I am of opinion that the term "judgment-debtor" in the section must be construed strictly. In the Code of Civil Procedure the term "judgment-debtor" is defined to mean "any person against whom a decree or order has been made." On the other hand, the term "deeree-holder" not only means "any person in whose favour a decree or any order capable of execution has been made" but "includes any person to whom such decree or order is transferred," and it appears to me that if the Legislature intended that the term "judgment-debtor" should also include a transferee or assignee from the judgment-debtor, words to that effect would have been incorporated in the section, as has been done in the case of s. 170, cl. 3. The fact that in cl. 3, s. 170, the language is "the judgment-debtor or any person having in the tenure or holding any interest voidable on the sale," while in s. 174 [485] simply the term "judgment-debtor" is used, shows, I think that the Legislature did intend that there should be a distinction.

It was open to the petitioner under s. 170 to save the tenure from sale; not having done so, I am unable to hold that he has now a right to come in under s. 174 to have the sale set aside.

I am, therefore, of opinion that we should not be justified in construing the term "judgment-debtor" as used in s. 174 so as to include a transferee or assignee from a judgment-debtor. I would accordingly discharge this Rule.

Norris, J.—In this case the petitioner before us obtained a money decree against a tenure-holder, and in execution of his decree attached the tenures, and at the sale subsequently held purchased them in satisfaction of his decree. The sale took place in June last, and was confirmed on the 13th of August last. The judgment-debtor held these tenures under a putnidar the opposite party in this Rule. He, the putnidar, sued the judgment-debtor for rent, obtained a decree, and in execution of his decree attached the tenures and purchased them on the 1st of August. On the 26th of August the petitioner before us first learnt of the sale of the tenures in satisfaction of the putnidar’s decree for rent, and applied under the provisions of s. 17 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to be allowed to pay into Court the amount recoverable under the decree with costs and 5 per cent. interest. His application was refused by the Munsif, and the Munsif's order has been affirmed by the District Judge.

It has been contended before us by Mr. Twidale for the opposite party, in the first place, that we ought not to interfere under s. 622 of the Code, because there was a second appeal, in this case. We are satisfied that there was no second appeal, and that if we interfere at all we can only do so under s. 622.

Mr. Bell, for the petitioner, has argued that his client is a judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Upon the best consideration that I have been able to give to this matter, I think that Mr. Bell's contention ought to prevail. I express this opinion with very considerable hesitation and doubt, first of all because it is opposed to the opinion expressed [486] by my learned colleague, whose experience in this branch of the law is a very much wider and longer one than mine; and, secondly, because I have reason to believe that my opinion is not shared in by the majority of my colleagues.

When I look at the provisions of s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, I see that if the petitioner had appeared in the sale room at the time the tenure was being sold for arrears of rent, and before the auctioneer had knocked the hammer down and declared the tenure to be sold, and had tendered the amount of the decree together with the costs of the sale and paid that into Court, he would have been entitled to the release of the tenure from attachment. When he might do that at any time the sale was proceeding, and before the property was actually knocked down, I am at a loss to understand why he should not have the same privilege after the property has been actually sold. It may be that there are some latent reasons which have induced the Legislature to refuse the privilege to a person in the position of the petitioner after the sale has actually taken place; but I confess I am at a loss to understand what those reasons can possibly be. It does not seem to me that the least evil or inconvenience can result from holding that the term "judgment-debtor" in s. 174 is wide enough to include and was intended to include, a person in the position of the present petitioner, who, to all intents and purposes, is the assignee of the judgment-debtor. I think I am fortified in this liberal construction of the section when I find that two other learned Judges of this Court have in Abdul Huq Mozumdar v. Mohini Mohan Shaha (1), given a very wide, and, if I may be permitted to say so, a justly wide interpretation to the words in s. 311 of the Code—"any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this chapter."

I am therefore of opinion, though, as I have said before, with considerable hesitation and doubt, and upon the best consideration I can give to the case, that the petitioner is a "judgment-debtor" within the meaning of s. 174.

For these reasons I would make the Rule absolute. But as my learned colleague is of a contrary opinion, the Rule, in accordance [487] with the provisions of ss. 575 and 590, Civil Procedure Code, will be discharged with costs.

Rajendro Narain Roy appealed under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decision of Mr. Justice Beverley.

Mr. Evans (with him Baboo Triptokhya Nath Mitter), for the appellant, submitted that the word "judgment-debtor" in s. 174 was wide enough to include the appellant, who was the transferee of the judgment-debtor.

Mr. Twidale, for the respondents, was not called upon.

OPINION.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J., Tottenham, J., and Pigot, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—The only question which is raised in this appeal is the question, what is the meaning of the word "judgment-debtor" in s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. So far as I can see, the expression "judgment-debtor" is an expression which is so well understood that it is impossible to give it any other than its well understood meaning, and that is, the person against whom a decree has been obtained. Mr. Evans suggests to us that it means not only the judgment-debtor himself, but also the assignee of the judgment-debtor's property, and that is the view which has been taken by Mr. Justice Norris. Mr. Justice Norris, in discussing the matter, discusses it on the ground that the Legislature may well have taken a wider view of the matter, but the question is not what they might have done, nor what it would have been wise for them to do, but what they have done, and they have said, in this particular case, that the only person who is to have this privilege is the judgment-debtor, and I do not think we can extend it beyond that.

Then in s. 170 the Legislature gives another right under different circumstances, and in that section they extend the power not only to the judgment-debtor, but to other persons besides, but they have refrained from doing so in s. 174, and from this also it would appear that they have done so intentionally.

On the whole, we think that the view taken by Mr. Justice Beverley is the correct view of the section, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ASMUTUNNISAA BEGUM (Petitioner) v. ASHRUFF ALI AND OTHERS.

(Auction-purchasers).* [25th April, 1888.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 311—Objection to sale by wife of judgment-debtor—Execution.

A person who claims to be a purchaser from a judgment-debtor prior to an attachment is not entitled to come in under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code and object to the sale of the judgment-debtor's property.

Abdul Huc Mazumdar v. Mohini Mohnu Shaha (1) overruled.

Rule that a person applying to set aside a sale for irregularity must prove substantial injury arising therefrom, as laid down in Joge Narain Singh v. Bhongbano (2) and explained by Krishnarav Vekatesh v. Vusudev Anunt (3) approved.

* Full Bench on Original Order, No. 33 of 1888, against the order of Baboo Upendro Chunder Mullick, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Monghyr, dated the 17th December 1887.

(1) 14 C. 240. (2) 2 W.R. Mis. 13. (3) 11 B.H.C. 15.
Full Bench.

On the 23rd May 1887 one Abdul Waliud applied for execution of a decree against one Minnat Hossein and obtained an order for attachment of certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. In execution of this decree the property was put up for sale on the 8th August 1887, and was purchased by one Ashruff Ali. On the 22nd August, Asmutunnissa, the wife of Minnat Hossein, applied to have the sale set aside on the ground that the property was given to her by her husband under a bai mawasa duly executed by him, and also on the ground of irregularity in the conduct and publication of the sale proceedings.

The Subordinate Judge held that s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure had reference to the admitted or undisputed interest of third parties to the property to be sold, but that here the claimant’s interest was disputed, and that the objections put forward by [489] Asmutunnissa were objections which could only be put forward by the judgment-debtor; and he therefore dismissed the application.

Asmutunnissa appealed to the High Court; and the learned Judges who heard the case referred to a Full Bench the question whether a person, who claims the property sold adversely to the judgment-debtor, and whose claim is disputed, is a “person whose immoveable property has been sold” within the meaning of s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The referring order was as follows:—

“The question raised in this appeal is whether a third party who alleges that her property has been sold in execution as the property of the judgment-debtor can apply to the Court under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have the sale set aside on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale? If we felt ourselves at liberty to follow a recent decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Abdul Haq Mozumdar v. Mohini Mohun Shaha (1), the appeal should be allowed; but we are not prepared to agree in the correctness of that decision; and as it appears to us to be opposed to the current of decisions in this Court, no less than to the object of the section itself, we are of opinion that the point should be referred for the decision of a Full Bench.”

“The Code of 1859, s. 256, did not specify by whom such an application might be made, but this Court always held that it could only be made by the judgment-debtor, and refused to hear third parties. It will be sufficient to refer to the case of Mina Koer v. Luchmun Bhugpat (2), and it will be observed that in that case the Judges were of opinion that the practice then in force was in conformity with the rule laid down in the present Code.”

“In Bhababuti Churn Bhattacharjee Chowdhry v. Bisheshwar Sen (3) the Judges expressed the opinion that the words ‘any person whose immoveable property has been sold’ were not to be restricted to the judgment-debtor alone, but they held that they do not include a person who has purchased the same property at [490] a prior execution sale which had not been confirmed at the time of the subsequent sale.

(1) 14 C. 240. (2) 1 C.I.R. 250. (3) 8 C. 367.
"In the case of Panye Chunder Sircar v. Hurchander Chowdry (1) certain remarks are made which seem to show that one of the Judges who decided that case was of opinion that the words were sufficiently wide to include a private purchaser from the judgment-debtor prior to the date of auction.

"In Rakal Chunder Bose v. Dwarka Nath Misser (2) it was held that a mortgagee who had obtained a decree for foreclosure of the property sold was a person who had such an interest in the property sold as entitled him to make an application under the section in question.

"In the present case, however, as in the case of Abdul Huq Mozumdar v. Mohini Mohun Shaha (3), the applicant is a person who claims not through but adversely to the judgment-debtor. She says: 'The property was not the property of the judgment-debtor, but belongs to me and the question is whether a claim of this sort can be entertained under s. 311. We are of opinion that it cannot be entertained under that section. It seems to us that the object of that section is to allow objections to be preferred to the regularity of the sale proceedings by those interested in the sale on the supposition that it was a sale of the judgment-debtor's property; and that the section ought not to be used for the purposes of allowing third parties to advance claims to the property on the ground that it was not the property of the judgment-debtor.

"This view is, however, opposed to that taken in the case of Abdul Huq Mozumdar v. Mohini Mohun Shaha, to which reference has been made."

Moulvi Surajul Islam, for the appellant.

The words of § 311 of the Code are wide enough to include a purchaser from the judgment-debtor; the section is not confined to a judgment-debtor—see Abdul Huq Mozumdar v. Mohini Mohun Shaha (3) and Bhagabuti Churn Bhattacharjee Chowdry (4). A mortgagee was held to come within the section—Rakal Chunder Bose v. Dwarka Nath Misser (2).

[491] Mr. Twidale, for the respondent.

The objector has no locus standi; s. 311 only refers to persons whose property has been sold under Chap. XIX, and it is only the judgment-debtor's property that the chapter deals with. Sections 254 and 266 clearly show this; persons who are not judgment-debtors claiming property sold under a decree come in under a different chapter of the Code.

OPINION.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J., Tottenham, Pigot, Macpherson and Ghose, JJ.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—This is an appeal from an order confirming the sale of immovable property under a decree, notwithstanding an objection under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground of irregularities. The objector was not the judgment-debtor, but was a person who claimed the property as her own, alleging that she had bought it of the judgment-debtor prior to the attachment. The question which we have to consider is whether such a person is entitled to object to a sale under s. 311.

The case of Abdul Huq Mozumdar v. Mohini Mohun Shaha (3) is a clear authority that the words "any person" in that section are to receive the widest meaning, and that any person whatever may come in and claim an interest in the property, and may apply under that section to set aside the sale. The earlier cases in this Court are under the section of the old Code, and take the opposite view.

(1) 10 C. 496. (2) 13 C. 346. (3) 14 C. 240. (4) 8 C. 367.

The case of Krishnarav Venkatesh v. Vasudev Anant (1) shows, and we think rightly shows, that the words any person were used intentionally to enable other persons than the judgment-debtor to apply if they were injured by the irregularity. Upon this state of the authorities, we have to decide what is the meaning of the section. The words are "any person whose immovable property has been sold under this chapter may apply," but the sale is not to be set aside unless the applicant proves that he has sustained substantial injury. We think that this means that the substantial injury must be the direct result of the irregularity, and that this could only be the case where the property of the person applying had not only been put up [492] for sale and knocked down, but had been sold in the sense that the applicant's interest had been legally affected by such sale, as in the case of Krishnarav Venkatesh v. Vasudev Anant (1), but that a person claiming by title paramount to the judgment-debtor is not within the meaning of the words "any person" in the section, inasmuch as his title to the property is not affected by the sale, whether it were regular or irregular, and therefore cannot apply to the Court to set aside the sale.

On the whole we are of opinion that the decision of Abdul Huq Mozumdar v. Mohini Mohun Shaha (2), cannot be sustained, but that the rule in Joge Narain Singh v. Bhughano (3), followed in Mina Koer v. Luchman Bhugqat (4) and Rakal Chunder Bose v. Dwarka Nath Misser (5), as explained by the Bombay case, is correct. We therefore answer this question in the negative.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Fotick Chunder Dey Sircar (Decree-holder) v. E. G. Foley and others (Judgment-debtor).* [23rd November, 1887.]

Execution of decree—Decree for arrears of rent—Under-tenure—Sale of property other than under-tenure—Arrest of judgment-debtor—"Charge"—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 65—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 68, 100.

A landlord, who has obtained a decree for arrears of rent of an under-tenure, is not restricted by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VII of 1885) to executing such decree in the first instance by sale of the under-tenure, but is at liberty to execute it in the ordinary manner against the person or other property whether moveable, or immovable of his judgment-debtor.

[493] The provisions of s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act are not amongst those made applicable by s. 109 of that Act to a person having a charge within the meaning of the latter section.

These appeals arose out of applications made by the appellant Fotick Chunder Dey Sircar to execute certain decrees against the respondents for arrears of rent of certain under-tenures held by them. The decrees had been passed by the third Munsif of Patuakhali, and the appellant had them transferred to the Court of the first Munsif of Burrisal for the purpose of executing them within the jurisdiction of that Court. The manner in which the decrees were sought to be executed was by attachment of the moveable property of the judgment-debtors, and also by the arrest of their persons. The latter part of the application was refused, but upon writs of attachment of the moveable property being issued the judgment-debtors applied to the Munsif to stay execution upon two grounds: first that the decree-holder was not entitled to proceed against them personally or against their property, moveable or immovable, without, in the first instance, proceeding against the defaulting under-tenures for the respective arrears of rent of which the decrees had been passed; and, second, that the certificates had been illegally issued.

The decree-holder thereupon objected that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to determine either of these questions, but the Munsif overruled that objection as regards the first point, and decided that the decree-holder was entitled to execute the decrees in the way he sought, and that the judgment-debtors' objections on that ground were invalid. As regards the second point, he held he had no jurisdiction to determine it, and, therefore, disallowed the objections of the judgment-debtors.

The latter thereupon appealed to the District Judge, and the only question raised in the appeal was the first of the above mentioned two points. Upon that question the District Judge reversed the Munsif's order, holding that a rent decree should first of all be executed by sale of the defaulting tenure or [494] saleable holding before it could be executed against the person or other property, moveable or immovable, of the judgment-debtor.

Against that order the decree-holder now appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Guru Dass Banerjee, Baboo Boikunt Nath Dass and Baboo Chunder Kant Sen, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J.—The question that arises for consideration in this case is whether, since the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, a landlord who obtains a decree for rent is entitled, if he pleases, in the first instance, to attach the moveable property, and, if he pleases, the person of his judgment-debtor, or whether he is obliged, in the first instance, to endeavour to execute his decree by putting up for sale the tenure, the rent in respect of which is in arrear, and for which he has obtained a decree.

The District Judge has held that the landlord is not entitled, in the first instance, to attach the moveable property, and, if he so pleases, the person of the defaulting tenant.

In support of this view, the District Judge has relied upon the case of Lalit Mohun Roy v. Binodai Dehee (1). With reference to that case, which was decided by Mr. Justice Ghose and myself, two observations are to be made. First, it was a decision under the old rent Act (Act VIII of 1869), and we especially called attention, at the conclusion of our judgment, to the fact that the conditions of things as they existed under that Act had been entirely altered by the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In the second place it is to be observed that in that case we held that if the landlord wished, in the first instance, to proceed against any immoveable property of the defaulting tenant, the immoveable property which he must attach and put up for sale is the tenure, in respect of the rent of which he has obtained a decree.

[495] We said nothing as to the landlord's right to proceed against the moveable property of the defaulting tenant in the first instance. That question was not before us.

Upon these grounds we are of opinion that the case cited does not support the conclusion at which the District Judge has arrived.

On behalf of the respondents it has been pointed out that, by virtue of s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, rent is declared to be "a first charge" on the tenure; this "charge," it was argued, was such a "charge" as is defined by s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, and being such a "charge" it was argued that "all the provisions therein-before contained" (i.e., in the Transfer of Property Act) "as to a mortgagee," so far as might be, "applied to the plaintiff, appellant, as the owner of the tenure," i.e., "as the owner of the property," and that the provisions of ss. 81 and 82 of the Transfer of Property Act, and all the provisions therein-before contained (i.e., previous to s. 100) "as to a mortgagee instituting a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property, so far as might be, applied to the plaintiff, he being a person having such charge;" and it was further contended that amongst the provisions therein-before contained applicable to the plaintiff were the disabilities contained in s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act.

One answer to this argument is this: The provisions of s. 68 are not amongst those which are referred to in s. 100.

S. 100 speaks of the "provisions contained as to a mortgagee" and "as to a mortgagee instituting a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property." The provisions dealing with the rights and liabilities of a mortgagee are contained in ss. 60 to 66 inclusive.

Ss. 67 to 77 inclusive deal with the rights and liabilities of a mortgagee; and of those sections the only one which s. 100 makes applicable to "a person having a charge not amounting to a mortgage" are those relating to "a mortgagee instituting a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property"; and s. 68 is not one of those sections.

And, further, supposing that s. 68 has any application to the matter it only deals with cases where a mortgagee, may [496] bring a suit for the mortgage money; it can have no reference to cases where after a suit has been brought and a decree obtained, the mortgagee seeks to sell any property in satisfaction of his decree. The disability, if there was any, ceased with the decree.

This, we think, is a sufficient and complete answer to Dr. Banerjee’s argument. But we are not prepared to admit that the “charge” referred to in s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, is such a “charge” as is defined by s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, is an enactment for the benefit of the landlord. It gives him rights which are denied to other creditors. The effect of acceding to Dr. Banerjee’s argument would be to deprive the landlord, at any rate for a time, of one of the rights and remedies which an ordinary judgment-creditor enjoys.

Seeing that s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, is an enactment for the benefit of the landlord, and considering that the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 as contained in ss. 50 to 61, and s. 65 as to the order in which properties belonging to a defaulting tenant might be brought to sale, find no place in the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, we cannot believe that it was the intention of the Legislature to tie the hands of a landlord, as they were tied under the old act. We are fortified in the view we take by a decision (Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.) where they held that the view taken by the District Judge, in the present case, was not correct.

Upon principle, therefore, and, so far as the cases go, upon authority, we are of opinion that the contention of Dr. Banerjee ought not to prevail.

We accordingly set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the first Court with costs of all Courts.

KALI CHARUN SINGH AND OTHERS (Decree-Holders) v. BALGOBIND SINGH AND OTHERS (Judgment-Debtors).* [18th February, 1888.]

Surety—Execution of decree against Surety—Surety for costs of appeal—Separate suit—Summary Procedure—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 253.

Section 253 of the Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to a surety who has become security in an appellate Court. A security bond, therefore, executed by a surety on behalf of an appellant for the costs of an appeal under s. 540 of the Code, cannot be summarily enforced against the surety in the execution proceedings; the remedy is by separate suit.

Bans Bahadur Singh v. Muqbla Begum (1) dissented from; Radha Pershad Singh v. Phuljuri Koer (2) followed.

Two of the respondents, Rajroop Singh and Ranpal Singh, had become sureties on behalf of the judgment-debtor respondent, Balgobind Singh, to a security bond taken under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code for the costs of an appeal. The costs not having been paid the decree-holders applied in the course of the execution proceedings to enforce the security bond against the judgment-debtor and the sureties. On this application the Subordinate Judge made the following order:

"It seems to me that the security bond executed by the sureties Rajroop Singh and Rampal Singh cannot be enforced in the execution. The security was taken under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code after the passing of the decree in the original suit and during the pendency of an appeal in the High Court against that decree. The provisions of s. 253 of the Civil Procedure Code therefore do not apply to this case. I am inclined to think that section applies to those sureties only who have made themselves liable before the passing of the decree of the first Court in an original suit. This view is supported by the ruling in the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Phuljuri Koer (2). There is no other section in the Code under which the security bond may be enforced in execution of the decree. The pleader for the decree-holder argues that the second para. of ss. 582 and 583 [498] have the effect of extending the operation of s. 253 to sureties who become liable before the passing of the Appellate Court's decree. I do not think they have that effect. The application for execution against the sureties is disallowed."

From this order the decree-holders appealed on the grounds (a) that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that, the security having been taken under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code pending appeal, it could not be summarily executed, but that a separate suit must be brought; (b) that the summary procedure was applicable to a security bond like the present one given pending appeal as a security for the performance of the decree which might be passed on the appeal, inasmuch as a suit cannot be said to be finally decided until the disposal of the appeal; (c) that the case relied on by the Subordinate Judge was not applicable to the present case; and (d) that, there having been no objection to the summary procedure, the application should not have been wholly dismissed.

Baboo Karuna Sindhoo Mukerji, for the appellants referred to the case of Bans Bahadur Singh v. Mughla Begum (1).

Baboo Nil Madhub Sen, for the respondents relied on the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Phuljuri Koer (2).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Ghose, JJ.) was delivered by Ghose, J.—The question involved in this appeal is whether a security bond executed by a surety on behalf of an appellant for the costs of an appeal, under s. 549 of the Code of Civil Procedure, can be enforced against the surety in execution of the decree of the Appellate Court, without a separate suit being brought against him.

The lower Appellate Court has held that it cannot be so enforced, and has accordingly disallowed the application of the decree-holder.

The main contention in appeal before us has been that the surety, by reason of the security bond executed by him in the Appellate Court, became as it were a party to the appeal, and that when s. 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure directs [499] that the decree of an Appellate Court shall be executed according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits, it can be summarily executed against a surety in accordance with s. 253 of the Code.

(1) 2 A. 604.
(2) 12 C. 402.
In order to be able to deal satisfactorily with this contention, it may be necessary to refer to some of the provisions of the old Code, Act VIII of 1859. Section 204 of that Code ran as follows: "Whenever a person has become liable as security for the performance of a decree or any part thereof, the decree may be executed against such person to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable, in the same manner as a decree may be enforced against a defendant." Section 342 was in these words: "It shall be in the discretion of the Appellate Court to demand security for costs from the appellant or not, as it shall see fit, before the respondent is called upon to appear and answer, provided that the Court shall demand such security in all cases in which the appellant is residing out of the British territories in India, and is not possessed of any land or other immovable property within those territories independent of the property to which the appeal relates; and, in the event of such security not being furnished at the time of presenting the memorandum of appeal or within such time as the Court shall order, the Court shall reject the appeal." Section 362 provided that "application for the execution of the decree of an Appellate Court shall be made to the Court which passed the first decree in the suit, and shall be executed by that Court in the manner and according to the rules hereinbefore contained for the execution of original decrees."

Now, there can be very little doubt that, regard being had to the words of s. 204 as they stood in the old Procedure Code, the decree therein referred to would be a decree not only of the Court of first instance, but also a decree of the second Court (s. 204 read with s. 362); and it appears that it was held in several cases, both in this Court and in some of the other High Courts in India, that a security bond, executed by a surety for the costs of an appeal, could be enforced against him summarily in the execution department without a regular suit being brought for that purpose. If the words with which we are now concerned in the present Code of Civil Procedure—I mean the words of s. 253, to which I shall presently refer—were the same as those used in s. 204 of the old Code, there would not be any difficulty in accepting, the view which the appellant has placed before us. But it seems to us that the law upon this matter has been materially altered by s. 253 of the Code. That section runs thus: "Whenever a person has, before the passing of a decree in an original suit, become liable as surety for the performance of the same or of any part thereof, the decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable, in the same manner as the decree may be executed against a defendant." The words "a decree in an original suit" are significant enough as indicating the intention of the Legislature so far as the present question is concerned.

Now, looking to s. 380, Chap. XXIV, which contains the provisions, as regards security for costs, that may be required from the plaintiff in a suit in a Court of first instance, and to s. 253 just referred to, there can be no doubt that if a person becomes surety for a party before the passing of a decree in an original suit, he becomes, as it were, a party to the suit itself, and the security bond executed by him may be enforced in the same manner as a decree may be executed against a defendant.

The next section that has to be referred to in this connection is s. 549. This section empowers an Appellate Court to demand from the appellant, at its discretion, security for the costs of an appeal or of an original suit under certain circumstances; and it provides that if such security is not furnished when demanded within the appointed time, the Court shall reject the appeal. Then in s. 583 it is provided: "When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter, desires to obtain execution of the same, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred, and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal, according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of the decrees in suits."

When, therefore, a decree-holder applies to execute a decree of an Appellate Court, the Court shall execute it according to the [501] rule, prescribed for execution of decrees in suits; and we have to find out in Chap. XIX of the Civil Procedure Code the rules in accordance with which such a decree is to be executed. Now s. 253 is a section which occurs in Chap. XIX under the head "of the mode of executing decrees;"
and the question that arises is whether, in providing that a decree of an Appellate Court is to be executed in accordance with the rules prescribed for execution of decrees in suits, the Legislature intended that
s. 253, which expressly refers to a surety in an original suit, should be extended so as to bring in a surety, who becomes a surety in an Appellate Court, as if he were a party to the decree passed in appeal. It will be observed that s. 253 declares, in the first place, the liability of the surety, and, in the second place, the mode in which satisfaction can be had as against him; but this liability, as already noticed, is expressly declared in reference to a surety who becomes a surety in an original suit before the passing of a decree in that suit, and we are unable to say upon a consideration of the various portions of the Code that the provisions of this section can be extended and made applicable to cases not provided by the Code itself. There is no provision, so far as we have been able to discover, which prescribes expressly the liability of a surety who executes a bond in the course of an appeal in an Appellate Court. All that we find in s.
583, read with s. 549, is that an appellant is bound to furnish, when demanded by the Court, security for the costs of the respondent, and that where a decree is passed in an appeal, the decree of the Appellate Court is to be enforced in accordance with the rules prescribed for execution of decrees in suits. The decree of an Appellate Court is indeed to be executed according to the rules provided for execution of decrees in suits; but it does not follow from this that a surety who becomes a surety in an Appellate Court becomes liable by reason thereof as if he were a party to the Appellate Court's decree, and that the said decree can be executed against him summarily.

Then, again, if we look to s. 336, we find an instance in which a Court of first instance is empowered to demand security from a judgment-debtor who is brought up under a warrant; and in this case, if a security bond be executed for the purpose of getting [502] the judgmentdebtor discharged from arrest, a provision is made in this vise: "In the case of surety, such security may be realized in manner provided by s.
253." So that it seems to be perfectly plain that wherever the Legislature intended that a security bond might be enforced summarily without the intervention of a regular suit, it has distinctly provided for it; but in the case of a surety who becomes a surety in an Appellate Court we do not find such provision made. We think that it would be straining the law if we were to give effect to the contention of the appellant that the surety in this case has become a party to the appeal, and that, in accordance with
s. 253, the security bond can be enforced against him summarily. Our attention has been called to a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Bans Bahadur Singh v. Mughla Begum (1), where a majority of three Judges against two held that under the provisions of ss. 602, 603, and 610 of the Code execution could be had against a surety for the costs of an appeal to the Privy Council in accordance with s. 253; but we are not prepared to take the same view of the matter. We are rather inclined to agree with the minority of the Judges who composed the Full Bench, and with the decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court upon the same question in the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Phuljuri Koer (2).

For these reasons we think that the judgment of the Court below is right, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

When a decree or order makes a sum of money payable by instalments, on certain dates, and provides that, in default of payment of any instalment, the whole of the money shall become due and payable and be recoverable in execution, by art. 178, Sch. II of the Limitation Act, limitation begins to run from the date of the first default, unless the right to enforce payment in default has been waived by subsequent payment of the overdue instalment on the one hand and receipt on the other.

R, obtained a decree against D. C. and K. G. for a sum of money on 21st June 1880. On 25th May 1882 an order was made in terms of the petition of both parties, providing that the amount of the decree should be paid by five instalments, the first instalment being due in July 1882, and that in default of payment of any instalment the whole amount should be due and recoverable in execution. Default was made in payment of the first instalment, nor was there any subsequent payment of that or any other instalment.

On 30th July 1886 R applied for execution of the four last instalments alleging that the first had been paid.

APPEL.

CIVIL.

15 C. 502.

This was an appeal against the order of the lower Appellate Court by which it affirmed an order of the Munsif, refusing to issue execution on the ground that the application was barred by limitation.

Mon Mohun Roy (the decree-holder) on the 21st June 1880 obtained a decree against Durga Churn Gooee and Kally Prosuno Gooee (judgment-debtors) for arrears of rent. On the 25th May 1882, upon the petition of both parties, an order was made providing that the judgment-debtors should pay to the decree-holder the amount of the decree by five instalments, and that in default of payment of any one instalment, the entire amount of the decree should become recoverable by proceedings in execution. The first instalment fell due in July 1882; the second in September 1883; the third in April 1884; the fourth in October 1884; and the fifth in April 1885.

On 30th July 1886 the decree-holder applied to the Munsif for execution of the last four instalments, it being alleged that the first had been paid.

The Munsif found that the first instalment had not been paid, and that, therefore, default had been made in the payment of an instalment in July 1882, more than three years before the date of the application for execution, and that no subsequent payment had been made. He, accordingly, held that the application was barred under art. 178, Sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1878.

On appeal the Judge upheld the finding of the Munsif; and dismissed the appeal on the grounds that it was barred by limitation, and that the Munsif could not make the order of 25th May 1882 by reason of art. 175, Sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1878.

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Gurudas Banerjee, for the appellant.

Baboo Kalikissen Sen, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and O’Kinealy, J.J.) after stating the above facts continued as follows:—

Two points have been decided in the lower Court: first, it has been held that the order for payment by instalments made in May 1883 was improperly made on the ground that more than six months had elapsed after the date of the original decree. I do not think this is sustainable, inasmuch as the order was made with the consent and on the application of both parties, and it is not open to either to say now that it was an improper order. But the lower Court has decided, secondly, that the application is out of time on the ground that in July 1882, when the first default was made, the whole of the money secured by the decree became payable, and might have been recovered by execution, and that the present application was barred by the provisions of art. 179, sub-s. 6 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. I think it unnecessary, and it would be unprofitable, to enquire how we might decide a question of this kind if it were a new question, for it is a question which has arisen many times in the course of a number of years. And in a matter of this kind it is all important that the current of [505] decisions should be uniform and consistent, and that it should be strictly adhered to.

I understand the authorities thus: First, it is a general rule that where a decree or order makes a sum of money payable by instalments on certain dates, and provides that, on default in payment of one of the instalments, the whole of the money shall then become due and payable, and be recoverable in execution, then under art. 178 of the Limitation Act already mentioned, as under corresponding articles in earlier Acts, limitation commences to run when the first default is made. The principle was laid down in the case of Hurronath Roy v. Maheroolah Mollah (1) by a Full Bench. That was a case, not of execution, but of a suit upon a bond payable by instalments, and what was laid down was this: "Under these circumstances we are of opinion that limitation did run from the time when default was made in the payment of the first instalment, in consequence of which the whole amount became due." Under the successive Limitation Acts the same question has arisen very often. In the case of Dulook Rattan Chand v. Chugon Narain (2) the question was considered with reference to execution, and Westropp, C. J., and Melville, J., held that limitation began to run from the date of the first default. The same question came before the Allahabad High Court in the case of Shib Datt v. Kalka Prasad (3), and the same conclusion was arrived at. The same view was taken by a Bench of this Court in the matter of Cheni Bash Shaha v. Kadum Mundul (4), and again in Asmutullah Dalal v. Kaly Churn Mitter (5).

There has, however, been engrafted upon that general rule an exception in certain cases. That exception I understand to be this, that if the right to enforce payment of the whole sum due upon default being made in the payment of an instalment has been waived, by subsequent payment of the overdue instalment on the one hand and receipt on the other, then, the penalty having been waived, the parties are remitted to the same position as they would have been in if no default had occurred. It is only necessary to [506] refer to two cases upon this point; one is Nil Madhuk Chuckerbutty v. Ram Sodoy Ghose (6). There the overdue instalments up to a certain date have been paid, and it was held that that being so, limitation would only run from the latter period, the first default having been waived. The same view was taken by Petheram, C. J., and Cunningham, J., in Ram Culpo Bhattacharji v. Ram Chunder Shome (7). There again the prior instalments were paid and received, the penalty being thus waived, and a fresh period of limitation was held to run. On the other hand in the case already referred to of Cheni Bash Shaha v. Kadum Mundul (4) the distinction is expressly taken between a waiver by payment and receipt of an overdue instalment, and a mere omission to sue or take steps on the default; and it was held that, although there may be a waiver by the payment and receipt of the overdue instalment, there could be none by the mere fact of doing nothing.

These authorities are quite consistent with one another. The only case which seems to me to conflict in any way with these cases is a case of Chunder Komul Das v. Bisassuree Dassia (8). There it does appear to me to have been held that, although in a case similar to the present defaults had occurred, and no subsequent payment had been made in respect of the kists in default, it was still open to the creditor to say that the provision making the whole sum payable on default of payment of one instalment was one only for his protection, and that he might afterwards waive it and put it out of the way as regards the period of limitation. That seems to me irreconcilable, if I correctly understand it, with the current of decisions on the subject, and especially inconsistent with the decision in Cheni Bash Shaha v. Kadam Mundul (1). I am disposed to think that there must have been some peculiarity in the case beyond what appears in the report, because the learned Judges cite as an authority in support of their view the case of Asmutullah Dalal v. Kally Churn Mitter (2), which appears to me, as I understand it, to be an authority for the contrary view. The result is that in my opinion there is an overwhelming [507] preponderance of authority in favour of the proposition that limitation runs from the date of the first default in the payment of an instalment, and that the present application for execution is barred by limitation. On that ground the decision of the lower Court can be supported, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson.

Costs—Practice—Costs of reference to High Court—Small Cause Court Act (Act XV of 1882), s. 69—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 220, 617, 620.

Under s. 620 of the Civil Procedure Code, the costs of a reference to the High Court cannot be dealt with separately, but must be dealt with when awarding the costs of the suit. They are, however, in the discretion of the Court, and need not necessarily follow the event of the suit.

On the 10th August 1887, this suit, which was one to recover money on a breach of contract, was, on the ground that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, and that there was a variance between the pleadings and the proofs, dismissed by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, subject to the opinion of the High Court on certain points referred to it.

At the hearing of this reference Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy reversed the decision of the learned Chief Judge on the points above mentioned, and remanded the case to the Small Cause Court for re-hearing.

At the conclusion of the reference, Mr. Phillips, who appeared for the plaintiff, asked for the costs of the reference; the Court however, intimated that costs should be dealt with by the Small Cause Court, and therefore made no order as to costs.

On the day fixed by the Chief Judge for reading the opinion of the High Court on the reference, the plaintiff applied through his attorney to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court for cost of the reference, on the ground that he had been successful in the High Court. The defendant, through his attorney, objected and contended that the Small Cause Court was bound by s. 620 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the costs must be costs in [508] the case. The learned Chief Judge decided that the plaintiff was entitled to costs and made an order to that effect.

The defendant thereupon applied to the High Court to have that order set aside; and Mr. Justice Trevelyan granted to the defendant a rule nisi and called for the record of the case:

(1) 5 C. 97.

(2) 7 C. 56.
At the hearing of this rule,—

Mr. Sale, appeared in support of the rule, and

Mr. Hill, to show cause.

Mr. Sale.—Section 620 of the Code applies to the Small Cause Court, and the case being still pending, it is not open to the Chief Judge to deal with the costs until the case is determined.

Mr. Hill.—If s. 320 is to be so read, then the practice of the High Court has up to the present time been wrong. Since 1883 there have been various orders of the High Court on references from the Small Cause Court, all of which dealt with costs. [Wilson, J.—If the Court had power to do so, it is only on the ground that a reference is an application under s. 218 or 220 of the Code.] Section 620 has reference to costs generally, irrespective of when the order is made. The word "case" in s. 617 may cover a suit or an appeal under s. 69 of the Small Cause Court Act. There are two classes of references, one by the Judge and not by the parties, and the other by the parties irrespective of the wishes of the Judge. Although this reference is stated to be under s. 617, yet that section does not refer to compulsory references which this reference is. Is this practice to prevail alike for both classes of reference? If costs consequent on the reference are to be costs in the case, then the High Court ought to make no order as to costs, but I find it has been the practice to do so; costs were given by the High Court in Maclin v. Weatherall, decided on the 14th January 1884; in Inderchund v. Puddun Singh, decided on the 11th December 1886; and in the Bombay Burmah Trading Co. v. Kanto Churn Ghose, all unreported cases. The phrase "costs in the case" is not a technical phrase; it has its origin in Act XXIII of 1861, but there it only referred to suits. I submit that the Legislature never intended that a reference which did not fall under s. 617, but under s. 69 of the Small Cause Court Act, should be governed by the rule laid down in s. 620. Is the rule laid down in s. 620 to [509] apply to references made by a Judge for his own guidance? I submit not, because it may well be that a party to a suit might be confident of success, and might for the purpose of harassing his adversary bring up the case time after time on reference. [Wilson, J.—I think s. 620 means that the costs shall be dealt with like any costs in the case not dealt with at the time, and although your client may possibly lose his case eventually, yet he might obtain his costs of the reference.] If the words "costs in the case" can be so read, I shall not press my argument. Then as to the costs of this present rule, as the High Court has hitherto dealt with the costs of references before it, and it has also been the practice of the Small Cause Court to allow them, I ought to have my costs.

ORDER.

Wilson, J.—The point raised in this matter is a small one, but it is desirable that it should be settled, because it is one which may be of frequent occurrence. What happened was this: A case came on before the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court in which a question arose which he referred to this Court, and which this Court decided in the plaintiff's favour, and it was directed that this case should go back to be decided on its merits. The matter came on again before the learned Chief Judge, who fixed a day dealing with the case on its merits, but in the meantime he made an order giving the plaintiff the costs of the reference to this Court. It is against that order that this rule has been obtained.
The question before me is the same as was raised before the learned Judge on behalf of the defendant, viz., whether the learned Judge had power to deal with the costs of the reference at this stage, or must dispose of them at a later stage when dealing with the costs generally. I think this objection is well founded. Section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act directs the manner in which, in certain cases, references are to be made to this Court, and by that section they are to be referred under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Now s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for references on questions of law by the Judge of an inferior Court who feels any doubt on such questions. But s. 69 of the Small Cause Court Act is somewhat wider, because the reference may be made whether [510] there is a doubt or not, but nevertheless the reference is to be, in express terms, under that section. Now, when the reference is under s. 617, the costs are provided for under s. 620 of the Civil Procedure Code, which says: “Costs, if any, consequent on a reference for the opinion of the High Court shall be costs in the case.”

Now the sole question here is what is the meaning of the words "costs in the case." On the one hand it is suggested that "the case," means "the reference," and that the costs of the reference may be dealt with as a thing apart. On the other hand a more extreme view is taken, namely, that the costs must follow the costs of the cause. Now I do not think that this can be the true meaning. The technical meaning of the words "costs in the case" is quite unknown in this country generally, costs of every separate application being dealt with in the discretion of the Judge when dealing with the costs of the case. I think the meaning of the words is plain. Section 617 allows a reference in the hearing of a suit or appeal, and under s. 620 the costs are to be costs in the case. I entertain no doubt that this means costs of the suit or appeal as in s. 617, s. 620 being the section under which the costs are dealt with, and the costs being made costs in the case. Turning to the sections dealing with the question of costs in suits, s. 220 provides "that the Court shall have full power to give and apportion costs of every application and suit in any manner it thinks fit, and the fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the case is no bar to the exercise of the power." And then comes the only proviso I think which makes costs prima facie, but not I think necessarily, abide the result of the suit: “Provided that if the Court directs that the costs of any application or suit shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing.”

Now these costs, therefore, under s. 620 are in the same position as costs of a suit under s. 220. The costs of an application may be dealt with separately or reserved, but the costs of a suit can only be dealt with once and for all, viz., at the termination of the suit.

The result is that I think this order is wrong, and the costs of the reference must be decided when the case is decided; but I desire [511] to say that when the learned Judge comes to deal with the costs of the reference he will not necessarily be bound to give them to the party who succeeds in the suit. He will be at perfect liberty to give them on their own merits. In the result this order directing the defendant to pay the costs of the reference must be set aside, and the applicant must have his costs of this rule.

Rule made absolute.

Attorney for defendant: Mr. Leslie.

Ishan Muchi and Others v. The Queen-Empress.*

Receiving stolen property—Evidence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411.

To constitute the offence of receiving stolen property, there must be some proof that some person other than the accused had possession of the property before the accused got possession of it.

[Diss., 1 L.B.R. 39 (41); Appr., 15 A. S. 317-13 A.W.N. 101.]

Ishan Muchi, Ananda Muchi, Tushti Muchi, Bonomali Muchi and Istambar Muchi were tried by the Sessions Judge of Jessore for the offence of receiving stolen property, first, in respect of property belonging to one Taramoni Baishnavig; and, secondly, in respect of property belonging to another person of the name of Nimai Karikar. There were two trials and a conviction in each.

The facts of the first case were as follows: About midnight on the 16th June 1887 Taramoni Baishnavig was awaked by knocks at her door. She got up, lit a lamp, and called to a neighbour, but got no reply; she heard the sound of pots knocked about, and the voices of two neighbours talking. She called to them and to other neighbours, but got no satisfactory replies, till at length the chowkidar was sent for, who came with two neighbours, Mohun Das and Nado Kapali.

[812] She found a pillow torn up in her verandah; but these men after a cursory view left her. After staying about an hour in the verandah she entered her house, and was about to shut the door when two men entered, the foremost of whom resembled one Sona Kapali, and the second resembled one Ghulam Kahar in his voice. They put out the light, and one of them pulled off a gold bracelet from her wrist. They told her to go outside; and she went to her neighbour Nobin Dass’s house. From there she saw several men go southward from her house past his, carrying a tin box. The tin box (which was a rather large one) contained two small wooden boxes, in which was a large quantity of jewellery. The wooden frame work, in which the tin box was, was found broken in the yard; and next morning the tin box and the two small boxes were found in the field opened. All the jewellery, which she valued at Rs. 308-10, was gone.

Next day, Taramoni complained to the Police, and they came to investigate on 19th June; but nothing material was discovered till 27th June. On 28th June the Sub-Inspector searched the house of the accused Ananda Muchi; and the Inspector searched the houses occupied by the other accused. Ananda lived in Paltadanga, and the other accused in Raghunathpur, about five miles apart. These villages are some miles distant from Gilapol, where Taramoni lives.

The prosecution proved that in Ananda’s house, in a cowhouse, were found buried in the ground, beneath a heap of cowdung, a silver girdle and some other ornaments. In the house occupied by Ishan Muchi

* Criminal Appeal No. 16 of 1888 against the order passed by F. E. Pargiter, Esq., Sessions Judge of Jessore, dated the 2nd of December 1887, (?) committed for trial to the Court of Sessions by Baboo Kader Nath Biswas, Deputy Magistrate of Jhenidah, dated 2nd August 1887. were found hidden inside a pillow case two chains of a gold necklace and some gold "cocoanut flower" ornaments, and inside a pot of kalai were found one chain of a gold necklace and some "cocoanut flower" ornaments. In a heap of earth beneath the cave of Tushti Muchi's house were found one chain of a gold necklace and some "cocoanut flower" ornaments. Nothing was found in the house occupied by Bonomali and Istanbar Muchi. The chains were all alike and the "cocoanut flowers" were also all alike. Taramoni identified them and the girdle as her property, which was stolen on the night of the robbery. The accused all admitted the property was found as stated by the prosecution, but denied all knowledge of it.

[513] The facts of the second case were very similar.

In both cases the Court found Ishan, Ananda and Tushti Muchi guilty under s. 411 of the Penal Code of dishonestly receiving stolen property; and sentenced them in the first case to three, five and one year's rigorous imprisonment respectively, and in the second case to one year's rigorous imprisonment each.

Bonomali and Istanbar Muchi were acquitted in both cases.

The Court directed the restoration of the stolen property to Taramoni Baishnavi and Nimai Karikar.

Ishan, Ananda and Tushti Muchi appealed to the High Court.
No one appeared on the appeal.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Pigott, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The prisoners are convicted of dishonestly receiving stolen property, first, under s. 411, in respect of the goods belonging to one person, and, second, in respect of goods belonging to another.

They were separately tried and sentenced on each of these charges.

There is no proof against them save the fact that the goods found in their possession were stolen from different persons, and were found in their possession under such circumstances as to prove a guilty knowledge on their part.

There is no proof as to their receipt of the goods; nothing to show that they received them at different times or from different persons. All the goods in the possession of each prisoner may have been stolen by the same thief, and may have been by him delivered to that prisoner at the same time, although stolen on different occasions.

If each prisoner received the goods found in his possession together at the same time, that would constitute only one offence.

There is nothing in the fact that the goods were stolen at different times, to constitute by itself proof that they were received at different times, or under such circumstances as to show that more than one offence was committed in receiving them.

It need not be considered whether, if a thief brought to a receiver, say, a coat and a ring stolen from different persons, and [514] on the same occasion gave them to the receiver, if he said—"Here is a coat stolen from A, take this," and the receiver took it, and also "here is a ring stolen from B, take this," and the receiver took it, these acts would or would not constitute different offences, because there is nothing to show that such a case existed here.

Here there is nothing but possession of stolen property found concealed established; and this is consistent with only one offence having been committed, so far as receiving is concerned; but in truth the offence proved is only the retaining of stolen goods.

In this case, as observed, there is no proof of actual receiving; and it has been held in England (2 Russell on Crimes, citing R. v. Cordy) that to constitute the offence of receiving there must be some proof that some person other than the prisoner had possession of the goods before the prisoner got possession of them; otherwise, possession of them is only proof of the stealing, which is not found here (1):

If this rule prevails under the Penal Code (and we see no reason why it should not), the prisoners should have been convicted of the retention of stolen goods, knowing or having reason to believe that they were stolen, of the existence of which knowledge or belief their concealment of the goods was evidence.

We, therefore, set aside the conviction in the second trial. The conviction in the first case we also set aside, and in lieu thereof we convict the prisoners under the same section (411) of dishonestly retaining stolen property, and sentence the prisoners on the findings in the first case, Ishan to four years, Ananda to six years, and Tushti to two years,—all in rigorous imprisonment.

Conviction and sentences varied.

[515] PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:
Lord Watson, Lord Hobhouse, Sir B. Peacock, and Sir R. Couch.
[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

MADHO SINGH (Plaintiff) v. AJUDHIYA SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants.) [4th and 7th February, 1888.]

Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868), ss. 41 and 83, cl. 4—Liability of lessees in the position of under-proprietors not entitled to sub-settlement—The Oudh Sub-Settlement Act (XXVI of 1866)—The Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876), s. 158.

A decree, in 1869, of a Settlement Court, upon the compromise of a claim, made by village co-parcenary occupiers, to an order for sub-settlement as against the talukdar, declared the claimants to be entitled to a heritable, but not transferable, lease of the village, at a rent leaving twelve per cent, profit to the lessees. For default in payment of rent this lease was decreed to be in future liable to cancellation “by the decree of any competent Court, according to any law which may be in force in Oudh with respect to persons holding an underproprietary right in land.” Afterwards, in 1879, the parties agreed that the lessees might be dispossessed for non-payment of rent. Default occurred, decrees for arrears were made in 1882 and 1883, and remained unsatisfied. In a rent suit brought by the talukdar, held, that he could not sue in a Revenue Court to have the lease cancelled, under the terms of the Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868), either by virtue of the decree, or of the subsequent agreement.

Appeal from a decree (9th April 1885) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (18th September 1883) of the Commissioner of Rae Bareli, affirming a decree (23rd June 1883) of the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur.

(1) See the case of Empress v. Uttom Koondoo, 8 C. 634, where, however, the point does not seem to have been taken.—Ed.

In the suit out of which this appeal arose the present appellant sued the first respondent and twenty-four other defendants for cancellation of a lease to them of a village, Chak Pindaria, pargunnah Amethi, in zillah Sultanpur; and also for possession.

The terms of the lease were stated in a decree (2nd October 1869) of a Settlement Court; and were followed ten years afterwards by an agreement executed between the parties on 18th March 1879.

The present proceedings having been taken by the talukdar on non-payment of decrees for rent, under the Oudh Rent Act [516] (XIX of 1868), the question now was whether they were authorised under that Act, of which s. 83 states in cl. 4 that suits "for the ejectment of a tenant, or for cancelling any lease on account of the non-payment of arrears of rent, or on account of a breach of the conditions of such lease," may be brought under it.

The lease originated thus: In 1869 a claim was made before a settlement officer by the present respondents, who were villagers occupying mouzah Pindaria in co-parcenary, for sub-settlement of that village to be made with them and as between them and the Raja of Amethi, in whose taluk the village, which he held in manaaf was situate. The claim as made was not allowed, not fulfilling the requirements of the rules regarding sub-settlements and other subordinate rights of property in Oudh, which are scheduled and made law by the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act (XXVI of 1866). By those rules, to entitle a claimant to sub-settlement, he must show that he possesses an under-proprietary right; and also that he, or some person from whom he has inherited, has by virtue of that under-proprietary right, and not merely through privilege granted on account of service, or by favour of the talukdar, held the land under contract (theka) with some degree of continuousness since the village came into the taluka. He also must have been entitled to profits exceeding twelve per cent. of the gross rental. However, in regard to this, a decree (2nd October 1869) was made in terms of an agreement to which the parties came, similar to another agreement between the Raja and other village claimants in the neighbouring mouzah of Thauraj, viz., that the villagers should have a heritable but not transferable lease of mouzah Pindaria, the rent to be fixed at a sum which would leave the lessees twelve per cent. of the profits, provided that the jumma for the first ten years was to be Rs. 2,999. The amount of the lease on the twelve per cent. principle was open to be re-determined at the expiration of every ten years, and the Raja was to be responsible for payment of putwaris, chowkidari, and other village expenses. No fresh title was to accrue to the lessees owing to the concession, and the lease itself was to be liable to "cancellation for default by the decree of any competent Court, according to any law which might be from time to time [517] in force in Oudh with respect to persons holding an under-proprietary right in land."

On the 18th March 1879, the villagers being then in arrear, a written agreement, in which they described themselves as "thekadars" of village Pindaria, was made between them and the Raja as follows:—

"Whereas up to this date the arrears of rent, decreed and not decreed, on account of joint lease of village Pindaria, amounting to Rs. 3,757, are due from all co-sharers of the aforesaid village within the period of limitation, and in consequence thereof, we are liable to be dispossessed at once by the Court; but as the Raja Madho Singh Bahadur has, at our request, granted us time, hence we, of our own will and consent, do execute this deed of agreement on our own behalf and on behalf of such of our under-co-sharers as live in commensality with us, or over whose share we hold possession, and hereby covenant that we shall repay the aforesaid money without interest in accordance with the instalments specified below. Should there be breach of promise on our part as regards the payment of any of the instalments, the Raja Saheb Bahadur shall be at liberty to annul the arrangement about payment by instalments and to recover the money out of our property of all description, charging us at the same time with interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from this date, and in return for this default to eject us and our co-sharers from the lease of the entire village through the Civil Court, or in any other way he may be able to do it, without following the rules (of procedure) laid down in the Rent Act, and after such ejectment it shall not be lawful and proper for us to cultivate any land, or take the fruits and flowers of any fruit-tree, without previously obtaining a fresh lease. Should we do so, then, according to the actual capability of the soil, rent at the rate of Rs. 7 per bigha for land producing two crops in a year, Rs. 3-8 per bigha for land yielding one crop in a year, and As. 8 for each Mahua tree may be recovered from us; and the Maharaja Saheb Bahadur shall in future be at liberty to dispossess us of that (land and tree) also, and in each year, until the rent instalment for that year shall be paid up, the money paid by us shall not be credited on account of this agreement.”

[818] Afterwards on 20th April 1882 the Raja obtained a decree against the villagers for Rs. 2,534, arrears of rent; and again on 27th February 1883 a similar decree for Rs. 1,865. The plaint in the present suit prayed for possession of Pindaria under cl. 4, s. 83 of the Oudh Rent Act, for non-payment of rent, amounting to Rs. 10,241, with cancellation of the lease.

The defence was that the defendants were prepared to pay all the arrears really due, but were not liable to the extent alleged. At the hearing before the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur, an issue was fixed raising the question whether the defendants were liable to have the lease cancelled and to be dispossessed on proceedings under the Oudh Rent Act, 1868, either under the terms of the settlement decree of 1869, or of the agreement of 18th March 1879.

The Deputy Commissioner held that neither such cancellation nor dispossess could be decreed under the Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868), its terms not being applicable to such a lease.

The Commissioner of Rae Bareli, on appeal, first dealing with the agreement of 1879, decided that its breach was not matter for a Revenue Court. He then considered the question of the outstanding arrears of rent, whether they were a cause of suit under Act XIX of 1868, and concluded that they were not. On this point his judgment was as follows:

"The question whether the respondents are liable to ejectment under the Oudh Rent Act on account of the outstanding arrears of rent under the two decrees of 1882 and 1883 still remains to be decided. Section 41 and cl. 4 of s. 83 refer to tenants only, and not to under-proprietors, and one of the stipulations of the decree under which the perpetual lease is held is 'that the lease is liable to cancellation for default by decree of any competent Court, according to any law which may be from time to time in force in Oudh with respect to persons holding an under-proprietory right in land.'"
"Now the Oudh Rent Act was in force when the lease was ratified, and it could hardly have been the intention of the Courts sanctioning such lease to allow ejectment under [519] s. 41* and cl. 4 of s. 83. Had the above-quoted stipulation been absent the lessees might be regarded in the position of tenants, and ejectment under cl. 4 of s. 83 for outstanding arrears might have been justified; but in the face of this stipulation they must be treated as under-proprietors are treated. Under-proprietors cannot be ejected under s. 41 and cl. 4, s. 83, hence the respondents cannot be so ejected either.

"It is contended that by such a decision all remedy on the part of the appellant against the respondents is practically barred, but s. 158 of Act XVII of 1876 provides, in my opinion, a very sufficient and effective remedy, and it is under that section that appellant should have proceeded instead of allowing hopeless arrears to accumulate as he has done. It is fortunate for the respondents that their lease is a non-transferable one under existing circumstances."

On an appeal to the Judicial Commissioner this judgment was upheld. The Additional Judicial Commissioner, Mr. T. B. Tracy, referred specially to an argument for the appeal based upon the language of s. 41 of the Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868); and held that the defendants were not placed on the footing, as regards liability to be sued under the Rent Act, of tenants with rights of occupancy. The decree of 1862 treated them as on the footing of under-proprietors. In regard to the words of the decree as to cancellation for default by the decree of any Court according to the law on the subject of persons holding under-proprietary rights, his judgment was as follows:

"If it had been the intention of the Settlement Court that the respondents should be on the footing of tenants with rights of occupancy (as contended for the appeal), all this part of the decree would be mere surplusage, as the superior-proprietors [520] could, as a matter of course, sue for the ejectment of the lessees under the provisions of the Rent Act on the occurrence of any breach in the conditions of the lease. It was clearly the intention of the Settlement Court that the respondents should be treated in case of default as defaulting under-proprietors, and that the lease should be liable to be cancelled in the same way and under the same rules as sub-settlements might be annulled. I concur with the Commissioner that the appellant’s proper remedy lay in proceeding under s. 158 of Act XVII of 1876. The respondents’ tenure is precisely that which is described in that section. They hold ‘under a heritable, non-transferable lease, the rent payable under which has been fixed by the Settlement Officer.’"

The appeal was accordingly dismissed, and the decree dismissing the suit upheld.

On this appeal Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the appellant.

The respondents did not appear.

*Section 41 of Act XIX of 1868 is as follows: "No tenant having a right of occupancy, or holding under an unexpired lease, or special agreement, or decree of Court, shall be ejected otherwise than in execution of decree for ejectment: provided that, if the tenant have a right of occupancy in the land from which the landlord desires to eject him, the decree shall not be made unless at the date of the decree a decree against such tenant for an arrear of rent in respect of such land has remained unsatisfied for fifteen days or upwards."
For the appellant it was argued that the respondents, not having obtained a decree for, or shown themselves entitled to, sub-settlement, and having admitted, both by the agreement of 1879 and in the course of the proceedings throughout, that they were liable to ejectment upon default in payment of arrears of rent, were in the position, as regards liability to be sued, of occupancy tenants. This was not altered by the words in the decree of 1862 referring to their liability as under-proprietors. Neither at the time of the decree nor afterwards was there any law, if not that which the plaintiff invoked, that was peculiar to the case of the latter. The Courts below should have held that the Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868) was applicable. The term “under-proprietor,” as used in the decree of 1862 must be understood in a large sense, as comprehending all rights inferior to the proprietary right.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment, after counsel for the appellants had been heard, was delivered by Sir B. Peacock.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the three Courts below, who were unanimous in their judgments, are correct in the opinions which they have formed. It is clear that under the [521] decree, by way of compromise, the parties had not a right to cancel the lease under the terms of the Rent Act.

With regard to the agreement, their Lordships are of opinion that the Courts below were right in holding that the plaintiff could not seek to enforce that agreement by suing in the Rent Court. His only remedy would have been to have sued in the Civil Court upon that agreement.

Under these circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the Judicial Commissioner.

Appeal dismissed.

SARDHARI LAL (Plaintiff) v. AMBIKA PERSHAD (Defendant).
[8th February, 1888.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 11—Code of Civil Procedure, ss. 278, 280, 283—Investigation of claim to attached property.

A decree-holder, against whom the release of property, attached in execution of his decree, has been ordered, after investigation under s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is limited by art. 11 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, the Indian Limitation Act, to one year within which to institute a suit to establish that the property is that of his judgment-debtor.

The extent to which the “investigation” required by s. 280 should be carried depends upon the circumstances of the case.
Appeal from a decree (16th December 1884) of the High Court, affirming a decree (28th December 1882) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore.

The principal question raised by this appeal was whether the suit was barred by limitation under Act XV of 1877, sect. II, and this depended, according to the appellant's case, upon two others, viz., first, whether or not a decree-holder, against whom an order under s. 280, Civil Procedure, has been passed, and who attempts to establish, in a suit under s. 283, that the attached property is, in fact, the property of the judgment-debtor, is bringing a suit to establish his right within [522] the meaning of art. 11; secondly, whether the required "investigation" had been made in this case, before the order had issued, under s. 280, releasing the property; for if none had been made, that order would have given no starting point to limitation.

Article 11 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act prescribes that a suit "by a person against whom an order is passed under ss. 280, 281,282, or 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure to establish his right to, or to the present possession of, the property comprised in the order" shall be brought within one year from the date of the order.

The sections of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to are the following:—

"278. If any claim be preferred to or any objection be made to the attachment of any property attached in execution of a decree, on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant or objector, and in all other respects as if he was a party to the suit."

"280. If upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that for the reason stated in the claim or objection such property was not when attached in the possession of the judgment-debtor, or of some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment-debtor, at such time it was so in his possession not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of, or in trust for, some other person, or partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall pass an order for releasing the property wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit from attachment."

"283. The party against whom an order under ss. 280,281, or 282 is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive."

The present suit arose out of the execution applied for in 1877 of a decree (14 May 1877) against Bishen Mohun Singh [523] and Ruder Mohun Singh upon a mortgage of their family estate executed in 1869 by their deceased father, Nandial, for Rs. 24,621; they having, also, stated accounts, since Nandlal's death, with the mortgagee, and paid part of the debt. The decree was that the mortgaged properties should be sold, and that if they should not realize enough to pay the debt, the balance should be realized out of the estate of Nandlal. The family estate having been attached, the sale was fixed for 1st October 1877, but postponed on objections made from time to time. On the 19th July 1880 the two sons and wife and minor grandson of the judgment-debtor Bishen Mohun Singh, and the wife and minor son of the other judgment-debtor, Ruder Mohun Singh, objected by petition to the sale, on the ground that they had not been made parties to the decree about to be executed, which was for a personal debt due by the judgment-debtors. They alleged that their interests in the ancestral property were not liable to be sold, and that at most "only the partitioned rights and interests of the judgment-debtors should be sold, the rights and interests of the objectors being exempt."

On this the order (31st July 1880) was that the property should be released on the ground of its being ancestral, and that only the judgment-debtor's right upon partition should be sold. The decree-holder, should he desire to bring that right to sale, was to file a new inventory within two days. This not having been done, an order was made in the following December, striking the suit off the file.

An application for a review was subsequently rejected by the Subordinate Judge. The decree-holder then applied to the High Court to call for the record under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code. This the High Court did, but having found no illegality, or material irregularity, in the proceedings, they dismissed the application.

The plaint in the present suit (20th May 1882) stated the facts, and claimed a declaration that the mortgage executed by Nandlal as head and manager of the family was binding on the defendants.

The defendants, other than Ruder Mohun Singh, set up limitation, the suit not having been brought within one year from 31st July 1880, the date of the order upon the claim for release.

[524] The Subordinate Judge having fixed an issue on the point decided that the suit was barred by art. 11. He said: "The plaintiff's pleader has argued at very great length that the Court should have determined specifically what share the claimants were in possession of and what share the judgment-debtors had and which was liable to sale; and as it did not do so, the order was not one which it could make under s. 280, and therefore art. 11 is not applicable. A number of rulings have been cited in support of the contention. It seems to me that had the contention been correct, the High Court would certainly have interfered under s. 622; but the High Court's order itself shows that the order made by the Subordinate Judge was within the exercise of his jurisdiction under s. 280."

The Subordinate Judge referred to Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeepnarain Singh (1); Rinarain Das v. Nownit Lal (2); Ram Sahai v. Sheo Pershad Singh (3). On appeal the High Court (Tottenham and O'Kinealy, J J.), holding that the order which led to this suit being instituted must be taken to have been passed under s. 280 of the Civil Procedure Code, affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the appellant.
The respondent did not appear.

For the appellant it was argued that the present suit, not being one to establish the plaintiff's right to the property, or to the present possession of the property comprised in the order of the 31st July 1880, did not fall within the meaning of the provisions of art. 11 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. Also there had been no investigation such as was required by s. 280. The order, therefore, purporting to have been made under that section should have been treated as a nullity, and not as an order from the date of which time could run. The case of Venkapa v. Chenbasapa (1) was referred to.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by [525] Lord Horhouse.—The sole question in this suit is whether it is brought in time to satisfy the exigencies of the Law of Limitation. The plaintiff's case is, that he was aggrieved by an order passed on the 31st of July 1880, and he now seeks to get rid of it in this suit. The order was passed in execution proceedings under the provisions of s. 280 of the Code of 1877, and the effect of it was to allow certain objections that had been lodged to an attachment obtained by the plaintiff in another suit in which he was plaintiff and decree-holder, and to release from attachment the property which at his instance had been attached and put up to sale. The plaintiff was entitled, under s. 283 of the Code, notwithstanding the order in question, to institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property then attached and put up to sale. But then it is provided by the eleventh article of the Limitation Act, Act XV of 1877, that a suit by a person against whom an order is passed under s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure to establish his right to the property comprised in the order must be brought within one year from the date of the order. Now this suit was not brought until the 20th May 1882, that is to say, about 22nd months after the date of the order. It is clearly therefore out of time unless it can be shown that for some reason or other the case does not fall within the article of the Limitation Law.

Two reasons have been suggested why their Lordships should hold that the case does not fall within the article. It is said that the article in question is aimed at orders passed against the persons who object to the attachment. But the answer is that it is aimed against persons who object to orders passed under s. 280; and it is not suggested that there can be any person against whom an order can be passed under s. 280 except the decree-holder himself. He therefore is the very person who by s. 283 is empowered to institute a suit to establish his claims, and who, by art. 11 of the Limitation Law, is confined to one year for the institution of that suit.

The other reason assigned is that s. 280 does not contemplate that any order shall be made until after an investigation which is directed by s. 278. The answer to that is that in [526] the first place we do not know what took place before the Subordinate Judge who made this order. It may have been that the parties who were before him agreed so far upon facts that he was enabled to deliver his opinion off-hand. But Besides that, the Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go; and though in some cases it may be very proper that there should be as full an investigation as if a suit were instituted for the very purpose of trying the question, in other cases it may also be the most prudent and proper course to deliver an opinion on such facts as are before the Subordinate Judge at the time, leaving the aggrieved party to bring the suit which the law allows to him. However that may be (and their Lordships do not desire to pronounce any opinion as to the extent of the investigation which is required under the Code), in this case the order was made; and it was an order within the jurisdiction of the Court that made it. It is not conclusive; a suit may be brought to claim the property, notwithstanding the order; but then the Law of Limitation says that the plaintiff must be prompt in bringing his suit. The policy of the Act evidently is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales, and for that reason a year is fixed as the time within which the suit must be brought.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this case falls within the scope of the eleventh article in question, and that the suit must fail upon that ground.

The result is that their Lordships agree with the Courts blow; they think that the appeal should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with that opinion.

Appeal dismissed.

[527] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Pigot.

IN THE MATTER OF SARBANANDA BASU MOZUMDAR AND ANOTHER (Petitioners) v. PRAN SANKAR ROY CHOWDHURI AND OTHERS (Opposite Party).* [20th February, 1888.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 145—Dispute as to right to collect rents—Tangible immovable property.

A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immovable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Harak Narain Singh v. Luchmi Bux Roy (1) and Sutherland v. Crowdy (2) referred to; Pramatha Bhusana Deb Roy v. Doonga Churn Bhattacharji (3) followed.

Where a dispute arose as to the right to collect the rents of certain land the ownership of which was claimed by both A and B, and the tenants who had been paying rent to A refused to pay rent to A and attorned to B, held that the conduct of the tenants in attorning to B was not an assertion of possession adverse to A such as to put an end to the relation of landlord and tenant between them and A and to A's right to collect the rents. Such attornment therefore did not deprive A of his right to have recourse to s. 145 in case of a likelihood of a breach of the peace, so as to have his possession of the right to collect the rents maintained, pending proceedings in a civil suit.

[For, 16 C. 513 (523); R., 12 C.W.N. 16 (22) = 35 C. 120; D., 23 C. 80 (84).]

This case arose out of a dispute concerning the right to collect the rents from the ryots of a piece of re-formed chur land in the district of Faridpore, called Shomaspur by the petitioners, and Dowlutdia by the opposite party.

In 1859 the river Padma flowed on the east of a group of temporary settled estates known as the Panchas Hazari Mehals. In midstream there was an island called Dowlutdia, which belonged to the Teota Rajahs (the opposite party to these proceedings). In this island there were a few small churs which did not belong to the Teota Rajahs; the chur on the extreme east [528] of the island was called Shomaspur, and belonged to Sarbananda Basu Mozumdar, one of the petitioners.

Between 1859 and 1875 the Padma had shifted its course, the island Dowlutdia had disappeared, and large accretions had formed contiguous to the Panchas Hazari Mehals. Beyond these accretions there was a narrow strip of land.

About 1877 the accretions, extending up to the main stream of the Padma, were at first settled to the Panchas Hazari Mehals; but subsequently all the lands on the east of the Western Boundary of the island of Dowlutdia were released to the Teota Rajahs with the exception of some portions, which were claimed by Sarbananda Baboo and a Mr. Renny.

All along a suti (a channel) ran through the relinquished tract from north to south. On the east of this suti, and a good way off from it, flowed the main stream of the Padma. Both these kept constantly shifting eastward until the suti occupied the position which the main stream of the Padma did in 1877. This suti was called Kootibaree suti in 1881, and is still known by that name. The main stream of the Padma at this time was about a mile on the east of the suti. The land in dispute lay between the Kootibaree suti and the river Padma, and began to re-form some time between 1877 and 1880.

The tenants on the disputed land paid rents to the Teota Rajahs, the opposite party, down to March or April 1886. Subsequently disputes arose between the tenants and the Rajahs, who tried to raise the rents. Being unable to obtain enhancement of rent from the tenants, the Rajahs declared the land to be their khas khamar, settled them with other tenants, and unsuccessfully endeavoured to oust the old and put the new tenants in possession. The tenants refused to pay any rents to the Rajahs and attorned to Sarbananda Basu and another, the petitioners, executing kabuliats, which were registered in the course of August 1886. In consequence of the threatening attitude of the parties, indicating a probability of a breach of the peace, proceedings under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure were instituted in October 1886.

Mr. W. H. Thomson, the Deputy Magistrate of Goalundo, found that on the 30th October 1886, the date the initial [529] proceedings were framed, the Teota Rajahs, the opposite party, were in possession by receipt of rent from the tenants as against the petitioners; and by his order of the 27th August 1887 passed under s. 145 ordered that the opposite party do remain in possession until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and forbade all disturbance of such possession until such eviction. He further ordered under s. 148 that the petitioners should pay the opposite party the sum of Rs. 1,500 as costs.
The Sessions Judge of Faridpore confirmed the order of 27th August 1887 on the 19th September.

The petitioners applied to the High Court under the revisional sections, and obtained a rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order of 27th August 1887 should not be set aside.

Mr. Evans and Mr. M. P. Gasper, Baboo Guru Dass Bannerjee and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for the petitioners.

The Advocate-General Mr. Paul, Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Ambica Churn Bose and Baboo Girija Sanker Mozumdar, for the opposite party.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Pigot, J.J.), was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This matter under s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, relates to nearly 10,000 bighas of chur land in the district of Faridpore. The parties are zamindars; and the question at issue is the right to receive rent from the cultivators. None of these ryots is a party to these proceedings. It has been found by the Magistrate, after a long and careful investigation, and in a well-considered judgment, that up to the end of the Bengali year, March or April 1886, the ryots on this chur paid rents to the Teota Rajahs, party No. 1; that subsequently disputes arose, and the Rajahs, being unable to obtain enhancement of rent from the tenants, declared the lands to be their khas khamar, and unsuccessfully endeavoured to make settlements with some other tenants for a portion, at least, of the lands. The tenants, on the other hand, told the Rajahs that they would not pay them any rents. The tenants probably finding themselves unable, unless supported by some person of influence, to resist the Teota Rajahs, put themselves into the hands of Sarbananda Basu and another, the second party to these proceedings, and attorned to them, executing kabuliats, which were registered in the course of August. In consequence of the threatening attitude of the parties indicating probability of a breach of the peace, proceedings under s. 145 were instituted in October 1886. It is unnecessary to refer to the cause of those proceedings except to state that, on the 27th August 1887, the Sub-divisional Officer of Goalundo found that the first party, the Teota Rajahs, were in possession by receipt of rent from the tenants as against the second party.

The main objections taken before us as a Court of Revision are that this dispute between zamindars with respect to land occupied or held by tenants is not properly cognizable under s. 145, and that, if cognizable, on the findings of the Magistrate, the second party was entitled to be declared to be in possession.

The first contention is founded upon a construction of the section in the present Code similar to that adopted at one time by Phear, J., with respect to s. 530 of the old Code—that is, that the section is applicable only to cases of actual or manual possession, such as that of ryots.

That was not, however, the construction of the words of the section, which finally prevailed in this Court. Under s. 530 it was, as Jackson, J., said in Harak Narain Singh v. Luchmi Bux Roy (1), "settled law that the section contemplates disputes between owners as well as occupiers of land," following in this respect Sutherland v. Crowdy (2), and he pointed out in that case that this construction of the section is in conformity with the policy of the law as shown in previous legislation on this subject.

It is argued that the introduction into the present s. 145 of the word "tangible" before the words "immoveable property" indicates that actual possession is alone contemplated by it. As to this, we can but adopt and follow the language of Field, J., in Pramatha Bhusan Deb Roy v. Doorga Churn Bhutteharji (1). We think that a dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immoveable property under s. 145. There can be no question that disputes regarding the exercise of this right are most fruitful causes of disturbance, especially in newly formed alluvial lands, such as are the subject of the proceedings now before us. We have no doubt that it is the policy of the law that Magistrates should have summary jurisdiction to pass temporary orders in such matters so as to prevent the occurrence of serious breaches of the peace. We are so strongly impressed with this view that, had the decision of another Division Bench been to the contrary, we should have felt it our duty to refer the matter to a Full Bench.

As to the second objection, it is contended that, inasmuch as the tenants had attorned to the second party, the first party had ceased to be in possession, and that consequently the order of the Magistrate in their favour should be set aside; that the previous existing tenancy had been determined by the action of the Teota Rajahs in declaring the lands to be their khas khamar; and next that, even if this were not sufficient to determine the tenancy, the conduct of the tenants in attorning to the second party would be an assertion of possession adverse to the Teota Rajahs, such as to put an end to any previously existing relations between them and the Rajahs, and, with them to the existence of such a right to collect the rents as is within the section. We do not think so. No doubt a zamindar and his tenants might, by agreement, determine any relation of landlord and tenant existing between them. But the acts of the two parties, the Rajahs and the tenants in the matter before us certainly cannot be construed as constituting such an agreement between them. The attornment by the tenants to the second party is not shown to have been even known to the Rajahs until after the proceedings under s. 145 were instituted. We regard the acts done by the Teota Rajahs and the tenants in this way: The Rajahs endeavoured to terminate the tenancy in a manner which was wholly unlawful, and in this they were opposed by the tenants, and were unsuccessful in obtaining from them a surrender of their lands. Under such circumstances, the original tenancy still subsisted, and the tenants in possession of the lands remained liable to pay rent as heretofore. The subsequent acts of the tenants in repudiating as their landlords the Teota Rajahs, and in attorning to the second party to these proceedings, could not by themselves alone operate so as to determine their tenancy. As has already been stated, no notice was given to the Rajahs that the tenants had put an end to their tenancy under them. We need not consider what the effect of such notice, if any, might have been.

It was argued that the decision of the Magistrate was wrong, as involving the acceptance of this proposition; that the right of a zamindar to come in under this section must exist, even though the payment of rent has been withheld from him for years, so long as his right to recover it by proceedings-at-law can be shown; and that such a proposition cannot be accepted, as it cannot be supposed that questions of title were intended to come before a Magistrate for decision under this section. There may be great force in that argument, and the Magistrate, so far as he adopted this view, may have been wrong. The point need not be decided by us in this case, and we do not decide it. Here the rent was paid down to just before the dispute between the Rajahs and the ryots which led to the proceeding under s. 145, Code of Criminal Procedure; and upon the dispute taking place, they attorned by real or pretended payments of rent to a stranger. The question on the second branch of the case is, whether such a proceeding by the tenants of a zamindar can deprive him of recourse to this section in case of danger to the peace, to have his possession of the right to collect rents maintained, pending civil proceedings; and we must determine that question in the negative.

Having regard to the length and character of the proceedings before the Magistrate, we are of opinion that his order regarding costs should stand.

The rule must, therefore, be discharged.

GANGA NARAIN GUPTA (Plaintiff) v. TILUCKRAM CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS (Defendants). [7th February, 1888.]

Plain Form of—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 50 and 53, sub-section (d)—Charges of fraud—Pleading—Amendment of plaint—rejection of plaint.

A plaint charging fraud must set forth particulars; general allegations, however strong the words, not even amounting to an averment of fraud of which a Court can take notice.

After an examination of the plaintiff's pleader by the Court to discover whether there were grounds, which did not appear, for an amendment, a suit was dismissed on the defects of the plaint, which, charging fraud, did not set forth a good cause of action in regard to the above.

Held, that dismissal was not the proper mode of disposal of the suit; but the plaint should have been rejected, a course which would have enabled the plaintiff, if he found himself at a future time in a position to make averments giving relevancy to an action, to present a fresh plaint.

Cas. 179 (180); 7 Ind. Cas. 255 (257).]

Appeal from a decree (1st June 1885) of the High Court, affirming a decree (15th April 1884) of the Subordinate Judge of Goalpara.

The question raised in the proceedings which gave rise to the suit in which this appeal was brought was as to the validity of an auction-sale in execution of a decree (25th April 1882), of which the first and second of the five respondents were the holders, the other respondents being the purchasers at the sale. The property sold (18th April 1883) was the plaintiff's interest in two separate shares in two zemindaries in the district, and they realized Rs. 21,500.
A petition by the present plaintiff to have this sale set aside under s. 311, on the ground that it had not been duly proclaimed, and that the execution purchasers had deterred others from bidding, was rejected (29th December 1882) and the High Court, McDonell and Tottenham, J.J., confirmed the order. The Judges said: "With regard to the point that the execution-purchasers had improperly deterred others from bidding for the [534] property, it may be that they did deter others, but even if they did so, this would not, we think, be an irregularity in conducting the sale within the meaning of s. 311. Certain rulings have been pointed out to us, in which the decree-holder, having obtained permission from the Court to bid at the sale, in one case, openly within hearing of the Court made disparaging remarks to deter others from bidding for the property; and in the other case, a mokhtar, in the interests of the decree-holder, directly discouraged other bidders by his talk. Regard being had to the fact that they were the decree-holders at whose instance the sales were being held, and that the Court ought to have interfered, it was held that there had been material irregularity in conducting them. We are not, however, prepared to hold that acts done by bidders or by by-standers at a public sale without the knowledge of the Court, or private understandings between intending bidders, will amount to irregularities in conducting it, such as will render it liable to be set aside under s. 311."

The plaintiff brought the present suit (18th December 1883) against the decree-holders and the auction-purchasers to have the sale set aside, and the property restored to him, on the ground that the latter had fraudulently and in collusion with the two decree-holders, prevented other persons from bidding at the sale, and so purchased the property for Rs. 21,500, the market value being Rs. 75,000. In separate written statements the defendants denied the fraud, urging that the plaint did not state distinctly how the fraud had been effected, and alleging that the value of the property did not exceed Rs. 21,500.

From the statements of the plaintiff's pleader, who was examined by the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff's case appeared generally to be that the auction-purchasers, whom he called the Gorgipore zemindars, had induced the decree-holders to sue for the debt due from the judgment-debtor and had done hostile acts against him, in reference to the land, the subject of the auction-sale in dispute. According to him, persons on behalf of the auction-purchasers had induced others not to bid at the sale.

The Subordinate Judge's judgment was to the effect that, even if the plaintiff could prove the statements in the plaint and those of his pleader, there would be nothing to justify [585] the Court in finding that the sale had been brought about by fraud; that it was stated that certain people, on behalf of the Gorgipore zemindars, went about inducing people not to bid; that that was exactly the ground the plaintiff took in his former application, and the High Court had then held that, even if they did deter others, it would not be an irregularity in conducting the sale within the meaning of s. 311. That if deterring others from bidding is not such an irregularity as to warrant the sale being set aside on that ground, it was not possible to obtain the same end merely by changing the name of the transaction and calling it a fraud instead of an irregularity. "It may be improper to induce people to abstain from bidding at a sale, but it is hardly a fraudulent proceeding." The suit was, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed.
The judgment of the High Court (Field and O’Kinealy, J.J.) was as follows: ‘What the fraud on the part of the defendants, the decreeholders, was is not stated in the plaint, and was not stated when the plaintiff’s vakil was examined on his behalf.’ The appeal was accordingly dismissed.

On this appeal,—

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, appeared for the appellant.

Mr. J. Graham, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents.

For the appellant it was argued that the Subordinate Judge’s judgment, based on the former decision of the High Court which only had reference to irregularity within the meaning of s. 311, did not cover the whole ground. The statements in the plaint were not so vague as to preclude the settlement of issues for the purpose of a hearing on the merits, the question being a wider one than the petition under s. 311 had raised. It was whether the property had been wrongfully disparaged by interested parties, with fraudulent intent, before the sale, with injury and loss resulting to the judgment-debtor. The High Court, instead of affirming the dismissal of the suit, should have remanded it. The dismissal in any view of the case was wrong, and the Court, even on its own showing, should have done no more than reject the plaint. The appellant now relied upon this, that, even if, of itself, the deterring others from bidding at a sale did not amount to a material irregularity within the meaning of s. 311, it might, when coupled with allegations of the property having been sold much below its market value, and coupled with charges of acts showing fraud and collusion, amount to a cause of action.

Reference was made to Rukhinee Bullub v. Brojonath Sircar (1); Subbaji Rau v. Srinivasa Rau (2); Fuller v. Abraham (3); Watson v. Birch (4); Sugden’s Vendors and Purchasers, 14th edition, Chap. 1, s. 5; Benjamin on Sales, Bk. III, Chap. 2.

For the respondents it was argued that no distinct act, constituting fraud, had been charged, and the case rested where it was, when the application under s. 311 had been rightly rejected.

Reference was made to In re Carew’s estate (5); Mason v. Armitage (6); Dart’s Vendors and Purchasers, 6th edition, Chap. III, s. 4 and cases collated at p. 121.

Mr. R. V. Doyne replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by LORD WATSON.—This is an action brought by a judgment-debtor for the purpose of setting aside a judicial sale; and there are two sets of defendants, the one being the judgment-creditors and the other the auction-purchasers. The ground upon which the action is laid is said to be fraud.

The 50th section of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) provides that every plaint must contain a plain and concise statement of the circumstances constituting the cause of action and where and when it arose. By s. 3, sub-s. (d), the Judge before whom the plaint depends is authorised, if it does not disclose a sufficient cause of action, to adopt one or other of two courses: he may at or before the first hearing either reject the plaint, or allow an amendment to be made upon the spot or within a limited time, upon such condition as to payment of [537] costs as he may think proper. When fraud is charged against the defendants it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. Lord Selborne said, in Wallingford v. The Mutual Society (1): "With regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well-settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice." There can be no objection to the use of such general words as "fraud" or "collusion," but they are quite ineffectual to give a fraudulent colour to the particular statements of fact in the plaint, unless these statements, taken by themselves, are such as to imply that a fraud has actually been committed.

In the present case it is unnecessary to criticise the plaint minutely. Strike out the words "fraud," "deceit," "illegal and fraudulent acts," "machinations," and so forth, of which there is great superfluity, and what remains? Nothing, except an allegation of certain facts which might be unattended with any fraudulent or illegal purpose or character. In these circumstances, the Subordinate Judge, being of opinion that no cause of action was stated in the plaint, allowed an examination of the pleader for the plaintiff. He did so, not with the view of taking evidence, or of ascertaining what was to be the evidence in the case, but with the very proper object of ascertaining whether the pleader was in a position to make, on behalf of the plaintiff, an amendment of the plaint, which would introduce a specific and relevant cause of action. Counsel for the plaintiff—who is appellant here—admitted that the effect of the declaration of the pleader was to make matters worse instead of better; and in that observation by the learned counsel their Lordships are quite ready to concur.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the judgment of the High Court is well-founded, and must be affirmed. They are however, of opinion that in disposing of this case upon the defects of the plaint as not setting forth a good cause of action, the Subordinate Judge ought not to have taken [538] the course of dismissing the suit. If he did not allow an amendment as authorised by s. 53 of the Procedure Code, he ought, in terms of the same section, to have rejected the plaint. That, according to s. 56 of the Code, would have enabled the plaintiff to present a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action if he found himself in a position at any future time to make averments which would give relevancy to his action. However, no objection seems to have been taken in the Court below to the form of the judgment, which was the same in both Courts, dismissing the action. No objection was stated in the appellant's case or raised by his Counsel; and in these circumstances, and seeing that the time limited for bringing an action to set aside the judgment has already elapsed, their Lordships are of opinion that the ends of justice will be served by permitting the judgment of the Court below to stand in its present form.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgments appealed from, and to dismiss the appeal. The appellant must pay to the respondents, Surjeswari Baruani, Anundmoyi Baruani, and Kanchunpria Baruani, who appeared at their Lordships' bar, the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Saticouri Pyne (Plaintiff) v. Luckey Narain Khettry (Defendant).* [15th June, 1888.]

Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 34, 77—Presentation for registration—Limitation for registration after acceptance by Registrar—Acceptance for Registration.

Although under Act III of 1877 it is imperative to present an instrument for registration within a prescribed time from its execution, there is no time fixed within which an instrument presented and accepted for registration must be registered.

[R. 5 M.L.J. 29 (31); 18 M. 255 (250).] *

Suit under s. 77 of the Registration Act.

The defendant on the 18th September 1886, executed in favour of the plaintiff a mortgage of his family dwelling house, situated in the town of Calcutta, to secure an advance of Rs. 3,000. The defendant having refused to register the deed, the plaintiff, on the 12th January 1887, presented it for registration, and applied for a summons calling upon the defendant to appear before the Registrar for the purpose of registration; the whereabouts of the defendant being unknown, this summons was affixed to the outer door of the defendant's family dwelling house, in which house he had ordinarily resided. The Registrar further issued a warrant for the arrest of the defendant, which, however, remained unexecuted, it being found impossible to discover the defendant's whereabouts. On the 30th August 1887, the Registrar refused to register the deed in the absence of the defendant, or proof of personal service of the summons, more than eight months having elapsed since the execution of the mortgage deed.

On the 28th October 1887 (the High Court having been closed for the vacation from 22nd August to the 27th October 1887) the plaintiff brought this suit, praying that the defendant might be compelled to register the deed, or that the Registrar should do so on his behalf. The defendant pleaded limitation.

suit lies to compel registration. Section 34 is subject to s. 77—Radha Kissen Roura Dakna v. Choonedoll Dutt (1). The document was presented within the time allowed by the Act, and there is no law of limitation for the actual fact of registration; Shama Charan Das v. Joyenoolah (2), which [540] case follows Sah Makhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondun Lall (3): the former case expressly lays down that s. 34 is subject to s. 77.

Mr. L. Ghose.—The decision of Sah Makhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondun Lall (9) was one under Act XX of 1866; that Act did not contain a section fixing a limitation of time in regard to appearance of executants or their representatives as did the Acts of 1871 and 1877; the only limitation provided for in Act XX of 1866 was in regard to presentation. The case of Shama Charan Das v. Joyenoolah (2), decided by Wilson, J., follows the Privy Council case, but the difference between the Act of 1867 and the Acts of 1871 and 1877 was not therein pointed out; nor was the case of In re Buttocherry Baneerjee (4), cited or considered. This latter case was a decision under Act VIII of 1871, which Act contained a limitation as to the appearance of executants, and is directly in point; it was there held that an order refusing registration should be obtained from the Registrar before the time fixed for appearance of the executant has expired, and if once the time fixed has expired, and no order of refusal to register has been made by the Registrar, no further proceedings can be taken to enforce registration. I submit that case should be followed.

JUDGMENT.

Trevelyan, J.—This is a suit brought under the provisions of s. 77 of the Registration Act.

The deed was executed on the 18th of September 1886. It was presented for registration on the 12th of January 1887 by the claimant, who applied for a summons against the executant. He was unable to serve the summons, and on the 30th of August 1887, the Registrar refused registration on the ground that more than eight months had elapsed.

The only question argued before me is whether the Registrar must not be taken to have refused registration at some period within the eight months, and whether this suit is not consequently barred by limitation. There is express authority in favour of the defendant's contention, and there is also, I think, express authority against it.

[541] I was much pressed with Mr. Justice Macpherson's decision, In the matter of Buttocherry Benerjee (4), and there is no doubt that that case is indistinguishable from the present one.

I think, however, that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Sah Makhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondun Lall (9) is a distinct authority for the contrary proposition. In the case Sir Barnes Peacock, referring to the Registration Act of 1866, says: "Though the statute makes it imperative to present an instrument for registration within four months from the date of its execution, no time is fixed within which a deed presented and accepted for the registration must be registered, and indeed from the nature of the requirements of the Act the period within which the registration must be completed could not have been fixed." Mr. Ghose, who appeared for the defendant, pointed out to me that there was a difference between the Act of 1866, with which the Privy Council were dealing, and the Act now in force, and that the Act which Mr. Justice Macpherson considered in the case I have mentioned fixed, as in the Act of 1877, a limitation for the time within which executants can appear. I do not agree with Mr. Justice Macpherson in considering that, from the fact that there is a limitation as to the time within which executants can appear, it follows that the refusal to register must be taken to have been made within the same period.

There being no express limitation I do not see why limitation by implication should be imported into the Act. As the Privy Council said, from the nature of the requirements of the Act, the period within which the registration must be completed could not have been fixed.

The Privy Council case is, I think, an express authority, and that this is so is clear from the ease of Shama Charan Das v. Joyenoolah (1) decided by a Division Bench of this Court.

I must order the defendant to register the document, and I direct that he pay the costs of this suit.

[542] Mr. Sale then applied for a direction in the decree that the Registrar might register the deed in the event of the defendant not attending to do so.

TREVELYAN, J.—The decree will be in the usual form; either it will contain a direction of the kind asked for, or in case the defendant cannot be found, you will have liberty to apply.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Khub Lal Sahu and Others (Defendants) v. Pudmanund Singh and Others (Plaintiffs).* [10th April, 1888.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1887), sch. II, arts 99 and 132—Government revenue, Suit to recover money paid on account of—Charge—Co-sharer, Payment of arrears of revenue by.

The plaintiffs and defendants were the proprietors of two separate plots of land, separately assessed with Government revenue, but covered by the same towzi number. Plaintiffs paid the Government revenue due from the defendants in respect of their plot from September 1873 to June 1885, in order to prevent the two plots being brought to sale, and on the 28th September 1885 instituted a suit to recover the amount. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that art. 132 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 applied to the facts of the case, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover all amounts so paid within twelve years of date of suit.

Held, that as on the authority of Kimm Ram Doss v. Musaffer Hosain Shah (2) the plaintiffs had no charge upon the property in respect of which the payment had been made, and as on the authority of Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (3) art. 132 only applied to cases where the money sought to be recovered is a charge upon the property, the limitation applicable to the case was that provided by art 99, and the plaintiff’s claim in respect of all payments made more than three years before suit was barred.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1860 of 1887, against the decree of C. A. Wilkins, Esq., Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 2nd of June 1887, affirming the decree of Baboo Bolai Chand, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 23rd of February 1886.

(1) 11 C. 750. (2) 14 C. 809. (3) 12 I.A. 12=7 A. 502.
In this case the plaintiffs and the defendants owned two separate plots of land, separately assessed with Government revenue, but entered in the Collectorate register as one estate covered by the same town number. The plaintiffs alleged that, as both plots of land were thus jointly liable for the total amount of Government revenue, and as the defendants had neglected to pay their shares of the same from September 1873 to June 1885, they had been compelled to pay it for them, in order to save their own plot from sale, and they accordingly instituted this suit on the 28th September 1885 to recover the amount so paid, which they assessed at Rs. 701-2-0 principal and Rs. 495-0-6 interest, or the sum of Rs. 1,196-2-6 in all. They also prayed that that amount might be declared a charge and realized in the first instance by the sale of the defendants' plot of land in respect of which it had been paid.

The only material question raised in the suit was one of limitation, the defendants contending that in any event the plaintiffs' claim in so far as it arose more than three years before suit, was barred by limitation. On the other hand, it was urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that twelve years' limitation applied, and that the whole amount claimed was therefore recoverable.

The first Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for the amount claimed, less a sum of Rs. 5, which was not proved, holding that art. 132 of sch. II of the Limitation Act XV of 1877 applied to the case, and that therefore the whole claim was within time. On appeal that decree was upheld by the District Judge.

The material portion of that officer's judgment was as follows:

“Article 99 of the Limitation Act does not apply for two reasons: first, because this is not a suit for contribution by a sharer in a joint estate; and, secondly, because, even if it were such a suit, yet it is a suit in which the plaintiff seeks to recover by the sale of the property, that is, to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property.

