We are not, therefore, prepared to hold that this was a matter heard and determined within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and we think we are supported in this view [64] by the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of the Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (1) with reference to a somewhat similar order.

With reference to the plea of res judicata, there is one other observation that we wish to make, which is this, that the learned Vakil for the appellant, while arguing the case, gave to his first ground in the memorandum of appeal this somewhat strained meaning, namely, that it was urged with reference to the order in the execution case; yet reading his memorandum of appeal, especially the first, second and fourth grounds

(1) 3 C. 47 = 4 I. A. T77.
together, it does seem that the objection was originally evidently meant to be taken with reference to the decision in the previous suit, and not with reference to the order passed on the execution-proceedings. But be that as it may, as we have shown above, that order cannot, in our opinion, have the effect of res judicata.

We come now to the second contention noticed above, namely, that the present suit is barred under the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As this ground is not taken in the memorandum of appeal, we do not feel disposed to allow it to be successfully taken. To allow it to be taken would be far from furthering the ends of justice. It has been found concurrently by both the Courts below in this case that the plaintiff has a good case on the merits; and though the plaintiff was unsuccessful in the execution-proceedings, his objection was thrown out without any adjudication upon it.

Then as to the validity of this contention, it is, we think, more than doubtful. It is true it has been held in several cases, and must now be taken to be settled law, that a person who is made a party to suit in his representative capacity is a party to the suit within the meaning of s. 244 for several purposes, but it has never yet been held, as far as we are aware, that he is in every capacity a party to the suit for all purposes. The cases referred to are all without exception cases where the judgment-debtor in his representative capacity sought to question his liability to satisfy a decree for money or for costs out of property which he claimed as his own as distinguished from [65] that of the person whose representative he was. The questions thus raised are questions which are to be decided with reference to the provisions of ss. 234 and 252 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and these provisions of law throw upon the Court executing the decree the duty of coming to a decision as to whether the liability questioned does or does not really attach. The question now raised is of a very different kind, that question being whether the share that the plaintiff now claims was sold in execution of the decree in the previous suit, irrespective of any question as to whether the purchase was for the plaintiff or for the defendant. Is Iswar Chandra Audhikari had not died during the pendency of that suit, and if the decree in that suit had been passed in the presence of Iswar Chandra Audhikari there can be no question that it would have been open to the present plaintiff to raise the point that he now raises in this regular suit; and we see no reason for thinking that the mere fact of the present plaintiff having been made a party defendant in that suit as the legal representative of his brother Iswar Chandra Audhikari, had the effect of enlarging the scope of that suit so as to make the present question come under the description of questions arising between the parties to that suit and relating to the execution of the decree. Indeed s. 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not have admitted of the scope of that suit being so enlarged; for that section provides that the person so made defendant may make any defence appropriate to his character as legal representative, and it would certainly never have been appropriate to the character of the present plaintiff as the legal representative of his deceased brother, Iswar Chandra Audhikari, to raise the question in that suit that he now seeks to raise.

We think that this case comes well within the scope of the observations made by this Court in the case of Kanai Lal Khan v. Shashi Bhosun Biswa (1), and, following that case, we think the present suit is not barred under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, even if the objection raised by the learned Vakil for the appellant had been allowed to be taken.

In the result we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal—Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 15—Appeal from decision of a Judge exercising Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty Jurisdiction—Practice—Vice-Admiralty Regulations of 1832. Rule 35—Application of—Mentioning of the apportionment of award for salvage services—Peremption of appeal.

Under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, an appeal lies to the High Court from the decision of one of its Judges exercising Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty Jurisdiction.

Such appeals are governed by the practice under the Civil Procedure Code and not by Rules 35 of the Vice-Admiralty Regulations published under the authority of 2 Will. IV., c. 51.

Rule 35 applies to appeals from the High Court to the Privy Council.

The Brehilda (2) relied on.

The mere facts of salvors having appeared and mentioned in Court the matter of the apportionment of an award for salvage services reserved by the decree making the award, did not perempt an appeal from that decree.

[R., 17 C. 337 (340).] Application for the admission of an appeal.

In an action of salvage brought by the owners, master, and crew of the steam tug Rescue against the British sailing ship Champion, her cargo, and freight, Norris, J., by an interlocutory decree, awarded the promotores the sum of £1,500 sterling for salvage services rendered by the Rescue to the Champion and Rs. 887 and 2 annas for damage sustained by the Rescue in rendering such services, together with the costs of the action, and reserved the consideration of the apportionment of the £1,500 sterling among the promotores. The decree was pronounced in Court on the 22nd February 1889, but was not signed until the 4th April 1889.

On the 25th February Messrs. Watkins & Co., the attorneys for the promotores, served upon the Marshal of the Vice-Admiralty Court and the Registrar of the High Court, Original Jurisdiction, and Messrs. Morgan & Co., attorneys for the impugnants, the following notice:

"Take notice that we are instructed by the promotores to appeal, and shall appeal in due time in this case against the [67] decision and decree pronounced in this cause on the 22nd February 1889, and we further beg to give you notice not in any way to release the bail found and provided by the impugnants, which bail, consisting of Company's Paper for Rs. 1,25,000, now remains deposited in Court. Dated the 25th day of February 1889."

(2) 7 C. 547=8 I.A. 159.
On the 6th March 1889, a memorandum of appeal on behalf of the promo vents was presented to the Registrar, who returned it on the ground that it had been presented without a copy of the decree in the action. On the 11th March 1889, the matter of the apportionment of the £1,500 sterling, reserved by the decree of the 22nd February, was mentioned in Court by Counsel on behalf of the promo vents; and on 19th March, Norris, J., pronounced the apportionment.

On the 29th March, the promo vents gave the impugnants notice that they would renew their application of the 25th March 1889 before Mr. Justice Norris "for an order that the said learned Judge do proceed to make a formal decree in the above action, and that the said learned Judge do have such decree recorded in the Assignation Book under and in the manner provided for by the 38th clause of the Vice-Admiralty Rules, subject always to the procedure provided for by and under Rules made by this Honorable Court and applicable to this matter;" and also that they would repeat the assertion of their appeal made on the 25th March; and further that should the Court be of opinion that the said motion and assertion could not be made as of right, then that they would ask for an order in effect that the presentation of their memorandum of appeal, tendered to and endorsed by the Registrar on the 6th March, should be taken and held as an assertion of appeal by them; or, in the alternative that the time for the assertion of such appeal should be extended. The application was supported by the following affidavit, dated 25th March:

I, Nowel Shaw Watkins, an Attorney-at-law and a member of the firm of Watkins and Company, make oath and say as follows:

(1) That the said firm have acted for the promo vents in this matter since and prior to the institution of the proceedings herein.

(2) That the hearing of this matter came on before his Lordship Mr. Justice Norris on the 20th of February 1889, and came to a termination on the 22nd February 1889, on which day the said learned Judge said that on the evidence adduced he was of opinion that the said promo vents were entitled to receive from the impugnants herein the sum of £1,500; but that his Lordship reserved the matter of the apportionment of the said sum amongst the said promo vents and requested the said promo vents' counsel to submit a scheme for such apportionment.

(3) That on the 25th day of February 1889 the said promo vents through the said firm instructed counsel to prepare a memorandum of appeal in anticipation of a decree being pronounced and made in this matter on the basis appearing in the earlier portion of the last preceding paragraph, and on the same day a draft memorandum of appeal was drawn up and settled by counsel and handed over to the said firm.

(4) That on the 27th of February 1889 the said firm delivered to counsel for settlement a draft decree on the said basis which the said firm had on that or the previous day received from the Registrar of this Honourable Court; and such draft decree was, as I am informed and believe, on the following day returned as settled by counsel to the said firm and was then handed over, as I am informed and believe, to the said Registrar, who settled it on 1st March 1889.

(5) That the said decree after being duly engrossed was submitted by the said Registrar to the said learned Judge, as I am informed and believe, on the 5th day of March 1889 for signature.

(6) That His Lordship intimated, as I am informed and believe, that he would not sign the said decree until he had made the said apportionment.
(7) That on the 6th of March 1889 the said memorandum of appeal was presented to the said Registrar, who returned it on the ground that it had been presented without a copy of the decree herein, with a note thereon to that effect in his own handwriting.

(8) That on the 6th of March 1889 the said firm instructed Counsel to mention the matter of the said apportionment to the [69] said learned Judge, and this matter having, thereafter, on the 11th of March 1889, been mentioned to the said learned Judge, his Lordship, on the 19th of March 1889, pronounced the said apportionment.

(9) That on the 22nd day of March 1889 the said promovents took the advice of Counsel as to whether any of the grounds mentioned in the said memorandum of appeal required amendment in consequence of the said apportionment, and that on the following day they were advised in the negative.

(10) That a draft decree has been prepared in the office of the said Registrar, ... to which the said impugnants object on the ground that there ought to be two decrees in this matter, one in respect of the amount to be paid on account of salvage by the said impugnants to the said promovents, and another in respect of the apportionment of the said amount.

(11) That no decree herein has yet been moved by Counsel under the 38th Rule governing the procedure of this Honourable Court in its Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction; that I am informed and believe that at no stage of the proceedings herein has the said Registrar been present; and that at no stage of the proceedings in this matter as I am informed and believe has the said learned Judge permitted any actuary or practitioner of this Honourable Court to do any act for the Registrar by reason of his unavoidable absence or for any other cause.

(12) That I am advised and believe that under the circumstances aforesaid no decree has yet been pronounced or made in this matter.

(13) That I have this day instructed Counsel to move the said learned Judge for an interlocutory decree in this suit and to pray that on such decree being pronounced and made the same be recorded and attested in the Assignation Book of this Honourable Court by the said Registrar.

This application was refused on the 4th April 1889 by Norris, J., who held that the rules of the Vice-Admiralty Regulations, published under 2 Will. IV, c 51, governed the admission of appeals here, assuming an appeal did lie under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865. He also held that his pronouncing [70] judgment in Court on the 22nd February was an interlocutory decree, and that the presence of the Registrar in the building of the High Court was a sufficient presence to comply with the Vice-Admiralty rules; and that the presence of the Court Official taking minutes was also a sufficient attendance of the Registrar. He also held that separate decrees must be drawn up; one in respect of salvage, and another in respect of the apportionment. On the 6th April 1889, Mr. Watkins presented the promovents' memorandum of appeal, with a copy of the decree annexed to the Registrar, who refused to receive it, but retained it as being filed on the record. The promovents thereupon gave the impugnants notice of motion before a Division Bench of the High Court for an order directing the Registrar to register the promovents' appeal and to take the ordinary steps to bring the same to a hearing.
They also gave notice to the impugnants not to release the bail deposited by them until this matter was disposed of.

In this application, which was heard by Pigot and Trevelyan, JJ., on the 10th April 1889, the questions raised and argued were:—

(1) Did an appeal lie under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction from the decision of a single Judge exercising Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, or was the appeal direct to the Privy Council from such decision?

(2) If an appeal did lie under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, was the procedure in respect of such appeal governed by the Civil Procedure Code or the Vice-Admiralty regulation published under the authority of 2 Will. IV, c. 51, and especially by rule 35 of such regulations? and

(3) Was the appeal perempted by the acts of the promovents?

The impugnants appeared on the motion under protest.

Mr. Evans and Mr. Gasper, for the promovents.

Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Roberts, for the impugnants.

Mr. Evans.—I move for an order directing the Registrar to register an appeal which has been presented to him, and to take the ordinary steps to bring the same to a hearing.

[71] By s. 540, Civil Procedure Code, appeals lie from all original decrees, except when expressly prohibited. Section 541 states the form in which an appeal must be presented; and under s. 548, when an appeal has been admitted, it must be registered. In the Mofussil, presentation of appeal has to be made to the Court; but here it is made to the Registrar. This rule applies to all appeals. The Court has power to delegate its functions to the Registrar all ministerial functions; and the practice here is to present appeals to the Registrar who is the proper officer for registering appeals. If the Registrar finds any difficulty with regard to them, he either takes the opinion of the Court, or refuses to register; and in the latter case, there is a right to move the Court.

[Pigot, J.—Which rule do you refer to?]

Mr. Evans.—It is the practice, and, I believe, it is in accordance with the rules.

[Pigot, J.—(after consulting the Registrar who was present in Court)—I understand that is the practice; but, if not, you can apply to us now to register the appeal.]

Mr. Evans.—The real point here is, whether the appeal should be registered under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, having regard to the fact that the appeal is from an order of a Judge exercising Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction. The rules with regard to appeals are the rules of the High Court under the Civil Procedure Code; and the High Court has power to make rules for its own procedure not inconsistent therewith.—See s. 652. Apart from rules so made, the Civil Procedure Code, Chap. 48, s. 631 et seq., deals with the power of the High Court: s. 638 excepts certain sections from applying to the High Court. Before the Act of 1877, Act VII of 1859 constituted the rules. Section 37, Letters Patent, 1865, gives power to make rules in Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty matters. Rules 61, 62 and 63 (Belchambers’ Rules and Orders, p. 81) must be read with Rule 50. Does Rule 63 mean that every step in an action in rem must be in accordance with the Vice-Admiralty Rules, or does it mean that only such portions shall be under those rules as are not provided for by the rules under the Civil Procedure Code?
[72] The Vice-Admiralty rules are, many of them, obsolete, and have never been followed here in practice. Then there is another question as to rule 35 of the Vice-Admiralty rules, namely, whether that rule applies in cases of appeals from one Judge of this Court to a Division Bench, or whether it applies only to appeals to a Superior Court. If it be held that rule 35 does not apply, then I am in order. If rule 35 applies, then the rules contained in the Vice-Admiralty regulations, as to the examinations of witnesses, presence of the Registrar, etc., have not been complied with. These rules are really obsolete.

Mr. Woodroffe (interposing).—We are appearing in this matter under protest, having had notice of the application. I understand your Lordships are not sitting here to take any appeal from Mr. Justice Norris' order or decree. This matter Mr. Evans is moving has been moved and argued before Mr. Justice Norris and decided by him. Mr. Justice Norris decided that the rules of Vice-Admiralty Court, published under 2 Will. IV, c. 51, governed admissions of appeals here, assuming an appeal did lie under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent Act.

[Pigot, J.—We are sitting here to hear motions, or, if an appeal is filed and is ripe for hearing, to hear such appeal.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—I submit a Division Bench, not sitting on appeal, has no power to deal with the order or decree of another Judge.

[Pigot, J.—We think it will be better not to deal with this point now.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—I desire to state it so that it might not be supposed there was any waiver.

[Pigot, J.—At present one incident of our sitting here as an Appeal Court is that we may entertain any application to admit an appeal.]

Mr. Evans.—I will show this is a fresh application based on a former application. When we moved before Mr. Justice Norris we could not get him to admit the appeal, because the decree had not then been signed. It was signed on 4th April. [Mr. Evans then referred to the affidavit of Mr. Watkins, dated the 9th April.] This matter has not been adjudicated upon by Mr. Justice Norris. The Court cannot hold that Vice-Admiralty suits are to be governed by the old rules. These rules were made under 2 Will. IV., c. 51.

[Pigot, J.—Additional rules were made on 6th July 1859 for the purpose of regulating the practice in the Vice-Admiralty Court.]

Mr. Evans.—Those rules do not touch this particular matter.

[Trevelyan, J.—I have been in several cases here, and the procedure was under the Civil Procedure Code, except in one undefended case.]

Mr. Evans.—Under the rules of the 6th July no witness can be called without forty-eight hours' notice given to the other side. Those rules refer almost entirely to the examination of witnesses.

[Trevelyan, J.—Have you enquired what has been the procedure on appeal from a Judge sitting in Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction in this Court?]

Mr. Evans.—In The Moorhill v. The Natmoo (1) and in other cases (2) the procedure in the Civil Procedure Code was followed—See Forms 108 and 109, Vice-Admiralty Rules and Regulations, Appendix, p. 81.

(1) Appeal No. 36 of 1875 (unreported).
(2) The Michelino v. The Dacca (Appeal No. 50 of 1875, unreported).
The Brenhilda v. The B. J. S N. Company, Limited (Appeal No. 7 of 1880).—This case went before the Privy Council, and is reported in 7 C. 547 and 8 I.A. 159.
The Mary Stuart v. The Nevada (Appeal No. 24 of 1883, unreported).
Mr. Evans.—Yes, but I do not know how it was filed. The Privy Council held there that the appeal to the Privy Council was governed by the Vice-Admiralty Regulations. Rule 35 refers to appeals to a Superior Court. The chapter in the Civil Procedure Code on Privy Council appeals was introduced into the Act of 1877 from Act VI of 1874; and from the Act of 1877 into the present Act: Act VI of 1874 governed the procedure in appeals to the Privy Council. There is a provision in the Act of 1874 [74] that nothing in it shall affect appeals from Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction. It is embodied in the Civil Procedure Code with slight variations. Section 1 of Act VI of 1874 is the last part of s. 616 of the present Code. Under s. 616 a copy of a decree is not necessary to the filing of an appeal. I submit rule 35 does not apply to appeals to a Division Bench of this Court. No monition or inhibition has ever been issued from one Bench of this Court to another.

[Pigot, J.—Was there an appeal in its Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction in the time of the old Supreme Courts?]

Mr. Evans.—No; an appeal lay only to the High Court of Admiralty in England.

Mr. Evans.—The appeal was by the Admiralty Courts Act, 1863, (2), transferred to the Privy Council.—See Forsyth’s Cases and Opinions, Edition of 1869, p. 377; Roscoe’s Admiralty Practice, Edition of 1878, Chap, 8, p. 90.

[Trevelyan, J.—3 and 4 Will. IV. c. 41, took away appeals from the Admiralty Courts and gave them to the Privy Council.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—It is expressly provided in the Commission (3) that the appeal lies to the Admiralty Court in England.

Mr. Evans.—Yes 3 and 4 Will. IV. c. 41, s. 2, transfers the appeal to the Privy Council.—See the Vice-Admiralty Commission of 1822 (3). 6 and 7 Vict., c. 38, makes further provisions regarding appeals from the Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Courts, enabling the Privy Council to exercise the same powers which those Courts had. Section 2 relates to appeals; ss. 9 and 10 to inhibitions, citations, etc.; s. 11 has an important bearing on the present question as explaining the position of appeals from the Colonies in the days before the application of steam to navigation.

[Pirot, J.—The section gives a period within which to prosecute the appeal. At the time of 6 and 7 Vict., c. 38, rule 35 was in existence.]

Mr. Evans.—The object of rule 35 was that the right to appeal should be asserted within fifteen days; but the appellant had a year for prosecuting the appeal. Assertion of appeal is [75] quite different from memorandum of appeal. The Brenhilda case (4) decided that the reception of the appeal was not a matter of right, as it had not been asserted within fifteen days. Limitation Act, 1877, sch. ii, art. 151, gives twenty days for an appeal to Privy Council.

[Pirot, J.—Act XX of 1862, s. 6, has not been repealed.]

[Trevelyan, J.—That is the Act from which the High Court adopted its rules.]

(1) The Michelino v. The Dacca (Appeal No. 50 of 1875, unreported).
(4) 7 C. 547=8 I.A. 159.
Mr. Evans.—Although the Limitation Act says that appeals from orders or decrees must be made within twenty days, s. 6 of Act XX of 1862 says the High Court may prescribe its own time. The decree in this case was made on 22nd February 1889, and on 9th March, the impugnants asserted their appeal in Court. I raise two main points: First what is the true construction of rule 35? Must everything be carried on under the old Vice-Admiralty Rules, or does it mean that things, not provided for by the ordinary rules of Court, should be governed by the Vice-Admiralty Rules. Second, whether or no rule 35 applies, does that rule apply to appeals to a Division Bench of the High Court under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, or was it not meant for appeals from Vice-Admiralty Court to a Superior Court only; and is it possible to apply it to such appeals? The old Supreme Court had power to appoint proctors, but the High Court has not. The work of proctors is now done in this Court by attorneys. The assertion of appeal is made in the Court, but an attorney cannot assert anything in Court. When I applied under Rule 38 for an interlocutory decree, and pointed out that there were no acts attested in the Assignation Book, the Judge held that inasmuch as the Registrar was present in the High Court building, the Chief Clerk must be taken as doing the duties of the Registrar, who could attest the Assignation Book afterwards. It was also held that the Court Minute Book was good as an Assignation Book.

Mr. Woodroffe.—In the Assignation Book is copied out what takes place in Court. There is no other proper Assignation Book kept than the Minute Book.

[76] [Pigot, J.—The wording of rule 35 is inconsistent with copying into the Assignation Book. The first part of the rule shows that the Registrar should make the entries himself in the Assignation Book.

Mr. Evans.—My objection was that there was no entry by the Registrar in the Assignation book of any act done in Court, or by any person acting for the Registrar.

I contend that no proper decree has been made, and that no Counsel has moved under rule 38.

The last Commission, dated 21st August 1843, to Sir Lawrence Peel (1) is nearly the same has the other. It also reserves the appellate jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court: 26 and 27 Vict., c. 24, does not affect India.—See s. 2 and sch. A. But the Letters Patent of 1862 and 1865 the High Court is empowered to exercise all jurisdictions exercised by any Judge. Section 9 of the Charter of 1861 gives Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction. Letters Patent of 1862, s. 31, and Letters Patent of 1865, ss. 32 and 33, also give Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty jurisdictions. But for the Letters Patent, the appeal would still lie direct to the Privy Council. Under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, the High Court has power in its appellate jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the judgment of the same Court through one of its Judges.

It must be admitted that inhibitions and monitions do not apply. Paragraph 6 of Mr. Watkins' affidavit of 26th March has in a great degree led to the present difficulty. The Judge reserved the question of apportionment.

[1] Pigot, J.—That is no part of the decree.

(1) Belchambers' Rules and Orders, p. 484.

Mr. Evans.—The notice of 25th February, which was served on the Registrar and impugnants' attorneys, is an assertion (of appeal) to each of them, and practically a compliance with rule 35.

[TREVELYAN, J.—In the Brenhilda case (1) the memorandum of appeal with copy of the decree was filed more than a month [77] after decree; and in the other cases I have looked at, only memoranda of appeals were filed. I find no entry of assertion of appeal in the Assignment Book].

Mr. Evans.—Provisions as to what shall be done on the filing of the memorandum of appeal appear in the Civil Procedure Code and in the Rules. In the case of The Mary Stuart (2), Moorhill (3), Dacca (4), and Brenhilda (1) there was no assertion of intention to appeal.—[Mr. Evans then referred to the notice of the 29th March.] If it be held that the Registrar was present as being in the Court building, then I contend that the Judge was present in the building when the memorandum of appeal was presented to the Registrar, and that there is a sufficient assertion of appeal in Court.

[Pigot, J.—There are two modes of asserting, either in writing or verbally. (Mr. Evans referred to his notes of the judgment of Norris, J., on his application). We do not sit to hear appeals from that order. We are sitting to hear an application to receive and admit the memorandum of appeal, and to direct it to be registered. We have noted Mr. Woodroffe's protest, and, if necessary, will hear him thereon.]

Mr. Evans.—Mr. Watkins' affidavit stated that he presented the memorandum of appeal and the Registrar refused to receive it. Norris, J., has reserved the question releasing the bail, but has passed an interim order restraining it till this motion is disposed of.

[Pigot, J.—The question of bail is not before us.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—We appear under protest. This Court has no jurisdiction in the matter; and if it had jurisdiction, the promotoors did not assert their appeal within the time prescribed; and whether there be or be not a rule prescribing the time for asserting an appeal or filing an appeal, or apart from all questions [78] of rules, the appeal is perempted. Tronson v. Dent (5) shows that the objection to the right of appeal must be taken at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Evans.—As to this, it is not before the Court, and we should be entitled to answer it.

Mr. Woodroffe.—If I can show, on materials now before the Court that the appeal is perempted, and, quite apart from our raising this question later on, we raise it now, because if I can show that the appeal is perempted, your Lordships will not admit a memorandum of appeal. Mr. Evans has assumed an appeal lies from the High Court, exercising Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, to a Division Bench of the Court. That is not so. This question has never before been raised. I contend that whenever the High Court, either in the person of one or more of its Judges, exercises Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, the appeal lies direct to Her Majesty in Council, and that there is no appeal to this Court.

(1) 7 C. 547 = 8 I.A. 159.
(2) Appeal No. 24 of 1883 (unreported).
(3) Appeal No. 36 of 1875 (unreported)
(4) Appeal No. 50 of 1875 (unreported).
(5) 8 Moo. P.C. 419.
[Pigot, J.—How can we hold that this Court has gone on for years receiving these appeals illegally. Must not that be decided by the Privy Council?]

Mr. Woodroffe.—I say the Court ought to reverse that practice. In the four cases referred to, the question was not raised. It was not raised in The Brenhilda (1), and it did not lie on the respondents there to raise it, as the judgment of the High Court was in their favour. I am ready to argue this point now, unless your Lordships intimate strongly I should not do so. It goes to the root of the matter.

[Pigot, J.—We intimate now that we think ourselves bound by the uninterrupted practice of this Court, and we will note that you raised the point.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—Then, assuming an appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, has not the appeal been perempted? This is not a matter of any appeal, but rests upon this that the Court is very particular in seeing there is no [79] peremption—The Hydros (2). The question of peremption was raised in The Brenhilda (1). The promoters in the present case attended on the settlement of the decree and they also attended on the apportionment.

[Pigot, J., referred to The Ulster (3).]

Mr. Woodroffe.—That case is long before The Brenhilda (1). Praying to a Judge to rescind an order perempts an after appeal from that order—Greg v. Greg (4).

[Pigot, J.—What are the acts that render this appeal perempted?]

Mr. Woodroffe.—They are set forth in para. 8 of the affidavit of Mr. Watkins of 25th March. You must get an inhibition or appear under protest to save being perempted.—The Brenhilda (1).

[Pigot, J.—Has any case been cited which shows that an appeal is perempted by an act done in furtherance of the right of appeal. We are prepared to hold that the mere appearance and mentioning the apportionment does not perempt the appeal.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—The Agilla (5); The Clifton (6).

[Pigot, J.—We do not think you could have been under the impression that the other side acquiesced in the judgment and would not appeal.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—They took no steps to show that they intended to appeal. The Ulster (3) is quite distinguishable. The offer there was an offer of peace.

[Pigot, J.—We are prepared to say that we do not think that on the present materials the appeal is perempted.

Mr. Woodroffe.—Then, without prejudice to our raising it hereafter, I do not go on with that point now.

[80] As to the rules: it is quite clear that Mr. Justice Norris thought the rules applied. The rules were made under the authority of the Act of Parliament of William IV (7). Those rules prevailed here prior to the establishment of the High Court. Do they apply since the High Court was established? Has the Indian Legislature any power to alter or repeal those rules?

[Pigot, J.—There are parts of rule 35 which seem to show that it was intended to apply to appeals to the High Court of Admiralty.]

(6) 3 Knapp 379= 3 Hagg. Admiralty Cas. 117. (7) 2 Will. IV, c. 51.
Mr. Woodroffe.—The Brenhilda (1) bears on this point.

[Pigot, J.—The words “Superior Court” are in your favour to a certain extent.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—The rule is applicable to the High Court of Admiralty, or the Court standing in its place as the Privy Council; but not to the High Court here. Under s. 652, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has power to make rules—Belchambers’ Rules and Orders, rule 61 et seq. Rule 63 expressly refers to the Vice-Admiralty Regulations. In s. 636, Civil Procedure Code, there is no mention whatever of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, and one would suppose that the framers of the Act knew that the practice in Vice-Admiralty suits was governed by other regulations. See s. 638.—I submit this Court has no power to interfere with an order in Council. Under cl. 26 of the old Supreme Court Charter (2), Admiralty jurisdiction was to be exercised as in England.

The Hydross (3) decides that the rules and practice of the High Court of Admiralty in England govern proceedings in maritime causes in the Supreme Court of Bombay under the Charter of 1823. The effect of the regulations is dealt with in The Aquilla (4). The rules were in this case held applicable to the Vice-Admiralty Court in St. Helena.—See Lord Brougham’s [81] remarks as to the force of the rules at p. 104 and 107. No ground has been made out for non-compliance with the rules. This is not a proper case for the Court to direct the Registrar to receive the appeal.

The Letters Patent draw a distinction between the Civil and the Vice-Admiralty and Admiralty jurisdiction.

The judgment of the Court (delivered by Pigot, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case the decree from which it is sought to institute an appeal was signed on the 4th April 1889, the memorandum of appeal against that decree was presented to the Registrar on the 6th April 1889, and was rejected; and this is an application made to us, sitting in the Appellate Jurisdiction from the Ordinary Original Side, for an order directing the Registrar to admit the appeal.

The application is made by the promovent, in whose favour a decree for £1,500 was made in the Court below; and there is no question that the formalities prescribed by rule 35 of the Rules and Regulations, made under an order of Council of June 1832, with respect to the bringing of appeals, were not in this case followed; and it is argued that the appeal under those circumstances cannot be admitted, a much longer period than fifteen days having passed since the time at which the decree was pronounced in open Court. It is contended on behalf of the parties seeking to appeal that the matter is to be decided on the practice of this Court in its ordinary appellate jurisdiction; and that the usual time should be allowed to the appellant from the date on which he was able to obtain a copy of the decree in the case.

The first question then is, in appeals under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from a single Judge sitting in the ordinary original jurisdiction to the Appellate Bench, does this rule 35 apply?

(1) 7 C. 547 = 8 I.A. 159.
(3) 5 M.I.A. 137.
(4) 6 Moo. P.C. 102.
Now there is no doubt that rule 35 applies in the case of appeals from this Court to the Privy Council. The case of The Brenhilda (1) shows that.

And there is no doubt that according to the practice of this Court, so far as it can be ascertained from the records, in appeals which have been brought from the decisions of a single Judge sitting on the original side to the other side of this Court, the [82] practice has been not to apply rule 35, as it is now contended it should be applied.

Four cases have been obtained from the record, namely, The Moorhill v. The Natomoo (2), The Michlin v. The Dacca (3), The Brenhilda v. The B. I. S. N. Company, Limited (4), and The Mary Stuart v. The Nivada (5).

And in all four cases the practice under the Civil Procedure Code was followed; and in the Brenhilda case (1) the length of time which elapsed between the date of the decree and the filing of the memorandum of appeal was more than a month. The decree is dated the 6th January 1880 and the memorandum of appeal was filed on the 19th February 1880. The practice of the Court, therefore, so far as these few cases furnish us with a guide, is certainly against the contention of the impugnants.

The terms of rule 35 show that the appeals contemplated as dealt with by it were appeals to England, which, when the rule framed, lay to the High Court of Admiralty.

When the rule was framed the Supreme Court was the tribunal having Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction: and there was not within that Court the practice as to appeals from one branch of this Court to the Full Court or a Divisional Bench of it, such as exists in this Court under the Letters Patent.

Next, we must look to the effect of the Letters Patent of 1865 as bearing on this question. In art. 37 of those Letters Patent it is provided that the Court shall from time to time make rules for the purpose of regulating all proceedings in (amongst others) its Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction; and it is provided that the Court shall be guided in making such rules and orders, as far as possible, by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, which at that time was Act VIII of 1859. Rule 63 of the rules of this Court is as follows: "In cases in the exercise of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, in which a ship or a ship and cargo, have been or are to be proceeded against or arrested, or in [83] which goods only have been or are to be proceeded against or arrested, either for the purpose of proceeding against the goods or the freight due thereon, or in which property shall have been or shall be arrested, and no party shall have appeared or shall appear at the return of the warrant, and in all other cases in the exercise of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, in which the rules contained in Act VIII of 1859 are not applicable, the practice and procedure shall be regulated as nearly as possible by the rules and regulations made and ordained by order of his late Majesty King William the Fourth in Council."

Now the jurisdiction, on which this appeal is sought to be brought, is one which is the creature of the Act of Parliament establishing the High Court and of the Acts passed under the Charter; and the fact that it is so created would lead to the conclusion that the practice in the exercise of that jurisdiction would be that of the Civil Procedure Code. We speak here of the appeal from the decision of one Judge to two Judges which is the direct creature of the High Court Act and the Charter.

Having regard to these two facts (one being the practice of the Court, and the other the proceeding so far as possible under the Charter), the rules of the Civil Procedure Code ought to be applied in the Admiralty jurisdiction within this Court, and we think the contention we are examining cannot be sustained.

Two other points were raised for the impugnants, one was that there is no appeal save to Her Majesty in Council from any decision of this Court sitting in the Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, and, involved in that, is of course the contention that there is no appeal from the decision of a single Judge save to Her Majesty in Council.

The applications have been so frequent from a single Judge pronouncing a decree of this Court to a Bench of this Court, that we intimated it would be needless to argue that point before us. If it must be raised, it must be before another tribunal.

It was also argued that the promovent is precluded by his own conduct from pursuing this appeal on the ground that the appeal is preempted owing to the promovents' conduct as set out in the affidavit of Mr. Watkins, dated 25th March 1889, in paras. 6, 7 and 8. The contention being that, inasmuch as under the circumstances in the affidavit related, the promovent was led to mention to the learned Judge, and, by so mentioning, to further so far as he could the signing of the decree or order the apportionment of the money amongst the salvors, We are unable to adopt that argument; so far as he acted, he did so against the decree, that is, in the very act of appealing from it and for the purpose of doing so; and it must not be forgotten that under the decree from which he appeals he takes what he has yet got, and he protests not that he has not got the £1,500, but that he has not got more.

We do not consider either of these contentions good ones; so we think the application must be granted, and therefore we direct the appeal to be admitted.

As to the costs of this application, we think the costs of both sides ought to be costs in the appeal.

Application granted.

ADMARLTY JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

IN THE MATTER OF THE SHIP "CHAMPION." [20th May, 1889.]

Salvage—Arrest—Excessive bail—Costs—Salvage services—Amount of award increased on appeal—Practice—Costs of appeal from the Original Side in its Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction.

In an action of salvage in which a ship was arrested and the bail asked for was found to be excessive, the Court (Pigot and Trevelyan, JJ.) held that the promoters must pay the impugnants the costs occasioned by the bail required being excessive.

The George Gordon (1) followed.

In this case the Court increased the amount of salvage award from £1,500 to £2,400 in consideration of the great risk incurred by the salvors in rescuing the ship and cargo, which were very valuable, from imminent destruction.

[88] Inasmuch as an appeal did lie under the High Court Charter and the Letters Patent from the Original Side in the exercise of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, and the Procedure was mainly governed by the Civil Procedure Code, the usual practice as to costs on appeal was followed in this case.

APPEAL from a decision of Norris, J., awarding £1,500 for salvage services.

This was an action of salvage brought by the owners, master, and crew of the Steam Tug Rescue, against the British Sailing Ship Champion, her cargo, and freight. The action was commenced for Rs. 1,22,219-2-5, and the Champion arrested and bail given for Rs. 1,25,000.

The Rescue was a steam tug of 1,500 tons gross register, and for the purposes of the action, her value had been, by agreement of the parties, fixed at £19,000. The Champion was an iron built and three-masted full-rigged ship of 1,441 tons register. Her value was stated by the impugnants to be £9,000, and that of her cargo, at the time the salvage services were rendered, to have been £33,000. By agreement the value of the ship and cargo was for the purposes of the action fixed at £43,000.

The facts of the case, as to which there was really no dispute, were as follows:

The Champion left Calcutta in charge of Mr. Paulson, a master Pilot of the port, for Port Pirie in South Australia, on 20th August 1888, with a cargo of 6,467 bales of gunnies. She was towed down the Hooghly by the Steam Tug Clive, and had proceeded as far as the Upper Gasper Light Ship on the 22nd August, when, on account of the threatening state of the weather, she was obliged to put back and to anchor at Saugor for the night. She proceeded on her voyage next morning, the 23rd August, the Clive taking her in tow; but met with violent squalls from the west at about the Lower Gasper Light Ship. Finding the storm increasing, and that instead of making head-way she was going astern to lee-ward on to the Saugor Sands, at about 1 or 2 o'clock in the afternoon she anchored; the hawser of the Clive were slipped, and she steamed away. Finally, the Champion was brought up to a point close to the Saugor Sand, a little to the north of the Intermediate Light Ship, and there she remained until the afternoon of the following day, the [86] 24th August. During the night of the 23rd the storm increased in violence, the wind was from west to south, blowing a hurricane and increasing in force the whole time. The storm was at its worst about 2 A.M., when it began to abate. The ship drew 21 ft. 10 in., and at low-water between 5 and 6 P.M., she began to bump. The masts were very much shaken and were expected every moment to come down; she also shipped heavy seas, losing everything moveable on board. When the flood came she swung to the tide and ceased bumping. This was at 11 o'clock. At about 4 A.M. (of 24th August), the ship again begun to bump, and continued to do so for about two or three hours, until she again swung to the flood and ceased bumping. The ship was found to be leaking and to be making about 3½ inches of water an hour, and at 5 A.M., the pumps were manned. During the night the sea had made a clean breach over the ship, and the boats were all more or less smashed and unsit for use; nor was there a spar left to rig a raft in case of necessity. Between 7 and 8 A.M., the ship was leaking very badly. Under these circumstances the pilot and the captain came to the conclusion that the ship had opened out so much that it would be fatal to stay where they were. Accordingly they determined to slip their anchor and run for Saugor Roads, 18 miles off. It was necessary to slip the anchors, because during the night the windlass had been broken by the surging of the chain as the ship rode in the very heavy sea. At 1 P.M., when the ship was in six fathoms of water, they slipped their anchors and made sail for Saugor Roads. The weather was then moderating, though still blowing fresh, with heavy squalls and a rough sea.

The Champion according to the evidence, on the afternoon of the 24th August, when running for Saugor, was in this condition. She was strained both in deck and poop from the tremendous bumping she had experienced, and, as appeared from the survey subsequently held, her bottom was also damaged. She was making 3½ inches of water an hour; her boats were all smashed; she had but one anchoor left, but not sufficient chain to use it; she required 45 fathoms of chains, whereas she had only 25, and to supplement this chain she had a ha'wser which had been already seriously damaged; and which was afterwards condemned on her [87] return to Calcutta on the 25th August. Her windlass was broken; and the crew were greatly exhausted and unable to get the anchor over the side of the ship. She was in fair trim as to spars, rigging, and sails, although, no doubt, the mast had suffered from the bumping, and some of the sails had been blown away during the night.

In this condition she was running for the Saugor Roads with wind south-west or west-south-west, Saugor Island north or north-east of her, the weather being still severe and the sea high. At 3 P.M., she passed the Lower Gasper Light, and at 4 the Upper Gasper, making for Black Point, the spot where it had been determined to beach her, unless assistance should come.

On the afternoon of 24th August there were in or just outside Saugor Roads four or five tugs, among these the Rescue and the Clive. Soon after setting sail the Champion hoisted signals of distress, she had signals flying at different masts and also a red ensign at the peak with a wheft in it. These signals were flying when the Clive passed the Champion and entered Saugor Roads. The Champion exchanged signals with the Clive and asked for assistance, but the Clive replied with her flags that she could not assist.
At 5-30 P.M. the Champion passed the Long Sand Light Ship and entered the Roads. At quarter to 6, while there was still a little daylight, she began to fire rockets with the view of attracting the attention of the tugs. At 6-30 the attention of the Captain of the Rescue was directed to the rockets: at that time the Rescue was abreast of the Central Saugor Flat Buoy several miles up. He at once turned round with the intention of saving life, and came to the Champion at about 7-30 P.M., it being then perfectly dark.

Up to this point of the case there was no dispute whatever as to the facts.

What followed subsequently to the Rescue reaching the Champion is thus described by the promovents in their written statement:—... "The weather at this time was squally with rain and the wind was blowing a moderate gale from the south-west and it was pitch dark. The Rescue sheered alongside as near as it was considered safe to approach the Champion and the Pilot [88] Mr. Paulson, who was still on board that vessel informed the master of the Rescue that the ship had been ashore on Saugor Sands: that she had neither anchors nor chains: and that unless the Rescue could take her in tow he would have to beach the ship in the endeavour to save the lives of those on board. The master of the Rescue was at the same time asked to take the Champion in tow by lashing the Rescue alongside of her, but this the master of the Rescue refused to do, for the reason that in his opinion such a course of action would have exposed both vessels to the imminent risk of having their sides stove in colliding one with the other as they were lifted by the sea.

"The Rescue, although it was not considered safe to lash her alongside the Champion, without the loss of any time steamed ahead of the Champion, and passed a rope for the purpose of hauling a hawser belonging to the Rescue on board. This operation, though successfully carried out, was attended with serious risk to the Rescue, as it necessitated the Rescue approaching perilously near the bows of the Champion in a seaway on a pitch-dark night. The necessity for incurring this serious risk without further delay was however, imperative, as the Champion would otherwise have drifted on to the Saugor Flat, and once there would in all probability have become a total wreck.

"Having succeeded in passing a hawser on board the Champion, the Rescue took Champion in tow and turned her round, so that she might stem the flood current. At the moment when the Rescue tightened her hawser and had the Champion in tow, both vessels had drifted abreast of and close the Lower Saugor Flat Buoy, which marks the edge of the Saugor Flat, and the two vessels remained about this position, the Rescue slowly steaming ahead till midnight, when the ebb began to make.

"At this time the wind was blowing strongly from the south-west, and the set of the tide, aided by the force of the wind, made the movements of the Champion very unsteady, taking sheers from starboard to port and forging ahead, making it very difficult and dangerous for the tug in those narrow waters. The Rescue continued to tow the Champion, and kept her moving through the water backwards and forwards along a course of two miles, [89] and continued so to tow the Champion till daybreak of the next day, the 25th day of August.

"At the time of the execution of this manœuvreing and during its continuance the position of the Rescue and the Champion was extremely critical, in that it involved the double risk to both vessels being driven on one of the sandbanks or colliding with one or other of the steamers known at the time to be lying at anchor not far off in the Roads.

"At day-break on the 25th day of August, in the attempt made to turn the Champion to the north, the single hawser parted and was lost overboard. The Rescue then proceeded to pass a fresh hawser on board the Champion, which was effected by one of the crew of the Champion dropping a line on the deck of the Rescue as she steamed close under the jibboom of the Champion at the risk of being cut down by the ship.

"About 9 A.M. on the same day a second hawser was passed on board the Champion with the aid of the Rescue’s life boat. While engaged in this work the boat sustained some injury to her gunwale and stern by colliding against the bows of the Champion. Immediately the second hawser was made fast, the Rescue proceed full speed with the Champion in tow towards Calcutta.

"The Rescue went on in tow of the Champion until she arrived at Garden Reach, just before dark, on the evening of the 25th day of August when she cast the Champion off, but remained by her until she was safely fastened to her moorings by the Harbour Master’s wire hawser, the Champion having, as aforesaid, no ground tackle available for the purpose.
It was then about 7-30 P.M."

The impugnants alleged that the Rescue took the Champion in tow on the night of the 24th after passing hawser in the usual way keeping the ship under weigh in Saugor Roads until day-break of 25th, and that she then proceeded with the Champion in tow towards Calcutta, where she arrived at about 5 P.M. on the 25th; that the weather during the night was moderate and usual south-west monsoon weather, the wind blowing fresh with squalls and rain; that when the Rescue took the Champion in tow neither was the ship nor the lives or limbs of those on board in any immediate danger, and the Champion was within reach of other help. They submitted that the Rescue did not render assistance as promptly as she might have done, inasmuch as the Rescue had been seen at anchor in Saugor Roads three or four miles off at the time when the Champion had passed the Upper Gasper Light Ship and was flying distress signals and letting off rockets, but did not come to the Champion’s assistance until over two hours after the Rescue had been seen by the Champion. They also submitted that neither the Rescue nor those on board had been exposed to any risk by reason of the services rendered by her, and that no unusual or severe labour was required by the Rescue or the crew in the course of such service. The impugnants further submitted that the claim of the promovents was “unjust, unreasonable, exorbitant, and enormously out of proportion to the services rendered” by the Rescue; that the claim was not calculated in accordance with the principles upon which awards were made by Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Courts in similar cases; and that the Court in dealing with the question of the costs of the action should take into consideration the unreasonable character of the promovents’ claim.

The amount of damages sustained by the Rescue was by agreement assessed at Rs. 887-2-0.

The captain, the chief officer, the boatswain, and the carpenter of the Champion were examined under Commission on behalf of the promovents.
The result of their evidence as well as that of the witnesses called at the hearing, and that of the experts who were examined as to the necessity of beaching the ship if assistance had not come, and the danger to life, to the vessels, and to the cargo in rendering salvage services, appear fully from the judgment of the Appeal Court at pages 102 to 105.

No evidence was given on behalf of the impugnants, but near the close of the hearing the learned Counsel for the impugnants was instructed to ask for a short adjournment to enable the impugnants to call two of the captains of the tugs that were in Saugor Roads on the night of the 24th August, one of whom was stated to be at that time somewhere down the river, and the other actually in Calcutta. This application was refused.

[91] The learned Judge at the original trial found that the tug had rescued the Champion from a position of distress and danger, and that the salvage services were rendered in the dark with a heavy sea and wind blowing. He also found that there was some appreciable risk to the tug in passing the rope; and in so far as there was appreciable risk to the tug there was some risk to those on board, but he did not think the risk was of a grave character. He also thought that the only persons who ran any risk were the men who manned the boat—which took the line to the ship; but he thought the risk was greater than when performing ordinary towage service. He was of opinion that the evidence proved that those on board the Champion did all they could to get the anchor over the side of the ship; but failed to do it. He found that it had been resolved to beach the ship if assistance could not be procured, but was of opinion that the necessity to beach her had not been proved. He was not satisfied that, if the ship had been beached, she would have become a total wreck, or that, if she had been beached, she would have been suffered to remain so long as to become a total wreck, when there were three tugs and two ocean-going steamers at hand.

... "The viva voce evidence of the Pilot differs in no material particulars from the evidence of the Carpenter, the Chief Officer, the Boatswain, and the Captain of the Champion, whose evidence was taken under Commission. ... I am clearly of opinion, and there can be no shade of doubt, that, if the ship had been left at anchor at Saugor Sands, another course of bumping in any way approaching what she had gone through would have caused the loss of the ship, and I think those on board did right in slipping her anchors and running into Saugor Roads for the purpose of obtaining assistance. I think the Pilot acted as a prudent, cautious, and careful man. ... Upon the best consideration I can give to what was done, it seems to me that everything was done that reasonable and cautious men, careful of the lives and property entrusted to them could do. At half past 5 or 6 on the evening of the 24th [92] there were some steam tugs lying in Saugor Roads, and with the view of attracting the attention of the tugs rockets were fired from the Champion. Ultimately the rockets attracted the notice of the captain of the Rescue. He was running up Saugor Roads for safety, saw the rockets, and bore down in the direction of the rockets and came up to the Champion at half past 6 or 7. The Rescue came within hailing distance and asked, "What do you want?" The answer from the Champion was, "I have lost my anchors and chains: take me in tow." He said, "What, now?" The answer was, "Yes, at once." Then Mr. Paulson says "the tug came up alongside again and he decided to take us in tow." ... I think Mr. Paulson's recollection must be at fault when he says the first attempt to pass hawsers was made then from the jibboom end.

It does not detract at all from the singularly lucid way in which he gave his evidence. The line was passed by lowering a boat from the steamer and taking it to the ship and passing it. Again Mr. Paulson's recollection is at fault. The captain of the tug says the hawser was got in very quickly by the Champion. . . . The Champion was taken in tow of the Rescue by the latter lowering a boat and passing hawses in the usual way. That was done with alacrity.

"It was blowing and a considerable sea was on, considerably more sea than the ordinary monsoon weather in August. Until the tug turned higher up to Saugor Roads there was anticipation of considerable dirty weather. Then the Champion was towed during the night up and down over a space of two miles. Then, when daylight came, the second hawser was passed, she was towed up to Garden Reach, when, having no ground tackle of her own, she got a hawser from the Port Commissioners and was moored for the night. The question I have to determine is, taking these facts into consideration, what is a fair remuneration to cover:

"(1) The amount of labour bestowed by the salvors;
"(2) The risk to the lives of the salvors;
"(3) The risk, if any, to which the salving vessel, the tug, was exposed;
"(4) I have to consider the value of the tug, which was £19,000;

and

"(5) The value of the Champion, i.e., ship and cargo, which was £43,000;
"(6) The degree of distress and peril from which the Champion was rescued.

"Having considered all these matters to the best of my ability, I have, on the one hand, to award generously for the protection of life and property and for the benefit of the commercial community; and, on the other, to guard against extortionate demands.

"I cannot but see that the labour of the salvors was at this time of year very much greater than if this ship had been lying to under bare poles. I do not think the labour was very much greater than in ordinary towage contract. It was rendered in the dark with a heavy sea and wind blowing. I have got to take that into consideration. I do not think there was any risk of life to those on board the tug. That is the chief ingredient to be taken into consideration. I cannot think there was much risk, if any, to life. The only persons who ran any risk of life were the men who manned the boat which took the line to the ship. Looking at the general atmospheric conditions and the time of day, I do not think the risk to the men was much greater than when performing ordinary towage services. I think there was some risk to the tug. . . . I think there was some appreciable risk to the tug in passing the rope, and in so far as there was appreciable risk to the tug, there was some risk to the lives of those on board. But I do not think the risk was of a grave character. The value of the tug has been agreed on. The only question which gives trouble, is the degree of distress the Champion was rescued from. From the log and the evidence taken on Commission, not an attempt was made to put out the anchor . . . . Even if the anchor had been got over the side, . . . I doubt whether it would have been of much use. . . . I think the evidence proves that they did do what they could to get out this anchor, but failed to do it, I also think they did intend to beach the ship. . . . I do not think necessity has been shown to beach the ship, I am far from being satisfied that the ship would have become a total loss or that the cargo was materially injured or damaged. I am far from satisfied that the ship would have become a total wreck if she had been beached. Further, I cannot believe with three tugs and two ocean-going steamers near at hand that, even if she had been beached, she would have been suffered to remain so long there as to become a total wreck. She was in a position of distress and danger, and from that position she has been rescued by this tug.

"What would a Court of Admiralty have awarded for these services rendered in the Mersey? I think the award I am about to make is in excess of what the Court of Admiralty would have awarded. I am bound to award with a generous hand, and I award to the salvors £1,500, calculated at the rate of exchange of the day on which the services were rendered, i.e., the 24th August. In addition to this sum I award Rs. 887-2-0 agreed upon. I must take a little time to consider as to how that sum should be apportioned. The award will be with costs."

Accordingly his Lordship, by an interlocutory decree, dated 22nd February 1889, condemned the impugnants to pay the said sums of £1,500 and Rs. 887-2-0, and costs, and ordered that, upon payment of the equivalent of £1,500 and of Rs. 5,000 for costs subject to taxation, the amount of bail should be discharged.

From this decree the promovents appealed.
Mr. Evans and Mr. Gasper, for the appellants.
Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Roberts, for the respondents.
The appeal came on for hearing before the same Judges who had ordered it to be admitted.
Mr. Woodroffe (after stating that the impugnants appeared under protest) said—I have to take some preliminary objections to the hearing of this appeal.

[Pigot, J.—Are they the same objections as were taken before?]
Mr. Woodroffe.—They are for the most part, but there are one or two others. The first is, whether there is an appeal from a single Judge exercising Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction to this Court.

[Pigot, J.—That is the point on which we said that on the practice of the Court we should hold we had jurisdiction.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—The point has never been raised in any previous case. I take the point and ask leave to argue it.

[Pigot, J.—We had it fully argued before on the application.]
Mr. Woodroffe.—I did not argue it, I merely submitted it. I was stopped.

[Pigot, J.—I do not think you will better your position by arguing it. We must, of course, hear you; but I may say that in the face of the practice of the Court in former cases, we could hardly bring ourselves to alter it.]

Mr. Woodroffe.—After that intimation I will simply read the protest. (He then read the respondents' protest which was as follows):

"The impugnants humbly protest against the said appeal of the promovents being heard or otherwise proceeded or dealt with by this Honourable Court for the following reasons:

I. For that this Honourable Court has no jurisdiction to hear or determine an appeal from a judgment or decree of a Judge of this Court exercising Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, and for that under the Vice-Admiralty Commission of the 19th July 1822 the appeal in all Vice-Admiralty cases lay direct to the High Court of Admiralty in England from which High Court of Admiralty it was by the Statute of 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 41, s. 2, transferred to the Privy Council, and such right of appeal direct to Her Majesty's Privy Council still exists and has not been taken away or affected by any subsequent enactment of a competent legislative authority.

"2. For that these impugnants have asserted their appeal to Her Majesty in Council against the above-mentioned judgment and decree and such appeal is still pending and undetermined, and the pendency of such appeal operates to suspend all proceedings by this Honourable Court in the exercise of its Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction in the above cause in respect of the said judgment and decree.

"3. For that the said appeal of the promovent was not asserted or proceeded with as it should have been in accordance with the said s. 2 of Act 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 41, nor with the regulations governing the Vice-Admiralty Courts nor with the practice to be observed with regard to appeals from the judgments and decrees of the Vice-Admiralty Courts.

"4. For that in appearing after the said judgment and decree had been pronounced on the apportionment of the amount thereby awarded between the salvors inter se the promovent absolutely perempted their appeal and have lost and forfeited all right to appear and to prosecute an appeal from the said judgment and decree."

Mr. Woodroffe.—When we asserted our appeal, which we say lies to the Privy Council direct, we handed in a memorandum of the grounds of appeal; but we say the Privy Council has to dispose of that. In accordance with what fell from the Court on the last hearing, we have filed objections under s. 561 of the Code.

[Pigot, J.—We will receive and record your protest, so that you may maintain all the rights you have in the Privy Council.]

Mr. Evans.—In cases where facts have been properly found, Courts of Appeal do not, as a rule, interfere. But here the learned Judge has totally misconceived the position, and, in important matters, such as risk to the Champion, he has gone in the teeth of the evidence. The evidence of experts shows that there was no alternative but to beach the ship. In other matters, such as risk to the salvors, he has misconceived the evidence; and in such cases the Appeal Court has never failed to interfere.—The Chetah (1). The impugnants could not call rebutting evidence, and did not attempt to do so. The written statement of the promovent is amply borne out by the evidence. There was no cross-examination as to evidence stating that, if the ship had gone ashore on Saugor Flat, she would have become a total wreck. Here the ship and cargo are of great value. There was imminent risk of life. Valuable services were rendered and unusual skill and enterprise were shown by the salvors.

[Pigot, J.—The danger the ship ran at the time she was taken in tow was caused by the fact that she had lost her anchors. If any vessel finds herself in the Saugor Roads without anchors likely to go ashore, and destruction is imminent, what is the measure of the damages to be awarded for salving her?]

(1) L. R. 2 P.C. 205.
[97] Mr. Evans.—I think the best exemplification of the measure of damages is given in The City of Chester (1) and The Lancaster (2).

(Pigot, J.—The strong point in your case is that the other steamers did not take any notice of the signals.)

Mr. Evans.—The Amerique (3) deals with the question of value in estimating the amount of salvage award. In The Thomas Allen (4) the amount awarded was reduced. The two material things in salvage are: first, the imminent risk to the vessel salved; second, the value of the property salved. When salvors have run great risk, the amount is greatly increased. Here there was no time to bargain. The risk to the Rescue was, first, attempting to come close enough to the ship to take her in low; second, risk of running into other vessels enormously increased by darkness; third, risk to the boat; fourth, risk of towing the Champion up and down all night in dark, hazy, squally weather. Therefore the risk was very great, and the services which were rendered show skill, courage, and enterprise on the part of the Captain and the crew of the Rescue.

(Pigot, J.—The absence of assessors tends against your case.)

Mr. Evans.—But there is the evidence of experts. Their evidence shows the imminence of total loss to the Champion; danger to the Rescue in passing the hawser; danger to the lives of the boat's crew; danger to the Rescue in towing up and down in a hazy night amongst the shipping; and skill, courage, and enterprise on the part of the Captain of the Rescue. He referred to The Lancaster (2) and The City of Chester (1).

(Pigot, J., referred to The England (5).)

Mr. Evans.—The Thomas Allen (4) shows that the Appeal Court will not interfere unless the difference between the amount awarded and what it considers ought to have been awarded is about a third.

(Pigot, J.—In that case the other tugs turned back out of her way.)

[98] Mr. Evans.—My case is stronger than that one, which is a very strong case. I put it, we ought to get ten per cent., but at least £3,000. We should not have troubled the appeal Court unless we thought we should get one-third more, and brought ourselves within The Chetah (6); a small percentage on a large value is a sufficient remuneration. In The Amerique (3) the principle how the value is to be taken into account is discussed. That was a derelict case.

(Pigot, J., referred to The Cleopatra (7).)

Mr. Evans.—In the Glenduror (8) the award was increased to £2,000 from £1,000. That case is distinguishable in showing that according to Sir Robert Philimore's other judgments, a larger amount would have been given if the salvors had not been a life-boat crew. In the Werra (9) a smaller percentage was given, although the value was large; but there was no risk. The value of the property salved has always been an element in considering whether the amount should be increased.

Mr. Woodruffe.—We do not contend that no salvage services were rendered to the Champion by the Rescue. There is no desire on the part of the Champion to minimise the services rendered to her. The Appeal Court will not interfere unless the amount awarded is so disproportionate to the services as to shock the mind.

The learned Judge has not overlooked any of the ingredients which must be taken into consideration in making an award. He has taken into consideration the risk to the tug, to the lives on board the Rescue and the boat. Whatever the risk was it has been amply rewarded. There is evidence that the weather was moderating and had moderated when the Rescue came up and took the Champion in tow. The presence of the tugs in Saugor Roads must be an element in determining the degree of danger to which the Champion was exposed at the time salvage services were rendered. He cited The Carrier Dove (1) on the question of assistance being available, Necessity for reaching the ship has [99] not been shown. The Privy Council has refused costs to successful appellants in appeals from amount of award; the rule is apparently the same still; and The City of Berlin (2) shows the disfavour with which the Court looks upon such appeals.

In case of derelict vessels larger awards are given. In The Cleopatra (3) the services were of a most heroic character and the danger was most imminent. The Lancaster (4), to a certain extent, is in favour of the protagonists. In this case there was an appeal, but the amount was not reduced on account of the rule of non-interference with the discretion of a Judge. As to The Chetah (5), the Judge in the lower Court was of opinion that the vessel was in such danger, that she would not only be lost but lost in a few minutes; the Court of Appeal had the aid of nautical assessors, and, with their help, came to the conclusion that the vessel would have come to destruction, but that there had been immediate danger of ruin.

The following cases were also cited and commented upon:—

The Werra (6); The Thetis (7); The Spirit of the Age (8); The Saratoga (9); The Mary Stenhouse (10); The Argo (11); The Tigris (12); The Bilton (13); The Skiblander (14); The Glenduor (15); and The Thomas Allen (16).

[Pigot, J., referred to The Cheerful (17), and The Genova (18).]

[100] As the amount of bail, the ship was arrested for Rs. 1,25,000, or nearly £8,400, that is, it was arrested for £4,000 more than it ought to have been. Bail is exorbitant when it is more than what the salvors can expect to realise. Costs incurred in giving exorbitant bail have been allowed.—See The George Gordon (19) and The City of Berlin (2).

Mr. Phillips followed on the same side, and commented in detail on the evidence.

Mr. Evans in reply. The only ground on which the Privy Council reduced the amount of the award in the case of The Chetah (5) was the want of imminence of peril. Mr. Woodroffe tried to make out that the award in The Lancaster (4) would have been reduced had it not been a matter of discretion. That is not so. The Appeal Court said that it was not a question what amount they would have given, but whether the Judge had acted reasonably.

The England (1) and The Saratoga (2) have no bearing on this case. The Cleopatra (3) was quite an exceptional case, and ought not to be taken as a guide. The ship salvaged was not an ordinary ship. It was expressly designed to bring The Needle to England. In The Thomas Allen (4) the amount was reduced for want of imminence of danger: still a large amount was given.

Mr. Evans.—No doubt it was a case of very considerable merit and of great risk, but we do not know the amount of the value of the tug and if there was any anchor. A large amount has been given when the ship salvaged was of great value, and there was considerable risk, enterprise, and courage. In The Spirit of the Age (5) about six per cent. was given. Life has been taken into consideration in awarding salvage only recently. The Glenduror (6) is in my favour. In the cases in Pritchard's Digest, when the amount awarded is small, there is something peculiar in the circumstances of the case.

As to costs: The George Gordon (7) has been cited as to exorbitant bail. There the award was very small and the action for £3,000. The amount of bail here is not exorbitant. We have asked for too much bail, but not exorbitant bail.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Pigot and Trevelyon, JJ.) was delivered by Pigot, J., who (after stating the facts of the case) continued as follows:

This is an appeal from the decision of a Judge of this Court sitting on the Original Side in the Admiralty Jurisdiction of the Court respecting a claim for salvage brought by the owners, master, and crew of the Steam Tug Rescue against the British Ship Champion and the cargo on board of her.

It was not disputed that salvage services were rendered by the Rescue to the Champion. The learned Judge in the Original Court held that such services were rendered, and he awarded the sum of £1,500 in respect of them; and he directed Rs. 5,000 to be deposited by the impugnants with the Registrar to meet the promovents’ costs.

The appeal is from that decision. The appellants contend that the amount awarded is wholly inadequate, and that the amount ordered to be deposited for costs is wholly inadequate for the purpose.

The Champion, on the afternoon of the 24th, when running for Saugor, was in this condition. She was strained, both in deck and poop, from the tremendous bumping which she had experienced; as appeared upon the survey held subsequently, her bottom had also suffered some damage. She was making three-and-a-half inches of water an hour. Her boats were all smashed. She had but one anchor, and not chain enough to use it; for she had only 25 fathoms of chain, and 45 would, according to the Captain’s evidence, be necessary; and to supplement this chain, she had only a hawser which had been already seriously damaged on her journey down from Calcutta, and which was afterwards condemned on her return there. Her windlass was broken, and the crew were, according to the evidence, greatly exhausted and unable to get the anchor over the side of the ship. She was in fair trim as to spares, rigging, and sails, although no doubt the masts had suffered from the bumping, some of the sails had been blown away during the night, one fore-top-mizzen-stay-sail was blown away as she was running up to Saugor.

Being in this condition, what was her position? She was running for the Saugor Roads, with the wind south-west or west-south-west. Saugor Island north or north-east of her, the weather being still severe and the sea high. At 3 she passed the Lower Gasper Light, and at 4 the Upper Gasper; she had then 2 hours 24 minutes before sunset. Making as much sail as she could carry, she could not in all probability, according to the evidence, have got so far as Black Point, the spot where, as appears from the evidence to be presently mentioned, it had been determined to beach her should assistance not be procured. She was in fact in a trap, sailing into the Saugor Roads, no doubt in perfect safety as long as she had water to sail in; but with no means of coming to an anchor, with nowhere, as the captain says, to go to. She could not, as the evidence shows, have gone up the river after sunset; the alternative suggested in cross-examination, namely that of beating about in the Saugor Roads, being stated in the uncontradicted evidence in the case to be an absolutely impossible one.

It was under these circumstances that Mr. Paulson says that if the Rescue had not come up (as she did soon after sunset), he would, in another quarter of an hour, have beached the ship. Of the fact that the resolution to beach her unless assistance should come was arrived at, there is no doubt. It is recorded in the log, in the protest, and is deposed to by the Captain as well as by Mr. Paulson.

On the afternoon of the 24th there were, in or just outside Saugor Roads (which begin above the Long Sand Light Ship) either four or five tugs, viz., the Clive, the Rescue, Hunsdon, Retriever, and Mr. Paulson believes, the Electric.

As the ship was running up to Saugor, the Clive was in sight. The Chief Officer says: We saw the Clive almost the whole day of the 24th; we lost sight of her at 5-30 p.m., when it got dark." The Captain says, "We first saw her at 3, she was alongside steaming into Saugor the same way we were." Mr. Paulson says: "During the time I was going from the place where I slipped my anchor, nearly where I started, I hoisted signals." The first signal was "I want a steam tug." The next was "I want immediate assistance." These signals were flying at different masts, and I had a red ensign at the peak with a wheft in it. That means, "that when you put up that signal any ship that sees it, is bound to come to your assistance."

"During this time I saw the Clive coming up astern of us. I saw her about half-an-hour after we started. When I first saw her she was four or five miles, three to four miles from us, and she came up astern of us. She overtook me and passed me, she was about a mile or a mile-and-quarter when she was nearest me . . . The signals we had were flying. We exchanged signals with him. She replied 'I cannot assist.' She did that with her flags."

He says, "The Clive is a new vessel of 600 or 650 tons. She is a very powerful tug . . . A comparatively new ship, and very powerful . . . I know the Rescue, of the two I think the Clive is more powerful, but the Rescue pulls better; she has more nominal horse power; she is a more modern steamer." The Captain says "The Clive when she left us on the bank and when we passed her subsequently entering Saugor, was quite seaworthy.” They passed her on entering at about 4 p.m.

The Captain says, that when they first saw the Rescue about between 5 and 6, they had then passed the Clive which was at anchor by the Long Sand Light Ship.

It is plain that so far as the Clive was concerned, her presence in the Saugor Roads did not in any way diminish the risk to which the Champion was then exposed. Whether it was the actual state of the weather, or an apprehension of worse weather, caused by the signals from Saugor, or any other reason more or less sufficient which prevented her from giving assistance, does not appear. There certainly was no assistance to be had from her.

Captain Stone of the Rescue says: “I remember the cyclone, I was anchored at Saugor at the time. I remained anchored there from 22nd night to night of 24th. I steamed up on the 24th to [104] upper part of Saugor for shelter. There was a signal flying at Saugor that a cyclone was raging. That was the first time I saw it at 5 o’clock. The signal was a drum over a ball No. 9. I saw this signal at 5 o’clock and proceeded up Saugor Roads.” Later on, in cross-examination: “I got under weight at 5 p.m. I was then lying a little below the Long Sand Light, and steered up for shelter to Saugor Road. Three other tugs had gone before me.”

“About half an hour after the Rescue had left the Long Sand Light, that is, at 5-30, according to the log, the Champion passed that Light Ship and entered the Roads. She had, as we have said, been flying signals since about 4 p.m., and at quarter to 6 began to fire rockets. There was a little daylight, it was twilight.” Mr. Paulson says: When some of the rockets were fired, at about 6-20, it was sufficiently dark to see rockets well. They would be fairly visible at 6-30. About twenty rockets were fired.”

The Champion, when passing the Upper Gasper, took in some sail, to spin out the time, so as to attract the attention of the tugs whilst there was light, but as Mr. Paulson says, “they did not come to us.” He says he noticed some tugs turn round and pass up; one was the Rescue. “She was about two miles from me when she steamed away.” At 6-30 Captain Stone’s attention was directed to the rockets fired by the Champion.

At that time the Rescue was abreast of the Central Saugor Flat Buoy several miles up. He at once turned round with the intention of saving life; that, he says, was uppermost in his thoughts.

He rounded under the Champion’s stern and hailed her, at, he says, about 7-30 p.m., it being then perfectly dark. The Captain of the Champion puts it at 7, 6-30, or 7; Mr. Paulson says, about 7. The log says “at 7-30 the Rescue came to our assistance.”. Having regard to the fact that the Rescue was so far to the north as the Central Saugor Flat when she turned back at 6-30, and that she went so far south as the Upper Middleton Buoy where she met the Champion, we think 7-30 is most probably correct.

In cross-examination Mr. Paulson says: “The tugs were all able to render assistance, but did not come.”

This is the state of the evidence as to the amount of assistance to be hoped for by the Champion from the tugs. After the tugs spoken of by Captain Stone are shown moving away, before the [105] Rescue’s departure, for a place of shelter, they disappear from the case. There is nothing to show where they went to, or whether, when darkness came on so as to allow the Champion's rockets to become visible, they or any of them were in a position to see them; or whether, if so, they were near enough to be in time to render any assistance; or, if so, able and willing to do so.

We have stated in detail what appears to us to be the effect of the evidence on this subject; because it was strenuously argued before us, that the presence of these tugs at or near Saugor must be an element of much importance in determining the degree of danger to which the Champion was exposed at the time the salvage services were rendered. We have arrived, upon a consideration of this evidence, at a contrary conclusion. We think that, looking at what actually happened, the Champion, when the Rescue saw her rockets and turned back to assist her, had no help to look for from any of the tugs but that one; and that in forming an opinion as to the danger in which she was, the other tugs may be left out of consideration, as completely as the Clive must be.

We do not forget that near the close of the hearing in the Original Court, the learned Counsel for the impugnants was instructed to ask for an adjournment to the following Monday to enable the impugnants to call the Captains of two of those tugs, one of whom was stated to be at that time somewhere down the river, and the other actually in Calcutta; and that the learned Judge, as might have been expected, refused the application coming at such a stage of the case. Beyond showing that one at least of those Captains was available for the purpose of giving evidence, if the impugnants had thought it desirable to ensure his attendance, and that they did not do so, we do not see that this application bears materially upon the case.

We have said that there is no doubt that it had been resolved to beach the ship, if assistance did not come. The learned Judge in the Original Court finds that this was so; but he adds "I do not think necessity has been shown to beach the ship;" and before us it was contended that no such necessity was shown. We have not had, nor had the Original Court, the advantage of hearing this case with the assistance of nautical assessors. There were, however, expert witnesses examined in the Original Court. Their evidence was given chiefly upon the facts as stated in the voluminous evidence of Mr. Paulson. No evidence was given on behalf of the impugnants. The promovents examined on Commission Captain Noel, the Chief Officer, boatswain, and carpenter of the Champion in October 1888. The case was heard in Court in the following February.

The Captain said that if the Rescue had not taken him in tow, he would have had to beach the ship. The Chief Officer said the same.

Mr. Paulson in his evidence says: "We had arrived at a conclusion as to what we should do. Caption Noel and I were agreed as to what we should do. The conclusion was that, if we did not get a tug, we should beach the ship." As to the anchor they had left he says: "The anchor was not ready. The crew were so exhausted we could not get it ready. We had a chain below, which we could not bring up. Between pumping and taking in sail it was all that the crew could do." Later on, "I made up my mind to beach her, because there was nothing to be done but beach her. My object in beaching her was to save the ship if possible, which was very doubtful, and to save life as well. I say doubtful, because of the state of the sea at the time; there were breakers on the beach." In cross-examination he says: "If beached, she would have been wrecked.
If the tug had not come, we would have gone higher up. It would have been a matter of only a quarter of an hour longer, and I would have beached her." To the Court he said: "It was night time, and that prevented my sailing up to Diamond Harbour. It was night; I could not see narrow and dangerous channels. If I could have gone up to Diamond Harbour that night I would, but it was impossible."

Mr. Elson, branch pilot, as we understand the highest rank in the pilots of this port, says that he would have beached the ship, and supposing the ship to have been at the Lower Gasper at 3, as she was, "I would not have been able to get to Diamond Harbour that day; the distance would have been too great. I could not have got beyond Saugor by dusk. It would not have been prudent to go through the narrow channel. The ship would have been utterly lost if I had tried to do so. The evidence of Mr. Cox, pilot, and of Mr. Alison, a seaman of experience, lately Marine Surveyor, and now Superintendent in the Licensed Measurers Department, is to the same effect as to the necessity which existed to beach the ship, if assistance had not come. They all say, however, that they would have tried the anchor still on board, if it was possible to do so, before beaching the ship.

Now, as to the possibility of using this anchor, and so avoiding the beaching of the ship, much argument was addressed to us. The suggestion is, that the state of exhaustion of the crew is exaggerated by Mr. Paulson, and that they could have got the third anchor over the ship's side, and that by supplementing the 25 feet of chain with the hawser, they could have saved her.

The learned Judge says: "I accept Mr. Paulson's statement that they had the anchor on board, that they lifted it to the forecastle and endeavoured to get it over the side, but the crew were unable to do it. Even if the anchor had been got over the side, having regard to where the chain was, looking to the fact as to the hawser, looking to the fact that the windlass lever was broken and that it was only left to them to take a double turn round the mast, I doubt whether it would have been of very much use. I accept Mr. Paulson's evidence that they did attempt to get the anchor over but failed. Probably he has exaggerated the state in which the crew was; still I think the evidence proves they did what they could to get out this anchor, but failed to do it."

With this conclusion, upon the evidence, we fully agree. It seems to us quite established that it was wholly impossible for the crew in their then state, exhausted from hard-work, exposure, and want of food (a description of their condition at 1 P.M., that day, in para 7 of the impugnants' written statement), to get the anchor over the ship's side: we see no reason to doubt, either, that Mr. Paulson is right in saying that they could not have got up the chain, or, we think, fitted the tackle to the anchor, so as to use it effectually even if they could have got the anchor over the side.

This being so, it appears to us to be established on the evidence, that the necessity for beaching the ship would have arisen but for the "Rescue"; for we do not think it necessary to consider the possibility of the ship's beating about all night in Saugor Roads, in a heavy sea, with an exhausted crew, with a great wind from the west-south-west or south-south-west blowing with occasional squalls, and with Saugor Island on her lee, and some shipping in the Roads.

Nor do we think that, upon the evidence, we need enter on any conjecture as to the possibility of the ship's being saved by one of the two ocean steamers which appear to have come into the Roads at or about the time the Champion was saved by the Rescue.

The next question is, what conclusion can be reasonably drawn from the evidence as to the result of beaching the ship in her then condition upon the Saugor flat. We think it clear, that, having regard to the lives of the crew, this, on the evidence, was the best place to beach her: the higher up the better; for the flat hard stretch of sand which forms the Sau- gor Flat narrows as it extends north, from three-fourths of a mile to one quarter of a mile at Black Point, which, or as near it as she could go, was the spot where Mr. Paulson meant to take the ship. But the Rescue came up to the ship at 7-30, when she was about the Upper Middleton Buoy; and taking it, that until she hove to, the Champion was making five miles an hour, she had shortened sail to increase her chance of being assisted in answer to her signals, we cannot see that there was any prospect of her getting so far north as Black Point: unless indeed Mr. Paulson's expres-sion of a quarter of an hour means that after the expiration of that time he would have given up all hope of rescue and have directed the ship solely with a view to beaching her. Even taking that view of his meaning, we think the doubt expressed by him as to the possibility of getting as high as Black Point well founded; the ship must, we think, have most probably been beached lower down. This however relates only or chiefly to the greater or less probability of loss of life. There would have been the longer space of shoal water for the crew to struggle through the farther south the ship was beached.

At the best, having regard to the state of the sea-breakers on the Flat, as Mr. Paulson says, serious danger to the lives of the crew there must have been, and from that danger they were saved by the Rescue.

[109] As to the danger to the ship and cargo, the Captain said that had the ship been beached she would not, in his opinion, have come off again. The Chief Officer said that in all probability she would have gone to pieces. Mr. Paulson said that to save the ship was very doubtful, because of the state of the sea at the time; there were breakers on the beach. There was little, if any, cross-examination on this matter. No evidence was tendered to contradict the promovent's witnesses upon it, or to show facts which might lead to a contrary conclusion; nor were the promovent's expert witnesses asked anything on the subject.

The evidence as to the consequences of the bumping sustained by the ship at the Saugor Sands the night before, which was not challenged, is to the effect that she would have gone to pieces had she had another low tide of bumping; and we see no reason to doubt that the uncon-tradicted opinions of the witnesses we have referred to were well founded. No means are suggested in any part of the evidence by which either ship or cargo could have been saved from, what would have been practically, destruction. Even from the amount of water which reached the cargo during the cyclone, although, according to the evidence of the Carpenter, which we see no reason to doubt, the water was kept by the pumping low enough (14 inches) to prevent its reaching the cargo, more than 300 bales were damaged by mildew from contact with the water which got in through the straining of the decks, though the ship was battened down. We think the Rescue saved the lives of the crew of the Champion from great peril, and the ship and cargo from imminent destruction.
The next question is, as to the character of the services rendered by the Rescue, having reference to risk incurred, skill and enterprise shown, and value of any property endangered in the act of salvage.

The learned Judge finds that the salvage services were rendered in the dark, with a heavy sea and wind blowing. He finds that there was some appreciable risk to the tug; and so far some risk to the lives of those on board; but does not think the risk was of a grave character. He does not think the risk much greater than when performing ordinary towage services. Upon this point also the learned Judge’s decision is appealed from.

[110] The case for the promovents is that the Rescue, after rounding the Champion and learning her condition, passed a rope on board of her for the purpose of hauling a hawser belonging to the Rescue on board, and that in doing this it was necessary for the Rescue to approch near to the Champion; that having regard to the darkness, to the heavy sea and wind, and to the fact that the Champion was, as she lay hove to, sheering about from time to time, such necessary proximity to her was very dangerous to the Rescue and to the crew on board of her. Further that the line to which the hawser was attached had, ultimately at any rate, to be passed on board the Champion by a boat manned by some of the Rescue’s crew, and that this was a service of great danger in the then state of the weather. This is the first branch of the case of the Rescue, so far as danger to herself and crew, labour and skill deserving reward, are concerned.

The second is this: after the hawser was passed on board, and before it was tightened, the two ships got to the Long Sand Flat Buoy. Then the Rescue took the Champion in tow and turned her round so as to stem the flood which was then running. In this position both vessels remained until the ebb began to make. It then became necessary, the wind still blowing strongly from the south-west, that the Rescue should move the Champion; as Captain Stone puts it, “the ebb tide began to make and of course the ship would come on top of me. I turned round and round; I turned round eight times in the space of two miles.” In fact until daylight. The hawser parted after daylight; they passed another, and afterwards another; and that day towed the ship up the river, bringing her to Garden Reach that evening.

As to what occurred in passing the hawser Mr. Paulson gives a perfectly clear and detailed account of an attempt to pass a line between the jibboom of the Champion and the Rescue; an attempt which he describes as having been made twice unsuccessfully, and as being attended with danger to the Rescue. No other witness describes this, although no one says it did not take place. Mr. Paulson had the best opportunity of knowing whether it was done or not. It is not inconsistent with any of the other evidence that such an attempt was made.

[111] But Mr. Paulson says that in the morning when a second hawser was passed it was done by a boat. In this his recollection is in conflict with that of Captain Stone, who says, “we did not lower a boat, a line was thrown from the jibboom. We could see then.”

The learned Judge in the original Court is of opinion that Mr. Paulson’s memory is at fault in this matter, that he confounds one occasion with the other; and we think we ought not to dissent from that view entertained as it is by the Judge who heard the evidence. We think we should leave out of the case any supposition of danger to the Rescue from an attempt to throw a line on board her from the Champion’s jibboom.
As to the passing of the hawser by boat: taking it, then, that the Captain of the Champion refers to any risk run by the Rescue as run in passing the hawser by boat, we must consider his evidence.

"Q.—Had the Rescue any difficulty in passing hawsers?

"A.—Well, yes she had.

"Q.—Did she incur any danger? (objected to.)

"A.—The danger she would run would be of coming across our bows and standing a chance of being run into by us.

"Q.—Did she as a matter of fact incur that danger?

"A.—Well, yes she did certainly."

In cross-examination he says: "The tug was 30 yards off. He was on both sides of me, he had to watch his chance; the ship was sheering about."

We own that we were somewhat struck with this phrase "watch his chance" as being appropriate to an attempt to approach the ship to take a line thrown from her. It is, however, in any case sufficient to indicate that the ships were in dangerous proximity in the course of the discharge of the duty which the Rescue had undertaken.

The Chief Officer:

"Q.—Had the Rescue any difficulty in getting alongside of you? (objected to.)

"A.—Yes. It certainly required some skill to come alongside of us with that sea that was running and the breeze that was blowing.

[112] We shall not refer to Mr. Paulson's evidence as to the danger of dropping the line. He says, and we have no doubt upon the evidence as to the state of the weather, correctly, that there was danger in the boat helping to pass the line.

As to the towing up and down Mr. Elson says: "I heard what the state of the weather was. It was very hard weather. There was great risk of the tug being collided with in towing on an ebb and the wind aft and towing at night. Tugs do not generally tow at night. As to passing the hawser, there was danger to the lives of the crew of the boat." Mr. Cox says (passing over for the moment his opinion as to the danger in passing the hawser as Mr. Paulson described it):—"I heard how the Rescue towed the Champion up and down. In doing that the Rescue was exposed to very considerable risk; the weather being hazy at the time would cause the risk."

To Court.—"Yes: it amounts to this, that there is more risk in a hazy night than a bright night. The danger to the men in the boat was, I think, extraordinary danger."

As to the passing of the hawser, we understand Mr. Cox to regard the necessary proximity of the tug to the Champion, even while the line was being passed by boat, as involving danger to the tug.

Mr. Alison's evidence is also to the effect that the danger of towing up and down a ship with no anchor, in dirty weather, was a real one.

Upon the whole evidence of these witnesses, parts of which we have above referred to, we have to form our opinion. We consider it, with reference to what is we think established, that though the severity of the weather had moderated, it was still blowing hard with squalls; that the squalls continued during the night, with bursts of rain occasionally obscuring the Saugor Light, and, as we have already said, the sea was high.

Upon this part of the case it is established, we think, that the salvage services of the Rescue were attended with; first, danger to the lives of the crew of the boat; second, danger to the safety of tug (a) when engaged in passing the hawser line, (b) when towing the Champion up and down during the night in the confined space of the Saugor Roads and with shipping lying there; and, third, so far as the tug ran that danger, there was risk to the [113] crew other than the boat's crew. We do not think the latter danger to life was of a very grave kind: but we are satisfied that the danger of injury to this valuable ship was serious, though such as might be, as it was, avoided by the exercise of skill in the management of her.

Therefore, in the view of the evidence which we take, we differ from the learned Judge in the original Court as to the danger from which the Rescue saved the Champion, and as to the risk incurred by the Rescue and the nature of the work performed by her, which we conclude to have been very greatly more than ordinary towage services.

We have said that the impugnants tendered no evidence upon the different points arising in the case; the evidence given on behalf of the promovents in explicit, and is, save in respect of, first, the dropping of the hawser line, second, a manifest error as to the depth of water in the pumps, i.e., 26 inches in place of 14, and, third, a mistake of one hour made by Mr. Paulson as to the time when the Gasper Light ships were passed, none of which mistaken statements in any way influence our judgment in favour of the appellants, unshaken in cross-examination.

No doubt there are cases in which evidence, even uncontradicted, may, as to matters of fact, be so incredible, and, as to matters of professional or expert opinion, so absurd, as to disappear in the face of hostile criticism. But we are of opinion that the evidence in this case is very far from being of such a character. As to the sources from which much of the evidence in the case comes, they are, in the first place, the officers and two men of the Champion herself: persons whose evidence might naturally have been expected to come from the impugnants: and who if their minds were biassed at all, might be expected to show a bias in favour of the Champion: while as to Mr. Paulson and the expert witnesses, there is nothing, either in their position or in the character of the evidence given by them, to entitle us to suspect a prejudice on their part in favour of the promovents, and they give their evidence, it must be remembered, with the guarantee of that professional reputation which they are no doubt highly interested in preserving.

It has been justly observed to us, that in this large port abounding in persons skilled in nautical matters, and well [114] acquainted with the navigation of the river, there must have been ample means of adducing skilled evidence to challenge the evidence given on behalf of the promovents, had that evidence and the conclusion to be derived from it been really open to substantial criticism. Nor can it be disregarded that the written statement of the promovents gave, from the outset, ample notice of what their case was.

It has been often stated as a rule followed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in cases of salvage, that the Court will not disturb the conclusion of the original Court as to the amount of reward, save in the case of some great difference between what the appellate Court and the original Court consider proper for the services rendered.

In the present case any difficulty arising from that rule hardly arises. The learned Judge in the original Court has awarded £1,500 to the promovents, upon the footing that the Rescue did not save the Champion from a position in which it would have been necessary to beach her; that if beached, it does not appear that her destruction would have been imminent or even highly probable; and that the Rescue in performing her salvage services did not run substantial risk. We do not dissent from the estimate which he has made, upon that footing, of the reward to which the Rescue was entitled; and we may, we think, assume that if, upon the evidence, he had found what, after the advantage of hearing a very careful argument in appeal, we have felt bound to find, in addition to the conclusion arrived at by him, he would, as we now feel bound to do, have awarded a higher sum than the £ 1,500.

We hold that the due and proper salvage award for the services of the salvors in this case is £ 2,400, to be calculated at the exchange of the day mentioned in the decree of the lower Court; and to be apportioned in the like proportions to the same persons as provided by the original Court with respect to the £ 1,500.

We think the bail was excessive; and that we should adopt the course followed by Brett, J., in The George Gordon (1) to this extent; that the impugnants should have, as costs of the excessive bail required from them, the difference between the interest on [115] Government paper in which the bail has stood and the market rate from the time the bail was given until the excessive bail be released, and that that amount be set-off against the judgment debt. It should be referred to the Registrar to fix the amount, but if the parties agree as to the amount before the decree is signed, the reference need not be included in the decree, and the amount agreed on may be inserted in the decree as the amount to be deducted from the judgment debt. The amount of bail was excessive so far as it exceeded £ 4,000 for salvage reward, and £ 500 for costs.

We think the appellants must have their costs of the appeal. The appeal, as we have already held, is under the High Court Act and the Letters Patent, and the procedure in it is mainly governed by the Civil Procedure Code, and we think the usual practice of this Court in appeals from the original Side should therefore be followed.

Costs of filing cross-objections will be allowed to the respondents. The appeal is allowed with costs on scale No. 2.

Appeal allowed.

TOOMEY (Plaintiff) v. Rama Sahi (Defendant).* [1st July, 1889.]

When consideration connected with the person with whom a contract is made form a material element of the contract, it may well be that such a contract on that ground alone is one which cannot be assigned without the promisor's consent so as to entitle the assignee to sue on it.

* Reference No. 2-A of 1889, made by Moulvie Abdul Barry, Munsif of Mozufferpore, dated the 9th of May 1889.

(1) L.R. 9 P.D. 46.
Stevens v. Benning (1) referred to.

By an agreement in writing, dated 13th December 1882, and executed in favour of M. D. and H. D., who were the proprietors of an Indigo concern, the defendant Rama Sahi agreed to sow indigo, taking the seed and tanda from M. D. and H. D.'s concern, on four bigahs of land out of his holding [116] selected, measured, and prepared by M. D. and H. D. or their amlah and when the indigo was fit for weeding, "to weed, re-weed, and turn it up to the extent necessary according to the directions of the amlah of the concern;" and when the indigo was fit for reaping, to "reap and load it on carts according to the directions of the amlah of the concern;" and "if any portion of the said indigo land "was "in the judgment of the amlah of the concern found bad," in lieu thereof to get some other land in his holding measured, and "on the land so measured in bysack to "sow Bhadon crops only which will be reaped in Bhadur. The defendant also agreed not to sow on the land measured any crop that might "cause obstacle to the cultivation of indigo," and, if he did so, "the amlah of the concern" should "be at liberty to destroy such crop," and he should not "oppose the destruction thereof nor sue in the Courts, Civil or Criminal, for destruction of the same." As regards a breach of any condition, it was provided: "If I or my heirs depart from the conditions of this indigo engagement directly or indirectly, or in any way neglect to cultivate or do not cultivate indigo, I or they shall pay to the above-named M. D. and H. D. damages for the same from my or their person and property and shall raise no plea or objection."

In 1886 M. D. and H. D. assigned the entire benefit of this agreement to the plaintiff.

In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant for damages on account of his alleged failure to cultivate indigo for the plaintiff's concern in accordance with the terms of the agreement of the 13th December 1882: Held, that the agreement must be construed as one which had been entered into by the defendant with reference to the personal position, circumstances, and qualifications of M. D. and H. D. and their amlah, and that therefore it was not assignable so as to give the assignee a right to sue upon it in his own name as for a breach of contract.

This was a reference by the First Munsif of Mozufferpore exercising Small Cause Court powers, and arose out of a suit for damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff, George Toomey, who was the owner of the Kanti Indigo Concern, brought a suit against the defendant Rama Sahi for damages, on account of his alleged failure to cultivate indigo for that concern in the years 1293, 1294, and 1925 Fasli, in accordance with the terms of an agreement, dated the 13th December 1882, and executed by him (the defendant) in favour of Baboos Mathura Das and Hanuman Das, who had assigned the agreement to the plaintiff.

At the time when Baboos Mathura Das and Hanuman Das established a rival factory, called the Mirzapore Indigo concern, there [117] was a dispute between them and the owner of the Kanti Concern, the plaintiff. This dispute was shortly after settled, and the owners of the rival factories entered into an agreement, dated the 4th March 1886, whereby a certain boundary line was fixed, and the propertied of each of the two factories agreed not to have their indigo sown by ryots holding jotes outside the boundary line so drawn on their side of the factory. In consequence of this agreement the jotes of some of the ryots, who had executed agreements to sow indigo for Baboos Mathura Das and Hanuman Das, fell within the area over which the Baboos had given up their rights to have indigo sown for themselves; and accordingly the Baboos assigned the entire benefit under the agreements executed by these ryots in favour of the Kanti Concern. The defendant was one of these ryots; and the agreement to sow indigo which he executed in favour of the Baboos, was dated the 13th December 1882. The plaintiff sued the defendant on that agreement as the assignee of the Baboos. The defendant contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue him on his agreement of the 13th December 1882, inasmuch as he had never agreed to cultivate indigo for the assignees of Baboo Mathura Das and Hanuman Das, and there was no provision in the agreement that the representatives or assignees of the Baboos should have the right to enforce it. On behalf of the plaintiff it was urged that, although the term "heirs" was not expressly mentioned in the defendant's agreement, it must nevertheless be implied, especially as s. 45 of the Contract Act of 1872 provided for such an omission; and that similarly the word "assignees" must be implied. The Munsif dismissed the suit with costs, contingent on the opinion of the High Court to which he referred the following question:

"Whether by operation of law the word assignee could be imported into the agreement of the defendant dated the 13th December 1882."

This agreement was as follows:

"I the declarant do of my own free will and accord appear before Baboo Mathura Das and Baboo Hanuman Das, proprietor of Mirzapore Indigo Concern Chakle Nye Pergana Besorah give [148] in writing this indigo engagement for cultivation of indigo on four bighas of first class land by a six and half cubit measuring pole within the area of mouza Beerpore Tuppeh Bhatysala Pergana Besarath out of my holding as per details at foot from 1290 to 1296 (one thousand two hundred and ninety-six) Fasli on receipt of Rs. 16 as advance and validly declare as follows:

In the commencement of the month of Assin and Kartick I or my heirs in company with the amlah of the concern shall on the requisition of the above-named Babus get the said (four) bigahs out of my holding as selected by the amlah of the concern and the above named Babus measure and till plough and turn up the same well as may be necessary for the term of this indigo engagement: And when the indigo land in the said mouza will be fit for sowing indigo the above-named Babus or their amlah shall get it measured and prepared: After the measurement and preparation when the sowing season will come in Falgoon and Chait I or my heirs shall sow it taking indigo seeds and tandi from the concern: When the indigo will be fit for weeding I or my heirs shall forthwith weed re-weed and turn it up, . . . to the extent necessary according to the directions of the amlah of the concern for the term of this indigo engagement: When the indigo will be fit for reaping I or my heirs shall in the indigo-manufacturing season reap it and load it on carts according to the directions of the amlah of the concern: I or my heirs shall plough the land with stumps in time and when the indigo grown from stumps will be fit for manufacture I or my heirs shall in the season of manufacturing indigo grown from stumps reap and load on carts the same also: If any portion of the said indigo land is in the judgment of the amlah of the concern of the above-named Babus found bad I (or my heirs) shall in lieu of such bad land again get measured some other land in my holding in the month of Bysack for the future and shall on the land so measured in Bysack sow Bhadmon crops only which will be reaped in Bhadur: I or my heirs shall not sow on the land so measured in Bhadur any rabi crop such as rahan bunga etc., the sowing of which may cause obstacle to the cultivation of indigo from the commencement of the month of Assin: Should I or my heirs do so the amlah of the concern of the above-named Baboos shall be [119] at liberty to destroy such crop and I or my heirs shall not oppose the destruction thereof nor sue in the Courts Civil or Criminal for destruction of the same: Should I or my heirs sue in the Courts, Civil or Criminal, such suit shall under the terms of this indigo engagement be inadmissible and invalid: As regards the bad land that the above-named Baboos or their Amlah may of their own will and accord give up on taking some other land in exchange I shall sow on it any crop I like: I shall take from the above named Baboo value of the indigo at Rs. 12 per bigah year by year for the term of this indigo engagement: As regards the sum of Rs. 16 now taken as advance I shall at the end of the year 1296 Fasli which is the last year of the term of this indigo engagement set-off this sum against the value of the indigo of that year and take the remaining value due to me according to account: I shall take advance on the 1st Assin make weeding in Bysack and take value in full in Bhadur every year during the terms of this indigo engagement: If I or my heirs depart from the conditions of this indigo engagement directly or indirectly or in any way neglect to cultivate or do not cultivate indigo I or they shall pay to the above-named Baboos damages for the same at Company's Rs. 20 per bigah from my or their person and property and shall raise no plea or objection. To this purport I give in writing these few words in the shape of an indigo engagement for a term of seven years to come to use when required."

Mr. Evans, and Mr. O'Kinealy (instructed by Mr. G. B. McNair), for the plaintiff.

Baboo Kali Kishen Sen, for the defendant.

OPINION.

This is a reference made by the first Munsif of Mozufferpore upon a point arising in a suit brought by the owner of the Kanti Indigo Concern against the defendant for damages on account of his alleged failure to cultivate indigo for that concern in the years 1293, 1294 and 1295, in accordance with the terms of an agreement entered into by him and dated the 13th of December 1882. The Munsif has referred to us the question [120] whether by operation of law the word "assignees" can be imported into that agreement. The agreement was made with Baboos Mathura Das and Hanuman Das, who assigned, or attempted to assign, it to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff as such assignee now sues on that agreement.

The arguments of the two learned Counsel, who appeared before us on behalf of the plaintiff went over a very wide range. In stating our opinion that the conclusion of the Munsif was right, we shall limit ourselves to one ground only. We do not propose to deal with the general questions with regard to the rights of persons to whom contracts of various kinds are assigned in this country. Assuming for the purposes of the argument as a general rule the assignability of contracts in this country, and the power of the assignees to sue upon them, we do not think that in the present case the contract was one, which upon a fair construction of it, can be held assignable so as to give the assignee a right to sue upon it.

This agreement is described by the defendant Rama Sahi as an "engagement for cultivation of indigo on four bighas of first class land by six and a half cubit measuring pole within the area of mouza Beerpore Tuppeh Bhatasa ParganaBesarah out of my holding as per details at foot from 1290 to 1296 Fasli on receipt of Rs. 16 as advance." It provides that "in the commencement of the month of Assin and Kartick I or my heirs in company with the amlah of the concern shall on the requisition of the abovenamed Baboos get the said four bigahs out of my holding as selected by the amlah of the concern and the above-named Baboos measured." When it is fit for sowing indigo the Baboos or their amlah shall get it measured. "After the measurement in Falgoon or Chait I or my heirs shall sow it taking indigo seeds and tandi from the concern. When the indigo will be fit for weeding I or my heirs shall forthwith weed, re-weed, and turn it up . . . . . . . . to the extent necessary according to the directions of the amlah of the concern." When the indigo is fit for reaping I shall "reap and load it on carts according to the directions of the amlah of the concern." Then again "if any portion of the said indigo land is in the judgment of the amlah of the above-named Baboos found bad, I or my heirs shall in lieu of such bad land again get measured some other land in my holding," and, on the land so measured "sow Bhadon crops only which will be reaped in Bhadur." Then there is a provision that he is not to sow on the land measured any crop which may cause obstacles to the cultivation of indigo. Should he do so, "the amlah of the concern of the above-named Baboos shall be at liberty to destroy such crops, and I or my heirs shall not oppose the destruction." Then as to the bad land which the Baboos or their amlah give up on taking other land in exchange, he is to be entitled to sow it as he pleases. Then there is a provision for payment of damages to the Baboos in case of his neglecting to cultivate.

We think that this contract is one which may reasonably be viewed as having been entered into with reference to the personal position, circumstances, and qualifications of the Baboos and their amlah. It makes the Baboos and their amlah sole Judges in matters of great importance and it does seem to us that it would be an unreasonable construction of this agreement were we to hold that it could possibly have been in the contemplation of the provision that any persons, the servants of any persons, the managers of any concern to the owners of which the Baboos may please to assign this contract, were to stand in the place of the Baboos and exercise the powers conferred by this agreement on the Baboos and their amlah. When considerations connected with the person with whom a contract is made form a material element of the contract, it may well be that such a contract on that ground alone is one which cannot be assigned without the promisee's consent, so as to entitle the assignee to sue him on it.

We have not before us the question whether or not the benefit of such a contract as this would have passed to the executors of the Baboos, supposing they had any. We should perhaps in that case be disposed to construe the contract as one which, together with the right to sue on it, the defendant might reasonably be supposed to have intended to be passed to the executors carrying on the same concern. This of course is but an obiter dictum, as the question does not arise in the case.

[122] We may, with reference to the principle to which we have just referred, that when considerations relating to the person with whom a man is willing to contract, as if personal relations between the parties, or the personal condition or qualifications of the promisee, form an element or may fairly be supposed to have done so in the entering into of the contract, mention a passage in Vice-Chancellor Wood's judgment in the case of Stevens v. Benning (1), at pp. 175-6. In this case we limit ourselves to the proposition that this contract cannot be construed as one which was entered into save with reference to the person, qualifications, status, and position of the Baboos of the concern of which they had charge. Therefore, we hold that neither by importation into the agreement, nor by any equitable principle, is the plaintiff entitled to sue in this case in his own name as for a breach of contract.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:
Lord Hobhouse, Lord Macnaghten and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

TARACHURN CHATTERJII (Defendant) v. SURASHCHUNDER MUKERJI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).
[27th and 29th March and 14th May, 1889.]

Hindu law—Will—Construction of will of Hindu testator—Power to adopt conferred on testator’s widow ended on estate vesting in his son’s widow—Gift of beneficial interest.

On a claim by the children of the testator’s daughter, as against his brother’s son, held that the testator’s direction to his executor (who was his elder brother), to make over whatever remained of his estate, after payment of debts, to his, the testator’s son (“when he comes of age”) had the effect of a gift to that son operating at that time, and that the words in the will, “if my minor son dies,” meant, in order to be consistent with the above, “dies before attaining full age.”

On the death of the testator’s son, after attaining full age and leaving a widow, the testator’s widow, although empowered by the will to adopt if the testator’s son should die without son or daughter (which he did), could not exercise this power after the estate had, consequently upon the son’s death, vested in his widow for her widow’s estate.

The testator’s son, having succeeded to the estate under the above provisions, himself made his will, whereby he directed that “his cousin brother” (the defendant above mentioned), on attaining full age, “becoming dakhilkar of my share as well as the shares of my elder uncle,” should maintain his, the testator’s mother and widow.

Held, that this was not an absolute gift of the beneficial interest, and that the claim of the children of the daughter of the parent testator was valid.

Appeal from a decree (7th March 1886) of the High Court, which reversed a decree (10th September 1884) of the Second Subordinate Judge of the District of the 24-pergunnahs.

The present questions related to the construction of two wills. The suit was for a declaration that the plaintiffs, minors suing by their mother, were entitled as heirs to the whole estate of the late Kalichurn Chatterji, only son of the late Madhub Chunder, whose daughter, Thakomeni, having been married to one Jogesh Chunder Mukerjee, was the mother who now sued on behalf of her children. Madhub Chunder died in 1845, having been joint with his elder brother, Anund Chunder, who died in 1850, leaving a son, the defendant Tarachurn and a widow Pearimoni, also a defendant. Madhub Chunder by his will, of which is elder brother Anund Chunder was appointed executor, gave a half share in his estate, in case his son Kalichurn should die a minor and without issue, to the son of his daughter, if she should have one; and the other half to Anund Chunder's son Tarachurn. He also gave to his widow a power of adoption to be exercised in events which however did not occur.

(1) 1 K. and J. 168.
(2) 14 I.A. 67 = 10 M. 205.

At an earlier stage it was determined, and was not now disputed, that Tarachurn was born before the death of Madhub Chunder. Kalichurn attained full age in 1850, when he, along with his uncle's widow Pearimoni, took the management of the family property. Three years later, in 1854, he died without issue but leaving a widow Matangini, a minor. He had made a will, dated 14th December 1853, providing as to Tarachurn's becoming \textit{dakhilkar}, and directing the adoption of one of the sons of the latter, in certain circumstances, by Matangini; which provision occasioned some of the doubts in the construction of the document.

The plaintiffs' case was that they were entitled to their shares upon a partition by right of inheritance. Tarachurn, in his defence, relied upon the wills as negativing the claim. He also set up a surrender to himself by Kalichurn's widow of her estate and adverse possession beyond the period of limitation.

The Second Subordinate Judge held that, under the will of Kalichurn, the defendant had a life estate in his property, and that the plaintiffs' title would not accrue till his death.

On the plaintiffs' appeal to the High Court, a Divisional Bench (Prinsep and Trevelyan, JJ.) reversed this decision, being of opinion that the plaintiffs' title as heir was not affected by anything in the will either of Madhub or of Kalichurn, or by surrender or by adverse possession.

That part of the judgment, which bears upon the only questions to be disposed of on this appeal, was as follows:—

"Madhub's will may be shortly described in the following terms:—

After appointing his elder brother Anund to be his executor, and making provision for payment of his debts and certain expenses connected with his family, it provides that his widow should receive a certain sum as maintenance. Anund was appointed to manage the estate as heretofore, until the testator's minor son Kalichurn attained majority, when Anund is directed to account to him. Permission to his widow to adopt with the consent of Anund is given, if Kalichurn should die without issue. In the event of Kalichurn dying, it is provided that if Thakomoni, his daughter, should be married and give birth to a son, then on that son attaining majority, he should receive one-half of the testator's estate, the other half going to Anund's son and in the event of her dying without a son, she would receive maintenance."

In regard to the will of Kalichurn, the Judges expressed the following opinion:—

On Tarachurn attaining majority, it was further provided that he should become \textit{dakhilkar} of the entire estate, including both his own and Kalichurn's share. The testator's widow is directed to adopt a son of Tarachurn, or, in the event of Tarachurn having no son, to adopt a suitable person. The testator's wish is expressed that the property should remain joint; that his widow should \textbf{[125]} live with the family; and that, if there should be any disagreement and she should live in her own father's house, she should receive maintenance. In the event of her not making an adoption, it is provided that she should have no concern with, or right to, the goods and properties; but inasmuch as no term is specified within which she was to adopt, this stipulation would have no effect until she became physically incapable of adopting. There is nothing in the will to show any intention on the part of the testator to disinherit her widow. The only portion of the will bearing in that direction, as has been already pointed out, relates to her receiving maintenance in a certain sum in the event of her finding it necessary to leave the family house and reside with her father, and on her failure to adopt, which, for reasons stated, is inoperative.

"The object of the testator in giving her maintenance only in the event of her leaving his house, was not to disinherit her but to ensure that the property should remain joint.

"The will declares that 'he who will be heir for the time being will jointly continue in possession of all the aforesaid properties with his co-sharers.' Looking at the general scheme of the will, we think that the widow would be included in the term 'heir for the time being.'

"In our opinion, therefore, on the death of Kalichur, his minor widow became entitled to his estate, which was to be under the management, first, of his step-mother Srimati Debi, and then on his attaining majority, of the senior male member Kalichurn; that a son was to be adopted, but that no provision was made for the inheritance in the event of failure to make this adoption."

Tarachurn appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant, argued that he took an estate for his own benefit in Kalichurn's half of the joint family property, liable only to be defeated in case of an adoption by Matangini, in accordance with the power given to her by her husband's will. The appellant did not take as a mere trustee for her and the heirs of Kalichurn. He was, in the event that had occurred, entitled to one-half of Madhub Chunder's estate, under his will, and that this was so, was confirmed by the will of Kalichurn and the expressions used in it.

[126] Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondents, argued that the High Court had correctly construed the wills of Madhub Chunder and Kalichurn.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., replied, claiming in the end that the High Court ought not to have made Tarachurn liable for the costs of the suit.

JUDGMENT.

Afterwards on 14th May, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by SIR R. COUCH.—The appellant (one of the defendants in the suit) is the son of Anund Chunder, who died in 1850. The respondents (the plaintiffs in the suit) are the grandsons of Madhub Chunder, the brother of Anund. He died on the 14th October 1845. Madhub Chunder had a son, Kalichurn, who died on the 23rd October 1853, after attaining majority, and a daughter, Thakomoni, the mother of the respondents. Kalichurn left a widow, Matangini, who died on the 21st December 1879. The property in suit is the share of Madhub in the joint property of himself and Anund, and the respondents are entitled to it by inheritance if it is not disposed of by the will of Madhub, which was made shortly before his death, or by the will of Kalichurn, by virtue of one or the other of which the appellant claimed to be entitled to the property. It was not disputed that the will of Kalichurn was genuine, and Madhub's was found to be so by both the lower Courts. The only questions in this appeal are the constructions of these wills.

The will of Madhub addressed to his brother Anund, after stating that he had a half share in their joint property, and giving directions for the payment of debts and the maintenance of his wife and son and daughter, and the education of the son and other matters, says: "God forbid, but if my minor son should die and my daughter should get married and a grandson be born, then on the said grandson's attaining majority you will give him half of my share, whatever it may be, and give half to your son: God forbid, but if she having no son becomes a widow, then you will pay her Rs. 4 a month for maintenance. You shall perform the Sharodia (Durga) puja, srads of parents and others and pay perquisites and presents to the spiritual guide and family priest according to the circumstances and your sense: God forbid, if you die before my son and daughter attain majority, then you may appoint attorney whomsoever you may think fit. You shall account for and make over whatever remains of the estate after payment of debts to my son when he comes of age. If you be of opinion that my half share should be sold and Company's papers should be purchased (with the proceeds) you may sell it for its proper value. Further, if my only son dies before he gets children, my wife may, with your consent, adopt a son." It has been found by the High Court, and is not now disputed, that Tarachurn was born before the date of this will.

The direction to make over the estate to the son when he comes of age has the effect of a gift to him to take effect at that time, and the words, "If my minor son dies," in order to be consistent with that, must mean dies during minority. On the son's death after coming of age leaving Matangi, his widow, Madhub Chunder's wife would not have power to adopt a son, the estate of Kalichurn having become vested in his widow.—Thayammal v. Venkatarama Aiyar (1).

The will of Kalichurn is now to be considered, as, if the appellant has any title to the property, it must be under that. In the official translation of it in the Record of proceedings it is said in several places to be torn and illegible, and it was agreed before their Lordships that the statement of it in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge should be taken as correct. This is as follows (the figures 1, 2, &c., being inserted by the Judge):

"The testator after describing the properties standing Swamami and benami and in possession and out of it, and stating that his father, Madhub, and Madhub's elder brother, Anund, had jointly acquired them with their own earnings, and were in joint possession and enjoyment (dakhal voge) thereof, and were performing the ceremonies and maintaining the family with the profits and their own earnings, says in the will: 'As my younger uncle died, leaving no issue or widow, in 1248, during the lifetime of my father and the elder uncle, they remained in possession (or were possessors, dakhikars) of all the estate. In the meantime, though the influence of evil stars, they became heavily involved in debts, and before they were all paid off, my father died in Assin 1252. I was then a minor, and my mother

(1) 14 I.A. 67 = 10 M. 205.
Srimati Debi, was my guardian in law Courts under the guidance of my elder uncle, who (with his own earnings and profits of the estate, performed the ceremonies and maintained the family, myself and my mother, as before, and paid off a large proportion of the debts) died in Srabun 1257, leaving his minor son, Tarachurn Chatterji, and my aunt, his widow, as his heirs. The said aunt, through evil advice of bad men, being about to divide the properties, I, on attaining my majority in 1257, made statements in some Courts with regards to some of the properties as if they were my father's self-acquired and exclusive properties, with a view to prevent the threatened division (or partition), and, taking upon myself the payment of debts due to some of the creditors, made arrangements with them and am gradually paying them off. But, in fact, maintaining those properties, debts, and dues still joint, I am in joint possession (dakhilkar) of the whole estate in conjunction with my said aunt, and am performing the ceremonies and maintaining the family. But I am so seriously ill now that my life is despaired of, and man is mortal and life is uncertain. I therefore deem it proper to make a will of the properties that will fall to my share. So, laying down these rules I make my will, that (as) ere this my mother was my guardian according to the anumati-patra of my mother and my elder uncle's consent, (1) I appoint my mother (step) the executrix of my said whole estate. So long as my cousin brother Tarachurn does not attain majority, my mother, in conjunction with my aunts, shall maintain and protect my minor wife, Matangini Debi, and perform the ceremonies and maintain the family as before, pay off the creditors' debts, conduct the law suits already pending in Courts or to be instituted hereafter, file documents, pay debts howsoever incurred, take back documents and realize dues. (2) Afterwards on attaining majority, my cousin brother, Tarachurn, becoming possessor (dakhilkar) of my share as well as the share of my elder uncle, shall maintain my mother and wife. (3) Further, I, being the only son of my father, it is provided in his said anumati-patra that if I die before the birth of any issue, my mother shall adopt a son according to Shastras. If my mother does adopt a son, well and good; otherwise on attaining majority my wife shall adopt one of Tarachurn's sons, and shall pass her time (life) under the kurthaship (management and protection) of Tarachurn. God forbid, if Tarachurn does not get issue, then she may adopt a son of somebody else fit for the purpose. (4) When the ijmali properties have not hitherto been partitioned, they shall remain joint. (5) And save and except turuf Belpukuria chuk lands purchased in auction, nobody shall have power to dispose of any other property by mortgage, gift, or sale. (6) The heir for the time being shall remain in possession (dakhilkar) of the aforesaid whole estate jointly with the co-sharer and perform the ceremonies and maintain the family, take proper notice of my sister and cousin sister, and my wife shall accept mantra (spiritual or religious initiation) according to the kulachar (family custom) from my [129] spiritual guide, or whomsoever may be living of the family of my guru, and shall live in my house. (7) My mother and others shall cause her to perform the proper religious ceremonies. (8) If there be disagreement in any respect and she lives in her father's house, she shall get Rs. 10 per month for her maintenance from my mother and others. (9) If she does not adopt a son in the manner heretofore provided for, there shall remain (or be) no concern (elaka) with and right (sattwa) to the estate and things, &c., on the part of my wife. (10) My clothes and raiments are left in the care of my mother and aunt. Tarachurn shall get them (paibek) when he comes of age. (11) Except those (clothes and raiments)
In the lower Courts much stress appears to have been laid on the word dakhilkar, which it was contended applied to one holding by virtue of his own title, and not to a possession held on behalf of another as an executor or trustee. The ordinary meaning of the word is "occupant," but the testator where he says he is in joint possession of the whole estate in conjunction with his aunt, and where (at No. 6) he says "the heir for the time being shall remain in possession of the aforesaid whole estate jointly with the co-sharer and perform the ceremonies and maintain the family, appears to give it a large meaning. In order to see what it means in the sentence, "Afterwards on attaining majority my cousin brother, Tarachurn, becoming possessor (dakhilkar) of my share as well as the share of my elder uncle, shall maintain my mother and wife," the context must be looked at. These are the only words that can operate as a gift to Tarachurn. The testator begins by appointing his step-mother executrix, meaning manager of his estate. So long as Tarachurn does not attain majority, she is to manage in conjunction with his aunt. On attaining majority, Tarachurn is to become possessor of the share, whether in the same capacity as the step-mother or otherwise is doubtful, but what follows assists in discovering the intention of the testator. He alludes to the provision in his father's will that if he dies without issue, his mother should adopt a son, who apparently, he thinks, should take the estate; and he says that if his mother does not adopt a son, his wife shall adopt one of Tarachurn's sons, and if Tarachurn has no sons, she may adopt the son of somebody else. That he wished an adoption to be made is apparent from the direction (9) that if his wife did not adopt a son she was to have no concern with, and right "to, the estate and things, &c.," and the words at (6), "the heir for the time being shall remain in possession," seem to be intended to refer to an adopted son rather than to Tarachurn. If the intention was that Tarachurn on attaining majority was to take the estate for his own benefit, it would be giving him a direct interest to prevent the wife making an adoption, which he might do by refusing to go one of his sons, and thus defeat that intention. It is more reasonable to suppose that the intention was to benefit the family of Anund by obliging the wife to adopt a son of Tarachurn, than by giving the estate absolutely to Tarachurn on his attaining majority. Their Lordships are of opinion that the proper construction of the will is, that it provided for the management of the property on the death of Kalichurn, and gave power to his widow to adopt, under certain limitations; that, on his death, his widow Matangini became entitled to his estate, and on her death the plaintiffs became entitled. This was the opinion of the High Court, which made a decree accordingly, reversing the decree of the first Court. That Court had ordered the costs of Tarachurn and another defendant, Ram Krishen Nusker, to be paid out of the estate of Kalichurn, but the High Court ordered those defendants to pay the plaintiffs' costs in the High Court and also in the first Court, and the other defendants to bear their own costs in all Courts. Their Lordships think that the costs of all parties in the appeals to the High Court and in the first Court should be paid out of the estate of Kalichurn, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to vary the decree of the High Court accordingly, and in all other respects to affirm it. This variation ought not to make any difference in the order as to the costs of this appeal, and the appellant will pay the costs of it.

TILUKHDARI SINGH and others (Plaintiffs) v. CHULHAN MAHTON (Defendant). [10th April, 1889.]

Abwabs, Meaning of—Long period of payment of abwabs—Effect of ss. 54, 55 and 61 of Regulation VIII of 1793.

Payments over and above rent, and described as abwabs in the zemindari accounts, for which, as abwabs, the tenant was sued, were held to be rightly treated as abwabs, and not as forming part of the rent fixed. They were held not to be recoverable from the tenant, although they had been paid for a period of unknown length and according to a long standing practice, not having been recovered at the time of the permanent settlement, consolidated with the rent, as they should have been if then payable, under s. 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793, Not having been so consolidated, they could not be recovered under s. 61. If not payable at the time of the permanent settlement, they came under the term of new abwabs, and in that case were illegal under s. 55.

Appeal from a decree (19th January 1885) (1) of the High Court, reversing on second appeal a decree (21st March 1883) of the Judge of the Gaya District, and restoring a decree (30th June 1884) of the Subordinate Judge of that District.

The question raised on this appeal was whether the appellants were entitled to recover, as landlords, from the respondents as tenants, sum entered in the zemindari papers, as customary abwabs, and paid for a long period. The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the appellants, thikadars of mouzas in the Gaya District, to recover from a ryt holding under them, Rs. 1,105, arrears of rent, both nakdi (or cash) and bhaoli (in kind), for the years 1286 to 1288 (Bengali), together with customary abwabs alleged to have been paid from time immemorial. The defendant admitted holding land under the plaintiffs, some at nakdi, other at bhaoli, rent; and also admitted that one anna, "hajjatana," and three pice for "batta company" were payable by him. It was also found by both the Courts in the district that a sum was payable for road cess. Other items claimed as abwabs, other than the Assul rent, were denied by the defendant. They are set forth in a list printed in the report of [132] the reference of this case by a Division Bench to a Full Bench at p. 176, I. L. R., 11 Calc., amounting to fourteen items in all; comprising, among other things, contributions for the pay of watchman and other village servants, also dak cess, &c.

The Subordinate Judge of the Gaya District, Babu Dwarkanath Mitter, held that these items could not be decreed under the law. He referred to s. 11 of the Rent Law (Bengal Act VIII of 1869) and to s. 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793 (1). For the rent, both as regards the cash and the quantity of produce, he found the claim proved, and decreed it, together with the items of abwabs admitted. He stated in his judgment: "The expediency of the law is fully demonstrated by the facts of this case. Here the plaintiffs claim several kinds of abwabs, bandhwaras, purohi, nocha, sidha, khurcha, and mangan. The evidence is discrepant as to the rate of each kind of impost, and even the plaintiffs' gomashta, whose business it is to realize them, cannot state all the rates. Add to these the abwabs claimed in respect of the nakdi-jote, and the number becomes very large indeed. These abwabs are fees payable to the village watchman, the putwari, the gomashta, the barahill, the weighmen, the purohit, and the landlord. These fees, which are exacted over and above the rent, have been repeatedly held by the High Court to be illegal and unrecoverable through the Court, unless the ryot has distinctly agreed to pay them."

The Subordinate Judge added: "I think it right to add here that the plaintiffs have attempted to show that, in lieu of the abwabs claimed, the ryots enjoy certain corresponding advantages: an allowance of two seers per maund of grain is made them, and [133] they get all the straw and chaff. The plaintiffs' pleader offered to give up the claim for the abwabs if the defendant agreed to give half of the straw and chaff. This was, to my mind, a fair offer, but the defendant refused to accept it. The total of the abwabs, I am told, would, on calculation, come up to two seers two chittaks per maund. The landlord, besides, has to maintain an irrigation scheme, peculiar to this part of the country, at his own cost."

Both parties appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the decision as to the abwabs. Regarding the bhaoli rents, he said: "I may notice a few of the salient features of this system. In the first place, the landlord does not get a full half share. The straw, chaff, &c., is appropriated entirely by the cultivator. It will be noticed that the lower Court offered the defendant to divide the whole produce equally between him and the landlord, but this offer was refused; and why? because it has always been the custom for the ryot to take the straw, &c. If so, the landlord should surely be allowed to plead that he is entitled to the dues he claims, because the ryot has always been in the habit of paying them. Again, the expenses connected with the maintenance of irrigation works, on which depends the crop, fall on the landlords; they also have to defray the costs of any litigation connected therewith. The very existence of the crop in this district depends on an artificial system of irrigation, which has to be kept up at the landlords' expense."

He also found that

(1) Section 54 of that Regulation enacts: "The impositions upon the ryots under the denomination of abwab, mahtoot and other appellations, from their number and uncertainty having become intricate to adjust, and a source of oppression to the ryots, all proprietors of land and dependent talukdars shall raise the same in concert with the ryots, and consolidate the whole with the assul into one specific sum." The end of the Fasli year 1198 is then fixed as the time within which the consolidation was in the Behar Districts to be effected.

Section 55 provides that: "No actual proprietor of land or dependent talukdar of whatever description shall impose any new abwab, or mahtoot, upon the ryots under any pretence whatsoever.
such cesses had, without doubt, been, from time immemorial, prevalent in the district.

The District Judge concluded his judgment as follows:—"In the present case the evidence adduced establishes two facts, first, that these dues have been collected and paid from time immemorial; second, that having regard to the peculiarities of the bhoali system, they are not excessive. In the case of Budhna Orawan Mathoon v. Jugessur Doyal Singh (1), it was held by the High Court that certain payments, which were not so much in the nature of cesses as of rent in kind, and which were fixed and uniform, and had been paid by the ryot from the beginning according to local custom, were not illegal cesses; [134] and so in this case I find that these so-called abwabs are not illegal cesses, and I may here notice that in many cases which have been tried by the Collector, the putwari has succeeded in establishing as against the zamindar his right to these dues; and I hold, therefore where the custom is proved, that the zamindar is entitled to levy a half share thereof from his tenants. For the above reasons I set aside that portion of the decision of the lower Court which disallows the dues claimed both on the nakdi as well as on the bhoali tenure."

The defendant then preferred a second appeal to the High Court. A Division Bench (Sir R. Garth, C. J., and Beverley, J.) doubting whether, under the present Rent Law, this claim for abwabs could be enforced, and pointing out that the authorities upon the point were apparently conflicting, referred to a Full Bench the question whether, assuming that the abwabs had, by the custom of the estate of which the lands formed part, been paid by the defendant and his ancestors for a good many years, they were legally recoverable by the plaintiffs, although they were not actually proved to have been paid, or to have been payable, before, or at the time of, the permanent settlement.

A Full Bench (Sir R. Garth, C. J., with Mitter, Prinsep, Tottenham, and Pigot, J.J.) answered the question in the negative. Their judgments are printed at length in the report of the appeal at p. 175 of I. L. R., 11 Calc.

The judgment of the District Judge was accordingly reversed, and that of the Subordinate Judge restored.

The plaintiffs appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, contended that the ruling was erroneous. The liability of the tenant for the abwabs in question was the result of the incidents and circumstances of the tenancy; and, though not expressed in the contract between the parties, was plainly deducible from the usage or custom with reference to which the contract was made. The evidence established that abwabs were prevalent in the district, and were paid according to custom established from time immemorial. A distinction must be drawn between legal and illegal cases. Those which had been collected for a long period, extending back presumably, to the permanent settlement [135] were not illegal, nor had any enactment prohibited their recovery by the landlord. On the contrary, under Regulation V of 1812, s. 3, such cesses might be enforced in certain cases; also s. 9 of Regulation IX of 1825, saved certain cesses, levied according to ancient custom. Abwabs existing at the time of the permanent settlement could be recovered, notwithstanding the provisions of Regulations VIII of 1793, IV of 1794, or anything in Act X

(1) 24 W. R. 5.
of 1859, the Bengal Rent Law, or in the Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Section 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793 contained merely a direction for the consolidation of abwabs with the assul rent; but no penalty for the omission was enacted. He referred to Lachman Rai v. Akbar Khan (1) regarding the question of each cess as a separate issue; and he contended that the items claimed were in effect, in themselves, part and parcel of the rent, referring to Bholanath Mookerji v. Brijomohan Ghose (2). In Budhua Oravan Mahtoon v. Juggesur Doyal Singh (3) the High Court said: "With respect to what are called the cesses in this case, we think they are not so much in the nature of cesses as of rent in kind; and it is not describing them correctly to say of them that they are uncertain and indefinite," and a decree was given.

Reference was also made to Serajgunge Jute Company v. Sorabdee Akoond (4).

No writing, nor any other formality was required by law in regard to such items; and s. 61 of Regulation VIII of 1793 in providing that persons suing on engagements in which the assul and abwabs shall appear to have been consolidated, shall be non-suited, does not prohibit or render illegal the collection of payments such as those now in dispute. The latter were lawful at the time of the permanent settlement, and nothing had, since then, rendered them illegal. Although they had been described in the plaint as "old usual abwabs," yet they were part of the rent, and a definite and certain addition to it; this, in itself, excluding them from being rendered illegal by the operation of Regulation VIII of 1793, s. 55, or in any other manner.

[1436] On the question of the intention of the Legislature, he referred to Harington's Analysis, Vol. II, p. 19, Regulation XXX of 1803, Regulation VII of 1822, where, in reference to the North-West Provinces, the rules as to the formation of the record of rights contained a provision for the recording of cesses. Regulation XII of 1817 also, in connection with the payment of putwaris, treated such a payment as legal. The edition of the Regulations of the Bengal Code by Mr. Justice Field, at p. 61, was also referred to, and Mr. A. Phillips' work on 'Tenures.' In regard to the finding of both Courts, that these were abwabs payable under old custom, the landlord receiving an equivalent, they were not, within the meaning of the sections of Regulation VIII of 1723 on the subject, illegal from any cause.

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal ought to be dismissed. The first question seems to be this: Are these payments, over and above rent, properly so called, abwabs, within the meaning of the word as used in Regulation VIII of 1793? They are described in the plaint as “old usual abwabs,” and they are also described as abwabs in the zamindari accounts. It appears to their Lordships that the High Court was perfectly right in treating them as abwabs, and not as part of the rent. Unquestionably they have been paid for a long period; how long does not appear. They are said to have been paid according to long-standing custom. Whether that means that they were payable at the time of the permanent settlement or not is not plain. If they were payable at the time of the permanent settlement, they ought to [137] have been consolidated with the rent under s. 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793. Not being so consolidated, they cannot now be recovered under s. 61 of that Regulation. If they were not payable at the time of the permanent settlement, they would come under the description of new abwabs in s. 55; and they would be in that case illegal.

(1) 1 A. 440.  (2) 14 W. R. 351.  (3) 24 W. R. 5.
(9) 22 W. R. 12.

Under these circumstances, it appears to their Lordships that the High Court was right in treating them as payments or cesses which could not be recovered.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

MAHAMMUD AMANULLA KHAN (Plaintiff) v. BADAN SINGH and others (Defendants). [10th April, 1889.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, arts. 142, 144—Proprietors having refused at the first regular settlement to engage, and others having been admitted as malguzars of the land, effect of lapse of time—Discontinuance of possession.

Article 144 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877, as to adverse possession, only gives the rule of limitation where there is no other article in the schedule specially providing for the case.

The proprietary right would continue to exist until, by the operation of the law of limitation, it has become extinguished; but if a claim comes within the terms of art. 142 (enacting that when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed, or has discontinued possession, limitation shall run from the date of the dispossess or discontinuance), in such a case, by the law of Act XV of 1877, and previously of Act IX of 1871, adverse possession is not required to be proved in order to maintain a defence.

At the regular settlement in the Delhi district (1843) the plaintiffs' ancestors, ex-mafidars of a plot on which the rent-free tenure had been resumed in 1838, declined to engage for the revenue; and the plot was assessed along with the village in which it was; the village-proprietors through the lamburgdars engaging for and obtaining the land.

At the revision of settlement, more than thirty years after, the plaintiffs [138] claimed possession, alleging their title, and that the village co-partners held only in farm from the Collector for the period of settlement.
Held, that there had been a dispossession, or discontinuance of possession within the meaning of art. 142, and that whether any proprietary right had existed or not in the plaintiff's ancestors, the twelve years' limitation ran from the date of the dispossession or discontinuance.

APPEAL from a decree (8th May 1885) of the Chief Court of the Punjab, reversing a decree (24th June 1884) of the Commissioner of the Delhi Division, and restoring a decree 29th October 1883) of the Judicial Assistant Commissioner.

The ancestors of the plaintiff, who now appealed, were said to have been the owners of about 320 bighas of land, formerly a mafi plot, of which the mafi was resumed in 1838 before settlement, in mouza Ghanaur in the Sonipat pargana of the Delhi district. To recover possession of this land the suit was brought by the descendants of the ex-mafidars. The defendants, respondents, who were zamindars and lambardars of that village, having engaged for the revenue upon the whole of it, including the plot in question, at the first regular settlement in 1843, when the plaintiff's ancestors declined to engage, now relied upon limitation, besides denying the plaintiffs' title.

The question now raised was whether, in regard to the defendants having obtained possession of the land from the Collector, there was a dispossession or discontinuance of possession on the part of the plaintiffs, from which time had run under art. 142 of sch. ii of Act XV of 1877.

The plaintiffs were descended from one Lutfusulla Sadik who held the land as mafi, and was "malik." The earliest sanad produced was a grant from one Afiz Khan in the sixth year of the reigning King of Delhi. The mafi was resumed by an order, dated 9th October 1837, and the ex-mafidars were offered an engagement for the land revenue, which they declined on the 5th April 1838. The lambardars at the first regular settlement, as they regarded the land as belonging to the village, would not engage for it separately, and the result was that it was for some time held by the Collector "kham tahsil." In 1842, however, engagement for the jama of the whole village was made with the lambardars, as part of the settlement operations, and lasted throughout the settlement.

[139] At the revision in 1879 of the old regular settlement, the plaintiffs claimed the land. By their plaint, filed in August 1883, they claimed that, their ancestral rights having remained under suspension during the term of settlement, they now were (having been, by their ancestors, proprietors all along, as well as mafidars and ex-mafidars of the plot) entitled to re-entry and possession, upon cancellation of what they designated as "the farm" from the Collector to the defendants, which they alleged was only for the term of settlement. The defendants insisted on their title as village proprietors; and that the plaintiffs having been deprived of possession, as the result of the orders of the revenue authorities, made as far back as 1837, and again acted upon in 1843, the suit was barred by time.

The Judicial Assistant Commissioner, Delhi, dismissed the plaintiffs' claim; but the Commissioner, reversing his decision, decreed for the plaintiffs. The latter was of opinion that, independently of the presumption arising in their favour, one which was recognised under Regulation XXXI of 1803, the plaintiffs had proved their rights as proprietors, prior to the resumption of the quality of freedom from revenue assessment which was taken away from the lands in 1837; and that they had also proved that they were set aside from the possession simply for refusing to engage at settlement. He did not consider that this refusal, and the fact that the land was managed kham tahsil, "abrogated the plaintiffs' proprietary right," or gave a starting point for limitation. Nor had, in his opinion, the subsequent occupation of the defendants, which he concluded to be that of farmers, from 1842, for the terms of settlement, any such effect. He quoted Regulation VII of 1882, which, in s. 4 refers to the kind of arrangement which had been made in this case; that section enacting as follows:—"In admitting particular parties to engage, it was in no degree the intention of Government to compromise private rights or privileges, or to vest the sadr malguzars with any right not previously possessed by them, &c., &c., &c. On the contrary, it is the anxious desire of Government, and the bounden duty of its officers, to secure every one in the possession of the rights and privileges which he may lawfully possess, or be entitled to possess." He held that the suit was within [140] limitation, and that the plaintiffs were proprietors at the time when the defendants got a farm of the land for the period of settlement, the plaintiffs being therefore entitled to recover possession.

On appeal to the Chief Court, a Bench (C. A. Roe and T. W. Smyth, JJ.) reversed the above judgment. The Judges agreed with the Commissioner that in 1838 the plaintiffs' ancestors were proprietors, but they held that the claim must be dismissed as barred by limitation. "The plaintiffs had not shown that the defendants in exercising, as they had done, all the rights of proprietors over the land, exercised those rights, not as proprietors under the old settlement of 1843, but as farmers; nor had they shown that limitation did not begin to run against the plaintiffs until the expiration of the settlement in 1879. A continuous possession the plaintiffs had not shown. There was no documentary evidence to show that the defendants held as farmers, nor were there sufficient grounds for the inference that their holding was only upon such terms. The inference to be drawn from the settlement proceedings was that the defendants had the land made over to them. At the settlement in 1842 the land was entered in the record by the description "milk mafi" of Bakar Ali, who had died three years before, and from whom the plaintiffs were descended. But the land was treated as part of the shamilat of the village, and had remained as such with the defendants even since. The plaintiffs had exercised no rights over it, of any kind, certainly since 1842, and, as far as it could be seen, not since the resumption in 1838."

The Judges accordingly held the suit barred by limitation, and dismissed the suit; but, considering that the result of the order was to confirm the defendants in the possession of property which once belonged to the plaintiffs' ancestors, without costs.

The first plaintiff, the Nawab Amanulla Khan, appealed alone to Her Majesty in Council.

On this appeal Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the appellant.—They contended that the claim did not fall within the terms of any one of the articles of sch. ii of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. They referred to Act XXXIII of 1871, and to a case in the Chief Court in [141] 1881, Latif Ali v. Khushwakh Rai (1). There was no effective dispossession, or discontinuance of possession, within the meaning of art. 142 of sch. ii; nor was there, on the other hand, any adverse possession on the part of the defendants which could render art. 144 applicable.

The respondents did not appear.

Counsel for the appellant having been heard, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

JUDGMENT.

Sir R. Couch.—The plaintiffs in this suit are descendants of one Lutuffulla Sadik, who held the land which was the subject of the suit as mafi. The earliest sanad appears to have been, as far as the evidence shows, a grant by one Afiz Khan in the sixth year of the reign of the King of Delhi. It is not material when the title commenced. This mafi was resumed in 1837, and at that time the ancestors of the plaintiffs, who had the mafi, were offered an engagement for the land revenue. They, on the 5th of April 1838, declined to take the land and engage for payment of the revenue. Then the defendants, who are called in the judgments of the lower Courts the lambardars, and were the representatives of the villagers, and held a large quantity of land in the village, undoubtedly as proprietors, were asked if they would take up the engagements. They appear, in the first instance, to have declined to do so, alleging that they had got a settlement which included this land. However, it was found that this was not correct, and for a time the settlement operations were discontinued, and the Government appears to have held the land as khas. In 1842 a settlement was made, and then an engagement was made with the lambardars, or representatives of the villagers, for the whole of the village, including the land which is the subject of this suit, and making no distinction between the way in which this land and the other land, of which the villagers were undoubted proprietors, was to be held. That settlement was to last for thirty years and would expire in 1872. Steps do not appear to have been taken immediately upon the expiration; but on a revision of settlement in 1879, the plaintiffs applied for what they called a [142] cancelment of the farm to the defendants, and to have possession of the land as their ancestral estate. The defendants refused to surrender the land, and consequently the plaintiffs were referred to the Civil Court, and then the present suit was brought.

Two questions were raised in the suit. One was, whether the plaintiffs (or rather their ancestors) were the proprietors of the land, as they alleged; and the other was, whether the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

Upon the first question, the Commissioner, before whom the case came by way of appeal, and whose finding on this matter was conclusive in the further appeal to the Chief Court, found that the plaintiffs were the proprietors; and no question remains about that.

The question which has now to be determined, is, whether the suit is barred by the law of limitation. The Chief Court, upon the further appeal from the decision of the Commissioner, has held that it is barred. The Act applicable to the case is Act XV of 1877, and the article is No. 142, which says that for possession of immoveable property when the plaintiff,

(1) Reported in the Punjab Record, Civil Judgments, 1881, p. 89. This is the case referred to in their Lordships' judgment.
while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed, or has discontinued the possession, the time from which the period allowed for bringing the suit begins to run is the date of the dispossession or discontinuance. It appears to their Lordships to be clear that when there was this refusal on the part of the plaintiffs, or their ancestors, to make the engagement for the payment of the revenue, and the Government made the engagement with the villagers, the defendants, there was a dispossession, or a discontinuance of possession, of the plaintiffs within the meaning of this article.

It is to be observed that the lower Courts in their judgments treat it as being a dispossession. The Commissioner, where he deals with the facts of the case, says: “Independently therefore of the presumption afforded by Regulation XXXI of 1803, the plaintiffs have, in my opinion, afforded most satisfactory evidence of their character as proprietors prior to the resumption of the lands in free tenure.” Then he goes on: “And their dispossession for refusing to engage at settlement.” In this opinion what took place was that at the time when they so refused they became dispossessed. Then Mr. Justice Flowden, in the passage [143] which is quoted from his judgment, treats it also as a dispossession, for he says: “When, upon the occasion of a settlement, a proprietor is in proprietary possession of the estate, and asserts his proprietary title, and it is formally recognized, but in consequence of his refusal to engage for the revenue, he is excluded from the enjoyment of his estate” (which was the case here) “which is therefore transferred to a farmer for a defined period, it is intelligible that there is not such a discontinuance of possession or dispossession as would support a plea of limitation;” and he goes on to give as the reason that the dispossession is not “adverse,” which word is not in art. 142. The Chief Court in their judgment say also: “All this shows that in 1838 plaintiffs were undoubtedly proprietors; but the land is now, and has been since 1842, equally undoubtedly in the possession of the defendants, who have exercised over it all the rights of proprietors.” There has been no possession of any description in the plaintiffs or their ancestors since the period of the engagement with the defendants; and whether any proprietary right may have existed is not the question; it is whether there has been a dispossession or discontinuance, which there clearly was. No doubt the proprietary right would continue to exist until by the operation of the law of limitation it had been extinguished; but upon the question whether the law of limitation applies, it appears to be clear that it comes within the terms of the art. 142, and if there has been any doubt in the minds of the Courts in the Punjab as to what was the effect of the law of limitation in cases of this description, it seems to have arisen from the introduction of some opinion that there must be what is called adverse possession. It is unnecessary to enter upon that inquiry. Article 144, as to adverse possession, only applies where there is no other article which specially provides for the case.

In this case their Lordships think art. 142 does provide for the case and that the suit is barred by the law of limitation. Consequently the decision of the Chief Court should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed, and their Lordships will so humbly advise Her Majesty.

Appeal dismissed.

Before Sir W. Comer Petharam, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Gordon.

A. M. Dunne, Receiver to the Bhukoilash Ghosal Family Estate (Claimant No. 3) v. Nobo Krishna Mookerjee, and, after his demise, his son Binod Behari Mookerjee and another (Claimants Nos. 2 and 4).#

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870)—Apportionment of compensation—Mokurari maurasi title, Evidence of—Presumption of permanent tenure.

A person claimed to hold a maurasi mokurari title to certain land which was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, but could produce no pattah or evidence of title other than certain rent receipts which showed that he or his predecessors in title had held the land in question for nearly one hundred years at presumably a fixed rent, the nature of the tenure not being mentioned in such receipt: Held, that the presumption was, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary that the claimant had a permanent and transferable interest in the tenure, and not merely an interest in the nature of a tenancy at will; and that this presumption was strengthened by the fact that his superior landlord, the lakhirajdar, had made no attempt to eject him or his predecessors in title during this long period.

The mode of apportionment of compensation between landlord and tenant considered.

This was a case under the Land Acquisition Act.

The land acquired amounted to 21 bighas 5 cottahs 8 chittacks, for which a sum of Rs. 11,751, as compensation, had been allowed.

The appellant, claimant No. 3, as receiver of the estate of Sutyanand Ghosal, claimed as lakhirajdar, admitting, however that one Nobo Krishna Ghosal, claimant No. 2, was lakhirajdar of 5 bighas 12 cottahs under whom he held a maurasi mokurari tenure of this 5 bighas 12 cottahs at a yearly rent of Rs. 14-14-9. Claimant No. 2 claimed to be entitled to 8 bighas 14 cottahs as his lakhiraj land, admitting that claimant No. 3 held a tenure under him at a yearly rental of Rs. 14-14-9, but denying that it was one of a permanent transferable nature. Claimant No. 4 was a small tenant of certain bustee lands under claimant No. 3. In support [145] of his claim, claimant No. 3 being unable to produce any pattah showing the nature of his right to the 5 bighas 12 cottahs in question, put in evidence receipts showing that he held under claimant No. 2 a tenure for which the rent was Rs. 14-14-9, which receipts were considerably over thirty years old; and oral evidence was given to show that the predecessors in title of this claimant had held possession of their land at a fixed rent for nearly one hundred years.

The Judge held that claimant No. 3 had not made out that he held a maurasi tenure under claimant No. 2, and awarded Rs. 2,800, the amount of the compensation-money for the 5 bighas 12 cottahs in dispute, to claimant No. 2.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 92 of 1888, against the decree of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 7th of February 1888.
Claimant No. 3 appealed to the High Court on the ground that his maurasi mokurari right in the 5 bighas 12 cottahs had been established.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Gordon, J.) was delivered by Gordon, J.—This is a compensation case under the Land Acquisition Act (Act X of 1870). The Collector acquired 21 bighas 5 cottahs and 8 chittacks of land for public purposes, namely, for the construction of the Kidderpore Docks, and he assessed a sum of Rs. 11,751 as compensation for the same, and as the tenant of a portion of the land so acquired refused to accept the compensation tendered, the Collector referred the case to the Judge under s. 15 of the Act.

The parties who appeared before the Judge agreed to accept the amount of compensation assessed by the Collector, but they were unable to agree as to the proportion in which the compensation was to be divided among themselves. The appellant before us claimed a share of the compensation on the ground that he held 5 bighas and 12 cottahs of the land as a maurasi mokurari tenure under the lakhirajdar, who, while admitting that the appellant held the tenure, alleged that it was merely a tenancy held as a tenancy at will, and not of a permanent transferable character, and that therefore the appellant was not entitled to any share of the compensation.

The learned Judge has held on the evidence that the appellant has failed to prove that his tenure is of a permanent or mokurari nature, and he has accordingly awarded the whole value of the 5 bighas, 12 cottahs, which he has fixed at Rs. 2,800, to the lakhirajdar.

The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the Judge was wrong, and that he ought to have held upon the evidence that the tenure was of a permanent transferable character; and, after carefully considering the matter, we think that this contention must prevail. Indeed, under any circumstances, we think that the judgment of the Judge could not be upheld, for even allowing that the tenure was not of a permanent character, it is quite clear that the appellant has a valuable interest in the land, which could not be determined without a notice to quit, and, under these circumstances, he would be entitled to some share in the compensation.

Then, as to the existence of the tenure: it is true, as the Judge points out, that the appellant has produced no document to show under what circumstances and conditions his tenure was created, but we do not think that for this reason his claim should be rejected, if he can satisfy us by other evidence that his tenure is in fact one of a permanent character. Now, there is other evidence to which we think proper effect has not been given by the learned Judge. That evidence shows that the appellant and his predecessors in the title have been in undisturbed possession and enjoyment of this tenure at apparently a fixed rent since the year 1203 (1796), i.e., for nearly one hundred years; and having regard to these circumstances, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we think a very strong and reasonable presumption arises that the appellant... has a permanent and transferable interest in the tenure, and not an interest of the nature of a tenancy at will, which is liable to be determined at the pleasure of his landlord.

Further, having regard to the habits and customs of the people of this country in matters of this kind, it appears to us [147] that the fact that the lakhirajdars have stood by and allowed the appellant and his predecessors in title to continue in uninterrupted possession and enjoyment of the tenure for so many years, without attempting to eject them or vary their rent, strongly indicates that they have all along regarded and treated the tenure as one of a permanent character, and their conduct in this respect gives additional strength to the presumption, which, as I have already said, arises in favour of the appellant from long possession.

On the whole, we think that the Judge was wrong in the view he took, and that the appellant, having a permanent interest in the tenure, is entitled to compensation.

As to the apportionment of the amount of Rs. 2,800: we think that it should be made in the manner laid down in the appeal from Original Decree No. 311 of 1886. Mohendra Nath Bose v. Mohini Bewa (1), decided on the 20th August 1887 by Tottenham and Beverley, JJ., referred to by the learned Judge in his judgment, and the shares will be ascertained in the office when preparing the decree.

Then as regards the appeal against the ryot: we think there is no ground for our interference. The amount in dispute between him and the appellant is small, and we are not prepared to say that the conclusion which the Judge came to with regard to it is wrong.

For these reasons the appeal of the appellant will be decreed with costs as against the lakhirajdar, and it will be dismissed as against the tenant, but without costs.

Sale for arrears of revenue—Act XI of 1859. ss. 10, 11, 28, 53, 54, and sch. A—Rights of purchaser of share of estate admitted to special registration under ss. 10 and 11 of Act—Rights of mortgagee of share against purchaser.

There is a clear distinction between the rights acquired under s. 53 and under s. 54 of Act XI of 1859. Under the former section the terms of the certificate given under sch. A are limited, and a purchaser under that section acquires the estate subject to all encumbrances existing at the time of sale, whether created before or after the default, and even up to the date of the sale; but there is no such limitation to the terms of a certificate given to a purchaser under s. 54, and all encumbrances created after the date on which a purchase under that section takes effect, that is, after the date on which the default was committed, are void.

A share of a taluk admitted to special registration under ss. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859 was advertised for sale under that Act in default of payment of the June kist of Government revenue. On the 25th July the recorded sharer mortgageg his interest in that share to the plaintiff. The sale took place on the 26th September, and the share was purchased by the defendant, who obtained a sale certificate in due form under the Act declaring, in accordance with s. 28, that his title accrued from 29th June, the day after the latest date allowed for payment of the June kist: Held, that the mortgage was of no effect as an encumbrance under s. 54 of the Act.

This was a suit on a mortgage bond executed in favour of the plaintiff on 25th July 1884 by defendants Nos. 1 and 3, Russick Chand Masanta, one of the sons of Koer Narain Masanta, and Thakurmoni, the widow of Uman Chand Masanta, another of his sons. Koer Narain died, leaving five sons, Prem Chand, Arun Chand, Umad Chand, the defendant Russick Chand, and the defendant No. 2, Jibun Chand, who were all co-sharers in the ancestral property left by their father, and of whom Jibun Chand was a minor at the date of the mortgage. Of the mortgaged property, a 5 annas 6 gunadas 2 cowries 2 krants shares, bearing a revenue of Rs. 320-9-3, formed the taluk of the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The mortgage was made in order to raise money to defray the instalments of Government revenue due in March and June 1884, in consequence of non-payment of which the estate of the mortgagees and their co-sharers was advertised for sale. The March instalment of revenue was paid, but that estate was sold for the June instalment, and was purchased on 26th September 1884 by Janmejoy Mullick, the father of the other defendants. The sale certificate was in the form given in Appendix A to Act XI of 1859, and, in accordance with s. 28 of that Act, the certificate declared that the title of the purchaser accrued from 29th June, the day after the latest date allowed for payment of the June instalment of revenue.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1707 of 1881, against the decree of R. Towers, Esq., Judge of Midnapore, dated the 25th of June 1888, affirming the decree of Babu Dwarka Nath Bhattacharjee, Subordinate Judge of Midnapore, dated the 16th August 1887.
Various defences were raised, the only one of which material to this report was, that the purchase at the sale for arrears of revenue by the father of the Mullick defendants was not subject to the plaintiff’s alleged mortgage lien. This question was argued for the first time before the Judge, whose decision upon it was as follows:—

“There remains the last and most important question taken, viz., was Janmejoy Mullick’s purchase free of the encumbrance created by this mortgage? His purchase took effect before the date of the mortgage. Section 28 says that on the sale becoming final and conclusive, the Collector is to give the purchaser a certificate of title in the form prescribed in sch. A of the Act, and this is to be sufficient evidence of the estate or share sold being vested in the purchaser from the date specified. That date is in the present case the 29th June. Plaintiff did not lend his money or get his mortgage from defaulting proprietors until the 25th July. There had been already default in the March hist, and the 25th July was fixed for the sale in consequence. There had also been default in the June hist, the latest day for payment of that hist being the 28th June. By the money borrowed from plaintiff the March hist was saved, but not so the June hist. The auction-purchase was one regulated by s. 54 of the Act. The question is, was plaintiff’s mortgage an encumbrance within the meaning of that section? Section 53, I think, throws some light on this. The purchasers therein mentioned are subject to certain disadvantages; they acquire the estate subject to all encumbrances “existing at the time of sale.” Then s. 54, which applies to Janmejoy Mullick’s purchase, lays down that he acquires his share subject to all encumbrances; it does not repeat the words “existing at the time of sale.” but they are probably to be understood. The sale certificate given to both kinds of purchasers (those under s. 53 and [150] s. 54) would be in the same form. There is, in fact, only one form, viz., that in Appendix A to the Act, so that in the case of a purchaser under s. 53, although his purchase would take effect on the day after the latest day for payment, he would acquire subject to subsequent encumbrances created between the last day of the payment and the time of sale. Why should not the case be the same with a purchaser under s. 54? It is only the form of the sale certificate which is relied on by him; yet a purchaser under s. 53, getting exactly the same kind of certificate, is still subject to encumbrances created before the time of sale. It is true, of course, that the words ‘existing at the time of sale’ do not occur in s. 54, and hence I am by no means certain that my construction is the right one. No. precedents, however, having been quoted on the point, I am left to my own resources, and, for the reasons given above, I think I ought to decide the question in the plaintiff’s favour. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.”

From this decision the Mullick defendants appealed.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Hill, J.J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The question raised in this appeal relates to the construction of s. 54 of the Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859). A share admitted to special registry under ss. 10 and 11 was advertised for sale for arrears of Government revenue for the June hist. Subsequent to the default, and before the sale, the recorded sharer mortgaged his interests in that share. The question before us, therefore, is: what are the rights under this mortgage as against the purchaser at the subsequent sale for arrears of revenue?

Section 54 declares that in a sale of this description "the purchaser shall acquire the share or shares subject to all encumbrances, and shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners." The certificate granted to such a purchaser is by s. 28 declared to be a certificate in the form prescribed in sch. A, and this form declares that the purchase under which the title accrues takes effect on a date which is the day after that fixed for the last day of payment, that is to say, the day on which the estate fell into default by failure of the sharer to pay his share of the Government revenue. It would seem clear, therefore, that any encumbrance, such as the mortgage now before us, created after what is declared to be the date on which the title under a purchase for arrears of revenue takes effect, would be null and void. But much argument, both here and in the Courts below, has been directed to the terms of s. 53, and it is contended that those terms apply equally to s. 54, although that section is expressed differently and in language not necessarily conveying the same meaning. A purchaser within the terms of s. 53, not being the purchaser of a share admitted to special registration, is declared entitled to acquire the estate subject to all the encumbrances "existing at the time of sale." The words "existing at the time of sale" do not appear in s. 54. To hold that the two sections confer the same rights on different kinds of purchasers would be to assume that the Legislature unintentionally omitted those words in s. 54. or that they are redundant in s. 53. This we cannot do. It is clear that, in order to give effect to the law, a distinction must be drawn from the omission of these words in s. 54. The Legislature appears to have directed that, ordinarily by reason of a certificate in terms of sch. A, all encumbrances created after the date on which a purchase takes effect, that is to say, created after the date on which the default was committed, are void; but that, under the circumstances described in s. 53, the terms of that certificate shall be limited, and a purchaser under s. 53 will acquire the estate subject to all encumbrances existing at the time of sale whether created before or after the default, and even up to the date of the sale. It is unnecessary for us to do more than point to the injury which might be done to the property of other sharers if the owner of a share admitted to special registration were allowed, subsequent to default in payment of revenue, to create encumbrances which would bind his share after it passed into the hands of the purchaser. The encumbrance, if a valid encumbrance, would necessarily diminish the price bid for the share, so as in all probability to make it less than the amount of revenue in arrear. The entire estate, including the shares of other recorded sharers, would then be liable to sale, and thus to save an encumbrance created by a defaulting sharer after the default, the property of other sharers who had paid their portion of Government revenue would become liable. The result would be that the encumbrance on the share would become a burden on the entire estate. It was probably to avoid such an injustice that the terms of s. 54, as distinct from s. 53, were enacted. One of the principal objects of Act XI of 1859, which was to give relief to co-sharers who had protected their rights by special registration, would be frustrated if such an opportunity were given to a defaulting co-sharer. We are, therefore, of opinion that there is a clear distinction between rights acquired under s. 53 and under s. 54, and that in the present case the mortgage which was created after the last day of payment, that is to say, the date of default in payment of Government revenue, was of no effect as against the purchaser at a revenue sale which subsequently took place. The orders of the lower Courts will, therefore, be set aside, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. The defendants will be entitled to costs both in this Court and in the lower Courts.

Sale in execution of decree—Disparaging remarks by bystanders or purchasers other than the decree-holder—Irregularity—Practice regarding sales in execution of decrees—Adjournment of sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 331 and 291.

Disparaging remarks made by bystanders or by purchasers at an execution sale other than the decree-holder do not constitute such an irregularity as is contemplated by s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is the practice of the Court, under the Rules of the High Court, which have the force of law, to place all properties intended for sale in execution of decrees on a list, and to proceed with the sales from day to day, [183] commencing on an appointed day. As each property is taken up in its turn, an adjournment of the sale of a particular property, which is the consequence of such procedure, is not an adjournment within the meaning of s. 291 of the Civil Procedure Code.

For the purposes of this report the facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and GHOSE, JJ.) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an order of the Munsif declining to set aside a sale on the alleged ground of irregularity in publishing and conducting it, and on the allegation that, in consequence of such irregularity, the property was sold for an inadequate price.

The Court below has found that there was no irregularity; and, therefore, although the price really was inadequate, the petitioner is not entitled to any relief; and in that decision we agree. The burden of proving the irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale lies on the judgment-debtor, and he must prove that no proclamation was duly published. The evidence on this point is as unsatisfactory as could be imagined, and, as the learned Pledger for the appellant pointed out, is of the most ordinary character, which never carries any weight. But it has also been brought to our notice that the petitioner more than once obtained the adjournment of the sale on the understanding that he would have no objection on the ground of non-publication of the sale proclamation. We think, therefore, that as far as the publication of the sale proclamation goes, the judgment-debtor has failed to prove that there was any irregularity whatever.

Then, as to the irregularity in the conduct of the sale, the only irregularity pointed out is, that the person who purchased the property, who is not the decree-holder, spread disparaging remarks calculated to deter intending purchasers from bidding for the property, the disparaging reports being that the property in question was mortgaged to several persons, and that it had been sold at a previous execution sale. The cases of Woopeno Nath Sircar v. Brojendronath Mundle (1) and Rubhine Bullub v. Brojonath Sircar (2) were cited to us in which it was held that conduct of this kind did amount to irregularity. But, in those cases, the person who committed the irregularity, in the one case, was the decree-holder himself, and in the other case, his mookhtear; and, in the case of the decree-holder, it is evident that he being, to a certain extent, concerned in the conduct of the sale, his interference, no doubt, unchecked by the Court, might amount to irregularity in the conduct of the sale. But those cases do not meet the case before us. In this case the irregularity is alleged to have been committed by an outsider who was afterwards the purchaser. The case of Gunga Narain Gupta v. Anunda Moyee Burrooonee (3) seems to us to be in point. There it was held that the disparaging remarks made by by-standers, or by persons who purchased the property, not the decree-holder, could not constitute such irregularity as would render the sale liable to be set aside under s. 311.

The other point taken before us was that there was a further irregularity, inasmuch as the sale did not take place on the day appointed. It appears that the sale was fixed for the 1st of October; then it was adjourned to the 6th. November, on which date the sale commenced, the sale of this particular property taking place on the 10th. The practice of the Courts under the Rules of this Court, which have the force of law, is to place all properties intended for sale on a list; and the sales commence on the day fixed, which must go on from day to day till the list is cleared. It appears that the sales commenced on the 6th, and went on from day to day; this particular property did not come on, for want of time, on any of these days; its turn came on the 10th. We think that that is no adjournment within the meaning of s. 291, and that there was no irregularity.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

INDIAN DECISIONS, NEW SERIES

[Vol.

This was a suit to recover possession of a certain jala with mesne profits. It was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, being valued at Rs. 1,260.

The plaintiff, Hari Mohun Mullick, alleged in his plaint that the jala appertained to his putni taluk of Madhupore; that the name of the jala was Daur Patherghata; that he and his predecessors had been in adverse possession of the jala for more than twelve years; and that defendant No. 2, the Nawab Bahadoor of Murshedabad, had, in collusion with defendant No. 1, Sheikh Matra Mondal, dispossessed him from the jala in Assar 1289 (July 1882). The defendants alleged that the disputed jala did not belong to the plaintiff's putni but formed part of the rent-free mahal Imamgunj, the property of defendant No. 2, the Nawab Bahadoor of Murshedabad. They admitted that the plaintiff had the lease of Imamgunj from 1252 to 1258 (1845 to 1851), and from 1278 to 1284 (1871 to 1877), during which time he held the jala, as the ijaradar of defendant No. 2, but denied his possession at any other time, and further alleged that defendant No. 1 had been in possession since 1286 (1879) as the ijaradar of defendant No. 2. They also alleged that the value of the suit was below Rs. 1,000; and therefore contended that the suit was cognizable by the Munisif's Court and that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to try it.

Subsequently, but before the settlement of issues, it appeared that the examination of the parties or their pleaders took place: and that the plaintiff then substituted for his original allegation that the jala appertained to his putni taluk of Madhupore, the allegation that the jala formed part of Chuck Askaran which also belonged to his putni.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1675 of 1888, against the decree of F. W. Badcock, Esq., Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 18th of July 1888, affirming the decree of Baboo Aughore Nath Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 25th of July 1887.

The Subordinate Judge found that the property in suit was worth more than Rs. 1,000, and accordingly held that he had jurisdiction to try the suit. On the merits he held that, although, the jala did not appertain to the plaintiff’s putni taluk of Madhupore, it formed part of Chuck Askaran of which the plaintiff was in possession, and also that the plaintiff had been in adverse possession of the jala for more than twelve years. Accordingly the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge before whom they repeated their objection that the suit had been over-valued, and that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to try it. The District Judge was of opinion that the suit had been over-valued and that it could not exceed Rs. 675 in value, but held that the effect of this was, that the plaintiff could only recover costs on the scale allowed in the Munsif’s Court. On the merits the District Judge held that the plaintiff had established his title to the jala by proving that it appertained to Chuck Askaran, of which he was in possession, and that he had also established his title by adverse possession. Accordingly the District Judge affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge giving the plaintiff costs on the scale allowed in the Munsif’s Court; and dismissed the appeal.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Baboo Ram Charan Mitter and Moulvie Siraj-ul-Islam, for the appellants.

[157] The judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and GHOSE, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit to recover possession of a jala with wasilat. It was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye being valued at Rs. 1,260. The plaintiff claimed this jala as appertaining to his putni taluk Madhupore, and alleged that the name of the jala was Daur Patherghata.

The defendants alleged that this jala did not belong to the plaintiff’s putni, but belonged to a property called Imamgunj, belonging to the defendant No. 2, the Nawab Nazim of Bengal. They disputed the value of the property in suit, alleging that it was below Rs. 1,000, and therefore contended that the suit was cognizable by the Munsif’s Court and not by the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the property was worth more than Rs. 1,000, and he proceeded to try the case on the merits.

Before the issues were framed it seems that the examination of the parties or their pleaders took place, and the plaintiff substituted for his original allegation the statement that the jala was a part of Chuck Askaran, which also belonged, as he stated, to his putni. But from the plaint it appears that he also set up a case of title by adverse possession.

On the merits the Subordinate Judge held that the jala did in fact belong to the plaintiff, though not appertaining to his putni of Madhupore. He held that it belonged to Chuck Askaran, of which the plaintiff was in possession, and also that the plaintiff had held adverse possession for more than twelve years.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge, and repeated the objection that the suit had been over-valued, and that therefore the first Court had no jurisdiction, with reference to s. 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The lower appellate Court was of opinion that the suit had in fact been over-valued, and that the value could not exceed Rs. 675; but it held that the effect of this would be that the plaintiff could recover costs only on the scale of the Munsif's Court. Upon the merits the District Judge held that the plaintiff had established his title [158] by adverse possession, and had also established his title by reason of the jala belonging to Chuck Askaran; and the decree of the first Court was affirmed.

In this second appeal it has been contended by the learned Advocate General for the defendants, appellants, that the change of case adopted by the plaintiff vitiates his suit; and that he had no right to a decree upon a state of facts not stated in the plaint, namely, upon the allegation that the jala belongs to Chuck Askaran with his putni. He further contended that the Subordinate Judge was precluded by the provisions of s. 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure from trying the suit at all; that he had no jurisdiction; and that, consequently, his decree must be set aside. It is contended, lastly, that the finding of the lower Court of title by adverse possession is an improper finding upon the evidence.

As to this last point, we think that both the Courts below distinctly found upon the evidence that the plaintiff had established his title by adverse possession. The finding is unequivocally expressed in both judgments, and we think that no ground for a second appeal can be raised upon that finding.

As to the alleged change in the plaintiff's case, we think that that does not constitute any real objection to the decree obtained by the plaintiff. The change, if there was any, was effected before the issues were laid down; and the issues are in all cases framed not only upon the pleadings, but also upon the examination of parties and their pleaders.

The fact that the jala has been found not to belong to the plaintiff's putni is, we think, no reason why he should not get a decree, because he has proved his title, though not in the way first set out in his allegations, namely, by satisfying the Courts below that the jala belonged to another property of his, and that his possession has been adverse to the defendants for more than twelve years. We do not think that the Judge below was right in saying that the fact that the jala belonged to Chuck Askaran is sufficient reason for giving the decree; but the finding of title by adverse possession is, we think, amply sufficient.

The only other question is as to the jurisdiction of the first Court to try the case. No doubt s. 15 of the Code of Civil [159] Procedure provides that "every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it." But this is an objection which was not taken in the petition of appeal to this Court. The District Judge only allowed this defect to operate as against the amount of costs to be obtained by the plaintiff; and against that ruling of the lower Court, no objection was taken until the learned Advocate-General raised it in his argument. We think, however, there is nothing in s. 15 which bars a Subordinate Judge from trying a suit below Rs. 1,000 in value. There is no doubt that a Subordinate Judge is competent to try all suits of a civil nature the trial of which is not barred by some special statute—Vide s. 19 of the Civil Courts Act.

The learned Advocate-General called our attention to a case decided by the Privy Council, Ledgard v. Bull (1), but that was a case which had been instituted in a Court not competent to entertain it. It was afterwards, by consent of parties, transferred to the proper Court and then tried. The defendant, however, had, from the first and throughout, objected that the suit had been filed in the wrong Court and could not be tried. The Privy Council held that the defendant's contention was correct, and that the transfer to a competent Court of a suit instituted in a Court not competent to try did not cure the defect, and the suit was dismissed by their Lordships. That case is clearly distinguishable from the present one.
That was a suit brought under a special Act which excluded the jurisdiction of every Court but that of a District Judge. It was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. It was filed, therefore, in a Court not competent to try it. The present suit was filed in a Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.

We think that the worst can be said of the plaintiff's mistake in this respect is, that it was an irregularity coming within the scope of
s. 578. But the words of s. 578, "not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court," we construe, as meaning, not affecting the competency of the Court to try. It appears to us, therefore, that the error in instituting the suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court rather than in that of the Munsif's is not an error which affects the jurisdiction. Had the converse been the case, that is, if a case cognizable only by a Subordinate Judge had been instituted in the Court of a Munsif, that would have been a case of want of jurisdiction. As it is, however, we think that there is nothing in the objection raised by the learned Advocate-General.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

obtained from Tara Prosunna a transfer of the putni, brought a suit against the plaintiffs and their co-shares, the pro forma defendants, for registration of his name in their sherista as putnidar; that the suit was opposed by the plaintiffs, and Tara Prosunna was made a party to the suit, which resulted in a compromise, whereby Tara Prosunna and Sashi Bhusan undertook to relinquish the putni and the plaintiffs agreed to accept the relinquishment on payment of the amount of rent and cesses due to them.

The present suit was brought for the balance due under that compromise.

The plaintiffs stated that their co-sharers were residents of a distant place, and that they therefore sued alone, making them pro forma defendants. They also stated that they would on recovery of the whole amount pay the respective shares thereof due to their co-sharers.

The pro forma defendants filed a written statement, stating that they had no objection to the plaintiffs obtaining a decree for the whole amount.

The principal defendant took several objections to the suit; the only one of which material to this report was, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue separately for their shares.

The Munsif held that the suit was maintainable, as the defendants had, since the suit was brought, given the plaintiffs permission to carry on the suit on their behalf.

The Judge found that the plaintiffs had not brought their suit until the very last day within the period of limitation, and that the bringing the suit without their co-sharers' cannot and making them defendants was an attempt to evade the limitation law, and that the subsequent consent of the co-sharers, given after the period of limitation had expired, could not be considered as an authority under s. 35 of the Civil Procedure Code to the plaintiffs to sue on behalf of their co-sharers. He therefore dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Bhowani Churn Dutt, for the appellants.

Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy and Baboo Monmath Nath Mitter, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.,) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

We think that the judgment of the District Judge is correct, and that this appeal must be dismissed.

The plaintiffs, as some of a body of persons entitled to a balance of arrears of rent, have brought this suit making their co-sharers defendants. They state that they have made them defendants because they are residents of a distant place; from which it may be inferred that they would have had some difficulty in obtaining their consent; and, no doubt, this is true, because it would seem that the suit has been brought on the very last day of the period prescribed by the law of limitation.

An objection as to the form of the suit was, as stated by the District Judge, pressed from the very first by the defendants. We have no doubt that it is only when the plaintiffs can show that those entitled to join with them have refused to join or have otherwise acted prejudicially to their interests, that they are entitled to sue alone and to make the reluctant or refusing co-sharers defendants in the suit. As authority for this we may refer to the case of Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co. (1), also to the cases of Pathiripat Krishnan Unni Nambiar v. Chekur Manakkal Nilakanthan Bhattathiri (1) and Kalidas Kevaldas v. Nathu Bhagvan (2); and we may further refer to Ramsebuk v. Ramall Koondoo (3). In the case of Prem Chand Luskur v. Mohshada Debi (4) it was expressly stated that the co-sharers of the plaintiffs had refused to join in the suit. On these grounds, therefore, we think that the suit was rightly dismissed, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

GYANADA KANTHO ROY BAHADUR AND OTHERS (Defendants) v.
BROMOMOYI DASSI, EXECUTRIX TO THE ESTATE OF KISHEN KISHORE GHOSE, deceased (Plaintiff).

Regulation VIII of 1819, ss. 5, 7—Putni tenure, Transfer of, by sale—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 13, 195 (e).

Regulation VIII of 1819 is not affected by the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885; the Regulation being specially saved from its operation by s. 195 (e) of that Act.

[163] This was a suit brought to recover from the defendants arrears of rent of a putni taluk in Pergunnah Dantia, for a period intervening between Kartick 1293 and Aughran 1294 B. S., together with cesses and interest, the yearly rent being claimed at the rate of Rs. 9,013-8.

The defendants contended that Pergunnah Dantia had been sold for arrears of Government revenue for the June kist of 1887, and the plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to recover the arrears of rent subsequent to that period. They also contended that their interest in the putni had been sold on the 12th Falgoon 1293 B.S., at an auction sale, the tenure being purchased by one Bromomoyi Dassi who had taken possession of the putni, after paying into Court the landlord's fee; and that, consequently, they were not liable for the rent after such sale. They further contended that the purchaser of the putni tenure should have been made a party to the suit, and claimed a set off of Rs. 1,401, which the plaintiff used to collect directly from an under-tenant of a certain mouza included in the putni; and lastly contended that the putni was a losing concern, and they were, therefore, entitled to ask the Court in the first place to direct a sale of the tenure in execution of any decree the Court might pass in the suit.

The Subordinate Judge found that a sale had taken place for arrears of Government revenue, but that the Government of Bengal had annulled the sale; he further found that the putni tenure had been sold on the 12th Falgoon 1293 B.S., in execution of a decree of a Civil Court other than the decree for arrears of its rent, and that at such sale Bromomoyi Dassi (who appeared to be at the time of suit in possession of the putni) had become the purchaser. He further found that the landlord's fee payable under s. 5 of Reg. VIII of 1819 had been paid into Court, but there was no satisfactory evidence to show that the plaintiff had notice of such deposit. He further found that the defendants had not followed the procedure laid down by s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, for the transfer of permanent tenures. He therefore held that the plaintiff was not bound to recognize Bromomoyi Dassi or to make her a party to the suit. He further found all the other points raised by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff and gave her a decree for the amount prayed.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul, with him Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee), for the appellants, contended that the purchaser of the putni had complied with the provisions of s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by paying into Court the landlord's fee plus the fee for service of notice on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, bound to recognize the purchaser as the holder of the putni tenure, and that it was unnecessary to prove the receipt of the fee and of the notice by the plaintiff; the presumption being that these matters had been legally carried out. That even assuming Reg. VIII of 1819 applied to the case, s. 5 of Regulation not having been complied with, it was the duty of the landlord to take steps under s. 7 of the Regulation, which he did not do.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Baboo Urija Sunker Mozumdar), for the respondent, contended that the law regarding the transfer of putni tenures was governed by Reg. VIII of 1819 and not by the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that under s. 195 (c) of the latter Act, the Regulation was not affected by the Act; and that inasmuch as the provisions of s. 5 of the Regulation had not been complied with, the plaintiff was not bound to recognize the transfer of the tenure, the plaintiff not being bound to take steps under s. 7 of the Regulation; compliance with that section being optional on the part of the landlord.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Gordon, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—This is a suit for arrears of rent of a putni taluk from Kartick 1293 to Aughran 1294, that is, for fourteen months, and the amount claimed, including cesses and interest, is Rs. 12,541-14-5.

The defence, so far as it is material in the present appeal, is that the interest of the defendants in the putni was sold in execution of a decree on the 12th Falgun 1293 and was purchased by one Bromomoyi Chowdhurani, who, by virtue of her purchase obtained possession of the putni and deposited in Court what is called landlord's fee, and the further fee for service of notice of the sale on the landlord as required by the Bengal Tenancy [165] Act, that this notice was duly served on the plaintiff, and that, under these circumstances, the defendants are not liable for the rent which has accrued subsequent to the sale. The Subordinate Judge who tried the case finds that the putni was sold on the 12th Falgun 1293 in execution of a decree other than a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, and that it was purchased by Bromomoyi Chowdhurani who seems to be in possession since her purchase. He also finds that the landlord's fee and the further fee for service of notice of sale on him have been paid into Court by the purchaser as required by s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but he considers that this is not sufficient to relieve the purchaser from all responsibility in the matter, or to compel the plaintiff to recognize her as her tenant, because there is no evidence to prove the plaintiff has received notice of the deposit, and further, because the provisions of s. 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act have not been complied with. He therefore holds that the defendants are liable for the rent, and has accordingly decreed the claim in full. The defendants appealed and the learned Advocate-General on their behalf contends that as the purchaser of the putni has complied with the provisions of s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by paying into Court the landlord's fee and the further fee for service of notice of the sale on the landlord, and the sale has, in consequence, been confirmed under s. 312 of the Civil Procedure Code, the transfer of the putni tenure is complete, and therefore the plaintiff is bound to recognize that transfer, although it is not proved that she has received her fee and the notice of sale. On the other hand, Mr. Woodrofe, for the respondent, argues that s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to the present case, because the rules to be observed on the transfer of a putni tenure are contained in Regulation VIII of 1819, which, being an enactment relating to putni tenures, is, under s. 195 (e) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, not affected by that Act, and as the rules of the Regulation as regards the registration of her purchase have in no wise been observed by the purchaser, the plaintiff is not bound to recognize her as her tenant, but has a right to recover arrears of rent from the defendants, who are the heirs of the putnidar whose name is recorded in her books.

[166] After carefully considering the matter, we think this argument is sound. The first question to be decided is whether Regulation VIII of 1819 is applicable to the present case. Now s. 5 of Regulation VIII of 1819 provides as follows:— "The right of alienation having been declared to vest in the holder of a putni taluk, it shall not be competent to the zemindar or other superior to refuse to register and otherwise to give effect to such alienations, by discharging the party transferring his interest from personal responsibility, and by accepting the engagements of the transferee. In conformity, however, with established usage, the zemindar or other superior shall be entitled to exact a fee upon every such alienation; and the rate of the said fee is hereby fixed at two per cent on the jumma or annual rent of the interest transferred until the same shall amount to Rs. 100, which sum shall be the maximum of any fee to be exacted on this account. The zemindar shall also be entitled to demand substantial security from the transferee or purchaser, to the amount of half the jumma or yearly rent payable to him from the tenure transferred, the condition of furnishing such security on requisition being understood to be one of the original liabilities of the tenure. The above rules shall apply equally to the case of a sale made in execution of a decree or judgment of Court as to all other alienations." And s. 6 lays down that "it shall be competent to the zemindar or other superior to refuse the registry of any transfer until the fee above stipulated be paid, and until substantial security to the amount specified be tendered and accepted." Having regard to these provisions it seems to us that the purchaser in the present case ought to have applied to the zemindar to register the transfer of the tenure, and, at the same time, to have paid or tendered the prescribed fee, and had she done so and also furnished the security which the zemindar was entitled to demand, the zemindar could not have refused to register the transfer. The purchaser, however, did nothing of the kind, and therefore the zemindar was not bound to register the transfer or recognise the purchaser as the tenant, and, under these circumstances, we think the plaintiff has still a right to look to the ostensible tenants, that is, to the defendants in the present suit, for her rent. The learned Advocate-General has drawn our attention to s. 7 of Regulation VIII of 1819, which lays down a particular procedure to be followed by the zamindar, when the putni has been sold in execution of a judgment of Court (as in the present case), if the rules of s. 5 have not been complied with by the purchaser, and (assuming that this Regulation applies to the present case) he contends that this is the procedure which the plaintiff ought to have adopted. We think, however, that even allowing that the plaintiff had notice of the sale, which it does not appear she had, it was not obligatory on her to proceed in the manner provided by s. 7. We think the plaintiff had two courses open to her: she could either refuse to recognise the transfer and the purchaser as her tenant until the rules laid down in s. 5 had been complied with by her, or she could take proceedings under s. 7. She has chosen the former course, which, having regard to the provisions of the Regulation, we think she had a legal right to do.

There remains the question whether s. 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has any application to the present case. If it has, then this curious state of things will arise that, under the enactments at present in force, (Regulation VIII of 1819 has not been repealed), there will be two totally different systems of registration of certain transfers of putni tenures. The Bengal Tenancy Act has introduced what may be called a system of public and official registry of transfers of permanent tenures under which the landlord's fee has to be paid to and the notice of transfer to be served on him through the medium of the District Collector, while under the law relating to putni tenures the registration of transfers of a private nature as it has to be made in the sherista of the zamindar, and the prescribed fee has to be paid or tendered directly to him without the intervention of any public officer.

If this dual system be in force, then the purchaser, in the present case, would have the option of following the procedure provided in s. 13 of the Tenancy Act instead of proceeding under the putni Regulation, a procedure which is clearly in derogation of the right of the zamindar under Regulation VIII of 1819 to have the transfer registered in her books in accordance with [168] the rules therein laid down, and which, therefore, affects an enactment which is specially saved from the operation of the Bengal Tenancy Act by s. 195 (e) of that Act.

We think, therefore, that s. 13 of the Tenancy Act does not apply to the present case, and that the rules laid down in Regulation VIII of 1819 ought to have been observed by the purchaser, and as they have not been observed, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree against the defendants.

The result is that, although we are unable to accept the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge for the conclusion he has arrived at, we think, for the reasons we have given, that the suit has been properly decreed, and, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.
Remand—Procedure on remand—Practice—Appeal from remand order—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 562, 588, cl. 28.

Upon an appeal under cl. 28 of s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code, against an order of remand under s. 562, the High Court is not restricted to the consideration of the form of the order, but may examine it on its merits.

Where an appellate Court passed an order under s. 562, remanding a case which had been disposed of in the Court of first instance upon points which were not preliminary points, but points directed to the merits of the case, the High Court on appeal set aside the remand order, directing the lower appellate Court to hear the appeal according to law.

These were appeals from orders of remand under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The facts, so far as they are material to the present report, are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of TOTTENHAM, J.

Baboo Sreenath Das and Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbati, for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (TOTTENHAM and BANERJEE, JJ.):—

JUDGMENTS.

TOTTENHAM, J.—These are appeals against orders of remand purporting to have been made by the lower appellate Court under s. 562 of Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides that if the Court against whose decree the appeal is made has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point, and the decree upon such point is reversed in appeal, the appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, remand the case, and direct the lower Court to proceed to investigate the case on the merits.

The suits were to recover mesne profits in respect of land of which the plaintiffs had been dispossessed, and for which apparently they had obtained possessory decrees.

The first Court laid down various issues: in one case six, and in the other eight; and having tried most of those issues, it dismissed the suits a parently upon their merits. The issue the first Court did not try was as to the amount of mesne profits the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. The findings upon some of the other issues being sufficient for the dismissal of the suits, the Munsif thought it unnecessary to try this last issue.

* Appeals from Orders Nos. 29 and 30 of 1889, against the orders of Baboo Purno Chunder Shome, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 10th of December 1888, reversing the orders of Baboo Mohendro Lal Ghose, Munsif of Pingna, dated the 30th of April 1888.
The plaintiffs appealed; and the lower appellate Court having set out the various issues arising in the two cases, proceeded to give its decision upon them seriatim. The result was that all the issues decided by the Munsif against the plaintiffs were decided by the lower appellate Court in favour of the plaintiffs. The lower appellate Court, thereupon, remanded the cases to the Munsif under s. 562 with reference to the issue as to the amount of mesne profits which the plaintiffs might have been entitled to recover, upon the ground that the judgment of the Court below on the preliminary points dealt with must be set aside, and the evidence on the record did not enable the lower appellate Court to come to a decision on the merits, the merits being the amount of mesne profits.

Against this order of remand these appeals have been preferred. The arguments occupied a considerable time, not apparently because there has been any difference of opinion on either side, or any doubt in the mind of the Court that the order was obviously unsustainable, but because the learned Pleader for the appellant wished the Court to go beyond what is usually done in similar cases, and to allow him to enter upon the merits throughout, with a view to show that the lower appellate Court was wrong in its decision upon the several issues that it had considered. Ultimately, the learned Pleader did not press us to restore the judgment of the first Court by which the suits were dismissed, but said that he would be satisfied if we simply set aside the order of remand and all the observations made by the Court in its order.

In dealing with the first part of the argument, the learned Pledger for the appellants laid before us many authorities of this Court and of the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts, to show that, where an appeal is made against an order of remand under s. 562, the High Court is not limited to, the consideration of the form of the order to see whether it is precisely in accordance with the section, but it is at liberty, and in fact is bound, to enter upon the merits of the preliminary point upon which the case has been disposed of by the first Court: and I think that those decisions are perfectly right. But I think that they apply only to cases in which the points in question are really preliminary points. Where the Court of First Instance has disposed of a suit upon what really is a preliminary point, and the lower appellate Court has reversed its decision on that point, no doubt the High Court should and must decide, between the two, which came to a right decision upon such point: but where, as in the present case, the points upon which the first Court disposed of the suit, and which points were also discussed by the lower appellate Court, are not in any sense preliminary points, but are points directed to the merits of the cases, I think that the High Court, upon appeal from the remand order, ought not to enter upon the merits of those points. It is quite enough to point out to the lower appellate Court that it has committed an error in applying s. 562 when that section does not apply, and that is the course I propose to observe in the present instance.

In these cases the points tried by the Munsif (who evidently did not consider them preliminary points) touched the merits of the cases. The lower appellate Court could not, therefore, legally remand these cases under s. 562, because s. 564 prohibits an appellate Court from doing so, except under the circumstance prescribed by s. 562. What the Court ought to have done if it thought any further enquiry or further evidence necessary to enable it to come to a decision, was to have complied with s. 566, keeping the cases on its own file.
This being my opinion, I set aside the order of remand under s. 562, and send these cases back to the lower appellate Court. That Court must hear the appeals in the manner provided by law, and come to a final determination upon them. Of course, should it think it necessary, it may remit the case to the first Court for trial of any issue; but the decision now rests with the lower appellate Court, and not with the Munsif. Costs will abide the result.

Banekjee, J.—I concur in the order made by my learned brother. The questions raised in these cases, which are of some importance, are, first, whether a party appealing under cl. 28 of s. 588, against an order of remand under s. 562 of the Code, is to be limited to grounds touching the correctness of the order appealed against merely in point of form, or is entitled, to go into the merits of the case so far as they bear upon the correctness or incorrectness of that order; and, secondly, if he is so entitled, whether he can ask this Court to examine the grounds upon which that order is based with reference as well to matters of fact as to points of law.

As to the first question, there does not appear to be much room for doubt. If a party is entitled to appeal against an order of remand, he is certainly entitled to ask the Court, not merely to consider whether that order is correct in point of form, but also to decide whether it is substantially and on the merits a correct order; and I think the view taken of the matter in the two cases referred to in argument, the case of Loki Mahto v. Aghoree Ajail Lall (1) and the case of Badan v. Iwnrat (2), is quite correct.

[172] The second question does not, however, seem quite free from difficulty; and if it had been necessary to decide the point in this case, I should have felt considerable hesitation in accepting the appellant’s view as correct, namely, that upon an appeal from a remand order the appellant is entitled to go into questions of fact, when, if the very same matter had come up before this Court by way of appeal from appellate decree, his contention must have been limited to points of law. This is an anomaly which the Legislature is not likely to have intended. Under the Procedure Code of 1859, second appeals, whether from decrees or orders, were limited to questions of law; and under the present Code, s. 585 is, I think, though not without some hesitation, sufficiently wide to limit the consideration of all second appeals to matters of law, whether they are appeals from appellate decrees or are appeals from orders in which the matter discussed is really raised by way of second appeal.

In the present case, however, it is not necessary to come to any definite decision upon this point, as the lower appellate Court’s decision on the so-called preliminary issues, upon which the order of remand appealed against is based, does not properly come before us for consideration now; that order clearly, and on the face of it, being bad in law as an order under s. 562. The points which have been regarded as preliminary points not being preliminary points in any sense of the expression, no remand order under s. 562 ought to have been made. That being so, we cannot be called upon at the present stage to determine whether the lower appellate Court’s decision on the so-called preliminary points is right; and the learned Vakil for the appellants very properly concedes that he is not entitled to ask us in these cases to restore the judgment of the Munsif. What he asks for is that the decision of the lower appellate Court upon certain of the issues, which it has regarded as preliminary issues, should not have any binding force, so far even as that Court was concerned. If the points disposed of by the lower appellate Court in its decision under appeal are not, as we think they are really not, preliminary points, any decision arrived at upon those points cannot have the effect that a decision properly arrived at under s. 562 can have; and this is all that I think it is necessary for us to say at present.

[173] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

JADU RAI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. BHUBOTARAN NUNDY AND OTHERS (Defendants).* [30th August, 1889]

Evidence—Parol evidence—Évidence to vary written contract—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Bought-and-sold notes—Oral evidence as to matter on which document is silent—Reservation of question on evidence—Damages.

The defendants agreed to purchase, to arrive, from Messrs. Ralli Brothers, 3,000 maunds of copper, July shipment, and, on the 13th August, the defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiffs to sell to them 750 maunds out of this copper. The bought-and-sold notes forming the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants, corresponded one with the other, and constituted a contract for delivery of 750 maunds conditional on arrival within four months. Fifteen hundred maunds or thereabouts of this copper arrived at Ralli Brothers' godowns within the time mentioned in the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The defendants delivered to the plaintiffs 375 maunds 6 chittacks of copper within time; and made no further delivery to the plaintiffs, no other shipment of the copper contracted for arriving within time at Calcutta.

In a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover damages for breach of contract to deliver, the defendants sought to show, by oral evidence, that the contract was for delivery of 750 maunds, if one-fourth of each of the successive arrivals at Ralli Brothers' godowns should, in the aggregate, amount to 750 maunds: Held, that such evidence was inadmissible under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

Questions as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise, and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given.

Appeal from the judgment of Trevelyan, J.

The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendants Rs. 3,834-2-6 as damages for the non-delivery of certain copper. The facts were as follows: On the 23rd July 1887, the defendants bought from Messrs. Ralli Brothers 3,000 maunds of copper, July shipment, at Rs. 21-2 per maund, and, on the 13th August, the defendants through a broker contracted to sell to the plaintiff's 750 maunds of the said copper, at the rate of Rs. 21-5 per maund. Bought-and-sold notes corresponding one with the other [174] were prepared and signed by the broker; the sold note ran as follows:—

"To Jadu Raiji, Ramgopal Raiji, this is written by Dhumsook Madun Chand with salutations. Further, we have bought for you Furrakawa copper, 750 maunds, as amdani (to arrive) of (or from) Mudusudan Nundy, Ramprosunno Nundy, and Bhubotaran Nundy at the rate of Rs. 21-5, the goods of the house of Ralli, Parbhars (1). Time limited (for delivery) four months. Interest at the rate of Rs. 10, Kothi weight in Company's Rupees, you will give (pay). The conditions as to weighment (delivery) to be 45 days after the goods shall have come into the ghur (house and godown, &c.). You are to deduct interest (discount) at the rate of of Rs. 8. Sumbat 1944, dated the 9th day of the dark side of Bhadro.

'Signature of Jadu Rai, Ramgopal Rai,
By the pen of Gridhari Lall.'

On the 21st October 1887 a portion of the copper arrived, and in November a further portion, amounting in all to 1,497 maunds; and the defendants, on the 23rd October, gave to the plaintiffs a delivery order on Ralli Brothers for 375 maunds 6 chittacks of such copper; and this quantity of copper was duly delivered to them under the delivery order. Two hundred and twenty-five maunds out of this copper were, under a contract for 450 maunds, delivered by the defendants to another purchaser, and they themselves took delivery from Ralli Brothers of the remainder of the quantity, selling it in the bazaar at a rate higher than Rs. 21-5. No more copper arrived in Calcutta within the terms of the defendants' contract with Ralli Brothers, nor did any other copper of the kind mentioned in the defendants' contract with the plaintiffs arrive in Calcutta for the defendants during the time mentioned in their contract with the plaintiffs.

Subsequently to the delivery to the plaintiffs of the 375 maunds 6 chittacks of copper, the defendants agreed with Ralli Brothers to cancel the contract, and Ralli Brothers paid over to them the sum of Rs. 12,500 in consideration of this agreement. The plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover damages for breach of their contract.

[175] The defendants in their written statement, stated that, at the time the contract was entered into, it was distinctly agreed that the defendants should sell and deliver to the plaintiffs 750 maunds of copper by instalments of one-fourth of each shipment of copper of which they should receive delivery from Ralli Brothers.

The evidence adduced on this point was that of the broker and of one of the defendants.

The broker's evidence was to the effect that there was no arrangement as to delivery, but that it was understood that delivery was to be taken from Ralli Brothers, who were to deliver the copper to the defendants, and out of that copper the defendants were to deliver to the plaintiffs in proportion as they got delivery from Ralli Brothers, viz., that if the defendants got delivery of only half from Ralli Brothers, the defendants would only deliver half to the plaintiff; if they got the whole they would deliver the whole; and that he (the broker) told the plaintiffs' gomastha that he would have to take delivery in the same way as the defendants got delivery from Ralli Brothers; and that all that was arranged between the parties had been put down in the contract, the bought-and-sold notes.

The evidence of the defendant Nilmoney was to the effect that, after the rates were fixed, he told the broker that the plaintiffs would get delivery of the copper as often as they (the defendants' firm) obtained it from

(1) Mr. Owen's (the translator's note stated this to mean literally "outside", i.e., bought and sold without taking delivery.)
Ralli Brothers; that if they got all at one time, delivery to the plaintiffs should be given at one time; if by two instalments, delivery to the plaintiffs should be by two instalments, and so on; and that he told the broker that as his firm was only selling the copper "to arrive" if only half arrived, the plaintiffs should get one-half; if only one-fourth, then one-fourth; that the broker obtained the consent of the plaintiffs to these arrangements, and that the contract was then made.

The defendants further contended that as the plaintiffs were aware, when they took delivery of the 375 maunds 6 chittacks, that more than sufficient copper to satisfy their entire contract had at that time arrived in Ralli Brothers' godowns, they had, by insisting on full delivery, waived all claim to that particular copper.

[176] Mr. Justice Trevelyan was of opinion, for the reasons given by him in the case of Jumna Doss v. Srinath Roy (1), decided on [177] the 17 C. 176-N.

(1) Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

JUMNA DOSS V. SRINATH ROY.

This was a suit, amongst other things, brought to recover money due under certain share transactions which the plaintiff alleged (1) to have been lent to the defendant, on the pledge of shares, between April and September 1833; further alleging that the defendant, between October 1833 and March 1834, made certain payments to him, and that, on the 5th March, it was agreed between them that the plaintiff should take over at the market rate of the day all the shares belonging to the defendant which he held; this was done, and the plaintiff sued for the balance due to him. The defendant denied that there was any loan, contending that there was an out-and-out-sale. There being, however, at the time of such sale, a contract by bought-and-sold notes under which the plaintiff agreed to re-sell to the defendant their shares, at a future date, at an enhanced price. Evidence was tendered to show the nature of the contract between the parties but was objected to on the ground that the contract being reduced into writing, no evidence other than the bought-and-sold notes was admissible.

On this question TREVELYAN, J., decided as follows:

The question raised as to the admissibility of the evidence tendered by Mr. Apcar seemed to me to be worthy of careful consideration. Mr. Pugh and Mr. Allen for the defendant contended that, under s. 91 of the Evidence Act, I was bound to exclude all evidence of the contract between the parties other than the bought-and-sold notes in which, they contended, the parties had reduced into writing the terms of the contract made between them.

Mr. Apcar in answer urged, in the first place, that the bought-and-sold notes did not constitute the contract; and secondly, that even if they did so he was, under the authority of the case of Bakshu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji (2) and of the Calcutta cases bearing on the same question, entitled to show that the real transaction was a pledge and not a sale out-and-out. Mr. Apcar first relied on the case of Eckford v. Jumna Dass (3).

On consideration I do not think that that case is any authority on the present question. In Eckford's case (3) this question was neither raised nor suggested by Counsel or Court, as far as I know or can find out, at any stage of the case, and therefore no precedent can be said to have been established by that case.

Mr. Apcar also relied upon the Bombay case I have mentioned and on some Calcutta cases.

[177] Those cases show that, where there has been an absolute sale of property, evidence may be given of a contemporaneous oral agreement that the property would be reconveyed on repayment of the purchase-money. I do not think it necessary for me to consider whether or not those cases apply to the present case. Section 91, which merely expresses the law as it existed at the time of the passing of the Evidence Act, runs as follows:—"When the terms of a contract, or of a grant, or of any other

(1) It transpired later on in the hearing of the case that this contract was not in writing, the only contract which was so being that witnessed by the bought-and-sold notes agreeing for a re-sale.

(2) 4 B. 594.

(3) 9 C. 1.
18th May 1886, that bought-and-sold notes did not necessarily constitute the whole contract between contracting parties; and (having reserved during the hearing the question of the [178] admissibility of the oral evidence varying the contract) decided that such evidence was admissible under s. 92 of the Evidence Act; and after holding that the contract set up by the defendants had been proved and fulfilled, namely, that the real contract entered into by the defendants was one to deliver one-fourth of such copper as arrived at Ralli Brothers' godowns, dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed.
Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. T. A. Apesar, for the appellants.
Mr. M. P. Gasper and Mr. Roberts, for the respondents.
Mr. Bonnerjee contended that the evidence varying and explaining the bought-and-sold notes ought not to have been received, and that the evidence given by the defendants did not establish the case set up by them, and the finding by the learned Judge, that the contract was one for the disposition of property, have been reduced to the form of a document, and in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract, grant, or other, disposition of property, or of such matter, except the document itself, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions herein before contained."

The first question then is, whether the terms of the contract have been reduced to the form of a document?

If the parties have intended to reduce all the terms of the contract into writing, then no parol evidence is admissible, but if they intended only to reduce into writing a portion of the terms of the contract, then I think they are entitled to give parol evidence of the terms which they did not intend to reduce into writing.

Now when bought-and-sold notes are exchanged, is it usually intended that these notes should constitute the whole of the contract? I think not, Mr. Benjamin, in his work on the law of "Sales" lays down as the result of the authorities that the bought-and-sold notes do not constitute the contract.

I think that this proposition is clearly borne out by the case of Sievwright v. Archibald (1) [see especially the decision of Mr. Justice Erle in that case], and also by the case of Parton v. Crofts (2). In both these cases the distinction between making a contract and a memorandum showing that the contract has been made is pointed out.

The result of those cases is that brokers' notes as a memorandum may satisfy the Statute of Frauds, but not exclude parol evidence.

In Clarton v. Shaw (3) Sir Richard Couch, C.J., and Markby, J., treated the bought-and-sold notes, not as the contract, but as information sent by the broker to his principals. Of course bought-and-sold notes unobjected to may be evidence of the contract, but they do not necessarily constitute the whole contract. Although they differ, Clarston v. Shaw (3) shows that parol evidence of the contract may be given.

[178] The defendant has much relied upon the case of Juggar Nath Sew Bux v. Ramdial (4), but I do not think that that case applied. It does not appear from the report that there were any bought-and-sold notes in that case, and the whole case proceeds on the assumption that the document mentioned in the case was the contract. All that the High Court held in that case was that, under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, no evidence could be given for the purpose of varying or contradicting the express terms of contract. I do not think that s. 92 of the Evidence Act applies to this case. I think it applies only to cases where the whole of the terms of the contract have been intended to be reduced into writing. I think this is shown by the words "adding to" which appear in that section. If it were not for those words, I should have been inclined to hold that s. 92 only excluded evidence contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from such of the terms of a contract as had been reduced into writing.

The question which has given rise to this argument is, in my opinion, admissible.

delivery of one-fourth of such copper as arrived in Ralli's godowns, was therefore wrong.

[The Court, after stopping Mr. Bonnerjee, called upon the other side.]

Mr. Gasper.—The evidence of the broker and the defendants, which, I submit, should be admitted, is in respect of a collateral matter, about which the contract is silent, and which is in no way inconsistent with the terms of the contract. It is a stipulation as to the mode of delivery, Morgan v. Griffin (1); it may be that the collateral agreement in some of its consequences may not be consistent with some of the results of the contract itself, but that is not what is meant by “inconsistency,” and the inconsistency must be on the face of the contract. I rely on Jumna Doss v. Srinath Roy (2) as to the bought-and-sold notes not being necessarily the whole contract.

Mr. Roberts on the same side.—Mr. Benjamin, in his work on “Sales,” at p. 268, deals with the question of the operation of bought-and-sold notes, and it is to be gathered therefrom, that they do not necessarily constitute the contract. Bought-and-sold notes, when they correspond and contain all the terms of the bargain, then form the contract; here the bought-and-sold notes, although agreeing, do not contain the whole contract, and that has been supplied by oral evidence in no way inconsistent with the contract, and such evidence is therefore admissible. In Cutts v. Brown (3), it has been held by Garth, C. J., that the rule laid down in s. 92 of the Evidence Act applies only to cases where, upon the face of it, the written instrument appears to contain the whole contract.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Pigot, J.):—

JUDGMENTS,

Petheram, C. J.—This is an action to recover damages for the breach of a contract to deliver a quantity of Furrakawa copper, and it is admitted that, if the plaintiffs are entitled to recover at all, the amount of damages is Rs. 3,834-2-6, what the plaintiffs claim in the plaint.

The facts of the case are as follows: On the 23rd of July 1887, the defendants bought of Messrs. Ralli Brothers' 100 tons, more or less, Japan copper, Furrakawa, for July shipment, at Rs. 21-2 per maund. They afterwards instructed one Madun Chand, a broker, to make re-sales of the copper on their behalf; and it was stated by the witnesses for the defendants that, when the defendants gave the broker his instructions, they, after the rates had been fixed, told him that the buyers would get delivery of the copper as often as the defendants got delivery from Ralli Brothers. If the defendants got delivery at once, they would give delivery all at once; if the defendants got delivery by two instalments, they were to get delivery by two instalments, and so on. And that the defendants were selling copper which was to arrive; if only half the quantity arrived, the buyers will get half; if only a quarter arrives, they will get a quarter. The broker said that upon these instructions he saw the plaintiffs and negotiated a sale of a portion of the copper to them. Upon such negotiation, he said that he informed the plaintiffs that Ralli Brothers were to deliver the copper to the defendants, and out of that copper the defendants were to deliver again to the plaintiffs, and that the actual delivery was to be taken from Ralli Brothers' godowns. The broker said this: He told them that if the defendants got delivery of only half from Ralli's they would deliver only half to the plaintiffs; if they got the whole, they would deliver the whole.

The plaintiffs agreed to purchase 750 maunds of the copper at Rs. 21-5, and the broker prepared and signed, on behalf of both seller and buyer, the usual bought-and-sold notes in the following terms:

"To Jadu Raiji, Ramgopal Raiji, this is written by Dhunsook Madun Chand with salutations. Further, we have bought for you Furrakawa copper, 750 maunds, as "amdani" (to arrive) of (or from) Mudusudan Nundy, Ramprosunno Nundy, and Bhubotaran Nundy, at the rate of Rs. 21-5, the goods of the house (firm) of Ralli, Parbhars. Prior to the 21st of October 1887, some portion of the copper mentioned in the defendants' contract with Messrs. Ralli Brothers arrived at their godowns, and another portion arrived early in November, in all about 1,500 maunds, and the defendants gave to plaintiffs a delivery order for 375 maunds and 6 chittacks of copper in the following form:

C.N.G. 24-1-89
\text{Rs.} 9,16,00
1545

Calcutta, 22nd October 1887.

No. 1501.
Godown-keeper,
Deliver to Mudusudan Ramprosunno Bhubotaran Nundy:

Plaintiffs presented the order to Messrs. Ralli Brothers and received from them 375 maunds and 6 chittacks of copper, and paid them the sum of Rs. 7,800. The defendants afterwards returned to the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 149-8-9, being the difference between the sum of Rs. 7,800 and the price of the copper delivered to the plaintiffs.

At the time of such delivery there was, in Messrs. Ralli Brothers' hands, the whole of the 1,500 maunds, or much more than a sufficient quantity of a copper to satisfy the plaintiffs' entire contract, and it was contended before us that it should be assumed that the defendants were aware of this fact. There is no evidence to support any such assumption, and I do not see why we should make it, though, in my opinion, it is wholly immaterial whether they knew the fact or not. Messrs. Ralli afterwards delivered the remainder of the 1,500 maunds to other purchasers from the defendants, some of whom purchased before its arrival, and some after.

No more copper ever arrived in Calcutta within the terms of the defendants' contract with Messrs. Ralli Brothers, nor did any other copper of the kind mentioned in their contract with the plaintiffs arrive in Calcutta for the defendants during the time for delivery mentioned in their contract.

[188] Some time after the delivery of the 375 maunds of copper to the plaintiffs, the defendants agreed with Messrs. Ralli Brothers to cancel their contract with them, and afterwards, on December 29th, 1887, Messrs. Ralli Brothers paid them the sum of Rs. 12,500 in consideration of their so doing.

The defendants have refused to deliver any further copper to the plaintiffs, and before action repudiated all liability to do so.

Upon these facts it was contended for the defendants that the bought-and-sold notes did not contain the whole contract between the parties, but that the contract was partly verbal and partly in writing; and that, taking the evidence of the broker with the notes, the contract proved was a contract to deliver one-fourth of each delivery made by Messrs. Ralli Brothers to the defendants until the plaintiffs had received 750 maunds, and that as the plaintiffs have received one-fourth of all such copper as arrived, they were not entitled to demand anything more. It was further contended that the plaintiffs were aware, when they took delivery of the 375 maunds, that there was sufficient copper in the godowns to satisfy their entire contract, and that as they did not insist on its delivery to them, they waived all claim to that particular copper, and, as no more copper afterwards arrived, they were prevented from making any claim by the condition of the contract.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the evidence of the conversation was not admissible at all, as the bought-and-sold notes must be taken to be the final expression of the agreement come to between the parties, and that no evidence was admissible to add to or vary the terms of the notes.

The learned Judge in the Court below has accepted the view put forward by the defendants, has admitted the evidence, and has come to the conclusion that the contract between the parties was not that which appears on the bought-and-sold notes, but was such a contract as is alleged in para. 3 of the written statement which is a contract to deliver one-fourth of such copper as arrived at Messrs. Ralli Brothers' godowns, and as the defendants have delivered 375 maunds, or a quarter of 1,500 [184] maunds, which is the whole amount of copper which did in fact arrive, there is no further liability on their part, and he has dismissed the suit.

I am unable to agree with the learned Judge in this view of the matter. The evidence as to what passed between the defendants and the broker before the negotiation with the plaintiffs commenced, was not, I think, admissible at all; because, apart from anything else, it does not appear that the conversation was ever communicated to the plaintiffs, or that the broker was in any sense their agent at that time, and the question is then reduced to the effect of the evidence given by the broker of the conversation between himself and the plaintiffs which resulted in the sale, and the signature by him of the notes.

After a good deal of leading by the defendants' counsel he said: "There was no arrangement as to delivery; it was understood delivery was to be taken from Ralli Brothers. Ralli Brothers were to deliver the copper to the defendants, and out of that copper the defendants were to deliver again to the plaintiffs. As many times as Ralli Brothers delivered goods to the defendants, so many times would the defendants deliver to the plaintiffs. If the defendants got delivery of only half from Ralli Brothers, they would deliver only half to the plaintiffs; if they got the whole, they would deliver the whole."

The broker further said: "All that was arranged I put down in the contract. By the contract I mean the bought-and-sold notes;" and that he reported what had passed to the defendants and said to them: "The Baboo consents to those provisions; you had better sign the contract;" and that he then, by the instruction of the defendants, signed the bought-and-sold notes on their behalf, and as constituting the contract.

The argument for the defendants turns on the portion of the broker's evidence which deals with the delivery of half only. It is said that the meaning of that sentence is that the plaintiffs were only entitled to half of what arrived, and the meaning of the words "only half from Ralli Brothers," is only half of what Ralli Brothers had contracted to deliver. The learned Judge has found that at the time when the contract was made, an [185] agreement was come to between the parties, such as is set out in para. 3, which amounts to an agreement that the defendants should sell and deliver to the plaintiffs 75.
maunds of copper, to arrive, by instalments of one-fourth of each instalment of copper of which they would receive delivery from Messrs. Ralli Brothers.

I can find no evidence of any such agreement. It appears by the bought-and-sold notes, which the broker says constituted the contract, that the defendants were to deliver 750 maunds if they arrived; and when he says if only half arrived, the defendants would only get half, but that all the terms were put down in the contract, the plain meaning of his words is, I think, that if the defendants only got half of 750, they would only give what they got to the plaintiffs.

I also think that, if the evidence of the broker bears the meaning sought to be put upon it by the defendants, it is excluded by s. 92 of the Evidence Act, it not being within proviso 2 to that section.

The bought-and-sold notes disclose a contract for the purchase and sale of 750 maunds, if 750 maunds arrived.

If the evidence of the broker means what the defendants say it does, the "separate oral agreement" was an agreement to deliver 750 maunds if a much larger quantity arrived. Such an agreement would be, in my opinion, inconsistent with the terms of the notes, and as the notes were signed after the conversation, and are proved by the defendants' witness to be the contract, I do not think evidence of such an oral agreement, to vary the terms of the contract as disclosed by the notes, would be admissible, or that, if admissible, it would be reliable or of any value in any way and, for my own part, I should not believe it.

The case of Sieuwright v. Archibald (1) was relied on by the learned Judge in the Court below; but that case does not, in my opinion, affect the present question. In that case, the bought-and-sold notes did not agree, and there being no other written memorandum of the contract, it was held that there was no sufficient proof within the Statute of Frauds. The learned Judges say that bought-and-sold notes may not be either the contract or [186] a memorandum of it, but merely notes sent by brokers, to their employers to give them information, and that in such a case the contract may be proved by any other legal means.

In the present case the broker, who was called by the defendants, said that the bought-and-sold notes were the contract, and it is apparent from the evidence that they were accepted by both parties as such, and this is in accordance with what was proved to be the custom of merchants in Calcutta in the case of Cowie v. Remfry (2) where this was proved. I am of opinion that parol evidence was not admissible to vary or add to the terms of the contract which had been reduced into writing. If any authority is required for this proposition, it will be found in the case of Young v. Austin (3).

The only other contention which was urged before us on behalf of the defendants was that of waiver. As to that, I think it enough to say that, as the defendants had the whole of four months to deliver in, the plaintiffs could not claim anything at all at the time when they received the delivery order for 375 maunds, and so could not demand a delivery at that time of anything more than the defendants thought fit to give them; and as they had no claim which they could enforce, they could not waive it by not asserting it.

On the whole, I am of opinion that the facts proved disclose no defence to the action, and that the appeal must be allowed and judgment given.

for the plaintiffs for the agreed amount of damages. The plaintiffs will get the costs in both Courts.

I should add that, although in the view I take of the case, it is not necessary to decide the point, it must not be understood that I am of opinion that the plaintiffs would have had no claim against the defendants by reason of their having cancelled their contract with Messrs. Ralli, and so put it out of their own power to fulfil their contract with the plaintiffs.

I would further add that I think the practice of admitting evidence and reserving the question of its admissibility for further consideration is unwise and much to be regretted. If the evidence is once admitted it is impossible to say what its effect may be on the mind of the person who hears it; and I think it most [187] desirable that the question of admissibility should be finally decided when the objection to questions is taken.

Pigot, J.—The plaintiffs sue for damages for the breach of a contract for the delivery of 750 maunds of copper; 375 maunds were delivered, and the breach alleged is the refusal to deliver 375 maunds, the remainder of what the plaintiffs say they were entitled to under the contract. The amount of the damages is admitted if defendants' liability be established.

The plaint in the first paragraph says: "Previously to the 13th day of August 1887 the defendants purchased from Messrs. Ralli Brothers, Merchants of Calcutta, a quantity of copper, and on the said 13th day of August the defendants contracted to sell to the plaintiffs 750 maunds of the said copper (delivery on arrival) at the rate of Rs. 21-5 per maund, Factory weight, with discount for four months at the rate of Rs. 10 per cent. per annum, with a further discount at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, for 45 days from the date of delivery."

The defendants in the first and second paragraphs of the written statement say as follows:—

1st.—"On the 23rd day of July 1887 they agreed to purchase from Messrs. Ralli Brothers of Calcutta 100 tons or 3,000 maunds more or less of Japan copper, Furrakawa, to arrive, by shipments in the months of July, on the terms and conditions set out in Exhibit A (hereunto annexed), which the defendants crave leave to refer to as part of this their written statement."

2nd.—"On the 13th day of August 1887 the plaintiffs agreed to purchase 750 maunds out of the said 3,000 maunds of copper so agreed to be purchased by the defendants from the said Messrs. Ralli Brothers under a contract, dated the 9th day of the dark side of the moon in Bhadro, in Sambat 1944, corresponding with the 13th day of August 1887, the terms whereof translated into English are as follows:"—

There is no dispute as to the bought-and-sold notes, which agree: nor as to the authority of the broker through whom the contract contained in them was made. And it is to be observed that the written statement in the paragraph just set out states that the plaintiffs agreed to purchase the 750 maunds under a [188] contract, that is, that contained in the bought-and-sold notes dated the 9th Bhadro (dark side) 1294, or 13th August 1887; and then sets out the terms of it as contained in them. That, as-I understand the effect of this language, makes it part of the defendants' case; that as to anything provided for in the bought-and-sold notes, they constitute the contract between the parties.
The third paragraph of the written statement contains the defence set up in this suit:—

3rd.—“At the time when this last-mentioned contract was entered into, it was distinctly agreed between the plaintiffs and the defendants that the defendants would sell and deliver to the plaintiffs the said 750 maunds of copper by instalments of one-fourth of each shipment of copper of which they would receive delivery from the said Messrs. Ralli Brothers.”

At the hearing the learned Judge allowed evidence to be given by the defendants, which evidence, as I understand, was tendered in support of the defence set up in the third paragraph of the written statement.
He did not, when allowing that evidence (which was objected to) to be given, decide the question raised as to its admissibility, but reserved that question for decision by his judgment in the case. In his judgment he held the evidence to be admissible, and finding that it established the agreement set up in the third paragraph of the written statement, and that, under the circumstances, the defendants became entitled by the terms of that agreement to refuse delivery of more than the 375 maunds delivered by them, he dismissed the suit.

What took place after the contract was, as proved or admitted, as follows:—On the 25th Bhadro (August 29th) the defendants sold to one Amritolall 200 maunds copper, to arrive. On the 27th Bhadro (August 31st) they sold to Tarachand and Ram Chunder 100 maunds, and Madhub Chunder and Prankristo 150 maunds, to arrive. They made no further sales than these of copper, to arrive.

About October 19th or 20th, 1,061 maunds of Ralli’s copper arrived, and about the 31st October, 436 maunds, that is, 1,497 maunds in all.
No more copper than this arrived under the defendants contract with Ralli Brothers. Of the copper which so arrived the plaintiffs got delivery of maunds 375-0-6, that is, [189] maunds 87-0-6 on October 22nd, maunds 100-11-0 on October 31st, and maunds 187-29-0 on November 8th. These quantities appear to have been delivered to them under a delivery order, from Ralli Brothers to the defendants for 375 maunds, dated October 22nd. It may be noticed in passing that these deliveries certainly do not seem to have been made in accordance with the alleged agreement in the third paragraph of the written statement.

To the other persons, to whom the defendants had sold copper, to arrive, they delivered 225 maunds out of the 450 maunds sold by them.

The rest of the 3,000 maunds of copper, to arrive, which defendants had contracted for with Messrs. Ralli Brothers, did not arrive at all, nor did any copper arrive of the description stated in the bought-and-sold notes. The defendants made an arrangement with Messrs. Ralli as to that part of the contract; at what exact date that does not appear, though from Nilmony’s evidence it would seem to have been before the 18th November. In December 1881 they received from Messrs. Ralli Rs. 12,500 in consideration of their having done so.

The defendants themselves took delivery from Ralli Brothers of the rest of the 1,497 maunds of copper, over and above the 375 maunds delivered to the plaintiffs and the 225 maunds to other persons. That would amount to about 897 maunds; and this they sold to different persons by ready sales, in the market, at prices higher than those agreed on with the plaintiffs.

In their written statement the defendants say that the rest of the 3,000 maunds did not arrive, and the defendants therefore could not, and in fact, did not, deliver the remainder of the 750 maunds of copper to the plaintiffs, and they submit that no further deliveries became due from them to the plaintiffs.

It may be worth while to set out the letter of December 11th from the defendants, in answer to a demand then made by the plaintiffs on the defendants for delivery of the remaining 375 maunds, to which the defendants replied on December 11th:

"We sold you 750 maunds (Furrakawa) copper, to arrive, from Messrs. Ralli Brothers & Co., with condition to deliver you the same as it will arrive at the said office. I delivered you 375 maunds, which had arrived, and the remaining shall be given to you when it will arrive at the said office." The arrangement with Ralli Brothers is not there disclosed; and the writer would seem, not to have had the "verbal agreement" present to his mind.

The defence was that, although an amount of copper did arrive more than enough to enable defendants to deliver the 750 maunds sold by the contract contained in the bought-and-sold notes, still as the defendants were not, by reason of the contemporaneous verbal agreement alleged in the third paragraph of the written statement, bound to deliver more than one-fourth of what, by each shipment, did arrive, and as they did deliver one-fourth of what did arrive, they are not liable for breach of contract. There is no dispute as to their liability, unless they are excused by some such defence as this.

The plaintiffs contended that it was not competent for the defendants to set up the verbal agreement alleged; and they contend before us that even if it was, the defendants have wholly failed to prove it.

These are the substantial points raised before us. There was another, argued before us for the defendants, but not noticed in the judgment, namely, that the plaintiffs by accepting the 375 maunds had waived performance of the contract alleged by them. There really is nothing in the case to warrant such a contention, nor could it lie in defendants' mouth to suggest a waiver, in face of their letter of December 11th, untruthful as it was. The learned Judge in the Original Court held that evidence was admissible to prove the contract set up in the third paragraph of the written statement. I shall presently state why I think that evidence was not admissible; at present I have to deal with the finding of the learned Judge. He found that the evidence establish the contract set up. Unfortunately, he did not state his reasons for this finding, or refer to the parts of the evidence which led him to that conclusion.

The evidence upon the point is that of the broker and of the defendant, Nilmoney; and it appears to me not merely to fail to establish, but to be quite inconsistent with, the case made in the third paragraph of the written statement. Madun Chand, the broker, says: "There was no arrangement as to delivery. It was understood delivery was to be taken from Ralli Brothers; Ralli Brothers [191] were to deliver the copper to the defendants, and, out of that copper, the defendants were to deliver again to the plaintiffs." Later on (combining a question and answer) he says: There was no arrangement as to what quantity of copper was to be taken delivery of at a time." Then he is asked: "Was anything said as to the proportion of delivery? A.—If the Nundy defendants got delivery of only half from Ralli Brothers, they would deliver only half to the plaintiffs; if they got the whole, they would deliver the whole. I said to the Mooneen gomashta of plaintiffs, you will have to take delivery in the same way as the defendants get delivery from the Rallis, In the contract it was written: "This contract is Ralli Brothers' contract-ka-durrun on account of'—and that means that the word durrun means on account of." He ends by saying "all that was arranged has been put down in the contract. By the contract I mean the bought-and-sold notes."

There is not a word in his evidence as to delivery of "instalments of one-fourth of each shipment of copper of which defendants would receive delivery from Ralli Brothers." Then Nilmoney says, "When the rates were fixed the broker was told that the plaintiffs will get delivery of the copper as often as we get it from Ralli's. If we get delivery all at once, we will give delivery all at once; if we got delivery by two instalments, they were to get delivery by two instalments, and so on." Later on, "I said to the broker, I am selling copper which is to arrive: if only one-half quantity arrived, you will get half; if only one-fourth, one-fourth. The broker consented and agreed to that and went to get the consent of the Baboo. He came back afterwards to me and then made the contract."

He was cross-examined as to his intention when making the contract. He says: "I had nothing particular in my mind. I intended to give a proportionate quantity only, proportionate to what I received. If I got the whole hundred tons, I would have given them the whole quantity they purchased." Later, "When I sold the goods as Ralli Brothers', I would have given delivery as I received from Ralli's, and I would have given a pro rata distribution amongst those persons to whom I sold the copper." This is manifestly quite idle and worthless testimony. He had not then [192] made any sales save to plaintiffs, nor did he for more than a jort.-night afterwards. However, this is what he says.

Of the contract set up in the third paragraph of the written statement, not a word is said in the evidence of either of those witnesses. It is to me quite clear that this evidence is fashioned so as to fit in with what did happen: namely, that the plaintiffs got one-half of their 750 maunds, and that Ralli Brothers (by an agreement with the defendants which they did not disclose) delivered only half of the 3,000 maunds sold to defendants. A verbal contract is accordingly set up, though not that set up in the written statement, by which plaintiffs were only to get the same proportion of their 750 maunds as Ralli should deliver of his 3,000 maunds; and so what is supposed to be a defence to the auction is supplied.

I think this evidence does not warrant the finding of the learned Judge "that the contract pleaded in the written statement, at any rate so far as what is stated in the third paragraph of the written statement is concerned, has been proved." I think he ought to have found on this question in the negative, and that his judgment and decree should be set aside on that ground and on that ground alone.

It is unnecessary to consider whether the contract substituted in the evidence could have been held proved. It has not been held proved, and, if necessary, I should express complete disbelief of the evidence in support of it. Apart, however, from the question whether the evidence warrants the finding of the learned Judge, which must be answered in the negative, I agree that the evidence tendered in support of the third paragraph of the written statement was not admissible.

It was expressly admitted in the written statement that the contract contained in the bought-and-sold notes (which agree) was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants.

It was a contract for 750 maunds of copper of Ralli Brothers, to arrive. Time, four months. The learned Judge has held that this term of the contract "to arrive" was a condition. I agree with that. The contract, therefore, bound the defendants to deliver 750 maunds if such a quantity arrived (as did) within the four months. But the contract in the third paragraph of the written statement substitutes for that obligation a very different one, [193] namely, the obligation to deliver 750 maunds, if one-fourth of each of the successive arrivals should in the aggregate amount to 750 maunds, otherwise not. No doubt the written statement only says that it was agreed that defendants should deliver instalments of one-fourth of each shipment. But if this does not mean that they were not to be bound to deliver more than such one-fourth, there is no meaning in setting it up as a defence: and it is in truth the defence raised in the latter part of the written statement, to the effect that the plaintiffs got one-fourth of what did arrive, and that as the 1,500 maunds residue of Ralli's contract did not arrive, they were not entitled to more.

The learned Judge holds that the contract set up in the third paragraph is not inconsistent with that contained in the bought-and-sold notes. I am unable to agree with him. I think the two are inconsistent in this: the first makes the plaintiffs' right to receive 750 maunds of Ralli Brothers' shipments of Japan copper, conditional on arrival within four months of that quantity. The second, in effect makes it conditional on the arrival of the whole 3,000 maunds, which the plaintiffs had, as a fact, agreed to buy from Ralli Brothers, but no condition referring to the amount of Ralli's contract, or making the arrival of the whole of it any part of the bargain between the plaintiffs and the defendants, is hinted at in the bought-and-sold notes.

The bought-and-sold notes provide: "The conditions to weighment to be 45 days after the goods shall have come into the godown."

The learned Judge holds that it was competent for the defendants to show that "goods" in this place meant, not the goods the subject of the contract, but the goods mentioned in the plaintiffs' contract with Ralli Brothers, which contract is not referred to in it at all. He holds that this was the meaning of the word "goods" according to the view of the broker and the defendant; and that, that being so (although he says counsel did not so put it, nor any witness say it), evidence of the matters in the third paragraph of the written statement was admissible.

I am unable to agree with the opinion that evidence as to this very special meaning of the word "goods" was admissible. There seems to me to be no ambiguity in the words of the [194] instrument such as to render it admissible. The words "goods of the firm of Ralli Brothers" in the early part of the document seem to me clearly descriptive of the copper agreed to be bought, and the word "goods" in the proviso as to weighment to relate clearly to the copper, the subject-matter of the contract between plaintiffs and defendants, or at any rate copper answering that description. Were this meaning to be attributed to the word "goods" as suggested, I do not see how it would make evidence of the contract in the third paragraph of the written statement admissible; and I am unable to agree with the learned Judge, either that evidence of the meaning of the word "goods" was admissible, or that, if admitted, it furnished ground for further admitting evidence of the verbal agreement.

As a result, the contract in the third paragraph being inconsistent with the written contract admitted both in the pleadings and in the evidence to have been entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants, no evidence of it was admissible, and the finding upon that evidence, even if it were warranted by it, cannot be sustained.
Another ground is stated by the learned Judge for holding the evidence of the matters alleged in the third paragraph of the written statement admissible. That is that, as held by him in a former case, bought-and-sold notes do not necessarily constitute the contract: in his former judgment, quoted by him, he refers to Sievewright v. Archibald (1), and the observations of Mr. Benjamin on this subject in which that decision is discussed.

In Sievewright v. Archibald (1), the bought-and-sold notes were inconsistent with one another: it seems to have been the opinion of the Court that the contract between the parties might well have been proved in some other way, if there was one; and if it could be proved so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. This and the other cases on this subject go no further than to show that there may be cases in which bought-and-sold notes have been made, but in which they do not, nevertheless, constitute the contract. But as a general rule when they agree, they do. Lord Campbell in Sievewright v. Archibald (1) says that where the bought-and-sold notes agree, it has been held that they constitute the contract. It may perhaps be a question, looking at the case of Cowie v. Remfry (2), which governs this Court, whether in Calcutta bought-and-sold notes do not by custom presumably constitute the contract unless this be disproved, once the authority of the broker is established.

At any rate, where the authority of the broker to act for both sides is clear, where the bought-and-sold notes agree and have been entirely acquiesced in, there can be no doubt that, at least so far as their contents go, they do constitute the contract.

In this case the matter even went further, for the defendants admitted that the bought-and-sold notes contained the contract between them and the plaintiffs, though setting up a distinct verbal one, and the broker deposed that the contract in the bought-and-sold notes did contain every thing agreed between the parties. I think the bought-and-sold notes were the contract in this case, and could not be varied by parol evidence.

For these reasons I think the judgment and decree of the Court below should be set aside, and a decree be made for the plaintiffs, and that they recover damages being the amount ascertained to be due, if damages should be found to be recoverable.

It is unnecessary to determine the question raised in the memorandum of appeal as to the defendant's arrangement with Ralli Brothers, and the profit made by him out of that arrangement; it is enough to say that I quite agree with what has been said by the Chief Justice on that subject.

I may add also that I quite agree with what has been said by the Chief Justice as to the admission of evidence subject to decision of the question whether it is admissible or not.

Appeal allowed.

Landlord and Tenant—Forfeiture—Denial by tenant of title of landlord—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 178—Forfeiture completed before passing of Act.

The plaintiffs, purchasers of a mokurari jama, sued to eject the defendants, on the ground that they had in their written statement in a former suit for rent, which had been decided in the plaintiffs' favour, denied the plaintiffs' title, and had thereby forfeited their tenures. The denial took place in March 1885, before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation: Held, that the forfeiture being complete before the passing of the Act, the case was not affected by s. 178 of that Act, and must be governed by the old law.

Under the decided cases before the Bengal Tenancy Act such a denial by a tenant of his landlord's title created a forfeiture. Satyabrama Dassee v. Krishna Chunder Chattopadhya and Ishan Chunder Chattopadhya v. Shama Churn Dutt (2) referred to. But soluble:—Since the passing of that Act, in any case to which it applies there cannot be any eviction on the ground of forfeiture incurred by denying the title of the landlord, that not being a ground enumerated in the Act, and therefore expressly excluded by s. 178.

This was a suit for ejectment and for khas possession of certain lands.

The plaintiffs were the purchasers of certain mokurari jama from the defendants Nos. 8, 9, and 10, called, the pro forma defendants. The purchase was made on the 25th Assar 1291 (8th July 1884), at which time and previously they alleged that the principal defendants (defendants Nos. 1 to 7) held the land from which it was sought to eject them as Karfa tenants. On this allegation the plaintiffs, in the early part of 1883, brought a suit against these defendants for arrears of rent. In that suit the defendants denied the alleged relation of landlord [197] and tenant, and denied also the plaintiffs' mokurari jama title; and they set up their own title as lakhirajdas. That suit was, on 31st December 1885, decided in favour of the plaintiffs, who sought in the present suit to eject the defendants on the ground (among others not material to this report) that they had forfeited their tenure by reason of their denial of their landlords' title in the former suit.

The Subordinate Judge (reversing on this point the decision of the Munsif) held that the plaintiff was entitled to eject the defendants, and gave him a decree for possession.

From this decision the principal defendants appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for appellants.

Dr. Gaurudas Banerjee and Munshi Seraj-ul-Islam, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Rampini, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—The present suit was brought by persons who claimed to be the landlords of the defendants, and they claimed to eject the defendants from the land in question on several grounds of which it is only necessary to notice the first.

The first ground was that in a former suit between the same parties, in which the plaintiffs sued to recover rent, the defendants in their written statement had denied that the relation of landlord and tenant existed at all between the plaintiffs and themselves, and set up an adverse title claiming the land as their own lalhuraj. That was decided against the defendants, it being established that the relation of landlord and tenant did exist; and a decree for rent was given accordingly. In the present suit for ejectment the plaintiffs based their title in the first place upon the forfeiture of the defendants' interest, which they (the plaintiffs) say arose from the fact of the defendants having absolutely denied their landlords' title in the rent-suit. Under the law as laid down in this Court before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it must be taken, we think, that the plaintiffs' contention is correct, and that such [198] a denial in the written statement of the landlords' title did work a forfeiture. The cases are many, and have not all been uniform, but the latter cases are, we think, all one way in favour of the plaintiffs' view. It is not necessary to do more than refer to two of these cases: one, Satyabhama Dassee v. Krishna Chunder Chatterjee (1) and the other, Ishan Chunder Chattopadhyya v. Shama Churn Dutt (2).

The denial in the rent-suit took place some time in March 1885. In the same year the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed and came into operation on the 1st of November of that year. That Act has obviously made a material change in the law in this respect. The mode in which it has dealt with the subject of eviction of tenants from their tenures or holdings is to enumerate the things which shall be grounds for a suit for eviction, and, in express terms, to exclude every other ground. Various classes of tenants are dealt with in their order.

Section 10 deals with permanent tenure-holders, and it declares that "a holder of a permanent tenure shall not be ejected by his landlord except on the ground that he has broken a condition on breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between him and his landlord, liable to be ejected. Provided that, where the contract is made after the commencement of this Act, the condition is consistent with the provisions of this Act." Section 18 deals with the case of a ryot holding at a fixed rent in perpetuity, and it says that he "shall not be ejected by his landlord except on the ground that he has broken a condition consistent with this Act, and on breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between him and his landlord, liable to be ejected." The case of the occupancy ryot is dealt with in s. 25, which says: "An occupancy ryot shall not be ejected by his landlord from his holding, except in execution of a decree for ejectment passed on the ground: (a) that he has used the land comprised in his holding in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy; or (b) that he has broken a condition consistent with the provisions of this Act, and in breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between himself and his landlord, liable to be ejected." The next case, that of a non-occupancy ryot, is dealt with in s. 44, which says: "A non-occupancy ryot shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be liable to ejectment on one or more of the following grounds, and not otherwise, namely: (a) on the ground that he has failed to pay an arrear of rent; (b) on the ground that he has used the land in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy, or that he has broken a condition consistent with this Act, and on breach of which he is, under the terms of a contract between himself and his landlord, liable to be ejected; (c) where he has been admitted to occupation of the land under a registered lease, on the ground that the term of the lease has expired; (d) on the ground that he has refused to agree to pay a fair and equitable rent determined under s. 46, or that the term for which he is entitled to hold at such a rent has expired." The remaining class of tenants, under-ryots, are provided for in s. 49, which says: "An under-ryot shall not be liable to be ejected by his landlord except (a) on the expiration of the term of a written lease; (b) when holding otherwise than under a written lease, at the end of the agricultural year next following the year in which notice to quit is served upon him by his landlord." Then s. 89 provides that no tenant shall be evicted from his tenure or holding except in execution of a decree, so that a landlord, even in case where eviction is allowed, cannot evict without obtaining a decree of a Court for that purpose. And s. 178 strengthens the matter, because it provides that "nothing in any contract between a landlord and tenant made before or after the passing of this Act . . . . . . . shall entitle a landlord to eject a tenant otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act." Thus it seems clear that under the present Rent Law, in all the cases to which it applies, there can no longer be any eviction on the ground of forfeiture incurred by denying the title of the landlord.

If the present case is governed then by the law in force prior to the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff is entitled to reply on the forfeiture; if it is governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, he is not. The general principle of construction applicable to such matters is that an Act is not to be held to take away vested right of property unless such an intention is expressed or appears by necessary implication. In the Tenancy Act we can find no indication of an intention that it shall take away from a landlord any vested right derived from a forfeiture which occurred before the Act came into operation. Section 178 is specifically made retrospective in one respect, for it says, that "nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of this Act (c) shall entitle a landlord to eject a tenant otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act." But the present case does not depend on contract, and, if it did, there is a great difference between a forfeiture under a contract made before the Act, and a forfeiture actually completed before the Act.

For these reasons, we think that the old law governs this case. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

J. v. w.

Appeal dismissed.
Arbitration—Long and unreasonable delay in the conduct of the proceedings—Revocation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 523—Appointment of arbitrator by the Court.

A submission to arbitration can only be revoked on good grounds.

The claimant in a reference to arbitration is the person on whom, ceteris paribus, it is incumbent to promote the conduct of the proceedings; and when, therefore, there is a long and unreasonable delay unexplained by any act of the other party either conducive to it or consenting to it or waiving it, the latter is, prima facie, entitled to decline to go on with the reference and to revoke the agreement for submission.

Where an agreement to refer has been duly revoked, the Court is incompetent to order it to be filed under s. 523 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Semble:—Where no arbitrator has been named in an agreement, and the aid of the Court in the appointment of an arbitrator is invoked, the parties ought to have an opportunity of being heard upon the selection to be made. Pestonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee (1) referred to.

[F., 29 C. 278; U.B.R. (1897-1901) 542; R., 17 C. W. N. 351 (352)=17 Ind. Cas. 600 (601)].

This was an appeal from a decree in terms of an arbitration award passed by the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore.

[201] The appellant, Osborne Richard Coley, and the respondent, Victoria Anne Da Costa, entered into an agreement, dated the 31st March 1886, by which they agreed that all matters in dispute between them should be referred to the arbitration of Baboo Shib Chunder Bajerji, Rai Bahadoor, Government Pleader, and Baboo Shoshi Bhusin Mookerjee, Pleader, whose joint-decision on each point should be final; and that, in the event of any difference of opinion between the said arbitrators upon any point, such point should be referred to the decision of Mr. T. C. Curtis, of Colgong, as umpire, who decision should be final. The agreement did not fix any date on which the award should be delivered, nor was any provision made for the appointment of other arbitrators in case any of the arbitrators thereby appointed should refuse or become incapable to act. This agreement was registered by the appellant on the 1st April.

There was no evidence to show that anything had been done by the arbitrators beyond a statement that two or three meetings had been held. But soon after the submission, Baboo Shoshi Bhusin Mookerjee, the arbitrator appointed by the respondent, went to Darjeeling for the benefit of his health, and the proceedings, if any had taken place, were suspended. On the 11th June 1886 the respondent wrote to Mr. Curtis, suggesting that Baboo Soorji Narain Singh should be appointed arbitrator in the place of Baboo Shoshi Bhusin Mookerjee: to this the appellant argued by his letter to Mr. Curtis of the 15th June. This fact does not appear to have been proved before the Subordinate Judge, though it was admitted on appeal before the High Court. The suggestion of appointing a fresh arbitrator in the place of Baboo Shoshi Bhusan was not carried out. Nothing was done from the time when the suggestion was made, nor was any attempt made to re-open or continue the proceedings until after the 8th December 1886, on which date the appellant sent a letter to Baboo Shoshi Bhusan Mookerjee, withdrawing from the arbitration, and requesting the return of all books, papers, letters, and documents filed by him.

In consequence, the respondent filed a petition, dated the 21st December 1886, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, to have the agreement for submission, dated the [202] 31st March 1886, filed under s. 523 of the Civil Procedure Code. Notice was given to the appellant to show cause why the agreement should not be filed, and cause was shown by him.

On the 23rd February 1887, the Subordinate Judge ordered the appellant to file the agreement within nine days from the date of the order, and that both the appellant and respondent should file the points of difference between them by that time. The reasons for this decision were that the delay on the part of the arbitrators, of which the appellant complained, was due chiefly to the illness of one of them; that there was no evidence that the appellant had been put to any inconvenience or annoyance in consequence of such delay; that there was no provision in the agreement that it should be void unless the award was filed within a fixed time; that, as the appellant had registered the agreement, he was the proper person to have taken it out of the Registry Office and to have filed it; and that, therefore, the cause shown by the appellant was neither sufficient nor satisfactory.

On the 29th March 1887, the Subordinate Judge appointed Baboo Shoshi Bhusan Mookerjee and Shib Chunder Banerji arbitrators, and Mr. Curtis, umpire. On the 2nd April, Baboo Shib Chunder Banerji declined to act, and on the 12th April, Mr. Curtis sent a notice to the same effect. In consequence of the refusal of Baboo Shib Chunder Banerji and Mr. Curtis to act, the Subordinate Judge, by his order of the 19th April, appointed Baboo Kirti Chunder Chatterji arbitrator and Baboo Sankata Churn Mitter umpire in their places. This order was made without any notice to the appellant.

Notice of the first meeting, which was fixed for the 1st June, was sent to the appellant under registered cover, but he did not attend it, nor any of the subsequent meetings. The arbitrators heard the matter ex parte, and delivered their award on the 18th June 1887.

On the 28th July 1887, the appellant filed his petition of objections, in which he objected to the award on the following grounds:—

(a) That there has not been a legal award in the case within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code.

[203] (b) That the nomination of, and reference to, the arbitrators were not made in the manner required by law, and as such, all proceedings subsequent to the reference were illegal and without jurisdiction.

(c) That some of the arbitrators were appointed without the knowledge and consent of the appellant.

(d) That the arbitration could not proceed inasmuch as it had been revoked by the appellant by his letter of 8th December 1886.

(e) That the arbitrators have no power to go on with the case ex parte, i.e., in the absence of the appellant.

(f) That the entire proceedings were ultra vires and without jurisdiction.
On the 20th July 1887, the Subordinate Judge overruled all these objections and made a decree in terms of the award.

From this decree an appeal was filed in the High Court.

Mr. Phillips, Mr. R. E. Twidale, and Baboo Umakali Mookerjee, for the appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory and Mr. H. E. Mendes, for the respondent.

Mr. Phillips.—The appellant was perfectly right in withdrawing from the arbitration. Section 523 contemplates that the application for filing an agreement should be made, while the matter is res integra, that is, not while the arbitration is going on, and before anything happens to put an end to the agreement.

There is no provision in the Code for an arbitration which is partly conducted out of Court.

[PiGOT, J., referred to the case of Pestonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee (1).]

Mr. Phillips.—The question in that case was as to the filing of an award.—See pages 126, 127. The entire proceedings here are more in the nature of an abuse of the sections. There was nothing done almost from the beginning. There is no necessity to resort to the Court in the case of a pending arbitration as the award can be filed after it has been made. Either there is a power to revoke, or there is none. If none, then the arbitration [204] must go on, and objections must be taken when the award comes to be filed.

[PiGOT, J., referred to the case of Brooke v. Surdyal (2).]

Mr. Phillips.—The order appointing arbitrators is bad, because it directs them to proceed de novo. The provisions as to the incapacity of an arbitrator do not apply to agreements to refer. The sections of ch. 37 are to apply so far as they are not inconsistent with the agreement to refer—see s. 524. The question is whether the Court has power to substitute arbitrators for those appointed by the parties. When parties come to an agreement to refer to certain persons, it would be a perversion of their intention to refer it to others. In the case of a reference by the Court, the Court can substitute others: and, in the case where no arbitrators have been appointed, it can appoint arbitrators or supersede the arbitration—see s. 510. To refer to unknown persons, in whom there can be no confidence, is inconsistent with s. 523, by which the Court cannot supersede, as there is no case pending before it. The arbitrators were not duly appointed. There was no notice served upon the appellant of anything done in Court, or of the appointment of the arbitrators. The Court had no power to appoint any persons arbitrators besides those named in the agreement.

[PiGOT, J., referred to Barracho v. D'Souza (3).]

Mr. Phillips.—In that case there was a reference of a matter in Court and by the Court. Section 316 of Act VIII of 1859 and s. 507 of the present Code are similar. The Judge has misapplied s. 508.

[PiGOT, J.—The words "order of reference" in s. 524 refer to what the Court does under s. 523. The term is not appropriate.]

Mr. Phillips—Appointments by the Court cannot be made without notice. The Courts are most reluctant to enforce such agreements. The agreement here was rescinded, and therefore there was no agreement to file. The observations of their [205] Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Pestonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee (1), if anything, are rather an authority in my favour on the question here.

In the case of Barracho v. D'Souza (2) there was a special stipulation for the appointment of an umpire. He also referred to Burla Ranga Reddi v. Kalapalli Sithaya (3) and Muhammad Abid v. Muhammad Asghar (4). The entire proceedings were illegal, and consequently the award is bad.

Mr. Gregory.—The revocation was not good; the arbitrators were duly appointed and the award made in the regular way.

I rely upon the cases of Pestonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee (1), Barracho v. D'Souza (2), and Muhammad Abid v. Muhammad Asghar (4) as to the appointments by the Court. In the absence of any authority, there is nothing in the Code that would vitiate the appointment and the award. Section 510 speaks of no notice, but leaves it in the discretion of the Court to appoint arbitrators. I therefore submit that notice was not imperative; and there is no authority which would make an appointment a nullity for want of notice, and consequently the award a nullity.

Mr. Mendes followed on the same side.

Mr. Phillips replied.

The judgment of the High Court (Pigot and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The award in this case is impeached in appeal on two main grounds; one, that the submission to arbitration was duly revoked before the order of the Court was made under which the agreement for reference was ordered to be filed under s. 523; and the other, that the proceedings had in the Court of Subordinate Judge were irregular, and such that the arbitrators who made the award, upon which the decree is based, were not a properly-constituted body of arbitrators at all, and that the award for that reason is bad. The first question is as to the right of the appellant to revoke the submission to arbitration which, it is clear, can only be on good grounds.

[206] The submission was in March 1886. We have nothing before us to enable us to determine whether anything was done by the arbitrators, though it is stated that two or three meetings were held. But, after the submission, the arbitrator appointed by the respondent went to Darjeeling for the benefit of his health, and the proceedings, if any had taken place, were suspended. A suggestion was made on the part of the respondent in June, that a fresh arbitrator should be appointed in his place; this was assented to by the appellant. This was admitted before us it does not appear to have been proved before the Subordinate Judge. Nothing, however, was done from that time until the following December, and there is no evidence that, until after the letter of December 8th revoking his submission was sent by the appellant, any attempt to re-open or continue the proceedings was made. In answer to a question put by us, the respondent's pleader stated to us that he was instructed that a meeting, or an attempt to hold a meeting, did take place in December, shortly before the appellant sent his letter of revocation. This is denied by the appellant; and, as there is no proof of it, it cannot, of course, be taken into consideration. It is most probably incorrect; there is nothing said of such a meeting in the respondent's petition of December

(1) 12 M I.A. 112. (2) 7 M.H.C.R. 72. (3) 6 M. 368. (4) 8 A. 64.
21st. As the case stands, therefore, we have only these facts: (1) a submission to arbitration in March; (2) a suspension of the arbitration soon after, by reason of the incapacity of the arbitrator nominated by the respondent; (3) a proposal by the respondent for the substitution of another person in his place, assented to by the appellant in June, but not carried out; (4) the lapse of six months, during which nothing is done; (5) the fact that the respondent, being the claimant as against the appellant, was the person on whom, ceteris paribus, it was incumbent to promote the conduct of the proceedings.

It appears to us that, under these circumstances, unexplained by any act of the appellant either conducting to this long delay, or consenting to or waiving it, the appellant was, prima facie, entitled to decline to go on with the reference.

Had the Subordinate Judge thought fit to enquire into the circumstances, it is possible, of course, that facts might have been proved which would have shown that the appellant was not entitled to revoke. But we have only to deal with what is before us; and must assume, for the purposes of our decision, that there was nothing more in the case than appears.

It is true that the appellant did not verify his written statement. But the delay mentioned in it was an admitted fact before the Subordinate Judge as before us.

We think that, on these facts, there appears such an unreasonable neglect in the prosecution of the arbitration as entitled the appellant to put an end to it. In the case of Pestonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee (1) the subject was considered as to whether or not the appellant was justified in revoking in that case; and we think that the circumstances of the present case are not wholly dissimilar to those which, in the case supposed by their Lordships in the decision of that case at page 131, would have justified, or might have justified, the appellant in that case in declining to proceed; no doubt, as we pointed during the argument yesterday, the period in that case between the submission to arbitration and the attempt to revoke was longer than that in the present case. But here we have a period of nine months elapsing during which, so far as the case before us shows, nothing was done to make any change in the state of things between the appellant and the respondent. In the case of Pestonjee Nussurwanjee v. Manockjee (1) almost immediately after the reference the partnership was dissolved, and the appointment of the person, who was to have the business in future, had been, as their Lordships point out, speedily determined, and, subsequently to that, several important decisions in the arbitration had been arrived at. We agree with the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant that, if anything, the observations of their Lordships are rather an authority in his favour on the question at issue here. The powers conferred by the Code upon arbitrators are very great; and we think that a party has a right, if he chooses, to insist upon it that, once an arbitration is decided upon, it shall be proceeded with reasonable speed. There is no doubt that in the present case the delay that took place was in itself unreasonable, and, being unexplained and not justified by any acts of the appellant, who hold that he had good cause under the circumstances for revoking this agreement. That being so, it was no longer competent to the Court to order the agreement to be filed under s. 523, and the proceedings were therefore invalid.

(1) 12 M. I. A. 112.
Having determined the appeal on this point, it is not necessary to go into the question elaborately argued before us as to the character of the proceedings taken by the Subordinate Judge; but we may say that, under no circumstances, could we have allowed the award arrived at, as it was, to stand. A proper opportunity ought, we think, to have been given to the appellant to come in before the appointment of the arbitrator in place of Baboo Shib Chunder, whose letter declining to continue as arbitrator was received apparently by the Subordinate Judge on the 4th April; and on that day, on his receiving that intimation, he appointed a fresh arbitrator. We think that the Court ought to have allowed the parties an opportunity of being heard as to the selection of an arbitrator. It is not necessary, however, for us to base our decision upon this ground, and the less so, because, were we to determine the case with reference to the validity of the proceedings taken, and apart from the question of the power of the appellant to revoke on the 8th of December, we should be obliged to send back the case again for the appointment of fresh arbitrators. But inasmuch as, in our judgment, the submission had been on that date validly revoked, that order was inoperative, and the proceedings had under it were likewise inoperative.

We therefore, allow the appeal, reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge made under s. 523 directing that the reference be filed, and set aside his decree on the award, with costs throughout.

[209] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Pigot.

IN THE MATTER OF Rash Behari Roy and another, Insolvents.

Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vic., Chap. 21), s. 50—Imprisonment of insolvent on Criminal side—False entries in books—Fraudulent preference—Fraudulent transfers—Warrant, illegality of—Concealment of property,

Section 50 of the Insolvent Act provides a punishment by way of penalty, and before an insolvent can be punished under that section, he must be shown by legal evidence to have committed, on some specific occasion, one or other of the offence enumerated in that section.

A law of this kind, the intention of which is to punish, should be administered as the Criminal law is administered, that is to say, specific offence should be charged, not technically specific in the sense of a specific form of indictment, but the Court and the insolvent and all concerned should know what offence the insolvent is being tried for; and the evidence should be directed to the proof of that offence, so that the accused may be in a position to produce evidence to rebut the charge of that offence; and the Judge should specifically find what offence the insolvent has been guilty of; and in his judgment and order and in the warrant it should appear what the insolvent has done.

A warrant committing an insolvent to jail for offences under s. 50 of the Insolvent Act, including, amongst the offences for which he is committed, an offence not contained in that section, is invalid.

* Original Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1889, against the order of Mr. Justice Trevelyon, dated the 13th of April 1889.
Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Trevelyon, made under s. 50 of the Insolvent Act.

Rash Behari Roy and Jollodhur Roy, traders, were adjudicated insolvents on the 21st April 1886, and on coming up for their personal discharge, were opposed on the following grounds: (1) that they had been guilty of fraudulent concealment of account-books and papers; that they had not produced any account-books prior to 1291, 1292 and 1293, nor any title deeds or zemindary papers or any papers or books relating to their business in the "North-West" and in "Rangoon"; (2) that the account-books produced to the Official Assignee for the years 1291, 1292 and 1293, were not original books and contained fictitious entries, namely, entries made after the balances for the day had been made up; (3) that certain mortgages in favour of Nilmadhub Roy and Debendronath Roy, and a putni lease granted to Grijaw Sundary Chowdhry and Protima Sundary Chowdhry, and an instrument of gift to Dayamoyee Dabee, and a certain conveyance to Kessublall Shaw and Hurilall Shaw were all fraudulent documents, and that a certain mortgage to one Josodallall Roy was given for a smaller sum than that stated in the document; (4) that the insolvents had vexatiously and frivolously defended four several suits brought against them by their creditors in the High Court which suits were eventually decreed against them in full; (5) that the insolvents had been guilty of concealment of property. The remaining grounds were intimately connected with the foregoing, and were treated with them.

It appeared in evidence against the insolvents, from an affidavit used by them for the purpose of obtaining further time to file their written statement in one of the above-mentioned suits which was for a large sum of money, that the summons in the suit was served on the 20th July 1886, and that twelve days after the service of this summons both the insolvents executed the putni above referred to in favour of their wives, the putni in question being of a very considerable portion of their property. It also appeared, that on the 26th July 1886, they took out a summons for two months, time to file further written statements, basing their application on an affidavit, which declared that there was a good and substantial defence to the suit, filing their written statement on the 20th August 1886, and that, on the 3rd August 1886, they executed the mortgage to Debendronath Roy. The written statement above referred to an inspection raised no substantial defence, but merely alleged, without denying the amount sued for, that they were ready and willing to have an account taken, and that they believed that, on the taking of that account, a much smaller sum than that sued for would be found to be due to the plaintiff.

The insolvents were tendered for cross-examination, and it was not until their cross-examination had been concluded that their books were produced.

Mr. T. A. Apcar appeared for the insolvents. Mr. Hill and Mr. M. P. Gasper, for the opposing creditors.

Trevelyon, J., found, as to the first ground, that the books were not produced in order to prevent the opposing creditors from examining the insolvents upon them. As to the second ground, that the insolvents had falsified their books, by making fictitious entries after the balances had been made up. As to the third ground, the mortgages, the deed of gift, and the putni leases and the kabuliats were all fraudulent documents, but that it was only necessary for him to refer to the mortgage of Debendronath and to the putnis; that as to the mortgage, that the consideration for the mortgage to Debendronath Roy was Rs. 30,000; that it alleged a previous debt of Rs. 3,500 which was taken as part of the consideration money, as well as other payments, which had been traced to persons, some of whom were not creditors; and that, if the money was taken from Debendronath, if it had left the insolvents' hands, and if it had been paid to the alleged creditors, then such payments were made for the benefit of the insolvents and for the purpose of defrauding the creditors who had brought suits against the insolvents. That, in considering whether the putnis were real transactions or not, it was necessary to remember the pending suits, and that, on the evidence before the Court (that taken before Mr. Justice Macpherson, the Commissioner before whom the case had first come up, not being put in), the putni had not been proved that it was abundantly clear that the putni had been executed in consequence of the service of summons in the suits brought against the insolvents, and not from pressure put upon the insolvents by the ladies. That as regards the fourth ground, there was no doubt but that the object of defending these suits, brought against the insolvents by creditors, was to get time to make away with their property. As to the fifth ground, that there was no doubt if the entries were fictitious, if the putni was fictitious, and if the money had not been distributed, then there had been concealment of property.

His Lordships then continued as follows:—"I find, as a fact, that there have been fraudulent transfers of property; that the defences to the suits have been vexatious and frivolous; also that the insolvents have falsified their books: although it appears in certain cases there have been entries after the balances were made up and carried over, entries made by mistake, yet there are a large number of cases in which payments have been made after the balances have been made up, and have not been carried over; an examination of these payments shows that they are fictitious. Then comes the question, what ought I to do? I have considered this question with great anxiety. This is certainly the most fraudulent commercial case I have seen since I have been sitting as Commissioner of this Court. These people have made away with large sums of money. They have brought in their books after long delay. In the interests of commercial morality, I must deal severely with the case. I have no doubt much money would have been available for distribution among creditors, but for the fraudulent acts of the insolvents. I direct that the two insolvents be imprisoned for one year each and decline them their discharge at the end of such year. The Sheriff's officer will take charge of them: Following the Bombay cases (1), I direct that they be imprisoned on the Criminal side of the jail."

The important portions of the order drawn up on this judgment were as follows:—"It appearing to the Court that the said insolvents have fraudulently, with intent to defeat the objects of 11 & 12 Vic., Chap. 21, made false entries in their books of account, and have fraudulently, with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among their creditors, transferred or made away with and mortgaged their properties, and have put their creditors (naming them) to unnecessary expense and delay by making vexatious and frivolous defence) to suits brought by the said creditors . . . . against the insolvents. This Court doth hereby adjudge and order that the said insolvents do stand committed to the custody of the Sheriff of the Town of Calcutta, and the Superintendent of the Presidency Jail, Calcutta, for a period of twelve calendar months . . . . The insolvents appealed.

Mr. Evans and Mr. T. A. Apclar, for the insolvents.

Mr. Hill and Mr. M. P. Gasper, for the opposing creditors.

[213] Mr. Evans.—The question, whether the transactions have been fraudulent or not, cannot be ascertained by the Insolvent Court, as between the insolvents, the assignee, and third persons; but the question is one for a Civil Court. The withholding of books in this case by the insolvents is not such an offence as is intended by the Act; there must be more than mere delay or difficulty in producing books. The only way of dealing summary punishment under the Act is on conviction on a proper prosecution. Punishment under s. 50 is not a conviction, as s. 70 deals with prosecutions. Section 50 has no exact parallel in the present English Act or in the old Indian Insolvent Acts. In one of the old English Acts it is declared that insolvents are to be committed to the debtors’ jail; and in this country two insolvents, Abdaw and Ramdhone Mullick, have been sent to the Civil jail. I submit it is not justifiable to treat the men as criminals under s. 51. If the order is a criminal one, I cannot find any similar section in the old English Acts, but there are some very like it, and these do not treat the matter as criminal, and I think the reason is that the Acts were for the relief of insolvent-debtors, and if it were not so, they would be imprisoned for ever and therefore the putting in prison on account of malpractices, differs from doing so on conviction. If the imprisonment is meant to be criminal, similar to that given to persons in due course of law, then you ought to be able to plead this in case you are charged again; but you cannot, under the Act, plead a previous conviction. Section 70, which provides for criminal punishment, points to a trial. I submit that the order of commitment is bad on the face of it, as it does not specify the false entries. (Mr. Hill.—In the grounds of opposition, which are not to contain specific allegations as is the case with a plaint, there is an allegation that the books contain fictitious entries, Pigot, J.—Has the learned Judge found that the insolvents were connected with the fictitious entries?) And it is bad as being in the alternative; and I say further that my clients have been convicted under s. 50 of an offence which falls under s. 51; and I am unable to say how much of the conviction is due to the insolvents having dealt with vexatious defences. Further the warrant contains an insertion which is bad on the face of it. There is an [214] illegal detention, as the warrant is informal. There is no evidence to connect the younger insolvent with the books. Next, ‘the withholding’ under s. 51 must, as I have said, be a complete withholding; here the books were brought in before the insolvency proceedings were over; and moreover four khatta books of 1290, which were said by the learned Commissioner to have contained entries made with a view to insolvency, were (it is now discovered) sent direct to the Insolvent Court from the Dacca Court, in which latter Court they had been filed since 1884, and out of the seven alleged fictitious entries, there are only four which are not contained in the books sent down by the Dacca Court. With regard to the findings of the Commissioner, ‘I find as a fact, &c.’ these are all findings on suspicion and not on evidence. As to the younger insolvent, there is no suggestion that he is connected with the false entries, and although he may have been implicated in the putnis, yet it is impossible to say how much of the punishment is due to the false entries, and how much to the putnis. The cases on the point, that persons informally connected must be brought up under habias corpus, to be found in Archibald’s Bankruptcy, edition 1856, p. 385, are to the effect that where the warrant contains words not according to the Act, then the warrant is bad. The words in the warrant must have direct relation to the offence, and where there is a statutory commitment, the commitment must be in compliance with the Acts; this is not so in the warrant under which the insolvents have been committed, and the warrant is therefore illegal, and the custody also. Next, as to undue preference, there must be a concurrence of three circumstances which are explained in Bourne v. Graham (1). The action must be voluntary to be an undue preference under s. 24—See the notes to Millet and Clarke’s Insolvency; Ex parte Craven, in re Craven & Marshall (2). As to voluntary payment see Strachan v. Barton (3). If the preference does not amount to fraudulent preference, it cannot amount to a crime under s. 50. As to finding on suspicion, see Ex parte Strikland (4), where, after a finding of fraud, a prosecution was directed. This is not a case for an order for prosecution at [215] all, it is a question whether the Court can convict without a prosecution and on suspicion. In the case last cited, it is clear it could not have been done. As to whether the imprisonment should have been on the Criminal side of the jail; the Act makes no distinction as to which imprisonment it should be. The word “imprisonment” in s. 53 is used in connection with civil debt. Either this is a proceeding in which the Commissioner was of opinion that the insolvent should be prosecuted, or it is a criminal proceeding, and, if the latter, then the opposing creditors would have had no locus standi, as only the Crown could have appeared. I submit the insolvents have been illegally confined, the warrant being itself an illegal one, and they would have been entitled to be brought up on habias corpus. Moreover the warrant does not direct that they should be imprisoned on the Criminal side.

[PETHERAM, C. J.—If the Judge had a right to send the insolvents to prison at all, had he not a right to send them to whichever side of the jail he thought fit?]

Mr. Hill for the opposing creditors.—The powers under s. 50 are somewhat analogous to the power given in s. 51. The practice in Bombay has been that it is in the discretion of the Court as to which side of the jail an insolvent should be sent to—See In re Cowasji Ookerji (5). In the case of a poor insolvent, charity would suggest that he should be imprisoned on the Criminal side of the jail, as under s. 50 no maintenance is allowed. This case is not being dealt with under habias corpus, or any analogous proceeding thereto, but it comes up as an appeal from an order. The learned Counsel then went into the evidence in support of the different charges.

The judgments of the Court (PETHERAM, C. J., and PIGOT, J.) follow:—

JUDGMENTS.

PETHERAM, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Trevelyan while sitting as Commissioner in Insolvency, and by which he committed two persons, who were insolvents and within the jurisdiction of the Court, to be imprisoned on the Criminal side of the jail for a period of one year. That order was made by the learned Judge under the provisions of s. 50 of the Insolvent [216] Act, and it is necessary to examine, for the purpose of what I have to say, the provisions of that section rather closely. That section provides "and be it enacted that in case it shall appear to any Court for the relief of insolvent debtors that any such insolvent has fraudulently, with the intent to conceal the state of his affairs, or to defeat the objects of this Act, destroyed or otherwise wilfully prevented or purposely withheld the production of any book, paper or writing relating to such of his affairs as are subject to investigation under this Act, or kept or caused to be kept false books, or made false entries in, or withheld entries from, or wilfully altered or falsified any such book, paper, or writing, or that such insolvent has fraudulently, with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among his creditors or of giving an undue preference to any of the said creditors, discharged or concealed any debt due to or from the said insolvent, or made away with, changed, mortgaged, or concealed any part of his property, of what kind soever, such Court shall have power to adjudge that the insolvent shall be imprisoned for a period or periods not exceeding two years in the whole, as such Court shall direct, and to declare him entitled to his discharge as aforesaid at the expiration of the term of imprisonment to which he shall be sentenced, and by warrant under the seal of the Court to order him to be arrested and committed to prison and there to be detained accordingly." Now the matter came before Mr. Justice Trevelyan in this way: The appellants, the insolvents, were persons who had carried on a considerable trade for some years (they were brothers), and in August 1886 they were adjudicated insolvent on the petition of some of their creditors. The creditors upon whose petition they were adjudicated insolvents, were not the opposing creditors at that time, but when they came up to be examined before the Commissioner of Insolvency, they were opposed by certain other creditors, and it was upon that opposition that this order was made. Prior to that order the books of these persons had been examined, they themselves had been examined and cross-examined, and certain witnesses had also been examined and cross-examined, and upon that the Commissioner came to certain conclusions and made an order in this form. As I said just now, that order was made under the section of the Act which I have just read, and the first question we [217] must consider here is what must have been made to appear to the Court, and in what way it must have been made to appear, before he had power to make an order under this section.

It is clear on the face of the section that it provides a punishment by way of penalty for the commission of certain offences, which punish-ment is to be administered by the Commissioner of Insolvency if it is made to appear before him that these particular offences have been committed.
Speaking for myself, and I think for my brother Pigot also, I am clearly of opinion that the words "in case it shall appear " in this section must mean, in case it shall appear by legal evidence that the person to be punished has committed the specific crime he is said to have committed, and that before any person can be punished under that section, he must be shown by legal evidence to have committed one or other of the offences which are enumerated in the section, and that it is not enough for the Commissioner, upon the matter coming before him, to be satisfied that this is a very suspicious commercial case, or to be satisfied generally that there has been dishonesty on the part of the insolvents in the matter of the bankruptcy, but as I said just now, he must be satisfied that they have been guilty on some specific occasion of some one or other of the offences which are mentioned in the section.

It follows from that, that in my opinion, before a Commissioner can commit under this section, he must convict the person to be punished of something or other that he has done. Having said that, the next thing it is desirable I should do is to see what the Judge has done in this case. His judgment is one of considerable length, but the whole of it I need not read. In his judgment he says: "I must hold that the putnīs executed in favour of these ladies are not proved to my satisfaction. The ḍatattīs produced are not such as to enable me to place any reliance on them; making ordinary inferences, which I must necessarily make, I think it quite clear the putnīs were executed in consequence of the service of the summons and not from the pressure of this suit in which a right to a large sum of money was depending." So that, with reference to this putnī, the view which the Judge appears to take, and the finding at which he [218] has arrived, is that he cannot say whether there is consideration for the putnī or not, but that the putnī was executed in fact for the purpose of giving these ladies the preference over certain persons who had obtained a decree against them, and for the purpose of preventing those persons from executing that decree. Now, is that or is that not an offence within the meaning of this Act? The Act provides, as I said just now, that "in case it shall appear to any Court that any such insolvent has kept or caused to be kept false books, or made false entries in, or withheld entries from, or willfully altered or falsified any such book, paper or writing, or that such insolvent has fraudulently, with intent of diminishing the sum to be divided amongst his creditors, or of giving an undue preference to any of the said creditors, discharged or concealed any debt due to or from the said insolvent, or made away with, changed, mortgaged, or concealed any part of his property, shall be imprisoned, &c." The learned Judge finds, as a fact, that the object of this particular putnī was not to diminish the amount divisible amongst, or to give the ladies an undue preference over, the general body of creditors, but to prevent one particular decree-holder getting possession of the property, and so to give the ladies an advantage over him. If this is the meaning of the finding of the Judge, it does not seem to me to constitute any offence within s. 50 of the Act at all; but having considered the evidence with reference to that which has been laid before us by Mr. Hill on behalf of the opposing creditors, it seems to me that in finding that the learned Judge has found as much against the insolvents within the meaning of the section as it was possible for him to do on the evidence, so that with reference to that charge, supposing it to be specifically found by the Judge with reference to that transaction, we think that his finding is not sufficient to sustain his order.

Then comes the other terms of his judgment. He passes over one matter and then proceeds to deal with the mortgage transaction. He says: "Next, as to the mortgage, there has been a good deal of cross-examination with regard to it. The amount of consideration was Rs. 30,000. It alleged a previous debt of Rs. 3,500 which was taken as part of the consideration, and then other payments were alleged, but these have been traced to [219] number of persons, some of whom are not creditors at all. They are persons whose names are entered in the books in a manner so suspicious that I think they are not creditors at all. It is not at all unlikely that this was done to get over paying their debts. I do not believe it the least likely they would be in the least anxious to pay their supposed creditors off and not do anything to get rid of the debts of the creditors. On the evidence before me I must find that if this money was taken from Debendronath Roy, if it has left the insolvents' hands, and if it has been paid to this alleged creditor, it was for the benefit of the insolvents and for the purpose of defrauding the creditors who had brought suits. That is the finding with reference to the mortgage. Is that a finding of any offence within the meaning of this section? The first and most obvious objection to that finding of the Judge is this: He does not find what the insolvents have done. The charge against them is one of two things: either that this mortgage is a sham transaction altogether, and so is a mortgaging the property for the purpose of diminishing the assets; or else, if the transaction was a real one, that the money has been secreted by them in such a way as that it is still available for their purposes and cannot be found for the creditors. The learned Judge does not find either of these two states of facts. He says it must be one or the other of the offences. He says: "I believe it must be one or other," as to that we have examined the evidence which has been laid before us, and we think that upon that evidence that was quite as much as the Judge could do. The evidence as to this is to some extent affected by the entries in the books, and as these entries have to do with the next charge as well, I will deal with the two altogether. He says: "The seventh ground of opposition refers to the same matter. The sixth I have dealt with; it is putting the matter in the same form. The fifth is concealment of property. No doubt if the entries are fictitious, if the pottah is fictitious, and if the money has not been distributed, there has been concealment of property."

"I find, as a fact, that there have been fraudulent transfers of property; that the defence to the suits has been vexatious and frivolous; also that the insolvents have falsified their books. Although it appears in certain cases there have been entries after the balances were made up and carried over, entries made by mistake; yet there are a large number of cases in which payments have been made after the balances have been made up and have not been carried over. An examination of these payments shows that they are fictitious.

Now a large portion of this charge, which is found in this way by the Judge, rests upon these entries; and the conclusion as to this charge at which the learned Judge arrives rests upon the supposition that the entries were made by these insolvents early in 1886 at a time when they were in insolvent circumstances, and therefore had reason to suppose that proceedings in insolvency would be taken against them. But the fact, which bears upon the proceeding and which is uncontradicted, is that these books were not in the possession of the insolvents at all. They had been since December 1884 lodged in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Dacca, and there they had remained down to the time when they were produced in this Court under a request from this Court to produce them. That request being dated the 8th September 1888, and having been made under the petition of the insolvents of that very date, it seems to us that this does away with the whole of the reasoning of the learned Judge as to the fictitiousness of these entries, because he assumes, and it must be assumed, and that is the argument before us, that these entries were not made before 1884 when they professed to be made, but in the middle of 1886, and with the view to this insolvency and with a view to conceal the property of the insolvents. And as soon as it appears that the books had not been in their possession at all since the autumn of 1884, and were not produced by them but upon their petition to the Court, it seems to us that that objection, and the effect of those entries, falls entirely to the ground. Then it seems to me to come to this, that this case shows, as clearly as anything can show, how necessary it is that a law of this kind, the intention of which is to punish people, should be administered as the Criminal law is administered; that is to say, specific offences should be charged against people, not technically specific in the sense of a specific form of indictment, but that the Judge and the insolvent and every one else should know what offence the man is being [221] tried for, and that the evidence should be directed to the proof of that offence, so that the accused person may be in a position to produce the evidence, if he has got any, to rebut the charge of that offence, and that the Judge, who has to try the case should specifically find what offence the insolvent has been guilty of, and in his judgment, and in his order, and in the warrant, it should appear what the man has done. In this particular case the judgment shows that the Judge was not convicting the insolvents of any specific offence, but the latter portion of his judgment shows, to my mind, pretty clearly what his view of the case was. What he says is: "Then comes the question: What ought I to do? I have considered this question with great anxiety. This is certainly the most fraudulent commercial case I have seen since I have been sitting as Commissioner of this Court. These people have made away with large sums of money. They have brought in their books after long delay. In the interests of commercial morality I must deal severely with the case." That shows to my mind, as clearly as anything can show, that the Judge was dealing with this case upon general grounds; on the ground that he considered it a fraudulent commercial case, and the insolvents had made away with large sums of money; but not on the ground that he had convicted them on any legal evidence of either of the offences specified.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the order committing these persons to jail was wrong, and that order must be quashed and the two insolvents must be released at once.

PIGOT, J.—I am of the same opinion. I wish to observe, in addition to what has fallen from the Chief Justice, that the conviction, so to call it, and the warrant under which the insolvents have been committed, includes, amongst the offences for which they have been committed, and offence not contained in s. 50 at all, but contained in s. 51, the sanction of which is of a totally different kind to that prescribed in the penal section 50. The offence is that the insolvents vexatiously and frivolously defended certain suits, and the order states: "And it appearing to the Court that the said insolvents have fraudulently, with intent to defeat the objects of 11 & 12 Vic., c. 21, made false entries in their books of account and have fraudulently, with intent of diminishing [222] the sum to be divided among their creditors, transferred or made away with and mortgaged their properties, and have put their creditors, that is to say, Bhagoban Chunder Roy, Bhoyrub Chunder Roy, Juggut Chunder Roy, Suruth Chunder Roy, Protap Chunder Roy, and Harendro Coomar Roy, to unnecessary expense and delay by making vexatious and frivolous defences." Then follows the order directing that the insolvents are to be imprisoned for a year, and that offence is set out in the warrant. It was, I think, properly argued before us that that alone would invalidate the order. It is impossible upon the face of that to say what portion of the punishment was awarded in respect of the vexatious and frivolous defence of four suits, which is treated as one of the offences for which the insolvents are committed. I would further notice that the order of the 13th April thus states the second offence:
“And have fraudulently, with the intent of diminishing the sum to be divided among their creditors, transferred or made away with and mortgaged their properties.” That is not a definite finding of a definite offence under the Act. It is a compendious finding, and in such a compendious finding there is danger: it does not find which of the alternative offences contemplated has been committed. I refer to it, following up the observations of the Chief Justice. It illustrates the justice of what has fallen from him: that each specific offence should be charged, and a specific finding made with respect to it. I concur in the order which has been made.

GREGSON (Plaintiff) v. UDOY ADITYA DEB (Defendant).
[11th and 12th April and 14th May, 1889.]

Specific performance—Contract—Disability to contract—Temporary disability of Zemindar to contract, his estate being subject to the provisions of Act VI of 1876 (Chutia Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act), amended by Act V of 1884—Effect of continuance of transactions after the release of his estate from management under that Act.

It is competent to a person, who has been, but is no longer, in a state of disability, to take up and carry on transactions commenced while he was under disability, in such a way as to bind himself as to the whole. He may be bound by a contract of which the terms are to be ascertained by what passed whilst he was disabled from contracting.

The defendant’s ancestral zemindari was placed under management by an order made under s. 2 of Act VI of 1876, and he became incapable of contracting in reference to it. He, however, agreed with the plaintiff that the latter should advance money on mortgage, and take a lease of part of the estate. Afterwards by an order, whether well founded or not at all events effectively made, under
s. 12 as amended by Act V of 1884, he was restored to the possession of his estate again acquiring the right to contract about it. He carried on the transaction with the plaintiff, retaining the benefit of money paid by him, but in the end not completing.

Held, that he was bound by the contract, though its terms were to be ascertained by what had passed while he was disabled from contracting, and that specific performance could be decreed against him. Whether his entering into the contract was against the policy of the Act, and whether the order under s. 12 had or had not been made on good grounds, did not affect the question.

[R., 33 C. 1065 = 4 C.L.J. 238; Cons., 33 C. 363 = 10 C.W.N, 149; D., 7 C.L.J. 578
Appeal from a decree (2nd December 1886) of the High Court, reversing a decree (20th May 1885) of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum and dismissing the appellant's suit with costs.

This suit was brought by the appellant against the respondent, the Zemindar of Patkum in the Manbhum District, for specific preformance of an agreement, of which the general terms were that the latter was to accept from the former a loan of Rs. 40,000, paying interest at 10 per cent., and, as security for the repayment, was to execute a mortgage; also granting to Gregson an ijara of this zemindari lands for nineteen years, viz., from 1889 to 1903.

The question now was whether negotiations to this effect commenced between the plaintiff and the defendant in the year 1884, while the zemindari was under the management of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, in virtue of Act VI of 1876, the Chutia Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, and intended to bring about the restoration of the defendant to the possession of his estate, could be insisted upon as a contract and made the subject of a decree for specific performance. The material provisions of the Act VI of 1876, as amended by Act V of 1884, are stated in their Lordships' judgment, as well as the facts giving rise to this suit.

The plaint stated that an agreement had been entered into, and that a petition for the release of the zemindari had been presented to the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum on 5th September 1884. It also alleged that the defendant had orally agreed with the plaintiff to make over to him the right of digging limestone and of levying dues on iron-smelting; and stated the times when payment was to be made according to the agreement. The plaintiff's demand was that a decree should direct the defendant to execute to the plaintiff an ijara potta, and to execute first a mortgage deed for Rs. 15,000, and another mortgage deed for Rs. 25,000 within three months from the date of the giving and receiving the potta and kabuliat; the decree also to award to the plaintiff possession in ijara right of the Patkum zemindari, excepting certain mouzas.

The defendant admitted by his written statement the fact of his having agreed to lease his zemindari to the plaintiff, but contended that he was not bound by his having done so, for, amongst others, the following reason: because, at the date of the agreement his estate was under management in accordance with Act VI of 1876, and he was "legally" disqualified thereby to make that agreement. He denied having agreed to give the plaintiff the right to dig limestone and levy dues on iron-smelters; and declared his willingness to repay to the plaintiff, with interest the moneys paid to obtain the release of the estate, and also the amount which the plaintiff had paid for the revenue.

Issues were fixed raising the questions of the competence of the defendant to contract to grant the alleged lease; and whether or not the defendant, by his subsequent conduct, had ratified the alleged agreement; also as to the facts relating to the limestone and dues leviable.

These were decided by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiff, and a decree was made as follows:—

That the suit be decreed; that the relief sought for in the plaint be granted, viz., that in consideration of an advance of Rs. 40,000 to be paid by the plaintiff in two instalments, to the defendant, the latter be and hereby is directed to execute in favour of the plaintiff a lease of the Patkum zemindari including the right to big limestone for building purposes, and to enjoy the profits obtainable from loharkar, for a period of nineteen years.
years, in compliance with the terms of the draft submitted by the defendant for the approval of the Deputy Commissioner of this District on the 5th September last, as also to execute the two mortgage bonds, as prayed in the demand of judgment, and further that immediate possession of the said zemindari, under the operation of the said lease, be given to the plaintiff, and that the defendant do pay all the costs of the suit, with interest on the plaintiff's costs at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree to that of realization.

On the defendant's appeal the High Court (Wilson and O'Kinealy, JJ.) reversed that judgment and decree.

The principal grounds upon which the High Court proceeded were in substance as follows:—That there was no sufficient material before the Court to support a finding of a concluded agreement between the parties; that the defendant was, under the provisions of the Chutia Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, incompetent to contract with reference to his estate; and that the contract was of such a character that the Court would not decree specific performance of it.

The suit was accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

Sir Horace Davey, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant, argued that the judgment of the High Court was wrong; because the contract to execute a mortgage and a lease of the defendant's estate, such execution to be after the release of the estate by the manager, acting under the Chutia Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, did not fall within the meaning of the 3rd section of that Act, specifying the disabilities imposed. If, as had been the case here, the zemindar, after the release of his estate, and it had not been contemplated that anything would be done before such release, took up the engagement and expressed himself willing to act upon it, he ratified it. There was nothing to prevent a ratification. That having been established, there were no grounds why, in the exercise of due judicial discretion, a Court of Justice should have refused to decree specific performance of the defendant's contract, upon which the plaintiff had acted in paying the money, the balance of the scheduled debt, and the current instalment of revenue. These acts, added to the admissions and evidence, established the agreement to the effect stated in the plaint. But even if the evidence might fall short of this result, the appellant was entitled to have the contract specifically performed according to what might be held to be the true terms of it.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, contended that the transactions of September 1884 between the plaintiff and defendant, on which the former relied to prove the alleged contract, and all the matters referred to in the petition of the 5th September 1884, were null and void by the operation of the Enactment VI of 1876. That which was in itself null and void or so rendered by legislative enactment, was not susceptible of satisfaction; nor was there any evidence of a new agreement after the 8th of October when the estate was released. What the Act rendered void, with a view to preventing its taking place, could not be ratified, or recognized, or made to serve the purpose of founding future proceedings. This was not a case where what was done might be void under a statutory enactment as to some purposes, and valid as to others; operative as regarded some persons, and not as to others. The disabilities imposed by the Act were express and for an express purpose to clear the estate of liability. Pending the management there was to be no encumbering the estate afresh, yet here this was the very transaction alleged to be enforcible. He referred, by way of illustrating this part of this case, to In re Northumberland Avenue Hotel Company (1), Hamilton v. Buckmaster (2). To separate the evidence, as to what occurred before and what after the release of the estate, could not be effected so as to leave proof of any clear agreement or transaction in which the intention of the parties could be collected. The evidence, also, related to a loan by way of mortgage which might be repaid the moment it was made; a transaction of which specific performance would not be decreed. Reference was made to Rogers v. Challis (3), Sichel v. Mosenthal (4), Larios v. Boughan-y-Gurley (5). For these reasons specific performance could not be decreed, and to them must be added that to decree it would be to contravene the declared policy of the law, i.e., of the Chittagong Encumbered Estates Act. It could hardly be allowed that a Zamindar should obtain the release of his estate by the very means, which the Act, with a view to its own operation, prohibited, adding to, or at all events in no way diminishing, the burdens on his estate.

Counsel for the appellant were not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was afterwards delivered (14th May) by LORD HOBHOUSE.—The plaintiff seeks specific performance of an agreement under very peculiar circumstances. The agreement, at first oral, was afterwards reduced to writing. At that time the defendant, who is the Zamindar of Patkum in Chota Nagpore, was subject to the operation of Act VI of 1876, passed to relieve the owners of encumbered estates in that district. The transactions between him and the plaintiff were intended to release him from that restraint, and had the effect of doing so. When released he continued to deal with the plaintiff on the footing of the agreement. And the question is whether he has thereby rendered himself liable to a decree for specific performance.

The defendant's estate was put under management on his own application in July 1879. He is a man in middle life and of at least average mental capacity. But during the management he was placed under legal disability, which continued until his estate was released in the year 1884. By September 1884 his debts, which in 1879 were about Rs. 26,000, were reduced to Rs. 7,639.

The material provisions of Act VI of 1876, as amended by Act V of 1884, with regard to property put under management and its owners, are as follows: The manager is to ascertain the debts and liabilities and to schedule them, and make a scheme for discharging them out of the surplus income. While the property is under management the holder is made incapable of mortgaging, charging, leasing, or alienating the same, and of entering into any contract which may involve him in pecuniary liability. On payment of all the scheduled debts and liabilities, or if an arrangement is made for their satisfaction which is accepted by the creditors and approved by the Commissioner, the holder is to be restored to the possession and enjoyment of his property.

In the early part of the year 1884 the plaintiff and defendant were in negotiation for a lease of the Patkum estate, by the latter to the former, but it was not till the month of September that the defendant would offer terms acceptable to the plaintiff. On the 5th of that month the defendant presented the following petition to Mr. Clay, the Deputy Commissioner in the Encumbered Estates Department:

"Petition of Maharaja Udoy Aditya Deb, inhabitant of Ichagurh, pergunnah Patkum, is to the following effect:

"For the liquidation of my debts and for the improvement of my estate, my ancestral zemindari, pergunnah Patkum in zillah Manbhum, is under the management of Encumbered Estates Department under Act VI of 1876. Considering that there would be a great improvement in my zemindari if I left out the same in _ijara_ to Mr. C. B. Gregson, I made a proposal to grant that _ijara_ settlement at a rent of Rs. 16,441-13-6, and to take a loan of Rs. 40,000, within three months from this date for the purpose of discharging my liabilities to the _mahajans_.
As the aforesaid Saheb Bahadoor agreed to these proposals, so, preparing a draft of the _ijara potta_, determining in grant the _ijara_ settlement to the aforesaid Saheb for a period of nineteen years from the beginning of the present year 1291 up to the year 1309, I have been filing it along with this petition; and I pray that receiving from the aforesaid Saheb Bahadoor the amount of my liabilities in the account of the Encumbered Estates, you will kindly pass an order for releasing the mahal from the management under Act VI. On the release of the aforesaid mahal from the Encumbered Estates management, I shall properly grant the _potta_ and receive the _kabuliat_ according to the draft filed along with it, and separately execute registered bonds, and receive Rs. 15,000 for the present. The money that will be deposited by the aforesaid Saheb Bahadoor in the Encumbered Estates Department shall be credited against the rents of the _ijara_ mahal for the present year. If on the release of the mahal I delay the granting of the _ijara_, then the aforesaid Saheb Bahadoor shall be able to take possession of the aforesaid mahal in _ijara_ right and to get _potta_ executed according to the draft filed along with it. As the property is under the control of the Encumbered Estates Department, I am now incompetent to grant the aforesaid settlement. I therefore pray that Your Worship will release the aforesaid mahal from the control of the Encumbered Estates Department. The _ijara potta_ and _kabuliat_ will [229] have to be executed on stamped papers, and at that time I shall enter the boundaries in the same. At present a draft only being prepared, is filed along with this petition.

Maharaj Udoy Aditya Deb."

"The 21st Bhadra 1291."

The draft lease filed with the petition specified a number of particulars with respect both to the loan of Rs. 40,000 and to the demised property and to the payments by the lessee, which it is not necessary now to mention. And it contained the following stipulation:—"Except the land fit for indigo cultivation you shall not be able to take any settlement or _ijara_ of any lands within the _ijara_ mahal from any tenants, and especially from Birinchi Narain, and if you take it I shall not be bound by this _pottah_."

The draft lease was communicated to the plaintiff, who, on the 9th September, objected that it omitted certain stipulation relating to limestone and to iron-smelters. On this point there is dispute between the parties. It is not of any great importance, nor if it were decided against the plaintiff would it impair his right to have the rest of the agreement performed. The High Court have expressed no opinion which of the parties is right on this point. The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff, and no reason for disputing his opinion has been assigned.

On the 10th September the plaintiff paid into the Collectorate Treasury the sum of Rs. 7,639-5-10, and got a receipt as follows:—

[230] On the 15th September the sub-manager reported to the Deputy Commissioner as follows.—

"Dated PURULIA,
The 15th September 1884.

"Sir,
I have the honour to report, for your information, that Mr. Gregson having deposited Rs. 7,639-5-10 for releasing the Patkum Encumbered Estate from attachment under Act VI of 1876, all the scheduled debts have been paid off, and that from the balance still at credit of the estate, the law charges and other management charges still due by that estate can be easily paid. It is therefore not necessary to apply for Commissioner's sanction to release of the estate."

The Deputy Commissioner, however, thought that it was necessary to obtain the Commissioner's sanction, and he applied for it on the same day, stating the circumstances as stated to him by the sub-manager. The formal order for release, which is not in the record, was not made until the 8th October.

It is contended by the plaintiff that on and after the 15th September the defendant was freed from the operation of the Act, and that in the whole of his subsequent action with reference to the agreement he must be taken to have been sui juris. So far as regards the question whether the agreement has been validated or called into action so as to bind the defendant, their Lordships think it makes little difference which of the two dates is taken as the date of emancipation. But the personal position of the defendant bears on another portion of the case, viz., whether such an agreement as this is the proper subject of a decree for specific performance against a person so situated. The High Court have thought that it is not, and the correctness of their opinion is challenged in this appeal. Their Lordships certainly think that there is nothing in the transactions themselves to operate as a release of the estate. The scheduled debts were not paid; they were only transferred to another creditor, and the transfer was coupled with an agreement for a fresh loan by which the defendant was loaded with debt more heavily than in 1879 when he..." sought the benefit of the Act. It is a matter of wonder to their Lords-ships that any order for release should have been made under such circumstances; but at all events they are clear that the defendant was not sui juris until the order was made.

Returning to the narrative of transactions between the parties, we find a considerable amount of correspondence, oral and written after the 15th September. Each deals with the other on the footing that the agreement is valid and binding. On the 3rd October the defendant wrote to the plaintiff requesting him to pay the current instalment of revenue, Rs. 633-9-8, and the plaintiff did pay that sum on the 6th. The defendant never offered to repay that sum nor the larger sum paid to meet the scheduled debts.

On the 12th November, five weeks after the formal release of the estate, the defendant wrote on the subject of Birinchi Narain. It has been seen that in the draft lease he stipulated that the plaintiff should not acquire Birinchi's interest in the property; and both the written correspondence and the oral evidence of the plaintiff show that he attached great importance to that matter. In point of fact the plaintiff had received a lease from Birinchi before the defendant presented his petition of the 5th September, and the defendant knew all about it. In his letters previous to the 8th October he recurs more than once to the requisition that Birinchi's lease to the plaintiff shall be cancelled as a condition of the defendant executing his lease to the plaintiff. On the 12th November he wrote to Anund Roy, the plaintiff's agent, thus:—

"If the Saheb has come back from Calcutta, please speak to him and get the pottah of Birinchi Narain Aditya Baboo returned. When this is done, I will go to Purulia, and I shall have no objection to register it. Before this, my only condition (lit., objection) was that the pottah of Birinchi Narain Aditya Baboo should be returned, and I still hold to this condition. After these matters are settled, you will write to me in reply, and on that I will go and get it registered. Settle the matter and write to me in reply.

"The 28th Kartick 1291."

The plaintiff answered this on the 18th November:—

"Yesterday I came here from Calcutta. The ijara settlement that was made with Brinchi Narain Aditya Baboo has been cancelled. I am now sending you the palki and bearers, and hope that you will without delay come to this place and finish the execution, &c."

It is not suggested that Brinchi's lease was not cancelled as stated in this letter.

The negotiations still went on, the plaintiff urging performance of the agreement, the defendant making excuses but always treating the agreement as a subsisting one. On the 30th November [232] he wrote to his own agent, but for the purpose of communicating with the plaintiff, excusing himself for not having gone to Purulia to execute the lease, asking that the plaintiff would come to the defendant's residence, and adding "I will surely execute the instrument. I have no objection," with more assurances to the same effect. On the 4th December he wrote requesting an advance of the whole loan at once, "albeit it has been arranged that the Rs. 40,000 should be taken in two installments." Not long after this the plaintiff became convinced that the defendant was triffling with him, and commenced the present suit.

In support of the decree of the High Court, which reversed that of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit, Mr. Mayne first argued that the transactions of September were wholly void as against the defendant; and then that what is wholly void cannot be validated. But the answer is that such an argument does not meet the facts of this case. It is quite competent to a person emerging from a state of disability to take up and carry on transactions commenced while he was under disability in such a way as to bind himself as to the whole. The present defendant has done that and more than that. Not only has he taken and, up to the time of a suit and for ought that appears till now, retained the benefit of the plaintiff's payments, but he has since the 8th October 1884 exacted from the plaintiff a part of the consideration which was to move from him. At the defendant's instance the plaintiff has given up the lease that he had obtained from Brinchi Narain, nor is it possible for the defendant to replace the plaintiff in his former position. The defendant therefore is clearly bound by the contract, though its terms are to be ascertained by what passed when he was disabled from contracting.

Then it is contended that, though the contract may be binding, specific performance is not the proper remedy, and that on two grounds: First, because it is a contract for mortgage. But it is also a contract for a lease, and the two parts are easily separable. So far as the plaintiff is concerned, he is bound, if he asks for the lease, to grant the loan. And he is willing to do that, but he is also willing to take the lease without insisting on the loan. It is true that it would be an idle thing to compel the defendant to [233] received a loan which, there being no contract to the contrary, he might repay at once, or on reasonable notice. But if he wishes to be released from that part of the contract, it will not be carried into effect by the Court.

The second reason alleged for not awarding specific performance is that the contract is against the policy of the Encumbered Estates Act; and on this point their Lordships confess to having felt much difficulty, owing to the very peculiar circumstances of the case. But after careful consideration they think that they must not look beyond the order of the 8th October 1884. They have before intimated that the order is difficult to reconcile with the policy, or indeed with the literal terms of the Act. But, factum valet, the Commissioner was acting within his jurisdiction, and his order is not under review. By it the estate was in fact released from management; and it must be taken that its owner then became as free to manage his affairs as any other man. He has used his freedom to adopt the documents of the 5th September 1884 as binding on himself, and he must now be compelled to act according to their tenor.

In their Lordships' judgment the High Court should have dismissed with costs the appeal from the Subordinate Judge; and that decree should now be made. If the plaintiff desires to have an account of the profits of the property during the time he has been kept out of possession, he has a right to that, he on his part accounting for the rents which would have been due from him. The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty accordingly.

MARIUM BEGUM AND ANOTHER (Defendants) v. MIRZA AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).

WAZIR BEGUM (Defendant) v. MIRZA AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs).

[8th, 9th and 14th May, 1889.]

Treaty, construction of—Money settled upon members of Royal Family of Oudh, and their heirs—Perpetual pensions by payments arranged between sovereign powers—Construction of the word "issue," as used in a treaty between them, and in subsequent correspondence.

An arrangement between two sovereign powers, viz., the King of Oudh and the East India Company, whereby members of the Royal Family of Oudh had secured to them and to their issue pensions in perpetuity, although a settlement of pensions in perpetuity could not under the Muhammadan Law be validly made by a private individual, took effect as a contract or treaty between the powers.

Held, on the construction of a treaty made in 1838 between the King of Oudh and the East India Company, that it was the intention of the King thereby to provide pensions for certain members of the Royal Family in perpetuity; that, if any of the pensioners should die without issue, his or her pension should revert to the King; that the words "heirs" and "issue" were used as convertible or equivalent terms; and that they meant persons who would be heirs according to Muhammadan Law.

Held, also, that the King intended in 1842 to provide for the ancestor of the plaintiffs an additional pension of the same kind as the pension which he had provided for her in 1838; and that, according to the letter written by the King in that year to the Government of India, after her death, if she should have left issue, the additional pension was to be payable to such of her issue as should be also her heirs, according to the rules of the Muhammadan Law of Inheritance.

Appeal from a decree (11th February 1886) of the Judicial Commissioner, reversing a decree (4th March 1885) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The principal question which arose between the parties was whether in construing the terms of a settlement, not questioned in other respects, made in 1842 by Muhammad Ali Shah, then King of Oudh, in favour of his queen, Malka Jahan Sahiba, and her "issue," the latter word should be construed as referring to the Imamia, or Shiah, Law of Inheritance, giving to males [235] double the share of females. For this construction the plaintiffs, now the respondents, contended. While on the other hand the case for the defendants, now the appellants, was that the word "issue" had reference to the law relating to endowments, and that its meaning depended on the intention of the founder or settler. The former law, if it was that to which the word referred, would also restrict the sharers; while the latter, if it should be applied, would include all persons tracing their parentage to Malka Jahan, and would put all descendants being in the same degree of remoteness on an equality as to their shares.
The plaintiffs, now respondents, were Nawab Sahib Mirza and Imdad Ali Khan, grandchildren, and heirs according to the Muhammadan Law, of the late Nawab Malka Jahan, one of the widows of Nawab Muhammad Shah, third King of Oudh. The defendants, now appellants, Nawab Sultan Mariam Begum and Nawab Amir Jahan Begum, were also grandchildren of the same. But the defendant Nawab Wazir Begum, who appealed separately, was the daughter and only child of one Bahadur Mirza, brother to the plaintiffs-respondents, who died in the lifetime of his grandmother Malka Jahan; so that Nawab Wazir Begum was great-grandchild of the latter. Consequently, if this case had to be governed by the ordinary Shiah Law, Nawab Wazir Begum would have been wholly excluded by her two uncles and her two aunts, parties to the other appeal, and they, while differing among themselves as to their respective rights, were all equally opposed to the claims of Nawab Wazir. Accordingly she filed her separate defence and separate appeal.

When the East India Company contracted what was known as the 6th Oudh Loan, the deed of engagement, dated 22nd November 1838, declared that the King of Oudh had paid and the Governor-General of India, on the part of the East India Company, had received, in perpetuity, the sum of Lucknow sicca Rs. 12,00,000. On this, interest at 4½o/o was to be paid, in pensions, quarterly, to the persons named, among whom was Nawab Malka Jahan (whose stipend was Rs. 400 a month), and to their heirs in perpetuity, on their receipts under their seals. On any of the pensioners dying without issue, his or her pension was to revert to the King.

The promissory note for twelve lakhs of rupees issued in favour of the King was not produced, but according to the plaint it bore the enfeetment, "this note is not negotiable and is to remain in deposit with the Resident at Lucknow, the interest on it is to be paid to Nawab Malka Jahan during her lifetime and after her decease to her issue." Afterwards, when interest on Company's paper was reduced from five to four per cent, Malka Jahan received interest at the latter rate down to July 1881, when she died. At her death her heirs, according to the ordinary Imamiya Law, were the two present appellants, her granddaughters, and these respondents, her grandsons. Under that law the grandsons would each be entitled to a share double that of a grand daughter, and Wazir, the appellant in the second of these appeals would be excluded; the interest upon the twelve lakhs of rupees would be divided into six shares, of which these respondents would have the right to receive each two-sixths, and the present appellants each one-sixth.

Doubts existing as to the proper proportion of shares distributable under the settlement, the present suit was instituted in March 1884. The plaint asked that the rights of the parties should be declared, alleging that the plaintiffs were, according to the law prevailing among Shias, entitled each to a one-third part of the interest of the promissory note, and adding that the defendant Wazir Begum was not under that law entitled to come in as a sharer at all. Wazir Begum filed her separate written statement claiming the same amount that her father might have had, if he had been alive. The other defendants, by their written statement, admitting that their family was governed generally by the Shiah Law, contended that the rights of the present parties to the interest upon the loan were governed by "the Instructions of Muhammad Ali Shah, the original grantor, and not by the ordinary law of inheritance; and that, as those instructions did not specify any particular shares, the plaintiffs and the defendants were, by the law relating to endowments, entitled to equal shares, and that by the words "naslan bad [237] naslan," as well as by the true construction of the rest of the King's words, Wazir was excluded.

Issues having been fixed raising these questions, the finding of the District Judge was by him expressed as follows:

"It appears to me that these are words indicating a plain intention on the part of Muhammad Ali Shah to benefit his children. The transaction is neither a gift nor a will; it is a wakf or appropriation by which the principal was tied up and the fruit given away. The rights of the parties depend on the intention of the original debtor, and are not based on inheritance."

It was the opinion of the District Judge that, in the absence of any special directions to the parties, equality of partition must take place among all the descendants of Malka Jahan without reference to sex or proximity; and he considered that there were no grounds for applying "hajib," or exclusion, where the law of inheritance did not apply.

The plaintiffs appealed from the District Judge's decision to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, on the ground that the ordinary Shiah Law should have been applied, and that such application would have excluded Wazir Begum, and would have reduced the shares of the present appellants to one-half of those of the plaintiffs. The present appellants filed objections, in the nature of a cross-appeal, by which they contended that the first Court should, according to the Muhammadan Law governing the Shiah sect have held that Wazir Begum was excluded.

The Judicial Commissioner allowed the plaintiffs' appeal, so far that he declared Wazir Begum disentitled and the plaintiffs entitled, each to one-third. The defendants Mariam and Amir Jahan, he held entitled each to one-sixth of the interest in question, that being the share which the ordinary law of inheritance prevailing among Shias would give to each. The rest of the plaintiffs' claim he dismissed. Having set forth in his judgment the principal provisions of the Treaty of 1838, and the entire correspondence which passed in 1842, the Judicial Commissioner held that the arrangements then entered into constituted a trust as to the interest of the twelve lakhs of rupees then lent by the King to the East India Company in favour of Malka Jahan and her issue; and that, having regard to that correspondence, [238] and its relation to the "deed of engagement of 1838," the words "her issue," in the documents of 1842, must be read as meaning "the heirs of her body." The material portion of his judgment was as follows:

"The transaction evidenced by the documents of 1842, which have been set out in the opening portion of this judgment, appears to me to be a contract between the Governor-General of India in Council on the one part and the King on the other, the latter agreeing to pay into the Residency Treasury twelve lakhs of rupees as a supplement to the payment acknowledged by the duplicate deed of engagement of the 22nd November 1838, and the former agreeing to receive the money as a loan, perpetual as regards the lender (the King), but as regards the borrower (the Governor-General), capable of discharge three months after notice of such intention in the Calcutta Gazette, and covenanting further to pay up to the date of discharge as aforesaid, the interest on the loan to Malka Jahan and her issue. The transaction would seem, therefore, to have been of the nature of a trust terminable at the option of the Government on three months' notice.

"The view that I take of the transaction of 1842 being that it constituted a trust, I have now to find what was in the mind of the King when he made, and in the mind of the Governor-General when he accepted, the trust. And it seems to me impossible, after reading together the King's letter to the Governor-General, dated 4th January 1842, and the Governor-General's reply, dated the 15th February, which are after all the documents evidencing the intention of the parties; I say it seems to me impossible, after reading these documents, to doubt that the King intended to make a provision for Malka Jahan of precisely the same nature as, and as a continuation of, that made by the transaction of November 1838, and that the Governor-General concurred in the hearty desire and wishes of the King. Now it is plain from a perusal of arts. 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the 'duplicate deed of engagement' (2 Aitchison, 141, edition 1876) that 'heirs' and 'issue' were therein used as convertible terms, and in the settling article of the 'engagement,' the words used are 'heirs in perpetuity.' I think therefore that the words 'her issue,' in the documents of 1842, must be read as meaning 'the heirs of her body.' The question then, if the view which I have taken of the matter be correct, narrows itself to this: What would the king have meant when referring to the 'heirs of the body' of his wife? Would he have intended to designate such persons absolutely, or relatively to the provisions of the Muhammadan Law? It seems to me inconceivable that the King, a Mussulman of a day when the laws and institutions of the country were Muhammadan, should have intended to designate his wife's direct heirs otherwise than relatively to the provisions of the Muhammadan Law.

I think that, as regards the declaration sought by the plaint, the appeal must [239] prevail. But I find myself unable to direct the refund by the defendants to the plaintiffs of money paid to the defendants by Government Officers. Sultan Mariam and Amir Jahan together appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

Wazir appealed separately.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for Sultan Mariam and Amir Jahan, argued, that in adjudging to the plaintiffs each a one-third share, and to the defendants each a one-sixth share, the Judicial Commissioner had wrongly regarded the rights of the parties as regulated by the rules of the ordinary law of inheritance. He should have held that their rights depended on the intention of the settlor, as shown in the Treaty of 1838, and in the correspondence of 1842. The King probably enough had in his view the operation of the ordinary law to which he was accustomed, but nowhere had he specified that the male issue of Malka Jahan should take a greater share than the female. From this, and from the general tenor of the documents the inference was that he regarded all her descendants as entitled to such shares as would be apportioned to them by the rules of the Muhammadan Law relating to grants or appropriations, and not to the shares into which, by the rules of inheritance, estates were divided. These interests were not inherited, but settled upon those entitled. The Judicial Commissioner had erroneously construed the words "her issue," to mean the "heirs of her body," and had erred in deciding that the King intended to designate his wife's heirs by tacit reference to the provisions of the Muhammadan Law of Inheritance. At the same time, the Judicial Commissioner had been right in holding that the defendant Wazir Begum was not entitled to any share; so far the decision was correct. The grant was specified to be "naslan bad naslan," and "batu bad batu," thus excluding the great-grandchild of Malka Jahan, who belonged to a subsequent generation and not to the generation in which came the plaintiffs. The second generation could not come in until the first should have been exhausted. Reference was made to Baillie's Muhammadan Law, Book IX, of Wakf or Appropriation, Vol. I, pp. 559, 571, and to Vol. II, pp. 211, 212, 217; Tagore Law Lectures, 1884, by Syed Ameer Ali, ss. ix and x, pp. 217, 397, 398, 399, 400.

Mr. J. Rigby, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyle, for Sahib Mirza and Imdad Ali Khan, respondents in both appeals, contended that the Court below was right in holding that the word "issue," used in regard to the right of succession to the interest of the fund in question, was equivalent to the words "heirs of the body," and that the relative right of such heirs to share that interest was governed by the ordinary law, that being the Muhammadan Imamiya Law of Inheritance, under which the parties lived. It was clear that the intention of the King (and it was upon his intention that the appellants also relied) was that the right to receive the interest in question should descend to her heirs according to the Muhammadan Law. That was, in this case, the law prevailing among Shias. As regards the passages which had been cited from Baillie's work at pp. 217, 218 and 219 of Vol. II, it was submitted that they meant no more than this, viz., that where a Muhammadan founder of an endowment, or settlor, expressed in his wakfnama a clear intention to benefit certain designated persons or classes, the latter would take, although the ordinary law of inheritance would not, of itself, have brought them in. There was nothing to be found in the book, nor was there any principle or rule in the Muhammadan Law, to prevent a Court's acting on the reasonable presumption that where a Muhammadan grantor used a general expression to indicate the order of succession which he wished to be observed, he intended that such expression should be interpreted by reference to the ordinary law governing the family. There was no ground for supposing that it was the intention of the King Muhammad Ali Shah to subject the interest created by him to any rule of succession other than that given by the ordinary law. To allow the correctness of the appellants' contention would be to let in the equal rights of the children, thirteen in number, of the appellants Sultan Mariam and Amir Jahan, and of the respondents. In reference to the appeal of Wazir Begum, it would be contrary to the only probable intention of the King, that she should be declared entitled to a share equal to that of a male, and there could be little doubt that he had entire regard to the Muhammadan Law as regulating the question of heirship.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., replied on behalf of the appellants, Mariam and Amir Jahan.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, replied for Wazir.

JUDGMENT.

On a subsequent day (14th May) their Lordships' judgment was delivered by SIR B. PEACOCK.—The facts of this case, as well as the origin and nature of the suit, are fully set forth by the Judicial Commissioner. It is sufficient for the present purpose to state that in the latter part of the year 1841 Muhammad Ali Shah, the then King of Oudh, was, under circumstances to which it is not now necessary to advert, induced by the late Sir John (then Colonel) Low, the Political Resident at Lucknow, to subscribe the sum of twelve lakhs of rupees to the 5 per cent. Government Loan [242] which was then open. The money was paid into the Resident's Treasury, and brought to the credit of the Government of India.

On the 21st January 1842 a letter from the King, dated 21st Zikad 1257 Hejira (corresponding with the 4th of January 1842) and addressed to the Governor-General, was forwarded by the Resident to the Secretary to the Government of India. The letter was, after the usual compliments in the following terms:

"Being fully convinced that your Lordship has always entertained a sincere friendship for me, I, without any ceremony, mention to your Lordship that at the time when the guarantee of the 3rd Ramzan 1254 Hejira (corresponding with the 22nd November 1838), regarding the pension of the ladies of my royal family, children and other relations, was concluded, the trifling sum of Rs. 400 per month was assigned to Malka Jahan Hamidai Sultan Fakhruzzamani Nawab Tajunnisa Begum. Owing to the smallness and insufficiency of the amount invested, as I have always entertained a particular regard for her, and in every way endeavoured to promote her honour and comfort, I now entertain the hope from your Lordship's kindness that, instead of issuing a promissory note in the name of Malka Jahan for the sum of Rs. 12,00,000, which was totally lodged by me in the Residency Treasury, your Lordship will receive that money into the company's Treasury, as a separate loan, for which he and the future Residents will pay 5 per cent. per annum interest, or Rs. 5,000 monthly, as long as the present public 5 per cent. loan shall exist, and that, when this loan shall have been paid off, Colonel Low and the Residents for the time being will, after taking receipt in the same manner as prescribed for the allowance mentioned in the said deed, pay to her and to her issue, generation after generation, and womb after womb, the interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, i.e., Rs. 5,000 a month, so long as 5 per cent. interest may be allowed, and afterwards such reduced interest as may be paid from time to time by the British Government. My sole object in making this request is to prevent the risk that might otherwise occur of Nawab Malka Jahan or her offspring being persuaded, at some future period, by evil advisers, to sell the note and squander the money. The accomplishment of this object will be highly gratifying to me, and will demonstrate to the public your Lordship’s [243] friendship and regard for me; this will prevent any new guarantee being entered into, but will merely be the payment of a larger sum in interest instead of a small one.”

The Governor-General, by letter sent through the Resident and addressed to the King, assented to his request, stating that he was pleased and gratified beyond limit in concurring with the hearty desire and wishes of the King in regard to the fixing of the stipend of Malka Jahan. From that time until the time of her death, on the 9th of July 1881, the stipend was paid to her in accordance with the terms of the arrangement between the Government of India and the King. Malka Jahan at the time of her death left two grandsons, the respondents in both these appeals, two granddaughters, Sultan Mariam Begum and Nawab Amir Jahan Begum, the appellants in one of the appeals, and a great-granddaughter, Nawab Wazir Begum, the daughter of a deceased grandson, the appellant in the other appeal, her surviving; such deceased grandson being a son of Mirza Humayum Bukht, a son of Malka Jahan, who died in his mother’s lifetime.

The question in these appeals is what is the proper construction of the King’s letter of 1842 read as it ought to be, in conjunction with the deed of 22nd November 1838 referred to therein, and to be found in the second volume of Aitchison’s Treaties and Engagements, edition 1876, p. 144.

By the latter of these documents it was the intention of the King to provide pensions or stipends for the ladies of his royal family, children and other relations, including, amongst others, Malka Jahan and her son Mirza Humayum Bukht, the grandfather of the appellant Nawab Wazir Begum, and father of the other appellants and of the respondents.

By the 3rd Article it was stipulated that the pensions should be paid to the several pensioners specified therein and to their heirs in perpetuity on their receipts under their seals; and by the 4th Article, that if any of the pensioners should die without issue, his or her pension should revert to the King of Oudh.

By Article 6, it was provided that the said pensioners and after them their issue who on their decease should succeed to their respective pensions should always experience the special favour and kindness of the British Government. It should be observed [244] that in that article the favour and protection of the Government is be-spoken not for all the issue, but merely for the issue who should succeed to the pensions. In the deed of 1838 the words “heirs” and “issue” are used as convertible or equivalent terms, so that in that document the word “heirs” must mean heirs who are issue and “issue” must mean issue who are heirs.

Their Lordships are of opinion that it was the intention of the King that, in the event of the death of any of the pensioners leaving issue, his or her heirs, according to the Muhammadan Law of Inheritance, should receive payment of the pension in the proportions regulated by such law of inheritance.
Their Lordships concur with the Judicial Commissioner in the opinion that the King intended in 1842 to provide an additional pension for Malla Jahan of the same nature as that which he had provided for her in the year 1838, and that, after her death, provided she should leave issue, it should be paid to such of her issue as should be her heirs according to the rules of the Muhammadan Law of Inheritance. There is nothing in the King's letter of 1842 to lead to the inference that he intended, by the increase of the pension of Malla Jahan, to benefit any other persons than those who were to be benefited upon her death by the pension of 1838. It seems unreasonable to suppose that he intended that the several pensions of Malla Jahan and of her son, which were created by the deed of 1838, should, if they should die leaving issue, be paid to their respective heirs according to the Muhammadan Law of Inheritance, and that the pension of Malla Jahan, created in 1842, should be paid to her issue so as to allow a granddaughter of her son to take an equal share with his sons and daughters, ignoring altogether the policy of the Muhammadan Law of Descent. Some effect ought to be given to the last words of the King's letter of 1842, wherein he says: "This" (meaning the assent of the Governor-General to his request, or, to use the King's own words, "the accomplishment of his object") "will prevent the necessity of any new guarantee being entered into, but will merely be the payment of a larger sum in interest instead of a small one."

The guarantee of the Government in the deed of 1838 was to pay the interest to the pensioners and their heirs if they should die leaving issue, and consequently a new guarantee would have been necessary if the intention was that the interest of the new loan should be paid to the issue of Malla Jahan, whether heirs or not. This appears to be almost conclusive that the word "issue" in the letter of 1842 was used in the sense of heirs of the body, and that such of the issue of Malla Jahan as would be her heirs according to the Muhammadan rule of descent ought alone to receive payment of the pension in the proportions assigned to them by the law.

It should be remarked that, although a settlement in the terms of the King's letter of 1842 creating pensions in prepetuity could not, under the Muhammadan Law, be validly made by a private individual, the arrangement of 1842 takes effect as a contract or treaty between two sovereign powers.

For the above reasons, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner, except so far as it relates to costs, ought to be affirmed. Considering, however, that the lower Courts differed in opinion, and that the ambiguity in the words used by the King in his letter of 1842 has led to the litigation, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to vary the decree of the Judicial Commissioner as to costs, and to order that the costs of all the parties in the lower Courts be paid out of the pension which is the subject matter of the suit.

Their Lordships order that the costs of the appellants and of the respondents of the appeals to Her Majesty in Council be paid out of the same fund.

Decree affirmed except as to costs.

MUNNALAL CHAUDRI (One of the Defendants) v. GAJRAJ SINGH (One of the Plaintiffs). [22nd June, 1889.]

Decree—Construction of decree—Construction of order may be Settlement Officer awarding estate to a Hindu widow—Transfer by widow, Effect of.

The plaintiffs obtained a declaratory decree that they were the reversioners and heirs apparent, expectant on the future death of a widow, who at the time of suit had survived two co-widows, and that they, the plaintiffs, would be entitled to inherit at her death the estate that had belonged to the deceased husband. All parties had proceeded, as far as to the present appeal, on the view that the surviving widow had the widow's estate only. But an order made in the course of the settlement operations in 1865 had conferred the estate of the deceased on the three widows, as well as on his mother, in equal shares of one-fourth each.

Held, that there was nothing in his order to show an intention to give to the mother, and widows anything more than an interest, such as that which a Hindu widow takes; and that the inheritance would devolve in due course of law and, an alienation which the widow had made operating only for her lifetime.

Appeal from a decree (16th July 1886) of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, dismissing an appeal from a decree (2nd January 1886) of the Commissioner of the Jabalpur Division, affirming a decree (7th September 1885) of the Deputy Commissioner of Mandla.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the respondent Thakur Gajraj Singh, together with his brother as co-plaintiff, on the 26th March 1883, claiming to have set aside a sale of the proprietary right in seventeen villages forming a taluka named Bamhni, in the tehsil and zillah Mandla. This sale, on 9th October 1882, had been executed by Mussammat Ganga, widow of a deceased Brahmin proprietor, Ratan Singh, to whom the taluka belonged, for the consideration of Rs. 8,000. The general question now was, whether in this suit, brought by the reversionary heirs, brothers of her late husband, against the widow and the purchaser, a decree had rightly limited the interest purchased to the widow's life.

The widow who sold was the survivor of three widows of Ratan Singh, who died on 23rd October 1883, leaving a mother [247] besides the three widows. On the 16th February 1864 the Settlement Officer, Mubarak Ali Khan, Superintendent, made the order as follows: "It is ordered that proprietary rights of mouza Bamhni Khas be conferred in equal shares of four-annas each on Mussammats Khema, Nanhi and Ganga, widows, and Mussammat Durga, mother, of Ratan Singh; that a rubkar be issued to the Tehsildar, Mandla, for information; that the papers be sent to the office; and that orders be issued for the information of the proprietors.

Mussammat Ganga, the first defendant, admitted the plaintiffs’ reversionary right; but the purchaser, Munnalal Chaudri, the second defendant, denied it, besides alleging that the sale was for the widow’s necessary expenditure. Issues on both these latter points were found against him in the first Court, which decreed for the plaintiffs; a decree which the Commissioner affirmed on appeal. A second appeal, to the Judicial Commissioner, was also dismissed.

The defendant Munnalal Chaudri on the 17th January 1887, applied for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council under s. 596, Civil Procedure Code. The value of the right of property involved was more than Rs. 10,000. In addition to the grounds of appeal consisting of a re-statement of the matters alleged in his defence, the defendant then, for the first time, relied upon the effect of the order made by the Settlement Officer on 16th February 1864, awarding equal shares of four annas each to the three widows and the mother.

The Judicial Commissioner gave the following reasons for granting the certificate, which he did on the 12th April 1887:

“No doubt these questions are raised now for the first time, but there is nothing in s. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure to show that the substantial question of law, which the appeal must involve, is to be a question which has been raised and considered in the Courts in this country. The question must be involved in the appeal, that is to say, it must be relevant, and not merely a speculative question raised for the mere purpose of making the appeal admissible. It may be doubted whether the question, as to a co-widow’s right to succeed, is relevant, because, in the present case, if it were decided that the next male reversioner should succeed, it would be necessary to decide the further question whether this finding of law would affect the rights of the plaintiffs, and to decide this further question certain issues of fact would have to be determined.

“The other ground of appeal is, I think, a substantial question of law; only one witness’s evidence was objected to, but possibly it might be held, if that [248] evidence is inadmissible, that the finding of the Courts on the question of the respondent’s relationship to the husband of the widows is unsustainable.

“The last three grounds of appeal were not pressed in this Court when the second appeal was heard, but I do not think this would bar the appellants from putting them forward as material questions of law.

“On the whole, then, though with some hesitation, I consider that the appeal does involve a substantial question of law.

Mr. F. W. Dillon, for the appellant.—In addition to the question of the evidence, upon which the lower Courts decided, there were two points: First, that, as regards three-fourths of the property claimed, the decrees of the lower Courts, which were of a declaratory nature, could not stand, inasmuch as the respondent, if entitled to one at all, was entitled to claim consequential relief; in other words, to claim possession of the estate (s. 42 of Act I of 1877). Secondly, that, as regards one-half of the property claimed, that portion which consisted of the shares of Mussammats Durga and Nanhi, who died more than twelve years before the date of this suit, the respondent's claim was barred by time. The widows of Ratan Singh, not having acquired the estate from him, but as a result of an award from the Government in the Revenue Department, held, with the mother of Ratan Singh, a separate four-anna share each in the estate. Where such an award defined the shares, it would be inconsistent with the provisions of s. 8 of the Act XVIII of 1881 [the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (I)] to allow one of those persons to claim under the Hindu Law a right which would conflict with the award. The sections contemplated that [249] proprietary rights could, during the process of settlement in the area under it, only be awarded by the Executive, and that the Judicial Courts could not award them, except in so far as s. 88 might permit. It followed that the claim of the respondent, as, that of the male heir next after the deceased, should have been at one time, for possession, not merely declaration of title, of all but the one-fourth share held therein by Mussammat Ganga, the sole survivor of the four grantees. Now, however, his claim would be barred as regards the two four-anna shares which had belonged to Durga and Nanhi. The appellant had acquired by purchase a title from Ganga based on her adverse possession of these two shares, besides her own, for a period of twelve years. Upon these grounds, if not upon the defence originally urged, it was submitted that the appeal should be allowed.

The respondent did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD HOBHOUSE.—This appeal is raised on three grounds. The first is this: that the plaintiffs, who sue as the heirs of Ratan Singh are not his heirs, or at least that the evidence, which proved that they are his heirs, ought not to have been admitted. Their Lordships consider that no objection has been shown to the admissibility of the evidence, and the matter, therefore, is concluded by the finding of the Commissioner, from whom no appeal upon facts lay to the Judicial Commissioner, whose decree is now under appeal.

The second ground is that legal necessity for the sale to the appellant ought to have been inferred by the Judge, the sale being by a person purporting to have a widow's estate. Their Lordships are of opinion that that also is concluded by the judgment of the Commissioner. They cannot hold, as a matter of law, that the things on which it is alleged that the money raised by the sale was spent constituted a legal necessity for the sale; and indeed it appears to them that the judgments of the Court below have gone upon the principle of examining the items which are alleged to have been spent on matters of necessity, and finding they have no connection with the sale. That therefore is a matter of fact which is concluded by the judgment of the Commissioner.

(1) Section 87 is as follows: "When a Settlement Officer or Settlement Court has, at any settlement made before this Act comes into force, made an award of proprietary rights in any land, all claims which, after consideration by such officer or Court, may have been expressly decided by him or it to be invalid, or inferior to the claims of the persons in whose favour the award was made, shall be barred both as against the Government and as against the persons last mentioned: and no suit shall lie for the enforcement of such claims in any Civil Court.

"The award at any such settlement of proprietary rights in land to a widow shall be deemed to confer on her those rights only which, in accordance with the personal law to which she is subject, she would enjoy in land inherited by her from her husband."
The third point is raised for the first time in these proceedings on the third appeal, and the fourth hearing of the cause. [250] All the parties have proceeded hitherto on the view that the widow of Ratan Singh, who effected the sale, had the widow's estate only; and therefore that, although the sale was perfectly good for her lifetime, it was not good for any period beyond her life, unless legal necessity for the sale could be shown. Acting upon that view, the Courts below have given the plaintiffs a declaratory decree that they are the reversioners and heirs-apparent expectant on the widow's death. But it is now said that this widow, Ganga, had something different from the widow's estate; that the effect of an order of the Settlement Officer in the month of July 1865 was not to give the three widows, who then were living, the widow's estate, but it was an order effecting a partition of the family, and giving one-fourth in absolute proprietorship to each of the three widows, and the remaining share to the mother of the deceased Ratan Singh. There may be words in this order about which there is some ambiguity, but reading the order as a whole, their Lordships cannot doubt that the Settlement Officer took Ratan Singh as being the proprietor of the estate, and took the estate as having passed to his heirs upon his death. Why he attributed a fourth to the mother of Ratan Singh does not appear, but no doubt she was entitled to maintenance; and it may have been that the state of things before him at that time led him to believe that it would be a proper way of dealing with the estate to give each of the four who had claims upon it the enjoyment of one-fourth of the estate. That may be so; but their Lordships cannot find upon the face of this order any intention to give to the mother and widows between them anything more than an interest in the widow's estate.

The consequence is that Ganga, having survived the rest, takes the whole of the widow's estate in the whole of the property, and the inheritance is left to devolve as it may devolve by course of law. The present heirs-apparent are the plaintiffs, and therefore they are entitled to the decree.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed. There will be no costs, as the respondent has not put in an appearance.

Appeal dismissed.

[251] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Gordon.

Limitation—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), art. 2 (b), Part I, sch. iii—Suit for arrears of rent at excess rate.

In 1865 the plaintiff sued and obtained a decree for payment of additional rent for excess land held by the defendant, and, on the 29th March 1877, instituted another suit against the defendant for khas possession of newly-accrued lands, or in the alternative, for an assessment of rent thereon according to the terms of the defendant's kabuliat. This suit was dismissed on the 29th June 1881; but, on appeal to the High Court, this decision was reversed on the 11th May 1883, and khas possession was given to the plaintiff. On appeal the Privy Council, on the 24th July 1886, reversed the decree for khas possession, and declared the plaintiff entitled to a decree fixing the extent of the excess lands, and assessing rent therefor in terms of the kabuliat, such rent to be payable from and after the 28th March 1878; and remitting the case for a finding as to the extent of the excess lands. The Subordinate Judge, to whom the case was remitted, gave the plaintiff a decree on the 21st March 1887 for increased rent in respect of 2 kanis 7 gundahs 2 cowries of excess land.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 63 of 1888, against the decree of Baboo Troi-I lokya Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Furridpore, dated the 31st of December 1887.

On the 14th July 1887, the plaintiff instituted a suit to recover excess rent for the years 1878 to 1886 and for rent at the old rate plus the excess rent for a portion of the year 1887.

Held, that the suit, so far as the rent for 1878 to 1883 was concerned, was barred by limitation.

This was a suit for arrears of rent for the years 1285 to 1293, and for the instalments of Bysack and Joishto of the year 1294. The circumstances which led to the institution of the suit were as follows:

The plaintiff was a zamindar and putnidar of mehal pergunnah Edilpur in the District of Backergunge, and the defendants held under him by virtue of a kabuliat dated the 23rd April 1850, a howla tenure in a chur appertaining to this mehal. The area of the tenure as given in the kabuliat is 13 drones [252] 6 kanis 16 gundahs, and the annual rent was Rs. 462, there being a stipulation for payment of additional rent at the rate of Rs. 2-7-7 a kani for any excess land that might accrue to the chur up to 5 drones, and at the prevailing pergunnah rate for land in excess of that quantity.

In 1865 the plaintiff brought a suit and obtained a decree against the defendants for payment of additional rent at Rs. 2-7-7 a kani in respect of 2 drones 6 kanis 13 gundahs 2 cowries 2 krants of land in excess of the original tenure of 3 drones 6 kanis 16 gundahs; and on the 29th March 1877 he instituted another suit against the defendants in an alternative form, that is, either for khas possession of newly-accreted land, or for an assessment of rent thereon, according to the terms of the kabuliat. This suit was dismissed on the 29th June 1881 by the Subordinate Judge who tried it, but on appeal the High Court, on the 11th May 1883, reversed his decree and gave khas possession to the plaintiff. The defendants then appealed to the Privy Council, with the result that the decree of the High Court for khas possession was set aside, and it was declared that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree "fixing the extent of the excess land, and assessing the rent payable for it in terms of the kabuliat of 1850."

Their Lordships further directed that the pergunnah rate should be fixed at Rs. 6-4 per kani; that the rent in respect of the excess land should become payable from and after the 28th day of March 1878, the date on which the notice was served on the defendants at the instance of the plaintiff; and that the case should be remitted in order that the precise extent of excess land for which rent was payable, and also the precise amount of the increased rent, might be ascertained in the Court below, and a decree given accordingly. The case then went back to the Subordinate Judge, who, on the 21st March 1887, gave the plaintiff a decree for increased annual rent of Rs. 477-11-4 in respect of 6 drones 2 kanis 7 gundahs 2 cowries of excess land. A few months after this, viz., on the 14th July 1887, the plaintiff instituted the present suit, in which he sought to recover excess rent at the rate of Rs. 477-11-4 for the years 1885 to 1886 and the old rent plus the excess rent for a portion of the year 1887.

The defence set up, so far as it is material in the present appeal, was that the claim for rent for the years 1285 to 1290 was barred by the statute of limitations.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred, it having been brought within four months of the decree declaring the plaintiff entitled to get Rs. 477-11-4 annual rent from and after the 28th March 1878. He was of opinion that the plaintiff had not slept over his rights since the accretion of the chur; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to bring his suit for recovery of rent until after the final decree was passed on the 21st March 1887, adding that by this decree of the Privy Council the relationship of landlord and tenant was finally established between the parties, and this new chur was allowed to remain in possession of the defendants as tenants by revival of the decree of the High Court; so that when they got back the chur, they got it with the liability to pay rent from the 28th March 1878, and, having sued within a reasonable time from the date of the final decree, the suit was not barred.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee and Baboo Basanta Kumar Bose, for the appellants.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, Baboo Durga Mohun Das and Baboo Omertrouath Bose, for the respondents.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose contended that the claim for rent for the years 1285 to 1290 was barred under Act VIII of 1885, art. 2 (b), Part I, sch. iii, citing Doyamoyee Chowdrainee v. Bholanath Ghose (1), Huro Pershad Roy v. Gopal Das Dutt (2), Sheriff v. Dina Nath Mukherjee (3).

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee relied on the case of Rani Swarnamoyi v. Shashi Mukhi Barmani (4), contending that, during the litigation commencing in 1879, and terminating in 1887, the plaintiff was unable to sue for rent in respect of the excess lands, and that the right to sue accrued only on the 21st March 1887.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Gordon, J.) was (omitting the facts) as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The contention before us is that the learned Judge’s view of the question of limitation is wrong. Now it is clear that prima facie the claim for rent for 1285 to 1290 is barred. The suit is for arrears of rent, and is therefore governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), and the period of limitation prescribed for suits for arrears of rent is given in sch. iii annexed to that Act (see s. 184). The article applicable to the present case is art. 2 (b) of Part I of this schedule, in which three years is the period of limitation for a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent, and that period begins to run from “the last day of the Bengali year in which the arrears fell due, where that year prevails, and the last day of the month of Jeyt of the Amli or Fasli year in which the arrears fell due, where either of those years prevails.”

Unless, therefore, there are some special circumstances in this suit which exempt it from the operation of these provisions of the law we think the appellant's contention must prevail. Now the learned Pledger for the respondents relies on the Privy Council ruling in the case of Rani Swarnamoyi v. Shashi Mukhi Barnali (1) as being in point, and he argues that during the litigation, which commenced in 1879, and terminated in 1887, by the declaratory decree of the Subordinate Judge, his client was unable to sue the defendants for rent in respect of the excess land; in short, he substantially contends that the plaintiff's right to sue the defendants accrued on the 21st March 1887 and not on the 28th March 1878, from which date the rent was declared to be payable. We think, however, that the Privy Council ruling is not applicable to the present case. In that case there were peculiar and exceptional circumstances, which do not exist here. A putni taluk was brought to sale by the zamindar for arrears of rent, the purchaser obtained possession of the putni, and the arrears of rent were paid to the zamindar out of the purchase-money.

The sale was afterwards set aside for irregularity at the instance of the putnidar, the purchase-money was refunded, and the putnidar recovered possession [255] with mesne profits for the time he was ousted. The zamindar then brought a suit to recover the original arrears, and it was held by the Privy Council, reversing the judgment of this Court, that upon the setting aside of the sale and the restoration of the putnidar to possession he took the estate subject to the obligation to pay the rent, and the arrears claimed must be taken to have become due in the year in which that restoration took place; and further that until the sale had been finally set aside the zamindar was in the position of a person whose claim had been satisfied, and his claim might have been successfully met by a plea to that effect. But the facts of the present case are quite different. As far as we can see there is nothing in the terms of the kabuliat or in the law of landlord and tenant then in force, which prevented the plaintiff from suing for the excess rent after the service of the notice on the defendants in March 1878.
Instead, however, of adopting this course the plaintiff chose to bring a suit in an alternative form asking either for khas possession of the excess land, or for a declaratory decree assessing the rent thereon in the terms of the kabuliat. He ultimately failed in his prayer for direct possession, but succeeded in getting a declaratory decree, and he now seeks to use this decree as if it gave him a cause of action in respect of the arrears he claims. We think that this is not so; and that the plaintiff's right to sue accrued when the rent for the excess land fell due after the service of notice on the 21st March 1878, from and after which date the Privy Council declared this rent to be payable, and therefore time began to run in respect of each year's rent on the last day of the Bengali year (the last day of Choitro) in which that rent fell due, and that being so, the claim for rent for the years 1285 to 1290 is barred by limitation. In the view we take we think we are supported by the authority of several cases which the learned Pledger for the appellants has placed before us, viz., the cases of Doymayee Chowdrainee v. Bholanath Ghose (2), Huro Pershad Roy v. Gopal Dass Dutt (3), and Sheriff v. Dina Nath Mookerjee (4).

[256] The result is that this appeal, as regards the rent of the years 1285 to 1290 inclusive, must be decreed, and the plaintiff's claim for the rent of those years be dismissed with costs of both Courts.

Mere previous possession will not entitle a plaintiff to a decree for the recovery of the possession except in a suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, which must be brought within six months from the date of dispossession.

Case in which the High Court on Special Appeal being of opinion that the judgment of the District Judge reversing that of the Munsif on the credibility of the witnesses did not fulfil the conditions that a judgment reversing such a decision ought to fulfil, brought up the case before itself and heard it as a Regular Appeal.

In this suit the plaintiffs sought to recover possession of three small plots of land about 4½ cotts in area, adjoining their homestead, alleging that the lands belonged to them and had been in their possession for a long time, and that they had been forcibly [287] dispossessed therefrom by the defendants. The plaintiffs prayed for a declaration that the lands had been in their possession for a long time, and that the defendants had no concern with them. They also prayed for possession and wasilut. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' title and possession and claimed the land as their own by right of inheritance.

The suit was instituted more than six months after the dispossession by the defendants.

Believing the oral evidence of the plaintiffs and their witnesses, the Munsif found that the plaintiffs had been in possession of the lands in dispute, and that they had been wrongfully dispossessed by the defendants; but did not make any finding as to the length of the plaintiffs' possession prior to their dispossession. Upon these findings the Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession and mesne profits.

This decree was reversed by the District Judge of Mozufferpore, who disbelieved the evidence of the plaintiffs and their witnesses.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

On the 21st May 1889, the High Court (Picot and Rampini, JJ.) passed an order, whereby the decree of the lower appellate Court was set aside, the case remanded, and brought up to its own file for final disposal. In making the order their Lordships observed:—

In this case the Munsif has given a very careful judgment, and the District Judge has set it aside by a decision which, although it may be the result of much consideration, does not, as we may say, fulfil the ordinary conditions which a judgment ought to fulfil when setting aside a carefully-considered judgment of the first Court: setting it aside, that is, upon the credibility of the witnesses. It was said by Sir George Jessel, Master of the Rolls, that a judgment which does not in the body give reasons for its conclusion is not a judgment at all; and to a considerable extent the judgment in the present case does not fulfil the proper conditions that a judgment reversing a decision ought to fulfil. At the same time, for reasons which have been indicated by the learned Pleader for the respondent, and which we need not refer to here, we think that it would perhaps not be satisfactory to remand the case; and we are reluctant to take any other course save that of hearing the case ourselves: a very unusual course which, however, in this case, we must adopt.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the District Judge formally, remand the case to him, and call it up to this Court to be tried as a regular appeal.

The evidence and the pleadings must be translated by the appellant, and the case set down for hearing next Monday fortnight, that is, the 10th of June 1889.

On the 16th July 1889, the appeal was heard by the High Court as appeal from Original Decree. Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee, for the appellants. Baboo Sreenath Banerjee, for the respondents. The judgment of the High Court (Picot and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from the decision of the Munsif of Hajipore. Under the terms of an order made by this Court it has been brought up here to be heard as a regular appeal before us.

In the suit the plaintiffs ask for a declaration that certain land was in their possession for a long time, and that the defendants have no concern with it. They ask also for a decree for possession and for wasilut.

The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree. The facts established in the opinion of the Munsif, from which we see no reason whatever to dissent so far as the findings of fact go, are that the plaintiffs were in possession of the land in question, that is, their bari land which skirts their house; and that they were dispossessed by the defendants of that land. The Munsif, finding these facts and without making any finding as to the length of the plaintiffs' possession prior to their dispossession, gave them a decree:

The suit was instituted much more than six months after the dispossession by the defendants. It could not, therefore, be maintained under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. And although there are many cases in this Court, notably the case of Khajah Enaeotoollah Chowdhry v. Kishen Soondur Surma (1) which did not affirm the proposition that either s. 15

(1) 8 W.R. 389.

of Act XIV of 1859, or s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, bars a suit for ejection founded upon possession wrongfully disturbed, recent cases in this Court have laid down that mere possession will not entitle the plaintiffs to obtain a decree for recovery of possession except under the special statute which entitles him to recover possession, if the suit is brought within a certain time of the date of dispossession. That proposition we read from Ertaza Hossein v. Bany Mistry (1), a case before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy. A similar proposition was laid down in the case of Debi Churn Boido v. Issur Chunder Manjee (2), where the dispossession was a forcible dispossession. These two cases adopted the view taken by Mr. Justice Prinsep in the case of Kawa Manjee v. Khawaz Nussio (3), and they are all founded upon a passage in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Wise v. Amerunnnissa Khatoon (4) at pp. 80, 81 of the Report.

It is true that the Bombay High Court has taken a different view.
It has held in Krishnawar Yashvant v. Vasudev Apaji Ghotikar (5), that the passage in the judgment of the Privy Council just referred to has not the effect attributed to it in this Court; and in the Full Bench judgment of the Bombay High Court in Pemraj Bhawaniram v. Narayan Shivaram Khisti (6), which judgment was delivered by Chief Justice Westropp, and in Mohabeer Pershad v. Mohabeer Singh (7), in the judgment pronounced by Sir Richard Garth, the proposition was affirmed that proof of quiet possession at the time of disturbance is enough to establish a prima facie case against a trespasser. We think, however, that we are bound to follow the recent cases in this Court, and to hold that the plaintiffs are precluded by the remedy under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act conferred upon them by that enactment (and which is given to them on condition that their suit shall be brought within six months from the date of dispossession), from asserting the rights which the earlier cases and the English law recognized to exist. That their case was founded upon possession and unjustifiable dispossession is pretty clear:
and our decision is limited to the proposition that they are debarred from succeeding, because they did not bring the suit within six months from the dispossession.

For myself, I am bound to say that, but for the rule that it is undesirable to disturb recent and established cases, I should follow the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Dwarka Nath Mitter, in the case of Khajah Enaetoollah Chowdhry v. Kishun Soondur Surma (8), and by Sir Richard Garth and Chief Justice Westropp in the cases I have referred to. But without referring the matter to a Full Bench it would be impossible to give effect to that view, and that we cannot do as we do not both dissent from the recent cases in this Court. Therefore, agreeing with my learned colleague as to the effect of the recent cases in this Court, I am of opinion that this appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed on the ground stated.

Under the circumstances we have determined to allow no costs.
The parties will bear their own costs throughout in all the proceedings.

Khub Lal and another (Defendants) v. Ram Lochun Koer (Plaintiff).* [26th November, 1889.]

Limitation Act, 1877, sch. ii, art. 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 278, 280, 281, 282—Order disallowing claim to attached property.

The effect of an order made under s. 281 of the Civil Procedure Code disallowing a claim to attached property is to give the auction-purchaser a title as against the claimant unless the order is set aside by a suit; and [261] a suit for that purpose can only be brought within a year from the date of the order.

Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershed (1) referred to.

This was a suit brought to recover possession of a fractional share of certain lands which the plaintiff alleged had been sold to her in 1887, but which, after she had taken possession, was attached under a decree obtained against her vendor. The plaintiff thereupon put in a claim under s. 271 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which was however rejected under s. 281 of that Code on the 6th August 1889. She thereupon, on the 7th August 1888, brought the present suit for the purposes above stated. The defendants contended that the suit was barred, it not having been brought within one year from the date on which the plaintiff's claim was rejected.

The Munsif held that the suit was barred, and dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge, on appeal from that order, reversed the decision, holding that the suit was one to establish the plaintiff's title, and was not affected by the order of the 6th August 1887, and that the plaintiff had therefore twelve years in which to bring her suit.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Saligram Singh, for the appellant, contended that, against an order passed under ss. 280, 281, or 282 of the Code, a suit must be brought within one year from the date of the order in accordance with art. 11 of sch. ii of the Limitation Act, and that the suit, not having been brought within that period, was barred.

Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, for the respondent, contended that the suit was one to recover possession, and not one contemplated by ss. 278 to 283 of the Code, and that the limitation for an ejectment suit was applicable thereto.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Norris, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession of a fractional share in mouza Bishampur Sadho, as having been sold and handed over to her by the owners on the 9th of March 1887, [262] the defence upon which the present question arises is that, after the sale to the plaintiff, the share of her vendor, including the share purchased by the plaintiff, was attached under a decree against the plaintiff's vendor, and that thereupon the plaintiff preferred a claim to the share now in dispute under s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that claim was enquired into and rejected on the 6th of August 1887. The present suit was instituted on 7th August 1888, and the question which we have to determine is whether this suit is barred by limitation.

In our opinion it is. Section 283 provides that the party against whom an order under s. 280, 281, or 282 is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive. And art. 11 of sch. ii of the Limitation Act prescribes one year as the period within which such suit may be brought.

It is contended, in the present case, that this being a suit to recover possession, it is not such a suit as is contemplated by ss. 278 to 283, and that the ordinary limitation for an action of ejectment applies. We think that this is not the case. Section 283 expressly provides that if the suit mentioned in that section is not brought, the order shall be conclusive; and it seems to us that the effect of this is that the order gives the auction-purchaser a title as against the claimant, unless it is set aside by action, and an action for that purpose can only be brought within a year. In taking this view of the law, we are, we think, acting in the spirit of the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pevash (1).

For these reasons we are of opinion that this appeal must be allowed, the decision of the Munsif restored, and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

On the 30th September 1885, before the Bengal Tenancy Act 1885 came into operation, the plaintiff, Maharaja Girija Nath Roy Bahadur, instituted a suit against Patani Bibee and others in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye for the recovery of arrears of rent and cesses for the years 1287 to 1292 (1880 to 1883). The suit, which was instituted under the old Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869), was decreed ex parte on the 8th February 1886. Subsequently, on the 6th December 1886, upon the application of Patani Bibee (defendant No. 1), the ex parte decree was set aside, and a re-hearing granted under s. 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiff, it appears, had also instituted a suit on the 7th April 1884 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dinagepore for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of the years 1287 to 1290 (1880 to 1883). That suit was decreed ex parte on the 5th May 1884, and in execution of the decree the judgment-debtor's property was sold. This sale was, however, set aside on the 23rd January 1885. Subsequently the decree-holder (the plaintiff in the present case) applied for a certificate for the execution of the decree in the District of Rajshahye, but that application was refused by the Subordinate Judge of Dinagepore on the 11th July 1885, on the ground that his Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree, and that, therefore, the decree was invalid.

The plaintiff in the present suit alleged that he had attained his majority in Ashar 1290 (June-July 1883), and that he had bona fide instituted his suit for arrears of rent for the years 1287 to 1290 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dinagepore, believing that the suit was cognizable by that Court: and contended that he was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of ss. 7 and 14 of the Limitation Act, 1877. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff had attained his majority in Ashar or Srabun 1290 (June or July 1883), and that he had prosecuted his suit and the proceedings subsequent thereto in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dinagepore with due diligence and in good faith. He was of opinion that s. 7 of the Limitation Act, 1877, did not apply to suits for arrears of rent brought under Bengal Act VIII of 1869; because s. 29 of that Act provided a special period of limitation for such suits, and the schedule to the Limitation Act provided no period for them. Accordingly, the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the benefit of s. 7 of the Limitation Act.

He also held that under s. 14 of the Limitation Act the plaintiff was entitled to a deduction of the total time during which he was prosecuting his suit and the proceedings subsequent thereto in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dinagepore, and that even if the plaintiff were allowed the benefit of the full period of one year three months and five days from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of the rejection of his application for certificate, his claim in respect of the rent and cesses for 1287 would still be barred. Accordingly, the Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for rent and cesses for 1288 and the subsequent years, disallowing his claim in respect of 1287.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court from so much of this decree as disallowed his claim for the rent and cesses for 1287.

[268] Baboo Jasoda Nandan Pramanick, for the appellant.

Baboo Srinath Dass and Baboo Gopi Nath Muherjee, for the respondents.
The judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ghose, J.J.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The question raised in this appeal is whether the plaintiff, suing for arrears of rent, and having been a minor at the time when one portion of the arrears accrued due, is entitled to the benefit of s. 7 of the Limitation Act; and to bring his suit to recover those arrears after the period prescribed by the law for such suits in general.

The lower Court has held that the plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of s. 7. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that s. 7 of the Limitation Act was not applicable to suits for rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, under which this suit was brought, because that Act provides a special period of limitation for suits brought to recover arrears of rent, and the schedule to the Limitation Act provides no period for such suits. Section 7 of that Act allows a minor such further time after he has attained his majority as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed for such suit in the third column of the second schedule annexed to that Act. As suits for rent do not come within that schedule, the Court held that that section was not applicable; and it appears to us that it was correct in the view which it took.

There is one authority pointed out to us by the pleader for the appellant as being against him. That is a case of Dinonath Panday v. Roghoonath Panday (1). On the other hand, the learned Pleader relies upon later rulings of this Court, and upon a ruling of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in which it was held that in certain other cases, not for arrears of rent, but still as to which special limitation was provided by other Acts, the plaintiff was entitled to the benefits conferred upon plaintiffs by ss. 5 to 25 of the present Limitation Act. He also relied upon a Privy Council case, Phoolbus Koonwar v. Lalla Jogeshwar Sahoy (2), in regard to s. 11 of Act XIV of 1859, the former Limitation Act.

[266] The last case decided by the Privy Council was a suit brought by a minor to establish his right to property in respect of which his claim had been rejected under s. 246 of the old Code of Procedure, Act VIII of 1859. By that section one year's limitation was provided for the institution of a suit. This Court held, and the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision, that the principle of s. 11 of Act XIV, which is much the same as s. 7 of the present Act, would apply. In the cases of Behari Loll Mookerjee v. Mungolanath Mookerjee (3), and Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Das Biswas (4), cited to us, it was held that the plaintiffs, suing under special Acts providing special periods of limitation, were nevertheless entitled of the benefit of s. 5 of the Limitation Act, which provides that if the Court is closed when the period of limitation expires, a plaintiff may file his suit upon the first day the Court re-opens and in the case of Khoshelal Mahton v. Gonesh Dutt (5), a similar doctrine was laid down. So also in the case of Khutter Mohun Chuckerbity v. Dinabushy Saha (6), the late Chief Justice applied the provisions of s. 14 of the Limitation Act, to a suit brought under the provisions of the Registration Act, which provide a special limitation for such suits.

These decisions may at first sight appear to conflict with the provisions of s. 6 of the Limitation Act, which provides:—"When, by any special or local law, a period of limitation is specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, nothing herein contained shall affect or alter the period so prescribed." But so far as s. 5 is concerned, we think that the decisions cited do not conflict at all with s. 6, for those decisions did not extend the period of limitation. All they did was to prevent the period of limitation from being curtailed by the closing of the Court: and Mr. Justice Mitter observes in his judgment in Khoshelel Mahlon v. Gounsh Dutt (1) that the days the Court is closed must be considered as non-existent, or what are called dies non, and therefore they are not counted.

As regards the case of Khetter Mohun Chucherbutty v. Dinabasky Saha (2), the decision of this Court is not easily to be [267] reconciled with s. 6, for the effect of that decision was undoubtedly to alter the period prescribed by the special Limitation Act. We do not, however, consider ourselves bound by that decision, for the present case is an entirely different one. And as regards the suit to establish the right of the unsuccessful claimant under s. 246 of the old Code of Procedure, we observe that since the decision in that case, new Limitation Acts have been passed, and also a new Code of Procedure, and now the corresponding section (280) does not prescribe a period of limitation, whereas the present Limitation Act, does prescribe a period of limitation for such suits in its third schedule. On the other hand, the present Limitation Act does not prescribe a period of limitation for suits brought under the old Rent Act of 1869, under which the present suit was brought. That Act still contains a special period of limitation for suits to recover arrears of rent as well as other matters.

It seems to us, therefore, that upon the strict construction of s. 7 put upon it by the lower Court, as well as upon the provisions of s. 6 of the same Act, it is right to hold that the plaintiff in this suit was not entitled to a fresh period of limitation on his attaining majority.

Another argument was addressed to us in favour of the plaintiff based on these facts: that a former ex parte decree was obtained when there was no bar of limitation, but which ceased to have effect, it is said, because it was found after decree that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass it; and though the sale held under that decree was set aside or not confirmed, the defendant, it was argued, recovered his property saddled with a charge for the rent covered by that decree. We are unable to recognize the cogency of this argument, or the existence of any such charge, certainly not as existing after the rent had become barred by limitation.

We therefore think that the appellant has rightly failed to recover the rent of 1287, and must be content with the decree obtained for the rent of the subsequent years.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[268] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Banerji and Mr. Justice Rampini.

RAGHUNANDUN PERSHAD and another (Decree-holders) v. BHUGOO LALL (Judgment-debtor).* [5th August, 1889.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 179, cl. 4—Suit to set aside order in a claim case—Execution of decree—Application in continuation of a previous application for execution—Steps in aid of execution.

Clause 4, art, 179, sch. ii of the Limitation Act, 1877, does not include a suit to set aside an order passed in a claim case.

R and L obtained a decree against B on the 7th March 1881, and in execution of that decree, certain property belonging to B was attached on the 11th June 1883. Thereupon a claim was made to the attached property by third parties, and a two-thirds share therein was released by the Court executing the decree. On the 22nd March 1884 R and L instituted a suit for a declaration that the entire property was liable to be sold under their decree, and obtained a decree on the 29th March 1886. This decree was reversed by the lower appellate Court, which upheld the order releasing two-thirds share of the property, and on 22nd July 1887 the High Court affirmed the decree of the lower appellate Court. On the 15th August 1887, R and L applied for execution of their decree in respect of the remaining one-third share. B objected that the application was barred.

Held, that the application of the 15th August 1888 was not a continuation of the application of the 11th June 1883.

Held, also, that the institution of the suit on the 22nd March 1884, and the appeal to the High Court from the decree of the lower appellate Court, were not steps in aid of execution.

This was an appeal against the order of the lower appellate Court, disallowing an application for the execution of a decree as being barred by limitation.

[269] On the 7th March 1881, Raghunandun Pershad and another obtained a decree on a mortgage bond against Bhugoo Lall: and, in execution of that decree, the mortgaged property was attached on the 11th June 1883. Thereupon, one Gopi Nath and others laid claim to the attached property, and the Court allowed the claim in respect of a two-thirds share of the same. The decree-holders, thereupon, on the 22nd March 1884, filed a regular suit for a declaration that the entire sixteen annas of the property was liable to be sold in execution of their decree of the 7th March 1881, and obtained a decree in the Court of First Instance on the 29th March 1886. This decree was reversed on appeal, the lower appellate Court upholding the order releasing a two-thirds share of the property. The decree-holders then appealed to the High Court, which affirmed the decree of the lower appellate Court on the 22nd July 1887.

On the 15th August 1888, the decree-holders applied for the execution of their decree of the 7th March 1881 against the remaining one-third share in the property. The judgment-debtor, Bhugoo Lall, objected that the application was barred by limitation. The Court of first instance overruled the objection, holding, upon the authority of the cases of Pyaroo Tuhovildarinee v. Nazir Hossein (1), Paras Ram v. Gardner (2), Issuree Dassee v. Abdul Khalak (3), that the present application was not altogether a fresh application for execution, but one in continuation of the previous application of the 11th June 1883, and having been made within three years from the 22nd July 1887, the date on which the High Court decree was passed, it was in time under art. 178, sch. ii of the Limitation Act, 1877.

On appeal the lower appellate Court allowed the objection and reversed the order of the Court of first instance on the ground that at no time was there any bar to the decree-holders proceeding against the one-third share of the property, and that they were not entitled to claim a fresh period of limitation, under art. 178 of the Limitation Act, from the 29th March 1886.

The decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Saligram Singh, for the appellants.

[270] Baboo Lal Mohun Das, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ., was (after stating the facts) as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

It is now contended in second appeal: (1) that the application of the 15th August 1888 ought to be regarded as a continuation of the application filed on the 11th June 1883; and (2) that the suit instituted by the decree-holder on the 22nd March 1884, and the appeal presented to the High Court, ought to be regarded as being in the nature of applications to take some step in aid of the execution of the decree; and that the decree-holders ought to be allowed to reckon their time either from the 22nd July 1887, or from the 29th March 1886. In support of the first of these contentions several cases have been cited, amongst which we may mention Pyaroo Tuhovildarinee v. Nazir Hossein (1), Issuree Dassee v. Abdul Khalak (3), Chundra Prodhan v. Gopi Morun Saha (4), and Paras Ram v. Gardner (2).

We have heard the learned Vakil for the appellant at some length on the point, and we think that all that it was possible to urge in furtherance of the appeal has been urged before us; but we are unable to give effect to his contention. The cases cited are all distinguishable from the present in this respect, namely, that in those cases the execution-proceedings were either interrupted by an intermediate order, which was afterwards set aside, or were rendered infructuous so as to make a fresh application necessary, as was the case in Issuree Dassee v. Abdul Khalak (3) and in these cases the second application could not have been made for a time by reason of the state of things that intervened, though in not making the second application earlier, no blame attached to the decree-holder. That this was the reason for the rule laid down in those cases will appear from the observations of Markby, J., in the case of Pyaroo Tuhovildarinee v. Nazir Hossein (1). In that case the learned Judge observes: “Whatever may be the form of the last application, dated the 5th December 1873, in substance it was an application to the Court for the continuation of the former proceedings on the ground that the bar that was set up by reason of the adverse order under s. 246 had been removed by the decision in the subsequent regular suit." And in the case of Paras Ram v. Gardner (1), Stuart, C.J., observes: "The interruption to the execution of his decree was not occasioned by any fault or laches of his own, but was caused by the illegal intervention of Dabi Das. Paras Ram's Procedure, therefore, under his decree, must be held to have been legally continuous, and he may proceed to its execution." Now, it is clear that in the present case those considerations have no application. It is clear that the decree-holders could, notwithstanding the order in the claim case, have prosecuted their application for execution against the one-third share which was not released then quite as well as they can do so now. Their present application is for the sale of that third share of the property; there was no bar then to their enforcing the execution of the decree, and there has been no subsequent removal of that bar. The reason of the decisions not applying to the present case, they cannot afford any ground for holding that the present application is a continuation of the application of the 11th June 1883.

Then, as regards the second ground, no doubt the case cited in the argument, Akbar Gazee v. Bibee Nuseezun (2), lends some support to it, but that was a case under the old Limitation Law (Act XIV of 1859), the language of which was very different from that of the present law. Clause 4, art. 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act provides, "that the three years may be reckoned from the date of applying, in accordance with law, to the proper Court for execution, or to take some steps in aid of execution of any decree or order," &c. Now, seeing that the Limitation Act XV of 1877 draws a clear distinction between suits and applications, it would be difficult to construe these words to include a suit for setting aside an order in a claim case. "Proper Court," again, as defined by Explanation II of that article, means the Court whose duty it is (whether under s. 226 or s. 227 of the Code of Civil Procedure or otherwise) to execute the decree or order." Therefore, evidently the provision of law just referred to contemplates an application made in the course of execution to the Court whose duty it was to execute the decree, and cannot be taken to include a suit to have an order in a claim case set aside.

We therefore think that the lower appellate Court was right, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 187—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), chaps. II to XII—Probate or administration to wills of Hindus executed before 1st September 1870—Limitation Act, 1877, art. 140—Adverse possession.

Section 187 of the Succession Act, which by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, was made applicable to wills executed subsequent to the 1st September 1870, has not been incorporated in Act V of 1881; and although it is competent to a Court to grant probate or letters of administration in respect of wills antecedent to the 1st September 1870, still it is not obligatory upon executors or persons claiming probate or administration to obtain such probate or letters of administration before they can establish their right in respect to any property subject to such wills.

The facts of this case were as follows:—One Hurro Chounder Roy, who was originally the owner of the properties which are the subject-matter of this suit, executed a will on the 16th Magh 1273 (February 1867), by which he bequeathed his estate to his grandsons, being the sons of his two sons, Kissory Mohun and Rai Mohun; the sons of Kissory Mohun getting among themselves an eight-annas share, and the sons of Rai Mohun getting the other eight annas. It was provided in this will that, until the grandsons attained the age of thirty, the properties bequeathed should remain under the management of his wife, and, on her death, of certain other persons mentioned therein; and that during his time the legatee should be maintained out of the proceeds, and that they should be entitled to any surplus that might remain after their necessary expenses.

[273] The will, as its contents clearly indicated, had the object of disinheriting his two sons, Kissory Mohun and Rai Mohun. Hurro Mohun the testator, died many years ago (not less than fifteen years) before the institution of this suit, and, upon his death, the properties bequeathed by the will were not taken possession of either by his wife or by any other persons named in it; on behalf of his grandsons who were then minors, but by his two sons, as if they were properties which had devolved on them by right of inheritance; and they continued to be in such possession until April 1887, i.e., within a month before this suit, when the plaintiffs, who are the sons of Krisna Mohun, obtained possession by virtue of letters of administration granted to them under the will of Hurro Mohun. In July 1881, when Rai Mohun (defendant No. 2) was in possession, he executed a mortgage bond in favour of defendant No. 1, hypothecating, as security, an eight annas share of the properties in suit, describing the same as his own eight annas share; and upon the mortgage bond the defendant No. 1 subsequently obtained a decree, and, in execution thereof, applied for the sale of the properties mortgaged; whereupon the plaintiffs intervened, but their intervention was disallowed; they then brought this suit to have their right declared in the properties in question under the letters of administration granted to them, and for the further declaration that the said properties were not liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant No. 1.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, upon the ground that the plaintiffs had lost their right by adverse possession on the part of the defendant No. 2 for more than twelve years. He was of opinion that the grandsons acquired a vested interest in the properties under the will of Hurro Mohun, and when neither the executor mentioned in the will, nor the grandsons, took possession upon the death of Hurro Mohun, as they ought to have done, the possession of Kishore Mohun and Rai Mohun was adverse; and that the grandsons not having sued within three years after their arrival at majority, their rights had been extinguished.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, not, however, impeaching the facts as found by the Subordinate Judge.

[274] Baboo Rashbehari Ghose, Baboo Sharoda Prosunno Roy, Baboo Saligram Singh, and Baboo Uma Kali Moukerjee, for the appellants.

Baboo Srinath Dass, Baboo Bhagabati Churn Ghose, and Baboo Jogendra Nath Bose, for the respondents.

Baboo Rashbehari Ghose contended that, under s. 187 of the Succession Act, no right to sue could accrue until letters of administration had been taken out, and that such letters having been obtained within twelve years of suit, the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration asked for by him. Further that, until letters of administration were obtained, there was no one capable of suing; also that the letters of administration must be taken to have had a retrospective effect, as though they had been granted at the time of the death of Hurro Mohun; and further, that, as the plaintiffs were not entitled to possession under the will until they attained the age of thirty, they were entitled to sue when the estate should fall into possession in accordance with art. 140 of the Limitation Act.

Baboo Srinath Dass, for the respondents, contended that it was not (obligatory in this case to have obtained letters of administration at all, and that the executors could have sued at any time to obtain possession; and neither they nor the grandsons having done so within the time allowed, the present suit was barred.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.) was omitting the facts) as follows:—

JUDGMENT:

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge, so far as the facts found by him are concerned, is not impeached before us. But what was contended for the appellants was that, in so much as, under s. 179 of the Succession Act, the plaintiff is the legal representative of Hurro Mohun, and all the property left by him has vested in him, and because, under s. 187 of the Succession Act, he was not competent to establish his right in a Court until letters of administration were obtained, and that such letters have been obtained within twelve years before suit, the plaintiffs were entitled to have the declaration asked for. It was also argued that the letters of administration granted to the plaintiffs should be taken to have a retrospective effect, as [275] if they were granted at the time of the death of Hurro Mohun, and that, therefore, he was entitled to claim the properties in question notwithstanding unlawful possession of the sons of Hurro Mohun for more than twelve years. It was further contended that, regard being had to the provisions in the will that the grandchildren should not get possession until their arrival at the age of thirty, and also to the provisions of art. 140 of the Limitation Act, the plaintiffs were within time. It will be observed, in the first place, that the will of Hurro Mohun bears date the 16th Magh 1273 (February 1867), that is to say, before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), by which certain portions of the Indian Succession Act were made applicable to all wills and codicils—made by any Hindu, Jain, &c., on or after the first day of September 1870; subsequently, however, by the Probate Act (V of 1881), it was provided that Chapters II to XIII of the Act which contain provisions similar to those in the Succession Act, which, by the Hindu Wills Act, were made applicable to Hindus, &c., should apply to the case of every Hindu, Mahomedan, &c., dying before, on, or after the first day of April 1881: so that, as it has been held by a Division Bench of this Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.), in Krishna Kinkur Roy v.
Rat Mohun Roy (1) an application may be made, and probate or letters of administration granted in respect of wills executed before the first day of September 1870. But then s. 187 of the Succession Act, which, by s. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, was made applicable to wills subsequent to the 1st September 1870, has not been incorporated in the Probate Act, and it follows from this, that although it is fully competent to a Court to grant probate or letters of administration in respect of wills antecedent to the 1st September 1870, still it is not obligatory upon executors or persons claiming letters of administration to obtain such probate or letters of administration before they can establish their right in respect to any property of the deceased in a Court of Justice. In regard, therefore, to the will of Hurro Mohun, there was nothing to prevent the executors named therein to sue to recover possession from the hands of the sons of Hurro Mohun; and there was nothing also to prevent the grandchildren from suing to recover possession of the estate.

(1) It was pressed upon us that, until letters of administration were granted to the plaintiff, there was no person in existence capable of suing, and therefore no cause of action could exist before such administration was granted. But it is quite clear that under the will of Hurro Mohun, which was executed before the Hindu Wills Act, the estate was vested in the grandchildren; and that it was quite competent to the executor and the grandchildren to bring a suit without any probate or letters of administration. The cause of action arose when the sons of Hurro Mohun took unlawful possession; and the executors were to bound to have sued within the statutory period from the date of the said cause of action. As to the point raised with reference to the provisions in the will, that the grandchildren were not to get possession until their arrival at the age of thirty, it appears to us that it is equally untenable.

The estate fell into possession within the meaning of art. 140 of the Limitation Act, when Hurro Mohun died. Under the terms of the will the estate vested in the grandchildren with this qualification, that so long as they did not attain the age of thirty, their manager (for the persons named in the will were nothing more than managers) was to hold it for them and for their benefit. It was incumbent upon those managers to have taken possession on behalf of the grandchildren; and if they did not do so, and allowed somebody else to remain in adverse possession for more than twelve years, the right of the grandsons must be taken to have been extinguished.

But, apart from these considerations, it seems to us to be clear that the suit must fail. Under the terms of the will, an eight annas share of the property devolved upon the plaintiffs, and the other eight annas upon the sons of Rai Mohun. The share of the property mortgaged to the defendant No. 1 is evidently not the plaintiffs' eight annas share but the other eight annas which devolved upon the sons of Rai Mohun, and the latter dealt with it as his own, viz., eight annas. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiffs are in no way affected by this mortgage, and indeed they have no cause of action.

The result therefore, is that this appeal will be dismissed with costs.

DEOKI SINGH AND ANOTHER (Opposite parties) v. SEOGOBIND SAHOO AND OTHERS (Petitioners).*  [19th November, 1889.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 158—Standard measure of the district—Evidence taken by an Ameen under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Under a proceeding under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in which an enquiry was directed, amongst other things as to the boundaries of certain plots held by certain ryots, the Ameen took evidence as to the standard measure of the district, and, the Court decided the case on their evidence: Held, that, in determining the boundaries, the question as to what was the standard measure of the district arose, and that the evidence was rightly received and acted upon.

This was an appeal by certain ryots against an order made under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The respondents, who were landlords of the appellants, had, in August 1887, obtained decrees for rent against their tenants which established the rent and the quantity of land held by the latter. Subsequently to these decrees, the landlords applied to the Munsif of Sitamarhi, under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, asking that the following particulars might be ascertained, viz.:—

(1) The quantity and boundaries of the land held by the ryots.
(2) The present rent payable.
(3) The class to which the tenants belonged.
(4) Whether the rents were liable to enhancement.

The Munsif thereupon appointed a Commissioner or Ameen for the purpose of holding these enquiries. On making these enquiries the Ameen found that the real dispute was a question of the boundaries of the holdings: the tenants claiming to hold a certain number of plots, whilst the landlords contended that they did not hold the number of plots claimed; and that there was further question as to the standard of measurement made use of in the district: the ryots contending that it was one of 7½ cubits, whilst [278] the landlords contended that it was one of 6½ cubits. The

* Appeal from order No. 183 of 1889, against the order of A.C. Brett, Esq., Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 4th of April 1889, reversing the order of Baboo Promotho Nath Chatterjee, Munsif of Sitamarhi, dated the 10th of May 1888.
Ameen proceeded to take evidence under Chap. XXV of the Code of Civil Procedure, and received evidence as to the length of the standard pole of the district; and accepted, as conclusive proof of the standard of measurement, a copy of an extract of the Settlement Register of 1847 put in by the ryots, in which was written the following memorandum: "Let it be known that the measurements in this pergunnah have been made with a rod of 7½ cubits." The landlords, however, produced a copy of some adjoining Government measurements of about the same period which were conducted with a rod of 6½ cubits, and gave direct oral evidence of this being the standard measure made use of in the district. The Ameen reported in favour of the larger measurement, and found that the lands claimed by the ryots were within their boundaries. On the case coming up before the Munsif, he found that the standard of measurement of the district was 7½ cubits, and, on this basis, came to a finding as to the holdings of the different ryots referred to in the petition.

Against these findings the landlords appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the decision of the Munsif on the point of the standard measure, and otherwise varied the order passed by him.

The ryots appealed to the High Court on, amongst others, the ground that, under the provisions of s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Court had no power to determine the question of standard measurement, and that the Ameen had no power to take evidence on the point in such a proceeding as that before the Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Norris, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Mozafferpora, reversing an order of the Munsif with reference to the measurement of some land under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and this is an appeal by the ryots.

[279] The proceedings in this case were initiated by the landlords under that section for the purpose of having the situation, quantity and boundaries of the land held by certain ryots ascertained and determined, and these proceedings were initiated in the Court of the Munsif. The Munsif was of opinion that it was necessary that a local enquiry should take place, and accordingly, under the powers of sub-s. 2 of that section, which embodied Chap. XXV of the Code of Civil Procedure, an Ameen was appointed for the purpose of holding such an enquiry.

The Ameen went to the spot, and he found when he arrived there that the real dispute was a question of the boundaries of the tenants' holding. The tenants claimed to hold a certain number of plots as their holding; the landlords said they did not hold all those plots, but a smaller number of plots; and that being so, it is apparent that the question was, whether the true holding of the tenants was included within the larger boundaries alleged by them, which included the whole of the plots, or within the smaller boundaries alleged by the landlords, which included the smaller number of plots.

There was apparently no dispute as to the number of bighas which the tenants held, and that was so, because there had been prior litigation between the parties, and in that litigation these tenants had been found to be entitled to a certain number of bighas, and consequently what the parties had to do was to get these given number of bighas included in the area which was claimed to be the area of the tenancy.

The tenants said that a bigha in this part of the country is larger than a bigha in any other part of the country, and therefore includes more land than the landlords say they are entitled to.

The landlords, on the other hand, said, it is the ordinary bigha, and if you measure within the boundaries, we allege you will find the number of bighas, which you are entitled to, and which you say you are entitled to; and that was the real dispute between the parties.

The Ameen then proceeded to take evidence under Chap. XXV of the Code, and, among other evidence, he took evidence bearing on the question of what was the customary bigha in that part [280] of the country; and the real ground of this appeal, and, in fact, the only ground of the appeal, is that, under the provisions of s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, neither the Munsif nor the Judge had any power to determine that question, and consequently the Ameen had no power to take evidence on that question, because that question did not arise in that form of proceeding.
As it seems to me, to hold that this question did not arise under these circumstances, is to hold that s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no operation, because it is clear that where the question is a question of boundary, and where the question of boundary depends to a great extent upon a known or admitted area, the whole question must depend upon what is the customary bigha which is included or which represents that area, and therefore the contention seems to me to make this section absolutely inoperative; for whatever the question is, whether it is a question of quantity or a question of boundary, or whatever it is, it is enough for the parties objecting to say at the beginning of the enquiry, 'we say that a bigha in this part of the country is not what you say it is,' and thereupon the enquiry must come to an end, because, according to this argument, this question, however material it may be, and however much it may have been the object of s. 158 that it should be enquired into, does not arise and ought not to be enquired into; and that, if it cannot be decided in this enquiry, it cannot be decided in any other. That is to reduce the question to a kind of absurdity, because it cannot be that the Legislature made an enactment of this kind leaving out one of the powers which was absolutely essential to the carrying of it out.

Under these circumstances, it seems to me that the Ameen was right in taking this evidence, and that the Munsif and the District Judge were right in taking that evidence into consideration.

The only other question is a question of fact, and the argument is, that the conclusion at which the Judge has arrived on the subject is wrong, because his reasoning is illogical. But when you come to ascertain what the real question is, it seems to me that his reasoning is highly logical; because, when you once get at the fact that the true question was not a question of area but a question of boundary, then it is obvious that the question [281] depends to a great extent upon the reasoning which the learned Judge has used in this case.

In my opinion then this evidence was properly taken, and there is no ground for supposing that the conclusion at which the Judge arrived, upon a consideration of that evidence, was wrong, and I think that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

JAGAT KISHORE ACHARJEA CHOWDHRY (Judgment-debtor) v. DINA NATH CHUCKERBUTTY CHOWDHRY AND OTHERS (Decree-holders).* [26th August, 1889.]

Court Fees Act (Act VII of 1870), s. 20, cl. 1—Rules under that section framed by the High Court in 1878—Process—Commission issued to Ameen to fix mesne profits—Evidence—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 393.

A commission issued to an Ameen to hold a local investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of mesne profits, is not a process within the meaning of cl. 1 of s. 20 of the Court Fees Act; and art. 3, Part II of the rules, promulgated in 1878, framed under that section, is therefore ultra vires, and cannot be enforced.

In the execution-proceedings of a certain suit in which the plaintiffs had obtained a decree, the Court deputed an Ameen to hold a local investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of mesne profits payable to the decree-holders by the judgment-debtor, at the same time directing the Ameen to make his report to the Court. In accordance with this order a local investigation was duly held, and in the report made by the Ameen mesne profits were assessed at Rs. 3,496. This report was filed in Court without objection being made thereto by either party. At a subsequent stage of the proceedings, the Court directed the decree-holders to pay into Court a further Court-fee, amounting to Rs. 102, as the fee of the Ameen. The decree-holders failed to make such payment, and the Subordinate Judge thereupon refused to allow the decree-holders to make use of the Ameen’s report as evidence, relying on [282] a note appended to art. 3, (1) Part II of the rules relating to the service and execution of processes framed under cl. 1, s. 20, of Act VII of 1870, as amended by the Acts of 1870, 1876, 1881, 1884, and 1889, and himself proceeded to determine the amount of mesne profits on other evidence, which consisted of copies of road-cess papers filed in the Collectorate by the father of the judgment-debtor, and found on the basis of these papers that the amount of mesne profits payable by the judgment-debtor was Rs. 7,417-8.

The judgment-debtor appealed against this order.

Mr. Evans (with him Baboo Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Grisk Chunder Chowdhry), for the appellant, contended that the Ameen’s report should not have been excluded, as the Judge was bound under s. 393 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to use this report as evidence in the suit, and that no rules made under the Court Fees Act could override that provision.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, and Baboo Dwarkanath Chukhravarty for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Gordon, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Dacca directing him to pay to the decree-holders the sum of Rs. 7,417-8 as mesne profits.

[283] It appears that a commission was issued by the Court under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to the Civil Court Ameen, directing him to hold a local investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of mesne profits payable by the judgment-debtor, and to report thereon to the Court. The Ameen completed his investigation and submitted his report, which was filed with the record, without any objection being taken to it by either party. He assessed the mesne profits at Rs. 3,496. Subsequently, when the case came on for hearing, it was found that the decree-holders had failed as ordered by the Court to deposit the excess Court-fees, amounting to Rs. 102, payable on account of the remuneration of the Ameen, and accordingly the Subordinate Judge, relying apparently upon a note appended to art. 3 of Part II of the rules relating to the service and execution of processes framed by this Court under cl. 1, s. 20, of the Court Fees Act of 1870, refused to allow the decree-holders' pleader to make use of the Ameen's report as evidence, and the judgment-debtor not appearing, he proceeded to determine ex parte the amount of mesne profits on other evidence, then before him. This evidence consisted of copies of certain road-cess returns which had been filed in the Collectorate by the father of the judgment-debtor, and on the basis of these papers alone the learned Judge fixed the amount of mesne profits at Rs. 7,417-8.

Mr. Evans, for the judgment-debtor, appellant, contends before us that the Judge has erred in law in not taking into consideration the Ameen's report. He points out that, under the provisions of s. 393 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Subordinate Judge was bound to use the Ameen's report and the evidence taken by him as evidence in the suit, and that no rules framed by the Court under the Court Fees Act can override these provisions. We think that this is a sound contention. The rule apparently referred to, and acted upon, by the Subordinate Judge, is to be found in a note appended to art. 3 of the rules which were framed and promulgated in 1878, and which are the rules at present in force.

Article 3 of the rules provides as follows:—

[284] It is the latter portion of this note which the Subordinate Judge apparently thinks is applicable to the present case, and under which he has refused to use the Ameen's report as evidence. In our opinion this note is ultra vires. It is inconsistent with s. 393 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section is as follows:—

"The Commission, after such local inspection as he deems necessary, and after reducing to writing the evidence taken by him, shall return such evidence, together with his report in writing, signed with his name, to the Court. The report of the Commissioner and the evidence taken by him (but not the evidence without the report), shall be evidence in the suit and shall form part of the record;" and then follows a provision for the personal examination of the Commissioner by the Court, with which we are not now concerned. Now, in the present case, as we have already said, the Ameen completed his enquiry, and submitted his report and the evidence he had taken to the Court, and, therefore, in accordance with the terms of the section just cited, we think the Subordinate Judge was bound to treat such report and evidence as evidence in the suit. We are also of opinion that art. 3 of the rules is itself ultra vires. A commission is not, in our opinion, a process within the meaning of s. 20 of the Court Fees Act. Process has a well-understood meaning, within which such a commission cannot be included. As both the rule and the note are ultra vires, they cannot be enforced by law, and this appeal must be decreed and the case be remanded for retrial. The Subordinate Judge will consider the report of the Ameen and the evidence taken by him as evidence in the suit, subject of course to any objections that may be taken to them by either party, along with the other evidence now on the record, and any fresh evidence bearing on the determination of the amount of mesne profits, which we give the parties liberty to adduce. We make no order as to costs.

[285] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Pigot.

MAHOMED MEDHI GALISTANA and others (Appellants) v.

Practice—Application in suit by persons not parties thereto—Lessors—Receiver.

Case in which persons, not parties to a suit in which a Receiver had been appointed, were permitted to apply, by motion or notice in the suit for the purpose of establishing their rights to obtain an order directing the Receiver to make over to them certain properties of which he was holding possession after expiry of the lease under which those properties had been held by him, and which had been granted to his predecessor in title by certain persons through whom the applicants claimed as representatives.

Neate v. Pink (1), as explained by Fry, J., in Brocklebank v. East London Railway Company (2), referred to.

Appeal from an order, made in the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, dated the 28th February 1889.

The suit, in which the order referred to was made, was an administration suit brought by a daughter to administer her father's estate; in such suit, in the year 1881, the Receiver of the Court was appointed Receiver, and, as such, he took possession of certain taluks and zemindaries situate in or about Purneah, more than half of which were alleged to have belonged to the father, Mahomed Tuckee, whilst the remainder was formerly held by Mahomed Tuckee in the name of his son under a lease from certain Persian zemindars, which ran from the year 1865 to the year 1885. The rents of this portion of the property so held under lease were duly collected by the said Receiver, and credited to the estate, he paying to certain persons who claimed to be the heirs of the Persian zemindars the yearly rental thereof until the expiry of the said lease, at which period the original lessors or their representatives became entitled to possession of the land formerly held under lease.

In December 1887, two persons, named Mirza Mahomed Moosavee and Hajee Mirza Mahomed Ali Savjee, produced to the said Receiver a power-of-attorney, alleged to have been executed [286] in their favour by the original lessors or their representatives, authorizing the donees of the power to take over possession of the properties formerly held by the Receiver under the said lease. This power, and another similarly presented, were both found by the Receiver to be insufficient for the purpose, and subsequently, in October 1887, a further power was obtained by the two persons aforesaid, and a fresh application was made to the said Receiver for possession of the said lands. The Receiver, however, declined to make over possession until the applicants proved, to the satisfaction of the Court, the fact that the donees of the power-of-attorney were either the original lessors or their representatives in interest, and until the Court should make an order directing him so to make over possession.

Mirza Mahomed Moosavee and Hadjee Mirza Mahomed Ali Savjee (hereafter called the applicants) thereupon applied to the Court, on notice in the administration suit above mentioned, for an order that the Receiver should deliver possession to the applicants of the said lands together with all papers, &c., connected therewith and should pay to the said applicants all rents and profits of the said lands, less collection charges, accruing since the year 1885. This application was supported by affidavit setting out the various devolutions and transfers of title from the original grantors of the said lease to the donees of the said power-of-attorney. The application was opposed by one Nathmal Golecha (who was the purchaser of the interests of all the parties to the suit other than those of the infant respondents) and certain of the infant defendants who had not parted with their shares in the estate in the hands of the Receiver.

Mr. Justice Norris dismissed the application, on the ground that the applicants were not parties to the administration suit, and that the Court had no jurisdiction in the matter. The applicants appealed.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Mr. M. P. Gasper, for the appellants.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Amir Ali, for the respondent Nathmal Golecha.

Mr. Chuckerbutty, for the infant respondents.

[287] The Advocate-General contended that the form of the proceedings was correct, and that the application should have been gone into, citing Neate v. Pink (1), Neate v. Pink (2); and that the proper course was to direct an enquiry to ascertain who was entitled to the properties. He distinguished the present case from that of Brocklebank v. East London Railway Company (3).

The Court here called upon Mr. Amir Ali on the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. Amir Ali contended that the case of Neate v. Pink (1) did not apply, as there were special circumstances in that case, and referred to Belchambers' Practice, p. 109, as showing that persons, not parties to the suit before the Court, cannot apply to the Court in such suit: Brocklebank v. East London Railway Company (2), [Petheram, C. J.—intimated that Mr. Amir Ali had no locus standi] Mr. Amir Ali submitted that being the purchaser of the greater portion of the estate in the hands of the Receiver from the parties to the suit, and a party to the suit, and a person on whom notice of motion was served, he was entitled to appear.

ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J. and Pigot, J.) was delivered by Pigot, J.—We think the case of Neate v. Pink (1) as it stands and as explained by Mr. Justice Fry in the case of Brocklebank v. East London Railway Company (2), shows that it is proper for, and perhaps absolutely incumbent on, this Court to make an order for an enquiry in these proceedings. It is not necessary for us to dwell upon the principle enforced in those two cases. It is clear that whatever is the least expensive course, consistent with a satisfactory enquiry, ought to be adopted, in order that the Court shall not, by its own dominant power, hold property on which the parties to the suit have no claim, and hold it in despite of the real owners. If the Court can find out who the real owners are, it should do so, and in the least expensive manner. Mr. Justice Norris's order must be set aside, and in its place we order an enquiry to be held as to the rights of the applicants or such other persons as may be entitled by assignment or inheritance to the interest [288] of the lessors (naming them) under the lease under which Mahomed Tuckee had a share in the property in question. This enquiry will be held by the Judge on the original side himself, or by such officer as he may send it to, and in such manner as he may direct. As to costs, the burden of the appeal and of the opposition in the original Court has been borne by Nathmal Golecha, for whom Mr. Amir Ali and Mr. Bonnerjee appear, and who, in a distinterested manner has come forward to defend the rights, possibly, of absent parties, and who was apparently prepared to enforce some principles of the Muhammadan Law of Succession in this matter. It may be that a successful opposition to this application might have the result of frustrating the rights of these Persian intruders, and so, if the opposition of Nathmal Golecha had been successful, the result might perhaps have been that part of the property would be heredita jacens, and might accordingly fall into his hands in some way or other. We do not say that he was influenced by that hope, but casting about for a justification for his appearance, we cannot find any. However excellent his motives, we think he must pay the costs of this appeal. He must also pay his own costs of the original application. As to the appellants' costs of the original application, they are to be in the discretion of the Judge dealing with the enquiry, who will have, in the suit in which this appeal is made, complete control concerning them. We must add that the infants, who appear here and who appeared in the Court below, notwithstanding they received notice that they need not appear upon the matter, cannot have any costs, either of this appeal or of the original application. Their appearance is merely cost-making, and such a course must be discouraged. Not merely do we make this order as to their costs, but we must order that the Receiver is not to pay for them any costs in this matter.

(1) 15 Sim. 450.
(2) L.R. 12 Ch. D. 839.

Appeal dismissed.

Attorney for the respondent Nathmal Golecha: Mr. R. Rutter.

[289] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Corner Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Pigot.

When an appeal is filed, but no paper books are delivered by the appellant, the respondent is entitled, without taking upon himself to deliver paper books, to have the appeal dismissed with costs.

Hurrooosoodery Dossee v. Kallypoddo Dutt (1) not followed.

In this case the suit brought by the plaintiff was dismissed, on the original side of the High Court, with costs, on the 13th June 1889.

The plaintiff, on the 12th August 1889, issued notice to the defendant that he had filed an appeal against the decision of the lower Court. This notice was served on the defendant on the 8th January 1890. The appellant, however, filed no paper book.

Under para 467 of the rules framed for the original side of the High Court (see Belchambers' Rules and Orders, p. 209), the appellant or his attorney is bound, "within six days from the presentation of the memorandum of appeal, to deliver to the Registrar, Original Jurisdiction, for the use of the Judges, two paper books containing a copy of the plaint, written statement, depositions of witnesses, and of the decree and judgment and memorandum of appeal. If the appellant fail to do so within the time limited, the respondent or his attorney may deliver such paper books."

The respondent being satisfied with the decree in his favour filed no paper books under this rule.

On the appeal being called on for hearing, no one appeared for the appellant.

Mr. Gasper, for the respondent, asked that the appeal might be dismissed with costs.

The Court (Petheram, C. J., and Pigot, J.), after the case of Hurrooosoodery Dossee v. Kallypoddo Dutt (1) had been brought to their notice, dismissed the appeal with costs.

Attorney for respondent: Baboo Gonesh Chunder Chunder.

Bunwari Lal Mookerjee (Plaintiff) v. The Secretary of State for India (Defendant).* [19th November, 1889.]

Small Cause Court, Mofussil, Jurisdiction of—Suit for compensation for damages against the Secretary of State—Provincial Small Cause Court Act (IX of 1887), sch. ii, art. 3.

A suit was brought against the Secretary of State in a Mofussil Small Cause Court for compensation for damages done to an oil mill by the officials of the Nalhati State Railway. Held, that the suit was not within art. 3, sch. ii of Act IX of 1887, and that it was cognizable by the Small Cause Court.

This was a reference under s. 646-B of the Code of Civil Procedure by the District Judge of Moorshedabad. The reference was in these terms:—

"The plaintiff sues the Secretary of State for compensation for damages done to an oil mill while it was being carried on the Nalhati State Railway.

"The Small Cause Court Judge has returned the plaint, being of opinion that the suit is one which is excepted from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court by art. 3 of sch. ii to Act IX of 1887.

"I am prayed, under s. 646-B of the Civil Procedure Code, to refer the matter to the High Court. I have considerable doubt whether the article is intended to cover a case of this kind. The officials of the Nalhati State Railway are officers of the Government: but the view which the Small Cause Court Judge has taken seems to me to be practically to hold that no suit can be brought against Government in the Small Cause Court. Article 43, however, is not consistent with that view: and comparing the provisions of Act XI of 1865, s. 1, Act X of 1877 and of the present Civil Procedure Code, with those of Act IX of 1887, it appears very doubtful that it was intended to except all suits against Government from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court."

No one appeared on the reference.

OPINION.

We are of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge is correct, and the present suit is not within art. 3, sch. ii, Act IX of 1887.

The papers will be returned, so that the District Judge may remit the record with this opinion to the Small Cause Court Judge.

PERTAP CHUNDER GHOSE (Plaintiff) v. MOHENDRANATH PURKAIT (Defendant).*

Contract—Effect of misrepresentation by a party as to part of the subject-matter of a contract—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17, cl. (b) and (h)—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 584 and 585.

Where one party induces another to contract on the faith of representations made to him any one of which is untrue, the whole contract is in a Court of Equity considered as having been obtained fraudulently.

Where a tenant had executed a kabuliyat containing a stipulation which the landlord had told him would not be enforced, the tenant could not be held to have assented to it, and the kabuliyat was not the real agreement between the parties. Where by an ikramnama tenants jointly promised that they would sign, and have registered, kabuliyahts for rents at rates mentioned: Held, that the document did not come under cl. (b) of s. 17 of the Registration Act III of 1877, operating to create or declare an interest, but came under cl. The limitation to the power of the appellate Court in hearing a second appeal under ss. 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, must be attended to, and the appellant cannot be allowed to question the finding of the first appellate Court on a question of fact.

Appeal from two decrees (27th January 1887) of the High Court, reversing two decrees (30th November 1886) of the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs.

This appeal raised the question of the appellant's right to obtain a decree for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate against the [292] defendants as tenants of two jots or cultivating-tenures in village Sunkorpore, in the 24-Pergunnahs, within the appellant's zamindari of Porni.

One of these, consisting of 140 bighas, bearing a rent of Rs. 299, stood in the name of Godadhur, son of Ruttur Purkait. The other, consisting of 3 bighas 15 cottahs at a rent of Rs. 8, stood in the name of his brother Abhoychurn, both of whom died before this suit was brought.

The plaintiff, who had purchased the zamindari rights in Porni in 1877 at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, had for about three years received the old rents from the respondent's family. Afterwards he obtained an ikramnama, dated 14th Baisakh 1287 (25th April 1880), from some of the raiyats of Sunkorpore, including Abhoychurn, which purported to be an agreement, signed by the latter and sixteen others, to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 2-12 per bigha, and also to include in their kabuliyats 7½ seers of paddy for each bigha, the effect being enhancement from Rs. 307.4 to Rs. 520.13.

Afterwards, on 21st June 1881, Abhoychurn having died in April of that year, Rukkhit Chunder Purkait, his nephew, son of Godadhur, also deceased, signed the kabuliyat on which the present suit was brought. He was a defendant in his own right and as guardian of the minor children of Abhoychurn. Afterwards by order of Court their mother Bhagubutti Dasi was appointed guardian of the latter under Act XL of 1858. She then in her written statement denied the authority of Rukkhit to bind the minors by signing the kabuliyat. Rukkhit himself also raised the objection that his two younger brothers, sons of Godadhr, were interested, but had not been sued, and the defence insisted that the lands were ancestral mawra tenures of the family.

The issues raised the questions whether Rukkhit had signed the kabuliyat with knowledge of its terms and effect, and whether the minor defendants were bound by it.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge was that the plaintiff’s suit on the kabuliyat failed, but that he was entitled to have effect given to the ikram signed by Abhoychurn, who was when he signed it “admittedly kurna of the family and father of the minors.” The Subordinate Judge decreed Rs. 1,272 instead [293] of Rs. 1,640 which was demanded on the strength of the kabuliyat.

Appeals were filed in the Court of the District Judge, both by the minor defendants and by the plaintiff.

The District Judge concurred with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the kabuliyat had been executed by Rukkhit Chunder with a knowledge of the amount of rent required, and held that, though “some of the stipulations in the kabuliyat were very hard and even flagrantly unjust,” there was no reason to suppose that Rukkhit was not a free agent, or was imposed upon when he signed, and that he was therefore bound by the kabuliyat. His execution being, in the Judge’s opinion, within the scope of his authority on behalf of the minors, they for whose benefit it also was were bound by it.

There were second appeals from all parties to the High Court under s. 584, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff urging that the ikarnama which had been excluded from the evidence for want of registration should have been received.

A Divisional Bench (Prinsep and Beverley, JJ.) reversed the decrees of the lower Courts and dismissed the suit.

The Judges were of opinion that the kabuliyat could not be enforced. They observed:

“It is impossible in a document of this description to state what terms the parties agreed should be enforced, and what they understood should merely be nominal. We cannot, therefore, concur in the finding of the District Judge that the agreement to pay an enhanced rent absolutely and unconditionally was ever accepted by Rukkhit. In taking a kabuliyat on the understanding deposed to by his Naib, and in attempting to enforce that agreement, the landlord has acted fraudulently. The parties therefore not being of one mind as to what was agreed upon, we think that the terms of the document cannot be enforced. It must not be supposed, however, that from our not calling attention to other portions of the District Judge’s judgment we accept his finding as to undue influence or misrepresentation in this case. From the facts found it is clear that on many points, he is wrong, while on others we are not satisfied that the case has been properly tried.”

[294] They then went into the question of how far the respondent Rukkhit was competent to bind his brothers and the sons of Abhoy, and after noticing the fact that the brothers of the respondent Rukkhit applied to be allowed to appear as defendants and defend the case, and that such application was refused upon the appellant’s objection, they came to the conclusion that Rukkhit had no power in that behalf, and they set aside the judgments of both the lower Courts, and dismissed the appellant’s suit with costs in all Courts.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson and Mr. G. Cave (with whom was Sir H. Davey Q.C.), for the appellant, contended that, as regards the kabuliyat, there were concurrent findings of the Subordinate Judge and of the District Judge that it was executed by Rukkhit with sufficient knowledge of its stipulations. The High Court had no authority to establish any other conclusion; nor was it justified in finding that the appellant had acted fraudulently on taking it; that he had exercised any undue influence, or made any misrepresentation in taking it; or that the parties purporting to contract were not of one mind. The ikrar, at all events, ought to have been taken into consideration. It did not require registration. Reference was made to ss. 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and to s. 17, cls. (b) and (h) of the Registration Act III of 1877.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent, argued that the judgment of the High Court was correct, the kabuliyat not being binding for the reasons given in the judgment. It was not binding on the minor defendants, for whom Rukkhit Chunder had no authority to act, and to whose interest it was prejudicial. The suit moreover, could not proceed in regard to the interest of the other sons of Abhoychurn, who had not been made parties.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson replied,

JUDGMENT.

Afterwards (on June 29th) their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—This suit was brought by the appellant, and the plaint stated that, on the 21st June 1881, the first defendant, Rukkhit Chunder Purkait, for himself and guardian of three minor defendants (two of whom are the first and second respondents) executed a registered kabuliyat, by which he rented 177 bighas 5 cottahs and 15 chittacks of land of the plaintiff, engaging to pay an annual rental of Rs. 487-9 and 1-10-12 kahans of paddy worth Rs. 33-4, total Rs. 520-13, and was in occupation of the above tenure; and that, exclusive of payments, there was due for rent and interest on overdue instalments, and for road and public works cesses, and interest thereon, a total of Rs. 1,640 11-1, and prayed for a decree for that amount and interest during the pendency of the suit. Rukkhit Chunder, in his written statement, said that he agreed to execute a kabuliyat, and a draft was made out and read to him, and when it was subsequently engrossed on a stamp, the plaintiff said it was just the same as the draft, and the defendant, in reliance on that statement, signed the document, but the draft and the engrossment were different. The minor defendants, by their mother and guardian, said they had no knowledge of the kabuliyat, and that Rukkhit had no power to execute a kabuliyat on their behalf. The Second Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, who tried the case, negatived the allegation that any deception was practised in getting the signature to the kabuliyat, but he held that all the terms of it were not binding on Rukkhit, “the bargain being very unconscionable and consideration very inadequate,” and that Rukkhit, whether guardian or manager, had no power to bind the other members of the family, as the contract was not for their benefit. He however admitted in evidence an ikrar or agreement executed on the 25th April 1880 by Abhoychurn, the father of the minors and uncle of Rukkhit, who died in April or May 1881, and who was the kurta or manager of the family, and by other tenants, by which he said they agreed to pay Rs. 2-12 per bigha. And he made a decree for rent according to the ikrar of 144 bighas 9 cottahs 7 chittacks and 15 gundahs, considering that the defendants were not proved to be bound by the area mentioned in the plaint.

From this decree there were appeals by both parties, which were heard before the Additional Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs. In his judgment, after saying that he agreed with the Subordinate Judge in the finding that Rukkhit signed the kabuliyat, he says, to quote his own words: “But he (the Judge) considers that the [296] terms of the kabuliyat are so extortionate and hard that he finds it difficult to believe that the defendant executed the kabuliyat with full knowledge of its terms, or after fully realizing the effect of the terms, or at all events that some extraneous motive or influence was used, such as a promise that all the terms would not be enforced. Now as to this I have to remark that the only question before us is, did the defendant knowingly execute the agreement as to the amount of rent? There are many stipulations in the kabuliyat, and some of them are very hard, and even flagrantly unjust, but we have nothing to do with them just now. All we want to know is, did defendant know what he was about when he agreed to pay the rent stated in the kabuliyat? It may be, and it appears from the Naib’s evidence that there are some stipulations in the kabuliyat which were not intended to be acted upon, but they need not be considered until plaintiff attempts to enforce them. The kabuliyat after the agreement to pay the rent contains these words: “If you (the plaintiff) or your heirs require the land, you and they will take khas possession of it. I (the tenant) and my heirs shall never have occupancy right to the said lands;” and towards the end a clause that if the rent is unpaid the tenants shall, at the pleasure of the plaintiff and of his heirs, be ejected from the land; and it shall be his and his heirs’ khas property. The Subordinate Judge said it had been proved to his satisfaction by printed dakhilas that the defendants paid rent at a uniform rate for upwards of twenty years, and were, therefore, in a position to plead the presumption arising therefrom in an enhancement suit. The evidence of the Naib, which the District Judge appears to have believed, is that the tenants objected to the condition that khas possession might be taken at will, and therefore, they were told that that condition had been inserted because then the tenants would remain under the influence (of the zamindar), and that it was not that the plaintiff would actually eject the tenants; and that, with reference to the condition that khas possession would be taken if rent were not paid by the end of the year, it was said that this was a penalty clause, and that the law was to that effect, and the plaintiff made those statements. It was admitted by the Counsel for the plaintiff that the statement of the effect of the law was a misrepren- [297]sentation. Although the District Judge does not expressly find that there was a misrepresentation, their Lordships think that this is the effect of his judgment. He says: “Granting that they (the tenants) were under a mistake as to their position, and that plaintiff represented his power as an auction-purchaser as greater than it really was, this would not amount to such misrepresentation as would vitiate the contract.” In this he was in error. Where one party induces the other to contract on the faith of representations made to him any one of which is untrue, the whole contract is, in a Court of Equity, considered as having been obtained fraudulently. If such a representation had not been made, the tenants might have refused to sign the kabuliyat. Further, if there is any stipulation in the kabuliyat which the plaintiff told the tenants would not be enforced, they cannot be held to have assented to it, and the kabuliyat is not the real agreement between the parties, and the plaintiff cannot sue upon it.

The Subordinate Judge, it has been seen, founded his decree upon the ikrar. The District Judge held that this document was inadmissible for want of registration, as operating to create or declare an interest, and coming under cl. (b) of s. 17 of the Registration Act III of 1877. Their Lordships are of opinion that it does not come under that clause, but under cl. (h), as a document merely creating a right to obtain another document, which will when executed create or declare an interest. Its terms are that the tenants conjointly promise that they will sign and have registered kabuliyas in respect of rents at the rates mentioned for the old lands which they have and for the excess land if any be found on measurement. It clearly was not the kabuliyat described in the plaint, and the evidence of the plaintiff himself showed that it was not intended to be the final agreement. It could not be sued upon as an agreement to pay the rent claimed, which the Subordinate Judge held it to be.

The District Judge, taking the view that the only question was whether Rukkhit agreed to pay the rent stated in the kabuliyat, and finding that he had power to contract on behalf of the minors, dismissed the defendant's appeal, and in the plaintiff’s appeal made a decree for the plaintiff for the amount of his claim with interest. From this the defendants appealed to the [298] High Court, the plaintiff also appealing on the ground that the ikrar ought not to have been held to be inadmissible. That Court set aside the judgments of both the lower Courts and dismissed the plaintiff’s suit with costs in all Courts, but did not in the judgment take notice of the question of the admissibility of the ikrar. Their Lordships have doubted whether the Judges of the High Court in hearing the appeals had regard to the provision in the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 584, as to appeals from appellate decrees, and thought they were at liberty to consider the propriety of the findings of the District Judge upon questions of fact. Certainly there are some passages in their judgment, particularly in the latter part, if not in the former, which suggest this. Their Lordships must observe that the limitations to the power of the Court by ss. 584 and 585, in a second appeal, ought to be attended to, and the appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a matter of fact.

For the reasons which have been stated, their Lordships are of opinion that the plaintiff’s suit should be dismissed, and that the decrees of the High Court are the proper ones. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm those decrees and dismiss the appeal. The appellant will pay the costs of it.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL MOTION.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF DHURONIDHUR GHOSE.*

Kidnapping—Penal Code, s. 361—Taking by father of minor wife from her husband—Guardianship of wife—Summons—Practice.

The husband of a Hindu girl of fifteen is her lawful guardian: and if the father of the minor takes away the girl from her husband without the latter's consent, such taking away amounts to kidnapping from lawful guardianship, even though the father may have had no criminal intention in so doing.

[299] One Dhurondhur Ghose applied to the Presidency Magistrate of the Northern Division of the Town of Calcutta for a summons against one Nityeprosad Bose, under s. 363 of the Indian Penal Code, for having kidnapped his wife, who was at the time a minor.

The facts placed before the Magistrate appeared to be as follows:—

On the 28th August 1889, the complainant’s wife who usually lived with her husband at No. 110, Shambazar Street (hereafter called the new house), went to No. 27, Boloram Ghose’s Street another house belonging to her husband (hereafter called the old house), and remained there for the night. The girl’s father, Nityeprosad Bose, who had lived with the complainant in the new house for about a month, was seen to go over to the old house on the morning of the 28th, and to return in about an hour’s time; he the next day took away the girl’s jewelry and clothes from the new house, saying that the girl had requested him to do so as the Ginnie of Futtehpore wished to see her and her baby, promising to return the jewels and clothes in half an hour. The complainant sent a maid in the evening of that day to ask his wife to come over to the new house, but the wife sent back word that as it was the Lukhee Pujah, she would not come that night but would do so early the next morning; at the time Nityeprosad was there also. The complaint again sent the maid the next morning to the old house to enquire if his wife had returned, but it was found that she had gone off to Rungpore. The maid was then sent to Rungpore to the house of Nityeprosad, and there found the complainant’s wife and asked her to return with her, but she refused to do so.

On the 3rd September the complainant through his attorney applied for a summons against Nityeprosad as above stated, intimating that he was prepared to prove the facts above stated, and that he had warned the accused not to take away his wife, he having intimated his desire so to do. The Magistrate, however, considered that the father of the girl was equally entitled with the husband to the guardianship of the complainant’s wife, and declined to grant the summons asked for. The application was again renewed by Counsel on the 4th September, but the Magistrate again refused a summons.

[300] The complainant then moved the High Court (Beverley and Banerjee, JJ.), asking that the Magistrate be directed to issue a summons.

* Criminal Motion, No. 389 of 1889, against the order passed by Moulvie Syud Ameer Hossein, Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, Northern Division, dated the 3rd of September 1889.
Mr. Chakravarti, for the complainant.—According to Hindu law, a husband is the lawful guardian of his minor wife's person. There is no criminal ruling exactly in point, but the following authorities may be referred to to establish that proposition:—Kateevam Dokanee v. Gendhenee (1), Dr. Guru Das Banerjee's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, pp. 117 and 171. A mere "taking" out of lawful custody is an offence under s. 361, Penal Code. The intention of the party taking has nothing to do with it. Reg v. Timmins (2). [Beverley, J.—That is an English case.] No doubt, it is a case under the English Statute, but the English law is substantially the same as the present section. Reg v. Baillie (3). Consent of the girl is immaterial. Neither force nor fraud form necessary elements in the offence as they do under s. 362. [Beverley, J.—If the girl had been taken away a few months later, she would have been sixteen and you could not have proceeded under this section.] After sixteen consent becomes a material element. The law takes into account the discretion of the girl herself. Hence the section protects parental rights up to the age of sixteen. That the person taking the girl away happens to be her father is immaterial. A mother may be guilty of the offence by taking away her own child against the consent of the father. Empress v. Prankrisna Surna (4).

The Court ordered a rule to issue, returnable in the usual way.

The rule coming on for hearing, the order of the Court (Tottenham and Banerjee, JJ.) was, as follows:—

ORDER,

This is an application to direct the Presidency Magistrate of the Northern Division of Calcutta to issue a process upon the petitioner's complaint that his wife, a minor under sixteen years of age, had been kidnapped from his lawful guardianship by her own father, the allegation being that the wife was taken from her husband's house while he was asleep by her father, and had been removed to Rungpore.

[301] The Magistrate refused to issue a process. In his letter to this Court, in showing cause against the rule, he says that there is no criminality in the act of a father taking away his own daughter, and that during his long course of experience as a Magistrate, he has refused many such applications.

We think that the cause shown is not sufficient, inasmuch as the act of the father distinctly falls within the definition of s. 361, Penal Code. He may have had no criminal intention in taking away his own daughter, but the law provides and the fact is undeniable, that the husband of a Hindu girl of the age of fifteen is her lawful guardian, and taking her away from him without his consent amounts according to the definition given above to kidnapping from lawful guardianship. We think, therefore, that the Magistrate must proceed according to law, and if he believes the complaint, he is bound to issue a process.

Summons directed to issue.

Attorneys for complainant: Messrs. Remfry and Rose.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

TARINIPROSAD ROY (Judgment-debtor) v. NARAYAN KUMARI
DEBI (Decree-holder).* [5th December, 1889.]

Execution of decree—Execution of rent decree obtained against a putnidiar—Property other than the tenure proceeded against—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1855), s. 65—Rent decree.

Where a landlord obtains a decree for rent against his tenant, which is on the face of it a decree for a sum of money without creating a charge upon the tenure, he is at liberty in execution to bring to sale property of his judgment-debtor other than the tenure itself.

Section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act creates a first charge upon the tenure for its rent and puts the landlord in the position of a first mortgagee so far as the rent is concerned, but the tenant remains personally liable for the rent, so that the landlord has a charge upon the tenure for [302] the rent, and he has a remedy against the tenant personally for the debt to him, and he has therefore a right to avail himself of either of these remedies.

The plaintiff, having obtained a decree against his tenant for rent of a putni-taluq, attached, in execution of this decree, properties belonging to the judgment-debtor other than the putni-taluq in question.

The judgment-debtor put in an objection that, under the terms of the putni-kabuliyat and the provisions of the law, the decree-holder was bound to proceed, in the first instance, against the putni-tenure itself and then against a certain sum given in deposit by the judgment-debtor.

It appeared that the putni-tenure was put up for sale in execution of this decree, but the sale was postponed at the request of the decree-holder and was not further proceeded with.

The Subordinate Judge held that, as far as the special agreement in the putni-kabuliyat was concerned, the case was on all fours with that of Lolit Mohun Roy v. Binodai Dabee (1), and that as the decree made no reference to the special agreement and was an ordinary decree for rent, he could not, therefore, go behind this decree and give effect to the terms of the kabuliyat; he further held that there was no provision of law limiting the right of the decree-holder to the sale of the putni-tenure only, and he therefore disallowed the objections.

The judgment-creditor appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jasadananand Pramanick, for the appellant, contended that the decree-holder was bound first of all to proceed against the tenure both under the Rent Law and the Transfer of Property Act.

Baboo Nilmadhnb Sen, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by

* Appeal from Order, No. 252 of 1889, against the Order of Baboo Hurro Gobind Mookerjee, Subordinate Judge of Dinagepore, dated the 22nd of May 1889.

(1) 14 G. 14.
Petheram, C.J.—This is a suit which was brought by a landlord against a tenant to recover his rent, and the decree upon the face of it is a decree for a sum of money without charging the tenure with any lien or charge of any kind, and from that I apprehend that it was a suit brought against the tenant personally [303] to recover the amount which was due from him to the landlord. This decree having been obtained, the landlord, the decree-holder, makes an application to attach the property of his debtor to answer the decree. The property which he elects to attach is not the tenure, and the question which arises here is whether he was entitled to pursue his remedy against other properties before he had sold the tenure itself.

The only section which can be relied upon by the defendant, the tenant, is s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This section provides that a tenant under these circumstances shall not be liable to ejectment for arrears, but his tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof and the rent shall be a first charge thereon.

This section, so far as I can see, creates a first charge upon the tenure for the rent of it, and puts the landlord in the position of a first mortgagee, so far as the rent is concerned, but the tenant remains personally liable for the rent. So that the landlord’s position is this: he has a mortgage or charge upon the tenure for the rent, and he has a remedy against the tenant personally for the debt to him. That being the case, he has a right to avail himself of either of his remedies. He may, if he chooses, bring an action in which he claims to establish his lien upon the tenure to bring that tenure to sale, notwithstanding any other charge which may have been made upon it, and that whether the tenant had any other property and whether some one else had a charge by way of contractual mortgage upon the tenure.

But if he thinks fit, he need not follow that course. He may bring an action to recover the debt the tenant owes him, in the same way as he might if he were a mortgagee in a case where there was a personal covenant in the mortgage-deed, giving the go-by to the mortgage and getting a personal decree against the debtor for the payment of the money. Having elected that course, he appears to be in the position of an ordinary creditor able to release his debt by the ordinary forms of attachment and sale of any property which the debtor has subject to any charge which other persons may have upon it. In this particular case the decree is, on the face of it, only a money decree for the [303] payment of the money, and in my opinion may be enforced in any of the modes in which an ordinary money decree may be enforced either against the person of the debtor or any property of his that may be found. In this view, we think, that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge was right, and that this appeal must be dismissed with cost.

Hemmuni Singh and others (Plaintiffs) v. Cauty and another (Defendants). [15th and 16th May and 29th June, 1889.]

Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), s. 7—Delimitation of land of adjoining proprietors—Correction of entry in register.

On a claim for the correction of the entry of the names of proprietors in the general register of revenue-paying lands in a district kept in accordance with Bengal Act VII of 1876, the limits of the area of the estate had not been defined, further than by boundaries mentioned in the plaint, which were disputed by the defendants, who were the owners of land adjoining, and who had obtained from the Revenue authorities an order for the entry now alleged to be incorrect. The properties were both parts of an ascertained number of bighas forming a chuckla.

The High Court, while affirming the decision of the Court below in the plaintiffs’ favour ordered a local enquiry with a view to the accurate delimitation of their estate. This, with the subsequent decree, resulted in the area being defined therein by reference to a map made and marked by an Amin. This was not a just division; for, while it divided the chuckla so as to give the defendants their full share, it went beyond it, to make up the full area of the plaintiffs’ share. Their Lordships, therefore, made a new order, calculated to secure the division of the whole chuckla in due proportions for the purposes of the entry in the register.

Appeal from a decree (8th March 1882) of the High Court varying a decree (1st July 1880) of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur.

The present appeal was preferred from a decree which directed a local investigation as to boundaries, for the purpose of ascertaining the correct entry to be made, in accordance with s. 7 of Bengal Act VII of 1876 (the Land Registration Act, 1876), in reference to an estate, as to which the names of the plaintiffs were entered in the column of proprietors.

The suit of which this appeal arose was brought to set aside the order of the revenue authorities in the Bhagalpur district, that the names of the defendants should be entered as owners, each of a one-third share of a whole area, or a chuckla, comprising a little more than 1,040 bighas, known as Pathurghati of Phagu Sirdar, and lying within or forming a dependency of a mauza called Letouna. This had formerly been part of a taluq named Thalba which belonged to a joint family estate owned in the year 1859 by five brothers. On a partition among the brothers, the chuckla Pathurghati was nominally allotted thus: viz., rather more than 503 bighas to one brother named Nundkishore, and the residue, 536 bighas and a few cottahs, to another brother named Haruckman.

The present suit had reference to the proper registration of the plaintiffs’ names as proprietors of these 503 bighas, part of Pathurghati, involving their marking-off and description. The property in the 503 bighas remained in Nundkishore’s possession till his death in 1872, descending to his heirs the present plaintiffs. The residue, 536 bighas came to the defendants as purchasers from Haruckman; and their application made in 1878 to have their names registered under Bengal Act VII of 1876 as proprietors, each of a one-third share of the whole of mauza Latouna and of chuckla Pathurghati, comprising all the 1,040 bighas.
HEMMUNI SINGH v. CAUTY

17 Cal. 306

(VIII.)

(instead of only the 536 bighas, which had fallen to the share of Haruckman) occasioned this suit. An order of the Collector, dated 29th March 1879, reversing that of the Deputy Collector, and confirmed on appeal by the Commissioner, directed entry of all that the defendants had applied for, which included entry of two-thirds of Pathurghati in their names.

The Subordinate Judge decreed that the names of the plaintiffs be entered in the register, in respect of that portion of Pathurghati of which portion the boundaries were given in the plaint; the names of the defendants being removed; the orders of the revenue officers being set aside as to the entry in favour of the defendants.

The High Court (Prinsep and O'Kinealy, JJ.) in the main affirmed this decree; but found it necessary to direct the District Judge to issue an order to an Amin to make a local enquiry, and a map of the land to which the entry when made would relate. This was done. The Judges then in continuance (3rd April 1883) gave the following decision:

"It was our intention not merely to find in favour of the plaintiffs, but to restrict the claim so that they might have only the 503 bighas odd to which they became entitled in consequence of the partition between Nundkishore and Haruckman Singh. We certainly never intended to deprive the defendant of the 536 bighas odd to which under that partition he was also entitled.

"The local enquiry has now been held, and the Amin has submitted a map showing the area claimed by the parties, as well as the boundaries of Pathurghati fixed by the survey of 1847, that is to say, about eleven years before the partition took place. Within these boundaries the Amin has found an area of 1,049 bighas, which was the area dealt with by the partition. The case, therefore, is practically a mere boundary dispute. The only difficulty arises from the fact that the boundary between the two properties of the parties runs almost entirely through jungle land having no defined features.

"The main objection which has been taken before us to the correctness of the Amin's proceedings relates to the northern boundary. Now it does not appear that any such objection was taken while these proceedings were being held, or at any previous stage of this case. It would seem rather as if the correctness of that delineation was accepted by the parties, since it generally accords with the boundaries which they pointed out. There is no reason to suppose that, as regards the eastern and western boundaries of the entire tola Pathurghati of Phagu Sirdar, any error has been committed; and the correctness of the entire demarcation is in some way corroborated by the fact that the area corresponds with that dealt with by the partition.

"It seems to us, therefore, that we should be doing justice between the parties in the present case, if we were to give the defendant the full amount of the 536 bighas to which under the partition he is entitled, leaving the remainder to the plaintiffs." The judgment then gave a more detailed description of what the entry was to be by reference to the map; and a decree followed to the same effect.

The plaintiffs appealed to Her Majesty in Council, as to the question of the correctness of the entry of the boundaries, as decreed by the High Court.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant, argued that, as the plaintiffs sought, not to obtain possession by decree, but to have their [307] title cleared from the doubts that would be cast upon it by the mistaken entry under the erroneous orders of the Collector and of the Commissioner, it was not incumbent on the plaintiffs to have the division ascertained and delineated. All that was necessary for the plaintiffs was that the orders should be set aside, and that the parties should be restored to their former position. If anything more was required, the boundaries alleged in the plaint were capable of being laid down. The decree of the High Court would have the effect of apparently transferring to the defendants, lands which, as to part, had been in the possession of the plaintiffs and of Nundkishore since 1859; and that decree prescribed an unjust division for the purposes of the register.

Mr. C. W. Avathoon, for the respondents, supported the decree of the High Court.

Mr. R. V. Doyne replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships took time to consider their judgment, which was afterwards (on 29th June) delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—The appellants were the plaintiffs in the suit, and the plaint stated that upon a partition between the members of a joint Hindu family of property, of which a chuckla known as Pathurghati formed part, and the entire 16 annas of which chuckla was 1,040 bighas 1 cotta 2 dhoors, 503 bighas 7 cottahs 12 dhoors 12 rains of jungle-land fell to the share of Babu Nundkishore Singh, the father of the first and grand-father of the second and third plaintiffs, and the remaining 536 bighas 13 cottahs 9 dhoors 8 rains of jungle-land of the chuckla went to the share of Baboo Haruckman Singh, from whom the defendants derive their title. That upon petitions of the plaintiffs and defendants for registration of names under Bengal Act VII of 1876, an order for registration of names of the plaintiffs in respect of the 503 bighas, &c., was made by the Deputy Collector; but on appeal the Collector reversed that order, and directed the names of the first and second defendants to be recorded in regard to two-thirds of the entire chuckla, and this order was confirmed by the Commissioner, and in accordance with it the name of the second defendant was also registered in respect of one-third. The plaint prayed for an order for registration of the plaintiffs' [308] names in respect of the 503 bighas, &c., out of the 1,040 bighas, &c., and for the registration of the defendants' names only in respect of the remaining 536 bighas, &c., and for other relief, giving boundaries of the 508 bighas. The written statements of the defendants said that the boundaries given in the plaint did not comprise 503 bighas of land; that the entire area of chuckla Bathurghati was not 1,040 bighas, and the boundaries given by the plaintiffs were wrong. The Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur made a decree that the names of the plaintiffs should be registered in respect of that portion of the lands which is called Pathurghati Phagu Sirdar, the boundary of which has been given in the plaint, and that the names of the defendants in respect of the share should be expunged, and that portion of the order of the Mutation Department which is prejudicial to the interests of the plaintiffs should be set aside.

Upon an appeal to the High Court, that Court considered that the partition was made as stated; but the real difficulty in the case consisted in the indefinite character of the boundaries given in the plaint.
upon which the plaintiffs’ case had been decreed; that those boundaries, so far as they understood them, were natural boundaries: but from the extensive area of the land in dispute, it was not improbable that these natural boundaries indicated only a small portion of the boundary lines. They therefore thought it necessary that the boundaries given in the plaint should be ascertained and clearly indicated in a map before a final order was made. The District Judge was accordingly requested to direct a competent Amin to prepare a map, after proper enquiry, showing the boundary as stated in the plaint; and having ascertained these boundaries, the Amin should proceed to measure the area falling within them, and should then submit his report for the orders of the High Court. The District Judge accordingly, by an order dated the 10th of June 1882, commanded a Civil Court Amin to make the local investigation and the map thus required.

The Amin made his report, dated 12th August 1882. In that he states that the servants of the plaintiffs and defendants had pointed out the land which they said was in the possession of their masters and it was measured; but the lands as pointed out when added together, did not tally with the amount of land specified [309] in the partition, and was deficient by 256 bighas 2 cottahs 14 doors. He then says that in order to ascertain why the amount of land had decreased, as well as to know the boundary limit of chuckla Pathurghati, he summoned several persons; but they only stated that the lands appertaining to mouza Babhungan, named in the plaint as on the west of the 503 bighas claimed, were on the western limit of chuckla Pathurghati. After this he called for a survey map made in 1847, which had been filed on behalf of the plaintiffs, and using this and taking a point on the east side where Pathurghati joined two mouzas, Doparkha and Burakurwa, which was pointed out and admitted by the agents of both parties and the servant of the proprietor of those mouzas, he fixed the boundary of Babhungaon farther to the west than the point which had been pointed out to him by the agents of the plaintiffs as on the western limits of Pathurghati, so as to include the 256 bighas which were deficient. This was done in the absence of any representative of the proprietor of Babhungaon. The Amin appears to have thought he was bound to fix the boundaries of Pathurghati so as to give an area which exactly tallied with that in the partition. But it was not his duty to do this, and the defendants had denied that the entire area of the chuckla was 1,040 bighas.

The case came again before the High Court on the 3rd April 1883, the respondents (the plaintiffs) having filed objections, in which they said that as the partition did not take place with reference to the survey map, the Amin was wrong in calling for the survey map, and in finding on the strength of it that the chuckla extended more on the west, contrary to the allegations of both parties. But the Court adopted the boundaries found by the Amin, and decided to give to the defendants the full amount of 536 bighas to which they said they were under the partition entitled, leaving the remainder to the plaintiffs; and also that the defendants were to have the portion which lies to the extreme east, and they were to obtain the services of some competent person to delineate on the map submitted to the Court by the Amin the boundaries between the 536 bighas and the lands belonging to the plaintiffs. This was done, and the case with the map of the surveyor again came before the Court on the 6th June 1883, [310] when it was objected on behalf of the plaintiffs that the balance remaining in their possession was considerably less than 503 bighas, but the Court said they had then no concern with that matter—it was con-considered before the decree was settled—and ordered that the map should form part of the decree, and that out of the lands in suit the plaintiffs should receive any land outside the boundary shown by the line marked by the surveyor, and the other boundaries—described in the order of 3rd April, and the defendants should get 536 bighas lying within those boundaries. The result is that the defendants would obtain possession of 536 bighas, and the plaintiffs might have to engage in a suit with the propri-tors of Babhungaon before they could obtain possession of the whole of the 503 bighas. This is not a just division, and their Lordships are of opinion that in this suit the boundaries of the land to be divided should be taken to be those pointed out by the servants of the parties, and that the proper decree will be that the land within those boundaries, and which are within the line marked green on the copy of the map of the Amin to be annexed to the order of Her Majesty in Council, shall be divided, by a competent surveyor, by a line beginning on the northern boundary at a point in a straight line with the north-west corner of the tank, and going thence to the southern boundary as nearly in a direct line as will conveniently divide the whole area in the proportion of 503 to 536, and that the plaintiffs shall obtain possession of the land lying on the western and the defendants of the land lying on the eastern side of such line, and that the suit should be remitted to the High Court that the line shall be so marked and the decree of the High Court be varied accordingly. Their Lordships will thus humbly advise Her Majesty. The parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

Decree varied.

[311] PRIVY COUNCIL.
PRESENT:
Lord Watson, Sir B. Peacock and Sir R. Couch.
[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

HAIDAR ALI KHAN (Plaintiff) v. NAWAB ALI KHAN AND (by revivor) NAUSHAD ALI KHAN (Defendants).
[17th and 18th July, 1889.]

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), s. 3—Effect of sanad to confer proprietary right on a talukdar, not being a trustee—Claim to under-proprietary right against talukdar distinguished, and not concluded by a decree for the former right in his favour.

Unless a talukdar, who holds such a sanad as is referred to in the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, has agreed in some way, or has otherwise become legally bound to hold the estate comprised in the sanad, or some part of it, in trust for another person, the principle on which Sookraj Koowar v. Government (1) and Hardco Baksh vJowahir Singh (2) were decided is not applicable to make the talukdar hold subject to a charge for the benefit of such other person.

The talukdar in whom no such trust is vested is entitled to the proprietary right in the lands forming the talukdari estate comprised in the sanad.

(1) 14 M. I. A. 112.
(2) 5 I. A. 161.
A claim against the talukdar for the proprietary right included lands in which the claimant alleged himself to have purchased under proprietary rights which were not claimed. A decree, maintaining the talukdar's proprietary right, was made without prejudice to a claim for the under-proprietary rights.

Appeal from a decree (10th June 1885) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (14th March 1884) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the plaintiff to obtain proprietary possession of villages in the Bara Banki district, of which the greater part were comprised in a talukdari sanad, dated 1st October 1860, granted by the Government to the plaintiff's brother, father of the defendant, who succeeded as talukdar in 1875. Part of the claim also was for villages in which the plaintiff alleged that he had purchased the under-proprietary rights. And the principal question raised by this appeal was as to the correctness of the concurrent judgments of the Courts below, which maintained the sole proprietary right of the defendant as talukdar, in virtue of the sanad confirmed as it had been by the effect of s. 3 of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869. A further question related to the under-proprietary rights.

[312] The plaintiff was the third son of Lutf Ali Khan, who died more than fifty years before this suit, leaving four other sons. The second son, Mardan Ali, deceased on the 16th August 1875, was father of the original defendant on this record, Nawab Ali, who died after this appeal had been filed. A certificate (16th October 1888) certifying his death, and the relationship of Naushad Ali, his minor son, was sent by the Judicial Commissioner to the Registrar, and by their Lordships' order of revivor (19th February 1889), Naushad Ali was brought on to the record, being represented by the Court of Wards through the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki.

Nawab Ali executed the kabuliyat on the 25th November 1858, and on the 25th October 1860 he received a sanad granted by the Chief Commissioner in the form then granted to the Oudh talukdars (1). This recited that, by the proclamation of the 15th March 1858, all proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh (with the exception of lands lying in special localities) were confiscated and vested in the British Government, which was empowered to make transfers as its will. Wherefore the Chief Commissioner, acting under authority vested in him by the Governor-General in Council, thereby granted and conferred on Nawab Ali Khan the entire proprietary right in, and possession over, the estate of Mailla Raeganj in Daryabad, viz., the villages entered in the kabuliyat executed by him, and to his heirs in perpetuity, subject to paying the annual revenue which might be fixed from time to time and to other terms specified.

Nawab Ali Khan had previously, on 12th July 1860, made application that "the integrity of his estate," conferred on him in proprietary right by the British Government heritable from generation to generation, should be maintained in accordance with the practice obtaining in a raj or gaddi without its being allowed to be divided into shares. And the sanad contained the following clause:—"One of the terms of this sanad is this, that if the original proprietor or any of his successors die intestate, his whole estate shall devolve on his male issues, viz., the sons and nephews, &c., in the order of succession in accordance with the system of [313] raj of gaddi." Comprised in the sanad were eight villages in perganna Bado

(1) A similar sanad is set forth at length in Thakur Shere Bahadur Singh v, Thakurain Dariao Singh (3 C. 649).
Sarai and six in Daryabad. Nawab Ali Khan was then about eighteen years of age, and his father and uncles were all living. The taluk was afterwards included in list 2 of the lists prepared in accordance with the Oudh Estates Act 1 of 1869, s. 8.

The estates claimed were shown by four schedules appended to the plaint and marked A, B, C and D.

Schedule A comprised the ancestral property in three villages, of which the first, Maila Raeganj, gave its name to the taluk.

Schedule B comprised certain villages, or divisions of villages, which were acquired while the defendant was a minor and were included in the sanad. These the plaintiff alleged to have been acquired in the first instance by himself.

Schedule C comprised certain under-property rights in small holdings which were said to have been acquired by the plaintiff himself, after the grant of the sanad, at dates varying from December 1874 to April 1876, from under-proprietors and village zamindars within the taluk.

Schedule D comprised sir land lying in different villages within the taluk, and alleged to belong to the plaintiff, as other sir land had belonged to Sahib Ali, the eldest of Lutf Ali's sons, and to Tassadduck Rasul, brother of the defendant, and to Inayet Ali, the third son of Lutf Ali.

The plaintiff's claim was based on statements in the plaint to this effect, viz., that with the exception of the late Raja Farzand Ali, who being talukdar of Jehangirabad did not care for assistance from the ancestral estate, all the other sons of Lutf Ali, including Mardan Ali, the defendant's father, were allowed sir land as detailed in schedule D; and that the plaintiff had full control over all the remaining estate, which was in his proprietary possession, according to the clauses 1, 3 and 12 in the wajib-ul-arz of village Maila Raeganj. This possession continued during the lives of the Raja and of Mardan Ali, the defendant remaining satisfied with his forty-three bighas of sir land mentioned in schedule D, but that after the deaths of his father and his uncle, Raja Farzand Ali, which latter took place on the 30th November 1880, the defendant sought to disturb the plaintiff's previous long possession, and applied on the 8th of January 1881 to the Magistrate, who maintained the plaintiff's possession under s. 530 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; that the Magistrate's order was set aside for certain irregularities by the Judicial Commissioner on the 9th June 1881; and that the defendant ousted the plaintiff from not only his possession of the lands of the taluk (i.e., from the lands of schedules A and B), including, with a small exception, the plaintiff's sir lands within the taluk, but also from his under-property rights acquired by him by purchase in the lands of schedule C.

The plaintiff claimed (1) that a decree for possession of the entire area of the ancestral property entered in schedule A of the plaint be made, excepting the sir land forty-three bighas held by the sons of Mardan Ali on payment of revenue; and that it be declared that the rent-free sir land entered in schedule D was, according to old usage, a compensation for the malikana or percentage due on account of superior right to the defendant as kabuliyatadar; (2) that a decree for proprietary possession of the entire area of the acquired property entered in schedule B be made in favour of the plaintiff; in whose favour also (3) a decree for full proprietary right in the estates and interests entered in schedule C should be made.

The grounds of defence appear from the issues, which were, first, whether the suit was barred either by the sanad or by the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, and how the claim was affected by the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act XXVI of 1866; secondly, as to the land comprised in schedule A, whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to it in right of inheritance; thirdly, whether he was entitled to the land in B and C, by reason of his having acquired it; fourthly, whether he was in possession till June 1881; and fifthly, "was defendant's name entered in the Government papers as owner, by consent of plaintiff, as ism farzi?"

At the hearing the plaintiff relied on clauses in the wajib-ul-arz of Maila Raeganj, the principal village in the taluk, as containing admissions of his beneficial interest. The District Judge found against him on the fifth issue; also expressing in the judgment an opinion that the wajib-ul-arz, as well as the correspondence and the evidence generally, contained nothing [315] to show that by agreement or by his conduct the talukdar had constituted himself a trustee as to any part of the estate claimed.

On the plaintiff's appeal the following judgment was given by the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Mr. T. B. Tracy:

"In appeal, Mr. Thomas contends that, at the regular settlement in 1870, the titular talukdar admitted in the village administration paper, or wajib-ul-arz, the possession and proprietary right of Sheikh Haidar Ali. Further, that the evidence on the record proved Haidar Ali's possession of the estate, and that there was nothing to show that Haidar Ali or his son Mansab Ali were merely agents for the talukdar.

"For the defendant his pleader contended that the real owner of the estate was Mardan Ali, the father of the defendant, who caused his son to be recorded as proprietor. It was further pointed out that, under s. 10, Act I of 1869, the defendant as sanad-holder had acquired an indefeasible title to the estate; that the suit was to recover possession of the taluka and not to establish that the defendant held it or any part of it in trust for the plaintiff; that the preparation of the wajib-ul-arz by the defendant was a clear indication of proprietary right; and that in this very paper, the plaintiff, as uncle of the talukdar, was recorded as holding some sir land for his maintenance.

"To this it was replied that the suit was not for the cancellation of the defendant's talukdari sanad, but for a return to the status quo ante, that is, for the restoration to possession of the plaintiff as rightful owner of the estate; that in accordance with numerous judgments of the Privy Council the suit was not barred.