Plaintiffs paid the money neither under a decree nor as joint proprietors of the estate, consequently art. 99 cannot apply—Ram Dutt Singh v. Horakh Narain Singh (1). They are undoubtedly entitled to recover under s. 69, Act IX of 1872, for if they had not paid, their own property would have been put up for sale. [544] In fact this point is not disputed in appeal. The liability of the appellant to pay the revenue was a liability upon his estate, and not merely a personal liability—Mothonanath Chattopadhyya v. Kristo Kumar Ghose (2). A suit brought to enforce payment of the money by sale of the property on which it is a charge comes under art. 132 of the Limitation Act—Lallubhai v. Naran (3); Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (4); Miller v. Ranga Nath Moulick (5); Janeswar Dass v. Mahabeer Singh (6). Had the plaintiffs sought only to make the defendants personally liable, then probably art. 147 would have applied; but as they seek to recover their money by sale of the immoveable property (on which it is a charge), art. 132 must necessarily apply. Plaintiffs' claim is not therefore, even in part, barred by limitation.”

The appeal was accordingly dismissed with costs, and the defendants now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Nilkant Sahai, for the appellants.

Mr. R. E. Twidale and Munshi Mahomed Yusuf, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

We are of opinion that this appeal must be allowed. The facts of the case appear to be these. There are two separate pieces of land, having separate jumma, with one towzi number. The plaintiff is the owner of one of these pieces of land, and the defendant is the owner of the other piece. The defendant did not pay the Government revenue in respect of his land from September 1873 to June 1885. The towzi number of both pieces being the same, there was danger of the plaintiff’s portion being sold along with the defendant’s holding for arrears of Government revenue in respect of the defendant’s holding. Plaintiff, to save his own estate, paid the Government revenue in respect of the defendant’s from September 1873 to June 1885, and brings this suit to recover the amount he paid, namely, Rs. 700 principal and Rs. 485 interest.

Both the lower Courts have given him a decree for the whole amount claimed, holding that art. 132, sch. II of the Limitation [545] Act applies to this suit; and that the period of limitation is twelve years. In both the lower Courts it was contended that art. 99, sch. II of the Limitation Act applies, and that argument is again advanced in second appeal before us. We are of opinion that that argument ought to prevail, and that the plaintiff can only recover moneys advanced within three years before the institution of the suit. The Full Bench decision in Kinu Ram Dass v. Mozaffer Hosain Shaha (1) is a conclusive authority for holding that the plaintiff had no lien upon the defendant’s holding in respect of payments that he had made, and the case of Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (2) is a conclusive authority to show that art. 132 is only applicable to cases where the money sought to be recovered is a charge upon the property. Their Lordships say at the bottom of page 14: “But the Counsel for the appellant relied upon the language of the 132nd article of the second schedule, ‘for money charged upon immoveable property twelve years.’” His contention was that that period of twelve years applied to every remedy which the instrument carried with it, and gave twelve years for the personal remedy against the mortgagor as well as against the mortgaged property.

“Looking at the previous language with reference to personal suits, and at the language of art. 132, their Lordships think great inconveniences and inconsistencies would arise if they did not read the latter as having reference only to suits for money charged on immoveable property to raise it out of that property.”

Therefore holding as we do that the plaintiff had no charge upon the property, it is clear that upon the authority of this case, art. 132 of the Limitation Act will not apply. Article 99 would be the only Article that would apply. The appeal will, therefore, be allowed, with full costs in this Court and proportionate costs in the Courts below. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified by giving the plaintiff a personal decree against the defendant in respect of so much of the money as he had paid within three years next before the institution of the suit.

H. T. H. Appeal allowed and decree modified.

Prem Chand Pal (Auction-purchaser) v. Purnima Dasi (Plaintiff) and Roma Nath Shi (Judgment-debtor).* [20th April, 1888.]

D, having obtained a decree on a mortgage of a 5½-anna share of an estate paying revenue to Government caused the share to be put up for sale in execution of that decree on the 17th August 1883 and purchased it herself. The sale was not confirmed till the 18th September 1883. In the meantime a 14-anna share of the estate, including the 5½-anna share, which was separately liable for its own share of Government revenue, was on the 26th September 1883 sold for arrears of the June kist of Government Revenue under s. 13, Act XI of 1859, and purchased by one G, who sold it again to P, who obtained possession on the 6th August 1884.

In a suit by D, against P. and the judgment-debtor to obtain possession of the 5½-anna share so purchased by her—Held, that the mortgage debt was not extinguished, and the mortgage merged in the decree on the 17th August 1883; but having regard to the provisions of s. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the mortgagee's rights were kept alive and remained in existence until the property vested in her by virtue of the granting of the sale certificate, and that between the date of the sale, 17th August 1883, and the date of its confirmation, 18th December 1883, the mortgage lien was fully preserved; that P's purchase being governed by s. 54 of Act XI of 1859, he acquired the share subject to all encumbrances, including the mortgage lien of D; that s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act does not in such a case deprive a mortgagee of his lien over the property and confine him to proceeding against the surplus sale-proceeds; that as the judgment-debtor had the right, at any time between the 17th August 1883 and the 18th December 1883, to redeem the property upon payment of principal, interest and costs to D, P had acquired the rights of the judgment-debtor by virtue of his purchase on the 26th September 1883 was equally entitled to redeem between that date and the 18th December 1883, but not having availed himself of that right, the property became absolutely vested in D on the 18th December 1883, and that consequently D was entitled to the relief claimed.

[547] The facts of this case were as follows: On the 23rd Joyst 1287 the father of the defendant No. 2, Roma Nath Shi, borrowed from the husband of the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,71, and to secure the repayment thereof executed a mortgage in his favour of a 5½ anna share out of 14 annas of a taluk named Jardai Junghsha. The 14 annas share of the taluk was separately liable for its own portion of the Government revenue assessed on the entire estate. On the 30th June 1882 the plaintiff's husband obtained a decree on the mortgage against Roma Nath Shi, which declared the mortgage lien, and directed a sale in the event of the non-payment of the amount due. In 1883, her husband having in the meantime died, the plaintiff proceeded to execute the decree, and on the *Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1927 of 1887, against the decree of F. Cowley, Esq., Judge of Midnapur, dated the 28th of June 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Kedar Nath Mozundar, Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 8th of May 1886.

17th August the property comprised in the mortgage was sold and purchased by the plaintiff herself for Rs. 800. That sale was confirmed on the 18th December 1883. In the meantime the 14 annas share of the estate was sold on the 26th September 1883 under s. 13, Act XI of 1859, for arrears of Government revenue, which had accrued due in the month of June, and was purchased by one Gopi Nath Maitra, by whom it was sold to the defendant No. 1, Prem Chand Pal, and he obtained possession of it on the 6th August 1884.

In December 1884 the plaintiff endeavoured to obtain possession of the share she had purchased, but she was resisted by Prem Chand Pal, who in March 1885 obtained an order in his own favour under s. 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff accordingly instituted this suit either to recover possession of the 5½ annas share or to bring it to sale in satisfaction of the mortgage decree. The plaintiff alleged that the sale for arrears of revenue had been caused by collusion between the defendants, and she submitted that the first defendant's purchase only gave him the property subject to the charge declared by the mortgage decree; that after the sale on the 17th August 1883, at which she had purchased, the defendant No. 2 had no right or interest in the property whatsoever, and, therefore, the defendant No. 1 had acquired nothing by his purchase.

Defendant No. 1 disputed the genuineness of the mortgage and denied all collusion between himself and the other [548] defendant, and contended that the revenue sale nullified the plaintiff's purchase, and that she had no right to the property.

The first Court found the mortgage to be genuine, and that there had been no collusion between the defendants. It considered that the plaintiff might and ought to have paid the revenue, which was a first charge on the property, and that she had no right to the property, but only under the provisions of s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act a right to the surplus sale-proceeds. As she had not proceeded against them that Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

On appeal that decree was reversed by the District Judge in a judgment, of which the following is the material portion:

"The main questions to be decided between the plaintiff and Prem Chand Pal are—"

"1st.—What rights did Prem Chand acquire by his purchase?

"2nd.—What rights thereafter remained to the plaintiff in the share of the estate bought by her?

"The answer to the first question is given in s. 34, Act XI of 1859—the purchaser shall acquire the share subject to all encumbrances, and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners." Section 28 and sch. A of Act XI of 1859 vested his title in Gopi Nath Maitra from the 29th June 1883, as the certificate filed shows.

"The written statement urges that Prem Chand's rights date back to the sale on the 26th September, and that plaintiff's mortgage lien had then been extinguished by plaintiff's prior purchase of the proprietary right; and that as plaintiff was thus the owner of the estate at the time it was sold for the realization of the Government revenue, such sale is binding on the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge has referred to the case of Chatraput Singh v. Grindra Chunder Roy (1), which is undoubtedly in favour of the defendant, if the defendant's contention as to the position of the parties be correct.

---

(1) 6 C. 389.

"But on the 9th December 1878 the Civil Procedure Code in force was Act X of 1877, and under that law a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree had an inchoate right in the property purchased even before the confirmation of the sale, and on the [549] confirmation his right went back to the date of sale. But Act XII of 1879 amended s. 316 of the former Code by providing that the sale certificate was to bear the date of the confirmation of the sale, and that the title to the property sold as between the parties was to vest in the purchaser from the date of the certificate, ' and not before.'

"This is also the law under s. 316 of the present Code.

"I have been referred to the case of Prangour Mozoomdar v. Himanta Kumari Debya (1) in regard to sales effected in July and September 1881; but that also would appear to have been decided under the law as it originally stood, as on page 601 occurs the passage ' the title to the property is no doubt inchoate until the sale is confirmed, but on confirmation it dates back from the time of sale.' The case quoted of Saroda Prosad Mullick v. Lutchmeepat Sing Doogur (2) was under the former law; and there the sale to Mooktakshshee Dabee had formally confirmed more than a month before the second sale.

"Further, I think that the mortgage lien could not be extinguished until the sale to the plaintiff had become final and complete. I am of opinion that on the 26th September 1883 plaintiff's mortgage lien was not extinguished, and plaintiff had not succeeded to the ownership of the property in suit. The Subordinate Judge has referred to s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, but I do not understand the law to limit the mortgagee's right. The sections would seem to refer mainly to sales of entire estates for arrears of revenue where the mortgagee might be in danger of entirely losing his lien on the property.

"Further, in this particular instance, as plaintiff was not on the 26th September 1883 the owner of the property in dispute, I do not think blame attaches to her for not paying the balance of Government revenue then due, and from another point of view, the defence again fails; for, as Gopi Nath's certificate shows, Gopi Nath's title dates from the 29th June 1883, and Gopi Nath bought the share of the estate in dispute subject to all its encumbrances, amongst those being the plaintiff's lien. The subsequent sale and the purchase by the plaintiff are valid as against the defendants.

[550] "The plaintiff will accordingly obtain a decree for possession of the 5½ annas share purchased by her, with costs in both Courts.'"

Against this decree Prem Chand Pal preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Srinath Das and Baboo Boidyo Nath Dutt, for the appellant. Baboo Hem Chunder Bannerjee, Baboo Uma Kali Mukerjee and Baboo Latoo Behari; for the respondent.

Baboo Srinath Das, for the appellant.—The purchase of the plaintiff respondent was on an earlier date than that of the appellant, and therefore the respondent was the owner of the estate at the time it was sold for arrears of revenue, and hence the appellant acquired the right of the "previous owner" by his subsequent purchase under s. 54 of Act XI of 1859. It cannot be said that at the time of the revenue sale there was any encumbrance on the property, as the mortgage lien of the respondent had come to an end by her purchase in August 1883.

Supposing that the purchase of the appellant was subject to encumbrances, the respondent cannot recover khas possession in this suit. All that she would be entitled to is to have her mortgage lien enforced and to get a decree for money subject to the appellant’s right of redemption.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, for the respondent.—Under ss. 6, 7, 13, 28 and sch. A of Act XI of 1859, the title of the appellant as purchaser accrued from 29th June 1883, i.e., the day after that fixed for the payment of the June instalment of Government revenue. Under s. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the title of the respondent accrued from the date of the confirmation of sale, i.e., 18th December 1883. Hence the title of the appellant accrued prior to that of the respondent, and therefore the purchase of the former was subject to the right of the latter to have the property sold in execution of her decree. The appellant is consequently barred by his pendens—see Gobind Chunder Roy v. Guru Churn Kurincker (1), Jhavoo [551] v. Raj Chunder Dass (2) and Raj Kishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub Holdar (3). Supposing the purchase of the respondent was anterior to that of the appellant, the former cannot be said to be the “previous owner” within the meaning of s. 54, Act XI of 1859.

Baboo Sinath Das in reply.

The judgments of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) were as follows:—

JUDGMENTS.

Norris, J.—This case comes before us upon an appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Midnapore, who has reversed the decision of the First Subordinate Judge.

The questions we have to determine are not free from difficulty; but upon the best consideration I have been able to give to the arguments which have been adduced on either side, the cases cited, and the judgment under appeal, I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct and should be affirmed. The facts of the case are as follows. His Lordship after stating the facts as above continued:—

The District Judge has given her a decree for this 5½-anna share, and against this decree the auction-purchaser, at the sale held on the 26th of September 1883, for arrears of Government revenue, has appealed; and it has been urged before us by the learned pleader for the appellant that this judgment is wrong and should be reversed. His principal ground of appeal is that the District Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff’s title to the 5½-anna share, which was put up for sale, was not perfected and completed until the date of the sale certificate, the 18th December 1883. He contends that the sale was perfect and complete on the 17th August 1883; and that on that day the mortgage debt was extinguished, and the mortgage merged in the decree.

I think, having regard to the provisions of s. 316, Code of Civil Procedure, that this contention is not sustainable. It has been urged that, although the section says that “the certificate shall bear the date of the confirmation of the sale, and so far as regards the parties to the suit, and persons claiming through or under them, the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate, and [552] not before," yet as regards third parties the property vests in the purchaser from the date of sale. No doubt the Legislature does not introduce the words "third parties," but if, as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, the title of the purchaser is not to be considered complete, nor the property to vest in him until the confirmation, we see no reason for holding that, as regards third parties, the title of the auction-purchaser is complete, and the property vested in him before the date of the confirmation of sale. If this view is correct, it seems to us that the plaintiff’s husband’s rights as mortgagee were kept alive and remained in existence until the property vested in him by virtue of the granting of the sale certificate, and that between the 17th August (the date of the sale) and the 18th December (the date of the confirmation of sale) his rights as mortgagee were all in existence, and the mortgage lien fully preserved in him. It may be that in addition to those rights he had other rights which it is not necessary to discuss.

What, then, is the position of the appellant, the auction-purchaser, at the sale for arrears of Government revenue? His position is regulated by the provisions of s. 54, Act XI of 1859, which says, "when a share or shares of an estate may be sold under the provisions of s. XII or s. XIV, the purchaser shall acquire the share or shares subject to all encumbrances, and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners,"—he takes the property subject to the encumbrances, and it is sufficient, in my opinion, for the purposes of determining this case, to say that he takes it subject, among other encumbrances, to the mortgage lien, which, I am of opinion, was still subsisting in favour of the mortgagee. I do not think it necessary to go into the question of the encumbrance which may have existed upon the 3½-anna share by reason of the decree of the 30th June 1882. In my opinion this ground of appeal fails.

Then, it has been further urged that, by virtue of s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, the plaintiff has no lien upon the mortgage premises, but has a lien only upon the surplus sale proceeds in the hands of the Collector, after the payment of the [553] Government revenue. I am of opinion that s. 73 does not operate to deprive the mortgagee of his lien. It is to be noted that this is a sale under the provisions of s. 18, Act XI of 1857, to which, as I have already pointed out, the provisions of s. 54 are applicable. If it had been a sale under the provisions of s. 37, a purchaser in the position of the present appellant would have taken the property free from all encumbrances, the mortgage lien would have been extinguished, the mortgagee would have been free to avail himself of the provisions of s. 73, although his lien on the mortgaged premises had gone, he would have had a lien on the surplus proceeds in the hands of the Collector, after paying the Government revenue.

There remains now only one other further point to be considered. It has been urged by Baboo Srinath Das that at any rate the plaintiff in this case cannot be entitled to a decree for possession. I confess I have some hesitation with regard to what I am now going to say, but after giving the best consideration I can to what has been urged, I think the position of the parties is, that between the 17th August 1883 and the 18th December 1883 the judgment-debtor, the defendant No. 2, would have had a right upon payment of principal, interest and costs to redeem the property. There was an equity of redemption existing in the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 2, up to the 18th December 1883.
On the 26th September 1883 I think the present appellant stood in the shoes of the judgment-debtor, and he had a right to redeem at any time up to the 18th December. I think he purchased on the 26th September, with the knowledge of the previous decree obtained against the judgment-debtor, the mortgagor, and I think that if he wished to exercise the right which I think he possessed, he should have come forward and claimed between the 26th September 1883 and the 18th December 1883, to exercise the right to redeem. I think the right to redeem was completely gone on the 18th December, when the sale certificate was given, and the property absolutely vested in the mortgagee. In my opinion both these grounds urged, and urged, if I may be allowed to say so, with great ability, have failed.

I, therefore, think that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

[554] BEVERLEY, J.—I may very briefly say I am also of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed with costs. It seems to me that the broad principle which is laid down in s. 54 is that the purchaser under that section acquires the share he purchases subject to all encumbrances existing at the time of the sale. It is admitted that if the mortgage in this case had been existing at the time, it would certainly have been encumbrance under that section, and the appellant, purchaser, would have taken the share subject to the mortgage. It appears to me to make very little or no difference that that mortgage had passed into a mortgage decree, and that in execution of that decree the property had been put up to sale, although the sale had not been confirmed. I think that, in accordance with the broad principle laid down in s. 54, the purchaser took the property subject (if one may say so) to the unconfirmed sale. If the purchaser had deposited the amount of the decree between the date of his purchase and the date of the confirmation of the sale, it is possible that the sale might have been set aside. He did not do so, however; and accordingly on the 18th December, when the sale was confirmed, the plaintiff became entitled to the possession of the property, and, therefore, the decree for possession was properly made by the lower Court.

In the view we take of the matter it becomes unnecessary to decide whether the words "the previous owner or owners" in s. 54 of Act XI of 1859 are to be understood as meaning the owners who made the default or the owners at the time of the sale. Neither is it necessary to determine whether or not the sale of August 1883 was complete as regards the purchaser before it was confirmed in December following. But as one of the Judges who decided the case of Prangour Mozoomdar v. Himanta Kumari Debya (1), I wish to say that that case appears to have been argued and decided on the supposition that it was governed by s. 316 of Act X of 1877 before that section was amended by Act XII of 1879.

I concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

RASH BEARI BOSU (Plaintiff) v. HARA MONI DEBYA AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [23rd March, 1888.]

Onus of proof—Revenue Sale Law—Act XI of 1859, s. 37—Purchaser of estate sold at auction, Rights of.

The onus of proving that under-tenures in a taluk sold at a revenue sale under Act XI of 1859 fall under any of the exceptions to s. 37 of that Act is on the person alleging the under-tenures to be within such exceptions.

[R., 27 C. 290 (292); 13 C.W.N. 720=9 C.I.J. 490 (492)]=1 Ind. Cas. 596; 12 C.I.J. 336 (344)=7 Ind. Cas. 21 (26); 16 C.W.N. 779=15 Ind. Cas 30 (31).]

The plaintiff, who had obtained a lease of the property from a purchaser at a revenue sale held under Act XI of 1859, sued the defendants to set aside an under-tenure created by the defaulting proprietors of the taluk sold. The defendants alleged that the plaintiff was the benami of one of the defaulting proprietors, and that the under-tenure was a long standing one, and was not voidable at the instance of the plaintiff.

The Munsif dismissed the suit, finding that the plaintiff was a benami for one of the defaulting proprietors, holding that the defendant had failed to make out that the under-tenure was protected by s. 37 of Act XI of 1859.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal held, on the authority of Gobind Nath Shaha Chowdhuri v. Reily (1), that the onus of proving that the under-tenure was voidable was upon the plaintiff, and dismissed the appeal, considering it unnecessary to decide the question of benami.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty, for the appellant, contended that the case of Gobind Nath Shaha Chowdhuri v. Reily (1) was not applicable; that the onus of proof lay upon the defendant.

Baboo Chander Kant Sen, for the respondents, relied on Gobind Nath Shaha Chowdhuri v. Reily (1) as throwing the onus of proof on the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.

[556] The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and TOTTENHAM, J.) was delivered by

TOTTENHAM, J.—We think this case must go back to the lower appellate Court for a fresh trial of the appeal.

The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants from an under-tenure held within a taluk which had been sold for arrears of revenue and had been leased by the auction-purchaser to the plaintiff.

The substantial pleas raised for the defence were that the plaintiff was only a benami for one of the original defaulters, and therefore had no right to take advantage of s. 37 of the Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859):

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1272 of 1887, against the decree of Baboo Parbati Coomar Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Khoolnah, dated the 14th of March 1887, affirming the decree of Baboo Furno Chunder Roy, Munsif of Khoolnah, dated the 25th of August 1886.

(1) 13 C. 1.
that the tenure in question was one of those expressly protected under that section; and that neither the plaintiff nor any other auction-purchaser could set it aside under its provisions.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, finding that the plaintiff was a benamidar for one of the defaulters. The Munsif also found that the defendants had failed to make out that the tenure in question was one protected by s. 37.

The plaintiff having appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Khoolnah, his appeal was dismissed upon the question which the first Court had found in his favour, namely, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff was bound to prove that the under-tenure in question was one of a kind which he was entitled to avoid; and, finding that the plaintiff had not adduced any evidence on this point, he dismissed his suit, considering it unnecessary to determine the question of benami.

We think that the Subordinate Judge was mistaken in dismissing the suit merely upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the tenure was voidable. The suit is governed by s. 37 of Act XI of 1859, and that section, dealing separately with encumbrances and under-tenures, lays down that the auction-purchaser shall be entitled to avoid all under-tenures and to eject the holders of them with certain exceptions, and then goes on to set out the exceptions. In the present case the defendants plead that they come under one of the exceptions. It appears to us that the presumption is in favour of the general proposition of law laying down that all under-tenures are voidable, and that the person pleading a certain exception is bound to bring himself within it. That being so, it will be for the defendant in this case to bring himself within the exception which he pleads.

The pleader for the respondent relies greatly upon the case of \textit{Gobind Nath Shaha Chowdhuri v. Reily (1)} as showing that the plaintiff would be bound to prove that the tenure was voidable. That case, however, was decided under a totally different law, namely, Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Section 66 of that Act is not in the same terms as s. 37 of Act XI of 1859, and the case of \textit{Gobind Nath Shaha Chowdhuri v. Reily (1)} is upon the words of s. 66. We cannot assent to the proposition of the learned pleader for the respondent that these two sections are substantially identical.

We think, therefore, that the decision of the lower appellate Court is clearly based upon an error in law, and that his judgment and decree must be set aside and the case go back to him for a fresh trial upon all the points raised. If necessary, the Subordinate Judge will be at liberty to allow the parties to adduce fresh evidence. The costs will abide and follow the result.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Mothea Mohun Ghose Mondul (Plaintiff) v. Akhoy Kumar Mitser (Defendant).* [8th May, 1888.]

Sale in execution of decree—Suit to set aside sale—Fraud—Auction-purchaser acting bona fide—Fraudulent execution of decree after adjustment—Execution of decree adjusted, but of which satisfaction has not been entered, Effect of, on rights of innocent purchaser—Adjustment of decree without certifying.

In 1881 R. obtained a decree against M. for possession of certain property with costs. Subsequently a compromise of the questions at issue in the suit was come to between R. and M. one of the terms of which was that R. gave up his claim to costs. Satisfaction of the decree was not entered up [558] in Court. In 1884 K., purporting to be acting on behalf of R., but without his knowledge or sanction, applied for execution of the decree for costs, and in the execution proceedings which followed a share of M. in a tank was sold and purchased by A. M. thereupon brought a suit against A., R., K., and others to set aside the sale, alleging that the whole of the execution proceedings had been taken without notice to him, and had been fraudulently taken by the defendants in collusion with one another in order to deprive him of his share in the tank. It was found that A.'s purchase was an innocent one and untainted with fraud.

Held, upon the authority of Reeta Malhotra v. Ram Kishen Singh (1), that the sale could not be set aside. Such a sale could only be set aside if it were shown that the Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree; but as the decree remained an unsatisfied decree so far as the Court was concerned, and capable of being executed, the compromise not having been certified to the Court, the Court had jurisdiction to execute it.

Held further, that the execution proceedings could not be held to be void, as, although instituted by a person who had no authority to institute them, they were instituted in the name of the decree-holder, and neither the Court nor the auction-purchaser was bound to see that the application was made bona fide on his behalf.

Pat Dasi v. Sharup Chand Mala (2) commented on.

[F. 21 B. 463 (404); R. 17 M. 56 (60)=3 M.L.J. 211; 9 Ind. Cas. 472 (474); 19 M. 219 (222); 13 C.W.N. 710 (714, 716) =37 C. 107 (113)=11 C.L.J. 254=1 Ind. Cas. 871; D. 20 Ind. Cas. 337 (340).]

This suit was brought to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree on the ground of fraud, and the circumstances which gave rise to it were as follows:—

In the year 1880 defendant No. 2, Ram Churn Pal, brought a suit against the plaintiff to obtain possession of an 8-anu share in certain jamai lands in the village of Panchasakhi, and in that suit, on the 31st January 1881, obtained a decree against the plaintiff for a 4-anu share in the lands with costs, which amounted to about Rs. 8.

Subsequent to the decree a compromise was come to between the plaintiff and Ram Churn Pal, by which the plaintiff agreed to give Ram Churn Pal possession of the whole 8-anu share claimed by him, and the latter agreed to give up his claim for costs. The compromise, however, was not reported to the Court, and satisfaction of the decree was not entered up. On the 23rd January 1884 an application was made to the Court on behalf of Ram Churn Pal to execute the decree for costs, and after the issue of the usual notice, and in pursuance of that application,

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1998 of 1887, against the decree of F. B. Taylor, Esq., Judge of Burdwan, dated the 9th of August 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Krishna Nath Roy, Munsif of Culta, dated the 7th of February 1887.

(1) 13 I.A. 106=14 C. 18. (2) 14 C. 376.
[559] the plaintiff's one-third share in a tank was sold by public auction on the 19th May 1884, and purchased by Akhoy Kumar Mitter (defendant No. 1 in this suit) for Rs. 27. Possession of the share in the tank was, however, not then applied for, and was only given on the 12th June 1886. The plaintiff filed this suit on the 9th July 1886, making the following persons defendants: No. 1 Akhoy Kumar Mitter, No. 2 Ram Churn Pal, No. 3 Chunder Nauth Mullick, No. 4 Khetter Mohun Ghose, No. 5 Koylash Chunder Ghose, and No. 6 Sreenutty Profulla Kumari Dasi, and praying to have the execution proceedings set aside on the ground of fraud, and to recover possession of his share in the tank. The defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were sued as pro forma defendants, they being the plaintiff's co-sharers in the tank. The plaintiff charged that the whole of the execution proceedings had been fraudulently taken by the first four defendants in collusion with each other, and that the purchase by defendant No. 1 was a purchase on behalf of himself and the other three; that the defendant No. 3 was the prime mover in instigating the execution proceedings which had been actually taken by defendant No. 4.

Defendant No. 1, amongst other things, pleaded that he had purchased at auction in good faith with his own money, and that the other defendants had no right or title to the share in the tank or any interest therein; he denied that any fraud or collusion existed between him and the other defendants with regard to the execution proceedings, and contended that, so far as he was concerned, the sale could not be set aside, and that he was entitled to the benefit of his purchase.

Defendant No. 2 filed a written statement denying all knowledge of the execution proceedings, and stating that he had been no party thereto, and had not authorized such proceedings to be taken, and he further denied that he had been any party to the fraud alleged by the plaintiff. Defendant No. 3, Chunder Nauth Mullick, did not enter appearance in the suit. Defendant No. 4, Khetter Mohun Ghose, filed a written statement admitting that he had caused the execution to be taken out, but pleaded that he did so bona fide and at the instance of Ram Churn Pal.

It appeared on the evidence that defendant No. 2 was an illiterate person, and that all the proceedings in the suit brought [560] by him against the plaintiff had been conducted by defendant No. 4 on his behalf.

The Munsif came to the conclusion, that defendant No. 2, Ram Churn Pal, had nothing to do with the execution proceedings, and had no knowledge of them; that all those proceedings were taken by defendant No. 4, Khetter Mohun Ghose; that the plaintiff was studiously kept in the dark, and that none of the notices issued in the execution proceedings reached him or his friends, and that he had no knowledge of such proceedings; that the attachment and sale proclamation were not advertised in the way alleged; that defendant No. 3, Chunder Nauth Mullick, was anxious to get possession of the tank, and at the sale only his men attended to bid, and that all the bidding was on his behalf, and that the price obtained was far below the value of the property; that defendant No. 1 was merely a tool in the hands of Chunder Nauth Mullick, and that Khetter Mohun Ghose was responsible for what had taken place and the prime-mover in the transaction. The Munsif accordingly found the fraud alleged by the plaintiff proved, and gave him a decree setting aside the sale with costs against the principal defendants other than Ram Churn Pal.

Against that decree Akhoy Kumar Mitter appealed upon this amongst other grounds that, even supposing any fraud had been committed, his connection therewith had not been proved; that he was not a benamidar for Chunder Nauth Mullick, but an innocent purchaser; and that, therefore, the sale to him at public auction could not be set aside. The District Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif upon grounds which sufficiently appear in the judgment of the High Court, and directed that each party should bear his own costs.

Against that decision the plaintiff preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Uma Kali Mookerji, for the appellant.

Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose (for Dr. Rash Behari Ghose), for the respondent.

Baboo Uma Kali Mookerji, for the appellant.—A sale made at the instance of a person who is not the decree-holder cannot be considered a valid sale. If the Court had [561] known that the person seeking to have the sale made was not the decree-holder, and allowed the sale to proceed notwithstanding, it would have acted without jurisdiction. The mere fact that the respondent is a bona fide purchaser would not give him any title to the property sold, if it did not validly pass to him. Supposing a decree-holder had died before execution issued, the sale would pass nothing to the purchaser, notwithstanding that he purchased bona fide, and in the present case the respondent is in no better position than such a purchaser would be. The case of Rewa Mahlon v. Ram Kishen Singh (1) is not in point, as here the sale was made without jurisdiction. The case of Pat Dasi v. Sharup Chund Mala (2) supports my contention.

Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose, for the respondent, contended that the sale could not be set aside, and relied on the case of Rewa Mahlon v. Ram Kishen Singh (1).

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, J.J.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit to set aside a sale in execution on the ground of fraud. The facts are that in 1880 defendant No. 2 brought a suit against the plaintiff for a half share of a certain jumma, and on the 31st January 1881 he obtained a decree for a four annas share with costs. Subse-sequently an amicable settlement was come to between the parties, by which the plaintiff gave up the half share of the jumma which was claimed, and defendant No. 2 relinquished his decree for costs. This arrangement, however, was not certified to the Court.

On the 23rd January 1884 an application was made to the Court to execute the decree for costs, and in pursuance of that application a one-third share in a certain tank belonging to the plaintiff was brought to sale and purchased by defendant No. 1 on the 19th May 1884. Possession was not taken, however, till 12th June 1886, and on the 9th July 1886 plaintiff filed this suit to have the whole of the execution proceedings set aside on the ground of fraud, and to recover possession of the tank. The fraud in question is alleged to have been perpetrated at [562] the instance of defendant No. 3 (to whom the tank in question formerly belonged) through the instrumentality of defendant No. 4. The pro forma defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are the plaintiff's co-sharers in the tank.

The first Court found the fraud established, and set aside the sale.

On appeal, the District Judge reversed this decision. He considered that the evidence did not justify the finding that the execution proceed-

(1) 13 I.A. 106=14 C. 18.  (2) 14 C. 376. were fraudulently instituted and carried through. He was of opinion that the matter was capable of a more simple explanation. He found apparently that the execution of the decree was taken out by defendant No. 4 without the knowledge of defendant No. 2, but that the notices, &c., were duly served, and that the property was not sold for an inadequate price. He seems to have been of opinion that the suit of 1880 having been managed for defendant No. 2 (who is an illiterate person) by defendant No. 4, execution was taken out by the latter in good faith, as the decree was about to become barred by limitation. "The only conclusion really justified by the evidence," he says, "is that Khetter Mohun's (defendant No. 4) action was unauthorized and illegal, and that there is every ground for a criminal action against him. But there is no proof that the purchase by Akhoy (defendant No. 1) was in any way tainted with fraud. The sale appears to have been duly held, and there is no evidence to show satisfactorily that the notices were not legally served.  I find that Akhoy Kumar Mitter's purchase was an innocent one, and untainted with fraud, and that, therefore, the purchase by him in open Court cannot be set aside."

Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal; and it is contended before us that, accepting the facts as found by the Judge, the sale was void and should be set aside—first, because the decree had already been satisfied by compromise; and, secondly, because the execution proceedings were not taken as the instance of the real decreeholder. In support of the first argument, the appellant relies on the case of Pat Dasi v. Sarup Chand Malla (1). In that case it was found [563] that the decree had been satisfied, though satisfaction had not been certified to the Court, and a Division Bench of this Court held that the sale under this satisfied decree was void and of no effect. There is no finding whether the auction-purchaser was a party to the fraud; if he was, that in itself would have been a good ground for decreeing the plaintiff's suit. But if he was not, we are compelled to say that, having regard to the judgment of the Privy Council in Reeva Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh (2), we are unable to agree in the view taken by the learned Judges who decided that case. In the case just referred to, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that where a person purchased bona fide, and for value, property exposed for sale under an execution issued by a Court of competent jurisdiction upon a valid judgment, "the sale is a good one and cannot be set aside." If the Court has jurisdiction, they say, "a purchaser is no more bound to enquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues."

We are of opinion that the sale could only be set aside in the present case if it were shown that the Court had no jurisdiction. But it does not follow that the Court had no jurisdiction, because the decree had been compromised out of Court. The compromise not having been certified to the Court, the decree remained, so far as the Court was concerned, an unsatisfied decree, capable of being executed, and the Court had jurisdiction to execute it. Neither can it be held that the execution proceedings were void, because they were instituted by a person who had no authority to institute them. They were instituted in the name of the decreeholder, and we are of opinion that neither the Court nor the auction-purchaser was bound to enquire whether the application was made by the real judgment-creditor. The Court having jurisdiction to sell the property, and the respondent's purchase being untainted with fraud, we are of opinion that the appellant cannot have the sale set aside, and recover back that property. At the same time we are not prepared to say that he may not have some other remedy open to him.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

riminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 133—137. Course to be followed in the administration of—Obstruction to highway—Claim of title—Bona fides of claim of title, Right of Magistrate to enquire into—Jurisdiction.

The mere assertion of a claim of title made without reasonable ground, or honest belief in it, or honest intention to support it, will not oust a Criminal Court of its jurisdiction under ss. 133—137 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In proceedings under s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code with reference to obstructions to public ways it is open to the Magistrate to enquire into the bona fides of the claim; and where he decides against its bona fides he must state reasons for his decision which will be subject to revision by the High Court.

Such a claim must be set up at or before the hearing and not afterwards. In re Chunder Nath Sen (1); Chunni Lall v. Ram Kishen Sahoo (2); Mutty Ram Sahoo v. Mohi Lal Roy (3); and R. v. Sandford (4) referred to.

This was a reference by the Sessions Judge of Midnapur under the provisions of s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The terms of the reference were as follows:

"In this case the present petitioner was called on by an order from the Magistrate of the district to remove a fence from an alleged public way, or to show cause (s. 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code) before the Assistant Magistrate why the order should be set aside or modified. Before that the opposite party had made another petition under ss. 133 and 144, which was dealt with by a Deputy [565] Magistrate, Baboo Bankim Chunder Chatterjee, under s. 144 only, he not being empowered to act under s. 133. The order passed by him (dated 13th August) after a local investigation dealt with a different obstruction (to the same road) from that now under consideration. From the language used by him in the order in question he does not appear to have thought that the way in question was one coming within the second para. of s. 133. He says: 'The other obstruction (the one now under consideration) is at a spot the connection of which with any public thoroughfare was not clear to me. It is quite possible it may be so connected, but a portion was under water and another portion cut up, so that the traces of a footpath, if any existed, were not visible to me. An embankment was pointed out as being a continuation of the road, but it is overgrown with jungle, and bore no traces of having been used as a thoroughfare for some time past.'

"The Assistant Magistrate, after taking evidence on both sides, passed an order on the 12th September under s. 137 that the order of the Magistrate directing the removal of the obstruction be made absolute. The Magistrate of the district directed, on the 14th September, notice to issue under s. 140, allowing three days from the date of its receipt for carrying out his original order. Against these proceedings the present application for reference has been made, and both parties have been heard through pleaders.

"For the present petitioner the rulings in Basuruddin Bhuiah v. Bahar Ali (1), Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (2), and Lal Miah v. Nazir Khalashi (3), are relied on; by the other side Angelo v. Cargill (4). There was no essential difference in the wording of the sections of the Criminal Procedure Code which were in force when the above decisions were respectively passed. It is difficult to reeonoile them. But I think it is clear that the High Court have now for some time maintained the view of the law which is favourable to the present petitioner.

"The Assistant Magistrate, while acknowledging the authority of these decisions, considered himself at liberty to go into the [566] bona fides of the question of title, i.e., of the claim set up by petitioner to hold the land free of any public right of way over it.

"He took evidence on both sides, and decided that the petitioner had not satisfied him of the bona fides of his claim. As far as the materials before him went, I should not say he was wrong in deciding that petitioner had not made out his title, but it is a difficult matter to conclude that he did not make a bona fide claim to it. In Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (2) the High Court observe that the enquiry contemplated is an enquiry into the existence or non-existence of the obstruction complained of, and not one as to disputed question of title. In Basuruddin Bhuiah v. Bahar Ali (1) it is said: 'In the present case it is plain that the right of way is really in dispute, and that its existence is at least open to doubt; no order can therefore be made under the sections referred to until the public right has been established by proper legal proceedings, civil or criminal.'

"There is no doubt that the right of way is really in dispute. Besides the oral evidence, there are on the record some documents which are certainly in favour of the contention of the petitioner. Besides that alluded to in the Assistant Magistrate's order, there is a registered lease of the tank, over the south bank of which the alleged road lies, from the Manager of the Court of Wards, and a bill of sale, a document over thirty years old, from a former proprietor to the uncle of petitioner. These documents give the boundary of the tank, but are silent as to any road. Had there been a public one over the south bank—vide the map, it is contended that it would have been specified in these documents.

"On the facts, then, I think that the Assistant Magistrate, though probably right on the materials before him in deciding in favour of the right of way, was not right in holding that petitioner had no bona fide claim of title. That being so, his decision is opposed to the later rulings of the High Court already quoted.

"But there is a further difficulty. The allegation of the opposite party (who initiated the proceedings) is that the road is a [567] public one. If there is a bona fide contest about this, the Magistrate is, by the rulings in question, ousted of jurisdiction. Then what redress is open to the public? It has been frequently held that no suit will lie in a Civil Court for obstructing a public thoroughfare without proof of special injury to the plaintiff. In all such cases, if the complainant is met with the allegation of a bona fide claim of title in the Criminal Court, and the Magistrate, therefore, refuses to interfere, there seems to be no remedy. The Civil Court will throw out a suit for obstruction, and under the present Code of Criminal Procedure the complainant is also without redress. In the Code of 1872 it was not so. Section 532 of that Code, for which s. 147 of the present one has been substituted, provided that, if a dispute arose concerning any right of way, the Magistrate might enquire into the matter, and if he found that the subject of dispute were open to the use of the public, might order that possession might not be retained to the exclusion of the public until the person claiming exclusive possession established his right in the Civil Court.

"By s. 147 of the present Code the Magistrate can only interfere where he considers the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace.

"Such being the circumstances of this case, I think it my duty to refer it for the decision of the High Court. It is desirable to have an authoritative decision on a matter which seriously affects public rights, and on which there is a conflict of rulings. I do not think any injustice has been done in this particular case by the orders of the Assistant Magistrate, but it appears incorrect as not being in accordance with the view of the law at present adopted by the High Court. His explanation accompanies the record."

Mr. K. B Dutt and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for the petitioners.
Mr. P. L. Roy and Baboo Ramesh Chunder Bose, for the opposite party.

Mr. Dutt.—The Magistrate has no jurisdiction in this case, as there is a claim of title—Basaruddin Bhuiya v. [568] Bahar Ali (1); Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (2). Sections 133 to 137 of the Criminal Procedure Code only entitle the Magistrate to hold an enquiry into the existence or non-existence of an obstruction, but nothing more. The English cases bear out my contention—see R. v. Barnaby (3); Charter v. Greame (4); R. v. Cridland (5); R. v. Nunneley (6).

It has even been held that, upon a mere suggestion of title, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is ousted (per Holt, C. J., in 2 Ld. Ray, 901, referred to in Paley on Summary Convictions, 5th Ed., p. 144, note). I do not contend that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to enquire into the bona fides of the claim set up. The test of a bona fide claim is whether there is any evidence to go to a jury (Stone’s Justices of the Peace, p. 340).

Mr. Roy, contra.—The two cases of Basaruddin Bhuiya v. Bahar Ali (1) and Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (2), cited by the other side, merely lay down that when a person raises bona fide a question of title the Criminal Courts have no jurisdiction; but these cases do not lay down that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to enquire into the bona fides of the claim set up. That point, moreover, has been conceded by the other side; and the Magistrate was, therefore, within his jurisdiction in deciding upon the facts of this case that the claim set up was a mere pretence to oust his jurisdiction and not a bona fide one.

Sections 133 to 139 of the Criminal Procedure Code clearly show that the intention of the Legislature was to vest the Magistrate with very large discretionary powers; and in this view of the matter, the contention that the Magistrate is merely entitled to hold an enquiry into the existence or non-existence of an obstruction and nothing more is untenable.

The English cases do not support the contention of the other side. Although under the English decisions the summary jurisdiction of the Justices of the Peace is ousted where the title [569] to property is in question [R. v. Barnaby (1)], yet it is always a necessary condition that there must be some show of reason in the claim, and it is not sufficient unless the defendant satisfy the Justices that there is some reasonable ground for the assertion of title—Cornwell v. Sanders (2); Hunt v. Andrews (3); Legg v. Pardoe (4); Calcraft v. Gibbs (5). R. v. Nunneley lays down that the claim must be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction. And it is for the Justices to say whether the claim be bona fide or a mere pretence—see also R. v. Huntsworth (6); Pease v. Claytor (7).

In R. v. Cridland (8) the decision was based upon the ground that the assertion of title was a bona fide one, and therefore is not against me. R. v. Barnaby (1) lays down the well-known maxim of English law that where the title to property is in question, the exercise of summary jurisdiction by Justices is ousted. This decision does not interfere with my contention.

The case of Charter v. Greame (9) is under "The Malicious Trespass Act," and has no reference to the present matter. Playter's case referred to by Holt, C. J., in 2 Ld. Ray, 901, clearly shows that the Justices acted from undue motives. See also R. v. Harpur (10).

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Pigot, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

It is a rule of English law that a bona fide claim of title ousts the jurisdiction of Justices proceeding in a summary way; this does not depend on enactment, but is a qualification which the law itself raises in the execution of penal statutes, save when the terms of the statute, under which the Justices proceed, show that the Justices are not to hold their hands even if a right be set up.

[570] Under the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 it was held by this Court, in revision, that in proceedings under s. 521 of that Code, which is similar to s. 133 of the present Code, if a claim of private right were set up in respect of what was alleged to be a thoroughfare or public place, the Magistrate should not make any order under s. 521 and the following sections, but should proceed under s. 532, so that the person claiming such private right should have an opportunity of having the question raised by him duly enquired into and determined; it being no part of the duty either of the Magistrate or of a jury, acting under s. 526 of that Code, to determine the rights of parties in property—In re Chunder-nath Sen (1) and other cases.

Section 147 of the present Code, which corresponds to s. 532, is more limited in its operation, being confined to cases in which a dispute likely cause a breach of the peace exists. But no such alteration has been made in the terms of s. 133 et seq. which corresponds to s. 521 et seq.
of the old Code as would make the decisions upon these sections of the old Code inapplicable to those of the present; and in accordance with those decisions, it has been held by this Court that a Magistrate proceeding under the sections of the present Code ought not, when a bona fide claim of title is set up, to proceed to make an order, but should allow the party setting up such a claim to substantiate it, if he can do so, by civil proceedings. The ground upon which these decisions have proceeded is that there is no provision made in Chapter X of the Code for an enquiry into a disputed question of title; and that it cannot be held to have been the intention of the Legislature that questions of this nature raised bona fide should be finally decided in a summary manner and to the exclusion of any recourse to the Civil Courts. These decisions go, not actually to the jurisdiction of the Magistrates, as the English rule referred to does, but rather to the mode in which, in revision, this Court has held that the Magistrates should exercise their powers, following the principle of the English rule so far as may be. A decision of a Full Bench of this Court —Chuni Lall v. Ram Kishen Sahoo (2)—soon to be delivered—will lay down the manner in which the question of title, [571] such as appears to have arisen in this case, can be brought before a Civil Court. We have deferred judgment in these cases until the question in that case should have been decided. In this case the defendant appears to have asserted his right to the land in question, free from any right of way over it, in the public, or any part of the public.

When such a question is bona fide raised, the Magistrate ought not to make an order under these sections of the Code, but should allow an opportunity for the determination of the question by the Civil Court.

The claim of title must, however, in order that it should be allowed have this effect, be bona fide, and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction, and it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim be bona fide or a mere pretence. The Magistrate cannot, of course, in determining this, decide contrary to the facts that the claim is not made bona fide, but must have reasonable and probable cause for his decision, which will be subject to revision by this Court. The rule, however, that a bona fide claim of title ought not to be determined in summary proceedings before the Magistrate is subject to this, that the objection must be raised by the defendant at or before the hearing; he cannot be heard afterwards to object to the result of proceedings to which he has deliberately submitted himself.

A fortiori, if the defendant expressly consents that the question of the propriety of the order shall be considered, and with it the question of right, he cannot object, before the Magistrate or afterwards, in this Court, in revision, to the Magistrate’s order. We say nothing here as to the effect of an order so made upon any civil proceedings in which he might afterwards seek to establish his right—see per Field, J., Mutty Ram Sahoo v.
Mohi Lall Roy. (3). As to the considerations which should guide the Magistrate in determining whether a claim of title is bona fide made, it would not be safe to attempt to lay down any general rule, save that there must be some show of reason in the claim, and it is not sufficient unless the defendant satisfy the Magistrate that there is some reasonable ground for his assertion of title. The claim must be one that can legally exist, and consequently [to mention [572] two English cases, from Pelay (1)] defendant was not allowed to oust the jurisdiction of the Justices by claiming a right as one of the public to fish in a non-navigable river, though, if he had made such a claim with respect to one where the tide ebbs and flows, it might have been sufficient. And so a claim by a defendant as one of the public to shoot over certain land when in fact the public had hitherto shot without interruption was held insufficient, as no such right is known to the law. And in another case it was held that the mere assertion of a right made by the defendant’s attorney, in writing, but without stating any grounds for it, was not enough.

(1) 5 C. 875=6 C.L.R. 379. (2) 15 C. 160. (3) 7 C.L.R. 143 (444)=6 C. 291.

In a recent case this Court was asked to interfere, in revision, with a Magistrate’s order for the removal of an obstruction from a public road, on the ground that the defendant had made a bona fide claim of right. It appeared that the piece of land in question had been recently fenced in by the defendant, that before that it had been used as a road, and had been repaired at the cost of the Road Cess Committee. No ground of title to the land was shown on the part of the defendant, save his attempt recently made to appropriate the land, and this Court refused him a rule.

These cases are referred to here, because it is desirable to point out that the action of the Magistrate under these sections is not to be trammelled by a mere assertion of right made without fair ground, or honest belief in it, or honest intention to support it.

The course which we hold that the Magistrate should follow in administering these sections where a claim of right is set up is as follows:—

He should consider, having regard to what has been said above, whether the claim is made bona fide; and if on a fair consideration of the matter, and remembering how scrupulously private rights should be respected, he thinks, the claim not bona fide, he should record his reasons for thinking so, and decide the case without further reference to the claim. It is for the defendant to set it up, and unless he does so the Magistrate has nothing to do with it, and the defendant must set it up at or before the hearing.

[573] Of course, if the Magistrate, on hearing the defendant, thinks his claim of right well founded, he will take no further proceedings; for in that case it will have been shown to him that s. 133 does not apply to the case.

If the Magistrate does not think this claim well founded, so far as he can judge, but considers that it is made bona fide, he should allow the defendant an opportunity of asserting it by civil proceedings. The existence of an intention or desire to do this is one test of bona fides—Reg v. Sandford (2). If the defendant does not within a reasonable time assert his right, the Magistrate may proceed. If the defendant does so, with success, the public right, which is the foundation of proceedings under s. 133, is either negatived or shown to be so doubtful that the Magistrate ought not to proceed further. If the defendant does not go into a Civil Court within a reasonable time or fails there, the Magistrate may proceed.

Our observations in this judgment are of course directed to that part of s. 133 which relates to the case now before us and deals with obstructions to public ways.

We may observe that in cases in which danger to public health or safety is involved, we by no means suggest that the Magistrate is fettered, in the exercise of the powers given to him under these sections, by the considerations to which we have adverted.

Having referred to these general considerations, we proceed to express our judgment upon the case now before us. As will be seen from what we have said, the view expressed by the Magistrate in his excellent judgment in this case as to the propriety of a Magistrate's forming an opinion upon the bona fides of a claim of title when set up is, we think, correct. That is, we think, a necessary part of his duty in such cases, and in the present case we are of opinion that the Magistrate's decision that the claim of title set up here was not such a bona fide claim of title as ought to prevent his proceeding to make an order is one which we cannot dissent from. Taking all the circumstances before the Magistrate into consideration, the length of the occupation by the defendants, the absence of proof of title (for the mowrosi deed was not, and [573] could not be, put in), the proof of user up to a recent time, the existence of disputes between the rival parties in the village throwing some light on defendant's present acts, are all matters to be weighed in determining this question, and we think that under the circumstances what the Magistrate had before him was enough to justify him in coming to the conclusion that the claim of right was not bona fide raised, and we, therefore, let the order which is the subject-matter of this reference stand. We may add, however, that, if it be the case, notwithstanding the absence of proof of it, that the defendants really had a bona fide claim of right, although they had not made it appear that they had, they are not, as will be seen when the Full Bench judgment in Chuni Lall v. Ram Kishen Sahoo (1) is delivered next week, without the means of resorting to the Civil Court should they desire to do so. When the judgment of the Full Bench has been delivered and printed, a copy of that judgment will be put up with these papers when they are returned to the District Judge.

Before Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Beverley.

ASGAR REZA and another (Opposite Party) v. ABDUL HOSSEIN and another (Petitioners).* [14th April, 1888.]

In a case of rival claimants to a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to the estate of a deceased Mahomedan lady, A based his claim on the ground that the deceased was a Sunni, and that he being a Sunni was her nearest heir. B's claim was founded on the allegation that the deceased was a Shiah, and that *Appeal from Order No. 25 of 1888, against the order of F. Peterson, Esq., District Judge of Purneath, dated the 9th of January, 1888.

(1) 15 C. 460.
he being a Shiah had the preferential title. The Judge declined to receive the whole of the evidence tendered, and to go into the question of title. On appeal the case was remanded to the Judge for determination of the question whether the deceased was a Sunni or a Shiah, and which of the parties had the preferential title to the certificate, upon the entire evidence.

[575] Per Gihose, J.—Where the question as to right to a certificate is between two parties, one of whom according to certain given facts would be the heir and the other a total stranger, those facts must be gone into and determined, although such procedure involves to a certain extent the trial of a question of title.

Cases distinguished where the question of the title to obtain a certificate is raised between one who is undoubtedly a natural heir and another who sets up a special title, or between two persons equally entitled to the succession, but one of whom claims exclusive title upon some special grounds.

The scope and object of Act XXVII of 1860 discussed.

[R. 23 C. 431 (436).]

This was an appeal from an order made on an application for a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 in respect of the estate of Mussamut Khubunnissa, who died, leaving a considerable property, both moveable and immoveable. The application was made by her brothers Abdul Hossein and Ahmed Hossein, and was opposed by Syed Asgar Reza and Syed Dilewar Reza, her grandsons.

The following was the material portion of the judgment appealed from:—

"The brothers, who are Sunnis, apply for a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, whilst the grandsons, who are Shiahs, allege that they are entitled to the certificate because their grandmother died in the Shiah faith. Both parties had ready a very great amount of evidence, but without going fully into this I have come to the conclusion that I ought to grant the certificate to the brothers, and for the following reasons:—

"Abdul Hossein and Ahmed Hossein have produced sufficient evidence to show that up to a certain time of life Khubunnissa was a Sunni; the opposite parties admit that they have no evidence to prove whether Khubunnissa was born a Sunni or a Shiah. Here there is one clear fact on which, if a certificate be granted, the Court avoids giving any opinion at all as to the merits of the rival claims to the deceased's property. An opinion if given of course would not be final; still in many cases of this kind evidence as to title is gone into. Where, however, this procedure can by any possibility be avoided, it appears to me that it should be avoided in the interests of all the parties concerned. It is obviously inadvisable to decide in a summary case a very intricate question of fact which would be a certainty have to be re-tried in a regular suit. This Court could not in fairness, on the petition of the grandsons, stop the case at any particular point, and without taking the whole of the evidence on both sides find that Mussamut Khubunnissa was or was not a Shiah. To fully enter into the question it would be necessary to hold a lengthened trial, the only result of which would be a heavy loss to the estate and no practical gain to any one.

[576] "Ordinarily no doubt the Court should look to the position of the deceased's relations at the time of the death of the person, for whose estate a certificate is to be granted, but when this position is such that it cannot be determined except on the determination, after a full hearing, of an intricate issue of fact, which again practically decides a dispute as to title, the question is whether it is not best for the parties that in a summary case the Court should take action on a proved—it may be said admitted—fact which in no way whatever touches the respective claims of the parties to the property of the deceased.

"I admit I have been in considerable doubt as to the proper course to take in these cases; but looking to the remarks of the learned Judges in the cases of Prankristo Biswas v. Nobodip Chunder Biswas (1) and Sarfoji v. Kamakshiamba (2), I am inclined to hold that in giving the certificate to the brothers of the deceased I am adopting the course which is fairest to both claimants, as no expression of opinion at all is necessary as to the title to the property. On the score of fitness something may be said in favour of the brothers; they are elderly men, have their home in the village in which the deceased lived, and have a lease of some of the deceased's moveable property. On the other hand, of the grandchildren, one is a minor and the other only twenty-three or twenty-four years old. I direct that a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 issue to the petitioners Abdul Hossein and Ahmed Hossein on their furnishing security to the extent of Rs. 10,000 with two sureties."

From this order the opposite parties appealed to the High Court mainly on the following grounds (a) that the Court ought to have held that the applicants had failed to make out any right to the certificate, and that the appellants were entitled to it, as nearest of kin to the deceased; (b) that the Court ought to have gone into the question as to the religion which the deceased professed at the time of her death, or at any rate should not have decided the case against the appellants without giving them the benefit of her allegation in that respect; (c) that the Court ought to have gone fully into the evidence, and, it not having done so, there had been a mistrial of the case; (d) that the fact (denied however, by the appellants) that the deceased was a Sunni at one period of her life, and that the appellants had no evidence to prove in what faith she was born, was wholly insufficient for the proper disposal of the case; the question was in what faith she died of which the appellants had evidence, and the Court was wrong in deciding the case simply on the above fact, and without going into the appellants' case and the evidence produced by [577] them; (e) that the Court was not justified in assuming that the applicants were entitled to a certificate by reason of deceased having been a Sunni, or in assuming that she was born a Sunni—a fact which was not admitted by the appellants and not proved; (f) that the Court was not justified in not trying the point on which alone the Court admits the case could be properly decided, merely because it involved intricate questions of fact; (g) that the right to the certificate, which the Court was bound to determine, could only be decided by determining whether the deceased died a Sunni or a Shia; (h) that the rulings relied on by the Court were not applicable to the facts of this case; (i) that the Court had granted the certificate without putting the applicants to strict proof of their right (j) that the grounds as to fitness were invalid, the appellant Asgar Reza had been managing his estate for some years, whereas the applicants for the certificate had never had experience in zamindari affairs; (k) that inadequate security had been taken.

Tara Prosunno Mookerjee (9); appeal from orders 195 and 196 of 1887 decided by Mitter and Beverley, J.J.) on the 8th November 1887 (10).

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (Ghose and Beverley, J.J.):

JUDGMENTS.

[578] Ghose, J.—The parties before us are rival claimants to a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to collect the debts due to the estate of a Mahomedan lady Khubunnissa Begun, who died in October last. They are, first, Abdul Hossein and Ahmed Hossein, who are brothers of Khubunnissa; and, second, Syed Asgar Reza and Dilawar Reza, her grandsons (daughter’s sons).

The claim of the brothers was founded upon the ground that the lady belonged to the Sunni sect of Mahomedans, and that therefore they being themselves Sunnis were her next heirs and as such entitled to the certificate; whereas the claim of the grandsons was upon the ground that she was a Shiah, and that they being Shias were her heirs, and therefore had the preferential title to the certificate in question.

It appears that the case of the brothers was opened with the examination of five witnesses, who were called to prove that the deceased lady was born in a Sunni family, and that she was herself a Sunni up to the time of her death. At the end of the examination of the said five witnesses, the District Judge, on the 7th January, stopped their (the brother’s) case, and called upon the opposite party (the grandsons) to produce their evidence on the 9th idem. On that date, after one witness on the side of the grandsons was examined, who was called to prove that for the last twenty-five or thirty years before her death the lady was a Shiah and not a Sunni, and that she died a Shiah, the Court, put certain questions to the Counsel on either side. Mr. Gregory for the brothers stated that on behalf of his clients he would not admit that the lady died a Shiah. Mr. Forbes for the grandsons said that he would not adduce any evidence as to whether the lady was born a Shiah or a Sunni. And the District Judge upon these statements, and without allowing the grandsons to call any other witnesses, or adduce any other evidence, proceeded to give judgment in the case.

In this judgment the learned Judge observes in the first instance that the brothers “have produced sufficient evidence to show that up to a certain time of life Khubunnissa was a Sunni. The opposite parties admit that they have no evidence to prove whether Khubunnissa was born a Sunni or a Shiah.” He then proceeds to say: “Here there is one clear fact on which, if [579] a certificate be granted, the Court avoids giving any opinion at all as to the merits of the rival claimants to the deceased’s property; an opinion if given of course would not be final, still in many cases of this kind evidence as to title is gone into. Where, however, this procedure can by any possibility be avoided, it appears to me that it should be avoided in the interests of all the parties concerned. It is obviously inadvisable to decide in a summary case a very intricate question of fact which would, to a certainty, have to be retried in a regular suit." Later on he says: "To fully enter into the question it will be necessary to hold a lengthened trial, the only result of which would be a heavy loss to the estate and no practical gain to any one."

Having made these observations, the District Judge observes as follows: "The question is whether it is not best for the parties that in a summary case the Court should take action upon a proved—it may be said admitted—fact which in no way whatever touches the respective claims of the parties to the property of the deceased." He then proceeds upon what he conceives to be the proved or admitted fact of the case; and being also of opinion that on the score of fitness something may be said in favour of the brothers, he determines that a certificate should be granted to the brothers upon the condition that they furnish security to the extent of ten thousand rupees with two sureties.

In taking the course that he did, the Judge admits that he has been in considerable doubt as to the proper course to be adopted; but that, regard being had to the remarks of certain learned Judges in two cases, one Prankisto Biswas v. Nobodip Chunder Biswas (1), and the other Surfoji v. Kamakshiamba (2) he says he is inclined to think that the course he has adopted is fairest to both claimants.

It was conceded by the learned Counsel on either side before us that, if the lady was governed by the Shiah law, the preferential heirs would be her grandsons; whereas, if she was governed by the Sunni law, the brothers would be her heirs.

Now, what is the proved or admitted fact upon which the Judge proceeds in holding that the certificate ought to be granted to the brothers? It is indeed true that in an early part of [580] the judgment the Judge states that the brothers have produced "sufficient evidence to show that up to a certain time of life the lady was a Sunni;" but it must be borne in mind that the Judge was not in a position to say that up to a certain time of life the lady was a Sunni without taking the evidence which the opposite party (the grandsons) were prepared to produce; and indeed the Judge in a subsequent part of the judgment observes: "This Court could not in fairness on the petition of the grandsons stop the case at any particular point, and without taking the whole of the evidence on both sides find that Mussamut Khubunnissa was or was not a Shiah."

Mr. Pugh on behalf of the brothers very candidly admitted that all that the Judge meant to find in his judgment was, not that Kubunnissa was a Sunni, but that she was born in a Sunni family, and that this was what the Judge meant to say was the "proved fact" in the case. Then as to the fact which the Judge considers to be "admitted," I do not exactly understand what he means to refer to; for there was no fact admitted on the side of the grandsons. All that their Counsel said in answer to a question by the Court was that he would not adduce any evidence upon the question whether the lady was born a Sunni or a Shiah; and it seems to me that the Judge infers from this that the grandsons admit that the lady was born a Sunni. This is perhaps the "admitted" fact to which the Judge alludes. It may indeed be gathered from the evidence that has been adduced on the side of the brothers that the lady was born in a Sunni family. But this was, it must be remembered, about seventy or eighty years ago; and that many years before her death she was married, as it would appear upon the evidence on behalf of the brothers, to a gentleman who was a Shiah, and with whom she lived for several years. And therefore one cannot legitimately infer from the mere fact of her birth in a Sunni family that she was, during the whole of her lifetime, a Sunni and died a Sunni. However that may be, the question that arises in this appeal is whether, supposing that the lady was born in a Sunni family, the Judge was justified in stopping the case at the point he did, and in excluding the evidence which the grandparents were prepared to adduce, and in holding, for the purposes of a certificate \[581\] under Act XXVII of 1860, the brothers must be taken to have a better title to it, and that no enquiry ought to be made upon the question as to whether she was a Shiah or a Sunni.

(1) S C. 866.
(2) 7 M. 452.

The Judge, as already noticed, in adopting the course he did, has been guided by two decisions. Upon examination of the case of Prankisto Biswas v. Nobodip Chunder Biswas (1), it will be observed that the two claimants were related to the deceased in the same degree of affinity, and as such both of them were \textit{prima facie} entitled to the certificate. One of them, however (Prankisto), contended that he was exclusively entitled to the property of the deceased on certain special grounds. The Judge of the Court below examined only one witness on behalf of Prankisto, and disposed of the case without examining the rest of the witnesses. He however entered into the title set up by that individual, and expressed an adverse view against him. A divisional Bench of this Court (McDonnell and Field, JJ.) in the first place explained what the real object of Act XXVII of 1860 was, as to be gathered from the preamble itself; and then observed that the Judge was wrong in expressing any opinion upon the special title set up by Prankisto, he having not heard all the evidence which that person was prepared to adduce; and “that, if the Judge, having pointed out that both parties were \textit{prima facie} equally entitled, had stopped there and declined to enter into the question of title raised by Prankisto Biswas, referring him to a civil Court for the decision of that question, and saying that the object of the Act would be sufficiently attained by granting a general certificate to the parties, there would have been no ground of objection against the proceeding of the District Judge." In this view of the matter they struck out, and set aside, that portion of the Judge’s judgment which dealt with the question of the exclusive title set up by Prankisto. It does not clearly appear from the judgment whether a certificate was granted by the Judge to both the claimants or one of them; it would rather appear that it was granted to both, and it would seem that all that Prankisto really pressed upon this Court was, though his appeal no doubt was upon the ground that he was exclusively entitled to a certificate, that the adverse \[582\] remarks made against his exclusive title by the District Judge were uncalled for.

I do not think that either the observations of the learned Judges in that case, or the course adopted by them, support the course taken by the District Judge in this case; and so far as the remarks made by them in explaining the object of the Act that “in effect the holder of the certificate was a trustee liable to account for the money received by him to the legal heir or representative of the deceased ” are concerned, they refer to the legal heir or representative who may be ultimately determined to be such by a civil Court; but they never meant to hold, as it seems to me, that the holder of the certificate might be, as it was contended for by Mr. Pugh before us, a stranger altogether. And this would seem to be plain enough by reference to the observations of Field, J., one of the Judges who decided that case, in another case—Sheetanath Mookerjee v. Pramothonath Mookerjee (1).

As regards the other case referred to by the District Judge, viz., Surfoji v. Kamakshiamba (2), it would appear that of the two claimants for the certificate one was the natural heir, and the other a person who set up a title as a son adopted by one of the widows of the last full owner. The lower Court granted a certificate to the natural heir. It does not appear that the Judge excluded any evidence; and in fact it does appear that some evidence was gone into as to the title of the adopted son. Turner, C.J., in the first place, observes "that the title of the appellant has sometimes been asserted and sometimes been ignored by the senior Rance (the alleged adoptive mother), according as it suited the efforts she made to recover the restoration of the dignity and possession of the Tanjore Raj." And then he observes as follows: "In administering the provisions of Act XXVII of 1860 it has not been the practice of the Court to enter upon the determination of intricate questions of law or of fact. It has been the practice to issue a certificate to the person who has prima facie the clearest title to the succession, such as the natural heir, and to leave a person whose claim to a superior title is on reasonable grounds disputed to establish that title by regular suit." He then refers to the questions which were raised in the case, and which he says are of such intricacy that they cannot be satisfactorily determined in the proceeding; and he alludes to various circumstances which indicated that the title of adoption set up was of a questionable character, and he concludes by saying that in this view the District Judge was right in refusing to enter into an exhaustive enquiry into the said title.

So far as this decision is concerned, it seems to me that it does not support the course adopted by the Judge; it rather shows that the question of the title to the succession to the estate of the deceased should, to some extent at least, be gone into in a proceeding under Act XXVII of 1860.

Now, on turning to the facts of the present case, the question as to the title to obtain a certificate is one that is raised, not between one who is undoubtedly the natural heir, and another who sets up a special title of his own; nor is it between two persons who are equally entitled to the succession, but one of whom claims exclusive title upon some special grounds. It is a question between two parties, one of whom, according to certain given facts, would be the heir, and the other a total stranger; and therefore it follows that, unless and until those facts are proved and found, the Court cannot possibly determine who has the better title to the certificate.

It has, however, been contended before us by the learned Counsel for the brothers that, regard being had to the object of Act XXVII of 1860, as explained in the preamble and in the Act itself, no enquiry as to whether the lady was a Sunni or a Shah, and as to who according to the law of succession is the preferential heir, ought to be gone into in this proceeding. This contention brings us to the consideration of the object and scope of Act XXVII of 1860.

(1) 6 C. 303  (2) 7 M. 452.
The preamble of the Act says: "Where it is expedient to consolidate and amend certain Acts now in force which provide greater security for persons paying to the representatives of deceased Hindus, Mahomedans and others not usually designated as British subjects, debts which are payable in respect of the estates of such deceased persons, and which facilitate the collection of such debts by removing all doubts as to the legal title to demand and receive the same, it is enacted as follows."

The first observation that arises upon this preamble is that it indicates that the person, to whom the debts payable in respect to the estate of a deceased person should be paid, is the representative of the deceased having a legal title to demand and receive the same. Now, who is this representative having a legal title to demand and receive the debts? This is answered by ss. 2 and 3 of the Act.

Section 2 provides: "No debtor of any deceased person shall be compelled in any Court to pay his debt to any person claiming to be entitled to the effects of any deceased person or any part thereof, except on the production of a certificate to be obtained in manner hereinafter mentioned, or of a probate or letters of administration, unless the Court shall be of opinion that payment of the debt is withheld from fraudulent or vexatious motives, and not from any reasonable doubt as to the party entitled."

It would appear from this section that the person entitled to demand the payment of the debts should be a person, who claims to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person, with this proviso, that nobody can be compelled to pay him such debts unless a certificate under the Act be produced.

Section 3, after laying down which would be the Court that should have authority to grant the certificate, says as follows:—

"The applicant in his petition shall set forth his title. The Court shall issue notice of application, inviting claimants and fixing a day for hearing the petition, and upon the appointed day, or as soon after as may be convenient, shall determine the right to the certificate, and grant the same according."

Now what is the title that is to be set forth in the application? This title, I apprehend, must be that of a representative claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person; and in order to indicate that he is entitled to the effects of the deceased person, he must, I think, state that he is so entitled, either under the law of inheritance, under a will, or such other title. Such a title which entitles him to the effects of the deceased person being set forth in his application, the Court shall determine after notice, inviting other claimants, the right to the certificate.

We then find that s. 4 provides that the certificate shall be conclusive of the representative title against all debtors to the deceased, and shall afford full indemnity to all debtors paying their debts to the certificate-holder. And s. 5 lays down that the Court may take such security as it shall think necessary from the certificate-holder for rendering an account of the debts received by him, and for indemnity of persons who may be declared in a regular suit to be entitled to the whole or any part of the money received by virtue of such certificate.

Then s. 6 of the Act provides as follows: "The granting of such certificate may be suspended by an appeal to the Sudder Court, which Court may declare the party to whom the certificate should be granted, or may direct such further proceedings for the investigation of the title as it shall think fit," &c., &c.

Now what is the title to be investigated as contemplated in this section? The title, I take it, is that set forth in the application of the applicant, viz., that he is entitled to the effects of the deceased person; and this title must be gone into before a certificate can be granted. No doubt the title which the Court under Act XXVII of 1860 really determines is not the title to the estate of the deceased person, but the title to the certificate; but I do not understand how, in a case where there are rival claimants, each claiming the effects of the deceased person, such a title can be determined unless the question of title to the estate itself is to some extent at least gone into. And when this title depends upon a question of fact, that question must be gone into before it can be held who has the preferential claim to be the representative of the deceased, and entitled as such to a certificate to collect the debts due to the deceased. This I think, has been the view which has almost uniformly been taken by this Court—see Nunkoo Singh v. Purm Dhun Singh (1) Juggut Chunder Roy v. Chunder Monee Shaha (2) Taylor v. Nundee Jan (3); Anundee Koorer v. Bachoo [586] Singh (4); Sheetanath Mookerjee v. Promothonath Mookerjee (5); Koonf Behary Chowdry v. Gocool Chunder Chowdry (6); and a recent decision by MITTER and BEVERLEY, JJ., dated 8th November 1887.

There are, however, one or two cases which, it would seem, have taken a somewhat different view, e.g., the case of Kali Coomar Chatterji v. Tara Prosunno Mookerjee (7). But I think it is opposed to the whole current of rulings of this Court, and the correctness of this ruling seems to have been doubted in the case of Sheetanath Mookerji v. Promothonath Mookerjee (5). A recent decision passed by MACPHERSON and GHOSE, JJ., was also cited before us; but I do not think that that decision lays down the proposition of law which the learned Counsel for the brothers contends for. It will be found on a reference to the decision of the District Judge in that case that he was of opinion that the deed of wakf which was relied upon by one of the claimants was of a very suspicious character and a sham transaction. The learned vakeel who appeared for the appellant did not, if I remember right, ask us to come to a different conclusion than what was arrived at by the Judge. All that he really asked for was that we should strike out that portion of the judgment which dealt with the question of the genuineness and validity of the deed of wakf; and we thought we might well do so in the circumstances of the case. But, however that may be, it will be observed, with regard to both of these cases, that the question raised was between a natural heir, a person who was prima facie entitled to the certificate, and another who would have no title whatever if he did not prove the special title set up by him; and there may be some reason in such a case for declining to enter, as in one or two cases this Court did decline to enter, into an enquiry into such a special title in a proceeding under Act XXVII of 1860. But the case is very different, indeed, where neither of the parties is an admitted heir, but whose title to the certificate depends entirely upon the proof of a question of fact. In the present case the brothers cannot be entitled unless the lady be proved to be a Sunni, and the [587] grandsons cannot succeed unless the lady were a Shia. And it seems to me that it stands to reason that the question of fact thus raised between them must be determined before the certificate could be granted to either of them.

It was however contended before us that the lady having been born in a Sunni family, it ought to be prima facie presumed that she was a Sunni all her life, and that the brothers were therefore prima facie entitled to the certificate, and that the opposite party should be left to establish their title in a regular suit. But it seems to me that in the first place such a presumption cannot be drawn, it being admitted that the lady was married into a Shiah family; and, in the second place, a Court cannot act upon a bare presumption like this, even in a proceeding under Act XXVII of 1860, when as it is alleged, there is evidence forthcoming on the other side rebutting that presumption and tending to show that she was not a Sunni, at any rate for many years previous to her death. It seems to me that the question of fact raised between the parties must be determined upon evidence and not upon mere presumption.

Some discussion was raised before us upon the question whether any change in the religious faith of the lady would alter the law of succession—that is to say, she being born a Sunni, whether the succession to her estate would be governed by the Sunni law or by the Shiah law; or, in other words, whether the matter is to be determined by the rule of law governing the family in which she has born, or by that governing the sect whose religion the lady embraced subsequent to her birth and before death. But it seems to me unnecessary at the present stage to express any opinion upon this point.

Then as to what the Judge says of the fitness of the brothers, it seems to me in the first place that what the Judge relies upon does not show that they are more fit than one of the two grandsons; but on the contrary it would seem that the fact of the brothers holding a lease on the estate is rather a disqualification than a recommendation in their favour; and, in the second place, such a question of fitness may properly arise between claimants who are equally entitled, but it hardly arises between parties who set up antagonistic titles.

[588] With these observations I would remand the case to the lower Court, with the direction that the District Judge should receive such further evidence as the parties might desire to adduce, and determine upon the whole evidence which of the two parties has the preferential right to obtain the certificate.

Having determined which is the party to whom the certificate should be granted, the Judge will determine the amount of security that ought to be taken from the party to whom the certificate is to be granted. I think it right to call the attention of the Judge to the matter of the security, for it seems that, it being conceded on both sides that the amount of debt to be recovered is at least one and a half lakh of rupees, if not more, the security which the District Judge has ordered to be given, viz., Rs. 10,000, is very small indeed.

Beverley, J.—In this case I should have been content to dismiss the appeal (subject to a modification of the order regarding the amount of the security to be taken) were it not for the strong view the other way expressed by my learned colleague. Looking at the facts of the case, the litigious character of the parties and the many nice legal points involved, I think the Judge was justified in stopping where he did, and, on finding it proved or admitted that the deceased lady was born a Sunni in a Sunni family, and that the fact of her subsequent conversion to the Shia family.
was disputed, in granting a certificate to her heirs according to the Sunni law, leaving it to the other side to establish in a regular suit the fact of the lady’s conversion and the legal effect thereof as regards the succession to her property.

I agree with the District Judge that such a course would probably have avoided much inconvenience hereafter and saved the parties unnecessary expense. But as my learned colleague is of opinion that the whole case should be gone into in the present proceedings, and as it is a matter in respect of which there has undoubtedly been a diversity of practice in this Court, I think it better to defer to that opinion than to put the parties to the expense of a further appeal. The case will therefore go back to the District Judge as suggested by my learned colleague, and the costs of this appeal will abide the result.

[589] I will only add one word as regards the case cited by my learned colleague to which I was a party. In that case the District Judge had granted a certificate in preference to the next-of-kin to a person who, it was alleged, was the adopted son of the deceased. But the alleged adoption was disputed, and the Judge had refused to go into evidence on the point; and what we said was that the Judge was not justified in putting aside the claim of the next-of-kin without going into evidence and finding in favour of the adoption. But that case would not be an authority for the proposition that the Judge could not have granted the certificate to the next-of-kin without going into the question of the alleged adoption. And there appear to be several cases the other way.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MEHER ALI MULLICK AND TWO OTHERS.*

[11th May, 1888.]

Instances of statements made by an accused person to a Police officer held to be admissible and inadmissible in evidence against such accused person.

A medical man who has not seen a corpse which has been subjected to a post mortem examination, and who is called to corroborate the opinion of the medical man who made such post mortem examination, and who has stated what he considered was the cause of death, is in a position to give evidence of his opinion as an expert. The proper mode of eliciting such opinion is to put the signs observed at the post mortem to the witness and to ask what in his opinion was the cause of death on the hypothesis that those signs were really present and observed.

In this case the three prisoners Meher Ali Mullick, Butto and Torab were charged with the murder of one Huree in a godown at the Doveton Young Ladies’ Institution, in Park Street, on the 4th April 1888. The three accused were all servants [590] employed in the Institution, being respectively the khansama and two of the kitmatghars. The evidence for the prosecution was purely circumstantial. The body of the deceased was found in a box at Juggarnauth Ghat on the evening of that day tied up with cords, and on the neck was found a piece of cloth, alleged to have been torn from a dhotee, twisted and four ply, and it was a portion of the case for the prosecution that death had been caused by strangulation, and that such strangulation was caused by this cloth cord. During the course of the enquiry, to ascertain how the murdered man came by his death, the Police on the morning of the 5th April proceeded to the Deveton Institution and during the course of investigating the case certain statements were alleged to have been made by Torab and the clothes worn by the deceased was produced to the Police, together with an umbrella he had with him and a bill written in the Bengalee character which it was alleged Hurree had taken with him to the Doveton on the 4th for the purpose of obtaining payment of moneys due to him from Meher Ali. At the time these statements were made Meher Ali was under arrest, but neither of the other two accused was suspected of having had any hand in the murder, and they were not then under arrest.

During the trial it was sought to give evidence for the prosecution of these statements. The statements were the following and made under the following circumstances: A Superintendent of Police, during the course of his evidence, stated that on going to the godown where the murder was alleged to have been committed he saw Torab there, and he asked him if he had seen Hurree the previous day. Upon his being asked what Torab said counsel for the defence objected. The objection was overruled, and the witness stated: "Torab remained silent, and on my repeating the question he said Hurree had come the previous day at noon to the premises, but that he did not know when he left."

The witness then proceeded to state that he went with others into a godown, and on telling Torab to empty his box Torab produced the Bengalee bill referred to above and made a statement. Counsel for the defence again objected to evidence of this statement being given. The statement sought to be proved was to the following effect:—

[591] "Sir, I have something to give you. Meher Ali gave me this paper yesterday evening to keep for him."

Upon the objection being taken, the question was not allowed, and the question of the admissibility of the evidence was reserved by his Lordship.

At a later stage of his examination the witness stated that after producing the bill Torab made another statement, and he was asked what that statement was.

The statement as recorded in the deposition of this witness taken before the Magistrate, upon which he was being examined, was as fol-

"Torab said: 'Hurree came here yesterday at 1 p.m. Hurree and I and Bhutto and Meher Ali were seated in this room looking over his account, when Hurree took sick with cholera; he went out of the room three times to ease himself and came back and sat down, when angry words passed between him and Meher Ali.' He also made a further statement."

Counsel for the defence again objected to this question and stated that it was clear that the whole of Torab's statement was not there given, and referred to the deposition of this witness before the coroner, where the same statement was more fully recorded, and contended that if a portion of the statement was to be admitted the whole must be admitted.
In the deposition of this witness before the coroner the statement was recorded as follows: "Torab said that the deceased Hurree had called the previous day, was taken ill with cholera, was purged three times, after which a dispute arose regarding accounts in Exhibit F (the Bengalee bill); that Hurree had abused Meher Ali's wife, on which Meher Ali had given Hurree a push in the throat, when Hurree fell backwards and became insensible; that they tried to get a box from the second shelf from the west of the room; that they tried to put the corpse into the box; it was too big; that they had to tie the body to make it fit into the box; that they then put the lid on after placing a sheet on the body; that they covered the box with a gunny and then tied it up with a rope; that they left the box till evening; and that at 6 p.m. Meher Ali got a cooly and had the box removed through the small door of the Institution opening into Free School Street."

[592] The argument as to whether evidence of these statements was admissible was reserved till the jury had withdrawn.

Mr. Pugh (Officiating Standing Counsel), for the prosecution.

Mr. Gasper, for Meher Ali.

Mr. Lal Mohan Ghose, for Torab and Bhutto.

Mr. Pugh.—The statements made by Torab are admissible in evidence, as he was not then under arrest; besides, the evidence has a material bearing on the case against him. The sections of the Evidence Act bearing on the subject are ss. 25, 26 and 27, but these statements are not "confessions," within the meaning of that term as used in those sections. "Admissions" are not "confessions," and are treated in the Evidence Act as distinct. The Queen v. Macdonald (1) is an authority in my favour, and that case was followed in Empress v. Dabee Perahad (2). It is only a confession made to Police officers that is inadmissible in evidence, and if a statement does not amount to a confession, it is otherwise admissible. In England it has always been the practice to admit such statements as these—Rex v. Greenacre (3). They are put forward as statements made by the accused as their defence, and the prosecution use them for the purpose of showing that they are inconsistent with the truth. They are not put forward as confessions at all. It is in that connection that I propose to use these statements.

Mr. Gasper.—The statement by Torab—"Sir, I have something to give you. Meher Ali gave me this paper yesterday to keep for him"—is perfectly innocuous. I shall not take up your Lordship's time about it.

I do not dispute the law obtaining in England on this subject as referred to by Mr. Pugh, but here we are governed by the Evidence Act, which has in this respect made a very great departure from the English law. I do not object to the statement made by Torab on his producing the Bengalee account paper, but the other statements are to all intents and purposes, confessions, and it is impossible to distinguish them from a confession even [593] in its ordinary and accepted sense. I am prepared to contend that the Evidence Act does not make any difference between admissions and confessions. Sections 17 to 31 deal with admissions, and in s. 24 you come to the first of those sections which deal exclusively with admissions in criminal cases.

[Wilson, J.—Is there any authority for saying that admissions and confessions are one and the same?]

Mr. Gasper.—There is the case of Empress v. Pandharinath (4), which lays down that a statement made to a Police officer, although made in self

(1) 10 B.L.R. App. 2. (2) 6 C. 530. (3) 8 C. & P. 35. (4) 6 B. 34.
exculpation, may still be an admission of a criminating circumstance, and thus a confession and inadmissible under ss. 25 and 26.

[Wilson, J.—That case falls far short of holding that admissions and confessions are the same thing.]

Mr. Gasper.—Another case bearing on the question is that of The Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), and the precise nature of the statement in that case is to be found in Hume’s Criminal Digest, page 310.
There is also the case of Queen v. Macdonald (2) referred to in that case.
The real question here is, does the statement contain an admission of a material fact necessary for the prosecution to prove or material for them to prove? If it does then it amounts to a confession and is inadmissible, and I contend that the statements I object to fall within that category, and should not therefore be admitted.

Mr. Pugh in reply.—There is no authority for Mr. Gasper’s proposition; a confession is an admission of guilt and not a statement made with the sole object of exculpating the maker, or, to use the words of Mr. Justtice Stephen, “a confession is an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime stating or suggesting the inference that he committed that crime.” See Queen-Empress v. Babu Lal (3).

Wilson, J. (having taken time till the following morning to consider the question).—I have come to the conclusion that [594] evidence can be given as to what Torah said when he made over the paper to the Police, but that evidence of the other statements sought to be proved cannot be given.

During the trial Dr. Mackenzie, the Police Surgeon, was called, to give evidence as to the cause of death, and in the course of his evidence he stated the various marks and indications he found when making the post mortem examination, and gave it as his opinion that death was due to asphyxia caused by strangulation. This opinion was challenged by counsel for the defence, and Dr. Mackenzie was cross-examined to show that death had not been caused as alleged. Subsequently the prosecution called another witness, Dr. Macleod, who had not been present at the post mortem and had not been called before the Magistrate, nor had he had anything to do with the case, the defence having been previously furnished with a statement of what Dr. Macleod was called to prove.

Upon Dr. Macleod being put in the box, the appearance of the body as spoken to by Dr. Mackenzie, together with the signs spoken to by him as having noticed by him when making the post mortem examination, were put to him, and he was asked “ upon these facts what in your opinion would be the cause of death.”

Mr. Gasper objected to the question.

Mr. Gasper.—This question cannot be put. Such a question is only admissible when the facts are admitted, and the question is one relating purely to medical science. Here the facts are not admitted—R. v. Wright (4); M’Naghten’s case (5).

[Wilson, J.—In both those cases the question put to the witness involved the truth of the evidence. Those cases don’t raise the precise point that arises here. The only case that I know of in this Court is Roghuni Singh v. The Empress (6), and the point raised there is the precise point raised in this case.]

If the judgment in that case is carefully read it is in my favour, and besides this Dr. Shaw was called by the Court, and under the Evidence Act the Court may put any question to a witness. [586] There is no case in which a question of this sort has been put, and there is no instance of a medical officer being called who has not been present at a post mortem and who is asked his opinion upon a disputed state of facts. Here we are governed by s. 45 of the Evidence Act and in this case the only evidence Dr. Macleod can give is that of an expert, and he can only give his opinion on a pure question of science. The only question this witness can be asked is, what are the usual indications of death by strangulation, and not the question put.

Wilson, J. (after rising to consult one of his colleagues and without calling on Mr. Pugh).—I think the question can be put.

FULL BENCH.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Wilson, Mr. Justice Pigot, Mr. Justice O’Kinealy and Mr. Justice Ghose.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. NILMAHUB MITTER. [7th June, 1888.]

An accused, in custody at the time, made to a Magistrate in Calcutta, in the course of a police investigation held in Calcutta, a statement confessing that he had murdered his father. The accused spoke and understood English, and the Magistrate questioned him in English, and was answered sometimes in English and sometimes in Bengali; whenever the answers were given in English they were so taken down, when in Bengali they were written down in English and read over to the accused in that language, who accepted the English as being the meaning of that which he had stated, and signed the document in the presence of the Magistrate who affixed the usual certificate thereto. In taking this confession, the Magistrate purported to have acted under ss. 164 and 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code. At the trial, subsequently to the admission of the confession in evidence under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, the Magistrate was called as a witness and deposed to the above facts, with reference to the language in which the confession was taken and the mode in which it was recorded; held [586] on a reference to a Full Bench as to whether the confession was inadmissible in evidence by reason of some of the answers having been given in Bengali but recorded in English, that the provisions of s. 164 of the Code had no application to statements taken in the course of a police investigation made in the town of Calcutta, and that consequently ss. 364 and 533 had no application; held, nevertheless, that the document was properly admitted upon the evidence of the Magistrate under the provisions of s. 26 of the Evidence Act.

Semble.—That the provisions of s. 164, as read with s. 364, would not be complied with where answers made by an accused to a Magistrate in one language are taken down in another, unless it could be shown that it was impracticable to have taken down the answers in the language in which they were given; and further that there would be grave doubt if such a defect could be cured by s. 533.

[Diss., 8 C.P.I.R. 21 (22) Cr.: 16 C.P.I.R. 122 (127); F., 21 B. 495 (499); R., L.B.R. (1893—1900) 70 (71); 17 C. 862 (870); 9 C.I.J. 55 (67).]

One Nilmadhub Mitter was tried before Mr. Justice Wilson and a special Jury upon a charge of murdering his father, Khetter Mohun Mitter. He was said to have shot his father at the house of the latter, No. 86, Cornwallis Street, at about 1 A.M. on Monday, the 26th March last. The father died on the 28th.

The police investigation began early in the morning of the 26th and continued throughout the day. Soon after 6 o’clock p.m., Baboo Kalinath Mitter, a Presidency Magistrate, who had been sent for, arrived at the house, 86, Cornwallis Street, where the prisoner was in the custody of the police. The prisoner then made the following confession in the presence of Baboo Kalinath Mitter:

"Q.—What is your name?

A.—My name is Nilmadhub Mitter.

Q.—Do you wish to make any statement regarding the wounds inflicted on your father, Baboo Khetter Mohun Mitter?

A.—Yes, I do.

Q.—You must know that there is no obligation on your part in making any statement, and should it be against your interest it will be used against you. Are you, having heard this, still willing to make the statement?

A.—Yes, having heard this, I am still willing to make the statement.

[597] Q.—Has any inducement been made by any one to persuade you to make this statement, or are you making it of your own free will?

A.—No inducement has been used, and I am making the statement of my own free will.

Q.—Who shot your father?

A.—I shot my father, Baboo Khetter Mohun Mitter.

Q.—When did you do it and under what circumstances?

B 1. A.—Last night I shot him when he was asleep in his bed at about 1-30 A.M. I shot him with this pistol. I shot only once. My father was then lying in a room to the south of other house (sic). That is the room in which he generally sleeps. I also shot my youngest brother at the same time by firing another shot. He was asleep in the next room.

"[The Bengali words used by Nilmadhub Mitter are:]

আমি আমার পিতাকে গুলি মারিয়াছি যে পিতৃভূমির দ্বারে মারিয়াছি তাহা এই আর তারপরে আমার হাতকে যে পিতৃভূমির দ্বারে মারিয়াছি।

"Q.—Where did you get this pistol?

A.—I purchased it from Messrs. Walter, Locke & Co. about a fortnight ago. I purchased it myself.

Q.—Why did you shoot your father and brother?

B 2. A.—I shot my father because he did not behave properly with me, and lately I asked him for Rs. 10,000 for giving deposit to Messrs. Barry & Co. for obtaining the post of cashier. My father refused to pay the money. This is nearly 20 or 22 days ago. I then purchased the pistol

*[Note.—I shot my father with bullet. The pistol with which I shot is this one, and after that I shot my brother with the same pistol.—Translated by the Court interpreter.]
with the object of shooting my father. I shot my brother Raj Kristo Mitter because he used to create ill-feeling between myself and my father.

"After purchasing the pistol I kept it, with the case, behind the book-shelf in the room in which I am now making the statement.

"Q.—When did you purchase the bullets?

"A.—I purchased them at the same time that I purchased the pistol.

[598] "Q.—Where did the pistol remain?

"A.—It remained behind the book-shelf until I took it out this morning at 1-30 A.M.

"Q.—Where did you leave the pistol after shooting your father and brother?

"A.—I left it at the room in which my brother was sleeping.

Nilmadhub Mitter.

"Note.—I believe that this confession was voluntarily made. It was taken in my presence and hearing, and was read over to the person making it and admitted by him to be correct, and it contains a full and true account of the statement made by him.

Kalinath Mitter,

The facts with reference to the language in which the Magistrate and the prisoner spoke to one another, and with reference to the mode in which the confession was recorded, appeared from the evidence of Baboo Kalinath Mitter, which, so far as it bore upon this matter, was as follows. In examination-in-chief he said:

"I knew the late Khetter Mohun Mitter. I had once, so far as I remember, seen the prisoner before the time I took down his statement. I remember going to 86, Cornwallis Street, on the 26th of March. This statement 'B' is in my writing. It is the deposition made by Nilmadhub. The signature is his. I went in consequence of having received a letter. Before I began writing, I had a conversation with Nilmadhub. No one else was in the room. Before taking his deposition I asked him questions. I asked him whether it was true that he wanted to make any statement. He said, 'yes,' he wanted to make a statement. I asked whether he wanted to do so voluntarily or whether any pressure had been brought to bear upon him. He said he wanted to make a statement; it was voluntary on his part; no pressure had been brought to bear on him. This first conversation was in Bengali. He understands English, and speaks English. In the deposition the questions were put in English one and all. He gave some answers in English and some in Bengali. When he gave an answer in Bengali, I rendered it into English read it over to him, and asked him if that was his answer, and he said, 'yes.'"

In cross-examination the witness said:

"I put no question in Bengali when taking down his statement. Before that I spoke to him in Bengali. Out of the answers I cannot give you [599] the exact number that were given in Bengali. The two answers marked B 1 and B 2 were given in Bengali."

The witness, also in his cross-examination, said:

"In 'B 1' a part, not the whole, of the English is a translation of the Bengali that follows. I put no questions in both English and Bengali."
At the trial this confession was admitted in evidence, under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, previously to the examination of Khetter Nath Mitter. The learned Judge in charging the jury pointed out to them that, apart from the confession, the other evidence in the case was not sufficient to support a conviction against the prisoner.