"It appears to me that the present suit is distinguishable from Ramanund Kunwar v. Raghonath Kunwar (1), and the other cases referred to in the judgment therein. In these suits the title of the talukdar as legal owner of the estate was admitted, but it was sought to establish that he had, by express agreement or by his conduct, constituted himself a trustee for others as to the whole or part of the beneficial interest in the land the subject of the sanad. The present suit is practically and substantially for a declaration that no estate had in fact been conferred by Government on the talukdar, and that in the entire transaction [316] was a mere fiction. I do not think that the confiscation, restoration, and subsequent grant of the estate can be viewed in this light. It must, I think, be held that the sanad gave the defendant the absolutely legal title to the estate against adverse claimants.

"It remains to be decided whether the defendant has subsequently, either by express agreement or by his conduct, constituted himself a trustee for the plaintiff.

(1) 8 C. 769=9 I.A. 41.
"The District Judge has found that the wajib-ul-arz, as prepared at the settlement of 1870, 'must be taken to be a correct and genuine record of the rights of the parties, but neither in that document nor elsewhere can I find any evidence of any agreement that in the record of rights, one name should be substituted for another as a fictitious transaction by way of trust. I can nowhere find that defendant has invariably admitted plaintiff's possession as proprietor over the estate.' In this finding I concur. The passages in paras. 1, 3, and 12 of the wajib-ul-arz on which the plaintiff relies are manifestly insufficient. The passage in para. 1 is as follows:— 'During the possession of the present talukdar other pattis acquired by Haidar Ali, uncle of the taluk-dar, by virtue of transfer were included.' Paragraph 3 begins as follows:—
Haidar Ali, the talukdar's uncle, has the power of proprietor in respect of arranging for cultivation, collection of rent and abatement and enhancement thereof, and for reclaiming waste land. Paragraph 12 merely declares that as a member of the talukdar family, Haidar Ali holds some sir for his maintenance in accordance with the usual custom. There is nothing in all this inconsistent with the finding of the District Judge that, as a fact, Sheikh Mardan Ali, and after him his son, the defendant, managed the estate through Mansab Ali, the son of Haidar Ali, who is the prime mover in the present case, his father, the ostensible plaintiff, being an old man on the verge of imbecility.

"As to the wajib-ul-arz, I find that it contains no admission by the defendant that his title is fictitious, and that his uncle was the rightful owner of the estate. Apart from this, if, as the plaintiff alleges, he was all along in proprietary possession of the estate and the defendant was merely titular talukdar, what becomes of his claim to be the cestui que trust of the latter?

[317] "There is no good evidence that the plaintiff was ever in possession of the estate as proprietor, either before or after annexation.
There is, on the other hand, ample evidence on the record that the estate was managed on behalf of Sheikh Mardan Ali and his son Nawab Ali, by Mansab Ali. This is abundantly proved by the numerous letters which the Judge has found to have been written by Mansab Ali to his uncle Mardan Ali, making reports as to the management and asking for orders.
The plaintiff has, in my judgment, failed to prove his case, which is from the outset improbable. It does not appear why he should have a better title to the estate than his elder brother Mardan Ali. In the next place, supposing him to have acquired possession under native rule to the exclusion of his elder brother, what motive could he have had for making his nephew the ism farzi proprietor in preference to one of his own sons?
Why did he not assert his claim when the summary settlements were made with Nawab Ali Khan, or when the estate was conferred on him by Government?

"The oral evidence as to the possession of the estate before 1881 is conflicting. I am however of opinion that, taking one part of the case with the other, the weight of evidence goes to prove that Haidar Ali and his son Mansab Ali managed the estate on behalf of the talukdar. As members of the family they were allowed extensive powers, and were not called to a very strict account in respect of their collections. Nawab Ali Khan was an absentee, and appears to have lived for the most part with his uncle the late Raja Farzand Ali Khan, the wealthy Talukdar of Jehangirabad. I do not think that any weight can be given to the evidence in this case of Tassadduk Rasul (Nawab Ali Khan's brother and the present Talukdar of Jehangirabad). The brothers are at enmity in consequence of the bequest by Raja Farzand Ali Khan of his estate to Tassadduk Rasul. The finding of the District Judge, though professing merely to decide the fifth issue, practically decides that Haidar Ali did not enjoy proprietary possession till 20th June 1881 (4th issue).

"I find that the plaintiff-appellant has failed to make good his claim to any part of the property in suit, and I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs."

On the plaintiff's appeal.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant.—The settlement made in 1260 Fasli, corresponding to 1853 A. D., in the name of [318] Nawab Ali Khan, then aged only nine or ten years, was no recognition of his exclusive right, but only the result of family arrangement. Actually at that time the son had no right, as his father, Mardan Ali, was then alive. The nephew's name was recorded as the ostensible proprietor, the uncle remaining in possession. The just inference was that the name was used by an arrangement common in troubled times. The question then arose, what were the rights of the relations of a talukdar, their rights not being expressed, in a sanad granted to the latter alone? It was submitted that this appellant's right to the proprietary interest in the lands forming the taluk of Raeganj, which he was admitted by the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 to have then possessed (lands of which the appellant retained possession till ousted by Nawab Ali Khan in June 1881), should have been declared. His rights were not those of a karinda or manager. It was not that the plaintiff alleged the sanad to be fictitious. What was meant was that the boy's name was used "benami," to which the expression "ismfarzi" corresponded; and what was alleged was that the existence of the plaintiff's interest in and title to the family estate having been established, the defendant should have been held to be in the position of a trustee. He could be held to be in that position on the principle recognized in Hardeo Baksh v. Jowahir Singh (1), Sookraj Koowar v. Government (2), and [319] The Widow of Sunkersahai v. Raja Kashi Pershad (3). The plaintiff at all events should have been declared entitled to possession of his portion of the sir lands comprised in the taluk; and no case had been suggested for excluding the plaintiff from the under-proprietary rights detailed in schedule C of the plaint. Reference was made to Gouri Shunker v. The Maharaja of Bulirampoore (4), Shere Bahadur Singh v. Davato Kuar (5), Ramanand Kuar v. Raghubath Kuar (6).

(1) 4 I. A. 178=3 C. 522=6 I. A. 161.—As the Indian Law Reports contain no report of the final judgment in Hardeo Baksh v. Jowahir Singh, in which the first judgment (9th June 1877), is reported (3 C. 522), the result here stated. On the remand, the Commissioner of Sitapur found as a fact that, during the period between Lord Canning's proclamation of confiscation in 1858 and the commencement of the disputes between the parties, there had been a joint interest in and a common management of, the talukdari estate by the parties. Upon this the final judgment (1st March 1879) was that such an interest could not have existed unless the talukdar had consented that the property should be held as the joint estate of the family; and that there were grounds for presuming that it was the intention of the talukdar that the villages included in the summary settlement with him, and sanad granted to him, should be held by him in trust for the joint family as joint family estate, subject to the law of the Mitakshara; and the appeal being allowed, it was declared that he so held the villages in suit.—See Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh (14 C. 493 at p. 495.)

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent, argued that the claim of the plaintiff, being against the sanad of 25th October 1860, could not be sustained. Neither the wajib-ul-arz, nor any other evidence in the suit established the title of the plaintiff as proprietor, and he had failed to prove his case. There was no ground for the recognition of a trust; and neither by the defendant's acts nor conduct, nor by express nor by implied agreement, had he rendered himself a trustee.

Mr. R. V. Doyne replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner ought to be affirmed.

There is nothing in this case to show that the defendant, by any agreement or by any arrangement or other means, became clothed with any trust as regards the lands included in the sanad. The case, therefore, does not fall within the decisions of Sookraj Koonar v. Government (1), or the case of Hardeo Baksh (2). The defendant is therefore entitled, as proprietor, to the lands included in the sanad.

A question has been raised with regard to the lands included in schedule C. As to those the plaintiff has claimed a proprietary right. If he had claimed a sub-proprietary right, the defendant might have given evidence to show that he was not entitled to any such right. Their Lordships however think that, in affirming the decree, it ought to be without prejudice [320] to any claim which the plaintiff may have to under proprietary rights in respect of the property included in schedule C.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to this effect, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

The appellant must pay the costs of it.

Appeal dismissed.

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and

Prem Sook and another (Plaintiffs) v. Dhurum Chand and another (Defendants).* [6th January, 1890.]

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 27—Contract in restraint of trade—Construction of contract.

A contract under which goods were purchased of a certain rate for the Cuttack market, containing a stipulation that, if the goods went to Madras, a higher rate should be paid for them, is not one in restraint of trade; and where the purchasers sold the goods to a person in Calcutta, who in turn resold to another, who took them to Madras: Held, that the original purchasers were, under the terms of the contract, liable to pay at the enhanced rate.

[F., 13 M. 472 (475.).]

(1) 14 M.I.A. 112.

(2) 6 I.A. 161.

752
This was a suit brought in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes by the plaintiffs on the following contract:—

1\frac{1}{4} \text{ Sree Gonesjee,}

"1\frac{1}{4}. To the ever-living Prem Sook Ram Narain.—Accept the salutation of Giridhari Lall and Dhurum Chand. Further (we) have bought from you 6 bales of twist, bearing Gunga label, at the rate of Rs. 9-15. We have bought these goods for the purpose of giving them to the Oриyahs. These goods shall go to Cuttack, not to Madras. If they are taken to Madras, we shall pay at the rate of Rs. 10-15. We will raise no objection on any account.

Sumbat 1945, 12 (light side in) Joyst. "(Sd.) Dhurum Chand."

[321] The plaintiff alleged that, notwithstanding this contract, the goods were taken to Madras, and he therefore claimed the price of six bales at Rs. 10-15, less the money received from the defendants. The defendants contended that the contract was one in restraint of trade, and gave evidence, which was believed, that they themselves had not sent the goods to Madras, but that they had sold them to one Sreeram, who again sold to one Mutty Setty, and that the latter had taken the goods to Madras.

The Judge of the Small Cause Court held that, having regard to the nature of the contract and to the case of Carlisle’s Nephews v. Richnauth Buktearmull (1), the contract was not one in restraint of trade or against public policy, as the defendants were not prohibited from selling the goods to Madras. But although the contract was not one in restraint of trade, he considered that the defendants had not themselves committed any breach of the contract, and could not therefore be made liable. At the request of the plaintiffs, the questions, whether the contract was void as being in restraint of trade, and whether the defendants could be held liable in consequence of the sale at Madras by Mutty Setty, were referred to the High Court.

Mr. Acworth, for the plaintiffs, contended that, under the terms of the contract, the defendants were liable to pay at the higher rate, and was then stopped by the Court.

Mr. Garth, for the defendants, contended that s. 27 was wide enough to cover a partial restraint, citing Madhub Chunder Poramanick v.
Rajcoomar Dass (2).

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Pigot, J.) was delivered by

Petheram, C. J.—This is a reference from the Small Cause Court upon which a question of law arises. The suit was a suit brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover the price of six bales of twist at the rate of Rs. 10-15 a bundle.

The defendants paid into Court a sum of money calculated at the rate of Rs. 9-15 a bundle, and the question between the parties was, what was the sum which, according to the contract between [322] them, the defendants were to pay the plaintiffs for these goods, it being admitted that they had received them.

The goods were sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants under a written contract (here followed the contract above set out, 17 C., p. 320).

(1) 8 C. 809. (2) 14 B. L. R. 76.
After that contract had been entered into, it appears that the defendants re-sold these parcels of goods in the Calcutta market to some other dealer, and the person to whom the defendants sold them, I believe—though that fact is not material to the decision of this case—re-sold them again in the Calcutta to another dealer, and that dealer sent them to Madras. Upon that the plaintiffs claimed to be paid at the higher rate, and the defendants objected to pay at that rate, because they had not themselves sent them to Madras.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court gave judgment for the defendants, considering that the lower rate only was payable, but at the request of the parties has referred these two questions for the opinion of the Court—1st, "whether the contract is void as being in restraint of trade and being opposed to public policy," if not, 2ndly, "whether in consequence of the buyer of the defendants' vendees having sent the goods to Madras the defendants are bound to pay the higher rate mentioned in the contract."

As to the first question, we can see no reason for supposing that this is a contract in restraint of trade in any sense whatever. The defendants are not restrained by the contract from dealing with Madras as much as they please. All that the plaintiffs say in that contract is, we will sell these goods to you at one price if you are going to send them to Cuttack, but we will charge you another price if they are sent for sale to Madras. They had a right to refuse to sell to the defendants at all this small parcel of goods, and they had a right to fix the price at which they were willing to sell them; and they did fix the price in this way, and the defendants accepted the bargain. We can see no restraint of trade in that, because it left the defendants free to trade with the goods in any other place and in any way they thought fit.

Then comes the other question, whether, in consequence of the [323] buyer of the defendants, vendees having sent the goods to Madras, the defendants were bound to pay the higher rate mentioned in the contract. This is a simple question of the construction of the words of the contract. These words are: "These goods shall go to Cuttack, not to Madras. If they are taken to Madras, we will pay at the rate of Rs. 10-15." In our opinion the meaning of these words is, we agree to send these goods to Cuttack, and if, instead of their going to Cuttack, they go to Madras, we agree to pay the higher rate. There is not only a contract that the defendants will not send them to Madras, but the defendants agree that if they go not to Cuttack but to Madras, they will pay the higher price for them. They have gone to Madras and not to Cuttack, and therefore it seems to us that the defendants must pay the higher rate.

A great deal has been said as to there being no limit as to time, and no limit as to the way in which they get to Madras. As to that, it seems to us that this contract must be read in the light of common-sense, and that the plain meaning of it is, that the goods are to be sent to Cuttack from Calcutta for sale, and if, instead of that, they are sent from Calcutta as bundles of bales of twist of that particular mark to be sold at Madras, they shall be paid for at the higher rate. We do not see anything illegal in that or anything in restraint of trade, or that it is unreasonable or unlikely for the parties to make such a contract. We think therefore that the Judge of the Small Cause Court was wrong in the view he took.
of this matter, and that judgment must be entered for the plaintiff for an amount calculated at the higher rate.

[324] MATRIMONIAL JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson.

HILLIARD (Petitioner) v. MITCHELL (Respondent).

Marriage—Suit for nullity of marriage—Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 18, 19 (2)—Domicile of origin—Religious communion.

Where the petitioner, a member of the Church of England, came to India about the year 1867, his domicile of origin being then English, and in 1871 married the illegitimate sister (since deceased) of his second wife, whom he subsequently married in 1887, it being uncertain what his domicile was at the date of his first marriage: Held, in a suit for nullity of marriage, that either the petitioner carried with him to India the laws as to capacity to marry by which he was originally governed, or he was governed by the law of the class to which he belonged, and that in either case the marriage could not be supported.

Lopez v. Lopez (1) referred to and applied.

ROBERT WILLIAM HILLIARD, by his petition, stated that, on the 14th day of February 1871, he was lawfully married to Mary Madeline Hilliard, then Mary Madeline Ross, spinster, at St. John's Church in Council House Street, in the town of Calcutta; that the petitioner's said wife died on the 21st day of December 1883; that, on the 19th day of November 1887, the petitioner went through the ceremony of marriage with Julia Ella Mitchell at St. Thoma's Church, Free School Street, in Calcutta; and that they had lived and cohabited together, but there had been no issue from this cohabitation.

Mary Madeline Hilliard, the petitioner's first wife, was the uterine half-sister of Julia Ella Mitchell, and the petitioner prayed for a declaration that the marriage celebrated between himself and Julia Ella Mitchell was null and void on the ground that the parties thereto were within the prohibited degrees of affinity.

The case was undefended.

Mr. L. P. Pugh, Mr. E. W. Ormond, and Mr. L. Evans Pugh, appeared for the petitioner.

They referred to the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 18, 19 (2); The Queen v. Chadwick (2); Lopez v. Lopez (1).

[325] The further facts appear from the following judgment:—

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—This is a petition by a husband for a decree of nullity of marriage, on the ground that the parties to the marriage are within the prohibited degrees of affinity. The marriage was duly proved; and it was proved that the petitioner had been formerly married to an illegitimate sister, since deceased, of the second wife.
The petitioner was born in England, of parents having an English or Irish domicile, and he is and has always been a member of the Church of England. He came to this country, he thinks, in 1867, as assistant in a shop in Calcutta. He has now no intention of ever returning to England; but what his domicile was at the date of the marriage, in 1871, is not clear, nor is it, I think, material to determine it. Upon any view, I think, the decree asked for must be made.

If the domicile of the petitioner was English, the English law of prohibited degrees was applicable to his marriage, and under that law, this was a prohibited marriage. If the petitioner's domicile was Indian, still the same result must follow. It may be that, as an Englishman born, he carried with him to India the laws as to capacity to marry by which he was originally governed, irrespective of the religious communion to which he belongs; and is therefore subject to the law of England in this matter. This is a point upon which the Full Bench in Lopez v. Lopez (1) at p. 720 abstained from expressing an opinion. If this view be not the true one, then the petitioner was governed by the law of the class to which he belonged, that is to say, the law of the Church of England, according to the principle applied to Christians of another class in Lopez v. Lopez (1).

Upon no view of the case can the marriage be supported. A decree of nullity must be made.

Decree of nullity of marriage.

[326] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Rampini.

Lala Kirut Narain and another (Defendants) v. Palukdhari Pandey and others (Plaintiffs)." [4th September, 1889.]

Appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 104, cl. 2—Special Judge—Dispute as to settlement of rent.

No appeal lies to the High Court from the decision of a Special Judge under s. 104, cl. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[R., 21 C. 776 (781); 33 C. 837 (839) = 4 C.L.J, 138.]

Certain raiyats, the respondents in this appeal, applied for a settlement of their rents under s. 104 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, to Mr. Collins, the Revenue Officer appointed to make a survey and record of rights in the district of Mozufferpore. On the 29th April 1886, Mr. Collins made a settlement of their rents upon the footing of what he considered to be the existing rent, but the landlords, the appellants in the present appeal, being dissatisfied with Mr. Collins' settlement, appealed against his orders to Mr. A. C. Brett, the Special Judge appointed under s. 108 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the purpose of hearing appeals from his decisions. Mr. Brett confirmed the orders of Mr. Collins, and the landlords preferred a second appeal to the High Court. This appeal was heard on the 6th January 1888; but the question as to whether a second appeal did lie to the High Court against the order of the Special Judge was not raised.

The Court (Macpherson and Ghose, JJ.) remanded the case to the Court of First Instance (i.e., the Settlement Officer) “to determine judicially and on proper evidence what the existing rent is.” When the case went back to Mozufferpore, the post of Settlement Officer had been abolished, as the cadastral survey and the preparation of the record of rights in Mozufferpore had been put a stop to by Government. Under these circumstances, Mr. Brett decided to deal with the case himself under ss. 565 and 568 of the Civil Procedure Code, and after receiving all the evidence [327] both parties had to adduce, on the 10th January 1889, again confirmed the settlement of the rents made by Mr. Collins.

The landlords appealed to the High Court.
Baboo Umakali Mookerjee, for the appellants.
Baboo Taruck Nath Palit, for the respondents.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that no appeal lay to the High Court from the order of 10th January 1889 passed by Mr. Brett.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Rampini, JJ.), after stating the facts, proceeded as follows:

The landlords now again appeal to this Court, urging (1) that Mr. Brett, as Special Judge, has under s. 108 (1) no power to do otherwise than hear appeals from the Revenue Officers’ orders; that as District Judge he has no power to take any steps in the case; and that, therefore, his proceedings now appealed against are ultra vires and without jurisdiction; (2) that ss. 565 and 568, Civil Procedure Code, have no application to the case; and (3) that he has now settled the rents of several raiyats who were not parties to the original proceedings before Mr. Collins. On the other hand, a preliminary objection is urged on behalf of the respondents to the effect that no appeal against the order of Mr. Brett passed on the 10th January last lies to this Court, inasmuch as under s. 108 (3) a second appeal lies to the High Court only against decisions passed by a Special Judge under the provisions of s. 106 of Act VIII of 1885, and that the decision of Mr. Brett now appealed against was not passed in a case under that section. We think after some consideration that this preliminary objection must prevail. It seems clear that, according to Chapter X of the Tenancy Act, a proceeding under s. 104 (2) for the settlement of rent is a different thing from a proceeding under s. 106 with regard to a dispute as to the correctness of any of the particulars required to be entered in the record of rights, and it is only when such a dispute arises, and is disposed of by a Settlement Officer, that a second appeal lies to the High Court. The words “not being an entry of a rent settled under this chapter,” occurring in s. 106, read in connection with s. 108 (3), clearly indicate that this Court has no authority to entertain a second appeal in matters [328] relating to the settlement of rent; and from the proviso to s. 108 it appears that it is only when a dispute arises regarding any of the particulars entered in the record of rights, and when on second appeal the High Court has altered the decision of the Special Judge in respect thereto, that they have the power to exercise any jurisdiction as to the settlement of rent. In the present case no point is raised before us as to any of the matters mentioned in the proviso to s. 108, and it follows that no second appeal lies to this Court against the orders of the Special Judge; and we find that the same conclusion has already been arrived at by another Division Bench of this Court in the case of Shewbarat Koer v. Nirpat Roy (1), decided by Tottenham and Gordon, JJ., on the 15th May 1889.

It remains to be considered whether we can or should interfere, as we have been asked to do, with the order of Mr. Brett, now appealed against, under the powers vested in us by s. 622, Civil Procedure Code. After consideration, we think we should not do so, for, though it has now come to our notice that the Government Notification of November 4th, 1885, ordering a cadastral survey in part of the Mozufferpore district, has been withdrawn, except with regard to certain specified villages (see Government Notification of December 14th, 1886, published in the Calcutta Gazette of December 15th, 1886, Part I, p. 1308), amongst which do not occur the names of the villages in which the present applicants are raiyats, yet it seems doubtful if we have authority to interfere under the provisions of s. 622 with Mr. Brett's orders. In the case above cited, it has been held that the Court of a special Judge when that officer makes an order regarding a settlement of rent, is not a Court Subordinate to this Court. It may, however, be contended that it is a Court subject to our appellate jurisdiction within the purview of s. 15 of the Charter Act, and that therefore we have authority to interfere. But be that as it may, as the present case is clearly one regarding the settlement of rent, and not one in which there is any dispute as to an entry in the record of rights (so that we could not now pass any order in it settling the applicant's rents), and seeing that no appeal lay to the Court when the order of the Special Judge was set aside (329) and the case remanded for re-trial on the 6th January 1888, it would seem to us to be one in which the interference of this Court under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code, is not desirable. We accordingly abstain from passing any orders with regard to it under the provisions of that section. We think it proper to mention that when the case was remanded on the 6th January 1888, no question as to whether a second appeal lay against the order of the Special Judge in this case was raised before this Court.

For all these reasons this appeal will be dismissed, but in the circumstances without costs.

C. D. P. Appealed dismissed.

MORAN and others (Plaintiffs) v. CHAIRMAN of MOTIHARI MUNICIPALITY (Defendant).* [1st August, 1889.]

High Court, Powers of—Enforcement of public duties—License for a provision market—Construction of the word "may"—Bengal Municipal Act, 1884 (Bengal Act III of 1884), s. 339.

The High Court has no power to compel Municipalities beyond the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction to do their duty or to restrain them from doing that which it is not in their province to do.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 139 of 1888, against the decree of Baboo Amrit Lal Chatterji, Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 29th of March 1888.

(1) 16 C. 556.
There are no words which render it obligatory on a Municipality to grant a license under s. 339 of Bengal Act III of 1884.

The word "may" in s. 339 of that Act is not to be construed as "shall."

[Appeal. 20 C. 654 (661); Cons., 21 A, 348=A.W.N. (1899) 97; R., 19 A. 313 (317.)]

This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs for an order directing the Municipal Commissioners of Motihari to grant a license to the plaintiffs under s. 339 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, and for compensation.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

The plaintiffs, who were the proprietors of an indigo concern in Motihari, carried on their business through a lawfully-constituted attorney and agent under the name and style of "The Motihari Indigo Concern." They were also the proprietors of an ancient market, called Goodri Bazar, centrally situated within the Town of Motihari and within easy access of its inhabitants. Upon the extension of Part X of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, to the Municipality of Motihari about the end of 1883, a license under s. 340, cl. 2, of the Act for the sale of perishable articles in Goodri Bazar was granted to the plaintiffs for the remainder of the then current year ending the 31st March 1886. About this time the Municipality opened a market called Henry-ka-bazar at a short distance from the town of Motihari. On the 1st April 1886, the plaintiffs applied for a license for their market under that Act; but their application was refused on the ground that the place where the market was held was not a fit place where articles of a perishable nature could be exposed for sale, consistently with the sanitation of the town, and the convenience and comfort of its inhabitants.

On the 9th June 1886, the plaintiffs applied that an officer should be deputed to point out the defects which required rectification, and the wants which should be supplied to entitle the plaintiffs to a certificate from the Chairman under s. 340 of the Act. On the 15th June, Mr. Henry, the then Chairman of the Municipality, passed an order, in which he pointed out the defects which ought to be remedied, and the alterations which should be carried out before he would grant a certificate. The plaintiffs, having remedied the defects and carried out the alterations pointed out by the Chairman, again applied for and obtained a certificate under s. 340. The certificate was dated 25th and 28th September 1886, and was granted by Mr. C. F. Worsley, the Chairman, who thereby certified, "after inspection of the Goodri market land, the new building and drainage arrangements, that the land is fit to be used as a market for the sale of meat, fish, butter, ghee, fruits, vegetable, and similar provisions."

On the 30th September 1886, the plaintiffs applied to the Commissioners of the Motihari Municipality for a license under s. 339 of the Act, and presented the certificate of the Chairman along with their application. On the 1st November 1886, at a meeting duly convened, the Commissioners refused a license on the grounds and for the reasons set forth in their resolution of that date, which was in these terms:—

"The petition of the Manager of the Motihari Indigo Concern for a license for the Goodri Bazar was put up before the Commissioners. The Chairman had no objection to grant the license applied for; but it was unanimously resolved by the Municipal Commissioners that the application for license should be rejected on the grounds that, this town being a small one, there is no necessity for granting a license for the use of the land as a market for the sale of provisions mentioned in s. 337, when there is a properly-constructed and well-managed market close to it: that there is no sufficient space in the market regarding which application has been made, and the consequence would be that on the hat days the place would become over-crowded, and the public roads would be used by the persons who would attend the market on hat days and that inconvenience would be caused to the people who pass by; that the Municipal Commissioners and the Municipal servants could not exercise proper and efficient control over the market in question; and that having regard to the fact that this town has of late year been subject to recurring epidemic of cholera, and to the remarks made by the Sanitary Commissioner on the occasion of his visits to this town on the 22nd February 1884 and 2nd February 1886 respectively, it is particularly desirable that the sale of perishable articles of food should be under the sole supervision of Municipal Commissioners and Municipal servants."

The plaintiffs appealed under s. 63 of the Act to the Commissioner of Patna against the resolution of the Commissioners refusing a license for their market; and, by an order passed on the 13th January 1887, the Commissioner declined to interfere, on the grounds that the granting of a license, even after a certificate of fitness for a market had been obtained from the Chairman, was optional with the Municipal Commissioners; that there was nothing in the resolution of the Commissioners which would authorize him to interfere under s. 63 of the Municipal Act; and that, therefore, he could not suspend the execution of that resolution.

On the 15th December 1886, the plaintiffs gave the Motihari Municipality notice of cause of action under s. 363 of the Act and on the 28th January 1887, filed their plaint. The plaintiffs alleged that the refusal of the Municipal Commissioners to grant them a license was arbitrary and without good and valid reasons. They charged the Commissioners with having mala fide exercised [332] the powers conferred on them to the injury and loss of the plaintiffs. They also alleged that the loss they had suffered, and would suffer, from such wrongful refusal of a license was over Rs. 1,200 a year; and assessed their total loss at Rs. 20,000. The plaintiffs prayed (1) for an order directing the Commissioners to grant a license to the plaintiffs and to pay compensation; (2) that the Court should grant a license in the event of the Commissioners failing to do so. In the alternative the plaintiffs prayed that the Court should award them compensation in the sum of Rs. 20,000 for the illegal and wrongful acts of the Commissioners.

The defendant Chairman denied mala fides, and urged that the action of the Commissioners in rejecting the plaintiffs' application for a license was valid, bona fide, legal, and fully justified, and that the Commissioners refused the license because the place was not one fit for a bazar. He denied the liability of the Commissioners to pay compensation, and questioned the correctness of the amount of the plaintiffs' income. He further contended that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to compel the Commissioners to grant a license; that where the statute did not give compensation, the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to grant compensation; and that no suit like the present one would lie.

On behalf of the plaintiffs it was contended that when the Chairman of the Municipality had granted a certificate under s. 340 under his own hands, the Commissioners were bound under s. 339 of the Act to grant a license to the plaintiffs.
The Subordinate Judge held that the Municipal Commissioners had a discretion under s. 339 to refuse a license for good and valid reasons, notwithstanding the certificate of fitness granted under s. 340 by the Chairman. He was of opinion that under s. 55 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, he could not issue any mandatory order against a body corporate and that s. 45 of the same Act was not applicable to the mofussil Courts; and accordingly held that he had no jurisdiction to compel the Commissioners to grant a license.

The Subordinate Judge found that Goodri Bazar was an ancient market. He also found that the Commissioners in refusing a license had acted legally and in proper exercise of their powers that the reasons assigned for their refusal were sufficient in law and fairly reasonable; and that there was no ground for imputing mala fides to them for such refusal. He also found that the plaintiffs had suffered loss of income from their market in consequence of such refusal, and was of opinion that the refusal of the license was an act done in the exercise of powers conferred by the Act within the meaning of s. 362, and that under ss. 362 and 363 the Court could award compensation. He thought that Rs. 500 a year for two years would be sufficient compensation for the plaintiffs. Accordingly, the Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 1,000 with costs on that amount, dismissing the plaintiff's claim for specific relief.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

The defendant also filed cross-objections against the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

Mr. Evans, Dr. Troyuchya Nath Mitter, and Baboo Prosunno Gopal Roy, for the appellants.

Mr. Phillips and Baboo Unmodo Prosad Banerjee, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Figot and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Champaran so far as it dismisses the suit which is brought by the plaintiffs in respect of the refusal by the Municipality of Motihari of a license for the use of certain lands in the occupation of the plaintiffs, as a market.

There is no doubt, and it has been so found, that this is an ancient market. There is no doubt that the powers possessed by the Municipality under Part X of Bengal Act III of 1884 have been so used as to put an end to that market to the profit of a market established by the Municipality under the authority of one of the sections of Part X of the Act; and the question before us is whether, under the provisions of Bengal Act III of 1884, power was conferred upon the Municipality of doing those acts destructive of the plaintiffs' property, and yet no remedy or no right was allowed by the Act to persons in the position of the plaintiffs in case of the Act being so used to the destruction of their property.

The sections which relate to this matter are ss. 337 to 340 inclusive, and perhaps one or two of the later sections of Part X. Section 337 gives the Commissioners power to "order that within such limits as they may fix, no land shall be used as a market for the sale of meat, fish, butter, ghee, fruits, vegetables, and similar provisions, otherwise than under a license to be granted by the Commissioners." Section 338 confers upon them the power, when they have passed such a prohibitory order as s. 337 provides, of granting such a license as is contemplated by s. 337.
Section 339 provides that the Commissioners may grant such a license year by year on the certificate of the Chairman. Section 340 provides that the Chairman shall grant such a certificate unless the land be defective for the purposes of a market in the respect specified in the section; and the second part of this section (340), which is that upon which the appellants rely, enacts that "the owners or lessees of all lands used as markets for the sale of provisions as aforesaid at the time of the extension of this part of the Municipality shall be entitled to receive a license for the current year without the certificate required by s. 339, but in subsequent years the license shall not be renewed without such certificate.

There is no doubt the plaintiffs were the owners or lessees of land used as a market at the time of the extension of this part of the Act to the Municipality of Motihari.

What the Municipality did was to start a market of their own and then refuse the plaintiffs a license, thereby shutting up their market; and with reference to that, one of the latter sections of this part may be referred to, that is, s. 344, which makes it an offence punishable by fine to permit land to be used as a market without a license under s. 338. It is contended that the later words of s. 340 may, and assuredly, if they may, they ought to, be read so as to save the property of the plaintiffs from the complete confiscation with which this public body, in exercise of the powers with which they have been vested, has visited them. If they cannot obtain a remedy in damages for the refusal to grant a license, they are wholly without any remedy at all. The Legislature in its wisdom having deliberately withdrawn from the Courts [335] in this country that power, which is possessed by the Courts of Justice at home, to compel corporations to do their duty, and to restrain them from doing that which it is not their province to do,—a power, which has been reserved to the High Court in its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction with respect to the presidency-town, but which has been withheld in respect of any of the Municipalities in the mofussil, the plaintiffs are wholly without remedy, unless we can give them damages for the conduct of the Municipality; but to do that, we must be satisfied that it was the duty of the Municipality under the provisions of the Act to issue the license which they have refused: for breach of such a duty they might perhaps (at least, that is plaintiffs' case), be liable in damages. There are no words in ss. 339 or 340 rendering it obligatory on the Municipality to issue a license, unless, in the words in s. 339 "and the Commissioners may grant such license year by year" the word "may" is to be read as "shall" or is to be read in some cases as "shall." That is the contention of the appellant; and the cases in which it is contended that "may" ought in that section to be read "shall" are cases in which land was actually being used as a market at the time of the extension of this part of the Act to the Municipalities. It is argued that as the owners of lands so used at such a time are declared entitled to receive a license for the current year without the certificate required by s. 339, but for subsequent years it is provided that the license shall not be renewed without such certificate, that that must mean that the license in subsequent years must also be renewed, provided the certificate is granted.

There are two difficulties in the way of adopting this construction. One, that the word "may" in s. 339 must, according to it, in the majority of cases be read as "may," but in exceptional cases as "shall." That is a serious difficulty; and the second difficulty is that the scope of the sentence at the close of s. 240, which it is suggested ought to be read as "provided that in subsequent years a license is to be issued in case a certificate is granted," seems not capable of bearing such a construction, and not to contemplate anything of the kind. We think that the effect of it is merely to relieve persons, using land as a market at the time the Act is made applicable, from the necessity in that year of obtaining a certificate; and the words "but in subsequent years the license shall not be renewed without such certificate, are merely words, as we read them, of caution to avoid the very unreasonable supposition that the one year's holding without a certificate involved the right to a license for subsequent years without a certificate. That they contemplate an enactment that such holders shall get a license for all subsequent years, if they please, without a certificate, we much regret we are unable to hold.

That being so, we must affirm the decision of the Court below and dismiss the appeal.

We think that it is most lamentable that Acts should be drawn, as they too often are, without that intelligent consideration of, or that anxious regard for, private rights, which ought to be the study of every Legislature that springs from English authority.

The cross-appeal must be allowed. As we have pointed out in our judgment in the plaintiffs' appeal, the Municipality was legally entitled to refuse the renewal of the license; the Subordinate Judge, with a very natural wish to do something for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs, gave them damages for that legal refusal. It is impossible that that order of the Subordinate Judge can be sustained. We therefore set it aside.

We are very glad to hear from the learned Counsel for the respondent that a license will be granted to the plaintiffs, and that the preposterous proceeding of which we have been studying the consequences will be so far corrected. Under the circumstances we shall give no costs either in the appeal or cross-appeal.

C. D. P.
Appeal dismissed and cross-objections allowed.

[337] VICE-ADmiralty JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson.

Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction—Procedure—Vice-Admiralty Regulation of 1832—Practice under Code of Civil Procedure.

In Vice-Admiralty cases, the effect of appearance, the mode of objecting to the jurisdiction, and the mode of questioning the validity of a pleading, are matters governed by a settled practice under the Code of Civil Procedure. The Privy Council rules issued under 2 & 3 Will. IV, c. 51, have no operation, except in case of suits in rem in which no appearance has been entered and other matters to which the Procedure Code cannot be applied.

The enactments and rules affecting the Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction reviewed and examined.

In the matter of the Ship "Champion" (1) referred to.

This was an action by the owner of an Arab barque, the Fez Rohnman, against the Fannie Skolfield, an American ship, to recover damages for injury to the former vessel occasioned by a collision at the Sandheads, which was alleged to be owing to the negligence of the Fannie Skolfield. The impugnant having entered an appearance set forth in his answer a plea as to the jurisdiction of the Court. The promoveent thereupon applied to have the paragraph objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court expunged from the answer on the ground that the impugnant did not enter appearance “under protest.”

Mr. T. A. Apcar, for the promoveent.—The present application is in the nature of a demurrer in replication, and is under Rule 5 (p. 7) of the Additional Rules for Vice-Admiralty Courts abroad of the 6th July 1859. The Vice-Admiralty practice is subject to the Rules of 1832 framed under 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 51. The impugnant has not appeared under protest, and therefore his objection should be expunged. [Rule 11 (p. 7) of the Rules of 1832.]

Mr. Garth, for the impugnant contra.—It has been decided that the Court follows its own practice. In the matter of the ship “Champion” (1); Letters Patent of 1865, s. 32; Belchambers’ Rules and Orders, Rules 62, 63, p. 88.

[338] Mr. Apcar in reply.—The case of the Champion (1) is no authority upon this particular point.

The following authorities were also referred to:—The Blakeney (2), The Vivar (3), Bardot v. The Augusta (4), In re Smith (5), Smoul & Ryan, pp. 29, 42; Charter of the Supreme Court, s. 26.

ORDER.

WILSON, J.—This is an application, under Rule 5 of the Additional Rule for Vice-Admiralty Courts abroad, issued by the Privy Council in addition to the Rules of 1832, under 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 51. The applicant, the promoveent, asks to have expunged a paragraph of the answer which objects to the jurisdiction of the Court, on the ground that the defendant, having appeared, absolutely and not under protest, is precluded from questioning the jurisdiction of the Court, and that the promoveent is, under the practice of the Court as a Court of Vice-Admiralty, entitled to have the paragraph expunged. Whether he is right in this contention depends upon what system of procedure governs the matter. If the procedure embodied in the Vice-Admiralty rules issued under 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 51, applies, the promoveent’s contention seems to be right; otherwise not.

It is unnecessary, therefore, to examine the several enactments and rules affecting the question. The Acts 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 51, empowered the King in Council to make rules to govern the practice of Vice-Admiralty Courts abroad. The rules relied upon in support of the present application were issued under that Act, and no doubt became binding upon those who then exercised the Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction now vested in this Court. And I believe the usual practice in the days of the Supreme Court was to exercise the Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction conferred by the commissions from time to time issued, rather than the Admiralty jurisdiction given by the Supreme Court Charter, just as this Court has followed a similar course.

The Acts 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104, under which the High Courts were founded, after providing for the transfer of the old jurisdiction, enacted. Section 11.—That amongst other things, Orders [339] in Council applicable to the Supreme Court or its Judges should apply to the High Court and its Judges, so far as might be consistent with the Act and the Letters Patent to be issued, and subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council. The first Charter gave to the High Court the jurisdiction, Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty, hitherto belonging to the Supreme Court or any Judge thereof. The second Charter, s. 32, continued this jurisdiction ; and in s. 37, enacted that the Court should have power by rule to regulate its procedure in Civil cases, including cases in its Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, with a proviso that the Court should be guided, as far as possible, by the Code of Civil Procedure, then Act VIII of 1859, an Act which did not apply

" proprio vigore to the High Court. Under this clause the Court, on the 4th April 1866, issued rules, of which several apply to Admiralty matters. Those material to the present case are two:

"62. The procedure in Civil cases which shall be brought before the Court in the exercise of its Admiralty, Vice-Admiralty, or Matrimonial jurisdiction shall be regulated, so far as the circumstances of the case will admit, by Act VIII of 1859 and Act XXIII of 1861."

"63. In cases in the exercise of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction, in which a ship, or a ship and cargo, have been or are to be proceeded against or arrested, or in which goods only have been or are to be proceeded against or arrested, either for the purpose of proceeding against the goods or the freight due thereon, or in which property shall have been or shall be arrested, and no party shall have appeared or shall appear at the return of the warrant, and in all other cases in the exercise of Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction in which the rules contained in Act VIII of 1859 are not applicable, the practice and procedure shall be regulated as nearly as possible by the rules and regulations made and ordained by order of his late Majesty King William the Fourth in Council in pursuance of the 2nd Will. IV, c. 51, and touching the practice to be observed in the several Courts of Vice-Admiralty in the Colonies, except so far as such rules may be inconsistent with the 24 and 25 Vict., c. 104, or of the said Letters Patent."

[340] The effect of those rules seems to me to have been to put an end to the operation in this Court of the Privy Council Rules, except in the cases in which they were expressly kept alive, that is to say, suits in rem in which there is no appearance, and other matters to which the Procedure Code cannot be applied. The Code of 1859 has been superseded by others which do apply in most matters

" proprio vigore to the High Court.

The matters now brought before me, the effect of appearance, the mode of objecting to the jurisdiction, the mode of questioning the validity in law of a pleading, are all governed by a settled practice under the Procedure Code. The result is that, in my opinion, the defendant is not precluded by his appearance from questioning the jurisdiction of the Court, but may do so in his pleading; and that this application is not in accordance with the practice of the Court.

The case of the Champion (1) before the Court of Appeal is not a direct authority upon the point now before me, for there were circumstances in that case which do not exist in this. But so far as it goes, I think it supports the view I take. I have further made enquiries, and I find the practice actually followed hitherto has been in accordance with this view.

It is said that in the present case the defendant in appearing has followed the forms of the Privy Council Rules. If any mistake of form has been made, it cannot alter the substance of things or affect the procedure of the Court.

This application must be dismissed with costs.

KISHORE CHAND BHAKAT AND OTHERS (Judgment-debtors) v. GISBORNE & CO. (Decree-purchasers) AND OTHERS (Decree-holders). [2nd December, 1889.]

Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 232—Transfer of portion of decree—Execution of decree by transferee of portion of decree.

No legislative prohibition exists to the transfer of a portion of a decree; and provided that the whole decree is executed, and the rights of all parties interested are cared for, there is no objection to the transferee being allowed to carry on the execution-proceedings.

[F., 19 M. 306 (307); R., 33 M. 80 (81) = 6 M.L.T. 242 and 294.]

The facts of this case were as follows:—On the 21st August 1885, Koyalsh Dobey and others obtained a decree against the present judgment-debtors, appellants. On the 6th of October 1885, the Dobey's assigned to the Gisbornes a twelve-anna share of the costs to which they were entitled by virtue of their decree. On the 15th September 1887, an application was made by the Gisbornes for execution of the whole decree. The Dobey's, who still retained a right to a four-anna share of the costs given by the decree of the 21st August 1885, were parties to that application. Notice of the application was duly served in conformity with the provisions of s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, and on the 11th November an order was made for placing the Gisbornes upon the record in the room of the Dobey's, the original judgment-creditors; and an order was also made on the same day for attachment of certain properties of the judgment-debtors, appellants. On the 3rd December a fresh order for attachment was made, the first order having become inoperative by reason of the non-payment of certain fee; and the 27th of December was fixed for settlement of the sale proclamation. On the 27th of December

* Appeal from Order, No. 251 of 1889, against the order of G. W. Place, Esq., Judge of Bankura, dated the 12th of July 1889, reversing the order of Baboo Taraprosunno Ghose, Munsif of Khatra, dated the 13th of July 1888.

(1) 24 W.R. 11.
(apparently in the presence of all parties) the sale proclamation was settled and directed to be issued; and the 20th February 1888 was the date fixed for the sale of the attached properties. On the 13th February the judgment-debtors put in certain objections. Some [342] of these objections were directed against the substitution of the Gisbornes upon the record as transferees of the decree; and other objections were against the execution of the decree by the Gisbornes. The 23rd February was fixed for the hearing of these objections; they were heard on the 23rd and subsequent days; and on the 13th July the Munsif made an order disallowing the Gisbornes’ application for execution of the decree upon the ground that the transfer by the original judgment-creditors to the Gisbornes was not a bona fide transfer. Against that order the Gisbornes appealed to the District Judge, and the District Judge held that no appeal lay to him. Gisbornes preferred a second appeal to the High Court, and that Court held that an appeal did lie to the District Judge, and directed him to hear the case on the merits. The District Judge accordingly heard the appeal on the merits, and found that, as a matter of fact, the transfer of the decree was a bona fide transfer.

From this decision the judgment-debtors appealed. The only material ground of appeal was that the assignees having, on their own allegation, purchased only a portion of the decree, the Court below should have held that they had no right to be substituted in the place of the decree-holders, and had no right to apply for execution of the decree.

Baboo Boddonath Dutt, for the appellants.

Mr. R. E. Twidale and Baboo Umakali Mookerjee, for the respondents.

The case of Seetaput Roy v. Ali Hossein (1) was referred to for the appellants.

The judgment of the Court (Norris and MacPherson, JJ.) was as follows. After stating the facts as above, their Lordships proceeded:—

JUDGMENT.

In second appeal before us two points have been urged, first, that there can be no transfer of a portion of a decree, and that the transferee of a portion of a decree is not in a position to carry on the execution proceedings. In support of this contention we are referred to the case of Seetaput Roy v. Ali Hossein (1), where Mr. Justice Mitter says at p. 12 of the report: “It is doubtful whether under s. 208, Act VIII of 1859,” which is the section [343] corresponding to s. 232 of the present Code, “they could be so added upon the record as co-decree-holders; s. 208 refers to the assignment of a whole decree, not of a portion of a decree. Therefore, as I have already observed, it is doubtful whether the Court had power to place the present special appellants as co-decree-holders on the record. But be that as it may, we think that there has been no proper application for executing the decree as far as the mesne profits are concerned.” We are of opinion that there exists no legislative prohibition against the transfer of a portion of decree, and that, if that is so, there can be no objection whatever to the transferee of a portion of a decree carrying on execution-proceedings, provided of course that the whole decree is executed, and that in the execution-proceedings, if any interest in the decree is left in the original judgment-creditors, their interests are provided for. No doubt, either upon an application for the substitution of the alleged transferee upon the record, or upon the application by such transferee to be allowed to execute the decree, the judgment-debtors have a right to be heard, and they have right to urge the existence of any equities subsisting between themselves and the judgment-creditors; and if the Court sees that allowing the transferee of a decree to execute it would place the judgment-debtors in a disadvantageous position, or would deprive them of any equities which exist between themselves and the judgment-creditors, such Court ought not to allow the transferee to execute the decree. But always supposing that the rights of all parties are cared for, there seems to us no objection to allowing execution of the decree.

The second point urged by the learned Vakeel for the appellant is upon a question of fact. He contends that the District Judge has not disposed of the question whether the transfer was, as a matter of fact, a bona fide one. We think, however, as I have already said, that the judgment of the District Judge upon this point shows that he has considered the whole evidence, and the conclusion to which he has come is that the transfer was, as a matter of fact, a bona fide one. There are no materials before us upon which we can interfere with this decision upon a question of fact. Both points raised in this appeal therefore fail. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

J. V. W. Appeal dismissed.

KHADIJAH KHANUM v. ABDOOL KURREEM SHERAJI. [20th December, 1889.]

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 155 (3)—Evidence in reply impeaching the credit of a witness.

In a suit by one K, claiming (inter alia) a share in a business as heiress of A, her father, the defendant pleading limitation, K, before the close of her case, put in evidence an entry in a Koran to show that she was born in 1279, and in the cross-examination of M, a witness for the defence put to him a letter purporting to have been written by A to M, supporting K's case. Upon M denying the genuineness of the Koran, and of certain words in the letter, it was proposed on behalf of K to give evidence, in reply showing that M had made statements to an attorney before the case inconsistent with his evidence, both as to the Koran and the letter.

 Held, that evidence might be given in reply as regards the Koran, but not as regards the letter; no substantive evidence having been given as to the latter before the close of the plaintiff's case.

Semble:—The expression "which is liable to be contradicted" in s. 155 (3) of the Evidence Act is equivalent to "which is relevant to the issue."

One Aga Mirza, who possessed (amongst other property) of a business carried on in a house called the kotee, retired in his old age after having transferred the business to his eldest son, Abdool Kurreem, but survived the transfer many years, and sometimes managed the business on behalf of Abdool Kurreem during the latter's absence. A few days before his death, Aga Mirza made a will by which he gave (amongst other legacies) one of Rs. 25,000 in favour of his daughter Khadijah Khanum, the plaintiff in this suit. The will purported to deal with a sum of Rs. 1,22,840, being the residue of his property after the transfer already referred to, and confirmed the said transfer.
Khadijah Khanum brought the present suit alleging that the transfer was a benami transaction and claimed (inter alia) a share in the business as an heiress of Aga Mirza under the Mahomedan Law. The claim of the plaintiff was opposed on various grounds, one of the most important being that it was barred by limitation, and the question of limitation again depended upon whether the plaintiff was born on the 4th of Ramzaan Hijree 1279 (23rd February 1863 A. D.), or on the 5th of Mohurrum 1275 (15th August 1858 A. D.), as alleged by Abdool Kurreem.

In the course of the plaintiff’s case she put in evidence an entry in a Koran purporting to have been made by Aga Mirza, in which there was a statement that the plaintiff was born in the year 1279.

After the plaintiff’s case had been closed, and in the course of the cross-examination of the witnesses for the defence, a letter (marked P. P.) was produced by the plaintiff purporting to have been written by Aga Mirza to one Mahmood, a friend of Aga’s announcing to him that Aga’s wife was with child. From the date of the letter, the child referred to must have been the plaintiff, as the case of both the parties was that the plaintiff was the youngest child of her father.

The letter was put to Abdool Kurreem who at first admitted that the whole of it was in the handwriting of Aga, but later on he said that the part referring to Aga’s wife being with child was an interpolation.

In the course of the plaintiff’s cross-examination of Mahmood, to whom the letter was supposed to have been written, and who denied that the part in question was in the handwriting of Aga Mirza, and who also denied that the entry in the Koran was genuine, Mr. Bonnerjee on behalf of the plaintiff proposed to give evidence that Mahmood had made statements to an attorney (who reduced them into writing), with regard both to the entry in the Koran and the letter from Aga Mirza to himself, inconsistent with those now made by him in the witness-box. The question, therefore, was how far the plaintiff, having then closed her case, was entitled to give rebutting evidence or evidence in reply in order to impeach Mahmood’s credit as a witness.

Mr. Bonnerjee contended that, under s. 155 (3) of the Evidence Act, he was entitled to do so. That section should be read with s. 153.

The expression, “which is liable to be contradicted,” is equivalent to “or which is relevant to the issue,” i.e., which goes to the merits of the case, and not merely shakes the credit of the witness. [Wilson, J.—The entry in the Koran is on a different footing. [346] The plaintiff gave substantive evidence on the point, but as to the letter no substantive evidence has been given. The letter was only produced in the course of the cross-examination of the defendant’s witnesses.] There is evidence to show that Aga Mirza wrote those words, and I wish to show that Mahmood’s evidence is valueless. [Wilson, J.—You wish to give evidence to show that the witness made a contradictory statement formerly with regard to the genuineness of the entry in the Koran, and the existence in the letter of the words in question.]

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Yes.

The Advocate-General (Sir G. C. Paul).—No rebutting evidence can be given after the close of the plaintiff’s case. The words “liable to be contradicted” should be interpreted with reference to the position of the party at the time when he tenders the evidence, and if at that time he has already closed his case, it is then too late for him to contradict it, and therefore the evidence sought to be contradicted is not liable to be contradicted within the meaning of the section. [He referred to Taylor on Evidence, 8th Ed., § 385.]

Mr. Bonnerjee, in reply.

Wilson, J. (after rising to consult his colleagues) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

I am inclined to think that in s. 155 (3) of the Evidence Act the words, "which is liable to be contradicted," mean "which is relevant to the issue." That being so, I think the safer course is to admit the evidence tendered so far as regards the Koran, for as to that book the plaintiff has given substantive evidence to show that the writing in it is that of Aga Mirza. The witness now to be contradicted has said it is not, and if his evidence can be impeached by showing that he has formerly made a statement inconsistent with his present one, there remains some evidence for the plaintiff relative to the issue.

But as to the letter P. P., that stands on a different footing. On this point the plaintiff has given no evidence, but has relied on what might be brought out from the defendant's witnesses, and they all say that the particular passage in question is not in Aga Mirza's handwriting, and the witness to be contradicted says [347] the same thing. If I am to allow him to be contradicted as proposed, this would be allowing the plaintiff, in reply, to give evidence which she might have given before she closed her case, or else it would be merely impeaching his credit, and this is immaterial, as even if he is impeached, there is no evidence on the plaintiff's side. I think, therefore, that this evidence cannot be admitted.

Mungniram Marwari and another (Defendants) v. Gursahai Nand (Plaintiff).

Liakut Hossein (Defendant) v. Gursahai Nand (Plaintiff).

Act XL of 1858, s. 3—Order granting certificate to act as guardian of minor—Obtaining a certificate—Majority Act (IX of 1875).

When a Court, to which application has been made under s. 3 of Act XL of 1858 for a certificate, has adjudged the applicant entitled to have one, he then substantially obtains it; although it may not be drawn up or issued at the time. Having obtained such an order, he has in substance complied with the terms of the Act; in the same way as, when a plaintiff has judgment that he shall have a decree in his suit, it may be said that he has then obtained his decree. Therefore, where a minor had been represented in a suit by a person who had obtained an order for a certificate under s. 3, but had not had it issued to him, the absence of a certificate was held to be not such an irregularity as entitled the minor, on coming of age, to have the proceedings set aside on the ground that he had not been properly represented.

Two appeals from two decrees (22nd February 1886) (1) of the High Court, reversing two decrees (31st March 1884) of the Subordinate Judge of Bghulpore.

The present respondent brought two suits severally against each of the present appellants, in respect of separate parts of an [348] estate which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against the plaintiff, now respondent, during his minority. The plaintiff’s ground of suit in each case was that in the suit so brought against him when a minor, which had resulted in the sale of several portions of the estate now sought to be recovered, he had not been represented by a properly-constituted guardian. He also alleged that the lands sold were debutter, or devoted to religious purposes, and were not liable to be attached in satisfaction of the decree against him.

The Subordinate Judge found that the suits had not been brought in due time, and dismissed both on the ground of limitation. On appeals preferred by the plaintiff to the High Court, both decrees were affirmed by the first judgment of the Court. But afterwards reviews having been admitted, both the original decrees were reversed by another Division Bench.

Hence these appeals, in both of which the principal question was whether or not the proceedings, which resulted in the sale complained of, were wholly ineffectual, on the ground of the defendant in the primary suit having been a minor unrepresented by a properly-constituted guardian. The appeals were not consolidated by any order, but both raising the same point were heard together.

The lands, attached in execution of the decree in the primary suit, originally belonged to the Mohunts, whom Gursahai Nand, the plaintiff in this suit, had succeeded. This property was said to have been granted to them in the last century, as “Sheottur,” meaning, according to the evidence, what is granted to Suniyassai Fakirs.

On the 22nd February 1873, the plaintiff’s predecessor Hurri Pershad described as Mohunt and proprietor of Math Bela Sheottur, mortgaged Mouzas Bela and Bichawan, with other land, to the first appellant Mungniram Marwari, as security for a loan of Rs. 4,000, and afterwards in March 1875 created a further charge upon it, as security for a further loan of Rs. 500 from the same lender. On the 28th September 1875, Hurri Pershad, by an instrument of that date, appointed Gursahai Nand to be his successors as Mohunt, and to take all his properties including these two mouzas.

[349] On the 24th November, 1875, Gossain Jitlal Nand petitioned the District Court, stating that Hurri Pershad had died, to grant him a certificate of guardianship of Gursahai, who was a minor, under Act XL of 1858. The order for a certificate was made on that date, but no certificate was ever issued.

(1) Sahai Nand v. Mungniram Marwari, 12 C. 542.
On the 24th March 1876, Mungniram Marwari instituted a suit, called the primary suit in this appeal, to enforce his mortgages, describing Gursahai Nand as a minor, also as "heir and disciple of Hurri Pershad deceased under the guardianship of his uncle Jitlal Nand;" and on the latter summons was served; but he did not appear to defend.

On the 16th January 1877, an ex parte decree was made in favour of Mungniram, ordering the sale of the property mortgaged. Under this, at a judicial sale, Mungniram himself purchased Mouza Bela: and Syed Liakut Hossein, the defendant in the other suit, purchased Mouza Bichwa.

On the 18th August 1882, Gursahai brought the two suits out of which this appeal arose. In one he sued Mungniram Marwari in respect of Mouza Bela, and in the other he sued Syed Liakut Hossein in respect of Mouza Bichwa. The case made out by his plaints was that he, as heir and successor to Hurri Pershad, was entitled to hold the property in dispute as debutter, or property dedicated to sacred and charitable purposes; that it could not have been lawfully seized in execution of a decree against Hurri Pershad upon the bonds of 1873 and 1875; and that the decree of 16th January 1877, obtained against himself, was invalid and ineffectual, inasmuch as he was not properly represented by any guardian in that suit.

The defendants by their written statements denied that the property in dispute was debutter, and asserted that it was property which Hurri Pershad could have disposed of at pleasure, and which was liable to be taken in execution for his debts. They alleged that the plaintiff was properly represented by Jitlal Nand as his guardian in the primary suit; also that he was twenty-five years of age, and not twenty-one as he stated, and that his suit, being in effect to set aside a decree made against him when a minor, was barred by limitation.

The suits having been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge upon this last ground of defence, and the plaintiff having appealed in both, the only point with which the High Court (Tottenham and Agnew, JJ.) dealt was whether the plaintiff had been properly represented in the primary suit. After quoting s. 3 of Act XL of 1858, they proceeded thus:

"It has been frequently decided that a person who claims to have charge of property in trust for a minor, cannot act for him in a suit unless he has been appointed guardian ad litem under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, or holds a certificate under Act XL of 1858, except where the property is small and the person claiming to act is a relative, when the Court may grant permission. In all the cases to which we have referred, with the exception of Aukhl Chunder v. Trijooa Soondweree (1), and Chunee Mul Johary v. Brojo Nath Roy Chowdhry (2), the person who claimed to act had not taken any steps to obtain a certificate or to be appointed guardian ad litem. In the first of these cases, the fact that the formal order granting permission to a relative to act, had not been drawn up, was held not to be a sufficient ground for dismissing a suit on appeal, when the minor had obtained a decree in the lower Court. In the second case it was held, that the making of an order appointing a guardian under Act XL of 1858, and not the subsequent taking out of the certificate, is that by which a

guardian of the person or property of a minor is appointed within the meaning of s. 3 of the Majority Act. There is not, so far as we are aware, any authority for holding that a person who has applied for a certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858, and who has been appointed guardian by the Court, can, as of right, sue or defend on behalf of the minor without taking out a certificate. But the absence of a certificate is not, we think, such an irregularity as to entitle the minor, on coming of age, to have the proceedings set aside on the ground that he was not properly represented. The appointment of a guardian is a matter of procedure, Fuyikuth Ithayi Umah v. Khairhirapokil Mamod (1), and if in reality the minor was represented with the approval of the Court throughout the proceedings by a fit and proper person, it would be a great hardship to allow a defect in procedure of a purely formal character to vitiate the whole of the proceedings, possibly after many years had elapsed. In this case we think that the circumstances are such as to preclude the defendant from obtaining relief on the ground that he was not properly represented, because Jitlal had not taken out the formal certificate of guardianship, to which he was entitled by the order of Court. It appears that before the order for the certificate was made, Jitlal had acted for the plaintiff as his guardian. He applied to the proper Court for a certificate, and his application was only granted after opposition, and he acted for the plaintiff not only in Mungniram's suit, but in suits by other creditors, and in proceedings taken by certain chelas to establish title to the [351] office of Mohunt. The plaintiff, after he attained majority, presented a petition in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, in which he stated that Jitlal had obtained a certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858, and had been managing his estate, and, on the 6th of July 1881, he was examined as a witness, and stated that Jitlal had been his guardian and used to do all his business. It is too late now for the plaintiff to come forward and ask for relief upon the ground that Jitlal was not his guardian. He has ratified Jitlal's acts in other respects, and must be bound by them in the present matter.

The Judges accordingly dismissed both appeals with costs.

This judgment was, on review, reversed by another Bench (Tottenham and Norris, J.) (2), who, seeing that a certificate under Act XL of 1858 was one of the documents mentioned in schedule II of the Court Fees Act VII of 1870, held that such a certificate "cannot actually come into existence until the person, who has the permission of the Court to obtain it, deposits the requisite amount of stamp duty." Without the certificate Jitlal Nand, in their opinion, had no authority to appear in the proceedings. They set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in both suits; whereupon the plaintiff appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

On these appeals,

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant Mungniram, argued that the respondent, the defendant in the primary suit, had been properly represented by Jitlal Nand as his guardian, and that the proceedings in that suit had rendered effectual the sale in execution of decree. Mouza Bela having been sold at that sale to the appellant, he had become the bona fide purchaser. If the respondent was a minor when the primary suit was brought, Jitlal Nand was his guardian, having obtained a judgment and order of the District Court that the certificate under Act XL of 1858, s. 3, should issue to him. Although Jitlal Nand had not obtained

(2) Sahai Nand v. Mungniram Marwari, 12 C. 342.
the formal certificate, that was not now ground for invalidating the decree obtained against Gursahai Nand, as represented by the former his guardian, on the 16th January 1877, ordering the sale of the property, Also, there had been a correct finding by the Subordinate Judge that Gursahai was more than 18 years old at the death of Hurri Pershad, which [352] occurred in 1875, so that the present suits, which were in effect to set aside a decree made against him during minority, were not brought in due time, not having been brought till August 1882. Although by the Majority Act IX of 1875, a minor, of whom a guardian had been appointed, attained his majority at the age of twenty-one years, and not before, the suits were barred under s. 7 of Act XV of 1877, the Limitation Act, and the 12th and 13th articles of schedule II. The first judgment of the High Court, correct throughout, had found that the respondent, after attaining full age, had accepted and ratified the acts of Jitlal done in the capacity of guardian.

Reference was made to Stephen v. Stephen (1); Chunee Mul Johary
v. Brojonath Roy Chowdhry (2); Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi (3).

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant: Syed Liakut Hossein, argued that the first judgment of the High Court, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, was correct. The minor had been properly represented in the suit against him in 1877. It was also too late for him to have the sale set aside on the ground that Jitlal Nand was not his guardian.
The judgment of the High Court upon the review was erroneous, for the mere fact that the certificate which had been duly ordered had not been taken out, did not leave Jitlal Nand without authority to represent the minor. He referred to Grischchunder Chowdery v. Abdul Selim (4) approving the ruling in Chunee Mul Johary v. Brojonath Roy Chowdhry (2).

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. W. H. Rattigan, for the respondent, argued that he not having been represented by a duly authorized guardian in the primary suit, the decree of 16th January 1877 and the sale in execution of it were inoperative against him.

[Sir B. Peacock inquired if the certificate was anything more than the statement or record of what the Judge had already ordered.]

[363] The certificate had not been issued, and no form of it was on the record; but it was submitted that the actual production of a document was necessary. There was no necessity for the respondent to sue to set the decree of 1877 aside. He was entitled to treat it as if it had not been made, not having been duly represented by a guardian to whom a certificate under Act XL of 1858 had been issued.

Reference was made to Civil Procedure Code, s. 443: Act XL of 1858, s. 3; The Bombay Minors Act XX of 1864; Act VII of 1870, sch. I, art. 10. [Sir B. Peacock observed that the Court Fees Act of 1870, having been later in date, could not be of any use in construing Act XL of 1858.]

Though the order granting a certificate might be sufficient to constitute a guardian for other purposes, yet he could not sue or be sued, with effect binding upon the minor, without having had a formal certificate issued to him. Stephen v. Stephen (1) was not applicable.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered on July 20th by Sir R. Couch.—In this case the plaintiff, the present Mohunt of a Muth called Bela Sheottur, seeks to obtain possession of certain properties, and for a declaration that the decree and auction sale under which the defendants in the two suits became the purchasers of the properties are not binding upon him, as he was a minor, and was not properly represented in the suit in which the decree was obtained. He is the successor in the [384] Mohunstship of one Hurri Pershad Nand, who, in the years 1873 and 1875, borrowed money of the defendant in one of the suits, Mungniram Marwari, and executed mortgages of the properties which are now claimed by the plaintiff. Hurri Pershad, on the 28th September 1875, appointed the plaintiff to be his successor (the terms of the appointment will be referred to), and died on the following day. On the 24th of November 1872 Jitlal Nand, the brother of Hurri Pershad, applied to the District Judge of Bhagulpore for a certificate of guardianship of the person and property of the plaintiff under Act XL of 1858, and on the 19th of February 1876 the application was allowed, after opposition on the part of one Somar Nand. The terms of the application and of the allowance are these: The application stated that Hurri Pershad had in his lifetime given the guddi of Mohunstship to Mohunt Gursahai Nand, the present plaintiff, his youngest disciple, of about 13 years of age; and, after stating the vesting in possession of the Muth and other properties, it said that it was necessary, in order to take care of the person of the minor and look after all the cases and manage the properties, that the petitioner, that is, Jitlal Nand, should obtain a certificate under Act XL of 1858; and it prayed for a certificate. The order of the District Judge, after stating the application, and that it had been objected to by a disciple, a chela, who claimed to have succeeded Hurri Pershad, and that the certificate of guardianship would be only as regards the personal property of the minor, “whatever that property may be at present,” said “Order; application allowed.”

On the 7th November 1876 Mungniram, the defendant in one of the suits, instituted a suit on his mortgage bonds against the plaintiff, and in the plaint he described the present plaintiff as “minor, disciple and heir of Mohunt Hurri Pershad Nand, deceased, under the guardianship of his uncle Jitlal Nand.” In this suit a summons was served on Jitlal Nand personally, but he did not appear, and made no defence to the suit; and, on the 16th January 1877, Mungniram obtained an ex parte decree declaring his lien upon the mortgaged property and directing it to be sold. In execution of that decree Mungniram caused the property to be attached, and it was put up for sale by auction; and Mungniram became the purchaser of Bela Sheottur, part of the property taken [385] in execution, and the defendant in the other suit, Liakut Hossein, purchased Mouza Bichwa, the other part.

On the 18th August 1882, the plaintiff instituted the present suits, alleging that he attained his majority in January 1880. The first question to be considered is whether he was properly represented in the suit by Mangniram by his guardian Jitlal; and that depends on the construction of Act XL of 1858. That Act in the third section says:—"Every person who shall claim a right to have charge of property in trust for a minor under a will or deed, or by reason of nearness of kin, or otherwise, may apply to the Civil Court for a certificate of administration; and no person shall be entitled to institute or defend any suit connected with the estate of which he claims the charge until he shall have obtained such certificate." The question is, what is the meaning of the words "until he shall have obtained such certificate?" Although the order was made allowing the application for the certificate, no formal certificate appears to have ever been prepared by the officer of the Court, and issued to Jitlal Nand. The Subordinate Judge found that although Jitlal Nand did not take out the certificate he was the constituted guardian of the plaintiff, but that he did not properly look after the interests of the plaintiff, and did not defend the suit. On that account he held that the decree in the suit was not binding upon the plaintiff, but he thought that the suit was barred by the law of limitation, and decided the case upon that ground.

Then it came by appeal to the High Court. That Court, after noticing some cases which had been quoted, said: "There is not, so far as we are aware, any authority for holding that a person who has applied for a certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858, and who has been appointed guardian by the Court, can, as of right, sue or defend on behalf of the minor without taking out a certificate," and they went on to state what is material as showing the nature of the case, that Jitlal Nand had acted for the plaintiff, not only in this suit by Mangniram, but that he acted in suits by other creditors, and in proceedings taken by certain of the chelas to establish title to the office of the Mohunt; and further, that after the plaintiff attained his majority, he presented a petition to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, in which he stated that Jitlal had obtained a certificate of guardianship under the Act, "and had been managing his estate; and on the 6th of July 1881 he (the plaintiffs) was examined as a witness, and stated that Jitlal had been his guardian, and used to do all his business." So that it appears that Jitlal had, at all events, although the certificate had not been issued, acted as the guardian of the plaintiff. The High Court then decided against the plaintiff, dismissing the appeal with costs. However, they entertained a petition for review, and, upon that petition, came to the conclusion that they had not put the right construction upon the Act. The ground of this conclusion appears to be that the Court Fees Act, which was passed in 1870, contains this provision: "Except in the Courts hereinbefore mentioned no document of any of the kinds specified as chargeable in the first or second schedule to this Act annexed shall be filed, exhibited, or recorded in any Court of Justice, or shall be received or furnished by any public officer, unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules;" and they considered, as they say, that the certificate could not actually come into existence "until the person who has the permission of the Court to obtain it, deposits the requisite amount of stamp duty." They reversed their previous judgment, and held that the plaintiff ought. to have a decree for possession and for mesne profits, on the ground that he had not been properly represented by Jimal in the suit.

Now the words are "until he shall have obtained such certificate." The section provides that the person who claims a right to have charge of the property may apply to the Civil Court for a certificate. The Court is to exercise a discretion, or at least is to inquire whether the person making the application is entitled to have the certificate. Their Lordships are of opinion that when the Court makes that enquiry, and comes to a decision that the application should be allowed, that is doing all that is substantially necessary in the matter; and when the order is made that the applicant shall have his certificate, the applicant really then obtains his certificate. All is done at that time which is necessary to show that he is the person who should have the certificate. He then, by getting that order, substantially obtains the certificate [357] although the officer of the Court, whose duty it would be to draw up the certificate, and prepare it for the signature of the Judge, or the seal of the Court to be attached to it, may not do that for some time afterwards, on account of the course of business, or the party not applying to him for it. When a man obtains an order for a certificate he does in substance comply with the terms of this Act, in the same way as when a person has the judgment of the Court that he shall have a decree in his suit it may be said that he then obtains his decree. The decrees, when it is drawn up afterwards, relates back to that time; and so would the certificate in this case relate back; and the terms of the Act that he shall have obtained such certificate are complied with.

The High Court give as a reason, as has been stated, that the Court Fees Act, which was passed twelve years after the Act of 1858 shows that obtaining the certificate is not complete until the fee is paid, and the certificate is actually issued. The answer to this is that it must be seen what was the intention of the Legislature when the Act of 1858 was passed, and when there was apparently no such provision as this in existence requiring the Court-fee to be paid before the certificate was issued. If the meaning of the Act in 1858 was that the obtaining the certificate was complied with by obtaining the order, any subsequent provision in the Court Fees Act could not make any difference in the intention of the Legislature. Their Lordships have to see what the intention was, and what was meant by these words when the Act was passed in 1858. Therefore they have come to the conclusion that the Act was sufficiently complied with by Jimal obtaining the order from the Judge, although the certificate was never actually afterwards drawn up. What means there might be under the Court Fees Act to oblige the person who had obtained such an order to take out the certificate it is not necessary now to consider. Probably, if there is not power now to oblige the fee to be paid, it would be for the Legislature to make a provision for it.

The plaintiff being thus properly represented in the suit, the other question which arises, and which has to be determined before considering any other matters or questions which arise in the case is, when did the plaintiff attain his majority? It is not disputed by his learned Counsel that the present suits are suits [358] in the nature of one to set aside a decree, and that such a suit must be brought, according to the law of limitation, within one year from the making of the decree, if the party at that time is of full age; but if he is a minor, then within one year of his attaining majority. The plaint in this suit was filed on the 18th of August 1882, and the question is whether the plaintiff had attained his majority.
more than one year before that time. That depends upon the date of his birth; and the Subordinate Judge who had that question to try upon the second issue, find this. He says: "With regard to the second issue, the plaintiff states in the plaint that he was born in December 1861, and that he attained majority in January 1880, that is, when he completed his age of 18 years. On the other hand, the defendants contend that he was 25 when he brought the suits. The plaintiff was examined as a witness in another case on the 6th July 1881, when he had no idea of bringing these suits, and he then stated his age to be 24 years, and distinctly said that he was a minor up to 1879, that is, until he completed the age of 21. In the present case he has not ventured to come into the box and explain away his previous statement. He was sedulously kept himself out of Court and though in the course of the trial the Court remarked that it would be satisfactory if the plaintiff himself was examined his legal advisers have not thought proper to examine him." The statement which is referred to is a deposition which he made on the 6th of July 1881 in some suit, the nature of which does not appear, and in that deposition there is this statement: "My name is Gursahai Nand, father's name Mohunt Hurri Pershad, age 24 years." Mr. Mayne has urged upon their Lordships that the heading of a deposition of this kind is not of much importance; that the settlement of the age by a witness is taken down in such a way that little weight ought to be attached to it. The answer to that seems to be that if the plaintiff made this statement without considering what his age was, or made it in a loose and informal manner, he might have come forward as a witness, or been produced as a witness by his legal advisers and explained it. He might have shown how it was that he came to allow his age to be put down at 24 years, when, according to his present case, he was some three or four years younger at that time, and would have been 19 or 20. The Subordinate Judge has properly attached considerable importance to that. He then goes on to say that he does not attach weight to the evidence which was given on the part of the plaintiff. Some of it, he says, and justly, is hearsay evidence, and he thinks that the evidence of the mother, and of the other persons who give any evidence on the subject, is not to be given credit to. The conclusion he came to was that the plaintiff was born in 1265 Fasli, and that he attained his majority when he completed 21 years of age, and more than a year before the suit was commenced. The difference between the 18 years and the 21 years has been adverted to in the course of the argument, and it has been said, and it may be with some justice, that the plaintiff may have supposed when he talked of majority that it was 18. This difference is explained by the operation of the Act of 1838; because when a minor is brought under the operation of that Act, which the plaintiff was by the certificate, the age of majority is altered from 18 to 21, and therefore it became necessary to show that the age of 21 years was attained.

Besides what the Subordinate Judge has referred to, some observations arise upon the evidence in this case with regard to the law of limitation. The hibanama throws some light upon the matter. That states: "I am Mohunt Gossain Hurri Pershad, inhabitant and proprietor of Mouza Muth Bela Sheottur, Pergunnah Bisthazari, lying within the jurisdiction of Station Sikundara, Sub-Division Jamui, Zillah Monghyr. Whereas life is uncertain, and out of old disciples no one is intelligent and clever enough to discharge and manage the zemindari, village, and Court affairs, and the affairs relating to my guddi of Mohuntship, for this reason I, of my own free will and accord in health of body and in a sound state of mind, have out of my disciples appointed a new disciple by name Gursahai Nand, who is competent to manage the zemindari, village, and Court affairs, as the holder of the estate to be left, and the guddi of Mohuntship, and successor to my dignity and possession, in order that after my decease he shall take possession of my guddi of Mohuntship, and succeed to my dignity and possession, the moveable and immovable properties, and household furniture detailed below." Therefore according to the plaintiff's case we have Hurri Pershad saying that no one is [360] intelligent and clever enough out of his old disciples to discharge and manage the zemindari, and appointing a youth at that time only 13 years of age. It seems unlikely that Hurri Pershad, if the plaintiff was only of that age, would have used such language as this in the hibanama. He might do it if the plaintiff were just upon the point of attaining his majority of 18. Again, it is somewhat strange that Hurri Pershad, considering that he said not one of the old disciples was intelligent and clever enough to manage the zemindari, when he appointed a youth of 13, made no provision for the appointment of a guardian. There is no suggestion that the plaintiff was a minor. The terms of this hibanama appear to their Lordships not to be consistent with the case of the plaintiff although they may be consistent with the case of the defendants, that at that time the plaintiff was very nearly attaining the age of 18, when he would be of full age if no certificate of administration had been obtained, which it would not be necessary then to apply for.

Another fact against the plaintiff's case is this: that an application was made for the return of documents, which was presented by a pleader; and in that application the plaintiff is made to state, or states: it is made through his pleader, and we may use the expression "made to state." "I have attained my majority since 1880, and have been personally transacting my own affairs." Upon that application, after a report was made to the Judge by the Record-keeper, an order was made that the documents should be returned on the petitioner having attained his majority. The pleader who was employed to present the petition was examined as a witness, and he appears to have done what was quite right; to have asked to see the petitioner, and saw him; he says that the plaintiff on that occasion told him that he had attained majority. It is suggested that the plaintiff had then in his mind the age of 18, but it is not to be supposed that the pleader, who, no doubt was acquainted with the law, did not consider that the proper age to be attained was 21; and certainly a Judge, whose duty it was to see that the plaintiff was entitled to have back the documents, would have to consider whether it was true or not that he had attained his majority. That supports the conclusion to which the Subordinate Judge came when he decided the issue against the [361] plaintiff, and there is certainly no reason for their Lordships thinking that this conclusion is wrong.

That being so, it is not necessary to consider the other question which was raised by Mr. Mayne, whether, as regards Mungniram, he being the plaintiff in the original suit, and being shown by the evidence to have known the whole state of the property, that it was "debuttur" property, and that Hurri Pershad had no right to mortgage it, and knowing also that the suit which he brought to recover the money was undefended, and that Jitilal was grossly neglecting his duty in not defending it, and raising the question that the estate which had come to the plaintiff as the Mohunt, was not liable to satisfy Mungniram's debt the decree obtained Mungniram against the present plaintiff represented by Jital was not binding upon him by reason of the gross laches of Jital.

The result is that their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the decrees of the High Court made upon the review should be reversed, and both suits be dismissed with costs in the Subordinate Court and in the High Court, including the costs of the review. This conclusion was correctly arrived at by the Subordinate Judge and by the High Court upon the first hearing of the appeals, although not upon the same grounds as those upon which the judgment is now given. The appellants must respectively have their costs of these appeals.

STRANG, STEEL & Co. AND OTHERS (Defendants) v.

A. SCOTT & Co. (Plaintiffs). [31st January, 1st February and 1st August, 1889.]

Maritime law—Jettison—Right to general average contribution—Right of shippers of jettisoned cargo—Default of master—Right of shipowner—Remedies of shippers—Lien on cargo saved in consequence of jettison.

In jettison of part of a general cargo the right of those entitled to contribution, and the corresponding obligations of the contributors originating in the actual presence of a common danger, not in the causes of it, are mutually perfected whenever the goods of some of the shippers (not being wrong-doers, of those responsible for the latter) have been advisedly sacrificed, and the property of others has been thereby preserved. Such exceptions as that recognized where the average loss has been occasioned by the ship's being unseaworthy [Schloss v. Heriot (1)], and as that made in the refusal of contribution to shippers of deck-cargo when jettisoned, are in the truth but limitations on the above rule, which have been introduced from equitable considerations. Where a ship was stranded owing to the negligence of her master, and thereby ship and cargo were placed in a position of such danger as to make it necessary to jettison part of the cargo in order to save the remainder and the ship: Held that innocent owners of the jettisoned cargo were entitled to general average contribution; but that the owners of the ship were not entitled (their legal relations to the shippers not having been varied by contract. The rules of Maritime law as to the rights and remedies in a case of jettison are: (1st) each owner of jettisoned goods becomes a creditor of the ship and cargo saved; and (2nd) he has a direct claim against each of the owners of the ship and cargo, for a pro rata contribution towards his indemnity. Contribution can be recovered by the owner of jettisoned goods either by direct suit, or by enforcing, through the ship-master, who is his agent for this purpose, a lien on each parcel of goods saved, belonging to each separate consignee, for a due proportion of his claim.

(1) 14 C. B. (N.S.) 59.
Appeal by special leave (29th December 1887) from a decree (15th August 1887) of the Recorder of Rangoon in favour of the respondents.

The respondents sued the appellants for Rs. 1,592, money paid by the former to the latter, under protest, to obtain the delivery of goods ex Abington detained as subject to a lien, and for Rs. 200 damages for the detention. The plaintiffs were the consignees of the goods, which had been shipped on board the steamship Abington from London to Rangoon with a general cargo. The defendants were the agents at Rangoon of the shipowners, and it was on their demand that this money had been paid to them under protest, they detaining the consignment, as being subject to a lien in respect of a probable average claim, on account of the jettison of other cargo from on board the Abington when near the end of her voyage. The master was also joined as a defendant. The circumstances of the jettison are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The finding of fact by the Recorder was that the jettison took place in imminent danger to the ship and cargo occasioned by the negligence of the master. The recorder held that, as the danger was occasioned by this negligence, no claim for general average contribution could be enforced, and that consequently no right of lien had arisen. He was also of opinion that the defendants were not entitled to insist on having the assessment in their hands, so as for them to have control over it exclusively of the shippers. The claim was accordingly decreed.

On the present appeal,

Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q. C., and Mr. J. Gorell Barnes, Q. C., for the appellants, contended that the respondents were liable to contribute in respect of the cargo jettisoned, and the expenditure incurred. Therefore the appellants had rightly demanded the money, having, as agents of the owners of the ship, a lien on the respondent's goods for the amount of general average contribution payable by them. Although the jettison of part of the cargo was a consequence of the ship's having grounded through the master's negligence in navigation, the respondents were not relieved from their liability to contribute. The appellants were entitled, and also were bound, to assert a lien in respect of the general average contribution, the respondents' liability not being dependent upon any of the causes of the ships being in peril, but only on the fact that she was in peril, and that she, and the cargo, were saved as the result of the jettison. The negligence of the master or crew in the navigation did not deprive the owners of their right of lien on the cargo for general average contribution.

The owners were also exempted from liability in respect of the negligence of the master by the bills of landing, under which the respondents' goods were carried; and for this reason, as well as on the general principle, the negligence of the master did not deprive the owners of the ship of their right of lien on the cargo for sacrifices made for the common benefit. Moreover, the agents of the shipowners were entitled to demand a deposit of five per cent. on the value of the goods and to refuse to release them unless the deposit should be made. It was the duty of the master to collect the general average contributions before parting with the goods, and in such case he acted not merely as agent for the shippers but also as agent for the shippers. Whether the contribution was for the benefit of the ship or for the benefit of the shippers was immaterial, as in either case it was the master's duty to collect it. Reference was made to

Mr. Bigham, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Fitzgerald, for the respondents, argued that the judgment of the Court below was maintainable, on the ground that the stranding of the Abington had been occasioned by the negligence of the master. The right to general average contribution could not arise upon a jettison in that way rendered necessary; the master and owners being liable for the losses resulting from the master's wrongful acts and omissions. When the master jettisoned cargo, under circumstances such as caused this jettison, he was the agent of the shipowners, and not of the shippers; the loss must fall upon the owners, and the shippers [368] were exempted from the consequences: the jettison not being such a one as gave rise to a general average contribution. If the shippers were called upon, the sacrifice would not be for the general benefit of all concerned, but for the benefit of the shipowners, to avert from them the consequences of the wrongful act of their servant the master. This would be contrary to the principle, which was an equitable one, in which contribution took its origin. Reference was made to Parsons on the Law of Shipping, Vol. I, Chap. IX; Abbott on Shipping, Part 6, p. 499, Edn. of 1881. To show that if the jettison was a consequence of danger into which a ship had been brought by the master's negligence, the goods saved were under no liability in respect of the goods jettisoned. Reference was made to Parsons on Marine Insurance, Vol. II, p. 235; Parsons on the Law of Shipping, Vol. I, p. 211, and a case cited in the latter; in a note on deck cargo jettisoned from Ware's State of Marine Admiralty Decisions, p. 326, The Paragon. The contract evidenced by the bill of lading, and the exceptions in it, did not relate to the questions of general average. On the general questions raised in the appeal, they referred to Crooks v. Allen (2), Wright v. Marwood (9), The Norway (10), Hutch v. Lamport (11), Ashmole v. Wainwright (12), The Etrick (13).

JUDGMENT.

On a subsequent day (August 1st) their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD WATSON.—The steamship Abington, on her way from London to Rangoon, with a general cargo, ran aground on the Baragua Flats in the Gulf of Martaban. Part of the cargo was thrown overboard in order to lighten the vessel, which was got off by that means, and was enabled to reach her destination in safety on the 19th October 1886. On the day of her arrival in the port of Rangoon, the appellants, Strang, Steel & Co., local agents for the ship, intimated to the respondents. A Scott & Co., and other consignees of the cargo then on board, that a deposit of one per cent. upon the value of their goods would be required before delivery "against probable average claim;" and on the following day they made a further intimation that the amount of deposit required would be five per cent. A correspondence ensued, in the course of which the respondents made various tenders, all of which were declined; and on the 25th October, six days after the arrival of the Abington, they paid the required deposit, amounting to Rs. 1,592-11, under protest, and obtained delivery of their goods.

The respondents, on the 27th October 1886, instituted the present suit in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon for recovery of their deposit, and for damages on account of the detention of their goods, upon the allegation that they had before payment made a tender entitling them to delivery. Upon the same day on which their plaint was filed, the respondents applied to the Court under s. 492 of the Civil Code, for an injunction to restrain the appellants, Strang, Steel & Co., from remitting to England, or removing from the jurisdiction of the Court, the deposit paid to them on the 25th October. These appellants judicially undertook to retain the amount claimed in their own possession, subject to the orders of the Court, without the issue of a formal injunction, and no further proceedings have been taken in that application.

On the 5th February 1887, the respondents were allowed to add to their original ground of action an allegation, to the effect that they were not liable to contribute for general average on account of either ship or cargo, because the grounding of the Abington and the consequent jettison of part of the cargo, were due to the default, negligence, and misconduct of her master. Upon the pleadings thus amended, the case was twice tried before the Recorder, who ultimately, on the 15th August 1887, gave the respondents a decree for Rs. 1,592-11, and for Rs. 200, in name of damages, with costs of suit. The learned Judge found, as a matter of fact, that the stranding of the ship upon the Baragua Flats was occasioned by the negligent navigation of the master; and he held, as a matter of law, that no claim for general average arises to the owners of cargo jettisoned when the peril which necessitated jettison is induced by the fault of the ship. Whilst resting his decision upon that ground, the learned Judge indicated that, in his opinion, the respondents had made a tender entitling them to demand immediate delivery of their goods, before they paid the deposit to the appellants.

In the course of the argument upon this appeal, three separate points were raised and fully discussed. The appellants argued: (1) that innocent owners of cargo, sacrificed for the common good, are not disabled from recovering a general contribution by the circumstance that the necessity for the sacrifice was brought about by the ship-master's fault; (2) that inasmuch as the bills of lading for the cargo of the Abington specially excepted "any act, neglect, or default whatsoever of pilots, master, or crew in the management or navigation of the ship," the owners of cargo saved are not, so far as concerns any question of contribution, in a position to plead the fault of the master; and (3) that the respondents did not, before the 25th October 1886, make a sufficient legal tender. The parties were not agreed as to the facts upon which the second of these contentions is based; but there was no controversy as to the facts upon which the first and third of them depend. It was conceded by the appellants that the Abington was stranded through the negligence of her master; and, on the other hand, the respondents admitted that the effect of her stranding was to place both ship and cargo in a position of such imminent danger as to make it prudent and necessary to sacrifice part of the cargo in order to preserve the remainder of it and the ship. The question whether the respondents made a legal tender depends upon the construction of the correspondence which passed between the parties in October 1886.

The first question raised is one of general importance, and, so far as their Lordships are aware, has never been made matter of direct decision in this country. It may be convenient in dealing with it to consider, first of all, the rights and remedies which the owners of cargo thrown overboard have in a proper case of jettison. Some of the qualities of their right, and of the remedies by which it may be enforced, have been authoritatively defined. Each owner of jettisoned goods becomes a creditor of ship and cargo saved, and has a direct claim against each\[368\] of the owners of ship and cargo, for a pro rata contribution towards his indemnity, which he can enforce by a direct action. In Dobson v. Wilson (1) Lord Tenterden said: "If a shipper of goods, which are sacrificed for the salvation of the rest of the cargo, is entitled to receive a contribution from another shipper whose goods are saved, I know not how I can say that this may not be recovered by an action at law. This is a legal right, and must be accompanied with a legal remedy."

Again, it is settled law that, in the case of a general ship, the owner of goods sacrificed for the common benefit has a lien upon each parcel of goods salved belonging to a separate consignee for a due proportion of his individual claim. The cargo not being in his possession or subject to his control, his right of lien can only be enforced through the ship-master, whom the law of England, following the principles of the Lex Rhodia, regards as his agent for that purpose. The duty being imposed by law upon the master, he is answerable for its neglect. In the course of the argument, his liability in that respect was questioned upon the authority of certain dicta of Lord Eldon's Hallett v. Bousfield (2). The circumstances of that case were very special. One of a number of persons alleging a right to contribution applied for an injunction to restrain the master from delivering the cargo without taking security, the bulk of them having consented to his so doing. Lord Eldon expressed a doubt whether it was the right of every owner of part of the jettisoned cargo to compel the captain to call on every owner of cargo saved to give security; but he dismissed the application on the ground that there was no instance of such an equitable remedy having been granted. Courts of Equity are chary of granting injunctions which may lead to inconvenient results; and it does not follow from Hallett v. Bousfield (2), that a master might not be restrained from making delivery of the cargo, at the instance of all or most of those entitled to contribution, without taking security for their claims. But their Lordships see no reason to doubt that, assuming the applicants' claim for contribution in that case to have been well founded, he would have [369] had his remedy at law. In Crooks v. Allan (3) Lord Justice (then Mr. Justice) Lush held that a master or shipowner is bound to exercise the power he is invested with when a general loss has arisen, and to use the means in his power for adjusting the average claims and liabilities and securing their payment, and he accordingly ordained the defendants, who had neglected to perform that duty, to pay to the plaintiffs the whole amount of contribution to which they were entitled. The learned Lord

Justice observed at page 42 of the report that "the right to detain for contribution is derived from the Civil law, which also imposes on the master of the ship the duty of having the contribution settled and of collecting the amount, and the usage has always been substantially in accordance with that law, and has become part of the common law of England."

The rule of contribution in cases of jettison has its origin in the Maritime law of Rhodes, of which the text, as preserved by Paulus (Dig. L. 14, Tit. 2), is: "Si levanda navis gravis factus mercium factus est, omnium contributione sacrificatur, quod pro omnibus datum est." The principle of the rule has been the frequent subject of judicial comment. Lord Bramwell, in Wright v. Marwood (1), said that, to judge from the way in which contribution is claimed in England, "it would seem to arise from an implied contract inter se to contribute by those interested." The present Master of the Rolls, in Burton v. English (2), disputed that view, and stated his opinion to be that the right to contribution "does not arise from any contract at all, but from the old Rhodian laws, and has been incorporated into the law of England as the law of the ocean. It is not as a matter of contract, but in consequence of a common danger, when natural justice requires that all should contribute to indemnify for the loss of property which is sacrificed by one, in order that the whole adventure may be saved." Whether the rule ought to be regarded as matter of implied contract, or as a canon of positive law resting upon the dictates of natural justice, is a question which their Lordships do not consider it necessary to determine. The principle upon which contribution becomes due does not appear to them to differ from that upon which claims of recompense for salvage services are founded. But, in any aspect of it, the rule of contribution has its foundation in the plainest equity. In jettison, the rights of those entitled to contribution, and the corresponding obligations of the contributors, have their origin in the fact of a common danger which threatens to destroy the property of them all; and these rights and obligations are mutually perfected whenever the goods of some of the shippers have been advisedly sacrificed, and the property of the others has been thereby preserved.

There are two well-established exceptions to the rule of contribution for general average, which it is necessary to notice:—

When a person who would otherwise have been entitled to claim contribution has, by his own fault, occasioned the peril which immediately gave rise to the claim, it would be manifestly unjust to permit him to recover from those whose goods are saved, although they may be said, in a certain sense, to have benefited by the sacrifice of his property. In any question with them he is a wrong-doer, and, as such, under an obligation to use every means within his power to ward off or repair the natural consequences of his wrongful act. He cannot be permitted to claim either recompense for services rendered, or indemnity for losses sustained by him, in the endeavour to rescue property which was imperilled by his own tortious act, and which it was his duty to save. Schloss v. Heriot (3) is the leading English authority upon the point. In that case, which was an action by the shipowner against the owners of cargo for contribution in an average loss, a plea stated in defence, to the effect that the ship was unseaworthy at the commencement of the voyage, and that the average loss was occasioned by such unseaworthiness, was held to be a good answer to the claim by Erle, C. J., and Willes and Keating, JJ.

The second exception is in the case of deck cargo. The reason why relief by general contribution is denied to the owners of goods stowed on deck, when these are thrown overboard in order to save the cargo under hatches, is obvious. According to the rules of Maritime law, the placing of goods upon the deck of a sea-going ship is improper stowage, because they are hindrances to the safe navigation of the vessel; and their jettison is therefore regarded, \([371]\) in a question with the other shippers of cargo, as a justifiable riddance of encumbrances which ought never to have been there, and not as a sacrifice for the common safety. But the owner of deck goods jettisoned, though not entitled to general contribution, may nevertheless have a good claim for indemnity against the master and owners who received his goods for carriage upon deck; and the exception does not apply, either (1) in those cases where, according to the established custom of navigation, such cargoes are permitted, or (2) in any case where the other owners of cargo have consented that the goods jettisoned should be carried on the deck of the ship.

It appears from the proceedings in this suit that the average claims at the instance of cargo owners exceed $30,000, and that there is a small claim on account of the ship. The fault of the master being matter of admission, it seems clear, upon authority, that no contribution can be recovered by the owners of the Abington, unless the conditions ordinarily existing between parties standing in that relation have been varied by special contract between them and their shippers. But the negligent navigation of the master cannot, in the opinion of their Lordships, afford any pretext for depriving those shippers whose goods were jettisoned of their claim to a general contribution. They were not privy to the master's fault, and were under no duty, legal or moral to make a gratuitous sacrifice of their goods for the sake of others in order to avert the consequences of his fault. The Rhodian law, which in that respect is the law of England, bases the right of contribution not upon the causes of the danger to the ship and cargo, but upon its actual presence; and such exceptions as that recognized in Schloss v. Heriot (1) are in truth limitations on the rule, which have been introduced, from equitable considerations in the case of actual wrong-doers or of those who are legally responsible for them. The owners of goods thrown overboard having been innocent of exposing the Abington and her cargo to the sea peril which necessitated jettison, their equitable claim to be indemnified for the loss of their goods is just as strong as if the peril had been wholly due to the action of the winds and waves.

\([372]\) In support of the legal proposition which they induced the learned Recorder to accept, the respondents relied upon a passage which is to be found in the original text of Lord Tenterden's work on Shipping (Ed. 1881, p. 499). It is in these terms: "The goods must be thrown overboard for the sake of all, not because the ship is too heavily laden to prosecute an ordinary course through a tranquil sea, which would be the fault of those who had shipped or received the goods, but because at a moment of distress and danger their weight, or their presence, prevents the extraordinary exertions required for the general safety." It appears to their Lordships that if Lord Tenterden had really meant to lay down the rule, that there can be no contribution for jettison in the case of a ship overladen through the fault of those who received and put her cargo on board, he would have done so in plain terms. What he does say is, that there can be no proper jettison from an overladen ship, so long as ship and cargo are exposed to no peril whatever from the action of the sea, but are merely exposed to the inconvenience of being unable to reach their destination in the ordinary course of time.

The authority upon which respondents placed their chief reliance was that of Mr. Parsons, who, in his Treatise on the Law of Insurance, that "when a jettison is justified by the circumstances in which it takes place, and these circumstances are occasioned by the fault of the master, or his want of care or skill, the jettison would give no claim for contribution; but the owners of the ship would be liable to the owners of the goods jettisoned for the damages caused by the wrong-doing of the master."

In both works the proposition is laid down in precisely the same terms, and the same cases are referred to. These treatises are justly regarded as of great authority in questions of maritime law; but their Lordships are constrained to say that, in their opinion, the text above cited is inaccurate, in so far as it bears that no claim of contribution will arise to the owners of jettisoned cargo in this case supposed, and is unsupported by the decisions upon which it is founded, which, all of them, relate to one or other of the exceptions already noticed.

Upon the question of legal tender, their Lordships are unable [373] to concur in the opinion expressed by the learned Recorder. The correspondence which passed before the deposit was paid appears to them to show that both of the parties were exceedingly unaccommodating, and somewhat unreasonable, and that neither of them was altogether in the right.

Their Lordships, even if it had been desirable to decide the second point urged for the appellants, are not in a position to do so, because there is no proof and no admission to the effect that, as alleged by them in argument, all the bills of lading for goods shipped in the Abington contained the same exception with those produced, of the master's act, neglect, or default in navigating the ship. But this is not a suit for recovery of contribution; and the appellants, if it be necessary, will not be precluded from substantiating their averments in the adjustment of average claims.

The result is that their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgment appealed from, and to dismiss the respondents' action, with costs in the Court below. The respondents must also pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Banerjee.

KAMINI DASSEE (Plaintiff) v. CHANDRA PODE MIONDE and others (Defendants).* [20th August, 1889.]

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Obligation of brothers to maintain widow of a brother who predeceased their father whose property they have inherited.

The principle that an heir succeeding to property takes it for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor, and is, therefore, under a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was morally bound to support, has ample basis in the Hindu law of the Bengal School.

[374] It is immaterial whether the property so inherited is moveable or immoveable.

In each case it must be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, the means, and various other circumstances of the parties claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was, according to the principles of the Hindu law and to the usages and practice of the Hindu people, morally bound to maintain that party.

The above principle is applicable to the case of a widow claiming maintenance from her husband’s brothers who had inherited her father-in-law’s property, her own husband having predeceased his father.

Jang v. Nandram (1) followed.

Provided, therefore, that there is nothing to show that she was not a dependent member of her father-in-law’s family, within the meaning of the rule of Hindu law enjoining a moral obligation on a person to maintain such members of his family, such a widow was entitled to maintenance.

[F., 23 B. 608 (610); 29 C. 557=5 C.W.N. 549; R., 22 C. 410 (417); 27 C. 555 (553); 22 M. 305 (307).]

In this case the plaintiff, who was the widow of the brother of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, sued them for arrears of maintenance for nine months from Joist 1294 to Magh 1294 (May 1887 to January 1888) at the rate of Rs. 3 per month; and to set aside a compromise of a suit which she alleged had been fraudulently made on the 16th of August 1887, by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in collusion with defendant No. 3.

The plaint stated that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 consented, in accordance with the dying instruction of their father, to pay the plaintiff Rs. 3 per month as maintenance, and that three months’ allowance or Rs. 9, being unpaid, a suit was brought by her against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2; that in that suit the defendant No. 3 acted as her manager, and defendant No. 4 as her pleader, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, in collusion with the defendant No. 3, fraudulently and without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, filed a compromise to the effect that the plaintiff relinquished all her future claim to maintenance in consideration of receiving from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 Rs. 30 in full satisfaction thereof. The present suit was consequently brought to set aside that compromise and for maintenance.

The defence was that the compromise was made with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff and that she was bound thereby; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintenance as her husband admittedly died before his father.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 540 of 1889, against the decree of F. F. Handley, Esq., Judge of Nuddea, dated the 4th of March 1889, modifying the decree of Baboo Sharat Chunder Paul, Munsif of Ranaghat, dated 30th of July 1888.

(1) 11 A. 194.
The Munsif found that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had inherited ancestral property, and, on the authority of Savitribai v. Luxmibai (1) and Apaji Chintaman Devdhur v. Gangabai (2), gave the plaintiff a decree for the maintenance claimed, ordering also that the compromise should be set aside as fraudulently made.

The Judge confirmed the Munsif's decree as to the setting aside of the compromise, but held that the defendants were not bound to maintain the plaintiff, as they had not inherited any ancestral immoveable property. As to the maintenance therefore he reversed the decision of the Munsif.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.
Baboo Devendro Mohan Sen, for the appellant.
Dr. Troylokya Nath Mitter, for the respondents.

The arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment:

JUDGMENT.

Banerjee, J.—This was a suit by a Hindu widow against her husband's brothers for maintenance and for setting aside a compromise on the ground of fraud. The plaintiff alleged in her plaint that, in accordance with the directions of her father-in-law, her husband's brothers, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, agreed to give her maintenance at the rate of Rs. 3 a month; that three months' maintenance having fallen in arrear the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the same, and defendant No. 3 was her agent to look after, and defendant No. 4 her pleader appointed to conduct, that case; that defendants Nos. 1 and 2, in collusion with defendant No. 3, caused a petition of compromise to be filed in that case on behalf of the plaintiff without her knowledge and consent; and that the plaintiff accordingly brought the present suit to recover maintenance for nine months and to set aside the compromise. The defence of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (which is the only defence necessary to consider now) was to the effect that the compromise in question was not fraudulent, but had been duly entered into with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff, and that she thereby consented to take Rs. 30 in full satisfaction of her claim for maintenance; and that the plaintiff compromised the former suit as she was not entitled to claim maintenance from defendants, her husband having died in his father's lifetime.

Upon these pleadings the parties went to trial substantially upon two issues: (1) whether the compromise was fraudulent and liable to be set aside; and (2) whether the plaintiff can recover any maintenance, and, if so, at what rate.

The first Court found both the issues in favour of the plaintiff and gave her a decree. On appeal the lower appellate Court, while affirming the finding of the first Court that the compromise was fraudulent, dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover maintenance from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, as they had not inherited any immoveable property from their father.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiff that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, having inherited their father's property, were legally bound to maintain the plaintiff whom their father was morally bound to maintain, and that the lower appellate Court was wrong in holding that the obligation to maintain the plaintiff could arise only if the defendants inherited some immoveable property from their father. And certain dicta of Sir Barnes

(1) 2 B. 573, (2) 2 B. 632.
Peacock, C. J., and Norman, J., in the case of Khetramani Dassi v. Kasi Nath Das (1) and the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Janki v. Nandram (2) are relied upon in support of that contention.

In Khetramani's case (1) Sir Barnes Peacock observes: “The obligation of an heir to provide, out of the estate which descends to him, maintenance for certain persons whom the ancestor was legally or morally bound to maintain, is a legal as well as a moral obligation, for the estate is inherited subject to the obligation of providing such maintenance.” And the reason why what was only a moral obligation in the ancestor, becomes transformed into a legal obligation in the heir, is pointed out in the following passage in the same judgment: “The maintenance of a widow being a moral obligation on the late proprietor, the son who inherits takes the estate, nor for his own benefit, but for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor, and he ought to perform the obligation of maintaining the widow.” Norman, J., in the same case, observes: “There is a large class of cases where, according to Hindu [377] law, an heir succeeding to property takes it subject to the duty of maintaining those whom the late proprietor was bound to support.” And the case of Janki v. Nandram (2) is clearly in point.

The authorities referred to above clearly support the appellant’s contention. But Dr. Troylokya Nath Mitter, for the respondents, argues in the first place that the proposition enunciated by the learned Judges in Khetramani’s case (1) is merely an obiter dictum and is laid down in terms too broad and vague to admit of convenient practical application, and that the case of Janki v. Nandram (2) has reference to a different School of Hindu law; in the second place that, even if the appellant’s view of the law be correct, there is a finding in the judgment of the lower appellate Court which is sufficient for the disposal of the case; and, in the third place, that the evidence as to the value of the property inherited by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is so meagre that no definite rate of maintenance can be fixed upon that evidence, and that any remand in this case to ascertain the amount of maintenance would, therefore, be practically useless. These objections no doubt require consideration, and I shall examine them separately.

As to the first objection: no doubt the remark of the learned Judges in Khetramani’s case (1) is an obiter dictum; but the proposition laid down has ample basis in the Hindu law, especially of the Bengal School which governs this case.—See Dayabhaga, Chap. XI, s. VI, para. 13. It is quite true that in the practical application of the principle embodied in the dictum to any particular case it will have to be determined whether the party claiming maintenance from the heir is one whom the late proprietor was morally bound to maintain; and that it is difficult to lay down any general rule for the determination of this last-mentioned point. But that alone would be no reason for not accepting the principle in any case. In Janki v. Nandram (2) the Allahabad High Court held the principle applicable to the case of a widow claiming maintenance from her husband’s brother who had inherited her father-in-law’s property. That decision is based not upon any doctrine peculiar to the Mitakshara law but [378] upon the doctrine of spiritual benefit which is fully recognised in Bengal. Having regard to that principle of the Hindu law and to the usages of the Hindu people, I see no reason to dissent from the decision.

of the Allahabad High Court. Each particular case, no doubt, has to be determined upon its own merits; in each case it will have to be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, the means and various other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was, according to the principles of Hindu law and to the usages and practice of the Hindu people, morally bound to maintain that party. It is not necessary for me to lay down any general rule on the point in this case. All that I am called upon to decide is whether the plaintiff in this case is a person whom, having regard to the circumstances of this case, her late father-in-law was morally bound to maintain.

Now that point does not appear to have been seriously contested in this case. It is true that the issue raised upon the point, namely, the second issue in this case, "whether the plaintiff is entitled to any maintenance, and, if so, at what rate," is very general in its terms; but the objection that was really raised before the lower appellate Court was that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintenance, being only a deceased brother's widow, and there being no ancestral immovable property in the hands of the surviving brothers; and the lower appellate Court has allowed that objection holding that defendants were not shown to have inherited any immovable property. Now that view of the law is clearly wrong. It does not matter whether the property inherited is moveable or immovable.

As, however, the case will have to go back to the lower appellate Court to ascertain the amount of maintenance, I shall leave it open to that Court to determine if there was anything peculiar in the circumstances of this case to show that the plaintiff was not a dependent member of her father-in-law's family within the meaning of the rule of Hindu law enjoining a moral obligation on a person to maintain such members of his family. In deciding this point the lower appellate Court will, of course, attach due weight to the allegation of the plaintiff that it was her father-in-law's dying request to the defendants that they should support her, if that allegation is found to be true.

[379] In support of the second objection the learned Vakeel for the respondents refers to a passage of the learned Judge's judgment, where he says: "It is sufficient that they (defendants) have paid the amount of Rs. 9, &c." Now, if the learned Judge had found that, having regard to the value of the property inherited by the defendants, the payment of Rs. 9 by them to the plaintiff was a sufficient discharge of their obligation to maintain her, that would, no doubt, have disposed of the case. But that clearly cannot be the meaning of the learned Judge. For he finds in the first place that, owing to their not having inherited any immovable property, the defendants were under no legal obligation to maintain the plaintiff; and when, therefore, he says that it was sufficient that the defendants have paid Rs. 9, all that he means is that it was sufficient as a matter of generosity.

Then as regards the third objection: all that is said is, that the evidence as to the value of the property inherited is meagre. Of course if there had been no evidence adduced as to the value or nature of the property inherited by the defendants, though the question as to the amount of maintenance was raised in the second issue, perhaps a remand would have been unnecessary, and the suit would have been liable to be dismissed. But, as it is, there is some evidence on the record as to the extent of the property inherited, and it will be for the lower appellate Court to say what maintenance the plaintiff would be entitled to, having regard to the value of that property and to all the circumstances of the family. In dealing with this question the Court of Appeal below will have to take into consideration the allegation of the plaintiff (if it finds that allegation to be true), that maintenance, at the rate of Rs. 3 a month, was given to her by the defendants amicably for some months.

The case will, therefore, go back to the lower appellate Court to be disposed of in accordance with the directions contained in this judgment. Costs to abide the result.

[380] CIVIL RULE.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF KAMINI DASI (Claimant) v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Opposite Party).*

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), s. 22—Determination of amount of compensation—Assessors, non-appealance of—Claimant, non-appealance of—Pleaider, non-appealance of.

Where, in a compensation case before the Land Acquisition Court, neither of the assessors nor the pleader for the claimant appear on the day fixed for hearing the Judge should not proceed with the case in their absence by confirming the Collector’s award, but should give notice to the parties; and if they do not, within the time limited by s. 22 of the Land Acquisition Act, cause their assessors to attend or appoint others, the Court should appoint other assessors in the place of those who were not in attendance.

Compensation case under the Land Acquisition Act.

In this case the applicant for compensation was dissatisfied with the amount of compensation awarded to her by the Collector, who, as a consequence, referred the case to the Judge of the Land Acquisition Court.

The applicant nominated as her assessor Mr. Heysham, and the hearing of the case was fixed for the 24th February. On the 24th February neither the assessor for the Government nor the assessor for the applicant or her pleader appeared. The Judge thereupon sent the applicant’s agent, who was present in Court, for her pleader; but he being engaged in another Court at the time did not appear until 11.45 A.M., when he discovered that the Judge had confirmed the Collector’s award. At 2 P.M. the applicant’s pleader applied to have the case restored and re-heard. The Judge, however, refused the application.

The applicant thereupon applied to the High Court for a rule calling upon the Government to show cause why the case should not be restored and re-heard.

Baboo Annada Prosad Banerjee, appeared to show cause.
Baboo Boidonath Dutta in support of the rule.

* Civil Rule No. 553 of 1888, against the order of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 24th of February 1888.
ORDER.

The order of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—This is a rule which has been obtained for the purpose of reviewing a decision of the Additional Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, sitting for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of compensation to be paid for land which was required for public purposes.

This was a piece of land belonging to the applicant here which was to be taken for some public purpose. In the first place it came before the Collector. The Collector for some reason referred the matter to the Judge, and then the proceedings had to be regulated by the law on the subject. But before I notice the law, I may as well state what the rest of the facts were. After the matter was referred to the Judge, an assessor was, as the law required, appointed on behalf of the claimant, and an assessor was also appointed on behalf of the Collector, the Collector representing the public body which wished to acquire the land, and a day was fixed for the hearing of the matter. When that day arrived, neither the assessor for the claimant, nor the claimant himself, nor the assessor for the Government was present, and upon that state of things, the Judge, in the absence of every one, made an award giving the claimant the amount which the Collector had offered in the first instance; and he did that on this ground: that the claimant gave no evidence as to the value of the land, and that the only evidence that was before him was the evidence that the parties who wished to acquire the land were willing to give that amount. He said, under these circumstances, the only thing I can do is to make an award for the amount they are willing to give, because there is nothing before me to enable me to ascertain the real value. The question is, whether he was acting within his jurisdiction in doing that.

The sections which apply to the matter are the sections of the Land Acquisition Act contained in Part III of that Act. Section 18 says that the reference to the Judge shall contain certain particulars for his information; and s. 19 provides that, after the reference comes to the Judge, two qualified assessors shall be appointed, one to be nominated by the Collector, and the other by the persons interested, for the purpose of aiding the Judge in determining the amount of the compensation. That was done, an assessor was nominated on each side, and two qualified assessors were appointed for the purpose of ascertaining that amount. Then comes s. 22, which says that, as soon as the assessors have been appointed, the Judge and the assessors shall proceed to determine the amount of the compensation. So that the claimant had done all that it was his business to do. He had nominated an assessor, and there was no reason why he should be present if he did not choose. It was the duty of the Judge and the assessors to assess the amount to be awarded as compensation. The claimant did not think fit to attend, and he was at liberty to stay away; but that did not relieve the Judge and the assessors, as a body, from ascertaining the value of the land. Then s. 22 also provides what is to be done in case of any or both of the assessors neglecting to act. In that case the course to be followed by the Judge was to give notice to the parties and to appoint some one else in his or their place. But the Judge did not do that. What he did was to make an award himself without the assessors. There is nothing in the Act which enables him to make an award independently of the assessors, and, inasmuch as his powers are derived solely... from the Act itself, it seems to me that his award in this case was without jurisdiction altogether. He had not the assistance of the assessors, and without them he himself did not constitute a tribunal for the purpose of determining the amount of the compensation. Under these circumstances, we think that these proceedings were without jurisdiction, and this rule must be made absolute to set them aside. We make no order as to costs.

[383] CIVIL RULE.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), s. 22—Determination of amount of compensation—Assessor of claimant, Non-appearance of—"Neglect to act"—Appointment of another assessor by Judge without notice to claimant.

On the hearing of a reference in a Land Acquisition case to determine the amount of compensation to be awarded, the assessor duly nominated on behalf of the claimant was not present, owing to some misunderstanding as to the order of the Judge in an application by the claimant for an adjournment of the case made two days previously and the other side objecting to any adjournment, the Judge called upon the pleader for the claimant to nominate another assessor on the claimant's behalf, which the pleader declined to do as he had already duly nominated. The Judge thereupon himself nominated another assessor, and, proceeding with the case, confirmed the award of compensation by the Collector. Held, assuming that the absence of the claimant's assessor amounted to a neglect to act, the Judge had no power to appoint another without seven days' notice to the claimant, and that the proceedings were consequently irregular and not in accordance with the Land Acquisition Act, and must be set aside.

This case, in which the claimant was dissatisfied with the amount of compensation awarded by the Collector in respect of certain land forming part of an estate of which he had been appointed Receiver, was referred by the Collector to the Judge for the purpose of having the amount of compensation determined. The claimant, on receiving notice from the Court to that effect, duly stated the amount of his claim, and appointed an assessor on his behalf before the 19th January, the day named therefor in such notice, and, on the 17th of January, the claimant by his pleader made an application to adjourn the hearing of the case, on the grounds that one of his witnesses was at Shahabad and could not attend on the 19th, and that it was necessary to make search for and obtain inspection of papers in the office of the Calcutta Municipality, for which inspection, though applied [384] for, leave had not then been granted. On that application the pleader for the claimant understood the Judge to state that he would make an order adjourning the case to some other day, when the case came on on the 19th. The claimant, on being so informed by his pleader, told the Counsel whom he had retained to conduct his case before the Judge and also his assessor not to attend on the 19th, on which day the pleader mentioned his former application and asked the Judge to fix a day for the hearing of the reference; but the pleader on the other side, whose assessor and witnesses were present, objected to any adjournment of the case. The Judge then proceeded with the hearing, notwithstanding an objection of the pleader for the claimant, that he had no power to do so, and asked the said pleader to nominate some other person as assessor on behalf of the claimant, but the pleader declined to do this as such an assessor had been already duly nominated. The Judge thereupon himself nominated an assessor on behalf of the claimant, and, proceeding with the case confirmed the award of the Collector.

The claimant therefore applied on petition to the High Court for a rule to show cause why the proceedings of the Judge should not be set aside as being irregular and not in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Land Acquisition Act, and a rule to that effect was granted.

Baboo Anoda Prosad Banerjee appeared to show cause.

The Advocate-General (Sir G. C. Paul) and Baboo Dwarkanath Mookerjee, for the petitioner.

The judgment of the Court (WILSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The course which the proceedings in this case have taken is in many respects unfortunate, and it has led to very undesirable results. It appears that land was taken up for a public purpose and that some part of the land so taken up belonged to an estate of which the Official Receiver of this Court on its Original Side was appointed Receiver. The usual notices were issued, and particularly a notice issued calling upon that gentleman to put in his claim and to nominate his assessor, if he desired it, and be prepared to proceed with the hearing, all of which events were fixed for the 19th January of this year, the notice having been issued on the 22nd December.

Two days before the 19th January, that is to say, on the 17th, the pleader who represented the Receiver applied to the Judge, to whom a reference to assess compensation had been made, and asked for some reasonable postponement to a day later than the 19th, but he omitted to give notice of that application to the Government Pleader on the other side. We assume that what is stated to have been said by the Judge as his recollection of what passed on that occasion, viz., the 17th, is strictly accurate; that his memory is clear; and that he did not give the pleader to understand that his application would be granted if renewed on the 19th; and it is in accordance with that, that in the order sheet there is no entry under date the 17th. But it is equally clear that the pleader did understand, no doubt by mistake, the Judge to have given him reason to suppose that, when his application for the adjournment came on on the 19th, it would be granted. That is clear from two things: first, that he did not give notice to the assessor, whom he had appointed, to attend on the 19th; and, secondly, from the fact that the counsel whom he instructed was specially notified that he need not attend on the 19th. The matter came on on the 19th, and the application for an adjournment was renewed. In the first instance the pleader who represented the other side assented to an adjournment subject to payment of the costs of the day, and that arrangement would have been carried out, but the leader of that gentleman intervened and objected to any adjournment, and, on that, the Judge refused the adjournment. It is unfortunate that the case was thus forced on when one of the parties, having been misled, was placed at a disadvantage. Having refused the adjournment the Judge appears to have called upon the claimant's pleader to nominate an assessor. The claimant's pleader, as appears from his affidavit and the Receiver's affidavit, stated that he had already nominated a gentleman and could not nominate another. The Junior Government Pleader in his affidavit says he does not recollect this to have been mentioned; but inasmuch as we know it to have been a fact that an assessor had been appointed, and it would have been but natural to mention the fact, we think we must take \[386\] it that this statement was made. The claimant's pleader not having nominated another assessor, the Judge nominated one on his behalf, and proceeded then and there to inquire into the amount of the compensation. The claimant's pleader appears at that stage to have left the Court and the case was decided on the evidence of two witnesses called apparently by the Government Pleader. The result was that the assessors, one of whom was nominated in the way I have mentioned, on the evidence of these two witnesses, came to the conclusion that the offer made by the Collector was enough and more than enough, and the decision was accordingly given against the claimant.

Now it is obviously a very unfortunate thing that the case should have been decided in that way, that is to say, that by reason of a \textit{bona fide} mistake on the part of those who represented the claimant, the value to be awarded to him for his land should have been assessed \textit{ex parte} and substantially without any real trial. That is a result we should not allow to stand if we could, consistently with fair administration of the law and without straining it in any way, set it aside.

There is one defect in the proceedings which, as it goes to the very root of what took place, makes it our duty to intervene in this matter. There are two or three sections in the Land Acquisition Act which have to be referred to. Section 19 deals with notices and the other proceedings which are prescribed for bringing the parties together finally before the Judge. Section 20 says: "In case of failure to nominate either of such assessors within the time so specified, the Judge shall himself appoint an assessor in his stead." That clearly applies to a case where either party has made default in appointing an assessor. That is not the present case, because the claimant had nominated his assessor. Then s. 21 says: "As soon as the assessors have been appointed, the Judge and the assessors shall proceed to determine the amount of the compensation." Section 22 says: "If before such amount is determined, any of the assessors dies or desires to be discharged or refuses or neglects or becomes incapable to act, the party by whom he was appointed may appoint some other qualified person to act in his place." Then it says: In the case of an assessor appointed by either party, "if for the space \[387\] of seven days after notice from the Court for that purpose, the party who appointed such assessor fails to appoint another, the Judge shall appoint some other qualified person in his stead." The provision of these sections, which seems to apply to this case, is that, if any assessor, already appointed, neglects to act, the Judge shall, after seven days' notice, appoint another person in his place. Therefore, in the present case, assuming that the absence of the claimant's assessor amounted to a neglect to act, then after seven days' notice, not before, the Judge could have appointed an assessor in his place. A fresh assessor having been appointed on the day of hearing, without seven days’ notice to the claimant, which s. 22 contemplates, the proceeding was opposed to the terms of this section.

On this ground, we think, we are bound to set aside the proceedings from the date at which the parties came before the Judge on the 19th January, and to direct that from that period they be resumed and proceeded with in accordance with law.

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

Before Sir W. Coomer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Pigot.

O khoy Coomar Bonnerjee (Plaintiff) v. Koylash Chunder
Ghosal and others (Defendants).* [17th January, 1890.]

Small Cause Court, Presidency Towns, Jurisdiction of—Presidency Towns Small Cause Court Act (XV of 1882), s. 19—Suit for legacy—Equitable jurisdiction.

A suit to recover a legacy brought in the Small Cause Court, in which there is no allegation that the executors were in possession of sufficient assets to pay the legacy, or that they had ever assented to the payment of the legacy, is one for the administration of an estate and for an account: such a suit the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try.

The plaintiff, a legatee under the will of one Durgamony Dassee, dated the 28th February 1887, brought a suit in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, against the defendants, who were the executors under the said will, to obtain payment of a legacy of Rs. 300.

[388] Probate of the will was granted in January 1888. No assent by the executors to the payment of this legacy was alleged by the plaintiff. The learned Third Judge, Mr. Chatterjee, dismissed the suit, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, it being one for “an account of property and its due administration,” and that the suit could only be tried under s. 213 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which had not been, however, extended to the Small Cause Court. On an application for a new trial, the learned Judges, Mr. Sconce and Mr.
Chatterjee, differed in opinion on this point, and referred to the Court the question whether or no the suit was one “for an account of property and its due administration under a decree of the Court.”

Mr. Graham, for the defendants.—The plaint does not allege an assent to the legacy; if anything, it states a refusal to assent. The first plea is under s. 292 of the Succession Act; the second under s. 19 of the Small Cause Court Act. I admit that if assent has been given by the executor, there is jurisdiction; such an assent is an admission of assets; but where there is no assent, the suit must be for administration. Whatever the jurisdiction under the old Act of 1850 might have been, such jurisdiction is distinctly defined now; and the schedule to the present Act expressly repeals all that remains of the old Act.

* Small Cause Court Reference, No. 9 of 1889, made by G. C. Sconce, Esq., Chief Judge, and K. M. Chatterjee, Esq., Third Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, dated the 14th of August 1889.

REFERENCE.

17 C. 387.

But even assuming the old Act to have given an equitable jurisdiction in the case of legacies, still, even in Equity, there are only two ways of obtaining a legacy; one, where the executor has assented; the other by an administration suit. Here no assent has been alleged, and it must therefore be taken to be an administration suit, and, under s. 19 of the Small Cause Court Act, there is no jurisdiction to hear such a suit.

No one appeared for the plaintiff.

OPINION.

The opinion of the Court (Petheram, C.J., and Pigot, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C.J.—This is a reference from the Small Cause Court in a case in which two Judges of that Court have differed. The suit was a suit in which the plaintiff was in these words: “The plaintiff states that one Durgamony Dassee, late of so and so, duly made her last will, dated 28th August 1887, and codicil, dated 3rd December 1887 and thereto appointed the defendants [389] abovenamed executors, and by such will bequeathed to the plaintiff a legacy of Rs. 300; that probate of the said will was granted by the High Court on 13th January 1888; that the defendants had possessed themselves of the moveable properties of the deceased as also the proceeds of the moveable property, and had not paid the plaintiff his said legacy though demanded,” and the question which arose for consideration was whether the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to try that suit.

The jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, as given by s. 18 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act of 1882, is limited by s. 19 of the same Act; and s. 18 provides that, subject to the exceptions in s. 19, the Court shall have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature when the amount or value of the subject-matter does not exceed two thousand rupees; and one of the suits in s. 19 which the Court has not jurisdiction to try is “a suit for an account of property and its due administration under a decree of Court.”

This is a suit to recover a legacy, but it is to be noticed that in the plaint there is no assertion either that the defendants are in possession of sufficient assets to pay the legacy, or that they have ever assented to the legacy being paid to the plaintiff; and, so far as I know, no Court, either of Common Law or Equity, in a suit of a civil nature, has any jurisdiction to decree a legacy simply, unless the executors have assented to that particular legacy, or unless the whole matter of the estate is before them for administration.

In this case there is no allegation whatever that the defendants ever had assented to this legacy, and consequently, the only relief, supposing the facts stated in the plaint to be proved and those facts only, which the Court could give to the plaintiff, would be to decree administration of the estate, so that the accounts must be taken and the estate divided; and s. 19 says that a Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit.

For these reasons and for those stated by him in his judgment we agree with the opinion of the Officiating Third Judge of the Small Cause Court, and this reference will be returned to the Small Cause Court with this expression of our opinion.

Attorneys for defendants: Messrs. Bonnerjee & Chatterjee.

BENI MADHUB ROY (Claimant) v. JAOD ALI SIRCAR
AND ANOTHER (Decree-holders) AND ANOTHER (Judgment-debtor).*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 65, 170—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 287—Attachment of tenure in execution of decree for arrears of rent by a fractional co-sharer—Fractional co-sharer—Arrears of rent of separate share.

An attachment of a tenure or holding in execution of a decree obtained by a fractional co-sharer for arrears of rent of his separate share, is not such an attachment as is contemplated by s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[F., 19 C. 597; 26 C. 937 (942); 14 C.L.J. 620 (623)=10 Ind. Cas. 417; R., 29 C. 54 (58)=5 C.W.N. 763; 29 C. 219 (222); 1 C.L.J. 500 (507); 4 C.L.J. 68 (69)=10 C.W.N. 176; 5 C.L.J. 235=2 M.L.T. 135 (F.B.); 4 C.W.N. 508 (512); 8 C.W.N. 472; 9 C.W.N. 34; 14 Ind. Cas. 49 (50); D., 26 C. 677; 7 C.W.N. 908 (910).]

In both these cases a fractional sharer of a zamindari obtained a decree for his share of the rent of a tenure with the zamindari, and in execution of that decree attached the entire tenure; upon which a third party preferred a claim under s. 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure alleging that he had purchased the tenure; and this claim was allowed. Thereupon the decree-holder obtained a rule calling upon the claimant to show cause why the order allowing the claim should not be set aside on the ground that, by s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, s. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to the case of the attachment of a tenure in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due thereon.

On the hearing of these rules it was contended that the attachment of a tenure by a fractional co-sharer, in execution of a decree for his separate share of rent, was an attachment contemplated by s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and in support of this contention an unreported ruling of Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Banerjee, in Rule No. 603 of 1889, was relied on. On the other hand, two other unreported decisions of Division Benches of the Court, in the first of which Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J., in Rule No. 269 of 1888, although the point was not actually decided, appeared to take for granted that [391] a sale of a tenure at the instance of a fractional co-sharer was not such a sale as is contemplated by s. 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; the point which was directly decided in the rule being that the provisions of s. 174 of that Act were general in their character and not restricted to sales under s. 159. In the other case, viz., Rule 554 of 1888, decided by the same Bench, their Lordships held that the provisions of s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to a case in which a share of a tenure is attached by a co-sharer landlord in execution of a decree for his separate share of the rent, and contained an expression of opinion which appeared to conflict with the view taken in Rule No. 603 of 1889.

* Full Bench on Rules Nos. 1040 and 1112 of 1889 in the matter of claim case No. 973 of 1889, against the order of Baboo Moti Lal Holdar, First Munisif of Chowki Jehanabad, dated 13th April 1889.
Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Beverley, before whom this rule was heard, having regard to the above unreported decisions, and to their unwillingness to concur with the decision in Rule No. 693 of 1889, referred the question stated below to a Full Bench with the following remarks:

"It appears to us that Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be read in connection with s. 65 of that Act; the sale of tenures and holdings in execution of decrees for arrears of rent, with its incidents and consequences, as provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act, is a creation of the Act itself, and must be strictly regulated in accordance with its provisions. We do not say that tenures or shares in tenures may not be sold, like other property, in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. But if the sale is one under the Tenancy Act, and if it is to be accompanied by the incidents and conditions attached to it by the Act, then, we think, the Act must be strictly complied with. Now, by s. 188, when two or more persons are joint landlords, anything which the landlord is authorized to do under the Act must be done either by all of them or by an agent authorized to act for all. In order to effect a sale of a tenure, therefore, under Chapter XIV, with all the incidents attaching to it under the Act, we think that all the joint landlords must combine to bring the tenure to sale, and that a sale by one co-sharer alone (whether of the entire tenure or a portion of it only), cannot be treated as a sale under the Act, and that the provisions of the Act will not apply to such a sale or to the attachment in view thereof. The question therefore which we refer to [392] a Full Bench is this: Is an attachment of a tenure or holding, in execution of a decree obtained by a fractional co-sharer for arrears of the rent of his separate share such an attachment as is contemplated by s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act?"

Baboo Troylokanath Mitter (with him Baboo Jadub Chunder Seal), for the decree-holder, in support of the rule, cited the unreported decision in Rule No. 269 of 1888, and referred to the case of Prem Chand Nuskur v. Mokshoda Debi (1); and contended that, under s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, each sharer who was entitled to rent had a first charge therefor on the tenure; and that he was in the position of a landlord under s. 3, cl. (4), and was entitled to sell if his rent was in arrear.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, Baboo Shavoda Churn Mitter, and Baboo Umakali Mukerjee, for the claimant, were not called upon.

OPINION.

The opinion of the Full Bench (Ptheram. C.J., Prinsep, Pigot, O'Kinealy, and Ghose, J.J.) was delivered by Ptheram, C.J.—The question which has been referred to the Full Bench in these rules is: "Is an attachment of a tenure or holding, in execution of a decree obtained by a fractional co-sharer for arrears of the rent of his separate share, such an attachment as is contemplated by s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act?"

In our opinion the answer to that question must be in the negative. Section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act gives certain privileges to persons who have taken proceedings under that Act for the purpose of recovering their rents; and s. 188 says that, where several persons are joint landlords, and when anything under this Act is authorized to be done, they must all join in doing it. That shows, in our opinion, that, where landlords are seeking to take the benefit of this Act, they must act in concert and, where one of several co-sharers in a zamindari thinks fit to pursue his remedies to recover his share of the rent, he must pursue them under the ordinary law of the country, and independently of the Bengal Tenancy Act. For this reason, we answer this question in the negative. The result is that both Rules will be discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

17 C. 393.

[393] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Tottenham.

Beni Madhub Chuckerbutty (Defendant) v. Bhubun Mohun Biswas (Plaintiff). [8th January, 1890.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 180—"Utbundi" holding—Right of occupancy.

Case in which the question as to what is an utbundi tenure is discussed.

Where the plaintiff, who had been dispossessed from certain land, claimed a right of occupancy in such land on the ground that he had held it for twelve years continuously: Held, that if the land formed a separate holding which he had from time to time cultivated on the utbundi system during a period which had covered more than twelve years, cultivation at various times and under separate agreements on each occasion (such periods not being continuous although of the same piece of land), would not confer a right of occupancy on the ground that the first of such periods commenced more than twelve years before the alleged dispossess.

The plaintiff sued, on the 24th February 1887, to recover possession of a certain piece of land situated in the district of Chupra, from which he had been dispossessed by the defendant, who was the putnidar of the mehal, on the 26th January 1886, the plaintiff claiming to have a right of occupancy therein.

The plaintiff alleged that he had been a settled ryot in the village of Chupra, and had held lands under the utbundi system for sixty years, and that the particular land in dispute had been in his possession and cultivated by him under such system for forty years.

The defendant admitted the disputed land was let to, and held by, the plaintiff under the utbundi system, and that, whilst the defendant had cultivated the land, he had paid rent for it at utbundi rates; but he contended that the plaintiff had not held the land for twelve continuous years, because, during such period of twelve years, part of the land was potiti, and for such land no rent [394] was paid as long as it remained potiti. As against this contention the plaintiff stated that from the very nature of utbundi holdings, it was impossible for a tenant to cultivate the entirety of such holding for twelve continuous years; that he had, as understood by this system of cultivation, paid rent for the whole land during the time at which portions of the land were potiti, inasmuch as the utbundi rate of rent was a higher rate than was payable for other holdings, and that under that system the high rent payable for such lands as were actually cultivated was the reason for no actual rent being made payable for such part of the holding as might be potit; and that under that mode of cultivation he was entitled to a right of occupancy.

The Munsif found that the land was held and cultivated by the plaintiff for more than twelve years before the date on which he had been dispossessed before portions of the land became potit, and twelve years before the date on which the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force; and holding, in accordance with the case of Premanund Ghose v. Shoorendronath Roy (1), that the period during which portions of the land were potit ought to be included in the period of the plaintiff’s possession, gave him a decree for possession.

On appeal the District Judge stated the question for decision to be, whether possession of the land during the period portions of the land were potit was with the plaintiff or the defendant? As to this he found that the presumption was that the possession was continuous in the plaintiff, and held that the finding of the Munsif, that the plaintiff had obtained a right of occupancy, was correct.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Evans, Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, and Baboo Saroda Prosongo Roy, for the appellant.

The Advocate-General (Sir Chas. Paul) and Baboo Kali Churn Bauerjee, for the respondent.

Mr. Evans, for the appellant.—There are no direct decisions as to what the utbundi system is, but there are some, which are not however against me, but which amount to only expressions of [396] opinion on the subject of the different Judges who passed them: Kenny v. Issur Chunder Poddar (2), Mirzan Biswas v. Hills (3), Dwarkanath Misree v. Noboo Sircar (4), Premanund Ghose v. Shoorendronath Roy (1). These opinions are all obiter. There is, however, a report on this class of tenures drawn up by Mr. Cotton, which was before the Select Committee when the Rent Act was passed. The words “continuous years” in the Rent Act cannot be said to have the same meaning as “twelve years.” The plaintiff is not entitled to any occupancy rights. There are grave errors in the trial of this case which require remand. The finding that the holding of the plaintiff extended over twelve years continuously, and that he has therefore obtained a right of occupancy, is based on a misconception of an utbundi holding, and on an erroneous presumption that the plaintiff was in possession even in the years when he did not cultivate.

The Advocate-General (Sir Chas. Paul), for the respondent.—My case is that an utbundi holding is a definite tract of land, part of which may be cultivated and part not, but that rent at a higher rate is paid for such portion as is cultivated, to make up to the landlord for the loss of rent for that which is not paid for and not cultivated. Section 180 of the Tenancy Act merely enacts Mr. Justice Jackson’s statement of the law in Premanund Ghose v. Shoorendronath Roy (1). The plaintiff is entitled to an occupancy right in these lands in accordance with the utbundi system.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) was as follows:

(1) 20 W.R. 329.
(2) W.R. (1864), Act X, 9.
(3) 3 W.R. Act X, 159.
(4) 14 W.R, 193.
JUDGMENT.

This was a suit brought by a ryot to recover four bighas of land of which he had been dispossessed by his landlord, the putnidar, and in which he claimed a right of occupancy by virtue of more than twelve years' continuous holding.

It was the case of both parties that the land had been held under the utbundi system; and the landlord's defence included these two points: first, that the land in question was part of his khamar lands held from year to year, in which, by s. 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no right of occupancy can accrue; and [396] secondly, that, if the land was not khamar, the plaintiff, an utbundi ryot, had never held it for twelve years continuously, and therefore had not acquired in it any right of occupancy.

The first point is settled by the finding that the land is not khamar; and with that finding there is no ground for interference in a second appeal. As to the second point, the Court has found that the plaintiff's possession had extended over more than twelve years continuously, and that his right of occupancy had thus become perfect. But it is objected in appeal that this finding is based on a misconception as to the nature of an utbundi holding, and on an erroneous presumption that the plaintiff was in possession even in the years when he did not cultivate. It is clear that the lower Court has in fact so held, and otherwise it could not have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff had acquired a right of occupancy; for s. 180 of the Bengal Tenancy Act prohibits the acquisition of such right in land ordinarily let under the custom of utbundi, until that particular land has been held for twelve years continuously. In this respect utbundi land is dealt with in the Act differently from ordinary ryotti land, in which, by s. 21, a settled ryot has a right of occupancy no matter how short a time he has held possession of it.

Now it is necessary to enquire what this utbundi system really is: for there seems to have been some difference of opinion regarding it; and perhaps in fact the incidents of that system do vary in different places.

Several Judges who have sat in this Court have stated their own opinions on this subject, and their opinions have not been quite uniform. Perhaps our safest guide in the matter is what is to be found in special reports made by Revenue officers, and in the descriptions given in the Statistical Account of Bengal compiled by Sir W. W. Hunter from information carefully collected through local officers in the districts where the system exists. When the present Bengal Tenancy Act was under consideration by the Select Committee of the Legislative Council a memorandum by Mr. Cotton, then a Secretary to the Board of Revenue, on the various land tenures in Bengal, was submitted by the Government of Bengal for the information of the Select Committee. Mr. Cotton here reports upon the utbundi system [397] and transcribes the passages describing it in the Statistical Account of Bengal in the districts of Nuddea (in which the land now in question is situated), Jessore, Moorshebad, and Pubna; and he sums up the results. We quote the passage in the Statistical Report relating to the utbundi system in Nuddea:—Utbbundi is applied to land held for a year, or rather for a season only. The general custom is for the husbandman to get verbal permission to cultivate a certain amount of land in a particular place at a rate agreed upon when the crop is on the ground. The land is measured and the rent is assessed on it.” Mr. Cotton says too that the utbundi ryot abandons altogether (i.e., has no right to claim again) any land, except such as he has under cultivation in any given year. The zamindar may let in jumma to some one any land which the utbundi ryot has not got under cultivation in any year.

Again, in September 1884, the Commissioner of the Presidency Division submitted to Government and analysis of the reports of his district officers regarding utbundi tenures. The Collector of Nuddea stated that cultivators who take such lands are not obliged to cultivate them a second year; but as a rule they can keep them for certain for three years if they elect to do so. Generally the lands under this system are cultivated from one to five years, and then left fallow for the same period. The cultivators acquire no right of occupancy, nor do they desire to do so.

These descriptions of utbundi do seem to refer rather to particular area taken for cultivation for limited periods and then given up, than to holdings of which parts are cultivated and other parts lie fallow while the rent for the whole is assessed year by year with reference to the quantity within the holding under cultivation in that year. A holding of the latter description hardly seems to answer to the general conception of utbundi, although the rent may be arrived at each year by ascertaining what area has been cultivated. It is not clear to which description the four bighas of the present suit belong: whether they are part of a larger holding once settled with the plaintiff, or whether they form a separate holding which he has from time to time cultivated on the utbundi system during a period which has covered more than twelve years. If it is the former case, his right of occupancy [398] would seem to be complete: but if it is the latter case, we are not prepared to hold that cultivation at various times and under separate agreements on each occasion, such periods not being continuous, although of the same piece of land, would confer the right upon the ground that the first of such periods commenced more than twelve years before the alleged dispossessions.

We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the case to the Court for a finding, after taking evidence, if, necessary, on the question whether these four bighas are part of a larger holding or whether they have been occupied from time to time under the custom of a separate utbundi as above described. Costs to abide the result.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Tottenham and Mr. Justice Gordon.

GOBIND LAL ROY (ONE OF THE Defendants) v. BIPRODAS ROY AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

Sale for arrears of revenue—Suit to set aside sale—Attachment of property sold, not necessary—Sale ultra vires, When—Act XI of 1859, ss. 5 and 17.

The right to set aside a sale for arrears of Government revenue under Act XI of 1859 is not confined to proprietors alone, but extends to all persons, such as mortgagees, having an interest in the property antecedent to its sale.

Watson v. Sereemunt Lal Khan (1) relied on.

There is nothing in s. 5 of Act XI of 1859 which indicates that property sold for arrears of Government revenue should be under attachment at the time of sale.

A sale in contravention of ss. 5 and 17 of Act XI of 1859 is ultra vires, and therefore void.

The principle laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Lala Moharuk Lal v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) applied.

[F., 7 C.W.N. 377 (380); R., 21 C. 354 (359).]

This was a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of Government revenue under Act XI of 1859.

[399] The plaintiffs were the executors to the estate of the late Bhagirat Das, the son of Bhuban Mohan Das deceased. On the 15th Bhadro 1286 (30th August 1879), Zahuruddin Mahomed Abu Ali Chowdhry (defendant No. 5) and his two sons executed a mortgage-bond in favour of Bhuban Mohan Das, whereby they mortgaged an eight-annas share in Mehal Khurd Muradpore situate at Malunga and a moiety of their eight-annas share in Mouza Padamsar situate at Govindgunge, both in the District of Rungpore, to secure the repayment of the sum of Rs. 15,000 and interest. Bhagirat Das, who had inherited his father’s estate, died on the 5th Bysack 1290 (17th April 1883), leaving a will which was proved by the executors, the plaintiffs. In 1886 the plaintiffs brought a suit (No. 19 of 1886) in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge of Rungpore against defendant No. 5, Zahuruddin Mahomed, and his two sons (the original mortgagees), Ramjanam Misser (defendant No. 3), Mahomed Zakaria (defendant No. 4), and others having an interest in the mortgaged properties to recover the sum of Rs. 30,716 and 12 annas due on account of principal and interest under the mortgage-bond of the 15th Bhadro 1286. During the pendency of this suit, on the 26th June 1886, Mehal Khurd Muradpore was sold by public auction by the Collector of Rungpore for arrears of Government revenue, including the arrear of Falgoon 1292 which fell due on the 1st Ch-yt 1292 (13th March 1886), and was purchased by Gobind Lal Roy (defendant No. 1) for Rs. 6,500. On the 22nd July the plaintiffs, and Ramjanam Misser and Mahomed Zakaria (defendants Nos. 3 and 4) applied to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale and of the low price fetched by the property; but their appeal was dismissed on the 23rd October 1886 on which date also the sale was confirmed. On the 8th November 1886 a sale-certificate was granted to the auction purchaser Gobind Lal Roy (defendant No. 1). On the 10th December 1886 the plaintiff’s suit (No. 19 of 1886) was decreed against the original mortgagors personally; but Mehal Khurd Muradpore, which had been sold on the 26th June, was exempted from liability under the decree.

It was further ordered by the decree “that in case the plaintiffs shall succeed to have the auction-sale of Khurd Muradpore [400] set aside by instituting a regular suit or otherwise, they shall be able to revive their claim to make the said Khurd Muradpore liable under this decree.”

On the 19th October 1887, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit, making Ramjanam Misser and Mahomed Zakaria defendants, because they refused to join them in bringing the suit. The Secretary of State was made a defendant, but did not appear. Some time after the institution of the suit, the defendants Ramjanam Misser and Mahomed Zakaria applied to be made co-plaintiffs; but their applications were refused on the ground that they were not made within a year of the date on which the sale had been confirmed.

The plaintiffs alleged “that long before the Government revenue kist for March of 1886 became due, the Collector of this district (Rungpore) under the Road Cess Act, gave an order for attachment of the said Mehal Khurd Muradpore for realizing the arrears of road cess and public works cess in respect of that mehal; and, accordingly, the aforesaid Mehal Khurd Muradpore was attached on the 12th March 1886; and a prohibitory order was issued to the tenants of the mehal, forbidding them to pay rents to the zamindars, and a Cess Collector was appointed for collecting rents of the mehal. That being the case, the Collector had no power to sell the aforesaid mehal at auction for arrears of Government revenue due for kist for March 1886. The aforesaid Mehal Khurd Muradpore was under an attachment in execution of a decree of the Civil Court, and the sale was made for arrears of Government revenue for the previous year; but the Collector did not issue any notice as required by s. 5 of Act XI of 1859, and, without the fulfilment of the requirement of s. 5, the aforesaid mehal could by no means be sold at auction. Therefore the sale of the aforesaid Mehal Khurd Muradpore, which was held by the Collector on the 26th June 1886, is illegal and invalid, and the Collector by so holding the sale acted without jurisdiction. It is no sale at all, and it cannot in any way affect the mortgage lien of the plaintiffs.”

The plaintiffs further alleged that no sale proclamations were issued or notices served as required by law, and that at the time of the sale the agent of Gobind Lal Roy (defendant No. 1), by stating that he would bind up to Rs. 50,000 [401] or Rs. 60,000, dissuaded intending purchasers in attendance from offering bids. They also alleged that the mehal was worth not less than Rs. 60,000.

The plaintiffs prayed that the revenue sale of Mehal Khurd Muradpore, held on 26th June 1886, should be set aside as illegal and made without jurisdiction. They also prayed for a declaration that Mehal Khurd Muradpore was liable to be sold for the debt due to them under the mortgage-bond of 15th Bhadro 1286; and that the amount due under their decree of the 10th December 1886 upon the said bond should be realised by sale of the said mehal. The plaintiffs further prayed that if the sale be not set aside, the defendant Gobind Lal Roy should be made liable in damages for the amount that should be found due under their decree of the 10th December 1886. Ramjanam Misser and Mahomed Zakaria (defendants Nos. 3 and 4) supported the plaintiffs, contending that the sale was illegal and ought to be set aside.

The defence set up by the principal defendant, the auction-purchaser Gobind Lal Roy, was that the plaintiffs as mortgagees were not entitled to bring this suit; that they could not enforce their lien against the mortgaged property, inasmuch as that property had been exempted from liability for the mortgage debt by the decree of the 10th December 1886 passed in plaintiffs' previous suit No. 19 of 1886; that the sale was legal and valid and was protected by the sale-certificate granted to him under Act XI of 1859 on 8th November 1886; and that, by s. 8 of the Bengal Act VII of 1868, the plaintiffs were precluded from questioning the validity of the sale on the grounds of non-publication of the sale-proclamations and want of notices; that the plaintiffs in their appeal to the Commissioner did not object to the irregularities set forth in their plaint, and that, therefore, they were prevented by s. 33 of Act XI of 1859 from bringing a suit to set aside a sale on the ground of those irregularities; and, lastly, that the property had been sold for an adequate price.

The material issues were:

(1st) Whether the plaintiffs, as mere mortgagees only of a half share, can bring this suit for setting aside the revenue sale, and whether they have any locus standi in Court? Further, whether they have any cause of action?

(2nd) Whether by the defendant Gobind Lal's purchase at the revenue sale, he purchased the estate Khurd Muradpore free from all encumbrances; and, if so, can the plaintiffs enforce now their mortgage lien?

(3rd) Whether the revenue sale of Khurd Muradpore on 26th June 1886 is valid, made after due sale-proclamations and notices, and whether the sale is invalid for its non-publication in the Official Gazette? Next, whether the Collector acted without jurisdiction?

(4th) Whether the sale is invalid if the estate was under attachment by the Collector for arrears of road-cess, and whether such attachment, even if made, was legal?

(5th) Whether the plaintiffs are competent to contest the revenue sale under s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868?

(10th) Whether the plaintiffs are mortgagees at all, and whether the plaintiff's right to Khurd Muradpore was extinguished before the revenue sale?

(11th) Whether the sale is valid if the property was attached by the Civil Court?

It appeared from the documents filed by the plaintiffs that one Ishan Chunder Roy had obtained a decree against the defendant Ramjanam Misser; and that in execution of that decree Ramjanam's interest in Mehal Khurd Muradpore had been attached by order of the Munsif on the 12th September 1885, and remained under attachment until the 13th March 1886, when the execution case was dismissed on the ground that the decree-holder had not paid the sale-proclamation fee. On the 22nd March 1886 the order of dismissal was set aside, and the execution case restored to its former number. The attachment thus revived continued up to the 18th May 1886, when the decree having been fully satisfied the execution case was finally disposed of. It also appeared from the plaintiffs' documentary evidence that, on account of arrears of road-cess, the estate
Khurd Muradpore had been attached by the Collector on the 12th March 1886 and continued under attachment up to the 25th September 1886. In consequence of the report of the Cess Head Clerk and the request of the Cess Deputy Collector, sanction to proceed [403] under s. 99 of the Cess Act, 1880, against certain habitual defaulting proprietors was granted by the Collector on 5th February 1886.

On the 9th March the following notice was issued to the ryots of Khurd Muradpore:—

DISTRICT RUNGPORE.

Notice under s. 99 of Bengal Act IX of 1880 for realization of revenue.

Lot Khurd Muradpore, Towni No. 526.

This prohibitory order is issued to the parties in possession of the mehal or the talooks, &c., as well as to the talookdar and the defendant talookdars and ryots, to the effect that they should pay the rent which is or may thereafter be due by them on account of any land included in the said mehal or talook, &c., to the Collector of this said District, or to Ugrakant Ghose, who is hereby appointed as Cess Collector, and they should not pay anybody else till they obtain the orders of the Collector. On receipt of the said sum, the Collector or the said Cess Collector hereby appointed will grant receipts, and such receipts shall be taken as a valid discharge, according to the provisions of the said law, in respect of any debts that are or may be due by the person who may obtain such receipt. If the rents be paid, without obtaining the orders of the Collector, to any other person, such payment shall be null and void.

ABDUL KHALIK,

Dated 9th March, 1886.

There was evidence to show that Abdul Khalik, the Deputy Collector, had been vested with the powers of a Collector under s. 99 of the Cess Act, 1880.

The Subordinate Judge found that Ishan Chunder Roy’s attachment continued against the Estate Khurd Muradpore from 12th September 1885 up to the 18th May 1886, but had ceased to exist on the date of the revenue sale which took place on 26th June 1886; that the sale of the property had been published in the Calcutta Gazette, but that, as prescribed by s. 5 of Act XI of 1859, fifteen days’ notification had not been given before the latest day of payment of the arrears of Government revenue, namely, the 28th March 1886; and, accordingly, held that the [404] Collector had no power to sell the estate. He also found as a fact that on account of arrears of road-cess the estate Khurd Muradpore was under attachment by order of the Collector from 12th March to September 1886, and held that, by cl. 2, s. 17 of Act XI of 1859, the Collector had no power to sell the estate so long as it was under attachment. He also found that the estate was worth about Rs. 50,000, and that the plaintiffs had sustained substantial injury by the sale. He accounted for the absence of bidders from the sale by the fact that the property was under attachment both by the Civil Court and by the Collector.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs as mortgagees were competent to bring the suit, and that, by the decree of the 10th December 1886, they could renew their lien on the property upon the revenue sale being set aside. He also held that, under s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, a sale certificate cured only defects in the serving and posting of notices under the sale laws, but nothing further, and was no protection to the purchaser when the sale was irregular and the Collector had acted without jurisdiction. He was of opinion that the sale was bad for irregularities, and, as the plaintiffs had sustained substantial injury by it, the sale should be set aside. He also held that the plaintiffs’ mortgage was duly proved.

Having decided the above issues in favour of the plaintiffs, the Subordinate Judge decreed their suit, set aside the revenue sale of 26th June 1886, and ordered the sale of the mortgaged property under the decree of 10th December 1886.

The defendant Gobind Lal Roy appealed to the High Court.

The Advocate-General (Sir G. C. Paul), Mr. Woodroffe, Babu Srinath Das, Babu Opendro Nath Mitter and Babu Jogendro Chunder Ghose, for the appellant.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy, Baboo Jogendro Nath Bose and Baboo Mohini Mohun Chuckerbati, for the plaintiffs-respondents.

Mr. Das, Babu Ashutosh Dhar and Babu Prosunno Gopal Roy, for the defendant-respondent Ramjanam Misser.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Aukhil Chunder Sen, for the defendant-respondent Mahomed Zakaria.

[405] Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhury, for the defendant-respondent Ram Kissen Khettry.

The arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

The judgment of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and GORDON, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit to set aside a sale of certain property for arrears of Government revenue. The property in question is an estate known as Mehal Khurd Muradpore, and it was sold by the Collector of Rungpore on the 26th of June 1886 for Rs. 6,500.

The plaintiffs are the executors to the estate of the late Bhagirat Das, the son of Bhuban Mohan Das deceased, who was the mortgagee of an eight-anna share of the property sold; and the principal defendant Raja Gobind Lal Roy is the auction-purchaser. The defaulting proprietors of the estate, Ramjanam Misser and Mahomed Zakaria, who are the successors in interest of the original mortgagors, have also been made defendants, because they declined to join with the plaintiffs in bringing this suit. There are also other defendants, including the Secretary of State, who however did not appear, and may therefore be left out of consideration in this appeal.

Sometime after the institution of the suit, the defendants Ramjanam Misser and Mahomed Zakaria applied to the Court to be made co-plaintiffs, but the Subordinate Judge, before whom the case was pending, refused their application on the ground that it was made more than a year after the date on which the sale had become final by law, and therefore it was too late.

The plaintiffs’ case is substantially this: In 1886 they brought a suit against the original mortgagors and other persons having an interest in the mortgaged property to recover the money due under the mortgage by sale of the property in question. Pending the decision of that suit, the property Khurd Muradpore was, as I have just said, sold for arrears of revenue on the 25th of June 1886. On the 10th December 1886, the plaintiffs' suit was decreed against the original mortgagors; but the mortgaged property, which had already been sold by the Collector, was exempted from liability under the decree. At the same time this further order was made in the decree: "that in case the plaintiffs shall succeed to have the auction-sale of Khurd Muradpore set aside [406] by instituting a regular suit or otherwise, they shall be able to revive their claim to make the said Khurd Muradpore liable under this decree." The plaintiffs, then, being unable to enforce their lien in consequence of the sale of the mortgaged property for arrears of revenue, and their appeal to the Commissioner against that sale having been dismissed, now ask to have the revenue sale set aside on certain grounds set out in the plaint, and for a declaration that the property in question is liable to be sold for the debt due to them under their mortgage. They further pray that if the sale be not set aside, the defendant Gobind Lal Roy may be made liable in damages on the ground that he is the chief wrong-doer in the case, because his agent, by saying he would bid up to fifty or sixty thousand rupees, dissuaded intending purchasers in attendance from offering bids. The plaintiffs say that the sale is illegal and was made without jurisdiction; because, firstly, no notification was issued by the Collector as required by s. 5 of Act XI of 1859, and secondly, that the estate at the time of sale was under attachment for arrears of road cess under the Cess Act, and that it was sold for arrears of revenue which accrued during such attachment, and that these irregularities caused the property, which was worth about sixty thousand rupees, to be sold for the small sum of six thousand and five hundred rupees, thereby causing them substantial injury.

The defence set up by the auction-purchaser is that the plaintiffs as mortgagees are not entitled to bring this suit; that they cannot enforce their lien against the mortgaged property, when that property was exempted from liability for the mortgage-debt in the previous suit No. 19 of 1886; that the sale is legally valid and is protected by his sale-certificate; that in their appeal to the Commissioner, the plaintiffs did not object to the irregularities now set out in the plaint, and therefore they cannot now ask to have the sale annulled on the ground of those irregularities; and lastly, that the property was sold for an adequate price.

The proprietors defendants Nos. 3 and 4 support the plaintiffs, and say that the sale was illegal and ought to be set aside.

On these pleadings the Subordinate Judge framed twelve issues; and having decided the substantial issues in favour of the [407] plaintiffs, he has decreed their suit, that is, he has ordered the sale to be set aside, and the mortgaged property to be sold under the plaintiffs' mortgage-decree of the 10th of December 1886.

The auction-purchaser appeals. But before considering his grounds of appeal it will be convenient here to say that, when the appeal was first called on for hearing before this Court on the 29th of July last, Mr. Evans, on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, represented that an arrangement had been come to between Mr. Woodroffe, counsel for the appellant, and himself, that the plaintiffs-respondents should withdraw all opposition to the appeal, and consent to the appeal being decreed on certain terms. And Mr. Evans, accordingly, on the abovementioned date, made a formal application to the Court that the appeal should be decreed in accordance with the terms arranged; and this application was recorded. But at the same time the pro forma defendants-respondents, Ramjanam Misser and Mahomed Zakaria, claimed to be heard in opposition to the appeal and in support of the judgment and decree of the lower Court; and the Court decided that it would hear the appeal as against them on a future date, to which the appeal was then adjourned. Subsequently, on the appeal being called on on the 12th of August, Mr. Evans informed the Court that the appellant had repudiated the aforesaid agreement, but as his clients considered it to be binding and conclusive, he would not appear and oppose the appeal, and, on the following day, Mr. Evans filed an affidavit setting out the circumstances of the arrangement and the view his clients took of it. On a subsequent day, in answer to a Rule issued on the appellant, his counsel, Mr. Woodroffe, filed certain correspondence, and at the same time certain letters were put in by the pleader for the appellant; and all these papers have been, at Mr. Evans request, placed on the record.

With these observations, which we have thought it necessary to make in order to explain why the plaintiffs' counsel did not appear to oppose the appeal, and as showing that his and their conduct in that matter was both proper and honourable, as also that of the learned counsel, Mr. Woodroffe, for the appellant, we now proceed to consider the various points argued before us by the learned counsel for the appellant.

[408] The points are these:—

1. The plaintiffs as executors of a mortgagee, and, not being in possession of the property sold, are not entitled to bring this suit.

2. The plaintiffs' suit No. 19 of 1886, for a declaration of their right to sell the mortgaged property, having been practically dismissed by the exemption of the mortgaged property from sale, a second suit to enforce their lien will not lie.

3. That s. 5 of Act XI of 1859 does not apply to the present case, because the property sold was not under attachment at the time of sale; and that even if there was any irregularity in not publishing the notification required by that section, that irregularity was cured by the provisions of s. 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868.

4. That the provisions of s. 17 of Act XI do not apply, because the property was in fact not under attachment by the Revenue authorities when the arrears accrued.

5. The grounds on which it is now sought to set aside the sale were not declared and specified in the appeal to the Commissioner, and, therefore, under s. 33 of Act XI, the suit will not lie.

6. There is no proof that the plaintiffs have sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularities complained of, and therefore, under s. 33 the sale cannot be annulled.

We will consider these objections in the order in which they are stated:—

1. As regards the first objection, we think that the Subordinate Judge is right in the view he took that a mortgagee can maintain a suit like the present. Sections 33, 34, and 35 of Act XI of 1859 are relied on as showing that only a person who is proprietor can bring a suit under the Act to set aside a sale. But we do not think that there is anything in these sections that warrants the inference that a right to sue is limited to proprietors only. Clearly the plaintiffs have an interest in the property in suit, inasmuch as that property is their security for the debt of the mortgagors, and if, as they allege, they have been deprived of this security by the illegal sale of the property by the Collector, we see no reason why, in the absence of any express provision of law to the contrary, they should not be entitled to ask the Court to grant them relief by declaring that the sale is illegal and inoperative as against them. We are not aware of any authority in which this particular point has been expressly decided. But there is a judgment of the Privy Council [Watson v. Sreemunt Lal Khan (1)] under the old sale-law, Regulation XI of 1822, in which it was laid down that the right to impeach the sale of land for arrears of Government revenue extended not only to the defaulting proprietors, but also to derivative holders under them, that is, in the particular case before their Lordships, to permanent leaseholders or istamnardars. And this too was the view of the Privy Council, although s. 23 of Regulation XI empowered proprietors only to contest the validity of such a sale. This we think is a clear authority in favour of the view that persons other than proprietors, who had an interest in property antecedent to its sale, could under that Regulation maintain a suit to impeach the validity of the sale: and a fortiori will such a suit lie under the present sale-law, in which the language used (see s. 53 of Act XI of 1859) is of a more general nature. We are accordingly of opinion that this suit will lie; and we decide this point against the appellant.

(2) The second objection is that the plaintiffs' suit No. 19 of 1886 for enforcing their lien against the property having been practically dismissed, a second suit for the same relief cannot be maintained: and in support of this contention certain cases are relied upon, viz., Watson & Co. v. The Collector of Zillah Rajshahye (2) and Sukh Lall v. Bhikhi
(3). But we do not think that these cases are on all fours with the present case. In the first place, the present appellant was not a party to suit
No. 19 of 1886, and therefore there can be no question of res judicata as between him and the plaintiffs. Further, if the sale be set aside, the appellant will cease to have any right to the property, and will therefore not be affected by a declaration of the plaintiffs' lien on it.
Again, the defaulting-proprietors raise no objection [410] to the form of the plaintiffs' suit. On the contrary, they support the plaintiffs and wish the sale to be set aside; so that, having regard to this fact as well as to the state of things existing when the decree of the 10th December 1886 was passed, which absolutely precluded the Subordinate Judge from directing the mortgaged property to be sold, we think that this objection ought not to prevail.

(3) The third objection is that, as admittedly the property was not under attachment by order of any judicial authority at the time of sale, s. 5 of Act XI does not apply. We think, however, that there is nothing in that section which indicates that the property sold for arrears should be under attachment at the time of sale. The object of the notification prescribed by s. 5, as pointed out in a decision of the Privy Council in Bunwari Lal Sahu v. Mohabir Pershad Singh (4), is to give timely information to an attaching-creditor that the property is in arrears, so as to enable him to step in and pay the revenue before the latest date of payment, and so to save the property from forfeiture and sale. If, therefore, a property is in arrears, and is also under attachment by order of any judicial authority, it seems to us that, having regard to

(3) 11 A. 187. (4) 12 B.L.R. 297=1 I.A. 89 (104).
the provisions of s. 5, the Collector could not legally sell it without first publishing a notification of the arrears not less than fifteen clear days prior to the latest date of payment; and in this view, it is immaterial whether the attachment was or was not subsisting at the time of sale.

The question then for decision in connection with this objection is whether the facts proved in the present case bring it within the purview of s. 5. Now the facts are these: One Sham Chunder Roy obtained a decree against the proprietor Ramjanam Misser, and, in execution of that decree, Ramjanam's interests in the Mehal Khurd Murapore were attached by an order of the Munsif, dated the 12th of September 1885, and the mahal remained under attachment until the 13th of March 1886, when the decree-holder having neglected to deposit the Court-fee required for the publication of the sale proclamation, the execution case was dismissed. On the 22nd of March 1886 the order of dismissal was set aside, and the execution case was restored to its number, and the attachment which was thus revived continued to subsist up to the 18th May 1886, when the decree having been fully satisfied the case was finally disposed of. It is clear from these facts that the property was under attachment by order of the Munsif for the whole of the period during which the arrears of revenue accrued, including the arrear of Falgoon 1292 which fell due on the 1st Cheyt 1292 (13th March 1886), for the realization of which it was liable to be sold; and therefore the Collector ought to have published the notification required by s. 5 at the latest on 13th of March, that is, fifteen clear days before the latest date of payment, namely, the 29th of March (the 28th being a Sunday). Admittedly no such notification was published; and, therefore, having regard to the prohibitive language of s. 5, we think that the Collector acted illegally in selling the property.

Then, as to this irregularity (supposing it to be a mere irregularity and not an illegality) being cured by the certificate granted to the auction-purchaser under s. 8, Bengal Act VII of 1868, we are of opinion that this section does not apply to a case in which no notification under s. 5 was published at all; and this point too was not pressed before us.

(4) Paragraph 1 of s. 17 of Act XI of 1859 [as amended by s. 2, Bengal Act III of 1881] runs thus: "No estate held under attachment by the revenue authorities otherwise than by order of a judicial authority shall be liable to sale for arrears accruing whilst it was so held under attachment." Now, it is clearly established that there being arrears of road-cess due in respect of Mehal Khurd Murapore, the Collector took proceedings under s. 99 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880) by issuing a notification in the form in Sch. F annexed to the Act. That notification is in substance an order prohibiting ryots and other persons in possession of the mehal from paying rent to anybody else except to the Collector or the Cess Collector, until the further orders of the Collector; and it was published on the spot on the 12th of March 1886, and continued in force up to the 25th of September of the same year. But with reference to these proceedings, it is contended that this prohibitory order is not an attachment within the true meaning of the term; and that even if it be, then the attachment was not valid, because the Collector did not record his opinion as required by s. 99 of the Cess Act. We think, however, that a prohibitory order of this kind, is in effect a mode of attachment; and we also think that the evidence shows that both the Collector and the Deputy Collector who had been vested with the powers of a Collector under s. 99 (see letter of the Commissioner, dated November 14th, 1882, The appeal at p. 38 of the paper-book) substantially recorded their opinions that proceedings should be taken under that section. There was thus a valid attachment of this particular property for arrears of road-cess by the Revenue authorities on the 12th of March 1886; and on the 13th March 1886 (1st Cheyt 1292), as we have already observed, the revenue of the preceding month of Falgoon fell due, and became an arrear of revenue under s. 2 of Act XI; and, therefore, this arrear accrued while the property was so held under attachment. Consequently, the Collector was positively prohibited from selling the property.

(5 and 6) The substantial question involved in the fifth and sixth objections taken by the learned Advocate-General is whether s. 33 of Act XI is applicable to the present case. We think that this question is not altogether free from difficulty. If s. 33 does apply, then it appears to us clear that the suit must fail because the grounds now taken under ss. 5 and 17 of Act XI were not declared and specified, as s. 33 requires, in the appeal preferred to the Commissioner, the main ground taken in that appeal being one of hardship on the ground of lowness of price.
Further, although it appears that the property, which was worth about fifty thousand rupees, was sold for the inadequate sum of rupees six thousand five hundred, thus we think, causing substantial injury to the plaintiffs who had a charge on the surplus sale-proceeds, it is urged that there is no proof that this smallness of price flowed directly from the irregularities (if there be any), and therefore it cannot be said that the plaintiffs sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularities.
It is quite true that there is no evidence worthy of the name to show that the inadequacy of price was caused by the so-called irregularities.
But then it is argued for the respondents that if s. 33 does apply, we are at liberty, in the absence of evidence, to infer that the irregularities deterred bidders, and so were the cause of the property being sold at so low a price: and in support of this argument, Mr. Justice Ainslie's judgment in the case of Mohabee Pershad Singh v. The Collector of Tirhoot (1) is relied upon. We think, however, after giving all these arguments our best consideration, that we need not express any decided opinion on this later point, because it seems to us that we are bound by the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court in a somewhat similar case, _Lala Mobarieh Lal v. The Secretary of State for India in Council_ (2); and that, in accordance with that judgment, we are compelled to hold that
s. 33 of Act XI is not applicable to the present case, whatever be our own opinion on that point. In the case referred to the Full Bench the provisions of s. 6 of Act XI had not been complied with, because the date notified for the sale was less than thirty days from the affixing of the notice, and it was held that this was not a mere irregularity or one of those errors of procedure which are intended to be cured by the purchaser having obtained his certificate, but that the sale by the Collector was absolutely illegal and void, as not being a sale which the Collector had power to hold under the Act; and for these reasons it was also held that the sale was not a sale within the meaning of the term as used in s. 33 so as to render it necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he had sustained substantial injury. We think that the principle laid down by the Full Bench is applicable to the present case; and that if a sale is illegal and made without jurisdiction, because the date notifying the sale was less than thirty days from the affixing of the notice, and so contrary to the provisions of s. 6;

a fortiori is a sale illegal and made without jurisdiction, when, as in the present case, such a sale is positively prohibited by the provisions of ss. 5 and 17 of the Act. And even if it be conceded that the omission to issue a notification under s. 5 was a mere irregularity (which we are not prepared to say it was), it is impossible to say that a sale made under circumstances positively prohibited by s. 17 is anything short of an absolute illegality. In this view and in accordance with the Full Bench ruling, we must hold that the sale in the present case was null and void.

[414] The plaintiffs no doubt ask to have the sale annulled, using the words of s. 33: but in the view we take they might just as well have asked for a declaration that the sale was void and inoperative as against them. This, however, is a mere matter of form, and therefore not material to the present case. The result arrived at in either case would be the same. The appeal therefore fails on all points, and is accordingly dismissed with costs payable to the respondents who contested the appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Rampini.

GUJRAJ SAHAI (Plaintiff) v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND ANOTHER (Defendants).* [2nd August, 1889.]

Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), ss. 21, 22—Sale in execution of a certificate under that Act—Procedure—Satisfied certificate—Act XI of 1859.

The procedure laid down by Bengal Act VII of 1880 must be strictly followed; and it is, therefore, absolutely incumbent on the Courts, when considering the validity of sales under that Act, to rigidly require an exact compliance with the formalities prescribed therein by the Legislature.

Where a certificate is issued in respect of a demand under the Act, upon payment of such demand it becomes the duty of the Collector, under s. 22, to enter satisfaction upon the certificate, and also in the register kept under s. 21.

A sale in execution of a satisfied certificate, or of a certificate not duly made under the Act, is absolutely void.

Abdul Hye v. Nawab Raj (1) and Lala Mobaruk Lat v. The Secretary of State for India (2) followed; Mohan Ram Jha v. Babu Shib Dutt Singh (3) referred to.

Semble:—Demands in respect of cess under Bengal Act VII of 1880 are not on the same footing as revenue demands to which Act XI of 1859 applies, and therefore, the procedure prescribed by the Act XI of 1859 for the recovery of the latter is not applicable to the recovery of the former.

Suit for declaration of right and confirmation of possession.

In execution of a certificate, purporting to be issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880 and dated the 13th January 1886, the entire estate of Ghospore Chuck Mujahed, consisting of three villages, was sold by auction on the 15th April 1886, and purchased by [415] Abdoott Hai, 3rd party defendant, for Rs. 560. The estate originally belonged to Bibi

Amina, Bibi Nesar Fatima, and Munzurul Fatima. The plaintiff Gujraj Sahai, who was a person of wealth in the enjoyment of an income of about Rs. 1,50,000 a year from zemindaries and indigo factories, purchased the estate in 1882 under a deed of sale from the Land Mortgage Bank of India, and in 1884 had his name registered under the Land Registration Act, 1876.

The certificate of the 13th January 1886 was issued in respect of road-cess on account of this estate falling due in 1885. It was not addressed to the plaintiff but to the original owners, and did not bear the signature of the Collector. There was also a note on the certificate in these words:—

"Seen to-day. No signature at foot. Pasted as at present.

The 20th August 1886.

The certificate (Exhibit 4) was as follows:

Collector.

[416] On the 21st January 1886 a notice (Exhibit A), also purporting to be under Bengal Act VII of 1880, but neither addressed to the plaintiff nor signed by the Collector, was drawn up in the following form:—

Notice under s. 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880.

THE GOVERNMENT

BIBI AMINA, BIBI NESAR FATIMA AND MUNZURUL FATIMA, in connection with the property purchased by BABU GUJRAJ, inhabitant of Mouza Baghi Maniar, Chuckla Garjouli, Pergunnah Bisara. Debtors.
You are hereby informed that a Road Cess Certificate for Rs. 43-4-6, which you are to pay under the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880, is written out. That certificate is annexed to the file of this Court. If you deny your liability for the amount, you must show cause within thirty days why such a certificate should not be enforced. If you do not show any sufficient cause within thirty days, then the certificate will be executed like a decree of the Civil Court for the amount in question. But this will not be done if you deposit the amount in this Court. As long as this amount is not paid, you are hereby interdicted from conveying your immoveable property or any part thereof by sale, gift, mortgage or otherwise. A copy of the above certificate is hereto annexed.

This day the 21st January 1886.

On account of Vouza Ghouspore, Chuck Mujahed, original with dependency, Chuckla Garjoul, Pergunnah Bisara, Touzi No. 9650, Cess No. 3887.

Tulbana-fee 12 annas.

HURRIHUR PERSHAD,

Mohurrir.

E. STEWART,

Depy. Collector.

On this notice there was an endorsement, dated 26th January, to the effect that the plaintiff had become acquainted with the order and would carry it out, and had paid the peon 12 annas process fee. This was signed "Babu Gujraj Sahai, by the pen of Ramruchia Lal, servant and putvari of Babu Gujraj Sahai aforesaid."

On the 5th February 1887, the plaintiff instituted this suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council (1st party), Makbul Hossein (2nd party) as the real purchaser, and Abdul Hye (3rd party) as the benamidar of Makbul Hossein.

The plaintiff's case was that, on the date of the auction-sale, he had paid up all demands in respect of road-cess and public works-cess due from him to the Government Tehsildar Laldhari Singh, who had granted him a receipt for the same on the 28th January 1886; that the certificate of the 13th January 1886 was not in due form under the Act; that no notice under s. 10 of the Act had been served upon him, and that the person to whom the notice was alleged to have been delivered had no authority to accept service on his behalf; that the processes under which the sale was stated to have taken place were invalid and were not duly issued and executed. The plaintiff submitted that, upon payment of all demands due by him, the certificate of the 13th January 1886 ought to have been cancelled. He charged that the proceedings were taken in collusion with Makbul Hussein (2nd party defendant), who was one of the original proprietors of the estate. The plaintiff alleged that he came to know of the certificate and the proceedings taken under it for the first time on the 16th August 1886, the date on which possession had been given by the Court; and that he thereupon filed two petitions, dated 19th and 25th August 1886, respectively, praying for a cancelment of the certificate and the setting aside of the sale, but that his petitions were rejected on the 25th September. That, thereupon, on 13th December, he appealed to the Commissioner of Patna, but having faint hopes of obtaining redress by that means he had filed his suit. He stated that, although his actual possession had not been disturbed, symbolical possession had been taken by the purchaser, and that the security of his title had been thereby affected.

The plaintiff prayed for a declaration that the certificate of the 13th January 1886 was of no effect, and that the sale in execution thereof was void as the money due for road-cess and public work-cess had been paid up; for confirmation of his right and possession in the estate; and for an order that the defendants, 2nd and 3rd parties, had acquired no right therein.

The Secretary of State was made 1st party defendant; and although two months' time was obtained to file a written statement on his behalf, no written statement was filed, nor did he appear in the Court below. The case was contested by the Secretary [418] of State and by defendant 3rd party, who was admitted at the hearing to be the purchaser. Their principal defence was that the conditions of law had been complied with, and that the sale and purchase had therefore been legally carried out and could not be interfered with.

The Judge found that the notice under s. 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 had been duly served upon the plaintiff, and that he was not ignorant of it as alleged by him; that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had paid the arrears for which his property was sold before the sale was effected; and that there was no informality in the sale-proclamation, nor was the sale brought about by fraud.

As regards the 6th issue, which was in these words: "Was the certificate of the 13th January 1886 informal? If so, what is the effect?" the Judge observed:

"The only informality alleged in the plaint is that 'the certificate was not formally drawn up.' It is in the list of documentary evidence that we find special mention of informalities. There it is said that the certificate is informal, because (a) it is not signed by the certificated officer, (b) it does not specify the name of the creditor, (c) it does not correctly describe the debtor; according to the description the plaintiff is not the debtor.

As to (a), it is undoubtedly the case that, under the law, a certificate is to be under the hand of the Collector; but here the place for his signature has disappeared bodily; and as it is undoubtedly issued from his office, the presumption is that it was signed. As to (b), it is true that the word 'Muzaffarpur' is not filled in after the words 'district of'; but this does not rise beyond the dimensions of a clerical error. As to (c), the names of some ladies are mentioned as the debtors; but it is admitted that these are the original proprietors from whom (through the Land Mortgage Bank, it is said) plaintiff derives his title. It is merely owing to oversight and general slovenliness that the alteration of names has not been made; that plaintiff cannot complain is shown by the facts that the names of the ladies occur in his own exhibits (Exhibits 1, etc.). And his own name appears throughout as purchaser (Khariddar). I hold that there has been no informality, at all events any such as would amount to material irregularity. I therefore decide issue 6th against the plaintiff."

In a previous portion of his judgment, the Judge made the following observations regarding the certificate itself:

"I have caused the original to be placed on the record, as no copy could give any idea of its tattered appearance. Indeed, now that I have patched it up, it is very different from the rag that was first presented to me. It is [419] drawn up in the usual slovenly manner; but it is in accordance with the form given in Form 2, Sch. II, attached to the Act. . . . It is impossible to say now whether it was signed, as the place for the signature has bodily disappeared, but it apparently bore no signature on the 20th August 1886, as I find a note on it in these words: "Seen to-day. No signature at foot. Pasted at as present. (Signed) D. Norton, 20th August 1886." Mr. Norton was a Joint-Magistrate here. The note does not indicate whether the place for the signature had disappeared; but not improbably the allusion to pasting connotes this."

The Judge dismissed the suit, and the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. M. P. Gasper (instructed by Messrs. Watkins & Farr), Baboo Nalit Mohun Mullick, and Baboo Promoth Nath Sen, for the appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Saligram Singh, for the respondent, Abdul Hai.

The Secretary of State, although made a respondent, was not represented.

The judgment of the High Court (Picot and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This suit is instituted for a declaration of right and confirmation of possession of an estate, consisting of three mouzas in the district of Mozufferpore. The plaintiff says that the estate was sold at an auction-sale held on the 15th April 1886 in execution of a certificate, purporting to be issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880 and dated the 13th January 1886, and that the defendant became purchaser of the estate at this sale for the price of Rs. 560. The estate is alleged by the plaintiff to be of the value of Rs. 40,000.

The certificate was issued in respect of road-cess stated to be due to the amount of Rs. 43-4-6.

Substantially the plaintiff's case, in the plaint, is that at the time of the auction-sale he had paid up all demands due by him; that the certificate was not in due form under the Act; that no notice under s. 10 of the Act was served on the plaintiff; and that the person to whom it is (he says) untruly alleged to have been given had no authority to receive it on his behalf; that the processes under which the sale is said to have taken place were not valid and were not duly issued and executed. Fifthly, repeating his allegation of payment, he submits that on such payment the certificate of January 13th, 1886, ought to have been cancelled, and he charges that the proceedings had against him were taken in collusion with the 2nd defendant, the purchaser. He says that he has filed a petition under s. 12, but having faint hope of a remedy by that means also files this suit. He says that although his actual possession has not been disturbed, symbolical possession has been taken by the purchaser; and the security of his title has been thereby affected; and he asks for a declaration that the certificate of January 13th, 1886, was of no effect, and that the sale was void, as the money due for road cess and public works cess had been paid up; for confirmation of his possession, and an order that the defendants 2nd and 3rd parties (the 3rd as benamidari purchaser for the 2nd), have acquired no right in the estate.

The Secretary of State was made 1st party defendant. No written statement was filed on his behalf, and he did not appear either in the Court below or before us. He is made a party respondent in this appeal.

The lower Court dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appeals.

The estate was purchased by the plaintiff in 1882. It was formerly the property of Bibi Amina, Bibi Nesar Fatima and Munzurul Fatima. Plaintiff purchased under a deed of sale from the Land Mortgage Bank, and his name was registered, under the Land Registration Act, in 1884. Plaintiff says in his evidence that he paid the cesses for the year 1884.
The cesses, in respect of which the certificate which is impeached was issued, were those falling due in 1885; they are three in number, inasmuch as the sudder jumma of the estate is Rs. 940-0-10; and under the Board's rules, for estates below Rs. 100, three kists are fixed for the year, namely, where the Fasli era prevails, June 7th, January 12th, and March 28th. The total of Rs. 43-4-6 is made up of Rs. 38-2-0 for cess, Rs. 1-15-0 for interest, and Rs. 3-3-6 for commission. The plaintiff is a person of wealth. His income from zemindaries and indigo factories is about Rs. 1,50,000 a year. We have not, however, to regard either such considerations of apparent hardship as seem involved in the sale for Rs. 560 [421] of an estate worth Rs. 40,000 in order to enable the State to recover from a person of great wealth the sum of Rs. 43-4-6. We have only to consider whether the proceedings taken under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1880, were in accordance with law; and, if not, whether they were, as the plaintiff contends, defective to such a degree, that either the certificate should be cancelled and the sale set aside under s. 20, or the sale be set aside because not made under the Act at all.

The Act (s. 7) provides that "when any arrears of the following public demands are unpaid by the person liable to pay the same, that is to say" [then follows in cls. 1 to 9 inclusive, a specification of the numerous demands to which the provision applied, to which are added, by s. 98 of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880), demands coming due under that Act), "the Collector of the district may make under his hand in Form 2 in the second schedule annexed to this Act a certificate of the amount of such arrears so remaining unpaid, and may cause the same to be filed in his office."

Section 8 provides that "subject to the provisions of this Act every certificate made under the provisions of s. 7 shall, as regards the remedies for enforcing the same, and so far only, have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court," and that in cases other than cases (7) mentioned in this Act "the Secretary of State for India in Council shall be deemed to be the decree-holder, and in all the cases mentioned the person therein named as debtor shall be deemed to be the judgment-debtor."

Section 10 provides that "when a certificate has been filed in the office of the Collector under the provisions of s. 5" (which relates to arrears due in respect of revenue) "or s. 7" (which relates to demands payable to a person other than the Collector) "such Collector shall issue to the judgment-debtor a copy of such certificate and a notice in form No. 4 in the second schedule annexed to this Act. From and after service of such notice such certificate shall bind all immovable property of such judgment-debtor situate within the jurisdiction of such Collector in the same manner and with like effect as if such immovable property had been attached under the provisions of s. 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

Sections 12 and 13 provide that when the person served with [422] notice denies his liability, he may "within thirty days after service of such notice, or where no such notice has been duly served within thirty days after execution of any process for enforcing such certificate, file a petition denying his liability before the Collector by whom such certificate has been made," and (s. 13) "such Collector shall fix a day for hearing the petition and determine whether the petitioner is liable for the whole or any part of the amount for which such certificate was made," and may set aside or vary the certificate accordingly. The Collector is to have all the powers of a Civil Court in hearing, &c., the petition; and the provisions of the Civi Procedure Code shall apply to the Collector exercising these powers. The Collector (s. 15) may refer any such petition for hearing to any Deputy Collector or Assistant or Extra Assistant Commissioner.

Section 18 provides that "every certificate made under the provisions of . . . or s. 7 . . ., may be enforced and executed upon the expiry of one month after service of the notice mentioned in s. 10," or as soon as any petition under s. 12 has been heard and determined.

Section 19 provides that "such certificate may be so enforced and executed by all or any of the ways and means provided in and by the Code of Civil Procedure for the enforcement and execution of decrees for money," &c., &c., &c., all duties, powers and authorities by the Code conferred on the Court being exercised by the Collector, or subject to his control by any Deputy Collector, &c.

These are the powers conferred by the law upon the Executive Officers. The protection given to the subject is first the right to present a petition under s. 12: and the rights given to him by s. 8, cl. (b), and by s. 20.

By s. 8 (b) the judgment-debtor may, at any time within one year after the service of the notice given to him under s. 10, bring a suit to contest his liability to pay the amount stated in the certificate and to have it cancelled; but no such suit shall be entertained unless the judgment-debtor has stated in a petition under s. 12 the ground on which he claims to have the certificate cancelled, or unless having omitted to state such ground in such petition, he shall satisfy the Civil Court that there was good reason for such omission.

[423] By this section it is provided that no certificate duly made under the provisions of this Act shall be cancelled by a Civil Court otherwise than on the grounds:

(1) that the amount stated in the certificate was actually paid or discharged before the making of such certificate;

(2) (which we need not detail);

(3) in cases other than (2), to which the present belongs, that the amount stated in the certificate was not due by the judgment-debtor under the certificate;

(4) want of jurisdiction.

Section 20 enacts that, when immovable property is sold in execution of a certificate under s. 18, and if such certificate is subsequently set aside by a competent Court, such Court may set aside such sale and may direct that the amount may be refunded to the purchaser with or without interest as the Court may direct: provided the purchaser has been made a party to the suit.

The matters of fact which the appellant contends for before us are: that no notice under s. 10 was served upon him; and that the arrears in respect of which the sale took place were, if due, paid to the proper person on the 28th January 1886 by the plaintiff's agent; and that the certificate was not, as required by law, signed by the Collector. This latter point gives rise to what may be called a question of fact, owing to the circumstance that the certificate has in some way so suffered since it was filed in the Collector's office (assuming that to have been done) that, according to the judgment of the lower Court, the place for the Collector's signature "has disappeared bodily": and the District Judge felt himself entitled, and, therefore, (we suppose), bound to resort to the presumption that it was signed "as it undoubtedly issued from the Collector's office." There are certain other alleged defects in this certificate upon which the appellant also relied.
As a matter of law it was argued that, as the money was received before the sale, that sale was illegal: first, because of the express declaration in the notice that upon payment the sale would not be held; and, second, that as the certificate is by the Act placed on the same footing as a decree, a sale could no more take place under a satisfied certificate than under a satisfied \textsuperscript{424} decree; and s. 22 (b) was cited to show that, upon payment, it falls on the Collector in the case of a certificate, and not, as in the case of a decree, upon the judgment-debtor to cause satisfaction to be entered up.

The second contention of the appellants in point of law was that (under the provisions of the Act VII of 1880) the certificate was not duly made under the provisions of the Act; that for that reason no execution could issue upon it as a decree: and that the sale made under colour of execution of such certificate was absolutely void; and further, as we understood, that, as no notice under s. 10 of the Act was given, nothing in the nature of an attachment of the property ever took place, and that no proceedings in execution under the sections of the Civil Procedure Code made applicable by s. 19 were ever had at all: and that therefore the sale was bad.

We shall first refer to the matters of fact in dispute. And at the outset we do not understand that it was seriously contested that, at the date of the issue of the certificate, January 13th, 1886, the three kists for 1885 were unpaid. This indeed is recorded as admitted by the plaintiff's pleader before the lower Court.

As to the payment of the money on January 28th, or, at any rate, on or before February 1st, we are quite unable to agree with the lower Court. We think it proved that the money was paid by Munraj Sahai, the plaintiff's agent, to Laldhari Singh, Tehsildar of Road Cess for the District. Exhibit 1 is a receipt signed by Laldhari for the sum of Rs. 431-9-0: Exhibit 2 is the counterfoil of it. Munraj says he paid this money to the Tehsildar, took No. 1 as a receipt, and wrote on the counterfoil (No. 2) the memorandum which is on the back of it. In both, the payment purports to be made on account of road-cess due in respect of Mouza Ghauspore, Road Cess Register Number 3887, which is the correct cess number of the estate. Munraj is not cross-examined Laldhari (still at the time of his examination, 6th January 1887, Tehsildar of Road Cess) says he received, on the 28th January 1886, about Rs. 175 from Munraj, at Mozufferpore, on account of road-cess payable by plaintiff on account of several mouzas. He corroborates Munraj as to Exhibits 1 and 2; the latter, the \textsuperscript{425} counterfoil, he kept. He produces a challan (Exhibit 3), which was given to him about the payment of the money. At the top of the challan is the date February 1st and the signature of the Road Cess Clerk. The challan is numbered 41. It states the money is remitted by Bibi Amina (the first in order of the names of the former owners), through Laldhari Singh, on account of cess of Mouza Ghauspore &c., Cess Towzi 3887. Dabi Persad, Treasurer for three years, says that Exhibit 3 bears his initials. He is not cross-examined as to when or under what circumstances he put them there.

Exhibit 3a is an extract from the Treasury Register for February 1886; it is produced by Dabi Pershad or on requisition to him. It records the payment of Rs. 43-9-0 for cess from Laldhari Singh, and notes the No. 41 of the challan relating to this payment, which, as we have noticed, specifies the mouza in respect of which the cess was paid. He says the date is February 1st, 1886. There are many challans on that date entered as issued, against which there are no payments. Issur Chunder Sen, Deputy Collector and Treasury Officer, in charge of the Road Cess Department, says that Exhibit 2 bears the signature of Khirod Nath Mookerjee, Head Clerk. He says that No. 1, and (as we understand the note of his evidence, which, no doubt, is a little obscure) No. 2 also, bears, not his written signature but his stamped signature, which, until lately, he appears to have used in these books when issuing them. No evidence is adduced which appears to us to displace the effect of this evidence. Jogesswar Sahai is called. He is one of the Tehsildars of Road Cess. He was given a cheque book (as it appears these books are called) K. In it there is the counterfoil and receipt relating to the demand in respect of which the certificate was issued. The "cheque" as well as the counterfoil is still there, unseparated. The amount is Rs. 43-4-6, which, and not Rs. 43-9-0, is that for which the certificate was drawn up. It bears a note written by him "agreeably to the order of January 13th, 1886, case sent up for proceedings under Act VII of 1880." He is not asked and does not say, what, or by whom, was the order of January 13th referred to in this note. He speaks of a report: if he made one, it is not deposed to or produced. It was of course on the (Exhibit Ka) that the certificate was issued. By whose order it was issued, or under what circumstances, there is no evidence whatever. He says: "I went there at the end of December and the beginning of January. Gujraj Sahai said: 'I don't know anything. If it is due, I am going to write to the mukhtear. He will pay it.' He says, a little before this, that Laldhari was one of the Tehsildars of Chukla Gargone, in which Ghouspore is, in September 1885, and he has still been (in service). The mouzas are not divided among the Tehsildars. . . . I never said that our mehal was placed under the charge of two Tehsildars."

There is one more piece of evidence which we think we should expressly notice. We cannot, of course, refer to every item of evidence in the case. It is Exhibit H, an entry from the register of the Road Cess Department. It records as of the 1st February the payment of the items making up Rs. 43-9-0. But this entry is placed subsequent to one of the date, February 25th. It is put in by the defendants: but no evidence is given about it: the date when it was written up does not appear: whether after February or how long after; if so, it is left to speak for itself.

Upon the whole evidence, that which we have referred to and that which we have been obliged not to expressly notice, we think the money was paid as the plaintiffs' witnesses deposes; that we must hold it to have been paid, on the fair balance of the evidence. There is reason to think, notwithstanding Issur Chunder Sen's expression of opinion, that different "cheque books" were issued to different Tehsildars, which in some cases, at any rate, contained, each of them, counterfoils and receipts for the same demand. It is true that Laldhari's "cheque" No. 1 is dated July 17th for cess down to September: and Issur Chunder says kist money is never asked for in advance. But then the document is unexplained by evidence on the part of the defendants, and the payment of it sworn to, or corroborated, by officials still in the employment of the Cess Department, and by the entries which were not seriously impeached by any evidence brought from that Department.

Exhibit H may, or may not, be suspicious, according to the nature and history of it, as to which there is no evidence: and there might well have been. It is true, that Exhibit 1 is for some annas more than Exhibit Ka, or the certificate based on it. Which of them is correct, there is no evidence to show. They differ, not in the amount of cess, but in the charges for interest and commission; mysterious items in these cess bills, which often attract the attention, but as to which one of us can say that in no case relating to cess demands has he ever read any evidence showing how the interest and commission were computed. It may be that in Laldhari's bill, interest was computed to a later period; and that in Jogesswar's a larger charge was made for commission, on account of the calls made by him for collection. But this is conjecture: the defendants have not thought fit to develop any case on the point: and we think it, and the comment on H, wholly insufficient to justify the Court in disregarding the strong affirmative proof of payment. Then Jogesswar's evidence, and also the service of the notice under s. 10 on the plaintiff (treating the latter as established, as the defendant urges that it is) would make the payment of the money soon after highly probable. It is improbable that, if this formidable certificate was served, or notice of it served, on the plaintiff personally, in respect of property so lately purchased by him and of such value, that he would have neglected to give directions about it: while the omission to pay up until then the cess for 1885 may, perhaps, be explained by this estate having been, as Jogesswar states, in tICA.

We hold payment proved. Upon payment, it became the duty of the Collector under s. 22 to enter satisfaction upon the certificate: and also in the Register kept under s. 21.

Section 22 creates a different law as to the satisfaction, both entry of it and proof of it, from that existing under the Civil Procedure Code: under which it is practically cast on the judgment-debtor to see that satisfaction shall be entered, and satisfaction not entered up is treated as, qua satisfaction of the decree, a nullity. But s. 22 casts on the Collector the duty of entering satisfaction, and nothing prevents the judgment-debtor under this formidable certificate of procedure from, at any rate, proving satisfaction of the certificate, if it be satisfied. That being so, we have a sale made in execution of a satisfied [428] decree at a tremendous under-value: and applying the principles laid down in the case of Abdul Hye v. Nawab Rai (1), we hold that the sale was absolutely void; even assuming that the bona fides of the purchaser was as unquestionable as his good fortune was in buying an estate at $\frac{1}{80}$ th of its value.

No one can in this country pretend to do more than arrive at a conclusion upon conflicting testimony as a matter of probability. If we should be in error in the conclusion that the money was paid, we are deceived by a conspiracy involving both forgery and prejury, such that, if it existed as the District Judge must suppose, it would show that the Road Cess Department in this district is corrupt to the core: a startling state of things, could we suppose it to exist, considering the tremendous powers given by the Act for enforcing the demands made out by the officers of that Department. We would refer here also to the following passage in Mohan Ram Jha v. Baboo Shib Dutt Singh (2): "It is clear also, from the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1868, that the certificate is to have the effect of a decree and that for sales in execution thereof the whole of the procedure prescribed by Act VIII of 1852 must be adopted. Therefore, as in the case of execution of decrees, if a party, before the sale takes place, comes into Court and pays the amount of the debt due or tenders the amount of the debt due, the Court is bound to receive the money and to abstain from selling the property attached; so in the case of the property which has been under the certificate for a Government demand, if the proprietor either before or at the time of sale come into Court, and before the property is actually sold, tender the amount of the demand, the Collector is bound to hold his hand and to abstain from selling the property."

Apart, however, from the question of payment, we think the sale must be set aside as not made under a certificate duly made under the provisions of the Act.

The Act is an extremely stringent one: the policy of it we do not of course discuss. But we suppose it to be that, as a matter of executive convenience, demands of a public nature, the justice of which has been enquired into and certified by officials of high rank and unquestionable integrity, may properly enjoy, for the [429] enforcement of them, the very exceptional privileges accorded to them by this Act; but subject to whatever safeguards are provided by the Act by the procedure laid down in it.

We think, therefore, that that procedure must, according to the familiar rule in construing and applying enactments of this nature, be strictly followed. The certificate does not bear a signature. It did not bear a signature on August 20th, 1886, as the note upon it shows. That note does not show that at that date the place for the signature had then been removed, as from the District Judge's judgment, seems now to be the case. We say "seems," for in the slovenly fashion so common in some parts of this Presidency, a copy only, and not the original, has been sent up with the record. In the state in which the document was when put in evidence, we think it lay on the defendants to show that it had been duly signed. Upon the evidence, we must find as to this in the negative. There is not a title of evidence, as there might and ought to have been, to show by whose order it was issued, and by whom it was signed, if it was signed by any one, which we greatly doubt. In the notice under s. 10 put in by the defendant which, according to the form given in the schedule, is to be issued by the Collector, there is a blank where the name of the Collector ought to be. If the Collector had signed the one, it may be supposed he would have signed the other. This defective notice confirms the conclusion to be drawn from the certificate itself; under what circumstances the certificate has been tampered with, and in what way, there is no evidence: not a question was put by Court or defendant, on the subject; one of the many respects in which the form in which this case comes before us, is imperfect and unsatisfactory. Having regard to these circumstances, we must hold that the certificate was not signed by the Collector or by any person authorized to sign it under the provisions of the Act.

Then the certificate was not addressed to the plaintiff. The second column of it, in place of being filled up as it ought to be, contains the following description:—"Bibi Amina and Bibi Nesar Fatima and Munzurul Fatima within the property purchased by Babu Gujraj Sahai." This defect runs through all the subsequent proceedings. In the notice to the Nazir, Exhibit 5, [430] in execution, dated 18th March 1886, the heading is as follows:—"Under the orders of the Deputy Collector of Zillah Mozufferpore, The Government (Decree-holder) v. Bibi Amina and Bibi Nesar Fatima and Bibi Munzurul Fatima, in connection with the property purchased by Babu Gujrai Sahai (Debtors)."
Nay, the memorandum of bids of sale, Exhibit 7, describes the property sold as:

"Memorandum of bids of sale, of the right and interest owned by Mussammum Bibi Amina, Bibi Nesar Fatima and Bibi Munzurul Fatima, in connection with the property purchased by Babu Gujraj Sahai, in Mouza Ghousepore, Chuck, Mjuahed, Chuckla Garjoul, Pergunnah Bisara, bearing Towzi No. 9656 and Cess No. 3887."

The sale-certificate to the third defendant has not been put in: for all we can tell, all that was purchased was the "right and interest owned by" the ladies, and not the plaintiffs' estate at all.

We think that these two defects are fatal to the certificate. There are others, which have been dwell on in arguments before us. But these are enough. We think it absolutely incumbent on the Courts, when considering the validity of sales under this Act, to rigidly require an exact compliance with the formalities prescribed by the Legislature: to do so at least as rigidly as the Courts at home have, for instance, in copyright cases and in many others, insisted on exact obedience to prescribed formalities. In this kind of case, the matter is of infinitely greater importance: as this appeal will illustrate.

It is said that the plaintiff could not have been misled, if he got the notice; as he of course knew that he was the real owner. That is true, in this case perhaps; and if he did get the notice, his prompt payment is well accounted for. But that is not the question. The question is, shall slovenly disregard of the formalities prescribed by the Legislature be treated as immaterial, or as invalidating the acts done under colour of its authority? As in the case of Lala Mobaruk v. The Secretary of State for India (1), we hold that the non-compliance with the provisions prescribed by the Act prevented the Collector from being clothed with the powers conferred on him by the Act, and that the sale was not a sale under execution of a certificate duly made under the provisions of the Act, and was absolutely void.

The judgment of Mr. Boxwell, the Commissioner, in appeal from the Deputy Collector, was put in, without objection, as evidence. We have not relied on it: but we are glad to find that our conclusion is the same as that arrived at by him: that the certificate was not signed and that the money was paid, as plaintiff contends. We are wholly unable to agree with the lower Court in treating para. 6 of the plaintiff's petition to the Commissioner as amounting to an admission that the money was not paid. It is going far to treat such a statement in such a document as evidence to be seriously relied on. We must express our regret that the District Judge should have cast a most serious imputation in his judgment upon the plaintiff's son, who is Vice-Chairman of the Road Cess Department. He says, "it is part of defendant's case that "he "has been able to manipulate the books." There is not a title of evidence to show that he could do so; not a suggestion in the evidence that he did do so: and no evidence that they were tampered with at all. We feel it our duty to say that there is nothing in the evidence to afford the smallest justification for this most serious charge; which is none the less a charge, apparently influencing the District Judge, because put as a recital of part of the defendant's case.

(1) 11 C. 200.
Holding the sale void on the two grounds of satisfaction before sale and of the invalidity of the certificate, we think it unnecessary to go into the other grounds of fact, or of law, argued by the appellant.

We wish to add a remark upon the argument addressed to us, that as Act XI of 1859 is to be read with this Act, the procedure prescribed and the powers conferred under that Act are applicable (and particularly ss. 6 and 18 of that Act) to the recovery of public demands of the nature arising in this case. We wholly dissent from this view. It has at no time been attempted by the Legislature to place demands in respect of cess on the same footing as revenue demands to which Act XI of 1859 applies. They have been always kept carefully separate in legislation: and for obvious reasons, although the absolute powers of the Collector under s. 6 have been habitually, under administrative orders from the Board of Revenue, used to enforce payment of cess demands amongst others.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and make a decree in favour of the plaintiff in the terms of his prayer. The declarations made will be as between the Secretary of State as well as between him and the other defendants. The plaintiff must have his costs throughout as against all the respondents, including the Secretary of State. It is true that the Secretary of State has not been represented in this matter, but the Government has supported the validity of the proceedings in this case. Two months’ time was obtained in the Court below to enable a written statement to be filed on behalf of the Secretary of State, and we think that under the circumstances, having regard to the source of the errors which have led to these proceedings, the Government ought to be liable for costs quite as much as the other defendants. Whether the Government will also think itself bound to consider the position of the defendant, the unsuccessful purchaser, it is not for us to say.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

SETH JAI DAYAL (Defendant) v. RAM SAHAE AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).

Contract—Contract which had become impossible to perform—Further and other relief—Damages—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 56—Novation.

Money having been advanced, a contract was made to secure repayment of it by a usufructuary mortgage, with possession to be given to the lender of land, which however had then already been attached under a decree and had been taken under the Collector’s management under s. 326 of the Code of Civil Procedure. To perform the contract by delivery of possession of the land having thus become impossible, it was held that the lender of the money was entitled to compensation, the damages being the amount of the advance, together with interest from the date when, had performance been possible, the land should have been made over to him.

Appeal from a decree (6th March 1885) modifying a decree (3rd September 1883) of the District Judge of Sitapur.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the respondents against Seth Sitaram, whom the appellant, by revivor, represented, and related to the following transaction: Seth Sitaram, the defendant, being indebted to Shukulji Gur Parshad, a Mahajan of Cawnpore, to the amount of Rs. 16,000, in consideration of that amount and the promise of a further loan of Rs. 5,000, mortgaged to him by way of zur-i-peshgi lease, dated 11th June 1877, villages comprised in talukhdan estate, in effect contracting to give possession for a term commencing on the 23rd September 1877. The Rs. 5,000 were not advanced by Gur Parshad, and he never entered into possession of the land. On the 7th July 1877, the mortgaged estate, which had previously been under attachment in execution of a decree, was taken under the direct management of the Collector, the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur, under s. 326 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On the 13th April 1882, Gur Parshad issued a notice to the defendant, calling upon him to pay the money due under his contract. To this the defendant replied, asserting that the contract had become void in consequence of the non-performance by Gur Parshad of his part of it. On the 17th June 1882, Gur Parshad died, having left all his property to the second and third plaintiffs, then minors, of whom the first became guardian, obtaining a certificate under Act XL of 1858. The suit commenced on 11th June 1883, claimed completion of the terms of the zur-i-peshgi lease of 11th June 1877, offering to pay at the time of possession delivered Rs. 5,000; and, in the alternative, a decree for Rs. 27,520 to be realized by the sale of the property, with a mortgage lien thereon until such sale: also, any other relief. The defence was that the document of 11th June 1877 was in operative, being an attempt to revive a time-barred debt for Rs. 15,000; and further, that the contract had become null and void.

The District Judge dismissed the suit, upon the grounds adverted to in the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, who, after stating the above facts continued thus:

Upon these facts, the Judge held that the contract was void, in the terms of s. 56 of "the Indian Contract Act, 1872;" and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The grounds upon which the Judge refrained from acting under the final clause of s. 56 of Act IX of 1872 are thus stated in his decision:

"There remains the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any equitable relief other than the remedies which they have themselves indicated.

"When an agreement is discovered to be void, or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement is bound to restore it, or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it.

"I am, however, unable to find that the defendant in this case received any advantage under the agreement, which became void on the 7th July 1877. Prior to that date the plaintiffs' representative could scarcely have recovered from him the amount of the debt on the notes; and in any case, the rights of Gur Parshad, as endorser, revived against the defendant as acceptor as soon as the contract as to the lease became void. It would be impossible to hold that the void contract had the effect of extending to six years the term within which the plaintiffs might sue on the promissory note."
I agree with the Judge in thinking that the zur-i-peshgi lease became void in the way stated by the Judge, but I am unable to follow the learned Judge in his reasons for refusing to award compensation for the loss sustained by the promisor through the non-performance of this promise. I consider it proved that, on the execution of the document of the 11th June 1877, the obligation created by the note of hand, last renewed on the 20th May, which fell due on the 11th June 1877, was cancelled, and the first obligation created by the zur-i-peshgi lease was substituted for it. This was, I consider, a valid novation; and in the terms of s. 62, Act IX of 1872, the defendant was thereby discharged from his liability to perform the original contract, i.e., pay Rs. 16,000. And this being so, I must hold that plaintiff is equitably entitled to recover from the defendant Rs. 16,000, with reasonable interest thereon from the 11th June 1877 up to date of payment. It has been objected for the defendant that the suit is barred (qua the relief to which I hold the plaintiff to be equitably entitled) by the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, sch. II, arts. 57 and 64. But, in my judgment, neither of these articles apply; and the article applicable is art. 116.

The decree of the District Judge is modified. The plaintiff will recover from the defendants Rs. 16,000, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, from the 11th June 1877 to date of payment. The rest of the plaintiff’s claim is dismissed. The costs of the suit will be borne by the parties in proportion to the extent of the plaintiff’s claim now decreed and dismissed.

In assessing costs the valuation of the claim as now decreed will be taken as Rs. 21,760.

[435] Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant, argued that the suit was not maintainable. The plaintiff’s equity was to be remitted back to the rights existing at the time when the document of 11th June 1877 was executed; performance having been impossible, and the contract void (s. 56 of the Indian Contract Act IX of 1872). Those rights, which had arisen out of the advances made by Shukulji Gur Parshad on hundi-transactions in and before 1877, might be enforceable, if a suit upon them was not barred by time. It was submitted that such a suit was barred, however, there not having been any complete novation effected, as had been supposed by the Judicial Commissioner,

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner is correct, and ought to be affirmed.

The action was brought upon a contract, dated the 11th June 1877, and was commenced on the 11th June 1883. The contract was not a void contract as was supposed by the Subordinate Judge. It was a binding contract; but it was one which the defendant was not able to fulfil. He states: “I have of my own accord and free will, in consideration of my having taken an advance of Rs. 21,000, put the said share, with the exception of talukdari sir lands, in possession of Shukuliji Gur Parshad, Mahajan, resident of Cawnpore, by way of settlement in a lease and farm for period of twelve years from 1285 till 1296 Fusli,’ that is, from the 23rd of September 1877, a date within the period of limitation. Then he shows that the whole of that Rs. 21,000 which he admits having received, in fact had not been received; he had not received
Rs. 5,000 of that amount; and although the contract states that he had put Shukulji into possession, he had not in fact put him into possession. Then the contract goes on: "The first condition is that the said Shukulji" (that is the ancestor of the plaintiffs) "shall retain possession as lessee of all the villages of the ilaka to the extent of seven annas for the stipulated term." There was a contract, therefore that he was to have possession of that property for a term commencing [436] on the 23rd of September 1877. It turned out that the estate had been seized into the hands of the Collector under a decree against the defendant, and it was impossible for him to the plaintiffs into possession.

Then the question arises, what were the damages for their not being put into possession? The damages awarded were for the Rs. 16,000 which had been received, and interest upon that amount from the date of the contract, at 12 per cent. If the defendant had given possession, as was intended by the terms of this contract, the plaintiffs would have had the property for a period to commence from the 23rd of September 1877 as a security for Rs. 16,000 and interest.

The plaintiffs not having been put into possession, and the defendant not being able to give them possession, the damages which they sustained by not having that security for the Rs. 16,000 and interest were the Rs. 16,000 and interest which the Judicial Commissioner has allowed.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner ought to be affirmed, and the appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Kissorimohun Roy and Others (Defendants) v. Harsukh Das (Plaintiff). [23rd July and 1st August, 1889.]

Attachment—Wrongful attachment—Claim to attached property—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 278, 283, 483—Attachment before judgment—Liability of creditor who caused attachment of goods not belonging to the debtor—Damases of sale—Difference between English and Indian law on the subject.

Orders for attachment in security under s. 483 of the Civil Procedure Code being issued on the ex parte application of the creditor, who is bound to specify [437] the property which he desires to have attached and its estimated value, it follows that the attachment is the direct act of the creditor, for which he is immediately responsible. Should the goods be proved not to belong to the debtor, the litigation and delay, and also any depreciation of the goods by an intermediate fall in the market, between attachment and sale, are the natural and necessary consequences of the creditor's unlawful act.

The plaintiff having taken without success, the summary proceeding under s. 278, to get the release of goods attached under s. 487, in a suit to which he was not a party, afterwards, in a suit brought by him in accordance with s. 283, established his right of property in the goods; * Held*, that (a) in order to entitle him to the full indemnity for the wrongful attachment, he was not bound to allege and prove that the defendants had resisted his previous application under s. 278 maliciously, or without probable cause; and that (b), the goods having been sold under the Court's order, the difference in market value of the goods at the time of their attachment (November 1883) and their price when they were sold (June 1884), the selling prices having fallen intermediatively must be added to the damages.

* Held*, also that, without bringing under review the judgment under s. 278, the effect of the judgment in the suit brought in accordance with s. 283 was to supersede the order under s. 278 and to render it inconclusive. The procedure on attachment not being the same in India as in England, where a judgment-creditor is not responsible for the consequences of a sale, under a judicial order, of goods taken in execution in satisfaction of his debt, that proposition does not hold good under the Indian procedure; and Walker v. Olding (1) is inapplicable to the latter.

APPEAL from a decree (13th March 1886) of the High Court (2) affirming a decree (28th April 1884) of the High Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought on 28th April 1884 by the respondent, Harsukh Das, in accordance with s. 283, Civil Procedure Code, to establish his right of property in, or a lien upon, 922 bales of jute which had been attached on 28th November 1883, before judgment, under s. 483, by the present appellants, Kissorimohan Roy and his brothers, in a suit brought by them on 23rd November 1883, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs District, against Borodakant Dey and Umakant Dey, at that time dealers in jute. That suit was one to recover about Rs. 4,500 from the Deys in respect of transactions [438] between them and the Roys, who caused to be attached the above bales of jute the screwing-godowns of Harsukh Das at Chipore as the property of the Deys. A claim was preferred, under s. 278, by Harsukh Das, who was to screw the jute into bales, having had transactions with the Deys in the autumn of 1883, and having made a contract on 7th November 1883 with them, under which he was to have a lien on their jute for advances made by him, and for interest and other charges. Harsukh Das, claim was disallowed on the 15th April 1884, by the Subordinate Judge, under whose order, afterwards made for the benefit of, all concerned, the jute was sold on 30th June 1884, realizing Rs. 12,053. This was upon a decline in the market price.