A majority of six to three of the jury returned a verdict of guilty, in which verdict the learned Judge agreed, and the prisoner was convicted, subject to the opinion of the Court upon the question hereinafter stated. Sentence was deferred, and the prisoner remanded to jail.

The question reserved was "whether, having regard to the facts stated by Baboo Kalinath Mitter, and to the terms of the confession itself, that confession is rendered inadmissible in point of law, by reason of some of the answers of the prisoner having been given in Bengali but recorded in English?"—and in reserving this question the learned Judge stated that there was nothing to show that the irregularity, if any, in recording the confession, had injured the accused in any way as to his defence on the merits.

Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Henderson, for the prisoner.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul) and the Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. Pugh), for the Crown.

Mr. Woodroffe.—The confession was admitted in evidence under s. 80 of the Evidence Act previous to the evidence given by Kalinath; I objected to it on several grounds, viz., that on the face of the document it did not purport to have been taken in accordance with the law, that there was no proof that it was signed by the accused, and that s. 80 did not apply to presumption as to the signature of the accused. Kalinath was not called as a witness for the purposes of s. 533 of the Criminal Code, but because he was a witness before the committing Magistrate. The mode in which the confession was taken down is not in accordance with s. 364 of [600] the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate and the accused were both Bengalis, and it was practicable for the former to have recorded the answers in the language in which they were given. The Magistrate is certain that he put two questions in Bengali, and there may have been others. If it should be contended that the confession can be good as to part and bad as to the other parts, I submit that the answer to the question—who shot your father—might have been consistent with shooting by accident or in self-defence. In the part of the confession marked B I there are a number of the English words which find no place in the Bengali. Has not the prisoner been prejudiced by this mode of taking down his confession? I submit he has. The evidence in the case showed that his younger brother was found standing up in the room in which his father lay, and the doctor's evidence showed that the wound on the younger brother might possibly have been self-inflicted. It was therefore important to see whether, as stated by the accused in his confession, the younger brother was asleep at the time. The Bengali words in B I do not mention this point. Moreover, it does not appear that the Bengali words were read over to the prisoner at all.

The Magistrate appears to have done that which was held fatal to a confession in the case of Queen v. Bheebeekee (1). The confession in the part marked B 2 is not clear, the evidence at the trial showed that the pistol was bought on the 2nd March, and the refusal of the father to stand security for the prisoner for the appointment in Barry & Co.'s office was long after the purchase. Again, the sum mentioned as the security required was in the confession Rs. 10,000, but the evidence in the case disclosed that Rs. 20,000 had been asked for by Barry & Co. All these matters make it of the utmost importance to show that the confession was taken down correctly. Secondary evidence of this imperfect confession could not be accepted.—Queen-Empress v. Viran (1). Parker, J., there held that the provisions of s. 164 were inoperative, and that s. 533 would not render a confession admissible where no attempt had been made to conform with the provisions of s. 164. See also Reg v. Bai Ratan (2); Queen v. [601] Omiro Gorindo (3); Queen v. Daya Anand (4); R. v. Shivya (5). Kalinath's evidence rebutted the presumption that the confession had been properly given, and therefore s. 533 had no application; the concluding portion of s. 533 shows that it is only when evidence is taken for the purposes of that section that the saving clause has any application. The confession having been wrongly admitted in the first instance, it ought to have been withdrawn after the evidence given by Kalinath. The moral effect of the confession on the jury would have been very different had they first heard the evidence of Kalinath as to how the confession, was taken—the case of Reg v. Bai Ratan (2). But in any case Kalinath's evidence only amounts to this, that he took down a certain statement in writing, and that the statement put before him was that statement; he was not asked what the accused said or answered. Assuming I am in error in saying that s. 533 does not apply, then what effect should be given to the words "duly made the statement recorded" in s. 533? I submit that the word "duly" has reference to the provisions of the law. [Wilson, J.—I think the meaning of s. 533 is that, if the Court finds that the Magistrate has not done all his duty, the Court may then take evidence to show that the prisoner has done all that was necessary for him on his part to do. It seems not to be necessary to take evidence under that section to prove that the Magistrate has done all that is necessary.] Further Kalinath did not inform the accused that he was a Magistrate; the accused was brought from the hands of the police to Kalinath, and during the confession the police, although not actually in the room, were just outside the door. [Pigot, J.—The cases regarding statutory confessions set out in Russell on Crimes, 426, appear to be in your favour.]

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul).—There is a great difference between a statement of law, as laid down in Russell on Crimes, and the actual law in this country. Under s. 364 the accused, after his statement is taken down, is at liberty to explain or add to his answers, and where the whole is conformable to that which he declares to be the truth, the Magistrate shall certify that the examination was taken in his presence and hearing, and that it [602] contains a full and true account of the statement made by the accused. That is what substantially took place in this case; the statement was read over to the accused and he did not object to it or add to it, and that being so it was admissible.

[Mr. Woodroffe.—The certificate of the Magistrate is under s. 364.] Be it so, it is also in compliance with s. 364, as s. 164 provides that it shall be signed in the manner prescribed by s. 364, but surely not without being read over to the accused. The evidence at the trial shows that the prisoner understood English; as to this there is the evidence of Kalinath, the evidence of Bradshaw who sold the pistol to him; and the cross-examination was not directed to rebut this fact. Then, in what language was he examined? Undoubtedly all the questions were put in English and the answers also given in that language, although it appears that some of them may have been both in Bengali and English. It cannot, however, be said that the examination was conducted in Bengali, nor partly in Bengali and partly in English; then under those circumstances it was not practicable to take down the examination all in Bengali. The intention of s. 364 is that the questions and answers should be taken down in one language; it was not practicable to do this, as the answers were given in two languages, and then, if it is not possible so to do, they should be taken down in English; when an answer was given in Bengali, it was rendered into English and read over to the accused, and he acquiesced in it. This was sufficient. The words "dually made and recorded" in s. 533 mean "made in due course of things," and s. 533 cures any defect. The case of Queen-Empress v. Viran (1) merely decides that, when a statement taken is radically insufficient, then the Court would hold the statement to be inadmissible. Here in the present case the confession is not radically insufficient. The case of Queen v. Ramanjiuya (2) shows that ss. 122 and 346 of the old Code must be read together, and that evidence may be given to explain that a confession has been duly recorded. The case of Titu Maya v. The Queen (3) does not follow Bai Ratan's case.

[603] The Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. Pugh).—There are no instances of confessions used on the Original side of the High Court having been taken down in any other language than English. In the case of Biddi Churn Nurie, decided by Prinsep, J., on the 4th September 1885, the Magistrate was examined and stated that the confession was made in Urdu, but was taken down in English; that confession was admitted. [O'Kinealy, J.—Does s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code apply at all having regard to s. 1? Section 164 falls under Chapter XIV, which is headed "information to the police and their powers to investigate." Most of that chapter, if not all of it, appears to have no reference to the Presidency. If s. 164 does not apply, neither does s. 364, and those two sections are the only grounds for saying that the answer to the Magistrate ought to have been taken down in Bengali. An investigation of Chapter XIV clearly shows that it is only applicable to mofussil police reports and investigations. But assuming the chapter to apply, the requirements of ss. 164 and 364 have been complied with. Section 364 provides for the recording of a confession in three languages. It cannot be said that the prisoner has been examined in two languages, because he has given occasional answers in Bengali. But supposing the confession has not been properly recorded, is it a defect? I submit not. It is true that the case of Queen-Empress v. Viran (1) lays down that the provisions of s. 164 are imperative, yet the decisions in this Court do not go to that effect. See Titu Maya’s case and those following it. Substantial compliance with the section is only necessary—R. v. Kala Chand Pal (4); Behari Hajdi, In re (5); Krishno Monte v. Empress (6). The other cases which show that any defect is cured by s. 533 are: Empress of India v. Bhairon Singh (7); Empress of India v. Yakub Khan (8); Empress v. Sagambur (9); Empress v. Munshi Sheikh (10); Fekoo Mahlo v. Empress (11);

[604] Mr. Woodroffe, in reply.—It is said that s. 1 of the Code and Chapter XIV show that s. 164 does not apply to the Presidency. Supposing it to be so, then the matter is reduced to an absurdity, for the confession was admitted under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, and that section has no applicability if s. 164 does not apply. [Petheram, C.J.—Assuming that the confession was wrongfully admitted under s. 80, the defect is cured by Kalinath’s evidence.] No, the document is not admissible in evidence at the time when it was put in evidence; it was admitted on the Monday, and Kalinath’s evidence was taken on the Friday following. Supposing s. 164 does not apply, did Kalinath’s evidence make the confession evidence? He did not pretend to say that he could tell which of the recorded answers were given in Bengali; the translation of the Bengali words does not fit in any one place in the confession; what the Magistrate did was not to make a translation of the Bengali words, for the English sentences are many more in number than the Bengali, and bear a further meaning. It has been assumed that the prisoner spoke English; there is no evidence to that effect. It is absolutely necessary that the Court should have the exact words of the confession; failing this the prisoner is prejudiced. Then supposing even that the Court would hold that, there being no proof that the Bengali words were read, nor that the whole of the English statement was read over, with or without the Bengali words before it was signed by the accused, can it be said that the mere fact of the signature of the accused makes it a statement that could be safely used as evidence against him? Suppose the Bengali words were taken into the confession, do they amount to a confession of the murder? No circumstances are given here at all; it may well be that it was not murder, but suicide or accident. Then as to whether the confession could be struck out after having once been received in evidence, there is direct authority of the English Courts that it can—The Queen v. Garner (1). Then can it be held that s. 164 does not apply? To hold so would be to hold that the police in Calcutta are under the control of no law, and that a Police Magistrate may take evidence of a confession [605] in Calcutta, but he may not do so outside Calcutta. The whole mode of taking the confession tends to show that it was taken under s. 164. Then, as to whether the defects in the confession can be remedied by s. 533 of the Code; the authorities show that they cannot. See Empress v. Hari Kisto Biswas (2) and Empress v. Mannoo Tamooloo (3), where the confession was defective as not being signed or marked by the prisoner, but the Court held that this defect could not be cured by s. 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The only case since the New Code of 1882 is the case of the Queen-Empress v. Viran (4), and that is in my favour. Section 553 of the Code does not apply, as I have already pointed out. Kalinath was not called under that section. I obliged them to call Kalinath Mitter. He was not called from day to day, but when it was necessary for them to show that there was no police interference. It was for the purposes of their case that he was called. Had it not been the case, and if the learned Judge had considered that there was some statutory defect in the confession itself, Kalinath Mitter would have been called much earlier. The case of the Queen v. Ramanjirya, which I have before cited, shows that “duly made” is equivalent to “duly recorded.”

OPINION.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J., Wilson, Pigot, O'Kinealy and Ghose, J.J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—The only fact which it is necessary to mention beyond that stated by the learned Judge is that the document, the admissibility of which is in question, was put in on Monday, May 21st, as being a document made under the provisions of s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and admissible in evidence without proof under the provisions of s. 80 of the Evidence Act, and that Baboo Kalinath Mitter was not called until the following Friday.

Several questions have been raised and argued before us as being necessary to the decision of the general question whether the document upon the facts proved at the trial was properly admitted as evidence against the prisoner. They were: 1st, does [606] s. 164 apply to a statement made by a person in custody, to a Magistrate in Calcutta in the course of an investigation, made by the police in the town of Calcutta, into the circumstances of a crime committed in Calcutta? Secondly, if it does not, was the document in question properly admitted upon the evidence of Baboo Kalinath Mitter under the provisions of ss. 21 and 26 of the Evidence Act? Thirdly, if s. 164 does apply to this case, was the statement of the prisoner recorded in accordance with the provisions of that section coupled with s. 364? and, fourthly, if it was not so recorded, is the defect cured by s. 533 of the same Act?

The first question depends on the construction to be placed on s. 1 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That section, so far as it is material to the present question, is as follows: "In the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing herein contained shall affect  the police in the town of Calcutta.

Section 164 deals with statements made to a Magistrate in the course of an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Act, and the point for consideration is whether the investigation, in the course of which the statement in question was made, was an investigation under that chapter.

The investigation was by the Calcutta Police in town of Calcutta, and unless there is some specific provision making Chapter XV applicable to the police in Calcutta, the section does not apply, as the statement was not made in the course of an investigation under the chapter.

The chapter is headed "Information to the police, and their powers to investigate." It is clear that many sections of the chapter cannot refer to Calcutta, and the only section which must apply to the police in Calcutta is s. 155. But we do not think that that section is sufficient to amount to a provision that the whole chapter is to apply to the police in Calcutta, or to give them any power to make investigations under it, and it follows that the present case is not in any way affected by s. 164 of the Code, or, as a necessary consequence, by s. 364 or s. 553.

The second question then arises, whether the document in question was properly admitted under the provisions of the Evidence Act?

[607] Baboo Kalinath Mitter was called, and he stated that he questioned the prisoner in English, that the prisoner understands and speaks English, and sometimes answered him in English and sometimes in Bengali; that when his answers were in English he wrote them down, when in Bengali he wrote them in English, and read over what he had written to the prisoner; that the whole document contains the prisoner's deposition, and that the prisoner signed it in his presence.
If the contents of the document did not amount to a confession, the document itself would be relevant as an admission under s. 21 of the Evidence Act; and though it is a confession, it is relevant and may be proved, unless it is excluded by s. 26 of that Act. That section is as follows: "No confession made by any person whilst he is in the custody of a police officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be proved as against such person."

At the time when the prisoner made the statement he was in the custody of the police; but it was made to, and in the immediate presence of, Baboo Kalinath Mitter, who has stated what is undoubtedly the fact, that he is a Magistrate for Calcutta, and consequently it is obvious that the confession is not excluded by s. 26, and this being so, and it being proved that the whole of the statements contained in the document were either the actual words spoken by the prisoner, or were accepted by him as representing the true meaning of what he had said and as the whole document is signed by him with his own hand, the whole of the admissions contained in the document were strictly proved to have been made by him, and were admissible against him under the Indian Evidence Act.

In this view of the law, the third and fourth questions become immaterial in the present case, but we wish to guard ourselves from being supposed to hold that when answers are made by an accused person in one language and written down in another, unless it is shown that it was impracticable to write them in the language in which they were spoken, s. 164 would be complied with; on the contrary, we think that when such a proceeding is adopted the statement of the accused would not be recorded under that section, read with s. 364, and we have very grave doubts whether the defect could be cured under the provisions of s. 533.

The question as to whether or not s. 164 has force in Calcutta was not raised at the trial. The document was put in by the prosecution, and admitted in accordance with the practice which has been followed since the passing of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882 at Sessions held in Calcutta.

In this Court the point has for the first time been raised, and argued by the Crown.

On the whole, for the reasons given in our answers to the first and second questions, we think that the confession was in the present case admissible in point of law, and we answer the question reserved by the learned Judge in the negative (1).

(1) An application was subsequently made to Wilson, J., for leave to appeal from the conviction and sentence to the Privy Council. In refusing the application Mr. Justice Wilson said: "I have fully considered the matter, and have consulted the other Judges, before whom the question of law I referred was argued and decided, and I think it clear that I must refuse the application. The principles upon which Courts could act in such matters were fully considered in the Bombay High Court in the case of Reg. v. Pestroji Dinsha, 10 Bom., H. C., 75. I fully accept the explanation of law given in that case by Chief Justice Westropp in his judgment, and I think, accepting this, that I should go quite outside them and far beyond any of the authorities in any High Court in this country, or decision of Her Majesty in Council, if I were to make the order now asked for. The application is, therefore, refused."

IN THE MATTER OF HARI DASS SANYAL AND OTHERS v. SARITULLA.*

[21st March, 1888.]

Further enquiry—Notice to accused—Discharge by Magistrate—Criminal Procedure Code Act X of 1882, s. 437.

No notice to an accused person is necessary in point of law before an order under s. 437 can be passed; but as a matter of discretion it is proper that such notice should be given.

[609] Held by the majority of the Full Bench (Prinsep Wilson, Tottenham, Norris, Pigot and O'Kineally, JJ.)—After an enquiry by a Subordinate Magistrate and the discharge of an accused person a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has jurisdiction, under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to order a "further enquiry" or a re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the Subordinate Magistrate, i.e., when no further evidence is forthcoming. But (Prinsep, J., dissenting), the words "further enquiry" in that section mean the enquiry preliminary to trial which regularly results in a charge or discharge, and do not include the trial. And if on the evidence taken the accused ought to be committed, then, in a case triable only at the Sessions, the proper course is to commit under s. 436; in other cases to refer to the High Court.

Per Prinsep, J.—The word "enquiry" includes a trial, and the "further enquiry" would therefore allow of the framing of a charge, and the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution.

Per Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.—The power given by s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order a further enquiry is confined to cases in which the revising officer is satisfied, for one of the reasons mentioned in s. 435, that the subordinate officer has proceeded on insufficient materials, and that with a more exhaustive enquiry further materials would be forthcoming. It was not intended that such an enquiry should be granted simply for the reconsideration of evidence.

This reference arose out of a case and counter case of rioting; the two cases were heard separately by the Joint Magistrate of Attia, who, on the hearing of the case against Hari Dass Sanyal and others, discharged the accused. In the counter case the accused Saritulla and others were convicted, but on appeal to the Sessions Judge this conviction and sentence was reversed. Saritulla thereupon applied to the Sessions Judge to set aside the order of discharge passed in the case of Hari Dass

*Full Bench on Criminal Motion No. 53 of 1887, against an order of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 23rd February 1887.
Sanyal and others, urging that the Joint Magistrate had not examined all the witnesses forthcoming on behalf of the prosecution; it however did not appear that the witnesses forthcoming had been summoned when the case was before the Joint Magistrate. On this application the Sessions Judge passed the following order:

"I am inclined to grant this application. I do not think that the discrepancies in the evidence which the Joint Magistrate has alluded to in his judgment are of such importance as he attaches to them. From his judgment in the [610] cross case, in which the present applicant was an accused, I am led to think that the Joint-Magistrate may have taken a wrong view of the facts of this case. The gunshot wound, from which the complainant’s brother is proved by the medical evidence in this case to be suffering, is strong circumstantial evidence in support of the complainant’s story. Under these circumstances I think this case should be re-enquired into particularly as it is urged on behalf of the applicant that the Joint-Magistrate did not examine all the witnesses that are forthcoming on his side.

* * * * *

I am aware that in certain cases [see Darsan Lall v. Jumuk Lall (1)] the High Court of this Province has held that a Sessions Judge is not competent to order a re-hearing of a case, unless additional evidence is forthcoming. But in this case additional evidence is forthcoming. It is said that the Joint-Magistrate did not examine four witnesses named in a petition presented to him. Moreover, it would seem to me from the Bombay High Court ruling in the case of the Queen-Empress v. Dorabji Harmasji (2) and the very recent Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court in the Queen-Empress v. Chotu (3) that a re-enquiry can be ordered even when no additional evidence is forthcoming. From the provisions of s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the Bombay High Court ruling, it is evident that no notice to the opposite party is necessary before ordering a re-enquiry under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I have, therefore, not given any such notice. I therefore under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code direct a further enquiry into this case."

Hari Dass and the other persons affected by this order applied to the High Court to have the order of the Sessions Judge set aside on the following grounds:

1. That the Sessions Judge had nothing before him to indicate the nature of the additional evidence referred to by him, and that without being satisfied that such evidence would have been material, and without any satisfactory explanation of the reasons which induced the prosecution to withhold such additional evidence during the trial of the case, the Sessions Judge [611] ought not to have ordered what is practically a re-trial of the case.

2. That the law not allowing an appeal on the facts in cases of discharge, the Sessions Judge was wrong in dealing with the matter as an appeal on the facts.

3. That the Sessions Judge was unable to indicate any point for further enquiry; and had practically ordered a new trial.

4. That the Sessions Judge had no power to order a further enquiry when there was no error of law committed by the Joint Magistrate, and when no material evidence was forthcoming.

(1) 12 C. 522. (2) 10 B. 131. (3) 9 A. 52.
5. That the order ought not to have been made ex parte, or that at all events as a matter of sound discretion the Sessions Judge ought to have given notice.

6. That the Sessions Judge had erred in law in allowing his judgment to be influenced by the record of another case to which the petitioners were no parties.

7. That the Sessions Judge had been mainly influenced in the matter by the opinion he had formed in the counter case which he decided on appeal.

On the hearing of this application the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J) considering that the questions arising were of great importance, and that the rulings on the points were conflicting, referred the following questions to a Full Bench:

1. Whether, after an enquiry by the Joint Magistrate and discharge of the accused, a Sessions Judge or the Magistrate, as the case may be, has jurisdiction under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order a "further enquiry," or a re-hearing, upon the same materials which were before the said Joint Magistrate, i.e., when no further evidence is forthcoming?

2. Whether in the circumstances of the case and the materials before him the Sessions Judge had authority under s. 437 to direct a fresh enquiry?

3. Whether he could do so without notice to the accused?

Mr. Woodroffe and Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry, for the petitioners.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), on behalf of the Crown.

[612] Mr. Woodroffe.—I submit the order was bad, as no notice was given to my clients. I rely on the cases of Chundi Churn Bhattacharjia v. Hem Chunder Banerjia (1); Jeebunkisto Roy v. Shib Chunder Das (2); Queen-Empress v. Amir Khan (3); Queen-Empress v. Erramreddi (4); Darsun Lall v. Jumul Lall (5); Queen-Empress v. Hasnu (6); Queen-Empress v. Chotu (7). All the High Courts except the Bombay High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Dorabji Hormasji (8) have held that notice is necessary; and s. 439 of the Code is explicit on the point. Section 436 also lays down that the accused shall have an opportunity of showing cause. [Petheram, C. J.—We are all agreed on that point.] On the second question the Judge had no materials before him for a fresh enquiry; he merely found that the Joint Magistrate "did not examine all the witnesses forthcoming," but did not find that the evidence they could have given would have been material. On the first question referred, the matter depends on the consideration of the word "further" and the word "enquiry." Now "enquiry" is defined in s. 4 of the Code as including "every enquiry conducted under this Code by a Magistrate or Court. The word is used in many other sections of the Code, but there is one general line of thought made use of in its use. Throughout the whole of Chapter XV, and up to the end of the Code, save in the two sections mentioned in the Bombay cases, the word "enquiry" is contrasted with the word "trial," and seems to be distinctly referable to preliminary proceedings before a Magistrate as distinguished from a trial. In the old Code an "enquiry" is defined as "an enquiry conducted by a Magistrate," and in that Code there was also a definition of the words "enquired into" and "trial."

The new Code has dropped those definitions and has enlarged them under the term "investigation." There is a difference between an "investigation" and "trial," and an enquiry does not include an investigation. In Chapter XX the heading is "of trial of summons cases," and in Chapter XXII the heading is "of summary trials." In [613] s. 176 the word seems to be used in the sense of a local enquiry, and in another different sense in ss. 375 and 380, on which sections the Bombay Court have built up some argument. Under s. 428 the taking of evidence is, for the purposes of Chapter XXV, to be deemed an enquiry, and what reason is there for reading ss. 375 and 380 in a different way? The above are all the places in which the word is used, until the referring sections. In s. 436 the words "fresh enquiry" are used, and in s. 437 "further enquiry." Section 537 governs the revisional sections. [Pract. J.—Is not s. 537 to be taken subject to any former provisions of the Code?] I understand the case of Bachhu Mullah v. Siva Ram Singh (1) to show that s. 537 governs the revisional sections, and that an erroneous view of a judicial officer is not a failure of justice which would entitle another Court to deal with the matter except on appeal. Under s. 439, read with s. 423, the High Court has all the powers of an appellate Court; and has power under that section to set aside and order of discharge. In the Allahabad case of the Queen-Empress v. Chotu (2) the Chief Justice uses certain sections to limit the cases which may be brought up on revision; but is that so? Section 428 gives the appellate Court power to reverse an order on appeal, to direct a further enquiry or an accused to be re-tried, and to reverse or alter any other order. If in s. 439 the High Court as a Revisional Court is entitled to exercise powers under s. 423, there is nothing to support the conclusion of the Chief Justice.

The Bombay Court in the case of the Queen-Empress v. Dorabji Hormasji (3) eludes the force of the observations of Mitter and Field, J.J., in the case of Chundi Churn Bhuttacharjee v. Hem Chunder Banerjee (4); and the case of Jeebunkiato Roy v. Shib Chunder Das (5) lays down that a further enquiry must be on additional evidence. This case was followed in Darsun Lall v. Junuk Lall (6) and the cases of Queen-Empress v. Hasnu (7), Queen-Empress v. Erramreddi (8), and [614] Queen-Empress v. Amir Khan (9) are to the same effect. There is also an unreported case of Abdul Nazir v. Gunga Singh, decided by Petheram, C. J., and Prinsep, J., on the 3rd March, 1887 (Cr. Motion 77 of 1887), similarly decided.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.
The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench:—

OPINIONS.

Petheram, C. J.—Section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives power of revision, and is in these terms:—

"The High Court, or any Court of Session, or District Magistrate, or any Sub-divisional Magistrate empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction, for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceeding of such inferior Court.

(7) 6 A. 367.    (8) 8 M. 296.    (9) 8 M. 336.

"If any Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under this section considers that any such finding, sentence or order is illegal or improper, or that any such proceedings are irregular, he shall forward the record, with such remarks thereon as he thinks fit, to the District Magistrate.

"Orders made under ss. 143 and 144 and proceedings under s. 176 are not proceedings within the meaning of this section."

Section 436 gives power to Courts of Sessions or District Magistrates to order committal where a case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session.

"When, on examining the record of any case under s. 435 or otherwise, the Court of Session or District Magistrate considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, and that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, the Court of Session or District Magistrate may cause him to be arrested, and may thereupon, instead of directing a fresh inquiry, order him to be committed for trial upon the matter of which he has been, in the opinion of the Court of Session or District Magistrate, improperly discharged.

"Provided as follows—

"(a) that the accused has had an opportunity of showing cause of such Court or Magistrate why the commitment should not be made.

"(b) that, if such Court or Magistrate thinks that the evidence shows that some other offence has been committed by the accused, such Court or Magistrate may direct the inferior Court to enquire into such offence."

Section 437 gives power to order further enquiry when a complaint has been dismissed or discharged:

"On examining any record, under s. 435 or otherwise, the High Court or Court of Session may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make, and the District Magistrate may himself make, or direct any subordinate Magistrate to make, further enquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under s. 203, or into the case of any accused person who has been discharged."

The section which relates to dismissals is s. 203. This section is in the chapter headed "Complaints to Magistrates." Under this chapter the Magistrate is to examine the complainant on oath, and, if he thinks fit, to direct an investigation; and (s. 203) he may, if not satisfied with the statement of the complainant and the result of the investigation, if any, dismiss the complaint without issuing any process.

The sections which relate to discharges are ss. 209 and 253.

The first is in the chapter headed "Enquiry into cases triable by the Court of Session or High Court."

Section 208 provides that the Magistrate shall, when the accused is brought before him, hear the complainant and the evidence on both sides and (s. 209) if he is not satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused, discharge him.

Section 253 is in the chapter headed "Trial of Warrant-cases by Magistrates."

Section 252 provides that when the accused is brought before him, the Magistrate shall hear the complainant, and shall hear the evidence for the prosecution and summon witnesses for the prosecution, if necessary.
and (s. 253) shall, if he finds that no case has been made out which un-rebutted would warrant a conviction, discharge the accused.

In cases under ss. 200-203 it would appear that if the Magistrate does not believe the complainant, and thereupon, without taking any further step, dismisses the complaint, the revising officer may, under s. 487, direct that, by way of further enquiry, he shall cause an investigation to be made, or, if one has been made which he considers insufficient or unsatisfactory, or if he considers that the complainant has not been sufficiently examined, may order that the complainant be recalled and his examination be continued. But it is difficult to see how a further enquiry can be ordered in any but one of these three cases, as it is clear that the enquiry is preliminary to the issue of process, and next step to take, if the enquiry as far as the [616] collection of materials is complete, is the issue of process. In such a case the only Court which could deal with the matter must be the High Court, under s. 439, embodying sub-s.
(c) of s. 428.

In cases under ss. 206-209 the Magistrate is, in the presence of the accused, to hear the evidence of the complainant or otherwise produced before him, and must, unless for some good reason he does not think it necessary, issue process and compel the attendance of other witnesses or the production of documents, and if he is not satisfied that there are grounds for putting the accused on his trial, may discharge him at any time. Here if in the opinion of the revising officer the Magistrate has not sufficiently examined the witnesses, or has not summoned witnesses who should have been summoned, or has not compelled the production of documents which were material for the prosecution, no doubt the revising officer may direct a further enquiry either by recalling witnesses who have been examined or by compelling the attendance of others, or the production of documents, so as to complete the enquiry which must be made before the charge is framed. But if the revising officer is satisfied that all the materials have been collected, I do not see how the revising officer can direct a further enquiry, because he does not agree with the conclusion at which his subordinate has arrived upon those materials. To do so is in effect to direct the Subordinate Magistrate, against his own view of the case, to frame a charge—a power which is given to the High Court alone under the section above cited.

The only other cases are those which arise under Chap. XXI, ss. 251-253. These are cases in which the accused is brought before a Magistrate on a warrant. In these cases the Magistrate is to take all such evidence as is produced before him; to ascertain if there are other witnesses likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and able to give evidence for the prosecution, and to summon such of them as he thinks necessary; and if, upon hearing the witnesses produced, and, if he thinks it necessary to compel the production of other evidence, after hearing such other evidence, the Magistrate finds that no case has been made out against the accused which, if unrebuted, would warrant his conviction, the Magistrate shall discharge him.

[617] Here also it is manifest that the revising officer may, if he thinks fit, direct the subordinate officer to compel the production of further witnesses, and also, as it seems to me, direct him to recall and further examine any witness who has been already examined. But if and when the revising officer is satisfied that all the materials which can be collected have been collected, I do not see how he can direct the Subordinate Magistrate to make further enquiry, the next step being to frame a charge, which is a proceeding subsequent to the completion of the enquiry, the taking of which, as it seems to me, can only be compelled by the High Court.

On the whole, then, in my opinion, the power given by s. 437 to order a further enquiry is confined to cases in which the revising officer is satisfied, for one of the reasons mentioned in s. 435, that the subordinate officer has proceeded on insufficient materials, and that, with a more exhaustive enquiry, further material would be forthcoming.

I think notice is not required by the law, but that, except in cases of dismissal under s. 208, notice should be given.

WILSON, J (TOTTENHAM NORRIS, PIGOT and O'KINEALY, JJ., con-curring).—The main question which we have to answer on this reference seems to me to involve three distinct enquiries, which should, I think, be considered separately. And as to each of those three enquiries, the language of the present Code of Criminal Procedure is so entirely different from that used in the earlier Code that the decisions upon that earlier Code afford us no practical assistance. The three questions I propose to consider are:

I. On what grounds is an order of discharge made under s. 209 or
s. 258 liable to be set aside by a Court of Revision?
II. What Courts have jurisdiction to set it aside?
III. What orders are proper to be made if an order of discharge is to be set aside?

The series of ss. 435 to 439 must, as more than one learned Judge has pointed out, be read together. Of these, s. 435 is the principal section dealing with the grounds upon which revisional jurisdiction may ordinarily be exercised. It says that—[618] "The High Court, or any Court of Sessions, or District Magistrate, or any Sub-divisional Magistrate empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction, for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the incorrectness, legality, or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court."

This I read as an express enactment that every finding, sentence, or order is liable to review, not only on the ground of illegality or irregularity, but also on the ground of incorrectness, that is to say, on the ground that it is wrong on the merits. And an order of discharge is no exception to the general rule. I do not mean to say that an order of discharge may not, der the subsequent sections, be set aside on other grounds, such as the discovery of fresh evidence, but only that it is liable to be so dealt with on any of the grounds here mentioned.

The second point for enquiry is, what tribunals have jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge? This Court has power under s. 439 to deal as a Court of Revision with any finding, sentence, or order which comes under its notice. Sessions Judges and District Magistrates in most cases have not this power; their course ordinarily is to refer the matter to this Court if they think there is ground for doing so. But in particular instances they themselves exercise revisional powers. And with regard to orders of discharge it is expressly enacted that they may do so, though to what extent and in what form is of course another question. Section 436 says that—"When on examining the record of any case under § 435 or otherwise, the Court of Session or District Magistrate considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, and that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, the Court of Session or District Magistrate may cause him to be arrested and may thereupon, instead of directing a fresh enquiry, order him to be committed for trial."

The words here used "instead of directing a fresh enquiry" must, I think, refer to the power given by the next section of ordering a "further enquiry," for, except in a single case spoken of in proviso (b), there is no other section giving power to order any enquiry at all. The next section, § 437, says:—

"On examining any record under § 435 or otherwise, the High Court or Court of Session may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any [619] of the Magistrates subordinate to him, to make, and the District Magistrate may himself make, or direct any Subordinate Magistrate to make, further enquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under § 208, or into the case of any accused person who has been discharged."

With regard to these sections, I think it clear, first, from the express reference to § 435, that the Courts mentioned have power to interfere with an order of discharge on any of the grounds mentioned in § 435, on the ground that it is incorrect, that is, wrong on the merits, no less than on the ground of illegality or irregularity. I think it clear, secondly, that the words "fresh enquiry" in § 436 and "further enquiry" in § 437 are used as meaning the same thing. Thirdly, though I am inclined to agree with the contention urged before us that the mention of the High Court in § 437 was not strictly necessary, and that, if it had not been mentioned, it would have had, under ss. 435 and 439, the same powers which are here expressly given to it, still I think the mention of the three tribunals together, the High Court, the Court of Session, and the District Magistrate, tends to show that the Legislature intended them to have the same power with regard to the matter dealt with in the section.

The examination of the sections so far satisfies my mind that the High Court, the Court of Session, and the District Magistrate all have power, as Courts of Revision, to deal with an order of discharge, and to deal with it on the merits as well as on other grounds.

The third question is, what orders these Courts can make when the necessity arises for setting aside an order of discharge. The High Court, under § 428, embodied in § 439, can set aside the order of discharge, and direct a charge to be framed and tried by the proper Court. It can, under § 437 and probably also under § 439, order a further enquiry instead of a committal. The Court of Session and the District Magistrate have, in cases triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions, the same alternative open to them under ss. 436 and 437. In other cases they can set aside the discharge and order a further enquiry under § 437, or refer the matter to this Court.

[620] The meaning of "further enquiry" has still to be considered. The word "enquiry" is one of frequent occurrence in the Code. The definition in the interpretation clause is very wide, and in some sections of the Act it certainly includes trial. If that meaning were adopted here, it might be that § 437 would authorise a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, not only to order further enquiry preliminary to trial, but also to order a charge to be framed and the trial of that charge to proceed. The word is often, however, used in a more specific sense, to denote the enquiry before a Magistrate preliminary to trial, which regularly results in a charge or a discharge. I am not prepared to adopt any but the narrower sense in the present section. My reasons are that, the order to be set aside being an order of discharge, the further enquiry would naturally be one of the same kind as that which has miscarried, an enquiry leading up to a charge or discharge. And upon the other view, s. 436, relating to comittal in cases triable only by the Sessions Court, would seem to be superfluous. For if "further enquiry" would cover a charge and a trial in the one case, it would equally do so in a case of the other class. But in s. 436 comittal and further enquiry are spoken of as distinct alternatives. Taking, however, this narrower sense, I think the enquiry includes not merely the taking of evidence, but the consideration of that evidence and the conclusion to charge or discharge the accused.

I think it unnecessary to consider what "further" enquiry would mean if the words were not explained by the context. Those words might mean an additional enquiry supplemental to the first, they might cover not only this, but also, a new enquiry superseding the first. Here I think they are used in the wider sense, first, because the further enquiry may be ordered on the ground that the first finding was incorrect; secondly, because it may be by a different Magistrate from the first; thirdly, because the words "further enquiry" and "fresh enquiry" are used as meaning the same thing.

The result is that in my opinion this Court or the Court of Sessions or the District Magistrate has jurisdiction on any sufficient ground to set aside an order of discharge, and direct either an additional investigation of the facts, or a reconsideration of the evidence, by the Magistrate whose order is set aside, or a new enquiry before another Magistrate; and among such sufficient grounds are the omission to take evidence which ought to have been taken, the discovery of fresh evidence mistakes of law, illegality or irregularity in the proceedings, and the incorrectness of the first finding. I agree with the view taken in the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Dorabji Hormasji (1), and to a great extent with that taken by the Full Bench of the Allahabad Court in Queen-Empress v. Chotu (2).

But although the jurisdiction of this Court and of the Court of Session and of the District Magistrate is upon this view a very wide one, the discretion thus conferred is a judicial discretion. No Court can properly set aside an order of discharge without having and assigning solid and sufficient reasons for doing so. And if there is reason to set aside an order of discharge, it is the duty of the Court which has to deal with the matter in each case to make such order as is appropriate to the facts of the case. In a case triable only by the Sessions Court, to which s. 436 applies, if the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate is satisfied that on the evidence taken there is a clear case for a committal, and there is no reason for desiring a further consideration by a Magistrate. I think it would ordinarily be his duty to direct a committal under s. 436, and not to order a further enquiry under s. 437. In the same way, in a case not triable only by the Court of Sessions, if the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate is satisfied that on the evidence taken there is a clear case for charging and trying the accused, and there is no reason for desiring further magisterial examination, I think it is ordinarily his duty to refer the case to this Court, which can make a suitable order, and not to direct a further enquiry by a Magistrate.

Any order, moreover, of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate setting aside an order of discharge is of course liable to be reviewed, in its turn, by this Court as a Court of Revision. And in my opinion, if in any case this Court were to find that the lower Court had set aside an order of discharge on insufficient grounds, or that, while there was good ground for setting [622] it aside, the lower Court had made an order inappropriate to the facts of the case, it would be right in reversing the order.

The result is, that I should answer the first question referred to us in the affirmative.

As to the second question, I should say that, if it is to be understood as a mere question of law going to jurisdiction, it must be answered in the affirmative; but that if the question is whether in each case there are good grounds on which the order of the Court below can be supported, we have not sufficient materials in the order of reference to enable us to answer the question.

As to the third question, I agree with Prinsep, J.

The cases must, therefore, in my opinion, go back to the referring bench to be dealt with on the whole of the materials before it.

Prinsep, J.—I have had the advantage of seeing the judgments which the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Wilson propose to deliver. So far as it goes, I agree with the opinion expressed by Wilson, J., as to the enlarged interpretation which is put on s. 437; but after very careful consideration, I am of opinion that the terms of that section should bear a still larger interpretation, and that it is competent to the High Court, Court of Session, or District Magistrate to set aside an order of discharge passed against the weight of evidence, and to order a further enquiry, within which I would include the framing of a charge, and thus to enable the accused to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution.

The term "enquiry" as defined in s. 4 (c) includes every enquiry conducted under the Code by a Magistrate or Court. The term is evidently used in contra distinction to "investigation," which it follows, and which may be described as including all proceedings conducted by the Police or any other person not a Magistrate, but authorized by a Magistrate in that behalf.

In my view an enquiry is not concluded by proceedings taken by a Magistrate up to the time that either a charge must be drawn or the accused should be discharged. If the offence be one exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the drawing up of a charge does not necessarily amount to a commitment, for ss. 211—213 show that other proceedings may intervene. If the [623] offence be a warrant case in which the Magistrate has jurisdiction, but which he may nevertheless commit, the drawing up of a charge in the latter case has the result just mentioned, and in the former enables the Magistrate to complete the evidence by requiring the accused to rebut the prima facie case made out by cross-examining the witnesses for the prosecution or otherwise. An enquiry, as defined seems to me to include a trial. It is not limited, as under the former Code, to the drawing up of a charge which, it was then expressly declared, was the commencement of a trial. I would also refer to s. 436 and especially to proviso (b). That section enables the Court of Session and District Magistrate to order a person improperly discharged of an offence exclusively triable by such Court to be arrested and forthwith to be committed for trial; but proviso (b) also provides that if the Court of Session or District Magistrate thinks that the evidence shows that some other offence has been committed by the accused, such Court or Magistrate may direct the inferior Court to enquire into such offence. What would be the nature of such enquiry? Prima facie a particular offence has been established. The enquiry would therefore be to ascertain how a charge of such an offence could be rebutted, to use the terms of ss. 209, 253. The rebuttal would be by requiring the accused to make his defence or displace the prima facie case by cross-examination of the witnesses after a charge, drawing his attention to the particular offence, has been framed.

So far, therefore, I regret to be obliged to disagree from my learned colleagues in the definition of "fresh enquiry," or "further enquiry" as used in ss. 436 and 437, though I agree with Wilson, J., that these terms are synonymous.

I am doubtful whether the power to order a further enquiry otherwise than under s. 437 is given to the High Court under s. 439.

I would further observe that it seems contrary to the system prescribed by the Code that in every warrant-case, e.g., a case of petty theft, tried by an inexperienced Magistrate (it may be the first case he has ever tried) should, of necessity, be referred for the orders of the High Court that justice may be done, [624] because a perverse or ignorant finding on the evidence has been come to. Such a Magistrate cannot pass any sentence which is not subject to appeal to the District Magistrate; every Magistrate in the district is subordinate to the District Magistrate; and yet it is sought to make such an order of discharge of the same force as an order of acquittal; to declare that it can be set aside only by the High Court. It is needless to point out that in many cases this must operate as a denial of justice, for complainants will, very rarely, consent to the delay and expense of setting the High Court in motion to obtain redress. It is difficult to understand for what reason the Legislature should have conferred power in respect to cases exclusively triable by the Court of Session on certain local Courts, and yet have refused them similar powers in respect of cases of a less important character.

With respect to the third question submitted to us, I am of opinion that, under the law, no notice to the accused is necessary before an order under s. 437 may be passed. A notice certainly would not be necessary before an order to set aside an order of dismissal under s. 209 could be passed, since that order was not passed with a notice to the accused person or in his presence, and therefore is probably unknown to him. An order of discharge, which is coupled in this section with an order of dismissal, no doubt rests on a different footing, but still it is dealt with in the same terms. It may also be remarked that the new section 436 expressly provides for notice to an accused before an order for his commitment can be made for an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session, and it would be difficult to assign any reason for any distinction between such a case and an order of discharge in a less heinous case in which the same order was passed. But it may also be noted that, as in the section preceding s. 437, so in a section following it (s. 439), provision is made for a notice before any order prejudicial to an accused person may be passed by the High Court as a Court of Revision. We have therefore the law expressly requiring notice to be given in two matters coming up in revision, while in another and cognate matter the law is silent. It is, no doubt, an ordinary rule of our Courts that no order shall be passed to a man's prejudice [625] without due notice to him, and as a principle the necessity is obvious. Still I find myself unable to say that, as the law stands, the fact that a man has not been served with a notice necessarily affects the legality of an order under s. 437. Section 440 makes it optional with any Court when exercising its powers of revision, (e.g., under s. 437) to hear any party either personally or by pleader, and this again seems to favour the view that the Legislature did not intend that a notice should be indispensable. At the same time, I am of opinion that no Court would be exercising a proper discretion in such a matter if, before proceeding under s. 437 to order a further enquiry in a case in which the accused person may have been discharged, it did not first give him an opportunity, by service of a notice, to show cause against such an order being made. If such a matter were to come before me as a Court of Revision, I would certainly feel bound either to direct the lower Court to reconsider the matter or to hear the accused myself.

Ghose, J.—I agree generally with the judgment that has been delivered by the Chief Justice. I desire, however, to make one or two observations upon the principal question before us, viz., what is the meaning of the words "further enquiry" as used in s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code?

It is said that these words mean the same thing as the expression "fresh enquiry," which occurs in s. 436. But it seems to me somewhat improbable that, if the Legislature intended to convey the same sense, they should have used two different expressions in two sections which immediately follow each other.

It appears to me that in a case which is triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, and where the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the accused has been improperly discharged by an inferior Court, he may, under s. 436, either direct a "fresh enquiry," or order that the man be committed for trial. In the former case, the inferior Court will be bound to hold a fresh preliminary enquiry, and it is in this sense I am inclined to think that the words "fresh enquiry" have been used; while in the other case no such enquiry would be necessary.

In cases not covered by s. 436 the High Court, or the Sessions Judge, or the District Magistrate, may direct "further enquiry," [626] into any complaint which has been improperly dismissed, or where an accused has been improperly discharged.

I think that in using the expression "further enquiry," the Legislature meant it in the sense of an enquiry which has not already taken place, that is to say, an additional enquiry. The learned Chief Justice has pointed out instances where such a "further enquiry" may be directed. Those instances, I believe are not exhaustive, but illustrative; for there may be, I think, other cases where "further enquiry" may well be directed. For instance, in a case where a Magistrate, after recording the whole of the evidence, considers that the facts, even if true, do not constitute an offence, the Revisional Court may direct, if it be of opinion that the Magistrate is wrong in law, "further enquiry," that is to say, a consideration of the evidence with a view to determine whether an offence has been established or not.

But where the inferior Court has taken the whole of the evidence and pronounced a judicial opinion upon it—that is to say, where a full enquiry has been made—I fail to see what the "further enquiry" would be, unless it be simply a reconsideration of the evidence which has already been considered. This I do not think was ever the intention of the Legislature.

In cases where the Sessions Judge or Magistrate thinks that there has been a miscarriage of justice, but where no "further enquiry," can properly be directed, the only course, I think, is to refer the matter to the High Court under s. 438 of the Code; and the High Court may upon such reference make the right order in the case.

[627] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

BHUPENDRO NARAYAN DUTT AND OTHERS (Petitioners) v. NEMYE CHAND MONDUL (Opposite party).* [17th April, 1888.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), s. 158—Incidents of Tenancy, Application to determine—Validity of Lease—Act XL of 1858, s. 18—Lease granted by guardian of minor's property for term exceeding five years (without sanction of Court, Effect of.

In a proceeding under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885) it is open to a petitioner, if he acknowledges the opposite party to be a tenant, to dispute the validity of the lease under which he alleges he is holding, and the Court is bound to go into and decide that question if raised.

A lease granted by a guardian of minor's property who has obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858 for a term exceeding five years without the sanction required by s. 18 of that Act is invalid.

[F., 20 B. 150 (153); R., 20 C. 249 (252).]

The facts of this case, together with the order against which the appeal was preferred, are fully stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. Evans, Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Taruck Nath Paulit, for the appellants.

Baboo Nil Madhub Bose, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J.—The facts of this case are as follows:—

The Sunderbun lot No. 44 was the mourasi tenure of one Mohendro Narain Dutt. He died leaving a will, whereby he demised his properties, ancestral and self-acquired, to his four sons, Jogendro, Bhupendro, Ganendro and Norendro, in equal shares.

After reciting that Jogendro, his son by his first wife, had come of age, and that the other three sons by his second wife were minors, the will proceeds as follows: "I do hereby constitute and appoint Srimati Bhava Sundari Dasi, my wife and their mother, executrix on behalf of the minor sons. Until the [623] attainment of majority by the said minor sons the said executrix shall remain in possession of all the property in their share, both moveable and immovable; shall collect and realize the rents, as also the monies that may be due to me on my account; shall preserve and take care of all the property; shall educate and support the minors; and shall administer the household expenditure, and celebrate the religious rites and ceremonies on a reasonable scale. God forbid it, but if the said executrix should in the meantime feel that it is likely that she will die (soon), then she shall be competent to appoint in her lifetime my mother, Srimati Sukamoyee Dasi, and my adult son, Jogendro, or, failing them, any one whom her judgment approves, being a relative of hers and a trustworthy person, as executor or executrix on behalf of the minor sons, and such executor or executrix shall do everything under the authority that shall be vested in them by her. It shall be incumbent upon my wife and my adult son aforesaid, whatever they undertake to do, to do it according to the advice of my nephew, Radha Nath Bose, and Shambhu Chunder Bose, my trustworthy friend. If it should be necessary to grant to anybody a jungle-abadi, mourasi and mokurari pottah of any jungle land in my immovable property, then, fixing a fair rent on it, my wife aforesaid, in unity with my adult son aforesaid, shall be competent to take a kabuliati and grant such pottah, and the said pottah shall never be liable to cancellation. According to the provisions I have laid down above in relation to my property, my adult son and the executrix shall perform and manage all matters.

The will is dated 12th Sraban 1272 = 26th July 1865.

The testator died on the 8th Bhadro 1272 = 23rd August 1865.

On 16th Bysack 1280 = 27th April 1873, Bhava Sundari and Jogendro, the executrix and executor under the testator’s will granted an amalnamah of Sunderbun lot No. 44 to one Uzir Nuskur, who was to hold the land rent-free up to the year 1283, and at a rent of 4 annas per bigha in 1284, 6 annas in 1285, 8 annas in 1286, 10 annas in 1287 and 1288, and at 14 annas ever afterwards.

The amalnamah contained an agreement by Bhava Sundari and Jogendro to grant a mourasi pottah at the above rates.

[629] As a matter of fact, the mourasi pottah was never granted to Uzir Nuskur.

Jogendro, the testator’s eldest son, died on the 18th Bhadro 1280 = 2nd September 1873, leaving a minor son Jotendro, in respect of whose estate a certificate under Act XL of 1858 was granted to his uncle Bhupendro by the District Judge of the 24-Pergunns on 22nd December 1873.

The certificate states that Bhupendro shall not be able, without the leave of the Court, to grant any kind of pottah relating to the minor’s estate for a longer period than five years.

In 1874 some negotiations took place with a view to a mortgage of some portion of the testator’s property, a fourth share of which descend-ed to Jogendro upon the death of his father Jogendro, and on 27th July the District Judge gave permission for the mortgage of the minor’s one-fourth share.

The mortgage does not appear to have been carried out, and on 11th Kartick 1282 = 27th October, 1875, a mourasi mokurari pottah of Sunderbun lot No. 44 was granted by Bhava Sundari and Bhupendro “for self and for minor Jotendro” to Nemye Chand Mondul, free of rent up to 1286, and at a progressive rate up to 1291, in which year and ever afterwards the rent was to be 11½ annas per bigha.

In 1882 Uzir Nuskur instituted proceedings in the Criminal Court against Nemye Chand Mondul under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.
There can be no doubt that these proceedings were instigated by Bhupendro; they resulted in favour of Nemye Chand Mondul. In 1883 Bhupendro and his brothers, who were then majors, and Jotendro, by Bhupendro as his next friend, brought a suit against Nemye Chand Mondul.

The plaint in that suit set out the pottah of Kartick 1282 and alleged that defendant was in possession of 289 bighas in excess of the quantity of land granted to him thereby, and asked that he might be ejected therefrom, and for mesne profits.

This suit was compromised, the defendant undertaking to pay Re. 1 per bigha in respect of 286 bighas, being 4½ annas per bigha in excess of the rent he was paying under the pottah.

[630] In 1886 Bhupendro and his brothers, and Jotendro, through Bhupendro as his next friend, took proceedings under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In their petition they alleged that Sunderbun lot No. 44 was their ancestral mouri mokurari chuk; that Nemye Chand was holding possession thereof, setting up a permanent pottah alleged to have been obtained from Bhava Sundari during the minority of Ganendro and Norendro and from Bhupendro on behalf of himself and Jotendro without the sanction of the District Judge; that Ganendro, Norendro and Jotendro were all minors at the date of the pottah, and were not bound thereby; that Nemye Chand had no permanent right as he alleged; and they prayed that under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the following matters might be determined:—

(a) What sort of right the opposite party has to hold the said land?
(b) What class of tenant he belongs to?
(c) If he is a tenure-holder, whether he is a permanent tenure-holder?
(d) What rent is payable now by the opposite party?
(e) Whether the rate of rent which the opposite party claims (to pay) is liable to enhancement?

Nemye Chand filed a written statement, in which he alleged (inter alia) that the mode and object and the form in which the action was brought was not what was contemplated, and aimed at by law; that s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to the case; and upon the merits he alleged that he was a permanent tenure-holder under the pottah and that his rent was not liable to enhancement.

The Subordinate Judge, after a brief recital of the facts, gave judgment as follows:—

"The execution of the lease by Bhupendro was a deliberate act on his part, and he cannot now be allowed to recede from the obligation created by the contract. He made an attempt to prove fraud in connection with the execution of the lease, but failed. Even if his servants misinformed him that would not vitiate the contract, the defendant not having been shown to have done anything to deceive him. Bhupendro entered into [631] the contract with his eyes open, and the Exhibit marked B" (the plaint in the suit of 1883), "shows that even as late as January, 1888 he recognized the lease, and the permanent character of the defendant's holding.

"Moreover, I am of opinion that it is beyond the scope of the present summary proceeding to hold an enquiry into the question of the alleged fraud."
" Bhupendro having executed the lease as guardian of the minor Jotendro cannot now, in the same capacity, ask the Court with good grace to set aside the lease as far as the interests of the minor are concerned.

" The minor may or may not recognize the defendant to be a permanent tenure-holder, and I should not, therefore say anything at present either for or against his right to set aside or modify the lease. Bhava Sundari, as executrix of the will of her husband, appears to have acted in contravention of its terms in granting the lease, which is therefore void as against Ganendro and Norendro, who were minors at the time. The lease is void for the following reasons: The fifth clause of the will required Bhava Sundari in agreement with Jogendro to execute mourasi leases of jungle lands after ascertaining the exact quantity of the lands to be leased; and by the second clause he was to take the advice of Radha Nath Bose and Shambhu Chunder Bose.

" Jogendro was dead when the lease was granted, and his consent could not be taken. The power of the executrix to grant such a lease, therefore, ceased upon the death of Jogendro, vide Sugden's Powers, p. 252. The quantity of the lands was never ascertained, and the advice of Radha Nath and Shambhu was not taken. The lease being thus void ab initio, the acceptance of rent by Ganendro and Norendro does not set up a lease, but only creates a tenancy.

" In the case of instruments which are void and not voidable, no question of ratification can arise.

" So far the case of these two plaintiffs is favourable but the matter does not stop here.

" The Exhibit marked B shows that these two plaintiffs after attaining majority, brought a suit against this very defendant and recognized the defendant's tenure as created by the lease [632] granted by their brother; this may be regarded as tantamount to a fresh grant by the former in favour of the latter.

" The petitioner, Ganendro, disavows all knowledge of the contents of the plaint referred to above, but I cannot attach much weight to the evidence of an interested witness like him.

" Under all these circumstances I am of opinion that the defendant is a permanent tenure-holder, and that his rent is not liable to enhancement."

Against this order, which under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, has the effect of, and is subject to, the like appeal as a decree, the petitioners have appealed to this Court.

Their grounds of appeal are as follows:

..." 1st.—That the lower appellate Court is wrong in holding that it is beyond the legitimate scope of a proceeding under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to hold an enquiry as to the question of fraud, more particularly when evidence was gone into without any objection by either side.

" 2nd.—That the Court below ought to have found upon the evidence on the record that the execution of the lease by Bhupendro set up by the defendant was brought about by the fraud of the defendant in collusion with the servant of the former, and therefore it is not binding on him.

" 3rd.—That the lower Court is wrong in holding that the execution of the lease was a deliberate act on the part of Bhupendro, and that he entered into the contract with his eyes open, and recognized the lease and the permanent character thereof.
"4th.—That the Court below is wrong in declining to decide the questions as to how far the lease set up by the defendant is binding on the minor Jotendro.

"5th.—That the Court below has erred in holding that Bhupendro as guardian of the said minor having once executed the lease cannot now in the same capacity ask the Court to set aside the lease, so far as the interest of the minor is concerned.

"6th.—That the Court below ought to have held that, under the circumstances, the lease, so far as the said minor is concerned, is not binding on him.

"7th.—That the lower Court has erred in acting and resting its decision upon Exhibit B, and regarding it as tantamount to a [633] fresh grant of a permanent character by the petitioners Ganendro and Norendro in favour of the opposite party.

"8th.—That the lower Court, having held that no question of ratification can arise when the lease is ab initio void, ought not to have given any effect in the present proceedings to the so-called fresh grant or recognition, if there was any.

"9th.—That the lower Court, upon the whole evidence adduced in the case, ought to have held that the defendant's tenure is not a permanent one, and it ought to have enhanced the rate of rent according to the evidence on record.

"10th.—That the lower Court, having refrained from passing any opinion as to how far the minor is bound by the said lease, has erred in coming to the conclusion that "the defendant is a permanent tenure-holder, and his rent is not liable to enhancement."

The appeal was argued before us some time since by Mr. Evans on the part of the appellant and Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the respondent, and at the conclusion of the argument we took time to consider our judgment.

The first point that arises for consideration is, whether in a proceeding under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is open to the petitioners to dispute the validity of the pottah.

The petitioners seek in this proceeding to obtain the same relief as they would have claimed in a regular suit to set aside the pottah.

We were at first inclined to think that the appellants were not at liberty in such a proceeding to have the question of the validity of the pottah put in issue and tried; but on consideration we are of opinion that it is open to them to have the question thus determined, and that the Court is bound to go into it and decide it.

If the appellants had altogether denied the respondent's tenancy, they must have brought an action of ejectment, but by acknowledging him as their tenant they seem to bring themselves within the provisions of the section, and are entitled thereunder to ask the Court to determine the nature of the tenancy; and in determining that question, the Court must look into the title which the respondent sets up and pronounce upon its validity.

The only point on which the enquiry under this section seems to differ from the trial of a regular suit under the Code of Civil [634] Procedure is the omission on the part of the Legislature to provide for the levy of the usual Court-fee stamp on the institution of suits, and this omission we must presume was foreseen and intended. In connection with this matter we were referred by Mr. Evans to the provisions of

Chap. X of the Act, relating to "Records of Rights and Settlement of Rents."

By ss. 101 and 102, the Local Government is empowered to order a record of rights to be prepared for any local area by a revenue officer, and in the preparation of such record the revenue officer may ascertain and determine the same questions as are referred to in s. 158.

By s. 106, if any dispute arises as to the correctness of any entry in the record, the revenue officer is to hear and decide the dispute, and, in so doing, he is, by s. 107, to adopt the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits. Then s. 108 provides for an appeal from the decision of such revenue officer to a special Judge, to be appointed by the local Government, and for a second appeal to the High Court from the decision of such special Judge.

Now s. 158 is apparently intended to apply to isolated cases the provisions of the foregoing sections of the Act with regard to the record of rights in local areas, with this difference that a local enquiry need only be made when found to be necessary (when it is to be made by a revenue officer), the matter being in the first instance determined by a Civil Court (instead of a revenue officer), and the appeal to this Court being in the nature of a first, and not a second, appeal.

Under these circumstances we are opinion that it was open to the lower Court, and that it is open to us, to determine the question of the validity of the lease under which the respondent claims to hold.

We proceed, therefore, to dispose of the appeal upon the merits.

And first as regards the appellant Bhupendro. It is admitted that Bhupendro was of full age when he executed the pottah of 11th Kartick 1282; but he now seeks to avoid it on the ground of misrepresentation and fraud.

Although the lower Court expressed an opinion that it was beyond the scope of the present summary proceeding to hold an enquiry into the question of the alleged fraud, it did in point of fact enquire into it, and found that fraud was not established.

We have gone through the evidence, and are of opinion that this finding is correct. The appellant’s case is, that whereas he granted this pottah in respect of land, which he believed to be wholly covered with jungle, a considerable portion of the land had in fact been cleared and brought under cultivation by Uzir Nuskur, the former tenant; and that the respondent in collusion with his, Bhupendro’s, servants falsely represented that the whole land was covered with jungle. We are of opinion that this case is not borne out by the evidence. There is not a suggestion to the above effect in the petition in this case; and the criminal proceedings and previous suit above referred to seem to us to point to a deliberate attempt to oust the respondent from the land after a large portion had been cleared, and brought under cultivation, and when neighbouring Sunderbun lots were being leased at higher rates of rent than the respondent was paying. As regards Bhupendro, therefore, we have no hesitation in holding that he is bound by the lease.

Then as regards appellants Nos. 2 and 3, Ganendro and Norendro, we are of opinion that they also are bound by the terms of the pottah. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the power given by the will to grant a jungle-abadi-lease was a joint power vested in Bhava Sundari and Jogendro—a power that could not be exercised by one after the death of the other.
We are not disposed, however, to agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the lease was necessarily void, because the advice of Radha Nath and Shambhlu Chunder was not sought.

We are, however, of opinion that Ganendro and Norendro cannot now be heard to say that the lease was not validly granted. In the suit of 1888, after they had attained majority, they treated it as a valid and subsisting lease; they have accepted the benefit of the compromise made by the respondent, and have continued to receive rent from him, both for the lands granted by the pottah and for the excess lands.

Whether their conduct be considered as amounting to a ratification of the lease or to a grant of a new lease upon the same [636] terms as those contained in the original pottah, or to an estoppel, the result is the same.

Lastly, we have to consider the case of the minor Jotendro.

The pottah was executed on his behalf by Bhupendro, his certificated guardian; but it is admitted that he executed it without having previously obtained the sanction of the Judge, as required by s. 18 of Act XL of 1858 and the terms of the certificate. The Subordinate Judge is of opinion that "Bhupendro, having executed that lease as guardian of the minor Jotendro, cannot now in the same capacity ask the Court with good grace to set it aside."

We fail to see what "good grace" has to do with the case. Either the lease is binding on Jotendro or it is not.

It has been held by this Court in Shurrut Chunder alias Bhola Nath Chattopadhyya v. Rajkissen Mookerjee (1) that a sale of a minor's immovable property by a guardian appointed under Act XL of 1858, who was also kurna of the joint family of which the minor was a member, is invalid if made without the sanction required by s. 18 of the Act, even though the sale may have been for the benefit of the minor and made in good faith to pay off the debts of the ancestor.

And in Buchraj Ram v. Kissen Singh (2) this Court held that a mortgage without the sanction of the Judge by a guardian of minor appointed under Act XL of 1858 is absolutely void; and the same view was taken by the Allahabad High Court in Mauji Ram v. Tara Singh (3). We think the same rule must hold good in the case of a lease for a term exceeding five years by a certificated guardian without the sanction of the District Judge.

As far as the infant is concerned, the respondent can obtain no benefit from the proceedings in the suit of 1883. If the minor himself could not ratify the lease, it is clear that Bhupendro, whether as certificated guardian, or as next friend, could not do so on his behalf. If the proceedings in the suit of 1883 operated, as far as Ganendro and Norendro are concerned, as a grant of a new lease upon the same terms as those contained in the original pottah, they cannot so operate as regards Jotendro, [637] for there is the same absence of sanction to those proceedings, and to the compromise, as there is to the original lease. Again, if these proceedings operate by way of estoppel as regards Ganendro and Norendro, they do not do so as regards Jotendro.

Therefore, in whatever light we look at this case, we are of opinion that the lease is not binding on Jotendro.

(1) 15 B.L.R. 350. (2) 11 C.L.R. 345. (3) 3 A. 852.
If this view be correct the respondent’s position as regards Jotendro’s four annas share in the land appears to be that of a non-permanent tenure-holder, whose rent is liable to enhancement.

The result, therefore, of our view of the whole case is that the decree of the Sub-Judge must be affirmed as far as regards twelve annas share of the lands held by the respondent, and reversed as regards four annas.

We determine—

(a) That the situation, quantity and boundaries of the land are as follows:
That it is situate in Pergunnah Moida, Sub-registration and Station Baripore, in Talook No. 1346 of the Towzee of the Collector of 24-Pergunnahs, being Sunderbun Lot No. 44.
That the quantity of land is more or less 1,735 bighas, and that the boundaries are—

(1) South—North of the northern boundary embankment of the chuck belonging to Nogendro Nath Dutt.
(2) North—By measurement twenty-two russees north from the southern boundary.
(3) West—East of khal called Kaora Sote, and eastern side of Bhodury’s khal.

(b) That the name and description of the tenant thereof are as follows:
Nemye Chand Mondul, son of late Huro Mohun Mondul, landholder of Bhowanipore, pargunnah Magura, station Debipore, in the Diamond Harbour sub-division.

(c) That the said tenant is, as regards twelve annas share of the said lands, i.e., as regards Bhupendro’s, four annas share, Ganendro’s four annas, and Norendro’s four annas share, a permanent tenure-holder whose rent is not liable to enhancement.

[638] That the said tenant is, as regards a four annas share of the said lands, i.e., as regards Jotendro’s four annas share, a non-permanent tenure-holder whose rent is liable to enhancement.

(d) That the rent payable by the said tenant in respect of the said twelve annas share at the time of the application was Rs. 935-3-17\(^\frac{3}{4}\) gundas.
That the rent payable by the said tenant in respect of the said four annas share at the time of the application was Rs. 311-10-19\(^\frac{3}{4}\) gundas.

Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we think the respondent is entitled to his costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed and decree modified.
In the matter of the petition of Khoda Bux Khan and others (Petitioners).* [29th February, 1888.]

Pleaders—Pleader’s taids—Mukhtears—Legal Practitioners’ Act (XVIII of 1879)—Ministerial duties of Pleaders, Delegation of to their bona fide clerks.

A Judge has a right to control his Court premises in such way as is most convenient to the public and to persons working there, but does not act rightly in passing any general order by which he excludes as a general body from his Court any portion of the community acting in an orderly manner.

The pleaders of this country are a body of men who, from the earliest times, have combined in their own persons the duties performed in England by barristers and attorneys, and in acting in this second and ministerial capacity are, on their own responsibility, entitled to work through any number of clerks or taids properly selected and paid by them; and no Court other than a High Court as established by Charter has the right to make rules defining the ministerial duties to be performed by them as distinct from the duties of their bona fide taids or clerks; nor does the Legal Practitioners’ Act of 1879 control in any way the privileges which have always existed in them or restrict their powers, the Act being one passed to bring mukhtears under the control of the Court.

[639] This was a rule calling upon Mr. Kirkwood, the District Judge of Patna, to show cause why certain orders made by him, limiting to two the number of clerks employed by pleaders and setting out specifically their duties and ordering their enrolment in the Court books, should not be set aside as being made without jurisdiction. The orders referred to and the letter of the Nazir of the Patna Court to the District Judge, which was the origin of the orders, were as follows:—

"With reference to your Honor’s orders prohibiting unauthorized persons to act in the Civil Courts as mukhtears, I have the honor to solicit your Honor’s orders as whether pleaders, ‘taids,’ of whom there are many (some pleaders having two or three taids working under them) fall under the category of unauthorized persons acting as mukhtears, and should be allowed to deposit money in my office, file lists of witnesses, withdraw money for the pleaders, and carry out other work.” On this letter the following order was passed:—

"Pleaders’ taids are merely allowed to deliver as messengers or postmen a list of witnesses to the Nazir, which list must be signed by the pleaders. Pleaders’ taids, as such, are not allowed to carry on any transaction with the Court Amla, or to deposit any money, or withdraw any money, or make any application, or withdraw any document. Pleaders’ taids are their private servants, unrecognized by the Court in any other capacity, without responsibility to the Court, and consequently not eligible for the performance of any of the acts referred to. Any pleader practising in the Civil Courts may employ within the compound of those Courts no more than two taids; the pleaders must register the names of these taids in a book, to be kept by the Nazir, which will show the name of the taid and the name of the pleader who employs him, and the part of the Court premises in which this taid ordinarily is to sit. These registered taids, and no others on plea of being taids, will be admitted into the Court premises. These registered taids are thus admitted solely for the purpose of doing clerical work for their employers, or for the purpose of messages, calling clients, and so on. They will ordinarily not be allowed elsewhere than in their customary sitting place, save when employed in calling their master or clients. [640] Any pleaders' taids found doing any unauthorized act will be excluded from the Court and compound.

This order was objected to by the pleaders, and they, in a petition to the Judge, represented that it was one calculated to cause them great inconvenience, hardship, and pecuniary loss in the discharge of their professional duties; that the duties ordinarily done by pleaders' taids were to take petitions signed by the pleader to the Court, to deposit money on their behalf with the Nazir, to receive money from the Court on receipts granted by the pleader, to get certified copies from the Sherista on applications made and receipts granted by the pleader, to inquire into the dates fixed for the hearing of cases; that such acts had hitherto been carried out by taids in the Patna Courts; and, after objecting to the limitation placed on the number of their taids, they asked the Judge to reconsider his order. On this petition the District Judge passed the following order:

"I have been through this representation, and have heard a large assembly of pleaders through their spokesmen, Baboo Guru Pershad Dass, in support of it. The issue is, who is entitled to do those acts which the Rules passed by the High Court under the Legal Practitioners' Act authorize certificated mohurirs to do? Of course, I except the parties themselves; leaving them aside, who else is entitled to do those acts? The pleaders say 'we are.' I by no means contest that position. Then the pleaders say, 'we have no time to do these acts ourselves; we claim to be entitled to hand over this portion of our duties to A, B, and C, whom we know, whom we have appointed our clerks or taids, and who will do them on our responsibility.' To that I reply 'you cannot do that; either do those acts yourselves, or if you must make them over to the only other class of persons authorized by the law to do them, namely, the certificated mukhtears. The law or rules do not recognize your taids; they have no authority to do any such acts; you cannot make yourselves into a Legislature or a High Court and constitute your employees a class without authority to do these acts, and so absolutely shut out from employment the very class of men authorized by law to do them. I am surprised at so large a body of gentlemen of eminent legal ability having signed this representation. It [641] is then said that if certificated mukhtears are employed they will have a right to a certain percentage of the fees, which percentage is now appointed [appropriated?] by the pleaders, that the pleaders will not consent to give up this percentage, and that the charge will really fall as an additional tax on the litigants. With that I have nothing to do, except to remark that a certificated mukhtear is entitled to be paid for his work as much as a pleader or any one else. I fixed the number of taids at two for the following reasons:

(1) It appeared to me that no one has a right habitually to sit and work at clerical or other work within the precincts of the Court without the permission of the Court, otherwise the Court premises may become converted into a congress of private offices.

"(2) It appeared to me advisable to put some limit to the number of taids employed in the Court premises by pleaders, on the score of accommodation, and in order that they may become recognized and well known, so that they may not be interfered with as mere touters or loiterers, and in order that they may not degenerate into touters or loiterers.

"(3) I consulted at least one of the leading pleaders, who told me that he only employed one taid, and thought two would be an ample allowance.

"(4) As apparently much of the work which pleaders' taids have hitherto been doing is unauthorized work and appertains to the work of the certificated mukhtears, fewer will now be required.

"Baboo Guru Prasad Sen asserted that he objected, as a matter of principle, to the Court imposing any limitation on the number of taids employed by pleaders within the precincts of the Court, holding that the Court had no authority to do so. For the reasons given above, I must maintain that the Court has a right to impose such limitation. The limitation of two taids per pleader will remain as the general rule, but any pleader finding this number too small for legitimate requirements may ask the Court for permission to employ a larger number within its precincts. I see no reason to alter the orders already passed; they appear to me correct and, in the interests of the [642] certificated mukhtears, called for. I would note that the pleaders argued their case before me with perfect good humour and propriety; and now, as always, I am perfectly willing to do anything I can, with propriety, or legitimately, do for them either individually or as a body."

The pleaders then moved the High Court to set aside these orders, and obtained the rule above referred to.

Mr. Evans and Mr. Abdul Rahman to show cause.

The Advocate-General (Mr. Paul), Mr. J. Twidale and Baboo Saligram Singh in support of the rule.

ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.,—This is a rule which has been obtained by the learned Advocate-General for the purpose of setting aside certain orders which have been made by Mr. Kirkwood, the District Judge of Patna. We have heard in opposition to the rule Mr. Evans as amicus curiae. He appears in that character at the request of the mukhtears practising at Patna, I suppose, or for the mukhtears generally, and we have been very glad to hear him, because it is very desirable in a case of this kind that the Court should have all the assistance possible to enable us to understand what the facts of the case are and what the law in this country is with reference to these matters so that we may be able to come to a proper decision.

The orders referred to in the rule were as follows (here followed the orders as set out above).

It will be noticed on reading these orders that the learned Judge assumes to have the right to do two things. He assumes to have the right to regulate the transactions which a pleader must do himself and the transactions which he must do through his clerk, and he also assumes to have the right to regulate the number of persons who should be admitted to the Court premises.
I think it will be well to deal with the second, which is the smaller question, first. There cannot be the slightest doubt that a Judge has a general power over his own Court in the sense that he has a right to see that order is maintained, that the Court room is not encumbered by persons loitering about there to the detriment of the business of the Court, and that the public are not allowed to enter portions of the Court house which are not intended for their use. But, as a matter of fact the Court house is a public place, and is a place to which the public has a right to resort so long as they behave properly and do not make a disturbance and do not crowd the Court in such a way as to interfere with the disposal of business; and as long as persons behave themselves properly in a Court house there is no authority vested in any one to turn it into a private place; and although undoubtedly this learned Judge has a perfect right to control the way in which the Court room is to be used by particular persons—that is to say, to arrange the seats in such a way as he finds most convenient, allotting to the pleaders one place, to the parties another, and to the public a third—I do not think he is right or that he is justified in making any general order by which he excludes any portion of the community, as a general body, from his Court; and though I expressly wish to be understood as not interfering in any way with the right of the Judge to control his Court premises in such a way as is most convenient to the public and to persons working there, still I think that this very general order is objectionable, because it is directed against a particular class of persons, and because it is so mixed up with the rest of his order that it is objectionable on that ground too.

Then I proceed to deal with the other part of the order by which the learned Judge limits and defines the professional acts which he considers the pleaders must do individually and those which their clerks may do for them, and with reference to what I have to say now I would specially call attention to the learned Judge's remarks which show that, though they are directed to the actual taids of the pleaders, he does not go into the question whether these persons are bona fide taids or not. He does not deal with it by saying that in his opinion these persons who are called taids are not taids at all, but are unauthorized mukhtears and touts and persons who for that reason ought not to be there; he deals with them as actual taids, and, therefore, in what I have to say in this case, I wish to be particularly understood as directing my remarks to persons who are bona fide taids or clerks of pleaders. If it were shown that the persons against whom the order is directed were not taids, but persons carrying on an independent profession and acting in individual cases and being remunerated by some arrangement for fees at a certain percentage or otherwise, a totally different set of considerations would arise; but, as I said before, the Judge has specially limited his remarks and the orders he has made to persons who are the actual and bona fide taids of pleaders. So that the only question which arises before us now is really the question whether the Judge had any right, or any legal power, to define certain acts, which he has here defined as acts, which must be done by the pleaders themselves and which they cannot employ their clerks to do for them.

It appears that from the earliest times, so far as we have been able to ascertain from the history of litigation in this country, a class of persons now known as pleaders has existed, and that these pleaders have conducted the litigation of the country for the litigants, and, in doing so, have done the administrative work, arising out of such litigation in the offices of the Courts, themselves, and have appeared as advocates in the Courts as well; in other words, have combined, in their own persons, the two duties which are performed in England by attorneys and barristers. This has been the case apparently from the earliest times; and, so far as we can ascertain and so far as it has been shown to us to-day, down to comparatively recent times the only recognized legal practitioner in the mofussil Court has been the pleader or vakeel who combined both vocations in his own person. Now it is clear that, so far as the Courts are concerned, the legislature has to a great extent made these persons officers of the Court, and of course the object of doing that is that the Courts may have a control over them as their own officers, and may see that, in their dealings with the public, they were fit to be entrusted with the responsible duties which they had to perform. But it is equally clear that, although in their capacity of pleaders or vakeels, the Courts and the Legislature have a perfect right, and they would be [646] wrong if they did not exercise that right, to insist that in their character as advocates they should do the work themselves, the conditions of an advocate being conditions which a man cannot sever from himself as an advocate, and it is in that capacity alone that he appears before the Court for his client and argues the client's case and advocates his cause; but it is not so with a man who combines the two offices in himself and gets up the case and does the ministerial work as well, for, as to that portion of his business, if he is to appear as an advocate as well, he must do a portion of it through other persons, and therefore he must have clerks to do it for him. But that does not do away with his responsibility to the Courts to see that the business of his office is conducted with due diligence and done properly and honestly; and the person whom the Courts would hold responsible, if anything wrong were to take place, would be, not the clerk or the taid of the pleader, but the pleader himself; and if they have the pleader himself upon their rolls, they have a man over whom they have a control, and that is all that is necessary in the interests of justice; and, so it seems to us, that the only thing necessary is that the Court should insist upon his duties as an advocate being performed by the pleader himself and the ministerial part of his office work, on his responsibility, by persons properly selected and paid by him.

But in addition to that there arises this other question—Supposing it to be necessary that the duties to be performed by the pleader himself, other than those which he performs in open Court, should be defined, and those to be performed by his taid or clerk should be defined, that must be done by the body, which has the superintending power over those persons and has the power to make rules, under the provisions of the Act, for their guidance as to the mode in which business is to be carried on, and that body is not the District Judge, but the High Court as established by Charter; and if any rules are to be framed, and if any regulations are to be made for the conduct of this part of their business, the proper and the only tribunal which has a legal right to make them is this Court and this Court alone, and to it the parties must apply if they wish any such rules to be passed.

[646] That being so, it seems to us that the learned Judge, in making these orders by which he has defined the duties to be performed by the clerks of the pleaders as contrasted with the duties which might be performed by the pleaders themselves was acting outside his jurisdiction, and that would be a quite sufficient reason for us to make this rule absolute to set aside the whole order, the series of orders of which it is composed being so intimately connected with each other that, in our opinion, the order must stand as a whole or fall as a whole. But I think it right to add here that, so far as we can see, the duties thus defined being a portion of the original duties of pleaders which it is necessary, by the nature of things, should be performed by their clerks, there really was no reason for these orders unless the Judge were empowered and compelled to make them by reason of the rights which are supposed to have been conferred on these mukhtears by virtue of the provisions of Act XVIII of 1879.

With reference to the meaning of that Act, I think it will be well to say a few words as to what the history of mukhtears is. As I said just now, the only body of recognized legal practitioners in this country which existed before this time, or in old times, apparently was the pleaders, who were persons who did all the work themselves as officers of the Court. But as time went on another body of men grew up, as it necessarily would grow up in a country where litigation is so rife. They were a body of men who carried on business as law agents and obtained the name of mukhtears. They seem to have been persons who had little knowledge, but they possessed great facilities for moving about the country; they communicated with the inhabitants in the district, they came up for them to the centres of litigation, and they communicated with the pleaders, and for doing that they got paid in some way, whether by the clients or the pleaders, in some cases by the client, in some cases by the pleaders, and in some cases by both. In that state of things it was found to be a scandal that these people should be allowed to do their work in this way without any check, and practise extortion if they thought fit. It was, therefore, found necessary that they should [647] be brought under some sort of control, and accordingly the existence of mukhtears was recognized in an Act passed in 1865, which was subsequently repealed by Act XVIII of 1879, which is the Legal Practitioners Act now in force. The object of this Act was not to control the privileges which had always existed in the pleaders or to restrict in any way the powers which they had, but to control this unauthorized body of law agents or mukhtears for the purpose of bringing them under the control of the Court, so that they might be kept in order and might not be at liberty to go about oppressing people by extortion. But so far as this case is concerned, the rights of mukhtears have nothing whatever to do with it, because it seems to us that the rights of the mukhtears are absolutely independent of the rights of the pleaders, and the only thing that is said, so far as they are concerned, is, that persons who are not pleaders shall not do anything of that kind specified in this Act until they have obtained the sanction of the Court to do it.

In the result, and with these remarks as to the general position of the parties, we are of opinion that these orders of Mr. Kirkwood were beyond his powers, and therefore this rule must be made absolute to set them aside.

RADHASYAM MOHAPATTRA alias MADUN MOHUN MOHAPATTRA (Plaintiff) v. SIBU PANDA AND ANOTHER (Defendants)*
[12th April, 1888.]

"Lis pendens"—Contentious suit”—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52.

A, on the 9th September 1883, sold certain immoveable property to S, for Rs. 99-12 by means of a conveyance which was not registered. On the 29th September 1883, S instituted a suit against A on that conveyance to obtain possession of the property. On the 5th October 1883, when that suit was pending, but before the summons was served on A, A by a duly registered conveyance sold the same property to R for Rs. 198-8. In the suit filed by S, A filed a written statement, but did not further contest it, and S obtained a decree and possession of the property. In a suit subsequently brought by R to obtain possession of the property from S upon the ground that his registered conveyance was entitled to priority over the unregistered document of S, it was contended that, R's purchase having been made whilst S's suit was pending, his title could not prevail against that of S. Held, that the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply to the facts of the case, as at the time of R's purchase there was no contentious suit or proceeding in existence, the summons in S's suit not having been then served.

The suit which gave rise to this appeal was instituted by the plaintiff on the 22nd May 1885, to recover possession of certain immoveable property which he alleged he had purchased from defendant No. 2, Annanpurna Debia, under a registered conveyance, bearing date the 5th October 1883, the amount of the purchase-money being Rs. 198-8.

The plaintiff alleged that after his purchase he got possession of the lands, but that he had been dispossessed under the following circumstances: He stated that defendant No. 2, acting in collusion with the defendant No. 1, prepared a false conveyance bearing date the 9th September 1883; and purporting to convey the land to defendant No. 1, in consideration of Rs. 99-12; that the conveyance was unregistered; that defendant No. 1 instituted a suit thereon and obtained a decree for possession; that defendant No. 2 did not defend the suit, but colluded with defendant No. 1 and allowed him to obtain a decree; that defendant No. 1 thereupon executed his decree and obtained possession on the 26th April 1884; that he (the plaintiff) preferred a claim which was disallowed, and that consequently he had been forced to institute this suit.

As a matter of fact the plaint, in the suit instituted by the defendant No. 1, was filed on the 20th September 1883, but the summons was not served on the defendant therein till after the 5th October 1883.

Both defendants filed written statements. Defendant No. 1 alleged that the plaintiff had purchased the property with full knowledge of his prior purchase and of his suit which was then pending; that the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 had colluded together to deprive him of his rights; and that the plaintiff had induced the defendant No. 2

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1868 of 1887, against the decree of J. B. Worgan, Esq., Judge of Cuttack, dated the 22nd of June 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Gopal Krishna Ghose, Munsif of Jaipore, dated the 30th of November 1885.

to execute the conveyance of the 5th October 1883 to effect that object; that in his suit against defendant No. 2 she had filed a written statement setting up that conveyance, but that she had failed to produce any evidence in support of her allegations, and that consequently he had obtained a decree and got possession of the property.

Defendant No. 2 denied that she had executed the conveyance in favour of her co-defendant or received the consideration money Rs. 99-12. She alleged that that document was a forgery concocted by the defendant No. 1 to deprive her of her property, and explained the fact of her not contesting his suit further than by filing her written statement therein by stating that she was ill and unable to appear when the suit was heard.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff’s conveyance was genuine, and that the document under which defendant No. 1 claimed was fraudulent, and gave him no right to bring the suit he did against defendant No. 2. He came to the conclusion therefore that, even though the plaintiff purchased whilst that suit was pending, the doctrine of lis pendens did not operate to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of his purchase, and he accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree.

The District Judge, on an appeal being preferred by defendant No. 1, remanded the case. He considered that before the question could be decided as to whether the plaintiff’s title was affected by the doctrine of lis pendens there must be a finding as to whether the suit brought by defendant No. 1 was bona fide or was a mere collusive proceeding between him and defendant No. 2, and he therefore directed an issue to be framed and tried by the Munsif on that point.

On the remand the Munsif held that not only was the defendant No. 1’s conveyance fraudulent, but that the suit was also a collusive proceeding between him and defendant No. 2, and that the decree therein had been fraudulently obtained and should not be given effect to.

This finding of fact was, however, reversed by the District Judge, who, after dealing fully with the other issues in the case, held that the conveyance to defendant No. 1 was a genuine document, and that the purchase by the plaintiff having been made whilst the suit of defendant No. 1 was pending, the latter was entitled to succeed, and the plaintiff’s conveyance was not entitled to priority. He accordingly reversed the decree of the Munsif, and dismissed the plaintiff’s suit with costs.

The plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court, and the only material question argued on the appeal was as to whether the doctrine of lis pendens applied or not.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from the decree of Mr. Worgan, the District Judge of Cuttack, who has reversed the decree of the Munsif.

The facts of the case are shortly these: The plaintiff brought a suit to recover possession of certain pieces of land, and the title under which he claimed was based upon a conveyance from the defendant No. 2, dated the 5th of October 1883. This conveyance was registered. The defendant No. 1, who was in possession of the land, also claimed to hold it under a conveyance from the defendant No. 2. This conveyance was dated the 9th of September 1883, and was unregistered. The defendant
No. 1 alleged that he purchased for a sum of Rs. 99-12; the plaintiff alleged that he purchased for Rs. 198-8. Prima facie, therefore, the plaintiff’s conveyance, being a registered document, would prevail over the conveyance of the defendant No. 1, which was unregistered.

The defendant sought to defeat the plaintiff’s stronger title based upon the registered conveyance by taking advantage of the doctrine of lis pendens; and the lis pendens upon which he relied arose as follows: He alleged that on the 20th of September 1883 he brought an action against the defendant No. 2, his vendor, to recover possession of the property which he alleged he purchased for Rs. 99-12 on the 9th September previously. [651] The summons in that suit as a matter of fact, was not served upon the defendant No. 2 until a date subsequent to the date of the present plaintiff’s conveyance, that is to say, subsequent to the 5th October 1883. The defendant No. 1 obtained judgment in that suit against the defendant No. 2 on the 15th of January 1884.
As a matter of fact the defendant No. 2 did not appear to defend the suit. She put in a written statement in which she alleged that she had parted with all her interest in the property to the plaintiff in this suit by virtue of the conveyance to him of the 5th October 1883, and she asked that he might be made a party to that suit. He was not, as a matter of fact, made a party to that suit; and, as I have said, judgment was given against the defendant No. 2, who did not appear to defend the suit. This is the lis pendens which the defendant No. 1 seeks to take advantage of.

The Munsif found that the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply.
The District Judge has overruled that decision, and has held that the doctrine of lis pendens does apply.

We are of opinion that the decision of the District Judge is erroneous, and it is sufficient for us to state only one reason, which is shortly this:
As a matter of fact at the date of the plaintiff’s conveyance, that is, the 5th October 1883, there was no lis pendens. Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, which deals with the question of lis pendens, says: “During the active prosecution in any Court having authority in British India, or established beyond the limits of British India by the Governor-General in Council, of a contentious suit or proceeding in which any right to immoveable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein.” As a matter of fact there was no contentious suit or proceeding in existence until the summons to the suit brought by the defendant No. 1 against the defendant No. 2 was served.
Upon this short ground, without entering into the other points argued by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose for the appellant, points upon which it is not necessary to express any opinion, we think this appeal should be allowed.

[652] It has been urged by Baboo Umbica Churn Bose on behalf of the respondent that there is a finding by the District Judge to the effect that the plaintiff had knowledge of the suit. We fail to see any finding that the plaintiff on or before the 5th of October 1883, had notice of the suit, or that, on or before the 5th October 1883, he had notice of the previous conveyance of the 9th of September 1883.
Upon these grounds we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court with costs to the plaintiff throughout.

H. T. II.

Appeal allowed.

KRISHNO KAMINI CHOWDHRANI (Plaintiff) v. GOPI MOHUN GHOSE HAZRA (Defendant)* [25th April, 1888.]

Small Cause Court, Mofussil—Jurisdiction—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss 69, 70—Small Cause Court Act (XI of 1865), s. 6—Puti rent—Implied contract.

The plaintiff, a purchaser in execution of a putni right, brought a suit in a Munsiff’s Court to recover from the defendant, a former holder of the putni right, a sum of money which she had been compelled to pay to the zemindar for rent which had accrued due prior to the date of her purchase. The Munsiff gave the plaintiff a decree, which, however, on appeal to the District Judge, was reversed. On appeal to the High Court, held, that, assuming the suit to lie independent of any express promise, it was one cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and no appeal would therefore lie. Rambux Chittangeo v. Modhoosoodun Paul Chowdry (1) distinguished.

Cases falling within the provisions of ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act are cognizable by a Court of Small Causes under s. 6 of Act XI of 1865. Nath Prasad v. Baij Nath (2) approved.

[F., 12 M. 349 (351); D., 23 C. 189 (191); 16 C.W.N. 975=17 C.L.J. 179=17 Ind Cas. 90 (91).] This was a reference to a Full Bench made by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Norris.

[653] The facts were as follows: The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were the holders, in equal shares, of a certain putni tenure. On the 1st Srabun 1291, in execution of a money-decree obtained against these defendants, their putni right and interest was put up for sale, and was purchased by the plaintiff. On the 1st Assin 1291 this sale was confirmed. Subsequently to the plaintiff’s purchase the zemindars put up to sale, for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819, the putni taluk, and the plaintiff, to protect her own interests in the taluk, paid-to the zemindars Rs. 620, which was the amount of arrears due for the kist running from Bysack to the 1st Assin. Of this amount the plaintiff admitted her liability for so much as represented the rent due from the 2nd to the 30th Assin, and called upon the defendants to repay to her the remainder of the sum paid by her. The defendant No. 1 arranged with the plaintiff for payment of his share, but defendant No. 2, although promising so to pay, did not do so, and the plaintiff therefore sued him in the Munsiff’s Court for the proportionate share payable by him, making the defendant No. 1 a pro forma defendant.

* Full Bench on Special Appeal No. 1213 of 1887, against the decree of T. B. Beighton, Esq., District Judge of Moorshedabad, dated 7th April 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Prosunno Kumar Goopte, officiating Munsif of Kandi, dated 11th September 1886.

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree; but on appeal the District judge reversed the decision of the Munsif, holding that the principle of the case of Sheogolam Singh v. Bhageerut, referred to in Macpherson on Mortgages, 303 (1), applied, and that the putni was not sold free from all liabilities. On appeal to the High Court an objection was taken by the respondent that the case fell under s. 6 of the Small Cause Court Act, and that, therefore, no second appeal would lie. After argument on this point the following order was passed:—

Petheram, C. J.—As Mr. Justice Norris and myself are not disposed to take the same view of the point involved in the case, and as it is a point as to which the authorities are not agreed, we think it desirable to send the case to a Full Bench to decide whether, on the facts found in this case, the case is one which is cognizable by the Small Cause Court.

On the hearing before the Full Bench—

Baboo Srinath Dass, for the appellant, contended that the suit did not fall within s. 6 of the Small Cause Court Act; that there [654] was no express contract in the case, and that the case of Rambux Chittageo v. Modhoosoodun Pal Chowdhry (2) showed that there was no implied contract either, and that a suit for contribution cannot be brought in a Small Cause Court; that the case of Nath Prasad v. Baij Nath (3) showed it was true that such a suit as this was cognizable by the Small Cause Court, but the reason for this was that the Contract Act had made a change in the law, but that this has been held not to be so—Ramjoy Surma v. Joynath Surma (4); that the principle of Rambux Chittageo v. Modhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (2) had all along been followed in this Court, and that in the new Provincial Small Cause Court Act express provision had been made for the exclusion of such suits; and further referred to Putteh Ali v. Gunganath Roy (5).

Baboo Kuruna Sindhu Mookerjee, for the respondent, contended that the decisions cited by the appellant had no application, as the present suit was not one for contribution between co-sharers; that the suit was not one for contribution at all, there being no joint liability between the plaintiff and the defendant; that the plaint was framed as one for the recovery of money which the defendant should have paid to the plaintiff, [Prescot, J.—It is only by straining the language of the plaint that the suit can be called one for contribution; the payment made by the plaintiff was merely one to clear off an incumbrance on his land which attached to the land before he became purchaser]; that the case of Rambux Chittageo v. Modhoosoodun Pal Chowdhry (2) showed that there was no implied contract; and that, therefore, the suit was not cognizable by the Small Cause Court; that contribution was based on joint liability, and there was no joint liability here; that cases on implied contracts were cognizable by a Small Cause Court—Sunker Lal Pattuck Gyawal v. Ram Kalee Dhamin (6); Govinda Munega Tirugam v. Bapu (7); that the present was a case of an implied contract falling under s. 69 of the Contract Act; and that sch. II, art. 41 of Act IX of 1887 was a guide as [655] to what class of cases was excluded from a Small Cause Court.

Baboo Srinath Dass, in reply, referred to s. 9, Chap. V of the Contract Act, as giving the definition of an implied contract, contending that there was no proposal for his client to accept made by the defendant.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C. J., Tottenham, Pigot, Macpherson, and Ghose, JJ.) was as follows:—

OPINION.

This case is referred upon the question whether or not it was cognizable by the Small Cause Court under s. 6 of the Small Cause Court Act (XI of 1865).

The suit is brought by a purchaser in execution of a putni right to recover from the defendant No. 1, one of the former holders of the putni right, a sum of money equal to a portion of what she has been compelled to pay to the zemindar for rent.

The rent which she has been compelled to pay accrued due, some of it before and some of it after the month of Srabun 1291. It was in Srabun that the plaintiff became the purchaser, and she claims from the defendant, whose putni right she purchased, payment of a portion of the sum which she has been compelled to pay in respect of the rent which accrued due prior to Srabun, stating that the other defendant, who is a co-sharer in the putni right so sold, and who is made defendant pro forma, had promised to pay his share claimed by the plaintiff on a similar ground, and that the defendant in the present proceedings whilst saying that he would at some time or other pay his share, has never done so; this alleged promise does not appear to have been proved, and does not form part of the case, and the question is, not whether this suit will lie, but assuming that it will lie independent of any express promise, whether the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain it. If it lies, in our opinion, under s. 69 of the Contract Act, the terms of that section being "a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other."

[656] The case of Rambux Chittango v. Modhoosoodun Pal Chowdhry (1) is relied upon as showing that such a suit will not lie in the Small Cause Court under s. 6. That case, however, was before the Indian Contract Act was passed, at a time when the law upon this subject had not been defined by legislation.

We think that, having regard to this, we are at liberty to consider this case independently of the considerations which formed the ground of the decision of this Court in the case of Rambux Chittango v. Modhoosoodun Pal Chowdhry, and to hold, as the High Court of Allahabad held in Nath Prasad v. Baij Nath (2), that cases falling within the provisions of ss. 69 and 70 of the Indian Contract Act are cognizable by a Small Cause Court under s. 6 of the Small Cause Court Act.

This case was, therefore, not appealable, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

T. A. P. Appeal dismissed.

JUGDEO NARAIN SINGH (Defendant No. 2) v. RAJAH SINGH (Plaintiff).* [8th May, 1888.]

Voluntary payment—Money paid, but not due, and paid under compulsion—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 15, 72.

In execution of a decree the plaintiff purchased certain property. Subsequently the defendant, in execution of another decree against the former owner of the property, proceeded to execute his decree against the same property. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim which was disallowed, as he had not then obtained, and consequently could not produce the sale certificate. In order to prevent the sale, he then paid the amount of the defendant's decree into Court, and subsequently instituted a suit against the defendant to recover the amount so paid into Court to prevent the sale. The defendant contended that the amount was paid voluntarily and could not be recovered back.

[657] Held, following Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishen Singh (1), that it was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. Fatima Khatoun Chowdhray v. Mohamed Jan Chowdhry (2) referred to; Asbibun v. Ram Prakash Das (3) doubted.

[1) P. 32 P.W.R. 1911=9 Ind. Cas. 966; Appl. 22 C. 28 (32); Appr. 25 M. 548 (552); R. 31 C. 1001 (1003); 12 C.W.N. 151 (153); 38 C. 1=12 C.L.J. 566 (571)=14 C. W.N. 945=0 Ind. Cas. 810; 16 C.L.J. 156 (160)=13 Ind. Cas. 155 (158); 2 S.L.R. 20 (22).

The plaintiff instituted this suit for a declaration of his title to a 1-anana and 2-gundas share in certain mouzahs, and to recover the sum of Rs. 109-14-6 which he had deposited in Court under the following circumstances: He alleged that defendant No. 3, Sheoram Singh, was formerly the owner of the share of the mouzahs in suit, and that on the 4th March 1884 that share was brought to sale at the instance of a Mr. Holloway who held a decree against him, and that at that sale he, the plaintiff, purchased the share for Rs. 382; that after his purchase defendant No. 1, Lala Bunseedhur, proceeded to execute a decree which he had obtained against Sheoram Singh by attaching the same share; that he (the plaintiff) thereupon preferred a claim to the property, but that his claim was disallowed, as he was not then in possession of the sale certificate. After his claim was so disallowed the plaintiff stated that, in order to prevent the share being sold at the instance of Lala Bunseedhur, he paid the sum of Rs. 109-14-6 into Court, that being the amount of Lala Bunseedhur's decree, and he therefore now brought this suit for the relief above mentioned, making Lala Bunseedhur and Sheoram Singh defendants, and also one Judgeo Narain Singh who had purchased Lala Bunseedhur's decree.

Judgeo Narain Singh alone contested the suit, the other defendants not appearing. Amongst other things he disputed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the suit was bad for misjoinder of causes of action, and that the money deposited in Court being a voluntary payment was not legally recoverable. The other issues raised by the defendant are immaterial, as they formed no portion of the grounds upon which the appeal to the High Court was preferred. The Munsif held that the suit

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2080 of 1887, against the decree of Baboo Jogesh Chunder Mitter, Subordinate judge of Bhagupore, dated the 22nd of June 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Kali Cocmar Bose, Munsif of Beguserai, dated the 29th of December, 1885.

(1) 8 I.A. 93=7 C. 648. (2) 12 M.I.A. 65=10 W.R.P.C. 29. (3) 1 Shome 25. was bad by reason of misjoinder of causes of action, and dismissed it accordingly without going into the question as to whether the plaintiff could recover the sum of Rs. 109-14-6.

[658] On appeal, the Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit as far as his claim to the money went. He found that, although the suit was one for a declaration of title to immoveable property and a claim to a refund, the plaintiff had one cause of action only, which arose out of the order refusing his claim in the execution proceedings; that leave under s. 44 of the Civil Procedure Code should, therefore, have been obtained; that no leave having been obtained, the Court was not bound to dismiss the suit altogether, but could give a decree for one of the reliefs asked for; that as the defendant had withdrawn his objections as to the plaintiff's right and title to the disputed share, all the plaintiff asked was a decree for the money; and that he was entitled to that decree.

In support of his finding on the latter point, the Subordinate Judge relied on the decision in the case of Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishen Singh (1), and refused to follow the case of Asbibun v. Ram Proshad Das (2), to which he had been referred, on the ground that the former being a decision of the Privy Council of a later date ought to be followed.

Against that decree the defendant, Jugdeo Narain Singh, now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, for the appellant.
Dr. Trolucko Nath Mitter, for the respondent.

The arguments advanced at the hearing of the appeal appear sufficiently in the judgment of the High Court (Norriss and Beverley, JJ.) which was delivered by—

JUDGMENT.

Norriss, J.—The facts of this case appear to be as follows:—

Sheoram Singh, defendant No. 3, was the owner of a 1-anna 2-gundas share in certain mouzahs.

One Holloway obtained a decree against Sheoram, and in execution of his decree attached and put up for sale his (Sheoram's) 1-anna 2-gundas share, which was purchased by the plaintiff on the 4th March 1884. After the plaintiff's purchase, defendant No. 1, who had also obtained a decree against Sheoram, proceeded to attach the same 1-anna 2 gundas share. The plaintiff objected [659] to the attachment; and his objection was investigated and disallowed on the ground that he had not obtained the sale certificate.

Upon his objection being disallowed the plaintiff deposited in Court Rs. 109-14-6, being the amount of the decree obtained by defendant No. 1 against defendant No. 3.

Defendant No. 2 is the assignee of the defendant No. 1.

Being defeated in his claim case plaintiff now brings this suit for the declaration of his purchased right in Sheoram's 1-anna 2-gundas share, and for recovery of the Rs. 109-14-6 deposited in Court.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 3 did not appear to defend the suit. The Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit upon the ground of misjoinder of causes of action.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed, and against this decree defendant No. 2 has appealed to this Court.

(1) 8 I.A. 93=7 C. 648. (2) 1 Shome 25.
Two objections are urged on his behalf by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose:

first, that there was a misjoinder of causes of action; second, that the plaintiff’s payment was a voluntary payment.

It is unnecessary to express any opinion upon the first point, for we find that in both Courts the defendant virtually admitted the plaintiff’s title, and, therefore, we think the suit may fairly be looked upon as one brought only to recover the money.

In support of his second objection, Dr. Rash Behari Ghose argued that the case of Fatima Khatoon Chowdhry v. Mahomed Jan Chowdhry (1), one of the cases relied upon by the Subordinate Judge as showing that the payment was not a voluntary one, was not really in point, as it was decided in the year 1868, before the passing of the Contract Act, which by s. 72 defines the cases in which money must be repaid or returned; and by s. 15 defines what is “coercion.”

In support of the argument the learned pleader referred to the case of Asbibun v. Ram Prosad Das (2).

The learned pleader further sought to distinguish the case of Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishen Singh (3), the case mainly relied upon by the Subordinate Judge, from this case.

[660] For the respondent it was urged that the last-mentioned case was a conclusive authority in plaintiff’s favour. It was further urged that the Contract Act was only an Act “to define and amend certain parts of the law relating to contracts,” and that the provisions of s. 72 of the Act were not exhaustive. In reply it was argued that, even if the provisions of s. 72 were not exhaustive, those of s. 15 clearly were; and that no payment could be said to be involuntary unless made in consequence of “coercion” as therein defined.

In Fatima Khatoon Chowdhry v. Mahomed Jan Chowdhry (1), the facts were these. The appellants, two sisters, who had married individuals of the same family, became entitled to dower in the form of a charge on an estate or property which had belonged to a person of the name of Nyum Chowdhury. He died in debt, and his heirs and representatives were sued by the respondents to recover some very considerable sums of money alleged to have been due by him, in which suit they obtained judgment. Under that judgment certain other properties were attached and sold, and the judgment was in part satisfied. Under one of the many proceedings that took place in the suit, the decree-holders obtained authority to sell the estate upon which the dower of the appellants was charged. In order to prevent that sale, which would have been mischievous and prejudicial in the highest degree to the rights of the appellants, they, upon a proceeding which they instituted and under the authority of the Court, not voluntarily, but under protest, and because they were compelled to take that step in order to prevent the sale of the estate, paid the sum of between Rs. 59,000 and Rs. 60,000 into Court. The appellants subsequently sued the decree-holders to recover the money thus paid into Court. The Zillah Court gave the appellants a decree. Upon appeal the High Court reversed the decision of the Zillah Court upon the ground “that by law the payment, under the circumstances in which it was made, constituted a voluntary payment with the full knowledge of the facts, and therefore that the money could not be recovered back.” The Privy Council said that “the money had been paid into Court, not voluntarily, but under a species [661] of compulsion, and for the purpose of preventing the injurious sale of the property.’” They further said in answer to the ground upon which the High Court had reversed the judgment of the Zillah Court that “it was not a payment at all; it was originally a mere deposit in Court of the full amount recoverable by the decree-holder; it was deposited under protest for the purpose of preventing an injurious sale of the property.”

(1) 12 M.I.A. 65=10 W.R.P.C. 29. (2) 1 Shome 25. (3) 8 I.A. 93=7 C. 648.

They further said “those were the circumstances under which the money was paid, the payment being clearly no voluntary payment, and the suit having been determined on its merits in favour of the appellants they are clearly entitled to recover this money back again.”

Now, if that case had come before a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and we had been inclined to take a different view of the law as there laid down, we might have felt ourselves at liberty to say that we were not pressed by the decision upon the ground that the observations above referred to were obiter dicta.

That they are so appears from a reference to what Lord Romilly says at p. 77, L. R., 8 I. A.: “Under that judgment certain other properties were attached and sold, and the judgment was in part satisfied. If it were necessary to look into the particulars of those numerous and somewhat complicated proceedings, it would probably appear (and that alone would be a ground upon which the respondent must be held disentitled to retain the money they have received) that this judgment was in effect satisfied; that all the decree of the Court had entitled the respondents to take out of the different properties in question had been paid and satisfied in one way or another; and was received by them so as to disentitle them to institute or to continue any further proceedings against those properties in respect of the claim now in question.”

But though no doubt, as observed by Wilson, J., in Kinu Ram Dass v. Mozaffer Hosain Shaha (1), even a “dictum of the Privy Council has not the weight of a decision,” yet “it is of course entitled to the most careful consideration;” and it is binding upon us in a case similar in all respects to the one in which [662] the dictum occurs. We cannot distinguish this case from the case before the Privy Council. The only point of difference appears to be that in the Privy Council case there was an express declaration of an intention to bring a suit on the rejection of the claim case; but we do not think that the absence of such declaration in this case is at all material. Unless, therefore, the decision of the Privy Council can no longer be regarded as law, we must follow it and dismiss this appeal.

The Privy Council case was decided in 1868. In 1872, the Indian Contract Act having been passed in 1872, the Privy Council case was discussed by a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Markby and Prinsep, J.J., in the case of Asbibun v. Ram Prosad Das (2). In that case Markby, J., said: “It appears to me that the facts of this case cannot be distinguished from those of the case reported in 12 Moore’s Indian Appeals, 65; and if that case is still law, it must govern the case before us. It is there laid down that a voluntary payment with a full knowledge of the facts cannot be recovered back. But it was held that where a man pays a money into Court to be paid to the decree-holder in order to stay a sale in execution, expressing his intention to bring a suit to contest the right of the decree-holder to attach and sell the property, that is not a voluntary payment, and may be recovered back if it turn out that the decree-holder had no right to sell the property. I have no doubt the plaintiff in the case was guided in what he did by the law as laid down in that decision.

(2) 1 Shome 25.

"But since that decision was given, and before this payment was made, the matter had been dealt with by the Legislature of this country—s. 72 of Act IX of 1872 provides that a person to whom money has been paid by mistake or coercion must repay it. This, I take it, is the same general rule as that laid down by the Privy Council, only expressed in the reverse way. But just as the Privy Council go on to determine whether a particular act was a voluntary act, so the Legislature here defines generally what is 'coercion,' and it seems to me that the meaning which the Legislature had attached to the word 'coercion' shows that a payment of the kind which the Privy [663] Council declared to be involuntary does not come within the legislative definition of 'involuntary payments.' In other words, the legislature here takes a different view of what constituted an involuntary payment from that taken by the Privy Council. Section 15 declares that 'coercion is the committing or threatening to commit any act forbidden by the Indian Penal Code or the unlawful detaining or threatening to detain any property to the prejudice of any person whatever, with the intention of causing any person to enter into an agreement.' The payment in this case was not made under any of the conditions here described.

"The only question then is whether Act IX of 1872 contains the whole law upon this subject, or whether it may be supplemented by the law as laid down by the decisions of the Courts, and as contained in general principles of equity. In some respects, no doubt, Act IX of 1872 is incomplete. In the preamble, it is expressly said that it only explains and defines certain parts of the law of contract. But there are nevertheless, as it appears to me, some particular topics with which the legislature intended to deal completely, and I think that the matter now under consideration is one of those topics. It seems to me that, if we were to hold otherwise, the provisions of the Act as to the recovery of money paid involuntarily would be entirely useless. Unless these provisions completely define the cases in which money paid may be recovered back, because the payment was not voluntary, they tell us nothing at all, for no one would doubt that by the law of this country the cases specified by the Act in ss. 72 and 15 are cases in which money may be recovered back on this ground. The important question is whether they are the only cases, and unless the legislature intended to say that they were the only cases, nothing whatever will have been done towards the simplification of the law upon this subject. Every one knows the extreme difficulty that has been experienced in determining what payments are, and what payments are not, voluntary, and when money once paid may be recovered back. I think the legislature intended to get rid of this difficulty by laying down a short and simple rule upon this subject, which the Courts of this country, not always trained to the discussion of these difficult questions, might easily apply. Of course [664] we may thus find ourselves barred in some cases from applying a remedy when a remedy would seem desirable, but that is not unfrequently the consequence of having fixed and precise rules of law. I therefore think that the money was not paid involuntarily, and could not be recovered back, and that the decision of the Courts below should be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs.

"I only wish to add that there is no contention, and I do not think there could be any contention that this case comes in under s. 15 of the Contract Act. But I do not wish to prejudice the question whether under some circumstances a man who sets the Court in motion to attach property in execution may not be said to detain property. That question does not now arise."

We are bound to say that we felt much pressed by the force of this judgment, the weight of which is considerably enhanced by the observations of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chundercanto Mookerjee (1), where their Lordships say, at page 50: "When it is urged that the claim should be decided upon general principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, it is to be observed, in addition to the considerations already adverted to, that these principles are to be invoked only in cases for which no specific rules may exist." But upon a careful consideration of the judgment of Markby, J., we think the learned Judge misconceived the basis of the plaintiff’s claim. It was not a claim based upon contract pure and simple; it was not a claim to recover money paid under an agreement entered into by the plaintiff in consequence of "coercion" as defined by s. 15 of the Contract Act.

If the case before Markby, J., and this case had been brought in England when the old system of pleading was in existence, the plaintiff would have claimed for "money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff."

In Bullen and Leake’s Pleadings, 3rd Ed., 44, it is stated "that this is the most comprehensive of all the common counts; it is applicable whenever the defendant has received money which in justice and equity belongs to the plaintiff, under circumstances which render a receipt of it, a receipt by the defendant, [665] to the use of the plaintiff." In Moses v. Macferlan (2), Lord Mansfield thus speaks of the action for money had and received: "This kind of equitable action to receive back money which ought not in justice to be kept is very beneficial, and therefore much encouraged; it lies only for money which ex æquo et bono the defendant ought to refund; it does not lie for money paid by the plaintiff which is claimed of him as payable in point of honour and honesty, although it could not have been recovered from him in any course of law, as on payment of a debt barred by the statutes of limitation, or contracted during his infancy, or to the extent of principal and legal interest upon an usurious contract, or for money fairly lost at play; because in all these cases the defendant may retain it with a safe conscience, though by positive law he was barred from recovering. But it lies for money paid by mistake, or upon a consideration which happens to fail, or for money got through imposition (express or implied), or extortion, or oppression, or an undue advantage taken of the plaintiff’s situation contrary to laws made for the protection of persons under those circumstances."

Though Lord Mansfield’s application of the principles thus laid down to the facts in Moses v. Macferlan (2) has been held to be incorrect, the principles themselves have never been disputed.

We think, therefore, that, though it may be that in an action brought in this country to recover money paid under a contract entered into through "coercion," the coercion proved must be such as comes within the provision of s. 15 of the Contract Act (upon which point we express no opinion); yet it does not follow that in the form of action we have to consider in this case that the "coercion" need be of such a character.

(1) 4 I.A. 23=2 C, 233. (2) 2 Burr. 1,000. Sec p. 1012.

And further we are not prepared to say that the defendant's conduct did not amount to "a detainer of the plaintiff's property to the prejudice of the plaintiff with the intention of causing him to enter into an agreement," viz., an agreement to pay the debt of a third person.

But we think the point in dispute is conclusively settled by the case of Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishen Singh (1). It is [666] unnecessary to set out the facts of that case in detail: it is enough to state that the respondent, the purchaser of a mouzah, paid money into Court to prevent the sale thereof in execution of the appellant's decree, which had been already satisfied.

The Privy Council said: "The arguments at the bar were not directed to show that there is any equity upon which the appellant could retain this money; but the objections taken to the action were that the payment was voluntary, and that the remedy, if any, was in the execution proceedings. Their Lordships think that there is no pretence for saying that the payment was voluntary. It was made to prevent the sale which would otherwise inevitably have taken place of the mouzah which the respondents had purchased, and was made therefore under compulsion of law, that is, under force of these execution proceedings. In this country, if the goods of a third person are seized by the Sheriff and are about to be sold as the goods of the defendant, and the true owner pays money to protect his goods and prevent the sale, he may bring an action to recover back the money he has so paid; it is the compulsion under which they are about to be sold that makes the payment involuntary: see Valpy v. Manley (2)."

It was sought to distinguish that case from the present by pointing out that in the Privy Council case the appellant's decree had been already satisfied.

In our judgment this fact is immaterial. It was sought also to impugn this decision upon the ground that the Privy Council had not considered the effect of ss. 15 and 72 of the Contract Act.

It may be that these sections were not relied on; but looking to the fact that all the learned Counsel engaged in the case had practised in this country, and that two of the members of the Board had been Chief Justices of Bengal, we must assume that any argument based upon these sections, such as had been urged before us, was felt to be untenable. If it had been urged, we think the answer given would have been the one we have pointed out.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Sale of property covered by decree to Court which passed decree when property is situate outside its local jurisdiction at time of application—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 223 (c)—Jurisdiction.

A mortgage decree was passed directing the sale of certain property wholly situate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. After the decree the district within which the property was situate was transferred and placed under the local jurisdiction of another Court. The decree-holder then applied to the first Court for execution of the decree, and thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application or to direct the sale of the property. Held, that the Court had authority to execute its own decree and bring the property to sale.

Held, further, that s. 223 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure does not curtail the power of a Court to execute its own decree, but gives it a discretion either to execute the decree itself or, on the application of the decree-holder, to send it to another Court for execution, and thereby extends rather than limits the Court's power.

This was an appeal against an order refusing to stay execution of a decree which had been obtained by the decree-holders, respondents, upon a mortgage against the judgment-debtors, the appellants. At the date of the decree the whole of the property comprised in the mortgage was situated in the district of Monghyr, and within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore, in whose Court the suit was instituted and the decree passed.

After the decree was passed a Subordinate Judge was appointed at Monghyr and given jurisdiction over the district known by that name, and upon the application being made by the decree-holders to the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore for execution of the decree, the judgment-debtors objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree, inasmuch as the whole of the mortgaged property was situated within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr.

[668] That objection was disallowed by the Subordinate Judge who delivered the following judgment:

"The decree in this case that directs the sale of some properties was passed by this Court. The properties are admittedly situate in the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, a jurisdiction constituted subsequent to the date of the decree. This Court, therefore, has now ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it. This brings the case under s. 649 of the Civil Procedure Code.

"The interpretation that has been put on that section by the ruling in Latchman Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (1) gives the decree-holder in the present case the option either to take out execution from this Court...

or to apply for it direct to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr. The decree-holder has chosen this Court, and there is nothing to restrain him from making that choice. This application, therefore, is valid and will proceed. The objection of the judgment-debtor is rejected with costs."

Against that order the judgment-debtors preferred this appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, for the appellants.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Bhubun Mohan Doss, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor under a mortgage decree of 23rd December 1878, made by the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore. The mortgaged property, which by the decree is ordered to be sold, is wholly situated in the district of Monghyr, which district was formerly comprised within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore. Since the passing of the decree, however, it appears that a Subordinate Judge has been appointed at Monghyr with a territorial jurisdiction conterminous with that district. An application having been made to the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore to execute the decree and bring the mortgaged property to sale, the judgment-debtor objected that [669] the property being now situated within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore had no jurisdiction to execute the decree and bring the property to sale. This objection was overruled by the Subordinate Judge, and the present appeal has been brought against that order.

It is contended, first, that the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore had no jurisdiction to entertain the application; and, secondly, that, even if he could entertain the application, he had no jurisdiction to direct the sale of the property.

On the first point, we think it clear upon the authority of the case cited by the lower Court Latchman Pandeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (1) that the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore had jurisdiction to entertain the application.

We are further of opinion that, in the present case, he also had jurisdiction to execute the decree. In support of the appellant’s contention, we have been referred to the cases of Maseyk v. Steel & Co. (2) and Shurroop Chunder Gooho v. Ameerrunnissa Khatoon (3). Neither of those cases is precisely in point, inasmuch as in both of them some portion of the property was admittedly situated within the jurisdiction of the Court which made the decree, whereas, in the present case none of the property is now situated within the local jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore. So far as they decide anything, however, those cases are in favour of the respondent: for in both cases it was decided that the Court which made the decree had power to execute it. It is true that in the latter case cited, Field, J., remarked: “The case of course would be very different if the property consisted of different taluks or different revenue-paying estates, the whole of any one or more of which was situated within (another) the Furreedpore district.” This, however, was not the case before him, and we cannot regard the remark as carrying any greater weight than an obiter dictum. The case of Maseyk v. Steel & Co. (2) was decided on the principle that a Court which has jurisdiction to make a decree for the sale of mortgaged property has also jurisdiction to execute its decree and bring the property to sale. We think that that is a correct principle of law, and, as shown in that case, it is in accordance with the practice on the Original Side of this Court. On behalf of the appellant some reliance has been placed upon certain remarks of Mr. Justice Ghose in that case, but those remarks do not seem to have affected the decision of the case before him, and we do not, therefore, feel ourselves pressed by them. Mr. Justice Ghose says that he concurs generally in the judgment pronounced by the Chief Justice; and he further remarks as follows: “Now it seems to me that if the Court which made the decree had jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the whole of the properties comprised in the mortgage-deed, it would also have jurisdiction to sell them in execution of that decree, unless it be shown that that authority has been taken away or curtailed by any of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.” In the present case, as in that case, s. 223, clause (c), is relied on as curtailling that authority. We are of opinion that this contention is unsound. That section begins by laying down the general proposition that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution under the provisions thereafter contained; and the section then goes on to say: “The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court, if the decree directs the sale of immovable property outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it.” We think that the use of the word “may” in this clause does not take away from the Court the power to execute its own decree conferred by the previous part of the section, but rather gives it a discretion either to execute the decree itself, or on the application of the decree-holder, to send it to another Court for execution.

It appears to us in fact to be an extension rather than a limitation of the Court’s powers, and an extension for the sake of convenience. In the cases put in clauses (a) to (d) it might sometimes be inconvenient for the Court to execute its own decree, and the law, therefore, gives it power, on the application of the decree-holder, to transfer the decree to another Court for execution. No such application was made in this case, and the Court had, therefore, no authority to send the decree to the Monghyr Court for execution.

We have not been referred to any other section of the Code or to any decision of Court in support of the position contended for by the appellant, and upon the authority of the decision in Maseyk v. Steel & Co. (1) we must, therefore, hold that the Subordinate Judge of Bhaugulpore had authority to execute the decree of his own Court, and in execution thereof to bring to sale property wholly situated in the Monghyr district.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

GUNGA CHUNDER SEN and others (Petitioners) v. GOUR CHUNDER BANIKA (Opposite Party).*

Criminal intimidation—Penal Code (Act XLI of 1860), s. 503.

The threat referred to in s. 503 of the Penal Code must be a threat communicated, or uttered with the intention of its being communicated, to the person threatened for the purpose of influencing his mind.

The prisoners in this case were charged by one Gour Chunder Baniika with having committed, on the 28th Aughran 1294, an offence under s. 503 of the Penal Code.

The evidence in the case disclosed that Gour Chunder had purchased a ryoti holding from a tenant of the three accused, who were talukdars. The accused objected to this purchase, and threatened, unless the land was given up, to beat the complainant and burn down his house. The particular occasion on which the offence was committed was on the 28th Aughran 1294, when all three accused uttered this threat in the presence of certain persons who deposed to the fact, and further deposed that the complainant was not present on that occasion. The evidence given by them did not show in any way that the accused had intended that the threats used should be communicated to the complainant.

The Deputy Magistrate of Nowakhali convicted the accused and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment. This conviction was upheld by the Sessions Judge, who however, reduced the sentence to one of six months' simple imprisonment.

The prisoners then obtained this rule calling upon the complainant to show cause why these orders should not be set aside.

Baboo Umbica Charan Bose (with him Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen), in support of the rule, contended that, inasmuch as the threat had not been uttered in the presence of the complainant, the accused could not be convicted of an offence under s. 503 of the Penal Code.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) to show cause.

JUDGMENT.

Petheram, C.J.—This is a rule which has been obtained for the purpose of revising a conviction of three men for an offence under ss. 503 and 506 of the Indian Penal Code, that is to say, for the offence of having threatened the complainant within the meaning of those sections. The charge is a charge of having threatened him on the 28th Aughran 1294 and in support of that charge two witnesses are called who speak to what took place on that occasion.

The facts of the case up to that point are these: that the complainant had purchased a ryoti tenure within the limits of the accused's zamindari, and the accused disliked his being there, and apparently, from what the witnesses say, they intimated their dislike of that to them. Two witnesses say that on that day they were at his house of the accused.

* Criminal Revision No. 175 of 1888 against the order passed by W.H.M. Gun, Esq., Sessions Judge of Nowakhali, dated the 9th of May 1888, confirming the order passed by Baboo Probhat Nath Roy, Deputy Magistrate of Nowakhali, dated the 30th of April 1888.
when a panada of theirs came and told them that the complainant, notwithstanding what they had done, was still in the place and was still taking away the paddy on the land, upon which the accused said that they would beat him and set fire to his house. Assuming that to be true, the question is, whether that is a threat within the meaning of the section.

[673] The section which defines the offence is s. 503, and it is in these words: "Whoever threatens another with any injury to his person, reputation or property, or to the person or reputation of any one in whom that person is interested, with intent to cause alarm to that person, or to cause that person to do any act which he is not legally bound to do, or to omit to do any act which that person is legally entitled to do as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat, commits criminal intimidation."

It is clear that the gist of the offence, as defined in that section, is the effect which the threat is intended to have upon the mind of the person threatened, and it is equally clear that before it can have any effect upon his mind it must be either made to him by the person threatening or communicated to him in some way. In this particular case there is no suggestion that the threat was made to the person threatened. All that happened was, that in the presence of some persons the accused used the words I have quoted in their house. In one sense those words amount to a very bad threat, but there is no evidence on the face of them, and there is no other evidence, that they intended that the words should be communicated to the complainant for the purpose of influencing his mind. It seems to us that the evidence in the case falls far short of establishing the offence defined by this section, which is, in our opinion, a threat communicated or uttered with the intention of its being communicated to the person threatened for the purpose of influencing that man's mind. In this case there is nothing whatever to show that it was the intention of the accused that the threat should be communicated to the complainant. The complainant himself was called, and he does not say that he ever heard this particular threat. Though he speaks of a threat uttered on some other occasion, he does not say that the threat which is the subject of these charges was ever communicated to him or that he ever heard it. Under these circumstances we think that there is no evidence of an offence having been committed under this section and that this rule must be made absolute.

T. A. P.

Rule absolute.

[764] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Kedar Nath Chatterji (Defendant No. 1) v. Rakhal Das Chatterji and another (Plaintiffs).* [9th July, 1888.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877) sch. II, art. 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 280, 283—Judgment-debtor, suit by, to establish title to property the subject-matter of claim in execution proceedings.

A judgment-debtor is not necessarily a party against whom an order is made within the meaning of that term as used in s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2641 of 1887, against the decree of Baboo Madhub Chunder Chuckerbati, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 27th of August 1887 affirming the decree of Baboo Gopi Mohun Mukerji, Munsiff of Burdwan, dated the 25th of August 1886.
so as to preclude his instituting a suit after the lapse of one year from the date of such order (the period of limitation prescribed by art. 11, sch. II, Act XV of 1877) to establish his title to, and to recover possession of, the property which has been the subject-matter of a claim in execution proceedings, and in respect of which an order has been made under s. 280 of the Code.

G, in execution of a decree, attached certain immovable property belonging to the plaintiff whereupon B preferred a claim, and on the 10th March 1881 got the attachment removed. On the 20th July 1881 B sold the property to K. In 1882 G instituted a suit against B to set aside the order of the 10th March, 1881, and to have it declared that the property was liable to attachment as belonging to the plaintiff. K was not made a party to that suit, and it was eventually compromised between G and B, the plaintiff's title being admitted. G thereupon again attached the property, and was met by a claim preferred by K, which was allowed on the 15th August 1883. G then brought another suit against K, to obtain relief similar to that claimed in his suit against B, but his suit was dismissed on the 17th February 1885. On the 25th September 1885 the plaintiff instituted a suit against G, B and K, to obtain a declaration of his title to, and to recover possession of, the property. It was contended that the suit was barred by limitation, being governed by art. 11, sch. II of Act XV of 1877, inasmuch as it was brought more than one year after the date of the order of the 15th August 1883.

 Held, that the suit was not such a suit as was contemplated by s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, not being one to establish any right which was the subject-matter of the litigation in the execution proceedings, and that consequently the provisions of art 11 did not apply to it and it was not barred by limitation.

[ F., 3 C.L.J. 381 (383); 15 M.C.C. R. 89; R, 13 M. 366 (368); 17 B. 629 (631); 22 B. 875 (884); 25 M. 721 (723)=12 M.L.J. 411; U.B.R. (1892–1896), Vol. II, 458 (461); 34 M. 533=8 M.L.T. 417=8 Ind. Cas. 157.]

[675] In this case the plaintiffs sued to have their right and title to certain immovable property declared and to recover possession thereof, and five separate persons were made defendants to the suit, eia., No. 1, Kedar Nath Chatterji; No. 2, Gour Kishore Ghose; No. 3, Boidya Nath Pal; No. 4, Sreemutty Bighoremoni; and No. 5, Kedar Nath Pal.

The main facts in the case material for the purpose of this report, which were not disputed, were as follows:—

Defendant No. 2, Gour Kishore Ghose, who had obtained a decree against the plaintiffs, attached the property, the subject-matter of this suit, whereupon defendants Nos. 3, 4, and 5, who were in the same interest, preferred a claim, and on the 10th March 1881 succeeded and got the attachment removed. On the 20th July 1881 defendant No. 3, purporting to act for himself, and defendants Nos. 4 and 5, sold the property to defendant No. 1, Kedar Nath Chatterji. In 1882 defendant No. 2, Gour Kishore Ghose, having so failed in his execution proceedings, instituted a suit against defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5, who had succeeded in their claim, for a declaration that the property was liable to attachment as being the property of the plaintiffs. That suit terminated in a compromise by which the plaintiffs' title was admitted. Defendant No. 1, Kedar Nath Chatterji, was not made a party to that suit.

After the termination of that suit Gour Kishore Ghose again proceeded to attach the property in execution of his decree against the plaintiffs, whereupon defendant No. 1, Kedar Nath Chatterji, preferred another claim, setting up his purchase of the 20th July 1881. This second claim was allowed on the 15th August 1883, and thereupon defendant No. 2, brought another suit against Kedar Nath Chatterji to set aside the order allowing his claim, and to have it declared that the property was liable to attachment by him. This suit was dismissed on the 17th February 1885 as the result of a compromise made out of Court.
The plaintiffs then instituted the present suit on the 25th September 1885 to recover possession of the property, setting out the above proceedings, and alleging that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had fraudulently colluded together in settling the suit [676] which terminated on the 17th February 1885, and that defendant No. 1 had dispossessed them of the property.

Defendant No. 1 alone contested the suit.

He denied the plaintiff's title and the collusion charged, and amongst other pleas contended that the suit was barred by limitation.

The only issue raised in the case material for the purpose of the appeal was that of limitation.

The Munsif decided the case in favour of the plaintiffs both on the merits and on the question of limitation, and gave them a decree. On the latter point he held that the plaintiffs had proved possession within twelve years of suit, and apparently, though not specifically, held that twelve years' limitation was the period applicable to the facts of the case.

Against that decree the defendant No. 1 appealed, and the Subordinate Judge agreed with the findings of the lower Court upon the merits, and also that the suit was not barred by limitation, and accordingly dismissed the appeal.

Upon the question of limitation the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was as follows:—

"It is contended that as the plaintiffs were the judgment-debtors in the execution proceedings in which this appellant intervened under s. 278 of the Procedure Code, they must be regarded as parties to that claim case, and they were bound to institute this suit within one year from the date of the adverse order in the claim, that is, the 15th August 1883. This suit is governed by the provisions of art. 11 of sch. 11 of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, and as it has been instituted more than one year after that date, it is barred by limitation.

"I think, however, that plaintiffs cannot be regarded as parties to that claim case, though they were certainly parties to the execution proceedings. I do not refer here to the practice of our Courts, where a claim under s. 278 and the following sections for all intents and purposes is treated as a separate case in which the decree-holder and the claimant are the only parties. Under the old law, s. 246, Act VIII of 1850, there was a provision to summon the judgment-debtor: consequently when he was so summoned he could be regarded as a party. [677] There is no such provision in s. 278 and the following sections down to s. 282. The decree-holder cannot also be regarded as his representative as his interest is limited. This was the view taken in the case of Shivapa v. Dod Nagaya (1).

"There is a stronger ground than the above for holding that the provisions of art. 11 are not applicable to this case. In the case of Bukshi Ram Pergash Lal v. Shoo Pergash Tewari (2) it has been authoritatively laid down that the suit contemplated by s. 283 is a suit which may be brought by the unsuccessful party in a proceeding under ss. 280, 281 or 282 to establish a right to the property in dispute, which right was the subject-matter of litigation in the execution proceedings.

"Let us then see whether the subject-matter of litigation in this suit is identical with that in the last claim case. There the decree-holder sought to enforce his right to sell the property as belonging to the judgment-debtor, and the claimant sought to get the attachment removed on the ground that it belonged to him. In this case the plaintiffs seek to recover possession on proof of their title. Recovery of possession was no one’s case in that proceeding.

(1) 11 B. 114. (2) 12 C. 453.

“I think, therefore, that this is not a suit against an order under s. 280, and is not therefore based upon the provisions of s. 283, to which alone art. 11 of the second schedule, Act XV of 1877, applies. The plea of special limitation is therefore groundless.”

The defendant Kedar Nath Chatterji now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Lal Mohun Das (for Dr. Troyloky Nath Mitter), for the appellant.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Tarapodo Chowdhry, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Beverley, J.—The facts out of which this case arises are as follow:

Defendant No. 2, in execution of a decree against the plaintiffs, attached the property now in suit, whereupon defendants Nos. 3 to [678] 5 preferred a claim, and succeeded, on the 10th March 1881, in getting the attachment removed. On the 20th July 1881 defendant No. 3 sold the property to defendant No. 1, who is the appellant before us. In 1882 defendant No. 2 instituted a regular suit for a declaration that the property was liable to attachment. To that suit the appellant was no party. It appears to have been decided on 26th January 1883 in terms of a compromise by which plaintiffs’ title to the property was admitted.

Defendant No. 2 then proceeded to attach the property afresh, and this time he was met by a claim on the part of the appellant, which was allowed on the 15th August 1883.

Defendant No. 2 thereupon brought a second suit to set aside the order in that claim case, and that suit was dismissed on the 17th of February 1885.

The plaintiffs then instituted the present suit on the 25th September 1885 to recover possession of the property on the strength of their title. The only question with which we are concerned in the present appeal is whether or not the suit is barred by limitation by reason of its having been instituted more than one year after the 15th August 1883, the date on which the appellant’s claim was allowed.

Both the lower Courts have held that it is not so barred.

By art. 11 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act of 1877, a suit by a person against whom an order is passed under s. 280, 281 or 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to establish his right to the property comprised in the order, must be brought within one year from the date of the order. In the present case the order of the 15th August 1883 was an order under s. 280 of the Code. If, therefore, the plaintiff was a person against whom that order was made, the present suit would seem to be barred under the article of the Limitation Act above referred to.

Now the right to bring a suit to contest an order under s. 280 is given by s. 283, which runs as follows: “The party against whom an order under s. 280, 281 or 282, is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." The question is, was the plaintiff a party against whom the order was made in the claim case, and is the present suit a suit to establish the right which he claimed in that case?

No doubt in one sense the plaintiff, who was the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings in which the claim was preferred, was a party to those proceedings, and the order was so far made against him that it adjudicated the question as to whether he was or was not in possession of the property at that time.

But if the section be construed strictly, as we think it must be construed, it seems to us that no order was really made against him under s. 280, and that the present suit is not governed by art. 11 of the Limitation Act.

When a claim is preferred to property which has been attached as the property of the judgment-debtor, the contest is really between the decree-holder who asserts that the property is liable to attachment, and the claimant who alleges that it is not in the actual or constructive possession of the judgment-debtor, and therefore not liable to attachment. And the order made in such a case is either that the property be released from attachment as not being in the possession of the judgment-debtor (s. 280) or that the claim be disallowed, the property being found liable to attachment (s. 281). In a sense the order in either case may be said to be against the judgment-debtor; in the one case it declares that the property is not in his possession; in the other it declares that it is liable to attachment and sale. But in neither case does it affect his right or title to the property, and in point of fact it is an order to which he need be no party, as it may be made behind his back.

Then, if we turn to s. 283, we see that the suit there referred to is a suit to establish the right which is claimed to the property in suit, that is to say, the right which is claimed in those proceedings, being on the one hand the right to have the property attached and sold in execution and on the other the right to have it released from attachment. The words of the section are not "the right to the property" meaning the title to the property, but "the right, which he claims to the property" which, we take it, means "the right which is claimed in that proceeding in respect of the property"—that is, as we have said, the right to have it sold or the right to have it released from attachment. That this is so, is clear, we think, from the fact that the decree-holder has no right or title in the property attached, and could not sue to establish any such right. What he claims and what he may sue to establish is the right to have the property declared to be liable to attachment and sale in execution of his decree.

The learned pleader for the appellant has relied upon the case of Netietom Parengaryprom v. Paynebary Parmeshwrenc Nambudy (1), in which a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held, under the similar provisions contained in s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1850, that the judgment-debtor was a person against whom an order might be made under that section. The correctness of that decision, however, has been doubted, and we have not been referred to any reported case in which it has been followed. On the other hand, several cases have been cited to us in which it has been held that the judgment-debtor was not a party against whom the order was made in the claim case, and that he was therefore not bound to bring his suit to establish his title to the property within one year from the date of the order—Cheriyarakel v. Vayaka Parambath Imbichi Ammah (1); Imbichi Koya v. Kakkunnat Upakki (2); Nitta Kolita v. Bishnuram Kolita (3); Mannu Lal v. Harsukh Das (4); Shivapa v. Dod Nagaya (5). In most of these cases the case of Netietom Parenayprom v. Tayanbarry Parameshwren Nambudry (6) was referred to, but the Court declined to follow it, and held that a judgment-debtor cannot necessarily be regarded as having been a party to the investigation against whom the order was made, but that it must depend upon the facts of each case. In the case of Cheriyarakel v. Vayaka Parambath Imbichi Ammah (1), Morgan, C.J., and Holloway, J., went so far as to say that but for the Full Bench decision referred to, they would have had great difficulty in saying that the judgment-debtor was a party to the order at all.

[681] There are certain remarks in the case of Bukshi Ram Pergash Lal v. Sheo Pergash Tewari (7) which go to support the view we take of the meaning of s. 283. In that case Mr. Justice Mitser said: "Under this section the decree-holder who fails in a proceeding between himself and a claimant under s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure may institute a suit to establish his right to the property which he claimed in the proceeding before the execution Court, viz., the right to attach and sell the property which was claimed by the claimant in satisfaction of his decree. That is, in our opinion, the correct construction of art. 11, which refers only to suits contemplated by s. 283. That being so, the question which calls for decision in this case is, whether the present is a suit which comes within the purview of s. 283. It seems to us that the suit contemplated by s. 283 is a suit which may be brought by the unsuccessful party in a proceeding under ss. 280, 281 or 282 to establish a right to the property in dispute, which right was the subject-matter of litigation in the execution proceedings."

In the present case we are of opinion that the suit is not such a suit as is contemplated by s. 283. It is not a suit to establish any right which was the subject-matter of litigation in the execution proceedings. It is a suit to establish the plaintiff's title to the property in respect of which the claim was preferred, but that title was not the subject of those proceedings, nor was it affected by the order made therein.

For these reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Notice to Quit—Service of notice to quit by registered letter, Sufficiency of.

Where a notice to quit was sent by a registered letter, the posting of which was proved, and which was produced in Court in the cover in which it was despatched, that cover containing the notice with an endorsement upon [682] it purporting to be by an officer of the Post Office stating the refusal of the addressee to receive the letter: Held, that this was sufficient service of notice. Lootf Ali Meah v. Pearce Mohun Roy (1) and Papillon v. Brunton (2) referred to.

Suit for recovery of khas possession and for damages.

Jogendro Chunder Ghose and another, the plaintiffs, alleged that Khetramoni Dasi, defendant No. 3, held a tenure consisting of three bighas of land; that the tenure was not transferable, and that she had no right of occupancy therein; that Hera Chand, her husband and predecessor in title, had granted a mourasi pottah to Dwarka Nath Karmokar and Durgachurn Karmokar, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who had excavated a tank and had also so deteriorated the condition of the land that it was no longer fit for cultivation. The plaintiffs, accordingly, prayed for khas possession by ejectment, and Rs. 300 as damages. The defence set up was that the plaintiffs were estopped by their own conduct; that the suit was not maintainable, as notice to quit was necessary, and no notice had been served; that the tenure was a transferable one; that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in possession by virtue of the mourasi pottah granted to them by Hera Chand; and that therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages or to khas possession.

The suit was dismissed by both the lower Courts on the sole ground that notice to quit being necessary and not proved, the suit was not maintainable.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerji, Baboo Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Uma Kali Mukerji, for the appellants.

Baboo Guru Das Banerji and Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mukerji, for the respondents.

Mr. Woodroffe, on the question of service of notice, cited the cases of Papillon v. Brunton (2) and Lootf Ali Meah v. Pearce Mohun Roy (1). He also referred to s. 16, cl. (b) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and pointed out that there was evidence of service of notice.

[683] The judgment of the Court (Pigot and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1615 of 1887, against the decree of Baboo Bhugwan Chunder Chatterji, Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 30th of April 1887, affirming the decree of Baboo Bhoolun Mohun Ghose, Munsif of Satkhira, dated the 8th of March 1886.

JUDGMENT.

In this case the service of the notice, which it was sought to effect personally upon the defendant Khetramoni Dasi, was not proved in the opinion of the Courts below, they disbelieving the assertion of a Mahomedan witness who deposed to having actually handed the notice to the party to be served, she being a purdanashin woman. The service of the notice in another form was, however, proved, having been effected by a registered letter, the posting of which was proved, and which was produced in Court in the cover in which it was despatched, that cover containing the notice with an endorsement upon it purporting to be by an officer of the Post Office stating the refusal by the defendant to receive the document. Upon the cases cited before us—Lootf Ali Meah v. Pearee Mohun Roy (1), and Papillon v. Brunton (2)—and having regard also to s. 16, illustration (b) of the Evidence Act, we think that only a captious doubt could lead us to regard that service as insufficient. The case was dismissed in both Courts on the sole ground that the notice being necessary and not proved the plaintiff could not maintain the suit. Other matters appear to have been gone into and largely discussed,—one, that under the circumstances a notice was not necessary inasmuch as the defendant No. 8, Khetramoni Dasi, having, by her acts, repudiated the relation of landlord and tenant existing between her and the plaintiff, became thereby a trespasser, and that in this suit notice was therefore unnecessary. Now, having decided that notice was duly given, we consider it unnecessary to decide whether a notice was necessary or not, and we express no opinion upon that question at all. It must be treated as not decided upon this appeal or in these proceedings. It is important, however, to record this in our judgment, because manifestly the case between the parties was not completely gone into, and it is desirable that nothing should be said here which would at all interfere with what is, we think, the right of the parties to have on remand, viz., a complete enquiry into all matters legitimately arising in the suit—and amongst them [684] this question may be one—without a decision of those matters being in any manner prejudiced or affected by such opinion as may have been come to by the lower Courts during the preliminary enquiries that have as yet alone taken place in this litigation. We, therefore, set aside the decrees of the lower appellate Court and the original Court. We find that the defendant, Khetramoni Dasi, was duly served with notice (Exhibit 2 put in.) We leave for future argument the question whether or not the notice was, in its terms, a proper one, limiting ourselves to holding that the service of it is established, and we remand the case to be re-tried by the original Court upon the whole facts as appear in the pleadings. The parties will be at liberty to adduce such further evidence as they may be advised to bring. The costs of all the Courts will abide the result.

MAHOMED BUKSH KHAN AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. HOSSEINI BIBI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs). [9th, 10th, 11th and 15th February, 1888.]

Issues—Inconsistent issues—Undue influence—Mahomedan law of gift—Possession not delivered at the time, but afterwards obtained—Mushaa, mixed, or common property, with shares undistinguished.

The execution of a hibanama having been denied by the plaintiff, a Mahomedan widow and purdanashin, in a suit brought by her to have it set aside as fabricated she also alleged that undue influence had been exercised upon her. It was decided upon the evidence that the instrument was genuine, having been executed by her of her own free will.

The above questions being inconsistent with one another, the latter should not have been admitted to form part of an issue together with the former.

On an issue of undue influence, rightly raised, a Court should consider whether the gift in question (a) is one which a right-minded person might be expected to make: (b) is or is not improvident act on the donor’s part; (c) is such as to have required advice, if not obtained by the donor; and (d) whether the intention to make [685] the gift originated with the donor, the principles being always the same, although the circumstances may differ.

The hibanama gave an undivided share in mokurari and zemindari holdings, besides other property not reduced into possession, the whole of which had, as a matter of title, devolved upon the donor as a member of a family of which the donees were also members.

Held, that the hibanama did not infringe the Mahomedan doctrine of mushaa, as an attempt to make a gift of an undivided share in property capable of division; it having been settled that one of two sharers may give his share to the other before division, whence it followed that one of three sharers might give his share to the other two. Ameena Bibi v. Zeifa Bibi (1) referred to and approved.

Held, also, that as the donor had done all that she could do to perfect the contemplated gift, which was attended with complete publicity, and as the donees had afterwards obtained possession, the fact of the donor’s having been out of possession, and therefore not having delivered it, did not, of itself, invalidate the gift. In regard to the principle and the analogy in other systems of law to be found in the cases relating to voluntary transfers (where, if the donor should not have done all that he could have done to perfect his intended law, he cannot be compelled to do more) the Hindu case of Kali Das Mullick v. Kanhuba Lal Pundit (2) was referred to.

Appeal from a decree (12th September 1884) of the High Court, reversing a decree (7th October 1882) of the Subordinate Judge of Gya.

The suit giving rise to this appeal was commenced by a Mahomedan widow, a purdanashin, who died shortly after, and it was continued by her heirs. The questions now raised were: First, as to the actual execution of a hibanama by her, she having both denied the making of the instrument, and also alleged coercion, and other undue influence, to have been exercised upon her; and, secondly, whether the hiba, if made, was a gift of property so sufficiently ascertained and divided as to be valid by Mahomedan law; and, thirdly, whether, if the gift had been made, the requirements of that law had been fulfilled by possession following the gift.

The hibanama, which was dated 30th May 1881, purported to have been executed by Shahzadi Bibi, who, in the following September, brought this suit to have it set aside. She died [686] shortly after, and was now represented by her heirs. The instrument purported, as a hibabil-iwaz (in consideration of a ring given to the donor), to give the whole of Shahzadi's one-sixth share in the estate of her then recently deceased daughter, Omda Begum, to the minor children of the latter, under the guardianship of their father, Mahomed Buksh Khan, who, with them, was a defendant in this suit. The share comprised, among other things, a one-sixth share of an hereditary and mokurari interest in about twenty villages, in pergunnah Shergatti, in the Gya district, which share, having been inherited as the instrument recited by Shahzadi, was by her given, by a previous hibanama, dated 9th September 1876, to her daughter Omda, then alive. This having led to disputes, an ikramana, executed in 1879, gave the possession of nearly all the villages to Nubi Buksh Khan, Shahzadi's husband, who, however, died in that year, or the year following, with the result that Omda became entitled to the whole property given to her by Shahzadi, and more besides, under the rules of inheritance. Omda died on the 14th May 1891, when, under Sunni law, her mother Shahzadi became entitled to a one-sixth share in the whole of her estate. That estate was composed of the one-sixth share in the villages given by Shahzadi to Omda in 1876, with, in addition, Omda's interest in village assigned to her under the ikramana of 1879, as well as her interest in property that had been her father's, and was allowed to Omda by a family solehnama, executed on the 14th February 1880, after his death. Omda's estate also comprised her dower due from her husband, Mahomed Buksh Khan, and a part of certain decrees, the whole estate being valued in the hibanama of 30th May 1881 at Rs. 50,000.

This hibanama was alleged by the plaint not to have been executed by Shahzadi. Coercion was also alleged and the prevention of any communication by Shahzadi with her friends. The issue framed raised the questions whether the instrument was genuine and executed by her, or with her knowledge and consent, and whether it was, if executed, obtained by undue influence. The Subordinate Judge of Gya found that the hibanama was genuine, having been "executed with the [687] knowledge, consent, and natural desire of Shahzadi Bibi;" adverting also to the inconsistency of the allegation of undue influence, with the denial of any execution whatever. Disallowing objections to the gift founded on the Mahomedan doctrine of mushaa, and also on the non-delivery of possession by Shahzadi, he dismissed the suit with costs.

On appeal this decree was reversed by a Divisional Bench of the High Court (GARTH, C. J. and BEVERLEY, J.). The judgment of the High Court went into the character and effect of the hibanaama and the evidence given in support of it. The Judges expressed themselves not satisfied that the document was executed, or that, even if it was, Shahzadi had understood its contents, or had been a free agent at the time.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, argued that the High Court had reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge on insufficient grounds.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent, argued that the judgment of the High Court was correct in result, according to what this committee had recognized in regard to persons in the position of the alleged donor. Where documents had been executed by secluded women, it must be shown that such persons had acted independently of all constraint and had been able to consult their own legal advisers if they wished to do so, the affirmative being upon those who derived benefit from the transaction. As was said in the judgment in Greschunder Lahoree v. Bhug-gobutty Debia (1), the Courts in India had always to be careful to see that deeds taken from purda women had been fairly taken, and that a woman executing a deed of gift had been a free agent, and had been duly informed of the effect of what she was about. Even if this hibanaama had been executed, there had been no evidence of a satisfactory kind that Shahzadi was a perfectly free agent; and it was for the defence to establish this. On the contrary there was much to show that she was under duress at the time of the alleged making of the instrument. Besides the above, there were two [688] legal objections to the hibanaama: First, that Shahzadi was out of the possession of the shares in the mokurari and zemindari interests, the subject of gift, as also of the share in the unpaid dower, and of the share in the money payable under the decree; secondly, that the share of Shahzadi in the above was in property jointly owned by her and by other persons, and such share has not been distinguished from those of the other owners. Such a gift, accordingly, fell within the doctrine of the Mahomedan law in regard to mushaa, or the undivided part of a thing, and was invalid. He referred to Baillie’s Mahomedan Law, Book VIII, Chap. 1; Hedaya Book XXX, Chap. 1; and Vol. III, p. 293 of Hamilton’s Translation; Mullick Abdool Guffur v. Muleka (2); and Amirunnissa Khatoon v. Abedunnissa Khatoon (3), which last case was distinguishable on the ground that specific interests were held, that not being the case here.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, in reply, having relied on the evidence to show that the deed was genuine, argued that the Mahomedan law was not contravened by giving effect to this gift. Nor did that law necessarily operate in this instance. The gift could be maintained as a contract, being in itself an equitable act on the part of the mother of the recently deceased Omda towards her children; and he referred to the restriction of 21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 17, within the local jurisdiction of the Courts in the Presidency towns, as pointed out in the judgment in Nobinchunder Bonnerjee v. Bomeschunder Ghose (4). He referred also to Act VI of 1871 and its provision in s. 24. However, applying the Mahomedan law, the gift in this instance was of property sufficiently ascertained. On the question of mushaa the case of Ameena Bibi v. Zeifa Bibi (5) was in point; he referred also to Mullick Abdool Guffoor v. Muleka (2). As regards possessed having been obtained after, but not at the time of, the gift, he argued that the gift had been, nevertheless, completed by acts carrying it out, as far as it possibly could be carried out, the nature of "the property being considered." [689] The rules of the Mahomedan law, on this head, in insisting on possession being given only enforced a principle that was common to all jurisprudence. To explain the principle, perhaps the most appropriate case was a Hindu one, viz., Kali Das Mullick v. Kanhya Lal Pandit (1), showing that the mere fact of the donor being out of possession cannot be used to defeat a gift otherwise complete. There, as here, the donor had done all that could be done to complete the gift, which was, therefore, maintainable. He referred also to Macnaghten's Mahomedan Law, Chap. V, p. 51; Baillie's Maho-v. Lakhma Mana (2); Ibrahim v. Suleman (3); and Amirunnissa Khatoon

v. Abedunnissa Khatoon (4).

JUDGMENT.

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—In this case the suit is brought to recover proerty contained in a hibanama or deed of gift bearing date the 30th May 1881, and purporting to be executed by a widow lady named Shahzadi Bibi, who is dead. The persons to whom the hibanama purports to convey the property are grandchildren of Shahzadi, the infant children of her daughter Omda, who had died a very short time before. The ground of action alleged by the plaint is that hibanama was a fabricated document, and that the alleged signature of Shahzadi was a forgery.

To understand the story and the position of the parties it is necessary to give a short sketch of the pedigree of the family. Shahzadi Bibi was the daughter of Sikundar Ali and Hesamut Bibi; she had two brothers, Nawab Ali and Mannujan. Nawab Ali married a person of the name of Hedyat. Shahzadi Bibi herself married one Nubi Buksh. By him she had only two daughters, both children, Omda Bibi and Hosseini Bibi.
Omda Bibi married Mahomed Buksh Khan, and by him had nine children, who are the infant appellants. Hosseini married Rubidad Khan. Maho-med Buksh Khan was the son of Jehangir Buksh Khan. [690] Jehangir married a person of the name of Mahamdu. Mahamdu's mother was Hasan Bibi. Jehangir's mother was Rousham Bibi, who also appears to have been the mother of Nubi Buksh and the sister of a lady called Daem Bibi, who was grandmother or in the position of grandmother to Shahzadi.

It appears that from Daem Bibi, Shahzadi derived a property consisting of some 22 villages. In 1876, being then the wife of Nubi Buksh, but living apart from her husband, and apparently not being on good terms with him, she determined to make over this property to her daughter, Omda Bibi. Her general mukhtar at that time was Mahadeo Lal. He seems to have renounced against the gift, and to have informed her husband, who also remonstrated. The lady, however, was firm in the purpose, and on the 9th September 1876 she executed a hibanama granting this property to her daughter.

Now there is no question as to the genuineness of that document.
It is executed by Shahzadi, by the pen of Mahadeo Lal, her general

Feb. 15.

At the end of 1879, or the beginning of 1880, Nubi Buksh died. On his death fresh disputes arose in the family. They were ultimately settled by a deed of compromise bearing date the 14th February 1880. From that time until the present quarrel the parties appear to have lived on good terms. The result of the various transactions which have been referred to was to place the two daughters, Omda Bibi and Hosseini Bibi, on an equal footing as regards the property they derived from their parents. Hesamut Bibi, the mother of Shahzadi, a witness for the respondents, says in her evidence: "Both Hosseini and Omda Bibi were equally rich, one of them was not richer than the other."

Shahzadi Bibi lived at Amas. Mahomed Buksh Khan and Omda lived at Khira. In May 1881 Omda fell sick, and she was moved to a place called Nawadi. Shahzadi went to Nawadi to be with her sick daughter. About four days after she went there Omda died. She died on the 14th May 1881. The body was taken to Madarpore, which was the family burying place and all the immediate relatives, including Shahzadi, went there and stayed at the house of Hasan Bibi during the customary period of mourning, which is nominally 40 days. On the death of Omda, by Mahomedan law, Shahzadi succeeded to a sixth of her estate. Her estate consisted of the 22 villages which were conveyed to her by the deed of September 1876; of other villages which she derived under the arrangement of 1876 and the compromise of 1880; of her dower, which amounted to one lac; and of a decree against Jehangir Buksh Khan, the amount of which is not stated, and which does not appear in their Lordships' opinion to be material for any purpose in the suit. If it had been material no doubt the parties would have taken care to have informed the Court what the amount of that decree was. On the 18th June 1881 the 40 days of mourning ended with the ceremony called "Chehloom." Mahomed Buksh Khan then went to Khira, and took Shahzadi with him. On the 22nd of June it appears that Shahzadi made a complaint before a Magistrate that she was detained there against her will. The Magistrate investigated the complaint, and seems to have thought that it was to a certain extent well founded, and he sent her home to [692] Amas under the protection of two constables. She repeated that complaint on the 15th of July, and again on the 25th of that month; but on the 2nd August the Magistrate in charge came to the conclusion that there were no sufficient grounds for a prosecution and that if she chose to go on she must act at her own risk. The matter then dropped.

On the 22nd September 1881 Shahzadi filed her plaint in this suit. The only ground of action alleged in the plaint is that the hibanama of 30th May 1881 was a fabricated document, and that her alleged signature was a forgery. On the 12th October 1881 Shahzadi died. The proceedings were continued by her daughter, Hosseini Bibi, and her father and mother, Sykundar Ali and Hesamut Bibi. On the 16th March 1882 issues were settled. Amongst the issues was this: "2nd, whether the hibanama on behalf of Shahzadi Bibi is genuine and valid and executed with her knowledge and consent, or whether it was manufactured without her knowledge and consent, or whether it was executed under undue influence?" In their Lordships' opinion the latter part of that issue ought not to have been admitted. It was absolutely inconsistent with the case made by the plaintiff. It only becomes possible on the assumption that the alleged cause of action is unfounded. There was another issue which also was only admissible on that assumption, namely: "3rd, whether in case the said hibanama is proved to be genuine it is invalid on any ground according to Mahomedan law."

The questions therefore which had to be decided by the Court and which now have to be considered by their Lordships, are three: First, was the deed really executed by Shahzadi? secondly, if so, are there any circumstances which go to prove that it ought not to be held binding upon her? and thirdly, is the gift valid under Mahomedan law?

Now, to take the first question: Was the deed really executed by Shahzadi? It purports to be executed by her by the pen of Mahadeo Lal, who was no doubt for a considerable time her general mukhteer. It purports to bear as her signature the Hindi words which admittedly she wrote on the deed of the 9th September 1876 by way of authenticating that document. Her execution is [693] attested by no less than 21 witnesses, nine of whom, as well as the writer, have been examined in support of the deed. She was a purda nashin lady. There were women inside, and they of course, according to the evidence, could have seen her execute the deed. Three swear they saw the execution; two whose presence is deposed to by several witnesses swear that they were not even in Madarpore. Their evidence, however, is not believed by either Court. Of the male witnesses three, and three only according to the evidence, could have seen the deed executed—Nawab Ali, who died before the hearing, Mannujan, and Dost Mahomed. The others attest the deed on Shahzadi's admission. In the afternoon of the day on which the deed is alleged to have been executed the Sub-Registrar came over and took her acknowledgment. The Sub-Registrar is stated by the Subordinate Judge to be a respectable and learned person." He deposes that he knew Shahzadi's voice, and that she acknowledged the deed before him.

The Subordinate Judge, who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses, unhesitatingly came to the conclusion that the deed was genuine. He relied principally on the evidence of Mannujan, Mahadeo Lal, and Manwar Ali, the Sub-Registrar. The High Court came to a different conclusion. They say: "We think that a large amount of suspicion attaches to this evidence, and we are not satisfied that the deed was really executed by Shahzadi." Their Lordships cannot consider the judgment of the High Court satisfactory. The learned Judges suspect everybody; they suspect everything. Every one who took an intelligent part in the transaction, the dead as well as the living—Shahzadi’s relations as well as her son-in-law’s dependents; even the Sub-Registrar of the district who attended only in the discharge of his official duties—one and all are alike involved in general and indiscriminate suspicion.

The learned Judges say that they cannot but regard Jehangir Buksh Khan as the prime mover in the matter; and they add: "We cannot help suspecting that this witness had a good deal more to do with the preparation, execution, and registration of this deed than he has chosen to tell the Court." ‘In their Lordships’ opinion this witness seems to have answered fairly every question that [694] was put to him, and if his evidence be true, and there is nothing to contradict it, his connexion with the transaction was of the slightest. According to his statement, he was summoned by a letter from Shahzadi to come over and witness the execution of the deed. He came over in the early morning; he spoke to Shahzadi and she spoke to him. She acknowledged that she had executed the deed, and he attested it. Then he mounted his horse and rode away, and that appears to be the only connexion he had with the transaction, except that he is the father of Mahomed Buksh Khan, and Mahadeo Lal was his general mukhtear.

The learned Judges also mention as a matter of suspicion that no independent person seems to have been called in to attest that deed, and that no independent person has deposed in favour of its execution. The latter conclusion is not quite accurate. The Sub-Registrar, whether he is to be believed or not, was unquestionably an independent person, and had no connexion whatever with either side. It is somewhat difficult to understand what is meant by the objection that no independent person was called in to attest the deed. It has not been suggested that any member of the family or any person who would naturally have been present if the deed were genuine was absent on the occasion when it is said to have been executed. Every member of the family with whom we are acquainted, with the exception of Hosseini Bibi and her husband, was present and attested the deed. It would not have been very natural that Hosseini or her husband should have been called in to attest a deed which disappointed their hopes, or at any rate defeated their chance of succession. But, in point of fact, according to the statement of Rubidad Khan, Hosseini Bibi was incapacitated by illness from going to Madarpore. It is stated that she did not go there until the chehloom. Rubidad Khan also states that he was not there, that he was present at the burial, but that from the time of the burial till the chehloom he did not go to Madarpore. It is difficult to see what advantage would have been gained by summoning an independent person to attest the deed. The lady was a purda nashin lady. A stranger would not have been admitted to her presence. The [695] attestation of a stranger who could not have seen her write and who could not have known her voice would have carried the matter very little further.

Then there are three minor matters of suspicion on which the learned Judges comment. They say the draft of the deed was not produced. It is difficult to see what light that draft could have thrown upon the transaction. At any rate, it was not called for. It is said that two letters which are mentioned in the evidence as having been sent by Shahzadi to summon Mahadeo Lal and Jehangir Buksh Khan were also not produced. They were not called for either. The plaintiffs seem to have been satisfied with a statement of what was contained in those letters by the recipient of the one and the writer of the other. Of course, if the deed was forged, notwithstanding the publicity connected with it, there could have been no difficulty in forging Shahzadi’s signature to a letter.

The learned Judges also observe that it is a remarkable circumstance that none of the female witnesses who were behind the purda make any direct statement on the point of Shahzadi’s writing the words in Hindi. They merely state, say the Judges in general terms, that Shahzadi executed the deed. That observation also does not appear to be quite accurate. The three ladies who were behind the purda, and who gave evidence for the defendants Malik Jehan Bibi, Hasan, and Mahamdu, state that the deed was executed by Shahzadi in their presence. One—and one only—of those ladies was cross-examined upon the point, and her statement in cross-examination is every positive. That is Mahamdu. She says: “The females had witnessed it in my presence. First the females witnessed it and then the males. The signature of Shahzadi Bibi was put in my presence. Shahzadi Bibi ordered Mahadeo Lal to sign for her, and then he signed for her. After that she wrote below it two or four letters in Hindi which she knew.” Mahamdu seems to have been the first witness who was examined on behalf of the defendants—certainly the first or second—the other two were not cross-examined upon the point. Their cross-examination appears to have been entirely directed to irrelevant objects.

[696] “Another very suspicious circumstance” in the opinion of the learned Judges is this, that the Hindi words written, or said to have been written, on the deed by Shahzadi Bibi, with the object of authenticating it, are identically the same, letter for letter, as those which are found on the hibanama of 1876. They add: “The fact of these Hindi words corresponding so exactly with those on the deed of 1876, which was apparently not in Shahzadi’s possession or produced before her at the time of execution, does certainly raise the suspicion that they were not really written by her, but had been copied by some other person from the former deed.”

Now it is material to mention a circumstance which in that passage appears to have been overlooked, namely, that those words occur, not once only, but twice. They were written in the morning, and they were written again in the evening when the Sub-Registrar came over to take Shahzadi’s acknowledgment. The Sub-Registrar states that he knew Shahzadi’s voice; he states that he read the deed to her. Then he goes on to say: “I asked whether she had executed the deed of gift or not? She said that she had executed it, and it might be registered. On the back of the deed of gift I, at that time, wrote out the registration with my own hand. After that I asked the Mussumat who knew her. The Mussumat said that Nawab Ali Khan and Mannujan Khan, who are her full brothers, knew her. I then asked both of them, and they said that they knew her. After that I wrote out in the deed the identification by both. After that I pointed out to Nawab Ali Khan the place where he should sign for Shahzadi Bibi, and also the place where they should affix their own signatures. After that Mahadeo Lal, mukhtar, signed for Shahzadi Bibi by his own pen, and she also wrote: ‘You will know from what is written.’ Nawab Ali Khan and Mannujan Khan affixed their signatures. After the signature affixed by Mahadeo Lal, Shahzadi Bibi affixed her signature. I did not make any objection to what Shahzadi Bibi wrote, because on other occasions also when I had taken her admission and made registration she used to write so much and I knew that he knew to write so much." Therefore, whether the first signature—that is, the Hindi words—[697] be genuine or not, it is quite plain that these same words were added again in the evening when the Sub-Registrar went over to take Shahzadi’s acknowledgment. If the learned Judges of the High Court are right, who was the forger? None of the ladies could write. That is clear. Jehan Lal, the writer of the deed, was not present at the time; he only came up just as the Sub-Registrar was going away. The only males who, according to the evidence, saw the lady on that occasion were her brother Nawab Ali and Mannujan. Mannujan cannot write. So that the words must either have been written by Nawab Ali or by the lady herself. There is not the slightest ground to suspect Nawab Ali of any fraud or forgery, and therefore it appears to be the necessary conclusion that the words must have been written by the lady herself.

When the cloud of suspicion in which the High Court has enveloped the transaction has been cleared away, the evidence in favour of the genuineness of the deed is absolutely overwhelming. There is no evidence whatever on the other side.

There is nothing but Shahzadi’s assertion that she did not execute the deed—an assertion in which no doubt she persisted from the time she complained to the Magistrate down to the time of her death.

Their Lordships think that the Subordinate Judge was right in relying on the evidence of the Sub-Registrar and of Mahadeo Lal, the mukhtear, with whose character the Subordinate Judge also seems to have been acquainted. He says he “holds a diploma, and is a respectable person in his community, and the Court has never seen any act of his by which it can suspect him.” Mannujan broke down on cross-examination. The Subordinate Judge attributes his confusion entirely to illness, and apparently the Civil Surgeon and Assistant Civil Surgeon of the district certified to that effect. Be that as it may, their Lordships think that it would not be safe to rely on Mannujan’s evidence, except so far as it is corroborated by other witnesses and they consider that more reliance is to be placed on the fact that the signature of Shahzadi was identified by her brother Nawab Ali, who seems to have been in a superior position to Mannujan. He was a person of education, and appears to have been trusted by other [698] members of the family. The mother, Hesamut, employed him to receive for her the allowance which her husband was condemned to pay, and she says: “I was on good terms with Nawab Khan. There was no misunderstanding between us at any time, I had confidence in him.” Certainly if this deed was a forgery he must have known all about it, but what possible reason can there be to suspect him of having been a party to such a gross fraud? In their Lordships’ opinion there is none. It is not necessary to go further into the evidence. It is sufficient to say that their Lordships have come to the same conclusion as the Subordinate Judge, that the deed was really executed by Shahzadi.

Then comes the question, was the deed executed under such circumstances that it ought not to be allowed to stand? Duress and coercion may be laid out of consideration. The witnesses who spoke to anything of that kind were discredited by both Courts. But there remains the more subtle form of undue influence. Their Lordships desire not to say a word which could interfere with the settled principles on which the Court acts in considering the deeds of purdahashin ladies, or could tend to lessen the protection which it is the duty of the Court to throw around those who are unable to protect themselves. They do not forget that this lady was a purdanashin lady. They do not forget that at the time of the execution of the deed she was living in more than ordinary seclusion; that she was in very deep distress; and that she was surrounded by the members of that branch of the family to which the objects of her bounty more immediately belonged. But bearing all these things in mind, and reviewing the whole evidence, they come to the conclusion that the lady knew perfectly well what she was doing, and that in every sense the act was her own act.

Where undue influence is alleged it is necessary to examine very closely all the circumstances of the case. The principles are always the same, though the circumstances differ; and as a general rule, the same questions arise. The first and practically perhaps the most important question is, was the transaction a righteous transaction—that is, was it a thing which a right-minded person might be expected to do? Can there be [699] any doubt about the answer to that question? Shahzadi made a settlement on Omda. Omda was her favourite daughter, and had a large family. By an untoward and unlooked-for event a share of Omda’s fortune which was principally derived from that settlement devolves on Shahzadi. To her the acquisition of property by her daughter’s untimely death seems to have been an odious and repulsive thing, and she determines as soon as possible to give it back to her daughter’s orphan children. Was there anything unnatural in that? It appears to their Lordships to have been a most natural act, and one which a right-minded person would be disposed to do.

Then there comes the question—was it an improvident act? That is to say, does it show so much improvidence as to suggest the idea that the lady was not mistress of herself and not in a state of mind to weigh what she was doing? Upon that Mr. Doyne made some forcible observations. He said that by the earlier hibanamama this lady had stripped herself of all that she possessed; that she had reduced herself to penury; that then by accident a portion of the property came back to her; and he insisted that it was an improvident act on her part to divest herself immediately of that pittance when she had nothing else to live upon. Now that ease is not made by the evidence. There does not appear from first to last any complaint on the part of this lady that she was reduced to poverty. Nor was her position that of a pauper. She had a house of her own; she had servants; she comes in a dooli; so far as the evidence goes she had enough for her wants, and her wants as a widow were probably very small. It does not, therefore, appear to have been a transaction so improvident as to show that it was not her own act.

Then was it a matter requiring a legal adviser? What could have been simpler than what she desired to do? She was not apportioning her property among the members of her family; she was not determining how much she could spare; but when property came to her by this sad accident she says: “I will have none of it.” What could a legal adviser have told her? If he had advised her to wait till she left the house where Mahomed Khan was, if he had told her to place herself between two [700] fires, and allow Rubidad Khan on the one hand and Mahomed on the other to urge the claims of their respective children, she would not have benefited much by the advice.

Lastly, did the intention of making the gift originate with Shahzadi? Upon that there is positive evidence and there is negative evidence. The positive evidence is very strong, but the negative evidence appears to be stronger still. Mahadeo Lal, who was unquestionably her general mukhtear as long as she had any property to deal with, and who was employed by her to prepare this deed, says: "I went to Shahzadi Bibi at the deori for condelement, and then Shahzadi Bibi told me this: 'I had at first given my property in writing to my daughter Omda Bibi, but now owing to her death one-sixth share devolves upon me. As I have no hope of living long, I do not like to take the estate of Omda Bibi. I wish to give that share to her sons and daughter. Please write out a draft of hibanama.'" In cross-examination he says even more positively that it was her own doing, and that he prepared the hibanama by her own direction.

Then Mahamdu (sic) says this in cross-examination: "Shahzadi Bibi herself commenced to talk about the hiba. I do not recollect how many days after going to Madarpore conversation took place about the hiba.
But she had spoken of it after ten or fifteen days. Shahzadi Bibi first spoke about the hiba to me and other females. Shahzadi Bibi said: 'I had already given in writing during the lifetime of my daughter.
Now she is dead, and a share has devolved upon me. How can I snatch it from grandsons and granddaughters? The children have become motherless. I will again give them in writing.' We told her: 'It is your pleasure. You have got a share; you may do with it whatever you like.' " There is not a scrap of evidence to show that the idea was suggested to her by Mahomed Buksh Khan or any one else. And it is a circumstance not to be overlooked that Mahomed Buksh Khan did not obtain any benefit personally for himself.

But the negative evidence is still stronger. No case of undue in fluence was set up by Shahzadi. The plaint is based on forgery and forgery alone. The question of undue influence was introduced for the first time in the issues; but although it was introduced then, it was not accepted by the family. We find [701] that on the application for registration, which took place a few days after the issues were settled—the date is the 23rd March 1882—the sole averment still is that the deed was a forgery. It is somewhat singular that, although the ladies who were examined as witnesses for the defendants were the first witnesses who were examined, and they stated that Shahzadi executed the deed of her own free will and without undue influence, the ladies on the other side who came forward a month afterwards to give evidence preferred to state what both Courts have held to be absolutely untrue, namely, that they were not present at Madarpore at all—they preferred stating that to admitting that they were present and trying to make out a case of undue influence, which they must have known then would have been fatal to the deed if it could be proved.

Their Lordships therefore hold that the suggestion of undue influence is not proved.

There remains the question whether the gift was good by Maho-medan law. On that two points were made. In the first place it was said to be open to objection on the Mahomedan doctrine of mushaa, which appears to be this: that a gift of an undivided share in a subject capable of division is not good because it would lead to confusion.
But it appears to be settled by Mahomedan law that if there are two sharers of property, one may give his share to the other before division.
That seems to be established by a passage in Maenaghten's Precedents, Case XIII, which was adopted in the case to which Mr. Mayne referred of Ameena Bibi v. Zeifa Bibi (1).

(1) 3 W.R. 37.
Now, if one of two sharers may give his share to the other, supposing there are three sharers, what is there to prevent one of the three giving his share to either of the other two? Mr. Doyne was asked what confusion that would introduce. Mr. Doyne took refuge in the doctrine itself, which he said was a very refined doctrine. To extend it to this case would be a refinement on a refinement, amounting, in their Lordships' opinion, almost to arcuetio ad absurdum.

The other point was, that the gift was invalid because possession was not given. That subject was considered in a case which [702] came before this Board in 1884, Kali Das Mullick v. Kanhya Lal Pundit (1). There it is stated that the principle on which the rule rests has nothing to do with feudal rules, and that the European analogy is rather to be found in the cases relating to voluntary contracts or transfers, where, if the donor has not done all he could to perfect his contemplated gift, he cannot be compelled to do more. In this case it appears to their Lordships that the lady did all she could to perfect the contemplated gift, and that nothing more was required from her. The gift was attended with the utmost publicity, the hibamana itself authorises the donees to take possession, and it appears that in fact they did take possession. Their Lordships hold, under these circumstances, that there can be no objection to the gift on the ground that Shalzadi had not possession, and that she herself did not give possession at the time. That view seems to be supported by a passage in Maenaghten's Precedents, Case X, where the question was: If property left by two brothers devolve on the widows, "are the widows entitled to dispose of their late husband's property by gift, and if they have to dispose of their late husband's property by gift, and if they have a right to do so, is the deed of gift executed by them in favour of one of the husband's heirs available in law?" Then it is stated that, "although the widows at the time of the execution of the deed of gift were not seised of the property, yet, if agreeably to their desire, the donee, in pursuance of a judicial decree, became subsequently seised thereof, the fact of the donors having been out of possession at the time of making the gift is not sufficient to invalidate it."

Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the appeal ought to be allowed, and that the decree of the High Court ought to be reversed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty accordingly. The respondents will pay the costs of the appeal and the costs in the High Court. The deposit of 300l., which was made by the appellants, will be returned.

[703] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Chintamoni Mahapatro (Plaintiff) v. Sarup Se and Another (Defendants).* [5th July, 1888.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10—Auction-purchaser—Assignee of trustee.

An auction-purchaser acquiring trust property for valuable consideration at a sale in execution of a decree is an assignee of the trustee within the meaning of that term as used in s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and consequently a suit against such a person by a plaintiff claiming to be entitled as trustee to possession of the trust property is governed by the ordinary rules of limitation and not excluded therefrom by the provisions of s. 10.

[704] The Munsif decided the case in favour of the plaintiff and gave him a decree in the terms asked for.

He held that the suit was not barred by res judicata, as the plaintiff was not the representative of his uncle, and was not bound by the decree in that suit; that it had been proved that the property in suit was the debutter property of the idol and that the defendants purchased it with notice that it was charged with the maintenance of the idol; that consequently art. 134 of sch. II of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case, as the assignees purchased with notice of the trust, and that s. 10 of the Act saved the suit from being barred by limitation.

On appeal the decision of the Munsif was reversed by the Subordinate Judge, who without going into the merits of the case held that the suit was barred by limitation. The material portion of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was as follows:—

"In the lower Court, defendants’ pleader relied upon art. 134 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, which provides a period of 12 years from the date of the purchase, and as more than 12 years have elapsed since the date of the defendants’ purchase, it was contended that the suit had become barred. The learned Munsif overruled this contention on the strength of s. 10 of the Limitation Act; but I do not think this ruling is correct. Section 10 makes an exception in favour of assignees for valuable consideration. The Munsif says the assignees purchased the property with notice of the trust. The present Limitation Act makes no difference between purchase with notice and purchase without notice. In Act IX of 1871 we find the words ‘a purchaser in good faith for value,’ but in framing Act XV of 1877 the Legislature deliberately expunged the words ‘good faith’ (vide speech of the Honourable Mr. Stokes on the passing of the Limitation Bill).

"Respondents’ pleader, without supporting the Munsif’s argument, very ingenuously says: ‘Art. 134 has no application here.’ His argument is that when a trustee conveys trust property to a third person he commits a breach of trust, and the beneficial owner can at once sue for the property, and art. 135 applies; but when the sale is effected, not by the trustee, but [705] against his will by the Court, the person beneficially interested may wait till the purchaser takes possession, and in fact no cause of action accrues until adverse possession is taken by the purchaser. This is a good argument, but the language of art. 134 is wide enough to cover the case of an auction sale.

"Granting, however, that art. 144 governs the case, the suit must still be held to be barred. Adverse possession began from the date of the defendants taking possession, and defendant swears that he took possession within six or seven months of his purchase. There is nobody to contradict defendant, and thus it appears that defendant’s adverse possession began more than 12 years before suit. Again plaintiff says his father died in 1280. His witness Shambhu Ram says plaintiff’s father died in 1280 or 1281. Another witness of plaintiff says that when defendants took possession plaintiff’s father was either lying ill or dead. I am not satisfied that plaintiff’s father had died when defendants took adverse possession, and I cannot rely upon the loose and random statement of the witness Mohendro, who is very hostile to defendant. Plaintiff’s witness Thakur Das says that defendant is in possession since 1280 or 1281. The cause of action, therefore accrued to plaintiff’s father more that 12 years before suit. The suit therefore is barred by limitation, I do not enter into the merits at the request of the respondents’ pleader.’"

The suit accordingly being dismissed the plaintiff now preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J.—We think that the finding of the lower appellate Court to the effect that this case is not governed by s. 10 of the Limitation Act is correct. The meaning of that section, as I understand it, is to declare that as a general rule trust property shall not be subject to any law of limitation; that no length of time shall bar an action to recover such property; but that when trust property finds its way into the [706] hands of an assignee for valuable consideration, the ordinary law of limitation shall apply; that the assignee shall have the same benefit as an ordinary purchaser of property, not trust property, would have. In this case the defendant was an auction-purchaser; and the question is, whether he is an assignee within the meaning of s. 10. We think that the lower appellate Court has rightly held that an auction-purchaser is an assignee within the meaning of that section. It was suggested by the learned pleader for the appellant that the word "assigns" must be read as governed by the word "his" in the section; and that the assignee must be a direct assignee of the trustee.

I do not think we should be justified in, nor is there any authority for, giving that limited meaning to s. 10. We think that the Subordinate Judge was quite right in the view he took of s. 10.

Whether art. 134 or art. 144 applies to this case, I do not think it is necessary for us to express any opinion at all. If the Subordinate Judge is wrong in thinking that art. 134 is wide enough to cover the case of an auction sale, at any rate, it is admitted that art. 144 applies; and if art. 144 applies, the plaintiff's claim is barred, as the Subordinate Judge finds that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff's father more than 12 years before suit.

The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

A vakeel will not be heard on behalf of an appellant on second appeal when neither duly certified ground or grounds of appeal have been filed, nor the appeal been admitted by order of Court under Rules 86 and 162 of Court.

Kishen Chunder Roy v. Hurrish Chunder Bose (1) followed.

[707] This suit, which had been brought in 1882 in the Court of the Munshi at Sealdah by Oliullah against Bachu Lal Khotta for the recovery of possession of a piece of land as part of wakf property, was remanded for retrial by the High Court on 11th February 1885.

The remand order was carried out, and on the 27th August 1885 the Munshi partially decreed the suit. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decision of the Munshi, dismissing the suit with costs. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. The grounds of appeal were filed by the plaintiff in person.

Baboo Okhoy Coomar Banerjee, for the appellant.

Mr. Dunne, Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterji and Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mookerji, for the respondent.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2457 of 1887, against the decree of C. B. Garrett, Esq., Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 8th of August 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Karuna Das Bose, Munshi of Sealdah, dated the 27th of August 1885.

(1) 3 W.R. 216.
At the hearing a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent to the appearance of a vakeel for the appellant on the ground that no certified grounds of appeal had been filed on behalf of the appellant; and the case of Krishna Chunder Roy v. Hurish Chunder Bose (1) was cited in support of the objection.

The judgment of Court (Pigor and Rampini, JJ.) so far as it is material to this report, was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this appeal a preliminary objection is taken to the appearance of the learned vakeel on behalf of the appellant. The appeal was presented by the appellant in person. There is no certificate by a vakeel that there are good grounds for the appeal; and a case decided by Bayley and Phear, JJ., Krishna Chunder Roy v. Hurish Chunder Bose (1), is cited as showing that, under such circumstances, a vakeel will not be heard by this Court. Further, it appears upon enquiry by us that no order of the Court, such as is contemplated by Rule 86 and Rule 162, which refers to and keeps it in force, has been passed admitting the appeal. Under these circumstances the appeal has got on the Board without any guarantee whatever, either by a certificate from a vakeel or an order of a Judge after considering the case, that it is a proper case to be set down for hearing in second appeal, and we must wholly decline to entertain it. The case must therefore be struck out of the list.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

UPOMA KUCHAIN AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. BHOLARAM
DHUBI (Plaintiff).* [28th May, 1888.]

Hindu Law, Marriage—Sudras—Inter-marriage between persons of different sections of the Sudra caste, Validity of.

There is nothing in Hindu law prohibiting marriage between persons belonging to different sections or sub-divisions of the Sudra caste.

BHOLARAM DHUBI brought this suit against his wife Nichali Kuchain (defendant No. 2) and his mother-in-law Upoma Kuchain (defendant No. 1) for the restitution of conjugal rights. In Bysack 1290 (April-May 1882) the plaintiff was married to Nichali Kuchain in the district of Sibsagar in Assam. The plaintiff was the son of a man of the Dhubi caste by a Koch woman. Nichali’s mother, defendant No. 2, was a Keot.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2061 of 1887, against the decree of H. Lutman-Johnson, Esq., Judge of Assam Valley District, dated the 7th of July 1887, affirming the decree of Baboo Prosmono Coonar Ghose, Extra Assistant Commissioner of Golaghat, dated the 30th of June 1886.

but having lived with a Bengali she was outcasted. The plaintiff and the defendant Nichali were, however, regarded as Sudras.

The defendants resisted the suit on the grounds that there was no marriage; and that the marriage, if contracted, was invalid in law, as the contracting parties belonged to different castes.

The Court of first instance held that the marriage had been duly solemnized according to Hindu rites; and that there was no rule of law which declared marriages between persons belonging to different sections of the Sudra caste invalid. Accordingly the Court decreed the suit with costs.

The defendants appealed to the Judge of the Assam Valley District, who dismissed the appeal on the grounds that the Hindu law of marriage did not apply to keots and Kochs in Assam; and that the parties in this case had been married in as formal a manner as persons in their position in life were usually married, [709] and the defendant Nichali had given no sufficient reasons for refusing to be bound by her contract.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jogendra Nath Ghose (for Baboo Shama Churun Pal), for the appellants.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Machperson and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit by a husband against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. The parties are residents of the district of Sibsagar in Assam, where the marriage was contracted; the plaintiff is a Dhubi or washerman, and the defendant is a fisherwoman. The defence in the lower Court was, first that there was no marriage; and, secondly, that the marriage, if contracted, was invalid in law, as the contracting parties belonged to different castes.

The Munsif held, first, that the marriage had been celebrated according to the usual Hindu rites and secondly there was no rule of law which would make an intermarriage between persons belonging to different sects or sub-divisions of the Sudra caste invalid.

The case was then carried on appeal before the Judge of the Assam Valley District, who has disposed of the matter in a very summary way. He gets over the question as to the validity of the marriage by holding that the Hindu law of marriage does not apply to Kochs and Keots in Assam. He then goes on to hold that the parties in this case were married in as formal a manner as persons in their position in life are usually married. The effect of his judgment is to uphold the Munsif's finding that a proper marriage ceremony had been performed. The Judge cites no authority for holding that the Hindu law of marriage does not apply to the particular classes to which these persons belong, and if the Hindu law does not apply, it is not apparent under what law, or under what custom, this marriage was celebrated. Admittedly there is no evidence of any custom on the record; and it was the case of the plaintiff that the marriage was celebrated according to, and consistently with, Hindu law; [710] and it was the case of the defendant that, inasmuch as the Hindu law did apply, the marriage was invalid. No party for a moment contended that the Hindu law was not applicable. The Judge was, we think, not right in disposing of the matter in this extremely summary manner.
The question remains, however, whether, according to Hindu law, this was a valid marriage. It was contended on the authority of a judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter in the case of Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (1) that marriage between two persons belonging to different sub-divisions of the Sudra caste is invalid. But that, we think, amounted to no more than an expression of opinion. The opinion of Mr. Justice Mitter was dissented from by Mr. Justice Markby, and the case was not decided on that ground. We further think that the opinion there expressed is inconsistent with the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Inderun Valungypooly Taver v. Ramaswamy Talaver (2). The question there was whether the plaintiff, being illegitimate, and therefore as it was argued, of no caste at all, could contract a legal marriage with a person of the Sudra caste, and their Lordships said: "Their Lordships are not aware that there is any authority—there has been none quoted, and it does not appear that there is any authority supporting any such proposition as that which is contended for by the Pundits; and though their Lordships do not agree in everything that has been stated in the High Court of appeal, they are satisfied that in the Sudra caste illegitimate children may inherit and have a right to maintenance; and that in this very instance the illegitimate father of the mother of the plaintiff, as well as his daughter, were treated as members of the family; and, on the whole, seeing that these parties are both of the Sudra caste, and that the utmost that has been alleged really is that the semindar was of one part of the Sudra caste, and the lady to whom he was married was of another part, or of a sub-caste, their Lordships hold the marriage to have been valid; to hold the contrary would in fact be introducing a new rule, and a rule, which ought not to be countenanced.

[711] The same view was taken in the case of Ramamani Ammal v. Kulantha Natchiar (3). There a similar objection having been taken, their Lordships said (p. 352): "On the argument of this appeal this objection was not insisted on; it was conceded on both sides that recent decisions had declared the legality of a marriage between persons of these two sub-classes of the Sudra caste."

We think that those decisions are conclusive as to there being no rule of law rendering such marriages invalid. It is true that the cases referred to were cases from the Madras Presidency; but it has not been shown to us that in this respect any principle of Hindu Law followed in that Presidency is inapplicable to the Presidency of Bengal; nor has any case or any authority from ancient writers been cited to show that such marriages are invalid. Mr. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law treats such marriages as obsolete; and most probably they are so in the more advanced parts of Bengal, in which castes have become sub-divided in such a way that the sub-divisions are regarded as distinct castes in themselves. But the facts that these marriages are not resorted to is no ground for holding that they are invalid according to law. Our attention was also called to another case—an unreported one—(Reg. Ap., 274 and 322 of 1886), which came before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy. In that case it was not necessary to decide the precise point which is now before us, but both the learned Judges intimated very distinctly their opinion that, if it were necessary to dissent from the opinion of Mr. Justice

DHIKU AND ANOTHER (Complainants) v. DEO NATH DEB ALIAS DINU AND ANOTHER (Accused).* [18th May, 1888.]

Appeal in Criminal case—Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 22—Illegal seizure of cattle.

No appeal lies from an order under s. 22 of Act I of 1871, awarding compensation for illegal seizure of cattle.

Queen-Empress v. Raja Lakshma (1) followed (2).