On the dismissal of his claim, and before the sale, Harsukh Das brought this suit claiming to have his right of property in the jute at the time of the attachment declared and claiming that, if the Court should find that he was not in fact the proprietor as against the Roys, he should be declared to have a lien on the jute for his advances to the Deys, amounting to Rs. 42,025; also, if the jute should be sold, that he should have decree for its value when attached, viz., Rs. 23,355.

The Courts below concurred in conclusions opposed to those of the Subordinate Judge, and held that the plaintiff, at the time of the attachment in November 1883, was the actual owner, by purchase from the Deys, of

(2) See Kishori Mohun Rai v. Hursook Das, 12 C. 696.
848 of the bales, and was therefore entitled to recover the full market value of those bales at the date of the attachment; and as to the residue of the bales, that the plaintiff had under an agreement in writing with the Deys, the lien claimed by him. The result to these appellants was that the market value of the 848 bales having fallen largely between the 25th November 1883, when they were attached, and the 30th of June 1884, when they were sold by order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, these appellants were declared liable to make good to the plaintiff that depreciation, amounting to Rs. 12,703-12. And they were also declared liable to pay the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,690-10 in respect of his lien. The total damages decreed were Rs. 25,584.

An appeal from the decree of Wilson, J., in the Original Jurisdiction, was heard by a Divisional Bench (Garth, C. J., [439] and Cunningham, J.) The hearing of the case and the judgments on appeal are fully reported in I.L.R., 12 Calc., 697. The result was that the appeal was dismissed.

The Roys appealed to Her Majesty in Council, and on the 12th February 1889, before their appeal came on for hearing, an application was made on their behalf by Mr. R. V. Doyne, on affidavits setting forth that there had been a judgment in their favour by the Subordinate Judge on the claim made by Harsukh Das under s. 278, to their Lordships, Lord Watson, Lord Hobhouse, and Sir R. Couch, then present. The petition was to have that judgment, not then contained in the record of the appeal, added thereto. It was argued that the appellants were entitled to have this judgment made part of the record, and to refer to it, as showing that they had, in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, acted in good faith throughout. The application was refused, on the ground that this judgment should not have affected the question raised in the subsequent independent suit permitted by s. 283.

Afterwards, on the hearing of this appeal (July 23rd).

Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellants, argued that the Courts below had taken an incorrect view of the plaintiff's right to damages. It was not disputed that, as the Courts found, the property was not that of the Deys, but of Harsukh Das. But it was insisted for the appellants that, as they had acted bona fide in attaching the jute in 1883, believing it to be that of the defendants, as it had remained in custody of the Court, and as it had been sold by order of the Court, they were not liable for the amount of damages decreed by the Courts below. The attachment could not be regarded as having been made without reasonable cause, and the respondent was an assenting party to the order made by the Court for the subsequent sale, which took place to prevent loss by injury to the goods in specie. The respondent could not claim as damages the reduction in price, the result of the fall in the market. In a case like the present, the party attaching goods for security, even although he might have caused the attachment of goods not the property of his debtor, could only be held liable for such damages as had been occasioned by his acting without reasonable and probable cause; or by his having wilfully misled the Court into action, whereby the opposite [440] party had been injured; or by reason of his having acted with malice. The attachment was the act of the officer of the Court, and it would be contrary to the principle declared in the judgment in Walker v. Olding (1), that a person who merely conducted litigation in

(1) 1 H. & C. 621=9 Jur. N. S. 53=32 L.J. Exch. 142.
Court should be held liable for what he had done in good faith. Reference was made to Walker v. Olding (1), The Quartz Hill Consolidated Gold-mining Company v. Eyre (2), Mitchell v. Mathura Das (3).

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. J. H. A. Bransou, for the respondent, contended that the appeal must be determined on the fact, found by both the Courts below, that the goods at the time of the attachment were the plaintiff's, rendering the attachment illegal. It was no part of their case that it was malicious, nor was it necessary for them to assert that there was an absence of probable cause, although no admission was made as to the latter, of which the Committee were not in a position to judge. The finding of the Courts below must be taken as to all the matters of fact, in which they have concurred, no ground having been shown by the appellants for impeaching that finding. The attachment was illegal, as depriving the plaintiff of his right; and the illegality was sufficiently brought home to the defendants by their having set the Alipore Court in motion. At their own risk they had caused the attachment, and the order of the Court in directing the sale of the goods to save further loss was an executive act, not a judicial proceeding; which act was the direct consequence of the defendant's mistake. The Civil Procedure enacted the law, which was not identical with English law on the subject, though, if, in Walker v. Olding (1), the defendants had pointed out the particular goods to the Sheriff's officer, the decision would probably have been different. Here the wrongful attachment was directly occasioned by the appellants, who were therefore responsible for all the direct consequences.

Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q. C., replied.

On a subsequent day (1st August) their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:

Lord Watson.—The present appellants, in a suit brought by them before the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, obtained a decree for a debt of Rs. 4,523 against two persons, who, in these proceedings, are called the Dey's, on the 7th January 1884. During its dependence, the appellants made application, in terms of s. 483 of the Civil Procedure Code, for attachment in security of 1,900 bales of jute, more or less, then lying in the present respondent's premises at Chitapore, which they alleged to be the property of one of the Dey's, the defendants in the suit. On the 28th November 1883 a perwana was issued, directing the Nazir of the Court "to proceed to the spot and make an inventory of the bales of jute actually attached, the same will be identified by Hari Churn Sircar on plaintiff's behalf.

The Nazir, in execution of the warrant, proceeded to the respondent's premises on the 28th November, and there attached a quantity of jute which was pointed out to him by the appellants as the property of Borodakant Dey consisting of 848 bales, which the respondent alleged had been purchased by him from the Dey's, and 74 bales over which he alleged that they had given him a lien for advances. The respondent then preferred a claim to the goods attached under s. 278 of the Code, which was disallowed, after inquiry, by the Subordinate Judge, on the 15th April 1884.

On the 28th April 1884 the respondent, as authorized by s. 283 of the Code, instituted the suit in which this appeal is taken before the High

Indian Court at Calcutta, in order to establish the rights which he claimed in the goods, and for damages in respect of their wrongful attachment. By decree dated the 28th December 1884, Wilson, J., declared that the respondent was sole and absolute proprietor of the 848 bales, and had a valid and effectual lien upon the remainder for advances exceeding their value, and assessed damages at Rs. 24,584, being the market value of the jute at the time of the attachment. The Court of Appeal, on the 13th March 1886, affirmed the judgment of Wilson, J., with costs.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge, dismissing the respondent's claim, was not brought under review in these proceedings before the High Court; but the effect of the judgment of the High Court has been to supersede his decree and render altogether inconclusive. The goods in question were sold in June or July 1884, by order of the Subordinate Judge, when, owing to the intermediate fall in the market, the price obtained for them was about half of what they were worth at the date of the attachment.

The validity of the respondent's claim to these 922 bales of jute depends upon the authenticity of the documents of title produced and founded on by him, which has been affirmed in this action by the concurrent findings of both Courts below. In the argument addressed to their Lordships the appellants did not impeach these findings; but they maintained that damages were assessed on an erroneous principle, and that the respondent was not entitled to recover more than the price which the jute realized when sold by order of the Subordinate Judge in the year 1884.

The appellants argued that to condemn them in payment of the market value of the jute on the 28th November 1883 was, in reality, to make them responsible for delay occasioned by litigation, and that the respondent could not recover the difference between that value and the depreciated price arising from such delay, unless he alleged and proved that they had litigated maliciously and without probable cause. That is a rule which obtains between the parties to a suit when the defendant suffers loss through its institution and dependence. It does not apply to proceedings taken by the injured party, after the wrong is done in order to obtain redress. But, in this case, there has been no action and no proceeding instituted by the appellants against the respondent Harsukh Das. The summary proceeding under s. 278 was taken by the respondent for the purpose of getting the release of an attachment issued in a suit to which he was not a party; and it does not appear to their Lordships that, in order to entitle him to recover full indemnity for the wrongful attachment of his goods, the respondent is bound to allege and prove that the appellants resisted his application maliciously, and without probable cause.

The appellants mainly relied upon the English case of Walker v. Olding (1) which was cited as an authority for the proposition that a judgment-creditor is not responsible for the consequences of a sale, under a judicial order, of goods illegally taken in execution in satisfaction of his debt. Walker v. Olding (1) would have been an authority of importance had the law of execution been the same in India as in England, but there is in that respect no analogy between the two systems. In England the execution of a decree for money is entrusted to the Sheriff, an officer who is bound to use his own discretion, and is directly responsible to those interested for the illegal seizure of goods which do not belong to the judgment-debtor. In India warrants for attachment in security are issued on the ex parte application of the creditor, who is bound to specify the property which he desires to attach, and its estimated value. In the present case, by the terms of the perwana, no discretion was allowed to the officer of Court in regard to the selection of the goods which he attached; his only function was to secure under legal fence all bales of jute in the respondent's premises which were pointed out by the appellants. The illegal attachment of the respondent's jute on the 28th November 1883 was thus the direct act of the appellants, for which they became immediately responsible in law; and the litigation and delay, and consequent depreciation of the jute, being the natural and necessary consequences of their unlawful act, their Lordships are of opinion that the liability which they incurred has been rightly estimated at the value of the goods upon the day of the attachment.

(1) 1 H. and C. 621 = 9 Jur. N.S. 53 = 32 L.J. Exch. 142,

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment appealed from ought to be affirmed. The appellants must pay the costs of this appeal.

[On Appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Ramsingh and another (Plaintiffs) v. Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki (Defendant).

Oudh Talukhdars—Title obtained by Talukhdar under his sanad—Effect of confiscation of 1858 upon previous gift—Attempt to establish trust for claimants as to part of talukhdari estate—Claim to sub-proprietary right distinguished.

The sanad granting a talukhdar's estate confers prima facie an absolute title upon the grantee.

A gift of villages by a talukhdar to collateral relations, if effectively made in 1850, and whether absolute or only for the maintenance of the donees out of the rents and profits, was rendered, by the effect of the confiscation of 1858, inoperative after that event to establish an interest as against the talukhdar holding under a sanad comprising the villages.

Where a claim was upon the principle that the conduct of a sanad-holding talukhdar and of his predecessor had been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his taluk interests, as to which ground was supposed to have been given for his relation to claim. Held, that such a claim was not established merely by the claimants having been left in possession of villages, and having paid to the talukhdar only the proportion of the revenue assessed upon them, during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh, and afterwards. Held, also, that the question of the claimants having an under-proprietary right in such villages was entirely irrelevant to a claim for a declaration that they had proprietary right therein, on which latter title they sought to found a right to have their names entered in the settlement record; and held that although there are cases in which the claimant of a proprietary right may be allowed to maintain, on the same facts, that he is an under-proprietor, this claim was not one of them.

Appeal from a decree (5th April 1886) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (30th October 1885) of the District Judge of Lucknow, dismissing the suit of the appellants with costs.

In the suit out of which this appeal arose, the plaintiffs sought a declaration that they were in full proprietary possession of six villages in Pergunnah Haidargarh, part of the Pokhra Ansari Taluk, of which the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki was Manager on behalf of the talukhdar, a minor, under the Court of Wards. They claimed under a deed of gift to their father, Babu Gurdet Singh, from his nephew Rajah Sahaj Ram Buksh, then the talukhdar, executed in 1258 (Fasli), corresponding to 1267 (Hijri), and to 1850 (Christian). This alleged donor was the deceased elder brother of the present minor talukhdar. The question on this appeal was, whether they had established their proprietary right, it being insisted against them that the mere fact of their possession for many years was consistent with the villages having only been given to them for their maintenance; and that, according to the defendant, was what had occurred. The plaintiffs alleged that they were entitled to mutation of names in the settlement record, but had only recently required and applied for it; having lately mortgaged parts of the villages, which rendered it necessary for them to have their names recorded as proprietors.

The defendant, the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, as Manager of the Pokhra Ansari Estate, on behalf of the minor talukhdar, admitted that the parties were descended from a common grandfather Rajah Surkham Singh; but alleged that the taluk descended by old family custom, and in accordance with the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, to a single heir, while the chutbhayas (or cadets of the family) were entitled only to maintenance; the plaintiffs holding the disputed villages as guzaradars (or holders) of subsistence allowance. He disputed the deed of gift of 1850, which, as he contended was of no operation, in consequence of the confiscation of the 15th March 1858, the revival of the talukhdari system in place of the village system, the summary settlement of 1859, the talukhdari-sanad, and the legislation of the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869. The minor talukhdar was entitled, according to the defendant, to an absolute proprietary right, without being liable in respect of any trust, express or implied.

At the hearing, upon issues raising the questions of the genuineness of the deed of gift, and the effect of the plaintiffs' long possession, it appeared that the latter held possession, paying to the talukhdar only the revenue assessed upon the villages, some of their witnesses describing their tenure as pulkitadari.

The District Judge, without finding that the alleged deed of gift was genuine, decided that, if it was, it would have been inoperative, for the reasons above stated. Although the sanad, and the law, protected inferior rights, this suit having been brought for the full proprietary right, being to all intents and purposes a suit for the partition of the talukh, could not be maintained for the under-proprietary right.

On an appeal, urging that the talukhdar had by this conduct constituted himself a trustee for the appellants, who also, failing their rights as proprietors, were entitled to a declaration of their rights as under-proprietors, the Judicial Commissioner, intimating that he had no doubt of the genuineness of the deed of gift of 1855, said:—
“But I am of opinion that under the terms of Lord Canning’s proclamation of the 15th March 1858, the deed of gift ceased to be of effect from the date of that proclamation. The words of the proclamation are clear. ‘With the above mentioned exceptions the proprietary right in the soil of the province is confiscated,’ and the plaintiffs’ right is not among the exceptions. If the plaintiffs had a right to a sub-settlement, their right was no doubt protected by the letters printed in the schedule to Act I of 1869; but the plaintiffs cannot bring themselves within the terms of Act XXVI of 1866, and what they claimed in this suit was the proprietary right in the villages. The statement that under-proprietary right only was claimed is an after-thought put forward for the first time at the hearing of the appeal.

“I am unable to find that the evidence shows that the talukhdar by his conduct constituted himself a trustee for the plaintiffs.” The trust must [Hardeo Baksh v. Jawahir Singh (1)] have been created at some time after the grant of the talukhdari-sanad, and I can find nothing in the evidence to suggest the creation of any such trust. The evidence goes no further than to show that plaintiffs were allowed to hold the villages as cadets of the family. When attempts at alienation were made, they were resisted; and in 1871 the talukhdar endeavoured to get the villages made liable for his debts.

On this appeal,

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellants, adverted to their uninterupted possession, and that of their father before them, of the villages, in which he contended that they certainly had rights. [447] The family connection of the parties, their payment only of the Government revenue, the acquiescence of the talukhdar for the time being in a state of things favourable to the plaintiffs’ claim, went far to show that he had recognized a trust for them. At all events, the appellants had shown themselves entitled to rights as under-proprietors. He referred to the judgment in Gauri Shunker v. The Maharaja of Bulwampore (2), showing that a plaintiff, seeking by his plaint, a direct settlement in superior-proprietary right, might modify his claim to one for a sub-settlement of an under-proprietary right. The appellants were entitled to a decree stating what their rights had been found to be, and that there ought to be a sub-settlement with them.

Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q. C., and Mr. C. C. Macrae, for the respondents, contended that the only ground on which the plaintiffs could maintain the claim which they had made, upon the issue which they had raised, had failed entirely, leaving them no right of falling back on the claim to a sub-settlement. The case cited was distinguishable, and the present claim was, in effect, disposed of by what their Lordships had said in Hasdar Ali Khan v. Nawab Ali (3). The plaintiffs could not, on this record, rely, for a decree, upon any title they might have as under-proprietors, which might or might not be brought forward, but had not been put in issue.

he holds that taluk. The plaintiffs claim to be proprietors of the villages by virtue of a deed of gift, which was dated in the year 1850, and of possession taken under that deed, and continued up to the present time. The deed of gift was made by the son of the then Rajah, or talukhdar, who was the manager of the estate, and made to the brother of the then talukhdar, who is the father of the plaintiffs. The genuineness of the deed is disputed; but it has been held to be genuine by [448] the Judicial Commissioner; and for the purposes of the present appeal the correctness of the holding may be assumed. But there is no doubt that the deed of gift (whether it is an absolute gift, or one for maintenance only, is a matter of dispute) was displaced by Lord Canning’s proclamation; and that the sanad of the taluk conferred an absolute title upon the grantee prima facie.

The plaintiffs base their claim upon the principle of those decisions of this Committee, in which it has been held that the conduct of the holder of a sanad has been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his sanad, interests in the property which he has by that conduct either granted to other people, or given them ground to claim. But the plaintiffs do not show that there has been any such conduct beyond the fact that they have been left in possession of the property during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh, and down to the present time.

The talukhdar has paid to the Government the revenue for the whole taluk, and the plaintiffs have paid the talukhdar that share of the revenue which would be payable for the villages that they hold.

They are now desirous of selling or mortgaging the property.

They have attempted to do so, and they have failed because they cannot get a mutation of names; and the present suit is a declaratory suit, in which they seek a declaration that they are the proprietors of the property in order that they may obtain a mutation of names.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the mere fact of possession which is consistent with an intention to give maintenance as well as proprietorship, does not establish any case against the talukhdar, obliging him to make the plaintiffs proprietors of that portion of his taluk.

Other cases are now set up. One is that the plaintiffs have a good title by adverse possession. Possession may be adverse or not, according to circumstances; and the question of adverse or non-adverse possession is mainly a question of fact. But there has been no allegation of adverse possession in the plaint, and no issue raised as to it before the Court below. Their Lordships think that it is impossible now to suggest a case of adverse possession.

[449] Then the plaintiffs claim that, if they are not proprietors, they have at all events a sub-proprietary right; and there are cases in which it would be quite just and proper to allow one who comes to claim recovery of villages, or the right to a settlement in villages, on the ground of a proprietary right, to maintain upon the same facts that he is in effect a sub-proprietor; but this is not such a case. The question of sub-proprietary right is entirely irrelevant to the relief claimed in this suit, which is for a declaration of right on which to found a mutation of names in order that effect may be given to the dealing with the estate by the plaintiffs.

Their Lordships, thinking that the suit fails upon the main point, hold that it also fails upon the other points; and the result will be that they will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

Before Sir W. Comer-Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Pigot.

Gubboy (Plaintiff) v. Avetoom (Defendant).*

Principal and agent—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230—Undisclosed principal.

A broker gave to one Gubboy the following sold note:—"Sold this day by order and for account of E. E. Gubboy, to my principal, G. P. Notes for Rs. 2,00,000 (two lacs) at Rs. 98-11.

" (Sd.) A. T. A.,

Broker.

This note was endorsed—"A. T. A., for principal."

In a suit by Gubboy against the broker for failure to take delivery: Held, that there was nothing in this contract to rebut the personal liability of the broker.

[450] Reference from the Calcutta Court of Small Causes.

The suit was originally brought in the Court of Small Causes by one E. E. Gubboy to recover from the defendant, one A. T. Avetoom, a broker, Rs. 2,000 as damages for refusing to take delivery of Government 4 per cent. paper of the value Rs. 2,00,000.

The contract in the case was dated the 4th October 1888 and ran as follows:—

"Sold this day by order and for account of Elias E. Gubboy, Esq., to my principal, Government of India 4 per cent. Promissory Notes for Rs. 2,00,000 (two lacs only), at the rate of Rs. 98-11, clear of brokerage.

A. T. Avetoom,

Broker.

"Delivery and cash on the 3rd and 4th January 1889."

On the 8th November A. T. Avetoom wrote to E. E. Gubboy stating that he had accepted the contract for his principal, adding "please note that principal is Babu Tincowrie Dass, to whom please deliver the paper on due date."

To this letter the attorney of E. E. Gubboy replied, "My client cannot accept any principal in the transaction whatsoever, you having declared to him at the time of entering into the contract that it was a mere matter of form your entering the words 'my principal' in the contract, and that when asked you declined to disclose the name of your principal." The facts stated in this letter were denied by A. T. Avetoom in a letter in reply.

The plaintiff tendered the paper on due date, but the defendant, believing himself not to be liable, had made no arrangements to take up the paper.

At the hearing the plaintiff's own evidence failed to establish the facts stated in his attorney's letter to A. T. Avetoom, viz., that the defendant had told the plaintiff that he himself was really the buyer; and the evidence of the defendant as to what passed was considered by the Court to be the most reliable; that evidence was, "I am sorry I cannot tell you the name of my principal. If you won't accept the contract, you are at liberty to do so. I cannot force your signature. Tincowrie Dass was present, [451] and, after some talk between plaintiff and Tincowrie Dass which I did not hear, plaintiff said he would accept the contract."

Tincowrie Dass was not called by either party; but it was proved that he had failed in business before the 2nd November, 1888.

On these facts the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, in delivering judgment, said:—"The case turns on the construction of s. 230 of the Indian Contract Act (here followed the section) . . . . It is for the defendant to rebut the presumption that a contract exists by which he is personally bound. I do not think he has done so. Among other cases Southwell v. Bowditch (1) was especially relied upon by Mr. Avetoom for the defendant. It was said by Couch, C. J., in Greenwood v. Holguette (2), 'we must not adopt as a rule of construction that it was intended to make the Contract Law of India the same as the law of England . . . . and therefore we cannot refer to any English case as a guide. We must look at the words of the law and gather from them as well as we can what was the intention of the legislative authority.'

"According to Southwell v. Bowditch (1) in England, and plaintiff in a case such as this must prove positively that, by some usage of trade, a contract exists which makes the broker personally liable, or fail in the suit. In India, under s. 230 of the Contract Act, the burden of proof is thrown on the defendant to prove the negative, that no contract exists making him personally liable. He must rebut the presumption that a contract does exist by which he is personally bound. This point was clearly shown by Wilson, J., in Soopromonian Setty v. Heilgers (3). The other Indian cases are Mackinnon Mackenzie & Co. v. Lang Moir & Co. (4), Hasobhoy Visram v. Clapham (5). All these Indian cases were actions on charter-parties, and are in many ways distinguishable from the present case. It might not unreasonably have been contended that when the defendants in these cases stated themselves to be agents of the owners of the ships, they disclosed the names of these principals within the meaning of [462] the Contract Act. The name of the ship being given, and the other party knowing the agents were not owners, it would not have been difficult to find out who the owners were (see per West, J., I.L.R., 7 Bom. 589).

"In Soopromonian Setty v. Heilgers (3), Mr. Hill, for the plaintiff, contended that a contract, that the agent shall be personally liable is to be presumed when the agent does not disclose the name of the principal; that means, in the case of a contract in writing, when the name of the principal is not disclosed on the face of the instrument. Mr. Phillips

(2) 12 B.L.R. 42 (46).
(3) :C. 71.

(5) 7 B. 51.
contended that any disclosure is sufficient; Wilson, J., said, 'I am inclined to think Mr. Hill's view is right,' but he did not decide the point.

"Section 231 of the Contract Act treats of the case of a person who neither knows nor has reason to believe he is dealing with an agent; but s. 230, if I understand it aright, assumes full knowledge on both sides that the agent is entering into a contract only as agent for some principal whose name he does not disclose. Such knowledge may be conveyed to the plaintiffs verbally or in writing, or, as in the present case, in both ways.

"It is enacted that under these circumstances a contract (a supplementary contract, if I may say so) shall be presumed to exist by which the agent (the broker) is personally bound. In the present case there was no disclosure of the principal's name, written or verbal, at the time the contract was made; there was a positive refusal to disclose the principal's name; and I do not think that a subsequent disclosure of the principal's name by the broker is sufficient to rebut the presumption against him. I can see no difference whatever in substance between the contract in Southwell v. Bowditch (1) and the contract in the present case."

This judgment the learned Judge made contingent on the opinion of the High Court as to "whether or not upon the terms of the contract as they appear on the face of the said note, and on the terms of s. 230 of the Indian Contract Act, the judgment is correct?"

Mr. Sale, for the plaintiff.—The defendant is personally liable. He has not disclosed his principal. I distinguish the case of [463] Soopro'monian Setty v. Heilgers (2) from this case, as there is nothing in the contract here disclosing the principal. In England evidence of usage is admissible to make the agent liable; here the Contract Act presumes that he is liable when he does not disclose. The case of Fleet v. Merton (3) is on all fours with this case as far as the terms of the contract are concerned. [The Court here called upon the defendant.]

Mr. Avoetoom, for the defendant.—The personal liability of the defendant is here rebutted by the words, "for my principal;" but further, on the 8th November, the defendant disclose the name of his principal. It is not necessary that the disclosure should be on the face of the contract. [Petheram, C. J.—I am not by any means prepared to say that the disclosure must be on the face of the contract.] The intention of the parties to the contract must be looked at to determine the liability; the words "sold by order and for account of" mean that the broker was selling for a principal. In Gadd v. Houghton (4), the words "on account of the principal" were held to be sufficient to save the agent from liability; see also Pike v. Ongley (5), where the words were "for and on account of owner."

Mr. Sale in reply.—The words "sold by your order and for your account to my principals," in Southwell v. Bowditch (1), were held to be, in the absence of evidence of custom, sufficient to free the Broker from liability.

OPINION.

Petheram, C. J.—The facts of this case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court in the reference which has been sent up to us, and it is not necessary to re-state them here, and the argument on the law is also very fully dealt with, so it is not necessary for us to say very much. The point which was most pressed before us by the learned Counsel for the defendant was that this contract on the face of it shows that the presumption which arises under the Contract Act is rebutted in this case, because it is said that from the words of the contract itself it was not intended that the broker should himself be liable. The case of Soopromonian Setty v. Heilgers (1), decided by Mr. Justice Wilson, shows that the presumption which arises under s. 230 of the Indian Contract Act may be rebutted, and with that view we entirely agree; but the question here is whether that presumption has been rebutted in this case. It is not contended that there is any evidence outside the contract to rebut it, but it is contended that certain words in the contract itself do so. Now the words which are relied on are those at the top of the contract, which are “A. T. Avetoom, for principal.” These words show that A. T. Avetoom was acting as agent for a real principal; but the presumption which arises under s. 230 only arises when an agent is acting for a principal, so that those words cannot be said to rebut the presumption. In addition to this the case of Fleet v. Murton (2) is sufficient to show that the agent may be liable notwithstanding words of this kind in the contract. In the result, therefore, we think that the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was right in his view of this case, and we answer the question referred to us in the affirmative. With this expression of our opinion the case will be returned to him.

[455] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Pigot.

No appeal will lie from an order of a Judge granting a certificate that a case is a fit and proper one for appeal to the Privy Council.

* Letters Patent Appeal No. 3 of 1889, against the decree of Mr. Justice Ghose, one of the Judges of this Court, dated the 20th of February 1889, in Privy Council Appeal No. 21 of 1888.

(1) 5 C. 71, (2) L.R. 7 Q.B. 126,
In this case an application was made to Mr. Justice Chunder Madhub Ghose, sitting in the Privy Council Department, for a certificate granting leave, under cl. 39 of the Letters Patent of 1865, to the applicant, to appeal to the Privy Council from a decision passed against him by Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Beverley; the learned Judge of the Privy Council Department granted his certificate; and from his order so granting such certificate, the respondent, who was unsuccessful in the appellate Court, appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. Evans and Mr. Twidale) for the respondent in the Letters Patent Appeal.—There is no appeal from an order passed under cl. 39 of the Letters Patent; it is suggested that cl. 15 gives a right of appeal, under which clause an appeal lies against a "judgment." The meaning of the word "judgment" is discussed in the following cases, in which it has been held that no appeal lies:—Mowla Buksh v. Kishen Pertab Sahi (1), Amirrunnessa v. Behary Lall (2), Mainly v. Patterson (3), In the matter of Kally Soondery Daria (4). The case of Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sundari Debi (5) does not lay down any rules upon which it can be said that an appeal lies to this Court from an order of a Judge in the Privy Council [456] Department admitting an appeal; this case has been observed upon by Sir John Edge in Banno Bibi v. Medhi Husain (6).

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul, with him Mr. Sandel and Moulvi Mahomed Yusuf), for the appellant:—I cannot say that the Privy Council in Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sundari Debi (5) in express terms overrules the decision of the High Court, but it lays down that the decision of the High Court was erroneous. I can only ask for a reference to a Full Bench. In the case of Kally Soondery Debia (4), Garth, C. J., took a mistaken view of what is a ministerial act. Granting a certificate is a ministerial act, but the matters preliminary to so granting a certificate are not ministerial; the Judge has to exercise his discretion; eliminating any ministerial acts, the step which a Judge takes, after hearing arguments, is to deliver judgment. The case of DeSouza v. Coles (7) lays down the construction to be placed on cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. [Pigot, J.—I think that has been dissented from in Sonbai v. Ahmedbhai Habibhai (8).] The present appeal is not from an error of discretion, but from an error of law. I submit that the word "judgment" means every order where reasons are given. As to what is a judgment within cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, see the cases cited in De Souza v. Coles (7). [Wilson, J.—The meaning of the word as given by the Madras High Court is dissented from in The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (9).]

Mr. Twidale, in reply, referred to the case of Sonbai v. Ahmedbhai Habibhai (8), as showing that the view taken of the word "judgment" in De Souza v. Coles (7) was not approved of.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Pigot, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—This is an appeal against an order made by Mr. Justice Chunder Madhub Ghose, granting a certificate to the respondent to the effect that the case is a proper one for appeal to the Privy Council

(1) 1 C. 102. (2) 25 W.R. 529. (3) 7 C. 339. (4) 6 C. 594.
(5) 9 C. 482. (6) 11 A. 375. (7) 3 M.H.C. 384.
(8) 9 B.H.C. 410. (9) 8 B.L.R. 433=17 W.R. 364.
Mr. Woodroffe has raised a preliminary objection that such an appeal does not lie to us. It has been decided in three cases that is so. It was decided, first, in the case of Mowlia Buksh v. Kishen Perta Sahi (1) by Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Jackson. The same view was taken by Chief Justice Garth and Mr. Justice Ainslie in the case of Amirunnessa v. Behary Lall (2), and again by Sir Richard Garth and Mr. Justice McDonell in the case of Manly v. Patterson (3); and I may observe that the last decision was given with a full knowledge of the decisions in this Court of a case on which reliance had been placed, the case of In re Kally Soondery Dobia (4).

These decisions are binding upon us, and we have not been asked to take upon ourselves the responsibility of dissenting from them; but we have been asked to refer the question to a Full Bench in order that those decisions may be reconsidered. We should have been justified in doing that if we ourselves were of opinion, on principle, that those decisions were wrong. But we are not inclined to dissent from the view taken in those cases.

We should also be justified in referring the question to a Full Bench if the view were correct, which has been pressed upon us, of the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Huri Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sundari Debdi (5) which is subsequent to the decision of this Court in the case I have last mentioned. We were asked to hold that the decision of the Privy Council that case was based upon principles inconsistent with the decisions arrived at in this Court upon the question before us. Had that been so, we should no doubt have been justified in referring this case to the Full Bench. But it appears to us that that is not so. The case before the Privy Council was this; a decree had been passed by the Privy Council and transmitted to this country for execution; the learned Judge exercising that particular branch of jurisdiction known as the Privy Council Department held, on an application before him, that one of the decree-holders was not entitled to execute the decree, and he gave effect to that decision by refusing to transmit it to the local Court for execution. The Privy Council, affirming the judgment of a majority of this Court, held that that decision, which actually determined the rights of the decree-holder, was a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. Speaking of the judgment of the majority of this Court, which judgment they approved and upheld, their Lordships say: "These learned Judges held (and their Lordships think rightly) that whether the transmission of an order under s. 610 would or would not be a merely ministerial proceeding, Mr. Justice Pontifex had in fact exercised a judicial discretion and had come to a decision of great importance which if it remained would entirely conclude any rights of Kali Sundari to an execution in this suit. They held, therefore, that it was a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15."

That is a very different case from the present case, where the order against which this appeal is brought is not one deciding finally or otherwise any question at issue in the case, or the rights of any of the parties to the suit. It is merely a step taken to enable the parties to go before the Privy Council and obtain from that tribunal a decision on the merits of the case. The result is that the appeal does not lie and must be dismissed with costs.

T. A. P.
Appeal dismissed.

(1) 1 C. 102.  (2) 25 W.R. 529.  (3) 7 C. 339.  (4) 6 C. 594.  (5) 9 C. 482.

A settlement of land (on which stood a hat) by the Government to a private person, such settlement being arrived at by taking into calculation the profits of the hat, does not amount to a grant of the tolls, but of the land [459] only; the reason for looking at the tolls being to ascertain the value of the land. Such a settlement, therefore, does not imply a monopoly which will enable the holder to restrain other persons from setting up another hat close by.

In these cases the facts were that in the vicinity of Kalighat a hat, called Chetla hat, which was alleged to be of very long standing, was resumed by Government in 1828, but the title of Government was not definitely affirmed until 1837. The Government appeared to have held the hat, at first under direct management, but in the year 1856 it was let in farm to one Luckhi Narain Sircar, and in 1867 Government sold to him all its proprietary rights for a sum of Rs. 7,000 with rent reserved of over Rs. 3,000. This estate was entered in the rent-roll as No. 1069, and it contained an area of rather more than 17 bighas. After the death of Luckhi Narain, his heirs mortgaged the estate to Gobind Chunder Addy, whose executor was the present defendant, and subsequently granted to the defendant, the then mortgagee, a mourasi pottah of three cottahs, on which the defendant built a temple. In 1881 Gobind Chunder Addy obtained a decree on his mortgage, and in execution thereof brought to sale in the same year this property, which was purchased by the plaintiff. In the proclamation of this sale, the defendant omitted to state that he held under a mourasi-mokurari lease two plots of land in the estate. Subsequently Gobind Chunder Addy purchased six bighas of lakhiraj land adjoining the hat, in which apparently originally fish, and fish traps were sold; and he induced several of the stall-keepers, who used to frequent Chetla hat, to come and establish themselves on his land. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit to obtain possession of the six bighas, alleging that they belonged to Chetla hat; secondly, if it should be found that he was not entitled to possession, for an injunction restraining the defendant from holding his hat upon that land; and, thirdly, to have it declared that the defendant could not set up against him the two mourasi-mokurari leases of which no mention was made in the sale-proclamation.

The only question material to this report is raised in the second contention of the plaintiff as to which the District Judge said:

“In respect of the first question, the plaintiff submits to the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and admits that the six bighas of lakhiraj land [460] are not included within taluk No. 1069; but as regards his decision on the second point, he contests it entirely. His contention is, that the Chetla hat being both an established hat and also a hat established by Government, the defendant cannot establish a new hat to the detriment of existing ones. The vakil for the plaintiff relied first on Reg. XXVII of 1793, by which sayer duties were abolished. In the preamble of that Regulation, no doubt, the right of the Ruling Sovereign to establish or to authorize subjects to establish hats and gunges is very broadly claimed; but if such an authority did or does exist in the Sovereign, it is an authority which never appears to have been exercised, and I am not referred to a single instance of a hat thus established. Nor is there any report in the books of such a right as the plaintiff claims ever having been claimed or adjudicated on in any Indian Court.

"No doubt such privileges conferred by a grant from the Crown have been adjudicated on in English Courts. But because the Crown has and has exercised that right in England, it does not follow that the Sovereign possesses the same rights in India, and the English cases do not, in my opinion, apply. It seems to me therefore that the right of opening a hat in Bengal is not of the nature of a privilege or a monopoly, but a simple right which every landholder possesses, and that a landholder, who has an old-established hat, has no more right to be protected against the competition of the surrounding landholders than an old-established shop has to be protected against the competition of other shops. But the plaintiff's pleader contends that Chetla hat stands in an unique position, from the fact that it was established by Government, and he seeks to make out that the sums collected in the hat were in the nature of a tax or sayer duty, and not of the nature of compensation for the use of the land on which the stalls of the hat are situated. There does not seem to me to be a particle of evidence to support this contention. The Government, in this country, is a many-sided institution; some of its acts are referable, no doubt, to an exercise of the Sovereign power, but others are merely the acts of a zemindar, a trader, or a common carrier. Hat Chetla appears to have existed long before Government resumed the mehal, and it is clear that the action of Government in carrying on the hat was referable, not to an exercise of the Sovereign power, but was simply an act by which the talukdar of lot No. 1069 sought to make his lands more profitable. Nor is there anything to show that the fees levied on the persons frequenting the hat were anything in the way of a tax or toll. They were apparently nothing but rent or compensation for use and occupation. No person was compelled to carry his goods to Chetla hat for sale; and any person who did so, did it because he found his profit in doing so. It seems to me, therefore, that the defendant is perfectly justified in erecting a new hat in proximity to Chetla hat, and inducing by fair means (if he can) the persons who now carry their goods to Chetla hat to bring them to his new [461] hat, and I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff has no right to be protected from such legitimate competition. I therefore affirm the Subordinate Judge's order on this point.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed, and the defendant brought a cross-appeal on matters not now material.

Mr. Woodruff, Mr. Evans, Baboo Durga Mohun Das, Baboo Bhurban Mohan Das, Baboo Prsonath Sen and Baboo Tarit Mohan Das, for the appellant in No. 1861 and respondent in No. 1823.
The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips) and Baboo Bhownani Churn Dutt for the appellant in No. 1823 and respondent in No. 1861.

Mr. Evans contended that the amount paid for this old established hat to the Government was arrived at by taking into account the profits of the hat, and therefore the sale was a grant from the Crown of a right to hold the hat and take tolls; and, if so, that implied a monopoly enabling the holder to restrain others from setting up markets near to it; and referred to the following cases:—Bungsho Dhur Biswas v. Mudhoo Mohuldar (1), Shistee Dhur Ghose v. Shib Kishen Mitter (2), Kishoree Lall Roy v. Ghool Monte Chowdrain (3), Mayor of Penryn v. Best (4), Lachmesser Singh v. Leelamund Singh (5), Parmeshari Proshad Narain Singh v. Mahomed Syud (6).

Mr. Woodroffe on the same side.—Whether or no Government had power to make grant or transfer by way of farm to the plaintiff there is no case to negative the idea that the Crown cannot interfere with hat holders in this country. The law stands thus: that a market, in the true sense of the word, cannot be held by any person in this country without a grant from the Sovereign power; that is the old law undoubtedly; the rule even in England where the Sovereign power is said to be vested in the Crown and Houses of Parliament; conjoint action of the three is the mode by which law is made in England. The prerogative of the Crown in England is not affected by Acts of Parliament unless the Crown is mentioned in the Act. The Regulations in this country stand [462] on a different footing from Acts of Parliament; and if the Crown is not affected by Acts of Parliament in England unless mentioned in the Act, a fortiori it cannot be so in this country under the Regulations (see Maxwell on Statutes, 161). It is clear that the Regulations cannot affect the prerogative of the Crown. The holding of markets was an internal duty; it came under the heading "sayer"; it was part of the law of this country that Government did, from time to time, grant sayer mehals, salt mehals, &c.; Government used to delegate their rights in respect of these monopolies, and the preamble of the Regulation shows that they did it with regard to hats. Under the Regulation, the holding of markets was an exclusive privilege of Government. The first 43 Regulations of 1793 were passed on one day, and by s. 8 of Reg. 1 of 1793 the Government decided that sayer collections should be abolished, and directed compensation to be given to the zamindar, therefor; but nevertheless keeping a power to re-impose the sayer collections. There, therefore, was an express reservation of power to re-impose the duty, but without the Regulation they could have done so. The Government, therefore, could re-establish hats and bazars or delegate this power to others. Government still had power to prevent over-taxation and imposts. Morley v. Chadwick (7).

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips), for the respondents.—There is no point of law in the question as to the hats, as the finding of the lower Court is, that whether or no Government had power to grant such a franchise as this, it has not done so. In the Court below the Judge says, that the sums collected were rents and not taxes, and that is a finding to the effect that Government never exercised any right of market with regard to the property, and that Government did not intend to convey any such right to the plaintiff. The rubokari shows that no franchise

was granted, and that no market was measured. The rubokari, moreover, is not a grant, but a record by the Collector of what was done. There is no market in the sense of a franchise which was being dealt with at that time. There was no franchise: the Government only insisted on sharing in the profits made out of the mehals. There are obligations and duties attached to all [463] franchises, and they are granted by the Crown for the benefit of the public, and in consideration of the public benefit the Crown parts with its rights, but here everything in the Regulation of 1793 is consistent with the parties being licensees; they acquired no right against the Crown, and it follows that they obtained no right against the public. The Regulation starts from the point of view of taxing, and not of franchise. The word "authority" in the Regulation refers only to establishing markets. The rules of the 11th June are not directed to markets only, but to any and all lands. The rights contemplated by Reg. XXVII are of a different nature from franchise (see ss. 4-11 of that Regulation). The intention of that Regulation was to abolish all such collections. With regard to franchise of a market, see Bacon's Abridgment Title "Fair and Market" B, and with respect to the manner of holding them, see Bacon's Abridgment Title "Fair and Market" C, and with regard to tolls see Bacon's Abridgment Title "Fair and Market" D. There may be a grant of a market without tolls being reserved. Prince v. Lewis (1) shows that there is a duty in the case of a franchise; in the present case there is no duty at all; there is a total absence of corresponding obligation to support the conclusion which I ask the Court to draw from the Regulations, viz., that they had nothing in the nature of the franchise. In the case of Bungsho Dhar Biswas v. Mudhoo Mohuldar (2), the observations of Jackson, J., were not strictly necessary for the decision, but he says the provisions of Reg. XXVII applied to hats existing at that time, and that the payments were compensation for the use of the land. In Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Taramoni Chowdhriani (3), the right of establishing markets is referred to; as far as that case goes it recognizes the right of anybody to hold a market on his own land. Moreover there is in this case no finding that the defendant is damned by the plaintiff's action. The existence of exclusive privilege in markets was sought to be upheld by analogy to the case of a ferry. But it is clear from the Regulation as to ferries, that the ferries were under the direct management of the Government, [464] and that the dues were collected by the Government, and that the farmers were officers of Government. The right under the Ferries Regulation does not approach a private proprietary right of franchise. There is nothing in any of the Ferries Regulations to show that the persons plying these ferries had any right against the Government or third persons. The cases cited by the other side of Shishtee Dhar Ghose v. Shib Kishen Mitter (4), Kishoree Lal Roy v. Golul Monee Chowdhriani (5), Narain Singh Roy v. Nurendro Narain Roy (6), Luchmessa Singh v. Lilamudd Singh (7), Parmeshari Proshad Narain Singh v. Mahomed Syud (8), are all cases of ferries, and have no analogy to the franchises. [Petheram, C. J.—You need not deal with those cases. I do not see what the ferry cases have to do with the question.] The rubokari shows that the plaintiff has received compensation on account of sayaer, and that there is nothing to show that any hat was carried on by Government; what is referred to there is the land only. The table attached to the rubohari shows that this jumma is based on an estimate of rents paid by permanent tenants. The Government have clearly no monopoly, and therefore the plaintiffs are not entitled to an injunction.

Mr. Evans in reply.

The material portion of the judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

Petheram, C. J. (after stating the facts and the decision of the Court on the question as to the effect of the sale on the two mourasi pottahs set up by the defendant) continued:

Now comes the other question, and of course that is the important question in the case, namely, whether the plaintiff who has purchased this taluk, upon which this hat has been held for so many years, is entitled to an injunction to restrain the owners of the neighbouring land from holding a market upon it.

The argument for the plaintiff is that this is an ancient market which was at some time or other resumed by the Government, and that the Government has since re-settled the land with the [465] predecessor in title of the plaintiff; and that inasmuch as upon the re-settlement of the land the amount of the revenue which had to be paid for it to the Government was arrived at by taking into calculation the profits of the market (the profits which arose from the tolls properly so called), that is to say, a share of the articles sold in the market taken for the privilege of selling them in the market, therefore that must be taken as a grant from the Crown of a right to hold the market and take tolls in it, and if it amounts to that, such a grant must imply a monopoly which will enable the holder of such a grant to restrain other persons from setting up a market anywhere close by.

The District Judge who heard the case came to the conclusion, upon the evidence before him, that this did not amount to any grant of tolls; that all that was granted were the lands included in the taluk; and that the only reason for looking at the tolls was to ascertain the value of the lands. We think that there is no difference between this market and any ordinary shop which, if it had a good-will and a large trade attached to it, would increase the value of the land and the amount of the revenue. Accordingly we think that the learned Judge is quite right in the view he has taken; and as to that it is only necessary for us to refer to the Regulations of 1793 which, to our mind, show clearly that the contention of the plaintiff cannot be correct. By those Regulations it was made illegal to take any tolls of this kind at all, and if the effect of those settlements was by implication to grant tolls, it was in fact for the Crown to be refusing to be bound by the Legislature or by the law of the country. We think it would be impossible for us to hold that where the two things are perfectly consistent and where this revenue may be payable for the use of the land (of course the person with whom it is settled putting it to the best use he can put it), and where it could be taken away, it would not be an illegal toll. Under these circumstances, and in the absence of any grant of any special privilege (without which it is admitted that any one may set up a market wherever he chooses, and may invite persons to come there for the purpose of selling goods), we think that the learned Judge was right in the conclusion at which he arrived with reference to these tolls.
[466] In the result then the appeal by the plaintiff, so far as the claim for an injunction is concerned, will be disallowed, and in so far as it relates to the refusal by the lower Court to set aside the second pottah, his appeal will be allowed, and the appeal by the defendant so far as regards the setting aside the first pottah will be allowed, and as regards everything else both appeals will be dismissed. The costs, I think, must be in proportion to the success of the parties.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Baunjee.

NILMONI CHUCKERBUTTY AND OTHERS (Petitioners) v. BYKANT NATH BERA (Opposite party).* [3rd February, 1890.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 122, sub-s. 2—Record of Proprietor's land as private land—Grounds for determining land to be private—Evidence.

In enacting sub-s. 2 of s. 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Legislature had before it the attempts which might be expected on the part of landlords to frustrate the intention of the Legislature, as asserted in the Draft Bill laid before the Council for consideration, to extend the occupancy-rights of tenants before the measures then declared to be in contemplation became law; and therefore the particular date, the 2nd day of March 1883, the date on which the Draft Bill was published in the Gazette, and leave was obtained to introduce the Bill into the Council, was declared to be the latest date on which there should be free action on the part of zemindars to assert their private rights, so as to prevent the accrual of special tenant rights. From the wording of that subsection, it was intended that, in determining whether land is the private land of the proprietor, regard should be had to any declaration made before the 2nd March 1883 by the landlord, and communicated to the tenants, in respect to the reservation of the proprietor's right over the lands as his private land: the words "any other evidence that may be produced" in that sub-section mean, therefore, any other evidence tending in the same direction that may be produced to show the assertion of any title on the part of the proprietor and communicated to the tenant before that date.

[F., 13 C.W.N. 661 = 4 Ind. Cas. 529 (530); B., 36 M. 168 (175) = 17 Ind. Cas. 353 (355) = 23 M.L.J. 624 = 12 M.L.T. 561 = (1912) M.W.N. 1193; 1 C.L.J. 456 (459); 13 Ind. Cas. 1 (2).]
The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is a matter under Chapter XI of the Bengal Tenancy Act in which the proprietor of certain bromattar lands sought to obtain from the revenue officer a record that the lands were his private lands.

The case in the lower Court was presented to the District Judge in appeal as coming within s. 120, sub-s. 1 (b), and was so dealt with. The District Judge found that no village usage was established, and he accordingly affirmed the order of the Deputy Collector rejecting the petitioner's application. In the appeal before us, it has been contended that the real character of the case has been misunderstood, and that the case should have been dealt with under sub-section (2). Now, under that subsection, the law allows three matters to be taken into consideration in determining whether the land should be recorded as the proprietor's private land. The first is local custom; the second is whether the land was, before the 2nd day of March 1883, specifically let as the proprietor's private land; and the third is any other evidence that may be produced. It is contended that there is some other evidence to establish the proprietor's right to have it recorded as his private land. That evidence has been placed before us, and consists of proceedings in two matters in 1885 and 1886, relating to the settlement of certain khas mehals within which these lands were situate, and the recording of these [468] lands in the names of the appellants on claims being set up by them that the lands were their nij-jote bromattar lands. On this assertion of title, it would seem that notices were issued on the tenants, and the lands were so recorded in the settlement-proceedings. It is now contended that we should remand the case to the lower appellate Court, in order that it may receive and consider this evidence as bearing on sub-s. 2, s. 120. The District Judge in dealing with the case under sub-s. 1 (b) has held that that documentary evidence was irrelevant, and, in our opinion he was right in so regarding it. Then the question is whether it might properly be considered under sub-s. 2, s. 120. It seems to us that in enacting that sub-section, the Legislature had before it the attempts which might be expected on the part of landlords to frustrate the intention of the Legislature, as asserted in the Draft Bill laid before the Council for consideration, to extend the occupancy-rights of tenants before the measures then declared to be in contemplation became law; and therefore the particular date, 2nd day of March 1883, the date on which the Draft Bill was published in the Gazelle, and leave was obtained to introduce the Bill into the Council, was declared to be the latest date on which there should be free action on the part of zamindars to assert their private rights, so as to prevent the accrual of special tenant rights. It was accordingly declared that it was a material point, in the consideration of such a matter as is now raised in appeal before us, whether the particular lands were, before the 2nd day of March 1883, specifically let as the proprietor's private lands. From this, we may take it that it was intended that regard should be had to any declaration made before that date by the landlord, and communicated to the tenants in respect to the reservation of the proprietor's right over the land as his private land. In this view, we think that the following words in that subsection "any other evidence that may be produced" must mean any other evidence tending in the same direction that may be produced to show the assertion of any title on the part of the proprietor, and communicated to the tenant before that date. But the documentary evidence on which the appellants' pleader relies in this case is of a much later date and therefore, in our opinion, can have no bearing on [469] a proper consideration of the matter now before us. The proceedings are all of dates not only later than that mentioned in sub-s. 2, s. 120, but even later than that of the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We think, therefore, that we should not be justified in remanding this case, so as to prolong these proceedings.
The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Trevelyan and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Iswari Pershad Narain Sahi, Lunatic, Represented by

[5th February, 1890.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). sch. III, art. (2)—Limitation for rent suit—Rent payable under a lease—Registered lease.

The Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) prescribes one period of limitation for all suits for rent brought under its provisions.

Article 2 of the third schedule of that Act includes a suit to recover arrears of rent payable under a lease, and there is no distinction as to the form of the lease or as to whether it is registered or not.

Umesh Chunder Mondul v. Adamoni Dasi (1), and Vythilinga Pillai v.
Thetchanamurti Pillai (2) distinguished.

This was a suit to recover arrears of rent under registered ticca kabuliyat.

Under the kabuliyat, which was executed on the 21st of September 1880, and duly registered, the proprietors of the Belsand Concern held in ticca the plaintiff's half-share in the 8 annas divided putti of Mouza Parstirampure, Pergunnah Mahila, in the District of Mozufferpore, for a term of seven years from 1288 to 1294 (1880-1886) inclusive at an annual jumma of Rs. 2,000, payable in three instalments of Rs. 1,000 in Kartick, Rs. 500 in Cheyt, and Rs. 500 in Joisto. It was also provided in the kabuliyat that upon the expiration of the said term of seven years the proprietors should pay rent up to the 10 annas instalment in 1295 for the zerat lands in the plaintiff's putti, on which there might be the indigoplantation of the Belsand Concern, and that they should [470] give up the lands after cutting the first and second crops of indigo.

The rent for a portion of 1291 and the years 1292, 1293 and 1294, and also the rent on account of the 10 annas instalment for 1295 in repsect of the zerat indigo lands having fallen due, the plaintiff, on the 2nd of April 1888, filed a suit for the recovery of the arrears for 1292, 1293 and 1294, alleging that the portion for 1291 was barred by limitation.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 285 of 1888, against the decree of Baboo Grish Chunder Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 6th of July 1888.
(1) 15 C. 221.
(2) 3 M. 76.
He also sued for the sum of Rs. 203-2 on account of the 10 annas instalment of rent for the year 1295 in respect of 100 bigahs of zerat indigo lands: and for damages for non-payment of rent. Subsequently, on the 11th of May 1888, the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint by including a claim for the two sums of Rs. 500 each, which fell due on the 13th Cheyt and 29th Jeyt 1291 respectively, subject to any objection the defendants might take.

The defendants contended that the plaintiff’s claim in respect of the two sums of Rs. 500 each, which became due in 1291, was barred by limitation; that his claim for the rent of zerat indigo lands on account of the 10 annas instalment in 1295 was incorrect; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to more than Rs. 13-15-3, which was his proportionate share of the rent for the 89 bigahs of zerat lands in possession of the Besland Concern.

It appeared that after the settlement of issues the plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Judge for an enquiry as to the area and the rate of rent of the zerat lands in the possession of the Belsand Concern, on the ground that he had no witnesses to prove the area or rate of rent. This application was refused by the Subordinate Judge; and the reason for his refusal was that the expenses of the enquiry would far exceed the amount in dispute between the parties, which was Rs. 68.

The Subordinate Judge held that the case of Unmesh Chunder Mundul v. Adamont Dasi (1) was distinguishable, and that art. 116, sch. II of Act XV of 1877, was not applicable to the present case; that sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, applied to all suits for rent, and a suit for rent upon a registered kabuliyat was not excluded from its operation. He therefore held that the claim for 1291 was barred by limitation.

[471] As the plaintiff adduced no evidence, he allowed Rs. 13-15-3 only as rent for the zerat lands for 1925. He disallowed the plaintiff’s claim for damages. Accordingly the Subordinate Judge passed a decree only partly allowing the plaintiff’s claim.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court for the portions of his claim which had been disallowed.

Baboo Rajendra Nath Bose and Baboo Srinath Banerjee, for the appellant.

Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The first question argued before us in this case is whether the plaintiff’s claim for the two sums of Rs. 500 each, which became due, one on the 13th Cheyt 1291 Fusli, and the other on the 29th Joisto 1291, is barred by limitation. The time from which limitation would run under the provisions of the Rent Law was the last day of Joisto 1291 Fusli, that is, the 8th of June 1884. The suit was brought on the 2nd of April 1888, that is to say, more than three years and less than six years after the period of limitation began to run. The contention before us is that, in the first place, the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act do not apply to this case; and secondly that, if they do apply, the fact that the rent is payable under a registered lease makes the period of limitation six years. As regards the first question, it is quite clear that the defendants would come, within the definition of the word "tenure-holder" contained in s. 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and there seems to be no reason why they should be excluded from the operation of that definition.

---

(1) 15 C. 221.

On the second question, which is the real question for decision in the case, the argument of the learned pleader is based upon a decision of this Court by O'Kinealy and Ghose, JJ., in the case of Umesh Chunder Mundul v. Adarmoni Dasi (1) and on a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Vythilinga Pillai v. Thetchanamurti Pillai (2). It seems to us quite clear that these decisions are inapplicable to the present case. The decision of this Court in Umesh Chunder Mundul v. Adarmoni [472] Dasi (1) is not a decision of any question under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Apparently the rent there claimed, if it be a rent at all, is not a rent to which the Tenancy Act is applicable; but whether that is so or not, there is no reference made in the judgment or in the case to the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Judges treated the case as entirely governed by the Limitation Act XV of 1877. They held that, inasmuch as the lease under which rent was claimed was a registered lease, art. 116 of sch. II applied, and not art. 110. The Madras decision does not carry the matter any further. There again this question could not have arisen, as the suit was a Small Cause Court suit, and the case was governed by Act XV of 1877, and no other Act. It seems to us quite clear that the Legislature in the Bengal Tenancy Act did not intend to make more than one period of limitation in suits for rent. Section 6 of the Limitation Act, which is by the Bengal Tenancy Act, s. 18, expressly applied to cases under that Act, provides that "when by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India, a period of limitation is specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, nothing herein contained shall affect or alter the period so prescribed." The Bengal Tenancy Act specially prescribes a period of limitation for rent suits brought in accordance with its provisions. It is clear that the 2nd article of the 3rd schedule of that Act is wide enough to include a suit of this description, viz., a suit to recover rent, and there is no distinction as to the form of the lease under which the rent is payable, or as to whether it is registered or not. The learned pleader suggests that by parity of reasoning the cases to which we have referred apply; but we think it is clear that the Legislature never intended to make this distinction, and the form of the schedule shows that they apparently intended to provide one period of limitation only with regard to all suits for rent. There is an additional argument to be found from the fact that the time from which the period of limitation begins to run is different in the Bengal Tenancy Act from that provided in the general Limitation Act; and, therefore, if the learned pleader's contention was right, we should not only have a different period, but also a different time from which that [473] period would run according as the contract was registered or not. This is a result which, we think, the Legislature never intended. It provided in the Rent Act for one period of limitation in all classes of suits for rent, and it is not possible to add to that a period of limitation not at all contemplated by the Legislature, viz., a period of six years. We think, therefore, that with regard to these two sums of Rs. 500, the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation.

The other question raised before us is as to a small sum in difference between the parties. The complaint is that the learned Judge in the

(1) 15 C. 221.
(2) 3 M. 76.
Court below did not make an inquiry asked for by the plaintiff with regard to the matters in difference between the plaintiff and defendants as to this sum. It appears that when the issues were settled, the plaintiff in this case said he had no witnesses to prove the area, and he applied for a measurement of the lands. His application was rejected, and the reason given by the Judge for rejecting it was that the expenses of the inquiry would be far more than the amount in dispute. The onus being on the plaintiff, if he had not his witnesses and evidence ready, he must run the risk of having an adjournment given him, or the inquiry asked for at the Judge’s discretion. The Judge has refused the inquiry on the ground that the expenses of it would be greater than the amount in dispute, and this is a matter which the learned Judge might well take into consideration in determining whether he should or should not allow an adjournment. The plaintiff as a matter of right was not entitled to an inquiry. He should have had his witnesses ready. We think that the plaintiff’s contention fails as to that also, and the result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[474] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Macpherson.

AHSANULLA KHAN BAHADOOR (Defendant) v. HURRI CHURN MOZOOMDAR (Plaintiff).* [31st January, 1890.]

Appeal from Original Decree, No. 170 of 1888, against the decree of Babu Karuna Das Bose, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 28th April 1888.
made an affidavit as to the mode of service and took the affidavit before the Munisif, to whom it was read and who then signed it, there was held to be a sufficient certificate to satisfy the requirements of the section.

This suit was instituted by the plaintiff to set aside the sale of a putni held under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819. [475] The plaintiff alleged that the plaintiff's predecessor took from the defendant's predecessor a putni-taluk at an annual rent of 212 rupees 8 annas in respect of an eight-annas share (excluding a miras of small bits of land) of the village of Kismut Duajani comprised in the share of 1 anna 15 gundas of Zemindari No. 5032 in Pergunnah Attia and others, being the defendant's zemindari. The plaintiff went on to state that the plaintiff having brought a suit against the defendant for having attempted to exact illegal cesses from him, and having gained the suit, the defendant became displeased with the plaintiff; and that with a view to harass him and with the evil intention of depriving him of the taluk, contrary to practice and without any reasonable cause, the defendant made an application to the Collector for the sale of the plaintiff's putni-taluk for the realization of the arrears of rent in respect thereof for six months, namely, from Bysack to Assin 1293 (April to October 1886), while the plaintiff was away from his house; and, without his knowledge, illegally, irregularly and collusively, put it up to auction and himself purchased it for a nominal consideration on the 1st of Aughran 1293, a day when the Civil Courts were closed. The plaint further alleged that there was great illegality and irregularity in the sale and in the proceedings relating thereto; that no notices were really published at the Sudder kutcheri, in the mofussil, in the mehal sold at auction, or in the Collectorate kutcheri; that the service of notice which is alleged in the rubakari for sale was not according to law. Then there was a statement in the plaint that the value of the property was Rs. 20,000, and that, owing to the absence of purchasers, it sold for only Rs. 125; and that the plaintiff had thereby sustained considerable loss. He prayed therefore that the sale might be set aside.

The defence so far as was material to this report was thus stated in the defendant's written statement: "As the plaintiff did not pay the rent payable by him in respect of the putni under claim, from Bysack to Assin 1293, the defendant, in order to realize the same on the 1st Kartick (15th October), made an application to the Collector of Zillah Mymensingh with an account of the arrears, and notice under Regulation VIII of 1819; and after causing the account of the arrears, notices, &c., to be really published under [476] the provisions of the said Regulation before the 15th Kartick 1293 in the said Collectorate, at the zemindary kutcherry of the defendant, at the residence of the plaintiff at Duajani and at a conspicuous place in the mehal of which the arrears were due, and having caused an affidavit relating thereto be made by the peon who published them in the Court of the Munisif of Chowki Atia, it was filed before the Collector on behalf of the defendant. As no one paid off the arrears of rent with interest of the mehal in question, and as the plaintiff's mukhtear and agent, although requested to pay them, did not pay them, the mehal, of which the arrears were due, was, on the 1st Aughran 1293, sold at a public auction according to law in the Collectorate openly, and in the presence of the plaintiff's mukhtear and agent, and the defendant purchased it at the highest price that was offered. There was no illegality, nor irregularity, nor fraud in the sale proceedings. All the acts that had to be done, and all the notices, &c., that were necessary to be published according to law on behalf of the defendant before the sale, were duly and regularly done and published according to law. The plaintiff having voluntarily let the rent fall into arrear, and being present by his mukhtear and agent at the time of the sale without paying the arrears of rent, &c., allowed the property to be put up to auction, there is no reason why the said sale should be set aside." It appeared that the petition by the defendant to the Collector, which is necessary under cl. 3 of s. 8 of Regulation VIII of 1819, was filed on the 2nd Kartick 1293, the 1st Kartick being Sunday. It was found, moreover, on the evidence that the petition was not struck up in the kutchery as directed by the Regulation.

The notice which was given under cl. 3 of s. 8 of Regulation VIII of 1819, being that applicable to sales for arrears otherwise than for the whole year, was as follows:

"To Hurri Churn Mozoomdar, &c. Within my Zemindari Mehal No. 5032, Pergannah Atia, &c. Kismut Duajani is recorded as a putni-taluk at an annual rent of Rs. 212-8. On account of the aforesaid putni taluk Rs. 110, the principal amount of rent for the Assar and Assin instalments of the year 1293, and Re. 1-9-7½ gundas, the interest on the same, in all Rs. 111-9-7½ gundas, in rent and interest, has fallen in arrear as due from you on account of the Assar and Assin instalments of the year 1293, and you have not been paying off the same though repeatedly demanded. Therefore, under Regulation VIII of 1819, this notice is being given to you, and you are hereby informed that before the 1st of the coming Aughran you shall pay the aforesaid rent and interest into my zemindari kutcheri at Jamruki. If you fail to pay the aforesaid money within the time allowed, then the aforesaid money due to me will be realized by sale of the aforesaid putni taluk at a public auction before the Collector of the District of Mymensingh on the 1st day of the coming Aughran, and no objection to the same on your part will be listened to."

The affidavit of service and publication of the notice of sale was made by one Balu, who, after stating the mode of service and publication, alleged that he asked for a receipt from the principal tenants of Duajani and from the agent of the plaintiff, but they refused to grant a receipt. He named three persons whom he asked and of whom he stated "they did not consent to grant a certificate of service of notice."

This affidavit was drawn up by Shoshi Bhusan, a pleader, who took Balu with the affidavit to the Court of the Munsif of Tangail, where it was read in the presence of the Munsif, who signed it with the addition of the words "on solemn affirmation declared the above to be true."

The Subordinate Judge gave the plaintiff a decree, mainly on the ground that the evidence for the defendant, on whom he held lay the onus of proving it, did not shew that the notice of sale was duly served and published in accordance with Regulation VIII of 1819.

From this decision the defendant appealed.

Mr. Evans, Mr. W. Garth, Mr. Peacock, Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, and Baboo Bussunt Coomer Bose, for the appellant.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy, and Baboo Makund Nath Roy, for the respondent.

Mr. Evans, for the appellant, contended that the evidence showed due service and publication of the notice of sale, and that within the Privy Council Rulings in the subject, there had been sufficient compliance with all the substantial requirements of the Regulation to support the sale. He referred to Ram Sabuk Bose v. Kamini Koomaree Dassee (1), Maharajah of Burdwan [478] v. Tarasundari Debi (2), and Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (3).

Mr. Woodroffe, for the respondent, contended that the defendant on whom the onus lay [Doorga Churn Surma Choudhry v. Najmooddeen (4) and Maharajah of Burdwan v. Tarasundari Debi (2)] had not shown that the provisions of the Regulation had been strictly complied with, and that there had been a non-observance of its provisions in several instances relating to the preliminaries necessary to sale. Clause 3, s. 8 of the Regulation, says that the petition for sale is to be presented on the 1st Kartick; here it was not presented until the 2nd Kartick. The petition should have been stuck up in some conspicuous part of the kutcherry as directed by cl. 2, s. 8, but this was not done. There is no certificate of the Munsif, which is necessary under the same clause when the village people refuse to attest the service of the notice; the necessary certificate is one to the effect that the notice has been duly published, the words being that in such a case the peon should “go to the kutcherry of the nearest Munsif and there make voluntary oath of the same having been duly published, certificate to which effect shall be signed and sealed by the said officer and delivered to the peon.”

The learned Counsel then went into the evidence to show that the notice had not been duly served and published. But even if the Court came to the conclusion that sufficient publication of the notice was proved, the notice of sale in this case was a bad notice as being a notice suited to the case of a zemindar proceeding under cl. 2, s. 8, and not one in accordance with the intention to be gathered from cl. 3 of that section under which the sale could be stayed by payment of less than the whole balance due, namely, a sum practically equal to three-fourths of the balance. This was not stated in the notice, and those interested in preventing the sale were injuriously affected by such omission. It is submitted that the omission to serve a valid notice is a non-compliance with a substantial requirement of the Regulation [479] for which the sale should be set aside. Reference was made to the cases of Bhukanatha Nath Singh v. Dhraj Mahatab Chand (5), Bhungwan Chunder Dass v. Sudder Ally (6), Maharajah of Burdwan v. Krishnakamini Dasi (7).

Mr. Evans, in reply, contended that the objections as to the presentation of the petition, and as to its not being stuck up, were not sufficient ground for setting aside the sale. The certificate of the Munsif intended by the section is one relating to the appearance of the peon before the Munsif or other officer after he has served the notice, and to his making oath to that effect; it is not intended to be a certificate that the notice has been published. What has been done in this case was amply sufficient to satisfy the provisions of the section. The notice was a good notice and a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the Regulation; any defect in it was not a sufficient ground for setting aside the sale. The cases of Sona Beebee v. Lall Chand Chowdhry (8), Pitambar Panda v. Damoodur Dass (9), and the Privy Council cases already mentioned were referred to.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Norris and Macpherson, JJ.) was as follows. (After shortly stating the facts the judgment proceeded):

The Subordinate Judge upon a consideration of the whole of the evidence gave the plaintiff a decree setting aside the sale. And his judgment is based upon the ground that the notice required to be published in the mofussil upon the land or at the kutcheri of the defaulting putnidar was not, as a matter of fact, duly published.

Against that decision the defendant has appealed to this Court. I shall presently consider the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and the evidence which has been given by the defendant to prove the due publication of the notice in the mofussil. But whilst we are of opinion that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge of that evidence is not correct, we are still obliged to arrive at the conclusion that this decree must be upheld, upon a ground to [480] which I shall presently refer. It will be convenient probably in the first place to deal with the points which were argued by the learned counsel for the respondent, Mr. Woodroffe, in support of the judgment.

One objection of Mr. Woodroffe was that the petition which has to be presented to the Collector under cl. 2 of s. 8 of Regulation 8 of 1819 under which the sale was held, or rather under cl. 3 of s. 8 of that Regulation, that is, the petition containing a specification of the balance of arrears that may be due, ought to have been filed on the 1st Kartick, whereas, as a matter of fact, it was not filed until the 2nd of Kartick.

We think that no force can be attached to this objection. The petition could not be received before the 1st of Kartick, because the rent which is in arrear and for which the putni is put up for sale has to be made up to the last day of Assin. We think that that portion of the section is directory merely. The Collector is put in force by the presentation of that petition. The 1st Kartick 1293 fell upon a Sunday, and we think that the petition was properly received on the 2nd Kartick. No injury, as it seems to us, could possibly ensue to the patnidar, or to the dur-putnidar or to the mortgagee, if there existed a dur-putni or mortgage, by the non-presentation of the petition on the exact day specified.

It was further urged by Mr. Woodroffe that non-compliance with the provisions of the Regulation which require that the petition shall be struck up in some conspicuous part of the kutcheri was fatal to these proceedings. We think, to use the words of the Privy Council in the case of the Maharani of Burdwan v. Krishna Kamini Dasi (1), that this publication of the petition is not a substantial portion of the process to be observed by the zamindar. No injury could result to the patnidar or any one holding under him by the non-publication of this petition, which, as I have already pointed out, is only the method prescribed by the Regulation for putting the executive machinery in force. Further, it is to be observed (though we are not inclined to lay very much stress upon this) that the provisions of cl. 3 of s. 8 do not appear to be so stringent as those of cl. 2 of the same section.

[481] Another point urged by Mr. Woodroffe was that there was no certificate of the Munsif as required by this section of the Regulation. We think that this objection too fails. The section says:—"In case the people of the village should object or refuse to sign their names in attestation, the peon shall go to the kutcheri of the nearest Munsif or, if there should be no Munsif, to the nearest thana, and there make voluntary oath of the same having been duly published, certificate to which effect shall be signed and sealed by the said officers and delivered to the peon." We think that "certificate to this effect" means a certificate to the effect that the peon did come before the Munsif or Police officer, as the case may be, and did make voluntary oath as to the service of the notice: and, as pointed out by Mr. Evans for the appellant, this provision of the section would be fully complied with if the peon went before the Munsif or Police officer and made a deposition upon oath, and if the Munsif appended at the foot of that deposition a statement to the effect that the deponent had that day made that deposition in his presence, that would have been, we think, a certificate within the meaning of cl. 2 of s. 8. And if, as in this case, the peon went before the Munsif with an affidavit which had been prepared and sworn to, the jurat of the Munsif would have been as much a certificate as if the peon had made a deposition on oath and the Munsif had recorded the fact of his so having made the deposition on oath.

The next point taken by Mr. Woodroffe is that, supposing for the sake of argument, we should hold that notice was, as a matter of fact, served as required by the provisions of the Regulation in the mofussil, upon the land of the defaulting putnidar, and at the Collector's kutcheri, the notice in this case is a bad notice. This objection, we think, is well sustained. Clause 2 of s. 8 of the Regulation says: "On the first day of Bysack, that is, at the commencement of the following year from which the rent is due, the zamindar shall present a petition to the Collector, containing a specification of any balances that may be due to him on account of the expired year, from all or any talukhdars or other holders of an interest of the nature described in the preceding clause of this section. The same shall then be struck up in some conspicuous part of the kutcheri, with a notice that, if the amount claimed be not paid from the first of Jeth following, the tenures of the defaulters will on that day be sold by public sale in liquidation. Should, however, the first of Jeth fall on a Sunday or holiday, the next subsequent day, not a holiday, shall be selected instead; a similar notice shall be stuck up at the Sudder kutcheri of the zamindar himself, and a copy or extract of such part of the notice as may apply to the individual case shall be by him sent to be similarly published at the kutcheri or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter. The zamindar shall be exclusively answerable for the observance of the forms above prescribed, and the notice required to be sent into the mofussil shall be served by a single peon, who shall bring back the receipt of the defaulter, or of his manager, for the same, or in the event of inability to procure this, the signatures of three substantial persons residing in the neighbourhood, in attestation of the notice having been brought and published on the spot." Clause 2 having dealt with the case of bringing a putni to sale for arrears of rent extending over a whole year, cl. 3 deals with mid-year sales, and says:—"On the first day of Kartick, in the middle of the year, the zamindar shall be at liberty to present a similar petition, with a statement of any balances that may be due on account of the rent of the current year, up to the end of the month of Assin, and to cause similar publication to be made of a sale of the tenures of defaulters, to take place on the 1st of Aughran, unless the whole of the advertised balance shall be paid before the date in question, or so much of it as shall reduce the arrear, including any intermediate demand for the month of Kartick, to less than one-fourth or a four-anna proportion of the total demand of the zamindar, Now it is apparent that there is a very wide difference between what is to be contained in a notice served under cl. 2, and what is to be contained in a notice served under cl. 3. Under cl. 2 the defaulting putnidar and the dur-putnidar and all encumbrancers and the public are to learn from an inspection of the notice served upon the land of the defaulting putnidar, and at the Collectorate kutcheri and on the kutcheri of the zemindar who is bringing the putni to sale, that the tenure will not be [483] released from sale unless the whole year's arrears are paid. So that if any person wants to buy the putni as a speculation, or the putnidar wants to release it from sale, or the dur-putnidar or encumbrancer wants to realease it from sale in order to preserve their respective securities, they know that none of them can do what he wishes to unless he is willing to pay the whole year's arrears. But the Legislature says that if the zemind-ar chooses to make use of the provisions of this, what I may call, highly penal regulation in respect of arrears of rent for six months, it will not deal so harshly with the defaulting-putnidar, as it does when the zemind-ar wishes to make use of the regulation in respect of a year's arrears of rent; for a putni may be released from sale on payment either of the whole arrears or of 75 per cent. of it, that is to say, 75 per cent. of the arrears due up to the end of Assin, and 75 per cent. of what has accrued due from the end of Assin to the end of Kartick, that is, 75 per cent. of another month's rent.

Now, the Privy Council have, as we think, distinctly laid down that a substantial compliance with the substantial portions of this Regulation is a condition precedent to the right of the zemindar to bring the tenure to sale under the provisions of the Regulation, and that non-compliance with any one of the substantial requirements is, in the words of s. 14, which allows the putnidar to sue to set aside the sale, a "sufficient plea."

The notice in this case is as follows:—(reads notice 17 c., p. 476). As I have already pointed out the object of the publication of this notice is to give not only to the defaulting-putnidar but dur-putnidars, mortgagees and other encumbrancers notice of the sale. It may well be that the putnidar, dur-putnidar, mortgagees or other encumbrancers would have available for the purposes of saving the estate from sale 75 per cent. of the arrears due, but not the whole. Take an illustration; supposing the arrears amount to a lakh of rupees, a putnidar, or dur-putnidar or mortgagee, or other encumbrancers, may have 75,000 rupees in his pocket, or lying with his bankers, or in Government Promissory notes on which he could raise a loan, and release the property from sale, but he may not have the whole amount. The object being to allow all persons interested in saving the [484] tenure from sale an opportunity of doing so, we are of opinion that if the zemindar chooses to bring into operation the provisions of cl. 3, s. 8, and to get a half-year's rent by means of this Regulation, he must strictly comply with the conditions laid down in the section. We think that all the requirements in cl. 2 of s. 8 must be import to cl. 3 of that section mutatis mutandis: and therefore we think that the service of the notice is a condition precedent to the sale being held, and that the notice so served must be a good notice, that is to say, it must be a notice which shall put all parties concerned in saving the tenure from sale in possession of the knowledge of what really they will have to do if they desire to save the tenure, and would be purchasers in possession of information as to the amount they will have to spend if they wish to purchase the property. We are therefore of opinion that this notice was not such a notice as ought to have been stuck up under the provisions of the Regulation: and therefore upon that ground the decree must stand. (The learned Judges then considered the evidence as to the publication of the notice, and came to the conclusion that the notice had been duly published, and continued):—

We therefore think that the ground upon which the Subordinate Judge has proceeded in setting aside the sale is an erroneous one. But as I have already said, we think that the ground that the notice was bad in law is a substantial ground and that upon it the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The result is that the decree must be affirmed, though not upon the ground on which the Subordinate Judge has based it.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[485] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Trevelyan.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF THE DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCER ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL. THE QUEEN-EMpress v. BIBHUTI BHUSAN BIT.*

Appeal in criminal case—Appeal by Local Government from judgment of acquittal—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 417.—

Under the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) the Local Government have the same right of appeal against an acquittal as a person convicted has of appealing against his conviction and sentence, and there is no distinction between the mode of procedure and the principles upon which both classes of appeals are to be decided.

The respondent Bibhuti Bhusan Bit was charged with having committed an offence punishable under s. 326 of the Indian Penal Code by causing grievous hurt to one Protob Madak.

The trial took place before the Sessions Judge of Bankura with the aid of Assessors. The opinion expressed by the latter was, that the accused was not guilty, the reasons given being the want of sufficient proof, and the existence of numerous discrepancies in the evidence adduced by the prosecution. The Sessions Judge, in an elaborate judgment, analysed the evidence for the prosecution, and came to the conclusion that a conviction on the evidence could not be sustained, and accordingly acquitted the accused, and directed his discharge.

Against that acquittal the Deputy Legal Remembrancer, at the instance of the Local Government, appealed.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the Crown.

Mr. R. Allen and Baboo Sridhar Dass, for the respondent.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer contended that, upon the evidence, the accused ought to have been convicted.

* Criminal Appeal No. 4 of 1889, against the order passed by G. W. Place, Esq., Sessions Judge of Bankura, dated the 10th of July 1889.
Mr. Allen, upon the facts, contended that the acquittal was correct; and he further contended that this was not a case in which the Court should interfere with the order of the lower Court. Upon this question his argument was as follows:—

This Court should not interfere in an appeal from an acquittal unless the judgment of the lower Court is manifestly absurd or perverse. The mere fact that this Court might, on the facts, have come to a different conclusion, would not justify it in reversing the decision of the lower Court and convicting the accused. To justify its interference, there must be a miscarriage of justice of such an extraordinary nature and of such extraordinary importance, that the Court, in the interests of the public and of the administration of justice, would be bound to interfere. [Empress v. Gayadin (1). Anonymous, In the matter of the petition of the Government Pledger (2). Queen v. Dukaran (3). Reg. v. Ramajirav Jivbajirav (4). Queen-Empress v. Chotu (5). Queen-Empress v. Balwant (6). Queen-Empress v. Gobardihan (7).] These cases show that the Court would be justified in interfering when, upon the facts as found, an offence was clearly disclosed, and when the acquittal was due to an erroneous application of the law. There is no case reported in which the Court has interfered merely because it would have come to a different conclusion on the evidence from that arrived at by the Court below. This Court has not the advantage of hearing the evidence and watching the demeanour of the witnesses, which must naturally have a great effect on the Judge and Assessors when they come to deal with the credibility of the witnesses. The right to appeal against an acquittal was first introduced in the Code of 1872. The Code of 1861 contained no such provision. The power is an arbitrary one, and should be most sparingly used. A second trial for the same offence after an acquittal is foreign to the fundamental principles of all criminal procedure. Should the Court, however, be of opinion that this case comes within the principles submitted, and that there has been a miscarriage of justice requiring its interference, a new trial should be directed, and this Court should not take upon itself the grave responsibility of deciding upon the evidence, as it appears on paper, after an acquittal by the Judge and Assessors in the Court below.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer, in reply.

The judgment of the Court (O'Kinealy and Trevelyan, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case Bibhuti Bhusan Bit was charged before the Sessions Judge of Bankura with having committed an offence punishable under s. 326 of the Indian Penal Code and was acquitted. Against that acquittal the Government have now appealed, and it remains for us to determine whether the judgment arrived at by the Court below ought to be reversed or not. Some cases have been cited before us by the learned Counsel who appeared for Bibhuti Bhusan Bit in this Court, and he has argued upon the strength of them, that this Court, should not interfere with an acquittal by a lower Court unless the judgment of that Court was manifestly absurd or perverse.

Under the Code of Criminal Procedure the Government have the same right of appeal against an acquittal as a person convicted has to appeal against his conviction and sentence. There is no distinction made in that Code as to the mode of procedure which governs the two sorts of appeals, or as to the principles upon which they are to be decided. Both appeals are governed by the same rules, and are subject to the same limitations; and it appears to us that we are bound to decide this appeal, and that we have no discretion to refuse to interfere if we consider that the judgment of the Court below is wrong, and that Bibhuti Bhusan Bit should have been convicted.

No doubt, in all cases of appeals, the Judges of a Court of Appeal are naturally very cautious in interfering with the judgment of a Judge and Assessors before whom the witnesses were examined, both on the ground that a Court before whom witnesses are examined has superior advantages in estimating the value of their testimony, and also here on the additional ground that in all criminal cases the accused is entitled to have the advantage of any doubt which may arise in the case; but, after giving the accused every benefit which he can derive from such a decision in his favour, if we are still of opinion that he is guilty of the offence with which he has been charged, we think there is no discretion left to us as to whether we should find him guilty or not.

[Their Lordships then proceeded to deal with the evidence in the case, and came to the conclusion that the judgment should be set aside. They accordingly convicted the prisoner and sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment.]

This case was referred to a Full Bench by Mr. Justice Trevelyan, and Mr. Justice Banerjee. The order of reference was as follows:—

"In this case the Munsif of Serajgunje gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Pabna and Bogra set aside that decree on the ground that the next friend of the plaintiff was a married woman. The Subordinate Judge relied upon the decision of a Division Bench of this Court (Prinsep and Grant, J.J.) in the case of Guru Pershad Singh v. Gossain Munraj Puri (1). We do not agree with that decision. In our opinion s. 457 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to the case of a next friend. Section 445, we think, governs the case. We refer to a Full Bench the following question: 'Can a married woman act as next friend of an infant plaintiff?' Should this question be decided in the affirmative, it is admitted that the plaintiff is entitled to the decree which was given to her by the Munsif.'

Babu Kishore Lall Sirkar, for the appellants, contended that under s. 445 a married woman might be a next friend. (The Court then called upon the other side.)

Babu Jasoda Nundun Pramanick, for the respondent, relied on the decision of Prinsep and Grant, J.J., and contended that [489] the English courts were in his favour (Judicature Act of 1875, Order 16, Rule 8). Under the rules of the original side of the High Court a married woman was held unqualified to act as next friend (Rule 574, Belchambers, p. 232).

Baboo Kishore Lall Sirkar was not called on in reply.

OPINION.

The opinion of the Full Bench was expressed by Prinsep, J.J., and with that view the remainder of the Court concurred.

Prinsep, J.—Upon reconsideration of this matter, I think that the view taken by the Division Bench which referred this case is correct. The plaintiff will therefore be entitled to a decree, the decree of the first Court being restored with costs.

NARAIN MAHTON (Defendant) v. MANOFI PATTUK (Plaintiff).*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153 (a)—Appeal from decree in rent suit under Rs. 100.

The words "amount of rent annually payable by a tenant" in s. 153 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act include the case of rent payable by a tenant to one of his co-sharer landlords who collects his share of the rent separately.

[R., 29 C. 54 = 5 C.W.N. 763; 30 C. 773 = 8 C.W.N. 193 (195); 7 C.W.N. 908.]

In this case the plaintiff in the year 1293 F.E. sued the defendants to recover Rs. 24-11, as the bhouli rent of eight bighas of land, alleging that he had an eight-annas share in such rent. The defendants contended that the plaintiff had only an eight-pie share of the landlord's interest in the land. The Munsif held the defendant's contention to be correct, but on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, the latter officer held that the plaintiff was entitled to an eight-anna interest in the rent and decreed the appeal.

* Full Bench on Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1685 of 1885, against the decision of Baboo Krishna Chunder Dass, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated the 28th July 1888, reversing the decision of Moulvi Ata Hossein Khan, Munsif of Aurungabad, dated the 31st March 1887.
One of the defendants appealed to the High Court. The amount claimed in the suit being less than Rs. 100, it was contended that under s. 153 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act no appeal [490] was allowed unless it could be held that the decision of the Courts below decided a question of the amount of rent annually payable by the tenant. Mr. Justice Pigot and Mr. Justice Rampini, before whom the case came, having regard to the conflicting decisions of Prasanna Kumar Banerjee v. Sri Nath Dass (1) and Aubhoy Churn Maji v. Shosht Bhusan Bose (2), referred to the Full Bench the following question:—Do the words "amount of rent annually payable by a tenant," in s.153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, mean "the total amount of rent annually payable by a tenant to the whole body of his landlords where there are more than one," or do they mean "the amount of rent payable by a tenant to one of his co-sharer landlords, who collects his share of the rent separately?"

Moulvi Mahomed Yussuf, for the appellant, contended that there was an appeal; relying upon Aubhoy Churn Maji v. Shosht Bhusan Bose (2), and pointed out that the Subordinate Judge had not tried the proper issue between the parties, but the question whether the plaintiff was in possession and enjoyment of half the hakimi share.

No one appeared for the respondent.

OPINION.

The opinion of the Full Bench (Petheram, C. J., Prinsep, Pigot, O'Kinealy and Ghose, JJ.), was delivered by Pigot, J.—In this case we agree with the decision come to by Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Macpherson, and referred to in the order of reference; and in answer to the question put to this Bench, we think that the words "amount of rent annually payable by a tenant" occurring in s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act include the case of rent payable by a tenant to one of the co-sharer landlords who collects his rent separately.

[491] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson.

Tincowrie Dawn v. Debenadro Nath Mookerjee,*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), arts. 179, 180—Execution of decree—Civil Procedure Codes (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 287, 288; (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 227, 228—Transfer of Decree to High Court for execution, period of limitation applicable.

Having regard to the provisions of ss. 227 and 228 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), the period of limitation applicable to the execution of a decree, transmitted by one Court to another for execution, depends on the character of the Court which passed the decree, and not on the character of the Court executing it.

S., a judgment-creditor, who had obtained his decree in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes on the 29th July 1884 had it transferred to the High Court for execution, and took certain proceedings there to execute it, which resulted in an order passed on the 13th June 1885, for payment out to him of certain monies realised in the proceedings in part satisfaction of his decree. Payment was actually made on the 8th August 1885. The next step in execution was an application made on the 14th September 1888; the usual notice was issued, and no cause being shown by the judgment-debtor, an order was made on the 19th December for the attachment of certain monies in the hands of a Receiver belonging to the judgment-debtor. These monies were also attached by other judgment-creditors. The question was then referred to the Registrar to enquire and report, who under the provisions of s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure were entitled to share in such monies, and in what proportion. It was objected that S. was not entitled to share on the ground that on the 14th September 1888 the right to execute his decree was barred by limitation. The question was referred by the Registrar to the Court.

_Held_, that as under art. 179, sch. II of Act XV of 1877 the period applicable to decrees of the Small Cause Court was 3 years, the application of the 14th September 1888 was barred by limitation, and that S. was not entitled to share under the provisions of s. 295.

_Held_ further that the order of the 19th December 1888 having been made out of time, though on notice to the judgment-debtor, there was nothing to prevent a third party questioning its propriety, though the parties to the suit might be precluded from doing so.

_Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (1) doubted._

[492] This was a reference by the Registrar to the Court under the provisions of Rule 13 of the Rules of the 18th February 1888.

By an order, dated the 15th April 1889, made in this suit it was, _inter alia_, referred to the Registrar to enquire and report which of certain judgment-creditors, who had all attached certain monies in the hands of a Receiver in execution of their respective decrees, were entitled under the provisions of s. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code to share in such monies, and in what proportions. Amongst such attaching creditors were Upendra Nath Sarkar and others, who had obtained their decree in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes on the 29th July 1884, and the question argued on the present reference was, whether they were entitled to share or whether their right to execute their decree was not barred by limitation. No question as to the right of the other attaching creditors to share was raised before the Registrar.

The various steps taken by the decree-holders, Upendra Nath Sarkar and others, to execute their decree were as follows. After the decree was passed by the Small Cause Court on the 29th July 1884 it was transmitted to the High Court for execution, and on the 23rd August 1884 an application was made for execution by attaching certain property, which was granted, and on the 26th August 1884 the property was attached. On the 13th June 1885 an order was made for payment of the amount realized to the attaching creditors in partial satisfaction of their claim under their decree, and on the 8th August following the amount so realized was paid to them. On the 14th September 1888 another application was made for execution, and the usual notice was issued to the judgment-debtors, as the decree was more than a year old. On the 19th December 1888, no cause having been shown by the judgment-debtors, on attachment was issued against the fund the distribution of which was the subject of the reference. This fund was in the hands of a Receiver appointed in suit No. 351 of 1889, which was a suit brought for dissolution of a partnership between the judgment-debtors. It appeared from the Registrar’s Report that on the 21st July 1888 notice of an application was given in that suit by these judgment-creditors for payment of their claims out of the partnership assets, but that application was refused on the 2nd [493] August 1888, and it was contended before the Registrar, that it must be treated as an application for execution. With regard to this, however, the Registrar considered that the only effect of that application could be to exclude the time between the 21st July 1888 and the 2nd August 1888, in computing the period of limitation to be applied to the application made on the 14th September 1888, and that, allowing for that time, the latter application would still be barred if three years was the period to apply.

The material portion of the Registrar’s Report on the question subsequently argued in Court was as follows:—

The note in the Court Minute Book with regard to that application (14th September 1888) made on the 19th December 1888 is as follows:—

“Mr. Chuckerbutty applies for attachment of money in the hands of the Receiver in Debendro Nath Mookerjee v. Rojoni Kanta Chatterjee. Notice has been served, as the decree is more than a year old.”

So far as appears from that note it was not suggested that there was any question of limitation.

It was further contended that the order made upon that application, whether made with the full knowledge of the facts or not, precludes me as a referee from considering any question which would affect its validity. That order, if made after time, could not affect the law of limitation. If, therefore, the claim of these creditors was previously barred it continues barred notwithstanding that order, and is inadmissible in law.

It was finally contended on the authority of Leake v. Daniel (1) that the claim has not been barred inasmuch as the Law of Limitation applicable to proceedings in execution should be the Law of Limitation in force in the Court to which the decree has been transmitted for execution. Although the opinion expressed in that case was purely obiter dictum, and had not the authority of a judicial dictum, I should not think of questioning its authority if it is as applicable to proceedings in execution now as it then was. But that opinion refers expressly to the intention of the Legislature under s. 287 of Act VIII of 1859, which provides that a decree or order transmitted to another Court for execution when filed in that Court “shall for that purpose have the same effect, as a decree or order for execution made by such Court.” The Code of Civil Procedure has since been materially altered. Act XIV of 1882 contains no provision as to the effect of a decree transmitted to another Court for execution, such as was contained in s. 287 of the former Code. Section 227 of Act XIV of 1882 says that a decree transmitted for execution to a High Court “shall be executed by such Court in the same manner as if it had been made by such Court in [494] the exercise of its ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction,” and s. 228 gives to the Court executing a decree the same power in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself.

An opinion founded on the special provisions of s. 287 of Act VIII of 1859 cannot now be referred to as authoritative, having regard to the altered provisions of the law.

The question is, at the request of Mr. Newgee, the attorney for the creditors, referred to the Judge in Chambers under Rule 13 of the rules of 18th February 1888.

(1) B.L.R. Sup. Vol. 970.
Mr. M. P. Gasper for the judgment-creditors Upendra Nath Sarkar and others.—The reference to the Registrar was made in the presence of all the attaching creditors, and no contention was then raised that the right to the execution of this decree was barred by limitation. It was not therefore open to the Registrar to go into this question.

Wilson, J.—The order directs the Registrar to enquire who are entitled to share, and in what proportions.

Mr. Gasper.—My next point is that the decree having been transferred to this Court for execution, the period of limitation to be applied is that governing decrees of this Court. This was so decided in Leake v. Daniel (1) by Peacock, C.J.

Wilson, J.—That case was decided when Act VIII of 1859 was in force, the provisions of which on this subject differ from those of the present Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Gasper.—The provisions of the old Code on the matter are embodied in ss. 287 and 288, and I submit that the effect of ss. 227 and 228 of Act XIV of 1882 is to make no change in the law in this respect. I rely on the words "The Court executing a decree sent to it under this Chapter shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself." One of those powers is to execute a decree provided 12 years have not elapsed since it was passed. I also rely on the decision in Ashootosh Duit v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (2). In this case the decree was revived when the Court issued notice to show cause why it should not be executed.

Wilson, J.—In that case the notice was to the judgment-debtor, and no question as to the rights of third parties arose, as it does in this.

[496] Mr. Gasper.—If the principle in that case be sound that element would make no difference, as a decree which is in existence and force against a judgment-debtor can be executed against any of his property.

No one appeared for the other attaching creditors or for the judgment-debtor.

The judgment of the Court was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Wilson, J.—The point raised in this case is a short one. It arises out of a reference to the Registrar, of a very usual kind, to enquire who were entitled to take a share of the sale proceeds of property attached in execution, and that depends upon what valid attachments upon the property were in force or had been ordered.

In the course of that reference it became necessary to determine whether Mr. Gasper’s client, who is one of the attaching creditors, is entitled to share in the proceeds of sale. The dates, which are important, are the following:—The claimant obtained his decree on the 29th of July 1884. The decree was transmitted to this Court for execution, and on the 23rd of August he applied for execution. On the 26th of that month the property was attached. On the 13th June 1885 an order was made for payment out to the creditor of what had been realized, towards satisfaction of his claim, and on the 8th August 1885 payment was actually made. The next step was an application for execution, the validity of which is in question. The application was made on the 14th September 1888; notice issued on the ground that the decree was more than a year old, and on the 19th December, no cause being shown, attachment issued; more than three years had thus elapsed after anything had been done, when the present attachment was applied for in 1888.

(1) B.L.R, Sup. Vol. 970.

The question is whether that attachment is valid or whether it is barred by limitation. Under the former Procedure Code provision was made for the execution of decrees, transmitted to Courts other than those which passed the same, contained in ss. 287 and 288 of Act VIII of 1859. These sections are as follows:

"The copy of any decree, or of any order for execution, when filed in the Court to which it shall have been transmitted for the purpose of being executed as aforesaid, shall for such purpose have the same effect as a decree or order for execution made by such Court, and may, if the Court be the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the district, be executed by such Court, or any Court subordinate thereto, to which it may entrust the execution of the same."

"When application shall be made to any Court to execute the decree of any other Court as aforesaid, the Court to which the application shall be made of referred shall proceed to execute the same according to its own rules in the like cases; provided that such Court shall have no power to inquire into the validity of the decree unless it appears from the face of the decree that the Court by which it was made had no jurisdiction to make the same."

On these provisions an opinion was expressed by Peacock, C. J., in Leake v. Daniel (1). "A question was raised in argument as to what law of limitation would apply, if the Court in which the decree was obtained, and that to which it was transmitted, were governed by different laws of limitation. It is unnecessary for us to determine what would be the law applicable to such a case; but, speaking for myself only, I would say that it appears to have been the intention of the Legislature under s. 287 that the law of limitation by which the Court to which the decree was transmitted was bound, should be the law. It is a general rule that Statutes of Limitation affect the remedy, and not the law." That opinion was expressed upon a section which said that the copy transmitted should have the effect of a decree of the Court to which it was transmitted to be executed. Then turning to the provisions of the Limitation Act XIV of 1859, ss. 19 and 20, they showed what the effect of a decree of the High Court was in point of limitation, and what the effect of a decree of another Court was. Those are the provisions of the law then in force.

Now we have to see what the effect of the present law is. ss. 227 and 228 of Act XIV of 1882. There is not a word about the effect of a decree in s. 227, but simply directions as to the manner of execution; and the next section goes on: "The Court executing a decree sent to it under this chapter shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. [497] All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree. And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself." That again says nothing about the effect of any decree, but deals simply with the manner of execution, and leaves the matter of limitation to be governed by the Limitation Act. Articles 179 and 180 of the second schedule to that Act provide what the period of the limitation shall be in each of the two cases, and the difference is made to depend solely on the character of the Court which passed the decree. There is one period for decrees of High Courts and another for decrees of other Courts. The law depends not on the character of the Court which executes the decree, but of the Court which passed it, though the manner of execution is that of the Court which executes the decree.

Another case cited was Ashootosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn Chatterjee (1), before Mr. Justice White, in which the learned Judge held that, where a notice issued from this Court to show cause why a decree should not be executed, and after the notice an order for execution was made, that order had the effect or reviving the decree, in the same manner as in former days when a decree was revived by seire facias, and gave a new period of limitation. It is not necessary to discuss that question, as in this case the order, which is said to have had the effect of reviving the decree, was itself made out of time, and there is nothing to prevent a third person questioning the propriety of that order, though the parties to the suit might be precluded from doing so. I must add that if it had been necessary to consider the correctness of that decision, I should have hesitated about following it. I think it is a decision which may have to be reconsidered.

The result is that by the law of limitation the claim of the claimant represented by Mr. Gasper is barred, and his client is not entitled to share in the proceeds of execution.

Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry (Plaintiff) v. Amarchand Kundu and others (Defendants). [25th, 26th, 27th, 30th July and 9th November, 1889.]

Mahomedan Law—Endowment—An appropriation not within the principle of wakf—Property settled on members of grantor's family with a charge upon it for religious and charitable purposes—Effect of appropriation where the charge was not a substantial one.

Although the making provision for grantor's family out of property dedicated to religious or charitable purposes may be consistent with the property being constituted wakf, yet in order to render it wakf the property must have been substantially, and not merely colourably, dedicated to such purposes.

Although an instrument purporting to dedicate property as "jisabilillah wakf," and vesting it in members of the grantor's family in succession "to carry on the affairs in connection with the wakf," might include provisions for the benefit of the grantor's family without its operation as a wakf being annulled, yet, on the other hand, it would not operate to establish wakf, as it did not devote a substantial part of the property to religious or charitable purposes.
Without determining how far provisions for the grantor's family might form part of a settlement for religious or charitable purposes, and yet not deprive it of its character as establishing \textit{wakf}, the Committee approved the decision in \textit{Mushuurool Huq v. Pukraj Ditarey Mohapattra} (1) to the effect that the mere charge upon the profits of the estates of certain items which must in the course of time have ceased, being for the benefit of one family, did not render an endowment invalid as a \textit{wakf}.

In the present case, however, there being no authority for holding a gift to be good as a \textit{wakf} without there being a substantial dedication of the property to charitable or religious uses at some time or other; and the uses prescribed involving only an outlay suitable for such a family to make in charity, the gift was held not to be a substantial, or \textit{bona fide}, dedication of the property as \textit{wakf}. The use of this expression, and others, being only to cover arrangements for the benefit of the family and to make their property inalienable, the property was not constituted \textit{wakf}, nor was it freed from liability to attachment in execution of a decree against one of the grantees.

The question now raised was whether a valid dedication had been effected by the plaintiff's father by an instrument which he executed on the 5th December 1864 of land in Chittagong, so as to constitute it \textit{wakf} or whether the instrument, though nominally dedicating property to religious and charitable purposes, established only a charge on the property in the hands of the members of the grantor's family, the property remaining liable to attachment in execution of a decree against one of them.

The suit, in which the present appellant sued as \textit{mutwali} of \textit{wakf}, or dedicated, property, was brought to obtain a declaration that four \textit{talugs} in the Chittagong district, which had been attached by Krishnadas Kundu in execution of a money decree against Shaikh Mahomed Rahimula Chowdhry, brother of the plaintiff, had been made \textit{wakf} by their father, and were consequently not liable to be attached in execution. Rahimula had been joined with Krishnadas Kundu as defendant, Ahsanulla alleged that Ahmedulla Chowdhry, their father who died in 1866, had executed the above-mentioned deed of 5th December 1864, by which he purported to dedicate all his property, moveable and immoveable, in the Chittagong district as "fisabilillah \textit{wakf}," for defraying the expense of a \textit{masjid} at his family dwelling-house, and of two \textit{madrassas} at Chittagong, also of lodging strangers; and also had provided for the superintendence of this endowment by his two sons.

The principal clauses are set forth in their Lordships' judgment. Krishnadas Kundu being now dead, he was represented by the respondents Amarchand Kundu and others.

Part of the property dealt with having been attached by Krishnadas in execution of a decree which he held against Rahimula, an application was made by Ahsanulla under s. 278, Civil Procedure Code, for its

\begin{footnotesize} \textit{(1)} 13 W. R. 235.
\end{footnotesize}
release. This was refused on the 31st December 1881 by the Subordinate Judge, who, after considering the terms of the deed of 5th December 1864, and the absence of any directions fixing what share of the income of the property, then said to \[500\] amount to Rs. 17,000 annually, was to be appropriated to religious and charitable purposes; and after referring to the condition of the musjid and Madrassas, made the following order:—

"It appears to me as very probable from the aforesaid circumstances that the real object of the appropriator was neither religion nor charity, but the perpetuation of the properties in his family, so that his male descendants may enjoy their profits without alienating it to strangers. That the appropriator had such an intention in view may also be gathered from the provision in the 5th paragraph of the deed, by which he tried to restrict even the power of the so-called mutwalis to sell or mortgage the allowances granted to them. I do not think a Mahomedan can lawfully make such a disposition of his property under the disguise of a wakf, and it appears to me that the disposition is invalid. The claim is dismissed accordingly with costs."

This suit was then, under s. 283, Civil Procedure Code, instituted to have the above order set aside, and to have it declared that the property had been validly dedicated, and made wakf, so that it was not liable to attachment. The plaintiff alleged that he and his brother were only salaried servants, having no ownership in the property. The Subordinate Judge considered that the validity of the instrument of 5th December 1864 had been established, and that the property was wakf and inalienable. He made a decree in favour of the plaintiff to that effect.

On an appeal by the defendant to the High Court, a division bench (MACDONELL and MACPHERSON, JJ.) gave the following judgment:

"The only question which we have to consider is, whether the wakfnama upon which the plaintiff relies, makes the talugs, which are the subject of this suit, valid wakf under the Mahomedan law. These are not the only properties affected by the deed, for the maker professed to appropriate his entire properties, moveable and immovable, as wakf. The plaintiff has carefully withheld all evidence of the income of the properties so dealt with; but he admits that the annual profit derived from them was Rs. 12,000 or Rs. 13,000, though he says that it has become less since the inundation. We think that there is every reason to believe that it is much more than that sum.

"If the first clause of the deed stood alone there would be a valid dedication, for the properties are dedicated as wakf for defraying the \[501\] expenses of the brick-built musjid at the dedicatory family dwelling-house, and of the two Madrassas at his ancestral homestead and his lodging-house in the town of Chittagong and for 'sadir warid.' This would, so far as words go, sufficiently satisfy the requirements of Mahomedan law according to the strictest construction which has been put upon it by the Courts in this country. But the dedication is qualified by the words in the manner provided in the paragraphs mentioned below.' These paragraphs, which are thirteen in number, contain only one short allusion to the object of endowment. This is to be found in the second paragraph where the mutwali is directed to, 'continue to perform the stated religious works according to custom.' The whole of the rest of the deed consists of minute provisions for the management of the property, the appointment of his three sons as mutwali and naib-mutwali, the succession to those offices which are to be filled by the sons of the mutwali, or, in their default, by sons born of the same family in nearest descent,' and for the maintenance and support of all other members of the family. The mutwalis are to get salaries of Rs. 100, 90 and 80 a month, respectively. If the sons of the mutwalis exceed three in number, the mutwalis can give to those who cannot get one of the three appointments any monthly allowance they like. Provision is also made for wives and daughters, and for birth, marriage, and funeral expenses of both sons and daughters. Lastly, it is left to the mutwalis to increase their own salaries or those of other salaried persons, having regard to the income and expenditure of wakf properties.

The only provisions regarding a surplus are contained in paragraphs 2 and 4, which direct that the surplus after meeting all the expenses is to be kept in a safe place under the supervision and management of all the mutwalis, and that all properties acquired out of this surplus are to be part of the wakf properties.

"The effect, therefore, of the deed as a whole is, that, while it professes to dedicate as wakf properties bringing in a very large annual income, it leaves it to the members of the family, who are as mutwalis to retain the control and management, to spend as little as they like beyond what is customary on the objects of the endowment, and to take as much as they like for themselves and the members of the family for all time on account of salary as maintenance. There is nothing whatever in the deed to indicate that the dedicator contemplated any increased expenditure in maintaining the musjid, madrassas and sadir warid. The maintenance of the members of the family, however numerous, is well provided for; but the stated religious works are to be performed according to custom. It is quite clear that the customary mode of performing them would involve an expenditure which in no way approached the annual income, and that there would remain a large annual surplus, which would be entirely at the disposal of the mutwalis, and from which all the members of the family would have to be maintained.

Although, therefore, the deed nominally dedicates the properties for purposes in themselves good and valid according to Mahomedan law, the dedication clause is subject to the subsequent provisions; and these, while giving the smallest possible prominence to the objects of the endowment, and limiting, as we should construe the deed, the expenditure on them, would operate to create a perpetuity for the benefit of the members of the family, and at the same time place the properties beyond the reach of the law. That this was the object of the dedicator there can, we think, from the terms of the deed, be little doubt.

On a proper construction of the whole deed it seems to us that though all the properties are nominally made wakf for proper and legitimate objects, there is a surplus which is to be enjoyed by the members of the family, and as to which there is no ultimate trust in favour of any pious or charitable purpose.

"It has been argued that a settlement of this nature is recognized by Mahomedan law, and that a person can make a wakf in favour of himself, his children and children's children, &c. The Subordinate Judge appears to have adopted this view, and has cited in support of it certain passages from Baillie's Mahomedan Law and the case of Luchmiput Singh v. Amir Alum (1), decided by Tottenham and Bose, JJ. It seems to us unnecessary to go into the point, because the settlement as made is not one of that character.

(1) 9 C. 176.
If the properties had been made wakf in favour of the founder’s children and children’s children, with an ultimate trust in favour of the poor and needy, we should undoubtedly have had to consider whether such settlement created a valid wakf. The decision of Norris and Tottenham, JJ., in Hamidulla Khan v. Lutful Huq (1) renders it extremely doubtful whether it would be valid. It was not considered so in that case. Here the dedication purports to be for religious and charitable purposes alone, and we have only to see whether this was the real intention of the donor and whether the deed as a whole supports such a dedication. It is clear that a person cannot do indirectly that which he cannot do directly. But putting this consideration aside, if the dedication in part fails as regards the avowed objects for which it was made, we are not, we think, bound to consider whether it will hold good as regards other objects for which there was no express dedication. It is clear that it was not the intention that in this case anything like the income should be spent on the objects designated and I think the settlement should only hold good to the extent of the intention of the donor as regards the special objects in support of which the settlement was made.

“In the case referred to as decided by Tottenham and Bose, JJ., it was held that the objects of the wakf being religious and charitable, the dedication [503] was complete, and that a subsequent direction that the manager should maintain the future male descendants of the maker of the wakf, did not necessarily alter its character. It was not decided whether such a direction could be lawfully carried out. That was a conclusion arrived at on the construction of the particular deed propounded in that case, and we must suppose that there was found to be an intention to create a bona fide wakf of all the properties, though this was coupled with a condition which might or might not be enforceable. Here, we think, there was no such bona fide intention as regards all the properties, and we should only give effect to the intention so far as it existed.

“We hold then that the deed, construed as a whole, did not create a valid and entire wakf of these properties, and that consequently the plaintiff is not entitled to get the properties released from attachment as wakf. It did, however, create a charge on the properties for the maintenance and support in the customary manner of the objects designated in the opening clause of the deed. We cannot, however, determine in this case what that charge is, in what proportion it should be borne by the different properties affected, or what part of the properties should be set aside to meet it, as this case relates to only a few of the properties subjected to the charge.

The plaintiff’s claim, so far as it seeks to get the properties declared to be wakf and to get them released from attachment as such, must be dismissed, and in lieu of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, there will be a decree to the effect that the properties in suit are subject to the charge specified above, the extent of which has yet to be determined. The appellant will get his costs in both Courts.”

From this decision the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that the instrument of 5th December 1864 had not been correctly construed with reference to the law of wakf, and had not received its due effect in the judgment of the High Court. An appropriation for religious or charitable purposes gave to the estate the quality of wakf of which it was not deprived merely by reason of the reservation of part for the maintenance of the donor’s family. A wakf might lawfully contain provisions for the benefit of the grantor’s family. Moreover, the law contemplated the payment of the mutwali, or superintendent, and trustee. The appointment of some one to take charge of the property appropriated was essential, and he was entitled to participate in the benefit of the appropriation. They referred to—

Baillie’s Digest of Muhammadan Law, Hanifseea, Chapter 1IX; Hamilton’s Hedaya, vol. II, of Wakf; Macnaghten’s Principles and Precedents of Muhammadan Law, Endowments, case VIII.

Appropriations, in the nature of settlements of property upon descend- ants, had been treated as appropriations under the name of wakf, where there was the use of that term, and an ultimate trust for the poor. The legal effect of wakf was said to be an abatement of the appropriator’s right of property; but it was consistent with a detaining of it in his ownership, without the power of alienation; and the poor were deemed to be an inextinguishable class of beneficiaries. The establishment of a wakf might be inferred from the general character of a grant; Kulb Ali Hossein v. Syf Ali (1), Jau Bibee v. Abdoollah (2), Jiwan Due Sahoo v. Shaik Kubeer-oood-deen (3). They also referred to Mr. Amir Ali’s Tagore lectures for 1884, lecture IX, section II, and to lecture X.

Luchnijiit Singh v. Amir Alium (4) showed that, notwithstanding provisions for debts and maintenance, a wakf was valid. And, although it was questioned, in Phate Saheb Bibi v. Damodur Premji (5), whether a wakf could be created merely for the purpose of conferring a perpetual estate on a particular family, without any ultimate use to the poor, it was afterwards decided that, if the condition of an ultimate dedication to a pious and unfailing purpose had been satisfied, a wakf was not invalidated by an intermediate settlement on the founder’s children, and their descend- ants, in Fatma Bibi v. The. Advocate-General of Bombay (6). They also referred to Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lutful Huq (7) and to Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hossein Mirza Rahimulla (8). Although there might be no trace in these cases that a man’s mere gift to his own family was in itself a pious use, yet the ultimate trust for religious, or charitable, objects, or for the poor generally, was in itself a pious use. And there was a discretionary power to the mutwali to allow what might be suitable to maintain the family.

Under another system of law, the principle being apparently applicable to all, provisions inconsistent with the trust, which a will established for pious purposes, were rejected—see Aushotosh Dutt v. Durgachurn Chatterjee (13).

The decision of the High Court that the charge on the properties for the maintenance and support of the charitable objects, designated in the opening clause, had been created, and yet that the properties were not constituted wakf, was inconsistent with the course of decision of the Courts.

Reference was also made to Kameez Fatima v. Saheba Jan (1). Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents, argued that the deed of 1864 did not validly and effectually dedicate the property in question, so as to constitute it wakf. It appeared from the deed itself, as well as from the evidence as to the subsequent dealing with the property, that there had been nothing more than an attempt to create, under colour of a wakf, a perpetuity for the benefit of family of Ahmedulla Chowdhry. The trusts declared were far from absorbing a substantial part of the properties. As to the document, it was insufficient that there should only be an insertion of the term wakf: there must be a clear intention shown to devote to religious or charitable purposes; and, instead of this intention being shown, the question arose whether the primary object was of that character at all. The real purpose in view was to provide for the family, and only a small part of the estate was to be applied to the charity. They referred to the Tagore Lectures, 1884, p. 230, comparing an expression of opinion therein with what was said by West, J., in Fatima Bibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (2). They also cited Khajo Hossein Ali v. Shahzada Hazara Begum (3), Futtoo Bibi v. Bharrut Lal Bhukat (4), Bailie's Digest, 557, [606] Hedaya, II, 349. They distinguished the case in which the judgment was given by Kemp, J., Muzhurool Huq v. Pukhraj Ditarey Mohapatra (5).

Mr. R. V. Doyne replied, referring to Macnaghten's Principles and Precedents, as giving all the true conditions of wakf, and contending that they were satisfied in this case.

Afterwards, on 9th November 1889, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The plaintiff in this suit, who is also the appellant, is one of the sons of Sheik Ahmedulla Chowdhry; the second defendant is another son; the first defendant is a judgment creditor of the second defendant, and in that character obtained an attachment against the property now in dispute. The plaintiff contends that the property is wakf and that he is the mutawali and that his brother has no interest therein which can be taken in execution. He accordingly made a claim in the execution proceedings which on the 31st December 1881 was rejected by the Court on the ground that no genuine wakf had been created.

The plaintiff then brought the present suit. In his plaint he states that the properties mentioned in the schedule were owned by his father Ahmedulla; that Ahmedulla by a wakfnama of the 5th December 1864 made a wakf of them, which ever since has continued in force; and that he and his brother are simply salaried servants, for the purpose of performing the work specified in the wakfnama. He prays for a declaration that the specified properties are wakf, and that the order of the 31st December 1881 may be set aside.

The only substantial issue throughout the litigation has been whether the intention of the deed of 5th December 1864 was to turn the properties in question into wakf property. If it was, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed; and if not, he must fail. The Subordinate Judge decided in his favour. On appeal the High Court thought that the intention of the deed was not to create an entire wakf of the properties, but only to create a charge on them for the maintenance in the customary manner of objects designated in the opening clause of the deed. They reversed the decree of [507] the Lower Court, dismissed the suit so far as it seeks to have the properties declared wakf and released from attachment, and declared "that the said properties are subject to the charge (the extent whereof has to be hereafter determined) specified in paragraph 1 of the wakfnama dated the 5th December 1864, that is to say, of defraying the expenses, in the customary manner, of the brick-built musjid of Jorip Mahomed Chowdury in Paragulpore, and of two madrassas and sadir warid (travellers) as mentioned in the said clause."

From that decree the plaintiff appeals, and his appeal must be decided entirely by the construction put upon the deed.

At the outset of the deed the grantor adverts to his age and his coming death, and says—"I hereby appropriate and dedicate as fisabilillah 'wakf,' in the manner provided in the paragraphs mentioned below,"—the properties now in question and other property there described,—"for defraying the expenses of the brick-built musjid of my grandfather, Jorip Mahomed Chowdury at my own family dwelling-house in the village of Paragulpore, and of the two madrassas at my own ancestral homestead, and my lodging house in the town of Chittagong and sadir warid (persons coming and going), and I pray to God that he may in his mercy accept and preserve the same for ever for being applied to those purposes."

The "paragraphs mentioned below" are 13 in number.

Paragraph 1 appoints the grantor's three sons to be mutwalis of the wakf properties in a gradation of rank, and it contains some very elaborate instructions respecting the management of the property.

Paragraph 2 runs as follows:—

"The mutwalis, after payment of the proper expenses of the mosarif and the necessary costs of collections of the zemindari and the salaries of mukhtears and other servants and the expenses of litigation and the like, and all other charges which may be incurred on the occurrence of any peril or emergency, out of all kinds of income and profits of the endowed properties according to the long standing practice, shall take from the residue his own monthly allowance, pay over the allowance due to the naib-mutwali and naib-ul-maniab and my daughters as specified in the schedule, and continue to perform the stated religious works [508] according to custom. He shall, having regard to the provisions contained in the first paragraph, keep his eye to the legitimate objects of the mosarif, and not commit extravagance and waste or practise fraud in connection therewith. The balance that may be left after meeting the above-mentioned expenses shall be kept in a proper, that is to say, a safe place, under the supervision and management of all the three persons."

The schedule provides Rs. 100 per month for the first mutwalis Rs. 90 for the second, Rs. 80 for the third and Rs. 30 for the daughters.

Paragraph 3 provides for the succession of mutwalis in case of retirement or death. It is very inartificially expressed, and in some contingencies might be difficult to apply. But for its bearing on the construction of the deed is sufficient for their Lordships to say that in their judgment it was meant by its framer to provide for a perpetual succession of some of the male members of his family as mutwalis, to be appointed either by existing mutwalis, or by a committee or by an officer of Government.

Paragraph 4 provides for the addition to the, wakf of surpluses occurring under paragraph 2.

Paragraph 5 declares that, the persons getting monthly allowances shall have no power to assign or charge them, and that creditors shall have no claim against them.

Paragraph 7 declares that, if "the mutwalis" have sons exceeding three in number, for those who are not mutwalis the mutwalis shall fix a monthly allowance. Those persons are to live on their own earnings in professions, trades or service; but when any one becomes a mutwal he is to bring into the wakf all the property he has got.

Paragraph 8 provides that if "any one" dies leaving no sons, his wife and daughter shall receive allowances. It then continues—"It shall be competent to the mutwalis, having regard to the income and expenditure of the wakf properties, to proportionately increase or decrease these allowances as well as their own salaries, and those of other salaried persons, and no one shall be able to raise any objections to the same."

The other paragraphs have no material bearing on the present question.

[509] The case has been very elaborately argued at the Bar, and numerous text-books and decisions have been cited; on the plaintiff's side to show that a wakf may lawfully embrace provisions for the family of the grantor; and on the defendant's side to show that there can be no wakf unless the whole property is substantially and primarily dedicated to charitable uses.

Their Lordships do not attempt in this case to lay down any precise definition of what will constitute a valid wakf, or to determine how far provisions for the grantor's family may be engrafted on such a settlement without destroying its character as a charitable gift. They are not called upon by the facts of this case to decide whether a gift of property to charitable uses which is only to take effect after the failure of all the grantor's descendants is an illusory gift, a point on which there have been conflicting decisions in India.

On the one hand their Lordships think there is good ground for holding that provisions for the family out of the grantor's property may be consistent with the gift of it as wakf. On this point they agree with and adopt the views of the Calcutta High Court stated by Mr. Justice Kemp in one of the cited cases Mushurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditalay Mohaputter (1). After stating the conclusion of the Court that the primary objects for which the lands were endowed were to support a mosque and to defray the expenses of worship and charities connected therewith, and that the benefits given to the grantor's family came after those primary objects, that learned Judge says:—"We are of opinion that the mere charge upon the profits of the estate of certain items which must in the course of time necessarily cease, being confined to one family, and which after they lapse will leave the whole property intact for the original purposes for which the endowment was made, does not render the endowment invalid under the Mahomedan law."

On the other hand, they have not been referred to, nor can they find, any authority showing that, according to Mahomedan law, a gift is good

as a wakf unless there is a substantial dedication of the property to charitable uses at some period of time or other. Mr. Arathoon indeed contended that a family settlement of itself imports an ultimate gift to the poor, founding himself on a passage in the Tagore lectures delivered in 1884 by a learned Mahomedan [510] lawyer (see p. 230). But no authority has been adduced for that proposition. The observations of Mr. Justice West, which are relied on by the learned lecturer, do not go that length; and they are themselves of an extra-judicial character, as the case in which they were uttered did not raise the question. Their Lordships therefore look to see whether the property in question is in substance given to charitable uses.

The leading clause of the deed contains no charitable gift except "in the manner provided by the paragraphs mentioned below," and we must search those paragraphs to find the real nature of the gift. Now as regards the grantor’s moveable property he was advised that there would be legal difficulty if he did not then define the objects on which it was to be spent. So he expressly mentions that it is to be spent in pious and virtuous works, and it is not necessary to decide whether the terms which he uses constitute a separate absolute gift to such purposes, or are controlled by the other paragraphs. As regards the immoveables he uses different language; and the only direction creating a trust for the objects mentioned in the opening sentence is that which is contained in the second paragraph. That trust is (after payment of ‘mounaref’ expenses, and salaries) “to perform the stated religious works according to custom.”

There is a great deal in the deed which is designed for the aggrandisement of the family property, and for keeping it perpetually in the hands of the family. The provisions for accumulation in paragraph 4, the attempt to save salaries from alienations and from creditors in paragraph 5; the provisions for appointment of male issue as mutwalis in paragraph 3, coupled with the allowances to other male issue, and to wives and daughters of such issue in paragraphs 7 and 8, all indefinite in point of duration, and, as their Lordships think, intended to be commensurate with the existence of the family; the direction in paragraph 7 that new mutwalis should bring all their private acquisitions into settlement:—all these things point to the same end, the increase of property available for the family. In paragraph 8 the grantor allows increases of salaries and allowances to members of the family, so that as property increases, the family may grow richer. There is not a word said about increasing the amount spent [511] on charitable uses beyond the expenditure which was according to custom. Their Lordships cannot find that the deed imposes any obligation on the grantor’s male issue, or on any other person into whose hands the property may come, to apply it to charitable uses except to the extent to which he had himself been accustomed to perform them.

If indeed it were shown that the customary uses were of such magnitude as to exhaust the income, or to absorb the bulk of it, such circumstances would have its weight in ascertaining the intention of the grantor. But the Court, in the execution proceedings, considered that the charitable outlays which he contemplated were of small amount compared with the property. The Subordinate Judge in this suit does not deal with the matter. The High Court says that the plaintiff has carefully withheld evidence as to value, and believes that it was much more than he represented. For all that appears there is no reason to suppose that the charitable uses would absorb more that a devout and wealthy Mahomedan gentleman might find it becoming to spend in that way.
Under these circumstances their Lordships agree with the High Court that the gift in question is not a bona fide dedication of the property, and that the use of the expressions "jasabilillah waqf," and similar terms in the outset of the deed is only a veil to cover arrangements for the aggrandisement of the family and to make their property inalienable.

The result is that in their judgment this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to that effect.

Security for costs—Civil Procedure Code, s. 549—Power of Appellate Court to extend the time for furnishing security—Costs.

Where the High Court, under s. 549, Civil Procedure Code, has demanded security from an appellant, it has power to extend the time for complying with this order an application made, as well after as before the time first fixed has expired; and may nevertheless reject the appeal, under that section, if the security is not in the end furnished. Haidri Bai v. The East Indian Railway Company (1) overruled.

In this case, the Registrar was directed to allow the costs applicable to the question argued and decided.

This suit (which was to establish an adoption and title to an estate valued at nearly twelve lakhs of rupees) brought by Munsamant Manki Koer on behalf of Badri Narain, a minor, having been dismissed, an appeal to the High Court was filed on 12th March 1883. Security under s. 549 was demanded on 26th August, 1884. This was followed by an order on 12th February 1885, directing that the appellant should furnish security for Rs. 5,000, in respect of the costs of the appeal, and the hearing below, within two months. judgment having then been made, the appeal was dismissed on 2nd June 1885, by a Divisional Bench (Garth, C.J. and Mitter, J.) (1).

On this appeal,
Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant, argued that the High Court had wrongly construed s. 549, and was not bound to reject the suit. He referred to Balwant Singh v. Dowlat Singh (2) and to Rajab Ali v. Amir Hossein (3).

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondent, referred to the cases in which it had been held that the security demanded must be furnished within the time first prescribed, and cited Heidri Bai v. The East Indian Railway Company (4).

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Calcutta, made on the 2nd of June 1885.

On the 12th of February 1885, an order was made by that Court, directing that the appellant should within two months furnish security to the extent of Rs. 5,000 in respect of the costs of the appeal before it, and of the original suit. It appears that on the 10th April, two days before the expiration of the period of two months, the appellant offered as security a bond by two parties of two sets of properties, and on the 13th April the pleader of the respondent asked that the matter might stand over, and that it should be referred to the Registrar to inquire whether the security was sufficient, that being the day after the expiration of the two months. The matter went to the Registrar. There was first an extension of time until the 20th April, and on the 18th of April a further extension until the 27th. On the 28th of April the Registrar submitted a report in which he stated that each of the two sets of properties included in the security bond, which had been executed on the 24th March 1885, and registered on the 1st April, was of sufficient value, but he submitted for the judgment of the High Court questions of law which had been raised before him with regard to the power of the parties executing the bond to deal with the properties. On the 2nd of June the High Court on the matter coming before them, made a decree by which they said: "It is ordered, under the provisions of s. 549 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that this appeal be and the same is hereby dismissed." Their reason for dismissing it appears in their judgment, in which they say: "We find that it has been decided by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Haidri Bai v. The East Indian Railway Company (4) that where the High Court orders an appellant to give security for costs, the Court may extend the time within which it orders the security to be furnished, if an application is made within that time, but if the security is not given within the time ordered (514) by the Court, and no application is made within that time to extend the time for giving security, the Court is bound, by s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, to reject the appeal." It is contended before their Lordships that the effect of that section is that the security which was tendered on the 10th April is the only security which can be looked at, and if, upon the inquiry which was afterwards made, it turns out to be insufficient, the Court has no power under the Act to extend the time.

(1) 11 C. 716. (2) 13 I.A. 57=8 A. 315. (3) 17 C. 1. (4) 1 A. 687.
for giving security so as to enable the appellant to do what, when it appeared that there was this doubt about the right of the parties to pledge the property included in the bond, he was willing to do, namely, deposit the sum of Rs. 5,000. In the present case this observation arises, that in fact the Court did give an extension of time beyond the 12th April, and if the appellant is right the proceedings by which the matter was referred to the report of the Registrar on the 13th, on the application of the respondent's pleader, would be altogether nugatory and idle. The Court, up to the time of the Registrar making his report, did give time for inquiry, and substantially did give an extension of time up to that period. The question is this: Is the Act so framed as to make it imperative upon the Court to reject the appeal if it turns out, upon the inquiry, that the security is insufficient? The words do not seem to be such as to require that conclusion. The section says: "That the appellate Court may, at its discretion, either before the respondent is called upon to appear and answer, or afterwards, on the application of the respondent, demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal, and if such security be not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal." Those words appear to be consistent with the Court having power to make fresh orders with regard to the time within which the security should be furnished, and not to fetter it in the way that is contended for by the learned counsel, that having once made an order and fixed a time they can make no alteration in it, no matter what circumstances might occur which would render it impossible for that order to be complied with. That would not be a reasonable construction of the Act. The other construction is a reasonable one, that the application to the Court to enlarge the time for giving security may be made either before or after the expiration of the time within which the security has been ordered to be furnished, and the Court may thereupon enlarge the time according to any necessity which may arise where it is just and proper that they should do so. If ultimately the order is not complied with, and the security is not furnished, the appeal may be dismissed. That agrees with the view which their Lordships have taken of the section in a case in which judgment was delivered on the 3rd of April last of Rajab Ali v. Amir Hossein (1).

In the present case it appears to their Lordships that the High Court were wrong in holding that they had no power to extend the time for giving the security, and that they were bound, by the s. 549, to reject the appeal. It was certainly a case in which they might properly have considered whether they should not allow the appeal to be heard. There was an application for review after the order of the 2nd of June was passed, and it then appeared that the party was ready to give the security by deposit of the Rs. 5,000. It is to be regretted that the Court did not allow that to be done, but adhered to its view of s. 549 which appears to their Lordships to be erroneous.

With regard to what should be done in the present case, the decree of the High Court of the 2nd June 1885 should be reversed, and an order similar to that which was made in the case of Balwant Singh v. Dowlut Singh (2) should be made. That was: "That the appellant may give security for the costs mentioned in the order of the 3rd of June 1882"—in this case it will be the order of the 12th February 1885—"of such nature as shall be satisfactory to the High Court, and within such reasonable...

time as shall be fixed by that Court, and that upon his giving such security his appeal shall be restored to the files of that Court." The appeal will then be heard by the High Court. It should be also ordered that the respondent should pay the costs of the petition of the 2nd July 1885, and the hearing thereon. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to that effect.

The respondent will pay the costs of the present appeal, but when those costs are taxed it will be proper for the Registrar, in [516], considering what should be allowed for the costs of perusal of the record, to allow only so much as is applicable to the question which has been argued before their Lordships and now decided.

MODHUSUDAN DAS (Plaintiff) v. ADHIKARI PRAPANNA AND another (Defendants). [15th November, 1889.]

Security for costs—Civil Procedure Code, s. 519—Rejection of appeal—Discretion of Court.

The security for the respondent's costs which the High Court had demanded under s. 549 not having been furnished within the time fixed, and the Court in the exercise of its discretion having refused to extend the time, the appeal was rejected under that section. Held that this was not a case for interference.

Appeal from two orders and a decree (8th December 1885) of the High Court, the latter rejecting, under s. 549 of the Civil Procedure Code, an appeal from a decree (8th December 1884) of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack.

The first Court dismissed the suit between the parties (relating to a claim to succeed as Mohant of a religious institution in Puri, valued at Rs. 35,18,333) and ordered costs, Rs. 2,816, to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendants. On the plaintiff’s appealing to the High Court, the defendants made an application under s. 549, on which it was ordered (3rd July 1885) that cause be shown; and an order followed that the plaintiff should within three weeks from that date furnish adequate security for the costs both in the original and the appellate Courts. This order was not obeyed, and the plaintiff (24th November 1885) applied for an extension of the period after its expiration. This the High Court (Wilson and Field, JJ.) refused (8th December 1885), observing that "though the Court might have power to extend the time for furnishing the security demanded, after the time [517] allowed by the order had elapsed, still in this case there were no good grounds for so doing. Three months had been allowed, and that was ample. On the plaintiff's own statement it was clear that he had not taken such steps as with reasonable probability would have enabled him to furnish the security in time."

The plaintiff now appealed from the orders of 21st August and 24th November, and from the decree of 8th December 1885.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that the High Court should not, in the exercise of a judicial discretion, have rejected the appeal. He referred to Rajab Ali v. Amir Hossin (1), Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer (2), Balwant Singh v. Dowlat Singh (3).

Mr. H. Cowell; for the respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock—Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal ought to be dismissed. The Court exercised their discretion on the 20th November as to whether they would enlarge the time for giving security for costs. Having considered the evidence and all the facts which were brought before them at that time, they exercised their discretion, and thought it was a case in which they ought not to enlarge the time. Their Lordships think that this is not a case with which they ought to interfere. The appeal upon the merits of the case was under the circumstances properly dismissed under s. 549 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly recommend Her Majesty that this appeal be dismissed, and dismissed with costs.

[519] This was a suit to set aside an adoption. The plaintiff, Manik Chand Golecha, who claimed to be the reversionary heir to the estate left by one Gopi Chand upon the death of Gopi Chand's grandmother, Jagat Settani Pran Kumari (defendant No. 1), brought this suit for a declaration that Jibun Mull Kuthari, called Golab Chand (defendant No. 2), was not adopted by the defendant Pran Kumari; that even if he were adopted, the adoption was invalid; and that a will, dated the 27th November 1883, and purporting to have been executed by the defendant Pran Kumari, was not duly executed by her, and that it was not binding on the plaintiff.

One Jagat Sett Harek Chand died, leaving him surviving two sons, Indra Chand and Bissen Chand Sett. Indra Chand died in 1235 (1828), leaving him surviving a son, Jagat Sett Gobind Chand, who died in 1272 (1865), leaving him surviving a widow, Pran Kumari (defendant No.1) and an adopted son, Gopal Chand. Gopal Chand died in 1275 (1868), leaving him surviving a son, Gopi Chand; and Gopi Chand died, a minor and unmarried, on 27th Auhran 1285 (12th December 1878), leaving him surviving his grandmother Pran Kumari (defendant No. 1). Bissen Chand Sett died, leaving him surviving a son, Sett Kissen Chand, who died on 14th Jeit 1289 (27th May 1882), leaving him surviving a daughter, Protap Kumari. Protap Kumari died in Bhadro 1276 (August-September 1869) leaving her surviving a son, Manik Chand Golecha, the plaintiff. The following genealogical table shows the position of the parties to the suit:

The family of Jagat Sett Harek Chand belonged to the Oswal caste, and followed the Jain religion. Many years ago the family migrated from the city of Nagore, in the district of Jodhpore in the North-Western Provinces, first to Dacca; and subsequently settled in Mohimapore in the district of Moorshedabad.

In the early part of the present century Jagat Sett Hare Krishna Chand adopted Vaishnavism; and ever since, the members of his family followed that form of worship, observing at the same time the rites and customs of the Jains.

Subsequent to the death of Gopi Chand, his grandmother, the defendant Pran Kumari, filed a petition, dated the 28th Falgoon 1285 (11th March 1879) intimating to the authorities her intention of taking a second son in adoption on the following day, the 20th Falgoon (12th March), “in conformity with the permission given her by her deceased husband, as well as according to the precepts of the Hindu Shasters.” Accordingly in Byasak 1286 (April 1879) Pran Kumari adopted Jibun Mull Kuthari (defendant No. 2) in accordance with the practice of the Oswal community; and about 2½ years later a second ceremony of adoption took place when a deed of gift (Ex. 1), dated 19th Pous 1288 (2nd January 1882), was executed by the natural mother of Jibun Mull Kuthari making a gift of the boy to Pran Kumari, and the Hindu religious rites of adoption were observed. Jibun Mull on being adopted received the name of Golab Chand.

On the 30th May 1837 the plaintiff instituted this suit. The plaintiff alleged that upon the death of Gopi Chand, the defendant Pran Kumari, Gopi Chand’s paternal grandmother, became entitled by right of inheritance to a life-interest in all the immoveable and moveable properties left by Gopi Chand, and that she was in possession of the same; that he was the only grandson (daughter’s son) of Sett Kissen Chand, the grandson (son’s son) of Jagat Sett Hare Krishna Chand, who was the great great paternal grandfather of Gopi Chand; that there was no other nearer male reversionary heir living in the family of Jagat Sett Gobind Chand, and that therefore he was the only surviving preferential reversionary heir to the estate left by Gopi Chand, deceased, upon the death of the defendant Pran Kumari; that having obtained a copy of a registered will, dated 27th November 1887, and purporting to have been executed by the defendant Pran Kumari, he for the first time on 2nd May 1887 came to learn that the defendant Pran Kumari had set up an adoption by stating that she had adopted Golab Chand (defendant No. 2) with her husband’s permission; and that she had by her said will given to Golab Chand all the properties which she had inherited from Gopi Chand; that the defendant Pran Kumari had no permission from her husband to adopt, and that she did not adopt the defendant Golab Chand according to law; and submitted that even if the adoption took place it was illegal and invalid, inasmuch as no adoption could take place under the permission of her husband after the death of her son and grandson Golab Chand and Gopi Chand. The plaintiff however did not state when the adoption took place. There was a further allegation in the plaint that the defendant Pran Kumari was physically and legally incapable of making a will. The plaintiff accordingly prayed for a declaration that Golab Chand (defendant No. 2) was not in fact adopted by Pran Kumari (defendant No. 1); that even if he were adopted, the adoption was invalid; and that the will of 27th November 1883 was not duly executed by Pran Kumari, and that it was not binding on him.

The defendant Pran Kumari denied the correctness of the genealogical table filed with the plaint. She contended that the plaintiff was not the reversionary heir of Gopi Chand, deceased, and that therefore he had no cause of action. She denied that the plaintiff first became aware of the adoption of Golab Chand (defendant No. 2) on seeing a copy of her will, and pleaded that he knew of it more than six years before the institution of the suit, and that the suit was therefore barred by limitation.
She alleged that on the 15th Bysack 1258 (27th April 1851) her husband Jagat Sett Gobind Chand gave her a written authority to adopt three sons in succession if the adopted son Gopal Chand or his son died without issue, and that there was also a verbal permission to adopt; that in accordance with this authority she had adopted Golab Chand (defendant No. 2)
"according to the custom which prevails among the Oswal caste and in the family of Jagat Sett at Mohimapore"; that Golab Chand was "treated and respected everywhere" by the men of their caste as well as by other people as the adopted son of Jagat Sett Gobind Chand and as a member of the Jagat Sett family; that ever since his adoption he had been discharging his duties as a member of the family, and that with her consent his name had been registered in respect of some of the properties left by the late Gopi Chand.
She submitted that "according to the rules, manners, and customs prevailing [522] among the men of the Oswal caste and in Jagat Sett's family, and according to law and the Shasters," the defendant Golab Chand was her validly adopted son, and that on her death he, Golab Chand, would be the preferential heir of Gopi Chand, deceased. She also alleged that the plaintiff's maternal grandfather, Sett Kissen Chand, himself had selected Golab Chand as her adopted son, and that when he left Mohimapore for Benares he had given Golab Chand salami "according to the custom prevailing in the caste and family." She submitted that by both these acts Sett Kissen Chand had recognized the adoption of Golab Chand as valid "according to the custom among the Oswals and in the family;"
and that the plaintiff was therefore estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption. She further alleged that she had executed the will of 27th November 1883 with a full knowledge and understanding of its purport and contents, and submitted that it was a valid will. There was no allegation in the written statement as to the date of the adoption, nor did it distinctly set up any custom under which Pran Kumari was entitled to adopt without the permission of her husband.

The issues so far as they are material to this report were as follows:—
"2. Is the suit barred by limitation? When did the plaintiff become aware of the adoption sought to be set aside?"
"3. Is the genealogical table given by the plaintiff with the plaint correct, and is the plaintiff the grandson and the only reversionary heir of Sett Kissen Chand and Harek Chand and Gopi Chand Jagat Sett? Has the plaintiff any cause of action?"
"4. Had defendant No. 1 authority from her husband to adopt three sons in succession? What is the effect of the second adoption after the death of the first adopted child and the heirs of his body?"
"5. Did defendant No. 1 adopt defendant No. 2 according to the Shasters and according to the custom prevailing with the Oswals and in the family of the Jagat Setts? Is the adoption valid? Is defendant No. 2 the only heir of Gopi Chand and Gobind Chand Sett?

"7. Did plaintiff's grandfather acknowledge defendant No. 2 as the adopted son of Gobind Chand, and is the plaintiff thereby estopped from denying the adoption?"

[523] On the second issue the lower Court held that the suit was barred by limitation, insasmuch as the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had only become aware of the fact of the adoption within six years before suit. On the third issue the Subordinate Judge found that the genealogical table filed with the plaint was correct. He held that it had not been proved that the Jains had a separate law of inheritance of their own, and that, upon the authority of _Lalla Mokabeer-Pershad v. Kundun Koowar_ (1), _Bachebi v. Makhan Lal_ (2), _Chatay Lall v. Chunnuo Lall_ (3), and _Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakh_ (4), in the absence of custom or usage varying the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance, that law must be applied to the Jains. He was also of opinion that inasmuch as it had been admitted on both sides that Jagat Sett Harek Chand, the ancestor of the parties, had come from Nagore in Jodhpur in the North-Western Provinces, where the Mitakshara law prevailed, it must be presumed that he had carried with him his own laws, and that when he adopted Vaishnavism he did not abandon them nor the religious rites and ceremonies of the Jains. He further held "that as the family of Jagat Sett adhered to their ancient ceremonial rites and customs of the west, and had those ceremonies performed by western Brahmins, they ought to be governed by the Mitakshara law, although they renounced their Jain religion and adopted Vaishnavism." As regards the defendant's contention that even if the Mitakshara law applied, still the plaintiff was not the reversionary heir of Gopi Chand, he held, upon the authority of the Mitakshara, Chap. II, s. 5, cl. 3, verse 6, and the cases of _Gridhari Lall Roy v. The Bengal Government_ (5), _Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand_ (6), and _Lallubhai Babubhai v. Mankuvarbai_ (7), that the plaintiff was a Bhundhu of Gopi Chand, and therefore a reversionary heir, there being neither agnates nor gentiles. Accordingly, the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was the reversionary heir of Gopi Chand, and therefore entitled to bring the suit.

[524] On the 4th and 5th issues the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the written authority set up was a forgery, but that under a custom prevalent among the Oswals, whether Jains or Vaishnabs, a widow could adopt without the permission of her husband, and that the adoption was not invalid on this or any other ground.

On the 7th issue the Subordinate Judge found that Sett Kissen Chand had assented to the adoption of defendant No. 2.

The material portions of the judgment of the lower Court regarding the 4th and 5th issues were as follows:—

"The defendants in the next place contend that defendant No. 2 was adopted by defendant No. 1, both according to the custom prevailing with the Oswals and in the family of the Jagat Setts and according to the Shasters. Thereupon the following issue was raised:—Did defendant No. 1 adopt defendant No. 2 according to the Shasters and according to the custom prevailing with the Oswals and in the family of the Jagat Setts?

"I find it proved by witnesses examined on both sides that defendant No. 1 adopted defendant No. 2, both according to the Hindu Shasters and according to the custom of the Oswals. I find no good reasons for disbelieving the witnesses in this suit. I have no doubt, therefore, that the defendant No. 2 was adopted by defendant No. 1, both according to the Hindu Shasters and according to the custom prevailing among the Oswals. Then the plaintiff contends that the adoption is invalid on two grounds, viz., (1) because there was no permission to adopt given by Jagat Sett Gobind Chand, and (2) because even if there were such permission, still it is invalid, as the first adopted child died leaving a son and widow. The defendants, on the other hand, contend that there was a permission given by Jagat Sett Gobind Chand to adopt three sons in succession, that no permission was necessary according to Shasters and according to the custom of the Oswals, and that the adoption is valid both according to law and according to the custom of the Oswals. Therefore, the principal question for determination is—Is the adoption valid? In order to decide this question, it is necessary in the first place to see whether or no a permission by the husband is [525] necessary for the adoption of a child by a widow according to the custom of the Oswals and according to Hindu Shasters prevailing in countries governed by the Mitakshara Law of Inheritance. That the permission is not necessary, according to the custom of the Oswals has been proved by defendant's witnesses Nos. 1, 2, 6, 9, 10, 12, 13, 16, 18, 19 and 20, and by witnesses examined under commission—Bodh Singh, Amrita Kumari Bibi, Mina Kumari Bibi in this district, and several others in Jeypur and Jodhpur. The fact is also proved by plaintiff's own witnesses, Nos. 10, 15 and 17. They prove the existence of the custom, and several cases of adoption by widows without their husbands' permission. Although, as to the existence of custom, they speak from heresay, still in such matters heresay evidence is admissible. Then as to the cases, although many witnesses state that they heard the fact of the want of permission from the near relatives of the adoptive mother, still some of them state that from their relation to the family in which the adoption was made they would have known the fact of the permission if there was any. It is very difficult to prove a negative fact. The plaintiff did not prove that there was permission in those cases. Again, by an adoptive mother it has been proved that she adopted a child after her husband's death without his permission. She of course knew whether or no her husband had authorized her to adopt. Another witness, who is an adopted child, states that he was adopted by a widow, and that he did not know that his adoptive mother had any permission from his father to adopt a child. He was very likely to know whether or no his adoptive mother had permission to adopt a child. I have therefore no doubt that in these two cases there was no permission given by the husband. Then in the other cases also I am of opinion that there was no permission. If there was any, they would most likely have known it, and the plaintiff would have proved its existence by citing the adoptive mother or child as witnesses. The instances of adoption by a widow without her husband's permission are, therefore, many. Is it all probable that in all these cases the natural father or mother gave their sons in adoption if such a custom did not exist? Did they throw away their children without any hope of securing them any happiness? Again, is at all probable that the heirs of the husband did not contest the validity [526] of the adoption, if there was no such custom? These cases therefore are very strong proof of the existence of the custom. Then we have the cases of Govindnath Roy v. Gulal Chand (1) and Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (2). Although the second case applies to Saraogis, still it has been proved in this case that the Saraogis are merely a sect of the Jains, that they differ from other Jains, the Sitambari Jains, only in the form of worship, and that in civil rights they are equal.

"Next I find it proved by two Jain pandits that according to their Shasters a widow is entitled to adopt without her husband's permission. I see no good grounds for disbelieving them on this point. * * I have no doubt, therefore, that by Jain law and custom a Jain widow is entitled to take a son in adoption without the permission of her husband.

"The pleader for the plaintiff contends that the family of Jagat Sett lost this right by their conversion to Hinduism, by their becoming Vaishnavas. I cannot agree with plaintiff's pleader in this opinion on several grounds. In the first place, I find it proved by witnesses examined on both sides that the custom is not religious but tribal. They state that the custom exists with the Oswals and not with the Jains alone. Then I find it proved by defendant's witnesses that the Oswal widows of Jeypur and Jodhpur, whether Jains or Vaishnavas, adopt children without the permission of their husbands. * * * I do, therefore, find that the custom is not confined to the followers of the Jain religion, and that it is peculiar to the Oswals. As the family of Jagat Setts are Oswals, I am of opinion that they did not lose their customary tribal rights by their change of religion.* * *

"Besides, in the present case, it has been shown before that the family did not completely change their religion. Although they worshipped Hindu gods, still they worshipped Jain gods also. Hinduism does not allow the worship of such gods. The worship of those gods is incompatible with the Hindu religion. On the other hand, I find that the Jains allow greater freedom of worship. It has been proved in this case that the Jains of Azimgunge [527] worship many Hindu gods and goddesses, and still they are reckoned as Jains. Therefore, strictly speaking, the family of Jagat Sett cannot be said to be Hindus: they are rather Jains. In that case there can be no doubt that Jagat Settani Pran Kumari Bibi was entitled to adopt a son without the permission of her husband. If the family was not strictly Hindu or Jain, then they would be governed by the principles of equity and good conscience (Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal) (1). In equity and good conscience they cannot lose their tribal customary rights of adoption, which appears to have no connection with their old religion. Again, they would be entitled to select their own laws of inheritance, &c.—Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal (1) and Abraham v. Abraham (2).

"In the present case we find that Jagat Sett Gobind Chand adopted Gopal Chand according to the Oswal custom of adoption merely by taking the child and distributing coconuts. He did not go through the ceremonies prescribed by the Hindu religion of adoption. This fact is an express declaration on his part that he intended to adhere to the customary law of adoption as prevalent amongst the Jains, more properly amongst the Oswals, and not to adopt the Hindu law of adoption. I am therefore of opinion that Jagat Settani Pran Kumari Bibi was entitled to take defendant No. 2 in adoption without the permission of her husband, according to the custom of the Jains, or more properly of the Oswals.

"Then I am of opinion that, according to the Hindu law prevalent in Jeypur and Jodhpur, it appears that a Hindu widow is authorized to take a child in adoption without the consent of her husband. There we find that Hindus take a child in adoption without the permission of their husbands. Very probably the fact is owing to the great weight being attached to the opinion of Vira Mitrodaya in those districts. That Vira Mitrodaya is a book of great weight in the Benares school which is governed by the Mitakshara appears from the rulings in the cases of Rajundur Kiswar Singh Bahadur v. Sheopursun Misser (3) and Ranjit Singh v. Jagannah Prosad Gupta (4). * * On the whole I am of opinion that the adoption of defendant No. 2 by defendant No. 1 is valid,

"Then it is said that the adoption is invalid, as of the four sons left by the natural father of defendant No. 2, one had been given in adoption, and the other two died before the defendant was adopted. I am of opinion that the contention is not valid. * * Lastly, I find that the Oswal community of this place recognized the adoption as valid. * *

On the whole, therefore, I find that the adoption of defendant No. 2 by defendant No. 1 is valid, and that it ought not to be set aside on the grounds stated above.

"The principal contention of the plaintiff is that the adoption is invalid, inasmuch as Gopal Chand left a son Gopi Chand, and the rulings in the cases of Padmakumari Debi Chowdhrami v. Court of Wards (1) and Thayammal v. Venkatarama (2), are cited in support of this contention. The wording of the decision in both the cases appears to favour plaintiff's contention. But the facts of the present case are clearly distinguishable from those of the cases cited. There the adoptions were made when the estate was vested in the heir of the last proprietor; but in the present case it was made at a time when the heir of the last proprietor was dead, and the estate had again vested in the widow of the original proprietor. The present case resembles the hypothetical case assumed in Bhoobun Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharjee (3) and the case of Pam Soondur Singh v. Surbance Dossee (4). * * I am therefore of opinion that the adoption in the present case is valid according to the principles laid down in the cases cited above.

"I am of opinion that it should be upheld, and not set aside."

Accordingly the Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe, Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, Baboo Omer Nath Bose, and Baboo Atul Chunder Ghose, for the appellant.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Srinath Das, Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar, and Baboo Nobodeep Chunder Roy, for the respondents.

[529] The judgment of the High Court (Mitter and Beverley, JJ.) after stating the facts proceeded as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The respondents filed cross-objections as regards the findings on the third and fourth issues, but Mr. Evans candidly admitted before us that he could not contest the accuracy of the lower Court's conclusion as to the written authority set up. Mr. Woodroffe, on behalf of the appellant, contended that the allegation made in the written statement to the effect that the adoption was made in pursuance of an authority derived from Gobind Chand not having been made out, the defendants should not have been allowed to set up a new case which is not to be found in their written statement, namely, that by a special custom of the tribe and family, the widow was entitled to adopt without permission. We are of opinion that the written statement is sufficiently broad in its terms to include the plea referred to. The existence of the custom in question is not inconsistent with an express permission or authority to adopt in particular cases; and we think that the fifth issue in general terms raised the question as to the validity of the adoption according to the custom prevalent among the Oswal caste and in the family of Jagat Sett. Several objections were taken in the lower Court, and although no specific issues were framed in respect of them, they appear to have been fully tried and discussed, and we are unable to say that the appellant has in any way been prejudiced. The questions, therefore, that have been laid before us for our consideration in this appeal are the following:

(4) 22 W.R. 121.

1. Is the plaintiff a reversionary heir and entitled to bring the present action?
2. Is the suit brought within time as provided by art. 118 of the Limitation Act?
3. Is it proved that by any special custom, prevalent among the tribe and family to which the parties belong, a widow can adopt a son without having obtained permission to do so from her late husband?
4. Supposing that the adoption was good and valid according to Jain usage, how is the matter affected by the fact that this particular family has embraced Vaishnavism?

[530] 5. Is the adoption in this case invalid by reason of the adopted son being the only surviving son of his natural parents?
6. Is the adoption invalid by reason of the estate having vested in Gopal Chand, and after him in his son Gopi Chand?

1. On the first point it has been contended before us that the plaintiff has no status as a reversionary heir, inasmuch as the sapinda relationship does not exist between him and the late owner Gopi Chand. The argument that has been addressed to us is opposed to the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Uma Sunker Moitra v. Kali Komal Mozumdar (1) as well as to that of the Privy Council in the case of Padmakumari Deb Chowdhurani v. Court of Wards (2). Upon the authority of these cases, therefore, we think the lower Court was right in overruling this objection to the suit.

2. As regards the question of limitation, the first point we have to decide is, when did the alleged adoption take place? If, as the plaintiff contends, the adoption did not take place till Magh 1938 Sumbut or the beginning of 1882 A.D., the question of limitation will not arise, as in that case the adoption itself took place within six years before suit. If, on the other hand, it took place in Bysakh 1936 (April 1879), then we have to consider whether the plaintiff knew of it more than six years before suit, or whether Sett Kissen Chand knew of it, and whether plaintiff is bound by his knowledge. Now it has been pressed upon us in argument (and we think there is a good deal of evidence in support of the theory), that there were in fact two adoptions—that in 1879 the boy Golab Chand was adopted in accordance with the practice of the Oswal community, and that some 24 years later there was a second ceremony of adoption when the deed of gift (Ex. 1) was executed and the Hindu religious rites were observed. Several of the plaintiff's witnesses, who speak to this later adoption, admit that there was a transaction of some nature or other having reference to an adoption some three years earlier. Prem Chand Pipara (p. 30) says that he and all the Oswals attended on that occasion, that they gave salami, and that cocoanuts were distributed. Mukund Lall Pandit (p. 37) speaks of a feast that took place some two years before the Jag ceremony. Sourid Muli Lorha (p. 39) says he sent his son to the adoption about the year 1936 (Sumbut). Sookul Chand Doogar (p. 43) speaks to the same effect. Harek Chand Goleecha (p. 48) speaks of Golab Chand being driven out for two or three years, and then taken in again. So also Hulas Chand Singh (pp. 53, 56) and compare the evidence in cross-examination of Rai Boodhoo Singh Dodhuria at pp. 160-61. From this evidence we think it clear that even on the plaintiff's own showing the boy Golab Chand was adopted in accordance with the practice of the Oswal community so far back as 1879. This evidence is corroborated by the petition (Ex. F. 1) at p. 178. Gopi Chand, it seems, died on 27th Aghran 1285, corresponding with the 12th December 1878, and on the 28th Falgoon following, corresponding with the 11th March 1879, the defendant No. 1 intimated to the authorities her intention of taking a second son in adoption. It has been contended before us, that the transaction which took place in 1879 was merely a consultation as to the person who should be taken in adoption. In the lower Court the difficulty appears to have been attempted to be met by the supposition that after his adoption in 1879 Golab Chand was turned out and retaken in adoption in 1882. We think that upon the evidence we must hold that there was an adoption according to the Oswal practice in 1879; and that this was followed nearly three years later by another ceremony performed in accordance with Hindu rites. Was the plaintiff then aware of this adoption more than six years before suit? He has sworn that he was not aware of it till a few days before instituting this suit. He deposes that he was living in Calcutta and elsewhere, and only on one occasion visited Mohimapur, where Pran Kumari resides. He has adduced some evidence in support of this statement. The defendants on the other hand have adduced evidence to show that the plaintiff was constantly at Mohimapur. We are not prepared to accept that evidence. The statements of Surbessur Mazumdar (p. 98) contradict those of the other witnesses. But although we are unable to agree with the lower Court in the view it takes of the defendants' evidence on this point, we cannot accept the plaintiff's statement that he only became aware of the adoption on 2nd May 1887. The family of Jagat Sett is an important one among the Oswals of Moorshedabad, and the plaintiff is related to the family through his mother. He admittedly came from time to time between 1883 and 1887 to Azimgunge, which is only four miles from Mohimapur; and on one occasion (November 1881) he says he saw the defendant No. 2 in the Jagat Sett's house at Mohimapur. We think it is impossible to believe that at a time when the boy was being recognized by the entire Oswal community of that neighbourhood as Pran Kumari's adopted son, the plaintiff was the only person who was not aware of the fact. It seems to us, therefore, that he has failed to show that he only became aware of the adoption on 2nd May 1887, or within six years before suit. The suit is therefore barred by limitation.

In connection with this matter it has been contended that even if the plaintiff himself did not know of the adoption, the evidence shows that his maternal grandfather, Sett Kissen Chand, knew of it; and that by the definition of the word "plaintiff" in the Limitation Act, Kissen Chand's knowledge would have the effect of barring the suit. We are unable to agree with the lower Court's conclusions on this point. There is no satisfactory evidence of Kissen Chand's knowledge of the adoption of defendant No. 2. It is curious to notice the manner in which this story grew, as the witnesses who deposed to it were successively examined. The first witness who deposed to this matter, Dinobundno Sen (p. 86), stated that at the time Sett Kissen Chand was consulted, it was not settled who was to be adopted. The next witness (p. 88) makes Kissen Chand refer to the deed of permission. Har Proshad Dabar (p. 95) states that the deed was got out and shown to Kissen Chand; while the next witness, Surbessur Mazumdar (p. 97), goes still further and deposes that Kissen Chand approved of the defendant No. 2 and paid him a salami. Most of these witnesses have been discredited in the matter of the written authority, and we think they cannot be believed on this point either.

3. The next question is whether by any custom or usage, prevalent among the Oswal Jains, a widow can adopt a son to her husband without an authority express or implied from him to do so. On this question we are of opinion that due weight must be given to the decisions of the Courts in analogous cases; and we therefore proceed first to examine these cases.

In the case of Gobind Nath Roy v. Gulal Chand (1) (which was a suit between Jains of this very district of Moorshedabad), the facts were these:—One Uttam Chand by a will authorized his widow to adopt a son who was to be selected by his executor, Moti Chand. Moti Chand died without making a selection, and the widow subsequently adopted Gulal Chand. The suit was instituted by Gulal Chand to recover possession of the estate as the adopted son; and it was held by the late Sudder Court that the adoption of Gulal Chand was a good and valid adoption, although it had not taken place in accordance with the authority given by the husband. In that case several pundits appear to have been consulted, and although there was a difference of opinion as to whether the widow could depose a son after being once adopted, they seem to have been unanimous in the opinion that according to the Jain Shasters “a sonless widow may adopt a son, just as may her husband, for the performance of rites. The sanction of her husband or the direction of the yatis or priests is not essential.” It is not stated in the report to what caste Uttam Chand Nahar belonged, but it appears from the evidence of plaintiff's witness Hulas Chand Singhi at page 59 of the paper book that Gulal Chand was an Oswal. This case then is in our opinion an important piece of evidence, being as it is a judicial decision so far back as 1833, that among the Oswal Jains of Moorshedabad a widow can validly adopt a son without the permission of her husband.

The case of Bhagwanadas Tejmal v. Rajmal (2) was one between Jains of Marwari origin residing in the district of Ahmednagar. In that case the widow had died without making an adoption; and the question before the Court was whether under Jain law or custom a son could be adopted to the deceased widow and her husband by other members of the caste. The Court held that the alleged custom was not proved; but it seems to be assumed throughout the judgment that, if the adoption had been made by the widow before her death, it would have been valid. This assumption is based, however, not upon any custom peculiar to the Jains, but upon the general principles of Hindu law according to the Maratha school. At page 257, Westropp, C. J., says:—The Maratha school of Hindu law permits the widow to adopt a son on behalf of her husband.

(1) 5 Select Rep., 276.
(2) 10 B.H.C. 241.
without any express authority from him to that effect, provided he has neither said nor done anything which can be regarded as a prohibition to her or a refusal by himself when \textit{in articulo mortis} to adopt. It has even been held here that the consent of the kinsmen of the husband is not essential to adoption by a widow, if the act be done in the \textit{bona fide} performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

In \textit{Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho} (1) it was held that among the Saraogi (or Jain) Agarwalas of the Meerut district, according to the custom of the sect, a sonless widow could adopt a son without any permission from her husband or the consent of his heirs, and this decision was affirmed by the Privy Council. It is contended by Mr. Woodroffe that this decision is not in point, inasmuch as the parties were Saraogi Agarwalas and not as in this case Jain Oswals. But the term Saraogi appears to be synonymous with Jain (\textit{Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho} (1) page 395, and \textit{Bhagvandas Tejmal v. Ragmal} (2) page 251), and the decision in this case, as in that in \textit{Govind Nath Roy v. Gulal Chand} (3) appears to be based on a custom prevalent among the Jains and not as being peculiar to any tribe or caste. This appears clear from the analysis, which is given in the judgment of the High Court, of the evidence upon which they found the custom proved. The parties in the present case admittedly came from the North-Western Provinces, and we think, therefore, that this case, like \textit{Govind Nath Roy v. Gulal Chand} (3), constitutes strong evidence in favour of the custom pleaded by the respondents.

Turning to the oral evidence taken in this case, we are unable to say that the lower Court was wrong in holding that it sufficiently establishes the custom alleged. A large number of witnesses (535) (including several called by the plaintiff himself) have deposed that among the Jain Oswals the husband’s permission is not a necessary condition to the validity of an adoption by the widow. It is no answer to this evidence to say that in some cases, as the witnesses admit, the husband does authorize or enjoin the widow to adopt. The question is not whether the widow may adopt with the husband’s permission—that is the ordinary Hindu law in this part of India; and the special deviation from that law, which has to be proved in this case, is that even when no permission has been granted the widow as the representative of her husband is entitled to adopt. A large number of instances have been cited by the witnesses in which this power is said to have been exercised by the widow. Some of these instances no doubt may be open to criticism; and as regards others the evidence is possibly not the strongest that might have been adduced. But some of the instances cited do certainly go to bear out the statements of the witnesses as to the alleged custom, and the plaintiff has not attempted to show that in any of the instances given there was an authority granted by the husband.

We think, then, that the oral evidence taken in this case, coupled with the judicial decisions in \textit{Govind Nath Roy v. Gulal Chand} (3) and \textit{Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho} (1) establishes the existence of a custom among the Jain Oswals, under which a widow may adopt a son to her husband even in cases where he has not conferred upon her an express authority to adopt.

4. Then it is contended that, even supposing it proved that according to Jain usage a widow can adopt a son to her husband without any authority derived from him, the family in this case had adopted Vaishnavism, and would not, therefore, be governed by Jain usage.

We think it is satisfactorily proved upon the evidence that the family of Jagat Sett Gobind Chand originally belonged to the Jain sect of Hindus, and that they embraced Vaishnavism in the time of Harek Chand about the beginning of the present century. But we are clearly of opinion that the adoption of the tenets [536] of another sect of Hinduism would not affect the laws and customs by which the personal rights and status of the members of the family were governed. The custom in question is not shown to have been in its origin in any way connected with the peculiar tenets of the Jain religion; and in our opinion it would not be affected by the particular creed or religion which a family or an individual governed by it may profess to follow. Moreover, in the present case the oral evidence clearly shows that the custom in question prevails among members of the Oswal caste, whether they are Jains or Vaishnabs. We are of opinion, therefore, that the fact that the family have turned Vaishnabs in recent times will not affect the question whether they would still be governed by the customary law, which, in our opinion, is well established on the evidence.

5. The next question we have to determine is whether the adoption is invalid by reason of defendant No. 2 being at the time the only son of his natural father. It appears from the deposition of Amrita Kumari Bibi, mother of defendant No. 2, that although both her living sons (Manik Chand Kuthari and defendant No. 2) have been given in adoption, the widow of one of her deceased sons has adopted a son. The reason for the rule forbidding the adoption of an only son does not therefore exist in this case; and even if we thought that rule imperative, it would not apply in the present case. We are of opinion that the adoption is not invalid on this ground.

6. The next objection urged is that the adoption is invalid because Jagat Sett Gobind Chand left a son Gopal Chand, who again left a son Gopi Chand, in whom the estate vested on his father's death. In support of this objection Mr. Woodroffe relies on the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Padmakumari Devi Chowdhury v. Court of Wards (1). In that case Gour Kishore executed a deed of permission to adopt in favour of his wife Chandrabali. Gour Kishore died leaving, besides his widow, a natural son, Bhowani Kishore, who succeeded to his property, and on Bhowani's death the estate vested in his widow Bhoobun Moyi. Chandrabali, then adopted a son to her husband Gour Kishore; but the Privy Council held that the adoption was invalid on the ground that "upon the vesting of the estate in the widow of Bhowani, the power of adoption was at an end and incapable of execution." We think, however, that that decision will not apply to the facts of the present case. In the case referred to the authority to adopt was sought to be exercised at a time when the estate had vested in Bhowani's widow; and the Privy Council held that it could not then be exercised so as to divest the widow of the estate which had devolved upon her. In the present case the adoption was made at a time when the estate had vested in Pran Kumari as heir to Gopi Chand; and the real question is whether it was not competent to her to divest herself of the estate by the adoption of a son. In the case of Bhoobun Moyi Deba v. Ram

(1) 8 I. A. 229=8 C, 302.
Kishore Achary Chowdhry (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council say (p. 311) with reference to the case under consideration:— "If Bhowani Kishore had died unmarried, his mother Chandrabali Debia would have been his heir, and the question of adoption would have stood on quite different grounds. By exercising the power of adoption, she would have divested no estate but her own, and this would have brought the case within the rule." And in the judgment of this Court in the case of Paddo Kumare Debi v. Juggut Kishore Acharjee (2) occurs the following passage in which similar opinion is expressed (p. 642):— "If, therefore, Chandrabali immediately on the death of Bhoobun Moyi had made an adoption and so divested her own estate, there would have been nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council, and nothing that we are aware of in the law, to prevent her doing that which her husband had authorised her to do, and which would certainly be for his spiritual benefit and for that of his ancestors and even of Bhowani Kishore." It is true that in their later judgment in that case the Privy Council decided that "upon the vesting of the estate in the widow of Bhowani, the power of adoption was at an end and incapable of execution." But the power in that case was a power given by the husband, and the decision referred to lays down the limit of time within which such a power should be exercised. But in this case, as we have found, no power from the husband was necessary to the validity of the adoption, and it seems to us, therefore, that the decision in Paddo Kumaree's case does not apply; and that the estate having vested in Pran Kumari she was at liberty to divest herself of it if she chose to do so, and that the adoption is not invalid on that ground.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the plaintiff's suit was properly dismissed in the lower Court, and we accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice Beverley.

Moheeb Ali alias Dummur and another (Petitioners) v. Ameer Rai and others (Opposite party). * [4th February, 1890.]

Bengal Tenancy Act. 1885, ss. 158 and 188—Joint-landlords—Application under s. 158 by one of several joint-landlords—Refusal by joint-landlords to join in such application. Effect of.

An application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, cannot be made by one of several joint-landlords. Section 188 of the Act requires that such an application should be made by all the landlords acting together, and it is not a sufficient compliance with its provisions to make the landlords, who refuse to join, parties to the proceedings under s. 158.

Chuni Singh v. Hera Mahto (3); Kali Chandra Singh v. Rajkishore Bhuddro (4); Rashbehari Mukherji v. Sakhi Sundari Dasi (5); Abdool Hossein v. Lall Chand Mohtan (6) Prem Chand Niskur v. Mokshoda Debi (7); and Jugobundhu Pattuck v. Jatu Ghose Akushi (8), referred to.

[Rel. upon, 18 C. W. N, 168 (169) = 20 Ind. Cas. 820.]

* Appeal from Order No. 347 of 1889 against the order of B. G. Geid, Esq., Judge of Sarun, dated the 6th of August 1889, affirming the order of Baboo Danda Dhari Btswas, Munsif of Chupra, dated the 7th of March 1889.

Thus appeal arose out of an application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, by two out of four joint-landlords.

The appellants, Moheeb Ali and another, who were two of four joint landlords collecting the rents jointly, made an application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, for the determination of the incidents of the tenure of their tenants.

The application was resisted by the tenants on the ground that it was barred by s. 188 of the Act, inasmuch as all the landlords had not joined in making it. The appellants endeavoured to meet this objection by making their co-sharers, who had refused to join them, parties to the proceedings, alleging that they had colluded with the tenants. They also contended that this was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 188, and cited the ruling in Abdul Hossein v. Lall Chand Mahtan (1) in support of their contention. The Munsif was of opinion that this ruling was not applicable; that as, upon their own allegation, their co-sharers had not joined them, their proper course was to have proceeded under s. 93 of the Act; and that therefore the application was barred by s. 188. Accordingly the Munsif dismissed the application.

An appeal from the order of the Munsif rejecting the application was dismissed by the District Judge, who held that it could not be said that making a joint-landlord a defendant is to "act together" with him within the meaning of s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The landlords appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Saligram Singh, for the appellants.

Baboo Akkoy Coomar Banerjee, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This appeal arises out of an application made under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by two out of four joint landlords, and the application has been rejected by both the lower Courts as being barred by s. 188 of the same Act. There is no question whatever that upon the allegations of the parties the landlords in this case are joint; they are undivided co-sharers apparently collecting the rents jointly. Now s. 188 of the Act runs as follows:—"Where two or more persons are joint landlords, anything which the landlord is under this Act required or authorized to do must be done either by both are all those persons acting together, or by an agent authorized to act on behalf of both or all of them."

An application by a landlord under s. 158 is a thing [540] which the landlord is authorized to do under the Bengal Tenancy Act and under that Act alone; there is no other law that authorizes him to make such an application to the Court. It follows that when there are two or more joint landlords, the application must be made by all of them acting together.

In the present case two of the four co-sharers, it is alleged, refused to act with the others in making the application, and the applicants have endeavoured to meet the requirements of s. 188 by making them parties to the proceeding. But this, we think, is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the section; the four co-sharers are not acting together in making the application. Unless they all unite in making the application, we think, it is not a legal application under s. 158 which the Court is competent to act upon. No doubt under the law as it existed prior to the passing of the Tenancy Act, and as it was expounded by the decisions of this Court, one of several co-sharers could, under certain circumstances, sue to enhance the rent—Chuni Singh v. Hera Mahto (1), Kali Chandra Singh v. Rajkishore Bhuddro (2), Rashbehari Mukherji v. Sakhi Sundari Dasi (3)—or could apply for a measurement of the land—Abdool Hossein v. Lall Chand Mahtan (4). But it is extremely doubtful whether after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and in view of s. 188 of that Act, these things may now be done by a joint co-sharer. But whether this is so or not, it seems to us that no argument can be drawn from it that under the present law an application for the determination of the incidents of a tenure may be made by a joint share holder. Section 188 is an entirely new provision in the land of landlord and tenant in Bengal, and we cannot suppose that it was introduced without a deliberate intention on the part of the Legislature. An argument was also sought to be drawn from the fact that a suit may be brought notwithstanding the provisions of s. 188, by a co-sharer for his share of the rent of an undivided tenure. But this stands, as has been explained in the cases of Prem Chand Nushur v. Mokshoda Deb (5) and Jugobundhu Pattuch v. Jada Ghose Atkushi (6), upon a wholly different ground. It has [541] been argued before us that, in the view we take of the law, great injustice may be done in certain cases; as, for instance, if an auction-purchaser of an undivided share in an estate, who is unable to obtain information regarding the property either from the tenants or from his co-sharers, is debarred from applying for a determination of the particulars of the property under s. 158. It is pointed out that such cases may occur even where no dispute exists as to the management of the property such as would enable a co-sharer to apply for the appointment of a common manager under s. 93 of the Act. This may be so, but the language of s. 188 seems to us to be clear and explicit, and we do not feel ourselves at liberty to overlook its provisions or to strain it in any way.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Mofussil Small Cause Court—Jurisdiction—Suit for the recovery of damages for the use and occupation of land.

A suit for the recovery of damages for the use and occupation of land is within the jurisdiction of the Mofussil Small Cause Courts.

[Appl., 22 M. 149 (150); Cited, 119 P. R. 1894: R., 23 C. 884 (883) (F.B.); D., 18 C. 316 (319); 1 P.R. 1894.]

(4) 10 C. 36. (5) 14 C. 201. (6) 15 C. 47.
This was a reference from the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah.

The reference was as follows:—"The plaintiff sues for Rs. 20 in the shape of damages for use and occupation of land at the rate of Rs. 7 a month from Falgoon 1295 (February-March 1889) to Bysack 1296 (April May 1889). It is alleged that the defendant occupied the land for the aforesaid period without the plaintiff's consent, and used its earth for making well sidings.

"The defendant contests the plaintiff's title to the land, alleging that he has leased it from one Peary Mohun Sur, the purchaser; [542] and contends that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit inasmuch as it comes under cls. 4 and 11 of sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act.

"Clause 4 of sch. II relates to a suit for the possession of immoveable property or for the recovery of an interest in such property. I don't think by the words "interest in such property" the Legislature meant the proceeds of immoveable property. In the mofussil, suits for damages for misappropriation of crops are generally brought in the Small Cause Courts without any objection. If the Small Cause Courts have jurisdiction to entertain suits for damages for forcible appropriation of crops, I see no reason why suits for "wasilat" and suits for damages for use and occupation of land should be excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court.

"Clause 11 provides for suits for the determination or enforcement of any other right to or interest in immoveable property. I think suits for easements, &c., arising from immoveable property are meant by this clause. I don't think it is in the contemplation of the Legislature that suits for damages for use and occupation of land, suits for wasilat, and suits for damages for wrongful appropriation of crops, are to be brought in the ordinary Civil Courts under this clause. Clause 35, which relates to suits for compensation, does not exclude such cases from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Courts.

"It appears in evidence that the defendant had previously held this identical land under the plaintiff and paid him rent. He has utterly failed to prove that Peary Mohun Sur had purchased the land. The contention as to plaintiff's title is simply groundless. The determination of this case does not depend upon the proof or disproof of a title to immoveable property or other title which this Court cannot finally determine. I am therefore of opinion that the Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit. But as I am doubtful as to whether the view I have taken is correct, I have thought it proper to refer the following point for an authoritative ruling of the High Court:—

"Whether the Small Cause Courts in the mofussil have jurisdiction to entertain suits for damages for use and occupation of lands."

[543] No one appeared on the reference.

The opinion of the High Court (TOTTENHAM and ALL, JJ.) was as follows:—

OPINION.

We are of opinion that the Small Cause Court has jurisdiction in this case. Clearly neither art. 4 nor art. 11 of the schedule excludes it, nor does art. 35.

C, D, P.
Mohomedan Law—Pre-emption—Ceremonies of "immediate demand" and "demand with invocation."

When a person claiming a right of pre-emption has performed the talab-i-mawasibat in the presence of witnesses, but not in the presence either of the seller or of the purchaser, or on the premises, it is necessary that, when performing the talab-i-ishad, he should declare that he has made the talab-i-mawasibat, and at the same time should invoke witnesses to attest it.

This was a suit claiming a right of pre-emption. The plaintiff on hearing of the sale had performed the ceremony of talab-i-mawasibat, or immediate demand, in the presence of witnesses, but not in the presence either of the seller or of the purchaser, or on the land itself. He then proceeded to perform the ceremony of talab-i-ishad, or affirmation, in the presence of the vendor and purchaser, but did not at the same time declare that he had [544] performed the talab-i-mawasibat, and he did not invoke witnesses to attest his immediate demand. It was argued for the defendants, respondents, before a Division Bench on the authority of the case of Jadunandum Singh v. Dulput Singh (1) that these omissions invalidated the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff, appellant, however, relied upon the case of Nundo Pershad Thakur v. Gopal Thakur (2) as showing that as he had performed the ceremony of talab-i-mawasibat in the presence of witnesses, it was unnecessary for him when performing the ceremony of talab-i-ishad to say in the presence of the same witnesses, that he had already asserted his claim.

The Division Bench (Petheram, C. J., and Gordon, J.) referred the case to a Full Bench with the following opinion:

"This is a suit for pre-emption, and the question raised before us in second appeal is whether the ceremony of talab-i-ishad, that is, the demand with invocation of witnesses, was properly performed by the plaintiff in accordance with the provisions of the Mahomedan law. The lower appellate Court is of opinion that it was not. It appears that when the plaintiff heard of the sale, he at once performed the ceremony of talab-i-mawasibat, that is, he asserted the right of pre-emption, and he also then and there called upon two persons who were present at the time to bear witness to his assertion. He then proceeded with these witnesses to the..."
house of the vendor, where the purchaser was also present, and where the deed of sale was being written, and said to the vendor: 'you said at that time that you would not sell the howla, but now you are selling.' They said: 'go, we shall give the howla to the dogs.' The plaintiff then standing there cried 'dohai Maharani,' and said 'my hakshafa right, no one else than myself shall be able to purchase. I shall purchase the howla. It must be given to me for the price it has been sold for, and I shall pay the same price. It is my right of hakshafa. I pay Rs. 100, it is my father's and grandfather's property, give it to me.' He did not, however, then declare that he had performed the talab-i-mawasibat, that is, that he had asserted his right of pre-emption of being informed of the sale, and he did not also invoke witnesses to attest his immediate demand. The Subordinate Judge thinks that these omissions invalidate the plaintiff's claim, and, in support of his view, he relies on a ruling of a Division Bench of this Court (Mitter and Maclean, JJ.) in the case of Jadunandun Singh v. Dulput Singh (1). In that case it was held that when a person claiming a right of pre-emption performs the talab-i-mawasibat in the presence of witnesses, but when doing so, was neither at the place, the subject of the right of pre-emption, nor was he in the presence of the vendor or vendee, and it was not proved that the demand with invocation of witnesses (talab-i-ishad) had been duly made, the right of pre-emption could not be claimed. The defect was the same as in the present case, that is, the pre-emptor did not prove that he told the vendor or vendee that he had performed the talab-i-mawasibat, and that he had called upon the by-standers to bear witness. The contention before us, on behalf of the plaintiff, appellant, is, that as the plaintiff had performed the talab-i-mawasibat in the presence of witnesses, it was unnecessary for him, when performing the talab-i-ishad in the presence of the vendors and purchaser, to say in the presence of the same witnesses that he had asserted his claim, and to call upon witnesses to attest it. And in support of this contention we have been referred to the case of Nundo Pershad Thakur v. Gopal Thakur (2), in which it was held by another Division Bench of this Court (Garth, C. J., and Beverley, J.) that when a person seeking pre-emption had performed the talab-i-mawasibat in the presence of witnesses, and as soon as possible on the same day in the presence of the same witnesses demanded his right from the vendors and the purchaser, it was unnecessary that he should again state, when making his demand, that he had declared his right as soon as he heard of the sale, or in the words of the judgment that it was unnecessary for him to 'go through the form of reminding the witnesses' that he had claimed his right as soon as he heard of the sale.

"This case is on all fours with the present case. Now it seems to us that according to the case first cited and according to the general principles of Mahomedan law, in order to give validity to the talab-i-ishad, it is essential that the pre-emptor should say in the presence of the purchaser or seller, or on the premises the subject of the sale, that he had already claimed his right of pre-emption, and should also invoke witnesses to attest his claim. Mr. Baillie in his Digest of Mahomedan Law says:—By talab-i-ishad or demand with invocation of witnesses, is meant a person calling on witnesses to attest his talab-i-mawasibat or immediate demand'; and again 'to give validity to the talab-i-ishad, it is required that it be made in the presence of the purchaser or

(1) 10 C. 581.

(2) 10 C. 1008.
seller, or on the premises which are the subject of sale.' It would appear, therefore, that when performing the talab-s-ishad, the pre-emptor must say in the presence of the seller or purchaser, or on the premises, that he has performed the talab-i-mawasibat, that is, made the immediate demand, otherwise, he could not call upon witnesses to attest that demand; and moreover, unless he does so, the purchaser or vendor would not know that he had legally asserted his right—See Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, Sec. VII, Chap. 3, p. 489, and for form of claim by affirmation and taking to witness (talab-i-ishad), see Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. III, Book 38, Chap. II, pp. 571-572.

"But as the two authorities we have above alluded to appear to us to be in conflict on this point, we refer the following question to the Full Bench:—

"When the person claiming a right of pre-emption has performed the talab-i-mawasibat, that is, has made the immediate demand in the presence of witnesses, but not in the presence either of the seller or of the purchaser, or on the premises, is it necessary, when performing the talab-i-ishad, that he should declare that he has made the immediate demand, and at the same time should invoke witnesses to attest it?"

Baboo Debendra Nath Sen, for the appellant, referred to the following authorities:—

[547] Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy and Baboo Banskant Nath Dass, for the respondents, were not called upon.

The opinion of the Full Bench (Petheram, C. J., and Prinsep, Pigot, O'Kinealy and Ghose, J.) was as follows:—

The question referred for the decision of the Full Bench is, "when the person claiming a right of pre-emption has performed the talab-i-mawasibat in the presence of witnesses, but not in the presence either of the seller or of the purchaser, or on the premises, is it necessary, when performing the talab-i-ishad, that he should declare that he has made the talab-i-mawasibat, and at the same time should invoke witnesses to attest it?"

According to Mahomedan law, if the claimant neglects to perform the legal forms necessary to be observed in asserting the right of pre-emption, his claim is null and void. The ordinary forms are as follows:—He must make an immediate claim or talab-i-mawasibat and subsequently an affirmation with witnesses called the talab-i-ishad. The latter consists in the party going upon the lands the right of pre-emption to which he claims, or to the seller or purchaser, and saying that he is a claimant of pre-emption, that he has already asserted his claim, and that he continues to do so, and at the same time calling witnesses to the fact of his having made it. One essential portion of these forms is the attesting the immediate demand, and this is not only the view put forward in Baillie's Digest, but also the view expressed in Hamilton's Hedaya and in Macnaghten's Precedents. Moreover, it is the view held by this Court, with the exception of the case of Nundo Pershad Thakur v. Gopal Thakur (1).

(2) 10 W.R. 119.
(3) 5 A. 100 (115).
(4) 7 A. 775 (811).
We think the view expressed in that case is not correct, and we answer the question in the affirmative.

The result, so far as this appeal is concerned, is that the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

A. C. BOYD (Plaintiff) v. A. KREIG (Defendant).*

[3rd and 5th March, 1890.]

Registration Act (Ill of 1877), s. 17, Clause (d)—Lease for one year—Lease exceeding one year—Option of renewal—Correspondence, when stamping necessary—Stamping correspondence containing agreement to lease.

A lease for one year, containing an option of renewal for a further period of one year, is not a lease for a term exceeding one year within the meaning of clause (d), s. 17 of the Registration Act, so as to render registration thereof compulsory.

Certain correspondence passed between the plaintiff and the defendant relating to a lease of a flat in premises in occupation of the plaintiff, which admittedly contained an agreement for a lease for one year with an option of renewal for another year. The terms in which the option was given were as follows:—The defendant in one letter wrote:—”So I expect you will give me the option of renewal for another year respectively five months on same terms” To which the plaintiff replied—”You may have the option of retaining it (the flat) for another year on the same terms, but not for a shorter period.” In pursuance of an arrangement the defendant had a draft lease prepared embodying the terms agreed on, which he sent to the plaintiff for approval, and which was in due course returned by him “approved.” The defendant then had the lease engrossed and properly stamped, but the plaintiff eventually refused to execute it, and it was never signed by the defendant. The option of renewal was given in the unexecuted lease in the following terms:—”Also with option to renew for another twelve months certain.”

The defendant having entered into possession and disputes having arisen, the plaintiff gave him notice to quit and sued to eject him, alleging that at the most he was a mere monthly tenant. The defendant pleaded that under the lease he was entitled to hold for a year. The year expired before the suit came on to be heard, and the defendant not having exercised the option to renew, vacated the premises. At the hearing the defendant in support of his case tendered the correspondence and the stamped unexecuted lease. It was objected that the correspondence was inadmissible in evidence—

(1) because the option to renew made the period for which the lease was to run exceed one year, and therefore rendered registration compulsory;

(2) because the correspondence was unstamped.

[549] On behalf of the defendant it was urged that registration was unnecessary, as the option did not make the lease one for a longer period than one year, and that the stamped unexecuted lease must be treated as part of the correspondence, and as it was properly stamped, no further stamping was required.

Held, following Hand v. Hall (1), that the existence of the option did not create a lease for a term exceeding one year within the meaning of clause (d), s. 17 of the Registration Act, and that consequently the correspondence did not require registration.

Held, further, that as the correspondence contained a complete agreement independently of the draft and engrossed lease, the latter could not be treated as part of the correspondence, and that consequently the correspondence must be stamped and the penalty paid before it could be admitted in evidence.

_Bhobani Mahto v. Shibnath Para_ (1), dissented from.

The plaintiff instituted this suit to eject the defendant from the top flat of the premises No. 3, Middleton Row, and to recover such sum as the Court might think fit to allow for the use and occupation of the flat from the 1st July 1889 up to the date of recovery of possession. The plaintiff, who was the lessee of the premises, alleged that he had permitted the defendant to use and occupy the top flat from the 1st November 1888 at a monthly rent of Rs. 130, and that on the 30th May 1889 he gave the defendant notice to quit and deliver up possession on the 30th June, but that the defendant had failed to do so. This notice to quit treated the defendant as a monthly tenant. The defendant in his written statement denied that he was a monthly tenant, and alleged that the plaintiff had let him the flat for one year certain from the 1st November 1888 at a monthly rent of Rs. 130; that being under the impression that the lease was valid and binding on the plaintiff he had gone to some expense in repairing the flat; that he had paid the rent up to the month of June 1889, and tendered the rent for July which the plaintiff had refused to accept. He therefore contended that he was entitled to remain in possession till the end of October. Previous to the case coming on for hearing, the defendant on the 31st October gave up possession of the flat, and it was admitted at the hearing that there must be a decree for Rs. 520, being Rs. 130 a month for the period from July to October. The only question [550] remaining to be decided in the case therefore was one of costs, and that turned upon the question whether the defendant had a lease for a year or not.

It appeared, on the admitted facts in the case, that in the month of October 1888 certain correspondence took place between the parties with reference to the demise of the flat, the material portion of which was as follows:—On the 21st October 1888, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff as follows:

"I beg to inform you that I accept your firm offer of the third floor of No. 3, Middleton Row, together with three horse stalls * * * * from the first of next month (1st November) at Rs. 130 per month for twelve months, with option for me to terminate the arrangement after five months on payment of Rs. 100. I believe you told me you had the house for two years, so I expect you will give me the option of renewal for another year, respectively five months, on same terms. * * * I shall have the usual agreement written out on stamped paper, copy of which I shall send you first for approval. Meanwhile please confirm the above * * ."

On the 22nd October the plaintiff replied as follows:—"I agree to let you the third flat of No. 3, Middleton Row, with the out-offices named by you, from the 1st November next, on the terms stated in your letter of yesterday's date with one exception, viz., that if you continue occupancy of the house for one year, you may have the option of retaining it for another year on the same terms, but not for a shorter period * * * ."

On the same day the defendant replied as follows:

"As arranged, I beg to send you herewith the usual draft agreement. The clause about the second five months to which you objected has been left out. Can you tell me what stamp is required * * * ."

(1) 13 C. 113.

On the same day the plaintiff wrote informing the defendant that he could not say what value of stamp was required, and he subsequently returned the draft agreement with a pencil note signed, intimating his approval thereof. Subsequently the defendant had the agreement engrossed and stamped with a 10-rupee stamp and sent it to the plaintiff for his signature. The plaintiff subsequently returned it to the defendant unsigned, after the defendant had entered into possession of the flat.

[551] The material portion of the agreement was as follows:—"I hereby agree and engage to rent of you the third floor of No. 3, Middleton Row, together with three horse stalls * * * for twelve months from the first of this month (1st November 1888) at Rs. 130 free of all taxes existing and forthcoming, payable monthly on the first day of every month * * * with option for me to terminate the arrangement after five months, subject to 15 days' notice on payment of Rs. 100, also with option to renew for another twelve months certain from the 1st November 1889 up to 31st October 1890 * * "."

Mr. Graham, for the plaintiff.

Mr. M. P. Gasper and Mr. Leith, for the defendant.

Upon the case being called on, TREVELYAN, J., intimated that on the admitted facts the case reduced itself to a question of costs, and that the onus was on the defendant.

Mr. Gasper submitted not, as the plaintiff's case was that the defendant was either merely allowed to reside in the flat as alleged in the plaint, or a monthly tenant as stated in the notice to quit, neither of which propositions he admitted.

TREVELYAN, J., referred to s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, and stated that he must presume the tenancy to be from month to month, and that, as the defendant set up a lease for a year, it was for him to prove his case, so he must begin.

Mr. Gasper then proceeded to open the case, and whilst referring to the letters above set out, Mr. Graham stated that he admitted the letters, but objected to their being admitted in evidence, on the ground that they contained an agreement which required to be stamped, and they were not stamped.

Mr. Gasper contended that the correspondence did not require stamping, as it ended in the agreement or lease which was properly stamped with a 10-rupee stamp, and which must be taken as part of the correspondence. All through the correspondence the agreement was referred to, and it must be treated as part of the correspondence, and if any portion of the correspondence was stamped, it would be sufficient. No further stamp was required.

[TREVELYAN, J.—How do you show that the agreement which bears a stamp, but is not signed by either party, is the contract ?]

[552] Mr. Gasper.—I submit it must be treated as part of the correspondence which evidences the contract, but, if necessary, I am quite prepared to pay the stamp required now and the penalty.

Mr. Graham then objected that the correspondence could not be put in evidence, as it disclosed an agreement for a term of more than a year by reason of its being for a term of one year with an option of renewal for a further period of a year, and consequently required to be registered, and referred to s. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 17 of the Registration Act.
Mr. Gaster.—The correspondence does not require registration. A lease for one year with an option of renewal for a further period is not a lease for a term exceeding a year.

It has been held so in this country as well as in England—see [Apa Budgava v. Narhari Annajee (1), Mohunto South Pursad Dass v. Parasu Padhan (2), Hand v. Hall (3)]. The option of renewal, to use the words of Lord Cairns, C., must be exercised by the defendant before it can be said any interest has passed to him, and until the option is exercised it is impossible to tell whether a tenancy for more than a year is to come into force or not. This agreement is divisible into two parts. In the first place it operates as a lease for a year, and secondly, it gives the tenant the right at the end of that year on proper notice of demanding a renewal of the lease for another year. This case is therefore precisely similar to the case of Hand v. Hall.

Mr. Graham.—The case of Hand v. Hall differs from the present, as in that case the tenant was required to do something before the lease was renewed, viz., to give a month’s notice. Here there is nothing of the kind, but merely an option to renew; that is to say, he has only to remain in possession, and do nothing.

[Trevelyan, J.—But he must “renew.”]

Mr. Graham.—If the meaning of “renewing” is to be taken as doing something before he acquires the interest, I must admit that Hand v. Hall is an authority against me, but it has not been followed in this Court.

[Trevelyan, J.—The Madras High Court has approved it.]

[553] Mr. Graham.—Bhobani Mahlo v. Shibnath Para (4) decided in 1886 is an authority in my favour—see also Ram Kumar Mandal v. Brajahari Mridha (5). Kisto Kalee Moonsheev v. Agemona Bewa (6) is also in my favour.

As to the question of the correspondence requiring to be stamped, there is nothing to connect the stamped agreement with it, and the correspondence contains a complete agreement in itself. I submit it must therefore be stamped before it can be admitted in evidence.

Mr. Gaster in reply.—Kisto Kalee Moonshee v. Agemona Bewa (6) is so badly reported as to be worthless, as it cannot even be gathered from the report what the document was, nor does it appear what was even decided. The case of Bhobani Mahlo v. Shibnath Para (4) is in the same condition, no cases being referred to or arguments given, and it does not appear if the attention of the Court was drawn to Hand v. Hall (3). Besides, that case refers to a zur-i-peshgi lease which is a mortgage. This case is even stronger than Hand v. Hall, as here there is an option “to renew,” the plain meaning of which is to the right to demand a fresh lease, whereas in Hand v. Hall the tenant had merely the right at the end of the term, on giving a month’s previous notice, “to remain on for three years and a half more.”

The following was the judgment of the Court delivered on March 5th:

JUDGMENT.

Trevelyan, J.—The only questions argued before me and which I have to decide in this case are whether the documents which create the tenancy of the defendant are admissible in evidence. It is conceded that if they are admitted in evidence there must be a decree for the defendant except as I shall mention hereafter, and that if they are not so admitted the plaintiff must succeed. The contention between the parties is as to the payment of the costs. The plaintiff is entitled to a decree for Rs. 520, the rent for the months of July, August, September and October 1889.

The rent for July was offered to him, but he refused to accept it, so that the tender of the rent for the subsequent months would have been an empty form, and as the rent for these months [554] accrued due after the suit was brought, the tender or non-tender of the rent could not affect the costs of the suit.

The defendant has vacated the premises since the suit was brought.

The admissibility of the documents depends in the first place upon whether they require registration, and in the second place upon whether the lease which was tendered for execution and was properly stamped can be treated as a part of the correspondence which created the tenancy.

As to the registration, a series of cases shows that where correspondence constitutes a contract leasing premises for more than a year, that correspondence must be registered, although a formal document may be contemplated. There is no doubt that by the correspondence in this case the plaintiff leased, and the defendant accepted the lease of the premises.

The lease was for a year, but it was provided that the tenant should have the option of renewal for a second year.

I have to decide whether the existence of this option creates a lease for a term exceeding one year within the meaning of s. 17, cl. (d) of the Registration Act (III of 1877).

After careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that the documents do not require registration. A number of cases have been cited and have been referred to by me.

Of the cases which are in point the result is that on the one hand we have decisions of the Bombay, Madras, and Allahabad High Courts accepting as applicable to the determination of this question the decision of the Court of Appeal in England in Hand v. Hall (1). On the other hand, there are some decisions of Division Benches of this Court on appeals from the mofussil, the last of which, Bhobami Mahlo v. Shibnath Para (2), is in point. The value of the report of that case and of the other cases of this Court which have been cited is much diminished by the absence of notes of the argument or of the cases cited. In determining whether I ought to act upon this decision, it is all important to know whether the case of Hand v. Hall was cited to the learned Judges who tried the case in this Court. The report is silent, and both the Judges have since left this Court, so I have no means of [555] referring to them as to that fact. I think it is pretty clear that Hand v. Hall was not cited. It is so much in point that if it had been the learned Judges of this Court would probably have distinguished it in their judgment.

In Hand v. Hall the question was, it is true, as to the construction of English statutes, but the question there was, as the question is here, whether a lease giving an option to renew was a lease for more than the original term of the demise.

The reasoning in Hand v. Hall seems to apply equally here.

Lord Cairns there says:—'The document we have to construe in this case runs thus:—'Hand agrees to let, and Hall agrees to take, the large room on the south end of the Exchange, Wolverhampton, from the

(1) L.R. 2 Ex. D. 355, (2) 13 C. 113.
14th February next until the following midsummer twelve months.' Stopping there, there can be no doubt that those words are words of present demise, and if the document had contained those words only, the defendant would have become tenant from the 14th of February to the following midsummer twelve months. The document, however, goes on:—'With right at the end of that term for the tenant, by a previous month's notice, to remain on for three years and a half more.' By this latter part of the agreement an option is given to the defendant, and must be exercised by him before it can be said that any interest has passed to him. It is a stipulation that at his option, on a notice given to the plaintiff, he shall not be disturbed for three years and a half. Whereas there is not anything to be done by the tenant in the first part of the agreement to create a demise, in the second part something has to be done by him before that part takes effect, and until that is done it is impossible to tell whether a tenancy shall come into force or not. I think, therefore, that it is absolutely necessary to devise the contract into two parts. I think the agreement is an actual demise, with a stipulation superadded that if at his option the tenant gives the landlord a notice of his intention to remain, he shall have a renewal of his tenancy for three years and a half.'

On the same reasoning there is in this case merely a demise for a year.

I am justified in my view that the reasoning in Hand v. Hall applies to the construction of the Registration Act by the decision of [556] the Bombay High Court in Aju Budgavda v. Narhari Annajee (1), by the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Khayali v. Husain Baksh (2), and by the decision of the Madras High Court in Virammal v. Kasturi Rungayyangar (3). Speaking with every respect to the decision of this Court to which I have referred, I think I should apply the reasoning of Hand v. Hall to the construction of the Registration Act. I have no doubt that if Hand v. Hall and the decisions to which I have referred had been cited to the Judges of this Court, they would have come to a different conclusion.

I hold that the documents in question do not require registration. There can, I think, be no doubt that the correspondence required stamping. It was complete in itself before the lease was tendered for execution. It is only on the ground that it was so complete that the defendant can succeed. If I were to accede to Mr. Gasper's argument, I should have to hold that the revenue law could be evaded by stamping a subsequent letter after the contract had been completed.

If the penalty (Rs. 110) is paid, the documents tendered can be marked as exhibits. [The penalty was here paid.]

The penalty having been paid the documents may be admitted in evidence, and there will be a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 520. In other respects the suit is dismissed.

The plaintiff must pay the defendant's costs on scale No. 2.

Appeal and Chapter (7)

Khetter Chunder Ghose and others (Defendants) v. Hari Das Bundopadhyo (Plaintiff).* [13th March, 1890.]

A gift of an idol and of the lands with which it is endowed (being a private endowment) made with the concurrence of the whole family to another family for the purpose of carrying on the regular worship of the idol, if made for the benefit of the idol, is not invalid, and is one binding on succeeding sebaits.

[Rel. on, 13 C.W.N. 1084 = 3 Ind. Cas. 76; R., 23 B, 131 (136); D., 34 C, 828 = 11 C.W.N. 782 (788).]

The plaintiff in this suit sought to recover possession of certain lands, alleging that a portion of this land was his ancestral property, and that the remainder, which formed the debutter land of an idol originally belonging to the defendants' family (the Ghoses), had been made over together with the idol to the grandfather and the granduncle of the plaintiff by a deed of gift executed in the year 1847 by defendant No. 4 and the father of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, they being at that time unable to carry on the worship of the idol out of the profits arising out of the debutter lands; and that the plaintiff's predecessors, and subsequently the plaintiff, had ever since held the land in question, and had performed the worship of the idol until he was dispossessed therefrom in 1884 by the defendants. The defendants pleaded limitation, questioned the validity of the deed of gift, and claimed the land as their own.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff had made out his title, and was entitled to possession. This decision was upheld on appeal by the District Judge, who, however, was of opinion that the plaintiff was also entitled to recover on another ground, viz., that he had acquired an indefeasible title to the land by 12 years' adverse possession.

[588] The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose, for the appellants, contended that the deed of gift was invalid, it purporting to be a gift of an idol, and land endowed for that idol's worship; and that such a gift could not bind subsequent sebaits, referring to the Padma Purana, Patalakhandha, Chapter 79; Dayabhaga, ch. vi, s. ii, 26; Durga Bibi v. Chanchal Ram (1); Navasirma Thatha Acharya v. Anantha Bhatta (2); Kuppa Gurukal v. Dorasami Gurukal (3); Uhoor Doss v. Chunder Sekhar Doss (4); Rup Narain Singh v. Junko Bye (5); Varmah Valia v. Varmah Kunhi Kutty (6); Mancharam v. Pranshankar (7).

Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy, for the respondent.—The authorities cited are clearly distinguishable from, and somewhat wide of, the present case. This was a case of a private or family endowment, and it has been found as a fact that the transfer was for the benefit of the family idol, i.e.,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 63 of 1889, against the decree of H. Beveridge, Esq., Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 26th of November 1888, affirming the decree of Baboo Amrito Lal Pal, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 15th of September 1887.

for the better carrying on of its worship. A sebait has power to alienate property for the benefit of the idol—Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (1) and Doorga Nath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (2). In this last case the Privy Council held also that in the case of land dedicated to a family idol, "the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction." Here all the members of the family, male and female, had either joined in the gift or expressed their consent by attesting it.

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose in reply.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J. and Banerjee, J.) was delivered by Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the respondent to recover possession of some land. The plaintiff alleged that a portion of the disputed land was his ancestral property; that the remainder, which formed the debutter land of an idol named Sridhar, originally belonging to the defendant's family called the Ghoses, was made over along with the idol to the grandfather and the [559] granduncle of the plaintiff by a deed of gift executed by defendant No. 4 and the father of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in 1254, or 1847, owing to their inability to carry on the worship with the profits of the endowed land; and that the plaintiff's predecessors, and after them the plaintiff, had ever since been holding the land and performing the worship until 1291, or 1884, when the plaintiff was dispossessed by the defendants.

The defendants pleaded limitation, questioned the genuineness and the validity of the deed of gift set up by the plaintiff, and claimed the land in suit as their own.

The Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiff's title and possession, and the lower appellate Court has further held that, even if the deed of gift was invalid, the plaintiff had acquired a title by twelve years' possession.

In second appeal the grounds urged on behalf of the defendants are —first, that the deed of gift set up by the plaintiff is not valid in law, and secondly, that the plaintiff's possession being admittedly that of a sebait or trustee, he could not acquire any title by adverse possession.

Upon the first ground it is argued, first, that the deed is invalid as it purports to give away an idol, which cannot be the subject of transfer; and secondly, that in no case can the transfer be valid beyond the lifetime of the grantors, who were merely entitled to the management of the endowed property as sebaites or trustees for the time being, and who had no power to bind their successors.

It is true that the Hindu law prohibits the sale of an idol (see the Padma Purana Patalakhanda, Chapter 79), and also the partition of it (see Dayabhaga, Chapter VI, s. 11, 26), though when there are several idols, partition is recognised by custom (see West and Buhler's Digest of Hindu Law, 2nd edition, page 396). But there is no absolute prohibition against the gift of an idol. An idol is not mentioned as an unfit subject of gift by Hindu lawyers in their enumeration of what are, and what are not, fit subjects of gift (see Colebrooke's Digest, Book II, Chapter IV); but on the contrary the gift of an idol under certain circumstances is considered a laudable act (see the Varaha Purana, Chapter 185; see also Hemdris, Chaturvarga Chintamoni, Danabhanda, Chapter II). But having regard to the view we take of the deed in question, we do [560] not think it necessary to examine this point much further. That deed, though it nominally professes to be a deed of gift of the idol and its land, is in reality a deed of arrangement for carrying on the worship of the idol. The fact, as the Courts below have found it, was that the Ghoses were unable to carry on the worship of the idol Sridhar with the income of the debutter land, and the plaintiff's predecessors being found able and willing to carry on the same, the Ghoses, with the concurrence of the whole family, made over to them the idol and its lands for the purpose of performing its worship regularly from generation to generation. It has been expressly found by the Courts below that the arrangement was for the benefit of the idol; and the real question in this case is whether such an arrangement is valid in law and binding upon succeeding sebaits.

We are of opinion that it is. It has been held in several cases that a sebaits has authority to do what may be required for the service of the idol and for the benefit and preservation of its property. In Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golam Chand Baboo (1) the Judicial Committee observe:—"It is only in an ideal sense that property can be said to belong to an idol, and the possession and management of it must, in the nature of things, be entrusted to some person as sebaits or manager. It would seem to follow that the person so entrusted must of necessity be empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol and for the benefit and preservation of its property, at least to as great a degree as the manager of an infant heir. If this were not so, the estate of the idol might be destroyed or wasted, and its worship discontinued for want of the necessary funds to preserve and maintain them." And the same view is affirmed by their Lordships in Doorga Nath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (2) in which it has been further observed that in the case of land dedicated to a family idol 'the consensus of the whole family might give the estate another direction.' If that is so, we see no sufficient reason why the arrangement made in this case in 1254 by the sebaits, who were all the then members of the Ghose family, for the purpose of preserving the property of the idol and preventing the discontinuance of its worship, should not be held to be valid. It was said that the effect of the arrangement was to convert an endowment for the spiritual [561]-benefit of the original founder's family into one for the benefit of the family of the plaintiff. We do not think that that was so. Having regard to the terms of the deed of 1254, and to the fact that the idol with its endowed property was made over to the plaintiff's predecessors, we think that according to Hindu notions the worship of the idol would still be for the benefit of the original founder's family from a spiritual point of view. And if the worship of the idol is at any time neglected, it will be open to the representatives of that family to enforce its performance; for under the deed of 1254 it was upon the express condition of the regular performance of the worship that the idol and its properties were made over to the predecessors of the plaintiff. It has been found that the plaintiff has been duly performing the worship of the idol, and no question has been raised as to his fitness to do so.

It remains now to consider the cases that were cited in support of the appellants' contention. They are all distinguishable from the present in one material respect. In none of them was it found or even alleged that the alienation that was called in question was for the benefit of the endowment.

In one of the cases cited, Durga Bibi v. Chanchal Ram (1), all that was held was that the right of managing a temple, of officiating at the worship conducted in it, and of receiving the offerings made at the shrine, could not be sold in execution of a decree against the manager. In Narasimma Thatha Acharya v. Anantha Bhatia (2) and Kuppa Gurnkal v. Dorasami Gurnkal (3) the sale of the priestly office for the benefit of the sebaits was held to be illegal. In Ukhoo Doss v. Chunder Sekhur Doss (4) the gratuitous transfer of the right of management by one of several joint sebaits of a family idol was held to be invalid beyond the lifetime of the transferor, on the ground of its involving an intrusion by a stranger into the management of a family endowment, and in Rup Narain Singh v. Jundo Bye (5), the general proposition is affirmed that a person who is himself nominated a trustee has no right to transfer his trust to any other person.

[862] In the case of Varmah Valia v. Varmah Kunhi Kutty (6), which was a case of a public endowment, the transfer of the office of trustees at the mere will of the trustees for the time being was held to be invalid as being in contravention of the special arrangements made by the founder, and as involving apprehended inconvenience in the carrying out of the trust. The case of Mancharam v. Pranshanbar (7) whilst affirming the invalidity of an alienation of the office of sebaits to a stranger, supports the respondent's case so far, that it upholds an alienation made in favour of a member of the founder's family.

These cases therefore do not militate against the view that in the case of a private endowment an alienation of the sebaits' office, made with the concurrence of the whole family, and for the benefit of the endowment, would be valid.

Upon reason and upon authority therefore we think that the deed of 1254 is a valid document, and that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed in this suit.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to consider the question whether the plaintiff has acquired a title by twelve years' possession.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[563] way where a bona fide question as to the way being public is raised, there is no jurisdiction to make an order under the section, and the question should be left for determination by the Civil Court. To have this effect, however, the claim must be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction, and it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim be bona fide or not.

[F., 22 B, 988 (994); R., 31 C. 979=9 C.W.N. 72 (74).]

This was a reference by the Sessions Judge of Sarun under the provisions of s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The terms of the reference were as follows:

"It appears that the District Magistrate on the complaint of Kharag Narain and others, and on a police report, took proceedings against Bissessur Sahu, the petitioner before me, and against Ram Saran Sahu under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, by directing them to remove certain obstruction from a public way, or to appear before one of his Subordinates and move to have the order set aside. The public way referred to is said to be a village pathway, which is used by the public, and the obstructions complained of consisted of a wall, a stack of bricks, and a shed placed and erected on a portion of the pathway. These persons in due course appeared before the Deputy Magistrate and raised certain objections. Bissessur Sahu urged that there was no public pathway in existence on the spot as alleged by the complaining parties, while Ram Saran, admitting the existence of such a pathway, denied that it has been obstructed. The Deputy Magistrate went into evidence, and he finds as a fact that the pathway is in existence and that it is a public pathway, and further that it has been obstructed as alleged by Bissessur Sahu. He accordingly ordered him to remove the obstructions within seven days, and to restore the pathway to its former condition.

"Bissessur Sahu now urges before me that under several rulings of the High Court the Magistrate was not competent to determine the question as to whether the pathway was a public or private way, and I think his contention is correct. The rulings cited are the following:—Basaruddin Bhuia v. Bahar Ali (1), Ashar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (2), and Lal Mea v. Nazir Khalasti (3), and in these it was held that whenever a bona fide question seems [564] to exist (as in the present case) as to whether there is a public road in existence at the place named, such question is one for the Civil Courts to decide, because the enquiry contemplated by ss. 133, et seq., Criminal Procedure Code, is an enquiry into the existence or non-existence of the obstruction complained of and not an enquiry into disputed questions of title.

"Such being the law, I think the Deputy Magistrate’s order cannot be sustained, and I accordingly recommend that it be set aside."

No one appeared on reference.

The order of the Court (Norris and Macpherson, JJ.) was as follows:

ORDER.

In this case Kharag Narain Singh and others complained to the District Magistrate under s. 133, Code of Criminal Procedure, against Bissessur Sahu, Ram Sarun Sahu, and Piyar Chand Sahu, alleging that they had obstructed a certain public way by placing bricks and erecting a shed thereon. The District Magistrate ordered a police enquiry to be made. The police reported that Bissessur and Ram Sarun had obstructed a path by a mud wall, the stacking of bricks and the erection of a shed. The District Magistrate thereupon issued an order under s. 133, Code of Criminal Procedure, requiring Bissessur and Ram Sarun to remove the obstructions, or to appear and show cause against such order. The defendants filed written statements; Bissessur denied the existence of the path obstructed; Ram Sarun admitted its existence, but denied having obstructed it.

The Deputy Magistrate, to whom the case was referred, visited the spot and examined a number of witnesses and found that the path in question is in existence, that it is a public one, and that it has in part been obstructed by the defendant Bissessur.

During the progress of the investigation before the Deputy Magistrate an attempt was made to compromise the case, and a petition of compromise was filed, in which Bissessur admitted that the path in question was a public one. The Deputy Magistrate refused to allow the case to be compromised, "because the path is a public one, and the parties concerned in this case had no right to make any change in its width and allow the wall to stand on a part of it."

[666] The Deputy Magistrate confirmed the conditional order of the Magistrate, and directed Bissessur to remove the obstructions complained of within seven days.

Bissessur obtained a rule from the Sessions Judge calling on the Deputy Magistrate and the complainants to show cause why the order of the Deputy Magistrate should not be set aside.

On the argument of the rule, Bissessur contended that under several rulings of the High Court, viz., Basaruddin Bhuiya v. Bahar Ali (1), Askar Mea v. Sabdar Mea (2) and Lal Miah v. Nazir Khalashi (3), the Magistrate was not competent to determine the question as to whether the pathway was a public or private way.

The Sessions Judge has referred the case to us with a recommendation that the Deputy Magistrate's order should be set aside, on the ground that there was a bona fide question raised by Bissessur as to whether the path in question was a public way or not, and that the cases cited showed that when such a question was raised, there was no jurisdiction to make an order under s. 133, Code of Criminal Procedure.

We quite agree with the Sessions Judge that the Deputy Magistrate ought not to have made the order if there was a bona fide contention on Bissessur's part that the path was not a public way.

In Luckhee Narain Banerjee v. Ram Kumar Mukherjee (4), the law is thus laid down:—"When such a question is bona fide raised, the Magistrate ought not to make an order under these sections of the Code, but should allow an opportunity for the determination of the question by the Civil Court. The claim of title must, however, in order that it should be allowed to have this effect, be bona fide, and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction, and it is for the Magistrate to say whether the claim be bona fide or a mere pretence."

We entirely concur in this view of the law.

We therefore set aside the order of the Deputy Magistrate, and direct him, after notice to both parties, to investigate the [666] complaint de novo. If he is satisfied that the defendants' contention that the way in question is not a public way is bona fide, and not a mere pretence, he Bengal Excise Act (Bengal Act VII of 1878), ss. 53, 59, 60—Sale by servant of licensed vendor in presence of master—Liability of servant.

The accused, who was the servant of a licensed retail vendor, of spirits and fermented liquors under Ben. Act VII of 1878, was convicted of an offence under s. 53 of that Act for selling excisable liquor without a license. The sale charged against him was of a quantity of puchwai in excess of that allowed to be sold under the license of his master. The sale was made in the presence of the master, the license, the accused merely handing the liquor to the purchaser at his master's request. Held that the conviction was bad, as the facts did not establish a sale by the accused, the mere mechanical act of handing the liquor to the purchaser not constituting a sale by the accused.

[D., 29 C. 496 (497.)]

This was a reference by the Sessions Judge of Birbhum under the provisions of s. 433 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The terms of the reference were as follows:

"The petitioner Harridas San has been convicted under s. 53, Ben. Act VII of 1878, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15, or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for two weeks.

[567] "One Bama Charan Saha is a licensed vendor of puchwai. Sriram Jugi purchased 5 seers (pucca) at his shop, the person who served him being the petitioner. The head-constable regarding petitioner as a partner with Bama Charan San reported petitioner for prosecution for sale of a quantity of puchwai in excess of that which the license permitted, namely 4 seers. The petitioner was accordingly summoned, not indeed under s. 60, but under s. 59 of the Act. At the trial, the prosecution gave no evidence of partnership. On the contrary the witnesses examined and the petitioner himself all agreed in saying that petitioner was the servant of Bama Charan, the licensee. Accordingly the Magistrate convicted neither under s. 60, nor s. 59, but under s. 53 for selling without license.

"No doubt it has been repeatedly held that servants of licensees are not, as such, exempt from responsibility under the Bengal Excise Act. In re Ishur Chunder Shaha (1), Empress v. Baney Madhub Shaw (2), Empress v. Ishan Chundra De (3). But I do not find that in any of the cases quoted the facts resemble those of the present case. For here the evidence shows that the sale was in substance the act not of the shop-man, but of the shop-keeper; that is to say, the licensee was himself present, and even personally directed his servant, the petitioner, to deliver the pot of puchwai to the purchaser Sriram Jugi.

\[\text{Criminal Reference No. 53 of 1890, made by J. Whitmore, Esq. Sessions Judge of Birbhum, dated the 24th February 1890, against the order passed by N. K. Sarkar, Esq., Joint-Magistrate of Birbhum, dated the 17th of January 1890.}

"The person responsible under the Bengal Excise Act for such a sale would, I consider, be the licensee himself. As for petitioner, his responsibility would seem to be little, if at all, greater than that of the coolie in Empress v. Ishan Chundra De (1).

"In this view of the case I would recommend that the order of the Joint-Magistrate, dated 17th January 1890, convicting petitioner Harridas San of an offence under s. 53, Ben. Act VII of 1878, and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 15, or in default to be simply imprisoned for two weeks, be set aside, and that a refund be directed of the fine or any part of it realized.

No one appeared on the reference.

[568] The order of the High Court (Norris and Macpherson, JJ.) was as follows:

ORDER.

This case comes before us on a reference from the Sessions Judge of Birbhoom, the facts are as follows:

Bama Charan Saha is a retail vendor of spirituous and fermented liquors under Ben. Act VII of 1878, and under the terms of his license he is not allowed to sell a larger quantity of puchwai than four seers. The accused Harridas San is a servant in the employ of Bama Charan Saha. Sriram Jugi went to the shop of Bama Charan and purchased 7½ kutchas (5 seers pucca) of undiluted puchwai. The puchwai was handed to Sriram Jugi by the accused in the presence of his employer and at his (the employer's) request.

The police regarding the accused as a partner with Bama Charan reported him (accused) for prosecution for sale of a quantity of puchwai in excess of that permitted to be sold under Bama Charan's license, an offence punishable under s. 60 of the Act, which says, inter alia, that "every licensed retail vendor who sells by wholesale shall be liable for every such offence to a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees."

The accused was summoned not under s. 60, but under s. 59, which enacts that "every manufacturer or vendor under this Act who fails to produce his license on the demand of any Excise Officer, or who commits any act in breach of any of the conditions of his license not otherwise provided for in this Act, or who artfully contravenes any rule made by the Board under s. 10, otherwise than as provided in the last preceding section shall be liable for every such offence to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees."

The Joint-Magistrate convicted the accused under s. 53 of the Act, for selling exciseable liquor without a license.

The judgment is as follows:

"The evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution proves that the accused sold more than 4 seers of undiluted puchwai to Sriram Jugi; who had no license to purchase such a large quantity of puchwai. The accused himself hold no license. His statement is that he sold as a servant of Bama Charan. But the pottah of Bama Charan has not been produced. It is not in evidence that the name of the accused is endorsed on the pottah authorising him to sell puchwai as a servant under him. I therefore find that he [569] sold puchwai without a license. I convict him under s. 53, Act VII of 1878, and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 15, in default to undergo simple imprisonment for two weeks.'

We are of opinion that the conviction cannot stand.

No doubt there are cases which say that the servants of licensees are not as such exempt from responsibility under the Bengal Excise Act.

In In re Ishur Chunder Shaha (1), Couch, C. J., says:—"But there is another reason why it (the conviction) ought not to be interfered with. Supposing there is an error here in the Magistrate's holding that this must be considered as his license, and that he was practically the vendor, there is no doubt that he did sell the liquor; if this was not his license, *he has been guilty of a breach of the law in selling liquor without any license."

In Empress v. Baney Madhub Shaw (2), the petitioner, the servant of a licensed vendor of spirits, was convicted for selling a bottle of brandy which was carried off and not drunk on the premises. It was contended for the petitioner that the master, the licensed vendor, was alone liable. Prinsep, in giving judgment, says:—"Two judgments of this Court have been considered by us on this point: In re Ishur Chunder Shaha (1) and the other recently delivered by Mr. Justice Pontifex and Mr. Justice Field, The Empress v. Nuddiar Chand Shaw (3). These decisions are in conflict. Our opinion inclines to the decision in In re Ishur Chunder Shaha; and having regard to the fact that that decision was not brought to the notice of the Judges who decided the more recent case, we think we are justified in following it."

The case of the Empress v. Ishau Chunder De (4) followed the decisions in In re Ishur Chunder Shaha (1) and Empress v. Baney Madhub Shaw (2), In the Empress v. Nuddiar Chand Shaw (3) Pontifex and Field, JJ., held that the licensed retail vendor himself is the only person liable to conviction under s. 60 of the Act.

[570] In our opinion it is unnecessary to express any opinion as to which of these decisions is correct. The facts proved in this case do not establish a sale by the accused. The master was present in the shop at the time the order was given by the purchaser, and directed the accused to give the article ordered to the purchaser. The mere mechanical act of handing the liquor to the purchaser cannot under the circumstances, be regarded as a sale by the accused.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 16, cl. (c)—Divorce—Intervenor—Procedure after decree nisi on application by respondent for liberty to intervene.

A wife sued for dissolution of her marriage on the grounds of her husband's adultery and cruelty. Subsequently and before the decree was made absolute, the respondent applied for liberty to intervene under the provisions of cl. (c) s. 16 of the Divorce Act, the application being based on affidavits alleging inter alia collusion on the part of the petitioner.

Held, following King v. King (1) that the respondent could not be allowed to intervene or be heard when the decree came on to be made absolute, but that the affidavits should be filed, and that notice should be given to the petitioner that the decree would not be made absolute until the matters set out in the affidavits as regarded the collusion had been cleared up.

On the 12th December 1889, the petitioner presented a petition praying for a decree for the dissolution of her marriage with the respondent on the ground of the respondent's adultery and cruelty towards the petitioner. The respondent did not appear or file any answer, and the case came on to be heard ex parte on the 23rd January 1890 before Mr. Justice Wilson. At the hearing evidence was given to prove numerous acts of cruelty on the part of the respondent, and also his adultery, and on the 23rd January 1890 the usual decree nisi was passed, dissolving the marriage unless sufficient cause [571] should be shown to the contrary within six months from the date thereof.

This decree was filed on the 15th February 1890. On the 1st May 1890, Mr. Pugh, on behalf of the respondent, moved the Court, under s. 16, cl. (c) of Act IV of 1869, on certain affidavits for a rule calling on the petitioner to show cause why the decree nisi should not be set aside and a fresh hearing granted, or for such other order as under the circumstances the Court might think fit and proper to pass. The grounds upon which the application was based were contained in certain affidavits alleging amongst other things that there had been collusion between the petitioner and the respondent, and that had it not been for the suppression of these facts, the Court would not have passed the decree it did, but have dismissed the petition.

Mr. Pugh in moving the Court stated that he was instructed on behalf of the respondent, and moved under the provisions of cl. (c) of s. 16 of the Divorce Act (IV of 1869).

[Wilson, J.—Is it open to a party to the suit to apply under that section?]

Mr. Pugh.—The question has been very fully discussed in the case of King v. King (1), and Mr. Justice Bayley there went very fully into the matter and delivered an exhaustive judgment. My contention is, however, that the learned Judge put too narrow a construction on the section when he held that the words "any person" did not include the respondent. It is perfectly true that this portion of s. 16 is taken almost verbatim from the English Act, but the great difference is that the later Act provides for the appointment of the Queen's Proctor, whereas here we have no official of that description. Neither the Advocate-General nor any Government official has any duty cast on him to intervene and therefore the only person at all likely to intervene is the respondent or a person moved by him, which is the same thing. No independent person who has no interest in the proceedings is very likely to intervene at the risk of having to pay the costs occasioned by his intervention, though of course it is possible that one might come forward and do so. The reasons, therefore, for preventing a respondent from intervening in England do not apply here, and [572] under these circumstances the Court should put a wider construction on the meaning of the term "any person" than is put on the corresponding portion of the English Statute.

(1) 6 B. 416.
Counsel then referred to the case of King v. King (1) at length, and to the cases of Latour v. Latour (2), Stoate v. Stoate (3), Boulton v. Boulton (4), and Clements v. Clements (5), and after referring to the affidavits contended that there was ample material contained in them which if true would lead the Court to set aside the decree. He then continued—The question arises as to what course under the circumstances the Court should adopt. In King v. King the affidavits, which were filed at the instance of the attorney for the respondent, were ordered to be placed on the record, and the petitioner was directed to attend in Court to be examined on the matters disclosed by them before the decree be made absolute. What happened after that order does not appear.

[WILSON, J.—Supposing the petitioner does appear, who is to cross-examine her? Upon the English authorities the respondent cannot be heard, and the Court of its own motion could not be in a position to do so.]

Mr. Pugh.—That is the difficulty, and that is why in the absence of a Queen's Proctor the Court should put a wider construction on s. 16, and hold that a respondent is entitled to intervene in this country.

[WILSON, J.—The difficulty in the matter is that by doing so the Court would be putting a construction on the section, which is substantially the same as the English Act, wholly different from the construction put on similar words in the English Act.]

Mr. Pugh.—In that case the only course is to adopt that followed by Mr. Justice Bayley, and allow the affidavits to remain on the file, but, as I have already stated, I contend that a liberal construction should be placed on s. 16 and that any one should be allowed to intervene and that therefore the respondent should be allowed to be heard.

Section 7 of the Act provides that, subject to the provisions contained in the Act, the Courts in this country shall Act and give [573] relief on principles and rules as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules of the English Court. Section 16 says any person may intervene, and if the English practice be followed and that be taken to be any person other than the respondent or some one moving at his instance, as there is no person whose duty it is to intervene on facts being brought to his notice, it would, in a case like this, result in the dissolution of a marriage under circumstances under which the Legislature intended it should not be dissolved. Though in England any person other than the respondent, or some one at his instance, may intervene, yet in practice the Queen's Proctor alone does so.

[WILSON, J.—In England there have been cases of private intervention.]

Mr. Pugh.—The Act, however, contemplates that in the great majority of cases the Queen's Proctor should be the person to intervene, and as a matter of fact it is the Queen's Proctor who generally does intervene. If, however, the Court holds that the respondent is precluded from intervening, then the affidavits, as in the Bombay case, can be put on the file with the record, and possibly between now and the time when an application is made to have the decree made absolute some person may, on the facts becoming known, come forward and intervene.

The judgment of the Court was delivered on May 5th.

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—In this case I shall follow the view of the law taken in the Bombay High Court in King v. King (1). The result will be that the affidavits filed by the respondent and others in this matter will be put up with the record of the suit. Following in the Bombay case, I shall not, when the matter comes on for the decree to be made absolute, allow the respondent to be heard; but, as in the Bombay case, information will be given to the attorney for the petitioner that the decree will not be made absolute till the matters set out in the affidavits alleging collusion have been cleared up. She may take what course she may be advised for the purpose of clearing up the matters alleged in the affidavits on that subject.

KARIM BUKSH v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS. * [5th September, 1888.]

False charge—False charge made to police—Institution of Criminal Proceedings—Penal Code, s. 211.

A person who sets the criminal law in motion by making a false charge to the police of a cognizable offence institutes criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code; and if the offence fall within the description in the latter part of the section, he is liable to the punishment there provided.

In this case the accused Karim Buksh was charged with having falsely instituted criminal proceedings against one Khoaz Mundul by charging him with committing mischief by fire (an offence under s. 436 of the Penal Code), knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such charge, and with having thereby committed an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code.

The facts were thus stated in the judgment of the Sessions Judge:—

"On the 15th November Karim Buksh complained to the head constable of Phulpur Thana that Khoaz Mundul had come with 40 or 50 persons to his homestead and had set to work erecting a house there, on the pretext that the land appertained to another man’s homestead, which Khoaz had purchased. Karim Buksh went on to state that he remonstrated, and that he was then chased by Khoaz and others to the neighbouring bari of his brother, Rasulla; that Khusal Chang, chowkidar, prevented those men from beating him; and that Khoaz Mundul had brought with him a smouldering torch, wherewith he set fire to the house of Karim Bukh. The head constable held a local enquiry and reported the charge as false, and hence the present prosecution under s. 211 of the Penal Code.

[575] "The head constable has proved the complaint. Karim Bukh adheres to that statement, and says the charge he brought was quite true. "I entertain no doubt that the charge of arson was false, and that Karim Bukh might have been prosecuted for fabricating false evidence as well as for an offence under s. 211, Penal Code. The charge he made was one punishable under s. 436 with transportation for life or imprisonment up to 10 years. I think the offence comes under the latter part of s. 211, Penal Code, and that it was the intention of the Legislature to regulate the punishment proportionately to the gravity of the false charge. In this view I am supported by a ruling of Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ., in Raffee Mahomed v. Abbas Khan (1). I am aware of a ruling to the contrary in Queen-Empress v. Karim Bukh (2), following Empress of India v. Pitam Rai (3) and Empress v. Parahu (4), but I am in a position to say that these latter rulings are opposed to the practice current in the mofussil Courts during many years. Moreover, it seems to me that when a man formally lays a charge of a cognizable offence at a police-station, he in effect asks the police to investigate the charge, arrest the accused, and send him for trial before a Magistrate, and that this is nothing short of instituting criminal proceedings' and it was so laid down in Queen v. Bonomally Sohai (5). If it be held that the latter part of s. 211 refers only to false charges instituted directly in Court then there arises an anomaly. The more heinous the offence the more imperative is it, according to practice and reason, that the complainant should go to the police in the first instance. A man must almost of necessity go first to the police if he wishes to prefer a charge of murder for instance, whereas he might, and not unfrequently does, go to a Magistrate if he wishes to lay a charge of grievous hurt under s. 325, Penal Code. Supposing these charges were proved to be false, the man who brought the former with the object of getting an innocent man hanged could be punished only with two years' imprisonment and fine, and would be triable by a Magistrate, while the one who brought the far less heinous charge [576] before a Magistrate would be liable to a sentence of seven years' imprisonment and would be triable only by the Sessions Court.

The case of Queen v. Hanooman Lall (6) was a false charge of murder preferred to the police and committed to the Sessions Court, and the High Court did not disturb the sentence. I would also refer to Queen v. Nathoo Doss (9), In the matter of the petition of Kader Bukh (8), Ashrof Ali v. Empress (8), and Empress v. Salik Roy (10)."

The Sessions Judge concurring with one of the assessors found the accused guilty, and sentenced him to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused appealed, and the appeal came on for hearing before Wilson and Rampini, JJ., by whom it was referred to a Full Bench with the following order:

In this case we see no reason to interfere with the conviction. Nor should we alter the sentence, if it be sanctioned by law. But its legality depends upon a point as to which the decisions of this Court are contradictory, namely, whether the latter part of s. 211, Penal Code, applies to a complaint made to the police, or is limited to cases brought before a Court. In the present case the accused made before the police a false charge against one Khoaz Mundul of having committed a misdemeanor by fire, an offence punishable, under s. 436, Penal Code, with more than seven years' imprisonment. He has been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The sentence is lawful if the second part of s. 211 applies; if not, it is illegal and must be reduced to not more than two years.

In Queen v. Bonomally Sohai (1) Campbell and Phear, JJ., held that to prefer a complaint to the police in respect of an offence with which they are competent to deal is to institute a criminal proceeding within the meaning of s. 211. In Raffee Mahomed v. Abbas Khan (2), Jackson and Hobhouse, JJ., took the same view and set aside a conviction by a Magistrate in respect of a false charge made to the police on the ground that the case being [577] under the second part of s. 211, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction. In In the matter of the petition of Kader Buksh (3), Kemp and Glover, JJ., decided to the same effect. It is not stated in the published report of this case that the charge was made to the police, but we have referred to the record and we find that it was so. On the other hand, in Queen-Empress v. Karim Buksh (4), Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J., held that to make false charges to the police is not to institute criminal proceedings, and did not fall within the latter part of s. 211: We refer to a Full Bench the question which of these conflicting views is correct.

No one appeared on either side at the hearing before the Full Bench.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench (Petheram, C. J., and Wilson, Tottenham, O'Kinealy and Macpherson, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—Section 211, Indian Penal Code, enacts as follows:

"Whoever, with intent to cause injury to any person, institutes, or causes to be instituted, any criminal proceedings against that person, or falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge against that person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both; and if such criminal proceeding be instituted on a false charge of an offence punishable with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for seven years or upwards, shall be punishable with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine."

The question before us is whether the latter part of the section applies to cases in which complaint has been made to the police of an offence falling within the description given, and into which the police are by law authorised to enquire.

According to the Code of Criminal Procedure now in force, there are two modes in which a person aggrieved may seek to put the criminal law in motion. He may make a charge, or in the language of the Code give information, to the police (s. 154). If the information discloses a cognizable offence, the proper officer of police may proceed to make an investigation; and if the result of that investigation is adverse to the accused, he is, in due course, brought by the police before a Magistrate. All this forms the subject of Ch. XIV of the Procedure Code. If the

(3) 21 W.R. Cr. 34.  (4) 14 C. 633.
[578] information does not disclose a cognisable offence, the police cannot take any step of their own authority. Secondly, a person aggrieved may lay a charge, or, as the Code calls it, a complaint (s. 191) before a Magistrate.

Whichever of these methods is adopted, the thing done by the accuser is the same, that which is called in the one case giving information, in the other making a complaint. In each case the steps that follow are governed by the Criminal Procedure Code. In each the first step taken by the accuser is ordinarily also the last, for from that time the control of the investigation or enquiry passes out of his hands into those of the constituted authorities; subject to this, that if, after an information before the police, the result of their investigation is adverse to the complainant, he may renew his complaint to the Magistrate. The procedure by information to the police is by far the more common course of proceeding, especially where any grave offence is alleged. A system similar to the present in these matters was in force when the Penal Code was passed in 1860; it was embodied in the First Procedure Code of 1861, and has been continued ever since.

In that state of things, if the latter part of s. 211 had stood alone, there could probably have been no doubt that the words "if such criminal proceedings be instituted" applied no less to a case in which the criminal law is set in motion by information to the police than to one in which it is set in motion by complaint to a Magistrate. But the doubt arises from the fact that the expressions "institutes criminal proceedings" and "falsely charges" occur in the first part of the section, and only the one expression "such criminal proceedings be instituted" in the latter. And hence the argument arises that the Legislature must have meant different things when it spoke of "instituting proceedings" and "making a charge," and that only what fell within the former phrase was within the latter part of the section.

I agree in this reasoning in one sense and not in another. I agree that we must take it that the Legislature did not regard the two phrases as co-extensive in meaning, but considered that there were, or might be, cases to which the one would apply and not the other. But I do not think we are to suppose that the Legislature meant the phrases to be mutually exclusive in [579] meaning, so that the instituting of criminal proceedings must be by something which is not a charge, and a charge must be something which is not the institution of criminal proceedings. This cannot, I think, be for two reasons. First, because there is no mode by which a private accuser can institute criminal proceedings except by making a charge; and if he does not do it by the charge, he never does it at all, to whatever length the proceedings may go. And secondly, because the last part of the section speaks of "proceedings instituted on a false charge."

It is not difficult to see various classes of cases which either do or probably may fall under one of the expressions used and not under the other, and which the Legislature may well have had in view when it used both. Thus proceedings to compel any one to give security, by reason of an anticipated breach of the peace under s. 107, or because he is concealing himself or has no ostensible means of subsistence under s. 109 of the Procedure Code, are apparently criminal proceedings, but they do not necessarily involve a charge of any offence. On the other hand, a charge to the police of a non-cognizable offence may very possibly be a charge within the meaning of the section, but could hardly be called the institution of criminal proceedings. So a charge made to the Judge of a Civil Court, or to public officers of other kinds, in order to obtain sanction to prosecute may well be a charge, but is not the institution of criminal proceedings.

For these reasons, I think that a man who sets the criminal law in motion by making a false charge to the police of a cognizable offence, institutes criminal proceedings within the meaning of s. 211 of the Penal Code, and that if the offence fall within the description in the latter part of the section, he is liable to the punishment there provided.

[580] PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:

Lord Macnaghten, Sir B. Peacock and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

MOHINI MOHUN DAS AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. BUNGSI BUDDAN SAHA DAS AND OTHERS (Defendants).

[19th November, 1889.]

Parties—Joiner of parties—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 30 and 34—Limitation—Signature of plaint by one of several co-plaintiffs.

There is "no rule that a person named as a co-plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint.

Three suits for money were tried by one of three joint-creditors, the others being named as co-plaintiffs with him in the plaints, which he alone signed and verified. An order was made by the Court after the filing of the plaints that one of these joint creditors should be added as a co-plaintiff, as if he had not been on the record already. If the date of that order had been the date of suit brought, limitation under Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 67, would have applied; but it was held that all the joint-creditors became plaintiffs when the plaints were filed, the order adding parties being inoperative, and that the suits when instituted were not defective for want of parties.

Three consolidated appeals from three decrees (24th February 1886), affirming three decrees (March 31st, 1884) of the First Subordinate Judge of Zilla Dacca.

The plaints (filed 2nd November 1883) in the three suits were signed and verified by Mohini Mohun Das, son of the late Modhusudan Das; but Govind Rani Dasi, widow of another son deceased, Mohini Mohun being described as manager acting on her behalf, and Khetter Mohun, another brother, described as "interested plaintiff," were named as co-plaintiffs. The cause of action was money lent from the money-lending business carried on by the plaintiffs in the name of the late Modhusudan Das, the defendants having signed hat-chittas, and the loan with interest having amounted to Rs. 2,991. An agreement dated 22nd Aughran 1268 (8th December 1875) was filed to show that Mohini Mohun was manager for the brothers.

Mohini Mohun petitioned (22nd November 1883) to be allowed to sue on behalf of Khetter Mohun; the latter petitioned (2nd January 1884) that he might be joined as a plaintiff. An order (8th January 1884) was made that he should be made a plaintiff in the suits. The Subordinate Judge having heard the three suits together on issues raising the questions of Mohini Mohun’s authority and of limitation, dismissed them, on the ground that the admission of the debt, which without admission would have been barred by limitation, was made (Assin 1287, September 1890) more than three years before the order making Khetter Mohun a party (8th January 1884) was passed. Till that order was made, the suits, in the opinion of the Judge had not been effectively filed, being defective for want of the proper parties having been made plaintiffs.

The High Court (Cunningham and O’Kinealy, JJ.), on appeals preferred by the three co-plaintiffs, supported this decision, on the ground that one of the three plaintiffs, who was a necessary party to the suits, had not been brought on to the record until after the expiration of the period of limitation.

The three alleged co-plaintiffs having appealed.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson (with whom was Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C.), for the appellants, argued that the decisions of the Courts below were incorrect. All the persons interested as plaintiffs were before the Court, being properly on the record, so that the suit, when filed on the 2nd November 1883, at which time the debt was not barred, was not, as had been erroneously supposed, defective for want of parties. Where the interests of joint-contractors had to be enforced, one of them, if duly authorized, might sue on behalf of all interested; and his authority might be shown. Reference was made to the Civil Procedure Code, ss. 30 and 34, and to the requirement that any such objection as the present should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity. There was, however, no valid objection to Mohini Mohun’s having sued on behalf of all the joint-creditors. He was manager on their behalf as shown by an agreement filed; and, in fact, neither of them had disavowed the claim, as filed by him, with their names mentioned as co-plaintiffs.

Reference was made to Sujan Ali Khan v. Lalla Kasheenath Doss (1), Mohka Harakraj Joshi v. Biseswar Doss (2), Bisandas [582] Magniram v. Lakmichand Kisauchand (3), and the Civil Procedure Code, ss. 26, 32, cls. 3 and 4.

Mr. R. V. Doyle, for the respondent Bungsi Buddan Saha, contended that the suits were instituted by Mohini Mohun alone. He alone signed and verified the plaints. The agreement on which reliance had been placed did not expressly authorise the bringing suits by Mohini on behalf of Gobind Rani; but the main question was,—when did Khetter Mohun become a party to these suits? It was not at the institution of the suits on 2nd November 1883 that he did so. The suits, having been filed by Mohini Mohun alone, were defective till the 8th of January 1884, by which time they were barred by limitation. The attempted joinder, or ineffectual attempt to join Gobind Rani Das was also a complete objection. Reference was made to s. 36, Civil Procedure Code, and to Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koonoo (4).

Mr. J. H. A. Branson replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by Lord MacNaghten.—These suits were instituted on the 2nd of November 1883 to recover moneys alleged to be due to Mohini Mohun,

(3) 3 B.H.C. 150.  (4) 6 C. 815.
Gobind Rani, and Khetter Mohun jointly, on an account acknowledged and signed in 1880. In both Courts the suits were held to have been originally defective for want of parties, and to have been barred by the Law of Limitation before the defect was cured.

On the face of the plaintiffs the three joint-creditors are named as co-plaintiffs. The names of Gobind Rani and Khetter Mohun have not been struck out, nor did they, or either of them, attempt to repudiate the suits. But still it was contended that Mohini Mohun was the sole plaintiff, or, at any rate, that Khetter Mohun ought not to be treated as a co-plaintiff from the commencement of the litigation.

In the first place it was said that the plaintiffs were signed and verified by Mohini Mohun alone. But that is immaterial. There is no rule providing that a person named as a co-plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint.

Then as regards Khetter Mohun, it was said that both Mohini Mohun and Khetter Mohun himself took the view that he was not [588] originally a plaintiff. Having named Khetter Mohun as co-plaintiff, Mohini Mohun presented petitions asking for permission to prosecute the suits on behalf of Khetter Mohun, relying, as appears by the plaints, on s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which only applies "when a suit is brought by one person on behalf of other persons having joint interest, but not named as co-plaintiffs." Notice of the petitions was given to Khetter Mohun, and he being named as co-plaintiff already asked to be made a plaintiff. By some oversight orders to that effect were made on the 8th of January 1834. The orders were merely waste paper. These various experiments or blunders cannot, in their Lordships' opinion affect the real position of the parties, which is plain on the face of the record. The question, as Mr. Doyne put it, is simply this:—When was it that Khetter Mohun became a party to these suits? If it was on the 2nd of November 1883 the suits were in time. If it was not till the 8th of January 1884, they were too late. Their Lordships think that Khetter Mohun, as well as Gobind Rani, became a party, as plaintiff, on the 2nd of November 1883, and that the suits therefore are not barred by lapse of time.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeals ought to be allowed, that the decrees of the Subordinate Court and the High Court ought to be reversed, and that the suits should be remanded to the High Court with a direction that they should be tried on the merits by the Subordinate Court, and giving the parties leave to raise such issues and to adduce such evidence as they may be advised, and that the costs which have been incurred in the Subordinate Court should abide the results of the suits, and the costs which have been incurred in the High Court be paid by Bungsi Buddan Saha Das. The respondent, Bungsi Buddan Saha Das, will pay the costs of these appeals.

[14th and 20th November, 1889.]

Sale in execution of decree—Sale of joint family estate in execution of a decree against the father upon debts contracted by him—Liability of son’s share—Hindu Law—Alienation.

It is only on condition of the son’s showing that the father’s debt has been contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose that the son, upon a decree against the father alone being executed by the attachment and sale of the family estate, can claim to have the liability limited to the father’s own share under the Mitakshara.

In the absence of such proof, whether the entirety of the family estate has been transferred at the sale in execution, or not, is a question of fact, in each case dependent on what was understood to be brought, and has been brought, to sale.

Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhum Mohun (1) and Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (2) referred to and followed.

The description of the property in the certificate of sale, as the right, title and interest on the judgment-debtor, was consistent with every interest, which he might have caused to be sold, passing at the sale.

Appeal from a decree (16th July 1885) of the High Court affirming a decree (10th June 1884) of the Second Subordinate Judge of Sarun.

The suit related to a 5-anna 4-pie share in mouzah Maharajgunge, in the Sarun district, being the ancestral estate of a family consisting of a father, Rai Moheswar Nath Sahai, Massumat Murat Koer, his wife, and their minor son, Markanda Nath. The latter sued by his mother as his guardian, and he was a respondent in this appeal. The father was joined as one of the defendants in the suit, but was a respondent in this appeal. He had, on 11th September 1869, mortgaged a fractional part of the above share to Seogolam, father of the principal defendant Chowaram, to secure Rs. 4,381. Again, on 5th November 1869, Moheswar Nath had mortgaged a 2-anna share of the family estate to Sant Lal to secure Rs. 500. And, on 30th August 1871, he mortgaged a 6-pie share to Chowaram to secure Rs. 1,050. These sums were debts; [585] Moheswar’s father having begun to contract them, and he himself having increased them.

Sheo Golam, Sant Lal, and Chowaram obtained decrees against Moheswar in respect of principal and interest due on their bonds. Their decrees were dated 11th September 1873, 7th April 1874, and 10th March 1874. One Sobh Narain also held a decree against him for at least Rs. 2,166.

Chowaram proceeded to execute his decree, and the whole 5 annas 4 pie share of Maharaajgunge was advertised to be sold on the 15th January 1875. But Moheswar's son and wife, on the day before the sale, brought a suit against him and Chowaram, claiming that the family estate might be protected by a declaratory decree from the impending sale. Also on the 5th January a petition was presented for the sale to be postponed on the ground that the ancestral lands ought not to be sold for a personal debt of the judgment-debtor, and while a suit was pending to exempt that estate from sale. The sale, however, took place.

Chowaram subsequently, on the 21st February 1875, obtained possession of the whole 5 annas 4 pie share from the Court, having paid the purchase-money, Rs. 10,000. This money was appropriated to the payment of various decree-holders against Moheswar, as appears by a proceeding of the Court, dated 10th May 1875. The appellant purchased the rights of Chowaram.

Meantime, the plaintiff proceeded with the declaratory suit. This, however, was dismissed on 12th May 1875, the Court being of opinion that after possession of the whole estate, in pursuance of the sale, had been given to the auction-purchaser a declaratory suit would not lie, and that it must be a suit for possession. A suit which Moheswar Nath, on the other hand, brought to have the sale set aside on the ground of fraud was dismissed on 25th June 1878 by the High Court (having been decreed in the first instance), so that the purchaser remained in possession. Upon this the objection was raised under s. 332 of Act X of 1877, amended by s. 43 of Act XII of 1879, then in force, that the co-sharers were entitled to joint possession with the purchaser. This was disallowed.

The plaintiff, accordingly, brought the present suit on 15th December 1880, in which issues were settled raising the questions whether the shares, other than Moheswar Nath's in the family estate, were bound by the debt, and whether possession of the whole, or any part, could be recovered by the son as his share.

The Subordinate Judge found it not proved that Moheswar Nath had applied to immoral purposes the proceeds of the loan in respect of which Chowaram had obtained a decree against him. He, however, made a decree for possession of the third share by the minor plaintiff, declaring that the purchaser at the sale was entitled only to the share of Moheswar Nath. This was supported, in the main (with a reversal as to mesne profits which had been decreed), on an appeal to the High Court; the Judges (Cunningham and Macpherson, JJ.) being of opinion that only the father's share had been sold.

From this decree an appeal by Mahabir Pershad, the purchaser of Chowaram's decree was admitted to Her Majesty in Council. Thereafter the respondent, Massumat Murat Koer, died; and by an order in Council, the appeal was revived against her husband, Moheswar Nath, on a certificate of the High Court that such revivor should be made; and on a like certificate, Massmut Bubuh Bibi was appointed guardian ad litem to the infant respondent.

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. H. Cowell, for the appellant—The sale was intended by the Court executing the decree, with the knowledge of all concerned, to transfer the whole joint family estate. The Subordinate Judge was right in holding that Moheswar was not proved to have applied the proceeds of the loan, upon which Chowaram's decree was obtained, to any immoral purpose. The minor respondent, by reason of the son's liability for his father's debts, not incurred for immoral purposes, cannot impeach the sale or limit the application of the execution to the father's share. The decree also was based upon a debt incurred by the successive heads of the family, and therefore bound the entirety of the estate, including the son's interest. Where the father of a family under the Mitakshara law as contracted a debt—on the one hand, neither necessary nor beneficial to the family—but still, on the other, not for an immoral or illegal purpose, then in execution of a decree upon that debt, the whole family estate may be sold, and not merely the father's share. This being the general rule, the exceptional case is where the creditor issues execution against the [587] interest of the father alone. In every one of the cases it is enough to see whether the facts bring it within the general rule as given in Nanomi Babuasins v. Modhun Mohun (1), or within the exception as found in Deendyal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (2) The claim is not under the mortgage, but under the sale upon the decree. They also referred to— Girdhari Lall v. Kantoo Lall (3); Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheopersad Singh (4); Simbhumath Pande v. Golap Singh (5); Bhagbut Persad v. Girja Koer (6); Minakshi Nayudu v. Inmudi Kanaka Ramaya Goundan (7).

The respondents did not appear.

Afterwards, on 20th November, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by :—

JUDGMENT.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the purchaser, whom the defendant represents, acquired the entirety of the 5 annas 4 pie which were put up to sale in execution, or only such share as the judgment-debtor Moheswar Nath would take on a partition. Other questions have been raised in the Courts below which are not relevant to this appeal. It has been considered whether the sale was necessary for the benefit of the family estate; but the question is, whether the plaintiff, who is the son of judgment-debtor, can set up his right as a co-sharer to impeach a sale decreed against his father for the purpose of defraying the debts of his father and grandfather. He can only do so on condition that he shows the debts to have been contracted for immoral purposes, and that issue has been found against him in this suit. Again, the first Court then examined the circumstances at considerable length to show that the purchaser bought the property subject to encumbrances, and that his purchase-money ought not to have been applied, as the Court in fact applied it, to the payment of those encumbrances. But if the plaintiff could have raised any such case as that, must have done so in a suit differently framed in point of parties, of allegations of prayer, of [588] issue, and of proofs. Except for the issue raised as to immorality, this suit is solely for the purpose of treating the defendant as nothing more than a co-sharer in the estate, and the decree with the plaintiff has obtained does so treat him.

There have been of late years a great number of suits of this kind, and some difficulties have been left as to the proper mode of treating them. It is to be hoped that recent decisions by this Committee have lessened these difficulties. At all events, their Lordships feel none in this case, treating it on the principles laid down in the cases of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (1) and Bhagbut Persad Singh v. Girja Koer (6); and addressing themselves to the question of fact whether the thing meant to be sold and bought was the entirety of the estate or only a share in it.

It would be more convenient if the record contained the whole of the proceedings in the execution and sale, because they must always be important evidence, often the best, as to the nature of the thing sold. In this case the application for attachment and sale, and the orders made thereon, and the notification of sale, are not to be found, and their Lordships are left to infer their tenor from an adverse petition presented on behalf of the plaintiff, and from the sale certificate. The difficulty is increased by the circumstance that there were three, or probably four, decrees then standing against Moheswar; whereas the sale proceeded on one of them, founded on a mortgage to one Chowaram of only a fraction of the estate. From the pleadings and judgments, their Lordships conclude that in some way not explained the various creditors combined to have the estate sold for the common benefit. At all events, no difficulty on this score has been felt in the Courts below.

Chowaram's decree, dated 7th March 1874, is for the realisation of a sum of money out of the property mortgaged to him by Moheswar, viz., "my rights and interest in 6 pie out of 5 annas 4 pie of the entire 16 annas" of the estate in question.

The day fixed for the sale was the 5th January 1875. On the 4th January 1875 the plaintiff filed a plaint against Chowaram and Moheswar, in which, after alleging fraud and immorality, he claimed that "the ancestral property of the plaintiff, which he has inherited from his grandfather, ought not to be sold in satisfaction of such illegal and personal debts;" and he prayed for a declaration protecting his estate. On the next day the plaintiff's pleader presented a petition in the execution proceeding, stating that the 5 annas 4 pie share of Mouzah Udopore, &c., "which is the ancestral property of my client, is to be sold to-day in this Court." The petition then states the suit commenced the day before and prays postponement of the sale till the suit should be disposed of. That petition was rejected, not on the ground that the thing to be sold was only the share of Moheswar, which could not prejudice the plaintiff, but on this ground, that "the plaintiff is at liberty, in case of the sale taking place, to make the purchaser a defendant in his suit, so that he (the purchaser) may defend the right purchased by him."

It is hardly possible to make it clearer that all parties, judgment-creditors, judgment-debtor, the plaintiff and his advisers, and the Court itself, considered that the thing put up to sale was the entirety of the estate.

The sale certificate was issued on the 6th February 1875 to the vāki of Chowaram, the decree-holder. After stating that all the "right, interest and connection which the judgment-debtor had in the property," had been purchased "from the decree-holder," and "that in future the certificate shall be considered as a good evidence of transfer of the right and interest of the judgment-debtor," it describes the property thus—"Five annas four pie of mouzah Udopore alias Maharajgunge, pergunnah Cherand, which belonged to the judgment-debtor, Rai Moheswar Nath, is sold (for) Rs. 10,000."

The Procedure Code at that time required that property sold in execution should be described as the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, and it has been held in many cases that the presence of these words in the sale certificate is consistent with the sale of every interest which the judgment-debtor might have sold, and does not necessarily import that when the father of a joint family is the judgment-debtor nothing is sold but his interest as a co-sharer. It is a question of fact in each case; and in this case their Lordships think that the transactions of the 4th [590] and 5th January 1875, and the description of the property in the sale certificate, are conclusive to show that the entire corpus of the estate was sold.

They are of opinion that the High Court should have reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and have dismissed the suit with costs, and that a decree to that effect should now be made in reversal of the decree of the High Court. The appellant should have his costs in the High Court and also his costs of this appeal. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty accordingly.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (Defendant) v. FAHAMIDANNISA BEGUM AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).
[5th and 9th April, 14th and 31st July, and 30th November, 1889.]

Act IX of 1847—Assessment to revenue, finality of, upon land within an estate permanently settled—Non-liability to assessment of alluvial land re-formed within such an estate, no abatement having been made on account of previous diluvion—Act IX of 1847, construction of—Jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in regard to orders of revenue authorities.

A review of the legislation anterior to Act IX of 1847 shows that whilst it was intended to bring under assessment lands not included in the permanent settlement, whether waste or gained by alluvion or dereliction from sea or rivers, yet all such lands as were comprised in permanently settled estates were to be rigorously excluded from further assessment.

Lands included in the permanent settlement having afterwards been covered by water, and having then been formed again on the same site, held not to be lands "gained" from the river by alluvion or dereliction within the meaning of Reg. II of 1819, that expression being confined to meaning 'lands gained since the period of the settlement.

The effect of Act IX of 1847 was merely to change the mode of assessment in the case of land already liable to be assessed under legislation [591] in force when that Act became law. It was not the object of that Act to bring under liability and re-formed on the site of land previously lost, within the area of a permanently-settled estate, the revenue upon which had been paid without abatement since the permanent settlement.

When an order of the Board of Revenue, purporting to be made under Act IX of 1847, subjected land included in the permanent settlement to assessment, held that the District Civil Court had jurisdiction (which, therefore, might be invoked as a matter of right) to entertain a suit brought by the landowner contesting that order, and to declare it unauthorised by law.

R., 30 C. 291 (300); 5 Ind. Cas. 454.]

Appeal from a decree (14th August 1886) founded upon the judgment of a Full Bench of the High Court, and reversing a decree (28th November 1884) of the Judge of Faridpur, and affirming a decree (21st March 1883) of the Subordinate Judge of that district.

This appeal, which was twice argued, questioned the correctness of the High Court's decisions that the respondents, as proprietors of a mauza within the area of an estate, permanently assessed to the revenue in 1792, were entitled to hold, without further assessment, land within it that had accreted, by the action of water, upon the site of land previously lost by diluvion; notwithstanding that the Board of Revenue, purporting to act under Act IX of 1847, had maintained orders assessing the land to the revenue as an alluvial increment, falling within the scope of their powers under that Act.

The decree of the Court below gave effect to a judgment of a Full Bench (1) delivered by Wilson, J., in which concurred a majority, consisting of Petheram, C.J., Prinsep, J., and O'Kinealy, J. (from whom Mitter, J., differed) upon the two questions referred by a Division Bench (Field and Macpherson, JJ.).

The two questions are stated at the commencement of their Lordships' judgment upon this appeal.

Mauza Mohun Sureswar, part of a zemindari in the Faridpur district, was originally within a divided share belonging to those whom the plaintiff represented. A smaller part of the same share belonged to Sama Churn Ganguli, who was made a co-defendant in the suit, not having been willing to join as a plaintiff. The principal defendant was the Government, whose local officers had contested [592] the plaintiff's claim to hold the entire mauza free of assessment, alleging that the recent accretions were not parcel of the original mauza, and maintaining a right to assess them under Act IX of 1847.

The mauza in the year 1792, when partition of the whole zemindari was made, contained an area of 69 drones, or 10,042 bighas. In 1793, under the permanent settlement, revenue was paid upon the mauza, and had been paid down to the date of the present dispute without any deduction on account of loss of area by diluvion, by which, however, the mauza had lost much from time to time, being near the confluence of the rivers Ganges and Brahmaputra. Before the year 1839 the 69 drones had been reduced to about 37. The Commissioner of the division made an order, dated 27th April 1838 (apparently in accordance with Reg. II of 1819, ss. 3, 7, 20, and others), to the effect that as part of permanently-settled lands the mauza Sureswar should be released to the parties then entitled to it as properties. After that, further diluvion occurred, and when in 1859, the thakbust survey preliminary to the regular survey was made only 4½ drones, or 652 bighas, of the mauza were left above water. At the survey in 1860, which followed the thakbust, the whole mauza was under water, the residue having entirely disappeared.

In the meantime Act IX of 1847 was passed. Of this, the first section is quoted in their Lordships' judgment; the third enacted that in all districts of Bengal, of which a revenue survey might be completed and approved by the Government, it should be lawful for the latter "to direct from time to time, whenever ten years from the approval of any such survey shall have expired, a new survey of lands on the banks of rivers and on the shores of the sea, in order to ascertain the changes that may have taken place since the date of the last previous survey, and to cause new maps to be made according to such new survey." The fifth section provided for proportionate reductions of revenue where it had appeared from inspection of the new maps that land had been lost by a revenue-paying estate, and the sixth enacted that "whenever, on inspection of any such new map, it shall appear to the local revenue authorities that land has been added to any revenue-paying estate, they shall without delay assess the same according to the rules in force for assessing alluvial increments, [593] and shall report their proceedings forthwith to the Sadar Board of Revenue, whose orders thereupon shall be final." The seventh section empowered the revenue authorities to take possession of islands thrown up in large and navigable rivers coming within the provisions of Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 3, with a proviso that any party aggrieved by the act of the revenue authorities in taking possession of any island should be at liberty to contest it in the Civil Court. The ninth section enacted that, except as regarded the proprietary right to islands, no suit should lie against the Government or any of its officers, on account of anything done in good faith in the exercise of the powers conferred by this Act.

The next survey, termed the Diara survey, made by the Government ten years after the last, under the powers conferred by Act IX of 1847, was for the purpose of ascertaining to what extent the estates bordering on the great rivers had increased or decreased in extent or area. In the interval between 1860 and 1867 there had been a large accretion to Mohun Sureswar, and at this survey 2,000 bighas were measured as newly thrown up. Upon the objection of the proprietors of the mauza about 650 bighas, part of the above, were released to them by the local revenue authorities as re-formed land of their estates, with reference to what had been proved to be the state of the ground in 1859. The proprietors, however, still objected, and claimed that the whole 2,000 bighas should be released to them as forming part of the original estate, and that no part thereof should be assessed as accretion. They accordingly appealed as to the remaining 1,350 bighas. On the 19th April 1881 the Board of Revenue found the facts against them; finding that it was not proved that this land existed at the time of the permanent settlement on its present site, but, on the contrary, that this land had certainly accreted since the survey preceding the last. The Board of Revenue decided upon the appeal of the proprietors, who were now respondents upon this appeal, that they were not entitled to the 1,350 bighas as a re-formation upon the site of their original estate. They rejected the appeal, thereby approving and confirming the assessment of the land as an accretion, within the meaning of Act IX of 1847, by the local revenue authorities.

[594] The present suit was instituted on 10th April 1882, claiming a declaration that what was part of Mohun Sureswar had been wrongly subjected to assessment, and presenting the case that the land had before the diluvion been assessed as part of the zamindari, upon which the revenue had been paid without any abatement, so that the local authorities had no right upon its re-appearance to assess it.

The Government, in their defence, denied that the land was a re-formation on the site of any part of the permanently-settled estate, and alleged that it was an accretion liable as land added to a revenue-paying estate within the provisions of Act IX of 1847, which rendered the assessment final and not questionable in the Civil Courts. The written statement said:—"The disputed land having been assessed by the revenue authorities under the provisions of Act IX of 1847, as being added to an estate paying revenue to Government, no civil suit is maintainable against Government." The issues raised the question of the competence of the Civil Courts, and also whether the land was or was not a re-formation on the site of formerly assessed land.

The Subordinate Judge found that the identification of the land with former parcels was beyond reasonable doubt, and held the Civil Courts to be competent to enquire into the legality of the assessment.

This judgment was reversed by the District Judge, who held that the revenue officer had acted rightly in assessing the land which he found to have been newly formed on the site of old land since the last survey but one. As to the competence of the Civil Courts, he decided in the negative in regard to the provisions of Act IX of 1847 and the decision of the High Court in Dewan Ramjewan Singh v. Collector of Shahabad (1).

The Division Bench of the High Court, to which the plaintiffs appealed, in making their reference to a Full Bench, stated their own opinion to be that the Civil Courts were competent to try whether the revenue authorities had in any case acted within, or exceeded, as they held them to have done in this case, their authority (2). They observed that it had been found as a fact by both the Courts below that the land which formed the subject of suit [596] was a re-formation at one time or other on the site of land which had formerly been within the plaintiff’s estate, as settled at the decennial and permanent settlements. The Judges added that there was no doubt that the plaintiffs had paid the full amount of revenue fixed at the permanent settlement on the sixty-nine drones, never having received any abatement for land diluviated or washed away.

The general effect of the Full Bench judgment (2) was that by the substantive law no land included in a permanently-settled estate was liable to further assessment: on the other hand, any land not so included was liable. Also, that the jurisdiction to decide the question of the liability of lands to assessment was no longer vested in the Collectors as revenue authorities, but in the Civil Courts. Although, in regard to lands of which the liability to be assessed was not in dispute, the assessment, as to the amount of it, was final, when made by the ultimate revenue authorities, the Civil Courts were competent, where the liability to any assessment at all was in question; and it was for them to try whether the liability existed.

The result was that by the decree of the High Court the land in question was held, as part of mauza Mohun Sureswar, comprised within the permanently-settled estate of the plaintiffs, not to be liable to further assessment by the revenue authorities, notwithstanding the order of the Board of Revenue.

Upon this the Government appealed.

Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the appellant. —The question being one of the construction and effect of Act IX of 1847, it was essential to consider the law enacted in the Regulations which preceded it. They referred to Regulations I of 1793, II of 1819, VII of 1822, XI of 1825, and III of 1828. The effect of the coming into operation of Act IX of 1847 in the districts of Bengal was that land such as that now in question, which had been assessed by the highest revenue authorities as land gained by the action of the river, had been finally assessed, and the Civil Courts were not competent to entertain this suit. The land had been reformed in the period between a former and the last Diarna survey, and it had been assessed to the revenue under [396] s. 6 of Act IX of 1847 by means of the machinery provided, the maps showing it to be an excess over what had been measured at the preceding survey. The order of the Board of Revenue of 19th April 1881 was final under the Act. It could not be questioned in a Civil Court, and the land was liable to the assessment imposed. An examination of the revenue law of Bengal showed that there was no absolute right vested in the proprietor of land to complain in the Civil Courts that his land had been wrongly assessed by the revenue authorities, or assessed too highly; the province having been, by the Civil and Revenue Regulations, placed under two distinct systems, for the civil and fiscal administration, under which it was not conceded that there should be an appeal from the revenue to the civil authorities. The resort to the Civil Courts must rest upon such enactment as might be found. The true construction of Act IX of 1847 had been to take it away in such a case as that of the assessment of the accretion to Mohun Sureswar; and though there had been considerable difference of opinion on the subject, the decision followed by the District Judge in this suit was correct.

They referred to—Dewan Ramjewan Singh v. Collector of Shahabad (1); Chunder Sikhaur Bundo padhya v. Obhoy Chunder Bagchi (2); Collector of Moorshedabad v. Roy Dhumput Singh (3); Narain Chunder v. Rules for guidance of the Revenue Department by R. B. Chapman.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent, contended that the exclusive jurisdiction of the revenue authorities, under Act IX of 1847, to decide on what assessment should [597] be fixed, did not empower them to assess land included in a permanently-settled estate. When the fact was in dispute whether land which the revenue officers proposed to assess was included within already settled and revenue-paying land or not, the Civil Courts could alone decide the question. The assessment in this case purported to be under Act IX of 1847, of which s. 5 provided for the proportionate reduction of rent where it appeared that land had been taken from a settled estate by diluvion, and s. 6 provided the mode of assessment where land had been gained by accretion. But this Act, while it suspended the further continuance of Regulations II of 1819 and III of 1828, which established tribunals, and fixed the procedure, for investigations regarding the liability of land gained from rivers, did not substitute any tribunal, or rules of procedure for determining contested questions as to the liability of any alluvial formation to be assessed at all. It did not even enact that persons interested should have an opportunity of objecting to the survey maps as to correctness. No mode of trying title in the Revenue Courts was established by this Act, nor was any appeal provided for. The whole aim of the Act was to provide a new mode of assessing, not revenue-paying land, but land never before assessed, and liable to be newly assessed. It was not designed to impose any new liability to assessment, which remained as fixed by the law before than in force. Its language precluded its application to the accretion to Mohun Sureswar, which was not land "gained" from the river, but land which, having been covered by water, had again re-appeared without change of ownership, as in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (1).

The following cases were also mentioned on both sides in reference to "gained".—Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esof (2); Imambanâi v. Hurbobind Ghose (3); Mani Lall Sahu v. Collector of Sarun (4); Collector of Rajshahye v. Shamasonderee Debea (5).

JUDGMENT.

[598] Their Lordships' judgment, on a subsequent day (November 30th), was delivered by

LORD HERSCHELL.— Two questions arise in this case. They were stated in the reference to the Full Bench by the Divisional Bench of the High Court in the following terms:

1st.—Whether the provisions of Act IX of 1847 are applicable to land re-formed on the site of a permanently-settled estate, the revenue of which estate has been paid without abatement since the permanent settlement.

2nd.—Whether, if these provisions are not so applicable, a Civil Court should, in the exercise of its discretion, make a decree declaring that the proceedings of the revenue authorities in respect of such land are ultra vires.

In their Lordships' opinion the second question which arises should be stated somewhat differently, viz., whether if these provisions are not so applicable, a Civil Court has jurisdiction to review the decision of the Board of Revenue and to declare that the proceedings of the revenue authorities in assessing such land were ultra vires.

The distinction is not material in the present case, but it appears to their Lordships that if the Civil Court has jurisdiction at all that jurisdiction may be invoked as a matter of right, and that it is not a case for the exercise of the Court's discretion. If the party appealing to the civil tribunal can establish that the Court has jurisdiction, and that the Board have acted ultra vires, he is, in their Lordships' opinion entitled as of right to a decree.

Both the questions involved in this case depend upon the construction to be put upon the Act of 1847. The 1st section of that Act enacts "that such parts of the Regulations of the Bengal Code as establish tribunals and prescribe rules of procedure for investigations regarding liability to assessment of lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction, or regarding the right of the Government to the ownership thereof, shall from the date of the passing of this Act cease to have effect within the provinces of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, and that all such investigations pending before the Collectors and Deputy Collectors, in the said provinces at the said date shall be forthwith discontinued, and that no measures shall hereafter be taken" [599] for the assessment of such lands, or for the assertion of the right of the Government to the ownership thereof, except under the provisions of this Act.

The terms of this enactment make it clear that its intention and effect were merely to alter the machinery by which lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion or dereliction were to be assessed, and not to subject to assessment any lands which would not have been liable thereto under the law in force at the time the Act was passed. It is therefore essential to a right interpretation of the enactment to examine carefully the state of the law at that time, and to see what lands were then liable to assessment, and whether the prior legislation throws any light upon the meaning of the words "lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction."

By cl. 3 of Reg. I of 1793, by which the decennial settlement was made permanent, it was declared to the proprietors that they and their successors would be allowed to hold their estates at such assessment for ever.

Regulation II of 1819 defines the right of the Government to the revenue of lands not included within the limits of estates for which a settlement had been made, and provides a machinery for their assessment. Clause 1 renounces all claim on the part of the Government to additional revenue from lands included within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement had been concluded. Clause 3, after declaring and enacting that lands which were not included within the limits of estates for which a settlement had been concluded were to be liable to assessment, provides that the foregoing provisions were to be deemed applicable "to all lands gained by alluvion or dereliction since the period of the settlement, whether from the introcession of the sea, an alteration in the course of rivers, or the gradual accession of soil on their banks." It then provides the mode of investigation in relation to the liability of lands to be assessed. It is not necessary for the present purpose to enter into the details of the machinery provided for; it is enough to say that the Collector is to make a judicial inquiry after full notice to the party interested taking evidence upon oath and examining the documents presented. After the Collector has notified his decision to the party concerned, the Board of Revenue are, upon a day to be fixed by public notice, and after hearing anything which the party may have to urge on his own behalf, to proceed to pass judgment in the case. If the Board of Revenue decide against the assessment, their decision is to be final except on proof of fraud or collusion; but if the Board declare the lands liable to assessment, the party may institute a suit in the Civil Court to try the justness of the demand. It may be further noticed that, by cl. 7 of the Regulation, in cases where land is supposed to be liable to assessment under the provisions of cl. 3, the Collector is to institute a full and particular inquiry into the circumstances and condition of the land in question at the period of the decennial settlement, and, in cases of alluvial land into the period of its formation. The 31st clause appears to their Lordships to be also very important. After providing that nothing in the Regulation should be considered to affect the rights of proprietors of estates for which a permanent settlement had been concluded to the full benefit of waste lands included within the boundaries of the estate which may have been since reduced into cultivation, it proceeds:—"The exclusive advantages resulting from the improvement of all such lands were guaranteed to the proprietors by the conditions of that settlement, and it being left to the Courts of Judicature to decide in all contested cases whether lands assessed under the provisions of this Regulation were included at the period of the decennial settlement within the limit of estates for which a settlement has been concluded in perpetuity, and to reverse the decision of the Revenue authorities in any case in which it shall appear that lands which actually formed at the period in question a component part of such an estate have been unjustly subjected to assessment under the provisions of this Regulation, the zemindars and other proprietors of land will be enabled, by an application to the Court, to obtain immediate redress in any case in which the Revenue authorities shall violate or encroach on the rights secured to them by the permanent settlement."

The next enactment is perhaps even more important. "It is further hereby declared and enacted that all claims by the Revenue authorities on behalf of Government to additional revenue from lands which were, at the period of the decennial settlement, included, [601] within the limits of estates for which a permanent settlement has been concluded, whether on the plea of error or fraud or any pretext whatever, saving of course lands expressly excluded from the operation of the settlement, shall be considered wholly illegal and invalid."

It is only necessary to notice in addition Reg. III of 1828. That Regulation recited that, partly from the number of revenue cases, and partly from the practice of the Courts in treating the appeals made to them as original suits, little or no progress had been made towards the settlement of the matter, and heavy arrears of such cases had accumulated. It accordingly provided for the appointment of Special Commissioners, to whom were entrusted the powers of the Court, all appeals to the ordinary Courts being abrogated in those districts in which such Commissioners had been appointed. So far the Regulations only altered the tribunal; it made no substantive change in the law. And inasmuch as no Special Commissioner now exists having authority in the district in which the lands in question are situate, the provisions relating to these Special Commissioners may be disregarded. The Regulation however modified in some respects the provisions of Regulation II of 1819. It enacted that decisions of the Boards of Revenue declaring the liability to assessment of lands should be carried into immediate execution, notwithstanding that the parties against whom the decisions had passed had sued to contest the decision in one of the established Courts of Justice. It further provided that all suits which might be instituted in the established Courts of Justice, under the provisions of Reg. II of 1819 to contest decisions of the Board of Revenue should be heard and determined in the same manner as regular appeals, and no further pleadings should be required or received than the objections of the appellant to the decision of the Board, and the reply to those objections on the part of the Revenue authorities, and that it should not be competent to the Courts to take further evidence, oral or documentary, unless it should appear that such evidence was tendered by the party adducing it to the Collector or the Board and was then rejected on insufficient grounds, or that such evidence was essential to the ascertainment of some fact material to the issue not fully inquired into in the course of the previous investigation. It will be [602] observed that these modifications of the law of 1819 only affect the procedure in cases of appeal to the ordinary civil tribunals of the country. They do not touch the right of appeal to such tribunals, or alter any of the rights previously assured to the owners of permanently-settled lands.

This review of the legislation prior to 1847 makes it, in their Lordships' opinion, clear that whilst it was intended to bring under assessment lands not included in a permanent settlement whether they were waste or gained by alluvion or dereliction, all such lands as were comprised in permanently-settled estates were to be rigorously excluded from further assessment. And in addition to this, the proprietors of such estates were assured that they could protect themselves against any action of the revenue authorities which would tend to infringe upon their rights by appeal to the Civil Court. Their Lordships think it equally clear that lands within the limits of settled estates which had become covered with water, and afterwards reformed, were not lands "gained from the river or sea by alluvion or dereliction" within the meaning of this legislation, which is confined to lands so gained "since the period of the settlement."

Returning now to the Act of 1847, it appears to their Lordships, as has been already observed, that its purpose was merely to change the mode of assessment in the case of a class of land already liable to be assessed under existing legislation, viz., land gained by alluvion or dereliction, which was not included within the limits of a permanently-settled estate. The terms of the 1st section point to this and nothing more, and the details of the legislation support the same conclusion. It is only to lands "gained" from the sea or river by alluvion or dereliction that the legislation is applicable. Their Lordships have shown from an examination of the previous legislation the construction which must be put upon these words, that they must be limited to lands gained since the period of the settlement. It is only in relation to these lands, therefore, that the previous enactments, are to cease to have effect. The 3rd section empowers the Government of Bengal, in any district in which a survey has been completed and approved by the Government, to direct decennially a new survey of lands on the banks of rivers and on the shores of the sea, in order to ascertain the changes that may have taken place since the last previous survey, and to cause new maps to be made according to such new survey. Section 6 provides that "whenever, on inspection of any such new map, it shall appear to the local revenue authorities that land has been added to any estate paying revenue directly to Government, they shall without delay duly assess the same according to the rules in force for assessing alluvial increments."

Their Lordships cannot think that it was intended by such a provision as this to deal with the case of lands in permanent settlement which had become derelict of the sea or a river. They cannot be said to have been "added" to the estate to which they already belonged. Considering the solemn assurance given by the Government to the owners of permanently-settled estates that they should not be liable to further assessment in respect thereof, their Lordships find it impossible to hold that it was ever intended by this enactment to subject them to an added assessment in respect of land for which they were already assessed because they had had the misfortune to be practically deprived of it for a time by an incursion of the sea or river. And no violence done to the language of the enactment by rejecting a construction which leads to such a conclusion. On the contrary, it would be straining the language unnaturally to include such a case as that with which their Lordships are dealing. If, indeed, such legislation as is contained in the preceding s. 5 had been in force from the outset, so that as soon as land had been washed away from a permanently-settled estate there had been a proportionate reduction of the revenue payable to the Government, it would not have been unreasonable to regard the land when again free from water as land "added" to the estate, and to assess it accordingly. And it may be that when the new map shows that land has been washed away from a settled estate since the previous survey, a proportionate abatement ought to be made under the Act of 1847. Upon this it is unnecessary to pronounce an opinion. It is clear that the Act provides no machinery for making such abatement where the land was covered with water at the time of the original survey. It is only "when on inspection of the new map" it appears that land has been washed away that there is any legislative authority for making an abatement.

[604] Their Lordships arrive then at the conclusion that the first question propounded by the Divisional Bench of the High Court ought to be answered, as all the Judges have answered it, in the negative.

But then it is said that the local Revenue authorities having assessed the land, and the Board of Revenue having made an order confirming their action, such order is, by the very terms of s. 6, made final, and that there is an express provision in s. 9 that no action in any Court of Justice shall lie against the Government or any of its officers on account of anything done in good faith in the exercise of the powers conferred by this Act. Their Lordships cannot conceive that it was intended by these enactments to deprive the owner of a permanently-settled estate of the protection assured to him by the Regulation of 1819. When once the conclusion has been reached that the provisions of the Act of 1847 are inapplicable to the case of re-formed land being part of a settled estate in respect of which the full assessment has continued to be paid, it appears to follow that neither the local Revenue authorities nor the Board of Revenue can effectually render such land liable to assessment. It has been shown that under the previous legislation the owner of such lands was expressly given an appeal to the Civil Court as a protection against any attempt of the revenue authorities to subject him to additional assessment. The provisions contained in cl. 31 of the Regulation of 1819 are in no way repealed or affected by the Act of 1847. The action of the Revenue authorities was, therefore, in their Lordships' opinion, wholly illegal and invalid. Their Lordships cannot hold that the Board of Revenue can, by purporting to exercise a jurisdiction which they did not possess, make their order upon such a matter final, and exempt themselves from the control of the Civil Court. It is argued that where the acts done were within the powers conferred by the Act of 1847, the protection afforded by s. 9 would be unnecessary, and that it must be applicable to acts done in assumed exercise of the powers conferred, but really in excess of them. But full effect can be given to this section without holding that it deprives the owner of a permanently-settled estate of that right of appeal which is given to him in order that he may have determined in a Civil Court "justness of the demand" of the Revenue authorities.

[605] The case, as it appears to their Lordships, may be shortly put thus. The Board of Revenue have, in violation of the right solemnly secured to the owner of a permanently-settled estate, claimed to subject his land to an additional assessment, a claim which has been declared by legislation to be wholly illegal and invalid. Thereupon the owner exercises the right conferred upon him by the Regulation of 1819, and appeals by suit to the Court of Judicature to reverse the decision of the Revenue authorities. In bar of this suit the answer set up is that a subsequent law empowers the Revenue authorities to assess, by new machinery, lands of a description within which the land in question does not fall, and makes the orders of the Board of Revenue thereupon final. Their Lordships are at a loss to see how this can be any answer. If it had been intended to take away from the proprietors of estates the power, by application to the Courts, to obtain immediate redress in any case in which "the Revenue authorities shall violate or encroach on the rights secured to them by the permanent settlement," it would have been done in express terms and not by such enactments as are contained in the Act of 1847. It seems to their Lordships that it would be an erroneous interpretation of that statute to hold that it rendered the Board of Revenue supreme, and enabled them to make valid and effectual a proceeding on their part which the law had declared to be wholly illegal and invalid.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

MOJEY and others (Petitioners) v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS

 v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS (Opposite-party).*
[18th March, 1890.]

Cheating—Cheating by personation—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 415, 419—Registration of false divorce—Bengal Act I of 1876.

To constitute the offence of cheating under s. 415 of the Indian Penal Code the damage or harm caused or likely to be caused to the person deceived in mind, body, reputation, or property must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised, or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom.

Where therefore certain persons were charged under s. 419 of the Indian Penal Code, one with personating another person before a Registrar, and the others with abetting such personation and causing the Registrar to register a divorce under the provisions of Bengal Act I of 1876 with the wife of the personated person, and where the lower courts convicted the accused under that section, holding that as such registrations were voluntary and a source of gain to the Registrar harm was caused to the Registrar in mind and reputation by registering false divorces as well as by losing his fees in the future through persons being less likely to avail themselves of his services, and that therefore an offence under the section had been committed,

Held, that the possibilities contemplated by the lower Courts were too remote; that the facts did not constitute an offence under the section; and that the conviction must therefore be set aside.

These two cases arose out of the conviction of five persons who were tried by the Deputy Magistrate of Rungpore and convicted, under

* Criminal Motions Nos. 79 and 82 of 1890 against the orders passed by A. Mackie Esq., Sessions Judge of Rungpore, dated the 14th of February 1890, affirming the orders, passed by Moulvie Abdul Khalique, Deputy Magistrate of Rungpore, dated the 17th of January 1890.
s. 419 of the Indian Penal Code, of the offence of cheating by personation. There were two separate trials in respect of two separate offences, and in each case there were three accused one of them being charged and convicted in both cases.

In the first case, which gave rise to rule No. 79, one Mojey was charged with the substantive offence, and two persons, named Najebullah and Yar Nashyo were charged with abetment of the offence. The facts found by the Deputy Magistrate to be conclusively proved in the case were that Mojey had personated one Samir before the Marriage Registrar and dishonestly induced him to register a divorce with Samir’s wife under the provisions of Bengal Act I of 1876 and that the other two accused abetted him by identifying him as Samir.

In the case in respect of which rule No. 82 was granted, the accused were Sabya, Shahar and Najebullah, the offence charged being precisely similar to the offence in the other case, namely, falsely personating one Kinu and causing the Registrar to register a divorce with Kinu’s wife.

The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused in both cases, and sentenced the principals in each case, viz., Mojey and Sabya, to rigorous imprisonment for two months under s. 419 of the Indian Penal Code, and the others, as abettors under that section read with s. 114 of the Code, to rigorous imprisonment for one and a half months, Najebullah being convicted and sentenced in both cases.

In each case an appeal was preferred to the Sessions Judge, who however upheld the convictions.

The accused then moved the High Court, and two rules were issued. In both the lower Courts it was contended that no offence had been committed assuming the finding of facts to be correct.

The reasons given by the two lower Courts in support of their finding that the facts constituted an offence under s. 419 of the Penal Code are fully stated in the judgment of the High Court.

At the hearing of the rules, Baboo Umbica Churn Bose appeared for the petitioners in both cases. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the opposite party.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Macpherson, JJ.,) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

In this case the appellant Mojey has been convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Rungpore of an offence under s. 419, Indian Penal Code, and the appellants Yar Nashyo and Najebullah of abetment of that offence.

The first petitioner was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two months, and the other two to rigorous imprisonment for a month and a half each. On appeal to the Sessions Judge the convictions and sentences were upheld.

[608] We granted a rule to show cause why the convictions should not be set aside.

The facts of the case are as follows:—The petitioner Mojey falsely presented to a Registrar appointed under the provisions of Bengal Act I of 1876, “an Act to provide for the voluntary registration of Mohomedan marriages and divorces,” that he was one Samir, and fraudulently caused the Registrar to register a fictitious deed of divorce, whereby Samir purported to divorce his wife. The other petitioners identified Mojey to the Registrar as Samir when they well knew that he was not Samir, and that the deed of divorce which he registered was a fictitious
The Registrar was paid by the petitioners, or one of them, one rupee for registering the deed.

The question we have to decide is whether upon these facts the convictions can be sustained. We are of opinion that they cannot. Section 415, Indian Penal Code, thus defines cheating—"Whoever by deceiving any person fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person or to consent that any person shall retain any property or intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation, or property, is said to "cheat." And s. 416, Indian Penal Code, thus defines cheating by persona tion:—"A person is said to 'cheat by personation' if he cheats by pretending to be some other person, or by knowingly substituting one person for another, or representing that he or any other person is a person other than he or such other person really is."

It is clear that the petitioners deceived, the Registrar, and it is clear that they thereby intentionally induced him to register the fictitious deed of divorce—a thing which he would not have done unless he had been so deceived.

Did this act of registering the fictitious deed cause, or was it likely to cause, damage or harm to the Registrar in body, mind, reputation, or property? We think not.

The Deputy Magistrate says:—"Remembering that these registrations are entirely optional with the parties, it is clear that the desire of the parties to get a marriage or divorce registered or not registered depends principally upon the estimation in which the public and the judicial Courts would hold such registration. If a belief gets ground amongst the people that false marriages and divorces can be registered as well as a true marriage or a divorce, I am certain nobody would consider it worth while to spend any money or take any trouble for such registrations. Now these registrations are actually a source of gain also to the Marriage Registrar. I believe therefore that such false registrations not only do harm the reputation of such a semi-private officer, but also go a great way towards the diminution of the Marriage Registrar's income."

The Sessions Judge says:—"After careful consideration I am of opinion that harm was caused to him (the Registrar, both) in mind and reputation by the false registration. Such registrations are voluntary, and it is easily seen that a Registrar before whom a false divorce has been registered suffers not only in reputation, but also by losing his fees in future through people declining to avail themselves of his office."

The arguments of the Deputy Magistrate and the Sessions Judge were adopted by Mr. Kilby, who urged nothing not contained in the passages quoted. We cannot agree with these arguments. We have to deal with the isolated acts of the petitioners, and to consider whether the registering of the fictitious deed, which was the act done by the Registrar in consequence of the deceit practised by the petitioners, "caused or was likely to cause damage or harm to the Registrar in body, mind, reputation, or property." We think that the "damage or harm" must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised, or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom. The possibilities contemplated in the argument are in our judgment too remote to be in contemplation of the statute. We therefore set aside the conviction of the petitioner Najebullah in this case and in the case No. 82, in which he has been convicted of a similar offence and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a month and a half.

With regard to the other petitioners, the terms of imprisonment have expired, and their pleader does not ask us to interfere with their convictions.

This judgment will govern motion No. 82.

DEGUMBARI DEBI v. AUSHOOTOSH BANERJEE AND OTHERS.*

[13th March, 1890.]

Security for costs—Practice—Suit for money—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 380 (Act VI of 1888), s. 5.

A suit to recover certain specified articles and money alleged to have been wrongfully seized and taken possession of by the defendant or to recover the value thereof is a suit for money within the terms of the second paragraph of s. 380 of the Civil Procedure Code, the term "suit for money" as there used being wider than a suit for debts.

Circumstances under which the Court will order security for costs to be given by a female plaintiff in such a suit.

This was an application on behalf of the defendants for an order directing the plaintiff, within a time to be fixed by the Court, to give security for the payment of all costs incurred or likely to be incurred by the defendants, such security to be to the satisfaction of the Registrar. The application was made under the provisions of s. 380 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended by Act VI of 1888, upon notice to the plaintiff, and was based on an affidavit of Mohendronath Banerjee, one of the defendants, and on the pleadings in the suit and certain proceedings in the goods of Prosunnamoyee Debi, deceased.

The plaintiff instituted the suit on the 4th January 1890, in her individual capacity and also as administratrix of the property and effects of Prosunnamoyee Debi, deceased. In her plaint she stated that Prosunnamoyee died on the 16th April 1889, possessed of considerable property consisting of two Municipal Debentures of the value of Rs. 1,000 each, and of ornaments, utensils, cash and clothes of considerable value which was her own absolute stridhan, and that she, the plaintiff, was her sole heir according to Hindu law; that she used to reside with the deceased, and that the property claimed in the suit was kept by the deceased in an iron safe, the key of which the deceased gave her; that shortly after the death of the deceased the defendants, who were the sons of the brother of the husband of the deceased, forcibly took the [611] key away from her, the plaintiff, and took possession of the property in the safe.

The plaint went on to state that the plaintiff had applied for letters of administration to the estate of the deceased, and that on a citation

* Motion in Original Civil Suit No. 4 of 1890.
being issued the defendants had lodged a caveat, but that such caveat was subsequently withdrawn and letters of administration granted to her on payment of the duty on the Rs. 2,000 worth of Municipal Debentures in her possession, upon her undertaking to pay the duty on the value of the assets she might subsequently recover. She stated that she had demanded the property so seized by the defendants, but they had not complied with her demand, and she annexed to her plaint a list of the property which she sought to recover. The list contained a number of gold and silver ornaments, utensils and clothes of considerable value, the value being given, and also stated that there was cash to the extent of Rs. 3,000 and ten-rupee notes to the extent of Rs. 500 in the iron safe, and the prayer of the plaint in the first place asked for a declaration that the debentures and property in suit were the stridhan of the deceased, and, subject to the payment of the debts, belonged to the plaintiff, and then went on to ask that the defendants might be directed to deliver up the property in suit as specified in the list, or to pay to the plaintiff as administratrix the sum of Rs. 12,318, the value thereof.

In their written statement the defendants denied the allegations of the plaintiff so far as the merits of the case were concerned.

In his affidavit in support of the application, Mohendranath Banerjee inter alia alleges that, in applying for letters of administration, the plaintiff had stated that the property other than the Municipal Debentures of which Prosunnamoyee Debi died possessed was not likely to come into her possession, and that she had been unable to ascertain in whose possession it was, or whether it was still in existence; that the suit was a vexatious one; that the plaintiff was residing with her nephew Koylach Chunder Gangooly in the district of Hooghly, and was wholly dependent on him for her food and clothing, having no means of her own, and that she was not possessed of, or in any way entitled to, any immoveable property in British India or elsewhere.

[612] The plaintiff and Koylach Chunder Gangooly filed a joint affidavit in reply to the defendants, in which the plaintiff denied that the suit was vexatious or that she was without means and dependent on her co-deponent for support, and stated that she was prosecuting a perfectly just claim; and Koylach Chunder Gangooly equally denied the allegation that the plaintiff was dependent on him for her support and maintenance. It was not, however, denied that the plaintiff was not possessed of any immoveable property in British India.

Mr. Bonnerjee, for the defendants, in support of the application.

Mr. T. A. Apchar, for the plaintiffs, contra.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—This is a suit for money within the meaning of the last clause of s. 380 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and although I do not dispute that the Court has a discretion under that clause to make the order or not as it thinks fit, this is a case in which the Court should act under the section. It is quite clear from the plaint and the proceedings on the application for letters of administration (to which he referred at length) that this is a mere speculative suit.

Mr. T. A. Apchar.—This is not a suit for money within the meaning of s. 380, but a suit to recover certain specified articles and a certain specified sum alleged to have been wrongfully and forcibly taken possession of by the defendants, and the section could never have been intended to apply to a suit of this description. The last clause of the section was no doubt added by Act VI of 1888 as in some way to compensate for the amendment of the Code which exempted women from arrest under decree in certain cases. The amendment, however, did not exempt women from arrest in all cases; and it could never have been intended that the last clause of s. 380 was to be applied to cases of this description, as the effect would be in numerous cases to prevent female plaintiffs from prosecuting just claims. This is not a speculative suit, and the proceedings show that the plaintiff is bona fide prosecuting a just claim. The application is therefore not one which the Court should grant, being merely an attempt to stifle the suit.

Mr. Bonnerjee, in reply.

[613] The judgment of the Court (Wilson, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

On this application two questions arise. The first is whether this case falls within the enactment. The enactment in question is the second paragraph of s. 380 of the Procedure Code, which paragraph has been added by a recent enactment, Act VI of 1888, and is as follows:—

"On the application of any defendant in a suit for money in which the plaintiff is a woman, the Court may at any stage of the suit make a like order" (that is an order for security for costs) "if it is satisfied that such plaintiff does not possess any sufficient immovable property within British India independent of the property in suit." The first question, then, is whether this is a suit for money. It is a suit in which the plaintiff claims in the alternative to recover certain gold and silver ornaments, chests, plates, clothing and other things, and Rs. 3,000 in cash and Rs. 500 in notes said to be in one of the chests, or for the value of such things. As to the meaning of the section, I think it clear that a suit for money is wider than a suit for debts. As to Rs. 3,500 of the Rs. 12,318 claimed, the suit is clearly a suit for money. As to the rest we must look at the substance. Suits brought against a person for depriving the plaintiff of goods are in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred met by money damages. I think that this is a suit for money damages, and therefore within the section.

That being so, is it a case in which the order should be made? There is no dispute that the plaintiff has not sufficient immovable property to be security for the defendant's costs, for she has none at all. I should be very sorry to lay down, and I guard myself against laying down, that this section is imperative on the Court, and that the Courts have no discretion but to order security to be given; but having regard to the circumstances of this case, I think I ought to exercise that discretion in favour of making the order. The order will therefore be made accordingly.

Application granted.

[614] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Pigot.

Porshinath Mookerjee and others (Defendants) v. Omerto Nauth Mitter (Plaintiff).* [17th March, 1890.]

In a suit for partition of a joint estate the words "property the subject of a suit" in s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code mean the whole joint estate.

In such a case "the owner" in s. 503 (d) means the whole body of owners to whom the joint estate belongs.

The Court has jurisdiction to place the whole of a joint estate out of which a plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned in the hands of a receiver, and to order that a receiver so appointed shall be at liberty to raise money on the security of the whole of such joint estate.

This was a suit for a declaration that an Indenture (being an agreement to mortgage) dated the 13th May 1886, and executed under the authority of an order dated the 6th May 1886 by Mr. L. P. D. Broughton, the receiver appointed in two pending suits, created a valid charge in favour of the plaintiff over the properties specified in the schedule to the agreement (being the whole of the joint estate in which the defendants were interested), and for an account and sale.

The present defendants were also parties to the above pending suits in which the receiver was appointed, and the agreement was executed by the receiver in his own name and purported to create a charge on the entire property. The agreement was drawn and caused to be executed by the attorney for the plaintiffs in one of the above suits, at whose instance the order of the 6th May 1886 was obtained and who had the carriage of the order.

The defendants admitted that the plaintiff advanced the money, and that it was applied for the purposes for which the Court gave the receiver liberty to raise money, but they contended that the order was made without jurisdiction, that the plaintiff should have made an application in the suit in which the order was made, and that the receiver had no authority to bind the parties in his own name. The decree in the lower Court was in the plaintiff's favour.

[615] The arguments in the lower Court sufficiently appear from the judgment of Mr. Justice Trevelyan, which (so far as is necessary for the purposes of this report) was as follows:—

"Several questions were raised by counsel for the defendants. It was first contended that the order authorising the mortgage was made without jurisdiction, and was therefore void. Mr. Phillips for one of the defendants argued that the Court had no jurisdiction in a partition suit to appoint a receiver, and that it had no jurisdiction to authorise the receiver to deal with the property. I cannot assent to this argument. I do not think there can be any doubt that property sought to be partitioned is the subject of a partition suit; and if that be so, s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code authorises the Court to appoint a receiver. Receivers have frequently been appointed in partition suits in this Court. Where it is necessary for the preservation of the estate it has always, so far as I know, been taken to be law in this Court that the Court may authorise the receiver to charge the property. The Court, if it can appoint a receiver, has ample powers to provide for the management of the property; and if the property is in danger of being lost, the Court has surely power to prevent such loss by raising money on it. The Court can deal with property which is under its control just as completely as the owner of the property can deal with it. How far the Court ought to allow a sale or a pledge of course depends upon the circumstances of each case. I think it is clear that the Court has jurisdiction.

"The next contention which I think I must notice is that this suit does not lie, but that the plaintiff's remedy (if any) is by application in the suits in which the order was made. The fact that the plaintiff may have a remedy in those suits does not exclude his remedy in this suit. I know of no provision of law which takes away his remedy, and no such provision or precedent has been cited to me. It is by no means clear that the present plaintiff could have in the other suits obtained the relief he now seeks. He might have in those suits compelled the drawing up of a formal mortgage, but it may be a question whether he could have therein asserted his remedies under such mortgage.

"The next point was that the receiver could not have bound the parties by an agreement made in his own name. The order of [616] the 18th of March 1886, under which the receiver acted, gave him liberty to raise Rs. 30,000 by mortgage of the joint estate at such rate of interest and upon such terms as he should think fit. He was also given liberty to execute the mortgage and get the same registered on behalf of the parties interested in the joint estate.

"This question can, I think, be answered by reference to the case of Wilkinson v. Gungadhur Sircar (1), which is the leading case in this country on the position of a receiver. Mr. Justice Phear there points out (p. 488) that in his opinion whatever the receiver rightly does with regard to the property under his control he does in the character of agent for the owners of the property. I think that this principle applied just as much with regard to parties to the suit who opposed his appointment or who objected to his receiving particular powers, as it does to the parties at whose instance he is appointed or set in motion. This being so, the ordinary law of principal and agent applies, and the defendants other than Kissoy Molun Roy and Komal Coomary Dabee must be held liable for the acts of their agent."

The plaintiff obtained an ordinary mortgage decree for an account and sale, but no personal decree except as to costs, with liberty to apply for an order for sale of other property the subject-matter of the suit.

Five of the defendants appealed.
Mr. Phillips and Mr. Handley, for the appellants.
Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. T. A. Appear, for the respondent Omerto Nauth Mitter.
Mr. M. Zorab, for the respondent Radha Nath Mookerjee.
Mr. Phillips.—The order of the 6th May 1886 goes beyond what the Court has power to do, and does not bind the shares of the defendants.

(1) 6 B.L.R. 486,
The Court cannot interfere with the enjoyment of the other co-sharers, or place the whole of the joint estate, out of which the plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned, in the hands of a receiver and give the receiver liberty to raise money on the security of the entire estate. If all the co-sharers desire it, a receiver may be appointed in cases of necessity. The plaintiff should have obtained a proper mortgage. The agreement to mortgage was made without our knowledge. We are [617] prepared to pay the money we have received with proper interest, but not compound interest. In this case there was no necessity. The decree gives a power of sale of property other than that included in the agreement, which is clearly wrong.

Mr. Bonnerjee, for the plaintiff-respondent.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Pigot, J.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal by five out of a numerous body of defendants in an action brought to enforce a charge upon certain estates belonging to all the defendants jointly, and which the plaintiff contends was created by a deed dated 13th May 1886, executed by Mr. Broughton in the character of receiver, he having been appointed receiver of all the estates in question by an order of this Court dated 18th March 1886, made in two consolidated suits which were then pending between the various defendants to the present suit, for the partition of such estates, and who had by another order of this Court, dated 6th May 1886, been authorized to raise the sum of Rs. 50,000 on the security of the estates which had been so placed in his hands for the purpose of paying the putni and mourasi rents which had fallen due on 1st May 1886. Neither of the present appellants was seeking partition in either of the two consolidated suits, and the applications upon which the orders in question were made were resisted by them and were made adversely to them notwithstanding such resistance. The [618] facts are not in dispute, and the questions which have been argued before us on this appeal are—(1) whether the Court has jurisdiction to place the whole of a joint estate out of which a plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned in the hands of a receiver; and (2) whether it has any jurisdiction to order that a receiver so appointed shall be at liberty to raise money on the security of the whole of such joint estate. It is clear that if the Court had jurisdiction to make the orders, no question can be raised in this suit as to their correctness, they having been made by a Court of competent jurisdiction in the course of other proceedings, and being now existing orders of such Court.

The first question mainly depends on the meaning to be given to the words "property the subject of a suit" in s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the suit is one for the partition of a joint estate. Mr. Phillips for the appellants has contended that the sole purpose of such a suit being to give the plaintiff possession of a divided share, and for that purpose only to divide the joint property, the only property which is the subject of the suit is the plaintiff's share, whether joint or divided, and that the Court has no jurisdiction to place anything more than that share in the hands of a receiver. For the plaintiff it was contended that the property in suit is the whole joint estate, inasmuch as until it has been partitioned the plaintiff has an interest in every portion of it. I think that the contention of the plaintiff must prevail, as not only is he interested in every portion of the joint property before it is partitioned, but by the partition the title of each of the joint owners is changed, the decree being carried out by mutual conveyance between the joint owners of the interest of the others in the several shares allotted to each. The view appears to be in accordance with the practice of this Court, as it seems that receivers of the entire joint estate have been appointed in partition suits, and is also in accordance with the practice of the Court of Chancery in England acting under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 20, sub-s. 8—see Porter v. Lopes (1), and with the practice of that Court before the passing of that Act (Searle v. Snares (2)), even where there had been not exclusion.

[619] The second question depends on the meaning of s. 503, sub-s. (d). By that sub-section the Court has power to grant to a receiver such powers for the protection, preservation, and improvement of the property as the owner himself has. It is in my opinion clear that when it is decided that the property in suit means the entire joint property, it follows that the words "the owner" at the end of the sub-section must mean the whole body of owners to whom the joint estate belongs; and what we have to decide is, whether a power to raise money on the property itself may be necessary for its own preservation. In considering this question, we must have regard to the conditions under which estates are held in this country, one of which is that they are liable to be sold if the rents and revenue due upon them are not paid; and when that fact is appreciated, it is apparent that the power to take the estate out of the hands of the owners and to place it in the hands of a receiver with power to do what is necessary for its protection must include a power to raise money to pay rent or revenue when it is necessary to do so; as to hold otherwise would be to hold that a receiver appointed to protect the estate could not interfere to prevent its being lost to the parties interested, although his appointment put it out of their power to protect it themselves. For these reasons I think that this suit was properly decreed, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[620] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Pigot.

Suddasook Kootary (Defendant) v. Ram Chunder (Plaintiff).* [17th March, 1390.]

Trust—Parol trust—Trustee—Executor de son tort—Donatio mottis causa—Exceptions to Report—Account—Appeal as to costs—Limitation.

One T. C., in anticipation of death, handed over his property to the defendant, and verbally directed him to pay certain specified debts and to apply the surplus for the necessities and support of his family. Held that a good trust was created at any rate so far as the debts were concerned.

The defendant claimed to have paid to S., the widow of one L., the deceased brother of T. C. and himself, the sum of Rs. 7,273-1 alleged to have been owing by T. C. to L. In a suit by the son of T. C. for an account the Assistant Registrar found (inter alia) in his report that Rs. 1,973 had been paid to S. by the defendant, and that the balance Rs. 5,298-1 had been taken over by the defendant by arrangement with S. (the first payment being time-barred; held that a good trust in favour of S. for the whole debt due to her was created in respect of the monies which reached the defendant’s hands applicable under the terms of the mandate to him for the payment of her claim; that no question arose as to limitation; and that it was unnecessary to consider whether the defendant, if acting as an executor de son tort had power to pay it though barred.

Held also that the trust was not in the nature of a testamentary disposition, though it was created in anticipation of death, and could not after the death of T. C. be recalled by his representatives—Pecham v. Taylor (1) followed.

Query—whether as to the application of the surplus after payment of the specified debts the defendant was in the position of an executor de son tort, and that, practically, it may in some cases be difficult to avoid the application to Hindus of the principles upon which executorship de son tort rests—Jogender Narain Deb Roykut v. Temple (2) referred to.

Semble that even upon the findings of the lower Court the order as to costs would have to be altered materially in favour of the defendant.

[621] The suit was brought by one Ram Chunder by Goomtee Bibee, his mother and next friend, the widow of one Teicum Chand Kootary, a deceased brother of the defendant Suddasook Kootary. The decree in the cause, made on the 18th August 1885, directed an account to be taken of the stock in trade and outstandings and effects of the shop or of the business carried on by Teicum Chand at Puggiaputty in the plaint mentioned, and of the jewels and gold and silver ornaments belonging to the plaintiff or to Goomtee Bibee (his mother) or Rookmai Bibee (his sister) come in to the hands of the defendant subsequent to the death of Teicum Chand.

The report of the Assistant Registrar was excepted to by the plaintiff upon the grounds that the defendant should have been charged with a larger quantity of goods than that admitted to have been received by him, and that he should not have been allowed in account the sum of Rs. 3,755.
the marriage expenses of Rookmai Bibee, the daughter of Teicum Chand. Mr. Justice Trevelyan held upon the first exception that it was for the plaintiff to prove the receipt by the defendant of any portion of the stock in trade other than that admitted by him, which he had failed to do; and upon the second exception the learned Judge held upon the evidence that the defendant was entitled to the marriage expenses of Rookmai Bibee as claimed by him. The plaintiff's exceptions were therefore disallowed.

The defendant also filed exceptions claiming to be allowed Rs. 2,507, the expenses of the shrad of Teicum Chand, which he alleged was, in accordance with the customs of his community, performed at Bikaner. As to this Mr. Justice Trevelyan, differing in opinion from the Assistant Registrar, held that the shrad was performed at the cost of the defendant, and he therefore was entitled to be reimbursed the amount. The defendant further claimed to have paid to one Sara Bibee, the widow of Luchman Kootary, the brother of himself and Teicum Chand, the sum of Rs. 7,273-1, the amount of a debt alleged to have been owing by Teicum Chand to Luchmun. The following are the portions of the judgment of Mr. Justice Trevelyan relating to this claim:

"There is no doubt that this money was either lent by Luchmun to Teicum Chand or deposited by Luchmun with Teicum Chand. A hath chitta was granted for Rs. 8,000 on the 9th of Choit, Sumbut 1931, by Teicum Chand in favour of Luchmun. In the year 1936 four sums aggregating Rs. 350 were paid to Luchmun's widow by Teicum Chand. I think that the Assistant Registrar is right in finding that these sums were paid by Teicum Chand on account of this debt. An entry of their payment appears in his books in his handwriting. Luchmun's widow says that this payment was made on account of the debt; and if there were not this evidence, I think it would be right to assume that these sums were so paid on account of the debt since Teicum Chand's death. The defendant has paid in cash to Luchmun's widow the sum of Rs. 1,975, and by arrangement with her he has taken over the liability for the remainder of the debt.

"Babu Grish Chunder has held that inasmuch as the payments by Teicum Chand were more than three years after the date of the hath chitta the claim is barred ... With a good deal of hesitation I think I must hold that the Assistant Registrar was right in deciding that the debt was barred by limitation and for the reasons given by him. I have been, considering whether, having in view the fact that the debtor and creditor are both dead, it ought to be possible to assume that the payment made by the debtor was within the time of limitation, and that such payment beyond the time within which a loan is barred would show that the money was deposited, or that there had been an acknowledgment or some other mode of taking the case out of the statute.

"I do not see my way to differ from the Assistant Registrar on the question, but, according to the view which I take of this case, it is not necessary for me to decide this question.

"As to the second point (whether the transfer in accordance with the arrangement made by the defendant with Sara Bibee amounted to payment), a portion of the money was no doubt paid. On consideration I think that what was done as to the rest did not amount to payment. I assume that the defendant was in the position of an executor.

"An executor can only charge the estate with money he has paid. By an arrangement of the kind made in this case he may possibly discharge the estate from liability to the creditor, but he does not necessarily charge it with liability to himself. If it were otherwise the result would be that an executor coming to an arrangement of this kind, and subsequently omitting to pay the creditor, or paying him by arrangement a smaller sum than the [623] amount due, would gain a personal advantage; whereas the benefit of any such transaction ought to enure to the estate which he represents. Counsel has not cited any case where an executor has received credit for anything but actual payment in cash. It seems to me that I must hold that the defendant is not entitled to credit for the sum not paid by him. . . I think that the defendant is practically in the same position as an executor, who is undoubtedly permitted to pay a time-barred debt. It seems to me that this principle applies to any person administering an estate. Even if the defendant be an executor de son tort, he is entitled to credit for such payments as might properly have been paid by him if he had been executor. In the result I allow this objection only in respect of the money actually paid, i.e., Rs. 1,975.

The learned Judge in dealing with the costs of the hearing and of the objections ordered the defendant to pay his own costs of the second day's hearing, and directed the plaintiff's next friend to pay the rest of the defendant's costs. The plaintiff's costs of the second day's hearing were ordered to come out of the estate, and the rest of his costs were to be borne by his next friend.

The case came up for further directions as to the costs of the reference and of the suit before Mr. Justice Norris, who (after stating the facts) delivered the following judgment:

"The result was the learned Judge varied the Assistant Registrar's report by allowing the defendant in all Rs. 4,475 out of Rs. 9,973-1, and disallowing his claim as to Rs. 5,298-1—the result being that the Rs. 11,197 brought into Court was increased by Rs. 4,475.

"The matter now comes on before me on further directions, and the question as to who is to pay the costs of the suit and reference has been argued. I have had some difficulty in determining what order I ought to make, as the hearing was not before me. But after consideration I think the right thing to do is to have regard to the facts of the case and to the rules as to costs in suits against persons in the defendant's position (Mr. Justice Trevelyman treated him as an executor); and unless an executor is guilty of fraud or wrong doing he is entitled to have his costs of the suit brought against him paid out of the estate, and I think in [624] this case the defendant is entitled to the general costs of the suit out of the fund in Court. On the other hand, I think the defendant must pay the whole of the costs of the reference which was rendered necessary owing to the position he took up claiming to credit himself with Rs. 9,973-1. He failed as to a moiety of this (Rs. 5,298); and I think he must pay the whole of the costs of the reference. The costs must be taxed on the proper scale, and when taxed set off against one another, the balance to be paid over by the party owing the largest amount. The costs of the next friend must come out of the funds in Court. The costs of argument on further directions to be costs in the reference."

The defendant appealed from the order and decree as to the sum of Rs. 5,298-1 (being the residue of Rs. 7,273-1) disallowed in his accounts, and as to costs. The plaintiff also filed a memorandum of cross objections as to the sum of Rs. 3,755 allowed to the defendant on account of the marriage expenses of Rookmai Bhee, as to the sum of Rs. 2,507 allowed for the _shrad_ expenses of Teicum Chand, and also as to the sum of Rs. 1,975, being portion of the sum of Rs. 7,273-1 allowed as having been paid by the defendant to Sara Bhee, and as to costs.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. T. A. Apoor, for the appellant.
Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Sale, for the respondent.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—The domicile of Teicum Chand was the Native State of Bikaner. The mandate therefore by him to his brother should be construed as a nuncupative will, and Suddasok is an executor of the estate (consisting of moveables only) in British India, and no questions of limitation can arise. Our appeal is as to the sum of Rs. 5,298-1, the liability for which we have taken over in our books by an arrangement with Sara Bhee, and we offer to bring this sum into Court. [This sum was paid into Court in the course of the hearing.] The defendant having been successful as to a large sum upon his objections on the reference, he should upon the merits have been allowed his costs.

Mr. Woodroffe, for the respondent.—There is no finding as to Teicum Chand's domicile, so the contention as to an oral will is inadmissible. As to the sum of Rs. 5,298-1 it has never been paid, and it would be a novel doctrine if an executor, were allowed to take over or compromise a debt due to the estate for his [625] own advantage. But the defendant is not an executor, for there was no will. If this point is disposed of then the appeal is wholly as to costs. But the defendant has failed as to a substantial sum upon his exceptions, and by s. 49 of the Judicature Act of 1873, 36 and 37 Vict., Cap. 66, where costs are in the discretion of the Court below, no appeal would be allowed. _Cotterell v. Stratton_ (1) and the other cases as to trustee's and mortgagee's costs cited in Wilson's _Judicature Acts_, 6th ed., p. 43, are clearly inapplicable to the present case, and the discretion of the lower Court should not be interfered with. As to our cross-appeal the defendant cannot claim protection as, or be in a better position than, an executor _de son tort_. The provisions of the Succession Act relating to executors _de leur tort_ (Act X of 1865, Part XXXII) have not been extended to Hindus, and it is doubtful whether the principles are applicable at all in the case of Hindus—_Joginder Narain Deb Roykut v. Temple_ (2), referred to in Henderson's _Tagore Lectures_ for 1887, p. 362. The position of the defendant was that of a manager. In _Gopal Narain Mozomdar v. Mudoomutty Goopta_ (3), Couch, C. J., states that among Hindus an executor really is not recognised. As to the sum of Rs. 1,975 which has been found to have been paid, this should not have been allowed, as the defendant was not entitled to pay a time-barred debt. The sum of Rs. 3,755 should upon the evidence have been disallowed, and the lower Court has for no sufficient reason allowed Rs. 2,507 for _shrad_ expenses. As to this we say the Assistant Registrar's report should have been confirmed.

Mr. Bonnerjee was heard in reply.

In the course of the reply, upon a suggestion by the Court that the defendant should be treated as a trustee under a parol trust created by Teicum Chand in his lifetime, the Court expressed a wish to hear the respondent upon this point.

Mr. Sale.—If it is argued that there is a parol trust that was clearly made in contemplation of death, being in the nature of a testamentary disposition or donatio mortis causa. But such gifts are unknown to the Hindu law, and the provision in the Succession Act (s. 178) has never been extended to Hindus (Mr. Bonnerjoe's work on the Hindu Wills Act, p. 82 note, was referred to).

JUDGMENT.

[626] The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Pigot, J.) was delivered by Pigot, J.—The principal questions before us are five:—

On the part of the appellant it is contended that he ought to have been allowed, in account with the plaintiff, the sum of Rs. 5,298-1, being the residue of the sum of Rs. 7,273 (after deducting the sum of Rs. 1,975 found to have been actually paid) due by the estate of Teicum Chand to Sara Bibee, the widow of his deceased brother Luchmun Chand, and for which residue of Rs. 5,298-1 he alleged that he had become liable by agreement with her; and he also contends that having succeeded on the reference to the Assistant Registrar, he ought to have been allowed his costs of the reference out of the money in the hands of the receiver, or that, at any rate, he ought not to have been ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs of that reference.

The respondent in his cross objections objects—1st, that the marriage expenses, Rs. 3,755, of Rookmai ought, not to have been allowed; 2nd, that Rs. 2,507 for the shradd of Teicum Chand at Bikaneer was improperly allowed; and 3rd, that the sum of Rs. 1,975 allowed to the defendant as having been actually paid, out of the sum of Rs. 7,273-1, was improperly allowed. These are the principal points.

There are other contentions as to costs which we need not specially mention, and which must follow the result of the main contention before us.

We think that it is clearly proved by the evidence in the case that the transaction deposed to by the defendant, between him and Teicum Chand did substantially take place. It is proved, we think, that Teicum Chand handed over his property, so far as he could do so, to the defendant, with a direction to him to pay the debts which he specified, and to apply the surplus for the necessaries and support of his family. This is the defendant did, and so far as appears from this case, with perfect fidelity, to the best of his judgment. He collected the monies due to the deceased, paid his debts, and conducted the affairs of the family of the deceased, taking, in their domestic matters, the place which naturally fell to him as the surviving brother of Teicum Chand.

[627] We see no reason whatever to doubt that in what he did both with respect to the payment of debts, to the part payment of Sara Bibee, and the settlement with her as to what remained unpaid to her, and with respect to the monies paid by him for the expenses of Teicum Chand's family, he acted in perfect good faith; and that as to the latter, he made the disbursements, both those which have been allowed to him and those which are in part the subject of this appeal, with regard to what it was in his judgment right and proper for him to expend on their behalf. A proof of his good faith in this respect is afforded by the fact that he expended Rs. 3,000 on the marriage expenses of the plaintiff, which sum he did not make any attempt to seek credit for in this suit, but has been content to defray from his own purse.

We have however to determine, not the question of the defendant's good faith, but whether he made, and if so was legally entitled to make, the actual payments challenged in this appeal, and whether he is or is not liable at all events in respect of the Rs. 5,298.1 not actually paid to Sara Bibee.

Now, first, as to the shrad expenses of the deceased and the marriage expenses of Rookmai.—We see no reason to be dissatisfied with the finding that as a matter of fact those expenses were incurred: we agree with the reasons given by Trevelyan, J., for the conclusion to which he came on this matter.

Nor do we think that any case is made out of extravagant or improper expenditure. Taking it as we do that the expenditure deposed to and recorded in Exhibit 9 was honestly recorded, and that this book has not been forged for the purposes of the suit, we have it that the money spent on Teicum's shrad and on Rookmai's marriage was spent or was authorised by the persons most acquainted with the position of the family and the sort of expenditure which that position would properly entail according to the usages of the country, and at the same time interested in not going unreasonably beyond a proper expenditure; for there is no reason to conjecture that at that time there was in any one's mind the least anticipation of an account of these expenses being called for on behalf of the plaintiff or his family, or any notion beyond that of celebrating these two ceremonies in a suitable and proper manner.

[628] If, therefore, the defendant had a legal right to defray out of Teicum Chand's estate expenses of this nature, he is entitled to be allowed these items in his account.

As to the defendant's legal position as custodian or holder of the estate of his brother, three alternative views have been suggested to us.

That as the domicile of Teicum Chand was the Native State of Bikaneer, the mandate by him to his brother should be construed as a nuncupative will, good as to the estate (consisting of moveables only) in British India; and that the defendant was therefore in the fullest sense, an executor to his brother's will.

The case is not before us in such a shape as would allow us to enter on this question. Most probably Teicum's domicile was as suggested; but this has not been found, nor was the question raised, or any evidence directed to it.

Then it is said that any rate he was an executor de son tort, and that the payments made by him were good in that point of view.

A third mode of regarding the dealings of the defendant with the estate is to treat him as a trustee under a parol trust created by Teicum Chand in his lifetime; and we think that (subject to what we shall say further on as to the possible effect of the Probate and Administration Act, which came into force a week before Teicum Chand's death) this contention may be supported. According to the account of the defendant, which we accept, Teicum Chand made over to him the key of his place of business, and requested him to take charge of his goods and outstandings, to pay thereout his debts, specifying them, and to apply the rest of the estate for his family.

In this country especially, a Court must require a transaction of this kind to be very completely proved before holding that a parol trust has been created. But looking both to the evidence and admissions in this case, and to the subsequent acts of the family, to the fact that defendant did pay the debts (by actual payments, save as to part of Sara Bibee's claim), and that as to none of the debts, save Sara's, has any question been raised, we think ourselves in this case justified in holding that, at any rate so far as the debts were concerned, a good trust was created, and that, so far as the [629] intention of Teicum and the defendant was concerned, a good trust also as to the application of the surplus for the benefit of the widow and children.

Regarding the matter in this light, a good trust in favour of Sara Bibee for the whole amount of the debt due to her was created in respect of the monies which reached the defendant's hands applicable under the terms of the mandate to him for payment of her claim. No question therefore arises under the Statute of Limitation; and it is unnecessary for us to consider the questions whether we should be entitled to assume, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that Sara's claim was not time-barred; or whether if it was, the defendant, if acting as an executor de son tort, had power to pay it though barred.

The trust was not one in the nature of a testamentary disposition, though it certainly was created by reason of the anticipation of speedy death, just as the trust to which effect was given in Pechham v. Taylor (1) was so; and at any rate after the death of Teicum Chand, could not be recalled or questioned by his representatives.

The payment therefore of the Rs. 1,975 was a good payment in execution of the trust, while as to the residue, the trust of it in the defendant's hands for Sara Bibee is a good answer to the plaintiff's claim. The defendant now holds that money as a trustee for her. He does not dispute it and, as we understand, has never done so; and indeed produced the money in Court that it might be taken charge of by the Court for her benefit, which of course we have no power to do in this suit.

As to that part of the intended trust which from its nature could not operate until after Teicum Chand's death, i.e., the application of surplus for widow and children, a difficulty might arise in holding it to be operative, inasmuch as this would, or might, be to allow a testamentary effect to be given to a disposition, not a will, not subject to probate duty, and therefore an evasion, however unintentional, of the law; it may be that after the debts specified were paid the defendant was as to the surplus and his management of it in the position of an executor de son tort. No doubt the sections of the Indian Succession Act relating to [630] executors de leur tort are not applicable to Hindus; and s. 265, illustration (b) of that Act, would not expressly apply to the case. The remarks of Phear, J., in Jogendro Narain Deb Roykut v. Temple (2), cited in Mr. Henderson's Tagore Law Lectures for 1887, show that practically it may be difficult to avoid the application of the principle on which executorship de son tort is founded to Hindus in some cases. It is not necessary to deal with the question here, as we are here concerned with the payment of a debt expressly mentioned by Teicum Chand, and with defendant's authority to pay it, whether time-barred or not. But in either case the findings we have affirmed show that the payments were properly made by him in that capacity.

The result is that the defendant succeeds as to the whole sum in dispute upon the exceptions to the report; and completely succeeds upon the account ordered, and the appeal must be allowed and the decree modified accordingly.

As to costs.—The enquiry before the Assistant Registrar was conducted in a highly unfortunate manner on the part of the plaintiff, imprudent to say the least with reference to his interests; and most oppressive to the defendant. The plaintiff is now of age; and he has adopted, as far as he could, the oppressive proceedings conducted in his name, and has pressed for costs as given in the Court below; or rather, for costs on terms even more favourable to him than the order then made; an order which, in respect of costs even upon the findings made in the original Court, we should have felt bound to alter materially in favour of the defendant.

(2) 2 Ind. Jur. N.S. 224.

Not merely was the conduct of the suit after the order for account was made oppressive. The suit itself was instituted without demand made of the defendant either for an account or for anything else.

This was the conduct pursued towards the defendant after he had for many years acted as head of the family with generosity to the plaintiff personally and as custodian of the family funds with perfect fidelity, as appears from the findings of fact. It must not escape attention, too, that had the plaintiff succeeded in this appeal, his success would have chiefly consisted in relieving his [631] estate from payment of a claim undoubtedly just, and which his father admitted just before his death.

The defendant-appellant must have his costs of the suit as against the next friend, or as to all or such portion of them as he may claim thereout, out of the moneys in the hands of the receiver; the plaintiff respondent must bear his own.

ASCA ALI (Judgment-debtor) v. TROILOKYA NATH GHOSE (Decree-holder).* [13th February, 1890.]

A decree was passed on the 6th September 1876, and on the 6th July 1888 an application for execution was made in the terms of s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure which did not contain a list of property as prescribed by s. 237, and the decree-holder did not produce the same till the 11th September 1888. The application having been made and admitted, any further application would be barred after the 6th September 1888.

Held, by the Full Bench, that the application of the 6th July 1888 was one within the meaning of s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Per Prinsep, Pigot and Ghose, Jj.—Held that the application was defective as not complying with the provisions of s. 237; and as it was not amended within due time or under the provisions of s. 245, the decree-holder was barred.

Per Prinsep and Pigot, Jj.—Maegregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar (1) should be overruled.

* Full Bench Reference in appeal from Order No. 212 of 1889 against the order of F. H. Harding, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 22nd April 1889. (1) 14 C. 124.
Per Petheram, C. J.—The application could not be carried out without amendment, and no amendment could be made after the application had been admitted and registered under s. 245. So much of the decision in Macgregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar (1) as decides that an application may be amended after admission and registration should be overruled.

Per O'Kinealy, J.—The original application was defective, and the further application of the 11th September 1888 was barred. An application to execute a decree if admitted, and order for execution made under s. 245, should be dealt with on its merits and decided accordingly.

On the 5th September 1876 the plaintiff obtained against the defendants a decree for the possession of certain lands with mesne profits and on the 6th July 1888 applied for execution of this decree against the property of the judgment-debtors. This application, however, although praying for the attachment of the immoveable property “specified in the list,” did not contain, nor was there annexed thereto, any list of properties whatever. The absence of the list was not reported to the Court by the officer responsible for this, but he did, however, report to the Court that the application was imperfect, in that it did not specify correctly the number and date of the previous application proceedings. On the 13th July the Court directed the application to be amended within a week’s time. On the 18th July an amended application was filed, but again no list of the specific properties which the decree-holder sought to attach was annexed. On this occasion also the officer responsible failed to report the absence of the list, but merely reported that a copy of the decree was required. On the 25th July the Court ordered the decree-holder to file a copy of the decree within a week. On the 10th August the amila reported that execution might proceed, and the Court pressed an order accordingly. On the 11th September 1888 the decree-holder filed a list of immoveable properties. On the 21st September the Court passed an order permitting the authorised agent of the decree-holder to verify the list of property, and subsequently warrants of attachment and sale proclamation were issued. The judgment-debtors then appeared and filed objections to the sale of the attached properties, contending that execution was barred because the application of the 18th July 1888, not having been accompanied by the descriptions required by s. 237 of the Code of Civil Procedure, could not be regarded as having been made in accordance with law. The decree-holder contended that the application for execution should be taken to have been made on the 11th September 1888, when the list of properties sought to be attached was filed. The Court considered that the filing of the list was an amendment of the application of the 18th July, and held that inasmuch as the list had been accepted an amendment of the application of the 18th July had been granted, and disallowed the objection. On appeal to the High Court against the order disallowing the objection of the judgment-debtor, Petheram, C. J., and Tottenham, J., on account of there being conflicting decisions on the point to be decided, referred the question set out below to a Full Bench.

The referring order was as follows:—“The point for decision in this appeal is whether a petition for execution of a decree by sale of the judgment-debtor’s property, drawn up in terms of s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but not containing at foot a description of the property as prescribed by s. 237 is an application within the meaning of s. 230. The decree in this case was passed on the 6th September 1876 and by s. 230 application to execute it having once been made and granted under the Code, any further application would be barred if made after the 6th September 1888. An application was made in the terms of s. 235 on the 6th July 1888, but it was not till the 11th September that the list of property to be attached and put up for sale was produced by the decree-holder. If without this list the application of the 6th July was no application in law, execution is barred; but if, even without it, it was an application within the meaning of s. 230, it is not barred by limitation. The lower Court has held that the application is not barred. Direct authority in support of this view is reported in the case of Macgregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar (1).

(1) 14 C, 124.

"But our attention has been drawn to a recently decided, but as yet unreported, case of this Court, appeal from order No. 58 of 1889 decided on the 19th November 1889, in which a Division Bench has decided a similar question in the opposite way.

"In this conflict of decisions we consider it necessary to refer the question to a Full Bench:—Is an application in terms of s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but not containing at foot a description of the property such as is prescribed by s. 237, an application within the meaning of s. 230?"

[634] Mouli Mahomed Yusuf (with him Baboo Surendro Nath Roy) for the appellant, contended that the application, to fall under s. 235, must comply with the provisions s. 235, clause (j). The two sections must be read together; Sree Nath Gooho v. Yusoo Khan (2). If no such amendment as is alleged had been made, then the application would not have been in order. Section 245 does not make the application a good one, as under that section the Court should have rejected the application or have allowed it to be amended then and there. No such order was made when the application was presented. The lower Court had no power to extend the period of limitation by means of s. 235. In Macgregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar (1) it is decided that some specification of the property to be attached is necessary. I say that s. 245 is imperative; and if the application is not made properly, it shall be rejected. The case of Hurry Churn Bose v. Subaydar Sheik (3) shows that no amendment can be allowed regarding the properties mentioned in a first application for execution. Some limit must be placed on s. 245 as regards the nature, time, and extent of the amendment. A trivial amendment after time possibly might be admitted; but if it is a material amendment affecting the decree-holder's rights, it should not be allowed, that is really what the decision of Hurry Charan Bose v. Subaydar Sheik (3) comes to. The case of Fuzloor Ruhman v. Altaf Hossein (4) is an instance of a trivial amendment. The case of Gowree Sunkur Tribedee v. Arman Ali Chowdhry (5) shows that an application for execution is not a proper one unless it is in accordance with the Code; and Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbadrapa Irsangapa (6), is a similar case.

Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy (with him Baboo Ankil Chunder Sen), for the respondent.—The question referred is distinct from the question whether such an application could be amended under s. 245. A defective application may be admitted under the 3rd clause of s. 245. That section does not include all the cases in which amendments can take place. Section 245 must be read with ss. 53 and, 647 as amended by s. 6 of Act VII [638] of 1888. When the application is once received and is on the file the Court may take it up, even after the period of limitation for the application is passed. Section 245 fixes no time for the Court to take up the application. [PETHERAM, C. J.—Section 245 applies to matters before the petition is filed.] The case of Kaminy Mohun Somoddar v. Gopal (1) shows that the Court is not bound to act at once under s. 245.

The decree-holder should not be made to suffer because the Court failed in its duty to reject the application—Syud Mahommed v. Syed Abedoolah (2); Fuzlour Rukman v. Alif Hossein (3). Defects of this nature do not cause the application not to be one under s. 235—Hurry Charan Bose v. Subaydar Sheikh (4), which agrees with the principle laid down in Syud Mohommed v. Syed Abedoolah (2).

The note to the case of Hurry Charan Bose v. Subaydar Sheikh (4) has been explained in Macgregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar (5).

The opinions of that Court (PETHERAM, C. J., and PRINSEP, PIGOT, O'KINEALY, and GHOSE, JJ.) were as follows:

OPINIONS.

PETHERAM, C. J.—When an application for execution has been made, it is the duty of the Court to satisfy itself whether the requirements of the law have been complied with; and if it is not satisfied that they have been, the Court may at once reject the application, or, if the materials necessary to amend it are before the Court, may allow it to be amended then and there, or the Court may direct that it be amended by the applicant and fix a time within which such amendment shall be made; the penalty for not making an amendment directed by the Court within the time fixed, unless the time has been extended, being that the application must be rejected.

The Court also has the power to admit the application if it is satisfied that the provisions of the law have been sufficiently complied with; but if the Court does in fact admit and register an application for execution, which is so imperfect that it is [636] incapable of execution, because no property is indicated in it which the applicant desires the Court to attach, I am of opinion that the Court has no power to allow it to be amended or added to afterwards. Section 245 gives a power of amendment before admission and registration, and I think by implication excludes any such power afterwards: indeed, it is apparent that no such power is needed in the interests of justice, as if one application is defective, the applicant can at any time within the period of limitation present another in proper form. It follows that my answer to the question referred must be that such an application is an application within the meaning of s. 230, but is one which cannot be carried out without amendment, and that no amendment can be made after the application has been admitted and registered under s. 245.

I think that so much of the decision of the case of Macgregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar (5), as decides that an application may be amended after admission and registration must be overruled.

The result is that the appeal will be allowed with costs.

PRINSEP, J.—The decree in the matter before us bears date 6th September 1876, and therefore ordinarily, its execution would, under s. 230 of the Code, become barred on 6th September 1888.

Application to execute was made on 6th July 1888 in the form prescribed by s. 235, except that in the last column, where the law requires the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required, it was stated that the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, as per list, might be sold. But no list was attached to that application, so that no execution could be taken out thereon. It was informal and imperfect, but still nevertheless it was an application to execute within the terms of s. 230, and so far the question put to us by the Division Bench is, strictly speaking answered. But I am unable to agree with the opinion expressed by that Division Bench, that being such an application execution is not barred by s. 230.

Section 237 provides "whenever an application is made for the attachment of any immoveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor, it shall contain at the foot a description of the property sufficient to identify it, and also a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest therein to the best of the belief of the applicant and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same."

"Every such description and specification shall be verified in manner hereinbefore provided for the verification of plaints."

The application before us does not comply with s. 237.

Section 245 declares that the Court, on receiving an application for the execution of a decree, shall ascertain whether such of the requirements of ss. 235, 236, 237 and 238, as may be applicable to the case have been complied with; and if they have not been complied with, the Court may reject the application or may allow it to be amended then and there, or within a time fixed by the Court. If the application be not so amended, it shall be rejected.

The Court therefore should have either rejected this application or should have allowed it to be amended then and there, or within a time fixed by the Court, and if not so amended the application should have been rejected. It would seem that this defect in the application was not brought to the notice of the Judge, nor was he made aware when execution would become barred. On 11th September 1888, however, after execution had become barred, the decree-holder put in a list of immoveable properties belonging to the debtor, which he wished to have attached. The District Judge has held that although no amendment was ordered by him, and consequently no period was fixed with which it was to be made, the order accepting that list made in oversight of the real state of the matter, must be regarded as allowing that amendment, although at that time execution was barred. I cannot agree in that view of the law. The District Judge was bound to act as provided by s. 245, and inasmuch as he did not allow the application to be amended then and there (that is when it was made) or within a time fixed by him, he had no alternative but to reject that application as informal, and execution became barred by limitation. Having regard to the terms of s. 4 of the Limitation Act, I am of opinion that as that application could not be put in force beyond the term of limitation fixed by s. 230, the District Judge could not, by an order under s. 245, after execution on that application had become barred, revive it by a list of immoveable property against which it was sought to be executed. The terms of the judgment by a Bench formed by myself with Macpherson, J., with which the referring Division Bench expresses dissent, are not quite accurately expressed. We never intended to hold contrary to s. 245, but we were of opinion that the lower Court was correct in refusing to grant a further period for amendment of the informal application, and thought that it should have been summarily rejected in the first instance.

In the case of Macgregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar (1), to which we have been referred, the application to execute did not comply with s. 237, because it did not specify any immoveable property as belonging to the debtor. It was, however, held that this would be sufficient indication of what it was intended to attach, as there could be no mistake when the creditor says, I want to take the whole. With every respect to the learned Judges, I cannot agree in this view of the law. A general application of that kind is informal, or it would never have been provided by the Legislature that a non-compliance with s. 237, by specification of immoveable property to be attached, would subject the application to be summarily rejected, or, at any rate, require an amendment before it could be acted upon. It is only when compliance has been made with s. 237 that the application could be admitted (s. 245), so that attachment could follow.

No reported case goes so far, and indeed the judgment itself states that a contrary opinion was expressed by another Division Bench in Hurry Charan Bose v. Subaydar Sheikh (2).

I am therefore of opinion that the order of the Subordinate Judge should be set aside, and the application to execute rejected as barred by limitation.

Pigot, J.—I agree that the application in question, although it did not contain at foot a description of the property such as is prescribed by s. 237, was an application within the meaning of s. 230.

I also agree with, I believe, all the other members of this Bench in dissenting from the proposition stated by the referring Bench [639] in this reference, viz., that if, even without the list (or description of property prescribed in s. 237), the application was one within the meaning of s. 230, it was not barred.

I think it was an application under s. 230; that it was defective as not complying with s. 237; and that it not having been amended within due time, or under the provisions of s. 245, the decree-holder was barred.

I agree that the case of Macgregor v. Tarini Churn Sircar, (1) was wrongly decided, and that the decision in appeal from order No. 58 of 1889, by Prinsep and Macpherson, JJ., and referred to in the order of reference, was rightly decided.

O'Kinealy, J.—In this case the plaintiffs obtained a decree against the defendants on the 6th September 1876, and under s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is said that an application to execute it would have been barred if made after the 6th September 1888. The judgment-creditor applied for execution on the 6th July 1888. He made his application in the usual form, and in the last paragraph he prayed that certain immoveable properties (as per list) belonging to the judgment-debtor might be sold. As a matter of fact, no list was filed, nor was its absence reported to the District Judge. On the 13th July the Judge directed that the application should be amended on another point, and on the 25th July the Court directed that a further and different defect should be set right. On the 11th September the decree-holder filed a list of the immoveable properties, and the Judge in the Court below who tried this case held that although this list was not ordered by the Court, yet the Court, by accepting it, allowed the application of the 18th July to be amended, and had perfect power to do so, although at that time the decree was barred by limitation.

On the case coming before a Division Bench of this Court, the learned Judges referred to this Bench the following question:—

"Is an application in terms of s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but not containing at foot a description of the property such as is prescribed by s. 230, an application within the meaning of s. 230?"

[640] To this question I think there can be only one answer, and that in the affirmative. Section 235 prescribes the form in which the application should be made. That section gives in detail the particulars that shall be entered in an application for execution, just as the previous sections of the Code described in what manner the application shall be written. Section 237 is a special section prescribing what further particulars are necessary in cases where the application for attachment is made in regard to immoveable property. It requires that the application shall contain at foot a description of the property sufficient to identify it, and also a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest therein to the best of the belief of the applicant and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same.

Every such description and specification must be verified in the manner provided for the verification of plaints.

It is thus clear that every application for the attachment of immoveable property must be made in conformity with the directions contained in ss. 235 and 237 of the Code.

Section 245 enacts that—

"The Court, on receiving an application for the execution of a decree, shall ascertain whether such of the requirements of ss. 235, 236, 237, and 238 as may be applicable to the case have been complied with; and if they have not been complied with, the Court may reject the application or may allow it to be amended then and there, or within a time fixed by the Court. If the application be not so amended, it shall be rejected."

It seems, therefore, difficult to arrive at any other conclusion than that s. 245 treats an application, imperfect by reason that it has not complied with the provisions of s. 237, as an application for execution of decree under s. 230 of the Code, and my opinion, therefore, is that the question referred to the Full Bench must be answered in the affirmative. But at the same time I feel I cannot concur in another conclusion arrived at by the learned Judges who referred this case. In their reference they state—

"If without this list the application of the 6th of July was no application in law, execution is barred; but if, even without it, it was an application within the meaning of s. 230, it is not barred, by that section."

[641] I regret I cannot bring myself to acquiesce in this conclusion. On the contrary, I am of opinion that the application was barred. Under the ordinary procedure of our Courts, an application, if perfect in form, is admitted, and an order is immediately granted to execute the decree; but, where a defective application is made, the Court, on receiving it, is directed to ascertain whether the requirements of the law applicable to the case have been complied with, and, if not, it may either reject it or allow it to be amended. If amended, the application is admitted, and the Court proceeds to order execution of the decree according to the nature of the application. These are the provisions of 245, which is the only section in the Code allowing amendment of an application for execution. And if we compare s. 245 with s. 53, which provides for the amendment of plaints, we can hardly help coming to the conclusion that the Legislature never intended that the Court should allow any amendment of an application to execute a decree after it had been admitted and an order for execution made in the manner prescribed by s. 245, but rather that it intended that the application should be dealt with on the merits. So I take it that if the application is so defective, is of such a nature that no relief can be granted, as it is in the present case, the result is that the application must be dismissed. No doubt in several cases in this Court the decree-holder has been allowed to give in a supplemental list of property to be attached and sold after the application for execution has been made and granted; but, properly speaking, the applications made in regard to such supplementary lists were not applications to amend, but new applications for the execution of the decree made within the time allowed by the law of limitation.

In the present case the original application was so defective that no relief could be obtained under it; and if the views already expressed are correct, it follows that the second and further application of the 11th September was barred and should have been rejected.

Ghose, J.—I also agree in holding that the application in question was an application within the meaning of s. 230 of the Code. But it was defective and incapable of enforcement, because it did not contain, as provided by s. 237, a list of the properties, to be attached and sold. This defect might have been [642] rectified, under the provisions of s. 245, within any time that the Court should have thought proper to allow; but it is now too late to do so.

FULL BENCH.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Pigot, Mr. Justice Macpherson, and Mr. Justice Norris.

THE QUEEN-EMPERESS v. O'HARA.* [10th March, 1890.]

Case in which, upon review, a certificate having been granted by the Advocate General under s. 26 of the Letters Patent a conviction was quashed on the ground of improper reception of evidence and misdirection.

The accused being upon his trial at the Sessions for murder, the two principal witnesses for the prosecution were G. and M., to whom pardons were tendered by the committing Magistrate under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and who had accepted the pardons. The Judge read to the jury statements (which had not been admitted in evidence) by G. and M. purporting to have been taken under s. 364.

Held, that the improper reception of such evidence constituted a decision erroneous in point of law calculated to prejudice the prisoner.

The Judge further charged the jury that they were not to convict upon the evidence of G. if satisfied that he was an accomplice and uncorroborated, but coupled the direction with a strong expression of opinion that G. was not an accomplice.

_Held_, that this constituted a misdirection in fact, though not in form, calculated seriously to prejudice the prisoner's case:

Case certified by the Advocate General under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865.

At the First Criminal Sessions of 1890 Thomas O'Hara and William Bellow were charged (inter alia) under s. 302 of the Penal Code with having committed murder by causing the death of one Sheikh Soleem on the 6th November 1889. The prisoners, at the trial before Mr. Justice Norris and a special jury, pleaded not guilty. The two principal witnesses against the accused were Joseph Goldsborough and John MacDermott, to whom pardons were tendered by the committing Magistrate under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code. These pardons were accepted.

[643] The case for the prosecution was that on the night of the 6th November O'Hara accompanied by Bellew and MacDermott, privates of the Leinster Regiment, and Goldsborough, a private of the Buffs, all stationed at Dum-Dum, left the barracks armed with two rifles and several rounds of Ball cartridge, their object being to shoot wild pigs; that they were all more or less in liquor, and that they attacked more than one of the inoffensive villagers and obtained some toddy, that they broke into a dispensary with the object of getting more toddy, and afterwards proceeded to the house of the deceased, who was asleep at the time, and that he was awakened by these four men and was asked for toddy; that on his failing to give any he was dragged out of his house; that O'Hara led him as they went along, and he and the deceased went, preceded by MacDermott and Bellew, and followed by Goldsborough up to a tank; that at this tank the deceased complained and was shoved into the tank by O'Hara; that he complained when in the tank; and that then O'Hara knelt down, loading a rifle as he did so, and fired at the deceased the fatal shot. The evidence of Goldsborough given at the trial, so far as is necessary for the purposes of this report, appeared from the notes of the learned Judge to be as follows:—"I knew MacDermott for five or six days before the 6th of November. I knew the prisoners O'Hara and Bellew. I did not know O'Hara before his regiment came to Dum-Dum. I remember the night of the 6th November, I had a conversation with the prisoner and MacDermott that day in the canteen after it opened: it opens at 5-30 p.m. We were talking from 5-30 p.m. to 9-15 p.m. We were all drinking. The conversation was that we should go out that night to a pig jungle. I proposed this. We were to go after we had answered to our names to the orderly Serjeant . . . . MacDermott and O'Hara (then says MacDermott and Bellew) were to bring their rifles . . . . Bellew gave the 10 rounds of ammunition. I got outside the barracks at 10-30 p.m. or 10-40 p.m. We four went on the road together. I was down first. MacDermott handed the rifle to O'Hara and Bellew had a rifle. I don't think any of the other men had ammunition except Bellew. My rifle as in the bungalow in its place on the rack. We four started off. We were more or less in beer; we were happy. We went north and west into a
They walked and... into the verandah, that was the man that was shot. The rifles were loaded just after they shoved the native into the tank. O'Hara's rifles was only loaded. O'Hara loaded it himself. We asked him (the native) for toddy... O'Hara pulled him along. MacDermott was in front, Bellew next, O'Hara with the native, and I was last. When we got near to a tank the native started murmuring, and O'Hara shoved him into the tank up to his waist in water, and whilst he was in the water he murmured again. O'Hara dropped on his knee and fired at him. The man appeared to have been hit. He shouted and threw up his hands. At the moment O'Hara fired I was three yards away. Bellew was a half turn facing O'Hara. Bellew was 10 or 15 yards from O'Hara. MacDermott was in front still walking on. No one did anything to prevent the native being shoved into the tank. I asked him (O'Hara) to get up and not to do it; if anything happened there would be a terrible row. He said 'Never mind, there are plenty more of the black bastards.' There was a second shot fired by O'Hara a little distance from the tank, after the native had been fired at... O'Hara's second shot was fired at nothing. We passed round another small tank, then took a southerly direction for a long distance.

This was the only evidence given as to the fact of O'Hara having fired the fatal shot; and the only evidence of his being at the tank with the deceased was that of Goldsborough and MacDermott.

The evidence given by MacDermott, so far as is necessary for this report, was as follows:—"On the 6th November we (after mentioning the four men) arranged an expedition in the canteen... When we started we were all under the influence of drink," and he also (after stating that when they on the road entered two or three houses) said:—"We went further on the road, taking a road [645] to the right and a narrow path to the left and came to another native house. I saw a native standing alongside his bed. The native left the house with us four. I led out first. When I got in the road I found there was no one with me... I did not look back to see if the others were coming. I got to a pond and went past it. I can't say whether we passed another... I came till I got to a road which turned to the right. I heard two shots fired, after which I turned round to look for my comrades... I went towards them up to the tank I noticed. I walked about 15 yards. I found my three comrades. I had not my senses properly at the time. I looked for the native, and saw him standing out in the pond. I asked my comrades whether they gave him a swim? They made no reply; they were laughing. We came away on to the main road again."

Several other witnesses were examined on behalf of the prosecution, whose evidence, however, for the purposes of the report, need not be referred to.

During the trial a statement made by Goldsborough on the 11th December to the Cantonment Magistrate, and purporting to have been taken by the Magistrate under s. 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was at first tendered in evidence, but being objected to, its admission was not pressed by the Crown, and it was not therefore admitted in evidence.
after the reply for the prosecution, and before the charging of the jury, the jury, under the directions of the learned Judge, found Bellew not guilty of the charges made against him.

During the course of the charge of the learned Judge to the jury, his Lordship said:—"Any difficulty that arises in the progress of this case . . . . namely, whether Goldsborough or MacDermott are accomplices or not, does not rest with the prosecution; the Legislature has conferred on certain persons the power of tendering pardons . . . . no information was given till the 11th December, when Goldsborough made a statement to the Cantonment Magistrate at Dum-Dum. I shall read it. It can do no harm. This statement contains nothing other than he has stated here, and a great deal less. On this statement there is no ground—I speak confidently, hardly any ground—for treating the men as accomplices,—no more ground than there would be for treating you or me so, [646] and all our chief difficulty in the case arises from the taint attached to these men which by no manner of means attaches to them."

His Lordship then read the statement, to which reference has been made as to its not having been received in evidence, to the jury, save so much thereof as constituted the heading, namely, "examination of accused persons," and the description of it as being made under s. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This statement ran as follows:—

"Examination of Accused Persons.

The examination of Joseph Goldsborough on the 11th December 1889.

My name is Joseph Goldsborough. I reside at Dum-Dum barracks. I am a private in the C. Company of the Buffs. On the morning of the 7th November I was in company with private Bellew, private O'Hara and private MacDermott of the Leinster Regiment. We went out of barracks of about 10-15 p.m. on the night of the 6th. Two of the Leinsters had rifles, Bellow and MacDermott. We went up past the cemeteries straight up the road. We went to a house and demanded some toddy. The native would not give it. MacDermott hit him a blow. I interfered and would not allow him to strike him. The man took us to another house further up the road, and there we got some toddy, a chitti full; then we went right up the road, crossed some jungle and came to another house. They again demanded toddy, and as the man would not give them toddy they took him about 100 yards or so and shoved him into a ditch and then shot him. Private O'Hara fired the shot. We then went on by a roundabout road till we came into the main road again. We came straight on to the barracks. We got back to barracks about 2 p.m. I went to my bed. I slept in No. 3 C. Company block. When I left them they were standing on the steps of No. 3. Other shots were fired at chittis on trees and at nothing in particular. Bellew told us to keep it quiet and nobody would find it out. We got some toddy from trees on the side of the road off the main road. We were all rather the worse for liquor when we went out. I never mentioned the matter to any one before I made this statement of my own free will.

(Sd.) Joseph Goldsborough.

[647] The above examination was taken in my presence and hearing, and contains a full and true account of the statement made by the accused."

His Lordship then continued:—"Upon that statement Goldsborough was treated as a person tainted and a pardon offered, which he accepted, MacDermott's statement was substantially the same as what he has given in the witness-box to-day. (States effect.) The least that could have been done before these men were put in this position would have been that these depositions should have been laid before the Government Solicitor and the Standing Counsel for advice. Whether or not they were accomplices in actual murder, you will partly have to determine. No doubt they were so in the acts of house trespass, robbery, and violence that preceded. If you are of opinion that they were accomplices in the murder, I must put you in possession of a rule of practice guiding juries in dealing with evidence before them. (Reads R. v. Stubbs, I Dear. C. C., 555.) I adopt that as my own. I tell you there is nothing to prevent you from convicting on their evidence. But I tell you that if I were in your place, and I were satisfied that they were accomplices not corroborated. I should refuse to convict. If both Goldsborough and O'Hara fired at the deceased with a common intent to commit murder, and death was inflicted by one or other of the shots fired, you might under these circumstances find O'Hara guilty of murder. I need not refer in detail to what took place at the toddy-trees; but there is a point which does seem to me most important. The whole of MacDermott's evidence is tinged with a desire to shield his own comrades, and he made adroit attempts to do so. At this place, firing at chattis, MacDermott said he got a rifle from O'Hara and loaded it, and an empty cartridge fell out. This seems to me, if true, to afford, if you believe it, the strongest corroboration of Goldsborough's statement as to the prisoner O'Hara's guilt. Goldsborough at the worst was a participator, and his evidence needs corroboration.

"If MacDermott is an accomplice, his corroboration goes for nothing, and Goldsborough is uncorroborated. Do you believe the evidence of MacDermott? If so, it is abundantly plain that he was not an accomplice. In finding whether he is an accomplice or not, you have to satisfy yourselves whether his evidence is true or false."

[648] A similar statement made by MacDermott before the committing Magistrate was also laid before the jury by the learned Judge. On the evidence before them the jury found O'Hara guilty of the charge of murder, and sentence of death was passed upon him.

Under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865, the Advocate-General then certified the following case:

Case certified by Her Majesty's Advocate-General for Bengal, under s. 26 of the Letters Patent for the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, bearing date the 28th day of February 1890.

"1. Thomas O'Hara and William Bellew were indicted at the First Criminal Sessions, 1890, for in effect—

"Firstly.—That they, on or about the 6th day of November 1889, committed murder by causing the death of one Sheikh Soleem, and thereby committed an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

"Secondly.—That the said William Bellew abetted the said Thomas O'Hara in committing the offence in the first charge mentioned, which offence was committed in consequence of the said abetment, the said William Bellew being present when such offence was committed, and thereby the said William Bellew committed an offence under ss. 114 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

"Thirdly.—That the said Thomas O'Hara and William Bellew, knowing, or having reason to believe, that the offence in the first charge mentioned had been committed, intentionally omitted to give any information respecting that offence, which they, the said Thomas O'Hara and William Bellew, were legally bound to give, and thereby the said Thomas O'Hara and William Bellew committed offences under s. 202 of the Indian Penal Code.

"2. The said Thomas O'Hara and William Bellew, respectively, pleaded not guilty to the several charges in the said indictments, and were tried before the Hon. John Freeman Norris, one of the Judges of this Honourable Court, and a special jury on the 19th, 20th and 21st days of February 1890.

"3. On the 21st of February 1890, after the close of the reply for the prosecution, the said William Bellew was, under the direction of the learned Judge, found not guilty on all the counts, but Thomas O'Hara was, after the charge of the learned Judge to the jury, found guilty on the first count and sentenced to death.

"4. The evidence sufficiently appears for the purpose of this case from the charge of the learned Judge as hereinafter set forth. The first examination of Goldsborough was not put in evidence, and the same purported to have been taken as the examination of an accused person under s. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code, whereas it was not, in fact, [649] taken in conformity with the provisions of that section. The said examination was tendered in evidence on behalf of the prosecution, but it was not admitted.

"5. The two principal witnesses for the prosecution were Joseph Goldsborough and John MacDermott, to whom pardons had been tendered by the committing Magistrate under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the said Joseph Goldsborough and John MacDermott, respectively, accepted such pardons. Goldsborough stated in his deposition that there was another shot fired by O'Hara a little distance from the tank and after the native was fired at, and that that second shot was fired at nothing, and that afterwards they went on to the toddy-trees, which he climbed for toddy, that no shots were fired at this place, and they went on further and turned to the left to other toddy-trees, at which all four fired. MacDermott stated that they fired at the same trees up which he and Goldsborough had climbed.

"6. The learned Judge, in the course of the address of the Counsel for the prisoner to the jury, interrupted him, and said that if it was on the evidence proved that two shots were fired by two men, and both men fired at the deceased with the intent to kill him, he would direct the jury that, though unable to say which shot produced the fatal effect, both were guilty of murder.

"7. The learned Judge, in charging the jury, said that "any difficulty that arises in the progress of this case—I won't deny it is one of great difficulty—namely, whether Goldsborough or MacDermott are accomplices or not, does not rest with the prosecution; the Legislature has conferred on certain persons the power of tendering pardons.* * * No information was given till the 11th of December, when Goldsborough made a statement to the Cantonment Magistrate at Dum-Dum. I shall read it. It can do no harm. This statement contains nothing other than he has stated here, and a great deal less. On this statement there is no ground—I speak confidently, hardly any ground—for treating the men as accomplices,—no more ground than there would be for treating you or me so, and all our chief difficulty in the case arises from the taint attached to these men which by no manner of means attaches to them. (Reads). Upon that statement Goldsborough was treated as a person.
tainted and a pardon offered, which he accepted. MacDermott's statement was substantially the same as what he has given in the witness-box. (States effect.) The least that could have been done before these men were put in this position would have been that these depositions should have been laid before the Government Solicitor and the Standing Counsel for advice. Whether or not they were accomplices in actual murder you will partly have to determine. No doubt they were in the acts of house-trespass, robbery, and violence that preceded. If you are of opinion that they were accomplices in the murder, I must put you in possession of a rule of [650] practice guiding juries in dealing with evidence before them, (Reads from R. v. Stubbs, 1 Deansley, C. C., 555.) I adopt that as my own. I tell you there is nothing to prevent you from convicting on their evidence. But I tell you that if I were in your place, and I were satisfied that they were accomplices not corroborated, I should refuse to convict. * * * I go back to the point. If two shots were fired, it is suggested that Goldsborough fired one of them, but there is no evidence that he did. But if you think you can play with the evidence like you might play at bowls or ducks and drakes and if you think he did, and O'Hara did it too, O'Hara is equally guilty of murder. I need not refer in detail to what took place at the toddy-trees; but there is a point which does seem to me most important. The whole of MacDermott's evidence is tinged with a desire to shield his own comrades, and he made adroit attempts to do so. At this place, firing at chattis, MacDermott said he got a rifle from O'Hara and loaded it, and an empty cartridge fell out. This seems to me, if true, to afford, if you believe it, the strongest corroboration of the prisoner O'Hara's guilt. Goldsborough at the worst was a participant, and his evidence needs corroboration. Is not this corroboration as to man and instrument in his hand, an instrument in a state showing it had been used? * * * You may spring a defence at my time; but it was a surprise to me, and it was an unusual thing that no intimation was given by cross-examination of witnesses. If in bed and seen, I agree that there is an end of the case. Mr. Pugh says O'Hara and Bellew were in bed; but he is in a dilemma as to MacDermott. It was suggested that there might have been a dummy in his bed, but there is absolutely not a shred of evidence of this. Ought it not to have been put to MacDermott—"Was there not a roll call?" "What steps did you take to prevent your absence being detected?" If MacDermott is an accomplice, his corroboration goes for nothing, and Goldsborough is uncorroborated. Do you believe the evidence of MacDermott? If so, it is abundantly plain that he was not an accomplice. In finding whether he is an accomplice or not, you have to satisfy yourselves whether his evidence is true or false.

"The defence was never heard of till it was produced in this Court. Halliday never heard. You would have expected they would at once have said in November if the evidence was available at this time: 'There was a check roll at 12. You are at liberty to disregard the evidence, but if you believe that the check roll-call was carefully taken on that night, you must acquit.'

"8. The learned Judge thereby erroneously decided the following points of law, namely:—

"A.—That it was for the jury to find whether Goldsborough and MacDermott, or either of them, were accomplices in the actual murder, whereas, it was for the Judge to direct the jury whether they were accomplices [651] or not; and if it was for the jury, the learned Judge should have directed the jury as to what was necessary to constitute them accomplices, and that it was not necessary that they should be shown to be liable to be convicted as participators in the actual murder, and the learned Judge was in error not so to have done.

"B.—That there was, upon the first examination of Goldsborough, no more ground for treating Goldsborough and MacDermott as accomplices than there was for treating his Lordship or one of the jury, though, no doubt, Goldsborough and MacDermott were accomplices in the acts of house-trespass, robbery, and violence, which preceded the actual murder, whereas the learned Judge ought not to have referred to the said examination, for that it was not admitted or admissible in evidence, and it showed that both of them were accomplices, and the learned Judge ought to have directed the jury that, as they were accomplices in the acts of house-trespass, robbery, and murder, their evidence should be treated as that of accomplices.

"C.—That even if Goldsborough at the worst was a participator, the evidence of MacDermott that O'Hara handed him the rifle at the tree mentioned in his evidence, and an empty cartridge fell out, afforded the strongest corroboration of Goldsborough's statement as to the prisoner O'Hara's guilt; whereas the learned Judge should have told the jury that, according to Goldsborough's statement, O'Hara had, some time after the murder and before they reached the toddy-trees, up which they climbed, fired a shot at nothing, and that no shot was fired at the trees up which they climbed.

"D.—That on the evidence of MacDermott he was not an accomplice, and it was for the jury to consider only whether they believed his evidence; whereas the learned Judge ought to have told the jury that MacDermott was an accomplice, and that, without corroboration, it would not be safe to believe his evidence.

"E.—That though, if MacDermott was an accomplice, his evidence must go for nothing, and Goldsborough would be uncorroborated, yet it was for the jury to consider whether they believed the evidence of MacDermott; for, if so, he was not an accomplice, wherein the learned Judge fell into a like error as in the preceding point.

"F.—That the jury ought simply to consider whether MacDermott's evidence was true or false, and that the question of his being an accomplice, and of the necessity of other corroboration of Goldsborough, would only arise in case the jury believed the evidence of MacDermott to be false, wherein the learned Judge fell into a like error as in the two preceding points.

"G.—That no taint attached to the evidence of Goldsborough or MacDermott, though they had received and accepted pardons under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code, whereas the learned Judge ought to have told the jury that on this account also their evidence could only be treated as that of accomplices.

[682] "H.—That if two shots were fired by two men, and both men fired at the deceased with the intent to kill him, and it were not proved who fired the shot which produced the fatal effect, both were guilty of murder; whereas the learned Judge ought to have told the jury that the man who fired the fatal shot would alone be guilty of murder.

"I.—That if two shots were fired, and Goldsborough fired one of them and O'Hara fired the other, O'Hara was equally guilty of murder, wherein the learned Judge fell into the like error as in the preceding point.
"I certify that in my judgment the points of law above mentioned, which have been decided by the said Court, should be further considered by the High Court under the provisions of s. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865.

"(Sd.) G. C. Paul, Advocate-General of Bengal.

The 28th February 1890."

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. Pugh), for the prisoner.—The case went to the jury on the evidence of Goldsborough and MacDermott. These persons had accepted pardons under s. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code; they were in the position of accomplices, and if not strictly speaking participes criminis they were in that position, and for the purpose of weighing their evidence they ought to be considered as accomplices; they were certainly persons giving their evidence under a conditional pardon, whether rightly or wrongly granted. If these pardons were wrongly granted it would seem that it was the duty of the Judge to have told the jury that they were not persons to whose evidence no suspicion attached. The learned Judge, however, at one time considered that they were persons who needed the protection of a pardon. As regards Goldsborough being an accomplice, it was quite clear from his own statement that if these men were put on their trial for criminal trespass, hurt, or burglary, Goldsborough was not only an accomplice, but a person responsible in the highest degree. The word "accomplice" is not defined. Under s. 133 of the Evidence Act he is made a competent witness, and a conviction is not to be considered illegal because based on such evidence. Under s. 114 he is presumed to be unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars. Mr. Justice Norris proceeded on the ground that an accomplice was participes criminis. I wish to establish that Goldsborough was an accomplice with reference to the provisions of [663] the Evidence Act and the rules of law prevailing here as in England regarding persons who come forward under pardons. It was the duty of the learned Judge to have told the jury that the man Goldsborough was no accomplice, but what the Judge did say was, that the statements of Goldsborough made before the Cantonment Magistrate was made under s. 364; and on reading it to the jury, he observed that Goldsborough was on more an accomplice than his Lordship or one of the jury were. The learned Judge left it to the jury to say whether these men were accomplices. This was wrong. The jury cannot determine he was participes criminis in the sense that he was a person who could be punished for the crime. The learned Judge was also wrong in stating that the jury were to take into consideration the circumstances under which Goldsborough and MacDermott gave their evidence. As to the position of accomplices, see The King v. Addis (1) and the Queen v. Boyes (2). [P'got, J.].—The different classes of accomplices are pointed out in Plummer's case in Foster's Crown Law, p. 352.] The cases cited show that it is for the Judge to say who was or was not an accomplice; see also Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, p. 154; Roscoe's Criminal Evidence (10th ed.), 132. As to the law in this country, Goldsborough falls under s. 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which is a section dealing with the tender of pardons to accomplices. The case of the Queen v. Mohesh Biswas (3) points out the kind of corroboration which is needed to the evidence of an accomplice, and Reg v. Farler (4) lays down that it must be in a material circumstance. The case of the Queen v. Sadhu Mundul (5) shows that the Judge ought to draw the attention of the jury to the principles relative to the reception of an accomplice's testimony. The Queen v. Chando Chandalee (1) shows that where a witness admits that he is cognizant of the crime as to which he testifies, and takes no means to prevent or disclose it, his evidence is no better than that of an accomplice. Further, an insufficient summing up is an error of law; and no general rule can be laid down as to when a prisoner is prejudiced by a defective summing up, but the Court will usually interfere where the finding [654] of the jury is such that an Appeal Court would set it aside—Reg. v. Fattechand Vastackand (2).

Now what corroboration was there of Goldsborough's evidence? The learned Judge pointed out that the words "there are plenty more black bastards" used by O'Hara to Goldsborough were corroboration, as the witness would not be likely to invent them; and he further directed the jury that the prisoner's guilt was corroborated by the dropping out of the empty cartridge from the gun given to MacDermott by O'Hara. This was clearly a misdirection, as the evidence is that O'Hara fired two shots, the last at nothing. There was a further misdirection, as the attention of the jury was not drawn to certain discrepancies. A Judge should caution a jury not to accept the evidence of an accomplice unless it is corroborated, and his omission to do so is a misdirection—Queen-Empress v. Avunyaga (3), which takes the same view as Queen-Empress v. Bebin Biswas (4). The evidence of the accomplice ought not to have been left to the jury without proper direction and observation from the Judge, see Queen v. Elahi Buksh (5), where all the cases on the subject are collected. There has been no corroboration of Goldsborough's or MacDermott's evidence by the evidence of the other witnesses; and further there has been no corroboration as to some very important matters connected with the details of the crime, e.g., there was no corroboration to show that the deceased died in the tank; or if he was there, as to who took him out and to his cloths being wet or muddy.

I understand his Lordship's charge to have been on this point as follows:—"These persons ought never to have had conditional pardons tendered to them because they were not at that time, and on the statement made, accomplices in the sense which the Judge attached to the words. In order to be accomplices in that sense a person must be particeps criminis, and on these statements they were not so: there was no reason for his Lordship to suppose they were or were not accomplices. 'That,' said his Lordship, 'it will be for you to determine on the evidence which you have before [655] you, and they therefore come before you, in my opinion undeservedly, with a taint on their evidence, which taint is derivable from the fact of their having had, rightly or wrongly, and in my opinion wrongly, tendered to them a conditional pardon and having accepted it. It will be for you, gentlemen, to determine on the evidence whether they are accomplices in the sense in which you are to take from me that they are accomplices, namely, whether they are particeps criminis. I tell you that if you think they are accomplices of that kind, then it is a rule, not indeed of law, but of practice which has all the reverence of law, that there must be corroboration. Corroboration is required of these statements, and corroboration has usually, not invariably, been resorted to by Judges as to the question of personal identity of the prisoners in reference to the occurrence.' His Lordship could even have gone further, and said: 'If you find that they are accomplices in that sense, if you find they are not corroborated as regards identity, then I can only tell you that I advise you to acquit them, as I would do myself.' Then his Lordship went on to say: 'They are accomplices undoubtedly in acts of theft; they are undoubtedly accomplices in robbery and house-breaking by night.' That was the position which the Judge legally took up as regarded the position of accomplices. I say that even under the Law of England an accomplice coming within the rule of the case of R. v. Stubbs (1), is not limited to a person who is \textit{particeps criminis}, but that rule deals with all persons who are involved in the circumstances in and out of which the crime has arisen, and particularly applies to all persons who give their evidence under a promise of pardon. I further say that if the learned Judge was right in his interpretation of the word "accomplice," he was wrong in saying that they were not accomplices even in the other sense. According to Goldsborough's evidence he was present; and in accordance with the case of \textit{The Queen v. Coney} (2), if a person was present at a murder and saw the whole event till completed, and then said nothing to his confederates, that would be evidence that he was aiding and abetting in the commission of the crime. But here, in this country, we have to deal with an accomplice as understood by the Evidence Act, [656] s. 114. There was a further misdirection in not calling the attention of the jury to the discrepancies between the statements made by Goldsborough, in his statement to the Magistrate and his evidence given in the Sessions Court. [\textit{Petheram, C. J.}.—What is your reading of s. 114 of the Evidence Act? And what is the effect if a Judge deliberately omits to leave the matter of this section to the jury?] I think the Court there means the Judge, and that if a Judge does not exercise his judicial discretion, then the verdict must be set aside. [\textit{Petheram, C. J.}.—Then I suppose s. 114 means that the presumption must be made in the absence of evidence to the contrary.] The Judge was further wrong in putting before the jury a document which was not admitted in evidence, on the ground that it could do no harm; and was further wrong in saying that the finding of the empty cartridge in the rifle handed to MacDermott by O'Hara was corroboration of Goldsborough's statement as to O'Hara's guilt. The only evidence of O'Hara being on the spot and firing is that of Goldsborough, although MacDermott says he was there; one person alone speaks to the fact of O'Hara firing the shot, but two speak of his being present.

Applying the principle of the \textit{Queen v. Gorachand Gope} (3), it is clear that Goldsborough was acting in accordance with the common object. As to the course open to the Court, s. 26 of the Letters Patent lays down the powers of the Court. As to these powers, see the case of \textit{The Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose} (4). In Elahi Buksh's case (5), the law permitted a new trial. I contend that "such judgment and sentence which to the Court should seem right," is the judgment and sentence which would have followed from a correct summing up in the Court below. In \textit{Gogan Chunder Ghose v. Empress} (6), the sentence and verdict were set aside; and in \textit{Hurribole Chunder's case} (4), the Court looked into the evidence, and Garth, C. J., says that the Court can either quash or confirm the sentence. For a definition of "sentence," see Wharton's Law Lexicon.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips, with him Mr. Handley, for the Crown.—The High Court under the Letters Patent of 1865 had [657] preserved to it the powers of the Supreme Court, and those powers included many powers belonging to the Court of Queen's Bench in England. Clause 25 of the Charter enacts that there shall be no appeal in Criminal cases: therefore this case cannot be dealt with on appeal. It is in the discretion of the Court to reserve points of law, but there is no power in the Court to decide them under that clause. Clause 26 refers to decisions of points of law, and gives power to the High Court to review the case and to finally determine such points of law and to alter the sentence, and to pass such judgment and sentence as shall seen right. There must be a point of law, and that point must have been decided; then this Court may correct the decision and deal with the sentence. If the sentence cannot be dealt with, then there is no jurisdiction in the High Court to hear the case or for the Advocate-General to certify. Nothing can be done but to alter the sentence and pass such sentence as the Court below could have passed had it decided correctly the point of law. This Court may (but I do not admit it can) quash the sentence. There is in this case no point of law in any view of the case. No point of law has been decided, and decided erroneously. The sentence is perfectly legal:

First, as to whether there is any point of law:—It is no rule of law that the witness's evidence is to be considered as to how far a man is mixed up with the crime; that is a question of fact. The case of R. v. Stubbs (1) is authority for this. The point put forward as a point of law is whether a man is an accomplice who has not participated in the crime. There is no law which compels the jury not to convict without corroboration, for the Evidence Act says there need be no corroboration. Secondly, there was no decision. What a Judge may say inadvertently in his charge and which is afterwards looked into and said to contain a point of law, is no decision. No notice is taken of what the Judge may have said till after the case is over. It is not necessary for me to say that nothing that a Judge says in a charge is not a decision; but under cl. 26 the matter must be a matter raised and decided consciously and not inadvertently.

I deny that in my opening I led the other side to believe that these men were accomplices; and even if I did, it did not prevent [658] the other side from arguing whatever they chose. I then in summing up put the case to the jury that these men were not accomplices if their story was to be believed. Even if it were not so, the other side had the opportunity to draw the attention of the Judge to the matter. The counsel for the prisoner cannot have understood that a point of law was decided wrongly by the Judge, as he made no objection.

The case of R. v. Stubbs (1) lays down that an accomplice must be a person implicated in the guilt: he must be liable to be punished. There is no point of law, and no point of law has been decided. But even assuming there to have been a point of law decided, this Court has no jurisdiction. I presume the point of law said to have been decided is that Goldsborough and MacDermott were accomplices. If so, then the next step for the Court below to have taken was to consider its discretion to use the presumption under s. 114 of the Evidence Act. As to

(1) 1 Dear. C. C. 555 (558), per Willes, J.
illustration (c) to that section, it is explained subsequently in the Act; the Negotiable Instruments’ Act supplies that presumption; besides the presumption in favour of official acts is not so strong as the presumption of judicial acts. PETHERAM, C. J.—Did not the Judge tell the jury that he considered the men not to be accomplices if what the witnesses said was true, and is not that in fact telling the jury that s. 114 did not apply?] That amounts to saying that this illustration (b) only applies to accomplices, and that is quite correct. It is a question of fact whether a man is an accomplice or not. There are two further remarks as to illustration (b) showing that every accomplice is not unworthy of credit. When he admits that he was a participator in the crime, he may not be always unworthy of credit: the character of the man must be looked into, and that is a matter of fact Illustration (b) intends to suggest that the Judge would be right in saying that the accomplices were not unworthy of credit unless corroborated from the outside. The conclusion which the Judge comes to on the facts arising under s. 114 is a conclusion of fact. The next step is not, as a matter of course, to conclude that the accomplice is unworthy of credit. The accomplice contemplated in s. 114 is one who shares in the guilt of the crime. It is not for a Judge, [689] because he finds a man implicated in a crime, to say that as a matter of law he is unworthy of credit. The presumptions are presumptions of fact arising out of the particular case, and they are for the jury and not for the Judge,—there is no use in the Judge making the presumption, except for the provisional purposes of advising the jury. Whatever view of an accomplice is taken, whether he is one or not, is a question of fact.

The next step for the Court below is to direct the jury correctly. When this Court has corrected the Judge’s error, if there is one, there is no jury to receive the correction. What this Court has to do is to correct the sentence, and that means the sentence pronounced upon the prisoner. The sentence on the verdict is a legal sentence, and without altering the verdict the sentence cannot be altered. This Court must find that there has been a wrong sentence pronounced. The Court cannot enter a verdict of acquittal. If the verdict of the jury is still a verdict of the jury, and if they were in law competent to pronounce that verdict, this Court has no power to deal with it. Further, a misdirection of law by a Judge does not render a jury incompetent in law to give a verdict. There is no case in England laying down that an omission to charge the jury as to a point of law is a misdirection. The cases cited under the appellate sections of the Code by the other side have no application. Then as to the case of Reg. v. Naoroji Dadabhai (1), Green, J., distinguishes between judgment and sentence, and speaks of them separately, not as is done by the Chief Justice in Hurribole’s case (2), where the words were dealt with generally. This case supports what I have contended for, except that it says that the Court may quash the conviction, which I do not admit—Empress v. Pitamber Jina (3), In Hurribole’s case (2), the point I am contending for was raised but not decided. The only decision come to there was that the Judge did not wrongly decide the case. There is no ground for thinking that the case can be retried or revised. It can only be so revised or retried on discovery of an error in a decision of a point of law. As to new trials in cases of murder, the Privy Council have held that there can be none—Attorney-General v. Bertam (4). The view taken by the other (660) side that there are two classes of accomplices is based on R. v. Adais (1) and R. v. Boyes (2), but there was no proposition of law in either of those cases. The first case does not tell us what constitutes an accomplice. As to the effect of the illustrations attached to the Acts of the Legislature, see Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chung Barooie (3) and Nanak Ram v. Mehim Lal (4). The question whether the evidence of an accomplice is credible is for the jury, and there would be no illegality if the Judge merely touched upon the matter and did not go thoroughly into it — R. v. Atwood (5). As to directing the jury and the effect of s. 114 of the Evidence Act, see The Queen v. Jaffir Ali (6). R. v. Stubbs (7) shows that the Judge has a discretion in charging on evidence of accomplices. In R. v. Mullins (8), Maude, J., gives the difference between spies and accomplices, and states that the whole matter is for the jury. There was here no direction as to whether these men were accomplices, but the mere expression of opinion of the Judge on the point leaving it to the jury to decide it. Further, I say, if corroboration needed, there was corroboration in that Adjoodhia identified three of the men and called the fourth a boy, and said that O'Hara carried a rifle. Jodha Pasisi also corroborates this, and the widow refers to four soldiers. The fact of the cartridge falling out of the rifle handed over by O'Hara to MacDermott corroborates the fact that MacDermott is not an accomplice.

Mr. Wondroffe was heard in reply.

Petheram, C. J., intimated that the Court would deliver a judgment upon the law points. After this, if it was necessary, their Lordships would hear counsel on both sides upon the facts, and then decide the case themselves.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by:—

Petheram, C. J.—Thomas O'Hara, a private in the Leinster Regiment, having in the February Sessions been convicted by a special jury of the murder of Sheikh Soleem on the 7th November, was sentenced to death by Mr. Justice Norris and we are now called upon to determine certain points of law arising from the [661] summing up of the learned Judge to the jury, which have been set out in the certificate of the Advocate-General under s. 26 of the Letters Patent of 1865.

That section is as follows:—

"And we do further ordain that on such point or points of law being so reserved as aforesaid, or on its being certified by the said Advocate-General that, in his judgment, there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law decided by the Court of Original Criminal Jurisdiction, or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the said Court should be further considered, said High Court shall have full power and authority to review the case, or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such point or points of law, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of Original Jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment and sentence as to the said High Court shall seem right."

The following is the certificate given by the Advocate General:—

(1) 6 C. & P. 388.  (2) 1 B. & S. 312.  (3) 7 C 132 (135).
(4) 1 A: 487 (495).  (5) 2 Leach. 521.  (6) 19 W. R. Cr. 57 (61).
(7) 1 Dear. C. C. 555.  (8) 3 Cox. Cr. Cas. 526.
In order to make intelligible the arguments addressed to us, and our opinion on the points raised in the Advocate-General's certificate, it is necessary to set out briefly the case for the Crown as stated by the prosecution; but for reasons which will appear, it must be understood that we express no opinion as to the truth or falsehood of any of the statements made in evidence.

The witnesses who have been called for the prosecution have stated that on the night of the 6th November the prisoner O'Hara, accompanied by Bellew and MacDermott, privates of the Leinster Regiment, and Goldsborough alias Taylor, private of the Buffs, or East Kent Regiment, all stationed at Dum-Dum, left the barracks armed with two rifles and several rounds of ball cartridge, their object being to shoot wild pigs; that they were all more or less in liquor; that they attacked more than one of the inoffensive villagers and obtained some toddy; that they broke into a dispensary with the same object, and that they afterwards proceeded to the house of the deceased. It is further stated that at the time of their arrival deceased was asleep; that he was awakened by the four men and asked for toddy; that on his failing to give any he was dragged out of his house, taken along a short distance, and then pushed into a tank and shot, and that he died in his house that night from the effects of the wound. It is also stated that, [662] the four men then went on, and eventually returned to barracks at Dum-Dum some time towards early morning.

We have set out the certificate of the Advocate-General. It is of course, so far as the statements in it purport to narrate what took place at the trial, to be read as those statements were preceded by the recital "whereas it has been represented to me that." We mention this, as some of the statements contained in the certificate do not, in the opinion of the learned Judge, appear to him quite accurate. There is, however, no difficulty as to what occurred at the trial, the learned Judge who presided at it being a member of the present Bench.

The statement in paragraph 7 of the certificate (down to the words, "I should refuse to convict") as to the manner in which the learned Judge in his charge dealt with the question whether or no the evidence of the witness Goldsborough and that of the witness MacDermott was to be treated as the evidence of an accomplice, and if so, how that evidence should be regarded by the jury, is substantially correct.

The statement in the same paragraph, to the effect that the learned Judge advised the jury that, at the place where after the party had left the tank MacDermott said he got a rifle from the prisoner O'Hara and loaded it, an empty cartridge fell out, and that this was corroboration of Goldsborough's evidence, if his evidence needed corroboration, is substantially correct.

It is not correct that the learned Judge told the jury, as stated in the 7th paragraph, that if two shots were fired and Goldsborough fired one of them, and O'Hara fired too. O'Hara was equally guilty of murder. The learned Judge told the jury that if both Goldsborough and O'Hara fired at the deceased, with a common intent to commit murder, and death was inflicted by one or other of the shots fired, they might under those circumstances find O'Hara guilty of murder.

The statement said to have been made by Goldsborough on the 11th December, and referred to in the 4th paragraph of the certificate, was tendered, was objected to, and was not put in evidence in the case. It was, as stated in the 7th paragraph, read to the jury by the learned Judge in the course of his charge, save that part of it which constitutes the heading of it, namely, [663] "statement of an accused person," and the description of it as being made under s. 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code. A statement made by MacDermott before the committing Magistrate, not put in evidence, was also, in effect, laid before the jury by the learned Judge in his charge.

A circumstance which constituted a part of the trial, and which, though not referred to in the certificate, must, in our judgment, be regarded, was stated to us by the prisoner's counsel, in the opening of his argument before us, and was confirmed by the learned Judge. It is, that each of the witnesses Goldsborough and MacDermott was warned by the learned Judge when under examination that the conditional pardon granted to him was subject to revocation by the learned Judge should the evidence given be such as to make it his duty to revoke such conditional pardon.

On behalf of the prisoner it was contended in the argument before us, that upon the several points set out in the certificate the learned Judge had erroneously decided points of law within the meaning of cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, in the manner therein set forth, and which we need not recapitulate.

For the prosecution it was contended that no point of law arose in the case in respect of the matters referred to in the certificate, and that no point of law had been decided. It was contended that the rule requiring a Judge to advise a jury not to convict upon the evidence of an accomplice unless he be corroborated upon material points is a rule of practice and not a rule of law, as decided in (amongst other cases) R. v. Stubbs (1); that it was for the jury to determine whether a particular witness was or was not an accomplice, and to draw such presumption, if any, against his evidence as it might be exposed to; that the Judge has no right to lay down, as a matter of law, that a witness is unworthy of credit; that if the jury think right, they are entitled to find upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice; that in the rule of practice relied on, accomplice means a particeps criminis; and that in the present case neither Goldsborough nor MacDermott was an accomplice, but that even if one or both were accomplices, there was ample corroboration of their evidence. We do not attempt to state exhaustively all the arguments offered by the [664] learned counsel for the prosecution, but these were the main arguments relied upon by him in this part of the case.

Before dealing with the points of law which arise before us, we must refer shortly to part of the evidence in the case. We shall do so, for obvious reasons, no more than may seem to us absolutely necessary for the decision of such points of law as we must decide in this proceeding.

The case for the prosecution is that the four soliders—we mention them in the order in which they are said to have gone towards the tank—MacDermott, Bellew, O'Hara, and Goldsborough—went from the house of the deceased to the tank, taking the deceased with them; that O'Hara held him as they went along; and he and deceased so went, proceeded by MacDermott and Bellew, and followed by Goldsborough, up to the tank; that there the deceased complained, was shoved into the tank by O'Hara, that he complained when in the tank, and that then O'Hara knelt down, loading as he did so, and fired the fatal shot.

The case against the prisoner therefore involves two principal facts—1st, that he was at the tank with the deceased; 2nd, that he fired the shot which killed the deceased. As to the first, MacDermott and Goldsborough depose to it; the second is deposed to by Goldsborough alone. There is no evidence but theirs that O'Hara was ever at the tank at all.

If both of these witnesses are accomplices, the rule which is commonly said to require corroboration of accomplices' testimony, would apply with reference, not merely to O'Hara's having actually committed the murder, but with reference to his having been at the place where it was committed.
If MacDermott be not an accomplice, there is evidence in the case, not needing corroboration, which brings O'Hara to the place of the murder.
Of course, if Goldsborough be not an accomplice, no question under the rule as to accomplice's evidence arises.

We shall proceed to deal with the point as to Goldsborough. Now, upon the case for the prosecution, chiefly contained in his own evidence, these facts appear. He was one of a party of four persons who went out armed at night; broke into a house, from which they took some property; used, at other houses, violence, or used menaces of violence by act or word, to persons found there, [666] and who, all four of them, carried off the deceased at dead of night from his house and took him to the tank.
While there he was shoved into the tank by O'Hara, Goldsborough being close by, and though not aiding and only so far as his presence might tend to intimidate the deceased from making resistance, not interfering to prevent the deceased from being so treated, Goldsborough being one of the persons who had brought the deceased to the spot. O'Hara then, according to Goldsborough's evidence, loads and aims at deceased within three yards of Goldsborough, and fires the fatal shot which Goldsborough sees take effect. After it is fired, MacDermott returns, finds the deceased in the water, and Goldsborough standing there, the other two men being sitting or lying. He finds them laughing. They then all four go away, and pursue their marauding expedition elsewhere.

We think that these facts are such as would form sufficient grounds for putting Goldsborough on his trial upon a charge of abetting the murder; and this notwithstanding the remonstrance which, according to his evidence, he offered to O'Hara just before the shot was fired.

From this point of view, and having regard to the fact that he had received a pardon under s. 337, and gave his evidence under that section, Goldsborough was, we think, an accomplice within the meaning of the rule under the law existing in India. Goldsborough being an accomplice, it was the duty of the learned Judge to follow the ordinary rule and advise the jury not to act on his evidence without corroboration in a material part of it, applying in the prisoner's favour s. 114 of the Evidence Act and illustration (b) of that section,—"that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars."

It is true that if, notwithstanding such advise, the jury had found the prisoner guilty on the accomplice's evidence, the conviction would not have been illegal merely because they had so done—(s. 133, Evidence Act).

It may be that an omission by the Judge to advise the jury according to the rule, however dangerous such a failure of duty on his part might be, would not nevertheless be ground for interfering with a conviction, but it did not become necessary to decide it in a proceeding under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. This question [666] was referred to in the case of Pestroji Dinska (1). Having regard to the course of decisions in this Court (although no doubt those decisions were, as pointed out in the

(1) 10 B.H.C. 75.
Bombay case referred to, come to in appeals from the mofussil), we are not prepared to say that this Court might not feel bound, even on the ground of such an omission alone, to review the case under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. The difficult question, however, need not be decided in the present case.

We have in this case to consider the nature of the learned Judge’s charge from another point of view, namely, the effect of the strong expression of opinion which fell from him that Goldsborough was not an accomplice. In the part of his charge to which we refer, summarized in paragraph 7 of the certificate, he spoke of Goldsborough and MacDermott together. We have for the present to deal with those observations with reference to Goldsborough’s position only, and must separate the reference to the one from that to the other for the purpose of expressing our meaning.

In this observation the jury were advised not to convict on the evidence of Goldsborough, if satisfied that he was an accomplice and uncorroborated. But in truth, the effect of that advice was, having regard to what accompanied or preceded it, practically nothing, because it was coupled with a strong expression of opinion, couched in terms of the most persuasive force, that he was not one: indeed, the result, though not the actual purport of the learned Judge’s words on this matter was, that the notion of his being an accomplice was utterly idle and preposterous. He said that Goldsborough was no more an accomplice than he, the Judge, or they, the jury, were.

The substantial effect of this was, that (although if an accomplice, Goldsborough’s evidence should not be acted on without corroboration), inasmuch as Goldsborough was not an accomplice, his evidence ought to be given as much weight to as that of a perfectly independent and unprejudiced witness. It was not an omission only, but an affirmation. It constituted, in our opinion, a misdirection, in fact, though not in form.

We shall refer presently to the effect of this misdirection, as we consider it to have been. We must here refer to the use of [667] statements of Goldsborough and of MacDermott in this part of the charge. These statements could not, we think, be laid before the jury; they had already, or one of them had, been tendered, objected to, and not put in. We think that to lay before the jury these statements, not admitted nor admissible in evidence, was in itself a decision erroneous in point of law, and calculated to prejudice the prisoner on his trial.

As to the misdirection with respect to Goldsborough, we think it was of a nature to prejudice most seriously the prisoner at the bar. The prisoner was entitled, on his trial, to the benefit of the presumption set out in the 114th section of the Evidence Act, and the effect of this misdirection was to exclude him from the benefit of that section.

Had the jury not been told that, in the opinion of the Judge, Goldsborough was not an accomplice, it may well be that, having heard his evidence as that of a person who had been in that character given a conditional pardon under s. 377, and who had been twice warned in their hearing that the pardon was subject to revocation, they might, as asked to do by the counsel for the prisoner, have so treated him in their own consideration of the case, and required corroborative evidence, satisfying to themselves, of some of the material particulars of his evidence. It may be that they would have found such corroboration in the evidence of MacDermott: but MacDermott (whether an accomplice within the meaning of s. 114, or not, a question we need not here determine) came before the jury with the stigma of having received a pardon under s. 337 of the Procedure Code, and he also had been twice warned in their presence by the learned Judge. It may perfectly well be also that they would have disbelieved that witness's testimony, or treated its truth as so uncertain as not to constitute satisfactory corroboration. It may even be that had the jury not heard from the Judge the opinion expressed by him, they would not have acted upon Goldsborough's evidence, whether corroborated or not.

In the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to deal with the argument for the prosecution as to the powers of the Court acting under s. 26 of the Charter. We take it to be clear that in a case of misdirection such as this, and of improper reception of evidence such as took place in the present case, this Court may and ought to exercise its powers of review.

Norris, J.—I do not think that I ought to rest satisfied with silently acquiescing in the judgment which has just been delivered. A careful consideration of the arguments addressed to us has satisfied me that I ought to have told the jury that Goldsborough was an accomplice, and there is no doubt in my mind that that misdirection must have very seriously prejudiced the prisoner. I also agree that I ought not to have referred in the way I did to the statements made by MacDermott and Goldsborough before the Cantonment Magistrate, but I do not agree that the reference to those statements in any degree prejudiced the case of the prisoner on his trial.

After delivering the foregoing judgment, the Court (the Judges forming the Full Bench) sat to deal with the case on the evidence as it appeared from the notes of Mr. Justice Norris.

Mr. Woodroffe, (with him Mr. Pugh), for the prisoner, said he proposed to address the Court upon the evidence in the same way as if that evidence was before a jury. He submitted upon the facts that MacDermott was an accomplice, and that his evidence should be received in that light and that Goldsborough's evidence, apart from his position as an accomplice, was full of inherent improbabilities and unworthy of credit. MacDermott being an accomplice within the ruling of Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., in Reg v. Fattechand Vastachand (1), there was no corroboration as to the material points in the case. There was further no evidence of intention.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips, with him Mr. Handley), for the Crown.—The case is, it is presumed, being discussed under similar circumstances to that of the Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (2). It is not in the power of this Court to sit as a Judge and jury, and to enquire whether the verdict pronounced was or was not illegal unless on a point of law. The merits of the case cannot be gone into; there is no complete record before the Court. Pontifex, J., in Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose shows how the cases should be dealt with apart from the Evidence Act, i.e., on the Letters Patent. Under the Criminal Procedure Code the Court has a power to do a variety of things of which there is no trace in cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, which gives totally different powers dealing only with points of law. The review referred to there is to be for the purpose of determining points of law and thereupon to alter the sentence. In Reg. v. Naoroji Dadabhai (3), Green, J., says the clause is not one giving a power to appeal. It cannot be that an appeal is meant, as there are no materials before the Court to deal with.

(1) 5 B.H.C. Cr. 85 (96).  (2) 1 C. 207.  (3) 9 B.H.C. 393.
The case of Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose is further reported in 25 W. R. Cr. 36, on the question whether the evidence, if believed, supported the verdict. On this trial the Court has not the advantage of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses. I shall show, however, that there is sufficient evidence, if believed, beyond the evidence of the two persons said to be accomplices, to support the conviction. (The learned Counsel then referred to the facts of the case). There is nothing peculiar in the circumstances under which Goldsborough gave his statement; drunkenness is no excuse as a defence; they were all four in the same state, though perhaps MacDermott was the worst. The case of Reg v. Fattechand Vastachand (1) only shows that the person treated by the Magistrate as an accomplice was not one. The amount of corroboration required to the evidence of an accomplice must depend on circumstances—Queen v. Kalla Chand Dass (2). There is here ample corroboration in the evidence of MacDermott. He shows that O'Hara had a gun during the time of the occurrence, and that gun had been used. It is not necessary that an informer should be corroborated in every particular, because, if such evidence could be found, it would be unnecessary to call the approvers—Reg. v. Gallagher (3).

Mr. Woodroffe in reply submitted that there was both misdirection and improper admission of evidence, and that the prisoner had been seriously prejudiced thereby.

The Court on the evidence quashed the conviction and set aside the judgment and sentence.

Conviction quashed.

This was a suit for possession of a wife by one Zohiruddin Sheik against his wife Hamidunnessa Begum, and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, her father and mother, praying for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff alleged that he was married to the defendant No. 1 on the 18th Baisakh 1290 according to law, and the defendant No. 1 had lived with him in his house as his wife for some time after the marriage, occasionally visiting her parents; that in the month of Chet 1291 the defendants 2 and 3 took away their daughter and refused to send her back, and the defendant No. 1 also refused to come to the plaintiff's house or to live with him as his wife. The plaintiff then brought a suit in the same form as the present suit, and at the same time brought a suit to have the kabinnamah or marriage contract pronounced invalid. The defendant No. 1 also brought a suit for maintenance against the plaintiff. Attempts were then made to settle the matter amicably and on solehnamahs being executed [671] the three suits were withdrawn, and the defendant No. 1 came and resided with the plaintiff (as he alleged). Disputes, however, again arising, the cases were re-instituted on the ground that the defendant No. 1 had not given her consent to the withdrawal of the suits. Defendant No. 1 pleaded limitation and denied that she ever lived in the plaintiff's house, and further pleaded that by a kabinnamah executed at the time of the marriage the plaintiff had agreed that he would reside during his wife's lifetime at the house of her father, the defendant No. 2; that he did in fact so reside there till Bhadro 1292; that the plaintiff had been guilty of cruelty and had taken another nekah wife in contravention of the terms of the kabinnamah; that at the time of the marriage the sum of Rs. 650 was fixed as dower, of which Rs. 80 was for ornaments and Rs. 570 in cash; that the defendant had only received a pair of "pirs" worth Rs. 24, and the sum of Rs. 626 was therefore due by the plaintiff, which the defendant claimed as prompt or exigible dower.

The Court of first instance found that the marriage had been consummated, and that the plaintiff should be allowed restitution of conjugal rights on payment of the prompt dower claimed, and the suit was decreed on those terms. The lower appellate Court held on the authority of Abdul Kadir v. Salima (1) that restitution should be decreed unconditionally, and in other respects upheld the decree of the lower Court.

Moulvie Seraj-ul-Islam, for the appellant.

Moulvie Mahomed Yasuf, for the respondent.

The arguments and the authorities cited sufficiently appear from the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) was delivered by Banerjee, J.—This was a suit by a Mahomedan husband for restitution of conjugal rights. The defendant No. 1 amongst other things, which it is not necessary now to consider, urged that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, first, because he had entered into a stipulation to live with the defendant, his wife, in the house of her father; and, secondly, because he had not paid the exigible portion of the dower due to the defendant.

(1) 8 A. 149.

[672] The First Court overruled these objections, and gave the plaintiff a decree which was made conditional, however, as regarded execution, upon payment of the prompt part of the dower. On appeal, the learned District Judge has modified that decree by striking out the condition and making it a decree absolute. In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the defendant, the wife, first, that the Courts below are wrong in giving the plaintiff a decree for restitution of conjugal rights when they ought to have held that he was not entitled to such a decree by reason of the stipulation entered into at the time of the marriage; and, secondly, that the Courts below are further wrong in giving him a decree when he has not paid the prompt part of the dower due to the defendant.

Now this is how the facts stand. The stipulation relied upon is contained in a kabinnamah, the execution of which is not denied. The stipulation is to the effect that the plaintiff shall live with his wife in the house of her father. But the kabinnamah contains another stipulation, which is to the effect that the plaintiff shall allow his wife to see her parents; and this, in our opinion, goes to show, that the stipulation as to residence was not intended to be absolutely obligatory. It further appears that the plaintiff, in his plaint, alleged that, after his marriage, his wife, the defendant No. 1, lived with him, sometimes in her father's house and sometimes in his own house, and this allegation was not denied in the written statement, though the defendant alleged that the periods of her stay in the house of her husband were short. And the learned District Judge has found, upon the presumptions arising in the case, and the correctness of that finding is not in any way questioned before us, that the marriage has been consummated. These being the facts of the case, let us see how far the objections taken before us are valid.

It is an ordinary incident of marriage, under the Mahomedan law, that the husband acquires dominion over the person of his wife. See Macnaghten's Principles of Mahomedan Law, Ch. VII. para. 7; Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan Law, 2nd Edition, p. 13; see also Buzloor Ruheem v. Shunsoomissa (1). The authority to which the learned Vakil for the appellant has referred, to show that this general right can be restrained by a contract to the [673] contrary, is a passage from Mr. Ameer Ali's work on the Personal Law of the Mahomedans, p. 237, which is to this effect: "If it be agreed that husband shall allow his wife to live always with her parents, he cannot afterwards force her to leave her father's house for his own." But the learned author goes on to add: "If the wife, however, once consent, to leave the place of residence agreed upon at the time of marriage she would be presumed to have waived the right acquired under express stipulation, and to have adopted the domicile chosen by the husband." The authority cited is really, therefore, upon the facts of this case, an authority in favour of the respondent.

There are other authorities still more in favour of the respondent's contention. In the Hedaya, Book II, Ch. 3, Grady's Edition, p. 49, it is said:—"If a male marry a woman on a dower of one thousand dirms, on a condition that he is not to carry her out of her native city, or that he is not to marry, during his matrimonial connexion with her, any other woman,—in this case, if he observe the condition, the woman is entitled to the above specified dower only, as that consists of a sum sufficient to constitute a legal dower, and she has agreed to accept it; but if he should infringe the condition, by either carrying her out of her native city, or marrying another wife, she is in this case entitled to her proper dower, because he had acceded to a condition on behalf of the woman which was advantageous to her, and that not being fulfilled, the woman is not supposed to be satisfied with the thousand dirms, and must therefore be paid her complete proper dower." This goes to show that a stipulation like the one relied upon in this case is not generally considered to be absolutely binding, though any infringement of it may entitle the wife to a larger amount as her dower than that agreed upon.

Then there is a case in Macnaghten's Precedents of Mahomedan Law, Ch. VI, Case VIII, in which it was held that a condition like the present is illegal and invalid. But without determining the question whether a stipulation as to residence such as this can be valid in any case—a question which it is not necessary for us now to decide—we think it sufficient to say that, having regard to the terms of the kabinnamah and also to the subsequent conduct of the parties, the stipulation relied upon is not in our opinion a sufficient answer to the plaintiff's claim for restitution of conjugal rights.

Then, as regards the second point, there is a difference of opinion between Abu Hanifa and his two disciples, Abu Yusuf and Mohammed, upon the question whether a woman can refuse herself to her husband after consummation upon the ground of non-payment of the prompt dower, the former answering the question in the affirmative and the two latter in the negative. (See Hedaya, Book II, Ch. 3, Grady's Edition, p. 54.) But upon this point the practice of later jurisconsults has been to follow the two disciples, though they agree with Abu Hanifa upon the question of the wife's right to refuse to accompany the husband on a journey.—Baillie's Digest, 2nd Edition, p. 125. And this view has been approved by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Abdul Kadir v. Salima (1).

That being the state of the authorities bearing upon the question, we think the learned District Judge was right in holding that the non-payment of prompt dower was not a sufficient plea in this case, the marriage having been consummated. The result is that this second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Pethevam, Rt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

ROMA NATH alias RAMANUND DHUR POODAR (Defendant No. 1) v. RAJONIMONI DASI FOR SELF AND AS MOTHER AND NEXT FRIEND OF JAGOBUNDO DHUR AND OTHERS, MINORS (Plaintiffs).* [1st April, 1890]

Hindu widow—Maintenance—Incontinence—Forfeiture of rights—Starving maintenance.

It is a settled principle of a Hindu law that a Hindu widow's right to claim maintenance is forfeited upon her unchastity. This rule is not to be restricted to women espoused, who are not of the rank of patni or wife.

Where a widow became unchaste after her husband's death, and was leading an unchaste life at and about the date of suit, held that she was not entitled to maintenance of any sort. Quere, whether if she were to begin to lead a moral life she would not be entitled to a starving maintenance.

Honamma v. Timannahbhat (1) and Vatu v. Ganga (2) referred to.

[675] This suit was brought by one Rajonimoni Dasi, the widow, and the minor son and minor daughters of one Ram Narain Dhur, through their mother and next friend the said Rajonimoni Dasi, against the present appellant, the executor to the estate of Ram Narain Dhur, and certain other persons who were legatees under his Will. The plaintiffs prayed (inter alia) for a declaration that they were entitled to the properties left by the deceased Ram Narain Dhur, and that his Will might be construed as to such portions (if any) as might be found valid, and for maintenance and other relief.

The claim for maintenance was resisted upon the ground that Rajonimoni was an unchaste widow, and that her son and daughters were not the children of Ram Narain Dhur; and certain questions as to the validity and construction of the Will were raised by the plaintiffs and decided by the Courts below, but the decision arrived at was in no way impugned by either side in the present appeal.

Upon the question of maintenance the First Court held that the evidence was not sufficient to prove Rajonimoni's unchastity during her husband's lifetime, but that she was actually carrying on an illicit intercourse since his death with one Hurry Mohun; and the Subordinate Judge was therefore of opinion that she was entitled to what is called a "starving maintenance," that is, bare food and raiment, from the estate of her husband. The legitimacy of the children was also considered to have been established, and the rights of the parties under the Will were declared.

Against this decision allowing a "starving maintenance" to the widow, the defendant No. 1, the executor to the estate of Ram Narain,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 88 of 1889, against the decree of C. B. Garrett, Esq., Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 28th of July 1888, modifying the decree of Baboo Krishna Chunder Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 30th of June 1887.

(1) 7 B. 559,

(2) 7 B. 84.
preferred an appeal to the District Judge, but no appeal or cross objections were filed on behalf of any of the plaintiffs. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed by the lower appellate Court. Upon the question of maintenance the District Judge observed:—“On the whole I think that the weight of authority is not so clearly against the Subordinate Judge’s decision that I ought to refuse it; and it seems a legitimate deduction from the decision in Keri Kolitani’s case (1) that if a woman who has succeeded to property on her husband’s death does not forfeit it by subsequent unchastity, a less fortunate woman who has succeeded on her husband’s death to bare allowance for food and clothing shall not forfeit it by subsequent unchastity.”

The defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court. At the hearing the minor plaintiffs sought to raise the question whether, their legitimacy in the opinion of the Courts below been established, they would not be entitled to maintenance apart from the widow, and whether, even if the widow’s claim to maintenance were found to be unsustainable, the decree for maintenance given by the Courts below might not be sustained upon the ground that the minors who were living under her protection were entitled to maintenance. They prayed in the alternative that they might be allowed to withdraw from the suit.

The minor plaintiffs were allowed to withdraw from the suit.
Baboo Golap Chunder Sarkar, for the appellant.
Baboo Krishna Komal Bhattacharjee and Baboo Uma Kali Mookerjee, for the respondents.
The authorities cited and the arguments appear sufficiently from the judgment.
The judgment of the High Court (Petheram, C.J., and Banerjee, J.) after setting out the above facts was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The minor plaintiffs then being out of the record, the next question that arises is whether the widow is entitled to the maintenance that has been decreed in her favour. Upon that question the finding arrived at is that she was leading an unchaste life at the date of the suit, and it is contended on behalf of the defendant, appellant, that whatever may be the rights of a Hindu widow who has taken one false step in her life but has afterwards repented, a Hindu widow who is actually leading an unchaste life is not entitled to maintenance of any sort, as against the heirs of her late husband, or those who represent his estate. On the other hand, it is contended for the respondent that if a widow is not unchaste at the date of her husband’s death and becomes subsequently unchaste, the rights to claim maintenance having once accrued, she is not divested of that right by her subsequent unchastity; and in support of this position the rule laid down in the case of Moniram Kolita v Keri Kolitani (1) is cited.

[676] If this position of the respondent were tenable, then, upon the findings of fact arrived at in this case, namely, that the unchastity of Rajonimoni during her husband’s lifetime is not made out, but that she subsequently became unchaste and was leading an unchaste life at the date of the suit, her claim for maintenance would be a valid claim. But we do not think that this contention is sound. The very case cited in its favour turns out really to be an authority against the position contended for. For the Privy Council, in that case, drew a clear distinction

---

(1) 5 C. 776.
between a claim for maintenance and a claim to inheritance. Their Lordships observe (1)—"The right to receive maintenance is very different from a vested estate in property, and therefore what is said as to maintenance cannot be extended to the case of a widow's estate by succession.
However the texts cited in regard to maintenance show that when it was intended to point out that the right was liable to resumption or forfeiture, and clear and express words to that effect were used. Jumutavahana in c. XI
s. 1, v. 48 of the Dayabhaga, refers to a text of Narada, in which he says :
—'Let them allow maintenance to his woman for life, provided they keep unsullied the bed of their lord; but if they behave otherwise, the brother may resume that allowance.'"

It was argued for the respondent that the passage of the Dayabhaga referred to in this part of their Lordships' judgment applies not to the patni, or wife, but relates merely to women espoused, but below the rank of patni or wife. As to that I shall have a word to say presently. For the present, it is enough to say that the authority cited is really in support of the opposite view, namely, that the right to maintenance may be forfeited for subsequent unchastity.

That being so, and the widow not having a vested right to maintenance by reason of her having been chaste at the date of her husband's death, the next question is whether the right to maintenance is conditional upon her continuing chaste.

The passage of the Dayabhaga which is quoted in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Moniram Kolita (1) is direct authority to show that the widow is entitled to maintenance only so long as she remains chaste, and that unchastity at [678] any period of widowhood would deprive her of the right to claim maintenance. It is true that Jumutavahana, after quoting the text of Narada, observes that the text relates to women merely espoused and not having the rank of patni or wife; but on referring to his explanation of the term patni in the paragraph immediately preceding, that is the 47th paragraph of
c. XI, s. 1, it would appear that the only distinction that he draws between a woman espoused and one having the rank of patni is seniority or superiority in point of caste, and that upon the death of the senior wife or wife of superior caste, the next in point of superiority in caste attains the tank of patni, or wife, without any further ceremony being gone through.
That being so, we do not see any reason for restricting the rule laid down as to chastity being a condition for maintenance in the text of Narada in para. 48, s. 1, c. XI of Dayabhaga, to the case of women espoused who are not of the rank of patni.

Of course, as regards the right to succession, there is a distinction observed, but we see nothing in reason or principle to make any distinction between women of the two classes, namely, those who are patnis and those who are merely espoused, as regards the conditions under which their claim for maintenance should be allowed.

This passage of the Dayabhaga is, therefore, in our opinion sufficient authority for the position that the right to maintenance is conditional upon chaste living on the part of the widow. And this view has been followed by later writers on Hindu Law, and also by Courts of Justice. See Macnaghten's Precedent of Hindu Law, Vol. 2, Ch. 2, Case 5; 1 Strange's Hindu Law, 172; 2 Strange 309, and the case of Maharane Bussunt Koomaree v. Maharane Kummul Koomaree (2). See also the

(1) 5 C. 776 (786).
(2) 7 Sel. Rep. 168, New Ed. = 8 I.D. (O.S.) 129.
observations of the Madras High Court in the case of Visalakehi Ammal v. Annasami Sastri (1). That being so, we think it a settled principle of Hindu law that a Hindu widow's right to claim maintenance is forfeited upon her unchastity.

Then there remains the further question whether, though she may not be entitled to maintenance as a source of wealth, she is not entitled to what has been termed "starving maintenance," that is, bare food and raiment. The Courts below have allowed her that, [679] and the question is, whether they have done so rightly. It is true that there are texts of Hindu law which require the husband to give bare starving maintenance to a disloyal wife; see Colebrooke's Digest, Book IV, c. I, vv. 81 to 83; see also the case of Honamma v. Timannaibhat (2). We should add, however, that this last case has been dissented from in a subsequent case by the Bombay High Court. See the case of Valu v. Ganga (3). But though, if the facts of this case had been different, and if the woman Rajonimoni, notwithstanding that she had taken one false step during her widowhood, had been leading a chaste life at the date of suit, we should have felt inclined to take the view that the Bombay High Court took in the earlier case, and declared her entitled to bare food and raiment from the persons who are in possession of her husband's estate, yet, having regard to the facts found in this case, we do not think there is any reason for our applying the rule laid down in the case of Honamma v. Timannaibhat (2) in her favour. The facts found, as we have pointed out above, are, that she became unchaste after her husband's death, and was leading an unchaste life at and about the date of the suit. That being so, we do not think there is anything in reason or authority to entitle her to any maintenance. The reason why bare food and raiment are directed by the Hindu sages to be given to an unchaste woman is that she may have a locus penitentiae, and that she may not be compelled by sheer necessity to continue to lead a life of shame and misery. That reason has no application to the present case, where the widow is still leading such a life and is claiming an allowance from the representatives of her husband to enable her to live comfortably. The reason of the rule, then, that prescribes a starving maintenance for an unchaste widow not being applicable to this case, we do not think that Rajonimoni is entitled to such maintenance.

It was said that such a decision may have the effect of confirming her in the immoral life that she is leading. We see no reason for such an apprehension. We do not decide in this case what her rights would be if she were to give up her present way of living and begin to lead a moral life; we do not say that she would not, even in that case, be entitled to claim a starving maintenance. All [680] that we say now is, that under the existing state of things she is not entitled to maintenance of any sort. In this view of the case, the decrees of the Courts below must be reversed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs.

APPEAL CIVIL.

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

Boidya Nath Adya and others (Defendants) v. Makhan Lal Adya (Plaintiff).  [14th April, 1890].

Appeal—Receiver, appointment of—Appealable order—Jurisdiction. Value for purposes of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XVI of 1882), ss. 503, 505, 588 (24), and 589—Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and Assam Civil Courts Act XII of 1887, s. 21—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, cl. 4—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), ss. 7, 8, and 11.

An appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for a Receiver under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the order on appeal is final under s. 588. Gossain Dulmir Puri v. Tekai Hetnarain (1) followed.

The Court to which such an appeal lies from the order of a Subordinate Judge is, under s. 21 of Act XII of 1887, the High Court where the value of the suit is above Rs. 5,000 and the District Judge's Court in other cases.

For purposes of jurisdiction the words "value of the original suit" in s. 21 of Act XII of 1887 are, in partition suits, to be taken to mean the value of the property in suit, and this is the valuation by which the Courts should be guided in such suits. Kirti Churn Mitte v. Aunath Nath Deb (2) followed.

The Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) s. 7, cl. 4, does not contemplate that a plaintiff should assign an arbitrary value to the subject-matter of the suit, and the provisions of the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), ss. 7, 8, and 11, indicate that this was not the intention of the Legislature.

In a suit for partition of moveable and immovable property, consisting chiefly of trading concerns, the plaintiff valued the relief [681] sought at Rs. 4,200. On an application by the plaintiff for the appointment of a Receiver, the Subordinate Judge rejected the application. The order was reversed on appeal by the District Judge. The defendants appealed to the High Court, and also obtained a rule by way of motion to show cause why the order of the District Judge should not be set aside on the grounds that he had no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal in a matter arising out of a suit the subject-matter of which exceeded Rs. 5,000 in value, and that the plaintiff had not shown that the appointment of a Receiver was necessary for the realisation, preservation, or better custody or management of the property in suit. The defendants also obtained a rule for stay of proceedings pending the appeal.

Mr. Woodroffe and Dr. Troyllyka Nath Mitte, for the appellants.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) was as follows:—

*Appeal from Order No. 379 of 1889 against the order of F. McLaughlin, Esq., Judge of Hooghly, dated the 27th of November 1889.

(1) 6 C.L.R. 476.

(2) 8 C. 757=11 C.L.R. 95.
JUDGMENT.

This appeal and these rules arise out of an application by one Makhan Lal Adya for the appointment of a Receiver to take charge of certain properties, moveable and immoveable, which form the subject-matter of a suit for partition instituted by him against his co-sharers in the Court of the Third Subordinate Judge of Hugli. The suit was valued at Rs. 4,200, but defendants urged in both the Courts below, and stated in the affidavit upon which the rule No. 8 of 1890 was granted, that the value of the property claimed was considerably over Rs. 5,000, and the correctness of this statement is not questioned before us.

The Subordinate Judge rejected the application. On appeal by the plaintiff, the District Judge has reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge, and held that a Receiver should be appointed.

Against that decision the defendants have come up to this Court by way of appeal and also by way of motion upon which the abovementioned rule No. 8 of 1890 has been granted. The other rule (No. 1613 of 1889) was obtained on an application for stay of proceedings pending the appeal. In their appeal the defendants contend that no appeal lies against an order rejecting an application for the appointment of a Receiver, such an order not being an order under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the so-called appeal to the District Judge should be regarded [682] as a fresh application to him for a Receiver, which he was competent to entertain, having regard to the provisions of s. 505 of the Code; that the Judge’s order must consequently be regarded as an original order under s. 503 for the appointment of a Receiver, and an appeal lies against it to this Court under s. 588; and that, as the order is bad on the merits, no sufficient case being made out for a Receiver, it should be set aside. In the rule (No. 8 of 1890) it is contended that even if it be conceded that an appeal lies against an order rejecting an application for Receiver, the appeal in this case lay to this Court according to s. 589 of the Code and s. 21 of the Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and Assam Civil Courts Act, as the value of the subject-matter of the suit was over Rs. 5,000; and that the decision of the District Judge was therefore passed without jurisdiction and should be set aside. On the other side it is argued that an appeal does lie against an order refusing an application for a Receiver; that the appeal in this case properly lay to the District Judge, the suit having been valued at less than Rs. 5,000; and that the order of the Judge was final under s. 588 of the Code.

Now the question whether an appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for a Receiver is, we think, concluded by authority. It was held in the case of Gossain Dulmír Puri v. Tekat Hetuarain (1), that such an appeal does lie, and the same view was taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Venkata Sami v. Stridavamma (2). That being so, the order of the District Judge was an order passed in appeal, and no further appeal lies from it under s. 588 of the Code. The appeal to this Court must therefore fail.

But though an appeal lay against the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing the plaintiff’s application for a Receiver, we think that appeal lay to this Court and not to the District Judge.

Section 589 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an appeal from an order, when such appeal is allowed by s. 588, shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in relation to which such order is made. And the Court to which an appeal lies from a decree of a Subordinate Judge in a suit is, under s. 21 of Act XII of 1887, the High Court [683] where the value of the suit is above Rs. 5,000, and the District Judge's Court in other cases. Now, though the expression "value of the suit" is not defined in Act XII of 1887, we do not think it means the amount at which the plaintiff chooses to value his suit. The Court-fees Act (s 7, cl. 4) provides that for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee payable, the value of certain classes of suits should be taken to be the amount at which the plaintiff values the relief sought. But we do not think the Legislature ever intended to leave it to the plaintiff to choose the Court in which he should bring his suit for possession or partition of property by assigning an arbitrary value to the subject-matter of the suit. The provisions of the Suits Valuation Act (Act VII of 1887, ss. 7, 8 and 11) clearly indicate that that is not the intention of the Legislature. The present case does not come within any of the classes of cases in which, according to that Act, the Court-fee valuation and valuation for purposes of jurisdiction are declared to be identical. In the absence of any rules made under the last-mentioned Act, we think the correct rule to follow is that indicated in the observation of Garth, C. J., in Kriti Churn Mitter v. Aunath Nath Deb (1), that for purposes of jurisdiction in partition suits we should be guided by the value of the property in suit. Now the value of the plaintiff's share in this case is unquestionably over Rs. 5,000, being not less than Rs. 20,000; and the valuation in the plaint was we think unwarrantably low. That being so, the appeal in this case lay to this Court and not to the Judge, and the order of the District Judge must therefore be set aside as passed without jurisdiction. We may add that the learned District Judge's order is not in our opinion a proper order on the merits of the case, as no sufficient ground for the appointment of a Receiver was made out.

(1) 6 C.L.R. 467, (2) 10 M. 179;

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed, but the rule (No. 8 of 1890) made absolute. Rule No. 1613 of 1889, which was obtained merely for stay of proceedings, will be discharged.

We make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed and rule made absolute.

[684] CRIMINAL MOTION.

Before Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Banerjee.

IN THE MATTER OF RAM CHANDRA GHOSE (Petitioner) v.

THE BALLY MUNICIPALITY (Opposite party).* [2nd April, 1890,]

Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), ss. 6 (cl. 13), 30 and 217 (cl. 5)—

Obstructing road not vested in municipality over which public have a right of way—Road.

The term "road" in cl. 5 of s. 217 of Bengal Act III of 1834 is not limited to roads vested in the Municipal Commissioners.

* Criminal Motion No. 48 of 1890 against the order passed by G. M. Currie, Esq., Magistrate of Howrah, dated the 10th of December, affirming the order passed by Babu Gogan Chandra Banerjee, Deputy Magistrate of Howrah, dated the 19th of June 1889.

(1) 8 C. 757.
A person was charged at the instance of a Municipality under that clause with obstructing a path through his paddy-field by erecting a fence at either end of it. It was found that the public had a right of way over the path, and the lower Courts convicted the accused of an offence under that clause. In revision it was contended that the conviction was bad, as the clause could only refer to a road which had vested in the Municipal Commissioners.

Held for the above reasons that the conviction was right and must be upheld.

In this case the petitioner was convicted of an offence under cl. 5, s. 217, Bengal Act III of 1884, at the instance of the Bally Municipality for obstructing a path putting up fences across it. The path passed through the petitioner's land, and he claimed it as his own. The evidence showed that it consisted of an al or very low embankment, and the Deputy Magistrate found that the public had a right of way over it, and that they even passed over it when the crops were standing on both sides. He found also that the petitioner had erected fences across it at either end, and he accordingly convicted him under the section and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 15, or undergo simple imprisonment for one week.

Amongst other contentions raised before the Deputy Magistrate, it was urged that the path had not vested in and did not belong to the Municipal Commissioners, and that the Municipality had no right to prosecute; but the Deputy Magistrate found that it was not necessary for the path to vest in the Commissioners or belong [688] to them to enable them to perform a charge under s. 217 of the Act, and that if the path were within the municipal limits it was quite enough.

The petitioner appealed against the conviction to the Magistrate, but that officer dismissed the appeal, stating that he saw no reason to interere.

The petitioner then applied to the High Court for a rule upon, amongst others, the following ground:

That the path being merely a foot path across a paddy-field and admittedly not belonging to the Municipality, the section under which he had been convicted had no application to the case.

A rule was issued upon that application, which now came on to be heard.

Babu Umbica Churn Bose, for the petitioner.
Babu Troyloka Nath Mitter and Babu Jagat Chunder Bannerjee, for the opposite party.

The judgment of the High Court (MACPHERSON and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The petitioner has been convicted under cl. 5, s. 217, Bengal Act III, 1884, of obstructing a road. This road is nothing more than a path, but it has been found that the public have a right of way over it. The contention before us is that the conviction is bad, because the road referred to in the clause above mentioned means only a road which is vested in the Municipality, and that this road was not so vested. In the Act a road is defined to be "any road, street * * or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not, over which the public have a right of way." Section 30 enacts that all roads (not being private property and not being maintained by Government or at the public expense) shall vest in and belong to the Commissioners. We see no ground for holding that the word "road" in cl. 5 of s. 217 is limited to roads vested in the Municipality, and does not include all roads within the definition given in the Act. There is nothing in the context which would warrant us in putting the more narrow construction on it, and it is noticeable that in the first clause of that section the words "public road," are used.

The rule must therefore be discharged.

Conviction upheld and rule discharged.

GOBIND LAL ROY (Plaintiff) v. HEMENDRA NARAIN ROY CHOWDHRY (Defendant). [19th November, 1889.]

Lease—Construction of lease, as to the inheritance of it by the heir on the lessee's death.

An ijara for one hundred and twenty-five years granted to wife stated that it was for the performance of pious acts by her, and that on her death her sons were to take. Her only son died before her, leaving a son.

Held that the construction that the grandson inherited the term on the death of the lessee was correct.

Toj Chund Bahadoor v. Srikanth Ghose (1) referred to.

[R., 31 C. 561 (569) : 37 C. 377 (381)=11 C.L.J. 401=5 Ind. Cas. 500 ; 15 C.L.J. 241 =13 Ind. Cas. 377 (382).]

Appeal from a decree (13th May 1887) of the High Court, affirming a decree (22nd March 1886) of the Subordinate Judge of Rungpore.

This suit was brought by the present appellant against the respondent to obtain possession of three villages. It raised the question whether the plaintiff, within whose putni estate the villages, but for an outstanding ijara, would have been included, was entitled to treat that ijara as ended by the deaths of the grantees.

The defendant's grandfather, Bhairabendra Narain Surma, within whose zemindari the villages then were, granted an ijara, dated February 17th, 1843, of the villages for a hundred and twenty-five years to his wife Hara Sunderi in these words:—"The ijara is granted to you for the performance of pious acts. At present you have a son, Jagadindra Narain Surma, and if other sons or another son be born, and if during the term of the ijara you die, then they will in equal shares enjoy the profits down to the end of the ijara."

Jagadindra having inherited the zemindari of which the villages were part, granted a putni to the present plaintiff. It contained the words "I convey to you my powers of making measurement, and jummabundi assessment of rent, and enhancement, making settlement, and ejectment of tenants."

[687] Jagadindra died in 1883, and his mother Hara Sunderi died in 1884. But Jagadindra left a son, Hemendra Narain, whom the plaintiff now sued, alleging that the ijara was only to last for the lives of Hara Sunderi and her sons, and that upon the deaths of her son Jagadindra and herself it came to an end, so that the plaintiff as putnidar was entitled to khas possession of the three villages.

(1) 3 M. I. A. 261.

The defence was that the ijara vested in Hara Sunderi and her heirs down to the end of the term of years.

Both the Courts below construed the ijara in favour of the defendant. The High Court (Mitter and Beverley, JJ.) held that the ijara was to Hara Sunderi and her heirs.

On this appeal, Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, argued that upon the true construction of the ijara it was a personal grant to Hara Sunderi and her sons. When her son died and she died it ceased to operate, not being intended for the benefit of any heirs more distant than those specified. Although in Tej Chund Bahadoor v. Srikanth Ghose (1), it was said that the grantor was not to be taken to have limited his grant, when made agreeably to law and custom, unless he had done so by qualifying words, the expressions used here were sufficient to make a limitation to the sons only.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships’ judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the decision of the High Court was correct. Each case must be determined on its own circumstances, and each document must be construed according to the words which are contained in it. Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court put a proper construction upon the document. In their judgment they say:—“There is nothing in that lease which would go to show that it was the intention of the grantor to limit it to a shorter period.” That is quite in accordance with the decision in Tej Chund Bahadoor v. Srikanth Ghose (1), which was cited by Mr. Mayne in the course of the argument. Then on the same page of their judgment the High Court say:—“In this case it seems to us that the reference [688] to the sons was made in order to indicate that the ijara was not come an end on the death of Hara Sunderi. Even if these words were not used the lease, under its terms, would have descended to the heirs of Hara Sunderi; but it was probably thought necessary to make that point clear; and in order to make it clear the last condition, that the ijara should continue to the benefit of the son or sons of Hara Sunderi, was inserted.” Their Lordships are of opinion that the ijara was to Hara Sunderi and her heirs, and that is the proper construction to be put upon the lease. In this case the widow had no daughters, and it is stated that the only issue was the son who was named. Their Lordships think that the High Court have put the proper construction upon the document, and they will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the decision of the High Court be affirmed. The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

(1) 3 M.I.A. 261 (272).
The question raised on this appeal was whether a plaint filed on behalf of two minors under the Court of Wards, Kumar Biseswar Roy and Kumar Kasiswar Roy, by one Biseswar Moitra had been rightly rejected by the Subordinate Judge, having been by him struck off the file of pending suits as incapable of being prosecuted for want of the sanction of the Court of Wards.

Raja Biseswar Roy left a widow, Rani Jai Sunderi Debi, the grandmother of the appellants and of the second respondent, between whom it was contested which had the right of succession to her estate. She died in 1867, leaving a son, Moheswar Roy, father of these appellants. He died in 1873, and under an order of 24th June 1874, made by the District Judge of Rajshahi under the 12th section of Act XL of 1858 (the Bengal Minors’ Act), the Collector took charge of these appellants’ estates.