[F., 19 M. 238.]

The accused were charged in this case with the wrongful seizure of some cattle belonging to the complainants, and under s. 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871) were fined by the Honorary Magistrate of Sylhet—Denumath, Rs. 20 and Bogra Rs. 15, which fines were ordered to be paid to the complainants as compensation.

The accused appealed to the Deputy Commissioner, by whom the finding and sentence of the Magistrate were set aside.

The case was submitted by the Sessions Judge of Sylhet to the High Court under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that the order of the Deputy Commissioner had been made without jurisdiction, as he had no power to entertain the appeal. The Judge referred to the case of Queen-Empress v. Raja Lakshma (1), in which it was held that no appeal lay in such a case.

No one appeared on the reference.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Tottenham, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We think that the ruling of the High Court of Bombay in Queen-Empress v. Raja Lakshma (1), to which the Sessions Judge refers, is one that should be followed, and that no appeal lay to the Deputy Commissioner. We set aside his order and direct that the order of the first Court be restored.

Biswa Nath Shah (Plaintiff) v. Naba Kumar Chowdhary (Defendant).* [29th June, 1888.]

Small Cause Court (Provincial), jurisdiction of—Provincial Small Cause Court Act (I X of 1887), sch. II, arts. 2, 41, 42 and 44—Suit for costs paid by one of two persons jointly liable.

N. C. granted a lease of three plots of land to B.S. The heirs of the former lessee brought a suit against N.C. and B.S. to recover possession of the same three plots of land. The suit was decreed with costs; and the costs, amounting to Rs. 80 and annas 5, were recovered from B.S. alone. Thereupon B.S. brought this suit against N.C. in the Court of Small Causes at Pubna for the recovery of that amount.

Held, that the suit was one which did not come under arts. 2, 41, 42 or 44 of sch. II, Act IX of 1887, and was cognizable by the Small Cause Court.

Reference under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Pubna.

Biswa Nath Shah (the plaintiff) brought this suit to recover from Naba Kumar Chowdhary (the defendant) the sum of Rs. 80 and annas 5, the amount of costs, awarded against Biswa Nath and Naba Kumar in a previous suit (in which they were defendants), but recovered from Biswa Nath alone.

It appears that the defendant had granted to the plaintiff a lease to three ryoti holdings which were situated in the defendant's putni taluk.

The heirs of a former lessee brought a suit against the plaintiff and the defendant for the recovery of possession of the three holdings. They obtained a decree, and recovered the whole amount of the costs from the plaintiff alone.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had induced him to take a lease of the holding through misrepresentation; that he had persuaded the heirs of the former lessee to bring the above suit, and had given evidence in their favour at the trial.

The plaintiff further alleged that, at the instigation of the defendant the whole amount of the costs had been recovered by [714] distress and sale from the plaintiff; and contended that it was recoverable from the defendant on equitable grounds.

The defendant, on the other hand, contended that the plaintiff had no cause of action in respect of the whole amount claimed, and even assuming that he had, the suit being one for contribution, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try it.

The Judge dismissed the suit, contingent on the opinion of the High Court on the questions, assuming the suit to be one for contribution: (1) whether it came within the scope of sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, and (2) whether, having regarded to art. 2 of that schedule, it was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes.

No one appeared on the reference.

* Civil Reference No. 10-A of 1888 made by Baboo Bulloram Mullick, Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Pubna, dated the 19th of April 1888.
The opinion of the Court (Macpherson and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:

OPINION.

We are of opinion that art. 2 of the second schedule of Act IX of 1887 (Provincial Small Cause Courts Act) has no application to the present case, and that the suits for contribution which the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try are those specified in arts. 41 and 42, or which might come under art. 44. The present case does not come under any of these articles. We think, therefore, the Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to deal with the case, and we set aside the order of the Judge, and direct him to proceed with it.

Hira Lal Das for Self and as Executor for his Minor Brother, Kanai Lal Das (Plaintiff) v. Mothura Mohun Roy Chowdhry and Others (Defendants).* [9th July, 1888.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 53—Established usage, meaning of.

The words "established usage" in s. 53 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, do not refer to a practice previously prevailing between the landlord [715] and his tenant, but to the established usage of the pargannah in which the holding is situate.

[F., 21 C. 132 (134); R., 7 C.W.N. 687 (689).]

Suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in kists.

Hira Lal Das brought a suit in the Court of the Third Munsif of Perozepore, on behalf of himself and as guardian of his minor brother Kanai Lal Das, against Mothura Mohun Roy Chowdhry and seven others for the recovery of arrears of rent, road and public works cesses, due for the first or Assar kist of the year 1293 B.S. (1886) in respect of a taluk held by the defendants under the plaintiffs' zemindari.

The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants held the land under a gurbundobasti kobala jumma payable by four kists or instalments, viz., Assar, Assin, Pous and Cheit; and that the Assar kist for 1293 (June 1886) was due from the defendants, which they refused to pay. The plaintiffs contended that by s. 53 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, rent was payable in four kists in the absence of usage which made it payable in more or less than four instalments. On the other hand, the defendants, none of whom filed a written statement, contended that the suit was not maintainable on the ground that by the established usage of the pargannah, as contemplated by s. 53, rent was payable not in kists, but at the end of the year. They adduced evidence in support of the usage; and also relied on the judgment and decree in a previous suit for rent in respect of the same taluk between the plaintiffs and defendants, in which the Court had held that rent was payable annually.

The Munsif was of opinion that s. 53 of the Bengal Tenancy Act made rent payable in four equal instalments, except when there was an agreement or established usage by which it was payable in more or less than four instalments, but that in no case could the rent be payable annually. He held that the defendants had failed to prove the usage they relied upon, and that the rent was payable in four kists; and decreed the suit accordingly.

On appeal by the defendants the decision of the Munsif was reversed by the Subordinate Judge, who held that s. 53 provided that money rent was payable in four equal instalments in the absence of agreement or established usage of payment at the end of the year. He also held the decree in the previous suit [716] to be "conclusive evidence of agreement or established usage between the parties that the defendants are to pay rent at the end of the year and by kists." He therefore decreed the appeal.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. M. Das and Baboo Rajendra Nath Bose, for the appellant.

Baboo Bhubon Mohan Das, for the respondents.

Mr. Das.—Under the new Rent Act (s. 53, Act VIII of 1885) money rent is payable by a tenant in four equal instalments unless there be an agreement or established usage to the contrary. Under the old Rent Act (s. 21. Bengal Act VIII of 1869), in the absence of any agreement or established usage, the rent was payable annually. The onus, therefore, is now thrown on the tenant to prove by agreement or established usage that he is liable to pay rent not by four equal instalments, but annually. The Judge has wrongly held the decree in the previous suit to be "conclusive evidence of agreement or established usage." He is also wrong in his interpretation of the words "established usage." As to the right meaning of those words see Chytnuno Chunder Roy v. Kadar Nath Roy (1).

Baboo Bhubon Mohan Das submitted, on behalf of the respondents, that the decree in the former suit precluded the appellants from recovering the rent in kists.

The judgment of the Court (Pigot and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

We think the judgment of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and the appeal allowed. The Subordinate Judge treats the decision between the parties in the former suit, whereby an annual kist was decreed, as conclusive evidence of agreement or established usage between the parties. We think he has made two mistakes. That decree is not any evidence whatever of agreement between the parties. There was a dispute between them as to the time at which the rent was payable, and a decree was made in accordance with the law existing at the time ordering payment of rent [717] yearly. This negatives, so far as it has any effect, such inference as might be drawn as to the existence of an agreement from the fact of yearly payments, as it explains them. Secondly, the Subordinate Judge refers to established usage between the parties, plainly treating that as within the scope of s. 53 and using the words "between the parties" as if they were in s. 53. That might be an useful addition to the Act, but the words are not there, and the words "established usage" in that section refer not to a practice previously prevailing between the parties, but to the established usage of the pergunnah in which the property is situated. The decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the Munsif restored with costs throughout. This decision will apply to appeals Nos. 2257 and 2258 of 1887.

(1) 14 W.R. 99.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:

Lord Hobhouse, Lord Macnaughten, Sir B. Peacock and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

BHAGBUT PERSHAD SINGH AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. GIRJA KOER AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs.) [15th February, 1888.]

Hindu Law, Alienation—Sale of joint family estate in execution of decree upon the father's debt—Exoneration of son's share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.

The sons in a joint family, under the Mitakshara, cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose.

The son's position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt.

A decree against indebted fathers, in a family consisting of fathers and sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title and interest of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale, notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint.

[718] Held, in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was not necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper inquiry as to the purpose of the loan, or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities.

Appeal from a decree (21st June 1883) of the High Court affirming a decree (8th June 1891) of the Subordinate Judge of Patna.
The appellants were the sons and representatives of Punn Singh, deceased, against whom this suit was brought, he having in his lifetime purchased, at several sales in execution of decrees against the respondents' fathers, the family estate in which the respondents now claimed their shares. This family estate was a five-anna four-pie share of mouzah Bazidpur Dhanki, in the Patna district. The question raised by this appeal was whether, after the sales of this estate in execution, the interests of the sons of the judgment-debtors could be recovered from the purchaser in consequence of the nature of the debts.

Under successive sales in 1879 fractional parts of the family share in Bazidpur Dhanki were sold in execution of decrees obtained by different creditors against three brothers living jointly, each with their families in the same coparcenary, viz., Jhaller Singh, Pertab Narain Singh, and Rughurudyal Singh, the sons of Sumbhu Dut Singh. Three sons of each of the above three brothers, some of the sons being minors, now represented by their respective mothers, sued Punn Singh, the purchaser of the share in Bazidpur Dhanki, to obtain a decree for their interests, inherited under the Mitakshara, in the family estate. They joined as co-defendants with the purchaser their three several fathers, and the wives, besides claiming as guardians of the minor sons, claimed their own interests also.

The plaintiff alleged that the income of the ancestral estate was sufficient for the family, and that there was no necessity for the loans contracted by the fathers; but that the latter by dissipation and extravagance wasted the income, and had taken loans on the security of the ancestral estate, the mahajuns having lent without due inquiry. It also stated that the order [719] issued for possession, on the application of Punn Singh, was only in respect of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors, the fathers, but that he had taken possession of the entire share of five annas and four pies in Bazidpur Dhanki, and the claim was that "in case the purchase of defendant No. 1, Punn Singh, in respect of the rights and interests of the fathers should be held valid, then that the plaintiffs might be put into possession of their legal shares by partition, and that mesne profits and interest might be awarded."

In his written statement Punn Singh alleged that the loans were taken for necessary expenses and the payment of former debts, the maintenance and education of the minors, and expenditure in suits. Of these loans the plaintiffs had derived the benefit, some of them, moreover, not having been born at the time when the family "became involved in debt."

At the same time that they instituted this suit (30th September 1880) the plaintiffs brought another against other purchasers of portions of the joint family estate at other sales.

The Subordinate Judge tried the two suits together, and dealing with the issues in both, which raised the question of the nature of the fathers' debts, he found that the plaintiffs had not proved that "the monies which were borrowed were applied specially for licentious purposes." At the same time he found that the defendants had failed to prove that there was any necessity for the loans, or that the defendants had inquired into the necessity of them "to such an extent as a cautious man would have inquired." He also found that five of the plaintiffs had not been born until after the date of the decree. Having rejected the claims of the latter, the Subordinate Judge held that the others were entitled to decrees for their shares, "not having been parties to the suit in which the auction sale had taken place, and thus having been unable to protect their rights."

He accordingly made the order for the division of the ancestral estate as set forth in their Lordships' judgment.

In both suits the purchasers of the family estate appealed to the High Court, of which a Divisional Bench, Mitter and Wilkinson, JJ., gave judgment in both appeals, referring in the judgment in this case to what was applicable in [720] the judgment delivered in the other. The view taken by the Judges of the facts was that on the one hand the defendants had not proved that the monies borrowed were required for family necessities, and on the other, that the plaintiffs had not established that they were applied to immoral purposes, though the conduct of the three brothers had been shown to have been immoral.

They referred to Deen Dayal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (1), and held the plaintiffs entitled to the decree as made by the Subordinate Judge, the purchaser having bought with knowledge of their claim. They therefore affirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

On this appeal,—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, contended that the purchaser at the execution sale was entitled to the entire share in the village as sold and certified to have been sold. The Courts below had concurred in finding that the debts in satisfaction of which the family estate had been sold had not been incurred, or shown to have been contracted, for immoral purposes. The purchaser was not bound to look behind the decree under which the sale took place, nor to prove any necessity for the loans, nor that inquiries had been made by the creditors before making them. He referred to Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhum Mohun (2); Hanuman Pershad Panday v. Baboo Munraj Koer (3); Girdhari Lal v. Kantoo Lal (4); Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (5).

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court in a suit brought by the widows of Baboo Jhaller Singh, Baboo Pertab Naran Singh, and Baboo Roghuburdyal Singh, on behalf of themselves and the infant children of their respective husbands, to recover possession of property which had been [721] purchased by the first defendant, Baboo Punnu Singh, under certain orders made in execution against the three husbands. The property which was the subject of this suit, namely, a five annas four pies share of Bazidpur Dhanki, was ancestral property governed by the Mitakshara. The husbands by four bonds had charged the five annas four pies share with certain debts. One of those bonds was given by one of the husbands alone, namely, Jhaller. The decree under which the first sale in execution took place was on a judgment upon a bond given by the three husbands to secure a certain sum of money lent to them, and by which they charged by way of mortgage, as security for the amount lent, the five annas four pies share. They were sued, not only to recover the money out of their general assets, but in the first place to have it realized out of the five annas four pies share. The decree was that the money should be recovered out of the property charged, and the five annas four pies share was attached in execution of the decree, and was sold in execution. The sale was confirmed by the Court, and the confirmation recites that the action had been brought for the recovery of a certain amount, and "as the right and interest of Baboo Jhaller Singh, and Baboo Pertab Narain Singh, and Roghuburdayal Singh, judgment-debtors, in the aforesaid land, or immovable property, were sold on the 6th October 1879, in execution of this decree through the bailiff of the Court of the Judge of Patna, and as seven days have elapsed and no objection is filed, it is ordered that the said auction sale be confirmed, and the said sale is confirmed by this order." Then at the foot of the certificate of confirmation the property is stated to be the five annas four pies share of the mouzah Bazidpur Dhausi, so that there can be no doubt that by the bond under which the sale took place that property was charged; the debt was decreed to be recovered out of the property; the property was attached; the property was sold, and the sale was confirmed as to the property itself. Therefore it was not a mere sale of the right, title, and interest of the debtors: It was the sale of the property being the right, title, and interest of the debtors.

The suit was brought by the widows on behalf of themselves and the children to set aside the sale entirely; and they also [722] prayed that possession might be awarded in respect of the whole five annas four pies share; and secondly: "In case the purchase of defendant No. 1,"—that is, the purchase of Punnu—"in respect of the right and interest of defendants Nos. 3 to 5 (that is, the three husbands), be held valid, then your petitioners might be put in possession of their legal share by partition."

The case was tried by the Subordinate Judge, and he gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the shares to which he considered the claimants would be entitled if a partition had been made. His judgment is in the Record, and his order is: "That the case of the plaintiffs be decided with this detail that the claim of five of the plaintiffs" naming them—"be dismissed with costs." Those were five of the children who were not in existence when the bonds were executed. There is no appeal on the part of those children with regard to the dismissal of their claim. Then upon the claim of the widows and the other children he ordered that the property "be divided into fifteen shams,"—which means fifteen shares,—"of which twelve shams be declared to be the property of the plaintiffs and three of Ghaller, Pertab, and Roghubur that each of the plaintiffs mentioned above do get possession of one shan, and the remaining shares, that is to say, the shares of the three husbands, remain in the possession of the defendants."

Upon that there was an appeal to the High Court, and the Court gave their judgment on the 21st of June 1883. For their reasons they referred to a judgment they had given in another suit. The effect of the judgment was that although the defendants had failed to prove that the loans in respect of which the bonds were executed were required for family necessities, still the plaintiffs had equally failed to establish that they were "applied to immoral purposes;" that the lenders did not make any proper enquiry which a prudent lender would make to satisfy himself as to the necessity of the loans. As to the evidence of immoral and extravagant conduct of the husbands, the High Court said: "Although the witnesses examined by the plaintiffs give a somewhat exaggerated account of it, yet we are on the whole satisfied that these persons were leading a life of debauchery and sensuality; and if the lenders had made proper [723] inquiry they would have found that the necessities of the loan arose from their improper and immoral way of life. The lower Court seems also to be of this opinion. The Subordinate Judge in one portion of his judgment says: 'The more bad conduct of Jhaller, Pertab, and Raghubur is not sufficient to resume the property.' But the lower Court thinks that the evidence adduced is not sufficient to establish that the amounts borrowed under the aforesaid bonds were actually applied to immoral purposes. In this opinion we also concur.' It, therefore appears that the High Court thought that, although the bonds were not proved to have been given for monies advanced for improper purposes, still the lenders of the money who had sued and recovered their judgments had not made proper inquiries to ascertain whether there was an actual necessity for the loans. But it must be borne in mind that this was not a case of a joint family consisting of brothers, but it was one consisting of fathers and children; and it has been held that sons are liable to pay the debts of their fathers, unless incurred for immoral or illegal purposes.

That principle was laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheopershad Sing (1), where a ruling of Chief Justice Westropp (2) was referred to with approbation, in which he said; 'Subject to certain limited exceptions (as, for instance, debts contracted for immoral or illegal purposes) the whole of the family undivided estate would be, when in the hands of the sons or grandsons, liable to the debts of the father and grandfather.' Colebrooke’s Dig., Book I, cap. I, par. 167, and Girdhari Lal v. Kanto Lal (3) were cited as authorities for the proposition, and in a subsequent part of their Lordships’ judgment the decision in the case of Kantoo Lal is summed up in the words following: ‘This case then, which is a decision of this tribunal, is undoubtedly an authority for these propositions: First, that where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or [724] under a sale in execution of a decree for the father’s debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father’s debt, cannot recover that property unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted.’

Now, although at the time of the sale notice was given on behalf of the children that the property was joint ancestral property, and that the fathers had no right to mortgage it, still the question arises whether, under the exception of the decree under which the property was ordered to be attached, it was for the purchaser to show that there was a necessity for the loan, or whether it was not necessary for those who claimed on behalf of the children to show that the debt was contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. If it was necessary to show that the debt was so contracted, the plaintiffs failed to prove the fact, and that is so found by the High Court. It appears to their Lordships that according to the decision in the case of Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo persad Singh (1) it was necessary for the plaintiffs to show that the debt was contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose.

In the case of Nanomi Babuasin v. Madun Mohun (1) the principle laid down in the previous case was adopted; and at page 17, L. R., 13 I A., in the judgment of their Lordships, it is said: "Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent co-parenary rights in the sons, the decisions have, for some time, established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father’s alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors’ remedies for their debts if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate their Lordships think that there is no conflict of authority." It appears, therefore, from the decisions that now in a case like the present, where sons claim against a purchaser of an ancestral estate under an execution against their father upon a debt contracted by him, it is necessary for the sons to prove that the debt was contracted for an immoral purpose, and it is not necessary for the creditors to show that there was a proper inquiry, or to prove that the money was borrowed in a case of necessity.

[725] Under these circumstances their Lordships think that the judgment of the High Court was an erroneous one, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty that that judgment and the judgment of the Subordinate Court, in so far as it was adverse to the appellants, should be reversed, and that the suit be dismissed with costs in both those Courts. The respondent will pay the costs of this appeal.

INDAR KUNWAR AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. JAIPAL KUNWAR (Plaintiff). [20th, 24th, 25th, 26th, January and 10th March, 1888.]

Will, Contraction of—Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 13 and 22—Unregistered will of talukdar—Meaning of "Maharani Sahiba" as applied to wife or wives—Decree for maintenance to widow under the will on which her suit was based, though her claim was for a different relief—Costs.

A talukdar, who died childless, but leaving two widows, bequeathed, by an unregistered will, to the "Maharani Sahiba" his entire estate, and gave a power to the same to adopt a son to him; also providing maintenance for both his widows after such adoption.

Held, that to determine whether the will referred, in such bequest and power, only to the elder or to both of the testator’s wives, extrinsic evidence of his intention was not admissible; but that the true construction was that which would indicate a reasonable and probable intention consistent with his views, as evidenced by his conduct, and his will generally. Abbott v. Middleton (1) referred to and followed.

As his views appeared to favour single heirship, and the whole state of things, as well as the language of the will, pointed to the owner of the estate being one, and the donee of the power to adopt being one: Held, that accordingly the words "Maharanii Sahiba" were not here used as a collective term for both widows, but signified only the elder, although, when qualified, as they were in another part of the will, they might include both.

[726] Held, also, that as, if there had been no will, the junior widow would have succeeded to an estate expectant on the determination of the life-estate of the senior, but subject to be defeated by an adoption by the latter, this was an interest bringing her within the meaning of s. 13, para. 1 of Act I of 1860; so that maintenance bequeathed to her by the will was payable, notwithstanding its not having been registered (as that section required in other cases) as well out of the talukdari as out of the non-talukdari estate of the testator.

Held, also, that this had been rightly decreed to her, as she had sued upon the will, although her direct claim in her plaint was not for this, but to share the estate equally with the senior widow, a claim which was dismissed. Held also, that the difficulty of construction having been caused by the testator himself, and in regard to the circumstances and position of the parties, costs would come out of the estate.

Three appeals and a cross-appeal, consolidated and heard as one, from a decree (27th March 1886) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree (3rd October 1884) of the District Judge of Fyzabad.

These appeals arose out of a suit (3rd December 1883) relating to the will of the late Maharaja Sir Digbijai Singh, k.c.s.i., talukdar of Balrampur, who died on the 27th May 1882, leaving two widows, of whom the senior adopted a son to him in 1883. This suit was brought by the junior widow, now respondent in appeals preferred by the defendants, against the senior widow and adopted son, claiming joint proprietary possession of a moiety of the late Maharaja’s moveable and immovable estate under his will, which was not registered within the thirteenth section of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, governing so much of the testator’s estate as was talukdari. The principal questions of these appeals were: (1) the effect of ss. 13 and 22 of the above Act in regard to the junior widow’s taking any benefit under a will not registered as the Act required; and (2) the construction of the will in regard to the use of the words ‘‘Maharanii Sahiba,” viz., whether by them the late Maharaja indicated the junior widow, as included in that expression, or the senior widow alone. The Courts below differed as to the latter question, the first Court holding that the junior widow had no right to more than the maintenance allowance given her by the will, while the Judicial Commissioner held that her right to the beneficial enjoyment of her husband’s estate was equal to that [727] of the senior widow. When leave to appeal to Her Majesty was granted an order was made in execution by the Judicial Commissioner (22nd June 1886), which came before their Lordships in Maharani Indar Kunwar v. Maharani Jaipal Kunwar (2).

The late Maharaja, whose property, on account of his loyalty as talukdar of Balrampur, was exempted from the confiscation of March 1858, caused his name to be entered in lists II and V (3) of the lists prepared in accordance with s. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, and it so remained during his life. He married his senior wife, Maharani Indar Kunwar, in 1860, and the Maharani Jaipal Kunwar, his second wife, in 1877; but had no issue.

(3) List II is of the talukdars whose estates, according to the custom of the family, on or before the 13th day of February 1856, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir.

The Maharaja's will on the 15th March 1878 was executed and attested in the manner prescribed by s. 19 of Act I of 1869, more than three months before his death, and was deposited in the Registration Office of Lucknow, under s. 42 of the Registration Act, III of 1877. This deposit was made under the belief that it was a registration within the meaning of Act I of 1869, s. 13 (1). The will was written in the Hindi character, by a servant, Ram Shunker, deceased in 1882, in the same year as the Maharaja. The will, as translated by the Judicial Commissioner, omitting the preamble, and certain charitable and religious bequests, was as follows:—

"At this time, that is to say up to the date of the writing of this document, I have no issue by my Khas Mahal; but by the mercy of Almighty God, I am not yet without hope. If, by the favour of Almighty God, issue should be born of my Khas Mahal, whether it be of the senior or of the junior Maharani Sahiba, then let it be owner of the entire riasat and of all the property, moveable and immovable, like myself, without the writing of any will. Perchance at some time I may lose hope of issue by my Khas Mahal; then in that case I have power to adopt whom I please; and having executed a deed in due form I will cause it to be verified by the Government, and let that adopted son, as if he were an actual son, be the owner after me of the entire riasat like myself; provided that after the adoption no issue be born of my Khas Mahal, for in that case let the issue of my Khas Mahal be considered the owner of the riasat and of all the assets, moveable and immovable, and let the adopted son have nothing to do with it, only let that adopted son be held entitled to receive food and raiment by way of maintenance during his life; and let not the amount of this maintenance exceed six thousand (6,000) rupees yearly. Should I have no issue by my Khas Mahal and in my lifetime find no opportunity to adopt, then in that case, without aliening moveable assets, let the Maharani Sahiba after me be during her lifetime the owner of the entire riasat and of the property moveable and immovable. There is to the Maharani Sahiba full authority to select, and within two years to adopt according to the custom of the family, and according to the Hindu law, such minor male child of my family as they may think fit. Should (God forbid) the said adopted son die in his minority, then again there is authority to the Maharani Sahiba to make a second adoption

List V is of the grantees to whom sanads or grants have been or may be given or made by the British Government, up to the date fixed for the closing of such list, declaring that the succession to the estates comprised in such sanads or grants shall thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture.

(1) Act I of 1869, s. 13, provides that "no talukdar or grantee, and no heir or legatee of a talukdar or grantee, shall have power to give or bequeath his estate, or any portion thereof, or any interest therein, to any person not being either (a) a person who, under the provision of this Act, or under the ordinary law to which person of the donor's or testator's tribe and religion are subject, would have succeeded to such estate, or to a portion thereof, or to an interest therein, if such talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee, had died intestate; or (b) a younger son of the talukdar or grantee, heir or legatee, in case the name of such talukdar or grantee appears in the third or fifth of the lists mentioned in s. 8, except by an instrument of gift, or a will executed and attested not less than three months before the death of the donor or testator, in manner herein provided in the case of a gift or will, as the case may be, and registered within one month from the date of its execution."
according to the above conditions; and let that adopted son be, in place of an actual son, the owner of the entire riasat and the assets, moveable and immovable, seated on the throne like myself. No one else can have any sort of claim; but may Government have a care that in accordance with the above detail and decision, a son be adopted by the Maharani Sahiba within two years. Should, peradventure, the Maharani Sahiba die without adopting any son, or should that adopted son die in his minority, or without issue and intestate, then in that case let that person of my family be owner of my riasat and of all and several moveable and immovable property, who may be lawfully held entitled according to the custom of the riasat. It will be proper for Government, during the minority of the heir, to manage, as Court of Wards, all the assets of the riasat, with such advice and arrangement that the opinion of the District Officer and the Maharani Sahiba and some Agent who is fit and a well-wisher of the riasat be associated therewith in order that the settlement of the riasat and welfare of the ryots may prosper. Let the minor heir be well educated and let the necessary expenses of the riasat be met as may on occasion be expedient. Besides the expenses of the riasat let the two Maharani Sahiba receive for their personal expenses form the money of the riasat according to the subjoined detail—fifty, five thousand rupees a year and let the two Maharani Sahiba spend this as each may please. This is the detail—the Bari Maharani Sahiba thirty thousand (30,000) rupees, and the Choti Maharani Sahiba twenty-five thousand (25,000) rupees. Let the rest of the cash assets, and the moveable property, remain in the treasury of the riasat, under the care of the Guardian of the Court of Wards; and on the heir attaining his majority let him make over to the said heir all the cash assets of the riasat, and the property, moveable and immovable, and let that heir be like myself, the owner of the entire riasat, seated on the throne. It will be proper for my representatives to maintain for ever according to the instructions, and to provide according to the subjoined detail for such expenditure as is prescribed, on account of the alms-house, and dispensary and school, and worship at the Shrine of Bijulipur, and the marriage of maidens of the Janwar lineage, and may Government always take care that this endowment subsists; let it never be discontinued.'

The parties accepted this translation as correct, except where the words "their" and "they" appear. The senior widow contended in her appeal that they should have been "her" and "she" only. After the death of the Maharaja the senior widow obtained an order for "dakhil kharj," or mutation of names, in the Revenue Register at the Collectorate, in her favour, as being entitled to the property under the will. She obtained a certificate also under Act XXVII of 1860 to collect the debts. And on the 8th November 1888 she publicly adopted the minor Udit Narain Singh, the son of Guman Singh, who already, on the previous 26th October, had executed a deed by which he made a gift of his son for the purpose of his being so adopted under s. 22, cl. 8 of Act I of 1869. By that deed Guman agreed that the senior widow should retain control of the estate, and should have the power, if need should arise, of ejecting his son, and of adopting some one else in his place.

On the 5th December 1888 the senior widow executed a deed acknowledging the adoption, and registered it. It stated: "The said adopted son will be the proprietor of the said estate [730] and property both moveable and immovable, like a real son." On the 28th March however she executed another document stating that the adopted son would only succeed to the Bulrampur estate after her death; and on the 8th April 1884, Guman Singh executed a deed acknowledging that what was stated in the last document, in regard to the succession, was correct.

Meanwhile, the junior widow filed her plaint, stating that her husband held bequeathed to his wives, both of them, the proprietary right for life in the entire estate, giving permission to them both to adopt; that, therefore, the adoption was illegal; and that the plaintiff was entitled to (a) partition of the moveables into two equal shares, and delivery to herself of one share; (b) joint proprietary possession in equal shares of the immovable property; and (c) mesne profits of the latter share from the date of the Maharaja’s death. The written statement of the senior widow relied on the non-registration of the will, and an exclusive bequest to herself. She alleged that the power to adopt was to her alone, the Maharaja having, as he was competent to do in regard to the general estate, barred the operation of the ordinary Hindu law by his will; and that under the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869 the plaintiff could not claim to inherit any part of the taluqdari. The defendant Udit Narain Singh, through his guardian ad litem the other defendant, repeated the above defence, adding that, even if the action of the late Maharaja in barring the operation of the ordinary Hindu law could be disregarded, still the plaintiff’s claim, so far as it was based upon Hindu law, must fail by reason of the fact that by the immemorial custom of the family none of the family property was partible; also that the plaintiff was not competent to challenge the validity of his—Udit Narain Singh’s—adoption, nor could his status, or his rights to the property, be matter for adjudication in this suit; and that he had been validly adopted.

The District Judge fixed issues raising the main questions, whether the junior widow was entitled to the moiety claimed by her upon the construction of the will and in regard to non-registration, and also whether the adoption of Udit Narain by the senior widow was invalid on account of its having been effected by her alone.

[731] In his judgment he stated that it was admitted by both parties, and accorded with the decision in Abdul Razzaq v. Amir Haidar (1), that the will had not been registered as s. 13 required, the mere deposit at the registration office not having been sufficient. In regard to the effect of non-registration he held that the junior Maharani was a person who would have succeeded to an interest in the Maharaja’s estate if he had died intestate, referring also on this point to the last mentioned case, and to Ajudhia Baksh v. Rukmin Kunwar (2). Going through the will, he remarked that the testator appeared to have sought to render it easy of construction, and that it was not going too far to say that if he had directed the servant, Ram Shunker, to write of the senior widow as “Bari Maharani,” this suit would not have been occasioned by the parties attempting to establish their own meaning for the words “Maharani Sahiba.”

As to the meaning of those words, he had regard to the ordinary notions of Hindus in respect of the following, viz., that the widow is considered half of the husband bodily; that if he dies, leaving more than one widow, they share his property, though it is considered as vesting in one individual; and that, in the Sanskrit texts, widows are spoken of, in the singular number, as one person. He referred to Macnaghten’s Hindu

(1) 11 I.A. 121=10 C. 976.
(2) 11 I.A. 1=10 C. 482.
Law, Chap. II, Inheritance; Viramitrodaya, Chap. III, part 1; Colebrooke's Dayabhaga, Chap. XI. But he was of opinion that other considerations outweighed the effect of these. Admitting extrinsic evidence to remove what he considered to be a latent ambiguity, there being two persons, in fact, to whom the description applied, he held that it applied to the senior widow alone.

He accordingly decreed to the junior widow the annuity of Rs. 25,000 from the date of the adoption, and dismissed the residue of her claim against both defendants.

An appeal to the Judicial Commissioner against this judgment and decree was made by both parties, the appeal of the senior Maharani and of the adopted son Udit Narain being limited to [732] the award of the annuity which they contended had not been asked for by the respondent in the suit, and if asked for could not have been granted to her by reason of ss. 13 and 24 of Act I of 1869.

On the 30th June 1885 the Judicial Commissioner, under s. 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure, remitted the case for the trial of certain additional issues which he thought necessary, directing the District Judge to take such further evidence as might be required, and he allowed the junior widow to be heard in support of her claim as based upon Hindu law.

These issues, in effect, were as to what part of the property in suit was governed by the provisions of Act I of 1869; whether the claim had reference to Hindu law; and whether the rights of the adopted son could be disposed of in this suit.

The District Judge returned a statement of the talukdari estate, and a further judgment that the claim was governed by family custom and by the will, with reference to the provisions of Act I of 1869; and that the rights of the adopted son could not be determined in this suit, they existing both as against the senior and the junior widow, the latter being only competent to dispute the validity of the adoption so far as to show that it was not in accordance with the will.

The above judgment and decree were reversed by the Judicial Commissioner, who found that the Maharaja, when he used the words "Maharani Sahiba" in his will, used them as a Hindu would use them in the general sense of the word "wife," and as including both his wives. It appeared to the Judicial Commissioner that the only contingency on which the junior widow would become entitled to the allowance of Rs. 25,000 was the Government's complying with the Maharaja's wish that it should take over the management of the estate on the adoption of a son.

After giving the meaning of "Maharani," the judgment continued thus:—"In the opening of the third part of the will the change from Khas Mahal Maharani Sahiba comes in, and from the way in which it is made it is plain that the Maharaja uses the words as an Englishman would have used the words 'my widow.' Should I have no issue by my [733] Khas Mahal, and in my lifetime find no opportunity to adopt, then in that case . . . let the Maharani Sahiba after me be, &c. And in the language of the Shastras the word 'wife' (widow) designates the class. Thus we read in the Mitakshara (passage omitted in Colebrooke's translation, on which subject see note in Mayne, s. 468; the text is given in 3 Madras H. C. at page 451). 'There (in that order) the first to inherit is the wife (patni); is she who is made by marriage . . . singular number, because the class is denoted.' And in the Viramitrodaya (Chapter III, Part I, s. 2) we read: 'The singular number (in the term 'patni' in Yajnavara's text, s. 1) implies the class.' And again (ibid, s. 10): 'The wives of the same class with the husband shall take the estate, dividing it amongst themselves.' Hence the singular number in the term 'wife' is to be taken to be used with the intention of designating the 'class.'

"It seems to me impossible to read the letters addressed by the Maharaja to his two wives without feeling that, although he treated the senior Maharani with respect, his fondness was greater for his younger wife, and that the Maharaja, when making his will, was favourably disposed towards the junior Maharani is evident from the provision which he made for her maintenance in the fifth part of his will. Few were better acquainted with the provisions of Act I of 1869 than the Maharaja, and the last clause of s. 25 of that Act provides that, 'in the case of a junior widow of the deceased, the maximum amount of the annuity shall be one-half of the maximum amount to which a senior widow of the deceased would be entitled under the former part of this section.' The Maharaja, however, when allotting the Rs. 55,000, which he assigned to 'the two Maharani Sahiba,' gave the junior Maharani only Rs. 5,000 less than to the senior Maharani. He gave the senior Maharani Rs. 30,000, and the junior Maharani Rs. 25,000. Under the Hindu law a widow to whom a power to adopt has been granted cannot be compelled to execute that power—Bumun Das Mukerjea v. Musammat Tarinee (1) and Uma Sunduri Debi v. Surobini Debi (2); and the Maharaja showed by appeal to Government to see his wishes carried out, that he felt the precariousness of his position in this respect. On the theory of the respondents, if the senior Maharani had died without adopting, the junior Maharani could not have adopted; and the Maharaja died testate, having provided by his will (fourth part) that if the Maharani Sahiba died without adopting, the next heir, according to the custom of the family, should take the estate. Even if the senior Maharani did adopt, it was by no means certain—the event has shown it to have been improbable—that Government would comply with the Maharaja's wishes, and take over the estate on the adoption of a son, the only contingency on the occurrence of which the junior Maharani would become entitled to her [734] allowance of Rs. 25,000 a year. In no case was it likely that for at least two years would even this remote contingency occur. "Is it then conceivable that the Maharaja, with his evident wish to treat his younger wife favourably, would have executed a will which, if the contention of the respondents regarding its meaning be correct, would have left the junior Maharani—certainly for two years, probably for ever—to the pittance, not exceeding Rs. 3,000 a year, which the provisions of s. 26, Act I of 1869, would procure for her? To me this seems inconceivable; and in face of the fact that when the Maharaja (in the fifth part of his will) was allotting his widows' allowances he allotted to the junior Maharani Rs. 25,000 per annum, I find it impossible to hold that this was the Maharaja's meaning. The only construction of the will which makes it consistent throughout is, as it seems to me, that which supposes the Maharaja's intentions to have been that, till the event contemplated by the fifth part of the will, both the widows should enjoy the estate.

"The securing a male heir by adoption on failure of actual issue is the central idea of the Maharaja's will. At the time of the execution of the will the age of the Maharaja was about 60, and (assuming their ages to be correctly stated in their mukhtarnamahs filed in this suit) the ages of the Maharani's were,—senior mahrani 41, junior Maharani 19. The Maharaja had not then met with the accident which ended in his death, and probably looked forward to another ten or fifteen years of life. By that time his elder widow would have become old and his younger widow would have reached mature age. The Maharaja was most careful to provide for all possible contingencies in his will, and one cannot suppose that these contingencies, did not strike him. Is it conceivable that, with two persons capable (the one on failure of the other) of performing his wishes as to the adoption, the Maharaja would have excluded one of those persons, and so reduced the chances of his wishes being fulfilled? And yet that is what we must suppose if we hold that the words ' Maharani Sahiba ' in the third part of the will denote the senior Maharani only. If, on the other hand, we read the words Maharani Sahiba as meaning ' my wife (widow) in the ordinary Hindu sense of the words, i.e., as comprising the class, there is no difficulty at all, and the will is consistent throughout.

"It has been said the Maharaja was careful to explain that by Khas Mahal he meant both ladies; why then, if by Maharani Sahiba he also meant both ladies, was he not equally careful to protect his meaning as regards the words ' Maharani Sahiba '? The answer is obvious. The words ' Khas Mahal, ' ' Chief Consort, ' left unexplained, might, contrary to the Maharaja's intentions, have not unnaturally been restricted to the senior Maharani. As regards the words ' Maharanii Sahiba ' a term common to both the ladies, there was no such danger, and no explanation was therefore needed."

Regarding the adoption, the Judicial Commissioner was of opinion that the junior widow could dispute it, but only so far as to show that the adoption was not in accordance with the Maharaja's will. His judgment continued thus:

"I am of opinion that the plaintiff is not competent to challenge the validity of adoption, so far as the fact that it was effected without her consent is [735] concerned, but that it is open to her to show, if she can, that it was otherwise invalid. I think that the plaintiff is not competent to challenge the validity of the adoption on the ground that she did not consent to it, because adoption is a religious ceremony, and the senior widow is therefore the proper person to perform it."

"The point as regards co-widows, and their powers in the matter of adoption, seems never to have been directly raised in the Courts of the North-Western Provinces, Bengal, or Madras; but as regards the right of the elder widow to precede the younger in the performance of religious duties, we have authority in the text books current in those provinces. Thus we read in Jagannatha's Digest of Hindu Law, translated by Colebrooke (Edition Madras 1874, Vol. II, page 124)—' Yajnyaawal-kya: If there be several wives of his own class, such duties are lawfully performed by no other than the eldest. Chandoswara and Vinyaneswara: If the first married wife be alive she must be preferred in all matters relating to religion. Vishnu: If many wives of his own class be living with the eldest alone should the husband conduct business relating to acts of religion, even though his younger wives be dearer to him.'

"The point as regards co-widows has been raised in Bombay in the case of Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (1). Messrs. West and Buhler give (3rd Edition, Vol. I, page 412) the following bywashtha: ' Question.—A deceased man has left two widows. The property of the deceased has passed into the hands of the elder widow. Can the younger widow claim a share of the property? And who has the right to adopt a son? Answer.—The younger can claim a share. The right of adoption belongs to the elder. And again, in Vol. II, page 977, Messrs. West and Buhler gave the following placita of the Shastras: 'The eldest of several widows has the right to adopt. On the death or disqualification the right passes to the next widow in order of marriage.' 'A man having directed an adoption, the elder widow may adopt against the wish of the junior.' And this view was the view taken by the High Court of Bambay in Rakhmobai v. Radhabai (1).

(1) 5 B.H.C. 181.

On the question whether the adoption of Udit Narain was duly effected, the judgment was as follows:

"That the boy was a fit subject for adoption is not now denied. That the ceremonies of the adoption were not duly performed is prima facie in the last degree improbable; and it has, I consider, been established by the defendants by good and sufficient evidence (which is entirely [736] uncontradicted) that all was rightly done. The evidence of Pundit Jugal Kishore is particularly clear as to the unconditional gift and acceptance of the boy, according to the forms of the Shastras, as a son to the Maharaja. And this being so, in my opinion factum valet.'

The result of his judgment was thus stated:

"I have now to find the relief to which the plaintiff is entitled. I consider that from the date of the Maharaja's death until such time as the Government shall see fit to take action in the terms of the fifth part of the Maharaja's will, under the provisions of s. 162 of the 'Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876,' the plaintiff is entitled to equal beneficial enjoyment with the senior Maharani—see Bhagwanden Doobey v. Myno Bayi (2) and Jijoiyamba Bayi Saiba v. Kamakshi Bayi Saiba, and Boyj Saiba v. Jigoyimba Bayi Saiba (3)—of the estate, but I am unable to hold that she is entitled to a partition of the moveables. The moveables must, I consider, follow the Raj, which is impartible. It may be said, 'but in the will (third part), although the Maharaja carefully forbids the alienation of the immovable property, he makes no such provision as regards the immovable property. This is true, but the Maharaja was no doubt sensible of the difficulties in the way of forbidding the alienation of the moveables. These largely consist of elephants, horses and cattle, and to have barred their alienation would have caused great practical inconvenience. That the Maharaja did not contemplate a dissipation of the moveables of the estate is plain from the fact that he provides in the fifth part of his will for their being taken over by the Court of Wards. I consider that her position as the elder widow gives the senior Maharani, as in the case of coparceners, a preferable claim to the care and management of the joint property. I think further that, under all the circumstances of the case, the costs of this litigation should be taxed as between solicitor and client, and be charged against the estate. The respondent's objection is decreed and the decree of the District Judge of Fyzabad, awarding the plaintiff Rs. 25,000 per annum, is set aside.'

From this decree all parties appealed, and their appeals were ordered to be heard together.

On these appeals,—

Sir Horace Davey, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne (Mr. C. W. Arathoon with them) for the Maharani Indar Kunwar, the senior widow, argued that, as the devolution of the talukdari property of the late Maharaja, had he died intestate, would have been governed by s. 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, and as the junior widow could not have come in to the succession under the rules prescribed by that section, she was not a person who would have succeeded to any interest in the Maharaja’s talukdari estate within the meaning of s. 13. She therefore, could not take any bequest of such estate under a will not registered as that section required.

Neither under that Act, nor under the ordinary law “to which persons of the testator’s tribe or religion were subject,” could she have come in, the talukdari estate having been entered, and remaining, in lists II and V, prepared under s. 8. Moreover, even if under the ordinary law the junior widow could have come in, she was not a person entitled to succeed, within the meaning of the words, “would have succeeded to such estate, or to a portion thereof, or to an interest therein,” used in s. 13, those words expressing “following immediately after.” This the junior widow would not do, as she would only be entitled to maintenance under s. 24, relating to the maintenance of surviving relatives of a Talukdar. Maintenance was not an interest in the estate within the meaning of s. 13, and the person entitled to it was not entitled, by force of s. 24, to any charge on the estate, having only a personal claim against the owner for the time being. A mere hope of succession was not included. No one in fact, was entitled to “succeed,” after the Maharaja’s death, except the senior Maharani. Thus the junior widow was excluded, and the estate having been entered in list II, the necessary presumption was that it devolved upon a single heir, in this case the senior widow, until such time as the effect of the adoption under the will should operate. The will not having been registered in compliance with the requirements of the Oudh Estates Act 1869, the junior widow not coming within the exceptions of s. 13, any disposition made by it of talukdari property in her favour failed. Reference was made to Ajudhia Baksh v. Rakmin Kuwar (1) and Abdul Razzak v. Amir Haidar (2).

As regarded the junior widow’s claim to an interest in the non-talukdari property, it was untenable upon the true construction of the will, which gave to the senior widow all the estate for [738] her life, or until adoption by her of a son to the Maharaja. The junior widow was not entitled jointly with the senior, nor entitled to anything but maintenance, taking no interest under the bequest. This rested upon the construction of the whole will, which left no doubt of the meaning of “Maharani Sahiba.” In these words there was at most a latent ambiguity, and extrinsic evidence was therefore admissible to explain them. The senior widow alone was intended to be referred to by these words, which were in the singular number, and not used, as they were in another part of the will, with the qualification of “donor.” Without, however, relying on the testimony as to the Maharaja’s probable intention, his intention was plainly visible upon the dispositions of the will, viz., that an adopted son should inherit his possessions with an intermediate estate to his senior widow, the junior widow receiving only maintenance.

Reference was made to the Indian Succession Act, X of 1865, ss. 62, 67; Act XXI of 1870; Act I of 1869, ss. 3, 8, 13 and 22; Act I of 1877, s. 3, illustration (a): Doe d Gord v. Need (1); Doe d Allen v. Allen (2).

As regards the adoption, whilst it was contended that it had not been invalidated by the junior widow's having had no part in it, it was submitted that it did not concern the senior widow's case as against the junior, the intention of the testator having been shown to be, upon the true construction of the will, in favour of the senior widow alone. Reference was made to Ramasami Aiyar v. Vencataramaiyan (3); Chitko Raghanath Rajadiksh v. Yanaki (4).

Sir Charles Russell Q. C. and Mr. J. Rigby, Q. C. (Mr. J. Brook Little with them), for the appellant, Udit Narain Singh, contended that he had been duly adopted to the Maharaja according to the terms of his will; so for maintaining the case of the senior widow as to rely on her having been the sole donee of the power to adopt, and having made a valid adoption, although without the concurrence of the junior widow. Reference [739] was made to Act I of 1869, s. 8; and it was argued that even if the authority to adopt had been given to the junior widow jointly with the senior (which, however, was not admitted) the adoption would have been valid as made. The construction of the will, as placed upon it by the Court of first instance, that the senior widow was solely empowered to adopt, was correct, the late Maharaja having contemplated speedy adoption, and there being no ground for supposing that he would have wanted the junior widow to be included in the power. It was admitted that two persons might not unusually, and not improperly, be described by a collective term: but here there was no ground or occasion for resorting to the construction that the two widows were meant. And the adoption, made by a proper person, had been plenary and unconditional; the estates of the adoptive father having thereupon vested in the adopted son, who stood in the line of succession from that moment, no omission having occurred in the requisite ceremonial. Where Act I of 1869 applied, the adoption was under it, and as to the property to which it was inapplicable the succession, in virtue of the adoption, followed by the operation of the ordinary law. Reference was made to Kalliprossuno Ghose v. Gocool Chunder Mitter (5).

The conditions which the senior widow afterwards sought to impose were of no effect; and whether resort was had to the Hindu law, or to Act I of 1869, the adopted son's title was superior, and upon it the Judicial Commissioner should have adjudicated as between him and the junior widow. Correct as the judgment was in holding the junior widow dissititled to have the adoption invalidated in order that she might have part in it, still it should not have been held that she was entitled to the joint beneficial enjoyment, together with the senior, until the Court of Wards should assume management of the estate. The minor's title by his adoption was independent of any action on the part of that authority and the Court's undertaking the management could not be made a condition precedent to his taking the ownership as adopted son. He had, having been adopted, already come in with a complete title.

[740] Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne (Mr. T. T. Forbes with them) argued that the appeals of the senior Maharani and of Udit Narain Singh should be dismissed; but that at the same time the judgment and decree of the Judicial Commissioner were incorrect upon some points, and should be varied in favour of the junior widow, the Maharani Jaipal Kunwar. The suit required and admitted an adjudication as to the rights of Udit Narain Singh as the adopted son so far as those rights affected the claim of the plaintiff, because her contention was that his adoption was invalid, and the first ground of its invalidity was want of concurrence in the act of adoption on the part of the junior widow. For this reason the judgment should have declared the adoption invalid. The probabilities were against the testator excluding one of his widows from the power to adopt, which was connected with binding usages, all of which regarded the widows as one for this purpose. He had used words that might include both widows. Then it was for those who would exclude the junior to show the ground for so doing. As to the argument derived from "capriciousness" and the improbability of the power being entrusted to two, the probabilities were all the other way. Reference was made to West and Buhler's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, 977, Book III, s. 3; Steel's Law of Castes; Rakhambar v. Radhabai (1). The ambiguity of the expression "Maharani Sahiba," with the absence of any indication as to which of the widows was meant, went far to show that both were intended. The words "khas mahal" ordinarily denoted the first married wife, but the testator used it to denote both his wives, whom he distinguished, when he wished to distinguish them, by using the adjectives "Bari" and "Choti." But as regards the testator's intention, it was improbable that he intended the junior Maharani to be left out; yet the construction contended for by the appellants would have left her without any provision for her maintenance, from the date of her husband's death until such time as an adoption over which she was to have no control should take place, the annuity not coming into effect till the adoption should be made. Moreover, there being no gift of a power to the survivor of the widows, this did much to show that both were intended. The adoption, moreover, was bad for other reasons, viz., as having been made under restrictions and conditions inconsistent with a complete giving and receiving and not in pursuance of the authority given by the will; also because the ceremony was not completed by a writing as required by Act 1 of 1869, s. 22, cl. 8; also, because the provisions in the will as to adoption, and the consequent devolution of the property, could not operate for want of registration under s. 13. Reference was made to Vinayak Anandav v. Lakshmibai (2); Chitko Raganath Ragadiksh v. Yanaki (3); Ramasami Aiyen v. Venkata Narayan (4); Thakurain Ramanand Koer v. Thakurain Raguhosth Koer (5). [Sir R. Couvch referred to Raja Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshimi Narsayya (6).] Taking the will as a whole, the contention was that under it the two Maharani received equal rights of management and possession of all the estate of the late Maharaja. And the Court below was wrong in holding that the moveable property, and such part of the immovable property as was not talukdari, followed the rule of succession applicable to the taluk. This by no means followed so far as impartibility was concerned; and as to such property at all events the junior Maharani was entitled to her share. Nor was it correct to say that her rights would be determinable upon the Government, as Court of Wards, at any time taking possession of the talukdari on behalf of the minor; for such possession could hardly be taken under the authority of a will that was not registered within s. 13 of Act I of 1869; and if and when taken, would be subject, by the effect of the rules binding on the Court of Wards, to the provisions of the will in favour of the widows. So far the judgment of the Court below required modification. But that Court was right in holding that the will, as far as it conferred any rights on the junior Maharani, was not invalid for want of registration. The provisions as to registration did not apply to any but the [742] talukdari property held under Act I of 1869; and, as applicable to talukdari property, they did not exclude a widow. The object of s. 13 was to prevent the talukdar from bequeathing his estate by an unregistered will to a stranger. Within the line of succession he might confer estate by an unregistered will upon such a relation as a widow, who was qualified to take in spite of non-registration; first, under sub-s. 9 of s. 22 of Act I of 1869; secondly; as having an interest in the estate within the meaning of S. 13. Moreover, had the talukdar died intestate, the junior widow would have had an interest expectant upon the death of her co-widow, there being in the case of intestacy a kind of statutory settlement on the first widow for life, on the second in default of adoption and contingently on her surviving—see s. 22 of Act I of 1869. The right to maintenance was an "interest" in a certain sense. For the meaning of this term, see Act I of 1877, the Specific Relief Act, s. 3; Jumma Na Dassya Chowdhri v. Bamasondeer Dassya Chowdhri (1), Anand Koer v. Court of Wards (2).

Act I of 1869 made maintenance a charge on the estate, as also did the general law under certain circumstances—see Juggernath Sawant v. Odhanir Narain Koomaree (3).

As to the widow's power to adopt and its nature in general, see Sri Raghunatha v. Sri Brojo Kishore (4).

Mr. J. Rigby, Q. C., replied contending that the junior widow could have no right to dispute the adoption as made, not having shown that she took a joint estate with the senior widow under the will, and not being referred to on the authority given by the husband. He also cited Sri Raghunatha v. Sri Brojo Kishore (4).

On a subsequent day, 10th March, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

JUDGMENT.

Lord Macnaghten.—The question in these consolidated appeals turns mainly on the construction and effect of the will of the late Maharaja Sir Digbijai Singh. The parties to the contest are the two [743] widows of the Maharaja, and an infant adopted by the senior widow. The litigation was commenced by the junior widow, who challenged the validity of the adoption and claimed joint proprietary possession of the immovable property and one-half share of the moveable property of the late Maharaja, of which the senior widow had taken sole possession. The junior widow founded her claim on the contention that the expression "Maharani Sahiba" was used in the will as a collective term comprehending both widows. The senior widow maintained that it applied to her alone. The District Court held that the junior widow's claim was not well founded, and that she was only entitled to maintenance under the will. The Judicial Commissioner, on the other hand, held that the junior widow was included in the expression "Maharani Sahiba." He treated the adoption as valid. He held that the moveables followed the raj, which was impartible. But he considered that the junior widow was entitled to equal beneficial enjoyment with the senior widow until the Government should take action by assuming the management of the estate in accordance with the request contained in the will. In the meantime the management of the estate was to remain in the hands of the senior widow. The conclusion of the Judicial Commissioner has not given satisfaction to any of the parties to the litigation. The senior widow and the adopted son have both appealed from the whole decree. Up to a certain point the case of the adopted son is the same as that of the senior widow. They differ only in their views as to the consequence of the adoption and the present rights conferred thereby—matters which cannot come into question in this suit. The junior widow has also appealed. She appeals from the decree so far as it holds the adoption valid and the moveables impartible, and so far as it commits the management of the estate to the senior widow.

In order to construe the will it is necessary to understand the testator’s position. The testator was one of the few Oudh chieftains who remained loyal to the British Government during the troubles of 1857 and 1858. At that time he was Raja of Bahrampur. His services were acknowledged by the Government. He was excepted by name from the Proclamation which confiscated proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh, and named first in the exception. He received the title of Maharaja and large grant of land. It seems to have been a person of considerable intelligence. As President of the Oudh Talukdars’ Association, he took an active part in framing the Oudh Estates Act, 1869. He was also for a time, and at the time when that Act passed, Member of the Legislative Council of India. His name was entered in Lists Nos. II and V mentioned in s. 8 of the Act. List No. II is “a List of the Talukdars whose estates, according to the custom of the family on and before the 13th day of February 1856, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir.” List No. V is “a List of Grantees to whom sanads or grants have been or may be given or made by the British Government up to the date fixed for the closing of such list, declaring that the succession to the estates comprised therein shall thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture.” On both of these lists his name remained during his life.

In 1860 the Maharaja married the Maharani Indar Kunwar, who is generally referred to in these proceedings as the senior widow. In July 1877 he married the Maharani Jaipal Kunwar, who is the plaintiff in the suit.

On the 15th of March 1878 the Maharaja executed his will. The Maharani Indar Kunwar was then 41, and the younger Maharani 19. The will was deposited in the Registration Office of Lucknow, but owing to a misapprehension of the law which seems to have been prevalent at the time, it was not duly registered under the Act of 1869. It is evident, however, that it was the intention of the Maharaja to comply with all the formalities required to give full effect to the dispositions of his will.

On the 27th of May 1882 the Maharaja died, leaving his two wives surviving. He died without legitimate issue, and without having adopted a son in his lifetime. Besides his talukdari estates he left non-talukdari property and moveables of considerable value.

Their Lordships now proceed to consider the testator’s will. The effect of non-registration in the view which their Lordships take of the true construction of the will, will be considered afterwards.
The scheme of the will, apart from the bequest which has given rise to the present controversy, is clear and consistent throughout. In the various contingencies which it contemplates the will shows no little thought and consideration. The testator observes that at the time of writing his will he was childless, but not without hope of issue—when all hope of issue became lost he might adopt a son, and he proposes to do so if opportunity should occur—after adoption a son might be born to him. These events might happen in his lifetime. After his death, in default of issue, natural-born or adopted by himself, he authorizes the adoption of a son. The son so adopted might die in minority, and then there would be occasion for a second adoption; lastly, in default of issue, and in default of an adopted son, it was his wish that his property should devolve on the person lawfully entitled according to the custom of the riasat. The testator provides for all these different events. And in each case he is careful to repeat and emphasize his wish that the estate shall devolve in its integrity, and that his successor, whoever he may be, shall, like himself, be seated on the guddee, the owner of the entire riasat, and of all the property belonging to it, movable and immovable. So far there seems to be the most anxious desire on the part of the testator that the principle of succession which had prevailed in his family for generations, and which was recognized in the talukdari lists, the rule of single heirship—one owner at one time—should be maintained unimpaired.

Turning now to the passages of disputed meaning, it is to be observed that the expression "Maharani Sahiba" occurs there in connection with three different purposes which present themselves to the mind of the testator. In the first place, it is to be found in the bequest of the estate contingent on the testator leaving no natural born or adopted son. In that case the testator declares his will as follows: "Let the Maharani Sahiba after me be during lifetime the owner of the entire riasat, and of the property moveable and immovable." Before the word translated "lifetime" there is in the original a possessive pronoun, but it may be translated either "her" or "their," and so it throws no light on the question. Maharani is a Hindi word, signifying the wife [746] of a Maharaja; Sahiba is Arabic for "lady." Both words are in the singular number. They are, however, throughout used as governing verbs in the plural. No stress was laid on this circumstance. It was not disputed that the plural verb might properly be used out of courtesy, as a mark of respect. The use of the word malik, "owner," in the singular is more significant. The learned Counsel for the junior widow suggested that the word was used like an adjective, and that it would not be in accordance with the idiom in which the will was written to use the plural, malikan. But no proof was offered in support of this suggestion. And though the use of the word malik in the singular is certainly not conclusive, it is not without weight, especially as it is the same word that is used by the testator in reference to the position of the single heir, on whom, whether a natural-born son, or an adopted son, or the heir according to the custom of the riasat, the property was to devolve in its entirety. On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the language of the bequest rather points to the exclusive possession of one than to the joint possession of two.

A similar observation applies to the provisions relating to adoption after the testator's death. "There is to the Maharani Sahiba full authority to select and within two years to adopt" a male child of the testator's family. In the event of the child so adopted dying in his minority, "again there is authority to the Maharani Sahiba to make a second adoption." The testator expresses a wish that "Government may have a care that... a son be adopted by the Maharani Sahiba within two years. Should, peradventure, the Maharani Sahiba die without adopting any son," the estate is to go to the person lawfully entitled according to the custom of the riasat. The nature of the case seems to require that the donee of the power should be one individual. The language rather points in that direction. If the testator intended to commit the selection and adoption to his two widows jointly, it is certainly singular that no provision should be made for the not improbable event of their disagreeing. If he intended to give the power to the survivor after the death of one, it would have been more natural that he should have said so. It was urged that a joint power of adoption is in accordance with [747] Hindu notions, that in some parts of India, when adoption has not been forbidden by a husband, the power falls to the widows jointly, and that the law provides for the case of a disagreement. That is true in Western India, but there is no evidence that such a custom is known in Oudh. It seems hardly applicable to the case of a family where the custom is single heirship and not joint possession.

The third passage, where the expression occurs, is in the clause relating to the provision to be made for the administration of the estate under the Court of Wards during the minority of an infant heir. The testator expresses a wish that in the management there should be associated "the district officer and the Maharani Sahiba, and some agent who is fit and a well-wisher of the riasat... in order that the settlement of the riasat and welfare of the ryots may prosper." It is difficult to conceive that a man of the testator's experience and knowledge of the world could have proposed that his two widows should both sit on this council, or that he could have seriously imagined that the settlement of the riasat and the welfare of the ryots would be promoted by an arrangement so calculated to foster jealousies and encourage intrigues.

Though no one of these passages taken by itself may be conclusive upon the question, it seems to their Lordships that they all point in the same direction, and that taken together they lead almost irresistibly to the inference that one person, and one person only, was intended by the designation Maharani Sahiba where the meaning is in dispute.

This inference is much strengthened by the passage in the will where the testator provides maintenance for his widows. There he uses the same words, "Maharani Sahiba" but to prevent any mistake he adds the word "two," and speaks of "the two Maharani Sahiba." It was said that in this passage the word "two" was added because the intention was that the allowance should not be joint, but that each should have a separate share. But it is to be observed that this explanation hardly accounts for the use of the word "two" in the first sentence, where the allowance, which is afterwards divided between the two ladies, is lumped together at one sum of Rs. 55,000.

[748] Again, in that passage in which the testator speaks of his hopes of issue where he uses the expression "Maharani Sahiba," he does not leave the expression unexplained.

We find then that in connection with the three purposes—of succession to the estate, selection and adoption of an heir, and representation on an administrative council during the heir's minority—in each of which a great noble in the testator's position might be expected to have in view one person, and one person only, the testator uses the expression "Maharani Sahiba" without qualification and without addition. In the two passages in which he must have had both his wives in view, in connection with the possibility of issue and in connection with the usual provision for widowhood, he qualifies the words "Maharani Sahiba" by other words which leave no doubt as to his meaning.

It is not disputed that, if one person only is intended, that person must be the senior widow, who was, for some years before the Maharaja's marriage with the plaintiff, the only person entitled to the style and dignity of Maharani Sahiba, and who after that marriage still retained the pre-eminence of an elder wife.

One argument which was urged on behalf of the junior widow remains to be noticed. It was founded on the maintenance clause. It was argued that according to the true construction of this clause, having regard to its language and its position in the will, no allowance by way of maintenance was payable until an adoption was made. It was said too that it would be absurd to give an allowance out of the income of a property to a person entitled to a life estate in the whole. Starting from this position, the learned Counsel for the junior widow contended that, if the appellants were right, the result would be that there would be no provision for their client so long as the senior widow chose to keep the estate. But nothing, they said, was more unlikely than that the testator could have intended to leave his favourite wife, as they termed the junior widow, either dependent on the miserable pittance to which she would be entitled under the Act of 1860, or a pensioner on the bounty of a jealous rival, especially considering that both widows were ultimately to be placed almost on an equality as [749] regards their maintenance. The only way to escape from a conclusion so improbable was to hold that the testator intended to give a joint life estate to both widows.

There would be much force in this argument if it rested on a sound foundation. But their Lordships think that it depends upon an erroneous construction of the provision for maintenance. That provision is no doubt apparently bound up with the clause which deals with the expenses of the rashat during the minority of an infant heir. But their Lordships consider that, upon the true construction of the will, it is a substantive and independent provision, and that maintenance runs from the death of the testator. There is no difficulty in the concurrent gifts to the senior widow of an allowance for maintenance and a life estate in the whole property. The life estate was not intended to continue at farthest beyond two years, and the duty of the senior widow would be to adopt as soon as possible. So long as the life estate might last, her allowance for maintenance would of course merge in the life estate.

Their Lordships desire to add that, in their opinion, this is not a case in which it would be proper to admit extrinsic evidence of the testator's intention. It is rather a case in which the difficulty created by the particular expression ought to be solved by adopting the construction which bespeaks a reasonable and probable intention, and rejecting that which would indicate an intention unreasonable, capricious, and inconsistent with the testator's views, as evidenced by his conduct and by the dispositions of his will which are not open to controversy.

The rule is laid down by Lord Cranworth in words which have often been cited with approval: "When, by acting on one interpretation of the words used, we are driven to the conclusion that the person using them is acting capriciously, without any intelligible motive, contrary to the ordinary mode in which men in general act in similar cases, then, if the language admits of two constructions, we may reasonably and properly adopt that which avoids these anomalies, even though the construction adopted is not the most grammatically accurate"—Abbott v. Middleton (1). Here the argument from reasonable and probable [750] intention is in favour of the construction which is rather the more obvious of the two.

Their Lordships have already expressed their view as to the right of the junior widow to maintenance from the testator’s death. They think that the maintenance is payable out of the whole estate, talukdari as well as non-talukdari, notwithstanding the non-registration of the will. If the Maharaja had died intestate, the junior widow would have succeeded to a life-estate in the talukdari property expectant on the determination of the life estate of the first married widow, but subject to be defeated by an adoption made by the first married widow, with the consent in writing of her husband. It seems impossible to say that that is not an interest in the estate within the meaning of s. 13, sub-s. 1 of the Act of 1860. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to express any further opinion on the construction of this most difficult section.

Although their Lordships hold that the claim put forward by the junior widow is not well founded, and that the order of the Judicial Commissioner granting relief on the footing of that claim must be discharged, they think it will be proper to make a declaration as to the allowance for maintenance to which they consider the junior widow entitled under the will.

As regards costs, the difficulty has been created by the testator himself, and under the circumstances, having regard to the position of the parties, their Lordships think it right that the order of the Judicial Commissioner as to costs should not be disturbed, and that the costs incurred in the execution proceedings in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the costs of all parties in these consolidated appeals should be paid, as between solicitor and client, out of the testator’s estate. The appeal in the execution proceedings does not call for any observation beyond this, that the appeal seems to have been necessary, and that no blame of any sort is to be attributed to any of the parties who appeared before their Lordships on the application for special leave to appeal. The order of the 22nd June 1886 will be discharged.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that an order be made to the following effect: Discharge [751] the order of the Judicial Commissioner, except so far as it provides for costs. And in lieu of the decree of the District Court, and of so much of the order of the Judicial Commissioner as is discharged, declare that according to the true construction of the will of the testator the junior widow is entitled only to an annuity during her life of Rs. 25,000, commencing from the day of the testator’s death, and that such annuity is charged upon and payable out of the income of the entirety of the testator’s estate. Discharge the order of the 22nd June 1886. Direct that the costs of all parties incurred in the execution proceedings in the Judicial Commissioner’s Court be taxed as between solicitor and client, and paid out of the testator’s estate.

The costs of all parties of these consolidated appeals will also be taxed as between solicitor and client, and paid out of the testator’s estate.

SHAM KISHEN DAS AND OTHERS (Decree-holders) v. RUN BAHADUR SINGH (Judgment-debtor). [6th March, 1888.]

Decree, Construction of—Construction of decree for money payable by instalments—Term making the entire sum payable on default in payment of some of the instalments at certain dates.

A decree for money payable by yearly instalments made the full amount payable on both the first instalment being unpaid on the due date, and two consecutive instalments being in default and unpaid at the same time. Defaults were made, and questions as to rate of interest on what amounts, and for what periods, by reason of the debtor's delay, interest was payable, were dealt with in an order of Her Majesty in Council, which made declarations as to the allowances of interest to which the decree-holder would be entitled on the adjustment of accounts between the parties. The accounts having been taken in the Court executing the order, the decree-holder applied for execution to the [752] full amount. Held, that the instalments having been paid, though not at due date, and applied in payment of interest, be was entitled to such execution, because the contingency, on the happening of which he would have been entitled thereto, had not happened.

Appeal from an order (11th February 1885) of the High Court, reversing an order (18th August 1884) of the Subordinate Judge of Gya, made upon an application for execution of a decree.

This appeal related to the proper construction of a decree for money with interest, based upon the terms of a compromise which decree directed payment by instalments; and the question raised had reference to the effect, according to that decree, of payment of an instalment after its due date, in regard to the right of the decree-holder to execute the decree for its full amount.

The order made by the Court of first instance was that execution should issue against the judgment-debtor, the present respondent, for Rs. 1,29,781, that sum having been found to be due upon a decree of 31st March 1873, as the result of accounts taken in the serishta of the Court between the parties, in conformity with an order of Her Majesty in Council of 9th July 1883.

The High Court, on the respondents' appeal, reversed the above order, and dismissed the application for execution. The Judges (MITTER and TREVELYAN, JJ.) said "We are of opinion that the order of the lower Court is wrong. Upon the face of the application which was made by decree-holder, and upon the account which was prepared by the lower Court, it does not appear that the decree-holder was entitled to execute the decree, because the contingency, on the happening of which the decree-holder would be entitled to execute the whole decree, has not happened.
The present petition for execution must therefore be dismissed, and the order of the lower Court set aside."

The Judges also noted that an error, which they found in the account, could be rectified, the application being dismissed on another ground.

The decree of 31st March 1873, abovementioned, was in favour of Narain Das, the appellant's grandfather, and was based on [753] the terms of a solehnama, whereby yearly instalments of Rs. 30,000 were to be paid on the last day of Bhadon, in each Fusli year, in satisfaction of the principal amount of Rs. 2,38,000 and interest, the first instalment to be paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 or 25th September 1874. The third clause of the solehnama was as follows:—

"If the first instalment be not paid on the 20th Bhadon 1281 Fusli, and two consecutive instalments be not paid, then the plaintiff shall have the power to take out execution of the decree, and realize his entire decretal money with interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem from your petitioners, defendants, and their properties. In case of default, the decree-holder shall be entitled to take out execution, and realize interest on the entire decretal money from the date of such default to that of realization, at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. If the first instalment be not paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fusli, then the decree-holder shall have the power to realize the principal with interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem from the date of this solehnama, to which your petitioners, defendants, shall have no objection."

Before the present proceedings there was other litigation between the parties, or those whom they represented, in regard to the construction of the solehnama, and the father of the present appellants preferred the appeal to Her Majesty in Council which resulted in the order above mentioned, of 9th July 1883.

That was the appeal of Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (1), and in the judgment in that case the following was pointed out:—

"Their Lordships think it right in this place to refer to that part of the judgment in order to point out that, in their opinion, the decree-holder could not, under the first paragraph of the third clause of the solehnama, issue execution for the full amount of the judgment with 12 per cent. interest, unless both the first instalment should not be paid on the 30th Bhadon 1281 Fusli, and two consecutive instalments should be in default and unpaid at the same time."

[754] The defaults which led to the previous litigation were, as appears from the judgment of the Judicial Committee (2), the non-payment until the 31st August 1876 of the instalment which should have been paid on the 25th September 1874, and a further default in payment at due date of the third instalment. The decree-holder had, in that litigation, in its stages in the Indian Courts, contended that these defaults had given him the right to execute his decree for the full amount, but that contention had been disallowed by these Courts in concurrence, and the decree-holder had not appealed to Her Majesty in respect of the decision of the High Court in that matter. Consequently there was no question in the former appeal before the Judicial Committee as to the right to execute in full; and the questions disposed of in 1883 related only to the rate of interest.

to which the decree-holder was entitled, on what amounts, and for what periods, by reason of the judgment-debtor’s delay in paying the instalments. The judgment, with the order which followed it, contained declarations as to the allowance of interest to which, in the adjusting of the accounts between the parties, the decree-holder would be entitled by reason of the delay in payment of the instalments then in question. Nor was there anything to indicate that the terms of the decree of 31st March 1873 upon the solehnamas and the provisions of the latter in regard to the right to execute in full did not continue, as before, to bind the parties.

On the 15th September 1883 the present respondent paid the decree-holder the instalment then due of Rs. 30,000 as admitted in the account filed in the Court of first instance on 13th March 1884, at the time when the application for execution in full was pending. And there was not after that any default which, according to the terms of the compromise, would alter the decree-holder’s position in regard to his right to execute.

However, on the 13th February 1884, the decree-holder filed the petition giving rise to the present question, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, to be allowed, in accordance with the order in Council of 1883, to execute the decree for the entire amount of it, which he stated to be Rs. 1,40,878. The Court [755] then ordered the judgment-debtor to file his account; and, after several orders had been made, directed that an account should be taken between the parties by the Court mohurrir, who reported the amount due, upon the decree of 1873, on the 18th August 1884, on which date the abovementioned order, subsequently reversed by the High Court, was made.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, appeared for the appellants.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent.

For the appellants it was argued that the High Court had failed to construe correctly the order in Council of 1883 and to give effect to the appellants’ rights. It should have been held that the preparation of the account in the lower Court, and the issue of execution, was in accordance with the order made on the former appeal.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by

SIR B. PRACOK.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court was correct in the view which it took that execution could not be issued. The plaintiff under the decree received the yearly instalments of Rs. 30,000, and according to the stipulation in the original arrangement they were to be applied in the first instance to the payment of interest, and the balance in reduction of the principal. He might have issued execution if the last instalment had not been paid; still, when it was paid, it was to be applied, according to the stipulation, in the first place in discharge of the interest.

As to the opinion which the High Court expressed with reference to the payment made on 31st August 1875, there is not sufficient on the record to enable them to say whether that opinion was correct or not. It is merely an opinion of the High Court not having reference to the decree, and therefore the parties ought not hereafter to be bound by it. The matter will be open for consideration on any future occasion,

PRESENT:

Lord Hobhouse, Lord Macnaghten and Sir B. Peacock.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

A zamindar, having granted a putni lease, mortgaged the zamindari to the putnidar, who having afterwards obtained a decree against the zamindar upon the mortgage, attached and purchased, at the sale in execution, the zamindari interest, subject to the mortgage.

Before that purchase, though after the attachment, another holder of a decree against the zamindar brought the right, title and interest in the zamindari to sale in execution of his decree, and himself became the purchaser. He then, claiming to have obtained the zamindari estate, sued the putnidar for rent due under the lease. This suit was dismissed, save as to rent due for the time intervening between the two sales in execution, on the ground that the relation of zamindar to lease had ceased on the purchase by the latter.

The present suit was brought by the purchaser from the zamindar, stating his title, acquired at the prior of the two sales, and claiming to redeem the mortgage. Held, that the dismissal of the rent suit, which involved the title, barred the present one; and the opinion was expressed that the plaintiff had been rightly adjudged in the rent suit to be bound by the proceedings taken by the mortgagee, pending which the purchase relied upon had been made.

Appeal from a decree (27th April 1885) of the High Court, reversing a decree (14th March 1888) of the Subordinate Judge of Hughli.

The question was whether a decree made by the High Court in 1874 was a conclusive adjudication upon the right of the [757] plaintiff, who now appealed, to redeem a mortgage upon, and obtain possession of, a zamindari estate in a three annas and four gundas share in pargunnah Shankhali in the Hughli district. He claimed title to the zamindari as purchaser, at an execution sale of the estate of the mortgagor, against the mortgagee, who had previously attached the property under a decree.
upon his mortgage, and who subsequently, and after the date of the sale to the plaintiff, bought, at a sale in execution of his own decree, the right, title, and interest of the zemindar who had mortgaged to him.

Before the proceedings giving rise to this dispute, Srimati Matangini Debi, then owner of the zemindari, granted a putni of her share in Shankhali to the late Rajkrishna Mukerji, father of the defendant, the present respondent, thus limiting herself to receiving the rent reserved. Afterwards, she executed, on the 16th May 1864, a bond and mortgage to the same Rajkrishna, charging her zemindari estate with Rs. 999 and interest.

Matangini having afterwards been sued by one Dinonath Bose, the latter attached her interest in Shankhali, in execution of a decree, on the 7th November 1871.

On the 30th December 1871 Rajkrishna Mukerji sued Matangini on the mortgage, and on 22nd February 1872 obtained a decree "that the plaintiff should realize Rs. 1,291 from the mortgaged property with interest," and on 3rd April 1872 attached the right of Matangini to receive the putni rent. On the 18th of the same month of April, the interest of Matangini in Shankhali having been put up for sale by the Court in execution of Dinonath Bose’s decree, Radhanadhub Holdar, the present appellant, became the purchaser for Rs. 5,350.

On the 14th May 1872, Rajkrishna Mukerji, at a sale in execution of his own decree against Matangini, purchased for Rs. 1,590 her zemindari interest, i.e., her right to receive the putni rent from him.

After that date he paid no further rent except the sum of Rs. 250 under a decree of the High Court, that sum being due for the period from 18th April to the 14th May 1872.

The decree of the High Court under which that sum was paid was made upon the appeal in a rent suit, brought in 1873 by Radhanadhub Holdar in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hugli, to recover Rs. 1,488 as rent due from the defendant as putnidar from the 18th April 1872, the date of the plaintiff’s purchase to the institution of that suit. In defending that suit, Rajkrishna Mukerji admitted that he was in possession of the property, but alleged that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between him and Radhanadhub.

The Subordinate Judge (19th March 1873) expressed his opinion that, in a rent suit, such a question of title could not be decided, and he decreed the rent, referring the defendant to a regular suit if he wished to establish his title to the zemindari interest, and holding that, till he did so, he must be treated as a tenant. A regular appeal to the District Judge was dismissed (3rd July 1873), the Appellate Court being of the same opinion. On this Rajkrishna Mukerji preferred a special appeal to the High Court.

The High Court (Sir R. Couch, C. J. and Glover, J.) in giving judgment (11th March 1874) observed that there was no reason why in a suit for rent, where the defendant repudiated the relation of tenant, that question should not be tried; considered what were the rights of the parties arising out of the state of things stated above; and concluded that the defendant had shown that, as against the plaintiff, he had a right to be no longer treated as a tenant from the time when he purchased the property. If any rent had become due between the two periods of their respective purchases, that might be decreed; and the Court accordingly inquired whether any, and what, rent became due between these ... dates. The parties then agreed that this came to Rs. 250; and for that sum, with interest, the Court made a decree.

In the present suit (14th March 1883) Radhamadhub Holdar alleged the same title as before, claiming a declaration of his right to redeem. The defence was: First, that the disputed property was already under attachment in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant’s father, when it was sold in execution of the decree obtained by Dinonath Bose, and the latter sale could not confer a title; and, secondly, that the decree of the High Court, of the 11th March 1874, was conclusive.

[789] The Subordinate Judge held that the trial of this suit was not barred by the adjudication of 1874, as the question of title was only tried for the purpose of deciding a rent suit; and that no question of the right to redeem had been, or could be, raised in a suit for arrears of rent. He was also of opinion that the plaintiff’s purchase on the 18th April 1872 was not affected by any lis pendens, regard being had to the provisions of s. 333 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and, further, that Rajkrishna Mukerji ought to have made Dinonath Bose a party to the suit of 1873; and that the plaintiff, that not having been done, was not bound by the decree of 1874; and, having purchased the equity of redemption which Matangini had in the property, was entitled to redeem. The Court, however, disallowed a claim for an account against the defendant.

Monohur Mukerji, who had succeeded Rajkrishna, appealed to the High Court, Radhamadhub filing objections under s. 561 to so much of the decree as disallowed an account.

The High Court (Cunningham and O’Kinealy, JJ.) reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. They were of opinion that the question substantially raised between the parties in the suit decided in 1874 was identical with the one now raised, and involved the point whether the plaintiff had such a proprietary right purchased at the sale of 18th April 1872 as would entitle him to redeem. The suit was dismissed with reference to s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

From this decree Radhamadhub Holdar, together with one Nawadip Chunder Chowdhry, who had been added as a respondent in the appeal to the High Court on account of his having acquired some interest from the original plaintiff, preferred the present appeal.

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, argued that the sale of the 18th April 1872 was complete on that date, including the right to redeem the mortgage. The purchaser at a sale in execution was affected only by decrees actually obtained, and no doctrine of lis pendens applied to bind this prior judgment-creditor, whom the mortgagee should have made a party defendant, or who, at least, was entitled to notice [760] of the execution proceedings by the other decree-holder, if he was to be held bound by the latter.

In the next place the question whether the appellants were or were not concluded by the decree of 1874, must be decided in their favour, for that decree did not cover the ground of their claim, the subject-matter of it not having been identical with that in the present suit; nor the actual point decided the same with that now raised. Moreover, the jurisdiction of the Courts had to be considered, the Court of first instance in 1874 having had only authority indirectly to determine title.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD HORNSEA.—Their Lordships think that this case is a very clear and simple one when once the numerous proceedings and dates are ascertained.

The material circumstances are these: Matangini was the proprietor of the estate in question, and she granted the estate in putni to one Mukerji, the father of the present defendant. No difference is made by the change of title; and it may be considered that the putnidar has remained one and the same person. After that Matangini mortgaged her proprietary interest to Mukerji. Mukerji's position therefore was this; that he was putnidar of the estate with a charge upon what we should call the reversion of the proprietary interest. Under those circumstances a creditor of Matangini sues for his debt, gets a decree, attaches the property, and sells it in the month of April 1872; and under that sale the plaintiff Radhamadhub became the purchaser. What did he get by his purchase? He got Matangini's proprietary right, subject to the putni, and subject to the charge. But in the meantime Mukerji had been enforcing his charge against Matangini and he got a decree, and in the month of May 1872 about a month after the sale to the plaintiff, a sale took place under his decree, and he himself purchased at that sale. Now if Matangini herself had [761] remained the owner of the proprietary interest she would be clearly excluded by that sale from all interest in the property. It is equally clear that the plaintiff must be excluded, if he having purchased only the right, title and interest of Matangini, unless he can show that after the purchase in April 1872 he was not bound by the proceedings in Mukerji's suit. That very question has been raised and decided between the parties. After the two sales Radhamadhub, as claiming to be proprietor, sued Mukerji as putnidar for the rent due upon the putni, and his claim was that he stood in the shoes of Matangini. On the other hand Mukerji defended himself by saying: "It is not you, but I, who stand in the shoes of Matangini, and therefore you have no claim against me," and the decision was that, inasmuch as Mukerji's suit to enforce his charge was pending at the time of the sale to Radhamadhub, Radhamadhub was bound by the proceedings against Matangini. On that ground the rent suit was decided against Radhamadhub. Radhamadhub now comes to redeem; but the right to redeem rests on precisely the same ground as the right to rent was rested. In each case the question is equally; Who is the true representative of Matangini? Therefore their Lordships conceive that the matter was expressly decided by the High Court in the rent suit; but they desire to add that even if it had not been so decided they see no reason to believe that any amount of argument would induce them to come to a different conclusion than that to which the High Court came.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed, and that the appellants must pay the costs; and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to that effect.

Appeal dismissed.

IN THE MATTER OF BADAL SINGH AND OTHERS (Judgment-Creditors)
v. BIRCH (Judgment-Debtor).* [21st August, 1888.]

Execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code, Chapter XX—Insolvency—Ex parte decree subsequent to insolvency—Attachment—Receiver in insolvency.

An insolvent, to whose estate no receiver under Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure had ever been appointed, entered in his schedule the names of certain persons as creditors for a sum of Rs. 210-9-3. These creditors subsequently obtained against the insolvent an ex parte decree for the sum so entered in the schedule, and in execution attached certain pay which the insolvent was then earning, but which he was not in receipt of at the time his schedule was filed, and did not appear therein as an asset of his estate. Held, that the judgment-creditors were entitled to take out execution, and were not prevented from doing so by reason of the insolvency proceedings.

REFERENCE under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In or about the month of October 1887 one Birch applied under the provisions of Chapter XX of the Civil Procedure Code to be declared an insolvent. This application was granted, and Birch thereupon filed his schedule, in which, amongst the names of other creditors, were entered the names of Badal Singh and others as creditors for an amount of Rs. 210-9-3. In these insolvency proceedings no order was made appointing a receiver of the property of the insolvent.

On the 21st May 1888 Badal Singh and others obtained against Birch an ex parte decree for Rs. 210-9-3, and in execution thereof attached half the salary payable to Birch as Secretary to the Darjeeling and Himalayan Railway Company, which appointment Birch first obtained subsequently to the filing of his schedule in insolvency. No application was ever made to set aside this decree. Birch thereupon applied to have the order of attachment set aside, on the ground that the judgment-creditors could not proceed in execution against him in consequence of the insolvency proceedings. The judgment-creditors [763] contended on such application that Birch’s salary, not being included in his schedule, was liable to seizure for any of the scheduled debts as long as the insolvency application remained undisposed of and a receiver had not been appointed to the property of the insolvent.

The Judge of the Small Cause Court held that the judgment-creditors could only proceed under the provisions of Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure for the recovery of their claim, and set aside the attachment, contingent on the opinion of the High Court on the question whether the judgment-creditors could recover the amount of their ex parte decree otherwise than under the provisions of Chapter XX of the Code.

On this reference no one appeared for the judgment-creditors.

Mr. C. D. Linton for the judgment-debtor.

OPINION.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J. and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by

* Civil Reference No. 19-A of 1888 made by A. Rattray, Esq., Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Darjeeling, dated the 13th of June 1888.
Petheram, C. J.—This is a reference from the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Darjeeling, and the question is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to proceed with the execution proceedings under a decree which he has obtained. The plaintiff in the suit is a person called Badal Singh and the defendant is Mr. Birch.

The facts of the case are these, that in the month of October or November 1887 Mr. Birch had filed an application to be declared an insolvent in the proper Court at Darjeeling and filed his schedule. That having been done, Mr. Birch was declared an insolvent, but nothing further was done in the matter, because, so far as we are told, there were no assets to divide, and no receiver was ever appointed. After that, in the month of May last the plaintiff Badal Singh having brought a suit in the Small Cause Court at Darjeeling against Mr. Birch to recover a sum of money in respect of which his name had been scheduled in Mr. Birch's schedule, the case came on for trial. But Mr. Birch did not defend that suit; he did not appear and put in a written statement, and accordingly the plaintiff proved his case and obtained a decree ex parte, and having obtained his decree, he proceeded to attach Mr. Birch's salary, which he is now earning as the Secretary of the Darjeeling-Himalayan Railway, and an order [764] has been made attaching half of Mr. Birch's salary under that application, and the present application is by Mr. Birch to set aside that attachment on the ground that the plaintiff cannot proceed under that decree in consequence of the insolvency proceedings.

As I said just now, no receiver has ever been appointed to the insolvent's estate, and none of the other creditors intervene and object to this proceeding in any sense whatever. The decree was obtained long after the insolvency proceedings in a suit in which Mr. Birch did not think it worth his while to appear, and the decree, on the face of it, is perfectly regular, and there is no application to set it aside. Under these circumstances we do not see any reason why, as against Mr. Birch, this decree should not be executed. If a receiver had been appointed, and appointed for the whole body of creditors, then it might be that he might object to his salary being attached on the ground that if any body was entitled to get it, he was entitled on behalf of the general body of creditors. No one here represents any of the other creditors, and so far as we can tell all the other creditors have been settled with in some way or other. But the question here is whether Mr. Birch, having allowed this decree to go against him, can now avoid payment of this debt altogether by setting up this insolvency proceeding in which practically nothing whatever has been done. We think he can do nothing of the kind, and that until that decree has been set aside, and if that is to be done it must be done in some other form, it is binding against Mr. Birch, and any property which he may acquire, and which is not claimed by the receiver on behalf of the general body of creditors, is liable to attachment.

We think then that the plaintiff's proceedings are perfectly regular, and that this question must be answered by saying that the order made by the Small Cause Court Judge of Darjeeling in favour of the debtor must be set aside, and the execution allowed to proceed at the suit of the plaintiff.

Order set aside.
15 C. 765.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley.

NADIR CHAND SINGH and others (Defendants) v. CHUNDER SIKHUR SADHU and another (Plaintiffs).* [16th July, 1888.]

In a suit instituted in January 1887 by a plaintiff to set aside a settlement made under Reg. III of 1872, and to recover khas possession of a mouza, alleging that the defendant held the lands as chakran, and that services for which he held them had ceased, the defendant pleaded that the tenure was durmokurari, that the lands had been settled as such in June 1877, and that the suit was consequently barred by the special limitation provided by s. 25 of the Regulation. The plaintiff sought to set aside the settlement on the ground of the non-publication of the record of rights and fraud of the defendant, and both the lower Courts found that the record of rights had not been published by its being posted conspicuously in the village as required by s. 24. On second appeal it was contended on behalf of the defendant that such publication was not essential, but that it was open to the Settlement Officer to publish the record in such manner as might be convenient.

Held, that posting the record conspicuously in the village is an essential part of the publication, and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

It was further contended that the onus of proving the tenure to be durmokurari, which had been thrown on the defendant, had been wrongly so thrown on him, as the suit was substantially one to set aside a decree.

Held, that the onus of proving the validity and propriety of the settlement proceedings upon which he relied had been properly thrown on the defendant.

Circumstances under which an Appellate Court will not allow additional evidence to be produced, at the hearing of an appeal, under s. 508 of the Civil Procedure Code.

[F., 19 C.I.J. 29 (33)=18 C.W.N. 271 (273).]

The plaintiffs, who were the mokuraridars of taulk Jamjari, brought this suit to obtain khas possession of mouza Sarisbad which was situate within that taulk, and which was in the [766] possession of the defendants. They alleged that the mouza was in the possession of the defendants, and had been in the possession of their father during his lifetime as a chakran tenure in consideration of certain services performed for the plaintiffs and their father, and that those services had been terminated in the year 1291 (1883-1884), when they dismissed the defendants from their service. They accordingly claimed to be entitled to recover khas possession.

The defendants stated that the mouza had been in the possession of themselves and their father for the last 50 years, not as chakran, but as dur mokurari tenure, and they attempted to prove that fact by the production of a pottah. They further stated that at the time when the settlement was made under the Sonthal Pergunnahs Settlement Regulation (III of 1872,) the tenure had been recorded as a dur mokurari tenure, 14 annas being recorded in the name of their father and 2

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 161 of 1888, against the decree of R. Carstairs, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Sonthal Pergunnahs, dated the 4th of October 1887, affirming the decree of F. J. Monahan, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Jamtara, dated the 13th of August 1887.
annas in the name of the defendant No. 3, and they contended that, inasmuch as the settlement was made on the 5th June 1877 and this suit was not instituted till the 12th January 1887, it was barred by the special limitation provided by s. 25 of that Regulation.

They further pleaded that, as they and their father before them had been in possession for more than 12 years before suit, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover khas possession.

The plaintiffs on the other hand in their plaint stated that they had come to know of the alleged settlement in the year 1875, and charged that the defendants had obtained the settlement by fraud, defendant No. 1 stating that the dur mokurari rent was Rs. 7 per annum, and they denied that the record of rights had been published as required by the provisions of s. 24 of the Regulation. They also denied that the defendants had ever paid any rent for the mouzah.

The other contentions of fact pleaded by the defendants are not material for the purpose of this report, as both the lower Courts decided the case on its merits against them.

The first Court found that the record of rights had not been published by posting it conspicuously in the village, and as it considered on the authority of Ram Narain Singh v. Ram Runjan [767] Chuckerbutty (1) that this was essential to the due publication, it held that the suit was consequently not barred by the period of limitation provided by s. 25 of the Regulation. It further found that there was sufficient evidence of fraud on the part of the defendants in causing the settlement to be made within the meaning of s. 18 of the Limitation Act; that the fraud first became known to the plaintiffs in Falgoon 1290 (February-March 1884); and that the suit had been instituted within the three years allowed.

Upon the question as to whether the suit was barred by 12 years limitation under art. 144 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, it held that there was no proof that the defendants' possession became adverse to the plaintiffs' before the year 1291 (1883-84), and consequently that the suit was not barred. It found all the issues on the merits in favour of the plaintiffs, and amongst them held that the pottah relied on by the defendants, but which was not produced [the defendants accounting for the non-production of the original thereof by stating that it had been stolen in the year 1283 B. S. (1876-77)] had not been proved. It further held that the defendants had failed to prove the tenure to be dur mokurari, and that, although the evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs to prove it to be chakran was not strong, still that they had made out their right to obtain khas possession, and accordingly gave them a decree.

On appeal the Deputy Commissioner confirmed the finding of the lower Court as to the non-publication of the record of rights under s. 24 and as to the suit not being barred by the limitation prescribed by s. 25 of the Regulation, nor by the period of 12 years prescribed by art. 144.

On the merits the Deputy Commissioner came to the same conclusion as the lower Court, holding that the onus of proving the tenure to be dur mokurari had been rightly cast on the defendants, and that they had failed to discharge it, and further holding that the plaintiffs had proved the tenure to be chakran.

He accordingly dismissed the appeal with costs. The defendants now appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Beverley, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J.—This suit was brought by the plaintiffs, who are mokuradars of a certain taluk called Jamjari, to obtain khas possession of mouza Sarisbad, which lies within the taluk. The mouza is at present in the possession of the defendants, and was before that in the possession of their father, Tara Churn Sinha. The plaintiffs' case was that the lands were in the possession of the defendants, and of their father before them, as chakran lands, i.e., that they were held by the defendants in consideration of certain services to be rendered by them; and they allege that these services were terminated in 1291, when the defendants were dismissed from the plaintiffs' service; and that at that time the plaintiffs became entitled to khas possession of the mouza.

The defendants' allegation was that the mouza had been in their possession and the possession of their predecessor in title for the last fifty years, not as chakran lands, but in dur mokurari tenure; and they attempted to prove their dur mokurari right by the production of a pottah purporting to create that tenure. They further alleged that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by the ordinary law of limitation, that is to say, by adverse possession of twelve years, and by the special law of limitation prescribed by s. 25 of Regulation III of 1872.

Both the lower Courts have decreed the plaintiffs' suit; and on second appeal it has been argued by the learned counsel for the defendants, appellants, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous in law, and the following among other points have been relied upon: In the first place it was contended that both the lower Courts have put an erroneous construction upon s. 24 of the Regulation. That section says: "After the Settlement Officer shall have made the record of rights for any village, he shall notify and publish the contents of such record to the persons interested by posting it conspicuously in the village and otherwise in such manner as may be convenient."

[769] The learned counsel contends that the true construction of this section is to leave it to the discretion of the Settlement Officer to publish the record of rights in any manner that he may deem convenient. In fact, Mr. O'Kinealy's argument is that the conjunction "and" between the words "village," and "otherwise" should be read "or." We think that this is an erroneous view. What the section says and means is that a record of rights must (that is, it is compulsory on the Settlement Officer to do it) be notified and published in the manner directed therein, that is, by posting it conspicuously in the village; and that it is discretionary with the Settlement Officer to publish it in any other manner that he may think convenient for the purpose of informing persons interested in the settlement proceedings of the result of the inquiry which he had made.

The second point urged by the learned counsel is, that the burden of proof has been wrongly placed upon the defendants in this case. It is contended that this is substantially a suit brought by the plaintiffs to set aside a decree, because s. 11 of the Regulation is in these words: "Except as provided in s. 25, no suit shall lie in any Civil Court regarding any matter decided by any Settlement Court under these rules; but the decisions and orders of the Settlement Courts made under these rules regarding the rights and interests abovementioned shall have the force of a decree of Court;" and Mr. O’Kinealy contends that this is practically a suit to set aside a decree, and the onus ought to have been placed on the plaintiffs. We think that this is not a correct view to take of the suit. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging that these lands were in the possession of the defendants as chakran lands; that the service in respect of which the lands had been granted had terminated; and that they, therefore, became entitled to khas possession; and the defendants’ answer to that was the settlement proceedings; and thereupon it became, we think, clearly the duty of the defendants to establish the plea which went to defeat the plaintiffs’ claim. I think that the illustration which I suggested to Mr. O’Kinealy in the course of the argument is an apt one, that the nature of the defence is substantially equivalent to a plea [770] of res judicata; and under these circumstances, it is admitted that it would be on the defendant to establish the decree upon which he relied as operating as res judicata. So is it, we think, here. The onus was properly placed on the defendants to substantiate the validity and propriety of the settlement proceedings upon which they relied. These two objections are really the only points of law which have been argued. The other objections taken by the learned counsel are nothing more than questions of fact.

Mr. O’Kinealy complains of the finding of the Deputy Commissioner with regard to the defendants’ contention that they were dur mokurari-dars; and he impugns the reasons which have induced him to come to that conclusion. These reasons may be right or wrong; but there is the finding of the Deputy Commissioner where he says: “I must agree with the lower Court that the dur mokurari tenure has not been proved,” and there is an end, as far as we are concerned as a Court of second appeal, of that question. Similarly, we think that the finding of the lower appellate Court with regard to the affirmative case made by the plaintiffs, that these lands were chakran lands, is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere on second appeal.

There remains only one more point to be considered, and it is this: The defendants in the Courts below relied upon a pottah. The Deputy Commissioner has found that the pottah never existed, that it was a fabrication. Mr. O’Kinealy asks us to give his client an opportunity of adducing further evidence to show that this pottah really had an existence, and was not altogether a myth; and he relies upon an affidavit of his client which states that, while this case was pending in the lower Courts, a list was sent to the deponent in which mention was made of a suit and a decree of about the year 1841, in which this pottah was referred to. The affidavit states that the deponent went to the Beebhoom Court; and upon inquiry in the record office he was told that no such record existed. Then it states that the deponent subsequently showed the list to a friend, who told him that he was misinformed; that when the number of the case and date are given, there must be such [771] a record existing; that subsequently search was made under the orders of the District Judge, and such record discovered.

In the first place it seems to us very doubtful whether, under s. 568 of the Civil Procedure Code, we have the power to admit this evidence; and, in the second place, if we have the power, we do not think sufficient cause has been shown to render it wise for us to exercise it. The statements in the affidavit appear to be of an extremely strange character. One would have thought that the party who had this list sent to him would, in the first instance, have shown it to his pleader, and that his pleader would have taken steps to have the record office at Beerbhoom searched in order to find out whether the record in question existed. It is not necessary for us to express any opinion as to whether the documents now sought to be put in are or are not genuine. It is sufficient to say that no ground has been made out for the application, which indeed is a novel one, to put in these documents at this stage of the case.

The result is that the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Rampini.

Durga Churn Rai Chowdhry (Defendant) v. Monmohini Das (Plaintiff).* [18th June, 1888.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 270, 295—Claim under s. 295—Attachment—Assignment.

A claim under s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code is not enforceable as an attachment against which an assignment is rendered void by the provisions of s. 276. Gang Dor v. Khushali (1) followed.

In June 1883 A, B and C obtained separate money decrees against, amongst others, T as executor under the will of his father. Some time in 1884 B attached the whole of the testator’s properties in execution of his decree; and A and C applied for rateable shares in the sale proceeds. On the 2nd June 1884 the parties came to an arrangement, by which it was agreed that B’s claims should be satisfied by means of all the attached properties with the exception of one, which should be left free for the benefit of the other judgment-creditors. By a deed, dated the 16th June, but which was found to have been actually executed on the 17th, T conveyed this property to A; and on the 17th June all the other attached properties were sold in execution of B’s decree; and on the same day B put in an application for the removal of his attachment from this property. D, another decree-holder on the 16th June, applied to be included in the rateable distribution of the properties attached by B; and on the 30th June D attached the property sold to A in execution of his decree. A preferred a claim to the property, which was disallowed; and A thereupon brought a suit to establish her right to it on the ground inter alia that B’s attachment had ceased to exist on the date of her purchase, and that the sale was a valid one.

Held, that the sale to A was valid as against D.

Monmohini Das (the plaintiff), Radha Mohan Mondul (defendant No. 2) and Radika Pershad Mondul had each obtained a money decree on the 25th June 1883 in the Court of the District Judge of the 24-Pargunahs against one Kunjo Behary Bose personally and Thacakurs Kur (defendant No. 3) as executor of the estate of his father Mohesh Chunder.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1561, of 1887, against the decree of C. B. Garret, Esq., Judge of 24-Pargunahs, dated the 13th of April 1887, reversing the decree of Baboo Kristo Chunder Chatterji, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 28th of December 1885.

(1) 7 A. 702.
Kur. In execution of Radha Mohun's decree, all the properties belonging to the estate of Mohesh Chunder Kur, including Bownia Abad (the property in dispute in this suit), were attached and ordered to be sold on the 7th May 1884. Before the day fixed for the sale, Monmohini, the plaintiff, and Radika Pershad Mondul applied to have their respective decrees satisfied by a rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of the attached properties, but made no application for attachment. These parties then seem to have come to an arrangement, by which Thakurdas undertook to satisfy the claim of Radha Mohun by means of all the other properties except Bownia Abad, which was to be left free for the other judgment-debtors; and on the 2nd June a petition was presented for the adjournment of the sale to the 17th. This arrangement was embodied in the petition of the 2nd June, in which Thacurdas promised to satisfy Radha Mohun's claims within fifteen days, and agreed that in default Radha Mohun should be at liberty to proceed with the sale of all the attached properties with the exception of Bownia Abad. To this arrangement Radha Mohun signified his assent to the Court through his pleader; and the sale was postponed to the 17th June.

[773] Thacurdas having failed to pay off Radha Mohun, all the attached properties, excepting Bownia Abad, were sold on the 17th June; and on that day Radha Mohun put in an application for the release of Bownia Abad from attachment.

On the 14th June Durga Churn Rai Chowdhry (defendant No. 1) made an application for the execution of the money decree he also held against Thacurdas; and on the same day this decree was transferred to the Judge's Court for execution. On the 16th June Durga Churn applied to be included in the rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of the properties attached under Radha Mohun's decree; and on the 30th June Durga Churn attached Bownia Abad in execution of his decree. Meanwhile, by a deed of sale, bearing date the 16th June 1884, Thacurdas conveyed Bownia Abad to the plaintiff Monmohini Dasi.

On the strength of this deed of sale Monmohini Dasi preferred a claim to Bownia Abad against Durga Churn's attachment, which was disallowed.

Monmohini Dasi, thereupon, brought this suit on 1st November 1884 in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, for a declaration of her rights to Bownia Abad on the ground, amongst others, that the attachment of Radha Mohun had ceased to exist on the 16th June, the date of her purchase, and that the sale was valid. The defendant Durga Churn on the other hand contended that the property had not been released from attachment on the date of the conveyance to the plaintiff and prior to his attachment, and that the sale was illegal and void.

The Subordinate Judge found that the deed of sale was actually executed on the 17th June and that it had been fraudulently antedated and was a fabricated document. He held that there was no valid or legal attachment on Bownia Abad on the date of the plaintiff's purchase; but dismissed the suit on the ground that it was based on a fabricated deed of sale.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, who agreed with the Subordinate Judge on the question of the existence of any attachment on the property on the date of the plaintiff's purchase, and as to the date of execution of the deed of sale, but differed from him [774] "in thinking that the conveyance was intrinsi-cally vicious;" and as no fraud had been actually committed on Durga Churn by it, he was of opinion that the deed was good as against him.
He accordingly allowed the appeal.

The defendant Durga Churn appealed to the High Court.
Mr. Evans and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, for the appellant.
Mr. Wodroffe and Baboo Tarapado Chowdhry, for the respondent.
The judgment of the Court (Pigot and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

We do not think it necessary to call upon the learned counsel for the respondent. We have already intimated that as to the question of fraud, the lower appellate Court was right upon the matters argued before it. A question of fraud, which might perhaps have been a substantial and serious one, viz., that under s. 53 of Transfer of Property Act, was not taken by the parties or by the Court in either of the Courts below; and, following the ordinary rule, we think ourselves unable to take it here, although it is raised in the first paragraph of the memorandum of appeal.

As to the second point, viz., the construction of s. 276, Code of Civil Procedure, we are driven to adopt the same rule as the Allahabad Court has done in the case of Ganga Din v. Khushali (1). In truth, to reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court upon this point, it would be necessary to do that which the Legislature has abstained from doing, that is, to provide that a petition presented under s. 295 shall have the same effect as an attachment. To hold that claims under s. 295 are claims enforceable by attachment against which assignments made under s. 276 are void, would perhaps be carrying out the intention that may have been in the mind of the Legislature when the old Code, which did not provide for a rateable distribution, was suddenly modified by the introduction of that perfectly new principle. Unfortunately the sections of the Code relating to execution were not re-cast so as to be fully adapted to the new state of things, and it appears [775] to us that in this respect s. 276 had not been successfully framed with the object of protecting rateable distribution amongst claimants under s. 295. We need say no more than express our concurrence in the decision in Ganga Din v. Khushali (1), and, that being so, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

CRIMINAL MOTION.

Before Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Rampini.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF DIN TARINI DEBI.*

[15th August, 1888.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 503—"Purdah-nashin" woman—Examination by commission—Personal appearance in Court.

A Hindu lady having been summoned as a witness on behalf of an accused applied under s. 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to be examined by commission on the ground (inter alia) that she was a "purdah-nashin," and

* Criminal Miscellaneous Motion, No. 31 of 1888, against the order of summons issued by F. J. Marsden, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 3rd of August 1888.

(1) 7 A. 702.
that her enforced appearance in a Criminal Court would entail a forfeiture of her dignity and position in Hindu society.

Held, that such application was properly made under the section, and that under the circumstances of the case the order prayed for could be made. [Expl. 24 C. 551 (355); R., 12 A. 69 (72)=9 A.W.N. 202; 2 Weir 659; 169 Pl.R. 1903=19 P.R.1903 (Cr.)]

The facts upon which the rule was issued are as follows:

The Chief Presidency Magistrate having framed a charge of attempting to cheat against four persons arraigned before him for having committed that offence, one of the four persons so accused applied for the issue of a summons to one Din Tarini Debi, a Brahmin widow, as a witness on her behalf. The summons being duly issued was served upon the lady on the 7th of August; she thereupon on the 8th August applied to the Magistrate for an order dispensing with her attendance in his Court, and for the issue of a commission to take her evidence under s. 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In support of this application it was alleged on her behalf that she was a purdah-nashin lady not in the habit of appearing in public, that she resided in her native village of Goverdanga at a distance of 37 miles from Calcutta, and that her attendance at the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate would therefore entail upon her "inconvenience" of a kind contemplated by the provisions of the section on which her application was based. It was further alleged on behalf of the applicant that, in the event of the Magistrate not feeling justified in granting such application, she was ready and willing to travel to Calcutta and submit herself for examination as a witness in a house she would secure for that purpose if the Magistrate would be pleased to attend at such house for the taking of her evidence on a day to be hereafter fixed by him. The Magistrate refused to make the order prayed for or entertain the alternative proposal made.

On the 9th of August the applicant moved the High Court (Wilson and Rampini, JJ.) under the provisions of s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for a rule to be issued upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why the order for the issue of a commission for the purpose of taking her evidence under s. 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should not be granted. The material averments in the petition on which the motion was made were as follows:

"That your petitioner is a resident of Goverdanga in the sub-division of Barasat in the district of the 24-Pergunnahs, which is about 37 miles distant from the Court of the said Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta.

"That your petitioner is a Hindu purdah-nashin lady of rank, living on income derived from her own zamindari and other sources exceeding the sum of Rs. 5,000, and that your petitioner is connected with other respectable zamindars, and that according to Hindu manners and customs your petitioner never appears before the public.

"That your petitioner has never up to this time attended any Court of Justice anywhere, either civil or criminal, to give evidence or for other purposes, and that if your petitioner be compelled to appear in the said Presidency Magistrate's Court she will for ever lose her dignity and position in society.

"That your petitioner, should she be forced to appear in a Criminal Court of a Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, will suffer degradation in the eyes of her own associates and [777] in the society to which she belongs, of a kind which nothing your petitioner shall hereafter do will ever remove or even modify. In running the risk of experiencing such degradation by a literal compliance with the order contained in the summons issued by the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, a true copy of which is hereto appended and marked A, your petitioner submits that she, as she alleges through no fault of her own, but entirely through her misfortune, will suffer such inconvenience, as is specified in s. 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as will entitle her to the relief to be hereafter asked for in the prayer attached to the petition.'

Upon that application the High Court (Wilson and Rampini, JJ.)
on 9th August issued the following rule:—

"In this case, as far as we can judge, it does seem to be a hardship that this lady should be required to give evidence in Court. The better course would be to issue a rule upon the Magistrate to show cause, which he will do by a letter to us, why it should not be ordered that this lady should not be required to appear in Court. We intimate to the Magistrate that we think he should not enforce her attendance under the sumpren, provided she does what she says she is willing to do, that is, comes to Calcutta and gives her evidence in such suitable place, either within the Court building or not, under such circumstances to be arranged by the Magistrate as to secure that she may be examined in the presence of the accused, and at the same time not be exposed to the inconvenience of coming into the public Court room.

"We would ask the Magistrate to let us know what arrangements he proposes to make in this matter, and if, as we have no doubt will be the case, those arrangements seem to us suitable, no further order will be necessary."

The rule now came on to be heard.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), for the Crown.

Mr. Reily, Dr. Guru Dass Banerji and Baboo Surendro Nath Dass, for the petitioner.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate, in a letter addressed to the High Court, contended that the Code of Criminal Procedure did not contemplate a Magistrate being called upon to take the evidence of a witness under commission or otherwise other than in his [778] Court; that the expense and inconvenience which would be caused should any innovation of this rule be permitted by the High Court would be very great, and would encourage innumerable applications of a similar kind being made in the Criminal Courts. The Magistrate further alleged that the petitioner apparently was frequently in the habit of travelling between Govardanga and Calcutta, that she was not a lady of exalted rank, and that she had been granted the privilege of attending Court and giving her evidence in a palki—a practice invariably followed in the Court of the Magistrate.

The Advocate-General.—Section 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, applies to all people, whether males or females, irrespective of rank or position; it may apply to the condition of a witness as included within the term "circumstances of the case" but does not relate to the privileges and immunities of witnesses, and therefore does not apply to a purdanashin woman. Her case must depend on the general law under which she claims exemption. This exemption has not been allowed within the term of living memory either by the High Court in its Criminal jurisdiction or in the Police Court. It has always been deemed a necessary condition to a criminal trial that the Court should hear the evidence of the witness, and no inconvenience worth consideration has been supposed to apply to the case of a woman coming into a Court of Justice in a palik and giving her evidence therefrom. The petitioner avers that the fact of her being forced into entering a Criminal Court would be degrading to her position; the Court will be careful not to encourage this belief by any undue regard for her susceptibilities. The Court should not encourage such a belief or notion, as numbers of highly respectable native ladies have given evidence in Court from palikas.

Mr. Reily, for the petitioner.—The word "inconvenience" has already been held to apply to the case of a purda-nashin lady who can furnish substantial reasons for her reluctance to appear in a Criminal Court—see In the matter of the Petition of Farid-un Nissa (1); also In the matter of the Petition of Hurroo Soondery (2). This reluctance may be a matter of mere prejudice, but is nevertheless a sentiment on which native society as at present [779] constituted sets great store. The Legislature has expressly recognized the existence of this feeling by giving immunity to certain persons from appearing in Civil Courts. The petitioner in this case is the widow of a Brahmin, a lady of some means, and in order to give proof of the genuineness of her objections is willing to pay the costs which may be incurred in connection with the issue of the commission.

The judgment of the High Court (O’Kinealy and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This was an application made by Srimati Din Tarini Debi asking that she might be examined by commission and not examined on oath in Court under s. 503 of the Code. In her application she sets forth that she was a purdah-nashin and a Brahmin, connected with a family of acknowledged respectability and possessed of considerable property, and she prayed that what had been done in some previous cases might be done in her case, namely, that she might not be compelled to appear in Court. On that application a rule was issued to show cause, and cause has been shown by the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta and by the Crown. The Crown objects, because the lady in her petition said that it was a degradation for her to appear in a public Court, and the learned Advocate-General argued that it would be intolerable to allow such a principle to receive the sanction of this Court. No doubt the phrase is objectionable, and it would be impossible, as the learned Advocate-General says, to admit the fact that merely appearing in Court is a degradation. Yet we do not think that disposes of the case.

There is no doubt that such applications have been granted under s. 503, and granted on the principle that in matters of procedure the customs and habits of the people should be taken into consideration. The learned Presidency Magistrate has shown cause by saying that it is the invariable custom for purdah nashin ladies to be examined in palikis in Court, but that is not exactly the question. The question is whether a commission ever issued in regard to purdah-nashin ladies in his Court. Of that he makes no mention. He also says that this lady travels from Goverdanga to Calcutta, but he does not say that she does so publicly. So far therefore as cause has been shown by the [780] learned Magistrate, it does not seem that the facts stated by him affect the reasons upon which such commissions have been granted. Looking to the nature of the application and to the fact that the lady has actually taken a house in Calcutta not far from the Magistrate's Court where she can be examined; that no possible inconvenience can arise to any person; and further that the lady has volunteered to pay the expenses of the commission, and even the defence do not require her to be examined in open Court, we can see no reason why this rule should not be enforced and we make it absolute.

We further direct by consent that the petitioner shall be bound to pay all costs consequent on the issue of the commission in Calcutta, which the learned Magistrate in the Court below shall deem reasonable and proper.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Ghose.

[7th June, 1888.]

Indian Law—Inheritance—Dayabhaga School—Brother’s daughter’s son—Great-grandson of paternal grandfather.

A brother’s daughter’s son does not succeed in preference to a great-grandson of the patern al grandfather of the deceased.

[R., 26 C. 285 (291)]

This was a suit brought to recover possession of a three annas four gundas’ share in certain immovable properties.

One Ramkishore Bundopadhyya, the original proprietor of the estate, portion of which formed the subject of this suit, died leaving him surviving four sons and one grandson, Issur Chunder (a daughter’s son), leaving to his said grandson a one-fifth share in his estate and to his four sons the remaining four-fifth shares.

[781] Ramnarain, the fourth son of Ramkishore, died leaving him surviving two sons, Gopal Chunder and Nobin Chunder, on whom the one-fifth share of their father in the estate of Ramnarain devolved.

Gopal Chunder died leaving him surviving Bama Churn and Benode Behari (the plaintiffs), sons of a deceased daughter, him surviving; and with the consent of the plaintiffs Nobin Chunder took charge of his own and the plaintiffs’ share in the property. Nobin Chunder died in 1281 (his wife having predeceased him), leaving no issue.

At the time of the death of Nobin Chunder, the plaintiffs and Huri Das Bundopadhyya (defendant No. 1), Becharam Bundopadhyya (the husband of defendant No. 2), grandsons by a son of a brother of Ramnarain, were alive. On the plaintiffs endeavouring to take possession of their own share and that formerly belonging to Nobin Chunder the defendants forcibly prevented them from so doing. The plaintiffs therefore brought the present suit to recover possession.

The defendants alleged that Nobin was a lunatic, at the time the succession opened out, and contended that beyond this they, being the great grandsoms of Ramkishore, were his heirs in preference to the plaintiffs.

The Munsif held that if Nobin had not been a lunatic at the time of his father’s death, then the plaintiffs as his brother’s daughter’s sons would have been his heirs in preference to the father of the defendants, but finding him to have been a lunatic dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who found that Nobin was of sound mind when his father died, and holding [782], the plaintiffs to be preferential heirs to the defendants reversed the decision of the Munsif.

Defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Troylokyanath Mitter and Baboo Grish Chunder Choudhry, for the appellant.

Dr. Guru Das Banerjee, Babu Krishna Kanai Bhattacharjee and Baboo Mohit Chunder Bose, for the respondents.

Baboo Troylokyanath Mitter (for the appellant).—I contend that the appellant is a preferential heir to the brother’s daughter’s sons of the deceased Nobin. The cases in support of my contention are; Gobind Talookdar v. Mohesh Chunder Surmah Ghuttack (1); Jugnat Narain Singh v. Collector of Manbhum (2); In re Oodooy Churn Mitter (3); Gopal Chunder Nath Coondoo v. Haridas Chini (4); Onia Chund Biswas’ case (unreported), Sp. App. 2640 of 1875, decided on the 6th June 1887 by Mitter and Birch, JJ., in which a brother’s daughter’s son and an uncle’s daughter’s son were excluded by the grandfather’s great-grandson; Dwarka Nath Sircar’s case (unreported), Sp. App. 754 of 1880, decided on the 22nd June 1881, and Sp. App. No. 1747 of 1880, decided on the 6th July 1882, by Field Bose, JJ. Pran Nath Surma Jowardar v. Surat Chandra Bhattacharjee (5) does not apply; the competition there was between a brother’s son’s daughter’s son and an uncle’s daughter’s son. There the former was preferred. There is also the unreported case of Abhoy Chunder Dey v. Huro Sundary, decided on the 25th April 1884 by Garth, C. J., and Beverley, J. The case of Hureekar v. Woomesh Chunder Roy (6) holds the passage of Dayakrama Sangraha to be an interpolation and the case of Gooroo Gobind Shaха v. Anund Lal Ghose (7) shows that those who offer funeral cakes to the paternal ancestors of the deceased [783] are preferred to those offering cakes to his maternal ancestor only. The precise position of the brother's daughter's son is not determined in that case—see p. 62. In the case of Kevy Kolitani v. Momee Ram Kolita (1) Jagannatha is expressed by Mitter, J., to be the highest authority in Hindu law. As to the right of daughter's sons to inherit, see Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 6, para. 9; Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. 1, s. 1, s. I, para. 4. As to the brother's right to succession, see Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. I, s. 7, paras. 1 and 4. The performance of the sraddh is not the sole ground for right of succession—see 2 Colebrooke's Digest (Calc. Ed.), 544; Sarvadhikari's Tagore Lectures, 763.

As regards the text authorities on the question whether a grandfather's great grandson is to be preferred to a brother's daughter's son, a brother's daughter's son cannot be forced into the list of heirs given in the Dayabhaga before a grandfather's great grandson. The list of heirs in the Dayabhaga is exhaustive; it goes through the heirs from the widow down to the great-grandfather's daughter's son—see Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 1, para. 1. First comes the son, then grandson, then great grandson, and then widow. Para. 44 shows that the reason for succession is spiritual benefit and not performance of the sraddha. Section 2, para. 1 of Ch. XI, Dayabhaga, deals with daughter's right; s. 2, paras. 29 and 25, with daughter's sons; and a son's daughter's son and grandson's daughter's son are excluded. Section 3, para. 1, deals with the father's right; s. 4, paras. 1 to 6, with the mother's right; s. 5, paras. 1, 8, 9 and 12, with the brother's right; s. 6, para. 1 with the brother's son; s. 6, paras. 5 and 6, with brother's grandson. In s. 6, para. 7, the brother's great grandson is excluded. If it had been intended to include in the list of heirs a brother's daughter's son he would have been named here. Section 6, para. 8, deals with a father's daughter's son; paras. 9 and 10 with the grandfather's descendants including the daughter's son. Para. 12 gives the heirs in the maternal line, and para. 11 shows that women inherit by express texts. To bring in a brother's daughter's son and nephew's daughter's son before a grandfather you must bring in a son's daughter's son, grandson's daughter's son before the father, but [784] for that there is no place in the Dayabhaga; Sree Krishna's Commentaries on the Dayabhaga.

The Dayatatwa in Ch. XI, paras. 4, 13, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 58, 65, 67, 68, gives the following order of succession to a person who leaves no male issue: "Male issue;" wife; daughter; maiden and married daughters; daughter's son; parents; brothers; brother's son; grandfather; grandfather's descendants; great-grandfather's descendants. Paras. 67 and 68 make para. 64 clear, viz., that the list does not go further down than daughter's son. The Dayakrama Sangraha is in my favour, excepting the interpolated passage. Ch. 1, s. 10, paras. 9 and 13, must be interpolated, as a son's daughter's son and grandson's son ought to have come in before the father, which s. 5 does not note. Further, a brother's son's daughter's son, uncle's son's daughter's son, and greatuncle's son's daughter's son should have been mentioned to make the thing logically complete—see also Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. IV. p. 227 (Calc. Ed.). The Dayakrama Sangraha is not always followed as regards the efficacy of pindas. Pindas to paternal ancestors are more efficacious than those to maternal ancestors—4 Colebrooke's Digest (Calc. Ed.), 230, and Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lall Ghose (2). Originally only three paternal ancestors got pindas; maternal ancestors never—Menu.

Ch. IX, s. 186, p. 269, quoted in Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 1, para. 40; see also Sarvadhirjani, 766, 767; and the Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. I, s. 10, para. 8, shows that the uncle's grandson is preferred to the grandfather's daughter's son, because the former is a sapinda and the latter not so. Then as to the effect of performance of the sraddha, the Purana Sraddha first to the paternal ancestors, next to the maternal ancestors.

As a conclusive test, suppose there to be a father, grandfather, and great-grandfather living, the maternal ancestors being dead, then no pindas to the latter are given; but if the latter are living and the former dead, then pindas to the former are given—see the Sraddha Tattawa, 139. Another test is that in the paternal line full pindas to three ancestors are given, divided pindas to three ancestors higher in succession, water to seven higher, [785] but in the maternal line after the three ancestors no higher ancestors are at all benefited. If two brothers related by the half blood are living in joint mess, the eldest performs the sraddha of their paternal ancestors and also of his three maternal ancestors. The younger brother cannot claim to perform the sraddha of his three maternal ancestors. See the Sraddha Tattwa (Seram. Ed.), p. 160, as to pindas to maternal ancestors. A brother's daughter's son may never give pinda to his maternal grandfather whose property he inherits, because his father may be living, and he is thus incapable of performing porban.

If the respondent's contention is correct, then the whole course of the Hindu law of succession as at present obtaining becomes unsettled. For example, commence with the late owner's own descendants; then (a) a daughter's son would equal a son so far as spiritual benefit is concerned, and (b) a son's daughter's son would equal a grandson, and (c) a grandson's daughter's son would equal a great-grandson, but (b) and (c) do not succeed according to any authority of Hindu Law before the descendants of the great grandfather. If there were no difference in the pindas, how is it that Dayakrama Sangraha prefers the mother's grandson, who gives one pinda to the sister's son who gives three pindas, and to the brother's daughter's son who gives two pindas?—see Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. I, ss. 9 and 10. Further, a long course of decision, even if wrong, the Courts will not as a rule set aside—see Lungessur Koer v. Sookha Ojna (1); also Thakoorain Sahiba v. Mohun Lall (2); Koer Goolab Singh v. Rao Kurun Singh (3); Abilakh Singh v. Klub Lall (4).

Dr. Gurudas Bauerjee (with him Baboo Krishna Kamal Bhattacharjee and Baboo Mohit Chunder Bose), for the respondents.

A brother's daughter's son is a sapinda; this is settled by the cases of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (5) and Digumber Roy Chowdhry v. Moti Lal Bundopadhyja (6); and the only point for argument is whether his position in the order of [786] succession is higher than that of the paternal grandfather's great-grandson. The authorities bearing on this question bearing out my argument that a brother's daughter's son succeeds in preference to a great-grandson of the paternal grandfather may be considered under three heads: (a) original authorities; (b) later text-writers, both European and Native; and (c) decisions of Courts of Justice. Under the first heading may be quoted Dayabhag, Ch. XI, s. 1, paras. 32-40; Ch. XI, s. 2, para. 17; Ch. XI, s. 3, para. 3; Ch. XI, s. 6, paras. 5-32; the Dayatata, Ch. XI, paras. 27, 81-65 (Golap Chandra Sarkar's translation). In the translation para. 64 is somewhat different from the original—see Raghunandana’s work, the Sraddha Tattwa (Serampur Ed.), Vol. II, p. 109; and the same work (Serampur Ed.), Vol. I p. 123. The Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. I, s. 2, is expressly in point, and the only question is as to the authenticity of this passage; as to this see Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (1); Halhed’s Gentoo Law, 35; Colebrooke’s Digest (Mad. Ed.), Vol. II, p. 566; Maenaghten’s Pr. of H. L., p. 29; 1 Strange, H. L. 148; 2 Strange H. L., 253-258; the Vyavastha Darpana (last Ed.), pp. 94-95; and on the main point Srinatha’s Comm. on the Dayabhaga (Bharat Chandra Siromani’s edition), p. 302.

Under the second heading the following authorities may be referred to: Halhed’s Gentoo Law, p. 35; Colebrooke in the note to the translation of the Commentary on Ch. XI, s. 6 of the Dayabhag; Maenaghten’s Pr. of H. L., 29-31; Elberling, p. 79; Prasannakumar Tagore Vyav. Darp. (2nd Ed.), 274 Shamacharan Sarkar’s Vyav. Darp. (2nd Ed.), 279-287; Mayne’s Hindu Law, paras. 469-499; Rajkumar Sarvadhiikari’s Tagore Law Lectures, pp. 810 et seq.

The only writer who takes an opposite view is Jagannatha (2 Col. Dig.), 567, but he is not an original authority, and even as a text-writer his opinion has often been disregarded. See Macn. Com. H. L., Preface VIII; 1 Strange’s H. L., XVII-XIX; Colebrooke’s Letters to Strange, Vyav. Darp., Prf. XXV; Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (1); Kery Kolitani v. Moneram Kolita (2).

[787] Under the third heading I cite the following; Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (1); Digumber Roy Chowdhry v. Moti Lal Bundopadhya (3). And of the cases against me that of Gobind Pershad Talookdar v. Mohesh Chunder Surmah Ghuttack (4) is the only case in which the question was discussed, the other cases simply following that case, and some of these latter cases were cases under Act XXVII of 1860, in which the question of title was only summarily considered. As for the case of Gobind Pershad Talookdar v. Mohesh Chunder Surmah Ghuttack (4); that is based upon a misconception as to the effect of a pinda offered to a maternal ancestor, and it is supported only by the authority of Jagannatha, and I submit that is not sufficient to outweigh the authority of Srikrishna.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The property in dispute in this case belonged to one Nobin Chunder Bundopadhya; and the question raised before us in appeal is whether or no the plaintiff, who is the brother’s daughter’s son of the said Nobin Chunder, is preferential heir to the defendants, who are his (Nobin’s) paternal grandfather’s great grandsons. The parties are governed by the Dayabhaga school of law.

This question is indeed a difficult one. In the case of Gobindo Hureekar v. Womesh Chunder Roy (5) it was held by a Bench of three Judges of this Court that a father’s brother’s daughter’s son is no heir according to Hindu Law. This decision was subsequently overruled in the case of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (1), it being then held that according to the true interpretation of the Dayabhag, and the “principle of spiritual benefit which constitutes the fundamental basis of the Law of Inheritance, propounded by the Dayabhaga," a father's brother's daughter's son, who occupies a position analogous to that occupied by a brother's daughter's son, was a sapinda and an heir. The precise position which he was entitled to occupy in the rank of heirs was, however, left undetermined in that case.

[788] The question as to whether a brother's daughter's son is entitled to succeed as against a great grandson of the paternal grandfather, and which is the very question we have to determine in this case, was subsequently discussed in the case of Gobind Pershad Talookdar v. Woomesh Chunder Surmah Ghutluck (1) before a Bench of two Judges, consisting of Sir Richard Couch and Mr. Justice Ainslie, and it was held that a brother's daughter's son though an heir according to the Full Bench decision in the case of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose, could not have a preferential title to the great grandson of the paternal grandfather. And it appears that this decision has been followed in several cases—see Oodoy Churn Mitter, In re (2); Juggut Narain Singh v. Collector of Manbhum (3); Gopal Chunder Nath Coondoo v. Haridas Chini (4); also three unreported cases, Special Appeal No. 2640 of 1875, decided on the 6th June 1877 by Mitter and Brich, JJ.; Special Appeal No. 1747 of 1880, decided on the 6th July 1882 by Field and Bose, JJ., and Special Appeal No. 754 of 1880, decided on the 22nd June 1881. In the case of Digumber Ray Chowdhry v. Moti Lal Bundopadhy (5), decided by a Full Bench of this Court, the question was raised as between a brother's daughter's son and a great-great-great-grandson of the great-great-great-grandfather of the deceased owner, and it was held that the latter, being only a sakulya, was not entitled to succeed in preference to a brother's daughter's son, he being a cognate sapinda.

We have it then, as decided by two Full Bench decisions, that brother's daughter's son is a sapinda and heir, and that he is entitled to succeed in preference to a sakulya; but that, as held by several Division Benches, his succession is to be postponed to agnate sapindas, such as a great-grandson of the paternal grandfather of the deceased owner.

The decisions of the Divisional Benches which have taken this latter view of the matter have, however, been questioned before us by Dr. Guru Das Banerji for the respondent, his contention being that if "the principle of spiritual benefit which constitutes," [789] according to the Full Bench decision in the case of Guru Gobind Shaha, "the fundamental basis of the Law of Inheritance propounded by the Dayabhaga," is to be followed, the brother's daughter's son is entitled to preference as against the paternal grandfather's great grandson. This contention is mainly based upon the following considerations: First, that a brother's daughter's son offers three pindas to his maternal ancestors, in two of which the deceased owner participates; whereas the great grandson of the paternal grandfather offers only one pinda to his paternal ancestors, in which the deceased participates; second, that of the two pindas participated in by the deceased, as offered by the brother's daughter's son, one is offered to the father of the deceased; whereas no such pinda is offered by the grandfather's great grandson, but that the pinda he gives is to a remoter ancestor; third, that according to Dayakrama Sangrha, and various text-writers of modern times which have adopted the authority of that treatise, the brother’s daughter’s son is entitled to succeed after the father’s daughter’s son.

It has been further contended that the decision of Sir Richard Couch and Mr. Justice Ainslie in the case of Gobind Pershad Talookdar v. Mohesh Chunder Surnakh Ghatlack (1), which is the foundation of the later decisions upon the same point, proceeds mainly upon a misreading of some of the observations of Mr. Justice Mitter in the Full Bench case in the case of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (2) as to the comparative religious efficacy of pindas offered to maternal and paternal sides respectively; and also upon the unsupported opinion of Jagannath Tarkapunchanum in his treatise known as Vivada Bhungarnuva as to the pindas offered to paternal ancestors being primary, and those offered to maternal ancestors being of secondary importance. It was further argued that upon the same principle under which the daughter’s son, father’s daughter’s son, grandfather’s daughter’s son and great grandfather’s daughter’s son succeed in preference to agnate sapindas of remoter lines, the brother’s daughter’s son is also entitled to preference as against the grandfather’s great grandson.

[790] The question raised before us, as already remarked, is indeed a different one, and the difficulty to our mind arises from the circumstances that the brother’s daughter’s son, although not mentioned anywhere in the Dayabhaga, as an heir, has been held by a Full Bench to be so, according to the principle of spiritual benefit as propounded by the Dayabhaga, without however assigning to him any definite position in the rank of heirs.

While recognizing, as laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose referred to above, that the law of succession propounded by the Dayabhaga is based upon the principle of spiritual benefit, several Divisional Benches of this Court found themselves unable to give to the brother’s daughter’s son a place above an agnate sapinda, such as the grandfather’s great grandson. And we may say that ever since the year 1874, this Court has invariably followed one course, viz., it has recognized the latter as an heir preferential to the former. That being so, before we come to a different conclusion, and disturb the law as settled for so many years by those rulings, we should be perfectly satisfied that they are wrong.

Now, addressing ourselves in the first place to the question of spiritual benefit, we do not find in the Dayabhaga any express texts drawing any distinction as regards efficacy between pindas offered by heirs in the female line and those offered by heirs in the male line. All that it seems to lay down in substance is that the rule of succession is to be governed by the amount of spiritual benefit conferred upon the deceased, or upon his ancestors, by which he, the deceased might himself be benefited by participation or otherwise. And one would not expect to find in a treatise like the Dayabhaga, which does not deal with the ceremonial part of the Hindu Law, any such details as to the comparative efficacy of the pindas offered by the agnate and cognate sapindas. But that a distinction like this does exist, and must have been present in the mind of the author of the Dayabhaga is disclosed by the fact that between an agnate sapinda and a cognate sapinda of equal degree of propinquity the former is preferred to the latter, although the latter is the giver of a larger number of cakes in which the deceased would participate than the former; and also by the fact that agnate sapindas in any [791] line are always preferred to the cognate sapindas of the same line. For instance, the father's son's son (i.e., a brother's son) of the deceased owner offers three pindas, one to his own father, and the other two to the grandfather and great grandfather respectively of the deceased, and in which two pindas only the latter participates. The father's daughter's son (i.e., a sister's son) offers three pindas, viz., to the father, grandfather and great grandfather of the deceased, and in which pindas the latter participates. And yet the brother's son is preferential heir to the sister's son. Then, again, as between the father's great grandson (brother's grandson) and father's daughter's son (sister's son), the former is the preferential heir, although he is more removed from the father of the deceased, and offers only one pinda (i.e., to the father) in which the deceased participates, whereas the father's daughter's son offers a larger number of pindas in which the deceased participates.

That the pindas offered to paternal ancestors are primary, and those offered to maternal ancestors are secondary in importance, and that there is a difference between the efficacy of the two classes of pindas, is not only laid down in distinct terms by Jagannath (see Vol. 11, Colebrooke's Digest, p. 576), but is to be well deduced from Rughunundun's Sraddha Tattwa.

Referring to the subject of Parvana Sraddha, which, according to the ceremonial law, a Hindu is bound to perform in the case of a man who dies on the day of amaboshya (new moon) or pretpukha (dark half of the lunar month of Bhadro). Rughunundun quotes in the first place the following text of Sankha: "One who dies in amaboshya, or in the pretpukha, his annual sraddha should be performed in the parvana form after his sapindakurun (sixteenth sraddh from the date of death), wherein oblation to the deceased is to the mixed with that of his father, grandfather and great grandfather." And he then observes as follows:

"Accordingly, when the annual sraddha of one who died in the pretpukha, &c., is performed in the parvana form, no other parvana is to be again begun for the sake of the performance of the sraddh of the maternal grandfather, &c., because the latter sraddha depends upon the sraddha of [792] the father as laid down in the text of Vrihaspati.
'Where fathers are worshipped the maternal grandfathers (are) surely to be (worshipped); and also by the text: 'A wise man should in the same manner perform the sraddha of the maternal grandfather also.'"

"In the same manner, if either of two step-brothers, living in commensality, performs sraddha in the parvana form, the other should not again perform the parvana sraddha of his maternal grandfathers. Hence it is also laid down in Dwaitanirnaya that, if a shajnkourush (the son begotten, who maintains a sacred fire) performs the sraddha of his three ancestors from father up to great-grandfather on the date of his father's death, he is not again to begin another parvana for performing the sraddha of his maternal grandfathers." (Rughunundun's Sraddha Tattwa,

There is also a passage in the Dattaka Chandrika which bears upon the same subject, and it is as follows:—

"In the same manner, as on the anniversary of the decease of a father (who died during the first half of oswina, denominated pretpukha) the ceremonials of a parvana rite having been contemplated in honour of the father and other two paternal ancestors in ascent above him, a parvana

rite is not recommended on account of the funeral repast in honour of the maternal grandfather and other two male ancestors (on the mother's side); for the commencement of the same depends on the funeral repast in honour of the paternal ancestors (which, in this instance, would have been already completed).'' (Dattaka Chandrika, Baboo Kishen Kishore's Ed., s. 1, v. 24).

It has, however, been said that according to the principle, which is to be gathered from the Dayabhaga, the person who offers pindas, whether primary or secondary, to the deceased, comes in first among the ranks of heirs; that the succession then goes to the ascending line, viz., the father and those who offer pindas to him in the order of proximity; and on failure of such heirs it goes to the grandfather and those who confer benefits on him, and then in like manner to the great-grandfather and his descendants; and that in this view of the matter, the brother's daughter's son is entitled to succeed in preference to the grandfather's great-[793] grandson, because the latter offers no pinda to the father of the deceased, whereas the latter does. And in this connection reliance is placed upon Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 6, v. 5, which treats of the relative claims of the uncle and nephew of the deceased owner.

The principle as enunciated above may no doubt be well applied in a contest between two persons who present funeral cakes of the same description but there appears to be no authority that it also applies in a ease where the rival claimants are presenters of cakes, primary and secondary, respectively. On the other hand, the contrary appears from the respective positions assigned in the Dayabhaga itself to the father, grandfather and great grandfather in relation to daughter's son, father's daughter's son and grandfather's daughter's son respectively. For instance according to the Dayabhaga, in default of daughter's son, the succession devolves on the father (see Colebrooke's Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 3, vs. 1 and 3), whereas, according to the contention now raised, there ought to come in after the daughter's son at least two other heirs, viz., the son's daughter's son and grandson's daughter's son, before the father can succeed. And similarly, according to the same contention, after the father's daughter's son, the brother's daughter's son, the brother's son's daughter's son ought to come in before the succession goes to the grandfather; whereas Ch. XI, s. 6, vs. 8 and 9, point to the contrary. The same remark applies to the relative position of grandfather's daughter's son and the great grandfather. But it has been contended that the expression "daughter's son," as occurring in Chap. XI, s. 3, v. 1, and s. 6, vs. 8 and 9, should not be read literally as denoting the son of the daughter of the deceased or of the father or grandfather, but it ought to be read as including the daughter's son of the son and grandson of the deceased, and the father's son's daughter's son and grandson, and so on.

No valid reason has been adduced before us in support of the contention that in the above passages the expression "daughter's son" should have a more extended signification than what it ordinarily bears. On the other hand, the well-known commentator Sree Krishna Tarkalunark commenting on vs. 34 to 37 [794] of s. 6, Ch. XI of the Dayabhaga, gives a recapitulation of heirs, and he clearly understands the expression "daughter's son" in its literal sense. It appears from several passages in the Dayabhaga itself that the expression "daughter's son" was used in its literal sense. For instance, in s. 2, Ch. XI, v. 17, the author of the Dayabhaga says: "Vrihaspati recites the gift of the funeral oblation as the sole cause (of right) in the instance of both (the daughter and the grandson) "as the ownership of her father’s wealth devolves on her, although kindred exist, so her son likewise is acknowledged to be heir to his maternal grandfather’s estate.’’ As the daughter is heiress of her father’s wealth in right of the funeral oblation which is to be presented by the daughter’s son, so is the daughter’s son owner of his maternal grandfather’s estate in right of offering that oblation, notwithstanding the existence of kindred such as the father and others.” (Colebrooke’s Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 2, v. 17).

Now it is clear from the above passage that the expression “daughter’s son” was used to denote only the daughter’s son of the deceased owner, and not to include his son’s daughter’s son and grandson’s daughter’s son, because the text of Vrihaspati cited above, and the observation made upon it by the author of the Dayabhaga, speak of “his maternal grandfather’s estate.” The pronoun “his” cannot apply to the son’s daughter’s son, or the grandson’s daughter’s son, because it is followed by the words maternal grandfather,” and the deceased owner could not be characterized as the maternal grandfather of his son’s daughter’s son or grandson’s daughter’s son. The same observation applies to the text of Menu cited in v. 19 of the same chapter and section. The text says: “Let the daughter’s son take the whole estate of his own father who leaves no other son, and let him offer two funeral oblations—one to his own father, the other to his maternal grandfather. Between a son’s son and the son of a daughter there is no difference in law, since their father and mother both spring from the body of the same man.”

It is clear that this text cannot apply to the son’s daughter’s son or the grandson’s daughter’s son.

In s. 3, v. 3 of the same chapter, the author of the Dayabhaga, treating of the father’s right of succession, says that 795 his right “should be after the daughter’s son and before the mother, for the father, offering two oblations of food to other manes in which the deceased participates, is inferior to the daughter’s son who presents one oblation to the deceased and two to other manes in which the deceased participates.”

Here the “daughter’s son” mentioned cannot include son’s daughter’s son or grandson’s daughter’s son, because neither of them presents “one” oblation to the deceased, and two to other manes in which the deceased participates.

In v. 8, s. 6, Ch. XI, the author of the Dayabhaga says: “But on failure of heirs of the father down to the great grandson the succession devolves on the father’s daughter’s son (in preference to the uncle) in like manner as it descends to the owner’s daughter’s son (on failure of the male issue in preference to the brother).” (Colebrooke’s Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. 6, v. 8.) The author here speaks of the “owner’s daughter’s sons,” which expression cannot include his son’s daughter’s son and grandson’s daughter’s son.

For these reasons we are unable to give to the expression “daughter’s son,” as occurring in s. 3, Ch. XI, v. 1, an extended meaning as contended for. In like manner we do not think that the expression “the daughter’s son” in Ch. XI, s. 8, vs. 8 and 9, could be stretched as to include father’s son’s (i.e., brother’s) daughter’s son, and grandfather’s son’s daughter’s son.

Reliance was also placed before us upon the Commentary of Srinath Acharya Chudamoni on Ch. XI, s. 4, vs. 4 to 6, which treat of the succession in default of the mother “together with her offspring.” There are two readings of the said commentary; one is as follows:—
"Here the phrase 'together with her offspring,' implying even a brother's daughter's son, the heritable right of the grandfather, is expressly mentioned."

The other reading is: "Though the word 'offspring' in the expression (सस्वसतान) 'together with her offspring' may include the brother's daughter's son, yet it is said that the grandfather is to succeed."

But whatever may be the correct reading, and although it be that the expression "together with her offspring" may imply [796] or include a brother's daughter's son, still there can be no doubt that according to the Dayabhaga, as understood by Srinath himself, the grandfather succeeds in preference to the brother's daughter's son.

It was further contended that the translation, as given by Mr. Colebrooke to paragraphs 9 and 10 of s. 6, Ch. XI, is not quite correct. But taking the translation as it was contended for, we do not think that, so far as the author of the Dayabhaga was concerned, it was his intention to place the brother's daughter's son just after the father's daughter's son; but on the contrary, reading vs. 8, 9 and 10 together, it would appear that he intended to say that the succession of the grandfather and great-grandfather respectively, their sons, grandsons and great-grandsons, as also their daughter's sons, would be in the same order as in the case of the father, his son, grandson and great-grandson, and his daughter's son, as laid down in the earlier parts of the same chapter; and in this view the brother's daughter's son would find no place just after the father's daughter's son.

Stress was also placed before us upon Dayatattwa, Ch. XI, para. 64. But as to this there are two readings; one is as follows:

"Accordingly, as on failure of the deceased proprietor's lineage, including the daughter's son, others succeed, similarly in default of the brother's son, the father's lineage ending with his (or the) daughter's son takes the heritage."

Another reading is: "As in default of one's own lineage, ending with daughter's son, another is entitled, so in default of brother's son, ending with his daughter's son, the father's lineage is entitled."

These two different readings are due to two different editions of the above work. We have been unable to discover which of those editions is correct; and we do not therefore think that we should be justified in acting upon either of them.

The last argument that was raised in this connection was with reference to the construction of v. 12, s. 6, Ch. XI. It was said that according to this verse, in default of the lineal descendants of the paternal great-grandfather, including the [797] daughter's son, the maternal uncle and the other heirs in the maternal line succeed and that therefore the brother's daughter's son has no place at all, if he is to come in after the agnate sapindas. But the Full Bench in the case of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose (1) considered v. 19 of the same section, and from the reasons given therein came to the conclusion that the word "&c." after the expression "father's daughter's son" in that verse is comprehensive enough to include such relatives who are, like the father's daughter's son, competent to offer oblations to the paternal ancestors of the deceased. This conclusion virtually overrules the contention raised before us as to v. 12.

We observe that Jagannath, the author of Vivad Bhungarnuva, while commenting upon v. 20, s. 6, Ch. XI, and which is substantially the same as v. 12, referred to above, advocates the claim of, among others, the brother's daughter's son, &c. (See Colebrooke's Digest, Vol. II, p. 567.) And this leads us to suppose that the words as used in v. 12 do not debar a brother's daughter's son from claiming succession in preference to the material uncle, &c.

We have next to consider the passage in the Davakrama Sangraha favouring the claim of the brother's daughter's son as entitled to succeed immediately after the father's daughter's son. It was contended, as already mentioned, that there were several copies of this treatise in existence which contained the above passage, and that it was not right in this Court to hold in the case of Govindo Hureckar v. Womesh Chunder Roy (1) that it was an interpolation. Now, in the first place, it must be observed that Sri Krishna Tarkalunark, the author of the said treatise, while recapitulating in his commentary the order of succession according to the Dayabhaga, did not mention the brother's daughter's son, or the uncle's daughter's son, who are mentioned in certain copies of the Davakrama Sangraha as heirs. And if these copies are correct, how is it that we do not find any mention made of many other cognate sapindas, such as son's daughter's son, grandson's daughter's son, brother's son's daughter's son, and others who occupy positions analogous to that which a brother's daughter's son and uncle's daughter's son occupy. That being so, it seems to us that the passages in the Davakrama Sangraha that are relied upon are of doubtful authority, and that we should not be justified in acting upon them. And if we cannot act upon these passages, it follows that we cannot accept the opinion expressed by certain modern writers based upon the authority of the Davakrama Sangraha.

As regards the argument pressed upon us that the decision of Sir Richard Couch in Govind Pershad Talookdar v. Mohesh Chunder Surnmah Ghuttack (2) proceeds upon a misreading of the remarks of Mr. Justice Mitter in the Full Bench case of Gooroo Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose it seems to us that there is some force in it. Mr. Justice Mitter, as we understand him, in the passage quoted by Sir Richard Couch in page 47 (15 B. L. R.) and relied upon in the following page, referred evidently to the pindas offered to the paternal ancestors of the deceased in which he participated, and pindas offered to his maternal ancestors which he, the deceased, was bound to offer, but in which he does not participate. And in speaking of these two classes of pindas Mr. Justice Mitter observed that the former were of superior religious efficacy. He did not apparently mean to refer to the giver of the pindas but to the deceased, while he alluded to the efficacy of the pindas as offered to the paternal and maternal ancestors, respectively.

But however that may be, this inaccuracy does not affect the true merits of the conclusion at which Sir Richard Couch arrived; for if there be a difference as to the efficacy of the two classes of pindas offered by a person to his paternal and maternal ancestors, respectively, there can be very little doubt that the decision cannot be impeached, although some of the reasons given may be questioned.

With reference to the argument that was pressed upon us that upon the same principle, viz., of spiritual benefit, according to which the daughter's son, father's daughter's son, grandfather's daughter's son and great-grandfather's daughter's son succeed in preference to agnate sapindas of remoter lines, a brother's [799] daughter's son is entitled to preference as against the grandfather's great grandson, we have to observe that it is no doubt true that the spiritual benefit conferred upon the deceased by the daughter's son, father's daughter's son, &c., is mentioned by the author of the Dayabhaga as the cause for their succession; but there are several passages in the Dayabhaga itself which clearly indicate that it is not the only cause. Referring to Ch. XI, s. 2, vs. 19 and 20 (Colebrooke's Dayabhaga), we find that the author says as follows:—

"Accordingly Menu propounds the daughter's origin from the person of the maternal grandfather as the reason of the daughter's son having a right to the succession, not her appointment to raise a son; else he would have specified this cause. Let the daughter's son take the whole estate of his own father who leaves no (other) son, and let him offer two funeral oblations, one to his own father, the other to his maternal grandfather.
Between a son's son and the son of a daughter there is no difference in law, since their father and mother both sprung from the body of the same man."

"Thus this very author expressly declares that the daughter's son, born of one not appointed to continue the male line, has the right of succession. 'By that male child, whom a daughter, whether formally appointed or not, shall produce from a husband of an equal class, the maternograndfather becomes in law the father of a son. Let that son give the funeral oblation and possess the inheritance'."

In the above passages it is expressly mentioned that "between a son's son and the son of a daughter there is no difference in law," and that "the maternal grandfather becomes in law the father of a son."

Then again the Dayabhaga, referring to the succession of the father's daughter's son in Ch. XI, s. 6, vs. 8 and 9, says as follows:—

"But on failure of heirs of the father down to the great-grandson it must be understood that the succession devolves on the father's daughter's son (in preference to the uncle) in like manner as it descends to the owner's daughter's son (on failure of the male issue) in preference to the brother."

"The [800] succession of the grandfather's and great-grandfather's lineal descendants, including the daughter's son, must be understood in a similar manner, according to the proximity of the funeral offering, since the reason stated in the text—'for even the son of a daughter delivers him in the next world, like the son of a son'—is equally applicable; and his father's or grandfather's daughter's son, like his own daughter's son, transports his manes over the abyss by offering oblations of which he may partake."

In the above passages the author says: "In like manner as it descends in the owner's daughter's son:'" and "since the reason stated in the text—'for even the son of a daughter delivers him in the next world, like the son of a son'—is equally applicable," the special reasons stated in the verses quoted are not applicable to a brother's daughter's son, uncle's daughter's son, &c.

Upon all these considerations we are unable to hold that the plaintiff, who is a brother's daughter's son, is a preferential heir to the defendants, who are the great-grandsons of the paternal grandfather of the deceased Nobin Chunder.

The result is that this appeal will be allowed with costs.

AMANAT BIBI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. IMAD HUSAIN (Defendant).* [15th and 16th March, 1888.]

Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 13 and 43—Act XII of 1879, s. 6—Act VIII of 1859, s. 7—Inclusion of the whole claim in suit.

The present suit was preceded by others in which the plaintiff sought to establish a right in the same part of the talukdari estate that he now claimed to redeem from mortgage.

The first suit, in which he with another claimed as under-proprietors, was dismissed in 1866 on the ground that they had not shown themselves to have held such right under the talukdars within the period since 1841. Proceedings not to be regarded as judicial, subsequently taken under Circular 4 of 1867, resulted in a finding that the dismissal was right upon the merits, the property having been transferred to the talukdar by a conditional sale which had become absolute.

[801] Another suit was then brought to recover the talukdari right, under the terms of Circular 166 of 1869, it being alleged that arrears of revenue paid by the talukdar had been paid on the plaintiff's account. That suit was also dismissed. Held, that the present suit to redeem the same property under a mortgage was not barred under s. 13 of Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 6 of Act XII of 1879. The claim to redeem did not arise out of the former cause of action within the meaning of the sections of Act VIII of 1859 relating to the inclusion of the whole claim in a suit. The plaintiff not then being aware of his right when he sued before, it could not be regarded as a "portion of his claim," and he was not precluded, by having omitted it, from bringing it forward.

Appeal from a decree (26th September 1884) of the Judicial Commissioner, affirming a decree (13th April 1883) of the District Judge of Fyzabad, which was made upon an order (1st August 1882) of the Judicial Commissioner, reversing a decree (27th October 1881) of the District Judge of Fyzabad, and remanding the suit to the Court of the District Judge.

This was a suit for the redemption from mortgage of ten villages, with Chaks appertaining, in Itaka Jaipur, in the Fyzabad district. The mortgage money was Rs. 2,000, on payment of which redemption was to take place, one-seventh of the rents and profits of the estates to be paid annually as naukar, and the rest to be credited for interest.

The questions now were whether the issue as to the right to redeem had been substantially determined in prior proceedings; and whether the plaintiff, having been bound to bring forward his claim to redeem on a former occasion, if he was to insist upon it, was now precluded by reason of his omission.

The appellant Amanat Bibi, the defendant in the suit, was the widow and representative of Malik Hidayat Husain, deceased, who was the brother and successor in the talukdari of Jaipur, of Malik Tafazzal Hussain. The other appellants Laeumman Persad and Narotami Das were mortgagees from Malik Hidayat Hussain.

Jiaka Jiapur, the mortgaged property, originally formed part of the estate of two brothers, Abbas Ali and Hafiz Ali, and upon a partition between them in 1251 Fusli, corresponding to 1843 A.D., became the share of Hafiz Ali, who was the father of the present plaintiff. It was ground common to both parties [802] to this suit that Jiapur passed into the possession of Malik Tafazzal Hussain by way of mortgage. Also it was admitted that the settlement of Jiapur was made with Tafazzal, having been included in the sanad relating to Taluka Samanpur. The difference between the parties was in this, that the plaintiff asserted that the mortgage took place about the 1st June 1854, and fixed no term for redemption, while on the other hand the defendants maintained that the mortgage was of earlier date, and having been by way of conditional sale had become absolute upon non-payment of the mortgage money within eight months, the period fixed for re-payment.

Jiaka Jiapur became, in and after 1866, the subject of several distinct litigations, carried on against Hidayat Hussain by members of his uncle’s family.

In 1866 Imdad Ali joined his cousin Mehdi Ali in suing to establish sub-proprietary rights in the villages which had by that time been included in the taluka of Hidayat Hussain. The Settlement Officer’s order (16th March 1866) contained a finding that Jiapur had originally belonged to the family of the claimants, and that the case of the defendant accounting for the change of possession was weak. But he held himself bound to dismiss the claim, in reference to the agreement made by the Government with the talukdars, that only those would be recognized as sub-proprietors who were proved to have held under them on a sub-proprietory basis within limitation, while the plaintiffs admitted that they never held as sub-proprietors under the talukdars during the nawabi. This decision was affirmed by the Commissioner on the 20th June 1866, and by the Financial Commissioner on the 25th October 1866.

Both claimants then applied to the Financial Commissioner, under Circular 4 of 1867, known in Oudh as the "Hard Case Circular," which provided for the hearing of claims preferred by persons who had suffered in the re-adjustments of property operated in the province after the general confiscation of rights in land ordered by Lord Canning in 1858. The result, however, was the same; the Financial Commissioner remarking that, putting aside other reasons as regards Mehdi Ali’s application, he had not held since 1255 F., about 1847, and the petition was [803] rejected, an order which was affirmed on review on the 27th February 1868.

Imdad Husain’s case was referred to an Assistant Settlement Officer for report, and the Financial Commissioner (11th April 1868), upon the investigation, dismissed his claim also.

Imdad Husain then made a third attempt under Book Circular 106 of 1867, "which prescribed that, when proprietors had been ousted, and their lands transferred to another proprietor on account of arrears of revenue by order of the former Courts of Oudh, such transfer should be considered temporary only, and the ex-proprietor should have a claim to re-enter into possession on payment of the moneys advanced by the temporary transferee, and that the lien of the latter should be held to be of the nature of a redeemable mortgage."
His petition was dismissed by the Settlement Officer on the 26th November 1868, the Financial Commissioner confirming the dismissal on the 17th April 1869.

Mehdi Ali commenced another suit in 1877 against Hidayat Hussain and this respondent Imdad Husain and others, in which he asserted that in 1854 Hafiz Ali, as his Manager, had mortgaged Jaiipur to Tafazzal for Rs. 2,000, and that on the 12th June 1854 Tafazzal had executed an agreement to Hafiz Ali, acknowledging his right to redeem at any time on payment of the mortgage amount. This respondent, in his written statement, admitted the mortgage agreement, but asserted that it had been granted to his father, Hafiz Ali, in his own right, and not as agent for Mehdi Ali, and that the document had been lost during the minority of the sons of Hafiz Ali. It was then, in effect, found that Hafiz Ali had not acted in the transaction as agent for Mehdi Ali, who therefore had no title to sue; and this suit was also dismissed finally on 29th July 1879.

The present suit was instituted on the 25th February 1881. The plaintiff, Imdad Husain, stated that the claim for a sub-settlement was preferred in ignorance that the property now in suit had been mortgaged by his father, and that the power to redeem subsisted. He alleged that, according to the agreement dated 4th Ramzan 1270 H., corresponding to 1st June 1854, it was clear that the whole mortgage money was paid out of the seventh part of the income; and he claimed to redeem under s. 6 of Act I of 1869, the Oudh Estates Act, and that accounts should be taken.

It was held in the Court of first instance that this suit for redemption of the villages in Jaiipur was barred by the former proceedings in the settlement Courts. This judgment was, however, reversed on appeal, and the suit was remanded for decision on the merits.

The issues then recorded raised the two questions whether the suit was barred as res judicata and whether the property had been mortgaged in 1854. The District Judge (Colonel F. E. A. Chamier) decreed in favour of the plaintiff for redemption of the property on payment of Rs. 2,001.

An appeal from this decree was dismissed by the Judicial Commissioner (Mr. W. Young). In his judgment upon the question of res judicata after stating the previous proceedings, he said: "The procedure was in my opinion altogether defective even on the materials then before the Courts, but it is obvious that the case then before those Courts was of a wholly different character from the present suit. That was a claim based on orders of the Government. This relies on a private bargain of the parties.

On the second point he summed up his examination of the evidence as follows: "On the whole, I think, that this agreement (1st June 1854) must be accepted as genuine, and taking it with the other evidence for the plaintiff, it seems to me that his contention, that the estate was mortgaged to the Malik in 1261 F. (1854) and not before, and that the mortgage was redeemable as set forth by the terms of the agreement, must be held to be established."

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellants, argued that the proceedings in the Settlement Courts barred the present suit. They referred to Thakur Shankar Baksh v. Daya Shankar (1); Phosphate Sewage Company v. Malleson (2); Hunter v. Stewart (3).

Toiponidhee Dhirj Gir Gosain v. Sreepatyi [805] Sahance (1); Moonshee Buzlor Ruheem v. Sham Soonessa Begum (2); Mooloo Vijaya Raghamada v. Katama Natchiar (Shivaganga case) (3); Soorjomonnee Dayee v. Suddanund Mohapattur (4); Act VIII of 1859, ss. 6 and 13; Act X of 1877, ss. 43 and 623.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, contended that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner was correct upon the question of res judicata. There were also concurrent findings of both Courts that the property was held under a redeemable mortgage. The cause of action was not identical with that in the former proceedings. The plaintiff was not bound to include the present claim in his former suit, and in fact was in ignorance of it at the time of the proceedings in the settlement; nor could he have succeeded in making good his claim until after the passing of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869.

Mr. J., Graham, Q.C., in reply, referred to Krishna Behari Roy v. Brojeswari Chaodhrani (5).

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment at the conclusion of the arguments was delivered by LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decision of the District Judge of Fyzabad, by which he granted a decree for redemption of certain property said to be on mortgage. The mortgage deed is not produced, but there has been produced a memorandum under the seal of a predecessor in title of the appellants, which stated upon the face of it that the property had been mortgaged and was subject to redemption. That memorandum has been held by two Courts to be a genuine document, and to be sufficient evidence of the alleged mortgage. The sole ground of appeal is that the respondent's suit ought to have been held barred [806] by what took place in certain settlement proceedings, for two reasons: (a) because the issue in this suit was substantially determined by the determination of an issue in those proceedings; and (b) because the respondent was bound to have brought forward, in the previous proceedings, the mortgage transaction on which he relies in the present suit.

The settlement proceedings may be stated very shortly. The respondent in 1866 brought a claim to establish an alleged sub-proprietary right. That claim was dismissed on an admission by the respondent that he never had held as sub-proprietor under the talukdar during the native rule, or during the term of limitation, that is, the period from 1844 to 1856. The dismissal was confirmed by the Commissioner and also by the Financial Commissioner, Colonel Barrow. After that proceeding had come to an end a Government Circular was issued, Book Circular 4 of 1867, which is known as "The Hard Case Circular," and thereupon the plaintiff applied for a review of his case. The Financial Commissioner entertained the application, and remanded the matter to the Settlement Officer. The Settlement Officer made a most minute and elaborate examination into all the circumstances. He found that the property had been conveyed to the talukdar by a conditional deed of sale, under which the purchase money was to be repaid within the period of eight months, and that on the expiration of that period the sale became absolute. He also found that the talukdar had paid up certain arrears of Government revenue which ought to have been paid by the respondent or his predecessors-in-title. The Financial Commissioner accepted the report of the Settlement Officer, and refused to disturb the previous orders. Their Lordships are of opinion that proceedings under the "Hard Case Circular" cannot be treated as judicial proceedings. It appears from the Circular that the talukdars had engaged to take cases of proved hardship into their favourable consideration. But relief was to be granted not as a matter of right enforceable by process of law, but as a matter of concession in a spirit of fairness and liberality. His appeal on the ground of hardship having been rejected, the respondent then sought to avail himself of another Circular. Adopting the finding of the Settlement Officer that the [807] talukdar had paid arrears of Government revenue, he sought to treat those arrears as paid on his account, and he brought a suit to recover the property under the terms of Circular No. 106 of 1869. That suit was dismissed. But it may be assumed for the purposes of this judgment that in that suit—which was a judicial proceeding—the Settlement Officer re-affirmed his previous findings, and determined that the property had been transferred to the talukdar by a deed of sale, which was dated in February 1853, and became absolute eight months after its date.

Is that determination a bar to this suit, founded, as the suit is, on a mortgage recognized as subsisting in 1854?

The section of the Act of 1877, as amended by the Act of 1879, which is applicable to the case, is in these terms: "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue, having been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit in a Court of competent jurisdiction between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, has been heard and finally decided by such Court." Now what was the question in issue in the former suit? The question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover the property which had been transferred by the Government to the talukdar on re-paying to the talukdar the arrears of revenue which he had paid to Government. The matter in issue in this suit is the respondent's right to redemption under a mortgage deed. It may be difficult to reconcile the position of the talukdar as mortgagee in 1854 with his position as absolute owner in 1853 under a purchase from the mortgagor. But if it be established that the respondent was mortgagor in 1854 with the right of redemption, why should he be barred of his right merely because at an earlier date he may have had no right to the property at all?

Then comes the question, was the respondent bound to have brought forward his present claim in the former suit? Section 7 of Act No. VIII of 1859 is in these terms: "Every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action, but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim, in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court. If a plaintiff relinquish or omit to sue for any portion of his claim, a suit for the [808] portion so relinquished or omitted shall not afterwards be entertained." That section has already been under the consideration of this Board in the case of The Raja of Pittapur v. Venkata Mohipati Surya (1), and the commentary upon it at page 119 is: "That section does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action, or every claim which the party has, but 'every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action'—meaning the cause of action for which the suit is brought.'" The respondent's present claim certainly did not arise out of the cause of action which was the foundation of the former suit.

Moreover, it appears to their Lordships that the fair result of the evidence is that at the date of the former suit the respondent was not aware of the right on which he is now insisting. A right, which a litigant possesses without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it, can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim" within the meaning of the section in question.

On the whole, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner was correct, and that the appeal ought to be dismissed, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with that view. The appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT:

Lord Hobhouse, Sir B. Peacock, and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

TRILOKI NATH SINGH (Plaintiff) v. PERTAB NARAIN SINGH (Defendant). [20th March, 1888.]

Res judicata—Code of Civil Procedure, s. 13—Identity of cause of action with that of prior suit, to which the plaintiff in a subsequent suit had been a party—Effect of judgment, that a will had been revoked, to bar, between the parties, any claim founded solely on the will.

The widow of a talukdar, acting under his supposed will, appointed the present appellant to succeed to the taluks and other estate which had belonged to the deceased.

[809] The heir of the deceased, under the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, obtained the judgment of the Judicial Committee, declaring that he was entitled to the taluks as against the present appellant, whose title was under the will, which had been revoked, as the Committee found. Another suit brought by the present appellant for a decree declaring that, in virtue of his appointment by the widow under the will, he was entitled to the whole of the estate of the deceased, talukdari and non-talukdari, was dismissed by the Judicial Committee on the ground that he had no such title to the whole or any part of the estate.

[held], that this prior judgment was conclusive to bar the present suit, which, being founded entirely upon the appellant's appointment in pursuance of the will, was brought for possession of all the estate of the deceased, as well as a declaration of right thereto.

(1) 12 I.A. 116.
Although the heir was not entitled to possession of the estate of the deceased other than talukdari, inasmuch as the widow took her estate therein, nevertheless the claim of the present appellant being only founded upon her appointment under the will, as if unrevoked, and not being a claim for property as descending to the widow upon her husband’s intestacy, the prior judgment was binding in the present suit.

[Rs. 20 B. 86 (96).]

Appeal from a decree (26th November 1884) of the Judicial Commissioner, reversing a decree (25th September 1882) of the District Judge of Fyzabad.

This appeal, and the suit out of which it arose, followed previous proceedings in the Oudh Courts and on appeal to Her Majesty in Council, concerning the rights of the present appellant, Triloki Nath Singh, nephew of the late Maharajah Man Singh, K.C.S.I., who died without issue on the 11th October 1870. The respondent, Pertab Narain Singh, was the son of the Maharajah’s daughter; and the question in the suit, which commenced these proceedings, was whether he or Triloki Nath, the Maharajah’s nephew (brother’s son), whose title was founded on the deceased having executed a will in 1864, was entitled to the taluks. The late talukdar’s name had been entered in lists II and V under the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869 (1). By the will of 1864 the Maharajah gave all his estates to his widow, the Maharani Subhao Kuar, with power to appoint his successor, and this power she exercised on the 16th August [810] 1872 by appointing Triloki Nath. But, as was decided in the judgment of their Lordships, of 19th July 1877, in the suit which was brought by Pertab Narain (making Triloki Nath, then a minor, a party), that will was orally revoked by the Maharajah in the month of January preceding his death.

The Maharajah’s estates, which had, at his request, been brought under the management of the Court of Wards, were, on the petition of the Maharani Subhao Kuar, whose name was substituted in the Collectorate records for that of her deceased husband on the 27th January 1871, brought under management in pursuance of Act XXIV of 1870, the Oudh Talukdars’ Relief Act, and so remained until the 30th September 1880, when the estates were made over to the present respondent, Pertab Narain.

Pertab Narain’s suit—Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharani Subhao Kuar (2)—was brought on the 21st November 1872 for a declaration of his title to the taluks under cl. 4 of s. 22 of Act I of 1869, and for the cancellation of the alleged will of the Maharajah of 22nd April 1864. The judgment of the Judicial Committee (19th July 1877) was that the will had been revoked, and the order declared that Pertab Narain was entitled to the talukdari and whatever passed with it under the Oudh Estates Act.

On an application by Triloki Nath for a re-hearing—Ex parte Triloki Nath Singh, In the matter of Pertab Narain Singh v. Maharani Subhao Kuar (3)—it was held that the appeal could not be re-heard, unless by some accident, without any omission, or default, on the part of the party seeking to re-open it, an order had been made without his having been heard. What might be Triloki Nath’s case in this respect might be raised.

(1) Metchana was the Maharaja’s ancestral taluk. The confiscated taluk of Gonda was given to him by the Government after the events of 1857-1858.

Afterwards, with reference to the above, Triloki Nath filed his plaint (3rd June 1879) for a declaratory decree that the proceedings in Pertab Narain's suit were not binding upon him, and that he might be declared to be the successor of the late [811] talukdar, and entitled to all his estate, on the strength of the appointment made by the Maharani under the will of 1864.

The suit was dismissed in the first Court in August 1881; but the Judicial Commissioner, on an appeal to him, being of opinion that the will had not been revoked, made a decree (22nd July 1882) granting what was claimed. An appeal from this decree was preferred by Pertab Narain, and on the 15th August 1882 the plaint in the present suit was filed by Triloki Nath, who, alleging himself to have been duly appointed under the will executed by the Maharajah in 1864, claimed the whole of his moveable and immoveable estate, with mesne profits. The plaint stated that "the property of the late Maharajah passed into the possession of the Court of Wards on or after the 23rd April 1870, and subsequently it was placed in the hands of a Manager appointed under Act XXIV of 1870, who retained possession thereof from the 3rd June 1871 till the 30th September 1880, when the debts of the said estate having been liquidated, plaintiff, as heir and successor to the said late Maharajah, became entitled to possession thereof, but the defendant obtained wrongful possession of the property in suit on the aforesaid date, and has retained unlawful possession of the same ever since; consequently the cause of action as to possession accrued to plaintiff on the 30th September 1880." With the plaint were filed copies of the deed of appointment executed by the Maharani on the 16th August 1872, and of another deed dated 20th May 1875, executed by her, and purporting to make over the proprietary possession in all the "property, moveable as well as immovable, belonging to the Maharajah and myself."

Pertab Narain's defence in the main was that the order of Her Majesty in Council (13th August 1877), following the judgment of the Judicial Committee of that year, which established the revocation of the will, was final and conclusive, barring the present suit.

The District Judge held the suit not barred, and decreed to the paintiff possession of the late Maharajah's estate with all accretions.

From this decree Pertab Narain appealed to the Court of the officiating Judicial Commissioner, Mr. T. B. Tracy, on the 8th [812] October 1882 but as the Judicial Commissioner's decree (22nd July 1882) in Triloki Nath's claim for a decree of his right was then pending on appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the hearing was postponed until the arrival of the decision of their Lordships (23rd July 1884). This reversed the Judicial Commissioner's decree—see Pertab Narain Singh v. Triloki Nath Singh (1) —holding that the Maharani was the full representative of the estate in the former suit.

The Judicial Commissioner, with the latter judgment before him, decided as follows: "It is obvious that the present suit was brought in consequence of the declaratory decree passed in July 1882, and as this judgment has been reversed, the present decree awarding possession of the Maharajah's estate to Triloki Nath cannot possibly be maintained. It is, therefore, useless to consider whether the suit was barred by ss. 12, 13, 43, or 373 of the Civil Procedure Code.'"

(1) 11 I.A. 197=11 C. 186

"The plaintiff–respondent's counsel have contended inter alia that the judgment of the Privy Council has reference only to the talukdari estate, and does not concern the personal estate of the late Maharajah. It seems a sufficient answer to this that the plaintiff respondent claimed the entire estate, both moveable and immoveable property, as the successor appointed under the will of the late Maharajah Sir Man Singh, and that it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the will was revoked by the Maharajah. The plaintiff–respondent's title to the moveable property is worth no more than his title to the talukdari estate."

"The appeal is allowed, and the judgment and decree of the lower Court are set aside."

On this appeal.—

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the appellant.

Mr. J. Graham, Q.C., Mr. J. Rigby, Q. C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent.

In the argument for the appellant reference was made to the judgments above referred to, and it was argued that the judgment of 19th July 1877 gave no title to the respondent to have [813] possession delivered to him. The manager, who had been in possession under Act XXIV of 1870, was not authorized to make over the estates to any other than the Maharani or her transferee; and the appellant was entitled to all the residue of Man Singh's estate beyond that which was governed by Act I of 1869, by reason of the Maharani having by her deed of 20th May 1875 conveyed to him her interest therein.

Counsel for the respondent were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh given on the 26th November 1884, and the question is whether that decision is correct with reference to the course of proceedings which had been previously taken in the various Courts of Oudh and also before Her Majesty in Council.

Sir Man Singh, who was one of the great talukdars of Oudh, died on the 11th October 1870. He left a widow, the Maharani Subhao Kunwar, and a daughter named Brij Raj Kunwar, by a deceased wife, and also a son of that daughter, Pertab Narain Singh, the present respondent.

The Maharajah made a will by which he gave all his property, moveable and immoveable, to his widow, with power to her to appoint a successor. Pertab Narain Singh, who was the son of the daughter, considering that he was entitled to the estates of the late Maharajah according to the rules of descent established by Act I of 1869, commenced a declaratory suit against the Maharani, and also against Triloki Nath, the present appellant, who had been appointed by the Maharani to be her successor, to have it declared that the will of the late Maharajah had been revoked by him, and consequently that the widow had no right to appoint Triloki Nath. In that suit the first Court decided that the will had not been revoked, and the Judicial Commissioner upheld that decision; but upon appeal to Her Majesty in Council it was held that the Maharajah had revoked the will, and that, consequently, the widow had no power to appoint Triloki Nath. That decision was in July 1877, and is reported in the 4th volume of the Indian Appeals, page 228. It is there said "It is now admitted on all sides, if it were [814] ever seriously disputed, that the appellant'—that is, the Maharajah Pertab Narain Singh, the present respondent—'can only succeed in his suit by establishing both the following propositions: (a) that the testamentary disposition which the Maharajah unquestionably had power to make and did make in April 1864 was revoked or became inoperative in his lifetime; (b) that the appellant is entitled to succeed to the taluk as the son of a daughter of the Maharajah, who had been treated by him in all respects as his own son, within the meaning of the 4th clause of s. 22 of Act I of 1869, it being clear that as a mere grandson by a daughter he would not be the heir ab intestato to the taluk under the special canon of succession to intestate talukdars established by that section of the statute." Their Lordships then came to the conclusion that Pertab Narain Singh was the son of a daughter, and that he had been treated by the late Maharajah in all respects as his own son. They accordingly decided in his favour and said: "Upon the whole, then their Lordships are of opinion that the Maharajah died, as he intended to die, intestate; that the appellant is the person who, under cl. 4 of s. 22 of Act I of 1869, was entitled to succeed to the taluk; and that he has made out his claim for a declaratory decree to that effect." But then they add: "The declaration, however, must, their Lordships think, be limited to the taluk and what passes with it. If the Maharajah had personal or other property not properly parcel of the talukdari estate, that would seem to be descendible according to the ordinary law of succession." Their Lordships, therefore, merely declared Pertab Narain Singh's title to the taluks and whatever descended under Act I of 1869. As to other property which was not included in that Act, Pertab Narain would not have been the heir to the Maharajah during the lifetime of the widow. She would have taken the widow's estate in all property except that which was governed by Act I of 1869.

Subsequently, Triloki Nath applied to her Majesty in Council for a review of that judgment, or for a re-hearing, his ground being that he had not been properly represented in the former suit; that the person who had appeared as guardian for him had not been properly appointed his guardian. Their Lordships [815] refused to advise Her Majesty to grant a review of the judgment, and stated that the only remedy which Triloki Nath had was to bring another suit, to try whether he was bound by the decision. Accordingly, in 1879, he brought a suit to have it declared that he was entitled to all the property, moveable and immoveable, of the late Maharajah. Previously to the commencement of that suit however, the widow had made a second appointment under the will, assuming it to be in force, appointing Triloki Nath to take the estate at once. It has been contended that that appointment vested in Triloki Nah not only the taluks, but also the right to the property to which the widow had succeeded upon the death of her husband. Whether that is so or not is not material. Triloki Nath brought his suit and he made reference to that document in the plaint. In that plaint he stated: "So far as the new plaintiff is aware, no further steps were taken in the prosecution of the said appeal until September 1875, and in the meantime,—that is to say, on the 20th of May 1875,—the Maharani executed another document recognising the now plaintiff as successor to the said Maharajah Sir Man Singh, and on the 31st August 1875 the Revenue authorities substituted the now plaintiff's name as the proprietor of the estates in place of the Maharani."
In the same record there is this statement: "The counsel for the defendant asks the plaintiff as a preliminary whether he is suing on the appointment executed by the Maharani on the 16th August 1872, or that mentioned in his 33rd paragraph of 30th of May 1875. The counsel for plaintiff answers without reservation that of the 16th August 1872." It is however to be remarked that in that suit, whether he was relying upon the document of 1872 or that of 1875, he asked to have it declared that he was entitled to the whole of the property, moveable and immovable, of the Maharajah.

The Judge by whom the second suit was tried found that the will had been revoked, following the decision of Her Majesty in Council, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the Judicial Commissioner certain points were laid down as those upon which the Judicial Commissioner was to decide, the second of which [816] was: "Supposing the plaintiff-appellant to be confined to the document executed in his favour by the Maharani Subhao Kunwar on the 16th of August 1872 as the basis of his suit, has he, or has he not, any present locus standi in Court?" Then, thirdly: "Supposing the plaintiff-appellant not to be confined to the document of the 16th August 1872 as the basis of his suit, then has there, or has there not, been any such valid appointment of the plaintiff-appellant under the power conferred upon the Maharani by the will of the Maharajah as to give to the plaintiff-appellant cause of action?" Upon that the Judicial Commissioner decided that the will had not been revoked, and he held that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration in his favour. The decree is stated as follows: "Claim for declaration of right to the talukdari estates and all property, moveable and immovable, belonging to the late Maharajah Sir Man Singh." He therefore treated the suit of 1879 as a suit relating not merely to the talukdari but to all the property, moveable and immovable, of the late Maharajah. He found that the will had not been revoked, and decreed "that the plaintiff-appellant be, and he is hereby declared to be, the appointed successor of the late Maharajah Sir Man Singh, and to be absolutely entitled to the said Maharajah's estates." There is no doubt that the second suit of 1879 was brought for a declaration of the right of Triloki Nath to the whole of the estates of the Maharajah, talukdari as well as non-talukdari, and that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner gave him a right to that property.

An appeal was preferred to Her Majesty in Council against that decision, but pending that appeal Triloki Nath, on the 15th August 1882, brought another suit, which is the suit now under consideration. In that suit he asked for possession of all the property of the late Maharajah. "Claim for possession of moveable and immovable property left by the Maharajah Sir Man Singh, deceased." That case coming on for trial, the first Judge followed the decision of the Judicial Commissioner in the second suit, and held that the will had not been revoked. An appeal was thereupon preferred to the Judicial Commissioner, but he very properly postponed delivering his judgment [817] upon the appeal until after the decision of Her Majesty in Council upon the appeal which was then pending in the second suit. Upon that appeal, in which judgment was delivered in July 1884, Her Majesty in Council reversed the decision of the Judicial Commissioner and dismissed the suit of 1879. The judgment of their Lordships is reported in the 11th Vol. of the Indian Appeals, 197, and at page 210 they say: "In the result their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgment appealed from, and to order that the suit of the respondent be dismissed, and that he pay the costs in the Courts below."

It therefore appears that Triloki Nath, the present appellant, has never claimed the property except under an appointment made by the widow in pursuance of an unrevoked will. He has never claimed to be entitled to the estate or any part of it as having been conveyed to him by the Maharani by the appointment of 1875 as property which had descended to her in consequence of the Maharajah's having died intestate. The second suit was brought in respect of the whole of the property upon the ground that the will had not been revoked, and that the Maharani had appointed the property to him. That suit was dismissed by Her Majesty in Council upon the ground that the plaintiff had no title to the whole or any part of the property in respect of which he was suing in that suit. The decree of Her Majesty in Council, in the suit in which Triloki Nath asked for a decree declaring that he was entitled to the whole of the property, must be and is binding in this suit, in which he is asking, not merely for a declaratory decree, but to be put into possession of the whole property.

The claim of the plaintiff in the present suit is founded entirely upon the will of the late Maharaja. Upon the strength of that will he is now asking to be put into possession of property to which Her Majesty in Council has decided that he has no title. It appears to their Lordships that Triloki Nath is bound by the decision of Her Majesty in Council of 1884, and that the Judicial Commissioner was perfectly right in acting upon that decision and dismissing the present suit.

[818] Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decision of the Judicial Commissioner and to dismiss the appeal. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

SIDHESWARI DABI (Defendant) v. ABHOYESWARI DABI (Plaintiff).* [4th June, 1888.]

The appointment of a receiver is a matter resting in the discretion of the Court.

The powers of appointing a receiver conferred by s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be exercised with a sound discretion, upon a view of the whole circumstances of the case, not merely the circumstances which might make the appointment expedient for the protection of the property, but all the circumstances connected with the right which is asserted and has to be established.

* Appeal from Order No. 323 of 1887, against the order of H. Luttman-Johnson, Esq., Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, dated the 29th of August 1887, affirming the recommendation of M. A. Gray, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Dhubri, dated the 8th of August 1887.
The Court will not interfere by appointing a receiver where a right is asserted to property in the possession of a defendant claiming to hold it under a legal title, unless a strong case is made out. Owen v. Homan (1); and Clayton v. The Attorney General (2) referred to (3).

Appeal from the order of the Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, passed on the 29th August 1887, appointing a receiver of property, the subject of a suit then pending in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner and Subordinate Judge of Dhubri.

[819] On the 9th March 1888, the Rajah of Bijn, Kumul Narain Bheep, died leaving two widows—Ranee Abhoyeswari Dabi, the plaintiff, and Ranee Sidheswari Dabi, the defendant in the case. The plaintiff was 19 years old when the Rajah died, and for about eight years previous to that she and the defendant lived with him. On the death of the Rajah, Ranee Sidheswari assumed the management of the entire estate, in which Ranee Abhoyeswari acquiesced; and in June 1883 appointed Baboo Jibon Ram Phookun her manager. The two Raneees continued to live on friendly terms for about three years after the Rajah’s death, when they fell out, and the plaintiff left the defendant on the 27th August on the alleged ground of her ill-treatment and scandalous conduct.

About a year after, the plaintiff, Ranee Abhoyeswari, brought this suit in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner and Subordinate Judge of Dhubri, in which she claimed the entire estate of the Rajah on the grounds that the defendant Ranee Sidheswari, who claimed to be the elder widow, was not married to the Rajah, and that even if she had been married she had forfeited her rights by unchastity both before and after his death. She further, in the alternative, claimed a moiety of the estate as co-heiress with the defendant, or, should the defendant’s exclusive title be established, that a suitable sum for her maintenance might be fixed and made a charge on the property.

The defendant contended that she was, and had been since the Rajah’s death in exclusive possession of all his property under a title admitted on more than one occasion by the plaintiff herself; that she had been legally married to the Rajah; and as elder widow was his sole heiress, the estate being an impartible raj, to which the ordinary rules of the Hindu law of succession were inapplicable. She further generally contended that the plaintiff’s claim was not made bona fide, and that there was no real foundation for it.

Subsequent to the filing of the suit the plaintiff made an application to the Subordinate Judge for the appointment of a receiver pending the final determination of the suit, on the ground that the defendant had grossly mismanaged the estate, and had wasted, and was wasting, large sums of money; and on the 15th July 1887 a rule was issued on the defendant calling upon her to show [820] cause why a receiver should not be appointed. The plaintiff filed her own affidavit and those of two other persons in support of her application. Her case contained grave charges against the defendant of immorality and fraud, of gross mismanagement and waste; and so far as she denied the defendant’s title to any portion of the property, her case shortly was that the defendant was the mistress and not the wife of the Rajah; that in both characters she had been unfaithful to him, and after his death continued to misconduct herself until her conduct became a public scandal; and that, while leading the plaintiff to believe she was managing the estate on her behalf, she (the defendant) set up a title claiming the entire estate, and supported it by forgery and false personation.

The defendant filed her own affidavit and those of seven other persons, denying the material allegations contained in the plaintiff's affidavits.

It appeared from the defendant's affidavits that within six days of the Rajah's death the defendant applied for the registration of an anumatipatra said to have been executed by the Rajah ten days before he died. By this document the Rajah recognized the defendant as his wife, and gave her power to adopt, postponing the plaintiff's power of adoption until after the death of the defendant. The document was registered before the Registrar of Calcutta, who went to the Rajah's house, where the plaintiff and the defendant were then residing. The plaintiff was present at the registration and signed her name as a consenting party.

On the 10th August 1883 the defendant got her name registered as the sole proprietor of the Rajah's estate. A consent petition, which admitted the exclusive title of the defendant, was filed under a muktearnamah executed by the plaintiff. On the 27th November 1884 the defendant took out a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, when a consent petition was filed by the plaintiff under a vakalutnamah. The defendant's affidavits also showed that her marriage with the late Rajah had been performed according to the custom of the family. The rule came on for hearing on the 8th August 1887; and on the same day the Deputy Commissioner and Subordinate Judge of Dhubri, on the ground that the plaintiff had made out a prima facie case, and that the existing management was so unsatisfactory and detrimental to the well-being of the estate as to render the appointment of a receiver expedient, submitted the names of certain gentlemen as being well fit and qualified for the appointment of ad interim receiver. On the 29th August 1887, the Judge of the Assam Valley Districts affirmed the recommendation of the Deputy Commissioner and Subordinate Judge; and appointed the Collector receiver of the estate pending the final determination of the suit.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

The Advocate-General Mr. Hill, and Baboo Hem Chunder Banerji, Baboo Iswar Chunder Chuckrabati and Baboo Kritanta Kumar Bose, for the appellant.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Evans, Mr. A. M. Bose and Baboo Baikanto Nath Dass, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from an order of the Judge of the Assam Valley Districts appointing a receiver of a large property which is the subject of a pending suit. The plaintiff in this suit is a widow of the Rajah of Bijni, who died on the 9th of March 1883, and she claims the entire estate of the Rajah on the grounds that the defendant, who claims to be the elder widow, was not married to the Rajah, and that, even if she was married, she has forfeited her rights by unchastity both before and after the Rajah's death. She further, in the alternative, claims a moiety of the estate as co-heiress with the defendant, or, should the defendant's exclusive title be established, that a suitable sum for her maintenance should be fixed and made a charge on the property. The appointment of a receiver is asked for on the ground that the defendant has grossly mismanaged the property, and had wasted, and would continue to waste, large sums of money. The defendant contends that she is, and has been since the Rajah's death, in exclusive possession of all his property under a title admitted on more than one occasion by the plaintiff herself; that she was legally married to the Rajah, and as elder widow is his sole heiress, the estate being an impartible raj to which the ordinary rules of the Hindu [822] law of succession are inapplicable. It is further generally contended that the claim is not made bona fide, and that it has no substantial foundation.