By s. 2, Bengal Act IX of 1879, “all persons and properties which at the commencement of this Act are under the charge of the Collector by virtue of an order of the Civil Court under s. 12 of Act XL of 1858 shall from such commencement be deemed to be under the charge of the Court of Wards.” From 1879, therefore, the minors came under the control of the Court of Wards; and upon this taking place, the Collector appointed to be manager of their estate one Hurrogobind Bose, who had also been manager under the Court of Wards of the estate of their cousin Kumar Shoshi Sikar Eswar Roy, now the first respondent. His action in regard to the estate of Rani Jai Sunderi was one of the matters of complaint in this suit, of which the enforced temination was now in question. To obtain for the minors, now appellants, two-thirds of their deceased grandmother’s property, Biseswar Moitra, describing himself as their “authorized guardian and well-wisher,” brought this suit on the 19th November 1879. He had written authority, dated 19th November 1879, from Hurrogobind, who purported to act under the direction of the Commissioner and to be authorised by the Collector in charge, to sue at his (Biseswar’s own risk, in order to prevent the application of limitation to the minors’ claim.

Afterwards, on the 8th May 1880, the Collector authorized Biseswar Moitra to act as next friend; but whether the Collector was empowered so to do was one of the present questions.

[690] On the 14th August 1880 the Subordinate Judge, after several times postponing the suit to enable Biseswar Moitra to obtain the permission of the Board of Revenue to prosecute the suit, ordered that the plaint should be rejected and the suit struck off the file.

On the 27th February 1884, Kumar Biseswar petitioned the Judge to restore the suit to the file, he having attained majority, and having received possession from the Court of Wards. A similar petition was preferred by Kumar Kasiswar, the other appellant, who had reached eighteen years of age.

On the 30th June, the Subordinate Judge dismissed both petitions, being of opinion that the plaint had been properly rejected, and that he had no jurisdiction to restore it to the file.

An appeal from this order, and also from the order of 14th August 1880, having been admitted, a Division Bench (MacDonell and Beverley, J.J.) dismissed it and affirmed the order rejecting the plaint. They said—

"We find from the proceedings of the Board of Revenue dated the 25th February 1880 that the question of this suit, and of the proper person to conduct it on behalf of the minors, was under the consideration of the Court of Wards, and from that resolution it is clear that the Court of Wards intended to reserve to itself the power of appointing a next friend of the minors for the purposes of this suit, if it should determine that the suit should be proceeded with; and on the 28th May 1880, only twenty days subsequent to the date of the Collector’s letter, we find a letter from the Court of Wards to the effect that they do not authorize the prosecution of the suit. We are driven, therefore, to the conclusion that the Collector’s letter of the 8th May 1880 was written without authority, and that it did not really convey the sanction of the Court of Wards for the institution or prosecution of this suit.

"Then it is said that under the proviso to s. 25, Act IX of 1879, the institution of this plaint was authorised by the manager, Hurrogobind Bose; and we are referred to a letter written by Hurrogobind Bose to Biseswar Moitra, dated 17th November 1879, upon which this plaint was filed, authorizing him at his own risk and responsibility to institute this suit in order to prevent the application of limitation.

"It is contended before us that this authority is sufficient, and that it was not necessary that the plaint should have been filed in accordance with ss. 51 and 52 of the Act, but that the manager had the power of authorising any third person to institute the suit on behalf of the minors. We are unable to adopt this view. We think that the plain meaning of s. 55 is this: That suits are not to be instituted on behalf of wards [691] of Court without the authority of some order of the Court of Wards, provided that in special cases, in order to save suits from being barred by limitation while the order of the Court is being applied for, the manager of the estate may of his own motion cause a plaint to be filed; but the section goes on distinctly to say that no further proceedings in the suit so filed shall be taken without the sanction of the Court. We see nothing in this section to over-ride the plain provisions of ss. 51 and 52, which prescribe the manner in which suits are to be instituted on behalf of minors. In such suits either the manager, or the Collector, or some other person appointed by an order of the Court of Wards, must be named as next friend. In the present case neither the Collector nor the manager, nor any person authorised by the Court of Wards, was named as next friend, and we therefore find that the suit was brought in an improper form, and for this reason alone we think that it was properly rejected.

"For these reasons, then, we think that the present appeal must fail. The appeal is dismissed with costs."

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellants, argued that, reference being made to the 15th section of the Act IX of 1879, the letter of 17th November 1879 conferred on Biseswar Moitra an authority to sue on behalf of the present appellants sufficient to satisfy the 55th section of the Act. Also in regard to the letter of 8th May 1880 it was to be presumed that the Collector was acting under the orders of the Court of Wards, and in accordance with the resolution of 25th February 1880. The Collector after that could not, by his letter of 28th May 1880, interfere with the hearing of the suit, which had been duly instituted. At most, the withdrawal of authority should only have the effect of staying the suit until these appellants should be released from the control of the Court of Wards.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondents, was not called upon by their Lordships, whose judgment was delivered by

JUDGMENT.

LORD HOBHOUSE.—The matter in dispute in this case lies within a very narrow compass. The 55th section of the Bengal Court of Wards Act, Act IX of 1879, provides that "no suits shall be brought on behalf of any ward unless the same be authorised by some order of the Court"—(that is, the Court of Wards): "provided that a manager may authorise a plaint to be filed in order to prevent a suit from being barred by the Law of Limitation; but such suit shall not be afterwards proceeded with, except under the sanction of the Court." The appellants in the year 1879 were wards of Court, and [692] Hurrogobind Bose had been appointed manager of their estate. On the 17th November 1879 Hurrogobind Bose wrote a letter to the plaintiff in this suit, Biseswar Moitra, authorising him to institute a suit on behalf of the wards at his own risk and responsibility, in order to prevent the application of limitation. The letter refers to applications to the Collector and to the Commissioner, and to opinions expressed by them, but it does not mention any order of the Court of Wards, nor does it purport to come from the Court of Wards at all. It is an authority of the manager under the second clause of s. 55 of the Act to Biseswar Moitra to institute a suit for the purpose of saving the time of limitation. On the same day the plaintiff instituted the suit. It seems to have been doubted in the High Court whether he had authority to institute the suit. Their Lordships considered that the manager had the right to give Biseswar Moitra the authority, and that the suit was properly instituted. Then came the question whether the suit should be prosecuted. Biseswar Moitra took immediate steps to get an authority from the Court of Wards to prosecute the suit, and he applied to the Civil Court several times to give him time to produce his authority to prosecute the suit. On the 8th May 1880 a letter was written, which, if it came from the Court of Wards, would show that they were then of opinion that the suit should go on, for it purports to be an authority from the Officiating Collector of Rajshahye, authorising Biseshwar Moitra to act as next friend of the infants. But it does not purport to come from the Court of Wards, and it is quite clear that nobody treated it as being an authority from the Court of Wards, because on the 10th May an application was made to the Civil Court to postpone the case, without any mention of the letter of the 8th May as being an authority to prosecute the suit. However that may be, on the 28th May a letter was written which does purport to convey the opinion of the Court of Wards. It was written by the Assistant Collector to the Government Pleader and the writer requested the Government Pleader “to take steps at once to inform the Court and intimate to the Mookhtar of the junior branch, Biseshwar Moitra, that the Court of Wards does not authorise the suit.” That letter was communicated to the Court. On the same day an application was made to the Court, and the letter was produced which refused sanction to the \[698\] prosecution of the case. Upon that the plaintiff applied for time to get the sanction of the Court of Wards, and time was given him and on two subsequent occasions further time was given that he might get the sanction of the Court of Wards. Ultimately the time was enlarged until the 14th of August, and on the 14th of August, there being nothing said in contradiction of the letter of the 28th of May, the Subordinate Judge ordered that the case should be struck off the file. It appears to their Lordships not only that he had jurisdiction to strike the case off the file, but that he was quite right in doing so. He had before him a suit which, however lawfully instituted, was by law incapable of being prosecuted without a sanction, which the plaintiff was unable to obtain.

Their Lordships therefore are of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs; and they will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with that opinion.

Appeal dismissed.

An appellant, after the transmission of his appeal to England, obtained leave in the High Court to withdraw it. The appeal involved the rights of a minor, party to the suit, whose mother and guardian obtained an order for her to be substituted for the withdrawing appellant, on the terms that she should give security to the satisfaction of the High Court for costs already ordered, and should undertake to abide by any order as to general costs.

1003
This was a petition preferred by Bamasunderi Debi, widow of the late Dwarkanath Chakerbati, who died in January 1886, leaving also another widow, the respondent Tarasunderi Debi. The petitioner asked to have her name, or that of her adopted son, Debender Nath Chakerbati, through her as his guardian, substituted in the abovementioned appeal for that of the appellants, Gaur Mohun, who after the transmission of the record to England had applied to the High Court for leave to withdraw.

The appeal raised the question whether Dwarkanath had, by his will, given to the petitioner the power which she had purported to exercise in adopting Debender Nath. The execution of the will was denied by Tarasunderi, by whom Dwarkanath had a son who survived him, but this son had since deceased. Probate of the will, having been granted under Act V of 1881, was afterwards, on 23rd April 1888, revoked.

The appellant Gaur Mohun, on 17th February 1888, had obtained a certificate giving leave to appeal and the petitioner now represented the injury that would be caused to the minor should the appeal be discontinued. The petition set forth that an application had been made on the 5th June 1889 to the High Court for leave to substitute the petitioner Bamasunderi, either as executrix appointed by the will or as guardian of the adopted minor, Debender Nath. This, however, had been refused, on the ground that it was for their Lordships, and not for the High Court, to dispose of the matter.

Mr. R. V. Doyne, supported the petition.
Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C, appeared for the respondent, Tarasunderi.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was that the petitioner ought to be substituted for the withdrawing appellant on the terms that she gave security to the satisfaction of the High Court for the costs already incurred, and undertook to abide by such order as might be made as to the general costs.

Solicitor for the petitioner: Mr. Stevens.
Solicitors for the respondent: Messrs. Sanderson, Holland, & Adkin.

[695] APPELLATE CIVIL.

GOPAL CHUNDER DAS (Defendant) v. UMESH NARAIN CHOWDHRY
AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs). [18th April, 1890.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 188—Suit for enhancement of rent or for additional rent—Joint proprietors.

Having regard to the provisions of s. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, where two or more persons are joint proprietors, they must all join in bringing a suit for enhancement of rent or for additional rent, Guni Mahomed v. Moran (1) referred to.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 134 of 1889, against the decree of Baboo Bhaloram Mullick, Subordinate Judge of Pubna and Bogra, dated the 11th of January 1889, affirming the decree of Baboo Debendro Nath Roy, Munsif of Shazadapore, dated the 30th of June 1888.

(1) 4 C. 96.
This appeal arose out of a suit for enhancement of rent and additional rent under ss. 30 and 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. The suit was brought by Umesh Narain Chowdhry and five others, who were the proprietors of an eight-annas share in mouzah Ghope Selanda Kole Chinakhara in zillah Pubna against their tenant Gopal Chunder Das (defendant No. 1), and their co-proprietors of the remaining eight-annas share, Grish Chunder Rahut and Durga Nath Rahut, who were made pro forma defendants.

The facts of the case are stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Baboo Sreenath Das and Babo Grijia Sunker Mozoomdar, for the appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Mohini Mohun Chuckerbutty, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and MacPherson, JJ,) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT,

This is a suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act to enhance the rent of the tenant defendant, and to obtain additional rent for land which he is said to hold in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid by him.

The plaintiffs are the proprietors of an eight-annas share of the mehal to which the holding of the defendant appertains, and [696] the defendants 2 and 3 are proprietors of the remaining eight annas.

The plaint sets out that the plaintiffs and the co-sharer defendants are in joint possession by making separate collections; that the tenant defendant is in possession of a temporary ryoty jote of 218 bighas 15 cottahs at a variable rent of Rs. 95-7, which jote is recorded in the name of his father in the sheristah of the plaintiffs and of their co-sharers; that the land which the defendant really holds amounts to 242 bighas 1 chattack; that they are entitled to rent for the excess area and to enhanced rent for the land in the holding, the grounds on which enhancement is claimed being all those specified in s. 30 of the Tenancy Act. They accordingly pay that the entire rent may be assessed at Rs. 348-4-5, and that a moiety of this may be decreed to them on account of their share.

The tenant defendant pleaded inter alia that the plaintiffs being only fractional shareholders could not alone bring this suit either for enhanced or additional rent; that although the rent was paid separately to the plaintiffs and to their co-sharers in proportion to their respective shares, there was no separate tenancy under each; that he was not in possession of the quantity of land alleged; that the rent was less than that stated; and that his jotes were kaimi and mokarari and had been admitted to be so by the co-sharer defendants.

It appears that before the new Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation the plaintiffs had brought a suit to enhance the defendant's rent. This was dismissed on account of the invalidity of the notice of enhancement, but it was proved in that suit that the defendant was in possession of 242 bighas of land. It is only necessary for the purpose of this appeal to allude to three issues which the Courts had to determine. These were—1st—Could the plaintiffs maintain this suit as regards the enhanced rent?

2nd—Could they maintain it as regards the additional rent for the excess area?

3rd—Was the decision in the previous case conclusive as to the extent of land in the defendant’s possession?

The Munsif held that under s. 188 of the Tenancy Act the plaintiffs could not by themselves sue for enhanced rent, as in such a suit all the landlords must join, but that there was nothing to prevent their suing for the additional rent an account of the excess area. He further held that the question of the area of the land was res judicata by reason of the previous decision; and on these findings, and accepting the defendant’s evidence as to the prevailing rate, he gave the plaintiffs a modified decree. The Subordinate Judge, on the appeal of both parties, reversed the Munsif’s decision on the first of the issues referred to above, and, upholding it as regards the other two issues, remanded the case in order that the other questions which arose might be disposed of.

The defendant, who is the appellant before us, contends that the decision of the Subordinate Judge on all the three issues is wrong. We think the Munsif was right and the Subordinate Judge wrong in the construction of s. 188. That section is as follows:—“When two or more persons are joint landlords anything which the landlord is under this Act required or authorised to do must be done either by both or all those persons acting together, or by an agent authorised to act on behalf of both or all of them.” Section 28 provides that the rent of an occupancy ryot, when paid in money, shall not be enhanced except as provided by the Act; and the following sections prescribe the mode of enhancement, the circumstances under which, and the extent to which, it may be made. As regards the mode, it may be by contract subject to certain stringent conditions, or by suit; and s. 30, which relates to a suit, commences as follows:—“The landlord of a holding held at a money rent by an occupancy ryot may, subject to the provisions of this Act, institute a suit to enhance the rent on one or more of the following grounds (namely).” Section 188 is therefore, as one of the provisions of the Act, imported into s. 30, and the only question seems to be whether the plaintiffs and their co-sharers are joint landlords of the holding within the meaning of s. 188. It is, clear, we think, that the suit must be to enhance the rent of the entire holding, and that the suit must be brought by all the joint landlords, the landlord being the person or persons immediately under whom a tenant holds.

The allegations in the plaint show pretty clearly that the plaintiffs are not the sole landlords of the holding in question. It forms part of an undivided estate, of which they are only fractional proprietors, and they are only entitled to receive a fraction of the entire rent payable. Whether they have joint or separate sheristas, the holding is recorded as one holding bearing one entire rent. This rent would be payable jointly to all the landlords (in this case the proprietors) but for an arrangement by which they collected separately their respective shares. It has been held, however, and it is only necessary to cite as authority the Full Bench case of Guni Mahomed v. Moran (1), that such an arrangement does not give rise to a separate tenancy, and that the original tenancy under all the landlords still continues. The case has indeed proceeded throughout on the understanding that the plaintiffs and their co-sharers were joint landlords, the only question being whether s. 188 applied. In our opinion it does apply, and was intended to apply to a case like this. So far therefore, as the enhancement is concerned, the suit will not lie at the instance of the plaintiffs alone.

(1) 4 C. 96.

We think also that the suit for additional rent on account of the excess land will not, as framed, lie. It is true that s. 52 differs from
s. 30 in this, that it merely declares the liability of the tenant to pay additional rent, and the circumstances which the Court should take into consideration if a suit it brought to obtain it, and that it does not expressly convey any authority to the landlord to bring a suit or import the provisions of s. 188. But the same principle applies alike to a claim for enhanced rent and to a claim for additional rent. The land, which is said to be in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid, has been held, rightly or wrongly, as part of the original holding. There is here no allegation that it has been taken by trespass. If a decree is obtained, the excess land will be annexed to the land of the original holding, and the additional rent will be added to the original rent. There will be no new holding created. If, therefore, some of several joint landlords cannot enhance the rent of the original holding, they cannot, it seems to us, any the more add to that rent in any other way, and they cannot increase the area of the holding any more than they can reduce it.
The right of some of several co-sharers to collect separately their share of the entire rent of an undivided holding is quite distinct. It rests on an arrangement between the co-sharers and the tenants as to the mode in which the entire rent shall be collected, but which preserves intact the original tenancy both as regards the area of the holding and the rent paid. We cannot, therefore, see the analogy, which both a Munsif and the Subordinate Judge find to exist, between a suit for rent and a suit for additional rent when the parties suing are some only of several co-sharers.

For the reasons stated we think the suit is not maintainable by the plaintiffs, and it is unnecessary, therefore, to determine the remaining point, viz., whether the question of area is res judicata, by reason of the former decision. We therefore decree the appeal, reverse the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

A Court has no jurisdiction, in execution of a decree, to sell property over which it had no territorial jurisdiction at the time it passed the order of sale.

The decree-holder at a sale under a mortgage decree purchased the mortgaged property with leave of the Court. Before the order of sale passed the mortgaged property had been transferred by an order of Government to the jurisdiction of another Court. Held by the Full Bench:—That the sale must be set aside as being without jurisdiction.

In this case one Prem Chand Dey, an assignee of a mortgage over certain properties at that time within the jurisdiction [700] of the Munsif of Bishenpur, obtained in the Court of the Munsif of Bishenpur by consent a decree under s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act against the mortgagor. This decree provided that the judgment-debtor should pay the sum due under the mortgage by the 12th April 1887, and in default the mortgaged property should be sold. Execution of this decree was taken out in 1887 against the judgment-debtor, and in 1888 the mortgaged property was sold, the decree-holder himself, with leave of the Court, being the purchaser thereof. An objection was then raised by the judgment-debtor that inasmuch as the property was not within the jurisdiction of the Munsif of Bishenpur, but had by an order of Government been transferred with other lands to the jurisdiction of another Munsif, the sale was invalid. This transfer from one jurisdiction to another took place about two months, before the institution of the suit on this mortgage. The objection raised by the judgment-debtor was allowed by both the lower Courts. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court, and the case came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Prinsep and Mr. Justice Hill, who passed the following order:—“Two questions arise for our decision in this second appeal: first, whether in the course of proceedings in execution to set aside a sale held in execution of a decree it is competent to the debtor to raise for the first time an objection going to the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree, even to the validity of the decree itself. Next, whether, supposing that an objection to the validity of the decree itself is untenable in the proceedings in execution of that decree, the sale could properly be held by the Court which admittedly had not jurisdiction at the time that the sale took place over the lands which were to be sold. Our inclination is to disallow the first objection, and to hold that in the course of proceedings in execution of a decree it is not competent to a judgment-debtor for the first time to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit, and to ask to have the particular decree declared to be inoperative, although he has not objected to it in the appeal allowed by law. This, no doubt, is a point of great importance, on which it is necessary to have the decisions of the lower Courts uniform. But if we were to hold, as we are inclined to do, that this objection could not properly be raised in the present stage of the proceedings, we should feel bound to refer the matter for consideration by a Full Bench of this Court, because we are not disposed to agree with the view of the law expressed by another Division Bench in the case of Kartik Nath Pandey v. Tilukdari Lall (1). In our opinion a Court of Execution is not competent to sell properties under an order for sale passed under s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, if at the time when that sale is held that Court has no longer jurisdiction over the lands which it is proposed to sell. We think rather that, having regard to the terms of s. 223, cl. (e) of the Code of Civil Procedure, execution should be transferred to a Court having jurisdiction over the immovable property, and therefore alone competent to hold such sale. We therefore desire to have the opinion of a Full Bench of this Court on both the points in this case.”

Baboo Rash Behari Ghose (with him Baboo Nolini Ranjan Chatterji), for the appellant:—The objection to jurisdiction was not raised until the execution proceedings, and in that stage it comes too late; Sadasaiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (2). You cannot raise jurisdiction at a late stage of proceedings; Kandoth Mammi v. Neelaucherayil Abdu Kalandan (3). Manohar Bhivra v. Potanis (4). No consent even can give jurisdiction—Meenakshi Naidoo v. Subramaniya Sastri (5), Ledgard v. Bull (6).

The order must be accepted as valid and binding. The following cases show that you cannot raise the plea of jurisdiction at a late stage of the proceedings:—Modun Mohun Ghose Hazra v. Baroda Soondari Dasia (7), Bishenmun Singh v. Land Mortgage Bank of India (8), Ooma Soondaree Dossee v. Bepin Behary Roy (9), Radha Gobind Gosswami v. Ooma Soondaree Dossee (10), Naro Hari v. Anpurnabai (11). A somewhat similar case to the last is that of Revell v. Blake (12). I say that the jurisdiction of the Munsif is derived from the Civil Courts Act; he may try cases under [702] Rs. 1,000, but he cannot try a case of a person whose land is outside his jurisdiction. When the matter of jurisdiction is a question of fact, the Munsif will have jurisdiction, for the superior Courts will not interfere with the findings. See Brown v. Cocking (13), There is also a distinction between a voluntary and an involuntary submission to jurisdiction; you cannot after a voluntary submission turn round and question it. Ex parte Pratii (14). Where it is a voluntary submission it cannot be objected to. The Queen v. Judge of County Court of Shropshire (15), Broad v. Perkins (16), Latchman Pundeh v. Moddan Mohun Shye (17), and Maseyk v. Steel (18).

Baboo Srinath Dass, Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, and Baboo Shaumbed Chunder Dey, for the respondents, were not called upon.

The opinions of the Full Bench (Petheram, C. J., Prinsep, Pigot, O’Kinealy, and Ghose, JJ.) were as follows:

OPINIONS.

Petheram C. J., (Prinsep, Pigot, and O’Kinealy, JJ., concurring).—This was a suit brought on a mortgage of 139 bighas of land forming part of mauza Bouridanga, Gopinathpur. It was brought in the Court of the Munsif of Bishenpur, and by consent it was decreed that the debtor should pay the mortgage-debt by the end of Choir 1293, and, in default, that the mortgaged property should be sold. Execution was taken out in 1887, and on the debtor paying Rs. 60, the execution proceedings were struck off. Execution was again sued out in 1888, when the property was sold and purchased on the 21st May by the decree-holder for Rs. 50. It has been found by both Courts that at the time the suit was brought, and when the order for sale was passed, the mortgaged property was wholly within the jurisdiction of the Munsif of Bankura, and not within the territorial jurisdiction of the Munsif of Bishenpur, who executed the decree.

Both Courts have refused to confirm the sale; and the Division Bench of this Court, which heard the case in appeal, has asked our opinion on the following question, viz., whether a Court in execution of decree is competent to sell property, if, at the time the sale [703] is held, the Court has no longer jurisdiction over the land which it is proposed to sell.

We are of opinion that the Court has no such jurisdiction. By s. 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure, suits for the recovery of immoveable property, or for the determination of any other right or interest in immoveable property must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate. This shows that the object of the Code is to limit the territorial jurisdiction of the Courts in regard to the property that they are entitled to deal with. The case of Kamini Soondari Chowdhvani v. Kali Proshunno Ghose (1) strongly supports this opinion. In that litigation a suit for foreclosure relating to lands in the 24-Pergunnahs was dismissed in the 24-Pergunnahs Court, and an action upon a covenant in the mortgage-deed relating to lands in Nuddea was also dismissed in the Nuddea Court. On appeal the High Court upheld the decision of the Nuddea Court, but decreed the appeal made from the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, and, remanding the latter case, directed that Court to determine certain questions relating to the village of Alumpur, within the district of Nuddea. Against that decree there was an appeal to the Privy Council, and their Lordships set aside the decree on the broad ground that the High Court in its Appellate capacity was not in a position to give jurisdiction to the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, so as to enable the latter Court to deal with a case commenced and prosecuted in Nuddea relating to lands in that district. It would seem, therefore, that the Courts in this country have no power to determine any right or interest in immoveable property lying wholly outside their local jurisdiction. Nor does the argument in favour of the extended jurisdiction of the Courts in the mofussil based on s. 223 appear to us to be supported by that section. So far as the Procedure Code is concerned, execution of a decree is only a continuation of the suit, and there appears no legitimate reason why a

(1) 12 I. A. 215 = 12 C. 225.
Court in the later stage of a suit should have greater powers than it possessed at its institution. But however that may be, a comparison of s. 223 with the last paragraph of s. 649 seems to us to indicate that territorial jurisdiction is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree.

[704] We are, therefore, of opinion that the Court below not having, at the time it passed the order of sale, territorial jurisdiction over any portion of the property sold, and this being a suit between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, that the Judge was right in refusing to confirm the sale.

In the result the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Ghose, J.—I agree in holding that the Munsif of Bishenpur had no jurisdiction to sell the property, and that therefore he was right (and so also was the Judge of the appellate Court) in refusing to confirm the sale. And this, I should think, he was bound and competent to do, when he found that he had no jurisdiction to hold the sale. I do not understand that the last portion of the judgment just delivered by the Chief Justice is intended to decide, or suggest, that if a third party, and not the decree-holder, were the purchaser, the Courts below would not be right in making the order they did, and it is therefore not necessary to discuss that matter in this case.

MOHINI MOHAN DAS (Judgment-debtor), Petitioner v. SATIS CHANDRA ROY and others (Decree-holders), Opposite-party.*

[7th March, 1890.]

Valuation of suit—Suit for possession and mesne profits—Value of the original suit—Act XII of 1887, s. 21.

In a suit for possession and mesne profits, the value of the original suit for the purposes of s. 21 of Act XII of 1887 depends not merely upon the value of the property sought to be recovered, but also upon the value or amount of the profits recoverable.

[R., 31 C. 365 (367)=8 C.W.N. 223; 34 C. 95+ (F.B.)=6 C.L.J. 255=11 C.W.N. 1133; D., 21 C. 550 (554).]

SATIS CHANDRA ROY and others (the opposite party) brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca against Mohini Mohan Das and Mary Pogose (the petitioners) and another for the recovery of possession of certain immovable property and for mesne profits, but did not state the amount they [705] claimed on account of mesne profits: They valued the suit at Rs. 4,000 and paid the court-fee on that amount, undertaking to pay a further court-fee on any sum that might be found due to them. They obtained a decree for possession, which directed that mesne profits should be ascertained in execution. There was no appeal from this decree. In the execution proceedings mesne profits were assessed at Rs. 6,188-2-0, upon which sum an additional court-fee was paid. On

* Civil Rule No. 1706 of 1889 against the order of Baboo Krishna Chandra Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 24th of August 1889.
the 24th August 1889 the Subordinate Judge passed an order disallowing the petitioners' objections as to their liability under this assessment.
From this order the petitioners appealed to the District Judge of Dacca, who returned the memorandum of appeal on the ground that the appeal lay to the High Court and not to him. Thereupon, the petitioners obtained from Norris and Ghose, JJ., a rule in the following terms:—

"Let a rule issue upon the opposite party to show cause before this Court why the District Judge of Dacca should not be directed to hear the appeal in this petition specified, or why this petition should not be registered as a memorandum of appeal to this Court from the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 24th August 1889, and left the record be sent for."

On the rule coming up for argument,
Baboo Mohini Mohan Roy and Baboo Lal Mohan Das, for the petitioners.

Baboo Promotho Nath Sen, for the opposite party.

The contentions of the parties appear from the judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ameer Ali, JJ.) which, omitting the facts, was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The question involved in this rule is whether, under s. 21 of Act XII of 1887, the appeal of the judgment-debtors lies in this Court or in the Court of the District Judge.

For the petitioners it is contended that the expression "value of the original suit" in s. 21 of Act XII of 1887 means the valuation fixed upon by the plaintiff at the outset, without regard to the value of the relief sought or the amount of the mesne profits that might be found due to the plaintiff; and it has been urged that to hold that the appeal from the decree for possession should lie to the District Judge, and that the appeal on the question of mesne profits should lie to this Court, would involve an anomaly.

For the decree-holders it has been contended that the value of the suit depends not merely upon the value of the property sought to be recovered, but also upon the value or amount of the profits recoverable.
We think this contention is correct.

Under s. 50 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff, in a suit for mesne profits or for money to be ascertained on the taking of unsettled accounts, is allowed to value his claim approximately. Accordingly when a claim for mesne profits is joined to a claim for the recovery of land, the plaintiff may either fix a nominal or approximate value on the latter part of his claim, or not fix any value at all. In either case the amount of mesne profits is usually reserved for enquiry after the preliminary decree for possession. When the enquiry as to the amount of mesne profits recoverable is reserved, the decree for possession is only a partial decree; the final decree is made only after the mesne profits have been ascertained. Now, in such cases the value of the suit is made up of two elements, viz., the value of the property claimed and the amount of the mesne profits. Should the plaintiff put any approximate value upon his claim for mesne profits, the value of his suit for the purpose of determining the forum of appeal from the preliminary decree would be constituted of two known elements, viz., the value of the property plus the assessed amount of mesne profits, and the appeal would lie to this Court or to the District Judge's Court, as the value of the two elements together exceeds Rs. 5,000 or falls below it. But when no amount is fixed approximately or nominally upon the mesne profits, it is an unknown quantity, and the value of the suit, so far as the appeal from the preliminary decree for possession is concerned, is the value of the property alone, which would determine the forum of appeal. When the amount of mesne profits has been ascertained, the value of the original suit is the value of the property sued for, plus the mesne profits, and the appeal would lie accordingly.

We do not think there is any anomaly involved in this conclusion. We think that the "value of the original suit" depends on, and is involved in, the value of the relief sought; and when once the final decree ascertaining the amount of mesne profits is made, the precise value of the suit becomes ascertained. Until then it is a variable quantity. To hold otherwise would be to declare [707] that the Legislature intended that only one component part of the value should be taken into consideration for determining the forum of appeal and not the other.

We accordingly hold that, under s. 21 of Act XII of 1887, the appeal in this case lies to this Court and not to the District Judge, and we direct that the appeal of the petitioners be registered accordingly. No costs of the rule.

C. D. P. Rule made absolute.

This was a rule under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act of 1887.

Maizuddin Biswas and another instituted a suit for damages in the Court of Small Causes at Furreedpore against Krishna Prosad Nag and others (among whom were the petitioner), making their co-sharers pro forma defendants. The plaintiffs alleged that they and their co-sharers were the lessees of a plot of re-formed chur land called Chur Madhubdia in pergunnah Pas Pashur, and that in the month of Bhadro 1293 (August-September 1886) the principal defendants had trespassed on their land and forcibly cut and carried away the grass growing on 50 bighas thereof. The plaintiffs claimed from the principal defendants the sum of Rs. 250 as damages in respect of their share of the grass that [708] had been cut and carried away. The principal defendants led,
The Judge found as a fact that the principal defendants had no right or interest in the land, that they were trespassers and had wrongfully cut and carried away the grass growing on the land. Accordingly, on 29th August 1889, the Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 240 with costs against the principal defendants except three of them.

Thereupon, these defendants moved the High Court under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, and obtained a rule calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why the decree of the 29th August should not be set aside.

On the rule coming up for argument—

Baboo Srinath Das and Baboo Grijja Sunker Mozumdar, for the petitioners.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Harendra Nath Mookerjee, for the opposite party.

The contents of the parties appear from the judgment of the High Court (Tottenham and Ameer Ali, J.), which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The question involved in this rule is whether, having regard to the provisions of art. 31 of the second schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Court Act (Act IX of 1887), a suit for damages for the forcible cutting and carrying away of grass is cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. The plaintiffs instituted this suit in the Small Cause Court of Furreedpore upon the allegation that they were the lessees of a piece of land, and that the defendants had wrongfully trespassed on the same and cut and carried away the grass growing thereon.

The defendants had, among other pleas, raised an objection to the jurisdiction of the Court, and also denied plaintiffs' title to the land. The Judge, however, found as a fact, that the defendants had no sort of connection with the land in question, and that they had wrongfully taken the grass as alleged in the plaint, and accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' claim. The defendants, thereupon, obtained a rule from a Division Bench of this Court under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, calling upon the plaintiffs to show cause why the decree of the Judge should not be set aside. Upon the hearing of the rule it was contended on behalf of the defendants that in view of the last clause of the article already mentioned, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It is said that the words "profits of immoveable property . . . ." wrongfully removed by the defendant" include crops or produce of land forcibly carried away. We are of opinion that art. 31 does not except from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes suits for damages for trespass and for the forcible appropriation of crops or the produce of land. A reference to the words of arts. 30 and 31 will render this perfectly clear. Article 30 excludes from the cognizance of the Small Cause Courts a suit for an account of property and for its due administration under decree, and art. 31 declares "any other suit for an account, including a suit by a mortgagor after the mortgage has been satisfied to recover surplus collections received by the mortgagee, and a suit for the profits of immoveable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant," to be likewise beyond the jurisdiction of Courts of Small Causes. From the collocation of the articles it is manifest that the suits referred to in the last clause of art. 31 are of the same nature, ejusdem generis, as those previously described. That clause, in our opinion, applies to cases where a person under some claim of title has received the profits of immoveable property and the rightful owner, on the establishment of his title, seeks to recover the same. The article clearly means to treat such a suit as one for an account. An examination of s. 6 of Act XI of 1865 and of some of the cases decided thereunder would show that suits for damages for trespass on land were never intended to be excepted from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. Section 6 of Act XI of 1865 provided that "claims for money due on bond or other contract, or for rent, or for personal property, or for the value of such property, or for damages" with certain limitations not necessary to mention here, should be cognizable by the Courts of Small Causes.

In the case of Sungram Singh v. Joggun Singh (1), no doubt it was held that a suit for assessed mesne profits within the pecuniary limit prescribed in the section, "being a suit for damages," [710] was cognizable by the Small Cause Court, but that case has never been followed. It would seem that the Legislature, in order to remove all doubts on the point, expressly exempted suits for mesne profits from the cognizance of the Courts of Small Causes. It may be remarked also that the language of the last clause of art. 31 is uniform with that of art. 109 of the Limitation Act, which relates to suits for mesne profits; and this fact, too, would indicate that the Legislature, in art. 31 of the 2nd schedule of the Small Cause Court Act, was providing for the same class of suits. Under s. 6 of the old Act a suit for the wrongful reaping and carrying off the produce of lands was held to be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes—Daur Sinha v. Raghunundun Sinha (2). In the case of Darma Ayyan v. Rajapa Ayyan (3) it was alleged by the plaintiff that he and the first defendant were in joint possession of a parcel of land, and that his share of the produce for the year 1887 was carried away by the first defendant with the aid of the second defendant. He accordingly claimed Rs. 187 as the value of his share of the produce. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff had no right to the possession of the land. In the face of this objection the High Court held that the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. In another case, Manappa Mudali v. McCarthy (4), decided by a Full Court consisting of Turner, C. J., Innes, Kernan, and Ayyar, J.J., it was conceded that a suit for damages for the wrongful cutting and carrying away of bamboos or any other produce of land was cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and the only question discussed was whether an objection as to the title of the plaintiff to the land would oust the jurisdiction. It was held that the jurisdiction is not ousted when the objection is raised incidentally.

We hold that the present Act has altered in no way the cognizability by Small Cause Courts of suits for trespass on land and the wrongful appropriation of produce, and that the present suit was properly maintainable in the Court of Small Causes.

The other objections taken in the petition have not been pressed, nor have they any force. The rule accordingly is discharged with costs.

[711] FULL BENCH.

Before Sir W. Corner Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Pigot, Mr. Justice O’Kinealy, and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Punchanun Bundopadhyya, minor, by his mother and guardian Kamini Debi (Plaintiff) v. Rabia Bibi and othees (Defendants).* [18th June, 1890]

Execution of decree—Claim to attached property—Questions arising between the parties or their representatives—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 234, 244, 278—283.

Held, by the Full Bench:—An objection taken by a person who has become the representative of the judgment-debtor in the course of the execution of a decree to the propriety that the property which the decree has been passed to discharge only under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not the proper subject-matter of a separate suit by a party against whom an adverse order may have been passed under ss. 280 and 281, as provided by s. 283.

Held, by the majority of the Full Bench [Prinsep, O’Kinealy, and Ghose, JJ.]:—Sections 278 to 283 of the Civil Procedure Code do not cover the case of any contest between parties to the suit or their representatives, on the record of the suit in regard to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of a decree. The effect of the decision between such parties is that the right to enforce or oppose execution is determined under ss. 244, subject to the result of such appeal as is allowed by law.

Per Prinsep and O’Kinealy, JJ:—Section 244 should be liberally construed to prevent litigation.

This was a reference to a Full Bench made by a Division Bench. (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) on the 12th July 1889; the referring order was as follows:—

"The predecessor of the plaintiff obtained a decree on the 28th of December 1881, on a mortgage bond, against the husband of defendant No. 1. In execution a portion only of the mortgage debt was satisfied by sale of the mortgaged properties. During the proceedings in execution the mortgagor-debtor died, and in the course of further proceedings taken in execution of that decree after his death against his widow as his representative, [712] certain property was attached as forming portion of his estate. The widow objected on the ground that this property had been sold to her on the 1st January 1883, that is, after the decree and before the attachment. Her objection was allowed, and the property was released from attachment. The decree-holder now sues to have it declared that the sale was fraudulent and collusive; that the property was that of the judgment-debtor, and therefore liable in satisfaction of the decree against him.

* Full Bench on Appeal from Original Decree No. 194 of 1888 against the decree of Babu Madhub Chunder Chuckerbait, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 31st of May 1888.
An objection was taken and allowed by the Court of first instance that the suit was barred by s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, inasmuch as the matter could be properly tried only in execution of the decree as between the decree-holder and the defendant No. 2, the representative of the original debtor, as it related to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. That is the only point which has as yet been heard by us on appeal. The decisions of this Court and the other High Courts have not been uniform in respect of this very important point, on which the case law may be said to commence with the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Chowdhry Wahed Ali v. Jumace (1). These cases are set out in the judgment of the lower Court, but we would add to them two more recent cases—Raj Rup Singh v. Ram Golam Roy (2) and Gour Moni Dabee v. Jagut Chandra Audhikari (3), decided by another Division Bench on the 21st May last. We think it most desirable that the expression of an opinion by a Full Bench on this point should be obtained so as to ensure the uniformity of procedure in the future, and we may add that we have no hesitation in following in this case the rule laid down in Raj Rup Singh v. Ram Golam Roy (2). We therefore refer, for the consideration of a Full Bench, the following point:—Whether an objection taken by one who has become the representative of the original judgment-debtor in the course of execution of a decree, to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own private property, and not held by him as such representative, is a matter cognizable only under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not the proper subject-matter of a separate [713] suit by a party against whom an adverse order may have been passed under ss. 280 and 281 as provided by s. 283."

Baboo Srinath Doss (with him Baboo Tarruch Nath Sen and Baboo Benode Behari Mukerji), for the appellant, Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Lal Mohun Das, for the respondents.

The following cases were referred to in the course of the arguments:

PETHERAM, C. J.—My answer to the question put to the Full Bench is, that an objection taken by one who has become the representative of the original judgment-debtor in the course of [714] the execution of a decree, to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own private property and not held by him as such representative, is a matter cognizable only under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not the proper subject-matter of a separate suit by a party against whom an adverse order may have been passed under ss. 280 and 281 as provided by s. 283.

Section 233 provides that when a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully executed, the decree-holder may apply to execute it against the legal representative or the deceased, and the section goes on to limit the liability of the legal representative to assets of the deceased which have come to his hands, and gives the Court power to compel him to produce accounts, so that under s. 234 a question may arise between the decree-holder and the legal representative of the deceased as to whether the legal representative has or has had assets of the deceased which are liable to answer the decree-holder's claim.

In the present case, although the question takes the form of an enquiry whether certain property, which is admittedly in the hands of the person against whom an order has been made under s. 234, came to her as the heiress of the deceased or by some other title, it is in fact the very question contemplated by s. 234 whether the legal representative has or has had assets of the deceased, and so is liable to satisfy the claim of the decree-holder.

Section 244 provides that all questions between the parties to the suit, or their representatives, relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree, and not by separate suit; and I think that this question under s. 234, whether the legal representative has or has had assets, must be a question between him and the decree-holder relating to the execution of the decree, and so comes within the operation of s. 244. Mr. Justice Wilson, in the case of Raj Rup Singh v. Ram Gulam Roy (1), has taken the same view of the section, and after an elaborate examination of the authorities comes to the conclusion that they support that view, and it is not necessary for me to add more than that I entirely agree with his judgment.

[715] Our attention has been called to a reported case of later date than the judgment of Mr. Justice Wilson, that of Gour Mono Debi v. Jugut Chandra Audhikari (2). In that case the learned Judges, Tottenham and Banerjee, J.J., say that questions raised under the provisions of s. 234 must be decided under s. 244. The other questions which were discussed in their judgment do not arise in this reference.

Pigot, J.—I agree that upon the authorities the matter was one cognizable under s. 244, and that therefore a separate suit will not lie.

O'Kinealy, J.—It appears from the record of this case that the predecessors of the plaintiff obtained a mortgage decree on the 28th December 1831 against the husband of defendant No. 1, and that during the proceedings in execution the mortgagor died, and the defendant Rabia Bibi was placed on the record as his representative. Subsequently certain property was attached as forming a portion of the mortgagor's estate, and on the widow objecting, her objection was allowed and the property released from attachment. This order is to be found at page 46 of the paper-book, and runs as follows:

"The oral and documentary evidence offered by the claimant proves that she is in possession of the properties claimed from before the date of attachment, under a kobala executed by her late husband in part satisfaction of her den-mohur.

"The decree-holder has failed to rebut this evidence. I accordingly allow the claim. The property claimed shall be released from attachment. Vakeel's fee, Rs. 20, and other costs of the claimant, shall be borne by the decree-holder."

In this state of facts the learned Judges of the Division Bench, who heard this case, have referred to us for consideration the following question:

"Whether an objection taken by one who has become the representative of the original judgment-debtor in the course of execution of a decree, to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own private property, and not held by him as such representative, is a matter cognizable only under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not the proper subject-matter of a separate suit by a party against whom an adverse order may have been passed under ss. 280 and 281, as provided by s. 283."

Section 244 (c) states that a Court executing a decree shall determine, among other questions—

"Any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree."

This section, with the exception of the words "or their representatives," is the same as s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, and the meaning to be attached to it has been the subject of discussion on several occasions before their Lordships of the Privy Council.

In the case of Wahed Ali v. Jumae (1), the facts were as follows:—A suit for possession of immoveable property and mesne profits was brought against certain defendants among whom were Wahed Ali and his daughter Mussummat Jumae. Wahed Ali died, and an application was made in January 1856 to have his son, Mullick Inayet Hossein, his daughter, Mussummat Jumae, and others, made defendants, as being his heirs and representatives. Ultimately in the High Court the claim against Mussummat Jumae personally was dismissed, but possession with mesne profits was decreed against her in her representative capacity.

In execution of the decree Mussummat Jumae's private property was sold notwithstanding her objections, and Wahed Ali became the purchaser. This sale was confirmed on the 15th March 1864, and after its confirmation Mussummat Jumae brought a suit to cancel the sale held in the execution proceedings and to obtain her property. The case came before a Full Bench of this Court, and the majority of the Judges held that Mussummat Jumae was only a party in her representative capacity, and that the Legislature only intended that parties in their own right, and not parties in their representative character, should come within the purview of s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861. They therefore decided that a regular suit would lie. This case was appealed to the Privy Council, and their Lordships held that where a decree was passed against a person in his representative capacity, he was a party to the suit in respect of any question that might arise [717] between him and the other parties relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861. So far therefore it has been settled that a party sued in this representative capacity and against whom a decree has been obtained is, in regard to any claim that he may make in his own right to property attached, a party within the meaning of s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861.

The next case in which an interpretation was put under s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, was that of Abedunnessa v. Amirunnessa, in the Privy Council (1). That was a case in which, after the death of the decree-holder, a contest arose between two parties Wajid Ali and another as to which of them was to be treated as his legal representative. At last it was held that Wajid Ali was the representative. A suit was then instituted to declare that Wajid Ali was not the legal representative, and for an injunction to prohibit execution of the decree in the previous suit. So far as the present case is concerned, it is only necessary to state what their Lordships of the Privy Council said in regard to s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861.

They say,—

"Their Lordships quite accede to the view of the learned Counsel for the appellant, that this section was intended to enable questions to be tried in execution cases which could not have been so tried before, and to provide, as might have been expected, an appeal from decisions in such trials; but the question narrows itself to this, whether the present case comes under these words: 'any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of the decree.' There must be two conditions to give the Court jurisdiction. The question must be between parties to the suit, and must relate to the execution of the decree." (2)

They then further add, by way of pointing out the rules which should guide a Judge in deciding whether a person was a party or not, that Wajid Ali "was in no proper sense of the word a party to the suit. No rights of Wajid Ali were determined or considered in the suit. He was not on the record when judgment was given, nor when the decree was made. He subsequently applied [718] for execution of the decree; but it appears to their Lordships impossible to say that a person by merely applying for execution of the decree thereby constitutes himself a party to the suit," under s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861.

Since then, the words, "or their representatives," have been added to the section by the Legislature, and following the rules laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council, it appears to me that s. 244, embraces all cases where there is an existing decree, in which the contest is between parties whose names were on the record when the judgment was given or the decree made, or their representatives, and where some right has been determined or considered between the parties or their representatives, such right relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. In the present case all these conditions are fulfilled. I therefore think that, unless we were to unduly narrow the scope of a section, which should be liberally construed in order to prevent litigation, the question arising in this case was one under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(1) 4 I.A. 66 = 2 C. 327.  (2) 4 I.A. 66 (74).
The next point is, whether this claim can be considered to be a claim coming within the provisions of ss. 278 to 283 of the Civil Procedure Code. These sections correspond to s. 246 and the following sections of Act VIII of 1859, the scope of which was twice considered in Full Bench decisions of this Court. In Wahed Ali v. Jumace (1), it was decided that ss. 246 and 247 did not apply to a case in which the party on the record, in a representative capacity, claimed the release of property attached in execution of the decree on the ground that it belonged to himself. In the course of his judgment, Sir Barnes Peacock states:

"If the plaintiff had made an application under that section" (meaning s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, "her claim must have been disallowed, for the property was in her possession, on her own account, and not on account of any third person."

In s. 281 of the present Code, it is stated—

"If the Court is satisfied that the property was, at the time it was attached, in possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property, and not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy [719] of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, the Court shall disallow the claim."

There is no difference between the present law and Act VIII of 1859, so far as the present reference is concerned; and I think, adopting the reasoning in the case of Wahed Ali v. Jumace, that ss. 278 to 283 have no application to such a claim; but further, I am of opinion that ss. 278 to 283 have no reference to any claim raised in execution of a decree between parties on the record or their representatives. Section 278 states—

"If any claim be preferred to, or any objection be made to, the attachment of any property attached in execution of a decree, on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection, with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant or objector, and in all other respects as if he was a party to the suit."

In other words, it suggests that a party making the claim is not a party to the suit; for if the meaning of the law is that parties to the suit may, under certain conditions, make a claim to the property attached, the latter portion of this section would have no meaning. No doubt it has been laid down that under s. 280, if the result of the investigation be that the Court is satisfied that the property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor, or of some person in trust for him, the property must be released; and it has been argued that this shows that a trustee in possession, who has unsuccessfully put forward in an execution proceeding, the title of a person other than the judgment-debtor, as the beneficial owner, may subsequently bring a regular suit to establish his right to or interest in the property. I think on consideration, that this argument is not sound. The section itself does not state who are to be the parties to the execution proceeding, but points out what should guide a Judge in deciding the contest; and that this is the true construction is shown by the concluding portion of s. 278. A similar interpretation was placed upon s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, in the case of Nga Tha Yah v. Burn (2). In that case the Court decided that it is for the claimant, and not for the execution-creditor, to begin, and he must show his own title to the property and not the title of any third party with whom he has no connection. Sir Barnes Peacock, in referring to s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, indirectly shows that, in his opinion, the claim must have been a claim of a party not on the record. He says:—"In the early part of the section, the Court is directed to investigate the claim with the like powers, as if the claimant had been originally made a defendant to the suit, and also with such powers as regards the summoning of the original defendant as are contained in s. 220. It is said that the words are remarkable; they are not that the claim is to be investigated as if the claimant were a party to the suit, but 'as if the claimant had been originally a defendant to the suit,' that is, the suit in which the execution issued. But I take it that the meaning really is 'that the Court is to have the same powers of investigation as if the claimant was a party to a suit which would give them power to summon the claimant and to dispose of the case against him, if he should refuse to attend,'"(1).

Again, in dealing with the nature of the claim which must be preferred, he states—"If the Nazir were to seize goods, believing them to be in the actual possession of a defendant, the claimant would have to prove that the Nazir had seized the goods of the claimant as the goods of the judgment-debtor. In an ordinary case, if the Sheriff wrongly seizes goods, the real owner brings an action against the Sheriff for seizing goods belonging to him. In such a case the claimant would have to begin and prove that the goods belonged to him. If he could show that the goods were in his actual possession, that would be prima facie evidence that they were his property, and not the property of the judgment-debtor. So, if he could prove that the judgment-debtor was his servant, and had the goods in his possession as his servant, that would prove his case. But no one would contend that the Sheriff would have to begin and prove that the goods belonged to the debtor. Even if they were not the debtor's, the claimant would not have a right to interfere unless he proved that they belonged to him, or were in his possession."(2).

I think, therefore, that ss. 278 to 283 of the present Code do not cover the case of any contest between parties to the suit, or [721] their representatives on the record of the suit, in regard to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree, whether the claim set up be a claim on the ground that the property is that of a person on the record or belongs to any third party. It seems to me that the effect of the decisions between such parties is, that the right to enforce or oppose execution against the property in dispute is decreed and finally determined under s. 244, subject to the result of such appeal as is given to them by law.

Prinsep, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Ghose, J.—I am also of opinion that an objection taken by a person, who has become the representatives of a judgment-debtor in the course of the execution of a decree, to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own property, is a matter, cognizable only under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and not the subject-matter of a separate suit. And I agree with Mr. Justice O'Kinealy in thinking that the matter does not fall within ss. 278 to 283, and that the effect of a decision upon the objection of the representative is that the question of the liability or otherwise of the property to satisfy the decree is determined under s. 244, subject to the result of such appeal as is allowed by law.

GOBIND SAHU and others (Defendants) v. LUCHMI NARAIN ROY and others (Plaintiffs).* [2nd April, 1890]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 106—Decision of a Revenue Officer under—Res judicata.

A question heard and decided by a Revenue Officer under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is res judicata between the same parties in a subsequent suit in a Civil Court.

[Rel., 2 C.W.N. 491 (493); R., 21 C. 38 (F.B.); 30 C. 339; D., 21 C. 378 (381); 22 C. 241 (219); 23 C. 257 (261); 5 Ind. Cas. 153.]

UNDER an order passed under s. 101 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, a survey was made and a record of rights prepared in respect of mouzah Bishunpore Soamai, also called mouzah Memari Khandhi, Chuckla Nai, pergana Bisara, in the district of Mozufferpore. During the preparation of the record of rights one bigha five cottas of land situate within this mouzah were claimed by Luchmi Narain Roy, Jodu Nundun Roy, and Rambelas Roy (hereinafter called the Roys) as mal or rent-paying land appertaining to their estate, while Gokhul Sahu and four others (hereinafter called the Sahus) claimed the land as part of the five bighas of rent-free brohmutter land purchased by them along with other properties under a deed of sale, dated 7th March 1883. After a full enquiry into the dispute between the Roys and the Sahus, the Revenue Officer, on 21st August 1886, by an order under s. 106 of the Act decided that this one bigha five cottas of land was the mal land of the Roys and liable to pay rent. Against this order the Sahus appealed under s. 108 to the Special Judge appointed under that section; and on 28th April 1887 the Special Judge reversed the order of the Revenue Officer, holding that the land was the rent-free brohmutter land of the Sahus. From this decision of the Special Judge there was no second appeal; but both parties filed separate suits in the Civil Court.

On the 10th June 1887 the Sahus brought a suit (No. 339 of 1887) to recover from the Roys the sum of Rs. 59-10-9 as damages for having wrongfully cut and carried away their crops from this one bigha five cottas of land. The Roys alleged that the land was their mal land, and denied that the crops belonged to the Sahus. Suit No. 489 of 1887 was in respect of the same piece of land, and was instituted on the 7th July by the Roys against the Sahus and their vendors. In this suit the Roys alleged that the land was their mal land, and was situate within their putti; that they were in possession; and that neither the Sahus nor their vendors had ever been in possession of it. They further alleged that the Judge’s order of 28th April 1887 was made ex parte, and contended that it was illegal and ought to be set aside. Accordingly, they prayed for a declaration that the land was their mal land, for confirmation of possession, and that the Judge's order of 28th April 1887 should be set aside. The Sahus alleged that the land in suit was part of the five bighas of brohmutter land which they had purchased under a deed of sale, dated 7th March 1883, and that they had been in possession since the date of their purchase; that by a sanad, dated Kartick 1199 Fusli (October 1792), these five bighas of brohmutter land were granted to one Bahuran Misser, and that they had purchased them from the heirs of Bahuran Misser. They denied that the Roys or their predecessors in title had been in possession within 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, and contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Sahus also pleaded that the Judge's order of 28th April 1887 was a bar to the suit under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The two suits were tried together by the Munsif.

The only issue material to this report was whether the suit of the Roys was barred under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Munsif found that the sanad of Kartick 1199 Fusli (October 1792) had been granted by the predecessors in title of the Roys, but held that the Sahus had failed to prove that the land was their rent-free brohmutter land and that they had raised the crops in suit. He held that the suit of the Roys was not barred under s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code or by limitation; and that the land was the mal land of the Roys. Accordingly the Munsif dismissed the suit of the Sahus and decreed that of the Roys. This decision was affirmed by the Subordinate Judge.

The Sahus filed separate appeals in each case in the High Court.

Baboo Sreenath Banerjee, for the appellants.

Baboo Mannatha Nath Mitter, for the respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Pigot and Beverley, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

These appeals raise a very important question under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it is to be regretted that the facts out of which they arise are not more fully before us.

It would appear, however, that under the provisions of Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act a measurement was made and a record of rights prepared in respect of a certain local area within which the land in suit is situated. The terms of the order made under s. 101 of the Act and the particulars specified therein in accordance with s. 102 are not on the record; but it is admitted that one party (whom we shall call the Roys) claimed this land as rent-paying land appertaining to their estate, while the other party (whom we may call the Sahus) claimed it as their rent-free brohmutter land. This dispute having been enquired into by the Revenue Officer under ss. 106 and 107 of the Act, he decided that the land was mal land and liable to pay rent.

Against this decision the Sahus appealed under s. 108 to the Special Judge appointed under that section—the Special Judge, it may be mentioned, being the District Judge of Tirhoot, and he reversed the decision of the Revenue Officer and held that the land was rent-free.

From that decision there was no second appeal.

Both parties, however, filed suits in the Civil Court. The Sahus sued the Roys for damages for having cut and carried the crops of the land, while the Roys sued the Sahus to set aside the Judge's decree and for a declaration that the land was mal and not the brohmutter of the Sahus. The two suits were tried together by the Munsif, who gave the Roys a decree and dismissed the suit of the Sahus. On appeal this decision was affirmed by the Subordinate Judge.

One point which was taken and argued in both the lower Courts was that the decision of the Special Judge under s. 108 of the Act operated as res judicata between the parties, and that no suit would lie to set it aside; and this the point that has been pressed upon us in second appeal No. 738.

The question is one of very great difficulty, having regard to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the subject. That Act nowhere defines with sufficient clearness the extent, scope, and object of the so-called record of rights. Section 102 in truth specifies certain particulars which may "either without, or in addition to other particulars," be recorded. The particulars there specified are such as pre-suppose the existence of a tenancy —such as the name and class of the tenant, the land held by him, the rent payable therefor and the nature of that rent, and the special conditions and incidents (if any) of the tenancy. If no relationship of landlord and tenant existed in respect of any particular piece of land, it seems to us to be at least doubtful whether any [725] entry could be recorded regarding it unless the order made under s. 101 specially directed such entry to be made as one of the "other particulars" not specified in s. 102.

In the present case we think we must take it upon the finding of the lower Courts that the Sahus are "tenants" within the meaning of the Act, and that the Revenue Officer was justified in making an entry regarding the land in suit.

By s. 3, cl. (3) a "tenant" is defined to mean "a person who holds land under another person, and is, or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to that person." Now the brohmutter sanad of Kartick 1199 F. S., under which the Sahus claim to hold, is found by the Munsif to have been granted by the predecessors of the Roys, and if genuine it operates as a special contract, but for which the Sahus would be liable to pay rent to the Roys. That being so, the Sahus, we think, are according to their own case tenants within the meaning of the Act, and the Revenue Officer therefore had jurisdiction to enter the particulars of the land in suit in his record of rights.

The next point is whether the Revenue Officer having heard and decided the dispute under s. 106, his decision will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought to try the same question in a Civil Court between the same parties.

In the case of Hurri Sunker Mukerjee v. Muktavam Patro (1) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that a judgment by a Collector in a suit under Act X of 1859 declaring the plaintiff entitled to assess rent upon land alleged by the defendant to be lakeraj is not conclusive in a subsequent suit between the same parties for arrears of rent under Ben. Act VIII of 1869. That decision was based on the principle that the decision of a Revenue Court on a question of title is no bar to the trial of the same question by the ordinary Civil Courts.

But by s. 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Revenue officer is directed to adopt the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of suits, and it is provided that his decision in every such proceeding shall have the force of a decree. It appears to us that these words were intended to invest him for the trial of these disputes with the powers of a Civil Court, and to give [726] to his decision the binding force of a decree of a Civil Court. This view is borne out, as it seems to us, by the two following sections. Section 108 gives the right of appeal against such decision to a special Judge to be appointed under that section and of second appeal to the High Court. Section 109 distinguishes between disputed and undisputed entries in the record, and while laying down that undisputed entries shall be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved, appears to treat the decision of disputed entries under ss. 106—108 as final.

We must confess that it is with considerable hesitation that we arrive at this result. The language of the Act is unfortunately vague; but we cannot suppose that it was the intention of the Legislature after providing for the trial of disputes regarding entries in the record of rights by the Code of Civil Procedure and by special appellate Court, that such disputes should be liable to be re-opened before the ordinary Civil Courts of the country.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the suit of the Roys was barred by s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Appeal No. 738 must be allowed, the decrees of the lower Courts are reversed and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

In appeal No. 691 we think that no ground for second appeal exists, and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Appeal No. 738 allowed.
Appeal No. 691 dismissed.

FULL BENCH,

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Pigot, Mr. Justice O'Kinealy, and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Radha Prosad Singh (Plaintiff) v. Bal Kowar Koeri (Defendant).* [2nd June, 1890.]

[727] In a suit for rent at the rate of Rs. 22-2 per annum the defence was that the yearly rent was not Rs. 22-2, but Rs. 18-10-6, and that the difference was made up of certain illegal cesses such as sarak, neg, and khuruch, which had been paid for a long time with the rent and without specification in the rent receipts. Both the lower Courts found that Rs. 18-10-6 was the defendant's asul jama.

Held by the Full Bench upon a review of the history of abwabs:—That the amounts sued for under the head of sarak, neg, and khuruch was abwabs and were therefore not recoverable, and that all additions to the actual rent under the denomination of abwabs are illegal, and any agreement to pay them is void.

* Full Bench reference on special Appeal No. 2101 of 1887 against the decree of the District Judge of Shahabad, dated the 25th April 1867, affirming the decree of the Munsi, First Court, Baxar, dated 30th December 1886.
Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1) dissented from.

Per Petheram, C. J.—The law, whether under the Regulations, or the Bengal Tenancy Act, or as laid down by the Privy Council in Tilukdhari Singh v. Chulhan Mahton (2), is the same, namely, that no imposition under any name whatever shall be recovered from the tenant for or on account of the occupation or tenure of the land, beyond the sum which has been fixed for rent, whether that sum has been paid by agreement or by judicial determination between the landlord and the tenant. Any contract, whether express or implied, to pay anything beyond that sum, under any name whatever for or in respect of the occupation of the land, cannot be enforced. The case of Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1) has been overruled by the Privy Council in Tilukdhari Singh v. Chulhan Mahton (2).

Per Ghose, J.—If in any given case the Court finds that any particular sum specified in the lease, or agreed to be paid, is a lawful consideration for the use and occupation of any land, that is to say, if it is really part of the rent although not described as such, the Court would be justified in holding that it is not an abwab and is recoverable by the landlord.

This was a Full Bench reference arising out of a second appeal in a suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiff alleged that the yearly rent of the defendant was Rs. 22.2, and claimed arrears of rent for the years 1290 to 1293 with damages. The defence was that the yearly rent was Rs. 18.10.6; that illegal cesses and double charge for Road and Public Works cesses were incorporated with the rent; and that no arrears were due, and that damages were not recoverable. The illegal cesses said to be included in the yearly rent mentioned in the plaint were sarak or cess for the maintenance of village roads, batta or the difference between the Sicca rupee and the Company’s rupee, neg, or fee for the putwari, and khuruch or expense (without any specific indication of its nature).

The plaintiff in the first Court examined his tehsildar and his putwari. The former ignored the realization of the alleged illegal cesses, but the latter stated that in the zamindari accounts of certain years, batta, sarak and the other cesses were entered in separate columns. It appeared from the jamabundis of 1279 an authenticated copy of which was filed by the defendant, that the items sarak, &c., were therein mentioned under separate heads, though the jamabundis of later years did not show any such specification. The plaintiff also put in his sehas or collection accounts and counterfoils of rent receipts to show that the amount stated in the plaint as the yearly rent was collected in former years, and that receipts had been granted without any specific indication of the sarak, neg, and other cesses, the whole amount paid being received as rent. The defendant, who was examined at the plaintiff’s instance, stated that batta, sarak, neg, and khuruch were in the rental, but he knew not from what time these were collected. The defendant was cited to produce his rent receipts, but did not produce them. He admitted, however, that the entries in the sehas and counterfoils were correct.

Upon this evidence the first Court held that the yearly rent was not proved to be what was stated by the plaintiff, but it was as alleged by the defendant; that in the zamindari papers of later years the plaintiff had improperly omitted the specification of the items sarak, batta, &c.;

(1) 15 C. 828.
(2) 17 C. 131=16 I.A. 152.
and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only at the rate of rent admitted by the defendant, and it accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree at that rate.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the lower appellate Court held that there has been no consolidation of the original asul jama and the items neg, batta, &c.; that the jama alleged by the defendant was the true asul jama; that the yearly rent stated in the plaint was made up of that jama and the items sarak, khuruch, neg, and batta, (specified in the jamabundi put in on behalf of the defendant) at certain established and known rates; and that no detailed claim for these items having been made, the frame of the suit precluded the plaintiff from obtaining any adjudication as to the legality or otherwise of any of these items. The lower appellate [729] Court accordingly affirmed the decree of the first Court with one modification, allowing the batta, in addition to the rate of rent allowed by the first Court.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court. The Division Bench (Petheram, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) referred the following question to the Full Bench:

"Whether the portions of the claim that are objected to as coming under the denominations sarak, neg, and khuruch are illegal cesses, or whether they are recoverable as rent by reason of their having been paid for a long time along with rent and without any specification in the rent receipts?"

The material portion of the referring order was as follows:

"In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant having for many years paid rent at the rate claimed, and taken receipts as for rent for the amounts paid without any specification of the items sarak, neg, and khuruch was bound to pay rent at that rate, and that the Court below ought to have held that there had been a consolidation of the rent and an implied agreement by the defendant to pay the whole amount as rent, notwithstanding that in some of the jamabundis part of that amount might have been specified and entered under different heads, as mere matter of book-keeping. And in support of this contention the case of Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1), which explains the Full Bench ruling in the case of Chulhan Mahlon v. Tilukhdhari Singh (2), relating to abwabs, is cited. The defendant, respondent, on the other hand, relies upon the Full Bench ruling in Chulhan Mahlon v. Tilukhdhari Singh, and contends that as to the items sarak, neg, and khuruch were entered under separate heads and as distinct from the rent, the mere fact of those items having being paid and the receipts not showing any specification of them did not make them part of the rent and recoverable as such. We are unable to agree in the interpretation put upon the Full Bench ruling by the decision in Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1)."

[730] Mr. J. T. Woodroffe (with him Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Baboo Hem Chunder Bonerjee, and Baboo Raghunundon Persad), for the appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Tarak Nath Pati, for the respondent.

Mr. Woodroffe.—The defendant alleges that illegal cesses are incorporated with the rent, and that no arrears are due. An account taken 15 years back (the jamabundis of 1279 B. S.) shows that in the zamindari accounts there was an appropriation for these items, but it was not in the time of the present tenant. No one was examined as to whether the sarak, neg, and khuruch were rent or not. The question is whether the fact of payment is legally inferable from the other facts of the case. [Petheram, C. J. The first question of law is whether the facts of the case as found, do constitute an agreement to pay Rs. 22-2 as rent. The Judge found as a matter of law that he was upon the evidence bound to find that these items were illegal charges; and the second point is whether sarak, neg, and khuruch are abwabs or not.] The defendant made a statement which is recorded in the order sheet to the effect that he paid Rs. 22-2 as rental for the years 1286, 1287, 1288 and 1289, but alleged that the amount was made up by illegal cesses. He gave no evidence of this, and did not produce his rent receipts of which we gave secondary evidence. The Full Bench case of Chulhan Mahton v. Tilukdhari Singh (1) only decides that if one sue to recover abwabs he may not recover unless they are proved to have been paid or payable before the Permanent Settlement. In the case of jeeatollah Paramanich v. Jogodindro Narain Roy (2) the ryot consented and contracted to pay an increased rent consisting of the original rent and a cess over and above it, and it was held that this demand and the old rent formed a new rent lawfully claimable under the contract. Here the defendant has paid Rs. 22-2 as rent and took receipts for it as rent. I rely upon the definition of rent in s. 3 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The counterfoils show that the amount is paid as rent only. Our contention is briefly stated in the order of reference. The Privy Council in Chulhan Mahton’s case (3) go upon the same ground as that taken up by the Full Bench (1). In Harington’s Analysis, Vol. II, p. 19, abwabs [734] are defined as anything which has been indiscriminately collected at different periods over and above the asul or original ground rent. Section 74 of the Tenancy Act only provides that impositions in addition to the actual rent cannot be recovered under the name of abwabs. [Petheram, C. J.—There is nothing to show that from the commencement of the tenancy or even at all the asul jama was paid without the other items.] No there is nothing. [Pigot, J.—Can there be said to be an implied agreement under s. 3 of Reg, V of 1812?] I submit so. The Regulations speak of abwabs as being of an arbitrary and intricate character, but that section expressly reserves payment of such sums as may have been specifically agreed upon.] [Petheram, C. J.—Is there any point of law with which this Bench can deal ? Do the questions put to us arise on the findings? Pigot, J.—There is no finding as to the antiquity of these abwabs, or whether the tenants agreed to pay consolidated rents.] There is nothing to prove that these are abwabs except the entry in the zemindar’s book, I say that the points of law are, 1st—whether the Judge was right in deciding that the Full Bench in Chulhan Mahton’s case (1) had held that sarak, neg, and khuruch were abwabs; 2nd—whether he should have decided that if they were so, they could not be consolidated except by some express agreement prior to the Bengal year 1198 (See Reg. VIII of 1793, s. 51), and that subsequent payment of these sums as rent would not bring the matter within the concluding words of s. 3 of Reg. V of 1812, viz., “payment of such sums as may have been specifically agreed upon between them.” There is also the question whether the Judge was warranted on the facts found by him in coming to these conclusions. [Petheram, C. J.—There is a question of evidence whether the item “tagan” or ground rent in the jamabundi of 1279 is any evidence that it was ever paid as rent alone without anything else.] I submit it is not. "Lagan" is not equivalent to asul jama, and the tenant has been paying Rs. 22-2. As to the language of the Regulations, In Reg. VIII of 1793, ss. 54 and 55, the word used is "imposition." In Reg. V of 1812, s. 3, they are described as "arbitrary or indefinite cesses," and in s. 74 of the Tenancy Act all impositions in addition to the actual rent are made illegal. If therefore the tenant pays any specific sum to the landlord, it must be presumed to be rent under s. 3 of Reg. V of 1812, unless it is shown to be otherwise. From the judgments of the Full Bench and Privy Council in Chulhan Mahton's case (1) it appears that the ground of those decisions was that the plaintiff was suing for rent plus abwabs. Muhammed Fayeaz Chowdhry v. Jamoo Gazee (2) decides that an agreement to pay collection charges if definite and forming part of the consideration for the lease will be enforced. The case of Juggodish Chunder Biswas v. Turrikeollah Sircar (3) is to the same effect. Puama Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (4) is not in conflict with the Full Bench in Chulhan Mahton's case (1). I gather from the rulings these propositions, 1st—that it is in each particular case the question whether an item is an abwab, and this must be determined by the evidence, 2nd—if there are items over and beyond rent, but which form part and parcel of the consideration for which the land is let, that is rent. In this case there is to be inferred an agreement to pay a new rent at a higher rate than the old rent, because such new rent has been so paid and received. As to whether these matters can be dealt within second appeal—it has been held that a finding on no evidence is a good ground of appeal, Futtehma Begum v. Mohamed Ausur (5). Here the Judge has misdirected himself in finding that there can be no amalgamation of separate items, and has assumed without evidence, that Rs. 17-8 paid as rent before suit brought was merely rent payable upon land. The Court can interfere on special appeal upon an error of law such as to say that there is evidence where there is no evidence, or to say that certain evidence is a legitimate inference when it is not, or if the lower Court misconceives the nature of the case or does not give any reasons, Futtehma Begum v. Mohomed Ausur (5), Denia Nath Banerjee v. Hari Dasi (6), Bidhumukhi Deba Chowdhrao v. Kefuutullah (7) Goluck Nath v. Kirti Chunder Haldar (8).

(1) 15 C. 828. (2) 11 C. 175 = 17 C. 131 = 16 I.A. 152.

(1) 11 C. 175. (2) 22 W.R. 12. (3) 17 C. 131=16 I.A. 152.

[732] Mr. Bonnerjee followed on the same side.

Mr. Gregory, for the respondent was not called upon.

The opinions of the Court (Petheram, C. J., Prinsep, Pigot, O'Kinealy, and Ghose, JJ.) were as follows:—

OPINIONS.

Petheram, C. J.—This was a second appeal which arose out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover a balance of rent at the rate of Rs. 22-2 per annum. The defendant by his pleader on the settlement of issues, stated that he was tenant to the plaintiff of the land in question at a rental of Rs. 18-10-6, and the Munsif fixed as the first issue for trial—Is the defendant's rental Rs. 22-2 as alleged by the plaintiff, or Rs. 18-10-6 as alleged by the defendant? And the questions which arise in the second appeal and in this reference are upon that issue. Both the Munsif and the District Judge, before whom the case came on appeal in the first instance, have found upon this issue that the defendant's rental is Rs. 18-10-6. The case has been brought before the High Court on

(1) 11 C. 175=17 C. 131. (2) 8 C. 730. (3) 24 W.R. 90.
(7) 12 C. 93. (8) 16 C. 650.
second appeal, and the plaintiff contends,—first, that there was no evidence on which the Munsif and the District Judge could come to such a finding; second, that even if there was some evidence, the Judge’s judgment shows that he has so misunderstood the plaintiff’s case, and has so misapplied the law, that his finding on the facts may be re-opened in this Court on second appeal; and, thirdly, that even if the rent is found to be Rs. 18-10-6 only, the plaintiff is still entitled to recover the larger sum of Rs. 22-2, the balance being made up of items which are neither uncertain nor arbitrary, and which the evidence shows the defendant agreed to pay as part of the consideration for his occupancy of the plaintiff’s land.

To discover whether these contentions are well founded, it is necessary to see what was the evidence which was given in the case. The suit, both before the Munsif and the District Judge, was heard along with thirteen others relating to the same mouzah, and they are all governed by the same judgment.

The plaintiff, in order to prove that the defendant’s rent was Rs. 22-2, called the defendant himself, and also required him to produce his receipts for rent for the years 1286 to 1292, inclusive. The defendant did not produce the receipts, and secondary evidence of their contents was given by the plaintiff, who [734] produced the corresponding counterfoils which were in the following form:

“No. D. A. 1678.

No. 2 . . . . . . . . . . . . . . Re. 1 (one rupee).

Date 25th Kuar 1286.

Mohit Koeri Kashtkar, inhabitant of Ramu Baria, through self, on account of rent, as per details of Mouzah Ramu Baria, Pergunnah Bhoejapore.”

“Out of (the rent of) the year 1286 Re. 1 (one rupee).

Received one rupee.

(Sd.) Adinath Rai, Tehsildar.

By his own pen.

(Sd.) Deo Narain Lal, Putwari.”

These counterfoils showed that in several of the years from 1286 to 1292 the defendant had paid the exact sum of Rs. 22-2, and that the yearly payments had always been within a few pice of that sum.

The plaintiff also put in his jamabundis for those years, which were in the following form:

Annual Jamabundi of Mouzah Ramu Baria for the year 1286.

The defendant in his evidence said—

"I am defendant in suit No. 156. I know that sarak, khuruch, chanda, neg, batta are in the rental, because I have been paying them. Battu is included in my rental of Rs. 18-10-6. I do not object to this batta. I do not recollect if I have paid all the abwabs separately from or with the rental proper, I do not know if receipts were called for. Receipts are not preserved. [735] The plaintiff also put in the sehas for those years when it appeared that they were kept in the following form:

[736] Upon this evidence the Munsif found as a fact that the defendant's rent was Rs. 18-10-6. He considered that the jamabundi

(a) Sic, in original. (a) Sic.
filed by the plaintiff were fabricated; that the receipts filed by him merely showed the amount paid, and did not prove conclusively that the whole of the money paid by the defendant was on account of rent only, and that the jamabundi for 1286, together with the sehas, showed that the difference between Rs. 18-10-6 and Rs. 22-2 was not rent at all, but was made up of various impositions and charges, and he accordingly found the first issue in favour of the defendant. When the matter came before the District Judge on appeal, he affirmed this finding of the Munsif. And the first question which has been argued before us has been whether there is any evidence on the record to support this finding. I think there is. The defendant himself stated that his rent was Rs. 18-10-6; the jamabundi of 1286 indicated that at that time the rental was Rs. 18-10-6, and the sehas for the subsequent years indicated that even if it be assumed that the form of the jamabundi had been changed since that time, the fact still remained the same; that the sum of Rs. 22-2 claimed by the plaintiff was made up of the rent with other charges added to it, and whether they were evidence for the plaintiff or not sehas were clearly evidence against him. The second question then arose, and the plaintiff contended that if there is some evidence on the record that the rent was the smaller sum, it is apparent from his judgment that the District Judge has so entirely misunderstood the case that his finding of fact may be reconsidered on second appeal. In the fifth paragraph of his judgment he says:

"The plaintiff will not tell us the exact date of the 'consolidation' but at last gives us about 1286 F. These modern consolidations cannot, as this Court has often ruled, be made by the malik alone. He must secure the acquiescence of the tenants concerned. There has, therefore, been no 'consolidation' as alleged."

And Mr. Woodroffe, on behalf of the plaintiff, says that it is apparent that the Judge thought that the plaintiff, in order to succeed, must prove a consolidation of the rent and other items by some particular agreement come to between the parties at some specified time; that with this in his mind he compelled the plaintiff's pleader to mention some time, and that when he mentioned [737] "about 1286," assumed that the plaintiff's contention was that the consolidation was effected by the change of the form of the jamabundi, and that as that was the act of the landlord alone, it would not bind the tenant; whereas the plaintiff's case was that the form of the jamabundis and receipts prove that the rent has always been the larger sum, and that the other figures merely show the mode of calculation by which the rental was originally arrived at.

If this was the view of the Judge as to what the plaintiff's real case was, I cannot say that he was wrong. The jamabundi of 1286 shows that the Rs. 22-2 was made up of that sum and various other items, and the sehas for the subsequent years, which, as I have before said, are certainly evidence against the plaintiff, show to my mind that the Rs. 22-2 always contained something other than rent, though they do not show what it was. These 'documents, in my opinion, rebut the inference of fact which may no doubt be drawn from the receipts, that the rent since 1286 has been enhanced to the sum of Rs. 22-2, of which fact the receipts for three years are made evidence by s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and prove conclusively to my mind that the change in the jamabundis was one of form only, representing no fresh agreement between the parties and made by the landlord with the intention of consolidating the other items with the rent, which he could not do except by agreement with the tenant.
I agree, then, with the Munsif and the District Judge that the rental was Rs. 18-10-6, and that the difference between that amount and Rs. 22-2 is made up of the items mentioned in the jamabundi of 1286, and upon this finding the third question arises, which is the question upon which the case of Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1) appeared to the referring Bench to be in conflict with that of Chulhan Mahto v. Tilukdhari Singh (2).

The cases of Chulhan Mahto v. Tilukdhari Singh was decided in January 1885 before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The suit was by ticcadars to recover from a ryot Rs. 1,105-1-2 as arrears of nagdi and bhowli rent for the years 1286 to 1288, together with certain customary abwabs. The nature of the abwabs appears in the report of the case to have been certain in this sense that the amount depended on the amount of the rent or of the [738] product of the land when the tenure was bhowli. It was found as a fact that according to the custom of the estate, of which the defendant's land formed a part, these items had been paid, by the defendant and his ancestors for many years, so that it appeared, that they were not uncertain or arbitrary, but were always paid, the amount of them each year being merely a matter of calculation. Mr. Justice Mitter, at page 183, says as to this—

"It has been next contended that although the disputed items in the plaintiff's claim are described in the plaint as old usual abwabs, and in the zemindari accounts also they are designated as abwabs separate and distinct from the specified rent, yet they are not abwabs, but part of the rent. This contention is mainly based upon the ground that anything which is certain and definite does not come under the class of abwabs, the imposition of which is prohibited by the Regulations. Although the Regulations did not clearly define what an abwab is, still I think it cannot be maintained that anything which is definite and certain is not an abwab under the regulations, although the parties to the contract may call it so. It seems to me that the Regulations, without defining accurately what an abwab is, left this question for the determination by the Court in each case upon the evidence. I cannot find anywhere in the Regulations the precise definition of the word abwab which would justify me to treat the disputed items of claim as part of the specified rent, although the plaintiff claims them in the plaint and enters them in the zemindari accounts as abwabs."

And the Full Bench held that nothing beyond the nagdi and bhowli rent could be recovered, any contract for the payment of the other items, whether express or implied, not being enforceable.

This case came before the Privy Council on appeal (3). The judgment of the High Court was affirmed. Lord Macnaghten, in delivering judgment in speaking of the items in question, says—

"Unquestionably they have been paid for a long period; how long does not appear. They are said to have been paid according to long-standing custom. Whether that means that they were payable at the time of the Permanent Settlement or not is not plain. If they were payable at the time of the Permanent Settlement, they ought to have been consolidated with the rent under s. 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793. Not being so consolidated, they cannot now be recovered under s. 61 of that Regulation. If they were not payable at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of Rs. 1,105-1-2 as arrears of nagdi and bhowli rent for the years 1286 to 1288."
Settlement, they would come under the description of new abwabs in s. 55, and they would be in that case illegal."

[739] By this judgment I understand the Privy Council, while affirming that of the High Court, to go beyond it and to hold that under the Regulations nothing could be recovered for the occupation of land, except one sum which must include everything which was payable for such occupation arrived at either by agreement or by some judicial determination between the parties, and that any contract whether express or implied, to pay anything beyond that sum, under any name whatever, for or in respect of the occupation of the land, could not be enforced.

After the decision by the High Court of the case which I have now considered, but before the decision by the Privy Council, the present Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) came into force. The sections, of that Act which are material to consider are s. 3, sub-s. 5, by which rent is defined to be "whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant," and s. 74 which enacts that "all impositions upon tenants under the denomination of abwab, mahtut or other like appellations, in addition to the actual rent, shall be illegal, and all stipulations and reservations for the payment of such shall be void." After this Act had been passed, but before the decision of the Privy Council, the case of Padma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1) was decided by a Division Bench of the Court. In that case the plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 2,830-13-3 for arrears of rent and for tehwari and salami due to them for the years 1290 to Baisakh 1293 in respect of a mokhuri tenure held under them by the defendant. The basis of the suit was a kabuliyat, dated 25th December 1869, by which the defendant agreed to pay a certain fixed rent, plus a small annual addition for items designated therein as tehwari, dusara and salami towzi, in respect of which items the amounts declared to be payable were Rs. 9 and 2 respectively. The only question was whether the tehwari and salami could be recovered. The learned Judges held that as the items in dispute were not arbitrary and uncertain in their character, but were specific sums which the tenants had agreed to pay to their landlords, they were in fact part of the rent agreed to be paid and were [740] not abwabs at all. They considered that what is or is not an abwab must depend on the circumstances of each particular case in which the question arises, and they allowed the plaintiff's claim. It is clear that this case may be reconciled by the judgment of the High Court in the other case, as Mr. Justice Mitter expressly says that the question whether the disputed item is an abwab must be decided by the Court in each case; but if I have correctly understood the judgment of the Privy Council in the same case, it is equally clear that it cannot be reconciled with that, as that decided that nothing can be recovered from the tenant except the one sum fixed as the rent of the land, and in this view, I think, we must hold the case of Padma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1) to be overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in that of Chulhan Mahtun v. Tilukhdhari Singh (2), and that unless the law has been changed by the Bengal Tenancy Act in favour of the landlord, the items in dispute in this action cannot be recovered, as they have been proved to be something beyond the sum which had been agreed upon as rent. The definition of rent in s. 3 of the Act does not, in my opinion, affect the question, as that would have been the correct definition of rent without the assistance of the Act, and consequently was so at the time of the decision of the Privy Council, and the only question is as to the meaning of s. 74. I think that the effect of that section is to declare the law to be as it is laid down by the Privy Council in the judgment which I have cited, and to be that no imposition under any name whatever shall be recovered from the tenant for or in respect of the occupation or tenure of the land beyond the sum which has been fixed for rent, whether that sum has been fixed by agreement or by judicial determination between the landlord and the tenant.

(1) 15 C. 828.
(2) 17 C. 131=161, A, 152.

In my opinion the portions of claim which are objected to are illegal, and cannot be recovered as rent, and the second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

O'Kinealy, J.—In this case the plaintiff, a zemindar, sued the defendant, his ryot, for arrears of rent due on account of the years 1270 to 1293. The plaintiff alleged that the rent was [741] Rs. 22-2 per annum. The defendant, on the other hand, contended that it was only Rs. 18-10-6 and that he had paid that sum. He also added that the difference between Rs. 18-10-6 and Rs. 22-2, claimed by the plaintiff, consisted of illegal cesses which had been incorporated with the original rent.

In the first Court the plaintiff examined his putwari, his tehsildar, and the defendant, in support of his case. The jamabundis, or collection papers from 1286 to 1292, were also produced as corroborative evidence.

The Munsif held that the jamabundis from 1286 to 1292 had been fabricated in order to support a false case. He has also held that the amount claimed as rent included abwabs, such as sarak, khuruch, neg, and batta; he found that the proper rent was what the defendant alleged it to be, and on that basis he decreed the arrears found to be due.

The plaintiff appealed to the lower appellate Court. He argued that the Munsif should have found whether the amounts claimed to be included in the jama, and disallowed by the lower Court, were legal cesses or not, and he urged that the onus of proving that illegal taxes were included in the rent claimed lay on the defendant. He further asserted that the Munsif was wrong in saying that the jamabundis produced on the part of the plaintiff were not genuine, and asserted that the plaintiff's claim was proved by the statements of the defendant and the papers admitted by him. These contentions seem to have failed before the Judge in the lower Court. He came to the same conclusion in regard to the jamabundis as the Munsif, and he agreed with that Judge in thinking that the sum stated by the defendant was the asul jama while the amount claimed by the plaintiff as the yearly rent was made up of the jama with other items, such as sarak, khuruch, neg, and batta.

This being the case, and the suit being a suit for rent, he refused to grant the items in excess of the annual rent, because, in his opinion, it was not rent, and the plaintiff ought not to succeed on a different title. He therefore dismissed the appeal.

From that decision a second appeal was preferred to this Court, and before the Division Bench it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the defendant having for many years paid the sums [742] claimed and taken receipts as if the amounts paid had been rent without any specification of the items sarak, khuruch, neg, and batta, he was bound to pay rent at that rate, and the Court below ought to have held that there had been not only a consolidation of these sums with the rent, but an implied agreement by the defendant to pay the whole amount as rent.
So far as I can see, that is not a valid ground of second appeal. In the case of Meer Mahomed Hossein v. Forbes, their Lordships of the Privy Council say (1)—

"The case was before the High Court upon Special Appeal, and, therefore, in strictness, they had nothing to do with the evidence in the cause."

In the more recent case of Pertab Chunder Ghose v. Mohendro Purkait (2), decided by their Lordships on the 29th June 1889, there is the following passage:

"Their Lordships have doubted whether the Judges of the High Court, in hearing the appeals, had regard to the provision in the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 584, as to appeals from appellate decrees, and thought they were at liberty to consider the propriety of the findings of the District Judge upon questions of fact. Certainly there are some passages in their judgment, particularly in the latter part, if not in the former, which suggest this. Their Lordships must observe that the limitation to the power of the Court by ss. 584 and 585 in a second appeal ought to be attended to, and the appellate Court ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first appellate Court upon a matter of fact."

In this case two Courts have come to the same conclusion on a matter of fact, which goes to the foundation of the case, namely, what was the rental of the defendant; and they have decided adversely to the appellant. This seems to me to conclude the case, and to render it impossible for us to decree the second appeal in favour of the appellant.

In this view of the case it would seem unnecessary that I should answer the question referred to this Court, namely, "whether the portions of the claim that are objected to us coming under the denomination sarak, neg and khuruch, are illegal cesses, or whether they are recoverable as rent by reason of their having been paid for a long time along with the rent and without any specification in the rent receipts;" but as the Judge in the Court below has forwarded as part of his judgment a decision on the nature of abwabs, and a majority of the Judges composing the Full Bench think that it should be answered, I think it is better to give my opinion.

In order to determine what was the meaning of rent under the old Regulations, and what were the cesses and assessments that they were intended to prohibit, it is necessary to see what the law was before the time of the Permanent Settlement; what the evils were that the Legislature then intended to get rid of, and how they attempted to do it.

Before the acquisition of Behar by the East India Company, the distinction between rent and revenue can hardly be said to have existed. Both were looked upon as the dues of Government, rather in the form of a tax on land than as rent. Thus in Regulation XLIV of 1793 (3), we find it declared that, according to the established usages of the country—and these, according to 24 Geo. III (1784), Ch. 25, s. 39, were to guide the Directors in fixing the income of Government from land—these dues consisted of a certain proportion of the annual produce of every bigha of land demandable, according to the local custom, either in money or kind. This right was a right peculiar to the State alone. So that as long as the Moghul Government was strong enough to govern the provincial rulers, taxation, so far as it fell upon land, may be said to have been substantially of a fixed nature. In Behar the zemindar divided the produce of the lands with the cultivators in stated proportions; and in Bengal a settlement was made with the ryot upon a standard called the asul, or original rate, with the accumulation of taxes successively imposed upon it. These taxes were divided into abwab and mahtut, and in calculating the zemindari demand, now called rent, the zemindar levied the asul or ground rent according to the jamabndi, or assessment, of each village, and the excess imposed, if abwab, according to the rate of the pergunnah, and if mahtut, according to the rate of the each chukla.

These two, namely, the asul abwab, constituted the whole land revenue demand imposed on the ryot prior to and after the British rule, To illustrate this, I print from Mr. Shore's Minute the following abstract (1) of a ryot account taken about the year 1781:

As I have stated above, the assessment of land revenue was the right of the Government alone, and as a fact the Government, when in full vigour, supervised the assessment year by year. Abwabs were in their nature unconstitutional; but from the beginning of the 18th century, when the Subahdars were becoming more independent, they began to levy new prepetual imposts now called subahdari abwabs. These viceregal imposts were levied by the Subahdars in a certain proportion to the asul, or standard, assessment, and the zemindars who paid were authorized to collect them from ryots in the proportion of their asul, or standard, assessment; and sometimes these cesses were incorporated with the original asul, so that the aggregate became a new asul, or standard of assessment, according to which the assessments on land were subsequently levied.

arbitrary manner not authorized by the Subahdar. The result was that the incorporated subahdari abwabs in some instances amounted to 33 per cent. of the asul, while the zemindari abwabs amounted to somewhere about 50 per cent.

Moreover, in some cases, the abwabs were increased in one estate to meet a deficiency in another, so that the incidence of the taxation varied in different estates, and often according to the caste and place of residence of the ryot.

They were also made a means of enhancing the rent, while it was one of the objects of Government to stop enhancements made in an arbitrary and indefinite manner.

The mode in which these abwabs grew up is well described by Mr. Shore in reference to the ryot's account printed above. He says, in 1789:

"If the accounts of the same land were now examined some additional impositions might appear. The zemindars introduce them by degrees, at intervals of two, three, four or five years, and rarely attempt them for two or three years successively. Solicitation and influence are equally employed to effect the establishment of them, and a ryot, when the burden is not too heavy, will rather submit than resist or complain. Temporary extortion may be practised at any time, but a permanent exaction of this nature can rarely be established by force alone upon the ryots (1).

It is, I think, in this sense that these cesses are said in the correspondence of that period to be arbitrary or indefinite. Thus we find them described by the officials of that period "as arbitrary impositions, vicious in mode and principle, yet extremely moderate in amount," as "claimed by no measured rule, but arbitrary indefinite expediency," as "an oppressive exaction wholly unauthorized," and a "daring encroachment on the exclusive prerogative of the Sovereignty, in levying from the subject what can only be legitimate in the form of a public supply of a necessary exigency of the State."

This too is, I think, the sense in which abwabs were considered as arbitrary or indefinite in the old Regulations—arbitrary, in the sense, that they were unauthorized by law—indefinite, in the sense [746] that, though levied in a certain proportion to and upon the original assessment or asul land tax, there was no definite rule guiding the zemindar in fixing the proportion they bore to the produce of the land, nor any rule prescribed for limiting their amount.

They were not arbitrary in the sense that the parties had not contracted in regard to them, for at that time rent was paid, not under contract, but as a land tax, as the Government share, and according to the pergunnah rate, nor indefinite in amount, since every abwab was, as in the present suit, a determined sum, generally a certain defined share of the real land tax.

In 1772, the Hon'ble Court of Directors deprived Nawab Mahomed Reza Khan of his appointment of Naib Dewan, and determined to stand forth publicly themselves in the character of Dewan, and in the proclamation of the 14th of May of that year (2), they laid down rules for the settlement and the collection of the revenue.

Rule 10 states:

"That the farmer shall not receive larger rents from the ryots than the stipulated amount of the pottahs on any pretence whatsoever; and that for every instance of such extortion, the farmer, on conviction, shall be compelled to pay back the sum which he shall have so taken from the ryot, besides a penalty equal to the same amount to the Sircar; and for a repetition, or a notorious instance of this oppression on his ryots, the farmer's lease shall be annulled."

Rule 12 states:

"That no mautul, or assessments under the name of mangan, hauri gundee, sood, or any other abwab or tax, shall be imposed upon the ryots; and that those articles of abwab which are of late establishment, shall be carefully scrutinized, and at the discretion of the Committee abolished, if they are found in their nature to be oppressive and pernicious."

The rules were issued three days after the assumption of the Dewani, and thus the prohibition of illegal assessments was almost the first act of the British Government when it assumed the revenue administration of Bengal.

The nature of them can be best understood from the terms in which they are described. Thus mangan in Behar, in which the land in connection with the present suit is situate, was a share of the crop given as a fee or perquisite to the headman of the village; and sood was an impost in order to meet the interest which the zemindars were compelled to pay on arrears of revenue; but what the rules plainly point out is that whether it be treated as an assessment or a tax, nothing beyond the ordi-

In 1787, the Regulation regarding the assessment of revenue in Bengal was revised by Regulation VIII passed on the 8th of June of that year (1). Section 50 runs as follows:

"That whereas notwithstanding the orders of Government in the year 1772, prohibiting the imposition of mautul or assessment, under the names of mangan, haurdawri, moracha, baxee jama, or sood, or any other new articles of taxation, various taxes have been since imposed, the Collector to strictly enjoyed to enforce this article and prevent the imposition of any new taxes upon the ryots, and if hereafter any new tax should be imposed, the Collector, on proof of such extortion, is to decree double the amount thereof as costs of suit."

In this section it will be seen that the Legislature describes these impositions as assessments or taxes, and it gives a few examples of those impositions which were not mentioned in the Regulation of 1772.

This brings us down to the Regulation relative to the Decennial Settlement which was subsequently re-enacted in 1793 when the Permanent Settlement was sanctioned. By s. 57 of Regulation VIII of 1793 it was enacted that—

"The rents to be paid by the ryots, by whatever rule or custom they may be regulated, shall be specifically stated in the pottah, which, in every possible case, shall contain the exact sum to be paid by them."

By s. 6 of Regulation IV of 1794, it was declared—

"If a dispute shall arise between the ryots and the persons from whom they may be entitled to demand pottahs, regarding the rates of the pottahs (whether the rent be payable in money or kind), it shall be determined in the Dewani Adawlut of the zillah in which the lands may be situated, according to the rates established in the pergunnah for lands of the same description and quality as those respecting which the dispute may arise."

So that what the Permanent Settlement and the Regulation of 1794 describe as rent, is the original ground rent assessed according to the pergunnah or customary rate per bigha; and it is at once distinguishable from the other assessments or taxes which have no relation to the customary rate or to the extent or produce of the [748] lands by the fact that the imposition of them was not caused, nor was it pretended to be attributed to, or claimable by reason of, any change in the customary rate, or in the extent or in the amount of produce of the lands. Bearing this in mind, we can now understand the meaning of ss. 54, 55 and 56 of the Permanent Settlement.

Section 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793 declares—

"The imposition upon the ryots under the denomination of abwab, mahtut, and other appellations, from their number and uncertainty, having become intricate to adjust, and a source of oppression to the ryots, all proprietors of land and dependent talukdars shall revise the same in concert with the ryots, and consolidate the whole with the asul into one specific sum."

Section 55 of the same Regulation enacts—

"No actual proprietor of land or dependent talukdar or farmer of land, of whatever description, shall impose any new abwab or mahtut upon the ryots, under any pretence whatever."

Now the effect of this enactment seems to be that, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, there was, or there was believed to be, a customary assessment per bigha for the land, which was described in the Regulations themselves as the asul, and that in addition to that there were added certain assessments or taxes or cesses of various kinds which the Legislature wanted to prohibit for the future, and that they proposed to bring about this result by compelling each Zemindar to revise the assessments or taxes then existing in concert with his ryots, and consolidate them into one specific sum which would form a new asul, and to absolutely prohibit any new assessment, imposition or tax in addition to the asul for the future—Ram Kant Dutt v. Gholam Nubby Chowdhry (1). A certain time was given for this consolidation, and if not carried out, it was declared that any action for the realization of the abwabs beyond the asul or ground rent should be non-suited.

We can now easily understand the meaning of the jamabundi of 1279 which was relied upon by the defendant in the present case.

[749] After the name of the tenant, comes "land." Then the ground rent called "lagan." Then comes "sarak," a cess in connection with roads. Then "batta," a tax imposed to make up any deficiency in the currency, which has always been considered an abwab—Chukan Sahoo v. Roop Chand (2); Regulation LI of 1795, s. 3, cl. 6. No question as to batta arises in this case. Then "putwari's neg," a cess imposed for the payment of the putwari and declared to be an abwab by the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Chuthan Mahton v. Tilukdhari Singh (1).

Lastly, the column "Ordinary expenses," a cess to cover ordinary zemindari expenditure.

In accordance with the common law, and in pursuance of s. 83, Regulation VIII of 1793, the lagan was determined by the average produce of the lands, in common years. But there is no law justifying the imposition of any of the other items at all; they are in name cesses, and have no connection with the produce of the land beyond that they are calculated upon the ground rent. There is no means known to the law for determining the proportion they must bear to the rent.

According to the view which I take of the Regulations, every item in this account, except that of "lagan," or ground rent, is a mahtut or abwab within the meaning of the Permanent Settlement Regulation, and the realization of any of it was punishable thereunder with a penalty of times the amount.

The form of pottah issued to the ryots at the time of the Permanent Settlement was subject to control. By s. 58 of Regulation VIII of 1293, no pottah was valid unless it had been approved of by the Collector and registered in the civil Court of the district. These restrictions as to form were partially removed by Regulation IV of 1794.

Towards 1812 the futility of this legislation was pressed on the Government; and as the objections to the then existing legislation cannot be better put than they are by Mr. Colebrooke, I put them in his own words. He said—

"Another part of the subsisting revenue regulations, which appears to me to need emendation, is that which relates to the form of leases; and which annuls such engagements as may not be drawn in prescribed from. [750] Before the enactment of the regulations connected with the Permanent Settlement of the land revenues of Bengal, a practice prevailed among landholders in this province of imposing on their ryots arbitrary cesses termed abwabs; being either authorized so to do by reservations in the pottahs, to subject the ryots to such abwabs as might be imposed on the pargunnah generally, or else assuming that authority without the sanction of any such reservation in the leases of their tenants.
To protect the peasantry from such arbitrary exactions, which had been the source of grievous oppression and of gross abuses, the regulations of the Permanent Settlement provided that no new abwab should be imposed on any pretence, under penalty of three times the amount; that the landholders, in concert with their tenants, should revise the abwabs and consolidate them with the land rents; that they should give or tender to their ryots pottahs prepared according to a form previously approved by the Collector and registered in the Adawlut. These rules are enforced by a provision that pottahs of any other form are to be held invalid. Notwith-sanding this penalty, which was expected to enforce universal compliance, by rendering the written engagements of landlord and tenant void and of no effect, if there be a deviation from the prescribed form, there is reason to believe that little progress had been really made towards the general introduction of the simple and definite leases which it was thus intended to enforce. But whether generally or partially successful, or wholly ineffectual, that penalty ought, I think, to be now rescinded. There is no longer any sufficient motive for holding the landholders and tenantry of the country in this sort of pupillage, prescribing to them the manner and form of their reciprocal engagements. They may be safely left to consult their mutual interests, by entering into such engagements as they may consider to be for their benefit respectively, and to reduce their agreements to writing in any form most intelligible and satisfactory to themselves or in their conviction most binding and secure. All that need be required, is that the engagements shall be definite; and it may be accordingly declared that any clause of a lease, or other engagement, reserving the power of imposing cesses or taxes, termed abwab or mahtut, or under any other denomination whatsoever, or binding the pottah holder to pay any impost or addition whatsoever beyond the rent, however regulated, in money or in kind, which the pottah or engagement specifies, shall be void and of no effect, and the courts shall maintain the remaining definite clauses, and enforce payment of such rent, and such only, as is specifically stipulated and agreed for by the pottah or other engagement. Under this alteration of the existing rules the Courts of Justice will give effect to the agreements of the parties according to their ascertained intentions, with exception only to stipulations subjecting one of the parties to arbitrary demands at the will of the other. This exception, together with the prohibition actually in force against the imposition of any arbitrary cesses or abwabs, under whatever pretence will entirely preclude the renewal of those oppressions and abuses which the Regulations I have proposed to modify were designed to prevent."

For these reasons Regulation V of 1812 was enacted, and of it ss. 2 and 3 ran as follows:—

"Section 2.—Section 2, Regulation XLIV, 1793, s. 2, Regulation L, 1795, and clause second, s. 2, Regulation XLVII, 1803, by which the proprietors of land paying revenue to Government are precluded from granting leases for a period exceeding ten years are hereby rescinded, and proprietors of lands are declared competent to grant leases for any period which they may deem most convenient to themselves and tenants and most conducive to the improvement of their estates.

"Section 3.—Such parts of Regulation VIII of 1793 and of Regulation IV of 1794 as require that the proprietors of land shall prepare forms of pottahs, and that such forms shall be revised by the Collectors, and which declare that engagements for rent contracted in any other than that prescribed by the Regulations in question shall be deemed invalid, are hereby rescinded; and the proprietors of land shall henceforth be considered competent to grant leases to their dependent talukdars, under farmers and ryots, and to receive corresponding engagements for the payment of rent from each of those classes, or any other classes of tenants, according to such form of the contracting parties may deem most convenient and most conducive to their respective interests; provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to sanction or legalise the imposition of arbitrary or indefinite cesses, whether under the denomination of abwab, mahtut, or any other denomination. All stipulations of reservations of that nature shall be adjudged by the Courts of Judicature to be null and void; but the courts shall notwithstanding maintain and give effect to the definite clauses of the engagements contracted between the parties, or, in other words, enforce payment of such sums as may have been specifically agreed upon between them."
Apparently some doubt arose as to the meaning of s. 2, and this was explained in Regulation XVIII of the same year. Section 2 of this enactment declared the true meaning was that proprietors of land were “competent to grant leases for any period even to perpetuity and at any rent which they might deem conducive to their interest,” provided that a person holding a restricted interest could not grant a lease extending beyond the term of his own interest.

This was the law in regard to rent and abwabs which remained in force until the passing of Act X of 1859. The avowed object in passing Regulation V of 1812 was to get rid of the necessity of having the forms of leases supervised by the Collector, but at the same time to re-state the prohibition already existing in Regulation VIII of 1793 against the landholders imposing or realizing any new abwabs, not to repeal them. The time for consolidating the abwabs existing at the time of the permanent settlement had passed, and they could not be re-assessed as abwabs, but only as rent, and in those cases in which they had been consolidated with the asul, this it was considered would leave the ryot in the same position as he was after the passing of Regulation VIII of 1793. By s. 2 of Regulation XVIII of 1812, the proprietors were empowered to grant leases of any form for rent, and by s. 3 of Regulation V of 1812 they were empowered to receive from the tenants “corresponding engagements for the payment of rent,” and it only. No further power was given. And as if to mark the distinction between cesses and rent, the former are referred to as paid under stipulations or reservations, the latter under engagements, and it was the engagements for the payment of rent, and not the stipulations for cesses, that were to be enforced. It was not the intention of the framers of this Regulation to allow the parties to contract for anything in money or in kind not then known as rent, and when they describe abwabs and mahtuts as arbitrary or indefinite they were only using words applied to these assessments from 1772. Bearing this in mind, a comparison of the latter portion of this section with ss. 54 and 57 of Regulation VIII of 1793 shows that the words “specifically agreed” in Regulation V of 1812 are the same as “specifically stated” in s. 57, and refer to the one specific sum of s. 54 in the permanent settlement. They have no reference to cesses. This is the view taken by the Full Bench, in Chultan Mahlon’s case (1), where it is said that the last four lines of s. 3 of Regulation V of 1812 refer to the ground-rent in the permanent settlement. That being so, I take it that every assessment of any kind beyond that entered in the second column of the jamabundi, which I have given above, was an arbitrary or indefinite cess within the Regulation and prohibited by it.

These sections are partially repealed by Act X of 1859 and Act VIII of 1869, and are now wholly repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, but partly re-enacted by s. 74 of that Act, which declares:

“All impositions upon tenants under the denomination of abwab, mahtul, or other like appellations, in addition to the actual rent, shall be illegal, and all stipulations and reservations for the payment of such shall be void.”

It seems, therefore, that all additions to the actual rent, under the denomination of abwabs, are now, as they were in 1793, illegal, and any agreement to pay them is void. This seems to me the conclusion arrived at by the Full Bench in the above case, which was subsequently affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

It has been argued that a different interpretation has been put upon that decision by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1). In that case the plaintiff sued for rent, and two items denominated tehwari and salami, and in the plaint the claims for the different items were set out as follows:

1. That your petitioners, the plaintiffs, are the proprietors and zemindars and purgasas Sahrai, &c., mehal Kharagpur. The defendant is the mokuridar of mouzah Gora, &c., purgana Parbutpatra, the zemindari of your petitioners, the plaintiffs, and pays an annual jama of Rs. 1,999-8 annas, besides road cess, public work cess, tehwari, &c.

2. That the sum of Rs. 2,830 13 annas 3 pies on account of rent, road cess, public works cess, tehwari, interest, salami, &c., from the year 1290 to Bysak instalment of the year 1293 Fusli  is due from the defendant.

For the year 1290.

The Judge in the lower appellate Court dismissed the claim. He found that salami was a tax levied on the occasion of a punna, [754] or religious festival, and tehwari, another tax imposed on the occurrence of the Doorga Pooja, when it is customary for zemindars to expend money in certain ceremonies. So that he held in so many words, that both in denomination and essence, these items were cesses. He further found that the kubuliat divided the amount payable into mal, tehwari, and salami and we know that in several parts of the Regulations, the word mal is used in the sense of rent, as opposed to any excess which was styled an abwab. Thus in Regulation LI of 1795, s. 2, cl. I, we find the words mal and abwab used in this sense. In short, the Judge found they were cesses, independent of the mal or rent, and only usually payable when certain ceremonies were performed. In appeal to this Court, the Division Bench decided that the items called tehwari and salami did form part of the rent and were recoverable because they were entered in the kubuliat under which the defendant held, were not arbitrary and uncertain, but specific sums which the tenant agreed to pay; and they decided that the Full Bench decision, above referred to, did not lay down as law that anything recoverable in 1812 could not be recovered at the present day. I agree in thinking that the Full Bench did not lay down any such doctrine, but I think that the Full Bench did lay down that these amounts were not recoverable under Regulation V of 1812. In that case the Full Bench held that in the last four lines of s. 3 of Regulation V of 1812, the words "sum specified" refer to the amount of the rent specified. And it follows.

(1) 19 C. 828.
from the regulation itself that all stipulations or reservations for abwabs or mahatut above the rent or asul jama were, after the time of the permanent settlement, null and void. In the case of Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1), the sums named tehwari and salami were in name cesses, and were found to be such by the lower Court, and this finding, so far as it depended on evidence, could not be interfered with in special appeal. Moreover, when we consider that so far back as 1772, long before the permanent settlement, salami was looked upon as an abwab, there can be little doubt of their nature. There were by name and nature distinct from the rent, were apparently so stated in the lease, and they were received by the landlord, not as rent, but as [755] cesses. This distinction was marked in the plaint where they were set out by name after the rent and in sharp contracts with it. And yet the sums were decreed as rent.

The Judges said:

"In the case before the Full Bench that Regulation did not support the plaintiffs. On the contrary, it was directly opposed to their claim. In the present case the Regulation does support the plaintiff’s case because the items in dispute are not arbitrary and uncertain in their character, but they are specific sums which the tenant agreed to pay to the landlords; and from the terms of their kabuliat it seems to us that the payments of these items, no less than the payment of the jama itself, formed part of the consideration upon which the tenancy was created. Therefore the plaintiffs were entitled, by virtue of Regulation V of 1812, to demand and recover these items, they being in fact part of the rent agreed to be paid, although not so described. In the definition contained in the new Tenancy Act, “rent means whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant or his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land by the tenant.” There is nothing new in this, but it expresses concisely what has always been understood by the word “rent.” What is or is not an abwab, must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case in which the question arises. The Full Bench case, upon which the District Judge relies, does not, as we have said, bar the plaintiff’s claim."

I must respectfully dissent from this judgment, and since I do so, I think it is only due to the Judges that I should give my reasons for my dissent. In the Full Bench, as in this case, the sums were definite: in that case the sums were admitted and held to be abwabs: in this case the sums were entered among the cesses and declared to be cesses. I do not see clearly how the Regulation is opposed to the one claim more than the other. Nor does the Regulation require that the sums in dispute should be arbitrary and uncertain. The words are “arbitrary or indefinite;” and to find that the sums are specific is not sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the law: indeed, it is opposed to two propositions laid down in the Full Bench case,—that it cannot be maintained that anything which is definite and certain is not an abwab, and that the last four lines of the Regulation invoked in support of this decision only refer to rent, and do not refer to abwabs. Nor can I bring myself to acquiesce in the proposition which, I think, is involved in the decision, that rent as defined in the [766] Rent Act, means the consideration upon which a tenancy is created—a mere contract rent and that only. The obligation to pay rent arising out of contract is not found more often than the obligation to pay arising from law. All the tenants, whether ryots or tenure-holders, whose rents have been enhanced, and all tenants in the estates settled under Chapter X of the Rent Act, are bound not by contract, but by law, to pay. In India the rights of landlord and tenant, as this very Act shows, are not wholly based on contract. They depend partly, on contract, partly on law, partly on custom and usage. Moreover, assuming that the rent in the case I am now discussing depended on contract, I cannot agree with a view taken in the decision. In regard to the sums sued for in addition to that called rent, the plaintiff sued for rent by name and additional sums which the lower Court found were in denomination and essence abwabs. This Court gave them as rent. It is declared by s. 74 that all impositions upon tenants under the denomination of abwab or mahmut or other like appellations in addition to the actual rent, are illegal, and the stipulation and reservations for their payments are void. So that these sums do not fall within the words, “what is lawfully payable,” in the definition of rent. Lastly, I am unable to assent to the proposition that the definition of rent in the Rent Act includes every specific sum which the ryot has agreed to pay. That proposition seems in conflict with the decision of the Full Bench. That certainly was not the meaning of the word rent in the old law. It certainly was not the opinion of Mr. Shore, who says—

“With respect to land and land revenue there are two material distinctions: first, the lands of the country were anciently distinguished by the denominations of Khalsa and Jahiri; the former may be translated exchequer lands; the latter, which are appropriated for the maintenance of Munsubdars, or the officers of the State, may be denoted assigned lands. The aggregate of the two constitutes the whole of the lands paying revenue to the State. Secondly, the distinction with respect to land revenue is that of asul or original, understood to be the standard assessment, in contradiction to abwab or taxes subsequently imposed upon it.”

In other words, before the permanent settlement, the asul, or ground rent, was only one portion of the amount payable by, and agreed to be paid by, a ryot; the other portion was abwab.

[757] This distinction, as I have pointed out above, runs not only through Regulation VIII of 1793, but also through other Regulations.

Regulation II of 1795, s. 3, cl. 2, runs as follows:—

“Second.—In the potthas for nukdi land (land paying a specific money rent per bigha), the name and length of the measuring rod was directed to be mentioned, and as, since the year 1781, sundry new articles of abwab and charges had been introduced, the potthah provided that all new abwabs and charges introduced since the Fusli year 1187 should, from the year 1196 of the same era, be considered as prohibited and relinquished, and the mal or original rent and abwab or cesses which existed in that year, viz., 1187 Fusli, being incorporated with the mal so as to form only one aggregate sum, this sum or specific rate should constitute what the ryots or cultivators of the nukdi lands were to pay per bigha.”

Again, take the preamble of Regulation XXX of 1803 regarding the settlement of the ceded provinces, where it is said that in the proclamation regarding the settlement of these provinces, and in Regulation XXVII of 1803 (1), it was declared that “all persons who may enter into engagements with Government for the public revenue, shall bind themselves to grant

(1) Section 53 (11), (12).
pottahs to their under-renters and ryots," in which "all authorized abwabs shall be consolidated with the land rent (or asul jama) in a gross sum:" that counter-engagements shall be executed by the ryots and under-renter of a similar tenor; and nothing but what is therein expressed shall be collected from the ryots or under-renters of whatever description.

The same view is set forth in Regulation VII of 1822, s. 9, and it comes to this, that up to the time of making a settlement, the whole amount paid by the ryots consisted of two portions, ground rent plus abwabs and that such of the abwabs as were allowed by the settlement were consolidated with the asul and called land rent, representing a share of the produce in contradistinction to abwabs or cesses. In illustration of this proposition, I set forth the lease granted under the Regulation to the ryots of Benares, the province next to Behar. It is the only form mentioned in the Regulations:

A pottah or engagement and stipulation in the name of—according to the zeyl without abwabs or serf. The fota or rent for the entire year of the cultivation shall be bilmokia or according to one rate; and exclusive of that neither a daam or dhimm will be taken.

In this lease rent is used in the sense of ground rent only, and it is on this supposition that all the elaborate rules for enhancement of rent in Act VIII of 1885 are based.

Nor do I think the express words of the Regulations, as to the consolidation of asul and abwabs into one sum, weakened by the argument that because the last four lines of Regulation V of 1812, s. 3, use the words in the plural, namely, "clauses" and "engagements," the rent must consist of more than one lump sum. It is a general clause and describes every person and every thing in the plural, except rent. It must be borne in mind that the leases contain a specification of rates, and that the land could be let for a term, and there might be clauses in regard to these matters as in the lease set out above. Moreover, we know that in some Regulations, before Regulation V of 1812, when rent was consolidated into one lump sum, the engagements between ryots and landholders are referred to in similar terms. Examples of this are found in Regulation XIV of 1793, s. 6, and in Regulation VII of 1799, s. 15, cl. 8, where the words bear a strong resemblance to those in Regulation V of 1812, although they refer to Regulation VIII of 1793.
The Judges held in the case decided by the Full Bench that there was no definition of abwabs in the Regulations, and hence [760] that it must be decided in each case whether any sum is or is not an abwab. It is true that there is no express definition of abwab in the Regulation. Yet, as the whole demand on a tenant is frequently declared to be the ground rent and abwab, the latter must be that portion of the demand not included in the ground rent. This too was the meaning attached to it in 1813, one year after the passing of Reg. V of 1812. In this year a glossary of legal terms was compiled in the East India House in London for the assistance of English readers of the Fifth Report, and in it abwab is defined as follows:

"This term is particularly used to distinguish the taxes imposed subsequently to the establishment of the asul, or original standard rent, in the nature of addition thereto. In many places they had been consolidated with the asul, and a new standard assumed as the basis of succeeding impositions."

This is, I think, an accurate definition of the term abwab as found in the Regulations, and it should serve as a guide to us in deciding cases; and certainly, if it be correct as I think it is, the cesses in this case and in the case under discussion were abwabs.

It is for these reasons I respectfully dissent from the decision in Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1). It seems to me to be in direct conflict with the decision of the Full Bench, and that both judgments cannot co-exist as an exposition of the same law. I think the sums of tekwari and salami stipulated to be paid were abwabs, and the stipulation to pay them was void.

I may add in support of the view of the Full Bench decision the case referred to pay the Judges of the Full Bench, viz., the case of Radha Mohan Surma Chowdhry v. Gunga Pershad Chuckertully (2). There the zamindar sued the farmers for Rs. 7,542-13-4 under the head of Zabita batta, i.e., an excess of a half anna in each rupee on the amount of the farming jama under their kabuliat, dated 22nd Bysack 1231. That suit was dismissed. Three Judges of the Sudder Dewani Adalut in giving judgment held as follows:

"The kabuliat provides that the farmers should pay such sums, over and above the stipulated jama, as are realized in the mofussil under the head of Zabita batta. Section 3, Regulation V, 1812, provides that the imposition of arbitrary or indefinite cesses, whether under the denomination [760] of abwab, mahtut, or other denomination, is illegal, and that all stipulations of that nature should be judged by the Courts to be null and void."

This case, in my opinion, bears a strong analogy to the case of Pudma Nund Singh v. Baij Nath Singh (1), and it affirms the principle that all agreements of the nature referred to in that case are null and void. The answer to the question referred to the Full Bench must, I conceive, be that the amounts sued for under the head of sarak, neg and khuruch, are abwabs, and are not, therefore, recoverable, and the appeals should be dismissed.

Prinsep, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Pigot, J.—I entirely agree.

Ghose, J.—This was a suit for rent for the years 1290 to 1293 at the rate of Rs. 22-2 annas per year. The defence was that the yearly rent was not Rs. 22-2 annas, but Rs. 18-10-6; and that the difference between Rs. 22-2 annas and Rs. 18-10-6 was made up of certain illegal cesses such as sarak, batta, neg and khuruch which could not be legally recovered.

The suit was instituted after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation.

The main question upon which the parties went to trial in the Courts below was whether the rent was Rs. 22-2 annas or Rs. 18-10-6; and upon this question both the Courts below found in favour of the defendant. They were of opinion that the "actual rent" was Rs. 18-10-6, and that although the defendant had for many years paid very nearly at the rate of Rs. 22-2 annas, still that sum was made up of the rent and the illegal cesses; that these cesses had not been consolidated with the rent in accordance with the provision of Reg. VIII of 1793, and that therefore they could not be recovered as rent. The learned Judge has, however, held that batta is not an illegal cess, and it can therefore be recovered; and he has reserved to the plaintiff the liberty of bringing a separate suit for neg.

The plaintiff appealed to this Court and the Division Bench before whom the case came on for hearing, has referred the following question to a Full Bench, viz.:

"Whether the portions of the claim that are objected to as coming under the denominations sarak, neg and khuruch are illegal cesses, or whether they are recoverable as rent by reason of there having been paid for a long time along with rent without any specification in the rent receipts."

It appears to me that upon the finding of fact arrived at by both the Courts below, the appeal ought to fail; and the question as to the legality or otherwise of the items of sarak, neg and khuruch hardly arises in this second appeal. The question between the parties was, what was the rent of the tenure held by the defendant; and it has been found that it was Rs. 18-10-6, and not Rs. 22-2 annas, and that the difference between these two figures was no part of the rent of the tenure, though paid along with it, and could not therefore be recovered as such.

But as the majority of the Judges who compose the Full Bench think that the question should be answered, I briefly state my views.

Section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides as follows:

"All impositions upon tenants under the denomination of abwab, mahint, or other like appellations, in addition to the actual rent, shall be illegal, and all stipulations and reservations for the payment of such shall be void."

And "rent" is defined in s. 3 (5) to mean "whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land." This definition, as I understand it, expresses in different words what has always been understood by the word "rent," viz., the consideration to be paid for the occupation of land by a tenant.

In this case the actual rent is found to be Rs. 18-10-6 only; and the other items claimed are what had been levied in previous years, under the denomination of sarak, khuruch, &c., in addition to the rent.

There is nothing to show that those items ever formed any part of the consideration for which the land was leased to the defendant; for if they did, they would, I think, be really rent, though described in the zemindari paper under other denominations. They were apparently abwabs imposed subsequent to the rent being fixed at Rs. 18-10-6; and it is not proved.
that the ryot at any time agreed to pay an enhanced rent including the said items as part of the rent.

[762] The word abwab is not defined either in Bengal Tenancy Act, or in the Regulations which have been repealed by that Act. When the East India Company obtained the Dewany of Bengal, they found that a variety of taxes, called abwab, mahtuts, &c., had been indiscriminately levied in addition to the asul or original ground rent by the Government from the zemindars, as also by the "zemindars" from the ryots. And from the Reports that were submitted by the officers of the Company, after investigation into the Revenue System, it would appear that in the time of the Emperor Akbar, a tumar jama or standard assessment was fixed upon the principle of division of the gross proceeds between the sovereign and the ryots in certain proportions. This standard assessment was from time to time augmented. But notwithstanding this standard assessment, various taxes were subsequently imposed upon the ryots by the farmers of the land revenue (zemindars, as also by the Subahdars (Viceroy)s) upon these farmers. And these taxes were called abwab jama in contradistinction to the asul jama, or original rent, at which the land was supposed to have been rated in the time of Akbar or an ancient rent fixed at some later period. The Subahdary abwabs were, it is said, generally levied upon the standard assessment in certain proportions from the zemindars, and the latter were authorized to collect them from the ryots in the same proportions; but, as a matter of fact, the zemindars were left to their own discretion and arbitrary will to make any new demands as they pleased, and there was no fixed rule or principle in levying these impositions. (See Harington’s Analysis, Vol. II, pages 19, 69, and 5th Report to the House of Commons, Vol. I, pages 103, 105 to 108, 275, 292, 300 and 391).

In the year 1772 (14th May) a Regulation (1) was passed, whereby it was declared that a settlement should be made for five years; that the farmers should not receive larger rents from the ryots than the stipulated amount of the potthas; that the payments made by the farmers to Government should, in like manner, be ascertained and established; and that no mahtuts or assessments under the denomination of mangan, sood, &c., or any other abwab should be [763] imposed upon the ryots, and those articles of abwab which were of recent establishment should be scrutinized, and such as might be found to be oppressive and pernicious should be abolished, and that all nuzzurs and salanis be totally discontinued (Articles 10 to 13).

In the same year, the Committee of Circuit, while making a settlement for five years in some parts of Bengal, found it necessary “to form an entire new hustabud or explanation of the diverse and complex articles which were to compose the collections,” these consisting of the asul or original ground rent and the abwabs. Such abwabs which appeared to be most oppressive were abolished, and the rest were retained, they being considered part of the “neat rents.” And in order to prevent the farmer from eluding the restriction imposed, the Committee prepared forms or potthas which the farmers were to give to the ryots, specifying the conditions of the lease and the “separate heads or articles of the rent.” (See Harrington’s Analysis, Vol. II, pages 19 and 20).

(F.B.).
Subsequently in the year 1787 (8th June), another Regulation (1) was passed, by the 50th article of which it was declared that, whereas, notwithstanding the orders of Government in 1772 prohibiting the imposition of mahtut or assessment, various taxes had since been imposed, the Collector should be enjoined to enforce that article, and that if any new taxes be imposed, he was to decree to the party injured double the amount extorted.

We then find that Lord Cornwallis, while recommending a Permanent Settlement of Revenue in Bengal, stated in his Minute, referring to Mr. Shore’s Minutes on the subject, that—

"The rents of the ryots, by whatever rule or custom they may be demanded, shall be specific as to their amount; that the landlords shall be obliged to grant pottahs, in which this amount shall be inserted, and that no ryot shall be liable to pay more than the sum actually specified in the pottah." (2)

And—

"every abwab or tax imposed over and above that sum is not only a breach of that agreement, but a direct violation of the established laws of the country." (3)

Further on he says—

"The Zemindar may sell the land, and the cultivator must pay to the purchaser. Neither is prohibiting the landholder to impose new abwabs or taxes on the lands in cultivation tantamount to saying to him that he shall not raise the rents of the estate. The rents of an estate are not to be raised by the imposition of new abwabs * * *. (3)

The policy of the Government then was, as I gather from what has been already noticed, that whatever may be payable as rent should be specified in the pottah to be granted by the landlord, and that no new abwabs should be imposed.

We then find that in s. 54 of Regulation VIII of 1793, it was laid down that—

"the impositions upon the ryots under the denomination of abwab, mahtut and other appellations, from their number and uncertainty, have become intricate to adjust, and a source of oppression to the ryots; all proprietors of land and dependent talukdars shall revise the same in concert with the ryots and consolidate the whole with the asul into one specific sum."

The next s. 55 provides that—

"no actual proprietor, or dependent talukdar, or farmer of land, shall impose any new abwab or mahtut upon the ryots * * * ."

Section 57 lays down that—

"the rents to be paid by the ryots, by whatever rule or customs they may be regulated, shall be specifically stated in the pottah, which in every possible case shall contain the exact sum to be paid, ."

Section 58 provides that the proprietor of the land or dependent talukdar shall prepare the form of pottahs to be given to the ryots, and obtain the approbation of the Collector. Section 61 says that in the event of any claim being preferred by any proprietor or talukdar on engagements wherein the consolidation of the asul, abwab, &c., shall appear not to have been made within the time limited by s. 54, they are to be non-suited.

This was the law until the year 1812. The object that the Legislature had in view in 1793 was to put down the imposition of new abwabs, and to make it compulsory upon the landlords to consolidate the then existing abwabs with the rent. And probably, they intended also that there should be but one sum, [765] including all the items of payment, fixed and specified in the pottah as the rent. But then s. 3, Regulation V of 1812, in the first place rescinds so much of the Regulation of 1793, which provided that the proprietors and talukdars should prepare forms of pottahs, and obtain the sanction of the Collector thereto, and authorizes them to grant pottahs in such forms as the contracting parties might agree to, and it then lays down as follows:—

"Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to sanction or legalize the imposition of arbitrary or indefinite cesses whether under the denomination of abwab mahtut, or any other denomination. All stipulations or reservations of that nature shall be adjudged by the Courts of Judicature to be null and void; but the Courts shall notwithstanding maintain and give effect to the definite clauses of the engagements contracted between the parties, or in other words, enforce payment of such sums as may have been specifically agreed upon between them."

It will be observed that the section prohibits the imposition of arbitrary and indefinite cesses, and says that any reservation or stipulation of that nature shall be null and void. And the words which follow are to my mind very significant as showing what they really intended to lay down. I think their intention was to provide that if the parties agree to any specific and definite sum or sums as consideration for the lease, such agreement shall be enforced. The expression "such sums as may have been specifically agreed upon" should be read as it were in contradistinction to the words "imposition of arbitrary or indefinite cesses."

As I have already stated, when the East India Company assumed the Dewany, they found after enquiry that a variety of taxes under the denomination of abwab, mahtut, &c., were being indiscriminately levied by the zamindars according to their own will and discretion, without any fixed rule or principle. And it was the policy of the Government to put a stop to such arbitrary and indefinite impositions, and to prohibit the levying of new abwabs. If the construction I have put be not correct, I fail to see with what object the last portion of the section beginning with the words "but the Courts shall notwithstanding, &c.," was put in; for accepting the opposite view to be correct, these words would, I think, be superfluous.

[766] In the case of Chulhan Mahton (1), decided by the Full Bench of this Court, Mr. Justice Mitter (and his judgment was concurred in by Tottenham and Pigot, JJ.) observed as follows:—

"Although the Regulations did not clearly define what an abwab is, still I think that it cannot be maintained that anything which is definite and certain is not an abwab under the Regulations, although the parties to the contract call it so. It seems to be that the Regulations, without defining clearly what an abwab is, left this question to the determination by the Court in each case upon the evidence. I cannot find anywhere in the Regulation the precise definition of the word abwab, which would justify me to treat the disputed items of claim as part of the specified rent, although the plaintiffs claim them in the plaint and entered them in the zamindary accounts as abwabs."
In that case the plaintiff claimed to recover a certain amount as rent, as also certain other items as "customary abwabs" as having been prevalent in the village from time immemorial. It was contended that these abwabs had existed from before the Permanent Settlement, and were therefore recoverable, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 54, Reg. VIII of 1793, and further that they were not abwabs, although claimed as such in the plaint, but part of the rent. The Full Bench negatived both these contentions, and Mr. Justice Mitter held, as already mentionned, that what was an abwab must be left to the determination by the Court in each case upon the evidence; but that in the case before them he could not hold that the disputed items were part of the rent. No doubt that learned Judge in a subsequent passage while referring to the last four lines of s. 3, Reg. V of 1812, viz., "but the Courts shall notwithstanding maintain and give effect to the definite clauses in the engagements contracted between the parties, or, in other words, enforce payment of such sums as may have been specially agreed upon between them," says that "the words 'sum specified' refer to the amount of the rent specified." But this passage must be read with what had preceded, and which I have already referred to.

The Judicial Committee in affirming that decision observed as follows:—

"The first question seems to be this: are these payments over and above rent, properly so-called, abwabs within the meaning of the words as used in the Reg. VIII of 1793?

[767] "They are described in the plaint as 'old abwabs,' and they are described as abwabs in the zamindari accounts. It appears to their Lordships that the High Court were perfectly right in treating them as abwabs and not as part of the rent. Unquestionably they have been paid for a long time—how long does not appear. They are said to have been paid according to long standing custom; whether that means that they were payable at the time of the permanent settlement or not is not plain. If they were payable at the time of the permanent settlement, they ought to have been consolidated with the rent under s. 54, Reg. VIII of 1793. Not being so consolidated they cannot now be recovered under s. 61 of that Regulation. If they were not payable at the time of the permanent settlement, they would come under the description of new abwabs in s. 55; and they would be in that case illegal.* * *"

What the Judicial Committee say is simply this: plaintiff expressly claims these items as abwabs; if they existed at the time of the permanent settlement, they should have been consolidated with the rent under s. 51, Reg. VIII of 1793; if they were not payable at that time, they are new abwabs, and therefore illegal under s. 55. And they further say that the High Court were right in treating them as abwabs and not as part of the rent.

I do not understand that they intended to go any way beyond what Mr. Justice Mitter said in his judgment, and to lay down, as it is said they did lay down, that nothing, save and except one sum, including every item of payment, could be recovered as payable for the occupation of land; and that an agreement to pay anything beyond that sum, although it might be a lawful consideration for the lease, could not be enforced.

It appears to me that if in any given case the Court finds that any particular sum specified in the lease or agreed to be paid, is a lawful consideration for the use and occupation of any land, that is to say, if it is really part of the rent, although not described as such, it would be justified in holding that it is not abwah, and is recoverable by the landlord.

And it is somewhat from this point of view that the case of Pudma Nund Singh (1) was decided. That was a case of a permanent mokurwari lease executed before the Bengal Tenancy Act, and under which the defendant agreed to pay a certain [768] amount as rent, and two other items of Rs. 9 and 2 respectively designated as tehwari and salami towzi. The Division Bench (Tottenham and Ghose, JJ.), before which the case came on for hearing, proceeding upon the provisions of s. 3, Reg. V of 1812, held that the items objected to, viz., tehwari and salami, were recoverable because they were not arbitrary and uncertain in their character, but specific sums which the tenant had agreed to pay; and because these sums formed part of the consideration for the lease, and were in fact part of the rent agreed to be paid, though not described as such. The case was decided upon the terms of s. 3, Reg. V of 1812, and not with reference to s. 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the lease having been executed before that Act was passed. The judgment in the case was delivered by Tottenham, J., who was one of the Judges who formed the Full Bench in the case of Chuhan Mahton. And I may here observe that it was not intended thereby to hold that anything that is not arbitrary and indefinite is recoverable, although it may not be part of the rent. In that case both the elements were supposed to be present, viz., that the items in question were not of an arbitrary or indefinite character; and secondly, they formed part of the rent agreed to be paid. I am, however, bound to say that having since more carefully considered the subject, I have come to the opinion that we were not right in holding that the items of tehwari and salami were part of the rent stipulated to be paid under the lease. They were, I now think, abwabs.

As regards the items of sarak and khuruch claimed in the case now before us, it seems to me that, although they had been realised in previous years at certain rates, still the amounts are not indefinite, and they may vary according to circumstances; and if the rent is not permanent, they would be augmented with the increase of rent—Radha Mohun Surma Chowdhry v. Ganga Pershad Chuckerbutty (2). But, however that may be, the question is whether under the Bengal Tenancy Act (s. 74) they may be recovered. The Judge of the Court below has found, as a matter of fact, that they are no part of the "actual rent," and it follows therefore that they are not recoverable.

[769] As regards neg, I should also think that it cannot be recovered in this case, because it is no part of the rent.

INDIAN DECISIONS, NEW SERIES

17 C. 769.

FULL BENCH.

Before Sir W. Coomer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Prinsep, Mr. Justice Tottenham, Mr. Justice Pigot, and Mr. Justice Ghose.

MOHENDRO NARAIN CHATURAJ and others (Defendants) v. GOPAL MONDUL and others (Plaintiffs).*

[1st April, 1890.]

Sale in execution of decree—Fraud—Suit to set aside a sale on the ground of Fraud—Decree—Quistions arising between the parties or their representatives under s. 244 (c) of Act XIV of 1882—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 2, 244 (c), 274, 287, 289, 311, 312, 314—316—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 18, Art. 166.

Held by the Full Bench (Petheram, C. J., Prinsep, Tottenham, and Pigot, J.), Ghose, J., dissenting, that when circumstances affecting the validity of a sale in execution have been brought about by the fraud of one of the parties to the suit, and give rise to a question between these parties such as apart from fraud, would be within the provisions of s. 244, a suit will not lie to impeach the validity of the sale on the ground of such fraud.—Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (1), Viraraghava Ayyangar v. Venkatacharyar (2), Paranjape v. Kanade (3), and Sakharran Gobind Kale v. Damodar Akharam Gujarat (4), approved; Gobind Chundra Majumdar v. Uma Charan Sen (5), dissented from in part.

Held that in such a case the judgment-debtor is entitled, whether the sale has been confirmed or not to make, as against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, such application (if any) under s. 311 as he may be entitled to make, his time for making it being computed from the time when the fraud first became known to him.

Held, further, that in cases in which the decree or the purchase is made benami, s. 244 does not apply, and a suit may be held to lie to set aside the sale.

Per Ghose, J.—An objection under s. 311, or upon the ground of fraud, raised by the judgment-debtor after the sale has been confirmed under s. 312, cannot be dealt with under s. 244. In such a case the judgment-debtor is entitled upon the ground of fraud to bring a suit to set aside the sale, or at all events to have it declared that the sale passed no title to the [770] purchaser, or that the purchaser is a trustee for him. There is no special provision in the Code for setting aside a sale on the ground of fraud when it has once been confirmed.

The facts out of which this reference arose were briefly as follows:—

Two persons, named Nilachul and Haradhun, who owned as landlords a certain property, obtained a decree for arrears of rent against the plaintiffs in respect of a tenure held by them in that property. Execution of this decree was taken out in the Court of the Munsif of Gungajulghati, and while the proceedings were going on the decree-holders assigned their interest to Gopal Mondul, the defendant No. 1. The tenure of the plaintiffs was then sold in execution of the decree, and was ostensibly purchased.

* Full Bench on Special Appeal, No. 1347 of 1888, from the decree of Baboo Rajendro Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Bankura, dated the 30th April 1888, affirming the decree of Babu Kartick Chunder Pal, Munsif of Gungajulghati, dated the 4th June 1887.

by the defendant No. 2 on the 21st April 1883. No application was made by the judgment-debtors within 30 days, as provided by art. 166 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, for setting aside the sale under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code, and it was confirmed on the 26th May following. No step was, however, taken by the purchaser to obtain possession of the property for upwards of a year, and it was not until the 6th June 1886 that the plaintiffs were served with a notice by the Court which had held the sale to vacate possession. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted the present suit on the 12th June 1886 for the purpose of setting aside the sale, and for such other relief as they might be entitled to obtain; the ground of action being that the sale was a fraudulent one, and that the defendant No. 3, who was the beneficial holder of the decree in the name of the defendant No. 1, secretly brought about the sale without any publication of the sale notification, and purchased the property in the benami name of defendant No. 2.

Both the lower Courts decreed the suit of the plaintiffs, and the lower appellate Court found that there was no publication whatever of the sale notifications; that the whole of the proceedings in execution of the decree were colourable transactions, the object of the defendant No. 3, who was the beneficial assignee of the decree, being to secure the property for herself; that she purchased in the name of the defendant No. 2; and that, prior to the service of notice upon the plaintiffs to vacate the land, they had no knowledge of the fraud that had been practised upon them.

[771] The case was referred to a Full Bench by the Division Bench (Pigot and Beverley, JJ.) on the 28th August 1889, with the following opinion:

"This is a suit to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud. The purchaser at the sale was the decree-holder. The fraud consisted in the decree-holder having brought about the sale without causing a notification of the sale.

"It has been held in the case of Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (1), in Madras in the case of Viraraghava Ayyangar v. Venkatacharyar (2), and in two cases decided in the High Court of Bombay Parenjape v. Kanade (3)—and Sakharan Gobiuda Kale v. Damodar Akhavam Gujar (4)—that fraud will not entitle a party to bring a suit which would, in the absence of fraud, be barred by the provisions of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code.

"Two cases later in date than that of Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (1) have been relied on by the Subordinate Judge as overruling or inconsistent with that decision. They are Brojo Gopal Sarkar v. Busirunnissa Bibi (5) and Gobind Chundra Majumdar v. Uma Chavan Sen (6).

"Although, perhaps, in form not expressed to be inconsistent with it, they are in some measure capable of being so treated, and we think it necessary to refer the question to a Full Bench.

"The questions we refer are:

"First—Whether, when circumstances affecting the validity of a sale have been brought about by fraud of one of the parties to a suit, and give rise to a question between those parties, such as, apart from fraud, would be within the provisions of s. 244, a suit will lie on the ground of fraud, notwithstanding the provisions of that section?"
"Second—Whether the case of Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Mooh (1) was rightly decided?"

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, for the appellants.

Dr. Troylukhya Nath Mitter, for the respondents.

[772] The authorities cited appear sufficiently from the judgments. The opinions of the Full Bench (Petheram, C. J., Prinsep, Tottenham, Pigot and Ghose, JJ.) were as follows:—

OPINIONS.

Pigot, J.—The case of Brojo Gopal Sarkar v. Basirunnissa Bibi (2) and Gobind Chundra Majumdar v. Uma Charan Sen (3) are relied on by the Subordinate Judge as inconsistent with the previous decision of this Court mentioned in the reference. They are, in effect, liable to the interpretation put upon them by the Subordinate Judge, although not professing to overrule it; and for that reason, although the case may be disposed of without deciding upon that inconsistency, it is proper to deal with the questions put to us.

Relying upon them, and upon previous decisions mentioned by him, the Subordinate Judge has set aside the sale, holding that the balance of authority is in favour of the suit being maintainable, though the execution-creditor may be the purchaser.

The question is of great importance, and ought, I think, to be determined in this reference. As to the first question, my opinion is as follows:—When circumstances affecting the validity of a sale have been brought about by the fraud of one of the parties to the suit, and give rise to a question between those parties such as apart from fraud, would be within the provisions of s. 244, a suit will not lie to impeach the validity of the sale on the ground of such fraud. I treat the "first question referred" as including the words "to impeach the validity of sale" in the 5th line of it, and limit the answer to this.

The words of s. 244 are express:—"The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree, and not by separate suit (namely)—"

"(a) Questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits as to which the decree has directed inquiry.

"(b) Questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits or interest which the decree has made payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit between the date of its institution and the execution of decree, or the expiration of three years from the date of the decree.

"(c) Any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, and [778] relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree, or to the stay of execution thereof.

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to bar a separate suit for mesne profit accruing between the institution of the first suit and the execution of the decree therein, where such profits are not dealt with by such decree.

"If a question arises as to who is the representative of a party for the purposes of this section, the Court may either stay execution of the decree until the question has been determined by a separate suit or itself determine the question by an order under this section."

(1) 11 C. 376. (2) 15 C. 179. (3) 14 C. 679.
No doubt the expression "relating to the execution," &c., is wide and somewhat vague, and has caused some difficulty in more cases than one; but once a case is held to come within those words, the law seems plain enough. The words of the sub-s. (c) are as clear as could well be used, and apply to all questions other than those concerning mesne profits and interest mentioned in (a) and (b) between the parties and of the kind therein described.

The object aimed at is equally clear: it is that the Court having the parties already before it, should decide all questions relating to execution, etc., arising between them, in place of allowing one or the other of them to put his adversary to the delay and cost of a separate suit in cases in which but for this sub-section it might be possible for him to do so. In order to effect this object to completely without injustice to the parties, an order under this section has been included within the definition of decree in s. 2 of the Code, so as to allow an appeal.

It is, however, contended that although the words of the sub-section include all questions relating to the matters specified, still, where questions arise of the nature referred to, in which fraud is involved, these may or must still be the subject-matter of a regular suit; and it is contended that the cases decided in this Court support this conclusion.

I shall refer to several of the cases which have been cited.

In Nilmoni Bonik v. Puddo Lochun Chuckerbutty (1) a sale in execution of the decree under Act X of 1859 of a Revenue Court [774] (which decree itself had been set aside) was set aside as fraudulently obtained. The purchaser (if that be material) was not a party to the original suit, but was a party to the fraud. No question arose in this case under s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, the section then corresponding to s. 244.

Umbica Churn Chuckerbutty v. Dwarka Nath Ghose (2) is one of those cases in which the head-notes misstate the decisions. The case was decided when Act XXIII of 1861 was in force. The Court says:—"The question to be tried does not arise between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and relating to the execution of that decree"; and lower down, "s. 11 therefore cannot apply." This case, therefore, assuredly does not decide that notwithstanding s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 a suit on the ground of fraud would lie though between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of that decree.

Nund Lall Doss v. Delawar Ali (3). In this case no question under s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 seems to have arisen. The co-sharer of the plaintiff, one Jamul Ali, induced the decree-holder to make false returns and to commit other irregularities, by which Jamul was enabled to purchase the plaintiff's property below its value in the name of Delawar Ali (defendant No. 1). It is difficult to see how this case can be treated as an authority for the proposition contended for. It does not appear from the report whether the decree-holder was a party to the suit or not: even if he was, it is plain he was not the only, or the real and principal defendant, and the relief claimed was against persons not parties to the original suit.

Ujolla Dasi v. Dhiraj Mahtab Chand (4) was a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1859. The procedure under Act VIII of 1859, if any, applied, and s. 283 of that Act does not contain

(3) 11 W.R. 244.
(4) 8 C. 215.
the provision introduced into Act XXIII of 1861 and now contained in s. 244. The case does not apply.

In Gunia Moni Dasi v. Pran Kishori Dasi (1), the plaintiff compromised a decree which the defendant had against her, paying [775] about Rs. 930 in respect of the decree. The compromise, however, was not certified, and the defendant sued out execution: thus the plaintiff was compelled to pay the amount of the decree. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover the money paid under the compromise. It was held that s. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861 did not apply to payments made out of Court not certified to the Court, and of which it could not take notice, and did not therefore apply in the case. This case was followed in the case of Ishan Chunder Bundopadhya v. Indra Narain Gossami (2), where it was held that s. 244 did not, any more than 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, apply to a case where a payment of money in satisfaction of a judgment-debtor's liability under the decree was made out of Court and was not certified. In that case the decree having been executed, and the judgment-debtor’s property purchased by the decree-holder, the Court set aside the sale.

These are cases in which it was held that the questions which arose were not “questions relating to the execution of the decree” within the meaning of the section. They do not decide that questions which do come within the purview of the section may nevertheless be determined by separate suit if a question of fraud is involved.

In the case of Gunia Pershad Sahu v. Gopal Singh (3) an agreement to postpone an execution sale was come to by the parties and was filed in Court, but in the wrong Court. The sale took place in consequence of this mistake; the judgment-debtor was absent; and the decree-holder took advantage of the sale so held and bought the property. It was held that a suit would lie to set aside the sale, as it is said in the report (more accurately, as stated in the order, for a reconveyance), upon payment of the amount due under the decree. In fact the sale was not invalidated, but was affirmed by the order, for a reconveyance was ordered on terms to be fulfilled by the plaintiff. On reference to the paper-book it appears that those terms were contained in an agreement between the parties made after the sale, and that one of these terms was the payment by the plaintiff to the defendant and his father of money due under a former decree, which had no connection whatever with the sale, or with the suit it which the sale had [776] taken place. No question was raised in the case as to s. 244: the questions in the case appear to have been treated as wholly unaffected by that section.

I think that it cannot be affirmed that either in this Court or elsewhere any course of decisions is to be found according to which questions coming under the section may be determined by separate suit, because of being affected by considerations of fraud—or if the circumstances giving rise to them have been brought about by the fraud of one of the parties to the suit in execution; and I see no reason why the section should not be held to apply to such cases as well as any others.

I must therefore dissent from the expression of opinion in the case of Gobind Chandra Majumdar v. Uma Charan Sen (4) at page 681, to the effect that: “If the sale was really a fraudulent sale, it is open to the judgment-debtor to bring a suit to set it aside on the ground of fraud.”

This, I think, would not be so, if they question arising was one properly coming within s. 244.

The decision in the case just mentioned is so connected with the question with which we are here concerned, that I think myself bound to express my opinion upon it. In that case a sale in execution took place, of which the judgment-debtor was, by the fraud of the judgment-creditor and the purchaser, kept in ignorance until after the sale had been confirmed. It was contended that the judgment-debtor was entitled under s. 18 of the Limitation Act to apply to have the sale set aside within 30 days from the discovery of the fraud. But it was held that the sale having been confirmed, no application could be entertained under s. 311.

I think that under s. 18 of the Limitation Act, where irregularities affecting the validity of the sale have been, by the fraud of the judgment-creditor or other parties to the sale, kept concealed from the judgment-debtor, he is entitled, whether the sale has been confirmed or not, to make, as against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, such application, if any, under s. 311 as he may be entitled to make, his time for making it being computed from the time when the fraud first became known to him. The confirmation of the sale ought not to be used as a shield for the fraud by which the Court has been induced to make the sale itself.

[777] In the present case the steps to take possession were a year after the confirmation of sale, and the judgment-debtor at once was put in motion.

I agree in principle with the cases decided in the High Courts of Madras and Bombay, and that of Saroda Churn Chuckerbulty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (1), referred to in the reference, and answer the second question in the affirmative.

In this particular case defendant No. 2, the purchaser was not a party to the original suit: he has been held to have purchased benami for defendant No. 3. So also defendant No. 1, who was the decree-holder, has been held to have become purchaser of the decree for defendant No. 3, and to have carried out the decree under his orders.

I think that if we were to hold sub-s. (c) of s. 244 as governing cases in which the decree or the purchase was made benami, and to apply it on the footing that the persons really interested were, within the meaning of the sub-section, parties to the proceedings, we should run the risk of applying the section, so as perhaps in some cases to work hardship. I do not think we are bound to go further than the express words of the section, and therefore think that in the close of the argument. There is no doubt, of course, that the fraud found was of the grossest character; and the suit, no being barred by s. 244 as the questions in it did not arise between the parties to the former suit, in execution, will lie for relief against the fraud charged and proved.

The appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs.

Petheram, C. J.—I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered.

Prinsep, J.—I am of the opinion.

Tottenham, J.—I also agree with the judgment just delivered.

Ghose, J.—This case has been referred to a Full Bench in consequence of a conflict of opinion that exists upon the question whether in the case of a fraudulent sale in execution of a decree where the decree-holder becomes the purchaser, a suit lies to set aside the sale. (The facts were then set out.)

(1) 11 C. 376.

[778] It has been contended before us that defendant No. 3 being, upon the finding of the Court below, the real holder of the decree, and having purchased the property, though in the name of defendant No. 2, must be taken to be a party to the suit in which the decree was passed within the meaning of s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the question now raised by the plaintiffs, the judgment-debtors, is a question relating to the execution of the decree, and therefore no separate suit lies to set aside the sale. It has been further contended that the omission of the publication of the sale notification, though it might have been fraudulent, was but an irregularity with the meaning of s. 311 of the Procedure Code, and that it was open to the plaintiffs to apply to the Court for the purpose of setting aside the sale within 30 days from the time when the fraud was discovered, claiming exception under s. 18 of the Limitation Act.

Upon the first of these two contentions, it seems to me that neither the defendant No. 3, who is only beneficially interested in the decree and in the purchase at the auction-sale, nor the defendant No. 2, the ostensible auction-purchaser, can be properly regarded as a party to the suit in which the decree was passed, or the representative of any such party, within the meaning of s. 244 of the Code. The defendant No. 1, by virtue of the assignment of the decree, may no doubt be regarded as the representative of the original decree-holders, but it can hardly be said that the defendant No. 3 fills that character, much less the defendant No. 2; and they are the persons against whom the plaintiff seeks relief in this suit. It follows, therefore, that the case does not fall within s. 244; and upon the finding of fraud that has been arrived at by the Courts below, there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover. And in this respect, I agree with my learned colleagues.

If this is a correct view, it may not be necessary to answer the two questions which have been referred to us. They are:—

First—"Whether, when circumstances, affecting the validity of a sale have been brought about by the fraud of one of the parties to a suit, and give rise to a question between those parties, such as, apart from fraud, would lie within the provisions of [779] s. 244, a suit will lie on the ground of fraud notwithstanding the provisions of that section?"

Second—"Whether the case of Saroda Churn Chuckerbutty v. Mahomed Isuf Meah (1) was rightly decided?"

But perhaps it may be desirable, in view of the conflict of opinion that exists, on the subject, and the importance of it, to answer these questions; and I proceed shortly to state my views.

The Code of Civil Procedure prescribes that where any property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made, giving the time and place of sale (s. 287); and the proclamation shall be made in the manner prescribed by s. 274 on the spot where the property is attached, viz., on a conspicuous part of the property to be sold (s. 289).

After the notification of sale is thus published, the property is to be sold on the advertised day. The judgment-debtor may, however, apply under s. 311 to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting it; but if no such application is made, or if such application be made; and the objection be disallowed, the Court shall pass an order confirming the sale as regards the parties to the suit and the purchaser; and that no suit to set aside the sale on the ground of such irregularity shall be brought (s. 312). The Code further provides that the sale shall not become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court (s. 314); and that when the sale has become absolute, the Court shall grant a certificate to the purchaser; and that upon such certificate being granted, the title to the property shall vest in the purchaser (s. 316).

(1) 11 C. 376.

In the present case, the sale was held on the 21st April 1885, and it was confirmed on the 26th May, no application having been made by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale within the time prescribed by the Limitation Act, viz., 30 days.

The question then arises What is the remedy which the law allows to the judgment-debtor, and is this suit maintainable?

It was contended that it was open to the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court, which held the sale, for the purpose of setting it aside under s. 311 of the Code; and that he might have made such an application, by virtue of s. 18 of the Limitation Act, within 30 days from the date of the discovery of fraud. It will be observed that an application under s. 311 can only be made upon the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale; and a question does arise whether the non-publication of the notification of sale is but an irregularity within the meaning of that section. But supposing for the sake of argument that it is an irregularity, the question is whether it was really open to the judgment-debtor to make the application, the sale having been already confirmed, and the fraud being not discovered until after that confirmation.

I have already referred to the several sections of the Code which bear upon this matter, viz., ss. 311, 312, 314, and 316; and it will be observed that if no objection to the sale is made within the time allowed by art. 166 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, i.e., 30 days from the date when the sale is held, the sale shall be confirmed and a certificate granted to the purchaser, in whom the title to the property shall thenceforth vest. It seems to me, regard being had to the arrangement of the various sections in the subchapter G (a) and (b), that so soon as the sale is confirmed and a certificate granted, the execution Court, so far as that sale is concerned, becomes functus officio, and that it is not competent to re-open a matter which is concluded by the confirmation of the sale. And this is practically the view that was expressed in a case decided by the Chief Justice and myself, Gobind Chundra Majumdar v. Uma Charan Sen (1). And the same view, I find, was adopted by the Bombay High Court in the case of Sakharam Gobind Kale v. Damodar Akkaram Gujjar (2).

Section 18 of the Limitation Act is as follows (omitting passages which are not necessary to be referred to in this connection): "When any person having a right to institute a suit or make an application has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or the title on which it is founded, the time limited for instituting a suit or making an application against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby."

This section contemplates the existence of a right to make an application. And the question here arises whether, after a sale has been

---

(1) 14 C. 679.

(2) 9 B. 468.
confirmed, and the title to the property has vested in the purchaser, the right exists in the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court which held the sale to set it aside. If the view I have already expressed be correct, it would seem that no such right exists.

If the application be made before the sale is confirmed, the Court would be competent to entertain it, even if it is presented after the expiration of 30 days from the day of sale, if it is satisfied that the judgment-debtor was by means of fraud kept from the knowledge of what had taken place. But it seems to me that so soon as the sale is confirmed, and a certificate of sale given to the purchaser, the right to make such an application ceases to exist.

In the case of Rai Bal Krishna v. Masuma Bibi (1) decided by the Judicial Committee, a question was raised whether the sale at which the plaintiff purchased was not bad by reason of non-compliance of the provisions of s. 219 of Act VIII of 1859 as to affixing of the notification of sale, and by reason of the period of 30 days having not expired from the notification before the sale was held. The High Court of the North-Western Provinces, apparently with reference to this question, and also with reference to a question of jurisdiction of the Court in which the sale took place, held that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed as purchaser. But the Privy Council held otherwise. They observed: "With respect to the first case, their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment dismissing the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was not the purchaser of Bisheshur's mortgage, on the ground of the sale being irregular, and the Court not having jurisdiction to execute the decree, was wrong. The irregularities referred to, if they existed, were cured by the certificate of sale * * *." That was taken to be a case of an irregularity, and it was held that it was cured by the certificate of sale; and if this is the correct view of the law, I do not see how it can be said that after a sale has been confirmed, and a certificate granted, it is open to the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court to set aside the sale upon the ground of irregularity.

I next turn to the question whether what occurred in this case was merely an irregularity, or something different from that. What [782] is complained of is (and so it has been found by the Court below) that there was no notification of sale at all published. As I understand it, irregularity in publishing a sale refers to cases like these: the notification is required to be published on a conspicuous part of the property to be sold, but it is published in a hole or corner, or on some other property, or, where several properties are attached for sale, the notification is published on only one of them: the notification of sale does not contain some of the particulars mentioned in s. 287: the proclamation is to be fixed in the Court-house, but it is fixed in the Police Office. These are irregularities, and they would come under s. 311. But it seems to be that when there was no notification at all published, it is a different thing. It has been held in several cases, both in Calcutta and Allahabad, that where there is an infringement of the provision of s. 290, which provides that no sale can take place before the expiration of 30 days from the publication of the notification in the Court-house, or if a sale takes place before the time specified in the notification of sale provided by s. 287, it is an illegality vitiating the sale. It is not a mere irregularity, but rather

(1) 5 A. 142= 9 I.A. 182.

If these rulings be right, there can be no doubt that in this case the sale was no sale at all, and that the provisions of s. 311 as to irregularity in the publishing of the sale have no application. The case of Rai Bal Krishna (6) decided by the Privy Council, which I have already referred to, would, however, seem to be opposed to the view adopted in some of these cases. But however that may be, so far as the case before us is concerned, I am inclined to think that it was not simply an irregularity, but an illegality that occurred in the sale; for it is a condition precedent to a sale that a notification should have been previously published. No doubt instances have occurred where, in cases like this, the execution Court has interfered and set aside [783] the sale when the matter was brought to its notice in proper time; but I should think that it is a power inherent in a Court holding a sale to refuse to confirm the sale if it finds that there has been no sale under the Code. [See in this connection the remarks of Sir John Edge in the case of Ganga Prasad v. Jag Lal Ray (7).]

Having dealt with the question whether an application could be made by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale under s. 311, I proceed next to discuss the question whether he could have in this case taken proceedings under s. 244 of the Code, and whether that section is a bar to the present suit.

I have already said that s. 244 does not contemplate such parties as those whom we have before us. But assuming that it does for the sake of argument, and for the purpose of enabling one to answer the question referred to us, the question that presents itself is whether an objection to the validity of the sale raised by the judgment-debtor after the sale has been confirmed under s. 312 can be dealt with by the Court under s. 244 as a question relating to the execution of the decree. I think not; for, as I have already explained, after a sale has been confirmed, everything in regard to that sale is at an end, and indeed the Court becomes functus officio. Section 316 distinctly lays down that, so far as the parties to the suit and the purchaser are concerned, the certificate of sale, which is to bear the date of the confirmation of sale, shall vest the title upon the purchaser. Can it be said that, notwithstanding the title has thus vested in the purchaser, proceedings may yet be taken under s. 244 of the Code upon any grounds mentioned in s. 311, or upon any other ground, such as fraud? I do not think so; for then there would be no finality in a proceeding holding or confirming a sale. Suppose the judgment-debtor was aware of the sale in proper time, and he applied to set it aside under s. 311, but the Court being of opinion that there was no irregularity confirmed the sale; the judgment-debtor subsequently discovers the fraud: can he then move the Court to set aside the sale under s. 244 and obtain relief on the ground of fraud? I apprehend not. Of course if the proceeding may be re-opened by an application under s. 311, although made after the confirmation of sale by reason of discovery of [784] fraud, as to which I have already addressed myself, well and good; otherwise I do not see how, notwithstanding the confirmation of sale, an application may be made under s. 244, and how can the matter be dealt with by the Court as a "Court executing the decree."

(1) 14 C. 1, (2) 16 C. 794, (3) 7 A. 289. (4) 9 A. 511. (5) 11 A. 333. (6) 5 A. 142=(9 I.A. 182. (7) 11 A. 333 (337, 338).
The ground upon which the present suit has been brought is fraud; and it seems to me that this gives to the plaintiff a cause of action upon which he is entitled to come to Court. Fraud vitiates the most solemn proceeding of a Court of Justice; it is an act which is extrinsic to the case. And although the proceeding cannot be impeached on the ground of mistake, it may be shown (and this I should think by a separate or counter-action) that the Court was led to make the decree or order by the fraud of one of the parties. Sir Barnes Peacock in the Full Bench case of Nilmoni Bonick v. Pundo Lochun Chuckerbutty (1), where the suit was brought to set aside a sale in execution of a decree under Act X of 1839, observed as follows:—"There is no general power in one Civil Court to set aside a decree of another Court of competent jurisdiction upon the ground of an error or mistake on the part of the Court making the decree. But where a decree of one Court, or an execution of a decree, is obtained by fraud, the fraud gives a right of action to the party injured by it against the party guilty of the fraud. It is a cause of suit in a Civil Court which has jurisdiction to administer equity, justice and good conscience, and to restrain the parties to the fraud from reaping the benefit of their own fraud." And it has been held in other cases that, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 11, Act XXI1 of 1861 (corresponding to s. 244), a suit may be brought if the sale was brought about by fraud, (See Umbica Churn Chuckerbutty v. Dwarkanath Ghose (2), Nund Lall Doss v. Delawar Ali (3), Mohort Nath Persad v. Ghujadur Persad (4).) The same principle may perhaps be deduced from two other cases—Pat Dasi v. Sharuf Chand Mala (5) and Ujolla Dasi v. Dhivraj Mahatab Chand (6). In the first-mentioned case the sale took place notwithstanding satisfaction of the decree out [785] of Court, and the decree-holder became the purchaser. It was held that a suit lay to recover the property. In the other case, where also the decree-holder was the purchaser, the suit was brought to set aside the sale. It was held that unless the judgment-debtor objected, or had opportunity to object, to the sale under s. 257 of Act VIII of 1859 (corresponding to s. 311 of present Code), a suit would lie to set it aside. Regard being then had to the reason of the thing, and to the course of decisions in this matter, I should hold that a suit lies, notwithstanding the provisions of s. 244 of the Code, to set aside the sale. I freely admit that if an application had been made in proper time by the judgment-debtor to the Court which held the sale, it might have set it aside upon the ground of fraud; but this is, as has been held in Indian Law Reports, II, Madras, page 264, and Indian Law Reports, VI, Bombay, page 148, because it is always competent to a Court to vacate any judgment or order, if obtained by fraud, and not because there is any special provision (as there is none) in the Code as to setting aside a sale for fraud. However that may be, there is nothing, I think, to prevent the judgment-debtor from bringing a separate suit for the same purpose: he might at any rate sue to have it declared that the sale passed no title to the purchaser, or that the purchaser is a trustee for him. In this particular case the judgment-debtor, no doubt, sues to set aside the sale, and not to have the declaration which I have just mentioned; but the objection on this head is merely as to the form and not to the substance; and, indeed, the plaintiff in the last clause of his prayer asks that any other relief which the Court may deem fit may also be granted; and upon this prayer the Court may declare that under the sale in question the defendant acquired no title, or that he should reconvey the property to the plaintiff. I observe that in the case of Gunga Pershad Sahu (1), which was brought to set aside a sale held in violation of a petition for postponement of the sale, which was agreed to by the decree-holder, and where the High Court of Calcutta passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff to the effect that upon his depositing certain moneys due to the defendant the latter should reconvey the property to him, the Judicial Committee substantially affirmed the decree. [786] They, however, understood the decree of the High Court as one setting aside the sale. Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the judgment of the Committee thus expressed himself: "It appears to their Lordships in this case that the Judges of the Court below were right in ordering the sale to be set aside." That was also a case where the decree-holder was the purchaser, and I do not see why, if the decree that was given in that case was correct (and it must be taken to be correct), this suit may not lie.

(2) 8 W.R. 506.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Pigot.

W. H. Kraal and others v. H. J. Whymer.*

[27th and 28th May and 2nd July, 1890.]

Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 4—Registration of Association—"Gain"—Mutual Assurance Society.

In 1870 a fund was formed by a number of persons, over 20 in number, the object being, according to the prospectus and rules, to provide for the widows, children, and other relatives of the subscribers. The management was vested in a Board of Directors elected by the subscribers from amongst their own number. Subscriptions at fixed rates according to tables were paid by the subscribers to secure the provision of pensions for their widows, children and relatives. The moneys so subscribed were invested in Government 4 per cent., securities, and in the course of management a large reserve fund was accumulated and so invested, the interest annually payable in respect of which amounted in the year 1888 to upwards of Rs. 64,000; but there was nothing to show that such reserve was larger than sound principles of management required. The rules provided for abatements of subscriptions according to a graduated scale, which might be granted or withheld from year to year by the Directors according to their opinion as to the condition of the fund. A subscriber to the fund was under no obligation to continue his subscription, but might stop it at pleasure, subject in certain contingencies to forfeiture of the benefit of past payments. Fines were also provided for unpunctuality in payment of subscriptions.

It was contended that the subscribers formed an association which required registration under s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act, inasmuch as they carried on business having for its object the acquisition of gain by the association, or the individual members thereof, as the subscribers must be taken to contemplate the ordinary consequences of their acts, and the forfeitures, fines, and large and increasing reserve fund constituted "gain."] Semble that these did not constitute gain.

* Original Civil Suit No. 109 of 1890.

(1) 11 C. 136,

[787] But held that whether they did or not, no business was carried on having for its object the acquisition of gain by the association or the individual members thereof.

The subscribers to the General Family Pension Fund are not a company, association, or partnership for the purpose of carrying on business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association, or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, within the meaning of s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act,

Where the substantial purpose of an association is not to carry on a business for gain, the fact that gain may accrue incidentally, or may arise from merely subsidiary provisions, does not make registration necessary.

[D., 19 M. 31 (35.)]

Case stated for the opinion of the Court under the provisions of s. 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiffs were the Chairman and Directors of the General Family Pension Fund and the defendant was one of the subscribers to the fund. The question having arisen as to whether the subscribers to the Fund formed a company, association, or partnership which required to be registered under the provisions of s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act, and, whether the Fund not having been registered, it was not, an illegal association, an agreement was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant to state this case. The agreement provided for the plaintiffs taking certain steps to register the fund in the event of the Court holding registration to be necessary, and also provided for costs being paid out of the fund.

The fund was established in the year 1870, and was founded on the same general principles and used the same tables as the Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund. [See Falle v. MacEwen (1)]. It was managed by a Board of Directors elected by the subscribers from amongst themselves, and its object, as stated in the prospectus, was as follows:

“To provide for the maintenance of the widows, children, etc., of those who shall subscribe to it on the terms and conditions specified in the rules.”

All Christian men in India, British Burma, Ceylon, the Andamans and Nicobars, and the Straits Settlements, not being under the age of 18 or above the age of 65, were eligible to become subscribers, but the Directors had the power to refuse [788] to admit any applicant. The rules also contained provisions with reference to the admission of military men not in bona fide civil employ and others following a more or less risky calling at enhanced rates. The funds were, under an arrangement with the Government similar to that enjoyed by the Uncovenanted Service Fund, deposited with the Government bearing interest at Savings Bank rates until invested in 4 per cent. Government securities, which were, when purchased, placed in the safe custody of the Comptroller-General. Payments to the credit of the fund could also be made at the Government mofussal treasuries. As a condition, however, of this assistance the Government of India stipulated that it should be stated in the prospectus that it exercised no kind of supervision over the management of the fund, and was in no way responsible for its solvency.

The working of the fund was governed by certain rules and bye-laws, which it appeared had in some respects been modified since the fund was started. At the time this case was stated the material portions of those rules were as follows:—

"Rule 4.—That the payments for securing annuities be regulated according to the rates laid down in tables A, B, and C. That as each subscriber shall complete his 5th, 10th, and 15th year of payments respectively on each risk, he shall from the 1st April 1886 be entitled to abatement of subscription on the following scale:—

5% on subscriptions of 5 years' standing.
12½ % " " 10 " "
20 % " " 15 " "

"Provided that in their annual report each year the Directors shall declare whether or not in their opinion the condition of the fund allows of the above scale of abatements and that if their opinion be unfavourable the abatement shall be reduced or suspended for such time as may be necessary."

This rule then went on to make provision for a subscriber substituting one nominee in place of another dying, marrying, or coming of age, and for subscribers allowing their subscriptions to lapse rejoining, and provided that the utmost amount of pension which could be subscribed for was, for a widow, Rs. 200, and for each child Rs. 80 per mensem with a maximum aggregate of Rs. 300 per mensem for the children of one father, or Rs. 200 per mensem [789] for the daughters alone, and maximum aggregate of the pensions depending on one life of Rs. 500 per mensem.

The pensions were payable to widows for life or till remarriage, but in the event of the death of the second husband the pension revived. Sons received pensions up to the age of 21, but there were provisions for subscribing for life pensions for them in the event of their being incapacitated by mental or bodily infirmity from earning their own livelihood. Daughters received their pensions up to date of marriage or death. A subscriber was also allowed to subscribe for his mother, sisters, or other near relatives under certain restrictions.

Rule 4, it appeared, had been considerably modified since the fund was started, the provisions as to the abatements having been introduced some time after the fund had commenced and when it had become possible from the state of the invested funds to allow of their being made. It was pointed out during the argument in the case that owing to the present prosperous condition of the fund it had been proposed that the abatements should be increased, and that a reference had been made to an actuary with a view of ascertaining if that course could be safely adopted, but that since this case had been stated he had reported that it could not safely be adopted at present, the margin being in his opinion too small and the rates subscribed for daughter’s annuities being too low.

The rules further provided that all applications for admission to the fund from intending subscribers should be made on certain specified forms, which included the usual medical report and certificate of a friend, and that upon admission an entrance certificate according to the following form, after it had been duly entered on the records of the fund, should be granted to each subscriber:—

This entrance certificate had to be given up to the Directors before any nominee could be admitted to the benefits of the fund.

Under the rules as they originally stood, non-payment of subscriptions until midnight of the last day of the month for which they were payable rendered void all claims on the fund by the nominees of the subscriber. That rule was, however, amended on the 31st May 1857, and under the amended rule provisions were made against total forfeiture of past payments. The material portions of the amended rule were as follows:—

Rule 30.—That all subscriptions are due and payable in advance on first day every month for the current month.

(2) That when the subscription for any month has not been paid within that month, a fine of 10 per cent. of the registered subscription shall be charged; this fine, if not paid at once, to be deducted from any abatement to which the subscriber may afterwards become entitled, or, in the event of his dying and leaving it unpaid, to be charged against the pensions that may become due to his nominees.

[791] (3) That, with the exceptions noted in the following clauses of this rule, non-payment of subscription until midnight of the last day of the month for which it is due shall, in the event of the subscriber's death, render void his nominee's claim to the pension subscribed for, but the name of the subscriber shall not be removed from the list until expiry of three months from the last day up to which his subscription has been paid.

(4) That one month's grace be allowed for every complete year during which payment of subscription has been made on each risk, up to a maximum of six months, and that if a subscriber die within that period of grace his nominees be admitted to the full pension subscribed for after deduction of the unpaid subscription and the ten per cent. fine incurred thereon.

(5) That when a subscriber, at the time of becoming a defaulter, satisfies the Directors of his having become unable to pay his subscription, he, or any person on his behalf, shall at any time within twelve months from the last day for which his subscription has been paid, provided the subscriber be alive at the time, be allowed to revive his full interest in the fund, without evidence of health, by paying the arrears of subscription in full to date, with ten per cent. on the amount of arrears for fine, but subject to the deduction of any abatement to which the subscriber may have become entitled.

(6) That in all other cases of default subscribers may be reinstated within twelve months from the date of removal of their names from the list of members on production of a Medical Report in form C satisfactory to the Directors, and payment of arrears in full to date with 10 per cent. fine, but subject to such abatement as the subscriber may be entitled to.

(7) That the past payments of members who were on the list of subscribers on 1st January 1886, or who joined or shall join subsequent to that date, shall not be entirely forfeited in the event of their discontinuing their subscription or any part of it after having paid it for at least three complete years, but shall entitle their nominees, if they survive the lapsed subscriber, to a pension proportionate to the subscription actually paid. Provided that the fund is kept informed, at least once a year, of the continued existence and address of the nominees, and in the case of daughters, of their being still unmarried; and that neglect of this proviso shall be considered a bar to any subsequent claims, unless the nominees be admitted to pension as an act of grace under the authority of a majority of votes of the subscribers on the application of the nominees, through the Directors, as provided by rule 47; the expense of such application to be borne by the nominees.

(8) Provided that when a subscriber allows his insurance to lapse, and is subsequently re-admitted on behalf of the same nominee, the later insurance shall be held to be in supersession of equivalent value of the older one. That the payments on account of the older insurance shall, however, be [792] allowed to count in computing pension in the event of lapse of the latest one.

It was pointed out at the hearing of the case that under the above amended rule nominees, who would otherwise have lost all claim on the fund by reason of the subscriptions having ceased during the lifetime of the subscriber, had been granted annuities proportionate to the amount of subscriptions actually paid up, and this had been done by the vote of the general body of subscribers, the rules allowing this course to be

Of the amounts shown in the last column, Rs. 26,500 represented the value of the house and premises 1, Grant's Lane, which had been bought in the year 1886 for the office of the fund.

The following was the case stated for the opinion of the Court:

1st. The General Family Pension Fund was established in 1870 with the object of providing on the mutual principle for the maintenance of the widows and legitimate, natural, and adopted children and step-children of the subscribers thereto on certain terms and conditions contained in the rules of the said fund which, together with the bye-laws, forms, tables and financial statements relative to the said fund and the 19th Annual Report thereof, are set forth in the schedule hereunto annexed.

2nd. All Christian men in India, British Burma, Ceylon, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, and the Straits Settlements, not being under the age of 18 or above the age of 65, are eligible as subscribers to the said fund, but the Directors can refuse admission to any applicant.

3rd. The payments by subscribers for securing annuities to any of the persons mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof are regulated according to the said rules and the rates laid down in the tables marked respectively A, B and C, appended to the said rules, and vary according to the age of the subscribers and the age and sex of the persons to be benefited, and under certain circumstances set forth in rule 4 of the said rules according to the period during which the payments have been maintained.

4th. There are no shareholders interested in the assets or property of the said fund, nor is there any deed of settlement with reference to the said assets or property, and the said fund has never been registered as incorporated under any legislative enactment or otherwise.

5th. The subscribers to the said fund can at pleasure discontinue their subscriptions without incurring any liability whatsoever.

6th. Under rule 30 of the original rules of the said fund, non-payment of subscriptions until midnight of the last day of the month for which the same was payable, in the event of the death of the subscriber rendered void all claims of his family to benefit from the fund, and non-payment for three months from the day on which his subscription became due subjected a subscriber to be struck off the fund with forfeiture of all past payments. That rule has recently been modified as appears from the rules, bye-laws, forms and tables corrected to 31st May 1887, published by the said fund so as to provide against total forfeiture of past payments.

7th. The management of the said fund is vested in a Board of Directors elected from and by the subscribers.
8th. All sums of money over five hundred rupees, after leaving a sufficient margin in the Bank of Bengal for current expenses, are paid into the General Treasury, and are required from time to time to be invested in Government securities.

9th. The office of the said fund is situated at No. 1, Grant’s Lane, Calcutta, and in 1886 the then Directors of the fund, by an indenture dated the 22nd of January 1886, purchased the said house and premises No. 1, Grant’s Lane, for Rs. 26,500, and paid for the same out of the funds belonging to the said fund.

10th. On the 31st day of December 1888 there were 511 subscribers to the said fund, the nominees of which consisted of 410 [794] widows, 236 boys, and 397 girls. There were 163 annuitants, of whom 47 were widows, 57 boys, and 59 girls, to whom were paid during the year ending on the date last above mentioned pensions amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 75,442-13-4.

11th. All payments for the year 1888, including pensions, amounting to 43\% per cent. on the total yearly income of the said fund, which amounted to Rs. 2,41,713-4-2, and the capital of the said fund derived solely from the subscriptions of the said subscribers and the interest accumulated thereon, amounted to Rs. 17,14,071-6-1 in the fund, inclusive of the value of the said house, No. 1, Grant’s Lane.

12th. The tables of subscriptions to the said fund were originally fixed by the projectors thereof at higher rates than was absolutely necessary, and it was subsequently found advisable to introduce the provisions regarding abatements of subscriptions comprised in rule 4 of the said rules as amended.

The questions for the opinion of the Court are:

1. Whether the subscribers to the General Family Pension Fund are a company, association, or partnership formed for the purpose of carrying on business other than that of banking, that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association, or partnership, or by the individual members thereof within the meaning of s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882?

2. If so, under what section of what Act, if any, can registration of the said fund be effected?

Mr. Evans and Mr. O’Kinealy, appeared for the plaintiffs.
Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Henderson, for the defendant.

Annexed to the case were copies of the nineteenth Annual Report of the Fund for the year 1888, and the original prospectus, rules, bye-laws, form, and tables. The Report contained the rules and bye-laws as they stood at the time the case was stated. No witnesses were examined at the hearing, but the facts required to be proved by s. 531 of the Code were allowed to be proved by affidavit of Messrs. H. H. Remfry, the Chairman, Mr. W. G. Rose, the plaintiff’s Solicitor, and the defendant. In addition to the documents annexed to the case, the Annual Reports for the years 1886 and 1889 were tendered and admitted.

[795] Mr. Evans.—The main question to be decided is whether this is a Society which carries on business for the sake of gain, and my contention is that it cannot be treated as such. It is clear that the object, as stated in the prospectus, is not gain, and there can be no gain to the Society or to any individual member of it. The scheme provides for the investment of the accumulations so that they will yield a profit, and it may be said that should be treated as gain, but the House of Lords has held that profits from investments are not taxable as gains from a business. It is not a carrying on of a business. It is not, however, necessary here to go so far. This is not a Society or Association carrying on business having gain for its object within the meaning of s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act. As a matter of fact there is no gain to the Society, and even if it he held that there is gain, there is no business carried on with the object of acquiring gain. Next there is no gain to any individual member, that is to say, no gain in a legal sense, for the fact that provision is made for the widows and children of the subscribers cannot constitute legal gain to them. Not only does s. 4 of the Act not apply to this society, but it is one that comes under the class referred to in s. 26, which refers to a class of Societies strongly contrasted with that covered by s. 4 and whose object is not gain. There is no provision in the prospectus or rules for doing anything else than carrying out the object for which the Society was formed. Except the rules relating to abatements, there is no provision for dealing with unnecessary accumulations. There is and can be no increase in the value of the annuities, or return of subscriptions, and the rules also provide against total forfeiture on a member failing to continue his subscriptions by the payment of annuities proportionate to the amount subscribed, so that the other members do not gain by forfeitures. Even if the present subscribers put an end now to the Society, they could not divide the accumulated funds amongst themselves as the Court would compel the Fund being devoted to an object ejsusdem generis. [In re the Bristol Athenæum (1), Pease v. Pattinson (2)]. The object of this Society is distinctly of a charitable nature, [The Queen v. Commissioners of Income-tax (3)], but the words of [796] s. 26 are quite wide enough to cover it even if it be held not to be "a charity." As regards the question as to whether there is any gain to the Society, it must be remembered that the words relating to gain to individual members were not found in the earlier English Act, and, as pointed out in Smith v. Anderson (4), they were introduced into the Act of 1862 in consequence of the decisions in the cases of The Queen v. Whitmarsh (5), Bear v. Bromley (6) and Moore v. Rawlins, (7). The later cases all go on the question of gain to individual members, and, as in this case there can be no gain to them, my contention is that they do not apply here. Those three cases have never been overruled, and are still valid and binding decisions.

In The Queen v. Whitmarsh (5) the Court was considering the case of a Company whose object was the purchase of lands with funds raised by subscription, and the division of such land in an improved condition amongst the subscribers, and it held that such a Company was not formed for the purpose of acquiring gain so as to bring it within the Companies Act then in force. Individual members might benefit by the transaction, but the Company, as a whole, would not, and any profits that the Company might acquire would arise from sources merely subsidiary to the purpose for which the Company was established. In Bear v. Bromley (6) it was held that "profit" meant profit derived from outsiders, and that though some of the members might gain at the expense of others, that did not make it a Society established for profit. There, too, the Society derived profit from fines, but it was held that any transactions of the Society which resulted in profit were by virtue of powers which were only subsidiary to the general purposes of the Society, and that purpose was not one for profit. Moore v. Rawlins (1), which was another building Society's case, also supports the view that though individual members may acquire profits as amongst themselves, that does not bring the Society within the Act.

In the latest case on the subject, The New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (2), the main questions arising in this case were [797] discussed by the House of Lords. That was a case of a Life Insurance Company which had no shares or shareholders, the members being the holders of participating policies, each being entitled to a share of the assets and liable for the losses. An account was annually taken, and the greater portion of the surplus premia over the expenditure referable to such policies was returned to the policy-holders, as bonuses, either by addition to the sums insured or in reduction of future premia. The House of Lords held that these so-called bonuses were not a profit or gain to the Company so as to be liable to income-tax. Lord Herschell there pointed out that persons associated together for the purpose of mutual insurance could not be said to carry on a trade or vocation from which profits or gains accrue to them.

It cannot be said in this case that the interest arising from the investments in Government paper is profit arising from business. The cases are clear to show that investing money in Government paper is not carrying on a money lending or any other business.

In support of the contention of the other side no doubt the dicta of Sir George Jessel, M.R., in In re Arthur Average Association, Ex parte Hargrove (3) will no doubt be relied on, but the Court of appeal held that it was unnecessary to decide that point. It may possibly be true, as Sir George Jessel put it, that marine insurance is not merely an indemnity against loss; but certainly his argument can have no possible bearing on life insurance. Then in In re Padstow Total Loss and Collision Assurance Association (4), it was pointed out by Brett, L.J., that the opinion he expressed with regard to mutual Insurance Companies in Smith v. Anderson (5) could not be maintained. In that case it was held by the Lords Justices that the mere investment in securities, as opposed to dabbling in them, could not be regarded as carrying on a business within the meaning of the Act. No case goes further than that if the intention is that some of the individual members should gain as against the rest of the Association the Act might apply. Some of the dicta go that length. [Counsel then cited Wingfield v. Potter (6) and Shaw v. Benson (7), and referred to [798] the judgment of Lindley, L.J., in the latter case and continued.] We have no concern here with the new words, as there can be no gain to individual members. The view expressed in Smith v. Anderson (5) was followed in Crowther v. Thorley (8), and In re Siddall (9). Section 26 of the Indian Companies Act would seem to refer to Associations of this character, and Part VIII of the Act would appear to contemplate the existence of a large number of companies which do not require registration, and are therefore not unlawful.

Mr. Woodroffe.—After the exhaustive examination of the cases by Mr. Evans, I do not propose to deal with them at length, but merely to point out the grounds on which I think his argument is erroneous or defective. The decision in The New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (1) does not dispose of the question raised in the present case. Mr. Evans’ definition of charity taken from the case of The Queen v. Commissioners of Income-tax (2) is not applicable here, as we are not governed by the Statutes of Elizabeth, and charity is not limited to assisting the poor. The nature of the business carried on by this Association is mutual assurance, with the qualification that the person who is to be benefited is named and other than the insurer. As pointed out by Lord Herschell in The New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (1), it is of the very essence of such an enterprise that a portion of the income should from time to time be invested in order to create and maintain a fund capable of meeting the liabilities that have been or are being created. How this was done in the present case appears from the reports of the Fund. In 1838 the accumulations, exclusive of the value of the house, are shown to be nearly 17 lakhs, which at 4 per cent. would yield about Rs. 68,000 a year, while the total amount of pensions payable for that year amounted to about Rs. 75,000. The report shows that there is a large annual increase in the accumulations, and at this rate of progressive advance, there will soon be no need for further subscriptions, as the interest from the fund will be ample to meet the liabilities. It is contended that the object of the Fund was not gain, but people must be taken [799] to intend the natural consequences of their own acts, and there certainly has been a considerable gain to this Association. The members must have contemplated the increase of the Fund by means of interest accumulations, and forfeitures, which has been the actual result. The Society cannot be looked on as a charitable or eleemosynary one; the object of the Fund was insurance, and it stands on the same footing as an Insurance Association, and insurance for the benefit of one’s wife and family is certainly not a charity. Then the Society carries on a business, namely a business of insurance. In Crowther v. Thorley (3), the definition given by Jessel, M.R., in Smith v. Anderson (4) is adopted. It is stated to be the reiteration of transactions. In re Siddall (5) followed Crowther v. Thorley. I contend therefore that this Association carries on a business, and that it has for its object the acquisition of gain by the association or by the individual members thereof. All that the earlier cases [The Queen v. Whitmarsh (6), Bear v. Bromley (7), and Moore v. Rawlins (8)] decided was that the mere fact that profit was made by the individual members of an Association was not enough to bring the Association within the words of the old Act, but we have it on the highest authority that it was to get rid of the difficulty brought about by those decisions, and the danger of allowing a large number of persons being associated together, as in this case, without registration, that the words “or to the individual members thereof” were subsequently introduced into the Act. The weight of the later decisions goes to show that if gain results to some individuals, if the business is carried on at all, that is sufficient to bring the Association within the Act. In the present case it has been pointed out that Government gives certain facilities to the Fund, but neither from the prospectus nor from the rules does it appear that it is essential that the funds should remain in the hands of Government. And as a matter of fact the Government expressly declines all responsibility. Supposing the present subscribers were to decide that they would no longer continue the Fund, what would there be to prevent them, after making provision for the annuities now in [800] existence being paid, dividing the rest of the Fund amongst themselves. The nominees would have no voice in the matter and could not stop them, for they are merely in the position of recipients of charity. In that case there would be undoubted gain to the members of the Society. All that was decided in The New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (1) was that the proportion of the payments in excess over liabilities returned to the participating policy-holders was not "profit" which was taxable under Schedule D of the Income-tax Act; and it is worthy of observation that the case was decided against the opinions of two of their Lordships, and reversing the unanimous decisions of the High Court and Court of appeal. At the most the decision amount to this, that the abatements do not amount to profit to the individual. It leaves untouched the question whether the Society carried on business for the purpose of gain. That case is also distinguishable from the present on the ground that there the funds, declared free from income-tax, were derived wholly from the participating policy-holders; whereas here the abatements are made from a fund derived from a number of other sources, such as forfeitures, payments made by others, fines, entrance fees, and interest on investments. The reason why the three earlier cases are not referred to with any disapproval in the later cases is that they were rightly decided under the then existing law, and that the law was changed to meet them. Supposing the members of this Association were now to say, we will provide for the existing annuities, and divide the surplus now, who could prevent them. It was to provide against such a state of things that the law was amended so as to compel such Associations to be registered.

The decision in Moore v. Rawlins (2) was based on the opinion that the purchase of land, &c., contemplated by the deed of settlement was merely an isolated transaction and consequently no business was carried on. In The New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (1) the judgments of Lords Halsbury and Fitzgerald, the two dissenting Lords, show that the point on which they differed from their colleagues was the construction of the eleventh clause of the Company's charter. The majority decided [801] upon the assumption that the portion of the surplus returned to the policy-holders were derived solely from the premia paid by the participating policy-holders of that year, which was a state of facts which the two dissenting Lords did not acquiesce in. They considered that the surplus was derived from other sources as well, which is the case here. In the case of Madras Equitable Assurance Company v. The President, Municipal Commission, Madras (3), the Court held that the investment for interest of the funds of a Mutual Insurance Company constituted "carrying on business for gain."

The House of Lords decided the case of The New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (1) on the supposition that all the money returned came from the persons to whom it was so returned, but that was not so in the Madras case, for there, as here, the funds came from other sources. Thus the original object of an Association need not be one for gain to bring the Association within the Act. In In re Arthur Average Association, Ex parte Hargrove (4), Sir George Jessel points out that it is enough if gain is acquired, that is to say, if gain is the legitimate result of the business of the Company. In that case, as here, there was a reserve fund, which was held to constitute "gain." The facts of this case are very similar to the facts of that case, for here the subscribers by means of the abatements participate in the general profits of the fund, and do not get merely a return of what they may themselves have paid in excess of what was required,

The same opinion was expressed in In re Padstow Total Loss and Collision Assurance Association (1). We are not affected here by the case of Smith v. Anderson (2), for there it was held that the business was not carried on by the certificate-holders, but was managed by trustees, whereas here there are no trustees, but directors, who are agents elected by and from amongst the subscribing members themselves. In the Padstow case the Judges were unanimously of opinion that the Company was an illegal one. Unless therefore a distinction can be drawn between [802] mutual marine insurance and life assurance that case cannot be distinguished from the present one.

Wingfield v. Potter (3) is a case of a single and isolated transaction and not a carrying on of a business, and the decision in In re Siddall (4) proceeded upon the principles of Curnowther v. Thorley (5) and Smith v. Anderson (2), the former of which was decided on the ground that the business was carried on by the trustees, who were under 20 in number. Therefore I contend that the decision in the New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (6) does not govern this case, and that those in Shaw v. Benson (7) and Jennings v. Hammond (8) show that the possibility of gain to individual members is sufficient to bring the Association within the Act. My view is also supported by the dicta of Sir George Jessel in In re Arthur Average Association, Ex parte Hangrove (9), and Smith v. Anderson (2) does not apply. The cases show that if there be a profit in which all the members may share, it may be looked on as a gain to the Association or to the individual members. The only case in this country (Madras Equitable Assurance Company v. The President, Municipal Commission, Madras (10)), also supports my view.

Mr. Evans in reply:—The words of the Act under which the Madras case was decided include "benefit Societies," and the Court relied on those words. In the New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (6) the Attorney-General expressly pointed out that the funds divided came from other sources. Here there can be no gain to the individuals, unless the declared object of the Society is expressly disregarded, and it cannot be contended that one of its objects is to disregard the object for which it was started and put an end to the Fund. Although it has been sought to make out that the Fund is, or shortly will be, ample to provide for all contingencies, that is not so; and it appears from the last report that in the opinion of the actuary the rate of subscription for daughters is too low, and the present surplus too small to justify any further abatements at present. Besides, as the Fund increases, so [803] do its liabilities for future pensions. In any case there is no intention indicated of benefiting the subscribers by division of surplus funds or otherwise than by the abatements as provided by the rules.

The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Pigot, JJ.) was delivered on 2nd July, and was as follows:—

(1) L.R. 20 Ch. D. 137. (2) L.R. 15 Ch. D. 247. (3) 45 L.T. 612.

JUDGMENT.

This matter comes before us in the form of a special case stated for the opinion of the Court under s. 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The first question submitted to us, and the only one which we propose to answer, is:—"Whether the subscribers to the General Family Pension Fund are a company, association, or partnership formed for the purpose of carrying on business, other than that of banking, that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association, or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, within the meaning of s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882." If it does fall within that description, then the Companies Act requires that it should be registered as a Company under that Act, unless formed under some other Act of Parliament, or of the Indian Legislature, or by Royal Charter, or Letters Patent; and not being so registered or formed, it is an illegal association. If the association does not fall within the above description, it is not an illegal association.

The facts concerning the fund are given in full detail in the special case and the documents annexed to it; it will be sufficient for the present purpose to summarise them briefly. The fund was founded in 1870, the object being, according to the rules, to provide for the maintenance of the widows and children of these who subscribe to it. The scope was afterwards enlarged so as to include other relations or subscribers. The management is vested in a Board of Directors elected by the subscribers. Subscriptions were originally at fixed rates according to published tables; but at a later period abatements of subscriptions were introduced, according to a graduated scale, for subscriptions of five, ten, fifteen, and twenty years standing. These abatements the directors are empowered to grant or withhold, according to their opinion as to the condition of the fund from year to year. The subscriptions of a member or intended to secure an annuity to the nominee for whose benefit he subscribes. He is under no obligation to continue his subscriptions, but may stop them at pleasure, subject in certain contingencies to forfeiture of the benefit of past payments; and fines are provided for unpunctuality in payments. In the course of management a large reserve fund has been accumulated and invested. There is nothing to suggest that this reserve is larger than sound principles of management require.

In order to bring a company, association, or partnership within the section in question, first, it must be formed for the purpose of carrying on a business; secondly, that business must have for its object the acquisition of gain, but the acquisition of gain contemplated may be either by the association or by the individual members of the association. The language of the Act before us is the same as that of the Act in force in England, and we have therefore the advantage of the English decisions on that Act, as well as on some other Acts, to assist us in applying the law to the present case.

It may perhaps be assumed (it is not necessary to decide it) that the operations of this association constitute a business: the real question is whether that business has for its object the acquisition of gain either by the association or by its members. The primary object is certainly not to confer any benefit upon the association as a body, or its individual members, but to make provision for the nominees of members. And the means by which it is sought to attain that object is by the adoption of a scale of payments so calculated as to render the intended provision secure, without unnecessarily burdening the contributors. But it was argued that the process adopted for attaining these ends naturally, and indeed necessarily, involves the acquisition of gain, and that, as people must be taken to contemplate the ordinary consequences of their own acts, the acquisition of gain must be held to be among the objects of the association.

The sources of gain suggested were these:—Forfeitures on the part of members ceasing to subscribe, which it was said formed a gain to the association by increasing its resources and diminishing its liabilities, and to members by lightening in the long run their contributions; fines imposed upon members not paying their contributions punctually; and lastly the large and increasing reserve fund derived from the surplus of the contributions over current outlay and the general receipts of the fund. This reserve fund it was argued was a gain to the association directly, and a gain to the members indirectly, by lightening their contributions. It was further suggested that the reserve fund might conceivably in time attain such dimensions as to exceed the liabilities charged upon it, and that the members for the time being might possibly be entitled to divide the surplus among themselves. This, however, would be to frustrate, not to carry out, the objects of the association. As to these matters, two questions arise: first, are they gains of the business within the meaning of the section; secondly, if so, is the acquisition of such gains the object of the association.

With regard to the first of these questions, it is at least extremely doubtful whether any of these matters can be called gains of the business. The case of The New York Life Insurance Company v. Styles (1) seems to us an authority for the proposition that they are not so within the meaning of another Act. In that case the House of Lords had to consider, with regard to a Mutual Life Insurance Society, whether the amount of premiums received from year to year, so far as it was in excess of the outgoings for the year, and which excess was partly returned to the member in the form of reduction of future premiums, or added by way of bonus to the amounts insured, and partly carried to a reserve fund, constitutes profits or gains within the meaning of Schedule D of the Income-tax Act (16 and 17 Vic., Ch. 34). We take the statement of the facts from the judgment of Lord Herschell at pages 407 and 408. “The appellant company has no shareholders and no shares. Each policy-holder is a member of the company, and is entitled to a share of the assets of the company and liable to all losses and expenses incurred by the company. A calculation is made by the company of the probable death-rate among the members of the company, and the amount claimed for premiums from the policy-holders is commensurate therewith. The chief part of the surplus shown by the accounts to which I have referred is paid, or, as the company alleges, is returned to the policy-holders (that is, to members of the company) as bonuses. The remainder of the surplus is carried forward as funds in hand to the credit of the general body of the members of the company. These bonuses are not paid in cash, but the amount of the same is deducted from the next premium due or is added to the policy.” Thus in that case, as in this, there was a reserve fund. In that case, as in this, there was a forfeiture clause, which was embodied in the policies. All these circumstances were relied upon in argument, and the same considerations were urged which have been laid before us. But those arguments did not prevail, and the majority of the Lords held, that in the case of a mutual association, in which the members contribute to a fund intended to secure objects in which they are all interested, any excess of the year's contributions over the outgoings does not constitute profits or gains, whether the shares of the individual members in the excess payments be returned to them in the form of reduction of subsequent contributions, or be added by way of bonus to the sums ultimately secured, or whether the amount be carried into a reserve fund for the benefit of all those concerned. It is difficult to see any distinction in principle between that case and the present.

If any of the things relied upon could properly be called gains by the association or by its members, we do not think it could be held that the acquisition of such gains was the object of the business of the association. And for this there seems to us ample authority. The case of The Queen v. Whitmarsh (1) was decided upon the former Companies Act, 7 and 8 Vict., c. 116, s. 2, which provided for the registration of associations "for any commercial purpose or for any purpose of profit," by which words it was held that the profit contemplated was profit to the association, not profit to the individual members. In that case a company claimed to be registered, the object of which was to acquire lands and make allotments to the subscribers, but there were powers of selling lands, from the exercise of which profits might accrue to the company. The judgment of the Queen's Bench, delivered by Lord Campbell, C. J., dealt with the matter thus: "The governing purpose of the company, according to the provisions of the deed, is the purchase of land by funds raised by subscription, and the division of such land among the subscribers. Each subscriber or shareholder, to whom an allotment of such land might be made, would obtain the advantages and enjoyment arising from the ownership in severalty of land, with the buildings and other improvements placed thereon; but these advantages to individual shareholders do not fall within the description of a profit to the company arising from its funds, and were not relied on in the argument. With respect to the powers conferred upon the directors, of selling land that might have been purchased, they are not given for any purpose of profit by purchase and resale, but as subsidiary only to the governing purpose of providing allotments, in respect of which the sale or other transfer of parcels of land might occasionally become convenient. It would be accidental only if profits arose from the exercise of these powers; and the exercise of them was clearly not the purpose for which the company was established."

The decision was followed in two other cases which arose upon the same Act, Bear v. Bromley (2) and Moore v. Rawlins (3). The latter case is a very instructive one. The society in question was one for the acquisition of land, the erection of houses thereon, and the allotment of them to the subscribers. This was held not to be a purpose of profit to the society. But the society was further empowered to make and sell bricks, to purchase and sell building materials, and to perform all kinds of work in the building business and in relation thereto. It was held on the construction of the deed of settlement that these latter powers did not authorize the carrying on of the trade of brick-making or building generally, but only on the lands to be acquired, and for the purpose of carrying out the substantial object of the association; and it was therefore decided that they did not render registration necessary. Several later cases have been decided with regard to societies of a like character under the subsequent Companies Act, 25 and 26 Vict., c. 82, s. 4, the words of which are the same as those of the Indian Act, and apply to profits whether acquired by the company or by its members: Wingfield v. Potter (1), Crowther v. Thorley (2), In re Siddall (3). In each of these cases it was held that the association did not require registration, though in each of them there were possibilities of incidental advantage, such as a possible resale of land at an advantage, or the benefit of forfeitures.

These authorities show that, where the substantial purpose of an association is not to carry on a business for gain, the fact that gain may accrue incidentally, or may arise from merely subsidiary provisions, does not make registration necessary. And the same rule is expressly laid down by Brett, L. J., in Smith v. Anderson.

Some other cases were referred to in argument, which do not seem to us to bear very strongly upon the case now before us, for the decisions turned upon considerations which do not arise in it. Thus in Smith v. Anderson (4) Jessel, M. R., considered that there was an association formed with the object of dealing in shares for profit, and accordingly he held the proceeding illegal for want of registration. The Court of appeal took a different view of the nature and objects of the undertaking, and hence came to a different conclusion as to the law applicable. In other cases registration has been held necessary, because it has been considered that associations have been formed to carry on business, the object of which has been to enable some of the members to acquire gain by their dealings with the rest. To this class belong the cases relating to Mutual Marine Insurance Societies: In re Arthur Average Association, Ex parte Hargrove (5), by Jessel, M. R., In re Padstow Total Loss and Collision Assurance Association (6); and those relating to Mutual Loan Societies, Jennings v. Hammond (7), Shaw v. Benson (8), In re Thomas, Ex parte Poppleton (9).

We think the subscribers to the General Family Pension Fund are not a company, association or partnership formed for the purpose of carrying on business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association or partnership, or by the individual members thereof within the meaning of s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882; and our decree will declare accordingly.

LALA GAURI SANKER LAL v. JANKI PERSHAD

[809] PRIVY COUNCIL.

Present:

Lord Hobhouse, Lord Macnaghten, Sir B. Peacock, and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

LALA GAURI SANKER LAL AND OTHERS ((Defendants) v. JANKI PERSHAD AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).

[22nd November and 11th December, 1889.]

Sale for arrears of revenue—Act XI of 1859, ss. 18 and 33—Collector's order of exemption.

A Collector's order under s. 18 of Act XI of 1859 for exempting an estate from sale for arrears of revenue must be an absolute exemption, and not an order having effect as an exemption or not, according to what may happen, or be done, afterwards. It must not depend on an act which may, or may not, be performed.

The High Court having set aside a sale, as contrary to the provisions of the Act XI of 1859, upon a ground other than that declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner of Revenue against the order for the sale, the Judicial Committee, referring to s. 33 as prohibiting such a course, reversed the decision of the High Court.

Appeal from a decree (28th June 1887) of the High Court, reversing a decree (9th March 1886) of the Subordinate Judge of zilla Chupra.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted on the 23rd May 1885 by numerous co-plaintiffs, some of whom were zemindars owning, and others were interested in, a mehal named Dumaria in Chupra, of which the jumma was Rs. 458-10-8, in respect of which there had been a default for certain months of 1883. The March and June kists being in default, the estate was sold by order of the Collector of Sarun on the 25th September 1883. It was purchased in the name of the defendant and present appellant, Lala Gauri Sanker Lal. Against this sale an appeal was preferred by the plaintiffs to the Commissioner of Revenue of the Division; but he, on the 18th September 1884, dismissed it, holding that there was no ground for interference.

The proprietors of Dumaria accordingly brought this suit on 23rd May 1885, alleging the sale to have been contrary to the provisions of the Sale Law, and specifying irregularities. They claimed that the sale should be set aside, and that they should have possession, mesne profits, and costs.

[810] The auction-purchasers and the Government were made defendants. The grounds of defence were substantially the same, viz., that there had been actual default.

The issues raised questions whether there was any cause of action against the Government, and whether the sale was or was not contrary to the provisions of the Sale Law. The plaint alleged that an application tendering payment had been made on 22nd September 1883, whereupon the Collector after enquiry in effect ordered that the arrears should be receiv- ed. This was called the special order in the judgment below. It was also alleged that the Collector, before the sale, viz., on 24th September 1883, made an order that the mehals on which arrears should have been deposited before a certain time would be released. This was termed the general order.

The Subordinate Judge decided that the sale was in accordance with the Sale Law, Act XI of 1859, and dismissed the suit with costs. On an appeal by the plaintiffs to the High Court, a Division Bench found that the arrears were not paid in due time, but were tendered before the sale. Differing from the Subordinate Judge, the High Court held that the special order had the effect of exempting the estate from sale. They, therefore, upon this special order, decided in favour of the plaintiffs. They were of opinion, at the same time, that had the plaintiffs failed on the strength of that order in getting the sale set aside, they could not have succeeded upon the general order of the 24th September. The appeal was decreed, the sale was set aside, and possession was awarded to the plaintiffs, with an account of mesne profits.

The Government, not having joined the co-defendants in preferring this appeal, were in the record made respondents under the statutory name.

On this appeal, Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, contended that the special order of the 22nd September 1883, even if proved to have been made as alleged by the plaintiffs, had not the effect of exempting the estate from sale under Act XI of 1859. Nor had the general order of the 24th September that effect. There was a subsisting arrear of revenue for which the mehal was liable to be sold. There was no obligation, legally binding on the Collector, to postpone the sale or to accept payment [811] after sunset on the last day allowed for payment. The sale was regular, and the plaintiffs were bound by it, with the result that the property had passed to the purchaser.

None of the respondents appeared.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment, on a subsequent day, 11th December, was delivered by SIR R. COUCH.—The appellants were defendants in a suit to set aside a sale of an estate or mehal called Dumaria for arrears of revenue due from the plaintiffs, made by the Collector of Sarun under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. The Lower Court dismissed the suit, but the High Court of Bengal reversed its decree, and ordered the sale to be set aside, and that the plaintiffs should recover possession of the estate.

On the 13th August 1883, Rs. 8-13-5 of Government revenue due on the 7th June 1883 being unpaid, a notification was issued by the Collector of Sarun that the estate would be publicly sold on Monday, the 24th September, and was duly published. On the 24th September the Collector made an order in these terms:—“Payments of revenue in arrear will be received in the treasury up to the time of sale. Applications for exemption on the ground of payment will be received up to 1-30 p.m., but they must be supported by treasury receipts for payment in full of all demands. No applications will be received, and no payments will be accepted, after the sale has commenced.” On the 22nd September, Bindeswari Pershad Singh, one of the respondents, presented a petition to the Collector, stating that in mehal Dumaria there was an arrear of Rs. 8-12-5 in consequence of default in payment of revenue made by the other shareholders, and that he had brought the amount of arrears, and praying that it might be received and entered in the account and the mehal released. from sale. On the back of this petition there is a written order, dated the 24th September, that the office report be submitted, and after entries of the office reports there are the following:—

"Receipt not produced before sale."

"The 25th September 1883."

"Accept on payment of all Government demands."

"R. C. P., Sarun Collectorate."

"C. C. QUINN."

"The—September 1883."

[812] In the lower Court, and in the High Court, the last entry is spoken of as made on the 22nd September 1883. It does not appear for what reason. Mr. Quinn was the Collector. It is not known who was the person who used the initials R. C. P., but no issue was raised in the suit as to the authority to make that entry, and cannot now be disputed.

In the judgment of the Lower Court it is found that the payment was not made before 1-30 p.m. on the 25th September, to which day the sale of Dumaria and a number of other estates, in arrear had been duly adjourned by the Collector, and at the time of the sale no treasury receipt was produced. The payment was made at the Collector’s office some time before 2 p.m. on the 25th and before the commencement of the sale, but after the officers had left the office and gone to the Collector’s ijlas (bench) to attend it.

Thus the order of the 24th September, called the general order, under which an exemption might have been granted, was found not to have been complied with, and the plaintiffs were obliged to rely upon what is called in the issues the special order dated the 22nd September. The lower Court held that this is not an order for exemption under s. 18 of Act XI of 1859. The High Court has held that it is. That Court says the effect of the order may be expressed as follows:—“I exempt this estate from sale provided the arrears are paid before sale.” It appears to their Lordships that what is called the special order is not such an order as is intended by s. 18. It should be an absolute exemption, not an order which may have effect as an exemption or not according to what may happen or be done afterwards. The section says it shall be competent to the Collector or other officer, at any time before the sale, to exempt the estate from sale. The Collector is to record in a proceeding the reason for granting exemption. Although this, as the High Court says may be done at any time, the reason should exist at the time the exemption is granted, and not be a fact which may happen afterwards, or an act which may or may not be performed. The words “accepted, &c.,” have been called by the lower Courts an order and considered as one, but it may be doubted whether they are more than a note by one of the Collector’s [813] officers that the Rs. 8-12-5 would be received, and therefore the mehal would be released from sale.

There is another and, their Lordships think, a fatal objection to the decree of the High Court. Section 25 makes it lawful for the Commissioner of Revenue to receive an appeal against any sale made under the Act if preferred within a specified time, and gives him power to annul any sale made under the Act which shall appear to him not to have been conducted according to its provisions. Section 26 gives power to the Commissioner, on the ground of hardship or injustice, to suspend the passing of final orders in any case of appeal from a sale, and to represent the case to the Board of Revenue, who, if they see cause, may recommend the Local Government to annul the sale, and the Local Government may do so, and cause the estate to be returned to the proprietor on such conditions as may appear equitable and proper. And s. 33 enacts that no sale shall be annulled by a Court of Justice upon the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of the Act, unless the ground shall have been declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner. The plaintiffs appealed to the Commissioner. In their grounds of appeal they say the Collector on the 24th September passed a general order and they complied with it. They do not mention any order of the 22nd September. The Subordinate Judge thought para. 1 of the memorandum of appeal was sufficient, but it is not. It only says the sale is fit to be set aside for reasons detailed in the following paragraphs. If the case now set up had been stated in those paragraphs, the Commissioner would have inquired into it, and, if he thought there was hardship or injustice, might have represented the case to the Board of Revenue. The second issue, as summarized by the Subordinate Judge is, "Does s. 33 of XI of 1859 bar the suit?" and upon his opinion of para. 1 he held that it did not bar the suit. In the judgment of the High Court this issue is not noticed. It is said that the two points upon which the parties went to trial were—1st, Was the amount due for arrears paid before the sale commenced? 2nd, What was the meaning and legal effect of the orders of the 22nd September and 24th September? This is a misapprehension. The issue upon s. 33 was tried by the Subordinate Judge. It was decided against the defendants, but the decree being entirely in their favour, it was not necessary for them to file a notice of objection under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure. They could support the decree on the ground that the second issue ought to have been decided in their favour. The High Court ought to have decided that issue, or have shown in their judgment a reason for not doing so. If it had been decided that the suit was barred by s. 33, the appeal to the High Court ought to have been dismissed.

Upon both the grounds which have been considered, their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the High Court ought to be reversed, and the appeal to that Court dismissed, with costs, and the decree of the lower Court affirmed, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to order accordingly.

The respondents, other than the Secretary of State for India in Council, must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Khagendra Narain Chowdhry and others (Plaintiffs) v. Matangini Debi and another (Defendants), and a cross appeal. [31st January and 4th and 5th February, 1890]

Decree—Form of decree—Suit for possession by owners of adjoining estates—Right of parties to equal moieties of property decreed, although each had claimed the exclusive title—Decrees dismissing their suits reversed, the evidence being sufficient as to the former, but not the latter right.

In cross suits between the owners of adjoining estates, each claimed against the other to be entitled to, and to be put into possession of, property situate on the boundary between their estates.

The High Court dismissed both claims on the ground that the evidence of the exclusive right of either party was insufficient.

Held, that, although this might be so, there was nevertheless sufficient evidence of possession having been held by both the one and the other, and of the title of both, to support the conclusion that each had a claim to an equal moiety, to which each should be declared entitled. Each should be put into possession of the moiety, which was opposite to, and adjoined his estate.

[815] Two appeals, consolidated and heard as one, from two decrees (21st May 1883) of the High Court, reversing one decree and affirming another (21st September 1883) of the Subordinate Judge of Goalpara, whereby the latter had dismissed the appellants' suit and had decreed the other. The decrees of the High Court dismissed both suits.