Now we must regard the defendant as in exclusive possession of the property claimed. She is the sole registered proprietor; and it is clear that ever since the Rajah's death, which occurred more than four years prior to the institution of the suit she has put forward the title which she now asserts. It is admitted in the plaint that the defendant was allowed to assume the entire management, though the admission is qualified by the assertion that the management was understood to be on the plaintiff's behalf. With this and with the allegations of fraud and immorality we shall deal hereafter; it is enough now to say that on the facts before us we must consider that possession followed the management, and if the possession has been disturbed, the disturbance has been by the plaintiff.

Both the Deputy Commissioner and the Judge seem to think that it is sufficient to justify the appointment of a receiver if the allegations of the plaintiff show a sufficient cause of action, and if the management of the estate has been and is such as to render the appointment expedient. Section 503 of the Civil Procedure Code certainly gives a wide discretion to the Court. It empowers the Court to appoint a receiver whenever it appears to be necessary for the realization, preservation, or better custody or management of any property the subject of a suit. This power is not however greater than that exercised by the Courts in England; and it must, we think, be exercised on the same principle, that is to say, with a sound discretion on a view of the whole circumstances of the case, not merely the circumstances which might make the appointment expedient for the protection of the property, but all the circumstances connected with the right which is asserted and has to be established. If a right was asserted to property in the possession of the defendant claiming to hold under a legal title, the Courts did not interfere by appointing a receiver unless a very strong case was made out. The principles to which we refer are stated in Kerr on Receivers (1), by Lord Cranworth in Owen v. Homan (2), [823] and in Clayton v. The Attorney-General (3) we see no ground for the contention that those principles are not applicable in this country. They were adopted to prevent a wrong to the defendant, which might equally be done here if they were not followed. It was indeed conceded that the plaintiff must at least show that her claim is honest and well founded, and if she must show that much, it is a mere question of degree as to how far she must make out her case.

Nor is there anything in Mr. Bose's argument that the principles referred to have been relaxed since the passing of the Judicature Act of 1873. It is only necessary to refer to the judgment of Brett, L.J., in North London Railway Co. v. Great Northern Railway Co. (1), and the dicta of learned Judges in other cases therein referred to. Those were cases of injunctions; but the words "just or convenient," which limited the power of the Court, applied also to receivers.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider the circumstances under which the claim is made, the evidence by which it is supported for the purpose of this application, and the conduct of the parties. Our observations are of course based on the limited materials before us, and can have no effect on the ultimate decision. The plaintiff has filed her own affidavit and that of two other persons; the defendant has filed her affidavit and that of seven other persons. All the material allegations of the plaintiff are contradicted in one or other of the defendant's affidavits. Now the plaintiff's case contains grave charges against the defendant of immorality and of fraud. So far as she denies the defendant's title to any portion of the property her case shortly put is this, that the defendant was the mistress and not the wife of the Rajah; that she was enciente at the time of her alleged marriage; that in either character she was so unfaithful to him that the Rajah, who was extremely fond of her, was driven to suicide; that she continued to misrepresent herself after the Rajah's death till her conduct became a scandal; and that, while leading the plaintiff to believe that she was managing for her, she set up a title of her own and supported it by forgery and personation.

Khagesseri is the only person who speaks to any fact denoting the unchastity of the defendant; and she gives neither time nor place. Putting aside the denials of what she says, it is extremely difficult to reconcile the conduct of the plaintiff with the truth of any one of her allegations. The defendant's affidavits show that a marriage ceremony was performed according to the custom of the family, and, whatever the decision may be as to the validity of the marriage, there seems hardly room for doubt that the defendant was recognized as the Rajah's wife and widow. The plaintiff was 19 years old when the Rajah died; and for some eight years previous to that she and the defendant had lived with him. The plaintiff does not say when she became aware of the defendant's position as mistress and of her immoral character; but the position must have been well-known, if what Khagesseri says is true, that the Rajah wanted to marry the defendant, but was dissuaded by his relatives, friends and priests. Was the plaintiff ignorant of this during her eight years of married life, or would she have been allowed to remain in ignorance after the Rajah's death? Again, the suicide of the Rajah in consequence of the defendant's infidelity, if that was really supposed to be the cause, must have created a great sensation in the family; and it would hardly have added to the popularity or strengthened the position of a woman who was not his wife. Yet we find the plaintiff an admitted wife, continuing to live on friendly terms with this woman for about three years, and allowing her to manage the whole estate as if she occupied a position at least equal to her own. It is said this management was purely permissive; but it was a management, which did not find favour either with the ryots or the authorities. According to

(1) I.R. II Q.B.D. 30.
Purna Chunder Bandopadhyya, Jibon Ram Phookun, her agent in the management and her alleged paramour, was so unpopular and his intercourse with the defendant so scandalous and notorious that even the ryots combined to remonstrate and ask for his dismissal. Failing to secure this, it is said they set up one Chunder Narain as a claimant to the estate. In the struggle for possession which then ensued the whole estate was thrown into disorder, and crimes of every description, we are told, were committed, yet the plaintiff remains quiet; she never thinks of withdrawing her permission. No one ever thought of going [825] to her for redress, and no one ever then thought of setting up her title. The district authorities also were very anxious to get rid of Jibon Ram Phookun, but they never asked the plaintiff to interfere. Like the ryots, they appealed to the defendant, and they appealed in vain. In short, up to the 24th August 1886, when the case under s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was decided by the Deputy Commissioner, the plaintiff’s name (except as far as it appears in that case) never seems to have been mentioned in connection with this property. On the 27th August 1886 the plaintiff says she left the defendant owing to her ill-treatment and scandalous behaviour. Her eyes then appear to have been opened; and the trouble with Chunder Narain having been overcome, she set up a claim, which gave rise to fresh trouble and kept alive the contest with the disaffected tenants. We should add that in the case under s. 145 the two Ranees were described to be of the first party, and Chunder Narain of the second, and the case was decided in favour of the Ranees. The defendant does not seem to have objected to the inclusion of the plaintiff’s name until after the case had been decided, and until after the plaintiff had set up an adverse title; but she distinctly alleged in her written statement that she alone was entitled to the property, and it does not appear that the plaintiff took any part in the conduct of her case.

Such was the plaintiff’s conduct. We will now turn to the defendant’s. Within six days of the Rajah’s death she produced for registration an anumatipatra said to have been executed by the Rajah ten days before he died. By this document he recognizes the defendant as his wife, and gives her power to adopt, postponing the plaintiff’s power of adoption until after the death of the defendant.

The plaintiff is said to have been present when this document was presented for registration, and to have signed her name as a consenting party. The registration was before the Registrar of Calcutta, who went to Rajah’s house, where the plaintiff and defendant were then residing. Under that Act the Registrar had to satisfy himself that the Rajah had executed the deed; he certifies that he did so: and it was registered. We [826] allude to this fact merely as showing that it was not a mere formal registration. Of this deed the plaintiff makes no mention; but Chunder Nath Chowdhry swears in his affidavit that she signed it in his presence, and the execution by the Rajah is also sworn to by another man. On the 10th of August 1888 the defendant got her name registered as sole proprietor of the Rajah’s estates. A consent petition is said to have been filed under a mukhtearnamah executed by the plaintiff, and this petition admits the exclusive title of the defendant. Again, on the 27th November 1884, the defendant took out a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, and the plaintiff is said to have put in a consent petition under a vakalutnamah. All these documents are alleged to be forgeries, but there is evidence before us that they were signed by her. We are not going to express any opinion as to which version is true; but we shall certainly not assume that they are forgeries. They at all events show that the defendant has openly from the very first asserted her exclusive title to the property, and that she was the recognized owner. It is said in the plaint (paragraph 8c) that "the defendant proclaimed in the zemindaries that the plaintiff was willing that she should be looked upon as the sole heiress of the Rajah." There is no proof whatever of the "looking-upon" part of the allegation, and the defendant never seems to have pretended that she was collecting rent on account of any one but herself.

It is argued that, even admitting the defendant to be the widow of the Rajah, she is only entitled to joint possession with the plaintiff, or to a moiety of the estate; that it is for the defendant to prove the family custom which is alleged to exist; and that the title of the plaintiff as an admitted widow of the Rajah is strong enough in itself to justify the appointment of a receiver. As to this, we shall merely say that the defendant's affidavits show grounds for believing that such a custom exists, and the affidavits for the plaintiff disclose no single instance in which the property has devolved on more than one heir. Besides this, the circumstances to which we have already alluded support the defendant's contention. The claim for maintenance furnishes no ground for the appointment of a receiver, and it is not shown that suitable maintenance has ever been refused. The plaintiff does not rely on her reversionary title, and even if she did, no case of waste sufficient to justify the appointment has been made.

We think, therefore, that, apart altogether from the way in which this property has been and is being managed, no case to justify the appointment of a receiver has been made good. In support of the charge of unchastity there is no single piece of credible evidence, and no one ever seems to have questioned the defendant's position as widow of the Rajah until this claim was brought forward under circumstances not altogether free from suspicion. We should be sorry on the materials before us to lend any colour to the accusations of unchastity and fraud by taking the property out of the defendant's possession.

It is necessary to say a few words on the other part of the case, viz., the way in which the property has been managed. Both the Deputy Commissioner and the Judge say that Jibon Ram Phukoon was a very inexperienced person, and quite incompetent to have charge of such a large property, and they attribute to his mismanagement the disorder and crimes which have prevailed in the estate for some years past. We are not going to say a word in support of Jibon Ram Phukoon's capabilities; he may be incompetent, and it may be very desirable to get a stronger and more experienced man; but there is nothing on the record to justify the inference that it was owing to his unpopularity or mismanagement that Chunder Narain came or was put forward as a claimant, though it may well be that he was not strong enough to put down that claim, and that his unpopularity may have added to the number of ryots who took Chunder Narain's side. It is easy to conceive what follows when one person tries to oust another as Chunder Narain is held to have done. The ryots were got over and took different sides; the rents were not collected to the extent they ought to be; and there is a constant struggle accompanied possibly with acts of violence and crimes such as those referred to by the Judge. But it was hardly reasonable to hold the person who is trying to maintain possession answerable for all this. It is impossible to say that the disorder would have continued, or that the rents would not have been [828] collected after Chunder Narain's claim had been disposed of if the plaintiff had not then come forward as a claimant and endeavoured to get possession. We consider that she is to a great extent responsible for the disorder of which she complains, and she is not, we think, in a position now to ask the Court to appoint a receiver while she is prosecuting her claim in the civil suit.

We do not think it necessary to consider in detail the charges of mismanagement which are set out in the affidavit of Poornoo Chunder Bundopadhya. It is clear that the defendant has not been able to collect a large portion of the rent and that she has expended large sums of money.

The expenditure certainly appears to have been unnecessarily great; but this, and the inability to collect the rent, is largely due to the adverse claim set up first by Chunder Narain, and afterwards by the plaintiff.

We think the order for a receiver ought not to have been made, and we set it aside and decree this appeal. The defendant is entitled to costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Ghose.

PUDMANUND SINGH BAHAHUR AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. BAIJ NATH SINGH (Defendant).* [9th August, 1888.]

Illegal Cess—Abwabs—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 74, 179—Regulations VIII of 1793, s. 54; V of 1812, ss. 2 and 3; and XVIII of 1812, s. 2.

What is or is not an abwab must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case in which the question arises.

Where by a kabuliat dated 1869 the defendant, as holder of a mokurari tenure, agreed to pay a certain fixed sum as rent, and also certain items designated tehwari and salami, it was held that they were not illegal cesses within the Full Bench Ruling of Chullan Mahto v. Tilukdari Singh (1), not being uncertain and arbitrary in their character, but [829] specific sums which the tenants agreed to pay to the landlords, and the payment of which, no less than the payment of the rent itself, formed part of the consideration upon which the tenancy was created (2), and which were in fact part of the rent agreed to be paid, although not so described; they were recoverable therefore under Regulation V of 1812.

[Diss., 17 C. 726 (F.B.); 7 Ind. Cas. 582 (583); D., 19 Ind. Cas. 701=18 C.L.J. 83.]

The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 2,830-13-8 for arrears of rent, and for tehwari and salami due to them for the years 1290 (1883-84) to Baisakh 1293 (April 1866) in respect of a mokurari tenure held under them by the defendant. The basis of the suit was a kabuliat dated 25th December 1869, by which the defendants agreed to pay a certain fixed rent, plus a small annual addition for items designated therein as tehwari dusara and salami tousi, in respect of which items the amounts declared to be payable were Rs. 9 and Rs. 2 respectively.

The only defence material to this report was that the defendant was not liable to pay tehwari and salami, inasmuch as they were abwabs,

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1647 of 1887, against the decree of C. A. Wilkins, Esq., Judge of Bhagubore, dated the 2nd May 1887, modifying the decree of Baboo Upendra Chunder Mullick, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 19th August 1886.

(1) 11 C. 175.  (2) See Mahomed Fazan Chowdhry v. Jamoo Gazee, 8 C. 730. and therefore illegal and not recoverable under the Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1885.

The Subordinate Judge decided that the two items of tehwari and salami were not illegal cesses; they being "ingredients of the consideration or bonus on payment of which the permanent mokurari lease was granted;" that they did not come within the Full Bench Ruling of Chultan Mahton v. Tilukdari Singh (1), that ruling "having reference only to the tenures of ordinary ryots and not to mokurari tenures acquired on payment of bonus or consideration. The provisions of s. 74 of Act VIII of 1885 can be distinguished similarly. It has been held in Jogodish Chunder Biswas v. Zarikulla Sircar (2) that there is nothing illegal in a parahi when it is a part of the consideration for which an agreement is entered into. In the mokurari lease tehwari and salami are treated as part of the rent stipulated for, although integral portions were split into heads, and the same therefore cannot be treated as impositions upon tenants in addition to the actual rent. The stipulation was definite and certain, based upon consideration and therefore does not come within the provision of s. 74."

The Subordinate Judge therefore gave the plaintiff a decree.

[830] The Judge on appeal reversed this decision on the point in dispute, and held that the items of tehwari and salami were abwabs, and therefore irrecoverable in this suit.

As to those items being abwabs he said:—

"There can be little doubt that the true meaning of the term is 'anything levied by the landlord in excess of the actual rent or asal Jama.' They were condemned in the regulations, chiefly on the ground of their being arbitrary and indefinite, subjecting the tenants to unforeseen payments, and rendering them liable to pay enhanced rents in a manner not contemplated by law. Now the kabuliat itself divides the amount payable by the mokuridar into mal rent, tehwari dusara and salami towzi, that is, it distinguishes the two latter items from the actual or asal rent. Moreover the salami is a tax levied on the occasion of a Punna or religious ceremony; the tehwari is another tax levied on the occurrence of the Durga Puja when it is the custom for zamindars to expend money in certain ceremonies. Therefore I come to the conclusion that these two items not being a part of the actual rent, being stated in the deed of agreement to be separate from the actual rent, and having no connection with the land itself or the occupancy thereof, are abwabs within the meaning of the Regulations (3) as well as of the former and present rent laws."

He was also of opinion that under the Full Bench Ruling of Chultan Mahton v. Tilukdari Singh (1) all abwabs, not only those levied from ryots, but also, as in the present ease, from a mokuridar, would be illegal, and also with reference to ss. 74 and 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the latter of which sections, "though it might apply to future agreements, cannot legalize an agreement which existed before the Act came into force and which was under the then law illegal."

The Judge therefore modified the decree of the first Court.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale and Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf for the appellants.

(1) II C. 175.
(2) 25 W.R. 90.
(3) The Regulations referred to by the lower Courts were Regulation VIII of 1793, s. 54, Regulation V of 1812, ss. 2 and 3, and Regulation XVIII of 1812 s. 2, which were repealed by Act VIII of 1885.
The judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and GHOSE, J.J.) was delivered by TOTTENHAM, J.—In this case we reserved judgment because it appeared to us that the case was of some difficulty in connection with a Full Bench judgment of this Court upon which the District Judge relied in his decision.

The suit was brought to recover arrears of rent, including certain sums on account of what are called tehwari and salami due in respect of a mokurari tenure. There was also a question with regard to interest payable; the plaintiffs claimed interest in monthly instalments, the defendants denied their liability to pay monthly; they also denied their liability for tehwari and salami.

The first Court decided the suit in favour of the plaintiffs; but on appeal the District Judge modified the decree by disallowing the items of tehwari and salami, and reducing the claim to interest by making it payable quarterly instead of monthly. The District Judge, as regards the items of tehwari and salami relied upon a Full Bench decision of this Court—Chuljan Mahton v. Tilukdari Singh (1). He was of opinion that under that decision he was bound to hold that the demands under these items were abwabs, and as such must be disallowed. He came to this conclusion because it appeared to him that the items in question were outside the rent properly so called.

The words of Mr. Justice Mitter’s decision in that Full Bench case, to which the District Judge refers, do at first sight seem to bear out the view taken by the Judge, but I happened to be one of the Judges of the Full Bench who concurred in Mr. Justice Mitter’s judgment, and I certainly did not at the time of the decision intend to concur in holding that anything recoverable under the terms of Regulation V of 1812 could not be recovered at the present day. That Regulation has been repealed by the new Tenancy Act. But at the time the kabuliat was given by the defendants in the present suit, it was in full force. We have had since an opportunity of consulting Mr. Justice Mitter on this point, and he is anxious that he should not be [832] misunderstood in this matter. He did not mean then to exclude the operation of Regulation V of 1812, where that Regulation could apply. In the case before the Full Bench, that Regulation did not support the plaintiffs: on the contrary it was directly opposed to their claim. In the present case, the Regulation does support the plaintiffs’ case, because the items in dispute are not arbitrary and uncertain in their character, but they are specific sums which the tenants agreed to pay to the landlords; and from the terms of their kabuliat it seems to us that the payment of these items, no less than the payment of the jumma itself, formed part of the consideration upon which the tenancy was created. Therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled by virtue of Regulation V of 1812 to demand and recover these items, they being in fact part of the rent agreed to be paid, although not so described. In the definition contained in the new Tenancy Act, “rent means whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant.” There is nothing new in this, but it expresses concisely what has always been understood.

(1) il C. 175.

by the word "rent." What is or is not an abwab must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case in which the question arises. The Full Bench case, upon which the District Judge relies, does not, as we have said, bar the plaintiffs' present claim. We think the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed on that point.

As regards the other point, namely, whether interest should be charged monthly or quarterly, we think it clear that District Judge is in error, because it is expressly provided in the tenant's kabuliath that interest should be charged monthly. The respondent's pleader, upon this being pointed out to him, frankly admitted that he could not support the District Judge's decision upon this point.

The result is that the appeal will be decreed, the decree of the lower appellate Court disallowing these disputed sums will be set aside, and the decree of the Court of first instance affirmed with costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court.

15 C. 833. [833] CIVIL REFERENCE.

Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Gordon.

KALI SUNKER DASS (Plaintiff) v. KOYLASH CHUNDER DASS (Defendant).* [17th August, 1888.]

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sch. II. art. 35, cl. (g)—Suit for actual pecuniary damages for breach of contract of marriage—Jurisdiction.

A suit for actual pecuniary damages for breach of contract of marriage comes within cl. (g) of art. 35 sch. II of Act IX of 1887, and as such is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small cause Court.

[F. 13 M.L.T. 497 (498)=1913 M.W.N. 637 (638); 19 Ind. Cas. 700; R, 5 Bur L.T. 57=14 Ind. Cas. 837.]

This was a reference by the Judge of Small Cause Court at Sealdah, and arose out of a suit for actual pecuniary damages for breach of contract of marriage.

Kali Sunker Dass, the plaintiff, alleged that on the 13th Falgoon he had agreed with Koylash Chunder Dass, the defendant, to the marriage of his daughter with Koylash's son, and that the 25th Falgoon was the date fixed for the marriage; that on the same day he had spent a sum of Rs. 40-6 in feeding relatives who were present, and had further to pay Rs. 10-4 for carriage hire for going to the bridegroom's house; and that he had also advanced a sum of Rs. 17-8-6 to musicians in contemplation of the marriage; but that on the 20th Falgoon, when he had gone to Panihati to fetch the bridegroom to his house, Koylash Chunder broke the contract by agreeing to his son's marriage with the daughter of another person. Kali Sunker therefore brought this suit to recover from Koylash Chunder Rs. 67-15-6 as the sum actually spent by him in contemplation of the marriage of his daughter with Koylash's son.

The Judge directed the plaint to be returned for presentation in the Munsif's Court, subject, however, to the opinion of the High Court on the following question: "Whether, having regard to the facts stated in

* Civil Reference No. 17A of 1888, made by Baboo Krishna Mohun Mukherji, Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Sealdah, dated the 5th June 1888.
the plaint, a suit for actual pecuniary damages for breach of contract of marriage could be entertained by the Small Cause Court.'" [834] Baboo Jogender Chunder Ghose, for the plaintiff.

Baboo Sham Lall Mitter, for the defendant.
The opinion of the High Court (Pigot and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:

OPINION.

In this case we think that the suit, as one for compensation for breach of contract of marriage, comes within cl. (g) of art. 35 of the second schedule to the Small Cause Court Act. We must take the terms of the Act with reference to the conditions of society in this country—conditions perfectly well known. In the immense majority of instances these contracts are made and broken, not by the acts of the persons about whose marriages they are entered into, but by their parents or guardians. We think that this case being one of these must be contemplated as included under that portion of the Small Cause Court Act above referred to. Of course where the special conditions of native life do not apply, as, for instance, in the case of persons sui juris, the argument of the pleader that the English mode of looking at these contracts should be followed may apply.

In the present case we think the matter must be regarded as one excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.
We allow the defendant the costs of this appearance.

(2) S. 3—See MINOR, 14 C. 159.
(3) S. 18—Certificated guardian, power of, to grant lease—unauthorized transfer, Effect of.—A lease for a term of 12 years, but renewable at the parganna rate and transferable in its character, granted by a certificated guardian without the authority of the Court, is void ab initio, and will, therefore, not avail the lessee, even for the period of five years for which such guardian is at liberty to grant the lease. Held, accordingly, that in the case of ijmali property, whether such a lease was executed by the guardian conjointly with the co-sharers of the minor or separately, the minor was entitled to eject the lessee as trespasser in respect of his own share without making his co-sharers parties to the suit. Quare, whether such a lease granted by a certificated guardian conjointly with the co-sharers of a minor, and thus creating one and the same tenancy, is not also void as against the co-sharers, held, also, that a transfer made by a person in the capacity of a certificated guardian before the actual issue of the certificate, but after the orders for its issue have been made in his favour, and after his recognition as a certificated guardian, is a transfer within s. 18 of Act XL of 1858. Semble.—The word "debtor" in s. 2 of Act XXVII of 1860 does not include the purchaser of a mortgaged property, who is in no sense a debtor; nor does that section contemplate a case of a decree other than a personal decree.

Semble.—The violation of a special order made by a District Superintendent of Police requiring the presence of an officer or of certain officers within the Police lines and issued expressly to him or each of them would come within s. 29 of the Act as being not "a rule or regulation," but a "lawful order" made by a competent authority and relating to the duties of the officer or officers.

The lessees. For default in payment of rent this lease was decreed to be in future liable to cancellation "by the decree of any competent Court, according to any law which may be in force in Oudh with respect to persons holding an under-proprietary right in land." Afterwards, in 1879, the parties agreed that the lessees might be dispossessed for non-payment of rent. Default occurred, decrees for arrears were made in 1882 and 1883, and remained unsatisfied. <td>(3) S. 32, Construction of—Outsider practising as mukhtear, his liability to punishment—Mukhtears, their functions—Civil Procedure Code, s. 37—Act XVIII of 1879 is an amending as well as a consolidating Act, and one of the respects in which it amended the old law was the conferring upon the High Court Power &quot;to make rules declaring what shall be deemed to be the functions, powers, and duties of the mukhtears practising in the Subordinate Courts. When a person other than a duly certificated and enrolled mukhtear constantly, and as a means of livelihood, performs any of the functions or powers which the rule framed by the High Court in accordance with the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act says are the functions and powers of a mukhtear, he practises as a mukhtear, and is liable to a penalty under s. 32 of the Act. The words &quot;any person&quot; in s. 32 embrace pure outsiders as well as duly qualified and enrolled mukhtears who have failed to take out their certificates. G. N., though not a certificated mukhtear was in the habit of appointing and and instructing pleaders in the Civil Courts on account of certain persons who paid him a regular monthly salary for so doing. In a proceeding against him under the Legal Practitioners Act, G. N., made this statement: &quot;I receive a letter from the mofussil from a person and act for him, sending the vakalatnama with his letter. I receive monthly wages from each of the persons who employ me. Each of the employers I have mentioned belongs to a distinct family and lives in a separate village.&quot; Held, that G. N., was neither a private servant nor a recognized agent of any of his employers within the meaning of s. 37 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was liable to a penalty under s. 32 of the Legal Practitioners Act for having practised as a mukhtear. Held, also, that having regard to the Court in which G. N. practised, the words in s. 32 &quot;to a fine not exceeding ten times the amount of the stamp required by this Act for a certificate authorizing him so to practise in such Court,&quot; were equivalent to the words &quot;to a fine not exceeding Rs. 250.&quot; In the matter of the petition of GIRHAR NARAIN TUSSUDUQ HOSAIN v. Husain Bux v. Mutookdharee Lall, 14 C. 312

(9) S. 148 (h)—Decree for arrears of rent, Assignment of—Execution of decree by assignee.—The fact that an assignment of a decree for arrears of rent was made before the Tenancy Act will not protect from the provisions of s. 148 (h) an assignee who proceeds to execution afterwards; but execution cannot be refused where, before that Act came into operation, the assignment had been recognised by a Court of execution under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code. Per Tottentham, J.—Such suit is in the nature of a suit for an injunction under the Specific Relief Act or else a declaratory suit. Jagadamba Devi v. Protap Gosh, 14 C. 537

(11) S. 153—Appeal in rent suit—Appeal from order of District Judge—In certain rent suits, the amount claimed being under Rs. 100, the question was raised as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to the whole 16 annas of the rent or only to a 10 annas share thereof. Upon this point the first Court gave the plaintiff decrees for the full amount claimed, holding that the question was res judicata. Upon appeal the District Judge held that the question was not res judicata, and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court. Held that, having regard to the provisions of s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no appeal lay, as the question was not one relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, nor was it "a question of the amount of rent annually payable by a tenant," these words in the section meaning the total amount of rent annually payable in respect of a holding, and not the amount of rent which may be payable to any particular co-sharer in the property. Prasanna Kumar Banerjee v. Srinath Das, 15 C. 231

(12) S. 153—Revisional power of District Judge in rent suits—Judicial Officer.—The words "Judicial officer as aforesaid" as used in the proviso to s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act have reference to the "Judicial Officer" spoken of in cl. (b) of that section and to such officer only, and a district Judge has no power to revise decrees or orders passed by a District Judge. Additional Judge, or Subordinate Judge referred to in cl. lease under which he alleges he is holding, and the Court is bound to go into and decide that question if raised. A lease granted by guardian of minor's property who has obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858 for a term exceeding five years without the sanction required by s. 18 of that Act is invalid. BHUPENDRO NARAYAN DUTT v. NEMYE CHAND MUNDUL, 15 C. 627

(15) S. 174—Act creating new rights, Effect of Application for execution.—The provisions of an Act which creates a new right cannot, in the absence of express legislation, or direct implication have a retrospective effect. Held, accordingly, that a judgment-debtor's right under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to set aside a sale did not avail where the sale was held in pursuance of a decree, the execution whereof had been applied for before that Act came into operation. LAL MOHUM MUKERJEE v. JOGENDRA CHUNDER ROY; BONOMALI CHUNDER GHOSAL v. REMKALI DUTT, 14 C. 636 (F. B.)

(16) S. 174—Deposit, Nature of—Jurisdiction—Application under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.—The dispost under s. 174 of the Tenancy Act must be of such a nature as to be at once payable to the parties, and a Court has no power to set aside a sale under that section unless the judgment-debtor has complied strictly with its provisions. KAHIM BUH v. NUNDO LAL GOSSAMI, 14 C. 321

(17) S. 174—Execution applied for after passing of Act VIII of 1885, decree being previous to the Act—Bengal Act, VIII of 1869, Construction of statutes.—A sale in execution of a decree passed under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, execution having been applied for after Act VIII of 1885 had come into force, cannot be set aside under s. 174 of the latter Act. UZIR ALI v. RAM KONAL SHAHA, 15 C. 383

(18) S. 174—Judgment-debtor, Meaning of.—The word "judgment-debtor" as used in s. 174 of Act VIII of 1885 does not include a transferee or assignee from a judgment-debtor, but must be construed strictly as referring to a judgment-debtor alone. RAJENDRO NARAIN ROY v. PHUDY MONDUL, 15 C. 482

(20) S. 184 and sch. III, part I, art. 3—Occupancy raiyat—Suit—Limitation.—The suit mentioned in s. 184 and sch. III, part I, art. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, means a suit by an occupancy raiyat as such, that is an occupancy raiyat claiming a right of occupancy as against his landlord. CHUNDER KISHORE DEY ALIAS MUKHORI DEY v. RAJ KISHORE MOZUMDAR, 15 C. 450

(21) S. 188—Co-sharers, Suit by—Parties.—S. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to such matters as a landlord is, under the Act, authorised or required to do; there is nothing in that Act which requires or authorizes a landlord to sue thereunder for arrears of rent. One of several joint landlords is competent to sue for the entire rent due from a tenant making his co-sharers parties to the suit. PREM CHAND NUSKUR v. MOKSHODA DEBI, 14 C. 201

(22) S. 188—Suit for rent—Co-sharers, Suit by—Joint undivided estate—Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 622.—A District Judge, in deciding a rent suit, held that s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act prohibited the Court from entertaining the suit in the form in which it had been framed, and therefore dismissed the suit. Held, on an application under s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code to have the judgment of the District Judge set aside, that the District Judge had acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally, inasmuch as s. 188 had no application to the case, and that his decision must be set aside. JUGOBUNDHU PATTUCK v. JADU GHOSE ALKUSHI, 15 C. 47

(23) Sch. III, art. 3—Limitation—Suit by occupancy ryot to recover possession from trespasser, Limitation for.—Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), relates to suits brought by an occupancy ryot against his landlord and not to a suit brought against a third party who is a trespasser. Code, ss. 290, 311, 312.—Neither the provisions of s. 33 of Act XI of 1859, nor those of s. 2, Beng. Act VII of 1868, affect the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain a suit to set aside a sale under a certificate on any of the following grounds, namely, that no arrears were due at all, that no notice was served in accordance with the provisions of Beng. Act VII of 1868, or that the provisions of s. 290 of the Civ. Pro. Code were infringed. The words "in respect of sales in execution of decrees" in s. 19 of Beng. Act VII of 1880, do not include any proceedings instituted after the sale for setting it aside. Ss. 311 and 312 therefore of the Civ. Pro. Code do not apply to sales under a certificate. The infringement of the provisions of s. 290 of the Civ. Pro. Code is not a mere irregularity, but it vitiates the sale—Bakshi Nand Kishore v. Malak Chand, I. L. R., 7 All. 289. The provision s. 8 of Beng. Act VII of 1880, as to the certificate becoming absolute and acquiring the force and effect of a final decree, does not come into operation unless the notice required by s. 10 is actually served. The only remedy of a judgment where property has been sold in execution of a certificate issued under Beng. Act VII of 1880, and who has sustained substantial injury by reason of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, is by way of an appeal under s. 2 of Beng. Act VII of 1868. The effect of s. 2 of Beng. Act VII of 1880 is that Act XI of 1859, and Beng. Act VII of 1868, and Beng. Act VII of 1880, are to be considered as if the provisions contained in them were contained in one Act so far as such construction is consistent with the tenor of the last mentioned Act. By the force therefore of s. 2 of the Act of 1880, the provisions of s. 2 of the Act of 1868 became applicable to a sale under an execution issued upon a certificate made under the Act of 1880. Bengal Act VII of 1880 is an Act for the recovery of all kinds of public demands, and therefore applies to cases of road or other public cesses.

SADHUSARAN SINGH v. PANCHDEO LAL, 14 C. I

(2) S. 19—Certificate Procedure—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 311, 312.—A suit will lie in a Civil Court to set aside a sale held under Beng. Act VII of 1880, where the sale proclamation is issued against the whole sixteen annas of the estate, but a sale held only of a portion thereof. The effect of s. 19 of that Act is, that it relates to the practice and procedure in respect of sales, that is, to the practice and procedure of executing Courts in the carrying out of sales.

RAM LOGAN OJHA v. BHAWANI OJHA, 14 C. 9

Act IX of 1880 (Bengal Road Cess).

Ss. 50—71—Cesses—Rent-free lands—Notice.—Plaintiffs sued to recover arrears of road and public works cesses on account of certain rent-free land, claiming double the amount under s. 58 of the Cess Act (Beng. Act IX of 1880). It was found that no notice of the valuation had been published as required by s. 52 of the Act, and it was held by the lower Court that the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to recover double the amount under s. 58. It was then contended that he was at any rate entitled to recover the amount of the cesses with interest under s. 62. Held that the latter section did not give the holder of the estate or tenure a right to recover the cesses payable under s. 56 before publication of notice, and that the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to a decree, and that his suit must be dismissed.

3.—To Privy Council.

1.—General.
(1) Attachment—Objection to attachment by judgment-debtor on behalf of others—Order against decree-holder—Civil Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283.—Where a judgment-debtor claims property which is the subject-matter of attachment, either on his own account as his own property, under whatever right, or as the representative of third parties in which capacity he has been sued, the question between him and the attaching creditor is properly one between the parties to the suit under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But where the judgment-debtor raises the claim or objection on behalf of third parties who are not represented before the Court, the order passed thereon must be regarded as an order under s. 280 of the Code, and the only mode in which that order can be contested is in a regular suit as provided by s. 283. In execution of a decree against a judgment-debtor in his private capacity the judgment creditor attached certain property. Thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that the property attached had been dedicated by him sometime previous as wakf under a registered wakf namah, and that he was only in possession as mutwali under the deed. The lower Court found that the document created a valid wakf, and allowed the objection and released the property from attachment. The judgment-creditor appealed. At the hearing of the appeal it was contended that no appeal lay, inasmuch as the order was one under s. 280 of the Civil Pro. Code. On behalf of the judgment-creditor it was contended that the order was one under s. 244, and was thus appealable. Held that the order was one under s. 280, and that no appeal lay, the remedy of the judgment-creditor being by way of a regular suit as provided by s. 283.

(2) In Criminal Case—Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 22—Compensation for illegal seizure of cattle.—No appeal lies from an order under s. 22 of Act I of 1871, awarding compensation for illegal seizure of cattle.

(5) See Limitation Act (XV of 1877), 14 C. 26; 15 C. 242.

2.—Second Appeal.
(1) New point—Discretion of Court.—On second appeal the appellant should not be allowed to raise an entirely new point if it is one for the right determination of which it is necessary to go into evidence which has not been produced in the lower Courts, or unless it is a pure point of law going to the question of the jurisdiction of the lower Courts and capable of being determined without the consideration of any evidence other than that on the record, and even if it falls within the above exception it is purely discretionary with the Court whether to consider it or not.
Fakir Chand Audhikari v. Anunda Chunder Bhattachari, 14 C. 586

(2) Rent suit—Bengal Act, VIII of 1869, s. 102—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—General Clauses Act, I of 1868, s. 6.—The word "proceedings" in s. 6 of Act I of 1868, as applied to a suit, means the suit as an entirety that is, down to the final decree. A second appeal, therefore, to the High Court on a question of the amount due as rent, will not lie when the suit was instituted previous to

3.—To Privy Council.

Security for performance of order to be made by Her Majesty in Council—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 608—Refusal of order staying execution where decree was not yet appealed to the Privy Council, but leave to appeal from interlocutory orders in execution granted—Intimation to Court below—A party to a suit in an Appellate Court, who had obtained leave to appeal from its decree to Her Majesty in Council, petitioned for the order of the latter staying execution of interlocutory orders made in execution of such decree, and directing payment by the petitioner to the opposite party of large sums without security taken for their repayment in the event of the decree being reversed. This accompanied a petition for special leave to appeal against those orders. The latter was granted, but it not being competent to the Judicial Committee to make any order as to the stay of execution, an intimation was made by it to the Court below that it appeared to be the reasonable course that the opposite party should not, pending the appeal, be put into possession of the large sums in dispute. That intimation being made, the petitioner might apply to the Court below for the due security of all money paid into the treasury in obedience to the decree. INDER KUMARI v. Security for personal appearance of defendant—Civ. Pro. Code. (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 477, 479—Bona fide suit.—A suit was instituted against the master of a vessel for repairs done to his vessel and for hire of a dock in which the vessel had been. The master being about to leave the jurisdiction of the Court with his vessel, the plaintiffs, under s. 477 of the Code of Civil Procedure, applied for an order that the defendant should give security for his appearance to answer any decree that might be passed against him, and a rule was issued calling on him to show cause why such security should not be furnished. The defendant showed cause, and alleged that the amount claimed for the repairs was excessive, that the repairs were badly done, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to dock hire, and that some of the repairs charged for had not been executed. He further counterclaimed for a large sum for demurrage owing to the detention of his vessel and damages caused to it by the wrongful act of the plaintiffs. It was contended that, as the claim was on a contested account which on the face of it was stated, but unsettled, on the principal of the English authorities, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the order asked for. It was further contended that the suit was not a bona fide one, but brought merely harass to the defendant, and that for this reason security should not be ordered to be given. It was not disputed that the defendant had no domicile in this country, and that he was shortly leaving in his vessel in the ordinary course of his business. The Court found the plaintiffs were undoubtedly entitled to recover some amount on account of repairs, and that the mere fact that the plaintiffs added on to such a claim one of a disputable character did not go to show that the suit was not a bona fide one. Held, that there is no authority for saying that the principles applied in England to the granting of writs ne eext regno should be applied in this country; and that the Court can only look to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure; that when a person comes on business to this country in which he has no property or domicile, and enters into a contract with a person to do work in connection with that business and which must be done before he leaves the country, and it is known he intends to leave as soon as the work is completed, there is an implied understanding, if the work was done on his credit, that it should be paid for before he leaves. Held, also, that the case fell within the provisions of s. 477 of the Code, and that the defendant should furnish security for his appearance while the suit was pending within a week in terms of s. 479, such security to be for the amount of the claim. Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1 of 1886).

S. 59—Rent suit for arrears due before Regulation came into force.—In a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent accrued due before the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation of 1886 came into force, which was instituted on the 7th of July 1886, where it appeared that the plaintiff’s name had been previously registered, but that the Chief Commissioner had issued no notification under s. 48 of the Regulation directing that the registers then in existence should be deemed to be registers prepared under s. 59 of the Regulation, and that the plaintiff’s name had not been registered under the last-mentioned section: Held, that s. 59 applies to rent accruing due after the Regulation came into force, and not to rent already due on the date on which it came into force, and that therefore the suit was maintainable. (1) Of re-formed land after diliation—Act IX of 1847, ss. 1, 6, 7 and 9 effect of—Jurisdiction of Board of Revenue. Its extent—Civil Court, Power of—Survey Maps, their evidentiary value.—Where on inspection of a survey map, and after its comparison with a former thak map, the Board of Revenue assessed certain land as alluvial increment, which, however, the Civil Court in a suit against the order of the Board, found upon further evidence to be a re-formation on the original site of a permanently-settled estate, in respect whereof the plaintiff had all along paid revenue without abatement: Held, that the land was not liable to fresh assessment, under the provisions of s. 6 of Act IX of 1847, nor was the comparison of the two maps by the Revenue Officer conclusive on the question of addition to the estate—Held, also, (Mitter, J., dissenting) that the order of the Board of Revenue fixing the land with liability to assessment was not final, and could be set aside by the Civil Court as ultra vires—Held, by the majority of the Full Bench, that the language of s. 9 was not such as would prohibit the present suit; and unless the meaning were clear, its operation should be limited to suits for damages on account of anything done in good faith; for instance, in a case of ouster under s. 7—Held, (Mitter, J., dissenting)—S. 1 of Act IX of 1847 repealed everything in the Regulation which enacted by what officers and how the question of liability to assessment should be tried, and therefore took away from Collectors and Boards of Revenue the power of giving any binding decision on the point. Held also (Mitter, J., dissenting) that the effect of the words “shall be final,” in s. 6 was to make the assessment final in every case in which there was jurisdiction to assess, but to leave it open to the Civil Court to inquire in each case whether there was such jurisdiction, or whether the lands assessed were liable to assessment. Per Mitter, J.—Section 1 has not abolished the judicial functions of the Revenue Authorities under Regulation II of 1881; all that has been abolished by that section are the tribunals constituted by Regulation III of 1828. Per Mitter, J.—The proceedings of the Revenue Authorities under s. 6 embrace an inquiry upon two questions, viz., the question of the liability to assessment and the rate of assessment, and under the express wording of the section the finality attaches to the whole order of the Sudder Board of Revenue. (1) Civ. Pro. Code, s. 266—Property held by judgment-debtor in trust for a specific purpose—Attempt to attach surplus after fulfilment of trust.—Neither the whole corpus, nor any specific portion of the corpus, of an estate in the hands of a trustee who is a judgment-debtor is rendered liable to attachment in execution of the decree against him, because a surplus of income is in his hands for his own benefit after due performance of the trusts: nor does such corpus, or any part of it, come, for that reason, within the meaning of s. 266 of the code of Civil Procedure, which only authorizes the attachment of property over which the judgment-debtor has a disposing power exercisable for his own benefit. Where a trust had been created for specific purpose, viz, the performance of religious and other duties, and the trustee had duly appointed another trustee in his place, the latter being entitled to hold the trust estate. Held, that a decree having been made against the trustee personally, the corpus of the trust estate could not be sold to satisfy the claim of the judgment-creditor, nor could any specific portion of the corpus of the estate be taken out of the hands of the trustee on the ground that there was, or might be, a margin of profit coming to him personally after the performance of the trusts. Held, also, that in a suit in which all the parties interested were not before the Court there could be no decision as to the extent of the trusts, nor as to whether any surplus profits of the trust estates would or would not, after the performance of the trust, belong to the trustee personally. otherwise is with the Court itself and not with the Police. M, the complainant, on the 19th November 1887, made an application to the postponement of his case against G, to enable him to apply to the

(1) Act XXVII of 1860—Rival claimants for certificate—Procedure—Trial of questions of title.—In a case of rival claimants to a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to the estate of a deceased Mahomedan lady, A based his claim on the ground that the deceased was a Sunni, and that he being a Sunni was her nearest heir. B's claim was founded on the allegation that the deceased was a Shia, and that he being a Shia had the preferential title. The Judge declined to receive the whole of the evidence tendered, and to go into the question of title. On appeal the case was remanded to the Judge for determination of the question whether the deceased was a Sunni or a Shia, and which of the parties had the preferential title to the certificate, upon the entire evidence. Per Ghose, J.—Where the question as to right to a certificate is between two parties, one of whom, according to certain given facts, would be the heir and the other a total stranger, those facts must be gone into and determined, although such procedure involves to a certain extent the trial of a question of title. Cases distinguished where the question of the title to obtain a certificate is raised between one who is undoubtedly a natural heir and another who sets up a special title, or between two persons equally entitled to the succession, but one of whom claims exclusive title upon some special grounds. Charge of Jury.
Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) s. 298—Duty of Judge when the jury are uncertain as to the offence committed—Evidence disbelieved in some parts and accepted in others.—A jury, after retiring, returned to the box, and after unanimously finding both prisoners not guilty of the charges framed against them, stated to the Judge that they thought an offence had been committed by one of the prisoners, but were uncertain as to the section of the Penal Code applicable to his case; the Judge thereupon made over to them a copy of the Penal Code, leaving them to decide under what section the offence fell. Held, that he had failed in his duty, and that he should have asked the jury what doubts they had as to the crime which had been committed, and should have explained to them the law and informed them what offence the facts would prove against the prisoner if they believed those facts. Where the evidence at a trial is in part disbelieved, as to which part it is thought that the witnesses had committed perjury, it is unsafe to accept the evidence of those witnesses in other parts and to convict the prisoner thereunder. Held, that although the plaintiff, who had claimed in the prior suit the under proprietary right in virtue of a sub-settlement, claimed in the present suit the superior proprietary right, the difference in the mode of relief claimed did not affect the identity of the cause of action, which was, in both cases, the refusal of the right to redeem; and that under s. 114 of the Act the judgment of 1864 was final. (23) S. 244—Finality of order—Competency of Court.—S. S. brought a suit under a mortgage bond, making R. S., a subsequent incumbrancer, a defendant, and obtained a decree for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises. After the decree a compromise was effected between all the parties with the exception of R. S., by the terms of which, in consideration of the judgment-debtors (mortgagors) undertaking to do certain acts, S. S. promised to execute his decree against only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises. The judgment-debtors (mortgagors) having failed to carry out the compromise, S. S. applied for a sale of the whole of the mortgaged premises, but on the petition of R. S. setting out the terms of the compromise to which he was no party, the Subordinate Judge, by an order of the 7th September 1885, held that under the agreement S. S. was entitled to sell only a 3 annas 12 dams share of the mortgaged premises, which was accordingly directed to be sold. That order was not appealed against, but subsequently in March 1886, S. S. made a fresh application for a sale of the remainder of the premises, R. S. objecting. Held, that the order of the 7th September was one which the court was competent to make under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and by reason of that order not being appealed it became final. (27) Ss. 244 and 258—Judgment-debtor as part-purchaser of a decree, Suit by—H. D. and R. D. owned a 6-anna share in certain decrees. The other decree-holders subsequently sold their 10-anna share to H. S. and S. M., two of the judgment-debtors. H. D. and R. D. then proceeded to execute the decrees, and in satisfaction thereof were allowed to receive, upon giving security under s. 231 of the Code, the full 16-annas share of the decreetal amount from H. S. and S. M., notwithstanding the objection of the latter on the ground of their purchase.

Thereupon H. S. and S. M. brought a suit for declaration of their right of purchase and the recovery of a 10-anna share of the money in the hands of H. D. and R. D. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the relief sought for. Held, also, that the provisions of s. 258 of the Civ. Pro. Code, did not affect the suit, which was brought not upon the allegation that the decrees were satisfied by the plaintiffs' purchase, but, on the contrary, was founded upon the proposition that the decrees were not so satisfied. Held further, that the claim was not within the words "relating to the execution of the decree" is s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code, inasmuch as it did not raise any question in respect to the furtherance of, or hindrance to or the manner of carrying out the execution of the decrees. Haragobind Das v. (29) S. 246—Execution of cross-decrees—Power of Court executing decree—Bona fide purchaser—Presumption of validity of order for sale.—If a Court ordering a sale in execution of a decree has jurisdiction, a purchaser of the property sold is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the order for execution, any more than into the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues. Notwithstanding anything in s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he is not bound to inquire whether the judgment-debtor holds a cross-decree of higher amount against the decree-holder any more than he is to inquire in an ordinary case, whether the decree, under which execution has issued, has been satisfied or not. These are questions to be determined by the Court issuing execution. Where property, sold in execution of a valid decree under the order of a competent Court, was purchased bona fide and for fair value: Held, that the mere existence of a cross-decree for a higher amount in favour of the judgment-debtor, without any question of fraud, would not support a suit by the latter against the purchaser to set aside the sale. (34) Ss. 276, 295—Claim to rateable distribution under s. 295—Sale pending attachment.—A claim under s. 295 of the Civ. Pro. Code is not enforceable as an attachment against which an assignment is rendered void by the provisions of s. 276. In June 1883, A, B, and C. obtained separate money decrees against, amongst others, T, as executor under the will of his father. Sometime in 1884 B attached the whole of the testator's properties in execution of his decree, and A and C applied for rateable shares in the sale proceeds. On the 2nd June 1884 the parties came to an arrangement by which it was agreed that B's claims should be satisfied by means of all the attached properties with the exception of one, which should be left free for the benefit of the other judgment-creditors. By a deed, dated the 16th June, but which was found to have been actually executed on the 17th, T conveyed this property to A; and on the 17th June all the other attached properties were sold in execution of B's decree; and on the same day B put in an application for the removal of his attachment from this property, D, another decree-holder, on the 16th June applied to be included in the rateable distribution of the properties attached by B; and on the 30th June D, attached the property sold to A, in execution of his decree. A, preferred a claim to the property, which was disallowed; and A, thereupon brought a suit to establish her right to it on the ground inter alia that B's attachment had ceased to exist on the date of her purchase, and that the sale was valid one. Held, that the sale to A, was valid as against D. Durga Churn Roy Chowdhury v. Monomohini Dasi, 15 C. 771. — 1908

(43) Ss. 311, 312—Sale in execution, Application to set aside—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 18, and sch. II, art. 166—Fraud.—An application under s. 311 of the Civ. Pro. Code to set aside a sale cannot be made after the expiry of thirty days from the date of such sale and after such sale has been confirmed, even though it be alleged that the sale was fraudulently kept from the knowledge of the applicant until after such confirmation. Sembor, that if, before such sale had been confirmed, an application had been made although after thirty days from the date of the sale, the Court would possibly have been justified in granting the application and extending the period of limitation if sufficient cause under s. 18 of the Limitation Act were made out. D, a judgment-debtor, was committed to jail on the 8th of August, 1884, and he applied under s. 336 of the Civ. Pro. Code to be released. On the 16th of November, 1884, B and C stood security for him under the provisions of s. 336 of the Civ. Pro. Code, that he would appear when called on, and that he would within one month apply under s. 344 to be declared an insolvent, and D was thereupon released. The decree-holder on the 20th of July made a fresh application to execute the decree against the sureties, unless they should produce the judgment-debtor in Court. Confession.

(1) Confession of an accused person—Evidence, Admissibility of confession in—Question and answer—Memorandum in English by Magistrate—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 164, 364 and 533.—It is not necessary that the English Memorandum referred to in para. 3 of s. 364 of the Crim. Pro. Code should be made in respect of confessions recorded under s. 164, as the manner in which such a confession is to be recorded under the provisions of that section is fully set out in the first two paras. of s. 364. A confession of any accused person was recorded before a Deputy Magistrate by one of his clerks, under the provisions of s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, while the case was under investigation by the police. No English Memorandum of the nature referred to in s. 364 was made by the Deputy Magistrate. A further confession was recorded by the Magistrate under the provisions of s. 364 while the case was being heard before him. Both confessions were recorded in narrative form and the questions and answers were not taken down. At the trial before the Sessions Judge both confessions were put in evidence, and no evidence was given under the provisions of s. 533 of the Crim. Pro. Code that the accused duly made the statements recorded. The accused was convicted mainly on the strength of the confessions. Held, upon the authority, of the decision in 8 C. 618 (note), that as the accused was not prejudiced by the questions and answers not being recorded, it was unnecessary for the Judge to take evidence under s. 533, and that the conviction based on the confessions must be upheld. _Fekoo Matho v. The Empress, 14 C. 539_ 357

(2) Crim Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 1, 164, 364, 533—Defect in confession—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 21, 26, 80—Presidency Towns, Investigations in.—An accused, in custody at the time, made to a Magistrate in Calcutta, in the course of a police investigation held in Calcutta, a statement confessing that he had murdered his father. The accused spoke and understood English, and the Magistrate questioned him in English, and was answered sometimes in English and sometimes in Bengali. Whenever the answers were given in English they were so taken down, when in Bengali they were written down in English and read over to the accused in that language, who accepted the English as being the meaning of that which he had stated, and signed the document in the presence of the Magistrate, who affixed the usual certificate thereto. In taking this confession the Magistrate purported to have acted under ss. 164 and 364 of the Crim. Pro. Code. At the trial, subsequently to the admission of the confession in evidence under s. 80 of the Evidence Act, the Magistrate was called as a witness and deposed to the above facts with reference to the language in which the confession was taken and the mode in which it was recorded. Held, on a reference to a Full Bench as to whether the confession was inadmissible in evidence by reason of some of the answers having been given in Bengali but recorded in English, that the provisions of s. 164 of the Code had no application to statements taken in the course of a police investigation made in the town of Calcutta, and that consequently ss. 364 and 533 had no application. Held, nevertheless, that the document was properly admitted upon the evidence of the Magistrate under the provisions of s. 26 of the Evidence Act.

Semble.—The provisions of s. 164, as read with s. 364, would not be complied with, where answers made by an accused to a Magistrate in one language are taken down in another, unless it could be shown that it was impracticable to have taken down the answers in the language in which they were given; and further, that there would be grave doubt if such a defect could be cured by s. 533.

On the expiration of his lease W, who, still held a portion of the mouza in ijara from a 2-anna co-sharer continued to cultivate indigo on the khas lands as before, and disregarding the opposition of the 14-anna co-sharers, claimed an exclusive title to do so. The 14-anna co-sharers thereupon brought a suit against W for ijami possession of the khas lands, and prayed, among other things, for an injunction prohibiting the defendant from sowing indigo upon the ijami lands without the plaintiffs' consent, and also for a general injunction to prohibit the defendant from throwing any obstacles in the way of plaintiffs holding ijami possession of the lands. The Court below granted an injunction prohibiting the defendant from growing indigo on the khas lands without the consent of the plaintiffs. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction but having regard to the circumstances, under which the defendant cultivated the lands, it was necessary to vary the injunction granted by the Court below by making it an injunction restraining the defendant from excluding by any means the plaintiffs from their enjoyment of the ijami possession of the lands. Costs.

(1) Costs of suit by husband against wife for divorce—Deposit of costs—Stay of proceedings until costs paid—Poverty of husband.—In a suit brought for dissolution of a marriage solemnised in 1859 (the parties to such marriage being of Anglo-Indian domicile) the respondent, being possessed of no separate property of her own, applied to the Court for an order directing her husband to deposit in Court a sum sufficient to cover her probable costs of suit. The Court made an order directing the Registrar to estimate and certify the wife's probable costs of suit, and directed the husband to pay the sum so certified into Court. The husband being a man of next to no means failed to pay into Court the sum certified by the registrar. Held on an application by the wife to stay proceedings until such costs were paid, that it would be unreasonable to stay proceedings on account of the husband being unable to pay into Court that which he did not possess; but that, inasmuch as the affidavits filed by the parties were contradictory as to the means of the husband, the matter should be referred (if the parties so desired it) for an inquiry by an officer of the Court into the question of means. (3) S. 133—Removal of nuisance—Public way—Suit for declaration of right and confirmation of possession—Cause of Action.—On the 6th of July 1882, the Joint Magistrate of Krishnagur, on a complaint made by A, order B to demolish a cow-shed which he had built some months previously, the land on which the cow-shed had been built being part of a public way. Thereupon B brought a suit against A for a declaration of his right to enjoy the land as his private property and for confirmation of possession. The plaint did not allege that B, in causing the Magistrate to initiate proceedings against A, had been actuated by malicious motives and had acted with intention of wrongfully injuring the plaintiff. Held, that the suit would not lie. Khobabuxsh Mundul v. Monglay Mundul, 14 C. 60
(4) Ss. 133—137, Course to be followed in the administration of Obstruction to highway—Claim of title—Bona fides of claim of title, Right of Magistrate to enquire into—Jurisdiction.—The mere assertion of a claim of title made without reasonable ground, or honest belief in it, or honest intention to support it, will not oust a Criminal Court of its jurisdiction under ss. 133—137 of the Crim. Pro. Code. In proceedings under s. 133 of the Crim. Pro. Code with reference to obstructions to public ways, it is open to the Magistrate to enquire into the bona fides of the claim; and where he decides against its bona fides, he must state reasons for his decision which will be subject to revision by the High Court. Such a claim must be set up at or before the hearing and not afterwards. Lukhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee, 15 C. 564.

(6) S. 145—Dispute as to right to collect rents—Tangible immoveable property.—A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immoveable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Crim. Pro. Code. Where a dispute arose as to the right to collect the rents of certain land the ownership of which was claimed by both A and B, and the tenants who had been paying rent to A refused to pay rent to A and attorned to B: Held, that the conduct of the tenants in attorning to B was not an assertion adverse to A such as to put an end to the relation of landlord and tenant between them and A and to A's right to collect the rents. Such attornment therefore did not deprive A of his right to have recourse to s. 145 in case of a likelihood of a breach of the peace, so as to have his possession of the right to collect the rents maintained, pending proceedings in a civil suit. Sarbananda Basu Mozumdar v. Pran Sankar Roy Chowdhuri, 15 C. 527.
(7) S. 145—Joint hearing of the case of several claimants—Possession—Number of plots. Dispute as to—Practice.—A Magistrate proceeding under s. 145 of the Crim. Pro. Held, that the course pursued by the Magistrate at the hearing was prejudicial to the case of the mauvases claimants, and that the form of his order was open to the objection that it would

(9) S. 145—Possession—Title—Symbolical possession.—A Magistrate, trying a case under s. 145 of the Crim. Pro. Code, in determining the question of possession, took into consideration to question of title. Held, that he had a right to discuss to question of title, if in his opinion it was material upon the question of possession; and that the mere fact that he had considered and discussed the question of title would not invalidate his decision on the point of possession, provided that there was evidence before him as to who was in possession. Simile.—In the absence of any other evidence of possession, a Magistrate would be justified in finding possession to be with a person to whom symbolical possession has been shown to have been given in execution of a decree, although possibly slight evidence would be sufficient to rebut such evidence of possession. holding that it was the property of Government. Held, that the

Decree.

1. Construction of—Construction of decree for money payable by instalments—Term making entire sum payable on default in payment of the instalments at certain dates.—A decree for money payable by yearly instalments made the full amount payable on both, the first instalment being unpaid on the due date, and two consecutive instalments being in default and unpaid at the same time. Defaults were made, and questions as to the rate of interest, on what amounts, and for what periods, by reason of the debtor's delay, interest was payable, were dealt with in an order of Her Majesty in Council, which made declarations as to the allowance of interest to which the decree-holder would be entitled on the adjustment of accounts between the parties. The accounts having been taken in the Court executing the order, the decree-holder applied for execution to the full amount. Held, that the instalments having been paid, though not at due date, and applied in payment of interest, he was not entitled to such execution because the contingency, on the happening of which he would have been entitled thereto, had not happened. Sham Kishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh, 15 C. 751 (P.C.)—12 Ind. Jur. 255 — 1085

Pro. Code, it is nevertheless open to the quondam judgment-debtor, when suing to have a sale made, the quondam decree-holder after satisfaction of the decree set aside, to prove the payment of the decretal money otherwise than by a certificate under that section. *Pat Dasi v.   (1) Of complaint—Report of Police Officer who is an accused person—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 200—203, 437. Sections 200 to 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be read together, and a Magistrate dismissing a complaint under the provisions of s. 203 on any one of the three grounds, viz., (1), if he upon the statement of the complainant reduced to writing under s. 200, finds no offence has been committed; (2), if he distrusts the statement made by the complainant; and (3), if he distrusts that statement, but his distrust is not sufficiently strong to warrant him in acting upon it except upon a further enquiry as provided for in s. 202—must record his reasons for so doing, for if such reasons were not recorded it would be impossible for the High Court, exercising its revivial powers under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to consider whether the discretion of such Magistrate has been properly exercised. It was never contemplated that a Magistrate should call for a report from an accused person under s. 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of the complaint if such accused happened to be an officer subordinate to the Magistrate. Where, therefore, a complaint was made against a Police officer, and complainant's statement was duly recorded, and the Magistrate acting under the provision of s. 202 called for a report from such Police officer, and acting upon that report dismissed the complaint under s. 203; Held, that he had acted illegally, and that his order made under the last named section should be set aside, and the case proceeded with according to law from the time at which the

(1) Construction of Razinama disposing of estate with words "naslan bad naslan"—In cases decided on the construction of documents, in which the expressions mokurari istemrari, istemrari mokurari, have been considered upon the question whether an absolute interest has been conferred by such documents or not, it has been taken for certain that if the words "naslan bad naslan" had been added, an absolute interest would have been clearly conferred. Accordingly, in construing a razinama between parties dividing family estate, and expressly declaring that the shares should descend "naslan bad naslan," held, that the insertion of these words was conclusive in itself; the expressed objects of this razinama pointing to the same construction, viz., that the estate taken under it was absolute. (1) Light and air—South breeze—Limitation Acts; Act IX of 1871, s. 27; Act XV of 1877, s. 26—English Prescription Act, 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 71—Limitation Act, Effect of, on the pre-existing law as to nature and extent of the right to light or air.—The Indian Limitation Act, unlike the English Prescription Act places light and air on the same footing; and the object of the Prescription Act and of the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, is not to enlarge the extent and operation of the easement, but to provide another and more convenient way of acquiring such easement—a mode independent of legal fiction and capable of easy proof in a Court of law; these Acts do not, therefore, alter in any way the pre-existing law as to the nature and extent of the right. The only amount of light for a dwelling-house which can be claimed by prescription or by length of time (whether prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871) without an actual grant is such an amount as is reasonably necessary for the convenient and comfortable habitation of the house. The right of air is co-extensive with the right to light. To give a right of action, either prior or subsequently to the Limitation Act of 1871, in a case (where there is no express contract on the subject) for an interference with the access of air to dwelling houses by building on adjoining land, the obstruction must be such as to cause what is technically called a nuisance to the house; in other words, to render the house unfit for the ordinary purposes of habitation or business. The right to ejectment under s. 22 of the Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869), accrues at the end of the year, and forfeiture or determination of the tenancy thereupon takes place, but if the landlord sues for subsequent arrears, he treats the defendant as his tenant, and the right acquired under that section must be taken to have been waived. (1) Dependent taluk—Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, ss. 48—52—Bengal Regulation XLIV of 1793, ss. 2—5.—A purchaser of a zemindari at a public sale may, by virtue of his ordinary right as zemindar enhance the rent of a dependent taluk from time to time under the provisions of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, and is not barred from so doing by the provisions of s. 5 of Bengal Regulation XLIV of 1793. The words "for the same period as the term of their own engagements with Government," in s. 48 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, refer to the period of the decennial settlement, and do not mean "in perpetuity." In an enhancement suit of the nature indicated above, the rate of rent to be fixed as payable by the under-tenure-holder must ordinarily be fixed with reference to the rents paid by ryots within the tenure itself and not with reference to those paid by ryots in the neighbourhood outside the limits of the tenure. (2) Suit for—Dismissal of enhancement suit—Rent suit at old rate for year for which rent had been sought at enhanced rate—Civil Procedure Code, s. 43.—The dismissal or suit for rent at an enhanced rate is no bar to a subsequent suit for rent at the rate originally fixed. SUDURUDDIN AHMED v. BANTI MADHUB ROY CHOWDHRY, 15 C. 145 (F.B.)
(3) Suit for—Transferable tenure—Mutation of names—Tenant who has transferred his holding, Liability of.—The main object of a suit for enhancement is to have the contract between the landlord and tenant as regards the rate of rent re-adjusted. In a suit for enhancement it was found that the defendant had, prior to institution, sold his holding, which by custom was transferable without the consent of the landlord, to a third party. There had been no mutation of names, or payment of a nazir, or execution of fresh lease; but the landlord had received rent from the third party and was fully aware of the transfer.    (2) Statement of accused to Police Officer during investigation—Admissions—Confessions—Experts, Evidence of—Medical witnesses, Evidence of—Opinion of experts, how elicited—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), ss. 25, 26, 27, 45.—Instances of statements made by an accused person to a Police Officer held to be admissible and inadmissible in evidence against such accused person. A medical man who has not seen a corpse which has been subjected to a post-mortem examination, and who is called to corroborate the opinion of the medical man who made such post-mortem examination and who has stated what he considered was the cause of death, is in a position to give evidence of his opinion as an expert. The proper mode of eliciting such opinion is to put the signs observed at the post-mortem to the witness and to ask what, in his opinion, was the cause of death on the hypothesis that those signs were really present and observed. Queen-empress v. Meher Ali Mullick, 15 C. 589 976
   (3) Survey Map—Suit for possession—Ejectment—Evidence of possession and title.—In a suit for possession of certain land as appertaining to a certain estate and for ejectment of the defendant, brought by a purchaser at a revenue sale, the only evidence adduced by the plaintiff was two survey maps of the years 1846-47 and 1865-66. The lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree for only a portion of the land claimed, such portion being included in both of the maps. The remainder of the land claimed was not included in the map of 1846-47. Held, that a survey map is evidence of possession at a particular time, viz., the time at which the survey was made, and may be evidence of title, but as to whether it is sufficient evidence or not, is a question to be decided in each particular case: Held, further, that as the two maps showed that the portion of the land decreed to the plaintiff was in his predecessor's possession at the date of both surveys—that is to say, at two periods with an interval of nearly twenty years between them—they might be sufficient evidence of title, and the decree of the lower Court was correct. Syam Lal Sahu v. Luchman Chowdhry, 15 C. 353 819
   (4) Validity of transfer—Benami transaction.—Wajib-ul-ars.—A transfer by registered deed admitted to have been executed, but alleged to have been benami and merely colourable was held, on the evidence, to have been valid and effective in the absence of evidence showing the contrary. A settlement officer should not receive for entry in the wajib-ul-ars of a village a mere expression of the views of a proprietor, or enter it upon the records relating to the village the wajib-ul-ars being intended to be the official record of local customs. (2) S. 13—Custom—Admissibility in evidence of judgments not "inter partes."—In a suit for rent the amount of the land held by the defendant was questioned, and it was contended that the land must be measured with a hath of 2154 inches and not one of 18 inches, as claimed by the plaintiff zemindar. Certain decrees obtained by the zemindar against other tenants, in the same pargana in suits in which 18 inches had been taken as the hath were tendered in evidence in support of the plaintiff's contention that the customary hath in the pargana was one of 18 inches. Held, that such decrees were admissible in evidence under the provisions of s. 13 of the Evidence Act, as they furnished evidence of particular instances in which a custom was claimed. Execution of Decree.

(1) Arrears of rent, Decree for—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 58—Application for execution—Suspected proceedings, Effect of.—G. obtained an ex parte decree in 1882 for a sum less than Rs. 500 as arrears of rent. Execution was taken out on the 19th May 1885. On the 20th June C., the judgment-debtor, applied to have the decree set aside, whereupon the application for execution was struck off. On the 21st November C.'s application for re-hearing was rejected. On the 3rd February 1886, G applied for the execution of his decree: Held that the decree-holder was entitled to execution, the application of the 3rd February being a continuation of the proceedings commenced on the 19th May, which had been suspended by the order of the Court of the 20th June. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 232—Assignee of decree, Execution by—Execution by Assignee—Cross decrees—Discretionary power of Court under s. 232 of Act XIV of 1882.—The discretion given to a Court under s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to allowing execution of decrees by assignees must be exercised reasonably. The mere fact of the existence of a cross claim against the assignor of a decree by his judgment-debtor is no reason for refusing issue of execution on the application of the assignee.

KRISHNA MOHINI DOSSEE v. KEDARNAIT CHUKERUTTY, 15 C. 446 — 882

(3) Civ. Pro. Code, Chapter XX (ss. 344, 360)—Insolvency—Ex parte decree subsequent to insolvency—Attachment—Receiver in insolvency.

—An insolvent, to whose estate no receiver under Chapter XX of the Code of Civil Procedure had ever been appointed, entered in his schedule the names of certain persons as creditors for a sum of Rs. 210-9-3. These creditors subsequently obtained against the insolvent an ex parte decree for the sum so entered in the schedule, and in execution attached certain pay which the insolvent was then earning, but which he was not in receipt of at the time his schedule was filed, and did not appear therein as an asset of his estate: Held, that the judgment-creditors were entitled to take out execution, and were not prevented from so doing by reason of the insolvent proceedings. In the matter of BADAL SINGH v. BIRCH, 15 C. 762 — 1009

(4) Decree against executors for debts incurred while acting under a will afterwards found invalid, Effect of—The heir's liability under the decree—The remedy of the decree-holder.—Certain executors, acting under an order of the Court, borrowed a sum of money from K. M. for the funeral expenses of J. D., the testator. K. M. obtained a decree for the amount against the executors and the adopted son of J. D. Afterwards F. D. got a decree, whereby both the will and the adoption were set aside, and he was declared the legal heir of J. D. K. M. then sought to enforce his decree against F. D., by the sale of the property which now formed part of the estate of F. D., who objected to the proceedings. Held, that as F. D. was not the legal representative of the judgment-debtors, the decree could not bind the estate in his hands but, in order to make the estate liable for the debt, the proper course for the decree-holder was to bring a regular suit against F. D. FONINDRO DEB RAIKUT v. JUGADISH-WARI DABI, 14 C. 316 — 210

(5) Decree for arrears of rent—Under-tenure—Sale of property other than under-tenure—Arrest of judgment-debtor—"Charge" Bengal Tenany Act (VIII of 1885), s. 05—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 68, 100.—A landlord who has obtained a decree for arrears of rent of an under-tenure is not restricted by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) to executing such decree in the first instance by sale of the under-tenure, but is at liberty to execute it in the ordinary manner against the person or other property, whether moveable or immovable, of the judgment-debtor. The provisions of s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act are not amongst those made applicable by s. 100 of that Act to a person having a charge within the meaning of the latter section Semble.—The "charge" referred to in s. 05 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) is not such a "charge" as that defined by s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. (6) Decree on Mortgage Bond—Costs against judgment-debtors personally.

—Certain plaintiffs were the holders of the following decree obtained on a mortgage bond: "It is order that the defendants shall pay to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 2,550 and costs Rs. 312, total Rs. 2,862, within two months from the date of the signing of the decree; interest will run on the said amount at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum up to realization. If the defendants do not pay the amount within the time prescribed, they will lose their right of redeeming the property mortgaged, and possession thereof will be given to the plaintiffs." On the judgment-debtors making default, the decree-holders applied for execution, the Subordinate Judge directed execution to issue, but held that execution could not be had for costs under the terms of the decree; and this order was upheld by the District Judge on appeal: Held that the decree-holders were entitled to their costs of the suit from the judgment-debtors personally, or from properties belonging to the judgment-debtors other than those mortgaged: Rutnessur Sein v. Yusoda, 14 C. 185.

(7) Foreign decree—Execution in British India of decrees of Courts of Native States—Evidence—Certified copies of foreign judicial records—Cooch Behar, Execution in British India of decree, passed by Courts of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 434—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 86.—A decree of the Court of the Civil Judge of Cooch Behar was sent for execution to the Court of the District Judge of Runpore. The copy of the record was signed by the Sheristadar instead of by the Judge himself. Upon receipt of the decree by the Subordinate Judge a notice, under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code, was served on the judgment-debtor, calling on him to show cause why the decree should not be executed, and an order was forthwith issued for the attachment of his property. The judgment-debtor appeared and objected that the copy of the record was not properly certified, and, therefore, that the whole of the execution proceedings were bad. The Subordinate Judge ordered that the record be sent back to the Cooch Behar Court through the District Judge in order that a certificate might be given in proper form, and directed that the other points raised should be decided after the return of the papers. On appeal it was urged that the order of the Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction, but the District Judge rejected the appeal. The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court: Held, that the Subordinate Judge acted properly in sending the record back to the Cooch Behar Court to be properly certified, and also that he should have set aside the execution proceedings as being altogether void, but, as that formed no portion of the grounds of appeal urged in the lower appellate Court, the appeal should be dismissed. Per Norris, J.—Quere.—Whether the notification published in the Calcutta Gazette of 8th April 1879, signed by the then Deputy Commissioner of Cooch Behar, and stating the mode in which copies of judicial records of the Courts of Cooch Behar are certified as correct copies, and which notification was published after a notification had been published by the Governor-General of India in Council under the provisions of s. 434 of the Civil Procedure Code to the effect that the decrees of the Civil and Revenue Courts of Cooch Behar may be executed in British India as if they had been made by the Courts of British India, was a compliance with the provision of s. 86 of the Indian Evidence Act at the time when there was a representative of the Government of India resident in Cooch Behar. Per Norris, J.—The notification of the 8th of April 1879 is now of no use, as there is no representative of Her Majesty or the Government of India residing in Cooch Behar, and consequently certified copies of judicial records of that State cannot now be received in evidence in the Courts of British India under the provisions of s. 86 of the Evidence Act. (8) Mortgage decree for sale of properties in different districts and jurisdictions—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 19, 223 (c) Sch. IV, Form 128—Jurisdiction.—A decree obtained in a suit, brought under the provisions of s. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshaye on a mortgage of certain properties situated in the districts and jurisdictions of Rajshaye and Nyadumka, directed that the properties mentioned in the mortgage should be sold and the proceeds applied in payment of the mortgage debt. The properties were sold by the Court of Rajshay: Held, that the authority given by s. 19 of the Code included an authority to make the order for the sale of the properties, and that the Rajshay Court was within its jurisdiction in directing and carrying out the sale. Quære.—Whether, where a sale takes place under a money decree of property partly within the local limits of the Court whose decree is being executed, and partly without that Court's jurisdiction, the sale of the property without the jurisdiction would be valid and binding in consequence of the provisions of ss. 19 and 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Per Ghose, J.—S. 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure merely provides that when it may be necessary for a Court to send a decree for execution to another Court by reason of the property being situate beyond its local jurisdiction, it ought to do so; and the words of sub-s. (c), "sale of immoveable property situate without the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," contemplate a case where the whole of the property, and not any portion of it, is situate beyond the local limits of the Court which passes the decree. Maseyk v. Steel & Co., 14 C. 661.

(9) Omission to describe the property to be attached—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 237, 245—Limitation.—A decree-holder, on the 8th July 1885, applied for execution of a decree dated the 10th July 1873, omitting to set out specifically in such application a description of the immoveable property sought to be attached. On the 24th July he applied for and obtained one month's time to file a list of these properties; and on the 7th August, after filing the list, applied for the attachment and sale of such properties. The judgment-debtor contended execution was barred by limitation: Held, that the omission to file on the 8th July the list describing specifically the properties sought to be attached, was a mere defect of description which could be remedied under s. 215 of the Code of Civil Procedure by allowing an amendment to be made; and further that the two applications of the 8th and 24th July should be considered as one entire application dating from the date of the 8th July. MacGregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar, 14 C. 124.

(10) Possession under decree—Reversal of decree—Restitution of property after reversal of decree—Mesne profits—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 244.—A Court, reversing a decree under which possession of property has been taken, has power to order restitution of the property taken possession of, and with it any mesne profits which may have accrued during such possession. Mookoo Lall Pal Chowdhry v. Mahomed Sami Meah, 14 C. 484.

(11) Practice—Execution proceedings—Power of District Judge to transfer execution proceedings to another Court—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 25, 647.—A District Judge has no power to transfer execution proceedings to a subordinate Court. Kishori Mohun Seet v. Gul Mohamed Shaiba, 15 C. 177.

(12) Representative of decree-holder—Attachment of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 232, 244, 273.—A person attaching a decree is a representative of the decree-holder within the meaning of that term as used in s. 244, cl. (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, and in every case is entitled to enforce execution of the decree which he has attached. When the decree attached has been passed by the same Court as the decree in execution of which it has been attached, the Court has jurisdiction to execute the attached decree on the application of the attaching creditor. Pebry Mohun Chowdhry v. Romesh Chunder Nundy, 15 C. 371.

(14) Sale of property covered by decree to Court which passed decree when property is situate outside its local jurisdiction at time of application—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 233 (c)—A mortgage decree was passed directing the sale of certain property wholly situate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. After the decree the district within which the property was situate was transferred and placed under the local jurisdiction of another Court. The judgment-debtor then applied to the first Court for execution of the decree and thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application or to direct the sale of the property. Held, that that Court had authority to execute its own decree and bring the property to sale. Held further, that s. 223 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure does not curtail the power of the Court to execute its own decree, but gives it a discretion either to execute the decree itself or on the application of the decree-holder, to send it to another Court for execution, and thereby extends rather than limits the Court's power. KARTIC NATH PANDEY v. TILUKDHARY LALL, 15 C. 667—1028

(15) Scheduled Districts—Execution of decree passed by Court of Scheduled District in Court of a Regulation District—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 284—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 223, 229—Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), s. 5.—On the 15th May 1879, a judgment-creditor obtained a decree in the Civil Court of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, which are included amongst the Scheduled Districts and on or about the 15th May 1879, at his instance, it was sent with a certificate of non-satisfaction to the Court of a Munsif in the Regulation District of Chittagong for execution. After sundry unsuccessful attempts to execute the decree, an application was made on the 17th September 1886, for its execution. The judgment-debtor objected that under s. 229 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree, as it could only act under that section and the Code had never been extended to the Chittagong Hill Tracts. Held that, as at the time the decree was passed and sent to the Munsif for execution Act VIII of 1859 was in force, and by s. 284 of that Act the judgment-creditor had a right to have his decree sent to any Civil Court for execution; he was entitled now to have it executed, as neither Acts X of 1877 or XIV of 1882 by express words or implication deprived him of that right: Held, further, that the intention of the legislature was with regard to decrees obtained in Scheduled Districts after the Code of 1877 came into force, that such decrees should not be executed by Courts in British India unless and until, under the provisions of s. 5 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), the Government had issued the notification therein referred to applying to the Scheduled Districts such portion of the Code of Civil Procedure as they thought proper to apply. Quare.—Whether a decree passed by a Court in a Scheduled District, and sent for execution to a Court in a Regulation District after Act X of 1877 came into force can be executed by the latter Court in the absence of such a notification extending the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to the Scheduled Districts. *KASHI MOHUN BORUA v. False Charge.
(1) Crim. Pro. Code, Act X of 1882, s. 191—Cognizance of an offence on suspicion—Penal Code, Act XLV of 1860, s. 211—Police report—False charge. Prosecution for, without first enquiring into truth of original complaint.—A person having laid an information before the police, the police reported the case as false; the informant then appeared before a Magistrate, asking that his case might be investigated and his witnesses summoned. This application was refused, and the Magistrate after perusing the police report passed an order directing him to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code. Held, that the application to the Magistrate was “a complaint” within the meaning of s. 191 of the Crim. Pro. Code into which the Magistrate was bound to have enquired. A Magistrate may take cognizance under ss. 291 and 292 of the Crim. Pro. Code, of an offence brought to his notice by a police report which affords ground for a suspicion that an offence has been committed; but, as a matter of sound judicial discretion, a Magistrate should not so proceed and direct that the person suspected be tried until some person aggrieved has complained, or until he has before him police report on the subject based on an investigation directed to the offence to be tried, and in cases of alleged false charges until it is clear that the original charge has been either heard and dismissed or abandoned. And before the order to prosecute for the false charge is made the person who made the original charge should be offered an opportunity of supporting it or abandoning it. Queen-Empress v. Sham Lal, 14 C. 707 (F.B.) =12 Ind. Jur. 50

(2) Penal Code, s. 211.—A false charge before the Police is a false charge falling within the first portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code. The latter portion of s. 211 of the Penal Code is confined to cases in which criminal proceedings have been instituted, and does not apply to false charges merely Queen-Empress v. (1) Fishing in tank connected with a running stream—Theft—Criminal trespass—Penal Code, ss. 379, 447.—Accused were charged with having taken fish from a tank belonging to the complainant and convicted of theft and criminal trespass under ss. 379 and 447 of the Penal Code. It was found that the tank in question was not enclosed on all sides and was dependent on the overflow of a neighbouring channel which was connected with flowing streams for its supply of fish; that the fish were not reared and preserved in the tank, and that the occurrence complained of took place at a time when the floods were high and the tank was connected with the streams so that the fish could leave it at pleasure. Held, that the fish were fera natura and not in “the possession of” the complainant and consequently no offence had been committed. Held, further, that had the fish been taken at a time when they were restrained of their natural liberty, and were liable to be taken at the pleasure of the owner of the tank, the conviction would have been upheld. (2) Infringement of exclusive right of fishery in public river—Theft—Criminal misappropriation—Mischief—Criminal trespass—Unlawful assembly—Penal Code, ss. 143, 378, 403, 426 and 447.—Fish in a public river cannot be said to be property in the possession of the person who may have the fishery right, and the infringement of that right is not theft under s. 378 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused were charged with unlawfully taking fish along with same eleven others in a public river, the right of fishing in which had been let out by the Government to the complainant, and the lower Court amongst other offences, convicted them of theft, criminal misappropriation, mischief, criminal trespass, and unlawful assembly. Held, that the conviction was wrong, and that no offence had been committed. BHAGIRAM DOME v. ABAK DOME, 15 C. 388

Further Enquiry.
Notice to accused—Discharge by Magistrate—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 437.—No notice to an accused person is necessary in point of law before an order under s. 437 can be passed; but as a matter of discretion it is proper that such notice should be given. Held, by the majority of the Full Bench (Prinsep, Wilson, Tottenham, Norris, Pigot and O'Kinealy, J.)—After an enquiry by a subordinate Magistrate and the discharge of an accused person a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has jurisdiction, under s. 437 of the Crim. Pro. Code, to order a "further enquiry or a re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the subordinate Magistrate, i.e., when no further evidence is forthcoming. But (Prinsep, J., dissenting) the words "further enquiry" in that section mean the enquiry preliminary to trial which regularly results in a charge or discharge, and do not include the trial. And if on the evidence taken the accused ought to be committed, then, in a case triable only at the Sessions, the proper course is to commit under s. 436; in other cases to refer to the High Court. Per Prinsep, J.—The "enquiry" includes a trial, and the "further enquiry" would therefore allow of the framing of a charge and the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution. Per Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.—The power given by s. 437 of the Crim. Pro. Code to order a further enquiry is confined to cases in which the revising officer is satisfied, for one of the reasons mentioned in s. 435, that the subordinate officer has proceeded on insufficient materials, and that with a more exhaustive enquiry further materials would be forthcoming. It was not intended that such an enquiry should be granted simply for the reconsideration of evidence. In the matter of Hari Das Sanyal v. Saritulla, 15 C. 608=13 Ind. Jur. 55 — 989

Ghatwali Tenure in Bhagalpur—Ghatwali's right of alienation—Sale of Ghatwali's estate in execution of decree against him.—Ghatwali tenures are rendered by their origin and incidents distinct in some particulars from other inheritances and to them the law of the Mitakshara, to its full extent, is not entirely applicable, yielding in their case to a custom, though only to the extent of the custom proved. On a question whether the sale of a ghatwali tenure in the Kharagpore zemindari, in Bhagalpur, in execution of a decree against the ghatwali, had transferred the inheritance as against the Ghatwali's son: Held, in regard to a proved custom, that the ghatwali was not inalienable, but might be aliened by the ghatwal, or sold in execution of a decree against him, if such alienation was assented to by the zeminder, this power of alienation not being limited to the life-interest of the ghatwal for the time being, but forming part of his right and title to the ghatwali. (1) Enhancement of rent, Effect of—Acts of mother and guardian how far binding on minor son—Kabuliyat given by widow in possession to bind her son and successor to pay enhanced rent decreed against her—Admission not amounting to estoppel.—A putnadar obtained decrees for the enhancement of the rent of holding in the possession of the widow of a deceased tenant, one decree being in respect of land formerly held by the latter and the other in respect of a holding purchased by the widow on behalf of her minor son by the deceased, whilst the enhancement suits were pending. The widow also signed kabuliyats relating to both tenancies, agreeing as mother of the minor, to pay the enhanced rent. Held, that as the putnadar was entitled to sue for enhancement, and it was not to be presumed that the mother held adversely to her son; also as she had come to what she believed to be, and was a proper arrangement, the son on his attaining full age, and entering into possession of the tenancies, was bound by the kabuliats. The putnadar was not precluded by the fact that he had, after the son had attained full age, sued the mother as tenant, stating that she, and not the son, was tenant. Watson and Company v. (1) Sale of joint family estate in execution of decree upon the father's debt—Exoneration of son's share only where debt has been incurred for an immoral or illegal purpose—Burden of proving the nature of the debt.—The sons in a joint family, under the Mitakshara, cannot set up their rights of inheritance in the family estate against the father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against a sale in execution of a decree upon such debt, although the sons may not have been parties to the decree, unless the sons can establish that the debt has been contracted for an immoral or illegal purpose. The son's position is distinct in this respect from that of other relations in the joint family, inasmuch as it is his duty to pay, out of the family estate, his father's debt. A decree against indebted fathers in a family consisting of fathers and sons, charged the family estate, and the sale in execution was not merely of the right, title and interests of the debtors, but of the property being such interest. On the other hand, before the sale notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint Held in a suit on behalf of the sons against the purchaser at the sale, to recover their shares, that it was for the plaintiffs to show affirmatively that the debts were contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose, and that to establish general extravagance against the fathers was insufficient. It was necessary for the purchaser to show that there had been a proper enquiry as to the purpose of the loan or to prove that the money was borrowed for family necessities. Bhagrat Pershad Singh v. The first para, of that section means that a gift of immoveable property can be effected by the execution of a registered instrument only, nothing more being necessary. (2) To property purchased by Hindu widow out of the income of her estate.

—When a widow, not spending the income of her widow's estate in the property which belonged to her husband when living, has invested such savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. The authority upon this matter is found in 10 C. 324=10 I.A. 150, where a widow having made no distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the latter were held inalienable by her for any purpose not justifying alienation of the former. 6.—Joint Family.

(1) Mitakshara Law—Sale of joint family property in execution of decree as the result of a mortgage by Managing Member—Liability of shares of members of family not parties to the decree.—Although some of the members of a joint family had not been made parties to a suit upon the mortgage effected by the managing members, the entire family estate was bound by the Act of the latter, and passed at the sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage. Whether the shares of all were bound depended on the authority of those who executed the mortgage. This authority they had to raise money to pay a debt owed by the family as joint members of an ancestral trading firm. The managing members of a joint trading family, having purported to mortgage the family estate, to pay a debt due by the firm, were sued upon it by the mortgagee, who afterwards purchased the property at the execution sale. In a suit brought by the latter against the other members of the family to obtain a declaration that he had purchased the entire family estate, the defendants, without showing that the mortgage did not validly bind the family estate, contended that, not having been made parties to the suit, they were not affected by the decree, and their shares had not passed at the sale in execution. Held, that as the defence was substantially on the latter ground only, though there was every opportunity given to the defendants to raise the former ground also, the suit need not be remanded; and that the whole estate had passed to the purchaser. DAULAT RAM v. MEHR CHAND, 15 C. 70 (P.C.)=14 I.A. 187=11 Ind. Jur. 435=5 Sar. P.C.J. 84=1 P.R. 1888

(2) Right of members of a joint Hindu family in a talukdari estate—The Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869)—Partition and account against the talukdar—The Oudh Rent Act (XIX of 1868), s. 83, cl. 15 and s. 106—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 127 and 120.—A member of a joint Hindu family cannot sue for a share of the profits of the joint family estate as he has no definite share until partition. He may sue for a partition of such estate unless by a family usage or special law it is imparitable, and then is entitled to an account. A talukdari estate, though entered in the name of one member of a joint family in the lists prepared in conformity with the Oudh Estates Act, 1 of 1869, may be subject to a trust, implied from the acts and declarations of the talukdar, for the joint family as a joint estate. In that suit, commenced in 1865, by a member of a joint family for the declaration of his rights, partition not being claimed, the order of Her Majesty in Council (1879) directed that the talukdar should cause and allow the villages forming the talukdari estate and the proceeds thereof to be managed and applied according to the trust declared in favour of the members of the family. The plaintiff in that suit afterwards obtained entry of his name as a co-sharer in the villages in the register kept under Act XVII of 1876, s. 56; and then brought the first of the present suits for his share upon partition, both in that estate as it stood in 1865, and also with the addition of villages since acquired out of profits, claiming an account against the talukdar. The latter alleged, among other defences, that the talukdari estate was impartible, and brought a cross suit to establish this, and also that it was held by him according to the rule of primogeniture, the right of other members of the family being only to the profits. Held, that, in regard to the order of Her Majesty above mentioned, which was applicable to an estate held subject to the law of the Mitakshara, the talukdari state could not be declared to be impartible; also that a declaration in the Judicial Commissioner's decree that a member of the family entitled to a share upon partition should hold it as an under-proprietor under the talukdar could not be allowed to stand. Held, also, (a) that the first suit, as one for partition and an account, was not barred by limitation under Act XV of 1877, s. 120, and must be decreed; (b) that the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act, XIX of 1868, s. 8, cl. 15, and s. 106, precluding proceedings in the Civil Court, might be applicable to the proceeds of the villages forming the original estate, the claimant having been recorded in the revenue records as a shareholder therein, but could not be applied to the rest of the joint estate; and (c) that the section of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to mesne profits were not applicable to a suit for partition or for an account of the proceeds of family in which a plaintiff has no specific interest until decree.

9.—Partition.

(1) Bengal school of Law—Partition by sons—Mother's shares on partition—Succession to share given to a mother on partition.—Under the Bengal School of Law the share which a mother takes on partition among her sons is not taken from her husband's estate either by inheritance or by way of survivorship in continuation of any pre-existing interest, but is taken from her sons in lieu of or by way of provision for, that maintenance for which they and their estates are already bound, and on her death that share goes back to her sons from whom she received it. (2) Family dwelling-house—Partition wall—Open space of ground—Easement.—Upon partition of joint property in Calcutta by mutual conveyances, whether under the direction of a Court of law or otherwise, it is implied that the parties take their respective shares with easements of light and air as between themselves in accordance with the existing state of the premises. In a suit for the partition of a family dwelling-house it was directed that the parties should take their respective shares by mutual conveyances with liberty to the plaintiff to raise a partition wall. The shares were allotted but no conveyances executed. Held, that in equity the parties must be deemed to have taken as if under mutual conveyances, in so far as concerned easements of light and air. Hindu Law—11.—Widow.

(1) Accumulations by Hindu widow—Accumulations, Period up to which they may be dealt with—Legacy to Hindu widow.—The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others her right is the same. The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but, if she has evinced no such intention, she can, at any time during her life deal with the profits. Where she invests her income, making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investments save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. (1) Construction—Charitable Gifts—Void Gifts—Gifts void for uncertainty.—A testator by his will directed that his executors should "get a Shiva's temple erected at a reasonable cost in a suitable place within the compound of the brick-built baitakhana house inclusive of the building and garden thereto," in which he had constantly resided. Held, that the direction was not void for uncertainty, and that under the circumstances 3 per cent. of the testator's moveable estate was a proper sum to allow for the cost of erecting the temple. Held, also that a direction to the executors "to perform all the acts properly and bona fide, to the best of their respective information and judgment, and according to the provisions of this will" did not give the trustees an absolute discretion to fix the amount proper to be expended on the erection of the temple. The testator further declared that "the said executor's or any of his "heirs and representatives" should "not be able to make any kind of gift, sale, or alienation, or create any incumbrance on the" said baihakana house, "and none of" his "heirs" should "be able to claim it in his own right; but that the executors" should "be competent to allow" the testator's "brother Issur Lochun Roy and" his "sister's son Shama Hindu Law—12.—Will—(Concluded).

Das Roy to use the said baitakhana and rooms, &c. Held, that this clause did not operate to dedicate the baitakhana house to the idol Shiva, nor to vest it in the executors, but that on the death of the testator it descended to his heir-at-law, freed from any prohibition against alienation. The testator further directed that his executors should "keep in deposit Government Promissory Notes of Rs. 9,500 (nine and half thousand rupees) for the preservation and suitable repairs of" the baitakhana "house in proper time, and for the daily and periodical worship of the said god Shiva, for his sheba (worship) and for the repairs of the temple," the expenses of these acts to be defrayed out of interest of the Rs. 9,500. Held, that (there having been no dedication of the baitakhana house to the idol) the sum of Rs. 9,500 must be apportioned, one moiety going to the heir-at-law, to whom the baitakhana house had descended, and the other to the executors for the repairs of the temple and the worship of the idol. The testator further declared that, "if after the performance of all the above acts there remains any money or moveable property as surplus, then the executors shall be able to spend the same in proper and just acts for" the testator's benefit. Held, that the direction contained in this clause was void for uncertainty. Held, also, that such direction did not amount to a valid precatory trust. Where Government securities in certain specified amounts are bequeathed by will, the interest thereon which has accrued due before the testator's death does not pass to the legatees. (2) Construction of—Restrictions upon estate bequeathed, effect of, if contrary to Hindu law—Restrictions separable from valid dispositions.