These consolidated appeals arose out of cross suits between, on the one side the appellants, who were zemindars of the Mechpara zamindari, and on the other the respondents, who represented the late Kirti Narain Chowdhry, the zamindar of Chapar, the latter having died while the suits were pending before the Subordinate Judge. Each party claimed the exclusive title to a water course, termed by the one the danga of Bahirgacha of the Kodalkati bil, and by the other the Tilukmari sota, together with the julkar or fishery, of which the value was stated to be Rs. 5,500. It was situate on the boundary between the two zemindaries, on the west, north, and east of it being villages belonging to Chapar, while on the west, south and east of it were villages belonging to Mechpara. According to the High Court, it was "what is called a sota," apparently an elbow, or offset of part of the Brahmaputra river," or low-lying land exposed to the action of the river or its channels. The boundaries were differently stated in the plaints in the two cases, while the amin's report made a third statement. The right to possess it had been for many years in dispute, the earliest decision, which however did not dispose of the question, having been in 1828. In 1849 the thakbust survey, preceding the regular survey, commenced, and the Deputy Collector in that year made an order, based on the "permanent lands having been washed away," which was followed by litigation in the Civil Courts, with orders for the amendment of maps in 1850, 1863, and 1875. None of these however were conclusive as to the present issue, which in effect was whether the disputed sota and julkar were within the one zamindari or the other. The disputes in the year 1877 were such that the Deputy Commissioner of Goalpara, as Magistrate of the district, attached the piece of water under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure then in force, s. 530 of the Act X of 1872, by an order of 10th December 1877, which both parties in their suits filed in December 1880, on the same [816] day, sought to have set aside, each party claiming exclusive possession.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge, which by consent was to govern both the cases, dealt first with the name of the disputed water, and on this point concluded that Mechpara was right. His judgment continued thus:—

"I consider from all the circumstances of the case that the title to the disputed water has always been vested in the Mechpara zemindars. I now come to the question of possession, and I think from the fact of title alone a strong presumption of possession in favour of Mechpara is created and this presumption is supported by the oral evidence of witnesses and by the production of kabuliyats and other documents. As I said in the course of trial, I am not disposed, in cases of this kind, to place much reliance on the oral testimony of fisherman and villagers in regard to title and possession; but in the present suit the documentary evidence produced by Mechpara is ample. Chapar has also produced kabuliyats and jumma-wasil-bakis to show that they have for years leased and collected the rent of the Tilakmara sota, but, as I have already held, the disputed water is not the Tilakmara sota."

He therefore decided in favour of the Mechpara zemindars, ordering that the attachment of 10th December 1877 be set aside, and that they should be put in possession of the disputed water, receiving the money realised by the Collector by the lease of it during attachment.

This decision was not maintained by the Judges of a division bench of the High Court (FIELD and O'KENALY, JJ.), who were dissatisfied with the evidence relating to the possession of the sota by either party. They found that the maps represented only what had been the Deputy Collector's view of the merits, and not the real possession by either party. Looking at all the proceedings from 1849 onwards, they found it to be impossible to decide that either party had been in possession of the disputed sota. Both parties were clearly out of possession at one time, and the possession in 1849, 1850, and 1851 had been disputed. Being of opinion that neither party had shown a title to the possession or to the property, sufficient to outweigh the evidence in [817] favour of the other, the Appellate Court was of opinion that both suits should be dismissed. Decrees were made, accordingly, from which both parties preferred their appeals, under ss. 595 and 596 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On these appeals,

Mr. T. H. Coute, Q. C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the Mechpara zemindars, argued that there was sufficient evidence to show that they were the owners of the sota as belonging to the Mechpara zemindari, and that they were in possession when possession was taken by the Deputy Commissioner of Goalpara in 1877. The decree of the Subordinate Judge had been set aside on insufficient grounds. Not claimed by the Government, nor by any third party, the sota was, in any view of the case, the property of either the plaintiffs or the defendants, unless, as might be the case, it belonged to both. The property had not been attached in order to its remaining in the possession of the Government for an indefinite time, and it was contended that both parties, according to a view of the evidence least favourable to the Mechpara zemindars, were shown to be entitled.

Mr. R. V. Doyle and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the representatives of the Chapar zemindar, argued that the evidence had shown an exclusive possession by the latter for a considerable period, and that the absence of claim by the Government, and the entire failure to prove title or possession on the part of Mechpara, gave weight to the claim on behalf of Chapar.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., in reply, contended that the judgment of the High Court, being purely negative, proceeded on evidence that in reality required an affirmative decision, viz., that Mechpara was entitled in equal part with Chapar. It was not necessary that the shares should have been marked out by evidence in the suit; that could be effected in future proceedings, and the statement of the title of the parties would satisfy the requirement of s. 565, Civil Procedure Code, which, in effect, was that when the evidence on the record was sufficient, the appellate Court should determine finally. The present judgment should be reversed, and an affirmative decree passed, in favour of each plaintiff, for half the sota, opposite to and adjoining Mechpara and Chapar, respectively.

[818] At the end of the argument, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by:—

JUDGMENT.

Lord Morris.—These two appeals, which have been consolidated, come before their Lordships on appeal from the High Court at Calcutta. The High Court came to the conclusion that neither party had proved their case, and that both the suits instituted in the Subordinate Court should be dismissed with costs.

It appears that the Subordinate Judge had decided in favour of the zemindars of Mechpara, and had given them a decree setting aside an Order of Attachment which had been issued by the Magistrate under the 530th and 531st sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, and declaring in favour of their title to the sota in dispute and to the consequent relief.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the decrees of the High Court cannot be sustained, although their Lordships concur in the decision on the matters of fact which the High Court arrived at, namely, that neither of the parties, the zemindars of Mechpara or their representatives on the one side, or the zemindars of Chapar or their representatives on the other, have proved a title to the exclusive possession of the sota in question. The Mechpara zemindars claim the piece of water as the northern boundary of that part of their estate, and included in their estate, and known as "the Codalkati, Bahirgacha danga," while the Chapar zemindars allege that the piece of water is a portion of their estate and is called the "Tilugmari sota." The identity of the place appears to be very clear upon the map made by the amin who was sent to survey it, and that is the map which their Lordships now deal with, and which was dealt with by the High Court and by the Subordinate Judge. Their Lordships arrive at the same conclusion as the High Court with regard to the insufficiency of proof given either by the zemindars of Mechpara or by the zemindars of Chapar as to the right and title to the exclusive possession of the sota in question. But their Lordships are of opinion that the decrees of the High Court cannot be supported as pronounced by the High Court. They are of opinion that, although neither party has proved a title to an exclusive possession, there can be no doubt that possession belongs to the zemindars of Mechpara and to the zemindars of Chapar.

[819] The Government, who have attached the valuable point of the fishery pending this litigation make no claim, and they are really in the position of stakeholders.

The evidence in the opinion of their Lordships is insufficient, as already stated, to establish an exclusive possession by either of the parties. On the other hand it is equally cogent in their Lordships' opinion to show that there is possession between the two.

The result that their Lordships arrive at is that the decrees of the Subordinate Court and of the High Court should be respectively reversed and each of the parties be declared entitled to an equal moiety of the sota opposite to and adjoining their respective zemindaries, and be decreed to be put into possession thereof accordingly, and that both of the parties having failed in their contention as to an exclusive possession, each should bear their own costs of the litigation in the Subordinate Court, in the High Court, and of these appeals; and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty accordingly.

Appeal allowed.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 943 of 1888, against the decree of A. C. Campbell, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Kamrup, dated the 1st of February 1888, affirming the decree of Baboo Sibo Prasaud Chuckerbutty, Extra Assistant Commissioner of Gauhati, dated the 30th of August 1887.
M., who entered into possession under his settlement. In a suit by S., the nisf-kherajdar for a declaration of his right to a settlement of the portion settled with M., and for possession.

Held, that, having regard to the provisions of s. 2, proviso (b), s. 12 of the Regulation, and the order of the Government of India, the nisf-kherajdar was entitled to a declaration of his right to a settlement, but in view of s. 154, he was not entitled to a decree for possession.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Deputy Commissioner of Kamrubi, who held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by s. 154, cl. (a), of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886.

On 27th Jhyt 1708 Sak (7th June 1875) certain lands were granted by the then Rajah of Assam to the predecessor of the plaintiff Madhub Nath Surma. This grant was subsequently confirmed by the British Government, and the lands were assessed as nisf-kheraj lands. At the nisf-kheraj survey in 1879 it was found that the plaintiff held certain lands in excess of his grant; and these excess lands, including the land in suit, were excluded from his nisf-kheraj estate. In accordance, however, with an order of Government that lands so excluded from a nisf-kheraj estate should first be offered at full rates to the kis-kherajdar; the excess lands were in 1881 settled with the plaintiff for one year. Subsequently, the plaintiff obtained a potta for a portion of the excess lands held by him, and the other portion, amounting to two bighas of land was settled by the Revenue authorities under a kobala pottah with the defendant Myarani Medhi. The plaintiff afterwards brought a suit against the defendant for a declaration that he was entitled to a settlement of these two bighas of land, being part of the lands which had been excluded from his nisf-kheraj estate and settled with him in 1881, and also for possession of the same.

[821] The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the land had been excluded from the plaintiff's nisf-kheraj estate and settled with the defendant, who had entered into possession under his settlement. An appeal from this decision was dismissed by the Deputy Commissioner who was of opinion that inasmuch as the defendant had obtained a kobala pottah in respect of the land, a decree for possession would affect the validity of the settlement made by the Revenue authorities, and that s. 154, clause (a), of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, barred the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jasoda Nundan Paramick, for the appellant.
Baboo Sharoda Churn Mitter, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Ghose, J.J.), was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The facts of this case, as we gather from the two judgments of the lower appellate Court, dated the 1st February 1888 and 23rd July 1889, are shortly these. A certain estate, known as "nisf-kheraj," was settled very many years ago by the then Rajah of Assam with the predecessor of the plaintiff. This grant was subsequently confirmed by the British Government. In the year 1879, when the said nisf-kheraj estate was surveyed, it was found that the plaintiff held certain lands in excess of his grant; and these lands, including the land in suit, were excluded from the nisf-kheraj estate and settled in 1881 with the plaintiff for a year. This settlement was in conformity with an order of the Government of India that when lands were thus excluded from a nisf-kheraj estate, settlement was first to be offered at full rates to the nisf-kherajdar. Subsequently, however, a potthah was given to the plaintiff for a portion of the lands held by him, and the other portion was settled under a kobala potthah with the defendant. The plaintiff afterwards brought the present suit to recover possession of two bighas of land, being a part of the lands excluded from the nisf-kheraj estate and settled with him in 1881.

The suit of the plaintiff is upon the ground of unlawful dispossess-sion; and the question which we have to consider upon the facts found by the lower appellate Court is whether he is entitled to any relief in this action. The learned Deputy Commissioner is of [822] opinion that inasmuch as a settlement has been made with the defendant by the Revenue authorities, a decree if given to the plaintiff would affect such settlement; and that this suit cannot, by reason of the provisions of s. 154, cl. (a).
of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, lie in the Civil Court.

It has been further contended before us by the learned vakeel for the respondent, referring to ss. 2, 6, and 11 of the Assam Regulation, that all previous Regulations and Rules (if any) in regard to any of the matters dealt with by the said Regulation have been rescinded, and could not therefore now be relied upon; that the Regulation recognises only certain rights which are specifically mentioned in s. 6; and that the right claimed by the plaintiff does not fall within that section.

Section 2 no doubt says that “all Regulations and Rules (if any) in force there relating to any of the matters provided for by this regulation shall be repealed;” but the proviso (b) to this section lays down that “all rules prescribed, appointments and settlements made, powers conferred and notifications published under any enactment hereby repealed, and all other rules (if any) in force on the date on which this Regulation comes into force relating to any of the matters hereinafter dealt with, shall (so far as they are consistent with this Regulation, and could be prescribed, made, conferred, and published thereunder) be deemed to have been respectively prescribed, made, conferred, and published thereunder.”

With reference to this proviso, we have to consider whether the orders of, and the rule laid down by, the Government of India, and referred to in the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner “are consistent with this Regulation, and could be prescribed, made, conferred or published thereunder.”

Section 6 provides as follows:—“No right of any description shall be deemed to have been, or shall be, acquired by any person over any land to which this chapter applies, except the following:—

(a) rights of proprietors, landholders, and settlement-holders other than landholders, as defined in this Regulation, and other rights acquired in manner provided by this Regulation;
(b) rights legally derived from any right mentioned in clause (a);
(c) rights acquired under ss. 26 and 27 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877;
[823] (d) rights acquired by any person as tenant under the rent law for the time being in force:

Provided that nothing in this section shall be held to derogate from the terms of any lease granted by or on behalf of the British Government.”

Sections 7, 8, 9 and 10 declare the rights of proprietors and landholders.
Section 11 refers to settlement-holders, and it is as follows:—

"A settlement-holder, who is not a landholder, shall have no rights in the land held by him beyond such as are expressed in his settlement lease."

The Regulation then proceeds in s. 12 to give to the Chief Commissioner certain powers, and it runs as follows:—

"The Chief Commissioner may make rules for the disposal, by way of grant, lease, or otherwise, of any land over which no person has the rights of a proprietor, landholder, or settlement-holder under this Regulation." So that the Chief Commissioner is empowered to make rules for the disposal of any land in respect of which no person may have a right under the Regulation.

We then find that in giving to the Settlement Officer a discretion in respect of the settlement of lands in which no person has a permanent and heritable interest, the Regulation lays down in s. 32 (2) that this discretion must be "subject to such rules as the Chief Commissioner may make under s. 12." And s. 35 lays down "If the person to whom a settlement is offered refuses to accept it, it shall be in the discretion of the Settlement Officer, subject to such rules as the Chief Commissioner may make under s. 12, to exclude him for the term of the settlement from possession of the estate, and to offer the settlement thereof to any other person he thinks fit."

Now, referring back to the proviso (b) of s. 2, it would appear that, assuming that the plaintiff has no right to this land as a settlement-holder (as in fact he has none), the rule prescribed by the Government of India before the promulgation of the Regulation, that when lands were found by survey to be in excess of a nisf-kheraj estate a settlement thereof should be, in the first instance, offered to the nisf-kherajdar, was a rule which is fully "consistent with this Regulation, and could be prescribed, made,[824] conferred, or published thereunder" by the Chief Commissioner under s. 12; and as such, it must be taken to have been prescribed under this Regulation.

In this view of the matter, it seems to us that the plaintiff has a right to hold the land and obtain settlement thereof and that this right can only be forfeited if he refuses to take settlement at full rates. And it does not appear that a settlement was offered to the plaintiff, and that he refused to accept it. That being so, the Settlement Officer was not justified in excluding the plaintiff from settlement.

It would appear, however, from the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner that a kobala pottah for the land in question had been granted by the Settlement Officer to the defendant when this suit was brought. We do not know what are the terms of this settlement.

Section 39 of the Regulation provides that, subject to the provisions of s. 151 of this Regulation, the order of a Settlement Officer as to the person to whom a settlement should be offered, the amount of revenue to be assessed, and the nature and term of the settlement to be offered, shall be final, and a settlement concluded with that person shall be binding on all persons from time to time interested in the estate; but, except as provided by ss. 35 and 36, no person shall, merely on the ground that a settlement has been made with him or with some person through whom he claims, be deemed to have acquired any right to or over any estate, as against any other person claiming rights to or over that estate."

And s. 151 lays down:—"The Chief Commissioner, a Commissioner, a Deputy Commissioner, a Settlement Officer and a Survey Officer, may call for the proceedings held by any officer subordinate to him, and pass such orders thereon as he thinks fit."

Sections 39 and 151 read together amount to this—that a settlement made by a Settlement Officer, unless interfered with by the Chief Commissioner, is final; but the settlement-holder does not thereby acquire any right to the property as against any other person claiming rights to it. So that the settlement already made with the defendant cannot now be interfered with; but he has not thereby acquired any right to the land as against the plaintiff.

[825] And s. 154, which has been relied upon by the Deputy Commissioner as debarring the plaintiff from obtaining relief in the Civil Court, has merely the settlement actually made by a Settlement Officer in view. The first portion of the section runs as follows:—"(1) Except when otherwise expressly provided in this Regulation, or in rules issued under this Regulation, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction in any of the following matters:—

(a) Question as to the validity or effect of any settlement, or as to whether the conditions of any settlement are still in force;

(b) Question as to the amount of revenue, tax, cess, or rate to be assessed; and the mode or principle of assessment."

It is not necessary to notice the remaining portion of the section except (m) "Any matter respecting which an order expressly declared by this Regulation to be final, subject to the provisions of s. 151, has been passed." And then cl. (2) says: "In all the above cases jurisdiction shall rest with the Revenue authorities only."

If the plaintiff had sought in this case to set aside the settlement made with the defendant, we apprehend we could not give him that relief. But he does not ask for that: what he asks for is the declaration of his right, and recovery of possession of the land from which he has been dispossessed. We think that, having the right to hold the land and to obtain a settlement thereof, his dispossession under the circumstances already mentioned was improper. But the property having already been settled with the defendant by the Revenue authorities on the date when the suit was brought, and the defendant having entered into possession under that settlement, we are unable to interfere with it, and give a decree to the plaintiff for possession. He is, however, in a position in this case to obtain a declaration that he is entitled to a settlement of the lands in question.

We, therefore, direct that the plaintiff be declared entitled to a settlement of the lands in suit, and that the decrees of both the lower Courts be set aside, but, in the circumstances, without costs.

NIL MADHAB SIKDAR and others (Plaintiffs) v. NARATTAM SIKDAR and others (Defendants).* [30th April, 1890.]

Lease—Condition restraining alienation—Alienation voluntary or by act of law—Condition for benefit of lessor—Re-entry—Forfeiture—Landlord and Tenant—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 10, 11, 12, 111, cl. (g).

By a clause in a lease it was stipulated that the lessee would not transfer in writing the land leased to him, and that if he did so the sale was to be void. The land was sold to the defendants in execution of a decree obtained against the lessee. In a suit in ejectment by the assign of the lessors:

* Held that the condition was void under s. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882)*, no right of re-entry being reserved to the lessors by the lease.

* Held also that the land having been sold against the will of the lessee by the act of a Court, the lessee could not be said to have voluntarily transferred his interest, Tamaya v. Jina pa Ganpaya (1) and Subbaraya v. Krishna (2) approved.

This was a suit to recover possession of certain homestead lands comprised within the plaintiff's kānī mokarari jama, which had been leased to one Jai Chandra Kundu by the plaintiff's predecessors in the tenure on the 22nd May 1875 on a permanent maurusī lease. The defendants alleged that Jai Chandra Kundu had abandoned the lands, and that they had purchased his interest, which was a permanent and transferable interest in the lands in suit, at a sale in execution of a decree obtained against the lessee.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit, holding that the jama was not transferable. On appeal the lower appellate Court held that it appeared upon Jai Chandra's kabuliyat that the [827] tenure was permanent and hereditary, and was therefore transferable according to law. The kabuliyat contained a proviso that the sale of the jama by the grantee will be void, but did not empower the grantor to take possession in case the jama should be sold. Upon the construction of the kabuliyat the lower appellate Court held that ss. 10 and 12 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) did not apply to the case, no condition for re-entry being expressly reserved for the benefit of the lessors, and that the clause restricting alienation was therefore inoperative, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. From this decision the plaintiffs appealed.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose, for the appellants.

The judgment of the High Court (Petheram, C. J., and Rampini, J.) was as follows:—

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 732 of 1889, against the decree of Baboo Parbutty Coomar Mitter, Subordinate Judge 'of Jessore, dated the 4th of February 1889; reversing the decree of Baboo Maamatha Nath Mookerjee, Munsif 'of Jhenidah, dated the 26th of March 1888. (1) 7 B. 262. (2) 6 M. 159. (3) 1 C. 391.
JUDGMENT.

In this case the plaintiffs are tenure-holders, and they seek to eject the defendants from some bastu land which was leased by the plaintiff's predecessors in the tenue to one Jai Chandra Kundu by a registered lease on the 9th Joisto 1282 or 22nd May 1875. The lease is a permanent and maurasi one at a fixed rent of Rs. 2-8 per annum, and in the kabuliyat executed by Jai Chandra Kundu there is a clause by which he stipulates that he will not transfer in writing in any way to any person the aforesaid bati (or homestead land), adding—"If I do so, it (i.e., the transfer) shall become void." The land was, however, in 1879 sold in execution of a decree obtained against Jai Chandra Kundu, and the defendants then purchased it and have since then been in occupation of it. The plaintiffs accordingly contend that the covenant in the lease restraining the lessee from alienation has been broken, and that they are therefore entitled to re-enter and eject the defendants from the land. The lower appellate Court decided against the plaintiffs, and they now appeal to this Court.

We are, however, of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to eject the defendants, as the lease contains no clause giving the lessors a right of re-entry or providing that the lease shall become void in case of a breach of the covenant against alienation. There being no such proviso in the lease, the condition against alienation cannot be said to be for the benefit of the lessor, and hence it is void under the provisions of s. 10, Act IV of 1882, and the [828] lease cannot be said to have determined under the provisions of s. 111, cl. (g) of the same Act.

It has been pressed upon us by the learned pleader for the appellant that in the case of occupancy raiyats a landlord has always the right of re-entry when the raiyat abandons the land leased to him—Bibi Suhodra v. Smith (1); Narendra Narain Rai v. Ishan Chandra Sen (2); Dwarka Nath Misra v. Hurrish Chandra (3). But the original lessee in this case was not an occupancy raiyat, and the subject of the lease is not agricultural land. Moreover, it seems doubtful whether, when a landlord grants a permanent and heritable tenure in land, he has any estate left in him, unless he reserves to himself a right of re-entry or reversion; for it has been held in the case of Sunit Koer v. Himmat Bahadur (4) that in the case of the grant of an absolute hereditary mokarari tenure it will, on failure of heirs of the lessee, escheat to the Crown, and will not revert to the original grantor or his heirs.

We are further of opinion that even if the lessor had provided in the lease for a right of re-entry in case of a breach of the covenant against alienation, no such breach as would entitle the lessor to re-enter can in this case be said to have been committed.

In the kabuliyat executed by Jai Chandra Kundu, he merely stipulates not to transfer in writing the land leased to him; but when the land has been sold against his will by the act of a Court, as in this case, we do not think that he can be said to have voluntarily transferred in writing the land forming the subject of the contract between him and the plaintiff's lessor. See Tamaya v. Jinaapa Ganpaya (5); Subbvaraya v. Krishna (6).

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

RUBIUN-NESSA (Plaintiff) v. Gooljan Bibee and Others (Defendants).* [26th May, 1890.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 149—Suit by third party claiming rent paid into Court in rent suit, nature of—Title suit.

The object of s. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to prevent tenants being harassed when disputes arise between rival claimants to the land in respect of which the rent is due. In a suit, therefore, under cl. (3) of s. 149 the plaintiff is entitled to have the question of title as well as that of possession tried, and to obtain the injunction therein mentioned. Jagadamba Devi v. Protap Ghose (1) referred to and explained.

This was a suit arising out of a rent suit brought by the defendant No. 1 against the defendant No. 2. The latter denied the relationship of landlord and tenant, and alleged that the rent was due to the plaintiff, upon whom a notice was accordingly served in terms of s. 149, cl. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). The plaintiff now sued to obtain an order under cl. (3) of that section to restrain payment out of the money deposited by defendant No. 2, and to direct payment of the said money to herself, upon establishment of her right to the land in the occupation of the defendants No. 2 and No. 3, the plaintiff alleging a title to the same derived from her husband, the defendant No. 4.

The Court of first instance held upon the evidence that the plaintiff had clearly established her title to the land in question as falling within her husband’s admitted share in the mehal and as having been purchased by her from him, and decreed the suit in her favour. The lower appellate Court remarked as follows:—

"The first Court considered and tried the suit as a title suit raising several issues. In the case of Jagadamba Devi v. Protap Ghose (1) it has been held by the High Court that such a suit is [830] not a title suit. The object of it, it appears from the clause, is to obtain an order restraining payment of the deposited money to the plaintiff in the rent suit. The only legitimate issue therefore in such a suit of a summary kind is in my opinion whether the plaintiff is entitled to restrain the payment to the defendant No. 1 of the money deposited by the tenants . . . . In a case like this the question of the conflicting titles of the hostile parties ought not, I think, to be gone into. Before the plaintiff can succeed, she is bound to prove that she has been actually and in good faith in receipt of the whole of the rent from the tenants, and if she fail to prove this the present suit ought to fail."

The lower appellate Court held upon the evidence that upon this ground the plaintiff’s suit ought to fail, but expressly abstained from deciding any question of title. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to High Court on the ground that the lower Court had misapprehended the ruling cited, and had erred in restricting the enquiry to the question as to who was in actual receipt of the rent, the real question being as to the title to the land.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Petheram, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J.—This is a suit which was brought in consequence of money having been paid into Court by a tenant under s. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. One of the defendants to the present suit sued a ryot to recover some rent. The ryot stated that the rent was claimed by the present plaintiff, and paid the amount into Court under s. 149. When that was done, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendants to establish her right to the land in respect of which she said that the rent was payable to her.

The matter came before the Munsif. He went into the matter and decreed the plaintiff's claim. The defendants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, and the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit, not because he found that the plaintiff was not entitled to the rent as an incident to the title to the land, but because he says you have not proved that you had been in possession in the sense that you were getting this rent from these [831] tenants for the last five years, and he refused to go into the question of title at all, relying upon the case of Jagadamba Devi v. Protab Ghose (1).

In that case the Judges held, for the purposes of stamp duty, that that was not a title suit, and that was all they held. That, no doubt, was a suit which was brought to determine which of two parties was entitled to the money paid into Court under that section; but we do not know what the form of that suit was, or in fact anything more than that the Judges considered that the suit was not a title suit. That does not determine that no suit which is brought under circumstances such as these can be a title suit, or that the plaintiffs in a suit, to establish their right where the matter has come into dispute by reason of another rent suit, and of the money having been paid into Court, may not go into their title. It seems clear to me that the object of s. 149 was to prevent tenants being harassed where disputes arise between rival claimants to the land in respect of which the rent is due, and consequently whether the dispute between such parties is a dispute as to title, or a dispute as to possession only, they are at liberty to have that tried, and in the suit in which that is being tried to obtain the injunction which is mentioned in sub-s. 3 of s. 149 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

For these reasons we think that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in the view which he took of this case, and that the case must be remitted to him for him to consider the matter in all its bearings, and, having regard to title as well as to possession, determine whether the plaintiff or the defendants in the present suit are entitled to this sum of money which has been paid into Court by the tenants.

The costs will abide the result.

Arbitration—Jurisdiction of Court over Arbitrators—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 508, 516.

When a Court has referred a suit to arbitration it has jurisdiction over the arbitrators to compel them to give up documents filed before them as exhibits during the course of the arbitration, and to return the original records of the suit which may have been handed to them. Such jurisdiction can be exercised by an application made in the suit on notice to the arbitrators.

The plaintiff sued to have a declaration of his right to a share in a certain trading partnership, for a dissolution of such partnership, and for the usual partnership accounts to be taken by the Court, and for a decree for such amount as might be found due to him from the defendants on the taking of such accounts.

The plaint was filed on the 21st August 1888, and the defendants in due course appeared and filed a joint written statement.

On the 6th December 1888 the case came on for hearing in the presence of counsel for both the plaintiff and the defendants, and an order was made referring all matters in difference in the suit between the parties to the final decision of Mahomed Haniff and Gour Chunder Dutt, who by the order were directed to make their award in writing and submit the same to the Court, together with the proceedings, depositions, and exhibits in the suit, within one month from the date of the order, or within such further extended time, not exceeding six months, as they might allow themselves by endorsement in writing on an office copy of the order. The order also contained the usual provision for the appointment of an umpire, and conferred on the arbitrators and the umpire the usual powers to examine witnesses, &c., and also a direction to the Registrar to deliver over to the arbitrators the original records of the suit.

The order was drawn up and filed on the 31st December 1888, and served on the arbitrators who took up the arbitration and by endorsement on the office copy of the order on 5th January 1889 extended the time within which to make their award till the 5th June 1889. On the 20th of February 1889 the arbitrators appointed an umpire, and on the 4th June 1889 they further extended the time within which to make their award till the 5th July 1889.

The original records of the suit were, in compliance with the terms of the order, handed to the arbitrators, who proceeded with the reference, and held several meetings, in the course of which various books of accounts and documents were put in and filed before them as exhibits.

On the 8th July 1889 an order was made by the Court in the suit extending the time for the making and filing of the award till the 5th September 1889, and after the last mentioned order was passed the arbitrators held various other meetings, making some 45 meetings in all held in the course of the arbitration.

Before any award was made the parties amicably settled all questions at issue between them in the suit, but such settlement was not recorded in Court until after the notice of the present motion was given, and after the motion had in fact been brought on for hearing and adjourned.

On the 26th April 1890 a notice was served on the arbitrators and the plaintiff, at the instance of the defendants, of an application to the Court for an order directing the arbitrators to deliver up to the defendants, or their attorney, or to the Court, the papers, books, and documents filed by the defendants as exhibits in the course of the hearing before the arbitrators, and to pay the costs of the application. The application was based on the proceedings in the suit and a joint affidavit of one of the defendants and a clerk in the employment of the defendant’s attorney.

The affidavit, after setting out in detail the proceedings referred to above, stated that the arbitrators had agreed to act as such without remuneration, and that neither the defendants nor the plaintiff were indebted to either of them, and went on to set out certain correspondence which had passed between the arbitrators and the parties through their respective attorneys, in which the former claimed their fees and complained of the settlement being made behind their backs, and the latter made charges of incompetence, irregularities, and fraudulent conduct on the part of the arbitrators. These charges, however, were not gone into at the hearing of the motion. The affidavit also set out correspondence between the defendants’ attorney and the arbitrators, in which the former demanded the return of the books and documents the subject-matter of the present application, and in which the arbitrators expressed their willingness to comply with such request, and went on to state that the defendants had sent to take delivery of them, but had failed to get them, and to describe the various unsuccessful attempts made to obtain them.

On the notice of motion being given, the arbitrator, Mahomed Abdul Haniff, appeared to contest the application and filed an affidavit in reply, in which the various charges referred to above were denied, and in which he denied that he and his co-arbitrator had ever consented to act without remuneration, and stated that they had been always ready and willing to proceed with the arbitration, but had been prevented from doing so by the parties not appearing before them on dates fixed for meetings, and he submitted that the settlement by the parties should not be allowed to deprive him of his rights under the order of reference, and that he was entitled to be paid his fees for the meetings which had been held.

On the motion coming on to be heard—
Mr. Bonnerjee, appeared on behalf of the defendants.
Mr. Pugh, for the plaintiff.
Mr. Bonnaiid, on behalf of Mahomed Abdul Haniff.
The other arbitrator, Gour Chunder Dutt, did not appear.

Upon Mr. Bonnerjee moving, the Court raised the question as to whether it had any power to make an order of the kind asked for against an arbitrator, and at the suggestion of Mr. Bonnerjee the motion was allowed to stand over.

During the interval an application was made to the Court on behalf of the plaintiff to have the settlement of the suit recorded.

On the 15th May the motion came on to be heard, the same Counsel appearing.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—The Court has jurisdiction to make the order asked for. The order of reference directs the arbitrators to submit the proceedings, depositions, and exhibits, with their award to the Court. The original record of the suit was directed to be made over to the arbitrators, and was made over to them, and the [835] Court must have the power to order that to be returned to itself. The arbitrators having taken up the arbitration under the order of reference, must be bound by and obey its terms. If they had refused to act, as it was open to them to do, the Court would then have had no jurisdiction over them, but by voluntarily accepting the burden of the reference, they must obey the order. Section 516 of the Code provides that arbitrators shall cause their award to be filed in Court together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them. In Fitzpatrick v. Macnaghten (1), Phear, J., held that, under the corresponding provisions of Act VIII of 1859, the Court which had referred a case was vested with the jurisdiction to control and direct the proceedings of the arbitration. Section 514 of the present Code provides that the Court may make an order superseding the arbitration in certain cases, and in such case proceed with the suit itself, and to do that the Court must necessarily be clothed with power to compel the record and documents being brought back into Court. In the case of Joy Mungal Singh v. Mohun Ram Marwacee (2), Norman, J., in noticing the conduct of one of the arbitrators in allowing certain books to be removed from the record, states as follows:—"The documents were entrusted to him by the Court and it was his plain and simple duty to return them to the Court." It is clear, therefore, that an arbitrator owes a duty to the Court in respect of documents entrusted to him by the Court, or filed by the parties, and this case shows that the Court has exercised jurisdiction over arbitrators. [Wilson, J.—It does not appear from the report of that case on whom the order was made.] It would seem from the concluding portion of the judgment that all the books and exhibits, together with the proceedings, were ordered to be brought into Court with the award, and that would seem to point to the order being made on the arbitrators. In Jagat Sunderi Dasi v. Soustan Bysak (3) the Court exercised jurisdiction over the surviving arbitrator, and Norman, J., stated that the arbitrator ought not to make over the proceedings, depositions, and exhibits in the suit to one of the parties, but that it would be his plain duty to transmit them to the Court. [836] In Rambullub Pal v. Ramananda Pal (4), notice was given to the arbitrators to show cause why certain documents should not be returned by them to the Court, and the order was made, but in that case the arbitrators appear to have submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the Court, and the present question was not raised. All these cases, however, show that here, where we are governed by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, arbitrators owe a plain duty to the Court, and consequently the Court has jurisdiction to make the order asked for.

Counsel then went into the merits of the case, and submitted that the order asked for was one which should be made.

Mr. Pugh supported Mr. Bonnerjee, and contended on the merits that the order ought to be made, and that the jurisdiction contended for was clearly a salutary one and one that should be exercised.

Mr. Bonnard.—The Court has no jurisdiction to make the order asked for—1st.—Because it has no summary jurisdiction over arbitrators.

2nd.—Because the parties having, after the order of reference, settled the case, there is no suit pending before the Court in which any order can be made. The parties have, by their own act, put an end to the arbitration, and thereby divested the arbitrators of their character as such, and have therefore rendered it impossible for any order to be made against them.

3rd—When matters in dispute in a suit have been referred by consent to arbitration, the effect of the reference is, not only that the suit in Court is abandoned, but also that the Court is divested of all jurisdiction in the suit in all matters except one, namely, to deal with the award when made and filed in Court. As no award has been or could be made in this case, the Court has no jurisdiction to make any order such as that asked for.

The cases cited by Mr. Bonnerjee have no application to the present matter, as they are cases in which the awards of the arbitrators have been filed in Court and confirmed by the Court, the Court thereby having jurisdiction to deal with them. The case here is totally different, for the award could not be made in consequence of the parties having settled their disputes out of Court and without notice to the arbitrators, thereby rendering them functi officio.

[837] Again, the reference to arbitration having been made by an order of Court and with the consent of the parties, all that remains for the Court to do is to pass orders under ss. 513 and 514 of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, "summoning witnesses," "enlarging the time for making the award," &c., all of which duties are of a purely ministerial character. The subsequent sections of the chapter only deal with the award when made and filed, and there is no section in the Code which gives the Court jurisdiction over an arbitrator where no award is made or filed, or where, as in the present case, the parties having settled their differences there is no matter in question in the action to be adjudicated upon. Under the circumstances, the case of Penrice v. Williams (1) is strongly in point. There it was held by Chitty, J., that the effect of an order, made by consent of the parties, referring the action and all matters in dispute to arbitration, was that there was no longer any action or question in an action pending before the Court, and therefore that the jurisdiction of the Court was exhausted; and that for all practical purposes the action, so far as the Court was concerned, had disappeared in every respect except one, viz., to allow judgment to be entered up according to the award, when made. It was therefore held that the power of the Court to make any judicatory order over the arbitrator was gone. [See also Woodley v. Johnson (2); Chitty's Equity Index, 4th Ed., p. 153; Shoebambar v. Deodat (3); Haradhan Dutt v. Radhanath Saha (4); Russell on Awards, 5th Ed., p. 477.]

There is no summary jurisdiction in the Court over an arbitrator. Here the arbitrators have been brought before the Court on a notice of motion which is irregular. When it has been sought to deal with an arbitrator, the usual practice has been to issue a rule on him to show cause.

In Dossett v. Gingell (5), an arbitrator refused to deliver up the award except on payment of an exorbitant fee, and so compelled the party to pay it, as he did under protest. The Court, on the ground of want of jurisdiction over the arbitrator, refused an application for an attachment to force him to refund the amount [838] found on taxation to be excessive, Tindal, C. J., holding that the Court was not warranted by any principle of law, or by the practice which prevailed, in making the rule absolute against the arbitrator. In the present case the parties have clearly compromised the case with a view to deprive the arbitrators of their fees, and under the circumstances the Court, even if it had the jurisdiction contended for, ought not to make the order asked for.

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply.—The case of Dossett v. Gingell (1), does not help the other side, as it was a very different case from the present. Here the arbitrators made no award and could make no award. Had they done so, s. 516 gives ample power to the Court to compel arbitrators to bring in the papers and documents filed before them, and, if it could have done so if the award had been filed, it can equally do so if no award be filed. Under s. 514 the Court can put an end to an arbitration, and all incidental powers for that purpose must be taken to be conferred on the Court.

The following judgment was delivered on May 26th:—

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—The defendants have applied for an order directing that the arbitrators appointed to decide the matters in difference in this suit should give up certain documents which came to their hands as arbitrators.

The order of reference was made on the 6th December 1888. It prescribed a time, with a limited power of extension by the arbitrators, for the arbitrators to make and file their award, "together with all proceedings, depositions, and exhibits." The Registrar was by the same order directed to deliver over to the arbitrators the original records of the suit. By another order of Court the time for making an award was extended beyond the period to which the arbitrators could have extended it. Ultimately the extended period expired without any award being made, and the parties have since settled their differences amicably. There remain in the hands of the arbitrators certain documents, filed as exhibits while the arbitration proceedings were pending. They do not and could not claim any lien upon the documents or any right to them of any kind. The only question raised is whether the Court has jurisdiction to order the arbitrators to give up the documents.

[839] After an order has been made referring the subject-matter of a suit to arbitration, the Court, by s. 508 of the Procedure Code, is precluded from itself dealing with the matter which has been so referred, except in the contingencies and in the modes provided by the Code. But the suit nevertheless continues to be a pending suit; it may in certain events have to be heard by the Court itself; and, while the arbitration proceeds, the Court may have to make orders of various kinds in furtherance of the proceedings.

The arbitrator cannot be compelled by the Court to undertake the reference or to proceed with it or to make an award. But if, and so far as, he acts as arbitrator, he takes upon himself, not only a duty towards the parties, but also, as was pointed out in the case of Maharajah Sir Joy Mungr Singh v. Mohun Ram Marwaraee (2), a duty to the Court, and this is distinctly the case with respect to documents. Section 516 expressly requires arbitrators who have made an award to file it, together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them. With regard to documents transmitted by the Court to the arbitrator as part of the record, it was said, in the case already referred to:

"The documents were entrusted to him by the Court, and it was his plain and simple duty to return them to the Court." As to documents entrusted directly by the Court to an arbitrator, such as the records of the suit, I think it clear that he is bound to return them when his right to keep them as arbitrator comes to an end, whether by the making of his award or by the making of an award becoming impossible; and I see no solid distinction between such documents and exhibits with which he is entrusted by reason of the order appointing him arbitrator, and a directing exhibits to be filed. This being the duty of the arbitrator, and a duty towards the Court, it follows, in my opinion, that that duty can be enforced by order made upon the arbitrator.

There will be an order directing the arbitrators to deliver up to the Court the documents mentioned in the notice served upon them with costs against Abdul Haniff, who opposed the application.

Application granted.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson and Mr. Justice Pigot.

ALI KADER SYUD HOSAIN ALI (Plaintiff) v. GOBIND DASS (Defendant). * [27th May, 1890.]

Interrogatories are not, in this country, to be framed to anticipate or supply defects of pleading or to ascertain the case of the other side. Where the pleading of either party is too vague, the Court may call for a further or fuller written statement, or may frame and record issues until the case raised by the pleadings is ascertained with sufficient clearness.

A plaintiff may interrogate with a view to obtain information or admissions in support of his own case, and this right extends not only to his original case, but also to any answers which he has to make to the defendant's case, subject to the qualification (inter alia) that the interrogatories must be directed to a case on which the plaintiff has already determined and to which he has committed himself. He cannot be allowed to put fishing questions in order to try whether he can discover any flaw in the defendant's case or suggest any answer to it.

[Appr., 23 C. 117 (124).]

This was a motion in support of a summons taken out on the part of the plaintiff to consider the sufficiency of affidavits made by the defendant in answer to certain interrogatories administered to him by the plaintiff.

* Original Civil Suit No. 261 of 1888.
The plaintiff, the Nawab Bahadoor of Moorshedabad, stated in his plaint that certain tenanted land, situate and numbered 49, strand Road, 234 and 235, Durmahatta Street, and 3, 4 and 5, Nawab's Lane at Juggernath Ghat in the town of Calcutta, and forming part of talook Sootanutty, was on the 14th January 1874, and had, for many years prior thereto, been the absolute property of his father, the late Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, and the plaintiff became entitled to the said land (together with other property) for his own absolute benefit under and by virtue of an indenture made between his father and himself on the date last mentioned. The plaint further stated that the said land had always been in the occupation of certain persons as the tenants thereof paying rent for their respective holdings from time to time [844] to the person or persons entitled for the time being to receive such rent; that for many years prior to the 30th August 1862 the said land was in the direct possession of the plaintiff's father, and the tenants paid their rents to his agents and servants, and that one of such tenants occupying a portion of the said land on the last-mentioned date and prior thereto was a person of the name of Itcharam, the quantity of land occupied by him being 8 chittacks and the rent paid therefor being Rs. 9-9 per annum.

The plaint further stated that by an indenture dated the 30th August 1862 the plaintiff's father farmed (amongst other property) the said land to one Heeraloll Seal (since deceased) for a period of 15 years from the date thereof, and under and by virtue thereof the said Heeraloll Seal, and after his death his representatives, remained in direct possession of the land until the 30th August 1877, when they made over possession to the plaintiff as the owner of the land, and the plaintiff had been since then and still was in direct possession thereof. The plaintiff after obtaining direct possession proceeded to make a fresh settlement with the tenants, and it was then ascertained that the 8 chittacks of land formerly in the occupation of Itcharam had been increased in area by encroachment upon other lands belonging to the plaintiff to 13 chittacks, and the said 13 chittacks were at the time of the settlement found to be in the occupation of the defendant.

After mentioning the boundaries the plaint further stated that the 13 chittacks of land found in the defendant's possession were numbered as plot 16 in a survey plan prepared under the orders of Government by a special Deputy Collector appointed for that purpose. The defendant on being called upon to come to a settlement with the plaintiff or to give up possession of the land declined to do so, and had since been in possession without paying any rent to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, therefore, prayed for ejectment, mesne profits, and further or other relief.

The defendant Gobind Dass pleaded limitation in bar of suit and, without waiving that objection, further stated that he was the present owner and shebait and mohunt of the Thakoor Ram-Sittah located in a temple standing on a piece of land about 13 chittacks in area (setting out the boundaries), and that he had been in possession of the land and temple and buildings and [842] Thakoor for a period of about forty-five years, and that he had never attorned to or paid rent to the plaintiff or his father, or to any other person.

Upon information and belief the defendant also stated that up to about fifty years ago there had existed on the said piece of land an old temple which was rebuilt about that time by one Rampersaud Hurroper-saud at his own expense as a pious act, and that from that time down to the time when the defendant came into possession one Gomlee Dass had been the shebait and mohunt of the Thakoor, and had been and was in possession of the land and temple and had never attorned or paid rent to the plaintiff or any other person, and that the land and buildings had never been in the occupation of any one of the name of Itcharam. The defendant also denied the possession of Heeraloll Seal, or that any rent had ever been paid to him, and denied the statements contained in the plaint save and except what was expressly admitted by him.

After affidavits of documents had been filed by both parties, the plaintiff applied for, and under the leave of the Court administered certain interrogatories for the examination of the defendant as to the history of the temple and the other allegations set out in the defendant’s written statement, to which the defendant filed an answer objecting to many of the interrogatories on the ground that the matters therein contained were inquisitorial, and related solely to the defendant’s case and title, and in no way to the plaintiff’s case or his alleged title.

The interrogatories which the defendant objected to answer were as follows:

"2. State to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief where Rampersaud Hurropersaud named in your written statement resided; whether he is alive or dead; and what connection he had with the land the subject-matter of this suit.

"3. State... by whom the said Rampersaud Hurropersaud had it [the old temple] rebuilt, and whether the person or persons rebuilding the same is or are alive or dead; and if alive, where he or they may be found.

"5. State, similarly, under what circumstances you obtained possession of the said land and temple and buildings and Thakoor [848] mentioned in the said second paragraph of your said written statement.

"6. State, similarly, if you were ever appointed shebait and mohunt of the Thakoor mentioned in the said third paragraph of your said written statement. If aye, state to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief by whom were you so appointed, and when and how was such appointment evidenced.

"7. If the said appointment was evidenced by any instrument in writing, state to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief in whose power, possession, or control such instrument now is, or in whose possession, power, or control you last saw the same.

"8. If you state in answer to the latter part of the 6th interrogatory that such appointment was not evidenced by any writing, then state to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief in whose presence was such appointment made, and whether the person or persons in whose presence such appointment was made is or are alive or dead; and if alive, where he, she, or they may be found.

"11. State to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief how old you were when you obtained possession of the said land and temple and buildings and Thakoor‘.”

The plaintiff applied for a summons to compel the defendant to answer the above interrogatories fully and sufficiently.

At the hearing of the application, Mr. Pugh and Mr. Ameer Ali appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Dunne for the defendant. The Court (Wilson, J.) after hearing arguments on both sides decided to have the matter re-argued before a Bench of two Judges, the points raised being of considerable importance.
On the 29th April the Court (Wilson and Pigot, JJ.) sat to hear the further arguments.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Bonnerjee appeared for the plaintiff in support of the summons, and Mr. Dunne appeared for the defendant.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—This case is different from the usual cases in ejectment. Here the plaintiff as a zamindar is entitled, on finding a person in possession, to claim rent from him. I rely upon the case of Kripamoyi Dabia v. Durga Govind Sirkar (1) and the cases [844] there cited as showing that it is for the tenant to prove that he is not liable for rent. This is a zamindary forming part of talook Sootanutty as set out in the plaint. If I prove that this is my zamindary, then the onus will lie on the defendant. (Mr. Dunne.—There is no allegation as to this in the pleadings. Part of the talook is vested in the Sobha Bazar Rajahs.) These interrogatories are preliminary to the plaintiff proving his case. The presumption I claim will only arise on my proving that the land is within my zamindary. The principle enunciated in Lyell v. Kennedy (2) clearly lays down a proposition entitling me to an answer here. There is no difference between an action in ejectment and any other action. That case is also an authority that whether the plaintiff claims on legal or equitable grounds, his right is the same. I rely on the case of the Attorney-General v. The Corporation of London (3) to show that a plaintiff may administer interrogatories in support of his own case, or to repel the defendant’s case, or to obtain admissions from the defendant, and he is entitled to ask the defendant what his defence is and the manner in which he means to support it, but not to see the proofs by which his case is to be established. [Pigot, J.—He is to be confined to establishing his own substantive case, and cannot seek a discovery of the evidence on the other side—vide the remarks of Kay, J., in Bidder v. Bridges (4).]

We want to discover, not his proofs, but the nature of his defence, and I can repel his defence by showing that some one else was in possession as my tenant, and that he holds from him. To make his title stronger than that of the defendant the plaintiff may interrogate as to every thing but evidence. In Lyell v. Kennedy (2) Lord Selborne at page 225 refers to the two cardinal rules as laid down by Wigram on Discovery, 2nd Ed., 1840, p. 14, and I rely upon his statement of the law (pp. 223-229), and Lord Bramwell goes even further (pp. 229-230). Interrogatories 2 and 3 are relevant to the plaintiff’s case. The language the defendant has used in refusing to answer is not sufficient according to the authorities—Mint v. Morgan (5). He should allege that they do [845] not go to support the plaintiff’s case. The case of Towne v. Cocks (6) is also in my favour. If limitation is set up the plaintiff is entitled to ask the defendant when he came into possession. The cases are to be found collected in Sichel and Chance on Discovery, at pp. 94-99. [Pigot, J., referred to the remarks of Jessell M.R., in The Attorney-General v. Gaskill (7) at p. 527.] I would also refer to the case of Bemolmone Dassie v. Hullodhur Bullub (8), where Lord Cottenham’s observations in The Attorney-General v. The Corporation of London (3) are cited, with (approval).

Mr. Dunne, for the defendant:—The principle has never been decided in any of the cases cited that the plaintiff is entitled to know more than a bare statement of what the defendant says his case is. The rule is fined down in The Attorney-General v. The Corporation of London (1) at p. 262, and even there all that was decided was that the plaintiff was entitled to obtain admissions and information from the defendant which would prove the plaintiff’s own case. In that case no title of any kind was pleaded by the defendant, and, as has been pointed out in Horton v. Bott (2), which is expressly in point in this case, The Attorney-General v. The Corporation of London was decided on special grounds. The rule laid down in Lyell v. Kennedy (3) does not affect the question here, as all that was there laid down was that in an action of ejectment the plaintiff is entitled to the discovery of matters relevant to his own case, and it simply extends to actions in ejectment the same right to interrogate as was laid down in The Attorney-General v. Gaskill (4), as existing in an action other than in ejectment. Here the plaintiff wishes to know how we make out our title, and his interrogatories are entirely directed to that object, and are of an inquisitorial or fishing character. Horton v. Bott (2) is distinctly approved of in Lyell v. Kennedy (3), and is stated to have been rightly decided, and it is an express authority for the proposition that a plaintiff in ejectment is not entitled to interrogate as to the title of the defendant in possession. As to the case of Towne v. Cocks (5), it is referred to in the arguments in Lyell v. Kennedy (3), and if it can be said to be in conflict with Attorney-General v. Bott (2) it must be taken to have been overruled to that extent. The case of The Attorney-General v. Gaskill (4) was not a case of ejectment, and goes no further than to show that the plaintiff is entitled to discovery of material facts which are part of and tend to prove his own case. Minet v. Morgan (6) is no authority for the proposition that our answers should expressly state that these matters do not support the plaintiff’s case. That was a case of the right to discovery by the defendant, and the question was not as to whether the plaintiff was ’compellable to answer as he did, but whether, having made certain statements, they afforded a sufficient answer to the discovery claimed. The case of Emerson v. Tad Coope & Co. (7) is also a case of discovery, and shows that it is sufficient to answer that the matters in question relate solely to the defendants’ case, and the plaintiff is not thereupon entitled to discovery for the sole purpose of showing that the defendant has not a title. In that case also the defendants relied upon their possession, as we do here. In Iey v. Kekewich (8) the demurrer was allowed on the ground that it was a fishing bill to know how a man made out his title as heir, and the defendant was not obliged to tell the plaintiff how he was to make it out. In Bidder v. Bridges (9) Kay, J., after referring to Wigram on Discovery and most of the authorities cited in the present case, disallowed the summons, saying that the interrogatories were in effect directed to the discovery of the evidence by which the plaintiffs intended to prove their case at the hearing. I submit that these interrogatories are of the same nature, and this furnished a conclusive answer to the application.

Mr. Pugh in reply: The rule is correctly stated in The Attorney-General v. Corporation of London, (1) at pp. 256 and 263 of the report. Some of the interrogatories are open to objection, but we are entitled to get admissions, or to repel the defendant’s case, or to support our own. I contend that I am entitled to know not only the nature of the case, but the facts on which the defendant relies, in order that I may know what

JUDGMENT.

[847] The judgment of the Court (Wilson and Pigot, JJ.) was delivered by

Wilson, J.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks to recover a plot of land and sets out his alleged title to it in the plaint. The defendant, in answer, relies upon the law of limitation as a bar to the plaintiff's claim and also asserts a title in himself, the particulars of which are given in the written statement. The plaintiff obtained leave to interrogate the defendant, and filed his interrogatories accordingly. The defendant, by his affidavit, answered certain of the interrogatories, and objected to others as being questions which he was not bound to answer. Those objected to are the second, part of the third, part of the fifth, the sixth, seventh, eighth, and eleventh. The matter comes before us on a summons taken out by the plaintiff to consider the sufficiency of the answers. And the question is whether the defendant is bound to answer the interrogatories to which he has objected. As to some of these interrogatories it was admitted by the learned counsel for the plaintiff that they could not be supported, for it was admitted that their effect was to ask the defendant by what evidence he intended to support his case. The rest of the interrogatories were insisted upon. It is not necessary to refer to the questions in detail: it is enough to say that they have all one characteristic in common. They all refer to, and are based upon, not matters alleged in the plaint as part of the case of the plaintiff, but matters alleged in the written statement as part of the case of the defendant.

It was sought to support these interrogatories on two distinct grounds. First, it was contended, on the strength of English authorities, that a plaintiff may interrogate a defendant in order to ascertain with sufficient clearness, and in sufficient detail, what the case of the defendant is which he has to meet at the hearing. Such interrogatories are really framed to anticipate or supply defects of pleading. Interrogatories for this purpose have undoubtedly been frequently allowed in England; but this has been the result of the systems of pleading and procedure prevailing in an English Courts of several kinds. The system of procedure in this country differs widely from anything that has ever prevailed in England, and under the Procedure Code two modes are specially provided for [848] meeting the difficulty in question. If the pleading of either party is too vague, the Court may require him to file a further and fuller written statement under s. 112. This method is not, so far as we know, in use in this province outside Calcutta; but in this Court it has several times been adopted. The other method provided by the Code is the settlement of issues. By s. 146, “at the first hearing of the suit the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the parties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material propositions of fact or law the parties are at variance, and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to the Court to depend.” This is the provision under which, not in this Court only, but in the mofussil as well, the case raised on the one side and on the other, by the plaint and written statement, is ordinarily ascertained with the necessary precision. If, under the system of procedure in force in this country, we were to allow interrogatories to be used by one party in order to ascertain with sufficient clearness the case of the other side, we should, we think, be misapplying the English authorities, following the decisions and overlooking the reasons on which they were based. We should further be introducing a practice wholly novel, so far as we now know, unnecessary, and likely to prove very inconvenient. Moreover, if in any case such a use of interrogatories were allowable, they would not, we think, be so in this case, for we do not think the written statement is open to exception on the ground of insufficiency of information as to the case set up.

The second ground upon which it was sought to support these interrogatories was this. It was said that a plaintiff may interrogate with a view to obtain information or admissions in support of his own case, and that this right extends, not only to his original case, but also to any answer which he has to make to the defendant's case. With proper qualifications this may be accepted as correct. But, amongst other qualifications, it is always subject to this qualification, that the interrogatories must be directed to a case on which the plaintiff has already determined, and to which he has committed himself. He cannot be allowed to put fishing [849] questions in order to try whether he can discover any flaw in the defendant's case or suggest any answer to it. If this test be applied, it is clear, we think, that the interrogatories in question are inadmissible. The summons must therefore be dismissed with costs.

The same considerations govern the case of the same plaintiff v. Hurdep Das, in which also the summons must be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL,

Before Sir W. Comer Petheram, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Rampini.

Satis Chunder Mukhopadhy (Defendant) v. Mohendro Lal Pathuk, minor, through his guardian Patu Mondul (Plaintiff).* [28th May, 1890.]

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32, cl. (6), 35—Certificate under Act XL of 1858—Horoscope—Minority.

A certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858 is no evidence of minority under s. 35 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), being neither a book nor a register nor a record kept by any officer in accordance with any law.

In a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of minority the plaintiff relied upon a horoscope to prove his age. Held, following Ram Narain Kallia v. Mone Bibee [1] that the horoscope was not admissible under s. 32, cl. 6 of the Evidence Act.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1082 of 1889, against the decree of J. Whitmore, Esquire, Judge of Beerbhoom, dated the 2nd of April 1889, modifying the decree of Baboo Shambhu Chunder Nag, Munsif of Suri, dated the 26th November 1888.

This was a suit brought to set aside a decree obtained against the plaintiff on the 3rd April 1888 by the present defendant in a suit upon a bond alleged to have been executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant's father, and to have the bond declared invalid upon the ground that the plaintiff at the time of the alleged execution of the bond and at the date of the decree was a minor.

[850] The Court of first instance decreed the suit, holding that the weight of the evidence upon the issue of minority was in the plaintiff's favour. Apart from oral evidence the plaintiff relied upon a certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858 obtained by the plaintiff's brother on the 23rd February 1884, which was cancelled on the 22nd June 1888, and a fresh certificate granted to the plaintiff's present guardian, Patu Mondul. These certificates declared that the plaintiff would attain his majority in the month of April 1889. The plaintiff also relied on a paper purporting to be a horoscope by one Ram Mohun Gunuk, an astrologer, since deceased, whose handwriting was deposed to by an ex-pupil of his. According to this document the plaintiff was born on the 29th June 1868.

The District Judge discarded the oral evidence as vague and inconclusive, but regarded the certificate of guardianship as admissible in evidence under s. 33 of the Evidence Act and the horoscope as admissible under s. 32, cl. 6. Upon this evidence he decided in favour of the plaintiff's minority. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rashbehari Ghose and Baboo Nobin Ranjan Chatterjee, for the appellant.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (Petheram, C. J. and Rampini, J.) was delivered by Petheram, C. J. (who after stating the facts, continued)—It is contended before us that neither the certificate of guardianship nor the horoscope upon which the District Judge relies, and upon which alone he relies, is evidence in this case for the plaintiff at all.

We think that this contention is well founded, and that neither of those documents is evidence. A certificate of guardianship is a document which is issued to a person appointing him the guardian of a certain person on the ground that that person is a minor, and it is said that the document is evidence of the age of that person under s. 33 of the Evidence Act. It is only necessary to read s. 35 to see that it is nothing of the kind. That section relates to entries made in public or official books, registers, or records, which are kept in the performance of a duty specially enjoined [881] by the law of the country. This certificate is neither a book nor a register, nor a record kept by any officer in accordance with any law, but is a certificate, as it professes to be, of which there is only this one, and which is not a public record or register of any kind, but is a document issued to a particular person giving to that particular person, and only to him, a particular kind of authority.

Then the next question is with reference to the horoscope. That horoscope has been admitted as coming within s. 32 of the Evidence Act and within cl. 6 of that section. That clause makes entries made by deceased persons evidence on questions of relationship, blood, marriage, or adoption, where the deceased person had some special means of knowledge. As to that it is enough to say that it is not shown that the person who made this horoscope had any special means of knowledge, and that the question which we have to decide is not one either of relationship, blood, marriage, or adoption. That shows that neither of these documents is any evidence at all.

In holding this we are acting in accordance with the view taken by Mr. Justice Norris in the case of Ram Narain Kallia v. Monee Bibee (1), and also with our own view of the law. Therefore we came to the conclusion that the finding of fact, that this person, the plaintiff, was a minor—the Judge having rejected the oral evidence—is supported by no evidence at all, and as his judgment rests upon that finding, the judgment must be set aside.

In doing so we do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion or as agreeing in the opinion expressed by the learned Judge that the decree obtained against the minor who has been sued without a guardian is a nullity, or that the suit will lie to set that decree aside, supposing all the plaintiff's allegations have been proved.

In the result this appeal will be decreed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Macpherson.

Romesh Chunder Sannyal (Petitioner) v. Hirus Mondal and another (Opposite party).* [27th March and 15th April, 1890.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 295, 378, 403 and 425—"Object" held sacred by any class of persons—Killing bulls set at large at Sradha, in accordance with Hindu religious usage—"Res nullius"—Property in Brahmini bull—Construction of Acts—Reference to Report of Indian Law Commissioners and of Select Committee—Theft—Criminal misappropriation—Mischief.

The word "object" in s. 295 of the Penal Code does not include animate objects.

A bull dedicated and set at large at the Sradha of a Hindu in accordance with religious usage is not an "object" within the meaning of that section.

Where such an animal was killed by certain Mahomedans secretly and at night in the presence of none but Mahomedans for the sake of the meat and value of the skin, held that no offence had been committed under s. 295. Queen-Empress
v. Imam Ali (2) followed.

Held further, that such a bull is not "moveable property" within the meaning of ss. 378 and 403, or "property" within the meaning of s. 425 of the Penal Code, and could not therefore be the subject of theft, criminal misappropriation, or mischief.

The fact that such a bull receives some attention from the cowherd of the persons who set it at liberty, and is daily fed by him by direction of his employers, and is not used for breeding purposes without their permission being asked, is not inconsistent with a total surrender by those who set it at liberty of all their rights as proprietors. Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (3) followed, Queen-Empress
v. Nalla (4) referred to and commented on.

In this case the two accused, who were Mahomeds, were charged with an offence under s. 295 of the Indian Penal Code. It appeared that at the Adya Sradha of the mother of Raja Jogendro Nath Rai, of Nattore, which was performed in the [883] year 1888, a bull was dedicated and set at large with the usual ceremonies. After the bull was so dedicated, it was tended by the Rajbari cowherd under the supervision of the Rajbari Sirdar, and he gave it a seer of rice a day and used to drive it away if he found it eating any one's crops. It appeared in the evidence taken in the case that the bull was used by the villagers for breeding purposes with the permission of the Rajbari people.

The accused were charged with having killed the bull. They were shown to have killed it at night in a straw-field some distance from the village, no Hindu being present. It appeared that the reason for their killing it was to obtain its flesh and skin, the former being eaten and the latter sold.

The Deputy Magistrate discharged the accused under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for reasons given in his judgment, which is set out below in the judgment of Mr. Justice Norris.

The petitioner, who was the complainant in the Court below, applied to the High Court to have the order of discharge set aside and the case sent back for re-trial on the ground that the Deputy Magistrate was wrong in law in holding that s. 295 of the Indian Penal Code had no application to the case.

The application was made by the Advocate-General (Sir G. C. Paul), and a rule was issued calling on the two accused to show cause why the order of discharge should not be set aside and the case remanded for re-trial.

The rule came on to be heard on the 27th March.

The Advocate-General (Sir G. C. Paul) and Baboo Pramatha Nath Sen, for the Petitioner in support of the rule.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby), for the opposite party.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (showing cause). The essence of the offence provided for in s. 295 is the intention of insulting the religious feelings of any class of persons. In this case it is clear the accused had no such intention as the bull was killed at night secretly, and their object was to eat the flesh and sell the hide. They were only charged under s. 295, not with theft, criminal misappropriation or mischief (ss. 378, 403, and 425). It has often been held in this Court that these sections do not apply. A Brahmini bull is "Nullius proprietas." [See Dwarka Moocchi [854] v. Queen-Empress (2), Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (3), Queen-Empress v. Nihal (4).] It is clear from these cases that no charge of theft, criminal misappropriation, or mischief would lie, and as it is equally clear from the evidence that there was no intention to insult the religious feelings of any one, s. 295 does not apply. [Norris, J.—Is there not in the evidence something to show that the complainant claims a proprietary right in the bull?] No, there is no claim of right set up. The bull was let loose to go where it chose, and abandoned by the owner. The dedication of and letting loose the bull, as shown by the Allahabad cases, necessarily involve the surrender and abandonment of all proprietary rights in it.

Then again a bull is not an "object" within the meaning of s. 295. This was decided by all the Judges of the Allahabad Court in Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (1). The word "object" as used in the section means "an inanimate object" such as an idol.

The Advocate-General.—This case is one of considerable importance, and although the case of Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (1) is no doubt against me, the principle therein laid down has not been followed everywhere, and the word 'object' in s. 295 has not been given the restricted meaning put on it by the Allahabad Full Bench. In the case of Hakim v. Empress (Punjab Record, 1884, No. 27), referred to in the note to Imadud Khan v. Bhagirath (2), the word was held not to be limited to inanimate objects, but is wide enough to include animate objects which are held sacred. Chapter XV of the Penal Code deals with offences relating to religion, and s. 295 is of a most comprehensive character. There would seem to be no real reason why the destruction of a picture of a monkey which is worshipped should be held to be within the section, while the destruction of a monkey itself, which is equally worshipped, should be excluded. The interpretation put on the section by Sir John Edge in the case of Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (1) is erroneous, and he has misapplied the doctrine of ejusdum generis (see Maxwell on Statutes, 2nd Ed., p. 540). Then the word "destroy" in s. 295 undoubtedly includes "to kill." There is also a decision of the Madras Court which is opposed to that of the Allahabad Court (Queen-Empress v. Nalla (3)). So that on the decided cases we have the Madras and Punjab Courts deciding one way, as against the Allahabad Court deciding the other. Then if we look to see what mischief this Chapter of the Code was intended to provide against, we find that it was certainly not intended to restrict s. 295 to inanimate objects. In the notes to the Penal Code prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners published in the year 1837, Lord Macaulay says in note J to Chapter XV (see pp. 71 and 49)—[Norriss, J.—I don't think you are entitled to refer to that.] In In re Mew v. Throne (4) it was held that this could be done, and the Lord Chancellor there referred to the Commissioners' report made in the year 1854, and to the speech of the Member in the House who introduced the Bill in 1860. [Norriss, J.—I don't understand that judgment to lay down that you can refer to speeches of Members of Parliament to show what the definition of a word in a section is.] The Lord Chancellor states that he does it "for the purpose of gaining assistance in interpreting the words of the law, not that one will be warranted in giving to these words any different meaning from that which is consistent with their plain and ordinary signification, but at the same time it may somewhat assist in interpreting these words and in ascertaining the object to which they were directed," and it is for that purpose I desire to refer to Lord Macaulay's note. (See also Hawkins v. Gathercole (5), Maxwell on Statutes, 2nd Ed., pp. 31 et seq., and The Queen v. The Bishop of Oxford (6). [Norriss, J.—My brother Macpherson thinks you are entitled to read it, and although I am of a contrary opinion.

I think that when one Judge of a division bench thinks so it is enough.]

In that note Lord Macaulay expressly refers to the slaughter of a cow in a sacred place at Benares as being a very serious matter and likely to lead to tumult, outrage, and even insurrection, and treats that as one of the offences for which the Commissioners had provided in this Chapter. There can be no doubt [856] that a Brahmini bull is looked on as a very sacred object by Hindus (see Manu’s Institutes, Chap. VIII, Sloke 242; Colebrooke’s Digest, Vol. II, p. 370), and therefore the slaughter of such an animal is clearly an insult to Hindu religion. I submit therefore that the Allahabad decision is erroneous, and that the case does come within s. 295, which should not be restricted to damaging or destroying inanimate objects only.

In addition to this the evidence in this case shows that the parties who set the bull at large still retained their property in the animal, so that it was capable of being stolen, misappropriated, or the subject of mischief, and was not ferae naturae.

C. A. V.

The judgment of the Court (Norris and Macpherson, JJ.) was delivered on the 15th April, and was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Norris, J.—The facts of this case are as follows:—

At the ceremony of the Adya Sradha of the mother of Raja Jogendra Nath Rai of Nattore, which was performed about twenty months ago, a bull was dedicated and set at large after being branded on the hind part. After the dedication and setting at large the Rajbari cowherd tended the bull under the supervision of the Rajbari sirdar; he gave it a seer of rice a day and used to drive it away if he found it eating any one’s crops. The bull was used by the villagers for breeding purposes, and there is some evidence to show that it was not so used without permission having been obtained from the Rajbari. Some eighteen months after the bull had been so dedicated and set at liberty, Hiru Mondal and Modhu Mondal, both Mahomedans, with others killed it. The killing took place at night in a straw-field some distance from the village, and was not witnessed by any Hindu.

Information of the slaughter of the bull reaching the Rajbari, a complaint was made to the Deputy Magistrate, and Hiru and Modhu were sent up for trial under s. 295, Indian Penal Code. The Deputy Magistrate, after taking the depositions of two witnesses called for the prosecution, discharged the accused under s. 253, Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Deputy Magistrate’s judgment, so far as it is material to set it out, is as follows:—‘It appears that the bull was killed by some [887] Mahomedans, including the two accused, for the sake of the meat. It has been held that the word, ‘object’ in s. 295 of the Penal Code does not include animate objects [Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (1)]; hence s. 295, Indian Penal Code, does not apply to the present case. Nor do I think that the case comes under the definition of ‘mischief.’ To constitute the offence of mischief the act done must be shown to have caused destruction of some property, or such a change in the property, or the situation of it, as destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously. Now it has been held that a bull so dedicated and set at large is nullius

proprietas, and it is therefore, in my opinion, incapable of being made the subject of mischief. For the same reason it is not 'property' which is capable of being made the subject of criminal misappropriation or larceny. [Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (1); Queen-Empress v. Nihal (2).] No doubt the killing of such a bull is simply outrageous to the religious feeling of a Hindu, and specially of one who dedicated it, but the rulings cited above leave me no option but to discharge the accused."

On the motion of the Advocate-General we granted a rule calling upon the two discharged persons to show cause why the order of discharge should not be set aside and the case sent back for re-trial.

The rule was argued before us a few days ago; Mr. Kilby showing cause, and the Advocate-General supporting it.

Mr. Kilby contended that the evidence conclusively negatived any "intention" on the part of the discharged persons "to insult the religion of any class of persons." The bull, he pointed out, was killed secretly at night at a distance from the village in the presence of none but Mahomedans for the sake of the meat and for the value of the skin, which the evidence showed was sold for Rs. 2.

The learned Counsel further contended on the authority of Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (3) that the bull was not an "object" within the meaning of s. 295, Indian Penal Code; and he relied upon the two other cases decided by the Allahabad High Court referred to by the Deputy Magistrate, and upon an unreported case [888] decided by McDonell and Field, JJ. [Dwarka Mookhi v Queen-Empress (4)], as establishing that the bull was not "moveable property" within the meaning of ss. 378 and 403, Indian Penal Code, nor "property" within the meaning of s. 425, Indian Penal Code, and therefore he contended the discharged persons could not properly have been convicted of an offence under either of these sections. The Advocate-General contended that the case of Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (3) was wrongly decided; that Edge, C. J., had misapprehended the rule of ejusdem generis, and had misapplied it: that the evidence showed that those who had dedicated the bull and set it at large still retained such a "property" in the animal as to make it capable of being the subject of theft, or criminal misappropriation, or mischief.

The case is one of considerable importance, affecting as it does the religious feelings of the Hindu population of the Empire: I have given it the most careful consideration, and as the result have arrived at the following conclusion, viz.—

1st.—That the killing of the bull was not a "destroying" within the meaning of s. 295, Indian Penal Code.

2nd.—That the bull was not an "object" within the meaning of the same section.

3rd.—That the bull was not "moveable property" within the meaning of ss. 378 and 403, Indian Penal Code, and could not therefore be the subject of theft, or of criminal misappropriation.

4th.—That the bull was not "property" within the meaning of s. 425, Indian Penal Code, and could not therefore be the subject of mischief.

5th.—That if the killing of the bull was a "destroying," and if the bull was an "object" within the meaning of s. 295, Indian Penal Code,

(1) 8 A. 51. (2) 9 A. 348. (3) 10 A. 150. (4) Criminal Motion No. 86 of 1884, unreported.

there is no evidence that the discharged persons "destroyed that object with the intention of thereby insulting the religion of any class of persons."

The correctness of the first conclusion depends upon the soundness of the second, for it is clear that if the bull is an "object" within the meaning of the section, the person who kills it "destroys" it. My reasons for holding that the bull is not an "object" within [859] the meaning of s. 295 are the same as those to be found in the judgments of Edge, C.J., and Brodhurst and Mahmood, JJ., in Queen-Empress v. Imam Ali (1).

I think that by the word "object" the Legislature meant something, "ejusdem generis" with a place of worship, such as an idol, or a picture which was the subject of litigation in Gossamee Sree Greedhareejee v. Runanlolljee Gossamee (2); something that is capable of "destruction" in the sense in which that word is ordinarily used, or of "damage," or of "defilement." Had the Legislature intended to make the killing of a dedicated bull an offence under s. 295, I think that they would have used language clearly expressing that intention.

I cannot agree with the Advocate-General that Edge, C.J., has either misapprehended or misapplied the rule of ejusdem generis in construing the section, nor do I think that the passages cited from Maxwell on Statutes support the contention. The Advocate-General, in support of his argument as to the intention of the Legislature, referred to the Notes to the Penal Code prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners and submitted by them to the then Governor-General of India in Council. In note J, being the note on "the chapter of offences relating to religion and caste," the Commissioners say of s. 275 of the Penal Code, which corresponds with s. 295 of the present Code:

"We have prescribed a punishment of great severity" (the proposed punishment was rigorous imprisonment for a term which might extend to seven years) "for the intentional destroying or defiling of places of worship, or of objects held sacred by any class of persons. No offence in the whole Code is so likely to lead to tumult, to sanguinary outrage, and even to armed insurrection. The slaughter of a cow in a sacred place at Benares in 1809 caused violent tumult, attended with considerable loss of life. The pollution of a mosque at Bangalore was attended with consequences still more lamentable and alarming. We have therefore empowered the Courts in cases of this description to pass a very severe sentence on the offender." The Advocate-General contended that this passage showed that the Commissioners intended that the word "object" should include a cow.

[860] I am unable to place this construction on the passage. What caused "the violent tumult at Benares in 1809" was not the slaughter of the cow, but its slaughter in a sacred place. The naming of two instances, one the defilement or pollution of a sacred place, the other the pollution of a place of worship, and then the use of the words "cases of this description," so far from helping the learned Advocate-General's contention, seems to me to militate against it.

With reference to the reading of this note I may observe that when the Advocate-General proposed to refer to it, I was of opinion that he was not entitled to do so; Macpherson, J., however, thought that he was so entitled, and so the note was read. I wish to say that upon consideration I think the Advocate-General was entitled to read the note, which seems to stand in much the same position as the Report of the Select Committee on the Evidence Act, which was referred to by the Full Bench in Queen-Empress v. Kartick Chunder Das (1).

In support of the 3rd and 4th conclusions at which I have arrived, I rely upon the judgment of Straight, J., in Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (2).
That was a case of a "bull dedicated and set at liberty," as was the bull in this case. The learned Judge says:—

"It was not only not the subject of ownership by anyone, but the original owner had surrendered all his rights as its proprietor and had given it its freedom to go whithersoever it chose; it was therefore nullius proprietas, and as incapable of larceny being committed in respect of it as if it had been ferae naturae." In Queen-Empress v. Nihal (3), the same learned Judge again expressed the same opinion.

In opposition to these cases, the Advocate-General relied upon a Madras case, Queen-Empress v. Nalla (4). In that case two persons had been convicted of mischief and criminal misappropriation in respect of a bull described as "the Kamatchi Amman temple bull." On appeal the Sessions Judge, "having regard to the principle on which the case of Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (2) was decided, namely, that a bull set at large in accordance with Hindu religious usage, when the original owner abandons all proprietary [861] right in such animal, cannot be the object of larceny and being of opinion that no material distinction in principle could be drawn between the case of a beast so abandoned and the case of a beast abandoned by its former owner and dedicated or attached to a temple, not however without considerable hesitation, held the bull in the latter case to be a fera bestia, and as res nullius to be incapable of being object of the offences in respect of which the accused were convicted, and quashed the conviction. On the case coming before the Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, the learned Judges, Muttusami Ayyar and Brandt, JJ., said:—

"We do not think it necessary to interfere in revision, not because we agree with the Sessions Judge that there is no material distinction between the case of an animal, property in which is wholly renounced or abandoned, and allowed, in accordance with religious or superstitious usage, to roam at large free from all control, and that of such an animal so abandoned and at large after dedication to a temple, but because the accused have undergone three months' rigorous imprisonment for the offences of which they were convicted. We consider there is a material distinction between the two cases * * * If on the evidence it appeared that the animal was turned loose after dedication to the temple, and that it was actually or inferentially accepted as so dedicated on behalf of the temple, then, though the animal were allowed to be at large free from all control, it would, prima facie, be the property of the temple."

I fail to see anything in this judgment in the least degree impeaching or questioning the correctness of the law laid down by Straight, J., in Queen-Empress v. Bandhu (2). I do not think that the fact that the bull in this case still receives some attention from the Rajbari cowherd and is daily fed by him by the direction of his employers is at all inconsistent with "a total surrender" by those who set him at liberty "of all their rights as proprietors."

A bull thus dedicated and set at liberty is regarded as sacred by all Hindus, and it is a religious and meritorious act on the part of strangers even to feed it; but it is peculiarly sacred in the eyes of [862] the person who performed the Sradha and set the animal at liberty, and he regards it as a moral duty to feed it after it has been set at liberty.

Even if it be true that the villagers do not use the bull for breeding purposes without asking permission of the Rajbari people, I think this is only a matter of courtesy on their part, and ought not to be construed as evidence of any property in the animal remaining in those who set him at large.

In support of the 5th conclusion at which I have arrived, I rely upon Mr. Kilby's argument which I have summarised above, and to which I have nothing to add. I am therefore of opinion that the rule should be discharged.

Macpherson, J.—I agree and would discharge the rule.

CRIMINAL APPEAL.

Before Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Hill,

JAI NARAYAN RAI v. QUEEN-EMpress.* [22nd April, 1890.]

Confession—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 164, 364 and 533—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 91—Examination of accused—Defect in confession—Confession not recorded in language in which it is given, admissibility of evidence.

An accused, when in custody, made a confession to a Deputy Magistrate in the presence of a Sub-Inspector, and during an investigation being held into a case of murder, under the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code. The confession was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate in English, though made in Hindi, which the Deputy Magistrate perfectly well understood and could write. It purported to have been recorded under the provisions of s. 164, and was in reply to one question which was set out. The record bore the signatures of the accused and of the Deputy Magistrate, as well as the certificate as required by the section. It occupied about five pages of foolsc p. At the trial the Sessions Judge excluded this confession on the ground that, not having been recorded in the language in which it was made, and there being no reason why it should not have been so recorded, the document was inadmissible in evidence. He, however, called the Deputy Magistrate as a witness and admitted in evidence his statement as to what the accused told him. This evidence, which occupied only a few [863] lines, was to the effect that the accused told him he had committed the murder, and on this evidence alone the accused was convicted. On appeal—

Held, that the provisions of s. 164 read with s. 364 are imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded, and that s. 533 does not contemplate or provide for any non-compliance with the law in this respect, and that, therefore, as it was not impracticable to record the confession in Hindi, the Sessions Judge was right in refusing to admit the document in evidence.

Held, further that the Sessions Judge erred in admitting the oral evidence of the Deputy Magistrate as to what the accused told him, as, seeing that he was acting under the provisions of s. 164. of the Criminal Procedure Code, the confession was matter which was required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, and therefore, under s. 91 of the Evidence Act, no evidence could be given in proof of such matter except the document, where, as in this case, it was in existence and forthcoming.

Held also, that as the defects in the record could not be cured under s. 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and no secondary evidence could be given, no proof of the confession could be given, and the accused must be acquitted.

* Criminal Appeal No. 223 of 1890 against the order passed by A. C. Brett, Esq., Sessions Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 30th of January 1890.
The prisoner, Jai Narayan Rai, was charged with the murder of one Mahabir under the following circumstances. It appeared that in the month of September 1889 there had been some rioting going on in the village of Patuha, and during one of these riots a man named Soorji, who was the father of Jai Narayan Rai, was killed. A charge was preferred against several persons, including Mahabir, in respect of this riot, and they were committed for trial on that charge. During the investigation of that case, it appeared that Mahabir had stated that he had dealt Soorji a blow on the head which had killed him. After the committal, Mahabir was released on bail by the Sessions Judge, and the night following his release he was killed when he was asleep in the verandah of his house, a deep gash being found in his throat, which, in the opinion of the Civil Surgeon, must have caused death very rapidly and prevented him ever speaking after it had been inflicted. It was alleged that the occurrence took place on the night of the 21st October. On the morning of the 22nd, information was sent to the thana, and a Sub-Inspector proceeded to investigate the case. It seemed that the prisoner was suspected of the crime, and in the afternoon a Sub-Deputy Magistrate, who had been sent out by the Sub-divisional Officer, arrived at the village and recorded a confession made by [864] the prisoner. The circumstances under and manner in which the confession was recorded are fully stated in the judgment of the High Court. The day following the prisoner was taken before a Magistrate of the first class and a further statement made by him was recorded, which purported to have been taken under s.164 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This statement was in reply to questions put by the Magistrate, and was as follows:—Q. "Did you make the statement you made yesterday before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, of your own free will"? A. "Yes of my own free will, and it is correct." Q. "Did any one teach you anything"? A "No one taught me anything." Both the confession and the statement before the Magistrate were recorded in the English language, and contained memorandum signed by the respective Magistrates, who recorded them in the form required by s. 164. The prisoner was committed for trial on the charge of murder, and at the trial the prosecution called several witnesses and tendered these statements made by the prisoner. The evidence given by witnesses who sought to connect the prisoner with the crime was disbelieved by the Judge, and the above statements were held by him to be inadmissible in evidence. He, however, called the Sub-Deputy Magistrate and recorded his evidence, which will be found in full in the judgment of the High Court. He also called the Joint-Magistrate and recorded his evidence as to the circumstances under which he recorded the statement set out above. The Joint-Magistrate deposed that when he recorded the statement he had the confession said to have been made to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate before him, but that he probably did not read it over to the prisoner. One of the Assessors found the prisoner guilty and the other considered he ought to be acquitted. The Sessions Judge agreed with the verdict of the former, and convicted the prisoner and sentenced him to transportation for life.

The material portion of his judgment was as follows:—

"The Government P leader has put into the box a number of witnesses sent up by the committing officer (Narghoon being principal witness), who say that the prisoner was seen just after he had struck the blow (with a chopper called 'gharasa'), that he was pursued and seized, but got away by struggling and escaped by threats. In putting his case, however, he did not rely on this evidence. And he was quite right not to do so. [865] Narghoon's story will not fit in with Ghina's, and I have no manner of doubt that the whole of this direct evidence is manufactured. I believe that the murderer, whoever he was, got clear off without any sort of detection, and that the denunciation of the prisoner was grounded on mere suspicion. The determination of the case turns entirely on the prisoner's confession, and unfortunately the Sub-Deputy Magistrate has not followed the procedure laid down by law. He has recorded the confession in English (though he himself can write Hindi), and I have therefore been obliged to rule that the record is inadmissible. The prisoner was taken to the Sub-divisional Officer himself next day (23rd), and was still in a confessing mood, but curiously enough the opportunity of rectifying the Sub-Deputy Magistrate's error was not seized, and all that was asked of the prisoner was whether he had made the 'yesterday's' statement of his own free will and without dictation. The Joint-Magistrate did not apparently even read over the confession to him (see his evidence). On the 11th November the prisoner told the Joint-Magistrate that he had been 'compelled by blows' by the police, who threatened to dishonour him. To this Court he does not allege that he was beaten (an accusation that he could hardly support), but he says that the police threatened to lie him and his wife and mother together. This procedure, I take it, would be considered very dishonouring.

"As I put it to the assessors, the problem before us is to consider whether the prisoner, in telling the Sub-Deputy Magistrate that he killed Mahabir, was speaking the truth or was lying. One assessor is satisfied that he was telling the truth and the other is doubtful. I entirely agree with the former assessor. The prisoner's contention that he was bullied into confessing is manifestly a conventional plea. That he told the Deputy Magistrate that he killed Mahabir is proved to demonstration both by the evidence of that officer and the evidence of the Joint-Magistrate, as well as by the prisoner's own statements and pleas. That he was telling the truth when he said so, I have no doubt whatever.

"Then how does the matter stand? It is quite true that we cannot accept the record which purports to have been made under s.164, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Deputy Magistrate, and the record made by the Joint-Magistrate does not carry us further, but the position is only thereby reduced to this, that it is the same as if no record had been made, and that the Deputy Magistrate had come into the box and said 'the prisoner told me he killed Mahabir, but I did not write down what he had said.' Is this 'evidence' that the prisoner killed Mahabir? I have no hesitation in saying that it is. The definition of 'evidence' in Act I of 1872 is as follows:—'Evidence means and includes all statements which the Court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses in relation to matters of fact under enquiry, &c.' To put it in another way, 'evidence' means (inter alia) words spoken in order to convince the Court [866] of the existence of facts. I do not think any reasonable man will deny that if A tells a Court that B told him he had killed C, A does so in order to convince the Court of the existence of the fact that B did kill C. This is the case here.

"As I am satisfied that the prisoner told the truth when he told the Deputy Magistrate that he killed Mahabir, I am satisfied that the prisoner did kill Mahabir; and what I have said above will show that I am so satisfied on evidence.'

The prisoner appealed to the High Court against the conviction and sentence, the main ground being that the Sessions Judge should not have admitted the evidence given by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate after holding that the confession itself was inadmissible.

Baboo Durga Mohun Dass (for Baboo Umbica Churn Bose), for the appellant.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Offg., Mr. Leith), for the Crown.

The nature of the arguments appears sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Hill, JJ.), which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The prisoner has been convicted of the murder of Mahabir Rai on the evidence of a Sub-Deputy Magistrate who deposes to a confession which the prisoner made. His evidence is this—" He (the prisoner) told me that he had killed a man named Mahabir, because Mahabir had admitted to the Magistrate that he had killed his (the prisoner's) father Suroop. He said he had cut the throat of Mahabir in the night with a gharasa as he slept on a bed. He pointed out the gharasa, which lay on the ground in front of him."

There is no other proof against the prisoner, as the direct evidence which implicated him was disbelieved by the Judge, who says it was not relied on by the prosecution, that he has no manner of Joubt it is manufactured, and that the murderer, whoever he was, got clear off without any sort of detection, the prisoner being afterwards denounced on mere suspicion. There is, however, evidence that the prisoner's father had been killed in a riot which took place some time previously, and that Mahabir, who with others had been committed to the Sessions on a charge of being concerned in it, had stated that he had inflicted the wound which caused his death. That case was still pending in the Sessions Court, and Mahabir and the other accused had been released on bail. The confession to which the Sub-Deputy Magistrate speaks was recorded [887] by him under the provisions of s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but the recorded confession was rejected by the Judge on the ground that the provisions of that section read with s. 364 as to the manner of recording it had not been complied with, and that it was therefore inadmissible. The Judge in rejecting the recorded confession treats it as if it had never been made and was not in existence. "The position (he says) is only thereby reduced to this, that it is the same as if no record had been made and that the Deputy Magistrate had come into the box and said 'the prisoner told me that he had killed Mahabir, but I did not write down what he had said.'" He then comes to the conclusion that the confession deposed to by the Deputy Magistrate is true and sufficiently proved.

It is contended for the prisoner that if the recorded confession is rejected and put aside, oral evidence is inadmissible to prove that he did confess. We think the contention is correct, and that the only confession (if any) which can be proved against the prisoner is the confession which was recorded under s. 164 of the Procedure Code.

There can be no doubt that the Deputy Magistrate was acting under s. 164. At the time when the confession was made, the police had commenced an investigation under Chapter XIV of the Procedure Code, the prisoner was in their custody, the confession was recorded in the presence of the Sub-Inspector, and the Deputy-Magistrate purported to act under
s. 164. That section, which is part of chapter XIV, provides that when a confession is made to a Magistrate under such circumstances, the confession shall be recorded and signed in a specified manner. It is therefore a matter which is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document; and under s. 91 of the Evidence Act, the only evidence which could be given in proof of such matter is the document itself, for, as this is forthcoming, there is of course no question of secondary evidence.

Section 533 of the Criminal Procedure Code modifies, however, as regards confessions, s. 91 of the Evidence Act. It provides that when, on the tender of a confession recorded under s. 164, it is found that the provisions of that section and of s. 364 have not been fully complied with, the Court shall take [868] evidence that the accused person duly made the statement recorded. That section does not authorise the Court to proceed as if there had been no recorded confession, or to treat such confession as non-existent: it clearly means that the evidence which is to be taken shall be evidence that the accused person duly made the particular confession which was recorded and tendered. If, therefore, a document framed under s. 164 of the Procedure Code is inadmissible owing to a non-compliance with the provisions of the law, the Court must proceed under s. 533, if the defects are cured by the provisions of that section. If they are not cured, no proof of the confession can be given.

The Judge does not profess to have acted under s. 533: he makes no allusion to it, but apparently considers that the defects in the record of the confession are not cured by it. He has in effect, however, admitted oral evidence of a matter which is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, although he rejected that document when it was tendered. The Deputy Magistrate does not, it is true, profess to speak to the contents of the document, but there is no pretence for saying that he spoke to any other confession than that which was made to him on the 22nd October, and which he recorded under s. 164. The course which the Judge has followed seems to us not only without authority of law, but opposed to the law as it is in this country. We might also point out the great danger attending it. The recorded confession, which the Legislature has attempted to safe-guard in every possible way so as to make it a perfect record of all that the prisoner did say, covers five pages of foolscap. The confession as spoken to by the Deputy Magistrate covers four or five lines. The former may or may not amount to a confession: no one can say without reading the whole of it. Yet it is not to be looked at, and the Deputy Magistrate's condensed version of it, possibly for all that is known an erroneous version, is to be accepted.

On this part of the case we have no doubt. But we have assumed so far that the Judge was right in holding that the defects which made the document inadmissible were not cured by the provisions of s. 533 of the Procedure Code. He can hardly have overlooked that section, and we must take it that this was what he intended to find, although he does not expressly [869] say so. The question whether he was right in this conclusion is a much more difficult one. It does not arise on the appeal of the prisoner, who, if he can get rid of the admitted evidence, is of course content to accept the Judge's decision as to the excluded portion; but the case is before us as a whole, and we think we must deal with it.

The confession which was recorded under s. 164 and tendered in evidence is written entirely in English. There is only one question "Did you kill Mahabir Rai?" Then follows a long statement covering five pages of foolscap paper. The record bears the signature of the prisoner and of the Deputy Magistrate, and has attached to it the certificate prescribed by s. 164, which is also signed by the Deputy Magistrate. The statement purports, however, on its face to be made on solemn affirmation. The first page is written on the form furnished for the depositions of witnesses, but it may there was an omission to strike out the words inappropriate to the examination of an accused person or to a confession, although it is singular that while the word "statement" has been substituted for "deposition" and the words "oath or" have been struck out, the words "solemn affirmation" have been allowed to remain. This, however, is a matter which might be cleared up by evidence. Probably no questions were asked, as the recorded confession was rejected as inadmissible. The ground of the rejection was that it was written in English, which was not the language used or understood by the prisoner, although the Deputy Magistrate understood and could write such language.

Section 364 read with s. 164 enacts that the confession shall be recorded in full in the language in which the accused person is examined, or, if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court, or English. It is clear that this provision of the law was not complied with. The question is whether the defect is cured by the provisions of s. 533, which is as follows:

"If any Court before which a confession or other statement of an accused person recorded under s. 164 or s. 364 is tendered in evidence finds that the provisions of such section have not been fully complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded; and notwithstanding anything contained in [870] the Indian Evidence Act, s. 91, such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits."

The point, so far as we know, has not been definitely decided. In the Queen-Empress v. Viran (1) the confessions were taken down in English, and not in the language in which they were made, but there was in other respects hardly any attempt to conform to the provisions of ss. 164 and 364. Parker, J., held that the provisions of s. 164 are imperative, and that s. 533 will not render the confession admissible when no attempt at all has been made to conform to its provisions. In the Queen-Empress v. Nilmadhub Mitter (2), which came before a Full Bench of this Court, the question arose but it was unnecessary to determine it. The Chief Justice in delivering the judgment of the Court said with reference to a confession:—"We wish to guard ourselves from being supposed to hold that when answers are made by an accused person in one language and written down in another, unless it was shown that it was impracticable to write them in the language in which they were spoken, s. 164 would be complied with: on the contrary, we think that when such a proceeding is adopted, the statement of the accused would not be recorded under that section read with s. 364, and we have very grave doubts whether the defect could be cured under the provisions of s. 533."

The question, which is not free from difficulty, is therefore still an open one. In our opinion the provisions of s. 164 read with s. 364 are imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded, and s. 533 does not contemplate or provide for any non-compliance with the law in this respect." It is clear from the two sections first mentioned that the confession is to be recorded in the language in which it was made, or, if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or English.

It would be for the prosecution to establish the impracticability, if any existed. Here there was obviously none.

The recorded confession speaks for itself, but the Magistrate is directed to do certain things in connection with it, and to render the [871] document admissible in evidence it must appear on its face that these things have been done. He is directed to sign it, to certify that he believes the confession to be voluntary (and he is prohibited from recording a confession until he has satisfied himself by questioning the person making it that it is voluntary); he is also to certify that it was taken in his presence and hearing, that it was read over to the person making it and admitted by him to be correct, and that it contains a full and true account of the statement made by him. The provisions of the Act would not be fully complied with by the Magistrate if he failed to sign the confession and the certificate, and to certify all the facts which he is required to certify; and it is against omissions of this kind by the Magistrate that we think s. 533 was intended to provide a remedy by allowing evidence to be taken that the accused person duly made the statement recorded. The section would only come into operation when a confession or other statement of an accused person recorded under s. 164 or s. 364 was tendered, but a confession recorded in direct violation of those sections would not be a confession recorded under them; and the recorded statement, to be proved, must mean a statement recorded in accordance with the provisions of the Act and not in violation of them. It may be argued that if the Magistrate recording the confession records it in a language other than that directed by law, there is on his part a non-compliance with the provisions of the law which is cured by s. 533, as much as non-compliance with any other provision; but there is a difference between non-compliance, an omission to do something which a person is directed to do, and a direct violation of the law; and, as I have said, the section seems to assume that the confession has been recorded in accordance with the provisions of the law. It is a section which provides a remedy in cases in which certain provisions of the law have not been fully complied with by the Magistrate, and, operating as it does against the accused person and not in his favour, it must be strictly construed. It would, we think, be extremely dangerous so to construe it as to include not only omissions to comply with the law, but infractions of it.

We think, therefore, the Judge was right in holding that the recorded confession was inadmissible, and that it could not be proved; but as we have held that he was wrong in admitting evidence to [872] prove a confession to the Deputy Magistrate, and, as apart from the confession, there is no proof against the prisoner, we must set aside the conviction and direct that the prisoner be acquitted.

Criminal Motion.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Macpherson.

Raghoobuns Sahoy (Petitioner) v. Kokil Singh alias Gopal Singh and another (Opposite Party)*
[2nd June, 1890.]

Sanction to prosecution—"Court"—Collector—Appraisement proceedings—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 195—Bengal Tenancy Act (Act VIII of 1885), ss. 69 and 70.

The word "Court," used in s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, without the previous sanction of which, offences therein referred to, committed before it, cannot be taken cognizance of, has a wider meaning than the words "Court of Justice" as defined in s. 20 of the Penal Code. It includes a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence bearing on that matter, in order to enable it to arrive at a determination.

A Collector, acting in appraisement proceedings under ss. 69 and 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is a Court within the meaning of the term as there used.

Where, therefore, in certain appraisement proceedings, some rent receipts which were alleged to be forgeries, were filed by tenants before the Collector, and proceedings were subsequently taken against them before the Joint Magistrate charging them with offences under ss. 465 and 471 of the Penal Code—

Held, that the Joint-Magistrate could not take cognizance of the offences charged without the previous sanction of the Collector having been granted.

[F., 2 Bom. Cr. Cas. 1 (4); Rel., 37 B. 365=15 Bom. L.R. 45 (48)=14 Cr. L.J. 72 (73)= 18 Ind. Cas. 408 (409); R., 37 C. 52 (56)=14 C.W.N. 132=11 Cr. L.J. 45=5 Ind. Cas. 62; 24 M. 121 (123)=2 Weir 170; 3 S.L.R. 66 (75).]

The facts which gave rise to this application were as follows:—

The petitioner, who was in the employment of the proprietor of mouzah Bhadones, in the district of Monghyr, applied to the Collector, under s. 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to appraise the crops on the lands of certain tenants alleging that the rent was taken by appraisement. The tenants resisted the application on the ground that they paid a fixed money rent, and in support of their objection filed some rent receipts. The petitioner alleged [573] that these receipts were forgeries. The Collector, under the order of the Commissioner, proceeded to enquire whether the rent was or was not taken by appraisement; but the Board of Revenue, on the appeal of the tenants, held that he could not do so, and the appraisement proceedings were abandoned.

Meanwhile, however, the petitioner had asked for an enquiry under s. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as to whether or not the receipts filed by the tenants were forgeries. The Collector directed a Deputy Collector to make this enquiry, but his order was eventually, set aside by the Board on the appeal of the tenants.

In December 1889 the petitioner applied to the Collector under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for sanction to prosecute the tenants in respect of the receipts alleged to be forged. The Collector refused this sanction, remarking, with regard to what had happened, that he was, as Collector, precluded from giving it, and that the petitioner should apply to the Board of Revenue.

* Criminal Motion No. 84 of 1890 against the order passed by G. E. Manisty, Esq., Joint Magistrate of Monghyr, dated the 6th of February 1890.
In February 1890 the petitioner lodged a complaint in the Magistrate's Court charging the tenants with offences under ss. 465 and 471 of the Penal Code in connection with the rent receipts. The petition of complaint set out the facts above mentioned, and represented that under the circumstances sanction was not necessary. The Joint-Magistrate, before whom the complaint was preferred, refused to entertain it, holding that he could not take cognizance of it until proper sanction had been obtained for the prosecution of the persons charged. The petitioner then applied to the High Court, and obtained a rule, which was served on the Joint-Magistrate and the tenants concerned, calling on them to show cause why the Joint-Magistrate should not be directed to entertain the complaint. This rule now came on to be heard.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose, and Baboo Srinath Banerjee, for the petitioner.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose and Baboo Mahabir Sahai, for the opposite party.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose in showing cause contended that the order of the Joint-Magistrate was correct, and that a Collector, while acting under ss. 69 and 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is a "Court," within the meaning of that term as used in s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and that consequently the prosecution could not be proceeded with until the necessary sanction as required by that section had been obtained.

Mr. Woodroffe for the petitioner, in support of the rule, argued that the Collector acting under these sections could not he held to be a Court, and that his duties were of a ministerial nature; s. 70 in fact directing that the appraisement papers shall be filed in his "office." He also referred to the definition of "Court of Justice" in s. 20 of the Penal Code and to the provisions of s. 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to the effect that all words and expressions not defined in that Code are to be deemed to have the meanings attributed to them by the Penal Code when they are therein defined. He further referred to s. 6 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the classes of Courts there mentioned, and argued that the Court referred to in s. 195 could not include a Collector acting under ss. 69 and 70 of the Tenancy Act. Whenever the Criminal Procedure Code dealt with proceedings in Courts other than those clearly covered by the definition given in the Penal Code, it specifically mentioned such Courts, as for example in ss. 476, 478, 480, were proceedings before Revenue Courts are expressly referred to. He contended therefore that the Collector was not a "Court," and that this was also manifest from the proceedings, where it appeared that his order directing the enquiry under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code had been set aside by the Board of Revenue, which was certainly not a "Court." He contended, therefore, that he was entitled to the order asked for directing the Joint-Magistrate to entertain the complaint.

The judgment of the High Court (Norris and Macpherson, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The question for determination is whether a Collector, acting under ss. 69 and 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is a Court within the meaning of s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It arises in this way. (Their Lordships set out the facts above mentioned and continued—)
[875] It is contended in showing cause that the order is right, that the Collector acting under the sections referred to is a "Court" within the meaning of s. 195 of the Procedure Code, and that sanction for the prosecution is necessary.

The word "Court," is not defined in the Criminal Procedure Code, and it certainly has a wider meaning than a Court of Justice as defined in the Penal Code. Having regard to the obvious purpose for which s. 195 was enacted, we think that the widest possible meaning should be given to the word "Court" as therein mentioned, and that it would include a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence bearing on that matter in order to enable it to arrive at a determination.

In the sections of the Tenancy Act referred to, the Collector is empowered to do certain things, some of which may involve the determination of the proportion in which the crop is to be divided, and his order is enforceable by a Civil Court as a decree. He is directed to give the parties an opportunity of being heard, and to make such enquiry (if any) as he thinks necessary. One mode of making an enquiry is certainly to take evidence. We think therefore that he is authorised to take evidence and come to a decision on the matters with which he is empowered to deal; that this brings him within the broad definition of a Court; and that sanction for the prosecution was necessary.

The rule is therefore discharged.

Rule discharged.

PRESENT:

Lord Macnaghten, Sir B. Peacock, and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

HEMANTA KUMARI DEBI (Plaintiff) v. BROJENDRO KISHORE ROY CHOWDHRY (Defendant). [25th February. 1890.]

Second appeal—Ground of second appeal—Civil Procedure Code, s. 584—Substantial error in a first Appellate Court's finding without any evidence to support it.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit upon the ground that the right, which it was brought to establish, had been taken away by a [876] compromise, entered into by a guardian on behalf of an infant party to former proceedings. This was reversed by the first appellate Court, which decreed the claim, holding it unaffected by the compromise, on the ground that the latter was, in fact, contrary to the interests of the infant. The High Court, on a second appeal, set aside this finding, there having been no proof that the compromise was to the infant’s detriment, and affirmed the decree of the first Court.

Held, that the High Court rightly reversed the decree of the first appellate Court; the above finding, without any evidence to support it, being a substantial error in the proceedings, and good ground of second appeal with the meaning of s. 584, sub-s. (c). of the Civil Procedure Code.

[F., 4 C.L.J. 198; R., 15 B. 670; D., 26 C. 53=2 C.W.N 649.]

Appeal from a decree (6th August 1886) of the High Court, reversing a decree (30th March 1885) of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the appellant’s late husband, Rajah Jotendra Narain Roy, who died pending this litigation, through his late mother, Maharani Surat Sunderi Devi, who died in 1888. He claimed enhancement of the rent, upon notice duly given, of a taluk within his zemindari, Pukhuria Jainsahi; and the question was whether he was not precluded from enhancing the rent by the effect of a raffanama or deed of compromise, entered into in August 1825 between his great-grandmother, Rani Bhubanmoyi Debi, and the defendant's predecessors in estate.

The Court of first instance having held that the compromise barred enhancement, the first appellate Court held that it did not, inasmuch as it had been entered into, as the Court found, against the interests of the infant in regard to enhancement. But this finding, on a second appeal to the High Court, was not maintained, and the decision of the first appellate Court was reversed. The question on this appeal was whether this was correct.

The circumstances under which the deed of compromise of 1825 was executed are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The Divisional Bench of the High Court (Mitter and Grant, JJ.) reversed the decree of the District Judge, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that it had been finally decided by the Sudder Court in 1836 in previous litigation between the plaintiff's grandfather, Harendra Narain Roy, who sued after the [877] death of his adoptive mother, Rani Bhubanmoyi, to set aside the raffanama in question, and the present respondent's predecessors, that Rani Bhubanmoyi had executed it as his guardian, and that the District Judge should not have allowed that question to be re-opened. They concluded as follows:—"We are of opinion that although the dismissal of the suit of Harendra Narain Roy, under s. 1, Act XXIX of 1841, did not preclude a fresh suit, still if any such suit be brought, the parties would be bound by the decision of the Sudder Dewani Adawlut so far as it decided any material issue. It was decided by that Court that this raffanama was executed by Rani Bhubanmoyi as the guardian of Harendra Narain Roy. That decision is final. The District Judge in this case is in error in re-opening that question. We must, therefore, take it that the raffanama was executed by Rani Bhubanmoyi as the guardian of Harendra Narain Roy. We find, also, that the same rent fixed by the raffanama has been received by successive owners of the zemindari for about fifty-seven years. We further find that since the last suit for enhancement was dismissed in 1858, no attempt was made to repudiate the raffanama till 1882. Under these circumstances, following the principle laid down in the case of Hunoonam Pershad Pandey v. Munraj Koonweree (1), we think that, having regard to the circumstances set forth above, a very heavy onus lies upon the plaintiff to establish that the raffanama in the language of the Sudder Dewani Adawlut used in their judgment of the year 1856, was "clearly and unmistakably" to the detriment of Harendra Narain Roy. But this onus has not been discharged by the plaintiff. The District Judge upon this point refers only to the decree of 1851, passed in favour of the owner of the 4-annas share of the zemindari. But that decree, which was passed in 1851, has no bearing upon the question whether the raffanama executed in the year 1825 was clearly and unmistakably to the detriment of Harendra Narain Roy. Being, therefore, of opinion that the raffanama is binding upon the plaintiff, we reverse the decrees of the lower appellate Court in all these cases, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all the Courts."

C VIII—142
[878] Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the raffanama, as converting into a permanent lease with rent never to be raised; a tenure which was still then subject to an enhanceable rent, was on the face of it contrary to the interest of the infant Harendra Narain Roy. It deprived him of his statutory right to enhance, and was not binding upon him or upon his successor the present plaintiff. The District Judge's judgment to this effect had regard to the evidence generally. As to the guardian's power they referred to—Hunooman Pershad Pandey v. Munraj Konnweree (1), Lalla Bunsedhur v. Bindesseree Dutt Singh (2), As to the right of enhancement, reference was made to Bamasoonderee Dossee v. Radhikha Chowdhrai (3).

Mr. J. H. A. Branson and Mr. W. A. Hunter, for the respondent supported the judgment of the High Court. It had not been shown to be beyond the powers of Bhubaneswari as guardian, or to be detrimental to the minor's interests, in the then existing circumstances, for her to have compromised the litigation in 1825. Also the predecessors in title of the appellant, by receiving rent in accordance with the compromise from the time when it was executed down to 1882, showed that they acquiesced in it. That the plaintiff had not discharged the onus upon him had been rightly found.

In regard to the widow's powers as guardian, they referred to Watson & Co. v. Shamlal Mitter (4); Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi (5). On the right to enhance—Hurronath Roy v. Gobind Chunder Buti (6). Mr. R. V. Doyne, replied.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta in a suit for enhancement of the rent of a taluk which was instituted in July 1882. The plaintiff is entitled to a 10-annas share of the zemindari on which the taluk was dependent; and another person is entitled to a 4-annas share.

[879] The only ground of defence which it is necessary now to notice is that a deed of compromise was executed in August 1825, by virtue of which the defendants allege that the rent of the taluk was permanently settled. That deed was executed by Rani Bhubanmooyi Debi, who was the widow of Raja Juggut Narain, to whom the property had belonged, and who had adopted, before the execution of the deed, Harendra Narain Roy, the grandfather of the plaintiff.

The circumstances under which this deed of compromise was executed are these. Some time before March 1823, a suit was brought by Rani Bhubanmooyi Debi and Krishen Indra Narain Rai, the owner of the other 4-annas of the zemindari, for enhancement of the rent of the taluk; and the defence set up to that suit by the ancestors of the present defendants was that the mouzahs had been granted to them in permanent mokurrrari, and that the rent was not liable to be enhanced. The suit was brought in the zillah Court, and a decree was made in favour of the plaintiffs, deciding that the rent was liable to be enhanced, and that if the defendants did not pay the rent demanded, the mehals in dispute should be measured according to the hastbud furib stated by the plaintiffs, and the jumma be assessed thereon. An appeal from this decree to the Civil appellate Court was dismissed on the 11th May 1824. In that state of things the deed of compromise was made in August 1825. It was addressed to Joygobind Mozumdar, the ancestor of the defendants, and was executed by Rani Bhurbanmoiyi; it states that the defendants were paying the annual istimrar rent of Rs. 399 odd, with progressive increase added; that, on appeal to the Court of the zillah, and the Provincial Court at Jehangirnuggur, a decree was passed for measurement and ascertainment of gross rents; and that for amicably settling with the defendants for an increase in the rent, the rent was fixed at sicca Rs. 600 including the old rent. The balance payable by the defendants after certain named deductions on account of their share was fixed in perpetuity. The defendants also presented a petition to the Court, saying that they assented to that compromise.

Nothing more appears to have taken place, except that the rent was regularly paid according to the compromise, until about 1854, and then a suit was again brought for enhancement of rent. That passed through various stages of appeal until it reached the Sudder Court. In the judgment of two of the Judges of the Sudder Court (three being present) it is stated that Rani Bhurbanmoiyi executed a deed of compromise, and from that time up to the period of the adopted son Harendra Narain Roy attaining his majority, the rent was collected according to the deed of compromise, and after that time until the institution of that suit in 1853. They then say:—"Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the Rajah is bound by the act of his mother done in 1232 as his guardian, and acquiesced in by him since he reached his majority, unless he can show that it was done in contravention of her duty to him as his guardian; in other words until he can show with reference to the circumstances under which, and to the then capabilities of the tenure regarding which, the compromise was made, that such compromise was clearly and unmistakably to his detriment." There is a clear finding by the Sudder Court upon the question whether Rani Bhurbanmoiyi was acting as guardian when she signed this deed of compromise that she was so acting. It must therefore now be taken that she did it as guardian.

The circumstances existing at the time of the compromise must next be considered. The parties were litigating not merely as to whether the rent was of the proper amount, or ought to be enhanced, but the defendants were contending that they had a perpetual tenure at a then fixed rent, and this was a settlement which was to put an end to the litigation, and which would also prevent the expense and delay, and the uncertainty of the result which was dependent upon the investigation that the Court had decided to order what the amount of rent, if it were to be enhanced, should be. Apparently it is a compromise which it cannot be said would not be beneficial to the infant, the adopted son, but is one which might fairly and naturally be come to as putting an end to the litigation and deciding once for all the matter which was in dispute between the parties; because it must not be forgotten that although there had been a decree affirmed on appeal that the rent was liable to be enhanced, that was subject to a further appeal, and the case might have been carried further by the defendants if this compromise had not been entered into.

The first Court before which the present suit came, held that the compromise was binding and dismissed the suit. It then went by appeal to the District Judge, who reversed that decree and held that the compromise was not binding; it then came before the Hight Court by what is called a second appeal, or an appeal from an appellate decree, and as the High Court in its judgment states what the judgment of the District Judge was it will be convenient to refer to the judgment of the High Court. They say, "We are of opinion that although the dismissal of the suit of Harendra Narain Roy, under s. 1, Act XXIX of 1841 "(meaning the dismissal of the suit which was brought in 1854, and which was finally dismissed, after being remanded to the lower Courts for further hearing, on account of the non-appearance of both of the parties) "did not preclude a fresh suit, still if any such suit be brought, the parties would be bound by the decision of the Sudder Dewani Adawlut so far as it decided any material issue. The District Judge in this case is in error in re-opening that question. We must therefore take it that the raffanama (deed of compromise) was executed by Rani Bhabanmoyi as the guardian of Harendra Narain Roy. We find also, that the same rent fixed by the raffanama has been received by successive owners of the zemindari for about 57 years. We further find that since the last suit for enhancement was dismissed in 1858, no attempt was made to repudiate the raffanama till 1882."—Then they speak of the principle laid down in the case of Hunooman Pershad Pandey v. Munraj Koonwarree (1); and go on to say that the District Judge upon the question whether the compromise was beneficial or not to the adopted son "refers only to the decree of 1851 passed in favour of the owner of the 4-annas share of the zemindari. But that decree which was passed in 1851 has no bearing upon the question whether the raffanama executed in the year 1825 was clearly and unmistakably to the detriment of Harendra Narain Roy." Now the decree in 1851 was obtained by the Government, after there had been a purchase at a sale for [882] arrears of revenue not paid by the owner of the 4-annas share, and the District Judge appears to have been in error in treating that as a decree passed in favour of the owner of the 4-annas share. The Government was in a different position from that in which the owner of the 4-annas share would be, and there is no evidence in the case upon which the District Judge could found his judgment reversing the decree of the first Court, and deciding that this compromise was not beneficial to the adopted son, an infant at the time it was made. When the judgments come to be looked at, it appears that he has reversed the decree of the first Court in the absence of any evidence—certainly in the absence of any evidence upon which he might reasonably come to the conclusion that the deed of compromise was not for the benefit of the adopted son. This appears to be a case in which, under the provision of the law that there is a second appeal where there has been a substantial error or defect in the procedure of the lower Court, the High Court was right in reversing the decree of the District Judge and leaving, as it did, the decree of the first Court—which held that the deed of compromise was a binding one, and therefore the suit for the enhancement of rent ought to be dismissed—to stand.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss this appeal, and to affirm the decree of the High Court. The appellant will pay the costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:

Lord Macnaghten, Sir B. Peacock and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

RAM LAL (Plaintiff) v. MEHDI HUSAIN and OTHERS (Defendants).

[12th and 13th March, 1890.]

Privy Council. Practice of—Findings of fact—Concurrent findings by two Courts.

The usual course of not disturbing concurrent findings of fact may be followed, notwithstanding that a part of the evidence in the suit has not [883] been considered by the lower Court, when both Courts, have arrived at the same result (1).

In this case, however, the whole of the evidence having been brought to their notice, the Judicial Committee expressed their opinion that the appellate Court below could not have decided otherwise than as it had decided.

Appeal from two decrees (13th April 1886) of the Judicial Commissioner varying, upon cross-appeals, a decree (18th March 1885) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

This suit was brought by the appellant to obtain a decree against the first respondent, Ram Lal, and the second respondent, the Nawab Kulsuman Nissa Begum, deceased, pending these proceedings, and now represented on this record by Ashgar Husain and by Aga Jani, a minor under the guardianship of the latter. The claim was for Rs. 41,043, made up, in part, of principal Rs. 25,000, and interest due on a bond dated 13th September 1883, (alleged to have been advanced for the Begum to her agent Saiyid Mehdi Husain), and in part of a sum of Rs. 9,020 consisting of advances alleged to have been made at different times between 25th September 1883 and 25th December 1883. Part of the evidence relating to the latter sum, to which alone this appeal related, was a receipt said to have been signed by the Saiyad on 26th December 1883. The Judicial Commissioner made a decree against both the defendants for Rs. 25,734.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant.

Mr. R. V. Dayne and Mr. A. J. David, for the respondent, Saiyid Mehdi Husain.

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C. and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents, Ashgar Husain and Aga Jani.

For the appellant it was argued that upon the evidence the decree should have been for the amount claimed.

For the respondents, both the agent and the representatives of the principal, counsel argued in support of the judgment of the appellate Court below.

Mr. J. D. Mayne was heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This suit in which this appeal is brought was instituted by the appellant, Ram Lal, as plaintiff, to recover [884] moneys alleged to have been advanced by him to the first respondent, Saiyid

(1) As to the rule regarding such a concurrence, See Krishnan v. Sridevi, 12 M. 512.
Mehdi Husain, as agent for a lady who has died during the progress of the litigation, and who is now represented by the last two respondents. A sum of about Rs. 30,000 was claimed as due on a bond dated the 13th and registered on the 19th September 1883. A further sum of about Rs. 9,000 was claimed as having been advanced in various amounts between the 20th September 1883 and the 25th December in that year.

The lower Court allowed the whole amount claimed as due on the bond. The Judicial Commissioner disallowed Rs. 4,000. That disallowance forms one of the grounds of appeal.

In support of his claim to the Rs. 9,000 the appellant relied, first, on oral evidence of a promise to repay the amount; both Courts rejected this evidence. Secondly, he relied on certain accounts which he produced; both Courts rejected those accounts. Thirdly, he relied on an alleged receipt purporting to be signed by Mehdi Husain, and to be dated the 26th December 1883. The respondent on oath denied that the signature was his. The lower Court rejected this receipt for want of a stamp. The Judicial Commissioner remanded the case for further evidence as to the genuineness of the document. When the case came back he rejected the alleged receipt on the merits. And so the claim failed in both Courts.

It was contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that the case as regards the Rs. 9,000 does not fall within the ordinary rule applicable to two concurrent findings of fact, because the lower Court had not an opportunity of considering, and did not consider, the evidence as to the genuineness of the receipt of the 26th December 1883. Their Lordships are not prepared to hold, either in this particular case or as a general rule, that the mere fact that a part of the evidence in the suit has not been considered by the lower Court, prevents the ordinary rule from applying when both Courts have arrived at the same result. In the present case, however, as the whole of the evidence has been brought to their Lordships' notice, they think it right to add that in their opinion the Judicial Commissioner could not have come to any other conclusion.

When the case was remanded the appellant did not think proper or was unable to produce any evidence as to the genuineness of the receipt on which he relied; but for some reason or other the respondent, Mehdi Husain, called the appellant, and in cross-examination by his own pleader the appellant said that the receipt was signed by Mehdi Husain. There was no corroborative evidence on the point. The appellant, in regard to other statements of his, was held to be a person on whose uncorroborated testimony the Court could not safely depend. Under these circumstances, though it would have been more satisfactory if the Judicial Commissioner had referred to the appellant's assertion, their Lordships cannot say he was wrong in treating it as unworthy of notice.

As regards the Rs. 4,000, there are not two concurrent findings of fact. Here the position of the parties is reversed. The respondent, Mehdi Husain, relies on an acknowledgment or rukka which the appellant says is not genuine. The Judge of the lower Court decided against Mehdi Husain principally on two grounds. One was that the rukka, if genuine, ought to have been mentioned to the Registrar when the bond was registered; the other was that the respondent in another suit had made a statement with regard to the advance of the money which the learned Judge considered, "if not false, certainly to be misleading." Their Lordships cannot attach any significance either to the fact that the rukka was not mentioned to the Registrar, or to the statement in the other suit which appears to their Lordships not to be inconsistent with the respondent’s present case.

Having listened to the evidence, their Lordships find themselves unable to dissent from the finding of the Judicial Commissioner. There is very great difficulty in determining, if it is possible to determine, on which side the truth lies in this part of the case; and the learned counsel for the appellant has not satisfied them that the Judicial Commissioner was wrong.

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed; the appellant will pay the costs of the appeal, but there will be only one set of costs between the respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Will—Widows’ share on partition—Right to deprive by will a widow of her share on partition.

Under the Hindu Law in Bengal a person has the right to dispose of his property by will so as to deprive his widow of her share on partition.

Bhobunnosee Debaa Chowdhrani v. Ramkissore Acharj Chowdhry (1) followed.

[R., 12 C.W.N. 838 (816).]

RAJ COOMAR ROY CHOWDHRY by his will dated 9th Magh 1281 (21st January 1875) gave, devised and bequeathed, subject to a provision for the maintenance of the worship of an idol and the performance of the Doorga Pooja and certain specific bequests therein mentioned all his immovable and moveable properties by the 4th clause in the following terms:—“My third son, Debendra Coomar, and my youngest son, Brojendra Coomar, and my two grandsons, Surendra Coomar and Jotindra Coomar, these four persons, shall be the real heirs to my moveable and immovable properties, the moneys advanced as loans, the conveyances and horses, and all the properties and goods and chattels that I have.” The testator appointed his sons Debendra Coomar and Brojendra

Coomar executors of his will, and left the entire management of his estate in their hands during their lifetime. The name of his [887] widow Prosunnomoyi Dasi (defendant No. 3) was nowhere mentioned in the will, nor was there in it any provision regarding her maintenance or residence in the testator’s dwelling-house, called Barakuti, or elsewhere. Raj Coomar Roy Chowdhry died on 14th Magh 1281 (26th January 1875), leaving him surviving a widow, Prosunnomoyi Dasi (defendant No. 3), three sons, Rajendra Coomar Roy Chowdhry, the eldest, Debendra Coomar Roy Chowdhry, the third (defendant No. 1), and Brojendra Coomar Roy Chowdhry, the youngest (plaintiff), and two grandsons Surendra Coomar Roy Chowdhry (the son of Rajendra) and Jotindra Coomar Roy Chowdhry (defendant No. 2), who was the son of the testator’s predeceased second son Norendra Coomar.

On 22nd April 1875 probate of the will was granted to the executors, Debendra Coomar and Rajendra Coomar, by the District Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs.

On the 11th Bhadra 1282 (26th August 1875) Surendra Coomar died unmarried; and the 4 annas which he took under the will descended to his father Rajendra Coomar, who conveyed the same in equal shares to the plaintiff Brojendra Coomar and to the defendant Debendra Coomar by an ikrār dated 17th Bhadro (1st September 1875). Brojendra and Debendra thus became entitled to a 6-annas share each of the testator’s properties. Rajendra died in Aughran 1282 (November-December 1875).

On 2nd Magh 1291 (14th January 1884) the plaintiff Brojendra Coomar and Debendra Coomar and Jotindra Coomar (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) separated when some moveable property and Government securities forming part of the testator’s estate were partitioned among them.

An attempt at an amicable partition according to the above shares of the Barakuti residence and the unpartitioned portion of the testator’s estate fell through by reason of Prosunnomoyi Dasi (defendant No. 3) insisting upon being made a party to the partition proceedings.

On 14th September 1887 the plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration of his rights and those of Debendra and Jotindra (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) and also for a declaration whether the widow Prosunnomoyi Dasi (defendant No. 3) was upon partition entitled to any share of her husband’s estate and for partition of the same.

[888] In his plaint the plaintiff set forth the above facts, and further stated that Debendra and Jotindra (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) admitted that the widow was entitled to maintenance and to suitable accommodation for her residence in the Barakuti house; but denied that she had any right upon partition to a share of the testator’s properties. The plaintiff submitted that upon partition the widow took a Hindu mother’s share and claimed a 6-annas share himself. The widow Prosunnomoyi Dasi (defendant No. 3) contended that, notwithstanding the will, she was entitled to a fifth share for the estate of a Hindu mother upon partition of her deceased husband’s estate; that upon a true construction of the will she was entitled to the same share; and that in any event she was entitled to maintenance and suitable accommodation for her residence in the Barakuti house.

The defendants Debendra and Jotindra alleged that they had always been and were still agreeable to an amicable partition of the Barakuti house and the unpartitioned portion of the testator’s properties, and that the proposal for an amicable partition mentioned in the plaint fell through by reason of the conduct of the plaintiff who was instigating the widow (defendant No. 3) to claim a mother's share in order that he might thereby decrease the shares of the defendants and augment his own by participating in the proceeds of the widow's share, and that the plaintiff had brought this suit with that object. They submitted that the defendant Debendra Coomar and the plaintiff were each entitled to a 4-annas share under the will and a 2-annas share under the ikhar of 17th Bhadro 1282 (1st September 1875) executed by Rajendro Coomar, and that the defendant Jotindro was entitled to the remaining 4-annas share, under the will. They further submitted that the widow (defendant No. 3) took nothing under the will, and that inasmuch as the heirs of the testator took not by right of inheritance, but by devise, his widow was not entitled to a Hindu mother's share, as she would otherwise have been under the Hindu Law. They repeated their offer to the widow of suitable maintenance and accommodation for her residence in the Barakuti house.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the intention of the testator was to disinherit his eldest son Rajendra Coomar, and the words in the 2nd clause of the will “My eldest son Rajendra [889] Coomar will have no hand in the management of my zemindaries, but his son Surendra Coomar, who is my elder grandson, will be his heir and will enjoy his (Rajendra Coomar's) proper share, and Jotindro Coomar, who is the son and heir to my second son, deceased, is to be regarded as being entitled to a share of my assets equal to that of his father, and will have a right to enjoy it accordingly,” clearly showed that the testator did not make any bequest to Jotindra, but simply recognized what rights he had under the Hindu law, and that as Surendra was not his heir, and therefore not entitled to a share of his estate, the testator took care to clothe him with the character of a donee and to give him Rajendra’s one-fourth share. The Subordinate Judge was also of opinion that Debendra, Brojendra, and Jotindra being heirs, the 4th clause of the will did not confer on them any special rights, but was a mere recognition of existing rights; that there was no actual gift to them, at any rate it was not expressed in clear and unequivocal terms; that there was nothing in the will nor was any circumstance proved by evidence that went to show that the intention of the testator was to deprive his widow of her rights upon the partition of his properties by his sons and grandsons; that there was no allegation or proof that he disliked his wife, and the presumption was that he loved her and would have made some provision for her if he had willed away his properties; and that the absence of some such provision and the intention of the testator which was to be gathered from all these circumstances favoured the widow’s contention. Accordingly the Subordinate Judge held that the provision for the maintenance of the worship of the idol and the performance of the Doorga Poojah and all the bequests, including the bequest of the Barakuti house, were valid, and that the will operated to exclude the widow from any share therein. The Subordinate Judge further held that under the 4th clause of the will Surendra took a 4-annas share of the residue of the testator’s properties; but that as re-grabs the remaining 12-annas share which were claimed by Debendra, Brojendra, and Jotindra, the testator had died in estate, and that the partition being among two sons and one grandson, the widow was entitled to a fourth or 3-annas share therein.

The defendants, Debendra Coomar and Jotindra Coomar, appealed to the High Court from this decision of the Subordinate Judge in [890] so far as he held upon the construction of the 4th clause of the will that the testator had died intestate as to the 12-annas share of the residue of his estate, and that his widow Prosunnomoyi Dasi was entitled to a fourth share thereof.

Prosunnomoyi Dasi (defendant No. 3) also appealed to the High Court against this decision in so far as it excluded her from the Barakuti dwelling-house and from the remaining one-fourth share.

The two appeals were heard together.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey, for the appellants, Debendra Coomar and Jotindra Coomar (defendants Nos. 1 and 2).

Mr. Evans and Baboo Kamini Kumar Guho, for the plaintiff-respondent, Brojendra Coomar.

The Advocate-General (Sir G. C. Paul), Baboo Nilmadhub Bose and Baboo Beptin Behari Ghose, for the respondent Prosunnomoyi Dasi (defendant No. 3).

Mr. Woodroffe.—The testator’s sole intention was not the exclusion (of Rajendra, though it may have been the prominent reason for his making the will he did. Nor do the other provisions of the will flow out of this intention. The view taken by the lower Court, that the sole object of the testator was to exclude his eldest son Rajendra, and that the will merely provided for his exclusion and did not contain any disposition of his estate, is ill-founded. The will, besides excluding Rajendra, does in fact dispose of the estate, and gives interest to persons, the beneficiaries thereunder, other and different from that which they would have taken under Hindu law. A husband has, subject to his wife’s right to maintenance only, full power to dispose of all his property—Sorolah Dassi v. Bhoobun Mohun Neoghy (1). I rely upon Comulmonee Dossee’s case, which, together with other suits and proceedings which arose out of the will of one Muddun Mohun Bysack, is reported by Sir Francis Macnaghten in his Considerations of the Hindu Law, original edition, pp. 77-93. In that case, as pointed out by Sir Francis Macnaghten, Comulmonee’s claim to a share upon partition was defeated by the will of Muddun Mohun, which the Court construed into an intention of the testator that upon a partition by his sons his widow should not be entitled to participate as she would otherwise have been under the Hindu law. By his will, Muddun Mohun did in effect himself make a partition of his property among his sons, and the will operated so as to make the shares allotted to them as if it were their self-acquired property, as in the case of Jugmohundas Mangaldas v. Mangaldas Nathuboy (2), where the Bombay Court held that property devised to a son was the self-acquired property of the son. There being no property left to partition, the ordinary rule of Hindu law, by which a mother is entitled to a share upon partition, did not apply in Comulmonee’s case. Clearly then it follows from, that case that a husband can by will deprive his widow of her right to have a share upon partition between her sons.

The case of Kishori Mohun Ghose v. Moni Mohun Ghose (3), on which the other side will most probably rely, is distinguishable from Comulmonee’s case and also from the present case. There the Court held the widow was entitled to a share only because there was in that case no bequest to the sons in the will.

As to the term “heirs” used in the 4th clause of the will:—The term “heirs” is not a mere statement that the person would be entitled to succeed as in case of intestacy: so to read it would bring in a grandson as an heir to supersede his father. The word "heirs" has been construed frequently as a word of purchase—Kooldebnarain Sahoo v. Wooma Coomaree (1), Nanee Tara Naikin v. Alayarakhia Soonar (2), Jugmohandas Mangaldas v. Mangaldas Nathuboy (3), Brickley v. Brickley (4), Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (5), Jarman on Wills, pp. 74-76. The lower Court is wrong in holding that, Debendra and Jotindra being heirs, the will does not give them any special rights, and therefore they take by descent. Jotindra also gets a share subject [892] to certain conditions, which, whether void or not, show the intention of the testator.

The lower Court is entirely wrong in holding that the testator died intestate as regards the 12-annas share, because if the true construction of the 4th clause be that there is no bequest and it is set aside or struck out, Rajendra would come in and claim a share out of the 12 annas. Then the sole intention (as the lower Court calls it) of the testator of excluding Rajendra, the eldest son, would be defeated. The will contains no express words disinheriting him, and an heir at law cannot be disinherited by negative words [Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (5)], so if there be an intestacy with regard to any portion of the estate, Rajendra would not be excluded. Debendra and Jotindra never refused the widow suitable maintenance and accommodation, and are even now willing that her maintenance should be fixed by the Court in the most liberal way it thinks fit. The plaintiff Brojendra is supporting the mother with a view to get an additional share, because if the mother should get a share it would mean that so long as she lived he would enjoy two shares at the expense of Debendra and Jotindra. As regards the widow's appeal for residence in the Barakuti dwelling-house, my clients do not contest it, but reiterate that assent which they all along have given.

Mr. Evans for the respondent Brojendro Coomar.—A widow can claim a share unless excluded. In this will there is no provision for excluding her from maintenance, and if the right to maintenance remains, all the rights incidental thereto must remain. The widow is entitled to a share in lieu of maintenance when the sons inherit her husband's properties and partition among themselves. Dayabhaga, chap. 3, s. 2, verse 29.

The Advocate-General for the respondent Prosunnomoyi Dasi also contended that the widow was entitled to her share; and proceeded to argue on behalf of the widow's right of residence, but was stopped by the Court, as this right had not been contested by Debendra and Jotindra.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose in rply.—The Dayabhaga, chap. 3, s. 2, verse 29, says that in a partition between sons of ancestral property, the mother is entitled to a share equal to a son, but it is silent as [893] to what her share should be when the father has given his property to his sons by will. The Dayabhaga only provides for the mother's share upon partition in the case of an intestacy, when the sons take by descent; but it nowhere contemplates a case like the present, where the testator has in effect partitioned his property among his sons and grandsons, and so left no property to be partitioned.

JUDGMENT.

These two appeals have been instituted by the three defendants in the original suit which was brought against them all by the plaintiff for the partition of family property left by his father, who died in January 1875.

The father was Raj Coomar Roy Chowdhry: the plaintiff is the youngest son; defendant No. 1 was the third son; defendant No. 2 is the son of Raj Coomar’s second son, who predeceased him; and defendant No. 3 is Raj Coomar’s widow. The eldest son and his son are both dead.

The matter now in dispute arises out of the provisions of the will of Raj Coomar, and the question is whether the widow, defendant No. 3, is entitled to any share of the estate on the partition now sought. The plaintiff in his plaint did not question her claim to a share, but alleged that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 disputed it. And these defendants have contested it throughout the suit and appeal, while they do not deny her right to maintenance.

The widow herself claims a share of the estate. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 objected to the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not included the whole of the property in which they and himself were interested. This objection, overruled by the lower Court, has been put forward again in appeal, but has not been seriously pressed.

As to the substantial matter in dispute, the Court below held that, as regards one-fourth of the estate and as to the whole of the family residence of Raj Coomar Roy Chowdhry, the will operated to exclude the widow from any share on partition; but that as regards the remaining three-fourths of the estate Raj Coomar died intestate, and that the widow was therefore entitled on this partition to have 3 annas out of the 12 annas.

In one of the appeals before us her right to this share is contested; and in the other appeal the widow objects to being excluded from the other quarter share of the estate and to being excluded from the family residence called the Barakuti.

Probate of Raj Coomar’s will was granted to plaintiff and defendant No. 1, two of his sons. We have to determine the meaning and effect of that document. It first recites the properties of the testator; then it recites that he had four sons, whose names are mentioned, and that the second son was dead, and his son a minor. It proceeds to state that the eldest son being addicted to vice and having left the paternal house, it was inadvisable to place any of the property in his hands; and this fact is given as the reason which rendered it necessary to make a will. The testator next dedicates a portion of this property for the worship of an idol and for the performance of the Doorga Pooja; and then he specifically bequeathes to this third and fourth sons and to his two grandsons, the children of the eldest and second sons, the whole of his Barakuti residence with the land pertaining thereto, and to his eldest son he gives one share in an ancestral dwelling-house. To this son he further bequeathes a monthly allowance of Rs. 75, but he gives the share of the estate, which would otherwise have been his, to his son Surendra Coomar. And he wills that his third and fourth sons and the two grandsons shall be the real heirs of all his property, the management remaining in the hands of the two sons during their lifetime.

We do not agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge that there is any case of intestacy arising upon this will. The object that the testator had before his mind was to deprive his eldest son of his inheritance, and if, as the Subordinate Judge says, there is no bequest in the 4th paragraph of the will, the result would be that the desire of the testator to deprive his eldest son of the property would have failed, we think that the plain reading of that paragraph is that the third son, Debendra Coomar, and the youngest son, Brojendra Coomar, and the two grandsons, Surendra Coomar and Jotindra Coomar, shall be his successors to all his moveable and immovable properties, and that no intestacy has ensued.

[895] In regard to the other question, viz., whether the lady has a right to a share on partition, we are inclined to think that the opinion expressed by the Judge in the Court below in regard to the other share is correct.

In the case of Bhobhumoyee Dabea Chowdhrami v. Ramkishore Acharj Chowdhry (1), the right of a Hindu in Bengal to make a will affecting his property was discussed, and it was decided, in conformity with the refer-rence from the Judges of the Supreme Court in 1836, that in Bengal a widow has no indefeasible vested right in the property left by her husband, though she has by virtue of her marriage a right, if all the property be willed away, to maintenance.

It therefore appears clear to us, following that decision, that if the testator in this case intended to will away his property so as to deprive the widow of her share on partition he had perfect power to do so.

The intention of the testator is to be gathered from the will, and in that he gave Debendra Coomar and Brojendra Coomar, who are his heirs, the same interest as he gave to Surendra Coomar and Jotindra Coomar, who could not succeed by the will to any interest in the proerty. We think, therefore, that the estate or interest given to each of these was the same, and that the interest was an out-and-out interest unclogged and unfettered by any other devise.

The conclusion that we arrive at, therefore, is that as regards this property the lady is not in a position to claim, as of right, under the Hindu law a share in the partition of this property. If that were so, the grandsons, Surendra Coomar and Jotindra Coomar, instead of receiving one-fourth of the property devised, would be only entitled to one-fifth. This, we think, is clearly opposed to the intention of the testator as portrayed in the will. But though we are unable to give the widow-appellant the relief she asks, we can and do declare that she is entitled to suitable accommodation in her late husband’s dwelling-house, the Barakuti. And this must be provided for her when the partition is made.

All parties admit that she is entitled to maintenance, and it will be for them to consider whether this should take the form of a [896] money allowance, or whether a portion of the landed property be assigned to her for her life in lieu of maintenance.

The result is that the appeal of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 succeeds to the extent of reversing the lower Court’s finding that as to three-fourths of the estate of Raj Coomar Chowdhry there was intestacy, and its order that the widow obtain 3-16ths share on partition be set aside.

The widow’s appeal must be dismissed, excepting only that she is to get suitable accommodation assigned to her in the Barakuti.

The plaintiff-respondent will pay the costs of appellants.

Appeal 171 allowed in part.
Appeal 231 dismissed.

Hindu Law—Alienation—Alienation by Hindu widow of a portion of her estate with consent of some of the reversioners—Suit by other reversioners to set aside alienation.

The principle enunciated by the Full Bench in the case of Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (1) is not applicable to a case where some only of the reversioners have consented to an alienation by the widow, and where therefore only a portion of the widow’s estate has been alienated.

In this case the plaintiffs alleged that the zamindari of mouzah Pandia belonged to one Joy Narain Ghose who died, leaving a widow, named Avimani Dasi, and that Avimani Dasi succeeded to the property as his heiress, and remained in possession thereof till the 13th November 1884, when her death took place; that the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 were at the time of her death the only reversionary heirs of her husband alive, and as [897] such, they became entitled to the property, the share of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 being 8 annas, and that of the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 also 8 annas; that the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 sold their share to the plaintiffs by a kobala executed on the 23rd April 1885 for a consideration of Rs. 1,975, and accordingly the plaintiffs applied for the registration of their names under Ben. Act VII of 1876, and also demanded rents from the ryots of the zamindari; and that the defendant No. 1, acting in collusion with the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, induced the ryots not to pay rent to the plaintiffs, alleging that he had purchased an 8-annas share of the zamindari from Avimani Dasi on the 8th June 1880. The plaintiffs impeached this sale as being beyond the power of Avimani Dasi, who, they alleged, was in possession of the property as a life-tenant only, and on the ground that there was no legal necessity which justified her in making the alienation. They therefore sued to set it aside and to recover possession of an 8-annas share of the zamindari with mesne profits from the date of their purchase.

The defendants Nos. 4 and 5 admitted that they had sold an 8-annas share of the zamindari to the plaintiffs on the date and for the consideration alleged by the plaintiffs.

The defendant No. 1 alleged that the purchase set up by the plaintiffs was not bona fide transaction, but one made in collusion with the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who were, moreover, never in possession of the property; that Avimani Dasi executed a kobala of an 8-annas share of the zamindari in his favour on the 8th June 1880; that the kobala was executed to enable Avimani to meet certain necessary expenses as maintenance, religious rites, Government revenue, &c., and was therefore made for legal necessity; that to this kobala defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were subscribing witnesses and therefore consented to it, and they had also signed their names as witnesses to a petition filed by Avimani Dasi before the Sub-divisional Officer, of Kendrapara in which she consented that the name of the defendant No. 1 should be registered in respect of the 8-annas share of the zemindari sold to him. This defendant submitted that the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were estopped by their conduct from setting up any right to the property in dispute, and that their sale to the plaintiffs was of no effect against his purchase.

[898] The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 relied on the collusive nature of the purchase set up by the plaintiffs on the same grounds as the defendant No. 1. They admitted the execution of the kobala by Avimani Dasi, though they denied that there was any legal necessity for the alienation. They, as well as the defendant No. 1, denied any obstruction of the plaintiffs in realizing rent, and that there was any cause of action against them.

The issues material to this report were:

1. Were the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 in possession of an 8-annas share of the zemindari, and did the plaintiffs purchase the same from them in good faith by a kobala dated 23rd April 1885 for a consideration of Rs. 1,975?
2. Did Avimani Dasi convey an 8-annas share of the property in dispute to the defendant No. 1 by a kobala dated the 8th June 1880 for legal necessity?
3. Did the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 record their assent to the said sale, and are they and the plaintiffs estopped from disputing it?

A supplemental issue raised the question—"Are the plaintiffs entitled to an 8-annas share or any part of the property in dispute under the purchase set up by them?"

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were not in possession of the 8-annas share when they purported to sell it to the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs' alleged purchase was a collusive transaction. On the 5th and 6th issues he found that the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 did consent to the kobala given by Avimani Dasi to the defendant No. 1 of the 8th June 1880, and he upheld that deed, and made a decree dismissing the suit.

On appeal the Judge confirmed this decision. There was no finding by either Court as to whether or not there was any legal necessity for the alienation by Avimani Dasi.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.
Dr. Rash Beharry Ghose and Baboo Monamotho Nath Mitter, for the appellants.
Dr. Troilokyanath Mitter, for the respondent, defendant No. 1.
Baboo Mon Mohun Dutt, for the respondents, defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

[899] The judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

The plaintiffs are the purchasers of an 8-annas share in certain property from the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who, together with the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, inherited the entire property as heirs of Joy Narain Ghose on the death of his widow Avimani Dasi.
It appears that Avimani Dasi sold an 8-annas share to the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff's vendors, who ordinarily would inherit an 8-annas share of the estate of Joy Narain Ghose, are found by both the lower Courts to have never been in possession of their share. Since Avimani's death it has been held by defendant No. 1 in respect of the half-share bought by him, and by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in respect of the remainder by right of inheritance. The plaintiffs now sue to recover possession as against the defendant No. 1, the purchaser from Avimani, and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who were co-heirs with their vendors, and are charged with having colluded with the defendant No. 1 in keeping the plaintiffs out of possession. The primary object of the suit undoubtedly was to have it declared that the sale by Avimani was not a sale of an absolute title in consequence of her having only a life-interest as a Hindu widow. But as we regard the suit, its object was also to obtain, by reason of the purchase from two out of the heirs of Joy Narain Ghose, whatever share in his estate up to a half share was inherited by the vendors of the plaintiffs. If there were any doubt as to this being the object of the suit, it is set at rest by the supplementary issue which has been drawn up in the course of the trial by the Subordinate Judge.

Neither of the Courts has found whether the sale by Avimani of an 8-annas of the property in dispute was a valid sale for legal necessity in accordance with Hindu law. The Courts concurrently have found against the purchase by the plaintiffs, holding that no consideration passed, and that in fact it was not a real transaction; and this finding has been arrived at notwithstanding that the vendors have themselves admitted the receipt of consideration.

We are of opinion that, having regard to the nature of the suit and the admission of the vendors, this point did not properly arise. The Subordinate Judge seems to have attached undue weight to the fact that the vendors of the plaintiffs were out of possession, and [900] to have considered with this fact the nature of the transaction. But such purchases are not uncommon and are recognized by law, which was provided in the law of limitation a special limitation for a suit by a private purchaser to recover possession of immoveable property sold when the vendor was out of possession.

Both the Courts have found that the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 consented to the sale by Avimani, and that as they were some of the reversioners who have subsequently inherited a share of the estate, representing the share so conveyed, the title of the defendant No. 1 was a good title as against them. This conclusion has been arrived at principally with regard to the rule laid down by a Full Bench in the case of Nobokishor Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (1); but in our opinion the principle enunciated by the Full Bench cannot be carried to this length, and cannot be applied to an alienation of only a portion of the widow's estate (2).

(1) 10 C. 1102.

(2) The same was decided in Sristidhur Churamoni Bhuttacharjee v. Brojo Mohun Biddyaratun Bhuttacharjee, appeal from appellate decree No. 881 of 1889 decided by PRINSEP and RAMPINI, JJ., on the 25th May 1890, in which the judgment was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This is a suit brought by one claiming, on the death of Bhagiruthi, a Hindu widow, as heir, the estate of her husband, Sarthukram, to set aside two alienations made by her to the respondents. It appears that in respect of one of these alienations, one of Numerous complications, which it is unnecessary to describe, would arise if it were possible that a Hindu widow having a life-interest could, during her life-time, convey a portion of the estate to some of the then reversionary heirs, Kanhai, signified his assent, not as a witness, but by affixing his name with the words “memsoor shud” which, we understand, mean ‘approved.’ The other alienation is similarly subscribed by both the then reversionary heirs, Kanhai and his elder brother Narain, these two being sons of Jagdumba, daughter of Sarthukram and Bhagiruthi. It has been continued, on the authority of the judgment of the Full Bench in Nobokishore Surma Roy v. Hari Nath Surma Roy (1), that these alienations are valid. Both the reversioners who signified their assent to the alienations predeceased the widow, their maternal grandmother. One of them, Kanhai, who was the only assenting party to one of the alienations, it has been found, died a minor. The age of Narain, the elder, has not been found by the lower Courts, and therefore if it were necessary for a decision of the case as to the title of the defendants, we should be bound to remand the suit for a proper finding. But as the case now stands, we think that without a finding on this point the plaintiff should obtain a decree in full of his claim.

In the first place, we are of opinion that Kanhai being a minor, his consent would not make the alienation a valid alienation. In has been found by the lower appellate Court that there was no legal necessity for this alienation, and, as this is a finding of fact, we are unable to question its correctness. As we have already stated in a judgment delivered in second appeal 259 of 1889, Radha Shyam Sircar v. Joy Ram Senapati (2), on the 8th instant, we are not inclined to extend the terms of the judgment of the Full Bench in Nobokishore Surma Roy v. Hari Nath Surma Roy (1) to an alienation made by a Hindu widow with the consent of only some of the reversionary heirs so as to bind their share in the ancestral estate.

The consent of the reversioners contemplated by the Full Bench is, in our opinion, such a consent as would be a valid consent, being given by persons themselves competent to execute a valid conveyance. Kanhai being a minor cannot be regarded as a competent person, and his death before the estate had fallen in by the death of his grandmother, a widow having only a life-interest, and before he had attained his majority, would prevent that alienation becoming absolute as against the heirs of Sarthukram at the death of the widow. The conveyance might be only voidable on his attaining majority, but his consent as a minor could not operate as against the heirs of Sarthukram’s estate. No doubt, as has been pointed out by the respondent’s pleader, the plaintiff-appellant could not be the heir of Kanhai and Narain, who up to their deaths were the reversionary heirs to Sarthukram’s estate, and therefore he might not be one who as Kanhai’s heir should [902] represent him in any matter relating to his own estate, but we cannot admit that in a matter concerning Sarthukram’s estate any right flowing from the reversionary interest which was only inchoate and never arrived at maturity should pass away from the actual heirs of Sarthukram to one who could never succeed by inheritance to that estate. The consent given by Kanhai as a minor would not operate as to exclude the plaintiff from the inheritance and pass Sarthukram’s estate on the death of Kanhai, the survivor of the two brothers, to his heir and away from Sarthukram’s family so as to give Kanhai’s heir the power of avoiding or ratifying the alienation. He would not be in a position to exercise his option for the benefit of Sarthukram’s estate, because if he avoided the alienation the property would pass to the plaintiff. This shows that it would be impossible to extend to this case the principle upon which the Full Bench proceeded. This alienation, therefore, to which the minor, Kanhai, alone signified his approval is, in our opinion, invalid as against the plaintiff.

It has been next contended that although on this ground the alienation in respect of any share to which Kanai might have a reversionary interest might be invalid in respect of that particular share, the share inherited by Narain would be bound by such alienation. This would of course depend upon his status as a major when he signified his consent. But, as has already been remarked, the lower appellate Court has omitted to come to any finding in this respect. However, if for purposes of argument we assume that he was a major, the alienations even as to the share to which he was one of the reversionary heirs at that time, cannot be affirmed. We have already held to this effect in second appeal No. 259. The result therefore is that the alienations in this suit are, in our opinion, absolutely void after the death of Bhagiruthi, and the plaintiff is entitled to a decree with costs throughout, the decrees of the lower Courts being varied.

(1) 10 C. 1102. (2) 17 C. 896.
reversioners so as to give them a valid title and thus enable them to reconvey. It would be impossible for a widow to predicate who would at her death succeed to her husband's estate as his heirs so as practically to make partition during her life-time, and retain a portion herself. The judgment of the Full Bench proceeded on the ground that by alienating property with the consent of all the reversioners she would be relinquishing in their favour, and thus accelerate the succession so as to enable them to convey, and that this would be the real effect of a conveyance by her with their consent. This principle would not apply to a case like that now before us.

It is open to some doubt whether the facts found by the District Judge would amount to a consent such as would confer an absolute [902] title on the vendee, even if defendants Nos. 4 and 5 represented the entire reversionary interest. We observe that the District Judge has not found, as the Subordinate Judge has found, that the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 participated in the consideration-money paid by the defendant No. 1. Moreover, it has not been found, nor does it appear that the vendee, defendant No. 1, bought solely on the assurance of their consent so as to estop them; for the deed itself recites what was considered to be a legal necessity under the Hindu law and a sufficient cause for the alienation, and therefore to establish any title as against the heirs the vendee would be bound to prove that.

The case therefore depends upon the character of the sale by Avimani to the defendant No. 1. Both the Courts have overlooked the main point necessary for the consideration of this issue, that [903] is to say, they have omitted to find whether the alienation was for legal necessity. The case must therefore be remanded to the lower appellate Court in order that this point may be determined; and the District Judge will deal with it according to law, either deciding the case on the evidence on the record, or remitting it to the first Court. Should it be found that the sale by Avimani to the defendant No. 1 conveyed an absolute title in an 8-annas share, then it will be for the Court to consider whether the plaintiffs on the supplemental issue should receive a decree for a 4-annas share of the estate, which would represent the share inherited by their vendors. On the other hand, should it be found that the sale by Avimani conveyed only the life-interest of a Hindu widow, the plaintiffs will be entitled to a decree to recover the share now held by the defendant No. 1. Costs to abide the result.

Case remanded.

This was a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 2,431-10, for principal and interest due upon a mortgage-bond dated 6th Sraban 1288 F. S. (17th July 1881). The bond purported to have been executed in favour of the plaintiff Koylashpoti Narain Singh by one Ahmud Hosain as general agent of the defendant Salimatul-Fatima; and from the endorsement of registration, it appeared that it had been registered by Ahmud Hosain under a general power-of-attorney dated 19th August 1878. Salimatul-Fatima, who was a purda-nashin lady, in her defence pleaded that [904] Ahmud Hosain was not her general agent, and had no authority to raise any loan on her behalf; that she did not execute the power-of-attorney of 9th August 1878; that the mortgage bond was not executed with her knowledge or consent; and that she had received no part of the consideration-money, nor was any portion of it expended on her behalf. Ahmud Hosain died during the pendency of the suit, and his heirs, who were made parties, contended that the bond was executed by Ahmud Hosain on behalf of Salimatul-Fatima, and that the money was borrowed for her benefit.

The Subordinate Judge found that Ahmud Hosain had executed the mortgage-bond and received the consideration-money. He also found that Ahmud Hosain had acted for Salimatul-Fatima as her agent on various occasions; that the power-of-attorney of 9th August 1878 had been returned to the husband of Salimatul-Fatima at the time of the death of Ahmud Hosain, and that Ahmud Hosain had under that power-of-attorney executed a deed of sale on behalf of Salimatul-Fatima. Although it had not been proved that Salimatul-Fatima, had executed the power-of-attorney, the Subordinate Judge admitted secondary evidence of its contents apparently on the grounds that it had been proved that the document was in possession of the husband of Salimatul-Fatima and had not been produced when called for by the plaintiff after notice to produce had been given; and upon such secondary evidence he came to the conclusion that it had been satisfactorily proved that Ahmud Hosain had authority from Salimatul-Fatima to take loans and execute mortgages on her behalf. Accordingly he held that she was liable under the mortgage-bond of the 6th Sraban 1288 F. S., and gave the plaintiff a decree against her.

This decision was affirmed by the District Judge of Gya, who dismissed Salimatul-Fatima's appeal with the following remarks:—"The Subordinate Judge, who has gone very carefully into the matter, has found that the document was executed by the appellant's husband's elder brother, under a general power-of-attorney authorizing him to do such things. The power-of-attorney itself is not forthcoming. It is proved to have been returned to the appellant's husband. Every effort has been made by the other side to get it before the Court, but in vain; so secondary evidence has been adduced of its contents, and evidence has been brought to prove that the same person, who is said to have acted for the appellant in the matter in question, has acted for her on other occasions also, the transactions having resulted in the actual transfer of property, of which the appellant cannot fail to have been cognizant. The endorsement of the registering officer on the mortgage-bond shows that it was presented with a general power-of-attorney from the appellant, duly registered, and I agree with the lower Court in being satisfied on the evidence that the executant of the bond did hold such a power authorizing him to enter into transactions of this kind.

* Appeal from appellate decree No. 1666 of 1888, against the decree of J.F. Stevens, Esq., Judge of Gya, dated the 21st May 1888, affirming the decree of Baboo Kali Prosunno Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated the 13th of September 1887.

It has been urged that the actual execution of the power-of-attorney has not been proved, and that the attesting witnesses ought to have been examined. It seems to me that the plaintiff has done all that he as a stranger could be expected to do. He is not supposed to know who the attesting witnesses were, and it is on the face of it improbable that if he did know, he could induce them to give evidence in his favour. There was a power-of-attorney duly registered which under the ruling in Kristo Nath Koonloo v. Brown (I) might have been received without proof. The plaintiff has done his best, as I have said, to get it produced before the Court; and having failed to do so, he has, I think, done sufficient in adducing evidence as to its contents.

The judgment of the Court (Pigot and Gordon, JJ.) was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

Upon the question raised as to the proof of the execution of the power-of-attorney, it is clear, and is indeed admitted, that the respondents' case rests alone upon the fact of registration. There is no proof unless that be proof. And as to the sufficiency of this, a note in the case of Kristo Nath Koonloo v. Brown (I), a ruling by Traveleyan, J., is relied on, as showing that registration of such a document is enough without further proof of execution. It is relied on very properly in the judgment of the District Judge, and was referred to, but without any argument or attempt to explain it by the learned counsel for the respondents. It is unnecessary to say that a reported decision of the learned Judge on the Original Side after argument must be treated as an authority of importance. But we do not think that the note in question is one by which we should be guided. There is no report of either argument or judgment; as the note appears it would be to the effect that mere registration of a document is in itself sufficient proof of its execution. We think that there must have been some misapprehension as to the grounds on which the document was admitted in evidence by the learned Judge. We think we should not treat this note as an authority for the proposition above mentioned, which we think could not be accepted. We must hold that in this case there is no proof that the lady ever executed the document under which it is sought to bind her. That being so, it is impossible to support the decision of the District Court, and the appeal must be allowed with costs.

KALI KANTA SURMA and others (Defendants) v. GOURI PROSAD SURMA BARDEURI and others (Plaintiffs).* [21st June, 1890.]

A suit claiming a right to the regular offerings made out of the funds of a temple which are of a substantial value as emoluments is a suit of a civil nature within the meaning of the explanation to s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Krishnana v. Krishnasami (1) referred to; Narayan Vithe Parab v. Krishnaji Sadashiv (2) distinguished.

[907] The plaintiffs based their claim to a goat sacrificed on the 4th day of each month on an alleged custom by which each of five families took certain goats in each month, and sued to establish their right without making the other families parties. Held, that to make any declaration in a suit to which they were not parties would be in effect to partition joint property, and to define the share of each without all the shares being before the Court—Prahlad Singh v. This was a suit for the establishment of title to the goats sacrificed on the 4th day of every month in the temple of the goddess Kamakhya on the Nilachal hills in Kamrup, and to recover the price of 15 goats. The plaintiffs alleged that in very ancient times five Brahmins had been import ed for purposes of worship called respectively Deka Bardeuri, Bura Bardeuri, Hala, Brahma and Bidhipathak, and they claimed as the descendants of the Deka Bardeuri. They further stated that the descendants of the five Brahmins, known as the five houses or families of Bardeuris (officiating priests), had since the time of their first employment performed in succession the daily worship of the goddess; that two of them were generally elected by the rest as Kartas or managers of the temple for the supervision of the ceremonies; that the two persons thus elected were called Dalois; that in addition to the Bardeuri families a number of Sudras were also employed in the temple; that there were other temples subordinate to the Kamakhya temple to which Brahmins were also attached, and these Brahmins were also known as Dalois; that some of these Brahmins known as cooks or supakars prepared the sacrificial offerings to the goddess, that the offerings (including certain goats sacrificed daily) were divided, according to an ancient custom, among the Dalois, the Bardeuri Brahmins, the Dewalia Brahmans, or Brahmans attached to the various temples, the cook Brahmans and the Sudras; and that the goat offerings made on five days in each month were divided among the five Bardeuris as their marjada (honorarium). The plaintiffs as the descendants of the Deka Bardeuri brought this suit against 16 Dewalia Brahmans and 12 Sudras attached to the various temples, alleging that disputes had arisen, and the latter had from the month of Assin 1293 by force withheld the goats which the Deka Bardeuri used to receive on the 4th day of each month, 15 goats in all.

[908] The defendants denied the right of the plaintiffs to the goats sacrificed on the 4th day of every month.

The family of one of the five Brahmans had become extinct. The objection was taken that the representatives of the other three Bardeuris had not been made parties to the suit.

The Munsif found in favour of the plaintiffs on the ground that it was reasonable to suppose from the evidence, and in particular from a document called a sidhanta-patra setting forth the customs of the temple, that the Bardeuris as managers of the temple would receive a larger share of the offerings than two goats per month as admitted by the defendants. The lower appellate Court held that it was impossible to decide the case solely with reference to the sidhanta-patra, and that the probabilities of the case inclined rather to the side of the defendants, but that on a mere balance of probabilities, the Munsif's decision should not be interfered with. The judgment of the Court of first instance was therefore affirmed.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) was delivered by Banerjee, J.—The plaintiffs state that they are the representatives of one of five Brahmans, who were brought from Kunoj by an ancient Hindu monarch to worship in the temple of Kamakhya in Kamrup, and that down to the present time the Dalois or managers of the temple have been always elected from among the representatives of the five Brahmans. They say that there are some smaller temples subordinate to the main temple in which the worship is conducted by other Brahmans, and that there are also a number of Sudras employed about all the temples. The defendants are the Brahmans employed about the temples other than those who are descendants of the five imported persons and the Sudras. The family of one of the five Brahmans is become extinct, that of another is represented by the plaintiff; but descendants of the remaining three persons who are admitted to be living, and who are said to claim the same rights as those claimed by the plaintiffs, are [903] no parties to this action. It is alleged that a goat is sacrificed in the temple each day, and this action is brought to obtain a declaration that the plaintiffs as representing the house of one of the five imported Brahmans are by the custom of the temple entitled to the whole of the goat which is sacrificed in the temple on the 4th of each month. The defendants object that the action cannot be maintained without the presence of the representatives of the other families of imported Brahmans and of certain other Brahmans and certain Sudras connected with the temple, and also contend that the five families between them are only entitled by custom to two goats in each month and not to the number alleged by the plaintiffs. The Courts below have found for the plaintiffs and given them a decree.

In second appeal it is contended for the defendants, first, that the Courts below were wrong in entertaining the suit, which was substantially one for dignity in a Hindu temple unconnected with any profit; secondly, that the suit must fail for defect of parties; thirdly, that there is no legal evidence to establish the customary right set up by the plaintiffs, and that such right can be enforced only if it is in accordance with the original conditions of the endowment; fourthly, that the sidhanta-patra has been misconstrued by the Courts below; and fifthly, that the learned Judge below was wrong in affirming the decision of the first Court when he disagreed with the Munisif as to his estimate of the evidence.

We do not think there is much in the first contention of the appellants. In the case of Krishnama v. Krishnasami (1), which was decided under the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, the Privy Council held that a claim to pecuniary benefits in respect of the performance of religious services was triable by the Civil Courts. Moreover s. 11 of the present Code, which enacts that the Courts shall try all suits of a civil nature, has an explanation added to it which provides that a suit in which a right to property is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend on the decision of questions as to religious rites. Now in the present case, the right claimed is a right to certain offerings, that is, goats sacrificed on certain days, which, if it is admitted, are not the voluntary offerings made by pilgrims, but are the regular offerings made out of the temple funds, and which being articles of food are clearly property. The suit therefore is one of a civil nature as explained in s. 11, and is triable by the Civil Court. We may add that the offerings claimed are of substantial value as emoluments, and are not mere tokens of dignity, though the customary right to them might have been based originally upon considerations as to the position of the plaintiffs, and that the present case is distinguishable on this ground from the case of Narayan Vithe Parab v. Krishnaji Sadhasiv (2).

The second objection is, however, in our opinion, fatal to the maintenance of the suit. The plaintiffs base their claim to the goat sacrificed on the 4th of each month on an alleged custom under which they say that each of the five families took certain goats in each month, and they bring this suit to have their right to the goat killed on the 4th declared without making the other four families parties. We do not think that such a declaration could in any case be made in their absence, or in the absence of the other Brahmins and Sudras attached to the temple and interested in the offerings. It is part of the plaintiffs' case that they are interested in the offerings, and to make any declaration in a suit to which they are not parties would be in effect to partition joint property, and to define the share of each without all the shares being before the Court, which manifestly cannot be done—see Prahlad Singh v. Luchmunbutty (3). It was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the parties being numerous, the first Court followed the course laid down in s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and permitted some of each group of persons interested and who ought to have been made parties, to represent the rest. We have heard the order of the first Court read out [911] of the suit which must include a notice of the names of the persons who have been permitted to represent others, so that the persons interested may have an opportunity of knowing who have been selected to represent them. Now in the present case no such thing was done. In the first place the Court did not give permission to any definitely named persons among those interested to represent the rest; and in the second place the notice issued by the Court did not show who the persons were that had been selected to represent the remaining persons interested. That being so, we think that the persons interested in the result of the suit who are necessary parties have not been properly made parties to it, and that the suit must fail by reason of defect of parties. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to consider the remaining points raised in the case. The result is that the decrees of the Courts below will be reversed, and the suit dismissed for defect of parties, with costs in all the Courts.

HURI DOYAL SINGH SARMA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. GRISH CHUNDER MUKERJEE AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[27th June, 1890.]

Hindu law—Stridhan—Stridhan inherited by daughter from mother—Preferential heirs on the death of daughter.

Stridhan inherited by a daughter from her mother passes on the death of the person who would be the next heir to the mother's stridhan. Where \( B \) inherited stridhan from \( A \), her mother, it was held to pass on the death of \( B \) to the sons of \( A \) in preference to the children of \( B \).

The only question material to this report was as to the succession on the death of a daughter to stridhan property which had been inherited by the daughter from her mother. For this question the facts and arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

C VIII—145

The judgment of the Court (Macpherson and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit for money due on a bond. The plaintiffs alleged that money lent really belonged to them, but the bond was taken in the name of their mother: and they further alleged that they were the only heirs to their mother. The defendants denied having borrowed any money on the bond, and they also urged that as the bond, on the face of it, showed that the money belonged to the plaintiffs' mother, and as she left a daughter who had male issue, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the money, and that their claim was further untenable by reason of their not having obtained any certificate under Act XXVII of 1860.

The first Court found that the plaintiffs' allegations were proved, and it gave the plaintiffs a decree; but the lower appellate Court, whilst affirming the first Court's finding that the loan was proved, held that the money was not shown to have belonged to the plaintiffs; and as the plaintiffs had a sister who died in 1292, leaving male issue, the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim the money (which might have been obtained by their mother at the time of her marriage) as heirs to their mother; and it accordingly dismissed their suit. In second appeal it was contended before us that the Court of Appeal below was wrong in throwing on the plaintiffs the burden of proving that the money in question had not been received by their mother at her marriage, when it ought to have held that it was for the defendants to make out that the money was that particular description of stridhan to which the daughter is the heir in preference to sons. The point was also raised, though not taken in the grounds of appeal, that upon the facts found, the plaintiffs were entitled to claim the money by right of inheritance, to whatever class of stridhan it might belong. As this is a pure question of law, and the facts found are sufficient for its disposal, we allowed it to be raised and argued.

There is no force in the first contention of the appellants. It being found that the money was their mother's property, and the [913] only right upon which they sought to recover it in that view of the case being their right by inheritance, it was clearly for the plaintiffs to make out that the property was that description of stridhan to which they were entitled in preference to other heirs.

On the second point, however, we think the appellants ought to succeed. The facts found by the lower appellate Court are that the money in question belonged to the plaintiffs' mother as her stridhan, but it was not shown of what description it was; that the plaintiffs' mother died leaving two sons (the plaintiffs) and a daughter; and that the daughter died in 1292, that is, about two years before the institution of this suit, leaving two sons and two daughters. Upon these facts, it is contended for the appellants that assuming the money in question to have been their mother's stridhan of that description which the daugther inherits in preference to the son, their sister took it not as stridhan, but as inherited property, with the same limited interest that a female heir takes in property inherited from a male owner; and that on her death it passed not to her heirs, but to the next heirs to her mother's stridhan that is, to the plaintiffs, who thus became entitled to the money when this suit was brought. Let us examine how far these propositions are correct according to the Hindu law of the Bengal School which governs this case.

They are fairly deducible from the Dayabhaga, Chapter IV, s. I, and Chapter XI, s. II, paragraphs 30 and 31. From the discussion in the Dayabhaga, Chapter IV, s. I, as to what constitutes stridhan, it is abundantly clear that, though the author does not admit any definite limit as to the number of kinds of stridhan, yet the only kinds of property that he has expressly considered to be stridhan are those obtained from relations by gift [which has been held to include a testamentary gift as well as one inter vivos, see Juddonath Sarkar v. Busunt Coomar Roy (1)], and there is not the slightest indication that inherited property in the author’s opinion would rank as stridhan. In Chapter XI, s. II, paragraphs 30, 31 of the same treatise, when treating of the daughter’s succession to the father’s property, the author says that the principle laid down in the case of the widow (Chapter XI, s. I, s. 56); that on her death the inheritance passes to [914] the next heir of the last full owner, the husband, ‘is applicable generally to the case of woman’s succession by inheritance.’ It is true that this is said in a chapter of the work relating to succession to the property of a male, but the language is quite general. The passage runs thus:—“Or the word ‘wife’ (in the text above quoted, s. I, s. 56) is employed with a general import; and it implies that the rule must be understood as applicable generally to the case of a woman’s succession by inheritance” (para. 31). The correct inference from this is that in the author’s opinion, whenever a woman succeeds to property by inheritance, the property on her death passes not to her heir, but to the next heir of the last full owner who would have succeeded in the first instance if she had not been in existence.

The Dayatathwa of Raghunandan is not very explicit on the point, but property obtained from relations is all that appears to be considered as stridhan (see Golap Chandra Sarkar’s Translation, Ch. IX).

The Dayakrama Sangraha of Srikrishna Tarkalankara, which is the next authority in point of time and importance in the Bengal school, is clearly in favour of the appellants’ contention. In Ch. II, s. II, para. 12, Srikrishna says that heritable wealth does not form a woman’s peculiar property, and in Ch. II, s. III, para. 6, in dealing with succession to the separate property of a woman when received by her at her nuptials (which is the description of stridhan under which the money in dispute comes according to the respondents), he observes:—“Here, however, on the death of a maiden daughter or of one affianced in whom the succession had vested, and who having been subsequently married is ascertained to have been barren, or on the death of a widow who has not given birth to a son, the succession to the property which had passed from the mother to her daughters would devolve next on the sisters having and likely to have male issue, and in their default on the barren and widowed daughters; and not on the husband of such daughter above mentioned in whom the succession had vested, for the right of the husband is in relation to the ‘woman’s separate property,’ and wealth which has in this way passed from one to another can no longer be considered as the ‘woman’s separate property.’ This [915] must be understood.” This clearly shows that on the death of a daughter who inherited her mother’s stridhan, the property passes not to her heirs,

but to the next heirs of her mother. The learned vakeel for the respondents argued that the use of the words 'ascertained to have been barren,' and 'who has not given birth to a son,' in the above passage indicates that the other heirs of the mother can come in only if the daughter who succeeded first dies leaving no male issue. We do not consider this argument sound. The author expressly declares that wealth which has passed by inheritance can no longer be considered as stridhan, and he clearly indicates that the person entitled to take it on the demise of any female who took it by inheritance is not the heir of such female, but is the next heir of the female whose stridhan it was, that is, the next heir of the last full owner; and the respondents' contention is clearly inconsistent with this view. It seems to us most probable that the words in question were used by the author to make it clear that the exclusion of the husband in the example given was due to the fact of the property inherited by the wife from her mother not being ranked as her stridhan; for if the wife left a son, the husband would be excluded even if the property devolved as her stridhan.

Words somewhat similar to those referred to above, used by the same author in his commentary on a passage of the Dayabhaga relating to the daughter's succession to her father's property, were relied upon in the case of Tinumani Dasi v. Niburan Chandra Gupta (1) as warranting an inference similar to the one sought to be drawn by the respondents' vakeel, but the Full Bench overruled that contention, and held that the proper import of those words was such as we have indicated above. The Court observed:—"It is exceedingly probable that the annotator suggested the addition of the words 'without leaving issue,' thinking that the language of the author without these words would be open to the objection of want of precision. Because, on the death of a maiden daughter (in whom succession has vested, and who had been afterwards married) leaving issue, the estate would 'not become the property of her husband or other heirs,' even if the law regulating the succession to a woman's peculiar property were applicable, because the husband would succeed only in default of issue."

Great reliance was placed on the side of the respondents upon the following passage in Colebrooke's Digest:—"A daughter may at pleasure give away to any person whomsoever the exclusive property of her mother which has devolved on her; after her death, the daughter's son-in-law and the rest shall obtain that which has not been aliened. It should not be argued that a daughter is only permitted to enjoy for life the peculiar property of a woman which she has inherited like the estate left by a man to which she has succeeded. That has not been asserted by Jimutavahana: and no reasoning supports it." (Coleb. Dig. V, 515; Commentary, Mad. Ed., Vol. II, p. 628). No authority is cited in support of this proposition, and it rests entirely upon the authority of Jagannath. Now speaking of him, his translator, Colebrooke, says:—"We have not here the same veneration for him when he speaks in his own name or steps beyond the strict limits of a compiler's duty" (Vyasavtha Darpana, 2nd Ed., Pref. XXVI, note). Jagannath's opinion, though no doubt entitled to great weight as that of a learned lawyer of vast and noted erudition, would not in itself be sufficient authority for any proposition of law, especially when, as in the present instance, it is opposed to the doctrine expressly laid down by Srikrishna in the Dayakrama Sangraha, and evidently deducible from the Dayabhaga.

Of later text writers, Macnaghten is in favour of the appellants' contention so far as it asserts that stridhan inherited by a female ceases to be ranked as such (Principles of Hindu Law, p. 38). As regards the rule of succession applicable to such property, he seems to have fallen into an error which has been pointed out by Mitter, J., in the case of Bhoobun Mohun Banerjee v. Muddon Mohun Singh (1), to which we shall presently refer. The opinion of Shama Charan is clearly in favour of the appellants—see Vyavastha Darpana, Vyavastha 487, 2nd Ed., p. 730.

The appellants' position seems to us to be equally clear upon the authority of the decided cases bearing on the point. In Pran Kissen Singh v. Bhugwatee (2), it was decided that a daughter who [917] takes by inheritance from her mother takes a qualified estate, and on the daughter's death the heir of the mother succeeds.

In the case of Bhoobun Mohun Banerjee v. Muddon Mohun Singh (1), Mitter, J., observed:—"That stridhan inherited by a woman does not become her stridhan is clear—see Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. II, s. II, para. 12, and s. III, para. 6: Macnaghten's Hindu Law, p. 38; Pran Kissen Singh v. Bhugwatee (2), Srinath Gangoopadhyya v. Sarbamangala Debi (3) and Sengawalathammal v. Valayudamudali (4). But it has been remarked by Mr. Macnaghten in the passage referred to above that upon the death of the woman who inherits to a stridhan property, it passes to her heirs, meaning evidently to persons who would inherit to her properties other than stridhan. With the greatest deference to that learned author it seems to be that this remark is founded upon some misconception of the provisions of the Hindu law upon the subject. According to Hindu law a woman can have only two kinds of properties viz., (1) stridhan, and (2) inhereted properties. As to the first class, there is an exhaustive enumeration of the heirs, and as regards properties inherited from a man, it goes after her death to the heirs of the last owner, and it seems to me that the same rule holds good also as regards stridhan property inherited by a woman, i.e., upon her death it goes to the heirs of the last owner. Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. II, s. III, para. 6, already referred to, clearly establishes this proposition.

"It seems to me that the same rule is laid down in the Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, s. II, para. 30. The chapter in question, it is true, mainly deals with rules of succession to properties left by a deceased made owner, but the paragraph referred to above appears to me to lay down a rule applicable generally to succession by women whether to the properties of a man or to stridhan of a woman. If it were not so there would be no provision in the Dayabhaga relating to succession to property inherited by a woman from a female ancestress who held it as stridhan. I do not think that this is probable. Having regard to this circumstances, and having regard to the language of the paragraph in question which [918] is very general, it seems to me that the rule there laid down is also applicable to stridhan property inherited by a woman." It is true that the question for decision in that case was whether a daughter inheriting her mother's stridhan takes it absolutely or with limited power of alienation; but the texts of the Dayabhaga, which were held applicable to the case, and on the application of which the alienation in question was set aside, are the very texts that contain the rule of succession relied upon by the appellants.

In Prakrissen Laha v. Noyanmonney Dassee (1), Wilson, J., held that what a daughter inherits from a mother does not become her stridhan.

Upon a consideration of the foregoing authorities we think it established that stridhan inherited by a daughter from a mother passes on the daughter’s death to the next heir to the mother’s stridhan.

There remains now the only question whether on their sister’s death the plaintiffs or their sister’s children were the nearest heirs to their mother’s stridhan. On this point there is no room for doubt. Whatever description of stridhan of their mother the money in dispute may have been, the plaintiffs as her sons are her heirs in preference to their sister’s children, that is, her daughter’s children. In fact, in the order of succession to stridhan, the position of the sons in the most unfavourable case for them is inferior only to that of the daughters—see Dayabhaga Chap IV, s. II. That being so, at the date of the institution of this suit, the plaintiffs were the only persons entitled to the money in question.

We ought to notice here two other points urged for the respondents. It was contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain this suit as they had not obtained any certificate under Act XXVII of 1860. This objection, though taken in the first Court, does not appear to have been urged before the Court of appeal below. Moreover, considering the defence of the defendants, which was a denial of the debt altogether, it seems to us that the case comes under the exception in s. 2 of Act XXVII of 1860, under which the Court may dispense with the necessity of a [919] certificate. It was also urged that interest ought not to be allowed at the stipulated rate after the due date mentioned in the bond. We do not think this argument is valid. The bond provides that interest should run at the rate stipulated until the money is actually paid off.

The result is that this appeal will be decreed, and the decree of the lower appellate Court will be reversed and that of the first Court restored with costs in this Court and the Court below.

to the prompt payment of the purchase money without waiting for a conveyance, and that the title was to be investigated and approved in the ordinary way.

This case distinguished from Sreeopal Mullick v. Ram Churn Nusker (1).

This was a suit for the specific performance of an agreement for the purchase by the defendant from the plaintiff of a house and premises No. 5, Chowringhee Lane, in the town of Calcutta, and the furniture and effects therein for the sum of Rs. 54,000. The agreement was embodied and contained in certain letters, dated the 18th and 19th November 1888, and written respectively by the defendant to one F. Siddons, the plaintiff's agent and by Messrs. [920] Dignam, Robinson, and Sparkes, the plaintiff's solicitors and agents, to the defendant. The first of these letters was as follows:

"MEMORANDUM.

"From Aaron Cohen & Co., 219, Old China Bazar Street.

"To
F. Siddons, Esq.,

"Dear Sir,

With reference to the telegram No. 413 from Mr. A. B. Sutherland —'Split difference. Accept 54,000. Reply'—I hereby agree to purchase the house No. 5, Chowringhee Lane, in the city of Calcutta, for the sum of the Rupees fifty-four thousand, including the furniture and fittings as per list handed over to Major McArthur, you having the right to remove family pictures, books, and such articles as were presented to Mr. Sutherland (these articles not to be of much value).

"It is also agreed between us that I shall have entry during the first week of December and not later. The title deeds to be sent to Messrs. Gregory and Moses, and on approval of the same the purchase money to be paid prompt. I agree also to pay you a brokerage of 1 per cent. on the transaction.

18th November 1888.

Yours faithfully,
(Sd.) Aaron Cohen.

"The telegram referred to is in my possession.

(Sd.) A. C."

On receipt of the above letter Messrs. Dignam, Robinson, and Sparkes wrote to the defendant accepting his offer on the terms mentioned in the letter of the 18th November. The defendant was let into possession on or about the 7th December 1888, previous to which date the deeds and documents of title relating to the premises had been forwarded by the plaintiff's solicitors to the defendant's solicitor. On the 22nd December 1888, Mr. Gregory, who had dissolved partnership with his former partner, Mr. Moses (on the 1st December), forwarded requisitions on title to the plaintiff's solicitors, who on the 2nd January 1889 made their replies thereto in writing.

[921] On the 8th January 1889 the defendant refused to carry out the agreement on the ground that the plaintiff had not made out a clear marketable title to the premises, and he alleged that the contract was subject to the title being approved by his solicitors, Messrs. Gregory and

Moses, and contended that it was expressly agreed between Mr. F. Siddons, acting on behalf of the plaintiff, and the defendant that the decision of Messrs. Gregory and Moses on the title was to be conclusive.

The judgment of the lower Court (Wilson, J.) was as follows:—

"This is a suit brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of a house No. 5, Chowringhee Lane, from the plaintiff to the defendant. The contract is embodied in two letters, of which the first is dated the 18th November 1888, addressed to the plaintiff's agent, Mr. Siddons, and signed by the defendant, and the second accepts the terms stated in the first. The essential parts of the first letter are, 'I hereby agree to purchase the house No. 5, Chowringhee Lane, in the city of Calcutta, for the sum of Rs. 54,000, including the furniture and fittings as per list handed over to Major McArthur.' Then there is an exception as to certain things which the plaintiff was to be at liberty to remove. Then the letter goes on—'It is also agreed between us that I shall have entry during the first week of December and not later. The title deeds to be sent to Messrs. Gregory and Moses, and on approval of the same the purchase money to be paid prompt.' Now the plaintiff claims specific performance of that agreement, and in the ordinary course of things, upon proof of the contract, there would be a reference to investigate the title. But by the defendant's written statement and the opening of his learned Counsel at the hearing, a question was raised, not only as to what was the effect of the written contract contained in the letters standing by itself, but also as to whether those letters really embodied the whole of the terms agreed upon by the parties. It was said that first by the words of the letters themselves, and secondly by reason of the evidence to be given, it had become a term of the contract that the whole carrying out of the contract was to be subject, as a condition precedent, to the approval of the title by the defendant's attorneys Messrs. Gregory and Moses, or rather one of them; and that inasmuch as that gentleman [922] rejected the title, that was conclusive, and the case could go no further. It was arranged that issues should be settled for the purpose of trying that matter now, and this was done.

"I have to say whether the view contended for is the true view of the contract. Oral evidence was given, and I admitted it because it was said that the effect of the oral evidence would be to show that the letter did not contain the whole of the contract between the parties. I may say at once that the oral evidence in my opinion conclusively shows that the letters contained the whole of the contract between the parties, and that the defendant himself, his attorney, and everybody else concerned in the case, acted on that view of matter. That being so, all I have to do is to construe the written documents.

"In this case the contract is a very peculiar one. In the majority of case a certain course is followed in sales of land. The title is investigated and is approved or rejected by the purchaser's solicitors. If the title is accepted, the conveyance is prepared and in due course executed the purchase money is paid at the time of execution, and when all that has been done the purchaser is entitled to possession; but this particular contract reverses the order of things. First, it is an express bargain that entry is to be given by a fixed date irrespective of the question whether the investigation of title was completed by that date or not. Then come the words upon which reliance is placed—'The title deeds to be sent to Messrs. Gregory and Moses, and on approval of the same the purchase money to be paid prompt.' What is said in this sentence is that the prompt payment of the purchase money without waiting for conveyance is to take place upon the approval of the title. To give them a further extent than that, and to construe them so as to make the carrying out of the contract in any form conditional upon the approval of Messrs. Gregory and Moses, would certainly be making them mean more than they actually say. The words do not appear in that part of the contract in which the principal terms are contained. The purchaser does not say ‘I hereby agree to take the house subject to the approval of the title by my solicitors.’ There is not a word about approval anywhere except in this particular passage. I think, therefore, the meaning of the contract is that the approval of the solicitors is, as stated [923] in that sentence, a condition precedent to the prompt payment of the purchase money without waiting for a conveyance. The case differs from the class of cases which have been relied on for the defendant, that is to say, from such cases as Hudson v. Buck (1), in which the purchase was made ‘subject to the approval of the title by the purchaser’s solicitor,’ and Hussey v. Horne Payne (2), in which the bargain again is made ‘subject to the title being approved by our solicitors.’ And it differs from a case in which I followed these two cases, Sreepal Mullick v. Ram Churn Nusker (3), where again it was expressly said that the sale and purchase should be subject to the approval of the title by the purchaser’s solicitors.

I entertain no doubt as to the true construction of this contract. That being so, it is unnecessary to consider other questions which have been raised. Had I taken another view, I should have had to consider how far the clause which made anything subject to the approval of Messrs. Gregory and Moses could apply in the event that has happened, viz., the dissolution of the partnership between those two gentlemen. I should further have had to consider whether the subsequent communications between the parties removed any difficulty arising from this circumstance. And, further, it is admitted that, if this clause were to be construed in the way contended for by the defendant, still the rejection by his attorney must be bona-fide, and his objections to the title reasonable; so that, if I had taken another view of the contract, I should have had to say whether, under the circumstances of this case, the objections were bona-fide and not unreasonable. But under the circumstances, and in the view I take, it is unnecessary for me to express any opinion on these points. The result is that there must be the usual reference to the Registrar as to title. The question of the costs will be reserved.”

From this decision the defendant appealed.

Mr. Evans (with him Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Acworth) for the appellant.—If there is a separate oral agreement apart from the agreement in writing, and not inconsistent with its terms, that may be proved; Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, prov. (2). The [924] defendant says that it was a term of the contract that the rejection of the title by his attorney should be conclusive. If this is so, the Court will not decree specific performance without a rectification of the contract in order that the real intention of the parties may be ascertained; Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 26 (a), 31 (2). The lower Court has treated these words “and on approval of the same, etc.” as fixing a punctum temporis for the payment of the purchase money. The question is, whether the defendant’s evidence, partly corroborated by that of Mr. Siddons, can be accepted.

Mr. Acworth followed on the same side.
Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Sale, for the respondent were not called upon.

The following authorities were referred to in the course of the arguments:—Fry on Specific Performance, 2nd ed., ss. 277, 488; Hudson v. Buck (1); Hussey v. Horne Payne (2); Sreegopal Mullick v. Ram Churn Nuskar (3); Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 91, 92, Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 26 (d), 31.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Prinsep and Pigot, JJ.):—

JUDGMENTS.

Petheram, C. J. (Prinsep, J., concurring).—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for the specific performance of a contract to purchase a house. The contract was in writing, and two points have been argued before us: first, that the defendant is entitled to give evidence to show that the written document does not accurately express what the contract between the parties was; secondly, that on the true construction of the written contract as it stands, the defendant was not liable to take the house unless his solicitors approved the title; that they had not done so, and consequently this action is not maintainable. The first point was taken before Mr. Justice Wilson, and he says:—"I may say at once that the oral evidence in my opinion conclusively shows that the letters contained the whole of the contract between the parties, and that the defendant himself, his attorney and everybody else concerned in the case acted on that view of the matter." [925] As to that, it is sufficient for me to say that I entirely agree with Mr. Justice Wilson in that view of the facts. The second question then resolves itself into one of the construction of the document, and on that question of construction there have been a variety of cases cited before us, which show that in a contract for the purchase of property where words such as "subject to the approval of our solicitor" are contained—that puts the solicitors in the position of persons who are to say whether the title is a good one or not. It is sufficient to say that this contract does not contain such words, and I do not think it is necessary for me to say anything more than that I agree with the view that Mr. Justice Wilson has taken of the contract. The result in my opinion is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs, and the case must go back to the Registrar for the ordinary enquiry as to title in accordance with the order of Mr. Justice Wilson.

Pigot, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the meaning of the contract, as unaffected by any of the considerations arising from the evidence which has been given, is that which has been attributed to it by the learned Judge in the original Court. If, on the other hand, the evidence in the case may be looked upon the grounds argued by Mr. Evans, and having reference to the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act and of the Specific Relief Act as referred to by him, then the safest guide we in that case could take would be, as it seems to me, the evidence of Mr. Siddons, who has stated the circumstances of the introduction into the contract of the interpolated words. It seems to me that, assuming the propriety of using that gentleman's evidence for this purpose, and giving to that evidence its fair and reasonable construction, and to the rest of the words of the document their fair meaning, the effect of the agreement certainly could not be carried further than is expressed in the words of Lord Justice Cairns in Hussey v. Horne Payne in L.R. 4, Appeal Cases, page 322, where he says:—"I am disposed to look upon the words as meaning nothing more than a guard against its being supposed that the title was to be accepted without investigation, as meaning in fact the title must be investigated and approved of in the usual way, which would be by the solicitor of the purchaser." In no way in which the case is to be looked at can it, I think, be properly held that it was the intention of the parties, or of either of them, that the bargain was to depend upon the unfettered discretion of Mr. Gregory.

I agree with the Chief Justice that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Norris and Mr. Justice Ghose.

Ramdhan Bhadra and another (Defendants) v. Ramkumar Dey and another (Plaintiffs).* [27th June, 1890.]

Limitation—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 184, sch. III, art. 3—Suit for possession by an occupancy ryot.

Having regard to the provisions of s. 184 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, the period of limitation for a suit for the recovery of land by an occupancy ryot is two years, as prescribed by art. 3, sch. III of the Act.

Saraswati Dasi v. Horitarun Chuckerbutti (1) followed.

[Diss., 7 C.W.N. 218; Rel., 11 Ind. Cas. 912 (913) = 7 N.L.R. 125; 21 Ind. Cas. 43, R., 31 C 647 (F.B.) = 8 C.W.N. 446; 17 C.L J. 316 (351) = 17 C.W.N. 889 (916) = 19 Ind. Cas. 793 (796); 9 C.W.N. 56 (59); 15 C.P.L.R. 125 (127).]

In this appeal the question was raised whether the period of limitation for a suit for the recovery of possession of land by a person claiming as an occupancy ryot was two years, as provided by art. 3, sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1835, or 12 years under the Limitation Act, 1877. For the purposes of this report the facts of the case and the arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment of Ghose, J.

Baboo Grish Chunder Chawdhury, for the appellants.
Baboo Dwarka Nath Chuckerbuti, for the respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (Norris and Ghose, JJ.):—

JUDGMENTS.

Ghose, J.—This is a suit to recover possession of certain lands under a jote right. The plaintiff's allegation is that he acquired a [927] right of occupancy in the lands by holding as a tenant for a long time, but that the defendants wrongfully dispossessed him therefrom on the 28th of Assin 1291, corresponding to the 13th October 1884; and the plaint asks that possession may be awarded to the plaintiff by establishing his jote right. The defendants, who are the landlords, deny the plaintiff's right, and set up the plea of limitation under art. 3, sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Both, the lower Courts have decreed the suit, bringing of opinion that the plaintiff has an occupancy right in the lands in suit, and that the defendants were not justified in evicting him. They have also held that the limitation applicable to the suit is not two years under art. 3 of sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the period of limitation applicable is two years, and not 12 years; and in support of this contention, a decision of a Division Bench of this Court (PRINSEP and HILL, JJ.) in Saraswati Dassi v. Horitarun Chuckerbutti (1) has been quoted. That decision was pronounced in a suit which was of a similar character to the suit now before us, and is to the effect that, although under the old rent law (Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 27), as expounded by the decisions of this Court, the suit could have been brought within 12 years from the date of dispossession, the title of the tenant being disputed and put in issue in the case, still, under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff has only two years to bring the suit.

It was, however, argued on the other side that the law under art. 3 of the 3rd Schedule of the Bengal Tenancy Act is substantially the same as it was under s. 27, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and that, therefore, the plaintiff having sought for a declaration of his title, and that title being disputed by the landlord, the suit is well within time, it having been instituted within 12 years from the date of the cause of action.

Section 27 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869 is as follows (omitting passages which are unimportant for the present question)—[928] “All suits to recover occupancy of any land, farm, or tenure, from which a ryot, farmer, or tenant has been illegally ejected by the person entitled to receive rent for the same, * * * * shall be commenced within the period of one year from the date of the accruing of the cause of action and not afterwards.” And it has been held in several cases by this Court that the said s. 27 refers only to possessory actions against the landlord, and not to a suit where title is at issue, and where the plaintiff seeks to have right declared and possession given in pursuance thereof; but that where the existence of the tenure is not disputed, and the plaintiff's original title as-tenant is not and never has been questioned, and where there is no question of title either raised in the suit or raised before the suit, the case is governed by s. 27, Bengal Act VIII of 1869—see Nistranee v. Kalee Pershad Doss Chowdhry (2); Asman Singh v. Obedooddeen (3); Dhurjobutty Chowdhraim v. Chamroo Mundul (4); Forbes v. Sree Lati jha (5); Joyntti Dassi v. Mahomed Ally Khan (6); Imam Boksh Mundul v. Momir Mondul (7); Srinath Battacharji v. Ram Rattan De (8) and Basant Ali v. Altak Hasen (9).

In the present case the title of the plaintiff as a tenant is disputed, and he seeks to establish his title and recover possession of what he claims to be his jote; and if we had to apply the law as it was expounded under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, there could be no doubt that the suit, having been instituted within 12 years from the cause of action, would be within time.

(1) 16 C. 741.  (2) 21 W. R. 53.  (3) 23 W.R. 460.

But then, what we have to consider is whether the case is not governed by art. 3, sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

That article runs thus:—“To recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as an occupancy ryot,” “two years” from ‘the date of dispossession.” And s. 184 of the Act provides that “the suits, appeals, and applications specified in sch. III annexed to this Act shall be instituted and made within the time prescribed in that schedule for them respectively.”

The decision in Saraswati Dasi v. Horitarun Chuckerbutti (1) is a direct authority upon the question we have to decide in this case; and it seems to me that we ought to adopt it, unless we are clearly of opinion that it is erroneous.

There is a marked difference of phraseology in the two corresponding sections of the two Acts. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27, speaks of “suits to recover occupancy of any land, farm, or tenure from which a ryot, farmer or tenant has been illegally ejected;” whereas art. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act speaks of suits “to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as an occupancy ryot.” The former Act referred to tenants of every class, and contemplated cases where the tenant being illegally ejected would be entitled to recover the occupancy of the land, that is to say, as has been held by this Court, it referred to possessory actions by tenants whether they be ryots having or not having rights of occupancy or whether they be middlemen; whereas the new Act refers to occupancy ryots alone and contemplates suits to recover possession of land claimed by a plaintiff as an occupancy ryot, i.e., where, by the very nature of the action, the ryot has to set out his title to the land claimed. It can hardly be, therefore, said that the Legislature intended simply to substitute, as it was contended on behalf of the respondent, the period of two years for that of one year, as provided by s. 27 of Act VIII of 1869. The words of art. 3 of the new Act would rather seem to indicate, although the matter is not very clear, that all suits for recovery of possession, wherein an occupancy right may be claimed, are to be governed by the limitation prescribed in that article. I observe that the Select Committee to which the Bengal Tenancy Bill was referred for consideration, on the 14th March 1884, referring to “Limitation,” reported as follows:—“We consider that a moderately short period of limitation should be fixed for the recovery by an occupancy ryot of land, comprised in his holding and, following the precedent presented by s. 81 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1881, we have fixed the period at two years from the date on which he is ejected, adding a proviso to guard against the revival of causes of action already barred. And this was adopted by the Legislature. It may [980] seem somewhat remarkable that, on the face of the various rulings of this Court with reference to s. 27 of the old Act, the Legislature intended to curtail, greatly to the disadvantage of the ryot, the period of limitation from 12 years to two years; and it may seem equally remarkable that it is only in cases of occupancy ryots that this curtailment has been made, and not in regard to tenants of any other class; but what we have to do is simply to administer the law as we find it.

(1) 16 C. 741.
A contention was raised before us by the learned vakeel for the respondent to the effect that, the cause of action having arisen before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, the defendant would be entitled to bring h's suit within 12 years, that being the time within which he might have sued if the Bengal Tenancy Act had not been passed; but I am unable to accept this contention as correct. Section 184 of the Bengal Tenancy Act declares that suits specified in Sch. III of the Act shall be instituted within the time prescribed in that schedule. And there is no saving clause for suits in which the cause of action had arisen before that Act was passed.

Another contention was raised before us to the effect that the suit as laid was not a suit against the defendants as landlord, but as a person having no title whatsoever, and, therefore, it did not fall within art. 3 of the Act. But it seems to me that, the defendant being in fact the landlord, it does not matter whether the plaintiff described him as such in the plaint or not.

For these reasons I think that the decree of the lower Court is wrong and should be reversed with costs.

Norris, J.—I concur in reversing decree of the lower appellate Court.

ORIGINAL CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Wilson.

QUEEN-EMpress v. SOLOMON.

[23rd July, 1890.]

The putting in, as evidence on his behalf, of any documentary evidence by an accused person during the cross-examination of the witnesses [931] for the prosecution and before he is asked under s. 289 if he means to adduce evidence, does not give the prosecution a right to reply.

Empress v. Kaliprosonno Das (1) followed. Queen-Empress v. Venkata pathi (2) dissented from.

[Disso., 14 A. 212 (216).]

The accused was charged with forgery of a valuable security, forgery, using as genuine a forged document, having the same in his possession with intent to use it as genuine, forgery for the purpose of cheating, and cheating. The offences were alleged to have been committed in connection with certain loans obtained by the accused from the Hong-Kong and Shanghai Bank on the security of Government opium passes alleged to have been forged, such loans having been made in the months of March and April 1890.

The Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. Pugh) and Mr. T. A. Apcar, for the prosecution.

Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. Allen, and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, for the defence.

Mr. Hyde, for the Hong-Kong and Shanghai Bank.

(1) 14 C. 245.  (2) 11 M. 339.
During the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, various documents were proved and put in as evidence on behalf of the defence. These documents consisted of numerous genuine opium passes, cheques, and entries in the books of the Hong-Kong Bank and the Bank of Bengal, showing the loan transactions of the accused with both banks for the years 1888 and 1889. Documents were also put in to show the transactions between the accused and one Nursing Dass, a dealer in opium, who was alleged by the defence to be dead, and whose name appeared on some of the forged passes as alleged purchaser of the opium they purported to cover. Evidence was also given in cross-examination to show the number of lots of opium purchased and shipped by the accused during the months of January to April 1890, and of the number of lots purchased in those months by the firm of which Nursing Dass was a partner.

After the close of the case for the prosecution, on the accused being asked whether he intended to adduce any evidence, Mr. Woodroffe replied in the negative. Mr. Pugh thereupon stated [932] that if he should deem it necessary, after hearing what use the defence proposed to make of the evidence referred to above, he should claim a right to reply on behalf of the Crown. Mr. Woodroffe submitted that the Crown could not have a right to reply, and the Court intimated that it would be fairer to both parties to have the question decided at that stage than to leave it over to be decided after Counsel had addressed the jury for the accused.

Mr. Pugh.—It has always been the invariable rule in England, and is still the practice, that when documentary evidence is put in on behalf of the accused, the prosecution is entitled to the right of reply (Roscoe, p. 220). Here s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code expressly provides for the difficulty experienced in England of an accused being forced under certain circumstances to put in as his own evidence the deposition of a witness taken before the Committing Magistrate. In this case there has been a large mass of evidence, of which it is difficult to see the relevancy, and until the prosecution know the purpose for which it has been put in, and the use intended to be made of it, it is impossible for me to tell what bearing it has on the case and deal with it. The Crown will thus be placed at a considerable disadvantage and it may result in a miscarriage of justice. The decisions on the point of the various High Courts are conflicting. The first reported case in this Court, Hurry Churn Chuckerbutty v. The Empress (1) is clearly distinguishable. The Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerji (2) decided by Field, J., was the first case which really interfered with the former practice of this Court, and that was decided upon the erroneous supposition that the Code of Criminal Procedure is a penal statute. That case was followed by Trevelyan, J., in The Empress v. Kaliprosanno Dass (3), but, as there pointed out, it was dissented from and not followed by Norris, J., in a case which is unreported. On the other hand, the Madras High Court in The Queen-Empress v. Venkatapathi (4) have decided the other way, and have refused to follow the decision in The Queen-Empress v. Grees Chunder Banerji (2). I am also informed that it is the practice of the Allahabad High Court under such circumstances to allow a reply, though there are no [933] reported decisions of that Court. I contend, therefore, that the decisions of this Court to the contrary are erroneous, and that the Code has not taken away the right of reply which existed and had been the practice of the Court under the High Courts Criminal Procedure Act (X of

(1) 10 C. 140, (2) 10 C. 1024, (3) 14 C. 245, (4) 11 M. 339.
1875) before the Code was made applicable to it, and that after what has happened in this case the Crown is entitled to reply.

Mr. Woodroffe was not called on.

The judgment of the Court was as follows:

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—The question raised now is one which I think I am bound to answer at this stage, in fairness to those who have the responsibility of conducting the case for the prosecution and for the defence, namely, whether, in the events which have happened down to this stage, the Crown is entitled to a reply. This seems to me to depend solely on the provisions of s. 292 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Independently of authority I should have thought that it did not give the Crown the right of reply. It only gives the right when the accused has stated, in reply to the question put to him under s. 289, that he means to adduce evidence. I further think it is my duty to follow the decisions of this Court rather than that of the Madras High Court. I hold, therefore, that up to this stage of the case nothing has happened which gives the Crown a right of reply.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

PIRTHI PAL KUNWAR (Plaintiff) v. GUMAN KUNWAR AND ANOTHER (Defendants). [13th March, 1890.]

Declaratory decree, Suit for—Declaratory decree not obtainable by absolute right—Discretion of Court.

It is discretionary with a Court to grant or to refuse a declaratory decree with regard to the circumstances—Sreenarain Mitter v. Kishen Soondery Dass (1) referred to and followed.

[934] A talukhdar died, leaving a widow; also a son who, having succeeded as talukhdar, died childless. The son's widow, being in possession, sued for a declaration that an adoption by the father's widow, to the father, was void and ineffectual. The ground of suit was that, at some time or other after the death of the plaintiff, the person alleging himself to have been adopted might obtain the talukhdari, unless his adoption should now be negatived.

With regard to all the circumstances, the refusal of such a declaration was approved by their Lordships. If the person alleged to have been adopted should sue hereafter, the question would be decided whether he was validity adopted or not.

APPEAL from a decree (27th July 1883) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree (17th December 1834) of the District Judge of Sitapur.

The question on this appeal was whether the appellate Court below had rightly reversed a decree declaring that the adoption of the second defendant by the first was invalid, and whether the appellant was entitled to have such a declaration made. Ratan Singh, talukdar of Katesar, in the Sitapur district and tehsil, died in 1837, leaving a son, Raja Sheo Baksh, and a widow, Rani Guman Kunwar, now the first defendant. Raja Sheo Baksh died in 1869, having, as alleged, made provision for the maintenance of the first defendant, and leaving a widow, the plaintiff.

On the 14th December 1883 Rani Guman Kunwar executed a document, registered the next day. This recited that Raja Ratan Singh had by will directed Guman to adopt a son to him, which she had accordingly done by adopting Maneshwar Baksh, to whom she bequeathed all her property.

On the 25th December 1884 Pirthi Pal brought this suit against Rani Guman Kunwar and Maneshwar Baksh to have it declared that this adoption was void. She obtained from the District Judge a declaration that, after the plaintiff's death, the succession would take place as if no such document as that of 14th December 1883 and no adoption had been made. The Judge refused to deal with any question as to the inheritance to Pirthi Pal's own property.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioner reversed the above decree and dismissed the suit with costs, giving judgment as follows:

"The first question which I have in this appeal to decide is whether I should be exercising a wise discretion in allowing the decree to stand. And I think that I should not. The District [935] Judge writes:—'It is an open question as to who will succeed to the property or the estate of the defendant No. 1 upon her demise. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain with any degree of accuracy at the present moment what would constitute the estate of the defendant No. 1 when she dies. How are we to know and how could we determine the question? It would be equally difficult to determine who is the next reversioner. Such a question could not be determined now.' And again:—'The defendant denies any intention to prejudice the plaintiff's interests, the object which the defendant has in view being merely, it is said, to provide an heir and successor to her own property. The will is somewhat ambiguous in its terms, and may admit of different interpretations being placed upon it.' The plaint is not drawn distinctly either under s. 39, or under s. 42 of 'The Specific Relief Act, 1877,' and Counsel for the plaintiff admits his inability to confine himself to either section of the Act. The plaintiff could obtain no immediate relief under her decree, and her rights will be in no way prejudiced by delay.

"In these circumstances, the remarks of their Lordships in Sreenarain Mitter v. Kishen Soondery Dassee (1), although made with reference to the law which preceded Act I of 1877, appear to me to be of force.'"

The Judicial Commissioner then quoted the passage that is given in the judgment below.

On this appeal,

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the appellant, argued that the decision of the Judicial Committee referred to by the Appellate Court below did not support his conclusion in the present cases. The facts here were sufficient to show that the Court of first instance had exercised a sound judicial discretion in granting a declaratory decree.

He referred to Thayammal v. Venkatarama Aiyyan (1); Jagadamba Chowdhvani v. Dakhina Mohun (2); Sreenarain Mitter v. Kishen Soondery Dassee (3).

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

SIR B. PEACOCK.—The circumstances of this case are very fully stated by the Judicial Commissioner in his judgment, and their Lordships have very few remarks to make beyond those which the Judicial Commissioner made when he delivered that judgment. He referred to the case of Sreenarain Mitter v. Kishen Soondery Dassee (3), and read the remarks which had been made by the Judicial Committee in that case. Amongst those remarks it was said: "It is not a matter of absolute right to obtain a declaratory decree. It is discretionary with the Court to grant it or not, and in every case the Court must exercise a sound judgment as to whether it is reasonable or not, under the circumstances of the case, to grant the relief prayed for. There is so much more danger than here of harassing and vexatious litigation that the Courts in India ought to be most careful that mere declaratory suits be not converted into a new and mischievous source of litigation."

The Judicial Commissioner, in exercising that judgment which the Judicial Committee had suggested ought to be adopted by the Courts in India, thought that this was not a case in which, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, he ought to grant a declaratory decree, or that a declaratory decree ought to have been granted by the Court of first instance, and he therefore reversed the decision of that Court and refused a declaratory decree. It appears to their Lordships that the Judicial Commissioner exercised a very sound judgment in what he did. All that is suggested by the learned Counsel on the part of the appellant in support of a declaratory decree is this—that, at some time or another after the death of the present plaintiff, the person who according to the plaintiff's contention is not an adopted son may by some means, either by an act of the Government or otherwise, obtain possession as an adopted son. The only object, therefore, of having a declaratory decree is to prevent him being put into possession. Their Lordships cannot assume that the Government, if petitioned to put the person claiming to be an adopted son into possession, would do so unless they saw that he had a right to that possession. The [937] officers of Government would in ordinary course, if there were any doubt as to the title, refer the parties to the Civil Court.

If the person claiming to have been adopted brings an action to enforce his title, the question will be investigated whether he was validly adopted or not.

JIBUN NISSA AND OTHERS (Defendants) v. ASGAR ALI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs). [14th March, 1890.]

Deed, Construction of—Deeds not intended to operate according to their tenor—Nullity of transaction apart from fraud.

Documents, principally a potta and a kobala, executed between a Mohomedan pardanashin lady and one of her relations purported to represent, the one a putni lease from her of her lands, and the other a sale of her house, and ground, from the date of the execution. That she received the consideration was not proved, but had it passed it would have been distributed between the two deeds, which formed part of one and the same transaction. From the Acts of the parties it was established that her intent was to deprive her heirs, not herself, and that she had no intention to part with the property in presenti, as the deeds represented that she did. Held, that, the latter not being intended to operate according to their tenor, the whole transaction was a nullity.

[Ref. 2 O.C. 149 (170); Rel. upon, 25 M.L.J. 290 (293) = (1913) M.W.N. 650 (652) = 20 Ind. Cas 924 (926).]

Appeal from a decree (16th August 1886) of the High Court reversing a decree (16th July 1886) of a Division Bench, affirming a decree (22nd April 1885) of the Second Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs District.

The plaintiffs, now respondents, were the nephews of Delrus Banu Begum deceased on 16th January 1883, and were her heirs by Shiah-law. The question raised was whether she had defeated the [938] plaintiffs’ title by transferring the property belonging to her, and in her possession, consisting of three parcels of revenue-paying land in the 24-Pergunnahs and of a dwelling-house, to her grandnephew Nawab Mohomed Mehti, who died on the 28th April 1879, and whose heirs the defendants were. The latter, when sued by the right heirs of Delrus, who was of advanced age, set up the following title. They alleged that Delrus, having long been in litigation with the plaintiffs, especially in the suit Delrus Banu Begum v. Nawab Saiyad Ashgar Ali Khan (1), for the expenses of which suit she wanted money, was desirous that they should not inherit her estate, but that it should go to Mahomed Mehti, that accordingly, on the 3rd August 1876, in consideration of a payment of Rs. 6,000, and a yearly rent of Rs. 647, she executed a putni potta of the three parcels of revenue-paying land in favour of Mahomed Mehti, receiving from him a corresponding kabuliyat; and that on the next day, the 4th August 1876, she executed to Mahomed Mehti, for a consideration of Rs. 6,000, a kobala of the dwelling-house, with ground adjoining; taking from him a lease for her life, at an annual rent of Rs. 2,647 of the three parcels granted in putni, and also a lease of the house and ground for her life at a monthly rent of Rs. 25. There was no question as to the making of these instruments, which were all registered; but the plaint alleged that in August 1876 Delrus was incapable of attending to business, and that, if the consideration did pass, which was doubtful, the execution was obtained by undue influence. The plaintiffs also alleged that Delrus did not understand the nature of the transactions, never intending that there should be an actual transfer. They alleged that possession continued as before, and that the rents reserved were never paid.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the consideration was inadequate; yet that, as the act of the owner, to carry out her own objects, the attempted transfer of the putni interest in the land was good against the heirs of Delrus. As to the alleged sale of the house, he held that the want of consideration for the deed of sale was against its operating. He therefore made a decree that the plaintiffs were entitled to obtain possession of the [939] house and ground appurtenant, but not of the lands granted in putni to Mahomed Mehti. On the appeal of both parties, heard by a Division Bench (Petheram, C. J., and Ghose, J.) the Chief Justice expressed an opinion, at which also, on a further appeal under the 15th section of the Letters Patent, the High Court (Prinsep, Wilson and Beverley, J.J.) arrived; his colleague on the Division Bench differing.

On the appeal under the Letters Patent the High Court's judgment was delivered by Prinsep, J., who was of opinion that the putni transaction was not separable from the matter of the kobala, and who, after going through the evidence, gave this decision:—

"The conclusion at which we arrive is, that the old lady, Delrus Banu Begum, executed the putni without knowing or being told the correct nature of the transaction, the manner in which it affected her rights, or the sacrifice which she was making; but that the knowledge which she should have acquired was kept from her by Mehti and his dependents; that she never actually received the full amount of the consideration; that it is not proved that she relinquished any portion of it; that as the primary object of the transaction was to obtain at least Rs. 12,000 there is every reason to believe that if she had known that the full consideration had not been paid, she would not have executed the deeds; and consequently that the putni was executed under undue influence and in fraud. But this transaction may also be regarded from another point of view, viz., that no effect was given, or intended to be given, to the transaction, that it was a mere sham and therefore inoperative."

Wilson, J., concurring and also doubting whether any consideration had been proved, to have passed, added:—

"What, then, is the consequence? I have already shown that, in my opinion, apart from any actual fraud, from the nature of the relation between the parties, the inadequacy of the price and the absence of any independent advice, the transaction cannot stand. Further, I think that if this transaction were really intended to be what it is represented to be on paper, there was, in addition, a gross actual fraud. Of the consideration, of Rs. 12,000 which the old lady is alleged to have received, certainly half she never got, and very probably nothing.

[940] "On the other hand, it is equally possible that things may not have been at all so bad as they look from that point of view. I think they were not so, and my reason is this. I do not think there was ever any intention on the part of any party to that transaction that it should have any such operation as the deeds represent. As I have said, I think the lady intended to deprive her nephews of their inheritance if she could, and she wanted money. I cannot see anywhere any satisfactory evidence that she intended to deprive herself then and there of her house absolutely, and of the whole almost of her valuable interests in the zemindari properties, in favour of Mehdi. A very important piece of evidence on that subject is the deposition of Gunga Churn. He tells us what was her intention at the time. He says, 'I know the plaintiffs in this case. She was on terms of enmity with them since the wakf case, and she told me repeatedly "They are my jain mokhalef (bitter enemies)."' Further on, 'I asked her that havng regard to the income of the property, I see the putni is granted for a very low amount. On this the said, 'I have two reasons for granting this putni. First, I require funds for the Privy Council case, and no one wants to purchase the property on account of the pendency of that suit, and they have long been my enemies. They are my heirs after my death, and it is my intention that they may not get my estate. Mahomed Mehdi is my grandson, and I like him, and it is for this reason also that I make the grant for a reduced value.' At the time of the execution of that deed there was a decree in execution against Delrus Banu Begum. At that time she required money to pay off that debt also.' That shows an intention to deprive her heirs, not an intention to deprive herself. Then, when we compare this with what happened afterwards, and find that this deed was never in any part of it acted upon, but that all subsequent transactions proceeded on the footing of the property being heirs, and not on the footing of what appeared on the face of the document, I think the proper inference is, that the lady never had any real intention to part in praesenti with the property in the manner the defendants represent, just as I think that there is no satisfactory evidence to show that she ever received any proper consideration. It follows, therefore, that the whole transaction must be regarded as a nullity.