—in the will of a Hindu restrictions contrary to law made by the will upon valid dispositions, if they are separable from the latter, need not be held to invalidate them. Three documents, of which the second and third were executed by a testator after intervals of some years, together formed his will; containing a bequest of estate to his sons. This was held valid by the High Court, although the testator in the latter documents had endeavoured to impose restrictions upon the estate contrary to law, and therefore inoperative; the principal of them being (a) prohibition of actual possession or alienation, by any son, of his share in the estate; and (b) direction that the whole estate should be managed in a common cutcherry, with religious trusts the sons to get only the remaining amount of profit according to their respective shares in perpetuity. At the same time the Court, held good a provision for defraying the marriage expenses of sons from joint funds, with the direction in the will that until the youngest son should attain majority, none of the sons should have a right to partition; any son who should separate from the others getting, up to the time of his attaining majority, merely maintenance, and not the profits accruing upon his share. A gift over was that on the death of a son surviving sons should take his share proportionately to their own, and that if any of the sons so taking should die leaving sons, such sons should receive their proportionate parts of the deceased son's share; the first part of this provision was held good, not being invalidated by the second, which, as constituting a gift to an indefinite class, would not take effect. The judgment of the High Court to the above effect was upheld by the Judicial Committee. Raktivshori Dasi v. Debendra Nath Sircar, 15 C. 409 (P.C.)=15 I.A. 37=12 Ind. Jur. 175=5 Sar. P.C.J. 100 857

Inspection of Documents.

In criminal case—Discovery—Power of Court to order inspection—Crim. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 94—99—Search warrant, form and validity of.—A and T, the later of whom was the book-keeper in the firm of J.M. & Co., were charged on the complaint of that firm with cheating by having dishonestly induced them to deliver to A certain sums of money between 1882 and 1887, and with having abetted each other in the commission of the said offence. The offence charged was carried out by T, omitting to make entries in the account books of sums due by A to the firm and by making false entries therein of payments by A. Whilst the charge was pending the Presidency Magistrate, before whom the charge had been made, granted a search warrant in the following terms:—"To Inspector M—Whereas A and another have been charged before me with the commission, or suspected commission of the offence of cheating, and it has been made to appear to me that the production of khatta books for the years 1882 to 1887 is essential to the inquiry now being made, or about to be made, into the said offence, or suspected offence, this is to authorize and require you to search for the said property in the house of A, No. 13, Pollock Street, and if found to produce the same forthwith before this Court." In execution of this warrant certain books and papers found in the house of A were seized and taken possession of by the Police, and of those books and papers the Magistrate, on the application of the prosecution, made an order for inspection. On a rule granted by the High Court to show cause why the order for inspection should not be set aside, it was contended that the search warrant had been granted without proper judicial inquiry and upon insufficient materials; that it was bad on the face of it, as he did not "Specify clearly" as directed in Form VIII, sch. 5 of the Crim. Pro. Code, whose khatta books were to be produced; and that there was nothing in the criminal law to enable a Court to make an order for inspection of document by the prosecution in a criminal case. Held, per Norris, J., that assuming the contention as to the search warrant arose on the rule as granted the warrant must be looked at as a whole and so looked at it sufficiently clearly showed that it was the khatta books of A which were referred to as being essential to the inquiry, and the objects of the directed search; nor was there anything to show that the warrant was issued otherwise than regularly and in due course. Per Norris, J.—Though the Courts in England have constantly refused to compel discovery in criminal cases, on the ground that no man should be compelled to produce evidence to criminate himself, the Legislature in this country has authorised the production, and under certain circumstances the compulsory production, of an accused person's documents in Court. When once an accused person's documents are in the possession of the Court by virtue of the due execution of a search warrant issued under the provisions of s. 96 of the Crim. Pro. Code, there is no distinction between such documents and those of any description found upon his person at the time of his arrest, or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, and it was never doubted that the latter may be used in evidence against him. If, as laid down in the case of Dilion v. O'Brien, 20 Irish L.R., 300, the right to seize and detain property of any description in the possession of a person lawfully arrested for treason felony, misdemeanour, rests "upon the interest which the state has in a person justly or reasonably believed to be guilty of a crime being brought to justice, and in a prosecution once commenced being determined in due course of law," a right to inspect to seize and detain it, and the proper persons to inspect it are those conducting the prosecution. It would, moreover, be unreasonable that the Police or those conducting the prosecution should not have an opportunity of inspecting and examining documents, &c. found on a prisoner when arrested or on his premises at the time of, or subsequent to, his arrest, before tendering them in evidence. Per Ghose, J.—The contention as to the validity of the search warrant did not arise on the rule as granted, but, semble, that the search warrant was bad in law, no summons under s. 94 of the Crim. Pro. Code having been, in the first instance, issued for the production of the documents, and there being no evidence to show that they would not be produced on summons only; that although the warrant was not specific, still inasmuch as no objection was raised to the form of the warrant, before the Magistrate, and the accused had not been prejudiced by reason of the specification of the documents being somewhat indistinct, and it was clear what was really meant, the objection as to the form of the warrant should be disallowed. Per Ghose, J.—There is no doubt that by the criminal law of this country, as laid down in the Crim. Pro. Code since 1861, an accused person may be compelled to furnish evidence, the production of which might have the effect of crininating him. The Magistrate has to determine at the time when he makes an order under s. 94 of the Crim. Pro. Code, or issues a search warrant under s. 96 whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry; but when they are brought into Court the inspection should not rest with the Magistrate, who does not prosecute and has no interest one way or the other in the result of the prosecution. It is reasonable that those who conduct the prosecution should have such inspection for the production of such documents is for the purpose of using them in evidence, and this could not be done unless the prosecution had an opportunity of inspecting them. In the ease of a search or seizure by the Police under Ch. XIV of the Crim. Pro. Code, the prosecutor would necessarily have an opportunity of looking at the documents and articles seized, and there is no reason why he should not have the same opportunity or privilege where, under the order of the Court, any particular document or other thing is seized under a search warrant, and brought up to the Court. Bearing in mind the purpose for which any document or thing is seized and brought before the Court, it seems that the Legislature, while providing for the seizure and production in Court of documents, etc., intended by implication that the prosecution should, under the order of the Court, have the power to inspect them and determine whether they should go in as evidence. Held per curiam—for the reasons above given—that the Magistrate had power to allow the inspection, but such inspection must be limited to the books named in the search warrant. Interest—(Concluded).

It was stipulated that the loan was to be repaid on a certain date and to bear interest, at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, but that if the loan were not repaid on the date named the principal was to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per mensem from the date of the loan: Held, on the authority of the decision in 10 C. 305, that the stipulation as to the payment of interest at the higher rate was not in the nature of a penalty, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount due on the bond with interest at the increased rate, from the date of the bond, and that, whether the interest at the increased rate, in case of non-payment on the date fixed in the contract, was payable from the commencement of the loan or from the date fixed for the repayment of the loan, s. 74 of the Contract Act was not applicable. The decision in the case of 10 C. 305, overrules the decision in the case of 9 C. 615, and all similar cases cited in 9 C. 689, which held that the stipulation for the payment of a higher rate of interest in the event of the non-payment of the debt on the date fixed in the contract, from the commencement of the loan, is in the nature of a penalty. Issues.

(1) Inconsistent issues—Undue influence—Mahomedan law of Gift—Possession not delivered at the time, but afterwards obtained—Mushaq, mixed, or common property which shares undistinguished.—The execution of a hibana having been denied by the plaintiff, a Mahomedan widow and purdanashin, in a suit brought by her to have it set aside as fabricated, she also alleged that undue influence had been exercised upon her. It was decided upon the evidence that the instrument was genuine, having been executed by her of her own free will. The above questions being inconsistent with one another the latter should not have been admitted to form part of an issue together with the former. On an issue of undue influence, rightly raised, a Court should consider whether the gift in question (a) is one which a right-minded person might be expected to make; (b) is or is not an improvident act on the donor’s part; (c) is such as to have required advice, if not obtained by the donor; and (d) whether the intention to make the gift originated with the donor, the principles being always the same, although the circumstances may differ. The hibana gave an undivided share in mokurari and zemindari holdings, besides other property not reduced into possession, the whole of

(1) Letters Patent, 1865, s. 12—Carrying on business and personally working for gain—Secretary of State—Cause of action—Statute 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106, s. 65.—S. 65 of 21 and 22 Vic., c. 106, does not constitute the Secretary of State a body corporate, but simply lays down that that officer and department are to be sued as a body corporate. A suit, therefore, brought against the Secretary of State is not one against any person or any real body corporate, but is one brought against a nominal defendant, such nominal defendant being put upon the record merely to enable the plaintiff to obtain the remedy secured to him by s. 65. The words "cause of action" in s. 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, mean all those things necessary to give a right of action; and in a suit for breach of contract, where leave has not been obtained to sue under that section, it must be established that the contract as well as the breach have taken place within the local limits of the Court. The work carried on by the Government of India is governing the country, in salt, opium, etc., although carried on by Government officers in charge of the several departments of Government, is not, properly speaking, business carried on by Government, but work carried on for the benefit of the Indian Exchequer. Kabuliyat.

(1) Construction of—Stipulations as to rent of new chur—hawaladari tenure—Measurement and assessment of chur land—Landlord and tenant—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 14—A kabuliyat, executed by the tenant of land held in hawala tenure, provided that on an adjoining chur becoming fit for cultivation, the whole land, old and new, held by the tenant should be measured, and the old being deducted from the total, rent should be paid for the excess land at a specified rate up to five drones, and for any more at the prevailing pergunnah rates. It provided also that either (a) rent should be realized according to law with interest thereon; or that (b) at the close of the year, the owner should, by a notice served on the hawalaar, require him to take a settlement of the excess land, and within fifteen days to file a kabuliyat; or (c) the excess land might be settled with others. Such a chur having been formed, the zemindar measured without notice to and in the absence of, the hawaladari. He then served a notice on the later requiring him to execute a kabuliyat within fifteen days for payment of a fixed rent upon the excess land as found by the measurement, or to yield up possession. Disregard of this led to a suit in which the zemindar claimed either khas possession or rent on measurement by order of Court. Held, that neither the kabuliyat nor the terms of s. 14 of Beng Act VIII of 1869 precluded a suit for assessment of the rent upon measurement; nor did the absence of authentic measurement as prescribed by the kabuliyat have that effect or affect the measurement by the amin; but that until both the measurement and the assessment of the rent had taken place (which might be either in the manner prescribed or by judicial determination), the zemindar could not put the hawaladar to his choice between (b) executing a kabuliyat for the rent, and (c) yielding up possession. The power of the District Court is limited to the determination of these questions and questions of title incidental thereto. There is no power in the Judge or the High Court in appeal to decide on any such reference a question arising under s. 55. The Court refused to grant such leave, apparently on the ground that the defendant was living at a long distance from Calcutta and that the suit was one for a small amount. Held, that, in refusing to grant such leave, the Judge of the Small Cause Court had not exercised the discretion vested in him under s. 18, and that the case was one in which the leave applied for should have been granted. Limitation.
(1) Cause of action—Adverse possession—Acts IX of 1871 and XV of 1877—Res judicata—Right of occupancy—Liability to assessment—Hindu widow, Power of, to bind reversioners—Chur land—Jungleburi tenure.—R, a Hindu widow, granted a jungleburi tenure to certain tenants in respect of a chur belonging to her husband's estate. An annulnama was granted to the tenants signed by a karpardas of R in respect of the tenure. R died in January 1861, and was succeeded by J and P, two daughters, the last of whom died on the 31st December 1880. On her death the grandsons succeeded to the estate. On R's death J and P got possession of all estate papers, and amongst them a dowel granted by the tenants in return for the annulnama. In 1865 proceedings were taken by the tenants to obtain kabuliylats on the footing of those documents, which proceedings came to an end in 1868. In 1873, J and P instituted suits against the tenants, alleging the annulnama and dowel to be forgeries, and seeking to enhance the rents payable to them, as well as to have it declared that R's acts did not bind them. In these suits it was found that J and P had all along been aware of the claim made by the tenants that they held a permanent tenure, and the suits were dismissed on the ground that it was too late for J and P, after the lapse of twelve years from R's death, to raise the question. In 1884, D, a receiver, instituted a suit in the names of the grandsons to eject the tenants on amongst other grounds that the grandsons reversioners were not bound by R's acts, and that the jungleburi tenure was not binding on them; that the tenants were middlemen and had no right of occupancy; that at all events the plaintiffs were entitled to rent on the area of land then held by the defendants, as there had been large accretions to the amounts covered by the annulnama and dowel. The defendant amongst other things pleaded limitation, res judicata, and that R had the power to grant the jungleburi tenures so as to bind the reversioners: Held that, being middlemen, the defendants had no right of occupancy, and that were the suit not dismissed for other grounds they were liable to have the rent assessed on the whole amount of lands held by them, which was in excess of that covered by the amulana and dowel. That the suit was not barred by res judicata as in the suits brought by J and P, the question of whether R's acts bound the reversioners was never decided. That the suit was barred by limitation. Adverse possession began to run on R's death (as J and P who represented the estate were then well aware that the tenants claimed to hold the lands under a permanent lease, and though J and P received rent, the possession of the tenants was adverse to them), and more than twelve years elapsed before Act IX of 1871 came into force, and therefore the defendants had then obtained a good title by adverse possession as against all the reversioners which could not be defeated by the provisions of the subsequent Limitation Acts of 1871 and 1877. Held, further that the question whether a jungleburi tenure granted by a Hindu widow is binding on reversioners depends on the circumstances of the land Quære—Whether such a tenure granted in respect of a chur where no legal necessity on behalf of the widow is shown could under any circumstances be binding on the reversioners. (2) Mortgagee—Adverse possession.—A mortgagee of an entire undivided estate does not, by a subsequent purchase of a certain share therein from one not in actual possession at the time of conveyance, thereby change his character from a mortgagee to that of an owner, but his possession continues as a mortgagee B held an entire undivided estate under a mortgage (usufructuary) from C since 1273 (1866), and as such mortgagee in 1282 (1875) B purchased a share therein from D, who had not been in actual possession since the date of the mortgage. On the 20th January, 1885, B brought a suit to recover possession of his purchased share: Held, that the subsequent purchase did not change the character of B from that of a mortgagee to that of an owner, and that his suit was barred by 12 years' limitation. (3) Suit for partnership accounts—Joint contract—Necessary parties, Omission of—Addition of new defendant—Time of joinder how material.—A suit was brought for partnership accounts. Ramdoyal v. Junmenjoy Coondoo, 14 C. 791.

(4) Suit for possession by member of family admittedly not joint—Partition—Adverse possession.—The plaintiff sued for possession of certain property, alleging that it had belonged to a joint family, of which he had been a member, and had been allotted to him on partition. The partition was not proved, and the suit was dismissed on the ground of limitation. On second appeal it was contended that if the partition was held not to be proved the family must be held to be joint, and as the possession of one member could not be adverse to another, the decree dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation was erroneous: Held, that as the family was admittedly not joint the plaintiff was bound to remove the bar of limitation by showing some sort of possession by himself within twelve years before his suit could be entertained, and as he had not done so his suit was properly dismissed. II, art. 178—Mesne profits—Decree for—Execution of Decree—Application for assessment of mesne profits—Joint decree holders—Minor, Right of, to execute whole decree when remedy of major joint-decree-holder is barred.—In execution of a decree for possession of certain lands and for mesne profits, dated the 15th August 1878, possession having been obtained in August 1880, two decree-holders, one of whom was a minor, applied on the 4th April 1882 for ascertainment of the amount of such mesne profits. Upon that application the Amin was directed to ascertain the amount due, but after repeated reminders had been sent him, and no report being submitted, the execution case was struck off the file on the 9th October 1882. The minor judgment-creditor having attained his majority on the 17th April 1885, an application was made by both decree-holders for execution of the decree by ascertainment of the amount of mesne profits, and for the recovery of the amount when so ascertained. The judgment-debtors pleaded limitation. Held, that the application was not an application for execution of the decree. The decree was divisible into two parts, and the present application must be treated as for the purpose of obtaining a final decree regarding the mesne profits, the previous decree having been in that respect merely interlocutory: Held, also, that the provisions of art. 178 of sch. II of the Limitation Act apply to an application by a decree-holder to make a decree complete. And further that s. 8 of that Act had no application to the case, and that therefore so far as the application of the major decree holder was concerned his remedy was barred as his application should have been made within at least three years from the date of the delivery of possession of the lands decreed. Held, further, that under s. 7 of the Limitation Act, the remedy of the minor decree-holder was not barred as the other decree-holder, could not give a valid discharge without his concurrence—and that, under s. 231 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he was as entitled to execute the whole decree, as though the remedy of the major decree-holder was barred his right was not extinguished. ANANDO KISHORE DASS v. ANANDO KISHORE BOSE, 14 C. 50=11 Ind. Jur. 143

(3) S. 10—Auction-purchaser—Assignee of trustee.—An auction-purchaser acquiring trust property for valuable consideration at a sale in execution of a decree is an assignee of the trustee within the meaning of that term as used in s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and consequently a suit against such a person by a plaintiff claiming to be entitled as trustee to possession of the trust property is governed by the ordinary rules of limitation and not excluded therefrom by the provisions of s. 10. CHINTAMONI MAHAPATRO v. SARUP SE, 15 C. 703

(4) S. 13—Construction of—Absence from British India—Goods paid for before delivery—Short delivery—Failure of consideration.—Money paid as the price of goods to be delivered hereafter is money received for the use of the seller and it is only upon failure of consideration that the money so paid becomes money received for the use of the buyer. When goods which have already been paid for are afterwards found to be short delivered, the failure of consideration takes place on the date of delivery, and limitation in respect of suit to recover back the sum overpaid will be reckoned from that date. The words

"absent from British India," in s. 13 of the Limitation Act should be construed broadly, and not limited in their application only to such persons as have been present there, or would ordinarily be present or may be expected to return. Semble.—A defendant is within s. 13, notwithstanding his having carried on a trade or had a shop or a house of business under an agent in British India. *Harrington v. (9) Art. 11—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 278, 280, 283—Investigation of claim to attached property.—A decree-holder, against whom the release of property, attached in execution of his decree, has been ordered after investigation under s. 280 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is limited by art II of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, the Indian Limitation Act, to one year within which to institute a suit to establish that the property is that of his judgment-debtor. The extent to which the "investigation" required by s. 280 should be carried depends upon the circumstances of the case. Sardhari Lal v. Ambicka Pershad, 15 C. 521 (P.C.) = 15 I.A. 123 = 5 Sar. P. C. J. 172 = 12 Ind. Jur. 210

(10) Art. 11—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 280—283—Judgment-debtor, Suit by, to establish title to property the subject-matter of claim in execution proceedings.—A judgment-debtor is not necessarily a party against whom an order is made within the meaning of that term as sued in s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to preclude his instituting a suit after the lapse of one year from the date of such order (the period of limitation prescribed by art. 11, sch. II, Act XV of 1877) to establish his title to and to recover possession of the property which has been the subject-matter of a claim in execution proceedings and in respect of which an order has been made under s. 280 of the Code. G., in execution of a decree, attached certain immovable property belonging to the plaintiff, whereupon B preferred a claim and on the 10th March 1881 got the attachment removed. On the 20th July 1881, B sold the property to K. In 1882 G instituted a suit against B to set aside the order of the 10th March 1881, and to have it declared that the property was liable to attachment as belonging to the plaintiff. K was not made a party to that suit, and it was eventually compromised between G and B, the plaintiff's title being admitted. G thereupon again attached the property, and was met by a claim preferred by K, which was allowed on the 15th August 1883. G then brought another suit against K, to obtain relief similar to that claimed in his suit against B, but his suit was dismissed on the 17th February 1885. On the 25th September 1885, the plaintiff instituted a suit against G, B and K, to obtain a declaration of his title to and to recover possession of the property. It was contended that the suit was barred by limitation, being governed by art. 11, sch. II of Act XV of 1877, inasmuch as it was brought more than one year after the date of the order of the 15th August 1883. * Held, that the suit was not such a suit as was contemplated by s. 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, not being one to establish any right which was the subject-matter of the litigation in the execution proceedings, and that consequently the provisions of art. 11 did not apply to it, and it was not barred by limitation. Kedar Nath Chatterji v.

(11) Art. 61 and 115—Agent for purchase of Stores for Government, Suit by—Cause of action—Suit against Secretary of State—Acknowledgment—Act XV of 1877, ss. 19 and 20.—The plaintiff, a purchasing agent, sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover certain sums of money alleged to be due to him for the purchase of stores, etc., for the Second Cabul Campaign. This suit was brought more than three years after the termination of the plaintiff's agency and more than three years after the last supply made by him as purchasing agent, but within a few months after the final refusal of the Commissariat Department to pay him the amount claimed; held, that it was doubtful if art. 61 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act would apply as against the Secretary of State for India in Council, but even if not the suit was barred by art. 115. Doya Narain Tewary v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 14 C. 256 170

(12) Art. 62—Suit to recover purchase money—Failure of consideration —Case of action, Accrual of.—Purchase money paid for a consideration which has wholly failed is money received for the use of the buyer, and a suit to recover back the money is thus governed by art. 62 of the 2nd schedule to the Limitation Act. A purchased a share of joint property from a member of a Mitakshara family, but his suit to recover possession of it was dismissed on the ground that the sale having been made without the consent of the other coparceners was void under the Law. A then brought a suit to recover back the purchase money by reason of failure of consideration:
Held, that the failure of consideration, although it did not become apparent until the former suit was brought and failed, was a failure from the beginning, and time ran from the date when the purchase money was paid. Hanuman Kamut v. Hanuman Mandur,
15 C. 51 620

(13) Art. 75—Instalment bond—Default in one instalment, the whole amount to fall due.—Waiver.—The mere fact that a creditor has done nothing to enforce a condition in an instrument, under which the whole debt became due on failure in the payment of one instalment, is no evidence of waiver within the meaning of art. 75 of the Limitation Act. Nobodip Chunder Shaha v. Ram Krishna
Roy Chowdhury, 14 C. 397 263

(14) Art. 75—See Decree, 14 C. 352.

(15) Art. 91—Suit to set aside deed.—Fraud.—In a suit instituted in 1884 by a husband and wife to have deed granting land which was extected by the husband in 1872 set aside on the ground that it had been obtained from the latter by fraud and undue influence, the facts relied upon were known to the co-plaintiff's husband from the date of the deed. Although in another suit a sale by the husband, effected in 1879, was set aside in 1882, on the ground of his having been unduly influenced, he was not at the time of the previous transaction, nor for some years after it, mentally incompetent or unable to allow that knowledge to operate on his mind:
Held that, therefore, the suit, falling within s. 91 of sch. II of Act
XV of 1877, was not maintainable by either of the plaintiffs. Janki

(16) Arts. 99 and 132—Government revenue, Suit to recover money paid on account of charge on immovable property—Co-sharer, payment of arrears of revenue by.—The plaintiffs and defendants were the proprietors of two separate plots of land, separately assessed with Government revenue, but covered by the same towni number.
Plaintiffs paid the Government revenue, due from the defendants in respect of their plot from September 1873 to June 1885 in order to prevent the two plots being brought to sale, and on the

28th September 1885 instituted a suit to recover the amount. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff, that art 132 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 applied to the facts of the case, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover all amounts so paid within twelve years of date of suit: Held, that as on the authority of 14 C. 809, the plaintiffs had no charge upon the property in respect of which the payment had been made; and as on the authority of 12 I.A. 13=7 A 502. Art. 132 only applied to cases where the money sought to be recovered is a charge upon the property, the limitation applicable to the case was that provided by art. 99, and the plaintiffs’ claim in respect of all payments made more than three years before suit was barred. KHUB LAL SAHU v. PUDMANUND SINGH, 15 C. 542

(17) Art. 116—Suit for arrears of rent—Registered contract.—A suit to recover arrears of rent upon a registered contract is governed by sch. II, art. 116 of the Limitation Act. UMESH CHUNDRA MUNDAL v. ADARMOONI DASI, 15 C. 221

(19) Arts. 120 and 127—See HINDU LAW—JOINT FAMILY, 14 C. 493.

(20) Art. 127—Suit for possession by purchaser from sharer in joint family.—Art. 127 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877 does not apply to a suit where the plaintiff is a stranger who has purchased a share in joint family property from one of the members thereof. HORENDA CHUNDRAGUPTA ROY v. AUNOARDI MUNDUL, 14 C. 544

(21) Art. 132—Construction of will—Charge on immovable property.—A will devising immovable states that the father of the devisee had lent a sum of money to the testator, and directed the devisee to repay the debt with interest. This was construed to be a charge on immovable, and it was held that a suit, brought by the auction purchaser of the creditor’s claim, to recover the above mentioned debt, was within art. 132 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877; and having been brought within twelve years from the date when the debt was so charged was not barred by time. (22) Arts. 132, 147—Suit on a mortgage bond—English mortgage—“Mortgage” and “Charge”—Transfer of Property Act, ss. 60, 67, 83, 86, 87—89, 92, 93, 100.—A suit on a mortgage bond to enforce payment by sale of premises hypothecated is governed by art. 132 of the Limitation Act. The clear distinction drawn for the first time between “mortgage” and “charge” in the Transfer of Property Act is not observed in the Limitation Act. Art 147 of the Limitation Act relates to a special kind of mortgage known as English mortgage, and includes only that class of suits in which the remedy is either foreclosure or sale in the alternative. (24) Art. 140—Claim to share in immovable property under will.—The right to property left by will (assuming that the testator had power to dispose of it falls into possession, by Hindu law, immediately upon the death of the testator; and, therefore, a claim, making title to share in immovable property under a will, is barred by time, unless brought within twelve years from the date of the testator’s death under art. 140 of Act XV of 1877, sch. (26) Art. 178—Execution of decree—Decree payable by instalments—Instalment, Default in payment of.—When a decree or order makes a sum of money payable by instalment on certain dates, and provides that, in default of payment of any instalment, the whole of the money shall become due and payable and be recoverable in execution, by art.

178, sch. II of the Limitation Act, Limitation begins to run from the date of the first default, unless the right to enforce payment in default has been waived by subsequent payment of the over-due instalment on the one hand and receipt on the other. R. obtained a decree against D. C. and K. G for a sum of money on 21st June 1880. On the 25th May 1882, an order was made in terms of the petition of both parties, provided that the amount of decree should be paid by five instalments, the first instalment being due in July 1882, and that in default of payment of any instalment the whole amount should be due and recoverable in execution. Default was made in payment of the first instalment, nor was there any subsequent payment of that or any other instalment. On 30th July 1886, R. applied for execution of the four last instalments, alleging that the first had been paid: Held that the application was barred by limitation under art. 178, sch. II, Limitation Act, 1877. Mon Mohun Roy v. Durga Churn Ghose, 15 C. 502 919

(27) Art. 170—Execution of decree—Step-in-aid of execution—Application to sell attached property subject to a mortgage.—A judgment-creditor applied on the 22nd May 1882, for execution of a decree, dated 7th November, 1881, and certain property of the judgment-debtors was attached. Thereupon a claim was preferred by a mortgagee and on the 10th August 1882, the judgment-creditor admitted the claim and applied that property might be sold subject to the claimant’s mortgage, and the proceeds if any paid over to him in part satisfaction of his decree. On the 20th June 1885 another application was made for execution, and on the 20th November 1886, a third application was made. To the latter application objection was taken, and it was contended that the decree was barred by reason of more than three years having elapsed between the application of the 22nd May 1882 and that of the 20th June 1885: Held that the application of the 10th August 1882, by the judgment-creditor to allow the sale attached property subject to the mortgage of the claimant was “a step-in-aid of execution of the decree” within the meaning of art. 179, sch. II, Act XV of 1877, and that execution of the decree was therefore not barred. Lalraddi Mullick v. Kala Chand Bera, 15 C. 363 826

(28) Art. 179 (para. 2)—Appeal against part of decree—Execution against judgment-debtors who were not joined in the appeal.—By a decree of a Court of first instance, dated the 16th August, 1880, Rs. 15,260-5-6 was found due against A, and Rs. 20,999-2-6 against A and B jointly, the suit being dismissed as against two other defendants who were alleged to have been sureties. The plaintiff appealed against so much of this decree as dismissed the suit against the alleged sureties, not making either A or B parties respondents; this appeal was dismissed on the 1st May, 1885. On the 27th April, 1885, plaintiff applied for execution against A and B: Held, that the application was barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act. Raghunath Pershad v. Abul Hye, 14 C. 26 1201

(29) Art. 179 and art. 175—Application for execution of decree—Order on petition to pay by instalments—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 210.—An application to execute a decree, dated 30th August, 1880, was made on 25th May, 1881. While the application was pending, the judgment-debtor presented a petition to be allowed to pay the debt by instalments, and the decree-holder consenting to this, the Court made the following orders: “According to the application of both parties it is ordered that the case be struck off, and the decree be returned.” The details of the instalments mentioned in the petition were endorsed on the decree by one of the amals of the Court, but it did not appear when or by whose order this was done. In an application for execution in accordance with this arrangement made on 7th March, 1885: Held, that the order was not one recognising or sanctioning the arrangement within the meaning of s. 210 of the Civ. Pro. Code, inasmuch as the Court at the time it made the order had no power to make any order for instalments, any application for that purpose being then barred by art. 175 of Act XV of 1877. The application for execution was, therefore, barred under art. 179 as not having been made within three years of 25th May, 1881. ABDUL RAHMAN SODAGUR v. DALLARAM MARWARI, 14 C. 348=11 Ind. Lis Pendens.

(1) Auction-purchaser bound by lis pendens.—K brought a suit against P to recover possession of certain land. Whilst that suit was pending in the Court of first instance the right, title and interest of P in the land were sold in execution of a decree against him at the instance of a judgment-creditor and purchased by G. Subsequent to G’s purchase K’s suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance; but K appealed, and the Appellate Court reversed the decree of the Court below and gave judgment in K’s favour. G, who was not made a party to the appeal, thereupon instituted a suit against K to eject him and obtain possession of the land. Held, that the doctrine of lis pendens applied, and that G was not entitled to maintain the suit. Held, further, that it made no difference to the application of the doctrine that the decree of the Court of first instance was in favour of G’s predecessor in title, for that decree was open to appeal and the decree in the suit was that passed by the Appellate Court, the proceedings in the Appeal Court being merely a continuation of those in the suit; and as G’s purchase was made whilst that suit was pending, G was still bound by the decree of the Appellate Court. GOBIND CHUNDER ROY v. GURU CHURN KURMOKER, 15 C. 94 648

(2) “Contentious suit”—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52.—A on the 6th September 1883 sold certain immoveable property to S for Rs. 90-12 by means of a conveyance which was not registered. On the 29th September 1883 S instituted a suit against A, on that conveyance to obtain possession of the property. On the 5th October 1883, when that suit was pending, but before the summons was served on A, A, by a duly registered conveyance, sold the same property to R, for Rs. 198-8. In the suit filed by S, A, filed a written statement, but did not further contest it, and S obtained a decree and got possession of the property. In a suit subsequently brought by R to obtain possession of the property from S upon the ground that his registered conveyance was entitled to priority over the unregistered document of S, it was contended that R’s purchase having been made whilst S’s suit was pending, his title could not prevail against that of S, held, that the doctrine of lis pendens did not apply to the facts of the case, as at the time of R’s purchase there was no contentious suit or proceeding in existence, the summons in S’s suit not having been then served. Magistrate.

(1) Jurisdiction of—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 349—Penal Code, Act XLV of 1860, s. 411—Receiving stolen property.—Under s. 349 of the Crim. Pro. Code a Second Class Magistrate transmitted a case to the District Magistrate, being of opinion that a more severe punishment was deserved than he was empowered to inflict. The District Magistrate returned the record to the Second Class Magistrate, directing him to commit the case to the Sessions Court. The committal directed was duly made. The High Court refused to interfere in the matter, holding that the proceedings of the Second Class Magistrate were not illegal, and that there was nothing done which took away the jurisdiction of the Second Class Magistrate to commit. Evidence — Written contract, Effect of failing to prove, when alleged. — A suit was brought by a Mahomedan wife for dower alleged to be due to her under a kabinnamah executed by her husband at the time of the marriage. She alleged the amount of dower to be Rs. 10,000, of which Rs. 5,000 was prompt and Rs. 5,000 deferred, and she claimed to be entitled to the whole on the ground that she had lawfully divorced her husband in pursuance of power reserved to her in that behalf by the kabinnamah. At the hearing she failed to prove the kabinnamah, but the Court gave her a decree, holding that there was evidence to show that a dower of Rs. 10,000 was usually payable in the plaintiff's family, and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the whole amount must be considered prompt, but as the plaintiff only claimed Rs. 5,000 as prompt, the decree was limited to that amount. Held, that the Court was wrong in decreeing the case upon an oral contract not alleged in the plaint nor admitted by the defendant, the suit being based upon a written agreement, which the plaintiff failed to prove. KHAJA MAHOMED ASGHUR v. Marriage — Shiah School Muta Marriage — Gift of term — Divorce — Maintenance. — In a suit brought by a Mahomedan of the Shiah sect against his wife, belonging to the same persuasion, for a declaration that the relationship of husband and wife had terminated, and that he was not liable to pay maintenance to her which he had been directed to do by an order passed under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the allegation that the marriage was a muta form, and that he, on the 22nd February 1882 had made hiba-i-muddot (gift of the term) of whatever period there then might remain unexpired, the wife pleaded inter alia that her husband was not competent to dissolve the marriage tie within the contracted period without her consent, and that if under the Mahomedan law the consent was unnecessary, the Court was bound, in administering justice, equity, and good conscience, to modify the strict law in this respect. Held that although the ordinary law of divorce does not exist in respect of marriages by the muta form, they can nevertheless be terminated by the husband giving away the unexpired portion of the term for which the marriage was contracted, and the consent or acceptance on the part of the wife is not necessary for the dissolution of the marriage. Held, further, that although the Court could not grant an injunction restraining the Magistrate from enforcing the order for maintenance, the plaintiff was entitled to ask the Magistrate to abstain from giving further effect to his order after the Civil Court had found that the relationship of husband and wife had ceased to exist. MAHOMED ARID ALI KUMAR KADAR v. Pre-emption.

(1) Pre-emption—Conditional sale—Right of pre-emption among co-parceners—Private partition of puttdari estate—Limitation Act, 1877, arts. 10, 120.—A and B had certain proprietary rights in an 8 annas putti of a certain mehal. C and D had no rights in that putti, but D had a small share in the remaining 8 annas putti. A private partition between the puttis having taken place, C and D's brother lent to B two sums of Rs. 200 & Rs. 199 by deeds of bai-bil-u'ufa dated the 12th & 21st June, 1876. C & D subsequently instituted foreclosure proceedings & on the 5th May 1884 were put into possession of B's share in the first mentioned putti in execution of a decree which they had obtained. On the 18th April 1885, A sued C and D to enforce his right of pre-emption. Held, that though the coparcenary could not be said to have ceased to exist, or those who were coparceners be said to have become strangers to one another, yet, there being a finding that the puttis were separate, it was not necessary, in order to establish A's preferential right, that a partition by metes and bounds should be shown to have taken place; but that a private partition, if full and final between the parties, would have the same effect as the most formal partition on the right of pre-emption, and that A's claim must, therefore succeed. Held, also, that the suit was not barred by limitation, it being governed by either art. 10, sch. II of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), which gave the plaintiff a year from the 5th May 1884, the date on which the mortgagee obtained possession, or by art. 120, under which his right to sue accrued upon the expiry of the six months' grace allowed to the-mortgagor after the decree for foreclosure, and there would be six years allowed from that time. Digambur Misser v. Ram Lal Roy, 14 C. 761=12 Ind. Jur. 94—505

(2) Joint purchase by co-sharer and stranger, Effect of—Co-sharer—Specification of share in a deed of sale, Effect of.—Under the rule of mahomedan Law, if a sharer in the estate alienates his interest to a co-sharer and a stranger, the purcosharer, by joining an outsider in the purchase forfeits his right as a sharer, and another co-sharer has the right of pre-emption. Held, also that in the case of a joint-purchase made by two persons of shares in two villages, in one of which one of the purchasers was already a sharer, at one entire consideration, the specification in the deed of sale of their respective shares in the aggregate purchase would not affect the rule. Management.

Of Estate by the Court—Summary enforcement of contract made by the Court—Izarah Lease—Lessee, Application by, though no party to the suit—Application by a person not a party to the suit.—A Court has complete power to enforce summarily a contract made by it when managing or administering an estate, whatever that contract may be. Such power of enforcing subsisting contracts made by it is not affected by the fact that the Court has ceased to manage the estate before such contract is carried out by reason of the dismissal of the suit under an order in which the Court had derived its power of management. Case in which the Court passed summarily such an order on the application of a lessee not a party to a suit in which the order completing the agreement for lease had been passed and at a time when such suit was no longer in existence. Mesne Profits.

(1) Decree for possession of immovable property—Reversal of decree on appeal—Suit for recovery of mesne profits from person who has taken possession under a decree which is subsequently reversed on appeal—Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244.—A landlord sued his tenant for arrears of rent, and obtained a decree for a certain amount and a declaratio that if the amount were not paid within fifteen days the tenant should be ejected under s. 52, Act VIII of 1869. The amount was not, paid, and the landlord executed the decree and obtained possession. The tenant appealed and succeeded in getting the decree set aside, and the amount found due from him for arrears by the first Court was reduced, and a decree made directing that if the reduced amount were not paid within fifteen days he should be ejected. He paid the amount found due by the appellate Court within the fifteen days and recovered possession of his holding. He then brought a suit in the Munsif's Court to recover mesne profits from his landlord for the time he was in possession after the execution of the First Court's decree. It was contended on second appeal that the suit would not lie as the matter might and should have been determined in the execution department under s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held, that as the suit was instituted in the Munsif's Court, and the Munsif under the circumstances of the case was the officer who, in the first instance, would have had to determine the matter in the execution department, there was at most only an error of procedure and no exercise of jurisdiction by the Munsif, which he did not possess, and that upon the authority of the decision in 19 W. R. 90, this could not be made a ground of objection on appeal. Held, also, that, the point being one that was not raised in the pleadings or before either of the lower Courts and being a point which went exclusively to the jurisdiction of the Court, it could not be raised on second appeal. Quaere.—Whether such a suit does not lie and whether the decisions in 2 C. L. R. 75, and analogous cases to the effect that such a suit does not lie are correct. AZIZUDDIN HOSSEIN v. RAMAUNGARA ROY, 14 C. 605

Minor.

(1) Objection to description of minor—Permission to sue, Proof of—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 440, 578—Act XL of 1858, s. 3.—Although the proper and regular manner of giving permission to sue on behalf of a minor is by an order recorded in the order-sheets, there is, nevertheless, nothing in the nature of the sanction provided by s. 3 of Act XL of 1858 which takes it out of the general rule of evidence, that sanction may be proved by express words or by implication. Where on a construction of the plaint and the pleadings it is found that the minor is the real plaintiff, the mere fact of his not having been properly described in accordance with s. 440 of the Civ. Pro. Code is no ground for setting aside a decree passed in the suit. BABA PERSHAD KHAN v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, 14 C. 159 (F.B.) 106

(2) Suit against—Error in the frame of a suit a minor defendant, Effect of—Guardian "ad litem" how appointed—Sanction of Court without formal order, Effect of—Service of summons—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 100 and 443.—The plaint in a suit described one of the defendants thus: "N.C., guardian on behalf of her own minor son, S.C." Upon the presentation of the plaint the Court directed the plaintiff to produce an affidavit to the effect that the mother of the minor defendant was his guardian, and an affidavit having been made that the "minor defendant" was under the guardianship of the mother, ordered the suit to be registered and summons to be issued on the defendants N. C. then filed a written statement, alleging that she held the land in suit on behalf of the minor. Held, that having regard to the orders of the Court and the allegations made in the plaint and written statement, the suit was substantially brought against the minor, and the error of description in the plaint being one of mere form, could not without proof of prejudice invalidate a decree against him in the suit. Held, also, that the want of a formal order appointing a guardian ad litem was not fatal to the suit, when it appeared on the face of the proceedings that the Court had sanctioned the appointment. Held (O'Kinealy, J., dissenting) that the fact that an order appointing a guardian ad litem at the instance of the plaintiff was made ex parte was not necessarily fatal to the suit, unless it could be shown that the minor had in any manner been prejudiced thereby. Per Mitter, J. (Petheram, C.J., concurring) that, although the matter of the appointment of a guardian ad litem is left to the discretion of the Court, it is always desirable that the appointment at the instance of the plaintiff should not be made, unless the minor, or his friends and relatives in whose care he may be, failed to move the Court for that purpose within a reasonable time after receiving notice of the institution of the suit.

Per Prinsep and Wilson, J.J.—No order appointing a guardian ad litem for an infant defendant, on the application of the plaintiff, should be made ex parte, and no such order should be made until the Court is satisfied that the infant has been duly served, and there has been an opportunity for making an application on behalf of the infant.

Per Wilson, J.—Quære.—Whether service on a guardian ad litem is good service under the Code?

Per O'Kinealy, J.—Having regard to the provisions of s. 443 of the Civ. Pro Code, no ex parte order made at the instance of the plaintiff for the appointment of a guardian ad litem is valid, without notice to the minor in the mode prescribed by s. 100, and any decree in the suit under the circumstances is absolutely void as against the minor. Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhry v. Jugut Chunder Deb, 14 C. 204 (F.B.) (3) Suit against—Misdescription in title of the plaint and in decree, Effect of.—In a suit brought against a minor widow as the heir of her deceased husband, she was described in the cause title of the plaint as "the deceased debtor Ramnath Acharjee's heir and minor widow Benodini Dabea's mother and guardian Anundomoyee Dassee." The plaintiff obtained no order for the appointment of a guardian ad litem. He, however, obtained a decree, and the minor defendant was described therein in the same manner. Held, that the minor was neither a party to the original suit nor to the decree, and that no property of the minor passed upon a sale in execution of such decree. Ganga Prosad Chowdhry v. (1) Suit for foreclosure—Conditional Sale—Reg. XVII of 1806—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 2—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s. 6—"Proceedings."—In a suit for foreclosure under a deed of conditional sale, where the due date of the deed expired and notice of foreclosure was served while Reg. XVII of 1806 was in force, but before the expiration of the year of grace that Regulation had been repealed by the Transfer of Property Act: Held, that, proceedings for foreclosure having been commenced under the Regulation, those proceedings were saved by s. 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act I of 1868. The "Proceedings" referred to in that section are not necessarily judicial proceedings only, but ministerial proceedings, as, in the present case, the service of notice of foreclosure. (1) Lien—Covenants that mortgagee be entitled to enter—Entry, Right of—Mortgage deed in English form.—B executed a mortgage deed in the English form in favour of the L Bank, containing amongst other covenants one providing that, upon default, the mortgagees would be entitled to enter into possession of the mortgaged properties. B died, leaving a widow, a daughter and a sister S, his heiress. According to Mahomedan law S was entitled to a six annas share of the mortgaged properties. On the 9th of May 1872, after the mortgage money became due, the L Bank brought a suit, and on the 13th of July 1872, obtained a decree by consent. The existence or right of S to a share in the properties was not known to the Bank, and she was not made a party to that suit. The Bank, in execution of their decree, caused the mortgaged properties to be sold, and themselves purchased some of them. The sale proceeds did not satisfy the entire claim. On the 1st of December, 1875, S sold her share of six annas in the properties to R. In a suit by R against the purchaser of two of the mortgaged properties at the aforesaid sale it was held that the share of S in the estate of B did not pass to the purchasers, though the Bank purported to have brought the whole sixteen annas in the properties to sale. R then brought this suit for the recovery of possession of the six annas share of the properties purchased at the sale by the Bank themselves, and which were now in their possession. Held that the share of S not having been sold the lien imposed upon it by the mortgage deed remained intact and continued in the hands of the Bank, Held, also, that, under the covenant in the mortgage deed above referred to, the Bank were entitled to remain in possession as mortgagees until the proportion of the debt, which might legitimately be imposed upon the six annas share of the properties in their hands was paid. 4.—Foreclosure.

(1) Foreclosure—Regulation XVII of 1806, s. 8—Provision as to the year of grace—Extension of time by mutual agreement—Transfer of Property Act, s. 2, cl. (c).—The year of grace allowed by s. 8, Reg. XVII of 1806, is a matter of procedure, which it was open to the parties to extend by mutual agreement without prejudice to the proceedings already had under the section and upon the expiration of such extended period the mortgagee acquired an immediate right to have a decree declaring the property to be his absolutely. The right so acquired by the mortgagee while the Regulation was in force is a right which falls within the meaning of cl. (c), s. 2 of the Transfer of Property Act. Proceedings under s. 8 had come to a close by the expiration of the stipulated period of extension while the Regulation was still in force, and the mortgagee brought his suit for possession in pursuance thereof after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. Held that the mortgagee was entitled to a decree such as he would have had if the Regulation had been still in force. Raij Nath Pershad Narain Singh v. Moheswari Pershad Narain Singh, 14 C. 451

(2) Foreclosure, Suit for—Conditional Sale—Regulation XVII of 1806—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 2, cl. (c), and ss. 86, 87—Procedure.—A suit was brought on the 24th January 1885, by a mortgagee upon a mortgage by conditional sale, asking for a declaration that the mortgagor's right to redeem had been extinguished, and that he was entitled to possession of the mortgaged properties. The mortgage was dated the 6th April 1881, and the mortgage money was repayable on the 13th May 1881. On the 9th July 1881, the mortgagee caused a notice to be served on the mortgagor in compliance with the provisions of ss. 7 and 8 of Reg. XVII of 1806. The year of grace expired on the 10th July 1882. It was contended by the mortgagor that, as the Transfer of Property Act came into force on the 1st July 1882, the proceedings taken by the mortgagee should be regulated by the procedure laid down in ss. 86 and 87 of that Act, and not by the procedure prescribed by Regulation XVII of 1806. Held that the procedure laid down by the Transfer of Property Act could not be applied to the case. Although the year of grace had not expired when that Act came into force, and the full and complete right of the mortgagee had not accrued, he had acquired the right to bring a suit under the provisions of Reg. XVII of 1806 at the expiration of the year of grace, and the mortgagor was under a liability to part with his property upon a suit being

(1) Sale in execution of mortgage decree—Sale certificate—Confirmation of sale—Sale for arrears of Government revenue—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 316—Act XI of 1859, ss. 13, 14, 54—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 73.—D having obtained a decree on a mortgage of a 51 anna share of an estate paying revenue to Government caused the share to be put up for sale in execution of that decree on the 17th August 1883, and purchased it herself. The sale was not confirmed till the 18th September 1883. In the meantime a 14-anna share of the estate, including the 51-anna share, which was separately liable for its own share of Government revenue, was on the 26th September 1883 sold for arrears of the June Kist of Government revenue under s. 13, Act XI of 1859, and purchased by one G, who sold it again to P, who obtained possession on the 6th August 1884. In a suit by D against P and the judgment debtor to obtain possession of the 51 anna share so purchased by her: Held, that the mortgage debt was not extinguished, and the mortgage merged in the decree on the 17th August, 1883, but having regard to the provisions of s. 316, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the mortgagee's rights were kept alive, and remained in existence until the property vested in her by virtue of the granting of the sale certificate, and that between the date of the sale, 17th August 1883, and the date of its confirmation 18th December 1883, the mortgage lien was fully preserved; that P's purchase being governed by s. 54 of Act XI of 1859, he acquired the share subject to all encumbrances, including the mortgage lien of D; that s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act does not in such a case deprive a mortgagee of his lien over the property and confine him to proceeding against the surplus sale proceeds; that as the judgment-debtor had the right, at any time between the 17th August 1883 and the 18th December 1883, to redeem the property upon payment of principal, interest and costs to D, P having acquired the rights of the judgment-debtor by virtue of his purchase on the 26th September 1883, was equally entitled to redeem between that date and the 18th December 1883, but not having availed himself of that right the property became absolutely vested in D on the 18th December 1883, and that consequently D was entitled to the relief claimed. possession of his tenure. In attempting to execute that decree he was opposed as regards certain plots, which he alleged were comprised in the tenure, by parties in possession, who instituted procceedings against him under s. 332 of the Civ. Pro. Code. These proceedings resulted in their claims being decided in their favour.
The plaintiff thereupon instituted one suit against his judgment debtor and all parties who had opposed him in such proceedings to obtain a declaration that all the several plots claimed against him belonged to the tenure in respect of which he had obtained a decree for khas possession, and he also prayed for khas possession of the various plots. It was found that the titles relied on by the defendants, and which had been set up by them in the proceedings under s. 332, were quite distinct one from another, and that there had been no collusion or combination amongst them to keep the plaintiff out of possession, but on the contrary that the defences were bona fide.
Held, that the suit was bad for misjoinder of causes of action and was properly dismissed. RAM NARAIN DUT v. ANNODA PROSAD

(1) Ss. 52, 88, 304 A—Causing death by a rash and negligent act—Kobiraj—Surgical operation—Unskilled medical practitioner—"Good faith"—"Accepting risk."—A kobiraj operated on a man for internal piles by cutting them out with an ordinary knife. The man died from haemorrhage. The kobiraj was charged, under s. 304-A of the Penal Code, with causing death by doing a rash and negligent act. It was contended that, inasmuch as the prisoner had performed similar operations on previous occasions, it was not a rash act within the meaning of that section, and that at all events he was entitled to the benefit of s. 88 of the Penal Code as he did the act in good faith, without any intention to cause death and for the benefit of the patient who had accepted the risk. Held, that, as the prisoner was admittedly uneducated in matters of surgery, and having regard to the meaning of "good faith" as defined in s. 52 of the Penal Code, he was not entitled to the benefit of s. 88. Held, further, that s. 88 did not apply to the case, as it was not shown by the accused on whom the burden of proving that fact lay, that the deceased knew the risk he was running in consenting to the operation, and he could not therefore be said to have accepted the risk. Held, also, that under the circumstances the conviction under s. 304-A was a proper one. SUKAROO KOBIRAJ v. THE EMPRESS, 14 C. 566

Plaint.

(1) Form of, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 50 and 53, sub-s. (d)—Charges of fraud—Pleading—Amendment of plaint—Rejection of plaint.—A plaint charging fraud must set forth particulars; general allegations, however strong the words, not even amounting to an averment of fraud of which a Court can take notice. After an examination of the plaintiff's pleader by the Court to discover whether there were grounds, which did not appear, for an amendment, a suit was dismissed on the defects of the plaint, which, charging fraud, did not set forth, a good cause of action in regard to the above. Held, that dismissal was not the proper mode of disposal of the suit; but the plaint should have been rejected—a course which would have enabled the plaintiff, if he found himself at a future time in a position to make averments giving relevancy to an action, to present a fresh plaint. Possession.
(1) Adverse possession—Issues—Variance between pleading and proof.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land, alleging that it was lakhiraj land, which he had purchased from a third party. The Court of first instance found that he had not proved the title he alleged, and, although it had been contended at the hearing that a title by twelve years' adverse possession had been proved, the Court held that it was not proved, and as it was not alleged in the plaint, and no issue was raised as to it, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, and accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed, and one of his grounds of appeal was that he was entitled to succeed by virtue of the title of adverse possession proved. The lower Appellate Court considered that the plaintiff had proved that he and his vendor had held adverse possession for a period of over twelve years and gave the plaintiff a decree on the strength of that title. The defendant appealed to the High Court, and it was contended on his behalf that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed upon a title of adverse possession when it was not alleged in his plaint and no issue had been laid down in respect of it. Held, that, as the suit was one for possession and the defendant had express notice in the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff relied on the title of adverse possession, and as he took no objection on the ground that he should be allowed an opportunity to call evidence to rebut it, and as he had consequently not been prejudiced by the course adopted by the lower Appellate Court, the decree of that Court should be confirmed. II.—A purchaser at a sale in execution not having applied to the Court for possession under s. 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure, brought a regular suit to obtain possession of the property purchased: Held, that, although a remedy might be open to the plaintiff under s. 318, still he was not precluded from bringing a regular suit, the remedies being concurrent. The words "the date of the sale," in the third column of art. 138, sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, signify the date of the actual sale, and not that of the confirmation of such sale. (1) Costs—Attorney’s lien—Lien—Attaching creditor—Fund in Court attached.—A sum of money had been paid into Court as admittedly due to the plaintiff in a certain suit; the plaintiff not having satisfied in full his attorney’s taxed bill of costs, the attorney applied for payment out of the fund in Court; previously to this application the fund had been attached by a third party. Held that the attorney was entitled to enforce his lien—i.e., against the attaching creditor for all costs incurred up to the date of attachment; that the attaching creditor was then entitled to be satisfied before the attorney could claim payment out of the balance in Court of any sum remaining due to him on account of his costs. Subramanyan Setty v. Hurry Froo Mug, 14 C. 374 ... 248

(2) Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 435—Revision by the High Court; Revision where lower Court has concurrent jurisdiction with High Court.—The High Court will not entertain an application for revision in cases where the District Court or Magistrate has concurrent revisional jurisdiction with the High Court, save on some special ground shown, unless a previous application shall have been made to the lower Court; but in cases in which concurrent jurisdiction is not possessed by the lower Courts no such general rule exists. In the matter of Queen-Empress v. Reolah, 14 C. 887 ... 585

(3) Evidence—Prosecutor’s right of reply—Witness called by Court—Tendering witnesses for cross-examination—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 289, 540.—The giving of any documentary evidence by an accused person, during the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, and before he is asked under s. 289 if he means to adduce evidence, does not give a right of reply to the prosecution. In a trial before the Sessions Court the prosecution is not bound to tender for cross-examination all witnesses called before the committing Magistrate. The Court should not call a witness on whose evidence it could not put implicit reliance. Empress of India v. Kaliprosanno Doss, 14 C. 245 ... 163

(4) Interrogatories—Refusal to answer—Particulars of damage—Civ. Pro. Code, (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 125, 127.—The plaintiff alleged that the defendant Bank improperly and without notice, and in violation of an agreement, sold some Government promissory notes, which had been deposited as security for certain loans, and claimed a specified sum as damages, or in the alternative a decree for an account. The defendant Bank denied the alleged agreement, and asserted that the notes had been sold after due notice and on failure of the plaintiff to comply with the terms on which the loans were made. Interrogatories were administered for the examination of the plaintiff, and amongst them one in the following terms:—“State how your estimate of damages to the amount of Rs. 1,30,000 mentioned in the eighth paragraph of the plaint is arrived at?” Upon the plaintiff declining to answer that interrogatory the defendant Bank applied on notice for an order under s. 127 of the Code of Civil Procedure requiring him to answer it fully. Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to Practice—(Concluded). answer it. If, on the one hand, it was intended to elicit the principle on which the damages were estimated by the plaintiff, the defendant was not entitled to discovery on that point. If, on the other hand, it was sought to elicit an account of the transactions between the parties, it was unnecessary, as the transactions were within the knowledge of the defendant Bank; and if it were not, then the enquiry was premature, as the question whether there had been any wrongful act committed and whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages should be first determined. Neckram Dobay v. The Bank of Bengal, 14 C. 703 466

(5) Liberty to apply—Relief after judgment—Damages—Specific performance—Review—Alternative relief.—On the 27th April 1886, a plaintiff brought a suit praying for specific performance of a contract, or in the alternative for damages; and on the 24th November 1886, obtained therein a decree for specific performance with the usual liberty to apply. On the 6th December 1886 the plaintiff discovered that it was out of the defendant's power to specifically perform his contract, and he thereupon, on the 13th April 1887, applied to the Court which had granted the decree for a rehearing of suit on the question of damages, asking that, in lieu of the decree for specific performance, a decree for damages, when assessed might be entered up. Held, that he was entitled to as for such relief. Pearisundari Dassee v. Hari Charan Mozumdar Chowdry, 15 C. 211 725

(6) Production of documents—Discovery—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882 ss. 136, 139.—If a notice under s. 131 of the Civ. Pro. Code be not answered as provided by s. 132, the party seeking the inspection of documents may apply for an order under s. 133, and his application must be supported by an affidavit. The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order under s. 136, unless the provision of s. 134 are strictly complied with. Dhapi v. Ram Pershad, 14 C. 768=12 Ind. Jur. 97 509

(7) Second Appeal—Vakeel, Right of, to be heard without certified grounds of appeal or without any order admitting the appeal—Rules and Orders of Court (Appealate Side), 86 and 162.—A vakeel will not be heard on behalf of an appellant on second appeal, when neither duly certified ground or grounds of appeal have been filed nor the appeal been admitted by order of Court under Rules 80 and 162 of Court. Principal and Agent.
Suit by principal for an account—Object of a decree for an account, as distinguished from a decree made upon the hearing—Costs—Limitation under Act IX of 1871, sch. I, art. 118.—A continued agency, or employment as dewan, for the purpose of drawing and expending the money of a principal, resulted in a suit by the latter, who alleged that more had been drawn than expended for him, and that a specific sum, or balance, stood against the defendant, having been misappropriated by him. The principal claimed also any further sum that might be proved to be payable. The dewan having denied the receipt of the money, and any kind of accountability, it was found against him that the relation of agency existed between the parties. But, on the ground that it was impossible to decide, upon the evidence adduced at the hearing, how much of the principal’s money was unaccounted for, though the attempt had been made to prove a balance due, the Appellate Court dismissed the suit. Held, that such a suit was essentially one for an account and that the Courts below should have followed the regular course, viz., to order an account to be taken of the defendant’s dealings with the plaintiff’s money. This was without any expression of opinion that, in a suit for an account, an issue may not be raised, at the outset, so clearly as this to be ready for decision. But the general rule being the other way, this suit was an example of it. As, however, the defendant had falsely denied his fiduciary position, he was ordered to pay the whole costs of this suit hitherto, including the costs of this appeal, without regard to the result of the account. Limitation under Act IX of 1871, s. 118, which was applicable, commenced from the date on which the agency ceased. HUBBINATH RAI v. KRISHNA KUMAR BAKSHI, 14 C. 147 (P.C.)=13 I.A. 123=10 Ind. Receiver.

(1) Appointment of—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 503—Discretion.—The appointment of a receiver is a matter resting in the discretion of the Court. The powers of appointing a receiver conferred by s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be exercised with a sound discretion, upon a view of the whole circumstances of the case, not merely the circumstances which might make the appointment expedient for the protection of the property, but all the circumstances connected with the right which is asserted and has to be established. The Court will not interfere by appointing a receiver where a right is asserted to property in the possession of a defendant claiming to hold it under a legal title, unless a strong case is made out. Sibheswari Davi v. Abhoyeswari Dabi, 15 C. 818

D, without special leave of the Court, served a notice to quit on certain tenants of the estate, who claimed to hold a permanent lease, and afterwards instituted a suit to eject them, also without a special leave of the Court. Res-Judicata.
(1) Civ. Pro. Code, 1877, ss. 13 and 43—Act XII of 1879, s. 6—Act VIII of 1859, s. 7—Inclusion of whole claim in suit.—The present suit was preceded by others in which the plaintiff sought to establish a right in the same part of the talukdari estate that he now claimed to redeem from mortgage. The first suit in which he with another claimed as under-proprietors was dismissed in 1866, on the ground that they had not shown themselves to have held such right under the talukdars within the period since 1841. Proceedings not to be regarded as judicial, subsequently taken under Circular 4 of 1867, resulted in a finding that the dismissal was right upon the merits, the property having been transferred to the talukdar by a conditional sale which had become absolute. Another suit was then brought to recover the talukdari right under the terms of Circular 106 of 1869, it being alleged that arrears of revenue paid by the talukdar had been paid on the plaintiff's account. That suit was also dismissed. Held, that the present suit to redeem the same property under a mortgage was not barred under s. 13 of Act X of 1877, as amended by s. 6 of Act XII of 1879. The claim to redeem did not arise out of the former cause of action within the meaning of the sections of Act VIII of 1859 relating to the inclusion of the whole claim in a suit. The plaintiff not then being aware of his right when he sued before it could not be regarded as a "portion of his claim," and he was not precluded by having omitted it from bringing it forward. mortgaged the zemindari to the putnidar, who, having afterwards obtained a decree against the zemindar upon the mortgage, attached and purchased, at the sale, in execution, the zemindari interest, subject to the mortgage. Before that purchase, though after the attachment, another holder of a decree against the zemindar brought the right, title and interest in the zemindari to sale in execution of his decree, and himself became the purchaser. He then, claiming to have obtained the zemindari estate, sued the putnidar for rent due under the lease. This suit was dismissed, save as to rent due for the time intervening between the two sales in execution, on the ground that the relation of zemindar to lessee had ceased on the purchase by the latter. The present suit was brought by the purchaser from the zemindar, stating his title, acquired at the prior of the two sales, and claiming to redeem the mortgage. Held, that the dismissal of the rent suit, which involved the title, barred the present one; and the opinion was expressed that the plaintiff had been rightly adjudged in the rent suit to be bound by the proceedings taken by the mortgagee, pending which the purchase relied upon had been made. Rabhanamdhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerjee, 15 C. 756 (P.C.) = 15 I.A. 97 = 12 Ind. Jur. 207 = 5 Sar. P.C.J. 211

(3) Code of Civil Procedure, s. 13—Identity of cause of action with that of prior suit, to which the plaintiff in a subsequent suit had been a party—Effect of judgment, that a will had been revoked, to bar, between the parties, any claim founded solely on the will.—The widow of a talukdar, acting under his supposed will, appointed the present appellant to succeed to the taluks and other estate which had belonged to the deceased. The heir of the deceased under the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, obtained the judgment of the Judicial Committee, declaring that he was entitled to the taluks as against the present appellant, whose title was under the will which had been revoked, as the Committee found. Another suit brought by the present appellant for a decree declaring that, in virtue of his appointment by the widow under the will, he was entitled to the whole of the estate of the deceased, talukdari and non-talukdari, was dismissed by the Judicial Committee on the ground that he had no such title to the whole or any part of the estate. Held, that this prior judgment was conclusive to bar the present suit which, being founded entirely upon the appellant's appointment in pursuance of the will, was brought for possession of all the estate of the deceased as well as a declaration of right thereto. Although the heir was not entitled to possession of the estate of the deceased other than talukdari, inasmuch as the widow took her estate therein, nevertheless, the claim of the present appellant being only founded upon her appointment under the will, as if unrevoked, and not being a claim for property as descending to the widow upon her husband's intestacy, the prior judgment was binding in the present suit. (4) Estoppel — Auction-purchaser — "Representative" — Mortgage—Adoption—Hindu Law, Mitakshara—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 115—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 118, 140, 141.—A purchaser at an execution sale is not as such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act. A Hindu governed by the Mitakshara School of Law, died on the 12th May 1867, leaving him surviving a widow B and a brother R who was admittedly the next reviserioner. In July, 1867, B purported to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September, 1867, obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of Rs. 9,000, and to secure its repayment executed a mortgage of seven mouzahs in favour of M as guardian of D. The money was advanced and mortgage executed at the instigation of R and with his consent, and upon his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A and it was admitted that the money was specifically advanced for, as well as applied towards, the payment of decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August 1880, M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party defendant as being the purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzahs included in his mortgage. On the 26th June, 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzahs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree M was opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had on the 8th November 1880, purchased five out of the seven mouzahs at a sale in execution of certain decrees against R. On the 29th February 1884, L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th August, 1884, M brought this suit against L, S, R and D, and the decree-holders in the suits against R, for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S. It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity; and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahs. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage money from the five mouzahs in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S as the representative of R was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus having been a party to M's first suit the question as to the liability of the mouzahs to satisfy the mortgage lien was res judicata as against him. It was also contended that the five mouzahs should not be saddled with the whole of the mortgage debt, but that the mouzah in the hands of M should bear its proportionate part thereof. Held that, as S was merely a party of M's original suit as purchaser of one mouzah, and as he, subsequently to the institution of that suit, acquired R's interest in the five mouzahs, and as R was not a party to that suit nor was his interest represented in any way, the decree was in no way binding against R, and therefore S was not barred by res judicata from setting up the interest of R in the five mouzahs so acquired by him. Held, further, that, though R was estopped by his conduct from disputing the validity of the adoption, or of M's rights as mortgagee, S being an auction-purchaser was not bound by R's acts, and was not estopped from disputing the adoption, as he derived his title by operation of law adversely to R, and was thus in a different position from a person claiming under a voluntary alienation. Held, also, that, though B purported to execute the mortgage as guardian for D, though D was not the adopted son of A, the substance of the transaction and not the form had to be looked at, and as B had full power to alienate for legal necessity the mortgage was still binding on the estate of A; and further that, even if there had been no legal necessity, having regard to the fact that it was made with the consent of R, the next reversioner, it equally created a valid charge upon the property, but that the mouzah in the hands of M must bear its share of the mortgage debt, and that the decree of the lower Court was wrong in declaring that the five mouzahs in suit were to bear the whole amount of the debt. It was further contended that D had acquired an absolute title by more than twelve years' adverse possession from the date of his adoption in 1867 before the purchase by S in 1880. Held that, as B died within twelve years of the alleged adoption, although under art. 118, sch. II, Act XV of 1877 (which came into force before the adoption could become perfected by eflux of time), a suit for a declaration that an adoption was invalid should be brought within six years from the date.
GENERAL INDEX.

Res-Judicata—(Concluded):
when the adoption becomes known to the plaintiff, still, having regard to the provisions of arts. 140 and 141, the next reversioner was not thereby prevented from suing to obtain possession within twelve years from the date of the widow’s death or when the estate fell into possession, and therefore that S was not barred by limitation from disputing D’s title. Quare.—Whether the ruling in 12 M.I.A. 397, applies to cases governed by the Mitakshara Law in Northern India, and whether an adoption made by a widow after the death of the husband without his express consent, but with the consent of his near kindred, is valid, or whether the recognition of the adopted son by the next reversioner would likewise render the adoption valid. Review.
(1) Error of law—Law, Mistaken view of—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 623.—A review of judgment may be granted (if it is necessary for the ends of justice that the judgment should be reviewed) where there is an error of law on the fact of the judgment, or where the decision of the Court has proceeded upon a mistaken view of the law. In this case, without deciding whether there was or not any error in law, the application for review of judgment was refused on the ground that it did not appear there was any danger of its causing a miscarriage of justice. (2) Of judgment of High Court—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 369. —The verdict and judgment of a Divisional Bench of a High Court, coupled with the sentence in a criminal case, are absolutely final, and as soon as they have been pronounced and signed by the Judges, and the High Court is functus officio, and neither the Court itself, nor any Bench of it, has any power to revise that decision or interfere with it in any way. (3) Second application for review—"Final"—Civ. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 378—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 623, 629.—There is nothing in the Civ. Pro. Right of Occupancy.

(1) Agreement restricting right of occupancy—Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), s. 178, applicability of, to suits pending when Act came into force.—S. 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885) has no application to suits instituted before the date on which that Act came into force. So where a landlord sued to eject a tenant who had executed a solenamah agreeing to hold the land in suit for a specified period at a specified rent and providing that the landlord was to be at liberty to enter on the lands at the expiry of the period, and the suit was instituted on the 6th October 1885, and where it was found that at the date of the solenamah the tenant had acquired a right of occupancy with respect to some of the lands in suit: Held, that the tenant was not entitled to the benefits conferred by s. 178, cl. 1, sub-cl. (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but was liable to be ejected. Moheshwar Pershad Narain Singh v. Sheo Babu Mahto. Moheshwar Pershad Narain Singh v. Dursun Raut, 14 C. 621...

(2) In Assam—Pykes, their rights and privileges.—The plaintiff who held land in Assam under a settlement from Government sued to eject the defendant from certain lands within his holding. It was proved that the defendant was a descendant from one of the pykes who held lands under the Assam Rajahs; that the Assam Rajahs granted the pyke to a certain lakherajdar; that the pyke held the lands in suit as before under the lakherajdar that the lakheraj was subsequently resumed by Government; and that the defendant had his house and gardens on the land for a long time, and had paid rent for many years at Government rate. Held, that the defendant was not liable to ejectment. The rights of such tenants explained and discussed. Dinabundhu Surmah v. Bodia Coch, 15 C. 100...

Right of Suit.

(1) Civ. Pro. Code, s. 11—Hereditary right to an office—Declaratory decree—Jurisdiction—Emolument.—A suit for the establishment of a right to the hereditary title of musicians to a satra will lie under s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure notwithstanding that the right sought to be established is one which brings in no profit to those claiming it. Mamat Ram Bayan v. Babu Ram Atai Dura Bhakat, 15 C. 159...

(2) Slander—Privilege of witness—Slander uttered by witness whilst under examination in a judicial proceeding.—A witness in a Court of Justice is absolutely privileged as to anything he may say as a witness, having reference to the enquiry on which he is called as a witness. The plaintiff sued to recover damages as to anything he may say as a witness, having reference to the enquiry on which he is called as a witness. The plaintiff alleged in the plaint to have been made by the defendant while being examined as a witness during the hearing of a case before a Magistrate. It was found that the statement was made in answer to questions put to the defendant as a witness and allowed by the Court as relevant to the case. The plaintiff alleged that the statement was made maliciously that the defendant bore him a grudge, and that it was to give vent to that grudge and to injure his reputation that the statement was made. Held, that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, and that the suit had been properly dismissed. Bhikumbar Singh v. Becharam Sircar. Bhikumbar Singh v. Goti Kristo Das, 15 C. 264...
Right of Suit.—(Concluded).

(3) Subscription, Suit for—Liability of subscribers to a proposed Town Hall.—A suit will lie to recover a subscription promised, the subscriber knowing that, on the faith of his and other subscriptions, an obligation is to be incurred to a contractor for the purpose of erecting a building to be paid for out of the moneys subscribed. Kedar Nath Bhattacharji v. Gorie Mahomed, 14 C. 64.

(4) Suit to set aside sale—Fraud—Sale under Act X of 1859—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 244—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 11.—B obtained an ex parte decree for arrears of rent against S under Act X of 1859, and in execution of that decree brought the tenure to sale. At the sale the tenure was purchased by N. S then brought a suit against B and N to set aside the sale on the ground that the rent decree and all execution proceedings taken thereunder were fraudulent, and alleging that B was the actual purchaser in the name of N. An objection was taken that the suit would not lie, and that the questions in the suit were such as could have been determined, and were determined by the Court executing the decree. Held, that neither s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code, nor the corresponding s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, has any application to proceedings in execution of a decree under Act X of 1859, and that the suit, being one to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, was maintainable. Sale.

(1) By Registrar—Title to property purchased at Registrar’s sale—Doubtful title, Enforcement of—Endowment—Rent charge.—The Court will not enforce a doubtful title on a purchaser where (a) there is a reasonable probability of litigation resulting; or (b) where the title depends on the construction and legal operation of some ill-expressed and inartificial instrument, and the Court holds the conclusion it arrives at to be open to reasonable doubt in some other Court. Case in which the title sought to be enforced did not fall within these rules. Kally Doss Seal v. Nobin Cuhnder Das, 14 C. 518.

(2) Certificate—See Mortgage—Sale, 15 C. 546.

(4) For arrears of rent—Construction of Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, para. 2.—Publication of copy or extract of such part of the notice of sale as may apply to the tenure of the defaulter.—Publication of the notice of sale of a tenure under Regulation VIII of 1819 is required to be in the manner prescribed in s. 8, clause 2; and personal service on the defaulter is not sufficient. The objects of directing local publication of the notice, viz., to warn the under-lessees of the sale proceedings and also to advertise the sale to those who might bid, would be frustrated if it were sufficient to publish the notice at a distant katcheri or to serve it personally. If there is a katcheri on the land of the defaulting putnidar, meaning the land which is to be sold for arrears of rent, the copy or extract of such part of the notice of sale as may apply to the tenure in question must be published at that katcheri, and if there is no such katcheri, on the land held by the defaulter, the copy or extract must be published at the principal town, or village on the land. In the description of this in clause, 2, as “the notice required to be sent into the mofussil,” the word “mofussil,” is opposed to the sadar kachteri of the zemindar, and refers to the subordinate estate, which is the subject of the sale proceedings. Where a zemindar, selling the tenure of a defaulting putnidar under the Regulation, had caused to be stuck up the requisite petition and notice at the Collector's kachteri, and the notice at the zemindar's kachteri, but not the copy or extract which is directed by the Regulation to be similarly published at the kachteri nor had published it at any other place upon the land of the defaulter: held, that the zemindar had not observed a substantial part of the prescribed process and that this was for the defaulting putnidar "a sufficient plea" within the meaning of the Regulation. The Maharani of BURDWAN v. KRISHNA KAMINI DASI, 14 C. 365 (P.C.) = 14 I. A. 36 = 11 Ind. Jur. 275 = 4 Sar. P. C. J. 772 —

(5) For arrears of rent—Regulation VIII of 1819, ss. 3, 5, 6, 14—Sale of putni tenure—Registered putnidars—Suit by unregistered putnidars. —An unregistered proprietor of a putni tenure is entitled to sue to set aside a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819. JOYKRISHNA MUKHOPADHIA v. SAKFANNESSA, 15 C. 345 —

(6) For arrears of rent—Under-tenure—Bengal Act (VIII of 1869), ss. 34, 59–61 and 65—Sale of property other than under-tenure.—Where a decree had been obtained for arrears of rent of an under-tenure, and in execution thereof application was made for the attachment and sale of a certain property of the judgment-debtor, other than the tenure for which the arrears were due—objection was taken that the kabuliyat stipulated that the tenure itself should be first sold in execution of the decree: held, that the kabuliyat not being referred to, or incorporated with, the terms of the decree, it was not open to the judgment-debtor to go behind the decree, as to the mode in which it was to be executed. But, held, on the construction of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59–61 and 65, that the under-tenure should first be sold before any other immovable property could be made available. Section 34 of that Act (introducing the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code into rent suits, "save as is in Act VIII of 1869 otherwise provided," made no alteration in this respect, ss. 59–61 and 65 especially providing for such mode of execution. LALIT MOHUN ROY v. BINODI DABER, 14 C. 14 —

(7) For arrears of revenue—Act XI of 1859, s. 36—Certified purchaser, Suit against—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 317.—A, the certified purchaser of a taluk at a sale held under the provisions of Act XI of 1859 for arrears of revenue, and who had obtained symbolical possession had at the time of the sale agreed with B, the former owner of the taluk, to reconvey to him (B) after the sale had been completed. In a suit by B to compel specific performance of the contract, alleging that he had never quitted actual possession of the taluk, objection was taken that the suit was not maintainable under s. 36 of Act XI of 1859 and s. 317 of Act XIV of 1882. Held that the suit, not being one to oust the certified purchaser from possession, was not barred by s. 36; and that neither was it barred by s. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code, that section applying only to sales in execution of decrees of Civil Courts held under the Procedure Code. FAZAL RAHMAN v. IMAM ALI, 14 C. 583 —

(8) For arrears of revenue act XI of 1865, ss. 37, 52—Sunderbund estate—District of which portion only is permanently settled—District, meaning of—Beng. REGS. IX of 1816 and III of 1828—Estate—Bengal Act VII of 1868.—The plaintiff was the auction-purchaser at a sale under Act XI of 1859 by the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs for arrears of revenue of an estate in the Sunderbunds on which the defendant was the holder of a mokwari mawris jungleburi tenure, under which he was to clear away the jungle and then to cultivate the land with paddy. The estate was one borne on the register of revenue-paying estates in the Collectorate of the 24-Pergunnahs, and therefore within that Collectorate with regard to the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1868, s. 10. The district of the 24-Pergunnahs is a permanently settled district, but the portion of it forming the Sunderbunds was declared by Reg. III of 1828, s. 13, not to be included in the permanent settlement. The Sunderbunds tract was moreover under Reg. IX of 1816 formed into a separate jurisdiction for settlement purposes under an officer styled the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds, who is subject to the direct control of the Board of Revenue, and independent of the Collector of the 24-Pergunnahs. In a suit after notice to quit to eject the defendant, and obtain possession of the land, or to have the defendant's tenure annulled: Held that, whether the term "district," was used with reference to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts or the Revenue Collector, the plaintiff was the purchaser of an estate in a "permanently-settled district" within the meaning of s. 37 of Act XI of 1859, and not in a district "not permanently settled" within s. 52 of that Act; and he was therefore entitled to eject the defendant. The position of the estate within the district of the 24-Pergunnahs was not affected by the appointment of the Commissioner of the Sunderbunds as an officer specially invested with the powers of the Collector within a certain portion of that district. Held, also, that the defendants' tenure was not protected as being one of "lands whereon plantations have been made" within the meaning of s. 52 of Act XI of 1859. Held, further, that, though there was no permanent settlement of the lands sold to the plaintiff, they fell within the definition of an "estate" as given in Beng. Act VII of 1868. Bholanath Bandyopadhyya v. Umachurn Bandyopadhyya and Umachurn Bandyopadhyya v. Bhola Nath Bandyopadhyya, 14 C. 440

(9) For arrears of revenue—Ejectment, Right of—Benami lease obtained by defaulting proprietor from purchaser at revenue sale, Effect of, on under-tenures—Act XI of 1859, ss. 37, 53.—A mehal belonging to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was brought to sale for arrears of Government revenue and purchased by defendant No. 6, from whom the plaintiff obtained a talukdari pottah of a portion of the land comprised in the mehal. The plaintiff thereupon sued to eject defendant No. 4, who was in possession of the land under a lease which was found to have been granted previous to the revenue sale. In the suit it was found that the plaintiff obtained the talukdari pottah as mere benamidar for defendant No. 1. Held, that the provisions of s. 53 of Act XI of 1859 applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to interfere with the tenancy of defendant No. 4 or eject him, and that the suit had been rightly dismissed. Rash Behari Ghose v. Purna Chunder Mozumdar, 15 C. 350

(10) For arrears of revenue—Liability to encumbrances—Act XI of 1859, ss. 13 and 54—Mokurari lease—Inquiry as to title of alleged owners of share sold—Benami transfers—Surrender of dur-mokurari interest, how proved—Limitation. (Act XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 144.—After the sale of a share in an estate under the provisions of Act XI of 1859 a suit was brought to establish a mokurari lease, as an encumbrance under s. 54, upon the share in the hands of the purchaser. This share having been held by several successive benami holders, the main question was whether those who had granted the mokurari were entitled to all or to any, and what part, of the land comprised in their grant; and as to this point the most important fact was the actual possession or receipt of the rents; this being also material in regard to limitation under Act XV of 1877, Sch. II, art 144, the twelve years' bar commencing from the date of possession first held adversely. The mokuraridar having granted a dur-mokurari lease of part of his holding, which was afterwards surrendered for good consideration, ikrar-namas to this effect were executed, but not being registered were not receivable in evidence. Held, that to prove a formal deed of reconveyance was not necessary—the receipt of the money and the relinquishment of possession sufficiently showing what had become of the dur-mokurari interest. The mokurari lease having been established as to so much only of the lands as were covered by the title proved, the decree below, although no question of apportionment had been raised, was conditional, that the whole rent reserved should be paid: Held that this condition should have been omitted, the amount of rent being determinable by a future proceeding if necessary. [Imambandi Begum v. Kamieswari Pershad, 14 C. 109 (P.C.)=13 I.A. 160=10 Ind. Jur. 468=4 Sar. P.C.J. 732 — 72

(11) For arrears of Road Cess—See Act VII of 1880 (Public Demands Recovery), 14 C. 1.

(12) In execution of decree—Judgment-debtor's share in joint ancestral estate—Mitakshara Law—Execution of decree by sale of such share—Rights of co-sharers not being parties to the decree or execution proceedings—Sale certificate.—The question was whether the whole estate belonging to a joint family, living under the Mitakshara, including the shares of sons or the share of their father alone, passed to the purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree against the father alone upon a mortgage by him of his right. Held that, as the mortgage and decree, as well as the sale certificate, expressed only the father's right the prima facie conclusion was that the purchaser took only the father's share, a conclusion which other circumstances—the omission on the part of the creditor to make the sons parties and the price paid—not only, did not counteract but supported. The enquiry in recent cases regarding the liability of the estate of co-sharers in respect of transfers made by, or execution against, the head of the family has been this, viz., what if there was a conveyance, the parties contracted about, or what, if there was only a sale in execution, the purchaser had reason to think he was buying. Each case must depend on its own circumstances. Simbunath Pande v. Golap Singh, 14 C. 572 (P.C.)=14 I.A. 77=11 Ind. Jur. 311=5 Sar. P.C.J. 5 — 379

(13) In execution of Decree—Suit to set aside sale—Fraud—Auction-purchaser acting bona fide—Fraudulent execution of decree after adjustment—Execution of decree adjusted, but of which satisfaction has not been entered, Effect of, on rights of innocent purchaser—Adjustment of decree without certifying.—In 1881 R obtained a decree against M for possession of certain property with costs. Subsequently a compromise of the questions at issue in the suit was come to between R and M, one of the terms of which was that R gave up his claim to costs. Satisfaction of the decree was not entered up in Court. In 1884 K, purporting to be acting on behalf of R, but without his knowledge or sanction, applied for execution of the decree for costs, and in the execution proceedings which followed a share of M in a tank was sold and purchased by A. M thereupon brought a suit against A, R, K and others to set aside the sale, alleging that the whole of the execution proceedings, had been taken without notice to him, and had been fraudulently taken by the defendants in collusion with one another in order to deprive him of his share in the tank. It was found that A's purchase was an innocent one, and untainted with fraud. Held, upon the authority of 13 I.A. 106, 14 C. 18, that the sale could not be set aside. Such a sale could only be set aside if it were shown that the Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree; but as the decree remained an unsatisfied decree so far as the Court was concerned, and capable of being executed, the compromise not having been certified, to the Court, the Court had jurisdiction to execute it. Held, further, that the execution proceedings could not be held to be void, as although instituted by a person who had no authority to institute them, they were instituted

(14) Of goods by description—Purchaser's right to reject—Whether goods according to contract or not, how relevant—Delivery of part of the goods—Contract Act, s. 78—Suit for prices of goods rejected.—B.K. agreed to buy from M.R. five bales of chrome orange twist, "or any part thereof that may be in a merchantable condition ex 'City of Cambridge' "or other vessel or vessels," with specific marks and numbers, each bale containing 500 lbs. at so much per lb., to be paid for on or before delivery. B.K. took delivery of and paid for only one bale, but rejected the others. M.R. brought a suit for the price of the four bales rejected. Held, that the property in the goods did not pass to the defendant by the terms of the contract, nor was the delivery that was taken by him of the one bale a delivery of "part of the goods" within the meaning of ss. 78 and 92 of the Contract Act; the suit therefore, did not lie. Held also that the question whether the defendant was entitled to refuse the goods, in other words whether the goods were according to the contract or not, was one that was unnecessary for the purposes of the present suit; but it would have been otherwise if the suit were one for damages on the ground of the defendant's refusal to accept the goods. A purchaser's right to reject goods by reason of their not answering the description in the contract may be independent of the question whether the property in the goods has passed to him or not. Small Cause Court, Mofussil.

(1) Jurisdiction or arrears of rent of homestead or bustoo land, suit for—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887), sch. II, cl. 7 and 8.—A Mofussil Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for arrears of homestead of bustoo land under the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act (Act IX of 1887). Uma Churn Mandal v. Bijari Bewah, 15 C. 174

(2) Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 59, 70—Small Cause Court Act (XI of 1805), s. 6—Putni rent—Implied Contract.—The plaintiff, a purchaser in execution of a putni right, brought a suit in a Munsif's Court to recover from the defendant, a former holder of the putni right, a sum of money which she had been compelled to pay to the zamindar for rent which had accrued due prior to the date of her purchase. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree, which, however, on appeal to the District Judge, was reversed. On appeal to the High Court held that assuming the suit to lie independent or any express promise, it was one cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and no appeal would therefore lie. Cases falling within the provisions of ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act are cognizable by a Court of Small Causes under s. 6 of Act XI of 1805. Krishna Kamini Chowdhurani v. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (Act IX of 1887), and is therefore not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. Amritomoy Dasla v. Bhogikath Chandra alias Jogessar Shaddoo, 15 C. 164

(4) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sch. II, arts. 2, 44, 42 and 44—Suit for costs paid by one of two persons jointly liable.—N. C. granted a lease of three plots of land to B. S. The heirs of the former lessee brought a suit against N. C. and B. S. to recover possession of the same three plots of land. The suit was decreed with costs; and the costs amounting to Rs. 80 and annas 5. were recovered from B. S. alone. Thereupon B. S. brought this suit against N. C. in the Court of Small Causes at Parna for the recovery of that amount. Held, that the suit was one which did not come under arts. 2, 41, 42.

-S. 24, 25—Suit to set aside order of Settlement Officer—Non-publication of record of rights.—Onus of proof.—In a suit instituted in January 1887 by a plaintiff to set aside a settlement made under Regulation III of 1872, and to recover khas possession of a mouzah, alleging that the defendant held the lands as chakran, and that the services for which he held them had ceased, the defendant pleaded that the tenure was Dur mokurari, that the lands had been settled as such in June 1877, and that the suit was consequently barred by the special limitation provided by s. 25 of the Regulation. The plaintiff sought to set aside the settlement on the ground of the non-publication of the record of rights and fraud of the defendant, and both the lower Courts found that the record of rights had not been published by its being posted conspicuously in the village as required by s. 24. On second appeal it was contended on behalf of the defendant that such publication was not essential, but that it was open to the Settlement Officer to publish the record in such manner as might be convenient. Held, that posting the record conspicuously in the village is an essential part of the publication, and that the suit was not barred by limitation. It was further contended that the onus of proving the tenure to be dur mokurari, which had been thrown on the defendant, had been wrongly so thrown on him, as the suit was substantially one to set aside a decree. Held, that the onus of proving the validity and propriety of the settlement proceedings upon which he relied had been properly thrown on the defendant. *Nabak Chand Singh v. (1) Evidence of—Resumption Chittas.—Government resumption chittas, in the absence of the resumption proceedings, are not conclusive evidence of title as against third persons. Dwarka Nath Misser v. Tarita Moti Daria, 14 C. 120.

(2) Presumption arising from possession—Issue as to identity of land re-formed on a site formerly submerged.—In a suit for the possession of a chur, formerly carried away and afterwards re-formed upon its former site, the issue was whether the land belonged to the plaintiffs or to the defendants. The issue was found in favour of the plaintiffs by the first Court; and the appellate Court, finding that the plaintiffs had been in possession for more than 12 years, concluded that, at all events, they had a title by adverse possession. On an appeal the High Court considered that the latter decision was not upon the issue, raised, the plaintiffs' claim being founded on an original title to the site of the chur—a title denied by the defendants; and remanded the suit for judgment on this issue, whereupon the Appellate Court maintained the judgment of the first Court in favour of the plaintiffs, finding on the evidence that the land belonged to the plaintiffs. Upon a second appeal the High Court reversed the decree of the Appellate Court, and dismissed the suit, on the ground that there was an entire absence of evidence as to which party was entitled at the date to which the dispute related. Held, that this was erroneous.

In a suit brought by the auction-purchaser decree-holder, for the area of the land reserved by measurement and division, Held, that the claim of the judgment-debtor to the land was a transferable claim, and therefore capable of being attached and sold in execution under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code. A lent B Rs. 99, and B executed a document on the 24th July 1881, whereby he agreed to repay the amount with interest in the month of Baisakh 1289 F. S. Voluntary Payment.

Money paid, but not due and paid under compulsion—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 15, 72.—In execution of a decree, the plaintiff purchased certain property. Subsequently the defendant, in execution of another decree against the former owner of the property, proceeded to execute his decree, against the same property. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim, which was disallowed as he had not then obtained, and consequently could not produce the sale certificate. In order to prevent the sale, he then paid the amount of the defendant’s decree into Court and subsequently instituted a suit against the defendant to recover the amount so paid into Court to prevent the sale. The defendant contended that the amount was paid voluntarily and could not be recovered back. Held, that it was not a voluntary payment, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

(1) Construction of—Gift over on failure of prior devise.—A testator made the following disposition by his will: "I appoint my brother N sole executor of my estate and effects after my decease, who shall pay all my debts and collect all outstandings. My wife is supposed to be in the family way; should she bring forth a male, in that case he will be the sole heir of my property and effects on his attaining proper age. If, on the other hand, she is delivered of a female child, all the expenses of her marriage or maintenance till that period should be defrayed from my estate. I also wish that she should receive a legacy of a Government 4 per cent. promissory note for Rs. 2,000 on her attaining proper age. In case my son dies before attaining proper age all my estates and property should be taken possession of by my brother. My wife is to receive a Government 4 per cent. promissory note for Rs. 1,000 as a legacy, and is to be maintained from my estate if she continues to live in our family dwelling house, under my brother's protection. The child with which the widow was enciente turned out to be a daughter: Held, that the clause in italics was one purporting to give the property, and not only the management of it to N, the power of management having already been given him in appointing him executor; that the provisions for maintenance of the widow, and for the marriage expenses of the daughter, tended to show (putting aside the legacies) that the widow and daughter were not to take the larger estate which they would have successively taken as heiresses; and that the wife of the testator, not having borne to him a son, and the apparent intention of the testator having been to give the estate to N, if the son did not take, or if the estate to the son failed by reason of his not attaining proper age, the gift over to N, on the principle laid down in Jones v. Westcomb, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 245, took effect on failure of the gift to the son, even though such failure was not in the precise manner expressed in the terms of the gift. Okhoymoney Dasee v. Nilmoney Mullick, 15 C. 282.

(2) Construction of—Oudh Estates Act (I of 1809), ss. 8, 13 and 22—Unregistered will of talukdar—Meaning of "Maharani Sahiba" as applied to wife or wives—Decree for maintenance to widow under the will on which her suit was based though her claim was for a different relief—Costs.—A talukdar, who died childless, but leaving two widows, bequeathed, by an unregistered will to the "Maharani Sahiba" his entire estate, and gave a power to the same to adopt a son to him; also providing maintenance for both his widows after such adoption. Held, that, to determine whether the will referred, in such bequest and power only to the elder or to both of the testator's wives, extrinsic evidence of his intention was not admissible; but that the true construction was that which would indicate a reasonable and probable intention consistent with his views, as evidenced by his conduct and his will generally. As his views appeared to favour single heirships, and the whole state of things, as well as the language of the will, pointed to the owner of the estate being one: and the donee of the power to adopt being one: Held, that accordingly the words "Maharani Sahiba" were not here used as a collective term for both widows, but signified only the elder, although, when qualified, as they were in another part of the will, they might include both. Held, also, that as, if there had been no will, the junior widow would have succeeded to an estate expectant on the determination of the life-estate of the senior but subject to be defeated by an adoption by the latter, this was an interest bringing her within the meaning of s. 13, para. 1 of Act I of 1809; so that maintenance bequeathed to her by the will was payable, notwithstanding its not having been registered (as that section required in other cases) as well out of the talukdari as out of the non-talukdari estate of the testator. Held, also, that this had been rightly decreed to her, as she had sued upon the will, although her direct claim in her plaint was not for this, but to share the estate equally with the senior widow, a claim which was dismissed: Held, also, that the difficulty of construction having been caused by the testator himself, and in regard to the circumstances and position of the parties, costs should come out of the estate. (3) Legacy to person appointed executor—Rebuttal of presumption— Parol evidence—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 128—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2.—The language of s. 128 of the Succession Act is peremptory and leaves no room for a presumption, and it is not left to the Court to decide whether the legacy is given to the person in his character as executor or not. The rule as to the admissibility of parol evidence to rebut the presumption, which may possibly upon the decisions obtain in England, has no force in this country where such evidence is inadmissible.