[941] "But another view of the case has been put before us by Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry. He contended, that even if it be held that the transaction was not intended to have present operation in the full sense of the term, it was at least clear that the lady had a strong desire to benefit Mehdi after her death, and so we were asked to give effect to the transaction as one by which she was to retain the whole benefit for her life, and Mehdi was to take it after her death. Now, in order to give effect to this contention, it must be held, that although, under the terms of the deeds, Mehdi was to have a vested interest from the dates of their execution, in fact he was not to have it till after the death of Delrus. There are several objections to this view: First, it would directly contradict the deeds; secondly, it would conflict with the case put forward by the defendants themselves in their pleadings and evidence; and thirdly, under the authority of the decisions of the Privy Council on this subject, it would seem that there are very strong reasons for saying that it would conflict with the rules of Mahomedan law (1). I therefore concur in the

Mr. R. V. Doyle, for the appellant, argued that as to the putni grant, and the consideration for it, the first Court was right in dealing with it as separate from the questions arising as to the sale of the house. There was no reason on the evidence for supposing that Delrus did not execute all the documents with full knowledge of their effect; or that she was deceived. She wished to benefit Mahomed Mehdi. No particulars of fraud were either proved, or alleged, and in the absence of fraud, the inadequacy of the consideration would not invalidate the transaction, so far as to prevent its being carried out, according to the intention of Delrus upon her death in 1879. This, at all events, applied to the putni.

Mr. J. D. Mayne and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the respondents, were called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch,—The respondents in this appeal brought a suit against the appellants, in which they alleged that Delrus Banu Begum died possessed of considerable property, and that they were [942] according to the Shiah law, of which sect the family were members her heirs, and as such were entitled to the estate left by her. The defence depended upon a transaction which took place on the 3rd and 4th of August 1876.

In order to explain that transaction it may be stated that Mahomed
Mehdi, the principal party to it, was the grandson of a brother of Delrus Begum. The nature of it was that Delrus Begum, who was said to be wishing to raise money, sent for Mehdi, and on his coming an agreement was made by which he was to pay her Rs. 12,000, and to receive in return a putni of her estate, with the exception of the house in which she lived, and about 20 bighas of land. He was also to have a kobala or deed of sale of the house and premises, and the Rs. 12,000 were equally distributed between the putni and the kobala. It is apparent from the evidence that this was one transaction. The putni was executed on the 3rd of August 1876, and the kobala on the following day. The putni states that out of 268 bighas of land in holding No. 186, Delrus Begum had her dwelling-house and 20 bighas of land; and that she had issued a notification for letting out in putni the 248 bighas, and that Mehdi, having applied to take the land in putni, she granted him a putni on receipt of a bonus of Rs. 6,000 at a determined and fixed annual rental of Rs. 647-14-10 gundahs in respect of her proprietary right in the 248 bighas. It provides that out of that rental he is to pay the annual Government revenue of Rs. 347-14-10 gundahs, and to pay to her Rs. 300 per annum as profits for her proprietary right.

By the kobala Delrus Begum sold to Mehdi for Rs. 6,000 her rights in about 20 bighas of land belonging to her dwelling-house, together with the pucca buildings and garden with trees, &c.

On the same date, the 4th of August, Mehdi executed an ijara by which he granted to Delrus Begum all his rights in the land included in the putni and kobala, at a rent of Rs. 2,647-14 annas 10 pies. This is the amount of rent Delrus Begum was to receive under the putni, with Rs. 2,000

(1) Abdul Wahid Khan v. Nuran Bibi, 12 I. A. 91; also reported in 11 C. 597, and see cases cited at p. 602 of that report.
in addition, and it provided that if Delrus Begum failed to pay the rent due on account of any instalment on the first day of the succeeding month, she should be liable to pay interest for the overdue instalment at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem, and if she failed to pay the rents due on account of three [943] successive instalments, her ijara rights were to cease on the first of the fourth month, and she says:—"I shall not make any default in the payment of any instalment; and if any land be taken by Government, I will not get the compensation thereof—that is, any portion of the value of it."

There were two questions raised by the defence—first as to the putni, and next as to the kobala. The case has been before five Judges of the High Court, and the Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, and all those Judges came to the conclusion, with regard to the kobala, that it was not intended to be a real transaction. It has not been contested by Mr. Doone, who has argued the case with great care and ability, and has called their Lordships' attention to every portion of the evidence which might assist the case of his clients, that this is a true finding.

That is very important with reference to the putni, because it was evidently one transaction, and it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to come to the conclusion that if that part of the transaction was altogether an unreal one, and that it was never intended that it should operate as a sale, the other part, that is the putni, was intended to be a real transaction. The consideration is said to have been Rs. 12,000; but it is obvious that at least Rs. 6,000 were never paid, and were not intended to be paid, or to have any effect as purchasing the property. With regard to the putni, the case was presented in the High Court as being a case of a fraud practised upon Delrus Begum; and it seems to have been treated in that way by some of the learned Judges. Their Lordships see no ground for thinking that any fraud was practised upon the lady. The defect in the transaction is that the intention on her part was not that which is apparent on the face of the deeds—in fact, that the deeds do not represent really what was intended. The evidence has been very fully examined, and it is not necessary to say more than that their Lordships, after the full argument which has been addressed to them on behalf of the appellants, have come to the conclusion that, as regards the result of the case, they agree in the judgment which has been given by the learned Judges of the High Court on the appeal from the two Judges who differed in opinion. They agree in that result for the reasons which were given by Mr. Justice Wilson towards the conclusion of his judgment, [944] namely, that the deeds were not intended to operate according to their tenor.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court of the 16th August 1886, and to dismiss the appeal; and the appellants will pay the costs of it.

In a suit to recover money due upon certain promissory notes executed between the 14th December 1885 and the 16th March 1886, the defendant pleaded (inter alia) minority, and alleged that by an order of the Civil Court the Collector had been appointed his guardian and manager of his estate under Act XL of 1838; that on the 6th December, when he was nineteen years of age, his estate had been released by the Court of Wards and was made over to his father on the 17th December; that on the 30th December the District Judge held that he was still a minor, and appointed a manager of his estate, and that the District Judge's order had been upheld on appeal by the High Court.

Held, that there was no evidence that the guardian of the person or property of the defendant had ever been appointed within the meaning of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), and as the defendant was not under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards at the time of execution of the promissory notes, he was then no longer a minor, but sui juris and competent to enter into a binding contract.

Held, that the Collector is not a Court of Justice within the meaning of s. 3 of the Majority Act. A Collector appointed under s. 12 of [1845] Act XL of 1858 cannot properly be styled the guardian of a minor's property.

Held, that under s. 3 of the Majority Act the disability of minority only continues so long as the Court of Wards retains charge of a minor's property and no longer.

Rudra Prokash Misser v. Bhola Nath Mukherjee (1) referred to and commented on.

Held, also that an agent may be impliedly authorized within the meaning of s. 20 of the Limitation Act to make a payment of interest or principal before the expiration of the period prescribed.

[Expl., 36 C. 768 = 13 C.W.N. 643 = 1 Ind. Cas. 724 ; R., 17 A. 578 = (1891) A.W.N. 118 ; 21 B. 281 (282).]

This was a suit by the brothers and the minor sons (by their guardian and next friend) of one Muddun Mohun Lal, deceased, to recover from the defendant the sum of Rs. 7,881, being the principal Rs. 5,800 and interest Rs. 2,081, alleged to be owing to the plaintiff's firm upon ten on-demand rokas or promissory notes executed on various dates between the 14th December 1885 and the 16th March 1886 in favour of Muddun Mohun Lal, one of the rokas being executed by one Sital Prosad Misser, the amukhtar of the defendant, and the remainder by the defendant himself. Various sums, as the plaintiffs alleged, had been paid upon the first seven rokas on account of interest on the 15th Palgoon 1293 F. S. (corresponding with the 5th February 1886), so that no question of limitation could arise.

The defendant in his return statement pleaded minority; that the loans had been raised by Sital Prosad Misser without his authority upon blank sheets of paper executed by him, and that Sital Prosad had no authority from him to pay interest; that he had not received the consideration for the rokas from Sital Prosad; and that the first five rokas were barred by limitation. In support of the defence upon the ground of minority the following facts were relied upon by the defendant. It was alleged that under an order of the District Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 1st September 1873, the Collector of the district was appointed manager to the estate of the defendant, who was then an infant, having been born on the 19th April 1866. On the 6th December 1885 the defendant ceased to be a ward of Court. On the 17th December his estate was made over to his father under s. 65 of the Court of Wards' Act (Bengal Act IX of 1879). On [946] the 30th December the defendant applied to the District Judge of Bhagulpore to be appointed guardian of his minor brother, Dharam Prokash. The Judge rejected the application, being of opinion that the defendant was still a minor, and by an order of the same date appointed one Bhola Nath Mukherjee manager of the defendant's estate. The High Court, on appeal, in the case of Rudra Prokash Misser v. Bhola Nath Mukherjee (1) held, the Collector having been appointed guardian of the defendant's estate under Act XL of 1858, the defendant must by virtue of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) continue to be a minor until he reached the age of twenty-one, whether the original guardian continued to act or not. It was admitted that the defendant was nineteen years and four months old on the 4th December 1885.

The Subordinate Judge decided in the defendant's favour upon all the points raised and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff's appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Woodroffe (with him Mr. R. E. Twidal and Baboo Saligram Singh), for the appellants.

Mr. Sandel and Babbo Kishori Lal Goswami, for the respondent.

The following authorities were referred to in the course of the arguments:—Act XL of 1858, ss. 4, 12; Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 3; Court of Wards' Act (Bengal Act IX of 1879), ss. 7—11, 20, 65; Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 11, 56; Rudra Prokash Misser v. JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (Petheram, C. J., and Rampini, J.) was delivered by Rampini, J.—The plaintiffs sue the defendant for the sum of Rs. 5,800 due as principal and for the sum of Rs. 2,081 due as interest on ten rokas or promissory notes, nine of which were executed by the defendant, and one of which was executed by [947] one Sital Prosad Misser, the ammukhtar or general agent of the defendant, between the 22nd Aughran and 26th Falagoon 1293 Fusli, i.e., the 14th December 1885 and 16th March 1886.

The answer of the defendant is (1) that he was a minor at the time of the execution of these rokas; (2) that he signed the rokas on blank sheets of paper, which he handed over to Sital Prosad, and that he himself received only Rs. 2,000 out of the Rs. 5,800 alleged to have been paid to him on them; (3) that the plaintiffs' claim on five of these rokas is barred by limitation; and (4) that Sital Prosad had no authority from him to borrow money or pay interest on his behalf.

The lower Court has found all these pleas in favour of the defendant, and the plaintiffs now appeal and contend that the findings of the Subordinate Judge are wrong.

We proceed to deal with his findings, seriatim, and, first, with his finding that the defendant was a minor at the time of the execution of these rokas.

It is admitted that the defendant was nineteen years and four months old at the time of the execution of the rokas, but it is said that, notwithstanding this fact, he was then a minor in consequence of the provisions of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) which prescribe that any person of whose person or property a guardian has been or shall be appointed by any Court of Justice shall not attain his majority until he shall have completed the age of 21, and a decision of this Court, Rudra Prokash Misser v. Bhola Nath Mukherjee (1), has been cited in which the question of the majority of this very defendant was at issue and in which it was decided that he did not attain his majority until the age of 21. But the present plaintiffs were not parties to that case, and therefore we cannot regard the decision in the case of Rudra Prokash Misser v. Bhola Nath Mukherjee (1) as more than a legal precedent for the principle that when a guardian has once been appointed to a minor under the provisions of Act XL of 1858, the disability of infancy will last till the age of 21, whether the original guardian continue to act or not. To enable this ruling to be used as evidence against the plaintiffs in this case, it is incumbent on the defendant to prove in this case the facts on which that decision was passed, and this the defendant has failed to do. He has not, in our opinion, in any way proved that any guardian of his person or property ever has been appointed by a Court of Justice under the provisions of Act XL of 1858. It has no doubt been said that a guardian of his property was appointed by the Judge of Bhagulpore on the 1st September 1873, inasmuch as on that date the Judge of Bhagulpore ordered the Collector (presumably of Monghyr), under s. 12, Act XL of 1858, to take charge of the defendant's property. But, in the first place, there is no legal evidence in this case of the Judge of Bhagulpore's having passed any such order. The evidence on this point consists of two returns submitted by the Collector of Monghyr to the Commissioner of Bhagulpore, the first of which is without date, and the second of which is dated the 20th March 1886, and which have been marked Exhibits C1 and C2 respectively. In these it is recited that on the 1st September 1873 the Judge of Bhagulpore directed the Collector, under s. 12, Act XL of 1858, to take charge of the estate in question. But, strictly speaking, this is not legal evidence of the Judge having passed any such order. If he did pass such an order, the order itself, or an attested copy of it, should have been produced, and not merely a recital by another officer that such was the case, there being nothing to show how that officer, became cognizant of the alleged order of the Judge.

In the second place, we do not think that, even if the Collector was appointed by the Judge under s. 12, Act XL of 1858, to take charge of the defendant's property, it can be said that a guardian of his property was appointed within the meaning of s. 3 of Act IX of 1875. We think that the guardian there referred to must be the guardian of the person and the administrator of the property of a minor which (whom) the Judge has power to appoint under the provisions of s. 7 of Act XL of 1858. It is to be observed that in s. 12 of Act XL of 1858 the Collector is not styled the guardian of the person or property of the minor, whose property he is appointed to take charge of; but, on the contrary, he is authorized to appoint some other person or persons to be the manager of the property and the guardian of the person of the minor. Now, there is no evidence whatever in this case to show that any such manager or guardian of the defendant’s property or person was appointed by the Collector by virtue of the order of the Judge passed on the 1st September 1873, and if there had been, this would not have brought the defendant within the purview of s. 3 of the Majority Act, for the Collector is not a Court of Justice.

We of course have not failed to notice that in the case of Rudra Prokash Misser v. Bhola Nath Mukherjee (1), the Collector has been spoken of as the guardian of the defendant’s property, but the question as to whether a Collector appointed under s. 12, Act XL of 1858, can properly be styled the guardian of a minor’s property, seems never to have been raised or considered in that case. We therefore do not think that this point can be held to have been decided in that case, and hence we do not feel ourselves bound by that decision on this point.

Then, it has been said that the defendant was a minor, because his estate was at one time under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards; but it is clear from the terms of s. 3 of the Majority Act that the disability of minority only continues as long as the Court of Wards retains charge of the minor’s property, and no longer; and it is admitted and shown in this case that the defendant’s property was released by the Court of Wards on the 6th December 1885, i.e., before the execution by the defendant of the first of the series of rokas sued on in this suit.

For these reasons we think that between the 14th December 1885 and the 16th March 1886, the defendant in this case was not a minor, but sui jurs, and competent to enter into a binding contract.

Then, turning to the facts of the case, we feel no doubt that the defendant executed nine of the rokas, now sued on (which indeed he does not deny) and got the full amount of the consideration mentioned in them, as well as the Rs. 200 paid on the roka of the 15th Falgoon 1293, which was executed for him by his admitted general agent and manager, Sital Prosad, who swears he executed it with the defendant’s authority. We entirely disbelieve the defendant’s statement that he signed blank sheets of paper and entrusted them to his agent Sital Prosad, who handed him over only Rs. 2,000 for them. The evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs shows that the defendant came in person with Sital Prosad and got the money himself on all occasions but one, and the notes themselves, except Exhibit No. X, show that the amounts of the loans are written on them just above or below the signatures evidently by the same hand as affixed the signatures to them. On this point the defendant says:—“In some blank chittis I sent through Sital Prosad, I noted the amount to be borrowed, in others not.” The rokas, however, show that this was done on all the rokas, except Exhibit X, signed by the defendant himself. This being so, we cannot believe that the defendant did not get the money. But even if he did not when he gave Sital Prosad authority to get the money

(1) 12 C. 612.

from the plaintiffs for him, as he says he did, if his agent did not give it to him, he is liable to the plaintiffs for the amounts paid to his agent on his account with his assent and at his instance. There seems no doubt that the money was borrowed partly to meet the expenses of a case the defendant was carrying on in the High Court, partly to pay the Government revenue due on the defendant's estate, and partly to defray the expenses of the Murhan ceremony of his brother.

There remains the question as to whether the suit is any way barred by limitation. It is admitted that if the payment of interest on the 15th Falgoon 1293 is proved, then the suit is not barred with regard to any of the rokas. Now, we feel no doubt that the interest on the first five rokas was paid, as alleged by Sital Prosad. We see no reason to discredit the endorsements on the back of the rokas. The Subordinate Judge says they have all been rubbed or fumigated so as "to give them an appearance of oldness." In our opinion one or at the most two only of the endorsements on the rokas appear to have been rubbed or smudged, and we do not think this smudging gives them any appearance of oldness, nor can we see what effect it has had on them. We therefore see no reason for suspecting their authenticity on this account. On the whole, we think that the payment of the interest in question is sufficiently proved by these endorsements and by the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs.

The next question is whether Sital Prosad was "duly authorized" to make such payment. It is to be observed that s. 20 of the Limitation Act does not require the agent to be authorized in writing, and we think that an agent may impliedly be so authorized. Undoubtedly Sital Prosad was authorized to borrow money for the defendant. This is clear we think from Sital Prosad and the defendant's conduct, as well as from the fact that while defendant admits that Sital Prosad was his am-mukhtar and manager, he does not produce his am-mukhtar names to show how his authority was limited; Sital Prosad says it was left in his zemin-dari serishta. We therefore consider that Sital Prosad must be held to have been authorized to make the payment of interest, which is proved by the evidence to have been a condition precedent to the plaintiffs making any further loans to the defendant. In addition to any implied authority, there is, we think, ample evidence to show that the defendant was aware of the payment immediately after it was made, and that he ratified it by receiving the balance of the Rs. 200 from Sital Prosad and by signing another note for Rs. 20] with the knowledge that the amount due for interest had been paid by Sital Prosad out of the amount borrowed by him on his (the defendant's) account. We, therefore, consider that the defendant is bound by the payment of interest made on his behalf on the 15th Falgoon 1293 by Sital Prosad. The suit consequently not barred by limitation in respect of the first five rokas, and the defendant is accordingly liable to pay the full amount for which he has been sued in this suit.

For these reasons we set aside the findings of the Subordinate Judge in this case on all points, and decree the suit in favour of the plaintiffs for the full amount claimed by them with costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Macmillan and another (Plaintiffs) v. Suresh Chunder Deb (Defendant).* [31st July and 1st and 8th August, 1890.]

Copyright—Form of Registration—"Selection," of poems, copyright in—Infringement of copyright by publication of copy before registration—Assignments of copyright previous to registration—Limitation of suits for infringement of copyright—Statute 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45.

The plaintiffs, the partners of a firm M. & Co., were the proprietors, registered under 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45, of the copyright of a selection. [992] of songs and poems, composed by numerous well-known authors, which was prepared by one P., and originally published in 1861. Since the original publication the book ran through several editions, one of which was published in the year 1882. The book was registered under the provisions of the above Statute on the 8th February 1889, the name of both the publisher and proprietor being entered in the register as M. & Co., the firm's address being given, and the date of the first publication was entered as the 19th July 1861. The poems contained in the book were arranged by P., not in chronological order of their production, but in gradation of feeling and subject, and at the end of the book were given some notes, critical and explanatory. On the 15th January 1889 the defendant published, at Calcutta, a book containing the same selection of poems and songs as was contained in P's book. The arrangement, however, of the defendant's book differed from P's in that the poems of each author were placed together and in order of their composition. In one of the poems the defendant printed forty lines, which were contained in the work by the original author, but which were omitted by P., and in another poem one line. In many places there were differences of reading in the two books, and in more of punctuation. In the defendant's book some of the titles to the poems, which had been assigned thereto by P, and not by the original authors, appeared, as well as a good many of P's notes, some with acknowledgment and some without. With each poem the defendant gave a mass of notes, critical and explanatory, and he also prefixed to the poems of each author a biographical notice. The suit was instituted on the 27th February 1890, and the plaintiffs complained that the publication of defendant's book constituted a breach of their copyright and prayed for the usual relief by way of injunction and damage. They contended that although the copyright in the works of the original authors had long lapsed, they were entitled to the copyright in the "selection" made by P,

It was contended on behalf of the defendant that there could be no copyright in such a selection; that if any existed the defendant's book did not infringe it; that the plaintiff's book being registered as first published in 1861 and the infringement charged being in respect of the edition of 1882, and there being no evidence to show that the same selection was contained in the latter as in the former edition, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief prayed for; that the author of the plaintiff's book being P., in whom the copyright would prima facie be, and the property being registered as in the plaintiffs' firm, the registry was had, as the assignment of the copyright to the plaintiffs was not shown; that the registration was also bad, as the entry merely contained the name and address of the plaintiffs' firm and not the individual names and addresses of the partners of the firm; that the publication of the defendant's book having been before the date of registration, the suit will not lie; and that the suit was barred by the special limitation provided by s. 26 of the Statute 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45.

[993] Held, that such a "selection" could be the subject-matter of copyright, the true principle applicable to such cases being that one person is not at liberty to use or avail himself of the labour which another has been at for the purpose of producing his work, and so take away the result of the other's labour, or in other words his property.

* Original Civil Suit No. 89 of 1890,
Held further, that the defendant's book constituted a piracy of the plaintiff's book, and had infringed their copyright, and that they were entitled to the relief they sought.

Held, also, that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary it was reasonable to assume that successive issues of a book of this kind under the same name are substantially the same book; that it was unnecessary that the registry should show an assignment of the copyright by P, to the plaintiffs [Weldon v. Dicks (1) followed]; that the registration was not bad by reason of the names and addresses of the partners of the firm not being given [Low v. Routledge (2) and Weldon v. Dicks (1) followed]; that the title to copyright is complete before registration, which is only a condition precedent to the right to sue, and that the plaintiffs had not therefore lost their right of action by reason of the defendant's book being published before theirs was registered [Tuck v. Priester (3) and Gourband v. Wallace (4) followed]; and that, assuming that the rule of limitation provided by s. 26 of the Statute was applicable in this country, the suit was not barred by limitation [Hogg v. Scott (5) followed].

[D., 29 M. 292.]

This was a suit for infringement of copyright brought by the members of the firm of Messrs. Macmillan and Company, the London publishers, and publishers and proprietors of a book called "The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics," which was a selection made by Professor Palgrave from the poems of numerous English authors of various periods. This book was first published on the 19th July 1861, since which date there had been several editions, one of which was published in 1882.

The suit was instituted on the 27th February 1890 against the defendant to restrain the publication, printing, and sale of a book called "Select Short Poems, Part X with copious notes, criticisms, and question papers, etc., prescribed for the B. A. Examination of the Calcutta University, 1890, and for the first B. A. Examination of the Bombay University." This work was issued and published by the defendant at Calcutta on or about the 15th January 1889, and was alleged by the plaintiffs to be an infringement of their copyright.

The plaintiffs alleged that the copyright in the "Golden Treasury" belonged and had always belonged to them; that they were the registered proprietors of the first and subsequent editions thereof, which had all been duly entered at Stationers' Hall in the Book of Registry of Copyrights and Assignments, kept at the Hall of the Stationers' Company in London pursuant to the Statute 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45, and they annexed a duly certified copy of an entry from such register. Such entry was as follows:—

<th>Name and place of abode of the proprietor of the copyright</th>

I hereby certify that the above written is a true copy of an entry in the Book of Registry of Copyrights and Assignments kept at the Hall of the Stationers' Company pursuant to Act of Parliament 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45.

Chas. Reid Revington.
Witness my hand this 9th day of February 1889.
Registering officer appointed by the Stationers' Company.

The plaintiffs further alleged that the book was sub-divided into four parts or books, the fourth part of which had been prescribed by the Syndicates of the Calcutta and Bombay Universities respectively as one of the text-books for the B. A. Examinations; that the poems and extracts contained in the book were selected [955] and the notes thereto compiled by Professor Palgrave with great care, taste and judgment and were the outcome of a large expenditure of learning, time and trouble, and they claimed that the said selection and notes were entitled to be protected from the infringement and piracy by the defendant, they charged that, both as regarded the notes and also as regarded the selection of the songs and poems, the defendant had in his book wrongfully copied and made an illegitimate use of their book, and of the taste, judgment, researches and learning of Professor Palgrave, and that the defendant's book was an infringement of their copyright. They stated that they first got information of the publication of the defendant's book in the early part of the year 1889 and communicated with the defendant on the subject, but that he did not comply with their demand to stop the publication and hand over all copies in his possession; and they alleged that in consequence of the defendant's act the sale of their book had been greatly interfered with, and their profits had been considerably diminished. They accordingly prayed for an injunction against the defendant in the usual terms, for damages, and for an account of the profits made by him on past sales.

The defendant in his written statement pleaded that the author of the "Golden Treasury" being Professor Palgrave, he was the only person entitled to the copyright, assuming that copyright in respect of the book could be claimed by any one. He admitted that the book was first published on the 19th July 1861, but denied that the entry in the register referred to by the plaintiffs was an entry made pursuant to the Statute 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45, and he submitted that the suit was barred by limitation. He stated that his book was compiled by himself and published on the 15th January 1889 to meet the wants of students preparing for the B. A. Examinations, and he denied that in the compilation of his work he had wrongfully copied or made an illegitimate use of the "Golden Treasury." He also stated that his work contained a large mass of information, instructive matter, criticism and notes.
useful for students, and he denied that his publication infringed the copyright, if any, of the plaintiffs. He stated that in the preparation of his work he had recourse to the complete published works of the authors of many of the poems, and [956] in the remaining cases he had referred to many publications other than the "Golden Treasury." He relied on the differences in the text and arrangement of the poems in the two works as supporting his case, and while admitting that some of Professor Palgrave's notes had been taken, pointed out that only in these instances had they been so taken without acknowledgment. He stated that the poems contained in his work had been prescribed for the B. A. Examination, and submitted that as the "Golden Treasury" was not a work aiming at instruction, and did not fulfil the functions of an educational work, the publication of such a work as his became necessary, and he denied that by its publication he had caused any damages to the plaintiffs by diminishing the sale of the "Golden Treasury."

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Garth, for the plaintiffs.
Mr. Bannerjee and Mr. O'Kinealy, for the defendant.

The following issues were settled at the hearing,—

(1) Are the plaintiffs the owners of the copyright, if any?
(2) Is the entry in the book of registration a sufficient compliance with the Statute so as to enable the plaintiffs to maintain the suit?
(3) Has the defendant infringed the plaintiffs' copyright?
(4) Is the plaintiffs' right to sue in respect of the publication of the defendant's book barred by limitation?

The evidence, on behalf of the plaintiffs, given at the hearing consisted of a certified copy of the entry above referred to, and certain formal proof of the publication of the plaintiffs' book and the publication and sale of the defendant's work and copies of the 1882 edition of the former were put in. Certain correspondence which had passed between the parties was also tendered and admitted. In support of his case the defendant was called and examined.

It appeared from the evidence that the "Golden Treasury" was divided into four books, each book corresponding to a period of literary history. The poems in each book were arranged, not in chronological order of their production, but, as stated in the preface, "in gradation of feeling or subject."

At the end of the work there was a summary of each book and some notes, critical and explanatory. The fourth book, in respect of which this suit was brought, contained selected poems of [957] Wordsworth, Coleridge, Shelley and other authors, and had been set as a text-book by the Calcutta University. The defendant's book contained the same selection of poems as the fourth book of Professor Palgrave. The arrangement of the poems was, however altered, those of each author being placed together and in order of their composition, and prefixed to the poems of each author was a biographical notice. With each poem was a large number of notes and other critical and explanatory matter, and it appeared that a good many of Professor Palgrave's notes had been copied, some with acknowledgment and some without. In one poem of Shelley's some forty lines were printed which Professor Palgrave had omitted, and in one of Wordsworth's, one line. In a good many places there were differences of punctuation, and in a few of reading. Titles affixed by Professor Palgrave to some of the poems also appeared in the defendant's work and appeared clearly to have been borrowed, as they did not appear in the work of the original authors. The defendant in his evidence stated that he had selected these poems because they were set by the University. He stated that he had seen what poems were included in Part IV of Professor Palgrave's book, but denied that he had taken his versions from that book, and stated that in the majority of instances he had gone to the works of the original authors for them. Apart from the notes, he stated that he made no use of the plaintiffs' book, except to see what poems were contained in it. He denied that he had copied any of the titles, but could not say where he had got those which did not appear in the works of the original authors but were assigned to some of the poems in Professor Palgrave's book.

Mr. Pugh (in opening the plaintiff's case) pointed out that what was set as a text-book for the B. A. Examination was Palgrave's "Golden Treasury, Part IV," and not the selection of poems contained therein, and that it was clear the defendant's selection was taken from the plaintiffs' book, and was not the result of independent labour and research. The variations relied on by the defendant were evidently inserted, most of them, merely with a view to conceal the piracy, and the defendant could not be allowed to protect himself in that way. It was clear the titles of the poems referred to and the notes had been copied. The [958] last case upon the question in this Court was that of Macmillan v. Kally Das Mookerjee (1) decided by Wilson, J., which showed that in such cases as this of compilation, a person had no right to use another's work to lighten his own labours. On the question of copyright in selections there were no direct authorities, but he referred to Longman v. Winchester (2), Spiers v. Brown (3), Butterworth v. Robinson (4), Sweet v. Benning (5), Smith v Chatto (6), and Copinger on Copyright, p. 13.

Mr. Bonnerjee (on behalf of the defendant) submitted that the plaintiffs had proved no case whatever with reference to the edition of 1882 as the certificate only referred to the edition of 1861, and assuming that they could have a copyright in that edition they could only have it in those parts of that edition which appeared in the one of 1882, and as there was no evidence on this point, the suit must fail [Murray v. Bogue (7)]. The book admittedly being the work of Professor Palgrave, the plaintiffs are only the assignees of the copyright in the book. That being so, to satisfy the requirements of the Act, the plaintiffs should have registered Professor Palgrave as the owner and themselves as such assignees, and consequently the registration is bad. It is also bad because the firm is registered as the proprietor, and in law there is no such person. The names and residences of the partners should have been given. Next, the suit will not lie as the defendant's book was published before the plaintiffs' book was registered. It is also barred by limitation, as it has not been brought within 12 months of the publication of the defendant's book, as required by s. 26 of the Statute 5 and 6 Vic., c. 45.

Upon the main question in the case there has been no infringement of copyright. What the University set was Palgrave's collection of poems for the sake of convenience instead of setting out the list of the poems. The "Golden Treasury" is not suited for educational purposes, and the defendant was perfectly entitled to take these poems from Palgrave's book and prepare them in the way he has done to assist students. The notes in the defendant's book show the different scope of the work. Palgrave took no credit for the [959] selection, but merely for the arrangement, and that the defendant has not copied. Apart from arrangement, there could be no copyright in selection, and any one can print these poems. It is clear the defendant's work is an independent one with a totally different object to the plaintiffs'. He cited the following cases in support of his arguments:—Jarrold v. Houlston (1), Wilkins v. Aikin (2), Spiers v. Brown (3), Tuck v. Priester (4), Clementi v. Walker (5).

Mr. Pugh in reply:—The only substantial question in the case is whether such a selection is prohibited. Spiers v. Brown (3) is in my favour. It is clear from the book itself that the defendant has not, as alleged, honestly compiled his work for the benefit of students. He has copied the selection notes and even some of the titles, and the alterations relied on are merely colourable. Murray v. Bogue (6) is distinguishable and Tuck v. Priester (4) was under a different Statute. Gouband v. Wallace (7) is an authority against the contention of the other side, that a suit won't lie when an infringement has taken place before registration. In registering it is optional to enter the name of the firm or the names of the partners. Copinger on Copyright, p. 137, Low v. Routledge (8) per Kindersley, V. C. The contention that Palgrave was the proprietor and that the plaintiffs should have been registered as assignees is contrary to the decision in Lover v. Davidson (9). On the question of limitation Hogg v. Scott (10) is against the defendant's contention.

The following judgment was delivered on 8th August:—

JUDGMENT.

WILSON, J.—This is a suit brought to restrain an alleged infringement of copyright. The plaintiffs are the proprietors, registered under 5 and 6 Vic., c. 45, of the copyright of a work published under the title of 'The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics.' The book contains a selection, made by Mr. Palgrave, from the poems of many English authors of various periods. It is divided into books, each book corresponding to a period of literary history. The [960] poems in each book are arranged, not in the chronological order of their production, but, as the preface says, 'in gradation of feeling or subject.' At the end of the work are placed a summary of each book, and some notes critical and explanatory. The fourth book contains selected poems of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Hartley Coleridge, Southey, Hood, Wolfe, Shelley, Allan Cunningham, Keats, Charles Lamb, Byron, Scott, Campbell and Moore.

The plaintiffs complain that the defendant has infringed their copyright by the publication of a book which he has issued, under the title 'Select Short Poems, Part X, with copious notes, criticisms, and question-papers, &c., prescribed for the B. A. Examination of the Calcutta University for the year 1890, and for the first B. A. Examination of the Bombay University.' These poems are the same selection as those in the fourth book of the Golden Treasury; and that the selection was borrowed by the defendant is beyond all doubt, because what was set as a text-book by the Calcutta University was the fourth book of Mr. Palgrave's work. Titles affixed by Mr. Palgrave to certain poems have also been borrowed; and a good many of his notes have been copied, some with acknowledgment and some without. On the other hand, the arrangement of the poems has been altered. Those of each author are placed together, and in the order of their composition. In one poem of Shelley the defendant prints forty lines which Mr. Palgrave had omitted; in one of Wordsworth one line. In many places there are differences of reading, and in more of punctuation. Whether these differences are mainly due to the editor or to the printer I cannot say. The defendant has prefixed to the poems of each author a biographical notice; and with each poem he gives a mass of notes and other critical and explanatory matter. Mr. Palgrave’s summary of his fourth book is not given.

The main question is whether the defendant’s book is a piracy of Mr. Palgrave’s. If the question had turned only on the notes which have been borrowed, I should not have been prepared to answer that question in the affirmative. The defendant’s book purports to be a sort of variorum edition of the poems; it gives explanations and critical estimates derived from many sources; and the notes taken from Mr. Palgrave are not many in number, and [961] bear a very small proportion to the whole mass of annotations.

But Mr. Palgrave’s selection of poems has been borrowed by the defendant, and the important question is whether that is an infringement of copyright. And first I have to consider whether there is copyright in a selection. There has not, so far as I know, been any actual decision upon this question. But upon principle I think it clear that such a right does exist; and there is authority to that effect as weighty as anything short of actual decision can be. In the case of works not original in the proper sense of the term, but composed of, or complied or prepared from materials which are open to all, the fact that one man has produced such a work does not take away from any one else the right to produce another work of the same kind, and in doing so to use all the materials open to him. But, as the law is concisely stated by Hall, V.C., in Hogg v. Scott (1), “the true principle in all these cases is, that the defendant is not at liberty to use or avail himself of the labour which the plaintiff has been at for the purpose of producing his work, that is, in fact, merely to take away the result of another man’s labour, or, in other words, his property.” I think it unnecessary to refer in detail to the case; it is enough to say that this principle has been applied to maps, to road books, to guide books, to street directories, to dictionaries, to compilations on scientific and other subjects. This principle seems to me clearly applicable to the case of a selection of poems. Such a selection as Mr. Palgrave has made obviously requires extensive reading, careful study and comparison, and the exercise of taste and judgment in selection. It is open to any one who pleases to go through a like course of reading, and by the exercise of his own taste and judgment to make a selection for himself. But if he spares himself this trouble and adopts Mr. Palgrave’s selection, he offends against the principle. In Longman v. Winchester (2) at p. 271, Lord Eldon laid down the principle I have stated, and referred to various cases to which it had been applied or was applicable, and said:—“So in the instance mentioned by Sir Samuel Romilly, a work consisting of a selection from various authors, two men might perhaps [962] make the same selection; but that must be by resorting to the original authors, not by taking advantage of the selection already made by another.” And this passage is cited as an authority by Lord Hatherley, then Vice-Chancellor, in Spiers v. Brown (1). I am of opinion that the selection of poems made by Mr. Palgrave and embodied in the Golden Treasury is the subject of copyright, and that the defendant's book has infringed that right.

Some other points of a more or less technical nature were raised on behalf of the defendant. It was pointed out that the book registered was registered as first published in 1861, whereas the infringement charged is of an edition of 1882; it was contended that it ought to be proved affirmatively that the poems in the edition of 1882 were contained in that of 1861, and Murray v. Bogue (2) was cited. In the absence of any reason to suppose the contrary, I think it is reasonable to assume that successive issues of a book of this kind, under the same name, are substantially the same book.

It was next contended that the author of the book being Mr. Palgrave in whom the copyright would prima facie be, and the property being registered as in the present plaintiffs, the registry is bad because it does not show an assignment to them. But the Act does not seem to me to require any such thing; and it has been so held in Weldon v. Dicks (3).

It was further contended that the registration was bad because it contained the firm and business address of the plaintiffs, and not the individual names and addresses of the partners in the firm. But this is contrary to the view expressed by Kindersley, V. C., in Low v. Routledge (4), and that acted upon by Malins, V. C., in Weldon v. Dicks (3), which I follow.

Then it was contended that the publication of the defendant's book having been before the registration, this suit would not lie. But it is clear that the title to copyright is complete before registration, which is only a condition precedent to the right to sue. This is made very clear by the reasoning in the judgments in [963] Tuck v. Priester (5), decided on another Act. And it was expressly so held in Gouband v. Wallace (6).

Lastly, reliance was placed on s. 26 of the Act, which, it was suggested, prescribed one year as the period of limitation for such a suit as the present. But, assuming that a rule of limitation in the Act would be applicable in this country, the decision in Hogg v. Scott (7) negatives the contention.

There will be a perpetual injunction restraining the printing or sale of the defendant's book as being an infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright with costs on scale 2.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice O'Kinely and Mr. Justice Ameer Ali.

Tarini Churn Sinha and another (Plaintiffs) v. Watson and Co. (Defendants).* [19th May, 1890.]

Fishery, Right of—Jalkar—Navigable river—Change in course of the river.

The jalkar, or right of fishing, in a navigable river is not affected by reason of the river having merely changed its course.

Gray v. Anund Mohun Moitra (1) followed,

Sibessury Dabca v. Lukhy Dabca (2) distinguished.

[19th May, 1890.]

This was a suit for the recovery of possession of 68 bighas of reformed chur land of the jalkar, or right of fishing, over a portion of the river Howlia, a public navigable river, and for mesne profits of the land and the jalkar from the year 1894 (1884) until the institution of the suit on the 22nd Bysack 1294 (20th May 1887).

The plaintiffs, Tarini Churn Sinha and Gopi Sundari Dasi, were joint-proprietors of the entire 16 annas of mouzah Bowat, pergunnah Bhandordaha, in the district of Nuddea. Their case was [964] that the land in suit was a re-formation on the original site of land appertaining to their zemindari of mouzah Bowat; that it had submerged into the bed of the Howlia in 1283 (1876) when that river, which at the time of the thak and survey measurements in 1854 and prior to 1283, used to flow towards the north and west of the mouzah, suddenly changed, its course and, taking a south easterly direction, flowed through it; that upon the land re-forming on the opposite side of the river the plaintiffs in Bysack 1290 (April 1883) proceeded to take possession of the land as well as the jalkar over the portion of the river which flowed through their property, but were resisted by the defendants, Watson and Company.

The defendants alleged that more than 12 years previous to the institution of the suit the land in dispute had submerged in the bed of the river Howlia, and denied that it was a re-formation on the site of any portion of mouzah Bowat. They pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as they had been in adverse possession of both the land and the jalkar for upwards of 12 years: they further pleaded that the jalkar right of the Howlia from Kadipur to Gazadia khal and Boalia was included in the istemrari settlement of taraf Srirampur, which constituted their zemindari; that the jalkar had been in the possession of the maliks of the said zemindari since the time of the decennial settlement; that they had regularly paid the rent fixed for the jalkar and were in possession.

The Subordinate Judge found that the greater portion of the land was submerged in 1283, and that the re-formation on the original site took place subsequently and within 12 years of the suit and accordingly held that the suit was not barred. But in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to the jalkar of the portion of the river which flowed through their land, the Subordinate Judge remarked:

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 879 of 1889, against the decree of F. F. Handley, Esq., Judge of Nuddea, dated the 24th of January 1889, modifying the decree of Baboo Gonesh Chunder Chowdhry, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 28th of April 1888.

(2) 1 W.R. 88.

"It has already been found that the portion of the jalkar lying on the south and south-east of the black dotted line marked in the ameen's map is situate within the boundary of plaintiffs' zemindari, mouzah Bowat. The jalkar being so situate, the question to be decided is whether it is the property of the plaintiffs. It appears from the evidence of the witnesses on both sides that the encroachment of the river on plaintiffs' mouzah was not gradual. According to the statement of the witnesses for the [965] plaintiffs, the greater portion of the land was diluviated in one year, i.e., during the rainy season of 1283, and the remaining portion was washed away in subsequent years. The witnesses for the defendants state that the diluviation was completed in one year, i.e., during the rains of 1278. It also appears from the evidence of some of the witnesses that the river Howlia has since become more narrow and shallow in consequence of the silting up of its source at Mata-bhanga. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the right in this portion of the jalkar has become vested in the plaintiffs, they being owners of the bed of this portion of the river. It is undoubtedly proved by documents produced by the defendants that the jalkar right in the Howlia from Kadipur to Shyampur and from Rajnagar to Gujra khal belongs to them, and that the portion of the river, of which the jalkar right is in dispute, lies within these limits. But as it is found that the change in the course of the river here was sudden and not gradual, the defendants are not entitled to extend their right of fishery over this portion of it. The ruling in the case of Sibessury Dabea v. Lukhy Dabea (1) is an authority in support of this view."

The Subordinate Judge accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession of that portion of the disputed land jalkar which was found to be situate within the boundary of mouzah Bowat, together with mesne profits from the date of dispossession until delivery of possession.

On appeal the District Judge reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it gave the plaintiffs possession of the jalkar on the ground that the defendants held the jalkar by grant, and having been in possession for 25 years, had acquired a title to it by prescription as well.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (O'Kinealy and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was delivered by AMEER ALI, J.—The point involved in this appeal is whether a right of jalkar in a public navigable river can exist apart from the right to the bed of the river, or must it necessarily follow [966] that right. Both these questions have been raised and discussed in other cases; still they are of some difficulty. The facts of the case are these:—The river Howlia, which is a public navigable river flowed prior

(1) 1 W.R. 88.
to 1283, in a certain course; and it seems to have in 1283, or thereabouts, adopted a different channel, and is now running over a portion of the plaintiff's land. The plaintiffs sue to establish their jalkar right over that portion of the river which flows over their land. Admittedly, the defendants have a jalkar right by grant from Government over this river within certain specified limits; and there is no question that the jalkar, which is claimed by the plaintiffs, falls within that limit; it is also undisputed that the river in its present channel is a public and navigable river. The Subordinate Judge held, apparently on the authority of the case of Sibes-sury Dabee v. Lukhy Dabee (1) that, inasmuch as the destruction of the river was sudden and not gradual, the defendants are not entitled to their jalkar right over the river in its present course, but that their right is restricted by the rights of those over whose lands the river now flows; and in that view of the matter he made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. He says:—"under these circumstances" (referred to by him in the judgment): "I am of opinion that the right in this portion of the jalkar has become vested in the plaintiffs, they being owners of the bed of this river." On appeal to the District Judge, that Court took a different, and, we think, a correct view of the principle applicable to the case. It seems to us that the decision of the case depends upon the answer to the question—Do the defendants lose the right, admittedly vested in them, by a change in the course of the river, though the river does not lose the character of a navigable river, and continues subject to the rights of the public as before? We think the principle applicable to the case was discussed and enunciated so early as 1864 in the case of Gray v. Anund Mohun Moitra (2) before Loch and Norman, JJ. In that case it appeared that the river over which the defendant had a right of fishery had changed its course and formed an inlet. Afterwards it resumed its old course, leaving the inlet separate and dry. In a suit by the owner of the bed of the [967] inlet, Norman, J., referring to the Institutes, said:—"We find it laid down that if a river, leaving its natural channel, flows, in another course, the former channel belongs to them who possess the farms on its banks, to each man according to the breadth of his land on the bank; and the new channel is subject to that law which governs the river, that is, it becomes public. But if, after some time, the river returns to its former channel, the new channel again belongs to them who have the farms on its banks." And then in another passage, "applying these principles to the present case, if the river simply change its course, and there is nothing to modify the conclusion which the Court ought to draw from the simple fact, the old dry course of the river must be taken to have become private property. And as incident to and part of the same, the owner of the soil is entitled to all bheel's or ponds, gulfs or damrorees, in which water remains but which do not communicate with the river except in the time of floods, and he could have claimed a settlement with the Government in respect of any jalkar in the same. The right of the defendant to the fishery—in the water in question being merely granted out of, and a part of, the right of the Government to the river can no longer exist where the right of the Government itself is gone." There, as it seems to me, the learned Judges held, that inasmuch as the inlet of the river had become separated from the main channel and had partially dried up, and Government had lost its right in respect to it, the right of the defendant also was lost. But the principle laid down was—that so long as the river retains its navigable

(1) 1 W.R. 88.
(2) W.R. (1864) 108.
character, it is subject to the rights of the public, and the right of fishery remains in the person who held it under a grant from Government. In the present case, which is the converse of Gray v. Anund Mohun Moitra, there is no question that the defendants had been for a long time in the enjoyment of the right granted to them by Government, and that the river which forms the subject-matter of the dispute is still a public navigable river. The case of Sibessury Dabee v. Lukhe Dabee (1) has no bearing on the question at issue here. In that case, the daha, or streamlet, respecting which the dispute was, formed a separate and apparently dried up armlet of the river Hughli, [686] and the learned Judges there held that an anterior right of fishery did not necessarily attach to the streamlet, which had no connection with the river Hughli. We are accordingly of opinion that the view taken by the learned Judge below is the correct view, namely, that the defendants have the right over the river in its present course to the same extent and under the same limits as they possessed previous to the change in its channel, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief which they seek.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court (O'Kinealy and Ameer Ali, J.J.) was delivered by Ameer Ali, J.—The question involved in this appeal is whether, having regard to the provisions of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs' suit is barred as a res judicata. The plaintiffs had on the 28th March 1884, brought a suit against the present defendants to recover possession of certain lands, and in the plaint had claimed mesne profits from the day of dispossess to the date of restoration of possession. That suit was dismissed by the first Court, but was eventually decreed by the High Court in favour of the plaintiffs with the mesne profits for three years preceding the date of suit. No mention was, however, made regarding the subsequent mesne profits. The plaintiffs have accordingly instituted the present suit for the mesne profits from the 28th of March 1884 to the date of recovery of possession, and the defendants contend that it is barred under the provisions of explanation III to s. 13 of the Code, and the lower Courts, giving effect to this contention, have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have appealed specially to this Court, and it is urged on their behalf that, as it was discretionary with the Court in the former suit to assess the mesne profits subsequent to the date of suit, the mere fact that the Court abstained from exercising that discretion does not consitute the present suit a res judicata. We think this contention to be sound. No authority has been cited by the learned pleaders for the defendants in support of their contention that the plaintiffs are precluded from maintaining the present action. They have relied simply on the words of the section, but as the question is res integra, we are at liberty to construe the section reasonably by a comparison of the other sections of the Code.

It is admitted that at the time the plaintiffs instituted their former suit, they had no cause of action with respect to mesne profits accruing due after date of suit; and they would not have been entitled to ask any relief in respect thereof but for the provisions of s. 211. That section runs thus:

"When the suit is for the recovery of possession of immovable property yielding rent or other profit, the Court may provide in the decree for the payment of rent or mesne profits in respect of such property from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the party in whose favour the decree is made or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree (whichever event first occurs), with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court thinks fit."

It is abundantly clear that the Legislature, in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits, empowered the Court in an action for the recovery of possession of property to assess the damages accruing due after suit and during the continuance of the trespass. But the section is not imperative or obligatory; it is merely discretionary. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga...
Pillai (1), accepting the contentions of the respondents’ counsel in that appeal stated the principles relating to suits for mesne profits thus:

"First, that where the decree is silent touching interest or mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit, the Court executing the decree cannot, under the clause in question, assess or give execution for such interest or mesne profits; and, secondly, that the plaintiff is still at liberty to assert his right to such mesne profits in a separate suit." And in the case of Fakhruddin Mahomed Ahsan Chowdhry v. Official Trustee of Bengal (2), the question was whether in awarding wasilat without any special mention of the period for which it was to be paid, it should be presumed that the Court intended to give it up to date of restoration of possession, the Judicial Committee, having regard to the defendant’s contention, said "the question (in this case) is whether the Court intended to give to the plaintiff that amount of wasilat to which he was undoubtedly entitled by law in this action, or whether they intended to cut his claim for wasilat into two, and to give him in this suit so much only as accrued up to the time of the commencement of the suit and to leave him to bring a separate suit for the rest."

Clearly, therefore, the Court had the power under s. 211 (s. 196 of the old Code) to assess and award the damages up to the date of recovery of possession, or to give to the plaintiff so much only as accrued up to the time of the commencement of the suit; and it chose, in the exercise of its discretion, to give him only that which had accrued due, and in respect of which he had a cause of action, and left him, to all intents and purposes, to bring a separate suit for the rest. There is nothing in principle or law to lead us to the conclusion that the mere abstention of the Court to award to the plaintiff mesne profits after date of suit would be a bar to any suit in respect thereof. On the contrary, the penultimate clause of s. 244 clearly shows that it is not so.

"Nothing in this section," it says, shall be deemed to bar a separate suit for mesne profits accruing between the institution of the first suit and the execution of the decree therein where such profits are not dealt with by such decree."

Again, a claim for mesne profits is distinct from a claim for recovery of immoveable property, and it is only under the Statute that such claims may be joined in one suit (s. 44, rule A). The cause of action in respect of the continuing trespass after the institution of suit arises from day to day, and it is only by express enactment, and in order to avoid, as we have already remarked, a multiplicity of suits that the Courts have been vested with the discretion of awarding damages during the continuance of the trespass and until its cessation. It does not follow that because plaintiff prayed for assessment of damages until he was restored to his property and the Court in its discretion was satisfied with decreeing his claim for damages so far as they had accrued due, his claim for damages for trespass continued after suit would be barred by the rule of res judicata. The opinion expressed by Macpherson, J., Byrnath Pershad v. Badhoo Singh (3), which that learned Judge reiterated with greater emphasis in Pratap Chandra Buna v. Swarnamayi (4) and the observations of the Chief Justice in that case fully support the view we have taken. Were we to uphold the contention urged by the respondent’s pleader, the result would be as pointed out by Phear, J., in the case of Haramohini

[972] Chowdhrani v. Dhamani Chowdhrani (1), "that an unsuccessful defendant directed by the Court to give up possession of the property held by him to the plaintiff might with impunity withhold possession from the plaintiff, notwithstanding the decree in which possession of the property is directed to be delivered over, keeping the plaintiff out by main force under every circumstance of aggravation, without the slightest apprehension or risk of having damages assessed against him."

For the above reasons we hold that the plaintiffs' suit is not barred.

The case must go to the first Court for the trial of any other issue that might have been raised between the parties. Costs to abide the result.

They were held not to be recoverable from the tenant, although they had been paid for a period of unknown length and according to a long-standing practice, not having been, if payable at the time of the permanent settlement, consolidated with the rent, as they should have been if then payable, under s. 51 of Reg. Lands included in the permanent settlement having afterwards been covered by water, and having been formed again on the same site, held not to be lands "gained" from the river by alluvion or dereliction within the meaning of Regulation II of 1819, that expression being confined to meaning lands gained since the period of the settlement. The effect of Act IX of 1847 was merely to change the mode of assessment in the case of land already liable to be assessed under legislation in force when that Act became law. It was not the object of that Act to bring under liability land re-formed on the site of land previously lost, within the area of a permanently-settled estate, the revenue upon which had been paid without abatement since the permanent settlement. Where an order of the Board of Revenue, purporting to be made under Act IX of 1817, subjected land included in the permanent settlement to assessment, held that the District Civil Court had jurisdiction (which, therefore, might be invoked as a matter of right) to entertain a suit brought by the landowner contesting that order, and to declare it unauthorised by law. Act III of 1865 (Carriers).

Ss. 6, 8—Negligence—Accident, Loss by—Special contract—Divisibility of contract.—A flat belonging to the defendants, carrying goods belonging to the plaintiff, was lost by coming into contact with a snag in the bed of a certain river, the existence of which snag could not have been ascertained by any precaution on the part of the defendants. The goods were received for carriage by the defendants under conditions printed on the back of "forwarding note" signed by the plaintiff; by one of which conditions the defendants protected themselves from liability against accident of certain particular kinds, and "from any accident, loss, or damage resulting from negligence, &c." Held, that the loss was not occasioned by the negligence of the defendants; that the forwarding note "was a special contract" within the meaning of the Carriers Act; that the clause purporting to protect the defendants from negligence was bad as being in contravention of; the Carriers Act: but that, nevertheless, the contract was not thereby rendered wholly bad, but was divisible, being good so far as it provided that the defendants were not to be liable for loss by accident, but bad so far as it provided that they should not be liable for negligence. (1) S. 3—Effect of sanad to confer proprietary right on a talukdar, not being a trustee—Claim to under-proprietary right against talukdar distinguished, and not concluded by a decree for the former right in his favour.—Unless a talukdar, who holds such a sanad as is referred to in the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, has agreed in some way, or has otherwise becomes legally bound to hold the estate comprised in the sanad, or some part of it, in trust for another person, the principle on which 14 M.I.A. 112, and 6 I.A. 161, were decided is not applicable to make the talukdar hold subject to a charge for the benefit of such other person. The talukdar in whom no such trust is vested is entitled to the proprietary right in the lands forming the talukdari estate comprised in the sanad. A claim against the talukdar for the proprietary right included lands in which the claimant alleged himself to have purchased under-proprietary rights which were not claimed A decree, maintaining the talukdar's proprietary right, was made without prejudice to a claim for the under-proprietary rights. (3) Sub-s. 1—Meaning of "intestate" as there used—Written but unregistered authority to adopt—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17.—The Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, requires the registration of the writing by which an authority to adopt is exercised; but not the registration of the authority, which is required by the Act to be in writing. The Indian Registration Act III of 1877, which does require authorities to adopt to be registered, expressly excepts authorities conferred by will. The word "intestate," in s. 13, sub s. 1, of the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, means intestate as to the talukdari estate; and the use of the word does not exclude from the exception in that sub-section a son adopted under an authority conferred by a talukdar's unregistered will. A talukdar by his will authorized his senior widow to select and adopt a minor male child of his family to be the owner of the entire riasat. This power having been exercised, the following objections to the adoption were disallowed: 1st, one founded on the will not having been registered, and, consequently, the authority not having been registered; 2ndly, one founded on the erroneous argument that the adopted son was not within the class excepted in s. 13, sub-s. 1, and therefore could not take under an unregistered will. (2) S. 3, cls. (3) and (5); s. 4 and s. 5, cl. (2) and (3)—Liability to ejectment—Non-occupancy ryots—"Rent" Payment for "use and occupation."—The defendants were cultivating ryots who had held certain land under Government, but not for a period sufficient to give them a right of occupancy. The plaintiffs in a suit against the Government succeeded in proving their title to the land. In a suit to eject the defendants as trespassers inasmuch as they could have derived no title from Government, who themselves had no title and no relationship of landlord and tenant existed between them and the plaintiffs who had not recognised their right to cultivate the lands: Held, that, under s. 3, cls. (3) and (5); s. 4 and s. 5, cls. (2) and (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendants were "non-occupancy ryots," and therefore not liable to ejectment except for the reasons and on the conditions specified in that Act; and no such reasons or conditions existed in this case. Liability to pay for the "use and occupation," of land by a person between whom and the proprietor of such land there exists no relationship of landlord and tenant is a "liability to pay rent within the meaning of s. 3, cl. (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, cl. (3), s. (9) S. 88—Suit for rent—Question as to amount of rent—Sub-division of Tenancy—Rent receipts signed by one of several co-sharers.—Several plaintiffs, co-sharers, sued two defendants to recover the sum of Rs. 78 odd for arrears of rent in respect of a tenure, the annual amount of rent payable being alleged to be Rs. 15. One of the defendants appeared and pleaded that the tenure had been some time previously divided by the principal plaintiff (who has the kurta of the family and collected the rent), and that after the division he had paid Rs. 7-8 per annum, being the rent in respect of his half of the tenure, to the kurta; in support of such payments he produced dakhilas or rent receipts signed by the kurta. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif, but on appeal the Additional Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for the amount of rent claimed less the amount proved.
to have been paid by the defendant who contested the suit, as shown by the dakhilas. He held that the division had not been proved: and that the dakhilas did not amount to a written consent required by s. 85 of Bengal Tenancy Act. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that the dakhilas or rent receipts did not amount to a written consent as required by s. 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the decree of the lower Court must be upheld. Aubhoy Churn Maji v. Shoshi Bhusan Bose, 16

(13) S. 120, sub-s. 2—Record of Proprietor's land as private land—Grounds for determining land to be private—Evidence.—In enacting sub-s. 2 of s. 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Legislature had before it the attempts which might be expected on the part of landlords to frustrate the intention of the Legislature, as asserted in the Draft Bill laid before the Council for consideration, to extend the occupancy-rights of tenants before the measures then declared to be in contemplation became law; and therefore the particular date, the 2nd day of March 1883, the date on which the Draft Bill was published in the Gazette, and leave was obtained to introduce the Bill into the Council, was declared to be the latest date on which there should be free action on the part of zamindars to assert their private rights, so as to prevent the accrual of special tenant rights.
From the wording of that sub-section, it was intended that in determining whether land is the private land of the proprietor, regard should be had to any declaration made before the 2nd March 1883 by the landlord, and communicated to the tenants, in respect to the reservation of the proprietor's right over the land as his private land; the words "any other evidence that may be produced" in that sub-section mean, therefore, any other evidence tending in the same direction that may be produced to show the assertion of any title on the part of the proprietor and communicated to the tenant before that date. *Nilmoni Chucker-

s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in which an enquiry was directed, amongst other things, as to the boundaries of certain plots held by certain ryots, the Ameen took evidence as to the standard measure of the district.
and the Court decided the case on their evidence: Held, that, in determining the boundaries, the question as to what was the standard measure of the district arose, and that the evidence was rightly received and acted upon. Deori Singh v. Seogobind Sahoo, 17 C. 277

(18) Ss. 158 and 183—Joint-landlords—Application under s. 158 by one of several joint landlords—Refusal by joint-landlords to join in such application, effect of.—An application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, cannot be made by one of several joint-landlords. S. 188 of the Act requires that such an application should be made by all the landlords acting together, and it is not a sufficient compliance with its provisions to make the landlords who refuse to join parties to the proceedings under s. 158. After the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 had become law, the tenancy in respect of which the rent had become due was attached in execution of such decree. A claim was subsequently put to the attached property by a third person, which claim was disallowed as being forbidden by s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885; Held, that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 were applicable to the proceedings in execution; the term "proceedings" in s. 6 of Act I of 1869 not including proceedings in execution after decree. Act VII of 1876 (Land Registration, Bengal).
(1) S. 7—Delimitation of land of adjoining proprietors—Correction of entry in register.—On a claim for the correction of the entry of the names of proprietors in the general register of revenue-paying lands in a district kept in accordance with Bengal Act VII of 1876, the limits of the area of the estate had not been defined further than by boundaries mentioned in the plaint, which were disputed by the defendants, who were the owners of land adjoining, and who had obtained from the Revenue authorities an order for the entry now alleged to be incorrect. The properties were both parts of an ascertained number of bighas, forming a chuckla. The High Court, while affirming the decision of the Court below in the plaintiffs' favour, ordered a local enquiry, with a view to the accurate delimitation of their estate. This, with the subsequent decree, resulted in the area being defined therein by reference to a map made and marked by an Amin. This was not a just division; for while it divided the chuckla so as to give the defendants their full share, it went beyond it, to make up the full area of the plaintiff's share. Their Lordships therefore made a new order, calculated to secure the division of the whole chuckla in due proportions for the purposes of the entry in the register. Hemmuni Singh v. A suit was instituted in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Dacca on behalf of a ward by his manager without the order or sanction of the Court of Wards, and proceeded to judgment without any such order or sanction. The suit was partially decreed; and the manager appealed to the District Judge for that portion of the claim which had been dismissed by the Court of first instance. At the hearing of the appeal, an application was filed on behalf of the appellant, accompanied by a letter giving sanction to the institution of the suit, the appeal and other proceedings connected therewith, with retrospective effect from the date of its institution. The Judge dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court: Held, having regard to s. 55 of the Court of Wards Act, 1879, as amended by s. 7 of Bengal Act III of 1881, the lower appellate Court was right in dismissing the suit. Held, also, that the sanction given after appeal did not have a retrospective effect. Dinesh Chunder Roy v. Golam Mostapha, Dinesh Chunder Roy v. Fahamidunnessa Begum, Dinesh Chunder Roy v. Act VIII of 1880 (Public Demands Recovery, Bengal).

Ss. 21, 22—Sale in execution of a certificate under that Act—Procedure—Satisfied certificate—Act XI of 1859.—The procedure laid down by Bengal Act VII of 1880 must be strictly followed; and it is, therefore, absolutely incumbent on the Courts, when considering the validity of sales under that Act, to rigidly require an exact compliance with the formalities prescribed therein by the Legislature. Where a certificate is issued in respect of a demand under the Act, upon payment of such demand it becomes the duty of the Collector, under s. 22, to enter satisfaction upon the certificate, and also in the Register kept under s. 21. A sale in execution of a satisfied certificate, or of a certificate not duly made under the Act, is absolutely void. Semble:—Demands in respect of cess under Bengal' Act VII of 1880 are not on the same footing as revenue demands, to which Act XI of 1859 applies; and, therefore, the procedure prescribed by Act XI of 1859 for the recovery of the latter is not applicable to the recovery of the former. A person was charged at the instance of a Municipality under that clause, with obstructing a path through his paddy field by erecting a fence at either end of it. It was found that the public had a right of way over the path, and the lower Courts convicted the accused of an offence under that clause. In revision it was contended that the conviction was bad, as the clause could only refer to a road which had vested in the Municipal Commissioners. Held for the above reasons that the conviction was right and must be upheld. Ram Chandra Ghose v. Bally, Municipality, 17 C. 684...

(1) Additional Judge—District Judge—Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870), s. 39—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 617.—An Additional Judge appointed to here cases under the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, is a District Judge within the meaning of s. 39 of the Act. Under s. 647 of the Civ. Pro. Code, an appeal from the decision of an Additional Judge so appointed lies to the High Court. In the matter of the application of Poresh Nath Chatterjee v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 16 C. 31

(2) Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 104, cl. 2—Special Judge—Dispute as to settlement of rent.—No appeal lies to the High Court from the decision of a Special Judge under s. 104, cl. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Lala Kirut Narain v. Palukhddi Pandey, 17 C. 326

(3) Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153—Cesses, Suit for—Bengal Act IX of 1880, s. 47—Appeal in cases under Rs. 100.—A suit to recover cesses for an amount not exceeding Rs. 100 falls under the provisions of s. 153 of Act VIII of 1885 with respect to appeals. Mohesh Chunder Chuttapadhyia v. Umatara Deb, 16 C. 638

(5) Newly given by law—Proceedings instituted prior to change in procedure—Appeal from order under s. 312, Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882)—Act VII of 1888, ss. 55 and 56.—It is a general principle of law that an appeal newly given by law is made applicable to proceedings instituted before that change in procedure is made: Held, accordingly, that an appeal for an order under the second paragraph of s. 312 of the Civ. Pro. Code, although made before Act VII of 1888 came into force, would, upon the operation of that Act, lie to Court to which an appeal would, lie from the decree in the suit in relation to which such order was made. In the matter of Anund Chunder Roy v. Nital Bhoomij, 16 C. 429

(6) Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 69, 86—Order of District Judge admitting person as caveator—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 588, cl. (2).—S. 86 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) makes the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to orders passed under that Act. An appeal therefore lies to the High Court from the order of a District Judge admitting a person as a caveator under s. 69 of the Act; such an order is appealable under s. 588, cl. (2) of the Code. A person not claiming any of the property of the testator, but disputing the right of the testator to deal with certain property as his own, has not such an interest in the estate of the testator as entitles him to come in and oppose the grant of probate. Abhiram Dass v. Gopal Das, 17 C. 48

(7) Receiver, Appointment of—Appealable order—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 503, 505, 588 (24), and 589—Bengal North-Western Provinces, and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), s. 21.—An appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for a Receiver under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the order on appeal is final under s. 588. The Court to which such an appeal lies from the order of a Subordinate Judge is, under s. 21 of Act XII of 1887, the High Court, where the value of the suit is above Rs. 5,000, and the District Judge's Court in other cases. Boidya Nath Adya v. Makhan Lal Adya, 17 C. 680

(8) Suit for rent—Question as to amount of Rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153.—Where there was a question as to the amount of rent annually payable, the plaintiffs claiming Rs. 15 and the defendants alleging the rent to be only Rs. 7-8: Held, an appeal lay under s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. 2.—In Criminal Cases.

(1) By Local Government from judgment of acquittal—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 417.—Under the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) the Local Government have the same right of appeal against an acquittal as a person convicted has of appealing against his conviction and sentence, and there is no distinction between the mode of procedure and the principles upon which both classes of appeals are to be decided. In the matter of the petition of THE DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCER. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BIDHUTI BHUSAN BIT, 17 C. 485

(2) Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 411.—Appeal from sentence of Presidency Magistrate.—No appeal lies from a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200, or a further period of three months' simple imprisonment, passed by a Presidency Magistrate. SCHEN v. THE QUEEN-EMPRESS, 16 C. 799

3.—Second Appeal.

(1) Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 584, 585.—Jurisdiction to hear a second appeal, on what matters—Secondary evidence. Question of.—Under ss. 584 and 585 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, a second appeal is confined to matters of law, usage having the force of law, or substantial defect in procedure. On an appeal to the Judicial Commissioner from the decree given on first appeal by an Appellate Court, and maintaining a finding of fact by the Original Court, the only questions were (1) whether secondary evidence had been properly admitted on a case that had arisen for its admission; and (2) whether the evidence offered constituted secondary evidence of the matter in dispute, which was the making of a document: Held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that (no special leave to appeal from the judgment of the Commissioner, the first Appellate Court, having been applied for the facts were not open to decision on this appeal); this Committee could only do what the Judicial Commissioner on second appeal, under the above sections, could have done; and that, as the case stood, they were bound by the findings of fact of the first Appellate Court. LUCIMAN SINGH v. PUNA, 16 C. 753 (P.C.)=16 I.A. 125=13 Ind. Jur. 169=5 Sar. P.C.J. 370

(2) Letters Patent, High Court, cl. 15—‘Judgment’—Order granting review of judgment—Civ Pro. Code, 1882, s. 629.—A second appeal was decided on the 1st June 1888, in favour of the respondents by two Judges of the High Court. On the 24th July, 1888, an application for review was filed with the Registrar. Various reasons prevented the two Judges from sitting together until the month of March 1889. On the 6th March the matter came up before them, when a rule was issued, calling upon the respondents to show cause why a review should not be granted, and made returnable on the 28th March 1889. On that day one of the Judges had left India on furlough, and the rule was taken up, heard and made absolute by the other of the two Judges sitting alone: Held, that the order was not a judgment within the meaning of s. 15 of the Letters Patent: and that no appeal would lie therefrom, the order being final under s. 629 of the Code of Civil Procedure. AUBHOY CHURN MOHUNT v. SHAMANT LOCHUN MOHUNT, 16 C. 788

(3) Practice—Finding of facts—Interference with finding of facts on second appeal.—As a general rule, the High Court will not interfere with the finding of facts by the lower appellate Court on second appeal, save on some very special ground; for instance, where such a finding of facts as appears to be necessary under the peculiar circumstances of the case, has not been satisfactorily arrived at. GOLUCK NATH alias RAKHAL DAS CHUTTOPADHYA v. KIRITHI CHUNDER HALDAR, 16 C. 645

Appeal—3.—Second Appeal—(Concluded).

622—Order of Special Judge as to settlement of rents.—The High Court has no jurisdiction either to entertain a second appeal from, or to interfere under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure with, an order of a Special Judge in regard to settlement of rents. SHEWBARAT KOER v. NIRPAT ROY, 16 C. 596

4.—Special Appeal.

(1) Practice—Procedure—Defective judgment of Appellate Court, reversing Munsiff's decision on credibility of witnesses—Judgment, form of.—Case in which the High Court, on Special Appeal, being of opinion that the judgment of the District Judge reversing that of the Munsif on the credibility of the witnesses did not fulfil the conditions that a judgment reversing such a decision ought to fulfil, brought up the case before itself and heard it as a Regular Appeal. PURMESHUR CHOWDHRY v. BRIJOLAL CHOWDHRY, 17 C. 256

(2) Second Appeal—Ground of second appeal—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 584—Substantial error in a first Appellate Court's finding without any evidence to support it.—The Court of first instance dismissed the suit upon the ground that the right, which it was brought to establish, had been taken away by a compromise, entered into by a guardian on behalf of an infant party to former proceedings. This was reversed by the first Appellate Court, which decreed the claim, holding it unaffected by the compromise, on the ground that the latter was, in fact, contrary to the interests of the infant. The High Court, on a second appeal, set aside this finding, there having been no proof that the compromise was to the infant's detriment, and affirmed the decree of the first Court. Held, that the High Court rightly reversed the decree of the first Appellate Court; the above finding, without any evidence to support it being a substantial error in the proceedings, and good ground of second appeal within the meaning of s. 584, subsection (c) of the Civ. Pro. Code HEMANTA KUMARI DEBI v. BIRENDRO KISHORE ROY CHOWDHRY, 17 C. 875 (P.C.)=17 I.A. 65=5 Sar. P.C.J. 542

5.—To Privy Council.

(1) Concurrence of two Courts on facts—"Affirming" judgment of Lower Court—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 596—Substantial questions of law—Case disposed of on facts.—Where the issues in a case involved questions both of law and fact, and the Subordinate Judge had decided against the plaintiff on two issues of fact, sufficient for the disposal of the case, without trying the other issues, the High Court found on those two issues substantially in favour of the plaintiff, but raised a further question of fact on the evidence and decided that against him, coming finally to the same conclusion on the facts as the Subordinate Judge, though not agreeing with him on all his findings or in the reasons on which they were based: Held, on an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, that the High Court did not "affirm" the judgment of the lower Court within the meaning of s. 596 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held, also, even assuming the judgment of the Lower Court was affirmed by the High Court, that there were substantial questions of law in the case which entitled the plaintiff to appeal, notwithstanding that such questions might be immaterial to the decision of the case. In the matter of the petition of ASHGAR. REZA REZA v. HYDER REZA, 16 C. 287=13 Ind. Jur. 336

Such appeals are governed by the practice under the Civ. Pro. Code, and not by r. 35 of the Vice-Admiralty Regulations published under the authority of 2 Will, IV, Ch. 51. Rule 35 applies to appeals from the High Court to the Privy Council. The mere fact of the salvors having appeared and mentioned in Court the matter of the apportionment of an award for salvage services reserved by the decree making the award did not perempt an appeal from that decree. Arbitration.

(1) Award on one point only—Remission to arbitrator—Refusal by arbitrator to act—Limitation—Adverse-possession—A case was referred for decision to an arbitrator. The arbitrator made his return, deciding by the award only one of the issues raised in the case, viz., that the defendants had been in possession of the land in suit for more than twelve years. The plaintiffs and the defendants claimed under the same landlord. The Munsif remitted the award to the arbitrator for determination of the other matters arising in the case; the arbitrator, however, refused to act further in the matter, and the Munsif himself took up the case and decided it in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the award made by the arbitrator was sufficient for the determination of the case, and reversed the decision of the Munsif, and gave the defendants a decree in terms of the award: Held, that as the plaintiffs and the defendants claimed under one and the same landlord, and the question between them being which of the two had the better title to the land in dispute, the case could not have been concluded by the findings of the arbitrator upon the question of possession, and that the Munsif had acted rightly on the arbitrator declining to complete the award, in deciding the case himself. JONARDON MUNDUL DAKIN v. SAMBU NATH MUNDUL, 16

C. 806

(2) Jurisdiction of Court over Arbitrators—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 508, 516—When a Court has referred a suit to arbitration it has jurisdiction over the arbitrators to compel them to give up documents filed before them as exhibits during the course of the arbitration, and to return the original records of the suit which may have been handed to them.
Such jurisdiction can be exercised by an application made in the suit on notice to the arbitrators. NURSING CHUNDER DAWAN v. NUFFER
CHUNDER DUTT, 17 C. 832

(3) Long and unreasonable delay in the conduct of the proceedings—Revocation—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 523—Appointment of arbitrarior by the Court.—A submission to arbitration can only be revoked on good grounds. The claimant, in a reference to arbitration, is the person on whom, ceteris paribus, it is incumbent to promote the conduct of the proceedings; and when, therefore, there is a long and unreasonable delay unexplained by any act of the other party, either conducting to it or consenting to it or waiving it, the latter is, prima facie, entitled to decline to go on with the reference, and to revoke the agreement for submission.
Where an agreement to refer has been duly revoked, the Court is incompestent to order it to be filed under s. 523 of the Code of Civil Procedure.
Semble:—Where no arbitrator has been named in an agreement, and the aid of the Court in the appointment of an arbitrator is invoked, the parties ought to have an opportunity of being heard upon the selection to be made. COLEY v. DACOSTA, 17 C. 200

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886.

Ss. 2, Prov. (b), 12, 39, 151 and 154—Settlement-holder—His rights under a settlement—Nisf-kherajdar, his right to a settlement—S. 154 of the Regulation.—The effect of ss. 39 and 151 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, is that a settlement made by a Settlement Officer, unless interfered with by the Chief Commissioner, is final; but the settlement-holder does not thereby acquire any right to the land so settled as against any person claiming rights to it, The effect of an order by the Government of India before the passing of the Assam Regulation in regard to the right of a nisf-kherajdar to hold lands found upon survey to be in excess of his nisf-kheraj estate, and to obtain a settlement thereof, considered.
In 1881 S, a nisf-kherajdar, obtained a settlement for a year of certain lands which were found upon survey to be in excess of his nisf-kheraj estate. Subsequently a pottah was granted to S, for a portion of the excess lands, while the other portion was settled by the Revenue authorities under a kobala pottah with M, who entered into possession under his settlement. In a suit by S, the nisf-kherajdar, for a declaration of his right to a settlement of the portion settled with M, and for possession, held that having regard to the provisions of s. 2, proviso (b), s. 12 of the Regulation, and the order of the Government of India, the nisf-kherajdar was entitled to a declaration of his right to a settlement, but in view of
s. 154 he was not entitled to a decree for possession. MADHUB NATH

Wrongful attachment—Claims to attached property—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 278, 283, 483—Attachment before judgment—Liability of creditor who caused attachment of goods not belonging to the debtor—Damage after sale—Difference between English and Indian law on the subject.—Orders for attachment in security under s. 483 of the Civ. Pro. Code, being issued on the ex parte application of the creditor, who is bound to specify the property which he desires to have attached and its estimated value, it follows that the attachment is the direct act of the creditor, for which he is immediately responsible. Should the goods be proved not to belong to the debtor, the litigation and delay, and also any depreciation of the goods by an intermediate fall in the market, between attachment and sale, are the natural and necessary consequences of the creditor’s unlawful act. The plaintiff having taken, without success, the summary proceeding under s. 278, to get the release of goods attached under s. 487, in a suit to which he was not a party, afterwards, in a suit brought by him in accordance with s. 283, established his right of property in the goods: Held, that (a), in order to entitle him to the full indemnity for the wrongful attachment he was not bound to allege and prove that the defendants had resisted his previous application under s. 278 maliciously, or without probable cause; and that (b), the goods having been sold under the Court’s order, the difference in market value of the goods at the time of their attachment (November 1883) and their price when they were sold (June 1884), the selling prices having fallen immediately, must be added to the damages. Held also that without bringing under review the judgment under s. 278, the effect of the judgment in the suit brought in accordance with s. 283 was to supersede the order under s. 287, and to render it inconclusive. The procedure on attachment not being the same in India as in England, where judgment-creditor is not responsible for the consequences of a sale, under a judicial order, of goods taken in execution in satisfaction of his debt, that proposition does not hold good under the Indian Procedure.

To commit offence—Attempt to cheat—Currency Office—Application for payment of lost halves of Currency Notes.—A man may be guilty of an attempt to cheat, although the person he attempts to cheat is forewarned, and is therefore not cheated. M wrote a letter to the Currency Office at Calcutta, enclosing the halves of two Government Currency Notes, stating that the other halves were lost, and enquiring what steps should be taken for the recovery of the value of the notes. The Currency Office having upon enquiry discovered that the amount of the notes had been paid to the holder of the other halves, and that the notes had been withdrawn from circulation and cancelled, sent M the usual form of claim to be filled up and returned to it. It appeared from the evidence that the Currency Office never contemplated paying M in respect of the notes. The form was filled up and signed by M and returned by him to the Currency Office: Held, that, although there was no intention on the part of the Currency Office to pay the amount of the notes, M was guilty of an attempt to cheat.

(1) Estoppel—Misrepresentation—Heir when bound by the acts of ancestor.—B purchased some property from D (a member of a joint Mitakshara family) in the name of his wife K, with the object of concealing from certain persons that he was the real purchaser, and further lest, in the event of a dispute arising in respect of such property, which was heavily encumbered, his exclusive property might be prejudiced and attached with debt. After the death of her husband K obtained a certificate of guardianship of her infant son S, in which she did not include this property, and in fact, continued to treat the property as her own. During S’s minority, C, the nephew of D, who was now of age, brought a suit for pre-emption against K in respect of this property, and obtained a consent decree under which he took possession. S, then, on attaining majority, instituted a suit against C for the recovery of the property as the heir, and representative of his father, on the ground that K was a mere benamidar. The defence taken by C, amongst others, was, was that K was the real owner he believed her to be; held that on the authority of 19 W.R. 292, it was a good defence, for, even on the assumption that the purchase was benami S as heir of B was bound by the misrepresentation of the latter. (2) Estoppel—Persons claiming under person who creates the benami.—The mere fact of a benami transfer does not in itself constitute such misrepresentation as to bind all persons claiming under the person who creates the benami. O made a benami gift of his property to his wife A. The deed of gift was registered and purported to be made in consideration of the fixed dower due to A. There was no mutation of names; but O managed the property as A’s am-muktar under a general power of attorney executed by her in his favour. On the death of O, A mortgaged the property. At a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagee against A, the mortgaged property was purchased by the defendants. On the death of A, H and R, the son and daughter of A, sold their shares in the property, which they had inherited from their father O, to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendants for a declaration of his right to the shares of H and R, and for partition: Held, that the acts of O were not such as to constitute an estoppel as against his heirs, and, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he sought. V of 1812, ss. 2, 3—Second Appeal, grounds of—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), s. 584.—In a suit for rent at the rate of Rs. 22-2 per annum the defence was that the yearly rent was not Rs. 22-2, but Rs. 18-10-6, and that the difference was made up of certain illegal cesses, such as sarak, neg, and khuruch, which had been paid for a long time with the rent and without specification in the rent receipts. Both the lower Courts found that Rs. 18-10-6 was the defendant's asul jana. Held by the Full Bench upon a review of the history of abwabs.—That the amounts sued for under the heads of sarak, neg, and khuruch were abwabs, and were therefore not recoverable and that all additions to the actual rent under the denomination of abwabs are illegal, and any agreement to pay them is void. Per Petheram, C. J.—The law, whether under the Regulations, or the Bengal Tenancy Act, or as laid down by the Privy Council in 17 C. 131; 161. A. 152 is the same, namely, that no imposition under any name whatever shall be recovered from the tenant for or on account of the occupation or tenure of the land beyond the sum which has been fixed for rent, whether that sum has been paid by agreement or by judicial determination between the landlord and the tenant. Any contract, whether express or implied, to pay anything beyond that sum, under any name whatever, for or in respect of the occupation of the land cannot be enforced. Per Ghose, J.—If in any given case the Court finds that any particular sum specified in the lease, or agreed to be paid, is a lawful consideration for the use and occupation of any land, that is to say, if it is really part of the rent, although not described as such, the Court would be justified in holding that it is not an abwab and is recoverable by the landlord. Cheating.

Cheating by personation—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 415, 419—Registration of false divorce—Bengal Act I of 1876.—To constitute the offence of cheating under s. 415 of the Indian Penal Code, the damage or harm caused or likely to be caused to the person deceived in mind, body, reputation or property must be the necessary consequence of the act done by reason of the deceit practised, or must be necessarily likely to follow therefrom. Where, therefore, certain persons were charged under s. 419 of the Indian Penal Code, one with personating another person before a Registrar and the others with abetting such personation and causing the Registrar to register a divorce under the provisions of Bengal Act I of 1876 with the wife of the personated person, and where the lower Courts convicted the accused under that section, holding that as such registrations were voluntary and a source of gain to the Registrar, harm was caused to the Registrar in mind and reputation by registering false divorces as well as by losing his fees in the future through persons being less likely to avail themselves of his services, and that therefore an offence under the section had been committed, held that the possibilities contemplated by the lower Courts were too remote; that the facts did not constitute an offence under the section; and that the conviction must therefore be set aside. MUNGESHUR KAUR v. JAMOONA PRASAD, 16 C. 603

(27) S. 244—Question relating to execution of decree—Parties to suit—Representatives.—K and M were brothers alleged to be joint in food, dwelling and business. In a suit which was brought against K, and which was unsuccessfully defended by him on behalf of himself and the joint family, a decree for costs was passed against him. K died after decree, and the decree-holder in execution had K’s sons put on the record as his representatives. Certain property was attached in execution, and the sons objected that the property in question had come to them as the self-acquired property of their uncle M, who had died after K, and that they had inherited no property from their father K. Their objection was allowed by the Court. The decree, and the property was ordered to be released from attachment. In a suit brought by the assignee of the decree-holder against the sons of K to establish his right to proceed against the property in question in execution of the decree against K; Held, that the question of the liability of the property to be taken in execution in the hands of the defendant was a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, and relating to the execution, &c., of the decree; within the meaning of s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and that the suit was consequently not maintainable. The cases as to the position of representatives added to the suit either before or after decree referred to and discussed. RAJRUPT SINGH v. RAMGOLAM ROY, 16 C. 1 = 13 Ind. Jur. 139

(25) S. 244—Representative of judgment-debtor—Purchaser at execution sale—Private purchase—Limitation Act, 877, art. 179—Application not in accordance with law—Application for execution by benamindar—Purchase pendente lice.—The defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were, together with one M, the owners of certain immovable property, including two mehals, Olipore and Ekhabala, subject to a mortgage on which the mortgagee obtained a decree on 30th July, 1873. Whilst that suit was pending one K, took out execution of a money decree which he had obtained in 1873 against defendant No. 3 and put up for sale the mehal Olipore, which was purchased by the father of the plaintiff A, who eventually obtained possession of it through the Court. The plaintiff B purchased privately the mehal Ekhala from the mortgagors and from M, some time after the date of the decree on the mortgage. That decree was in course of execution when the mortgagee died, and his estate came into the hands of the Administrator-General, who on 13th August 1878 sold the decree to G, defendant No. 1. After this sale several applications were made to have the name of G substituted for that of the original decree-holder, but in none of these applications was any further step taken towards execution of the decree, or any order made for substitution of the name of G, until 18th July, 1885, when, after notice to the defendants under s. 232 of the Civ. Pro. Code, G’s name was substituted as decree-holder, and execution was taken out against the mortgaged property including Olipore and Ekdhal. The plaintiffs each claimed the mehal they had respectively purchased, but their claims were disallowed. In suits brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration of their right to hold the properties free of the mortgage, the Court found that G was only a benamidar, so far as his purchase of the mortgage decree was concerned: Held, the plaintiff A, being the purchaser at a public sale in execution of a decree was not the representative of the judgment-debtors, the mortgagees, within the meaning of s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code; but the case was different with respect to plaintiff B, who claimed by private purchase, and must be considered the representative of the judgment-debtors within the meaning of that section. Held, also that G being merely a benamidar, the applications made by him for execution of the decree and for substitution of his name as decree-holder under s. 232 of the Civ. Pro. Code. were not applications made in accordance with law, within the terms of art. 179 of the Limitation Act, 1877, so as to prevent the operation of the law of limitation. Execution of the mortgage decree was therefore barred. The mortgagee having become inoperative, the plaintiff A, though a purchaser pendente lite, was no longer bound by it, and the defendant therefore was not entitled to enforce the mortgage against him. (32) S. 257-A—Agreement for, or to give, time for satisfaction of judgment-debt—Agreement without sanction of Court—Illegal Contract—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Consideration.—The plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant under which the judgment-debtor was liable to pay the amount by instalments with interest at 4 per cent. Eventually, the defendant failing to pay, the plaintiff accepted a bond executed jointly by the defendant and T his father, by which they both became liable for the amount of the decree with interest at 16$ per cent. In a suit on the bond, it was contended that the bond was void under s. 257-A of the Civ. Pro. Code, as being an agreement to give time for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt made for no consideration and without the sanction of the Court, and also without sanction provided for by the provisions of the Act. Held, also that s. 257-A of the Code was not applicable. That section was framed to prohibit the enforcement of an agreement of the kind mentioned therein, if made without the sanction of the Court, in execution of the decree, but was not intended to take away the right of parties of entering into a fresh contract either for payment of the judgment-debt, to give time for such payment, or for the payment of a larger sum than may be covered by the decree, if it be for a proper consideration. In this case the consideration for the bond was a lawful consideration; it could not be said that because satisfaction of the decree was not certified to the Court, there was no consideration: Held, also the bond was not void under s. 23 of the Contract Act. Semble.—The words "any law" in that section refer to some substantive law, and not to an adjective law, such as the Procedure Code is. The sale contemplated by s. 293 of that Code must be a sale of the same property that was first sold and under the same description, and any substantial difference of description at the sale and re-sale, in any of the matters required to be specified by s. 287, to enable intending purchasers to judge of the value of the property, will disentitle the decree-holder to recover the deficiency of price under s. 293. Seemler That even if the difference of description was due to the value of the property having been changed between the sale and re-sale, owing to causes beyond the control of any person, the decree-holder, if entitled to claim damages against a defaulting purchaser at the first sale must proceed against him by way of suit and not by an application under s. 293. Companies Act (VI of 1882).
S. 4—Registration of Association—"Gain"—Mutual Assurance Society.—In 1870 a fund was formed by a number of persons over 20 in number, the object being, according to the prospectus and rules, to provide for the widows, children and other relatives of the subscribers. The management was vested in a Board of Directors elected by the subscribers from amongst their own number. Subscriptions at fixed rates according to tables were paid by the subscribers to secure the provision of pensions for their widows, children and relatives. The monies so subscribed were invested in Government 4 per cent securities, and in the course of management a large reserve fund was accumulated and so invested, the interest annually payable in respect of which amounted in the year 1888 to upwards of Rs 64,000, but there was nothing to show that such reserve was larger than sound principles of management required. The rules provided for abatements of subscriptions according to a graduated scale, which might be granted or withheld from year to year by the Directors according to their opinion as to the condition of the fund. A subscriber to the fund was under no obligation to continue his subscription, but might stop it at pleasure, subject in certain contingencies to forfeiture of the benefit of past payments. Fines were also provided for unpunctuality in payments of subscriptions. It was contended that the subscribers formed an association which required registration under s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act, inasmuch as they carried on business having for its object the acquisition of gain by the association or the individual members thereof, as the subscribers must be taken to contemplate the ordinary consequences of their acts, and the forfeitures, fines, and large and increasing reserve fund constituted "gain." Semble that these did not constitute gain. But held that whether they did or not, no business was carried on having for its object the acquisition of gain by the association or the individual members thereof. The subscribers to the General Family Pension Fund or not a company, association, or partnership formed for the purpose of carrying on business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association, or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, within the meaning of s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act. Where the substantial purpose of an association is not to carry on a business for gain, the fact that gain may accrue incidentally or may arise from merely subsidiary provisions, does not make registration necessary. Confession.

Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 164, 364, and 533—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Examination of accused—Defect in confession—Confession not recorded in language in which it is given, admissibility of, in evidence.—An accused, when in custody, made a confession to a Deputy Magistrate in the presence of a Sub-Inspector, and during an investigation being held into a case of murder, under the provisions of Chapter XIV of the Crim. Pro. Code. The confession was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate in English, though made in Hindi, which the Deputy Magistrate perfectly well understood and could write. It purported to have been recorded under the provisions of s. 164, and was in reply to one question which was set out. The record bore the signatures of the accused and of the Deputy Magistrate, as well as the certificate as required by the section. It occupied about five pages of foolscap. At the trial the Sessions Judge excluded this confession on the ground that not having been recorded in the language in which it was made, and there being no reason why it should not have been so recorded, the document was inadmissible in evidence. He, however, called the Deputy Magistrate as a witness, and admitted in evidence his statement as to what the accused told him. This evidence, which occupied only a few lines, was to the effect that the accused told him he had committed the murder, and on this evidence alone the accused was convicted. On appeal, held that the provisions of s. 164 read with s. 364 are imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded, and that s. 533 does not contemplate or provide for any non-compliance with the law in this respect, and that, therefore, as it was not impracticable to record the confession in Hindi, the Sessions Judge was right in refusing to admit the document in evidence. Held further, that the Sessions Judge erred in admitting the oral evidence of the Deputy Magistrate as to what the accused told him, as, seeing that he was acting under the provisions of s. 164 of the Crim. Pro. Code, the confession was matter which was required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, and therefore under s. 91 of the Evidence Act no evidence could be given in proof of such matter except the document, where, as in this case, it was in existence and forthcoming. Held, also, that as the defects in the record could not be cured under s. 533 of the Crim. Pro. Code, and no secondary evidence could be given, no proof of the confession could be given, and the accused must be acquitted. JAI NARAYAN RAI v. QUEEN-EMPRESS, 17 C. 562 ... 1119

Contract.

(1) Construction of—Cash on delivery—Readiness and willingness to take delivery—Delivery Failure of, in terms of contract—Breach of contract—Custom.—Where a contract is for delivery "free on board," and cash on delivery is provided for, payment may be required upon delivery of the goods at the time and place mentioned for delivery in the contract. HEILGERS & CO. v. JADABLALL SHAW, 16 C. 417 ... 275

(2) Effect of misrepresentation by a party as to part of the subject-matter of a contract.—Where one party induces another to contract on the faith of representations made to him, any one of which is untrue, the whole contract is in a Court of Equity considered as having been obtained fraudulently. Where a tenant had executed a kabuliyat containing a stipulation which the landlord had told him would not be enforced, the tenant could not be held to have assented to it, and the kabuliyat was not the real agreement between the parties. PERTAB CHUNDER GHOSE v. MOHENDRA NATH PURKAIT, 17 C. 291 (P.C.) = 16 I.A. 33 = 13 Ind. Jur. 370 = 5 Sar. P.C.J. 444 ... 733

(3) Personal Contract—Assignment—Suit by Assignee.—Construction.—When considerations connected with the person with whom a contract is made form a material element of the contract, it may well be that such a contract on that ground alone is one which cannot be assigned without the...
promisor's consent so as to entitle the assignee to sue him on it. By an agreement in writing, dated 13th December 1882, and executed in favour of M.D. and H.D., who were the proprietors of an Indigo concern the defendant Rama Sahi agreed to sow indigo, taking the seed and tandi from M.D. and H.D.'s concern, on four bigahs of land out of his holding selected, measured, and prepared by M.D. and H.D. or their Amlah; and neither M.D. nor H.D. was fit for reaping "the reed, re-weed and turn it up to the extent necessary according to the directions of the Amlah of the concern;" and when the indigo was fit for reaping to "reap and load it on carts according to the directions of the Amlah of the concern;" and "if any portion of the said indigo land" was "in the judgment of the Amlah of the concern found bad," in lieu thereof to get some other land in his holding measured, and "on the land so measured in Bysack" to "sow Bhabdon crops only which will be reaped in Bhabdur." The defendant also agreed not to sow on the land measured any crop that might "cause obstacle to the cultivation of indigo," and, if he did so, the Amlah of the concern "should be at liberty to destroy such crop," and he should not "oppose the destruction thereof nor sue in the Courts, Civil or Criminal, for destruction of the same." As regards a breach of any condition, it was provided: "If I or my heirs depart from the conditions of this indigo engagement directly or indirectly, or in any way neglect to cultivate or do not cultivate indigo, I or they shall pay to the above-named M.D. and H.D. damages for the same from me or their person and property and shall raise no plea or objection." In 1886 M.D. and H.D. assigned the entire benefit of this agreement to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant for damages on account of his alleged failure to cultivate indigo for the plaintiff's concern in accordance with the terms of the agreement of the 13th December 1882: Held, that the agreement must be construed as one which had been entered into by the defendant with reference to the personal position, circumstances, and qualifications of M.D. and H.D. and their Amlah, and that, therefore, it was not assignable so as to give the assignee a right to sue upon it in his own name as for a breach of contract. Toomey v. Rama Sahi, 17 C. 115

4) Specific performance—Vendor and *purchaser—Approval of title by purchaser's solicitor—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss 91, 92.—In a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of a house, the entire contract being contained in letters which provided that entry was to be given to the purchaser by a fixed date, and that the title deeds were to be sent to the purchaser's solicitors, and "on approval of the same the purchase-money to be paid prompt": Held, that the carrying out of the contract was in no way conditional upon the approval of the solicitors, but that their approval was a condition precedent to the prompt payment of the purchase-money without waiting for a conveyance, and that the title was to be investigated and approved in the ordinary way. Cohen v. Sutherland, 17 C. 919

5) Which had become impossible to perform—Further and other relief—Damages—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 56—Novation.—Money having been advanced, a contract was made to secure repayment of it by a usufructuary mortgage with possession to be given to the lender, of land, which, however, had then already been attached under a decree, and had been taken under the Collector's management under s. 326 of the Code of Civil Procedure. To perform the contract by delivery of possession of the land having thus become impossible, it was held that the lender of the money was entitled to compensation, the damages being the amount of the advance, together with interest from the date when had performance been possible, the land should have been made over to him. *Seth Jaidayal v. Form of Registration—"Selection," of poems, Copyright in—Infringement of copyright by publication of copy before registration—Assignment of copyright previous to registration—Limitation of suits for infringement of copyright—Statute 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45.—The plaintiffs, the partners of a firm M. & Co., were the proprietors, registered under 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45, of the copyright of a selection of songs and poems, composed by numerous well known authors, which was prepared by one P., and originally published in 1801. Since the original publication the book ran through several editions, one of which was published in the year 1882. The book was registered under the provisions of the above Statute on the 8th February 1889, the name of both the publisher and proprietor being entered in the register as M. & Co., the firm's address being given, and the date of the first publication was entered as the 9th July 1861. The poems contained in the book were arranged by P., not in chronological order of their production, but in gradation of feeling and subject, and at the end of the book were given some notes, critical and explanatory. On the 15th January 1889, the defendant published at Calcutta, a book containing the same selection of poems and songs as was contained in P's. book. The arrangement, however, of the defendant's book differed from P's. in that the poems of each author were placed together and in order of their composition. In one of the poems the defendant printed forty lines, which were contained in the work by the original author, but which were omitted by P., and in another poem one line. In many places there were differences of reading in the two books, and in more of punctuation. In the defendant's book some of the titles to the poems, which had been assigned thereto by P. and not by the original authors, appeared, as well as a good many of P.'s notes, some with acknowledgment and some without. With each poem the defendant gave a mass of notes, critical and explanatory, and he also prefixed to the poems of each author a biographical notice. The suit was instituted on the 27th February 1890, and the plaintiffs complained that the publication of defendant's book constituted a breach of their copyright, and prayed for the usual relief by way of injunction and damages. They contended that although the copyright in the works of the original authors had long lapsed, they were entitled to the copyright in the "selection" made by P. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that there could be no copyright in such a selection: that if any existed the defendant's book did not infringe it; that the plaintiff's book being registered as first published in 1861 and the infringement charged being in respect of the edition of 1882, and there being no evidence to show that the same...
selection was contained in the latter as in the former edition, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief prayed for; that the author of the plaintiffs' book being \( P \), in whom the copyright would prima facie be, and the property being registered as in the plaintiffs' firm, the registry was bad, as the assignment of the copyright to the plaintiffs was not shown; that the registration was also bad, as the entry merely contained the name and address of the plaintiffs' firm and not the individual names and addresses of the partners of the firm; that the publication of the defendant's book having been before the date of registration, the suit would not lie; and that the suit was barred by the special limitation provided by s. 26 of the Statute 5 & 6 Vic., c. 45. Held, that such a "selection" could be the subject-matter of copyright, the true principle applicable to such cases being that one person is not at liberty to use or avail himself of the labour which another has been at for the purpose of producing his work, and so take away the result of the other's labour, or, in other words his property. Held, further, that the defendant's book constituted a piracy of the plaintiff's book, and had infringed their copyright, and that they were entitled to the relief they sought. Held also that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it was reasonable to assume that successive issues of a book of this kind under the same name are substantially the same book; and it was unnecessary that the registry should shown an assignment of the copyright by \( P \) to the plaintiffs that the registration was not bad by reason of the names and addresses of the partners of the firm not being given that the title to copyright is complete before registration, which is only a condition precedent to the right to sue, and that the plaintiffs had not therefore lost their right of action by reason of the defendant's book being published before theirs was registered and that assuming the rule of limitation provided by s. 26 of the Statute was applicable in this country, the suit was not barred by limitation. MacMillan v. Code for the purpose of compelling the removal of an obstruction from a public way where a bona fide question as to the way being public is raised, there is no jurisdiction to make an order under the section, and the question should be left for determination by the Civil Court. (4) Ss. 134, 144—Penal Code, s. 188—Disobeying order of public Servant—Trader at hat—Order prohibiting holding of hat.—A District Magistrate by an order made under s. 144 of the Crim. Pro. Code, after stating that it appeared that one "G. C. S. has recently established a hat at S in the vicinity of K, an old established hat, and held it on the same days, and that in consequence of the establishment of the new hat, and the endeavours made to induce or force people to frequent the new hat instead of the old one, a serious breach of the peace or riots are imminent," ordered "that the said G. C. S. and all other persons abstain from holding such hat" on those days. The order was duly made and promulgated but not strictly in accordance with s. 134 of the Code, and the orders of Government made thereunder. Notwithstanding the order one P. C. A, was found exposing goods for sale as a trader at the hat on one of the prohibited days, and he was thereupon charged with disobeying the order of the Magistrate, and convicted of an offence under s. 188 of the Penal Code: Held, that the conviction was bad, as P. C. A. did not come within the description of the persons intended by the order to be prohibited from "holding" the hat, which referred to "holding" as owner or manager, not as a trader. Held, also, that the terms of s. 134 of the Code, and the notification made by Government thereunder as to promulgation and issue of an order, are directory, but an omission to follow strictly such direction, though it is an irregularity, does not invalidate the order: where therefore it is shown that the order has been brought to the actual knowledge of the person sought to be affected by it, such omission does not prevent the case coming within s. 188 of the Penal Code. (7) S. 145—Dispute as to right to collect rents—Tangible immovable property.—A dispute as to the right to collect rents is a dispute concerning tangible immovable property within the meaning of s. 145 of the Crim. Pro. Code and the operation of that section cannot be limited by any rule which would depend upon the area of the property in dispute. Where, in such a dispute, which related to two pergannahs comprising more than three hundred distinct villages, it was admitted by the petitioner that the opposite party had been in possession by receipt of rent from the tenants up to a period some three months anterior to the institution of the proceeding, but she alleged that she had succeeded in inducing the tenants to attorn to her by payment of rent to the officers appointed by her since such period; and where the Deputy Commissioner, after recording a certain amount of evidence, refused to examine any more witnesses, on the ground that the enquiry would extend to an inordinate length and be extremely expensive, and passed an order under the section:—Held, that even though it might be established that the Deputy Commissioner's action in excluding evidence was illegal, it did not follow, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that the High Court would be justified in exercising its revisional powers. Held, further, that a payment of rent for a short time to the petitioner, even if proved, would not amount to dispossession of the opposite party. ABAYESSARI DEBI v. SHIDHESWARI DEBI, 16 C. 513 ... 339

(8) S. 145—Possession, Inquiry into—Time at which Magistrate has to determine who was in possession—Undisturbed possession immediately before dispute.—In an inquiry, under s. 145 of the Crim. Pro. Code, where the property in dispute was forest land, the right to possession of which was exercised by cutting and removing timber from time to time, the Magistrate found that the men of the first party had been driven away by those of the second, and had been unable to enter the forest and remove the timber alleged to have been cut by them; that this happened before the time of the initial proceedings, and continued to the date of the hearing; and that the men of the second party had been able to bring out of the forest the timber which had been cut. Upon these findings he came to the conclusion that the possession of the second party had been established, and made an order, under the section, in their favour: Held, that having regard to the nature of the property in dispute, these facts could not constitute legal possession of the second party at the time the proceedings were instituted. Held further that in like cases, having regard to the nature of the property in dispute, and the mode in which possession, may be exercised over it, in order to give which party was in possession when the proceedings were instituted, it is necessary to inquire which party was in undisturbed possession of the land in dispute by felling timber and removing the same without objection on the occasion immediately preceding the one on which the dispute arose; and whichever party be found to have been in possession on that occasion should be presumed to have possession at the time when the proceedings were commenced. JAGAT KISHORE ACHARJIA CHOWDHURY v. (13) S. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Notice to accused—Revisional power. Exercise of, by High Court.—When Subordinate Courts grant sanction to prosecute under s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code, it is incumbent on them so to frame the proceedings before them so to enable the High Court to satisfy itself from the record whether the application for sanction has been properly granted or not. A Magistrate, in disposing of a charge of theft, delivered the following judgment: "The charges of theft of doors and windows is not proved at all against the accused. They are acquitted." There was no further record of the proceedings. Immediately on the judgment being delivered, the pleader appearing for the accused applied for sanction to prosecute the complainant under ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate refused to hear the application then on the ground that it was not the proper time fixed by him to hear applications. The attorney for the complainant, who had expressed his willingness to have the application heard and disposed of there and then, intimated that he was prepared to show cause why sanction should not be granted, and asked that notice of any future application might be given to the complainant. The accused renewed the application the following day without notice to, and in the absence of the complainant or his attorney, and the Magistrate granted the sanction asked for. On an application to the High Court to revoke the sanction: Held, that the Magistrate did not exercise a proper discretion under the circumstances in neglecting to give the complainant notice of the application, and an opportunity of being heard. Held further, that the mere fact of the charge laid by the complainant not having been proved, was not, in itself, sufficient ground for granting sanction to prosecute him under ss. 182 and 211 of the Penal Code, and as, beyond the judgment of the Magistrate there was nothing on the record to show that there were sufficient grounds for granting the sanction, it should be revoked. (22) S. 487—Judicial proceedings—Sanction to prosecute—Criminal Appeal—Hearing of, by District Judge who has granted sanction to prosecute—Penal Code, s. 210.—A complainant applied to a Munsif for sanction to prosecute a decree-holder for an offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code, and upon the Munsif’s refusing such application, preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who granted the sanction asked for. The decree-holder, having been prosecuted and convicted before a Deputy Magistrate, preferred an appeal which came on for hearing before, and was disposed of by, the same District Judge who had granted the sanction: Held, that the words "shall try any person," as used in s. 487 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, include the hearing of an appeal, and that the hearing of the appeal from the order of the Munsif refusing sanction was a judicial proceeding within the meaning of the Code, and consequently that, under the provisions of s. 487, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal against the judgment and sentence passed by the Deputy Magistrate. by his nika wife, whom he had subsequently divorced, the Magistrate found that the marriage had not been proved, but that, upon the other evidence adduced, including the similarity of the features and the name of the child with those of the defendant, who did not appear before him during the proceedings, but with whom he stated that he was well acquainted, the child was the illegitimate child of the defendant. He, accordingly, made an order for maintenance under the section: Held, that, under the circumstances, he was wrong in taking into account the similarity of the names and the features of the child and the defendant, but, as there was ample evidence of the paternity, he was justified in making the order he did, as it was immaterial for the purpose of determining the liability of the defendant to maintain the child, whether the mother had been married to the defendant or not. Nur Mahomed v. Iqsmulla Jan, 16 C. 781

(24) S. 551—Unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose—Infant, Custody of.—A Hindu girl, under the age of 14 years, went of her own accord to a Mission House where she was received and allowed to remain. The mother and husband of the girl thereupon applied to the Magistrate, who took proceedings under s 551 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Lady Superintendent of the Mission House denied the girl was legally married, and alleged that she was practically being brought up with the connivance of the mother to a life of prostitution. The Magistrate, after recording evidence, found that the girl was legally married; that the other allegation was not established; and that, although she went to and remained in the Mission House of her own free will, there was, under the circumstances an unlawful detention for an unlawful purpose. He further found that there were no facts established which would disentitle the husband or the mother to the custody of the girl and passed an order under the section directing the girl to be restored to her mother. Held, upon the fact as found by the Magistrate, as it was immaterial whether the girl did or did not consent to remain at the Mission House, there was an unlawful detention within the meaning of those words as used in the section, as the girl was kept against the will of those who were lawfully entitled to have charge of her. Held, also, that s. 551, applying only as it does to women and female children, must not be construed so as to make it include purposes which, although not unlawful in themselves, might only become so when entertained towards a child in opposition to the wishes of its guardian, but that the purpose whether entertained towards a woman or a female child, must be in itself unlawful. Held, consequently, that in the circumstances of the case there was no detention for an unlawful purpose, and that the Magistrate had no power to make the order. Held, further, that although the Magistrate had no power under the section to make the order he did, it did not follow that the Court should direct the girl to be restored to the custody of the Lady Superintendent even if it had the power to do so, and that having regard to the circumstances of the case there was nothing to justify such an order being passed. DECLARATORY DEREE.

Suit for—Declaratory decree not obtainable by absolute right—Discretion of Court.—It is discretionary with a Court to grant or refuse a declaratory decree with regard to the circumstances. A talukdar died, leaving a widow: also a son, who, having succeeded as talukdar, died childless. This son's widow, being in possession, sued for a declaration that an adoption by the father's widow, to the father, was void and ineffectual. The ground of suit was that, at some time or other, after the death of the plaintiff, the person alleging himself to have been adopted might obtain the taluqdar, unless his adoption should now be negatived. With regard to all the circumstances, the refusal of such a declaration was approved by their Lordships. If the person alleged to have been adopted should sue hereafter, the question would be decided whether he was validly adopted or not. PIRI, PAL KUNWAR v. DECREE.

(1) Construction of decree—Construction of order made by settlement Officer awarding estate to Hindu widow—Transfer by widow, Effect of.—The plaintiffs obtained a declaratory decree that they were the reversioners and heirs apparent, expectant on the future death of a widow who, at the time of suit, had survived two co-widows, and that they, the plaintiffs, would be entitled to inherit at her death the estate that had belonged to the deceased husband. All parties had proceeded, as far as to the present appeal, on the view that the surviving widow had the widow's estate only. But an order made in the course of the settlement operations in 1865, had conferred the estate of the deceased on the three widows as well as on his mother, in equal shares of one-fourth each. Held, that there was nothing in this order to show an intention to give to the mother and widows anything more than an interest, such as that which a Hindu widow takes; and that the inheritance would devolve, in due course of law, an alienation which the widow had made operating only for her life-time. (3) Form of decree—Suit for possession by owners of adjoining estates—Right of parties to equal moieties of property decreed, although each had claimed the exclusive title—Decrees dismissing their suits reversed, the evidence being sufficient as to the former, but not the latter right.—In cross suits between the owners of adjoining estates, each claimed against the other, to be entitled to, and to be put into possession of property situate on the boundary between their estates. The High Court dismissed both claims on the ground that the evidence of the exclusive right of either party was insufficient. Held that, although this might be so, there was, nevertheless, sufficient evidence of possession having been held by both the one and the other, and of the title of both, to support the conclusion that each had a claim to an equal moiety, to which each should be declared entitled. Each should be put into possession of the moiety which was opposite to and adjoining his estate. Khagendra Narain Chowdry v. Matangi Deb, 17 C. 814 (P.C.) = 17 I.A. 62=5 Sar. P.C.J. 538

Deed.

(1) Construction of—Deeds not intended to operate according to their tenor—Nullity of transaction apart from fraud.—Documents, principally a pottah and a kobala, executed between a Mahomedan pardanashin lady and one of her relations, purported to represent, the one a putanic lease from her of her lands, and the other a sale of her house, and ground, from the date of the execution. That she received the consideration was not proved, but had it passed it would have been distributed between the two deeds which formed part of one and the same transaction. From the acts of the parties it was established that her intent was to deprive her heirs, not herself, and that she had no intention to part with the property in praesenti, as the deeds represented that she did. Held, that the latter not being intended to operate according to their tenor, the whole transaction was a nullity. Jibun Nissa v. Asgar Ali, 17 C. 937 (P.C.) = 5 Sar. P.C.J. 574

Interrogatories—Fishing questions—Suit for recovery of land—Title—Defective pleadings—Issues—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 112, 121—127, 146.—Interrogatories are not in this country to be framed to anticipate or supply defects of pleading or to ascertain the case of the other side. Where the pleading of either party is too vague, the Court may call for a further or fuller written statement, or may frame and record issues until the case raised by the pleadings is ascertained with sufficient clearness. A plaintiff may interrogate with a view to obtain information or admission in support of his own case, and this right extends not only to his original case, but also to any answers which he has to make to the defendant’s case, subject to the qualification (inter alia) that the interrogatories must be directed to a case on which the plaintiff has already determined and to which he has committed himself. He cannot be allowed to put fishing questions in order to try whether he can discover any flaw in the defendant’s case or suggest any answer to it.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869).
(1) S. 16, cl. (c)—Divorce—Intervenor—Procedure after decree nisi on application by respondent for liberty to intervene.—A wife sued for dissolution of her marriage on the grounds of her husband's adultery and cruelty. The respondent did not appear or file an answer, and the case was heard ex parte and resulted in a decree nisi being passed. Subsequently, and before the decree was made absolute, the respondent applied for liberty to intervene under the provisions of cl. (c), s. 16 of the Divorce Act, the application being based on affidavits alleging, inter alia, collusion on the part of the petitioner. Held, following G. B. 416, that the respondent could not be allowed to intervene or be heard when the decree came on to be made absolute, but that the affidavits should be filed, and that notice should be given to the petitioner that the decree would not be made absolute until the matter set out in the affidavits as regarded the collusion had been cleared up. (2) Costs.—One of two co-sharers by ancestral title in the under-proprietary right in certain villages obtained in 1870, decrees against the talukdar for sub-settlement, and getting possession had his name entered in the khetwpat. The other co-sharer remained entitled to claim that this possession was held partly for him. The present suit was brought upon two agreements purporting to have been made in 1870 between the two co-sharers while proceedings to obtain the above decrees were pending, to the effect that whereas both had claims against the talukdar one only was to sue him, the other paying half of the costs and being entitled to receive half of what might be decreed. The Judicial Committee upon the evidence concluded, that the appellate Court attributing too much to certain omissions and acts on the plaintiff's part which were more or less explained had

(2) Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 65, 66—Admission of Secondary evidence—Copy of document.—On an appeal to the Judicial Commissioners from a decree given on first appeal by an appellate Court and maintaining a finding of fact by the Original Court the only questions were (1) whether secondary evidence had been properly admitted on a case that had arisen for its admission; and (2) whether the evidence offered constituted secondary evidence of the matter in dispute which was the making of a document. Both the above questions were decided in the affirmative by their Lordships, the first on the ground that whether the evidence offered would itself prove the making of the document or not, it formed good ground for holding that there was a document capable of being proved by secondary evidence admissible with reference to the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) ss. 65, 66; the second also in the affirmative because the evidence consisting of a copy which was made of a document and filed (in another suit) among the records of the Court and still there endorsed, "copy in accordance with the original," signed by the Judge who presided on the Court who alone was authority to compare and accept such copy, there were grounds for considering it genuine. (3) Parol evidence—Evidence to vary written contract—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 92—Bought-and-sold notes—Oral evidence as to matter on which document is silent—Reservation of question on evidence—Damages.—The defendants agreed to purchase, to arrive, from Messrs. Ralli Brothers, 3,000 maunds of copper, July shipment, and on the 13th August, the defendants entered into a contract with the plaintiffs to sell to them 750 maunds of copper. The bought-and-sold-notes, forming the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants, corresponded one with the other, and constituted a contract for delivery of 750 maunds on arrival within four months. Fifteen hundred maunds or thereabouts of this copper arrived at Ralli Brothers' godowns within the time mentioned in the contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The defendants delivered to the plaintiffs 375 maunds 6 chittacks of copper within time; and made no further delivery to the plaintiffs, no other shipment of the copper contracted for arriving within time at Calcutta. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover damages for breach of contract to deliver, the defendants sought to show by oral evidence that the contract was for delivery of 750 maunds, if one-fourth of each of the successive arrivals at Ralli Brothers' godowns should, in the aggregate, amount to 750 maunds: Held, that such evidence was inadmissible under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Questions as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise, and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given. JADU RAI v. BIJUBOTARAN NUNDY, 17 C. 173

(4) Thak-maps—Boundary—Title. Question of.—The sole question for determination being a question of the boundary of two taluqs, the Judge hearing the case refused to give effect to a certain thak-map which had been prepared in 1859, and upon the face of which appeared what were admitted by the parties then owning the taluqs to be the boundary lines of the taluqs at the time; no evidence was given showing that these boundary lines had ever been altered: Held, that the map was clearly evidence of what the boundaries of the properties were at the time of the permanent settlement and also as to what they admittedly were in 1859. Upon M denying the genuineness of the Koran, and of certain words in the letter, it was proposed on behalf of K to give evidence in reply showing that M had made statements to an attorney before the case inconsistent with his evidence both as to the Koran and the letter. Held, that evidence might be given in reply as regards the Koran, but not as regards the letter; no substantive evidence having been given as to the latter before the close of the plaintiff's case. Execution of Decree.
(1) Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 230, 235, 237, 245—Specification of property—Form of application.—A decree was passed on the 6th September 1876, and on the 6th July 1888 an application for execution was made in the terms of s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure which did not contain a list of property, as prescribed by s. 237, and the decree-holder did not produce the same till the 11th September 1888. The application having been made and admitted, any further application would be barred after the 6th September 1888. Held by the Full Bench, that the application of the 6th July 1888 was one within the meaning of s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Per Prinsep, Pigot and Ghose, JJ.—Held, that the application was defective as not complying with the provisions of s. 237, and as it was not amended within due time or, under the provisions of s. 245, the decree-holder was barred. Per Prinsep and Pigot, JJ., 14 C. 124 should be overruled. Per Petheram, C. J.—The application could not be carried out without amendment, and no amendment could be made after the application had been admitted and registered under s. 245. (2) Claims to attached property—Questions arising between the parties or their representatives—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 234, 244, 278=283. Held by the Full Bench:—An objection taken by a person who has become the representative of the judgment-debtor in the course of the execution of decree to the effect that the property attached in satisfaction thereof is his own property, and not held by him as such representative, is a matter cognizable only under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not the proper subject-matter of a separate suit by a party against whom an adverse order may have been passed under ss. 280 and 281 as provided by s. 283. Held by the majority of the Full Bench (Princep, O'Kinley and Ghose, JJ):—Ss. 278 to 283 of the Civ. Pro. Code, do not cover the case of any contest between parties to the suit or their representatives on the record of the suit in regard to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of a decree. The effect of the decision between such parties is that the right to enforce or oppose execution is determined under s. 244, subject to the result of such appeal as is allowed by law. Per Princep and O'Kinley, JJ.—S. 244 should be liberally construed to prevent litigation. PUNCHANUN BUNDOPHAYA v. RABIA BIBI, 17 C. 711 (F.B.) ... 1016

(3) Execution of rent decree obtained against a putndar—Property other than the tenure proceeded against—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 65—Rent decree.—Where a landlord obtains a decree for rent against his tenant, which is on the face of it a decree for a sum of money without creating a charge upon the tenure, he is at liberty in execution to bring to sale property of his judgment-debtor other than the tenure itself. S. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act creates a first charge upon the tenure for its rent, and puts the landlord in the position of a first mortgagee so far as the rent is concerned, but the tenant remains personally liable for the rent, so that the landlord has a charge upon the tenure for the rent, and he has a remedy against the tenant personally for the debt to him, and he has therefore a right to avail himself of either of these remedies. (4) Mesne profits—Decree made against a widow representing estate, enforced against a minor adopted son through the widow as his guardian—Devolution of liability along with estate, upon the minor, without his having been made formally a party to the decree—His similar liability in a suit for mesne profits.—A minor, who had been adopted by a widow as a son to her deceased husband, was not made a party to an appeal, which she preferred after the adoption, from a decree made against her when she represented the estate: Held, that, as liability under the decree made when the widow fully represented the estate, devolved upon the minor on his adoption, the widow's estate being also thereupon divested, it would be right for her to continue to defend but only as guardian of the minor. Also, that it having been for the minor's benefit that the widow as guardian should appeal from a decree, which had already diminished his estate, the minor was bound by the adverse decree of the appellate Court, although he had not been made formally a party thereto. Held also, that the minor, by his adoptive mother as his guardian, was liable in a suit for mesne profits, fought after the decree upon title; it being made clear that the suit for mesne profits was substantially brought against the minor. the principle laid down in 2 I.A. 275; I Calc., 133, that the debt was a personal debt, payment of which could be enforced only against the property left by B. (6) Security for costs—Security Bond, Enforcement of, by execution—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882). s. 549—Act VII of 1888, s. 46—General Clauses Act (I of 1862), s. 6.—On the 9th June, 1888, a decree-holder applied for leave to execute his decree (which was one for costs) against a person who had become security for the costs of an appeal which had been dismissed with costs; this application was refused, on the ground that the law as it then stood did not authorize such an application, the remedy of the decree-holder being by regular suit against the surety. Subsequently to the passing of Act VII of 1888, the decree-holder made a fresh application for such execution under s. 46 of that Act. The Court after referring to s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, rejected the application, on the ground that proceedings against the surety had been commenced before Act VII of 1888 had come into force; held, on appeal, that the application should have been allowed. Abdul Wahad v. Farredãonnissa, 16 C. 323

(7) Transfer by operation of law—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 232—Right of procedure—Execution under—Bengal Act (VIII of 1869) and Act (VIII of 1885).—Upon the death of the full owner, the mother took out probate of a will in which she was appointed executrix. The will was afterwards disputed by the minor son of the testator, and probate was revoked: but while the mother was in possession of the estate as executrix, she sued and obtained a decree for rent under Bengal Act, VIII of 1869. Upon the application of the minor for the execution of the decree: Held, that the minor was in a position to execute the decree, his succession to the estate of his father being a succession or transfer by operation of law within the meaning of s. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Held, also, that the mode in which the decree was executed under the old Rent Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1869) was, in so far as it was right at all that belonged to the judgment-creditor, not a private right, but a mere right of procedure, and the execution was therefore to be governed by Act VIII of 1885. Umasoondary Dasy v. Brojonath Bhattacharjee, 16 C. 347

(8) Transfer of decree for execution—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 223—Jurisdiction.—s. 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that the Court which passes a decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court, should be interpreted to mean, another Court having jurisdiction and to competent to execute that decree, having regard to the amount or value of the subject-matter of its ordinary jurisdiction. (9) Transfer of decree for execution—Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 6 and 223.—Having regard to the provisions of s. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to execute a decree sent to it for that purpose under s. 223 of the Code, when the decree has been passed in a suit the value or subject-matter of which is in excess of the pecuniary limits of its ordinary jurisdiction. Alternative charges—Statements made to Police Officer investigating case—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 191, 193—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 161.—An accused was charged with giving false evidence upon an alternative charge, one statement having been made to a police officer investigating a case of arson, and the other having been made when he was examined as a witness before the Joint Magistrate when the case was being enquired into. The two statements were contradictory, and no evidence was given to show which of them was false. It was not proved that the statement made to the police officer was made in answer to questions put by him, and the only evidence given at the trial with regard to the inquiry upon which the police officer was engaged was to the effect that an inquiry was being made about the burning of a house. The jury acquitted the accused, and the case was referred to the High Court by the Sessions Judge, who disagreed with the verdict of acquittal: Held that the verdict was right. Before a conviction in such a case can be sustained, it must, having regard to the provisions of s. 161 of the Crim. Pro. Code, be clearly provided by the evidence that the statement made to the police officer was a statement in answer to questions put to the accused by the investigating police officer, and in the absence of such evidence, even though the statements were proved to be false, a conviction could not be sustained. Held, further, that in such a case, it is also necessary for the prosecution to establish that the police constable was making an investigation under Chap. XIV of the Crim. Pro. Code. The Empress v. Grant.
Construction of—Invalidity of grant or covenant by grantor in favour of persons unborn, upon a condition which may never arise—Restraint upon grantor's own power of alienating—Hindu Law.—A Hindu owner cannot make a conditional grant of a future interest in property in favour of persons unborn, who may happen at a future time to be the living descendants of the grantees named, to take effect upon the occurrence of an event which may never occur. That he would thereby impose a restraint contrary to the principles of Hindu law, upon his own power of alienating his estate, discharged of such future interest is a reason for the invalidity of such a grant. The purpose was to oblige the grantor and the successors in a Raj estate to give in some way or other maintenance to all the descendants of four persons living at the date of grant, by declaring that on the failure of the Raja of the day, at any future time to maintain such descendants the latter were to have an immediate right to four of the Raj villages. This might be regarded as importing a present assignment to persons not yet in existence, subject to a suspensive condition which might prevent its ever taking effect; or it might be regarded as a covenant intended to run with the Raj estate, in favour of non-existing convenaneous, to give the villages to them in the event specified: Held, that in either view it was equally ineffectual. Held, also, that the High Court had correctly construed the instrument in holding that the words, "if ever in the time of my descendant you are not provided with means of maintenance," formed a condition; which also was unfulfilled—the descendants being in possession of villages granted to them by the Raja, other than those claimed, more than sufficient for their maintenance. (1) Invalid agreement relating to estate of adopted son—Conditional adoption.—A talukdar by his will authorised his senior widow to select and adopt a minor male child of his family to be the owner of the entire raisat. This power having been exercised, the adoption was questioned on the ground that the widow had agreed with the natural father of the adopted son that she should retain the whole estate during her life: Held, that this had not rendered the adoption conditional, and that it did not affect the rights of the adopted son. Even if it had amounted to a condition, the analogy, such as it was, presented by the equities relating to powers of appointment under English law, suggested that the condition itself would have been void without invalidating the adoption. A clause in the wajib-ul-azz of a village in Oudh authorized by any co-parcener not having male issue, or his widow, to make a gift of his share in the village to a daughter, or a daughter's son; the intention apparent from this, and from a further provision as to the descendants of a sharer's daughter being to modify the law otherwise prevailing, viz., the Mitakshara, and authorize the introduction of a daughter, or her son, and their descendants, male or female, in priority to brothers or nephews of the sharer: Held, that such introduction was authorized, and that the inheritance, where the widow had made a gift of it in favour of a daughter, was transmitted to that daughter's daughter, the gift being more than the donor would have taken as a widow. The gift was to the daughter and to her husband jointly: Held, that a gift being invalid as to the husband, the daughter took the whole estate given on the general principle of gifts to two persons jointly where they failed as to one of them, operating entirely for the benefit of the other who could take, declared in Humphrey v. —9.—Maintenance.

(1) Hindu widow—Incontinence—Forfeiture of rights—Starving maintenance.

—It is a settled principle of Hindu Law what a Hindu widow’s right to claim maintenance is forfeited upon her unchastity. This rule is not to be restricted to women espoused, who are not of the rank of patni or wife. Where a widow became unchaste after her husband’s death, and was leading an unchaste life at and about the date of suit, held, that she was not entitled to maintenance of any sort. Quare, whether if she were to begin to lead a moral life she would not be entitled to a starving maintenance. Roma Nath alias Ramanund Dhur Poddar v. Rajonimon Darji, 17 C. 674

(2) Obligation of brothers to maintain widow of a brother who pre-deceased their father whose property they have inherited. The principle that an heir succeeding to property takes it for the spiritual benefit of the late proprietor, and is, therefore, under a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was morally bound to support, has ample basis in the Hindu Law of the Bengal school. It is immaterial whether the property so inherited is moveable or immoveable. In each case it must be determined whether, having regard to the relationship, the means, and various other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was, according to the principles of the Hindu Law and to the usages and practice of the Hindu people, morally bound to maintain that party. The above principle is applicable to the case of a widow claiming maintenance from her husband’s brothers who had inherited her father-in-law’s property, her own husband having pre-deceased his father. Provided, therefore that there is nothing to show that she was not a dependent member of her father-in-law’s family, within the meaning of the rule of Hindu Law enjoining a moral obligation on a person to maintain such members of his family, such a widow was entitled to maintenance. —10.—Partition.

(1) Inheritance of talukdari estate in Oudh—Sanad recognizing primogeniture—Effect of, as to existing rights of inheritance—Shares held by members of family—Mesne profits on specific and definite share.—The ordinary rule is that if persons are entitled beneficially to shares in an estate they may have partition. Although in a suit for the partition of joint family estate, where the head of the joint family does not account for the profits under the ordinary Hindu Law, mesne profits are not recoverable, it is not so where the family has been living under a clear agreement that the members are entitled, not as an ordinary Hindu family, but in specific and definite shares. If the enjoyment of those shares is in any way disturbed, the right to sue for profits will arise, as well as the right to partition. A talukdari estate which, before and after annexation, was subject to the common Hindu Law of Oudh; viz., the Mitakshara, was restored after the general confiscation of 1858 to the family, which received a sanad recognizing the shares of its members. At the same time, a grant was made to the head of the family as talukdar of two other villages, and to him afterwards in 1861 was issued a primogeniture sanad of the above talukdari estate. This sanad could not prevail against the family rights of inheritance; and effect was given to family arrangements, with the same result as regards the two villages. On the contention that the family, by the effect of the sanads, was to have one head and sole manager in the talukdar, who being accountable to the junior members.

for their shares of the profits, was alone to hold the entire estate by primogeniture; Held that this kind of managementship was entirely unknown to the common Hindu Law of Oudh; and that apparently, the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, did not contemplate any such thing. At all events there must be clear arrangements, such as were not found here, to establish and prove its existence. Partition was accordingly decreed to the members of the family suing for it, 14 I.A. 37, I.L.R. 14 C. 493, as the right to partition of a talukdari estate, referred to and followed also the same case in regard to profits, where the members of a family are entitled to specific and definite shares not as members of an ordinary joint family. (1) Gift of idol and debutter land—Private Endowment—Benefit of idol—Sebaits—Debutter property.—A gift of an idol and of the lands with which it is endowed (being a private endowment made with the concurrence of the whole family to another family for the purpose of carrying on the regular worship of the idol, if made for the benefit of the idol, is not invalid, and is one binding on succeeding sebaits. KHETTER CHUNDER GHOSE v. HARI DAS BANDOPADHYA, 17 C. 557 ...

(2) Hereditary right to be shebait and to have possession of property dedicated to religious purposes.—According to Hindu Law, when the worship of a Thakur has been founded, the office of a shebait is held to be vested in the heir or heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, provided that there has not been some usage, course of dealing, or circumstance showing a different mode of devolition. It having been established that a particular worship had been founded by the plaintiff's grandfather, it followed that the plaintiff was by inheritance the shebait of that worship, there being no proof of any usage at variance with this presumption, but the custom appearing to be in accordance with it. Held, that the plaintiff, as such representative of the founder, was entitled, in preference to a collateral descendant member of the founder's family, to claim the shebaitship. Also, that the plaintiff was entitled in that character, to the possession of a portrait which had been by the same founder dedicated to this worship. But that he had no right to a temple in which the portrait was kept, this temple having been given by one of the worshippers ("for the location of the Sri Sri Ishwar Jois") with the condition annexed that the defendant should be shebait. The plaintiff, accordingly, could not claim possession of this temple, as it could only have been accepted as a gift upon the donor's terms; and this condition prevailed notwithstanding that the temple had been in part paid for by subscription among the worshippers; there being no evidence that the latter did not know of it, or had paid their money with any reference to the question who was to be shebait. be born to such of brother, capable of being adopted as a son of the testator, in accordance with certain conditions made in the will. These conditions failed, and, on the expiration of the term of eight years, the estate vested in the brother. The will made no provision for disposal of the rents and profits of the estate during the period the succession thereto was in abeyance. Disputes having arisen between the widow of the testator and his brother, as to the right to such rents and profits, the brother eventually agreed to pay, and did pay, over to the widow a large sum by way of settlement of these disputes, for which sum the widow executed a release. The widow invested the sum so received in Government Securities, and twenty years afterwards created, with this fund, a trust in favour of one G.C.R., and appointed B. trustee thereof. On the death of the widow, the daughter of the testator tried to set aside this trust, claiming the funds as a portion of the father's estate with which the widow had no right to deal: Held, that as the accumulations were handed over to the widow by the person entitled to the reversion after the estate had vested in him, and a release had been entered into between them, no presumption arose that the fund in question had been accumulated by the widow for the benefit of other heirs of the testator, and that there being no such presumption, the facts of the case must be looked at to ascertain the intention of the parties regarding this fund. Held, as to this that the conduct of the widow evidenced no intention to accumulate the sum received by her for the benefit of any person but herself, or that she ever intended to give up the power of disposing, expending, or dealing with it in any way. (2) Brother's widow, Obligation to maintain—See HINDU LAW (MAINTENANCE), 17 C. 373.

(3) Maintenance of Hindu widow where there are sons by different mothers, how chargeable.—When the Hindu law provides that a share shall be allotted to a woman on a partition, she takes it in lieu of, or by way of provision for, the maintenance for which the partitioned estate is already bound. According to Jumutavahana, referred to by Jaganatha (Colebrooke), commenting on v. 89 of Ch. 2, Ck. V, it is a settled rule that a widow shall receive from sons, who were born of her, an equal share with them; and she cannot receive a share from the children of another wife. So long as the estate remains joint and undivided, the maintenance of widows is a charge on the whole; but where a partition takes place, among sons of different mothers, each widow is entitled to maintenance only out of the share as shares allotted to the son or sons of whom she is the mother. 15.—Will.

(1) Construction of a will of Hindu testator—Power to adopt conferred on testator’s widow ended on estate vesting in his son’s widow—Gift of beneficial interest.—On a claim by the children of the testator’s daughter, as against his brother’s son, held that the testator’s direction to his executor (who was his elder brother), to make over whatever remained of his estate, after payment of debts, to his, the testator’s son, ("when he comes of age"), had the effect of a gift to that son operating at that time; and that the words in the will, "if my minor son dies," meant, in order to be consistent with the above, "dies before attaining full age". On the death of the testator’s son, after attaining full age and leaving a widow, the testator’s widow, although empowered by the will to adopt if the testator’s son should die without son or daughter (which he did), could not exercise this power after the estate had, consequently upon the son’s death, vested in his widow for her widow’s estate. The testator’s son, having succeeded to the estate under the above provisions himself made his will, whereby, he directed that “his cousin brother” (the defendant above mentioned) on attaining full age, “becoming dakikar of my share as well as the shares of my elder uncle,” should maintain his, the testator’s mother and widow; ‘Held, that this was not an absolute gift of the beneficial interest, and that the claim of the children of the daughter of the parent testator was valid. Tarachurn Chatterjee v. Suresh Chunder Mukerjee, 17 C. 122 (P.C.)=16 I.A. 166=13 Ind. Jur. 289=5 Sar. P.C.J. 379 ...

2) Construction of will—Successive interest bequeathed—Gift over after life-interest—Construction of gift to persons, and the heirs male of their bodies.—A will cannot institute a course of succession unknown to the Hindu Law; and in conferring successive estates, the rule is that an estate of inheritance must be such a one as is known to the Hindu Law, which an English estate tail is not. It is competent to a Hindu testator to provide for the defeasance of a prior absolute estate contingently upon the happening of a future event; but an important part of the rules relating thereto is: first, the event must be one that will happen, if at all, at latest immediately upon the close of a life in being at the time of the gift (as decided in the Mullick case: 9 M.I.A., 123). Secondly, that a defeasance, by way of gift over, must be in favour of some person in existence at the time of the gift (as laid down in I.A. Sup. Vol. 47=9 B.L.R. 377), the latter case deciding not only that a gift to a person unborn is invalid, but that an attempt to establish a new rule of inheritance is invalid. A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his executors upon trust to pay the income to his daughter during her lifetime, and after her death, in trust to convey the residue to his two half-brothers, in equal moieties, and to the heir or heirs male of their or either of their bodies, in failure of whom upon trust to give the same to the sons of his daughter. Both the half-brothers survived the testator. On the death of one of them, the daughter (to whom children, as well as to the half brothers, had been born), making all persons interested parties, claimed that the trust and limitations had become void as to one moiety of the residue bequeathed, and that she had become entitled thereto for the estate of a Hindu daughter. Of the children, all were born after the testator’s death, save three sons of the surviving half-brother who were born in the testator’s lifetime: ‘Held, that the gift of the residue so far as it purported to confer an estate of inheritance on the half-brothers and the heirs male of their bodies’ was contrary to law and void; that the gift to the plaintiff’s sons, unborn at the death of the testator, was incapable of taking effect; that each of the half-brothers took an estate for life in one moiety of the residue bequeathed, in remainder expectant on the death of the plaintiff; and that, accordingly, on the death of the half-brother, who had died before this suit was brought the inheritance of his moiety had devolved on the plaintiff, as daughter and heir of her father, and as she claimed, Kristoromeni Dasi v. (2) Insolvent debtors under Civ. Pro. Code—Civ. Pro. She, however, omitted to attend; and her name was not included in the schedule of creditors. The insolvent was discharged under s. 355. The creditors who proved their debts were paid, and the residue of the property was paid out by the receiver to the insolvent. In an application by the decree-holder to execute her decree against the property of the insolvent: Held, that the discharge of the insolvent did not operate as a discharge of the debt under s. 357 of the Civ. A law of this kind, the intention of which is to punish, should be administered as the Criminal Law is administered, that is to say, specific offences should be charged, not technically specific in the sense of a specific form of indictment, but the Court and the insolvent and all concerned should know what offence the insolvent is being tried for; and the evidence should be directed to the proof of that offence, so that the accused may be in a position to produce evidence to rebut the charge of that offence; and the Judge should specifically find what offence the insolvent has been guilty of; and in his judgment and order and in the warrant it should appear what the insolvent has done. Marine Insurance—Open cover—Proposal to issue policy—Acceptance—Refusal to issue policy in terms of open cover.—An open cover to an amount stated for insurance on cargo to be shipped for a voyage in a ship (afterwards lost on that voyage) was given by the agent of the defendant company to the owner of the ship in order that he might give it to the charter, and it was a proposal to insure. The owner transferred the open cover to the plaintiff, who, under charter with him, shipped rice and applied for policies to the amount stated in the open cover. The defendants’ agent then refused to issue any policy on the rice so shipped: Held, that the open cover, as given to the owner, constituted a subsisting proposal to insure, and as soon as application for the policy under it was made to the defendants’ agent by the shipper, to whom the open cover had been transferred, there was a binding contract that a policy should be issued in its terms. Jurisdiction of Civil Court.

(1) Deputy Commissioner—District Court—Insolvent judgment-debtors—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 344, 360—Application to have judgment-debtor declared insolvent—Costs.—The Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and not that of a Deputy Commissioner, is the “District Court” in Chota Nagpur under ss. 2 and 344 of the Civ. Pro. Code. A Deputy Commissioner, therefore, invested with the Local Government with powers under s. 360 of the Code, has no jurisdiction, apart from any transfer by the “District Court,” to entertain an application by judgment-creditor under s. 344 to have his judgment-debtor declared an insolvent. The question of jurisdiction not having been raised in the lower Court the order was set aside without costs. Joynarain Singh v. Mudhoo Sudun Singh, 16 C. 13.

(2) Sale in execution of a decree—Property outside jurisdiction of Court executing decree—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 16, 223, 649.—A Court has no jurisdiction in execution of a decree, to sell property over which it has no territorial jurisdiction at the time it passed the order for sale. The decree-holder at a sale under a mortgage decree purchased the mortgaged property with leave of the Court. Before the order of sale was passed, the mortgaged property had been transferred by an order of Government to the jurisdiction of another Court. Held by the Full Bench, that the sale must be set aside as being without jurisdiction. Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Devi, 17 C. 699 (F.B.) ...

(1) Tributary Mehals, Kheonjur—"Local Area"—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882), ss. 182 and 531.—The Penal Code and Crim. Pro. Code have no application to the Tributary Mehal of Kheonjur, which is on precisely the same footing in that respect as Mohurbhunj. Certain persons, officers of the Maharaja of Kheonjur, one of whom was a resident of the Cuttack district and the others residents of Kheonjur, were charged before the Deputy Magistrate of Tajpore with certain offences under the Penal Code. They were convicted, and, on appeal to the Sessions Judge, the conviction was upheld. It was found by the Sessions Judge that the scene of the occurrence which gave rise to the charges was within the territory of Kheonjur: Held, that the Deputy Magistrate and Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to try the case, and that the conviction must be set aside. Held, further, that ss. 182 add 531 of the Crim. Pro. Code had no application to the case. The words "local area," used in s. 182, only apply to a "local area" over which the Crim. Pro. Code applies, and not to a local area in a foreign country or in other portions of the British Empire to which the Code has no application; and similarly s. 531 only refers to districts, divisions, sub-divisions and local areas governed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. *In the matter of Bichitrannund Dass v. Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870).

(1) Apportionment of compensation—Mokurari Maurasi title, Evidence of—Presumption of permanent tenure.—A person claimed to hold a mokurari maurasi title to certain land which was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, but could produce no pottah or evidence of tile, other than certain rent receipts, which showed that he or his predecessors in title had held the land in question for nearly one hundred years at, presumably, a fixed rent, the nature of the tenure not being mentioned in such receipt: Held, that the presumption was, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the claimant had a permanent and transferable interest in the tenure and not merely an interest in the nature of a tenancy at will; and that this presumption was strengthened by the fact that this superior landlord, the lakhirajdar, had made no attempt to eject him or his predecessors in title during this long period. The mode of apportionment of compensation between landlord and tenant considered. Dunne v. Nosio Krishna Mookerjee, 17 C. 144 634

(2) S. 22—Determination of amount of compensation—Assessor of claimant, Non-appearance of—'Neglect to act' Appointment of another assessor by Judge without notice to claimant.—On the hearing of a reference in a Land Acquisition case to determine the amount of compensation to be awarded, the assessor duly nominated on behalf of the claimant was not present, owing to some misunderstanding as to the order of the Judge in an application by the claimant for an adjournment for the claimant for an adjournment to make two days previously, and the other side objecting to any adjournment, the Judge called upon the pleader for the claimant to nominate another assessor on the claimant's behalf, which the pleader declined to do, as one had been already duly nominated. The Judge thereupon himself nominated another assessor, and proceeding with the case, confirmed the award of compensation by the Collector. Held, assuming that the absence of the claimant's assessor amounted to a neglect to act, the Judge had no power to appoint another without seven days' notice to the claimant, and that the proceedings were consequently irregular and not in accordance with the Land Acquisition Act, and must be set aside. *In the matter of T. Landlord and Tenant.

(1) Forfeiture—Denial by tenant of title of landlord—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1883), s. 178.—Forfeiture completed before passing of Act.—The plaintiffs, purchasers of a mokurari jama, sued to eject the defendants, on the ground that they had in their written statement in a former suit for rent, which had been decided in the plaintiffs' favour, denied the plaintiffs' title, and had thereby forfeited their tenures. The denial took place in March 1885, before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation: Held, that the forfeiture being complete before the passing of the Act, the case was not affected by s. 178 of that Act, and must be governed by the old law. Under the decided cases before the Bengal Tenancy Act such a denial by a tenant of his landlord's title created a forfeiture. 10 Cal. 41, referred to. But semble,—Since the passing of that Act, in any case to which it applies, there cannot be any eviction on the ground of forfeiture incurred by denying the title of the landlord, that not being a ground enumerated in the Act, and therefore expressly excluded by s. 178. (2) Long continuance of a tenancy at a low and unvaried rent—Zemindar's right against tenant—Origin and special purpose of the tenancy—Cessation to use the land for such purpose—Burden of proving permanent tenure—Inference of tenancy-at-will, or from year to year.—The evidence having shown the origin and particular purpose of a tenancy, long continued at a low and unvaried rent, viz., from 1798 until 1873, when the tenant ceased to use the land for the purpose: Held, that it was not to be inferred from that evidence that an agreement had been made between the parties that the tenant should hold a permanent tenure; and held, that, on such cessation, the tenant could only resist a suit to eject him by proving, or giving grounds for the inference of an agreement with the owner of the land that he should have something more of a lease than the ordinary tenancy-at-will, or from year to year; also that the facts here presented did not lead to that inference. (1) Condition restraining alienation—Alienation voluntary or by act of law—Condition for benefit of lessor—Re-entry—Forfeiture—Landlord and Tenant—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 10, 11, 12, 111, cl. (g).—By a clause in a lease it was stipulated that the lessee would not transfer in writing the land leased to him, and that if he did so the sale was to be void. The land was sold to the defendants in the execution of a decree obtained against the lessee. In a suit in ejectment by the assigns of the lessors, held that the condition was void under s. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), no right of re-entry being reserved to the lessors by the lease. Held also that the land having been sold against the will of the lessee by the act of a Court, the lessee could not be said to have voluntarily transferred his interest. decree for payment of additional rent for excess land held by the defendant, and, on the 29th March 1877, instituted another suit against the defendant for khas possession of newly-accreted lands, or in the alternative, for an assessment of rent thereon according to the terms of the defendant’s kabuliat. This suit was dismissed on the 29th June 1881; but, on appeal to the High Court, this decision was reversed on the 11th May 1883, and khas possession was given to the plaintiff. On appeal, the Privy Council, on the 24th July 1886, reversed the decree for khas possession, and declared the plaintiff entitled to a decree, fixing the extent of the excess lands, and assessing rent therefor in terms of the kabuliat, such rent to be payable from and after the 28th March 1878; and remitting the case for a finding as to the extent of the excess lands. The Subordinate Judge, to whom the case was remitted, gave the plaintiff a decree on the 21st March 1887 for increased rent in respect of 2 kanis 7 gundahs 2 cowries of excess land. On the 14th July 1887, the plaintiff instituted a suit to recover excess rent for the years 1878 to 1886 and for rent at the old rate plus the excess rent for a portion of the year 1887. Held, that the suit, so far as the rent for 1878 to 1883 was concerned, was barred by limitation. HURRO KUMAR GHOSE v. KALI KRISHNA THAKUR, 17 C. 251

(3) Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1886), sch. III, art. 3—Suit by occupancy ryot to recover possession after dispossession by landlord—Question of title —Possessory suits—Ben. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27.—A suit by an occupancy ryot to recover possession of land of which he has been dispossession by his landlord, in which the title of the tenant is denied and put in issue, is governed by the special period of limitation prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, sch. III, art. 3, namely, two years from the date of dispossession. It was intended by that enactment to provide for all suits to recover possession of land brought by an occupancy ryot, and to limit the period previously allowed by the Courts to suits for recovery possession by reason of a title set up and proved by the plaintiff, and not to provide only for suits of a possessory nature such as were previously dealt with by s. 27 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. (2) S. 10—Trust—Position as regards the daughters, of sons managing estate of deceased Mahomedan.—A solehnama in 1847 to which were parties the sons, daughters and widow of a deceased Mahomedan proprietor, transferred the shares of two minor daughters in their father’s estate, having been executed by their mother, the widow, on their behalf. In a suit in 1882 to set aside the solehnama at the instance of the two daughters, the evidence showed that the sons managed the property after their father’s death, and at the time the solehnama was executed: Held, on the question of limitation, that it was not to be inferred that the sons, by reason of their having managed their late father’s estate, should be regarded as trustees, at the time of the execution of the solehnama, for the daughters; and, therefore, s. 10 of Act XV of 1877 was inapplicable. RAM LOCHUN KOER, 17 C. 260 ...

(6) Arts. 59 and 60—Money deposited—Banker and Customer—Money lent—'Deposit'—'Trust'—Cause of action—Demand.—The plaintiff deposited from time to time with the firm of the defendant, who carried on a banking business, various sums of money, the amounts deposited bearing interest, and at times certain sums being withdrawn by the plaintiff, and an account of the balance of principal and interest being struck at the end of each year and presented to the plaintiff. The date of the first deposit was not known, but it was some time previous to 1828—1875. A demand was made for the whole amount of the principal and interest in Bhadro 1292 (August—September 1885), and the demand not having been complied with, a suit to recover the money was brought on the 8th March 1886; Held, that s. 60 and not s. 59 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case; the cause of action therefore arose at the date of the demand, and the suit was not barred. The dictum of White, J., in the case of 6 C.L.R. 470 that "the word 'depositor' in the Limitation Act as distinct form 'loan' points to cases where money is lodged with another under an express trust or under circumstances from which a trust may be implied," dissented from. (7) Art. 130—Suit for assessment of rent on lakheraj land after decree for resumption—Effect of decree as creating or not relationship of landlord and tenant.—The plaintiff brought a suit in 1861 against C for resumption of, and for declaration of his right to assess rent upon, C's lands within his zamindari which C held as lakheraj. That suit was presumably instituted under Reg. II of 1819, s. 30, which related only to resumption of lakheraj lands existing prior to 1790, but there was nothing to show conclusively under what law it was instituted, or whether the lakheraj grant was one subsequent or anterior to 1790. In that suit an ex parte decree was passed in 1863 that "the suit be decreed, and the land in dispute to be declared to be shukur," i.e., liable to assessment. In a suit brought in 1886 against the representatives of C, after serving a notice upon them to pay rent for the land at a certain rate, to assess the land at the rate mentioned in the notice, and for the recovery of rent at that rate: Held that the decree of 1863 had not the effect of creating the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and therefore the suit not having been brought within twelve years from the date of that decree, was barred by art. 130 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. (8) Art. 130—Suit for assessment of rent on lakheraj land after decree for resumption—Effect of decree as creating or not relationship of landlord and tenant.—The plaintiff in 1862 obtained a decree for resumption of land held under an invalid lakheraj title created before 1790, the decree declaring the land liable to assessment. In a suit brought more than twelve years after the decree against the representatives of the defendant in the suit of 1862 to assess the land: Held that the decree of 1862 did not create the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, and that the suit was, therefore, barred under art. 130 of the Limitation Act XV of 1877. Limitation Act (XV of 1877)—(Continued).

(9) Art. 135—Suit by mortgagee against mortgagor and purchasers from him—Reg. XVII of 1806—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).—A mortgagor, by conditional sale, before the operation of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, on default made in payment, proceedings having been taken by the mortgagee under Reg. XVII of 1806, entitled the mortgagee to possession after the year of grace. On the mortgagor's right of possession being thus brought to an end without a suit for foreclosure, a right of entry accrued to the mortgagee whose suit for possession, unless brought within twelve years from the date 'when the mortgagor's right to possession determined', was barred by art. 135 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877. This Regulation foreclosure was applied to a mortgage, dated 17th November 1865, between Hindus, with power of entry and sale, in the English form, of land in the 24-Pargunnahs District (which mortgage, therefore, received the same effect as a mortgage by conditional sale), and the proceedings were perfect on or before 31st March 1873 as against the mortgagor, whose right of possession determined on the 17th February 1886. Parcels of the mortgaged land had been sold by the mortgagor down to August 1886, and the purchasers, not having been served with notice of the above proceedings under the Regulation, were not parties thereto, so that the relation of mortgagee and mortgagor continued to subsist, between them and the mortgagee, notwithstanding the determination of the mortgagor's right of possession. In a suit brought in 1882 against these purchasers, as also against the mortgagor, for foreclosure and possession by a transferee who had acquired the mortgagee's interest in 1879: Held, that the mortgagor's right of possession determined on the above date, and that the mortgagee's right of suing for possession having been extinguished on the expiration of twelve years from that time, viz., on the 17th February 1878, such a right was not revived by the subsequent creation of suits for foreclosure, on the coming into operation of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882; and that the title of the plaintiff made through the mortgagee, to sue the purchasers for possession of the mortgaged land, was barred by time under art. 135 as against them. The suit therefore was dismissed as against the purchasers; but as against the mortgagor, who made no defence, the right of possession in the mortgagee consequent on the proceedings under the Regulation in force till its repeal in 1882 supported the decree made against him by the Courts below, from which he had not appealed. Srinath Das v. Khettar Mohun Singh, 16 C. 693 (P.C.)=16 I.A. 85=13 Ind. Jur. 132=5 Sar. P.C.J. 315

(10) Art. 142—Burden of proof—Date of dispossession or discontinuance of possession.—The claimants had shown that they formerly were proprietors of the land to which they alleged title, and from which they claimed to oust the defendants; but they had been dispossessed, or their possession had been discontinued, some years before this suit was brought by them, and the land was occupied by the defendants, who denied their title. That being so, the burden of proof was on the claimants to prove their possession at some time within the twelve years (prescribed by art. 142 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877) next preceding the suit. That the claimants certainly showed an anterior title was not enough, without proof of their possession within twelve years, to shift the burden of proof on to the defence to show that the defendants were entitled to retain possession. Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi, 16 C. 473 (P.C.)=16 I. A. 23=5 Sar. P.C.J. 321

(11) Art. 142—Symbolical possession.—On the 7th November 1868, certain property was purchased by one Gopal Doss Banerjee at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained against one Jogodanund Gossami. On the 8th January 1873, the purchaser obtained a sale certificate, and on the 10th August 1873, was put into symbolical possession of the property through the Court. On the 3rd March 1875, the plaintiff, in execution of a decree obtained against Gopal Doss Banerjee, purchased this property, symbolical possession of the property being given to him by the Court on the 31st March 1875. On the 7th August 1885, the plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of this property alleging that he had been dispossessed therefrom on the 13th July, 1885 by the defendant No. 2, who had taken an izara of the property from the son of Jogodanund. (12) Arts. 142, 144—Proprietors having refused at the first regular settlement to engage and others having been admitted as malguzars of the land, effect of lapse of time—Discontinuance of possession.—Article 144 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877, as to adverse possession, only gives the rule of limitation, where there is no other article in the schedule specially providing for the case. The proprietary right would continue to exist until, by the operation of the law of limitation, it has become extinguished; but if a claim comes within the terms of art. 142 (enacting that when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed, or has discontinued possession, limitation shall run from the date of the dispossessions or discontinuance), in such a case by the law of Act XV of 1877, and previously of Act IX of 1871, adverse possession is not required to be proved in order to maintain a defence. At the regular settlement in the Delhi district (1843) the plaintiffs' ancestors, ex nafaiders of a plot on which the rent free tenure had been resumed in 1838, declined to engage for the revenue; and the plot was assessed along with the village in which it was; the village proprietors through the lambardars engaging for and obtaining the land. At the revision of settlement, more than thirty years after, the plaintiffs claimed possession, alleging their title, and that the village co-partners held only in farm from the Collector for the period of settlement: Held, that there had been a dispossession, or discontinuance of possession, within the meaning of art. 142; and that whether any proprietary right had existed or not in the plaintiffs' ancestors, the 12 years' limitation ran from the date of the dispossession or discontinuance. (13) Art. 166—See Sale, 17 C. 769.

(14) Art. 179—Application for execution by benamidar—Application not in accordance with law.—In a suit brought for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to hold certain property free of a mortgage decree which had been purchased by one G, on 13th August 1878, in execution of which decree several applications were made to have the name of G substituted for that of the original decree-holder, but in none of these applications was any further step taken towards execution of the decree, or any order made for substitution of the name of G until 18th July 1885, when after notice under s. 232 of the Civ. Pro. Code, G's name was substituted as decree-holder and execution taken out against the mortgaged property, G was found to be only a benamidar so far as his purchase of the mortgage decree was concerned: Held, that G being merely a benamidar, the applications made by him for execution of the decree and for substitution of his name as decree-holder, under s. 232 of the Civ. Pro. Code, were not applications made in accordance with law within the terms of art. 179 of the Limitation Act, 1877, so as to prevent the operation of the Law of Limitation. Execution of the mortgage decree was therefore barred. GOUR SUNDAR LAHRI v. HEM CHUNDER CHOUDHRY, GOUR SUNDAR LAHRI v. HAPIZ MAHAMED ALI KHAN, 16 C. 355 = 13 Ind. Jur. 381 ... 234

(15) Art. 179—Application to execute decree—Step-in-aid of execution—Application for sale of property under attachment.—The application contemplated by art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act and described as "an application for the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court, &c., &c." is an application within the terms of s. 235 of the Civ. Pro. Code, that is to say, an application setting the Court in motion to execute a decree in any manner set out in the last column of the form prescribed; but, having so set the Court in motion, any further application, during the continuance of the same proceeding, is an application to take some step in-aid of execution within the terms of cl. 4 in the last column of art. 179 of the Limitation Act. An application, therefore, for the sale of property under attachment, is an application merely in aid of an execution then proceeding. CHOWDHRY PAROOSH RAM DAS v. KALI PUDDO BANERJEE, 17 C. 53 ... 574

(16) Art. 179—Application to take a step in aid of execution—Opposing application to set aside sale in execution of decree.—The appearance of a decree-holder by his pleader to oppose a application made by the judgment-debtor to set aside a sale in execution of the decree is not application within the meaning of art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act to take a step in aid of execution. The application contemplated by that article is an application to obtain some order of the Court in furtherance of the execution of the decree. Umesh Chunder Dutta v. Sooder Narain Deo, 16 C. 747 495

(17) Art. 179, cl. 2—Appeal against whole decree by one defendant only—Execution of decree—Execution against judgment-debtor who did not appeal.—A plaintiff obtained, on the 14th September 1881, a decree against two defendants, the decree as against the first defendant being one for partition; and, as against the second defendant (who had set up a julkar right on the lands claimed to be partitioned, and had contended that partition could not be had, and had obtained a partial decree, but had been ordered to pay partial costs to the plaintiff), being one for costs. The first defendant alone appealed against this decree, but unsuccessfully, his appeal being dismissed on the 18th January 1884. The decree-holder applied for execution of his decree as against the second defendant for costs in December 1886: Held, that the application was not barred, for that limitation ran from the 18th January 1884. Nundun Lall v. Rai Joykhiisen, 16 C. 598 395

(18) Art. 179, cl. 2—"Appeal presented"—"Where there has been an appeal”—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 541—Execution of decree.—The words "appeal presented" in the Limitation Act, 1877, mean an appeal presented in the manner prescribed in s. 541 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The words "where there has been an appeal," in art. 179, cl. 2 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, mean where a memorandum of appeal has been presented in Court. In execution of a decree against which an appeal has been presented but rejected on the ground that it was after time, limitation begins to run from the date of final decree or order of the Appellate Court. Akshoy Kumar Nundi v. Chunder Mohun Chatthati, 16 C. 250 165

(19) Art. 179, cl. 4—Suit to set aside order in claim case—Execution of decree—Application in continuation of a previous application for execution—Steps in aid of execution.—Cl. 4, art. 179, sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, does not include a suit to set aside an order passed in claim case. R and L obtained a decree against B on the 7th March 1881, and in execution of that decree certain property belonging to B was attached on the 11th June 1883. Thereupon a claim was made to the attached property by third parties, and a two-thirds share therein was released by the Court executing the decree. On the 22nd March 1884, R and L instituted a suit for a declaration that the entire property was liable to be sold under their decree, and obtained a decree on the 29th March 1886. This decree was reversed by the lower Appellate Court which upheld the order releasing a two-thirds share of the property, and, on 22nd July 1887, the High Court affirmed the decree of the lower Appellate Court. On the 15th August 1887, R and L applied for execution of their decree in respect of the remaining one-third share; B objected that the application was barred. Held, that the application of the 15th August 1888 was not a continuation of the application of the 11th June 1883. Held, also, that the institution of the suit on the 22nd March 1884 and the appeal to the High Court from the decree of the lower Court were not steps in aid of execution. Raghunandan Pershad v. Bhugloo Lal, 17 C. 268 717

(20) Arts. 179, 180—Execution of decree—Civ. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 287, 288, (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 227, 228—Transfer of Decree to High Court for execution, period of limitation, applicable.—Having regard to the provisions of ss. 227 and 228 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), the period of limitation applicable to the execution of a decree transmitted by one Court to another for execution, depends on the character of the Court which passed the decree, and not on the character of the Court executing it. S, a judgment-creditor, who had obtained his decree in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes on the 29th July 1884, had it transferred to the High Court for execution, and took certain proceeding there to execute it, which resulted in an order passed on the 13th June 1885, for payment out to him of certain monies realised in the proceedings in part satisfaction of his decree. Payment was actually made on the 8th August 1885. The next step in execution was an application made on the 14th September 1888; the usual notice was issued, and no cause being shown by the judgment-debtor, an order was made on the 19th December for the attachment of certain monies in the hands of a Receiver belonging to the judgment-debtor. These monies were also attached by other judgment-creditors. The question was then referred to the Registrar to enquire and report who, under the provisions of s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure, were entitled to share in such monies, and in what proportion. It was objected that S was not entitled to share on the ground that on the 14th September 1888 the right to execute his decree was barred by limitation. The question was referred by the Regisstrar to the Court. Held that as under art. 179, sch. II of Act XV of 1877 the period applicable to decrees of the Small Cause Court was three years,

The application of the 14th September 1888 was barred by limitation, and that S was not entitled to share under the provision of s. 295. Held further, that the order of the 19th December 1888 having been made out of time, though on notice to the judgment debtor, there was nothing to prevent a third party questioning its propriety, though the parties to the suit might be precluded from doing so. TINCOWRI DAWN v. DEBEN-

1.—Dower.

Restitution of Conjugal Rights—Prompt dower—Stipulation as to residence.—
In a suit by a Mahomedan husband for restitution of conjugal rights, the defendant, his wife, pleaded, first, that he had entered into a stipulation at the time of the marriage to reside with her in the house of her father, and that he had not done so; and secondly, that he had not paid the exigible portion of the dower due to her, the marriage having been consummated. Held as to the first point, upon the facts (after referring to the authorities, but without deciding whether a stipulation of this kind can be valid in any case), that the stipulation relied upon was not a sufficient answer to the plaintiff’s claim. Held, upon the authorities that the non-payment of prompt dower is not a sufficient plea in bar of such a suit. HAMIDU-NISSA BIBI v. ZOHIRUDDIN SHEIK, 17 C. 670...

2.—Endowment.

An appropriation not within the principle of wakf—Property settled on members of grantor’s family with a charge upon it for religious and charitable purposes—Effect of appropriation where the charge was not a substantial one.—Although the making provision for the grantor’s family out of property dedicated to religious or charitable purposes may be consistent with the property being constituted wakf, yet in order to render it wakf the property must have been substantially and not merely colourably dedicated to such purposes. Although an instrument purporting to dedicate property as "fsabi lillah wakf," and vesting it in members of the grantor’s family in succession, “to carry on the affairs in connection with the wakf," might include provisions for the benefit of the grantor’s family without its operation as a wakf being annulled yet, on the other hand, it would not operate to establish wakf, as it did not devote a substantial part of the property to religious or charitable purposes. Without determining how far provisions for the grantor's family might form part of a settlement for religious or charitable purposes, and yet not deprive it of its character as establishing wakf, the committee approved the decision in 13 W.R., 235, to the effect that the mere charge upon the profits of the estates of certain items which must in the course of time have ceased, being for the benefit of one family did not render an endowment invalid as a wakf. In the present case, however, there being no authority for holding a gift to be good as a wakf without there being a substantial dedication of the property to charitable or religious uses at some time or other, and the uses prescribed involving only on outlay suitable for such a family to make in charity, the gift was held not to be a substantial, or bona fide, dedication of the property as wakf. The use of this expression and others being only to cover arrangements for the benefit of the family and to make their property inalienable, the property was not constituted wakf, nor was it freed from liability to attachment in execution of a decree against one of the grantees, MAHOMED AHSANULLA CHOWHDHY v. 3.—Guardian.

Power of guardians—Sale by guardian of property to which ward's title was in dispute, for the benefit of the latter.— By the Mahomedan Law, guardians are not at liberty to sell the immoveable property of their wards, the title to which property is not disputed, except under certain circumstances specified in Macnaghten's Principles of Mahomedan Law, Ch. VIII, cl. 14. But, where disputes existing as to the title to revenue-paying land, of which part formed the wards' shares, sold by their guardian, where thereby ended, and it was rendered practicable for the Collector to effect a settlement of a large part of the land, a fair price moreover having been obtained, the validity of the sale was maintained in favour of the purchaser as against the wards for whose benefit the transaction was. Although the sale deed incorrectly stated the purpose of the sale to have been to liquidate debts, a statement repeated in a petition to the Collector, asking that settlement of the shares sold should be made with the purchaser, yet, on the transaction being afterwards impeached by the wards, held, that it was open to the guardian to prove the real nature of the sale, and to show that it was one beneficial to them. Jettison—Right to general average contribution—Right of shippers of jettisoned cargo—Default of Master—Right of shipowner—Remedies of shippers—Lien on cargo saved in consequence of jettison.—In jettison of part of a general cargo the right of those entitled to contribution, and the corresponding obligations of the contributors, originating in the actual presence of a common danger, not in the causes of it, are mutually perfected whenever the goods of some of the shippers (not being wrong-doers, or those responsible for the latter) have been advisedly sacrificed, and the property of others has been thereby preserved. Such exceptions as that recognized where the average loss has been occasioned by the ship's being unseaworthy [Schloss v. Heriot, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 59], and as that made in the refusal of contribution to shippers of deck, cargo when jettisoned, are in truth but limitations on the above rule, which have been introduced from equitable considerations. Where a ship was standard owing to the negligence of her master, and thereby ship and cargo were placed in a position of such danger as to make it necessary to jettison part of the cargo in order to save the remainder and the ship: Held, that innocent owners of the jettisoned cargo were entitled to general average contribution: but that the owners of the ship were not entitled (their legal relations to the shippers not having been varied by contract). The rules of Maritime Law as to the rights and remedies in a case of jettison are: (1st) each owner of jettisoned goods becomes a creditor of the ship and cargo saved:; and (2nd) he has a direct claim against each of the owners of the ship and cargo for a pro rata contribution towards indemnity. Contribution can be recovered by the owner of jettisoned goods either by direct suit, or by enforcing, through the ship-master, who is his agent for this purpose, a lien on each parcel of the goods saved, belonging to each separate consignee, for a due proportion of his claim. It was objected, that, under s. 267 of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, the prisoner ought to have been tried in every respect as though the trial had been held at the Central Criminal Court in London, and that the law of evidence to be applied was that prevailing in England: Held, on a case certified by the Advocate-General, under

Held, that there was no evidence that a guardian of the person or property of the defendant had ever been appointed within the meaning of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), and as the defendant was not under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards at the time of the execution of the promissory notes, he was then no longer a minor, but sui juris and competent to enter into a binding contract. Held, that the Collector is not a Court of Justice within the meaning of s. 3 of the Majority Act. A Collector appointed under s. 12 of Act XL of 1858 cannot properly be styled the guardian of a minor's property. Held, that under s. 3 of the Majority Act the disability of minority only continues so long as the Court of Wards retains charge of a minor's property and no longer. Brijmohun Lall v. Of mortgage—Intention of preserving prior security presumed—Mortgagor—On the 29th November 1882, H mortgaged to the plaintiff his one-third share in a house and garden to secure Rs. 1,000 with interest at 12 per cent. On the 3rd January 1884, H mortgaged his one-third share in the same house to a third person to secure Rs. 1,000 with interest at 18 per cent. On the 14th May 1884, H and his two brothers mortgaged to the plaintiff the entirety of the said house and garden to secure Rs. 3,400 with interest at 18 per cent. This last mortgage recited the mortgage of 29th November 1882, and a further loan of Rs. 100 by the plaintiff to H, and contained the following clause:—"Now in order to liquidate the said debt and on account of our necessity, we three brothers do this day mortgage to you whatever right, title and interest we have in the said two premises and take the loan of Rs. 3,400; out of this money we have also liquidated the said debt; therefore, for interest of the said money, we are paying at the rate of Re. 1—8 per month;" held, that the transaction of the 14th May 1884, did not amount to payment of the original debt, but was in reality a further advance and a fresh security for both the old debt and the fresh advance, on different terms as to interest, the old debt remaining untouched; but that even had the original debt been satisfied thereby, that fact would not have necessarily destroyed the security, the presumption being, unless an intention to the contrary were shown, that the plaintiff intended to keep the security alive for his own benefit. (2) Right—Redemption claimed under terms of mortgage—Insufficient tender of mortgage money—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 83, and 84.—According to the judgment of the Appellate Court below, a mortgagor having liberty by the terms of his mortgage to redeem at the end of its second year, on payment of the whole of the principal and interest, was not entitled to a decree for redemption, in a suit brought after the close of the second year on showing only that in the first half of the second year the principal money had been de- posited in Court, and that for the interest, for both years, decrees had been obtained by the mortgagor against him before his suit was instituted. The above, not showing payment or tender of the interest of which payment was secured by the mortgage, on appeal was dismissed. He-wanproperty, with other, was mortgaged, first to one mortgagor and secondly to another. Decrees were obtained upon both mortgages: the terms of the first decree giving effect to a compromise between the mortgagor and the first mortgagee. Sales in execution followed; but before the sale under the decree the first mortgage was not executed, the sale under the decree upon the second took place, the possession remaining with the purchaser at the first sale, who was acting benami for the mortgagor. At the subsequent sale under the decree upon the first mortgage, the plaintiff purchased and now sued for possession. The High Court decided that the plaintiff was entitled to the first mortgage lien, in consequence of his purchase at the second sale; and, all persons interested in the matter being before the Court, that the proper course was to direct an inquiry as to how much of the mortgage-debt was chargeable upon that portion of the property which formed the subject of the appeal; and to direct that so much of the mortgage-debt should be realized by the sale of that property. Held, that this judgment incorrectly treated the plaintiff as mortgagor, refusing him a charge for the full amount of his purchase-money. The case depending upon its own circumstances, it would be contrary to equity to allow the mortgagor to set up any right to possession as acquired by his purchase; and that the plaintiff, as against him, was entitled to a decree for possession as purchaser. Oudh Talukdars.

Title obtained by Talukdar under his sanad—Effect of confiscation of 1858 upon previous gift—Attempt to establish trust for claimants as to part of talukdari estate—Claim to sub-proprietary right distinguished.—The sanad granting a talukdar's estate confers prima facie an absolute title upon the grantee. A gift of villages by a talukdar to collateral relations, if, effectively made in 1850, and whether absolute or only for the maintenance of the donees out of the rents and profits, was rendered, by the effect of the confiscation of 1838, inoperative after that event to establish an interest as against the talukdar holding under a sanad comprising the villages. Where a claim was based upon the principle that the conduct of a sanad holding talukdar and of his predecessor had been sufficient to establish against him a liability to make good, out of his taluk, interest, as to which ground was supposed to have been given for his relations to claim; Held, that such a claim was not established merely by the claimants having been left in possession of villages, and having paid to the talukdar only the proportion of the revenue assessed upon them, during the whole time of the troubles in Oudh and afterwards, Held, also, that the question of the claimants having an under-proprietary right in such villages was entirely irrelevant to a claim for a declaration that they had proprietary right therein, on which latter title they sought to found a right to have their names entered in the settlement record: and held that, although there are cases in which the claimant of a proprietary right may be allowed to maintain, on the same facts, that he is an under proprietor, this claim was not one of them. Ram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner of Barabanki, 17 C. 444 (P.C.)=17 I. A. 54=5 Sar. P.C.J. 486=Rafique and Jackson's P.C. No. 156 ...

Parties.

(1) Co-sharers—Right of some of several co-sharers to sue alone—Refusal to join suit as plaintiffs.—It is only when plaintiffs can show that those entitled as co-sharers to join with them have refused to join or have otherwise acted prejudicially to the plaintiff's interests, that they are entitled to sue alone and make their co-sharers defendants in the suit. Dwarka Nath Mitter v. Tara Prosuna Roy, 17 C. 160 ...

(2) Joinder of parties—Civ. Pro. Code, ss. 30 and 34—Limitation—Signature of plaint by one of several co-plaintiffs.—There is no rule that a person named as a co-plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint. Three suits for money were filed by one of three joint-creditors, the others being named as co-plaintiffs with him in the plaints, which he alone signed and verified. An order was made by the Court after the filing of the plaints that one of these joint-creditors should be added as a co-plaintiff, as if he had not been on the record already. If the date of that order had been the date of suit brought, limitation under Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 67, would have applied; but it was held that all the joint creditors became plaintiffs when the plaints were filed, the order adding parties being inoperative, and that the suits when instituted were not defective for want of parties. Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddh Saha Das, 17 C. 580 (P.C.)=5 Sar. P.C.J. 498 ...

(3) Right of suit—Benamidar—Suit for declaration of title to, and for possession of immovable property—Disclaimer of real owner.—In a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right by purchase to, and for possession of, certain immovable property, it was found on the evidence that the plaintiff was merely a benamidar for one of the defendants, and had no right to the property. That defendant in his evidence disclaimed any title to the property: Held, that the plaintiff had no right to sue, being a mere benamidar, and neither the disclaimer of the real owner, nor the fact that he was a party to the suit, was sufficient to enable the plaintiff to maintain the suit when instituted or to entitle him to have the real owner added as a co-plaintiff. Partition.

(1) Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Partition by Civil Court of a portion of a revenue paying estate—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 265—Revenue paying estate—Partition of, into several revenue-paying estates.—The meaning of s. 265 of the Code of Procedure is that where a revenue-paying estate has to be partitioned into several revenue paying estates, such partition must be carried out by the Collector. DEBI SINGH v. SHEO LALL SINGH, 16 C. 203=13 Ind. Jur. 296 .... 135

(2) Suit to stay partition by Collector—Bengal Act (VIII of 1876), ss. 26, 105—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaration of specific rights—Limitation.—A person bringing a suit under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act to stay partition directed by the Collector under Ben. Act VIII of 1876, on the ground that a private partition has already been come to, must prove not only that there has been a private partition, but also that under that partition he is entitled to, and was in possession of, in several some specific portion of the property again sought to be partitioned by the Collector: and such person is entitled to no declaration affecting the rights of other shares in the parent estate. Simile:—S. 26 of Ben. Act VIII of 1876 does not bar the right to bring an action, but merely limits the effect of the decree unless the action is brought within a certain time, KALUP NATH SINGH v. (7) S. 210—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 258—Satisfaction of decree—Execution of decree—Fraudulently executing decree after it has been satisfied when satisfaction has not been certified to Court.—A decreeholder having proceeded to execute his decree against his judgment debtor, the latter objected, stating that the decree had been already satisfied, although the adjustment thereof had not been certified to the Court as required by s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment-debtor being under the circumstances compelled to deposit the amount of the decree in Court, applied for and obtained sanction to prosecute the decreeholder for an offence under s. 210 of the Penal Code. It was contended that the case did not fall within that section, as the satisfaction, not having been certified to the Court, could not be recognised by the Court executing the decree, and that consequently no offence had been committed: Held, that the words "after it has been satisfied" used in s. 210 of the Penal Code indicate only the fact of the satisfaction of the decree. The fact of the satisfaction is of such a nature that the Court executing the decree could not recognize it does not prevent the decree-holder from being properly convicted of an offence under that section. A bull dedicated and set at large at the Sradha of a Hindu in accordance with religious usage is not an "object" within the meaning of that section. Where such an animal was killed by certain Mahomedans secretly and at night in the presence of none but Mahomedans for the sake of the meat and value of the skin, held, that no offence had been committed under s. 295. Held further, that such a bull is not "immoveable property" within the meaning of ss. 378 and 403, or "property" within the meaning of s. 425 of the Penal Code, and could not therefore be the subject of theft, criminal misappropriation, or mischief. The fact that such a bull receives some attention from the cow-herd of the persons who set it at liberty and is daily fed by him by direction of his employers, and is not used for breeding purposes without their permission being asked, is not consistent with a total surrender by those who set it at liberty of all their rights as proprietors.
Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—(Concluded).

(15) Ss. 441, and 456—House breaking by night—Criminal Trespass—Intent.—When a stranger, uninvited and without any right to be there, effects an entry in the middle of the night into the sleeping apartment of a woman, a member of a respectable house hold, and when an attempt is made to capture him, uses great violence in his effort to make good his escape, a Court, should presume that the entry was made with an intent such as is provided for by s. 441 of the Penal Code. An accused person in the middle of the night effected an entry into a house occupied by two widows members of a respectable family. On an alarm being given, and an attempt made to capture him, he made use of great violence, and effected his escape. Upon these facts he was charged with offences under ss. 456 and 323 of the Penal Code. The defence set up was an alibi, which was disbelieved by both the lower Court. Neither Court found specifically what was the intention with which the accused entered the house, but it was suggested that it was probably for the purpose of prosecuting an intrigue with one of the woman. There was no evidence that he had been invited by her to go there. The lower Courts convicted the accused under s. 456. It was contended that, as the prosecution had failed to prove that the entry was made with intent to commit any offence, the conviction was illegal: Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the Court ought to presume that the entry was effected with such intent as is provided for by s. 441, and that the conviction should be upheld. Before a guardian ad litem had been appointed for the minor defendant, an application was made to the High Court to transfer the case from the Mofussil Court to the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction by the minor defendant through a next friend. It was contended that the application was informal, and could not be granted, and that no such application could be made on behalf of the infant defendant until a guardian ad litem had been appointed, and then it should be made by him: Held, that the objection should not prevail, and that the application could be made through the next friend. Authority of—Power to execute conveyance and enter into covenants on behalf of infants and persons refusing to execute—Defects of title known to purchaser at time of sale—Covenants for title and quiet enjoyment—Pardanashin when not bound by conveyance executed by her containing covenants for title and quiet enjoyment—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 261, 262—Rules of Court (Belchamber's Rules and Orders). Nos. 341 and 436.—The Registrar of the High Court has authority, when so directed by an order of Court, to execute a conveyance on behalf of a party refusing to do so, so as to pass his estate, if any, but has no authority to bind him by entering into any covenants on his behalf. The power of the Registrar to execute such a conveyance rests upon statutory authority. General covenants for title and quiet enjoyment extend to the case of a defect known to the purchaser at the time of the sale, unless, the intention of the parties that they should not do so is clearly expressed in the covenants the selves. "Conveyance," as used in Rule 436 (Belchambers' Rules and Orders) means such an instrument as may be necessary to transfer the estate, if he has any, belonging to the person on behalf of whom the Registrar executes the transfer to the purchaser. Circumstances under which a pardanashin lady will be relieved from liability under covenants contained in a conveyance executed by her. D, an heir of one X, a deceased Hindu lady, sold and conveyed to M, in March 1878, a moiety in certain premises belonging to the estate of X. Subsequently a decree was made for partition of the estate left by X in a suit to which D, A, R, G and S were parties, and an order was made in that suit directing the premises of which D had sold a moiety to be sold by the Registrar, and the parties were directed to join in the conveyance, the Registrar being directed to approve and execute the same on behalf of G, who was an infant. At the sale, the plaintiff purchased the premises, and thereafter D refused to execute the conveyance, which included the usual covenants for title and quiet enjoyment. A summons was thereupon taken out against him, and an order was made directing the Registrar to execute the conveyance on his behalf. The conveyance was then executed in September 1885 by A S and R, and by the Registrar on behalf of D and the minor G. In a suit instituted by M, under the conveyance of 1878, the Court held that he was entitled to possession, as against the plaintiffs, of the moiety of the premises covered by his conveyance. The plaintiff, therefore, brought a suit against D, A, R, G and S to recover damages for breach of the covenants for title and quiet enjoyment. It was not found that R had any good independent advice in the matter, or that she clearly understood the nature of the contract she was entering into, and the liabilities she was taking upon herself: Held, that although the Registrar had authority to execute the conveyance on behalf of D and G, he had no authority to enter into the covenants on their behalf, and that the suit should be dismissed as against them: Held, also, that having regard to the position of R, the suit should also be dismissed as against her. (3) S. 17, cl. (d)—Lease for one year—Lease exceeding one year—Option of renewal—Correspondence, when stamping necessary—Stamping correspondence containing agreement to lease.—A lease for one year, containing an option of renewal for a further period of one year, is not a lease for a term exceeding one year within the meaning of cl. (d), s. 17 of the Registration Act, so as to render registration thereof compulsory. Certain correspondence passed between the plaintiff and the defendant relating to a lease of a flat in premises in occupation of the plaintiff which admittedly contained an agreement for a lease for one year with an option of renewal for another year. The terms in which the option was given were as follows:—The defendant in one letter wrote:—"So I expect you will give me the option of renewal for another year, on same terms." To which the plaintiff replied—you may have the option of retaining it (the flat) for another year on the same terms, but not for a shorter period." In pursuance of an arrangement the defendant had a draft lease prepared embodying the terms agreed on, which he sent to the plaintiff for approval and which was in due course returned by him "approved." The defendant then had the lease engrossed and properly stamped, but the plaintiff eventually refuse to execute it, and it was never signed by the defendant. The option of renewal was given in the unexecuted lease in the following terms:—"Also with option to renew for another twelve months certain." The defendant having entered into possession and disputes having arisen, the plaintiff gave him notice to quit and suit to eject him, alleging that at the most he was a mere monthly tenant. The defendant pleaded that under the lease he was entitled to hold for a year. The year expired before the suit came on to be heard, and the defendant, not having exercised the option to renew, vacated the premises. At the hearing the defendant in support of his case tended the correspondence and the stamped, unexecuted lease. It was objected that the correspondence was inadmissible in evidence—(1) because the option to renew made the period for which the lease was to run exceed one year, and therefore rendered registration compulsory; (2) because the correspondence was unstamped. On behalf of the defendant it was urged that registration was unnecessary, as the option did not make the lease one for a longer period than one year, and that the stamped unexecuted lease must be treated as part of the correspondence, and as it was properly stamped, no further stamping was required. Held, following Hand v. Hall, L R., 2 Ex. D., 355, that the existence of the option did not create a lease for a term exceeding one year within the meaning of cl. (d). s. 17 of the Registration Act, and that ...

consequently the correspondence did not require registration. Held further, that as the correspondence contained a complete agreement independently of the draft and engrossed lease, the latter could not be treated as part of the correspondence, and that consequently the correspondence must be stamped and the penalty paid before it could be admitted in evidence. Boyd v. Kreig, 17 C. 548

Res Judicata.

(1) Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13.—The decision of an issue in one of two suits tried together, which is not appealed, against, cannot be treated as res judicata so far as the same issue is concerned in an appeal from the decision in the other suit. A, a ticadar, sued B for rent in respect of a holding in the ticca. In that suit B pleaded that he was a partner of A in the ticca transaction, and that no rent was due from him in consequence thereof. B then sued A for an account of the partnership, in the same transaction, and A in that suit denied the partnership. Both suits were heard together by the Munsifs, who held A was not a partner. B appealed against the judgment and decree in the account suit, but did not appeal against that in the rent suit. It was contended on the appeal that the question as to whether B was or was not a partner was res judicata, by reason of the decision in the rent suit not being appealed against and having become binding: Held, that s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply, and that the question was not res judicata. There was no bar at the time the issue was tried and decided by the Munsif and the Appellate Court was bound to decide the appeal upon the evidence. Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Matho, 16 C. 233

(2) Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Estoppel by judgment—Act IX of 1847—Allusion.—To apply the law of estoppel by judgment, stated in s. 6 of Act XII of 1879 and in s. 13 of Act XIV of 1882, it must be seen what has been directly and substantially in issue in the suit, and whether that has been heard and finally decided; for which purpose the judgment must be looked at. The decree is usually insufficient for showing this, as, according to the Code, it only states the relief granted, if any or other disposal of the suit, without the ground of decision, and without affording information as to what may have been in issue and decided. This suit was to establish a right to land, and for possession, against two defendants, who alleged their rights respectively. The claimant had previously obtained a decree against one of the defendants, and in that decree the land now claimed had been excepted: Held, that the matter now in issue, not having been directly and substantially in issue in the prior suit, the present suit was not barred under s. 13, Act XIV of 1882, Civ. Pro. Code. Kali Krishna Tagore v. Secretary of State for India, 16 C. 173 (P.C.) = 15 I.A. 186 = 12 Ind. Jur. 413 = 5 Sar. P.C.J. 237

(3) Civ. Pro Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Evidence—Estoppel—Ex parte decree, Effect of Rate of rent—Rent suit.—A mere statement of an alleged rate of rent in a plaint in a rent suit in which an ex parte decree has been obtained is not a statement as to which it must be held that an issue within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure was raised between the parties so that the defendant is concluded upon it by such decree. Neither a recital in the decree of the rate of rent alleged by the plaintiff, nor a declaration in it as to the rate of rent which the Court considers to have been proved, would operate in such a case as to make that matter a res judicata, assuming that no such declaration were asked for in the plaint as part of the substantive relief claimed, the defendant having a proper opportunity of meeting the case. (4) Civ. Pro. Code, s. 13—Omission to bring forward in a prior suit what then would have been a defence—Accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee—Purchase of mortgaged property by the latter at judicial sale, on lease obtained to bid.—A mortgage between parties who had accounts together, comprised lands which also were leased by the mortgagors to the mortgagors, who, in 1878, obtained a decree upon the mortgage, although at the time they owed to the mortgagors a considerable sum for rents. The mortgagors did not then set up the defence that they were entitled to have a general account taken, and to have the mortgagees’ decree limited to such balance as might be found to exist in favour of the latter. But the mortgagors alleged a specific agreement, which they failed to prove, that the rents were to be set up against the mortgage-debt; and they also stated their intention to sue separately for the rents due. No deduction was made in the decree upon the mortgage on account of these rents, for which moreover afterwards the mortgagors did obtain a decree. But the mortgagees executed their decree upon the mortgage, notwithstanding objections (which were disallowed in 1882), and having obtained leave to bid at the judicial sale purchased the property. In the present suit brought by the mortgagees to have the judicial sale set aside and to have the mortgage-debt extinguished, by having set off against it the rents which had already accrued, or might afterwards accrue, and for possession of the lands on the expiry of the lease; held that, although an equity had been raised in favour of the mortgagees, that an account should have been taken and that the rents payable should have been credited against the sums due by them, yet this equity could not be enforced in this suit. The proper occasion for enforcing it would have been in defence of the suit upon the mortgage: the present claim was within the meaning of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the plaintiffs were now barred from insisting on it, exceptione res judicatæ. Nor could the mortgagees be held to have purchased as trustees for the Mortgagors, as suggested for the appellant, the leave granted to bid having put an end to the disability of the mortgagees to purchase for themselves, putting them in the same position as any independent purchaser.

(5) Civ. Pro. Code, s. 13—Substantial matter in issue decided in a former suit—Right of shebaitship of a family deb-sheba under a will.—A testator, who died leaving widows and a daughter, also three surviving brothers, bequeathed all the residue, after certain legacies, of his acquired estate to maintain the worship of a family deity, appointing his three brothers and his eldest widow to be shebaitis, and providing that "the family of us five brothers shall be supported from the prosad offerings to the deity," One or other of the brothers then for some years managed the estate as shebaitis, and the survivor of them was succeeded by his son, one of the defendants in the present suit, which was brought by the testator’s only daughter as heiress to his estate, claiming that the Court should determine "those provisions which were valid and lawful and those which were invalid and illegal." She claimed possession and an account, and also to be the shebait. In a previous suit the present shebait had obtained a decree, to which the daughter, now plaintiff was a party defendant, affirming the validity of the will and the rights of the members of the family to be maintained under it: held, that the question of the validity of all the provisions of the will having been substantially decided in the decree in the former suit which pronounced that the will was wholly valid, passing the entire estate of the testator to the deb-sheba and maintaining the rights of members of the family under the will, this suit was barred under s. 13 of Act X of 1877 as to all but the claim to be shebait. The plaintiff’s claim to a preferential title to this office depended on a sentence in the will constituting, as construed by Courts below, to be shebait the senior in age of the heirs of the original shebaitis, the defendant now holding the office coming within this provision according to the judgments of both Courts. As to this no reason had been shown in appeal for a different conclusion.

On the 30th March, 1886, he instituted a suit to recover possession alleging that he had acquired a right of occupancy. It was contended that, owing to the purchase of the share of the proprietary interest he could not have acquired such right: Held, that under Bengal Act VIII of 1869 there was nothing to prevent such right being acquired by the plaintiff if after his purchase he continued to hold the land as a ryot, and if the relation of landlord and tenant existed between himself on the one hand and the proprietors on the other, and if the period for which he so held extended for twelve years from the date of the commencement of his holding. Having arrived at the spot about 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M., a body of men, consisting of about 1,200 in all, many of them armed with lathies and headed by the prisoners, who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day, proceeded to the spot, and above 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some five of whom were more or less severely wounded with the lathies. The occurrence resulted in the conviction of some of M's servants for rioting, under s. 147 of the Penal Code. M's people wholly denied any right on the part of T to construct or repair the bund, and had previously denied the existence of such right, and refused permission to T to exercise it. It was contended that the assembly of M's people was not an "unlawful assembly," that the interference by T's people with the channel of the river justified them in coming to stop the work, and the show and use of force in compelling them to do so: Held, that the prisoners had been rightly convicted: Held, further, that as no right of private defence of property is conferred by the Penal Code, except as against the perpetrators of offences under the Penal Code, and that as upon the facts of the case as found, no offence had been committed by T's people, their acts amounting merely to a civil trespass, and that as there was no pressing or immediate necessity of a kind showing that there was not time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, no question as to the right of private defence arose in the case. It was further contended that M's people did not assemble to enforce a right or supposed right within the terms of s. 141 of the Penal Code, but to defend a right, and that such action did not make the assembly an unlawful one; Held, that they were members of an assembly the common object of which was by show of criminal force and by criminal force, if necessary, to enforce the right to keep the river channel clear; by preventing the construction of the bund, and by demolishing it so far as it was constructed, and that the case came within s. 141, para. (2) Auction—Auctioneers—Agent bidding "kutcha pucca"—Usage of trade—Custom—Condition of sale.—An agent of the defendants made, at an auction sale a bid for certain goods; this bid was not at the time accepted by the auctioneers, but was referred to the owner of the goods for approval and sanction, the agent agreeing to such reference. The conditions of sale contained no clause stipulating for such procedure. Previous to any reply being received by the auctioneers from their principals, the principals of the agent bidding refused to acknowledge the bid of their agent. In a suit brought by the auctioneers to recover a loss on a re-sale of the goods, the plaintiffs set up a usage of trade, whereby it was alleged that the bidder at such a sale was not at liberty to withdraw his bid until a reasonable time had been allowed for the auctioneers to refer the bid to the owner of the goods. The only evidence on this point was that of an assistant to the firm of the plaintiffs, who stated "that such an arrangement had never been repudiated:" Held, that the conditions of sale containing no clause to the

<td>(5) For Arrears of Rent—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 8—Service and publication of notice of sale—Irregularities in preliminaries to sale—Petition for sale—Certificate of Munsif when service is sworn to before him—Form of notice of sale in mid-year sales for six months’ arrears.—All the requirements in cl. 2, s. 8 of Reg. VIII of 1819, must be imported into cl. 3 of that section mutatis mutandis. Where, therefore, the zemindar is proceeding under cl. 3 to obtain a mid-year sale for six months’ arrears of rent, the service of notice of sale is a condition precedent to the sale being held. Such notice must show, as provided by that clause, that the sale may be prevented by payment of the whole of the balance due, or of three-fourths of such balance. In such a case a notice, which stated that the sale would take place unless the whole of the balance was paid, as if the zemindar was proceeding under cl. 2 for the whole year’s arrears, was held to be a bad notice, and a non-compliance with a substantial requirement of the Regulation such as to justify the reversal of the sale. The publication of the petition to the Collector containing a specification of the balance of rent due, by sticking it up in some conspicuous part of the kutcheri as required by cl. 2, s. 8 of the Regulation, is not a substantial portion of the process to be observed by the zemindar previous to a sale for arrears of rent; non-compliance with that provision, therefore, is not a ground for setting aside the sale. For the same reason the non-presentation of the petition on the precise day (1st Kartick), specified in cl. 3, s. 8, affords no ground for setting aside the sale. The presentation of the petition on the 2nd Kartick, when the 1st was a Sunday, was held to be a sufficient compliance with the section. The words “certificate to which effect” in the portion of cl. 2, s. 8, relating to the procedure in case of refusal by the village people to attest the publication of the notice of sale, mean a certificate to the effect that the plea on which the petition was based, whether in the name of the Munsif or Police Officer, as the case may be, and did make voluntary oath as to the service of the notice, Where the plea, after serving the notice, made an affidavit as to the mode of service, and took the affidavit before the Munsif, to whom it was read and who then signed it, there was held to be a sufficient certificate to satisfy the requirements of the section. A—Rights of purchaser of share of estate admitted to special registration under ss. 10 and 11 of Act—Rights of mortgagee of share against purchaser.—There is a clear distinction between the rights acquired under s. 53 and under s. 54 of Act XI of 1859. Under the former section the terms of the certificate given under sch. A are limited, and a purchaser under that section acquires the estate subject to all encumbrances existing at the time of sale whether created before or after the default and even up to the date of the sale; but there is no such limitation to the terms of a certificate given to a purchaser under s. 54, and all encumbrances created after the date on which a purchase under that section takes effect, that is, after the date on which the default was committed, are void. A share of a taluk admitted to special registration under ss. 10 and 11 of Act XI of 1859, was advertised for sale under that Act in default of payment of the June kist of Government revenue. On the 25th July the recorded sharer mortgaged his interest in that share to the plaintiff. The sale took place on the 26th September, and the share was purchased by the defendant, who obtained a sale certificate in due form under the Act declaring, in accordance with s. 28, that his title accrued from the 29th June, the day after the latest date allowed for payment of the June kist. (7) For Arrears of Revenue—Act XI of 1859, ss. 18 and 33—Collector's order of exemption.—A Collector's order under s. 18 of Act XI of 1859 for exempting an estate from sale for arrears of revenue must be an absolute exemption, and not an order having effect as an exemption or not, according to what may, happen, or be done, afterwards. It must not depend on an act which may, or may not be performed. The High Court having set aside a sale, as contrary to the provisions of Act XI of 1859, upon a ground other than that declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner of Revenue against the order for the sale, the Judicial Committee, referring to ss. 33 as prohibiting such a course, reversed the decision of the High Court. (8) For Arrears of Revenue—Fraud—Bidders, Dissuasion of.—In a suit by some of the co-sharers in a mouzah against the others to set aside a sale for arrears of revenue, the finding of the Court of first instance established that a certain co-sharer in a mouzah had intentionally withheld the payment of a small arrears of Government revenue, and had thereby caused the property to be sold under Act XI of 1859, purchasing it himself for a small sum in the name of certain other persons; and had also dissuaded certain intending bidders from bidding at such sale: Held that the evidence did not warrant such a finding, but that assuming these facts to have been established, the right of the co-sharer to buy up the estate at the revenue sale was not based upon any right or interest common to himself and his co-sharers, and that, in the absence of misrepresentation or concealment, the fact that he had intentionally defaulted as found did not constitute fraud; nor did the fact, that he had deterred others from bidding for the property, necessarily constitute an act of fraud. DOORGA SINGH v. SHEO PERSHAD SINGH, 16 C, 194

(9) For Arrears of Revenue—Suit to set aside sale—Attachment of property sold, not necessary—Sale ultra vires—When—Act XI of 1859, ss. 5 and 17.—The right to set aside a sale for arrears of Government revenue under Act XI of 1859 is not confined to proprietors alone, but extends to all persons, such as mortgagees, having an interest in the property antecedent to its sale. There is nothing in s. 5 of Act XI of 1859 which indicates that property sold for arrears of Government revenue should be under attachment at the time of sale. A sale in contravention of ss. 5 and 17 of Act XI of 1859, is ultra vires, and therefore void. GODIND LAL ROY v. BIPRODAS ROY, 17 C. 398

Code, 1882, s. 201—Decree-holder, Purchase by-Satisfaction pro tanto—Mortgagee not trustee for mortgagor in sale proceeds—Leave to bid at sale in execution when granted—Permission of the Court to decree-holder to buy—Practice.—A mortgagee who has obtained a mortgage decree, and after obtaining permission to bid at the sale held in execution of such decree, has become the purchaser, does not stand in a fiduciary position towards his mortgagor. A mortgagee in such a position, therefore, is at liberty to take out further execution for any balance of the amount decreed that may be left after deducting the price for which the mortgaged property was sold, and is not bound to credit the judgment-debtor with the real value of the property to be ascertained by the Court. The permission to a mortgagee to bid should be very cautiously granted, and only when it is found, after proceedings with a sale, that no purchaser at an adequate price can be found, and even then, only after some enquiry as to whether the sale proclamation has been duly published. It is the practice of the Courts under the Rules of the High Court, which have the force of law, to place all properties intended for sale in execution of decrees on a list, and to proceed with the sales from day to day, commencing on an appointed day. As each property is taken up in its turn, an adjournment of the sale of a particular property, which is the consequence of such procedure, is not an adjournment within the meaning of s. 291 of the Civ. J., Prinsep, Tottenham, and Pigot, J. J., Ghose, J., dissenting), that when circumstances affecting the validity of a sale in execution have been brought about by the fraud of one of the parties to the suit, and give rise to a question between these parties such as, apart from fraud, would be within the provisions of s. 244, a suit will not lie to impeach the validity of the sale on the ground of such fraud. Held, that in such a case the judgment-debtor is entitled, whether the sale has been confirmed or not, to make an objection against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, such application (if any) under s. 311 as he may be entitled to make, his time for making it being computed from the time when the fraud first became known to him. Held, further, that in cases in which the decree or the purchase is made benami, s. 244 does not apply, and a suit may be held to lie to set aside the sale. Per Ghose, J.—An objection under s. 311, or upon the ground of fraud, raised by the judgment-debtor after the sale has been confirmed under s. 312, cannot be dealt with under s. 244. In such a case the judgment-debtor is entitled upon the ground of fraud to bring a suit set aside the sale, or at all events to have it declared that the sale passed no title to the purchaser, or that the purchaser is a trustee for him. In the absence of such proof, whether the entirety of the family estate has been transferred at the sale in execution or not, is a question of fact, in each case dependent on what was understood to be brought, and has been brought to sale. Salvage.

Arrest—Excessive bail—Costs—Salvage services—Amount of award increased on appeal—Practice—Costs of appeal from the Original Side in its Admiralty or Vice Admiralty jurisdiction.—In an action of salvage in which ship was arrested, and the bail asked for was found to be excessive, the Court (Pigott and Trevlyan, J. J.) held, that the promovents must pay the impugnants the costs occasioned by the bail required being excessive. In this case the Court increased the amount of salvage award from £1,500 to £2,400, in consideration of the great risk incurred by the salvors in rescuing the ship and cargo, which were very valuable, from imminent destruction. Inasmuch as an appeal did lie under the High Court Charter and the Letters Patent from the original Side in the exercise of its Admiralty or Vice-Admiralty jurisdiction and the procedure was mainly governed by the Civ. (1) Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 195,439,476—Jurisdiction of High Court in revision to quash orders, under s. 476 of the Crim. Pro. Codc.—The High Court is competent in the exercise of its revisional powers to interfere with an order of a Subordinate Court, whether made under s. 195 or under s. 476 of the Crim Pro. Code, directing the prosecution of any person for offences referred to in those sections. The High Court, under s. 439, has the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by s. 423 to alter or reverse any such order. Before a Court is justified in making an order under s. 476, directing the prosecution of any person, it ought to have before it direct evidence fixing the offence upon the person whom it is sought to charge, either in the course of the preliminary enquiry referred to in that section, or in the earlier proceedings out of which the enquiry arises. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the earlier case may induce some sort of suspicion that the person had been guilty of an offence; but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of an offence by the person who is to be prosecuted. (2) "Court"—Collector—Appraisement proceedings—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882) s. 195—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss 69 and 70.—The word "Court," used in s. 195 of the Crim. Pro. Code, without the previous sanction of which offences therein referred to, committed before it, cannot be taken cognizance of, has a wider meaning than the words "Court of Justice" as defined in s. 20 of the Penal Code. It includes a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter, and authorised to receive evidence bearing on that matter, in order to enable it to arrive at a determination. A Collector, acting in appraisement proceedings under ss. 69 and 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is a Court within the meaning of the term as there used. Four of the accused were also charged with and convicted of, respectively, causing hurt during the riot to the two men and a woman, and were sentenced to separate terms of imprisonment under ss. 147 and 323 of the Penal Code: Held that the sentences were legal. Specific Performance.
(1) Contract—Disability to contract—Temporary disability of Zemindar to contract, his estate being subject to the provisions of Act VI of 1876 (Chutia Nagpore Encumbered Estates Act), amended by Act V of 1884—Effect of continuance of transactions after the release of his estate from management under that Act.—It is competent to a person, who has been, but is no longer, in a state of disability, to take up and carry on transactions commenced while he was under disability, in such a way as to bind himself as to the whole. He may be bound by a contract, of which the terms are to be ascertained by what passed whilst he was disabled from contracting. The defendant's ancestral zemindari was placed under management by an order made under s. 2 of Act VI of 1876, and he became incapable of contracting in reference to it. He, however, agreed with the plaintiffs that the latter should advance money on mortgage, and take a lease of part of the estate. Afterwards by an order, whether well founded or not—at all events effectively made—under s. 12, as amended by Act V of 1884, he was restored to the possession of his estate, again acquiring the right to contract about it. He carried on the transaction with the plaintiff, retaining the benefit of money paid by him, but in the end not completing Held, that he was bound by the contract, though its terms were to be ascertained by what had passed while he was disabled from contracting, and that specific performance could be decreed against him. Whether his entering into the contract was against the policy of the Act, and whether the order under s 12 had, or had not, been made on good, grounds did not affect the question. GREGSON v. Where a cheque bearing a stamp of one anna was dated the 25th September, and the evidence showed it to have been actually drawn on the 8th September, and therefore to have been post-dated, it was contended that the cheque was really a bill of exchange, payable 17 days after date, and therefore inadmissible in evidence as being insufficiently stamped: Held, in a suit to recover the amount of the cheque on its being dishonoured, that it was admissible in evidence. Subordinate Judge.

Jurisdiction of Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 15 and 578.—S. 15 of the Civ. Pro. Code does not preclude a Subordinate Judge from trying a suit within the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court. The words "not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court" in s. 578 of the same Code, mean "not affecting the competency of the Court to try." The error in instituting a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court instead of in that of the Munsif is not an error which affects the jurisdiction of the former Court within the meaning of s. 578. The testator died on the 2nd December 1879, and Jodha in October 1879; the money due by the Rajah of Bettia was realized on the 7th December 1884, Jodha left on only child Binda, who was born before the death of the testator. Binda sued to recover the legacy left to her mother; the defence was that the legacy had lapsed: Held, that Jodha was, in point of law, within the meaning of s. 96 of the Succession Act, a person in existence at the death of the testator, because a lineal descendent of her's survived the testator. Summary Trial.

Magistrate, Power of, to try case summarily—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), s. 260.—A complainant applied to a Magistrate for process against certain persons under ss. 437, 146, 148 and 149 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate, having perused the petition of the complainant and examined him on oath, issued summons against the persons named under those sections. The complainant was not himself and eye-witness of the occurrence, and merely stated in his petition and evidence, what he had been told by his servants. Subsequently, before the accused appeared, the Magistrate examined an eye-witness and issued a fresh summons under ss. 447 only and then proceeded to try the case summarily, and convicted one of the accused. It was contended that he had no power so to try and dispose of the case: Held, that the Magistrate had power to try the case summarily. When a Magistrate ascertains that the facts which are alleged to have taken place disclose only an offence triable summarily, he can dispose of such case summarily, and the mere fact that a complainant enumerates sections of the Penal Code relating to offences not triable summarily does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, unless the facts of which he really complains disclose such offences. Golap Pandy v. Boddam, 16 C. 715 ...

Superintendence of High Court.

(1) Arbitration—Award—Application to file award, objection to—Decree on award, Finality of—Private arbitration—Revisional powers of High Court—Jurisdiction—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 520, 521, 525, 526 and 622.—Certain disputes between parties were referred under a written agreement to an arbitrator, who in due course made his award. The plaintiff then applied to the Subordinate Judge to have the award filed in Court under the provisions of s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendants came in and objected to the award on the following amongst other grounds:—(1) That the value of the property in suit was Rs. 500 only, and therefore that the application should have been made in the Munsif's Court and not in that of the Subordinate Judge. (2) That the agreement of submission was vague and indefinite, and did not clearly set out the matters in dispute. The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection without taking any evidence, and directed the award to be filed and a decree to be passed thereon. The plaintiff appealed. The defendants contended that no appeal lay, and that, if it did, it lay to the District Judge and not to the High Court: Held, that, assuming that on a proceeding under ss. 525 and 526, the Court has power to consider such objections as are mentioned in ss. 520 and 511, the above objections did not fall under either section, but that the Subordinate Judge, before entertaining the application, was bound to satisfy himself that he had jurisdiction to entertain it, and for that purpose to take evidence regarding the value of the property; and that even if no appeal lay, the High Court could interfere under its revisional powers, because the Subordinate Judge had acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally in assuming... jurisdiction without taking such evidence: Held, further, that as the second objection was well founded inasmuch as the agreement to refer was vague and indefinite, and did not clearly lay down the power of the arbitrator in dealing with the subject-matter in dispute, and as it was not possible to make out what powers were intended to be conferred upon the arbitrator, the award should not be allowed to be enforced under the provisions of ss. 525 and 526. Upon an application to set aside such order: Held, that the High Court had jurisdiction, under s. 15 of the Charter Act, to set it aside if it were made without jurisdiction. Abayeswari Debi v. so as to confer a valid title. Where the plaintiff bought from the heirs immoveable property, and such property was conveyed to the plaintiff by an unregistered deed, registration of the deed (the property being of the value of less than Rs. 100) not being compulsory: Held, in a suit to recover

(6) Ss. 88, 90—Decree unsatisfied by sale of mortgaged property—Right to decree for sale of other than mortgaged property.—The holder of a de cause on a mortgage obtained an order under s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act for sale of the mortgaged property, and the proceeds of this when sold being insufficient to satisfy the decree, he applied, for a decree under s. 90 for the sale of other properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. The Subordinate Judge refused the application on the ground that there was no such provision in the order for sale under s. 88: Held, that the decree holder was entitled to the decree asked for. The terms of s. 90 contemplate a decree in the suit for recovery of the mortgage money after sale of the mortgaged properties under a decree given under s. 88. The decree holder can then apply to the Court, and if he can show that, after the sale of the mortgaged properties, there is still a balance due to him under the decree obtained under s. 88, and that that amount is legally recoverable from the judgment-debtor, he can ask for and obtain a decree under s. 90 for realisation of the balance from other properties of the debtor. Sonatun Treaty.

Construction of—Money settled upon members of Royal Family of Oudh and their heirs—Perpetual pensions by payments arranged between sovereign powers—Construction of the word "issue," as used in a treaty between them, and in subsequent correspondence.—An arrangement between two sovereign powers, viz., the King of Oudh and the East India Company, whereby members of the Royal Family of Oudh had secured to them and to their issue pensions in perpetuity, although a settlement of pensions in perpetuity could not, under the Muhammadan Law, be validly made by a private individual, took effect as a contract or treaty between the powers. Held, on the construction of a treaty made in 1838 between the King of Oudh and the East India Company, that it was the intention of the King thereby to provide pensions for certain members of the Royal Family in perpetuity that if any of the pensioners should die without issue, his or her pension should revert to the King; that the words "heirs" and "issue" were used as convertible or equivalent terms; and that they meant persons who would be heirs according to Muhammadan Law. Held, also, that the King intended in 1842 to provide for the ancestor of the plaintiffs an additional pension of the same kind as the pension which he had provided for her in 1838; and that according to the letter written by the King in that year to the Government of India, after her death, if she should have left issue, the additional pension was to be payable to such of her issue as should be also her heirs, according to the rules of the Muhammadan Law of Inheritance. Trust.

(1) Parol trust—Trustee — Executor de son tort—Donatio mortis causa—Exceptions to Report—Account—Appeal as to costs—Limitation.—One T. C., in anticipation of death handed over his property to the defendant, his brother, and verbally directed him to pay certain specified debts, and to apply the surplus for the necessities and support of his family. Held, that a good trust was created, at any rate so far as the debts were concerned. The defendant claimed to have paid to S, the widow of one L, the deceased brother of T. C. and himself, the sum of Rs. 7,273-1 alleged to have been owing by T. C. to L. In a suit by the son of T. C. for an account the Assistant Registrar found (inter alia) in his Report that Rs. 1,975 had been paid to S, by .the defendant, and that the balance Rs. 5,298-1 had been taken over by the defendant by arrangement with S, (the first payment being time-barred). Held, that a good trust in favour of S, for the whole debt due to her was created in respect of the monies which reached the defendant's hands applicable under the terms of the mandate to him for the payment of her claim; that no question arose as to limitation; and that it was unnecessary to consider whether the defendant, if acting as an executor de son tort, had power to pay it though barred. Held, also that the trust was not in the nature of a testamentary disposition, though it was created in anticipation of death, and could not after the death of T. C. 'be recalled by his representatives. Quaere—Whether as to the application of the surplus after payment of the specified debts the defendant was in the position of an executor de son tort, and that practically it may in some cases be difficult to avoid the application to Hindus of the principles upon which executorship de son tort rests to. Semble that even upon the findings of the lower Court the order as to costs would have to be altered materially in favour of the defendant. SUDDASOOK KOOTARY v. RAMCHUNDER, 17 C. 620 ... 953
